STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

MANPOWER

SCHEFFERVILLE, P.Q.—MOBILITY PROBLEM

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the problems of the people of Schefferville with respect to mobility. Two months ago, the Federal Government agreed to pay up to $4,500 of the moving expenses of people laid off by the Iron Ore Company. I feel this arrangement should also be available to families who were not directly employed by Iron Ore but are working either for the town, the school board or the local small- and medium-sized businesses, so that anyone in Schefferville who wants to move and find a new place to live can do so with the help of federal funds. I am pleased to see that the Province of Quebec, after a lot of persuading, has agreed to pay 25 per cent of eligible costs and that the company will pay the same percentage, so that finally, the Federal Government will contribute $4,500, the Province of Quebec about $1,250 and the same will be contributed by the Iron Ore Company, so that in the final instance, thanks again to our federal programs, the people of Schefferville will be able to increase their mobility.

HORTICULTURE

DAMAGE TO EASTERN ONTARIO APPLE ORCHARDS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, the eastern Canadian apple industry suffered severe damage to its orchards caused by the 1980-81 winter, the impact of which has now reached the critical stage. The industry seeks essential financial relief similar to that which has previously been extended to other agricultural production which was subjected to abnormal climatic factors beyond its control.

As there was no tree insurance program available which would have provided the necessary protection to cover this type of disaster, eastern Canadian apple producers are looking to the federal Government for leadership in resolving this unfortunate problem. Without a viable domestic industry, the price of imported produce will only escalate, but with the help of the federal Government, Canada can improve its self-sufficiency and reverse the current trend.

Hopefully at the joint apple industry-Government meeting planned for April 26, a position acceptable to the federal Government and to the apple industry will be successfully reached and acted upon so that the apple industry can get on with the job in meeting the Government's challenge in its endeavour to buy Canadian by replacing imports with home grown produce.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

RECOGNITION OF ACHIEVEMENTS OF SPANISH CIVIL WAR VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a matter in this House once again concerning what I and many other Members feel is a serious long standing injustice in Canada.

In the late 1930s, 1,200 Canadians made their way to Spain to fight against the combined fascist forces of the Spanish army, Germany, and Italy. The war against fascism actually began in 1931 with the invasion of Manchuria by Japan, and it expanded further with fascist attacks on the elected Government of the Republic of Spain. The fight expanded between 1939 and 1941, until the entire world became involved in the fight against fascism.

It is interesting to note that one of Canada's heroes, Norman Bethune, was an active participant in the fight against fascism in Spain and in China. Norman Bethune, a Canadian, became a Chinese national hero. Canada officially ignored him for 30 years until it became convenient to recognize him as a Canadian hero because we were in the process of recognizing the Peoples' Republic of China. It was because of Bethune's great achievement over 30 years ago that we put aside questioning his political persuasion, and we put aside the fact that he had violated the Foreign Investment Review Act, and looked specifically at his achievements in Spain and in China.

Mr. Lewis: What does FIRA have to do with it?

Mr. Skelly: It is time that we looked at the achievements of the Mackenzie-Papineau Brigade and recognized the achievements of these Canadians in their contribution to the fight against fascism.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAELI-PALESTINIAN CONFLICT—ESTABLISHMENT OF COLONIES IN OCCUPIED TERRITORIES—POSSIBLE DANGERS

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Madam Speaker, this week, the State of Israel celebrated its thirty-fifth birthday. The international community, including multilateral organizations such as the United Nations and at the bilateral level, has regularly criticized the establishment of settlements in occupied territories. On the very day of Israel's thirty-fifth birthday, a new settlement in Upper Nablus was announced by the Israeli Government. Hon. Members will recall that Nablus is located more than 60 kilometers north of Jerusalem, in a territory where Palestinians and Arabs are in the majority. I would like to point out to the House that this new settlement proves that it is extremely urgent that the parties concerned, namely Israel and the Palestinians, negotiate a settlement as soon as possible, so that the Palestinians can find a place to live and have a citizenship that is recognized, and Israel can live within recognized and safe borders. Madam Speaker, these settlements are a very disturbing element of policy in the Middle East, and I hope that the House and the Government will indicate to the Government of Israel the need to negotiate.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

COST OF RENOVATION OF EXECUTIVE OFFICES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, earlier this week the press reported an interview with the president of Canada Post Corporation, Mr. Michael Warren, in which he commented that postal rates could be expected to go up again on some unspecified date. This should come, I suppose, as no surprise to any of us, but I find it particularly interesting because it has also come to my attention this week that this same Canada Post Corporation is spending upwards of a million dollars to renovate their executive offices in the Sir Alexander Campbell Building here in Ottawa. Tenders, I am informed, will be let by invitation only.

Renovations were made last August to some of the offices in the annex. In November, $300,000 was spent to renovate the eighth and ninth floors, and the expenditure of $424,000 to further re-do the executive area has just been approved. None of these contracts was made by public tender.

I commented yesterday that the budget fiasco was the product of an exhausted Government weary unto death. Clearly this condition is not limited to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and his cronies. Has the Cabinet surrendered all control over Government operations, or is it just too tired to care any more?

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONDEMNATION OF ECONOMIC POLICIES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, the Government's economic policies clearly indicate that it is, colloquially speaking, out of its tree, that it is in fact out of touch with reality, and that it psychologically insane. I say this because the Government is refusing to deal with reality. Rather than planning for jobs, it has turned over its financial elbow room to the private sector. Rather than planning for full employment, it changes the definition of full employment. Rather than changing its policies, it changes its words.

Madam Speaker, the Government is attempting to make acceptable to Canadians what is clearly unacceptable. It is preaching as being realistic an unemployment rate of 12.4 per cent today, 10 per cent for the long-term, and an ultimate goal of 7 or 8 per cent.

The Government is playing with our dreams, our hopes and our values, rather than acting on them. The Government is denying its responsibility. It is treating the economy as if it were the weather. It is blaming what is happening today on economic analysis rather than taking appropriate action.

Not only that, the Government has a split personality. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) refuses to speak in specifics with regard to jobs. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) talks about some 300,000 jobs coming out of the budget. The Government must get its act together. It is time to call in a clinical psychologist to return some sanity to this place.

HEALTH

CONTROVERSY OVER HEROIN USE IN TREATMENT OF TERMINALLY ILL

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, there has been considerable discussion recently on the possibility of using heroin once again as a pain suppressant in the treatment of terminally-ill patients. It must be remembered that while heroin remains a prescriptible drug and one which medical doctors may still administer, its importation and manufacture in Canada have been forbidden since 1955. This prohibition action was taken by the Canadian authorities at that time in compliance with the International Narcotic Control Convention established by the World Health Organization.

The use of this drug for palliative purposes is very controversial. Heroin is favoured because of ease of administering by hypodermic needle. However, very many medical practitioners are opposed to giving terminally-ill patients medication by injection, and find it more acceptable to administer medication by mouth.

The medical community has sufficient knowledge to realize that drugs given for pain are effective only if given regularly rather than intermittently. Currently there are excellent drugs available for this purpose other than heroin. Heroin is a potent respiratory depressant, a phenomenon which has lead many medical practitioners to discontinue its use before any Government intervention.

I am concerned that columnist power instead of good judgment is being used to extract money from Canadian citizens, money that could more effectively be used in other fields of medical research than returning to the use of heroin even in a limited way.

THE BUDGET

MINISTER'S DESCRIPTION OF MEDIA BEHAVIOUR

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, when is a peep a leak, and when is a leak a theft? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) told reporters yesterday, and I quote:

> I would rather call it a theft than a leak, or a peep than a leak, if you wish.

Just to confuse matters more, the Minister then tried, through his press secretary, to put pressure on a reporter from Newsradio to withdraw the offending phrase. This was followed by intimidation, threats, and a bribe to the reporter by offering a further seven-minute interview with the Minister of Finance.

Is there no end to the Minister's largesse? The reporter was offered more interview time with the Minister if he would only remove the offending word "theft". Truly it can be said of this Minister: "Oh, what a tangled web we weave when first we practise to deceive."

It is one thing for the Minister to add $200 million to our already crippling debt load, but it seems to me that he is adding insult to injury by blaming it all on the media and then going so far as to accuse them of theft.

We are now in a situation, Madam Speaker, where reporters invited into the Minister's office for a pre-budget photo opportunity session are accused of theft for simply doing what they are invited to do in the first place—take photos of the Minister holding up his budget. This photo session cost the people of Canada $200 million in additional debt over two years, which at present interest rates costs $1 million a month.

CALL FOR REVIEW OF BUDGETARY PRACTICE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I want to follow up on the statement just made by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). The evidence that the House and the country have heard over the last few days with respect to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is a good indication of the Peter Principle at work: when things can go wrong, they will. The Minister of Finance has added a new wrinkle: when things could be worse, they will be worse. Yesterday he compounded his difficulties.

• (1115)

In some of the statements he has made he talked about the necessity of opening the budgetary practice. I think the House of Commons ought to consider it a necessity to review the budgetary practice. If there is no case to be made in some areas for secrecy, then secrecy should be removed. We ought not to have these monumental intrusions on good sense and logic compounded by deception. Murphy's law, the Peter Principle, or whatever applies—this is a mess that is now in the hands of this House of Commons to clean up.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FULL EMPLOYMENT—LEVEL FORECAST BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Finance stated that 7 or 8 per cent of the work force would remain unemployed even if the economy were running full speed ahead. That pretty well confirms the projections contained in the Minister's budget that when we are supposed to be three or four years into recovery, for example in 1987, we will have an unemployment rate of 8.8 per cent, or 1.162 million Canadians unemployed. Were these personal musings of the Minister of Finance, or does the Government now accept 7 or 8 per cent to be full employment in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Government has views about the current situation and it has proposed a budget to deal with the situation. What happens seven or eight years down the road is a matter for pretty general conjecture. If I am Prime Minister at that time I will certainly undertake to express my views on that before the time arises.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has just confirmed what he said this morning, that he was leaving it to others to worry about unemployment five or ten years down the road. We are talking about projections of the Government based on its own strategy for economic recovery. I would remind the Prime Minister that in December, 1979, when this Party was in office and unemployment stood at 7.2 per cent and was projected to reach 8.2 per cent, as reported at page 2297 of Hansard the President of the Treasury Board said that our proposal showed:

—a shameful willingness to accept unemployment and economic weakness in this country on the part of the Conservative Government.

I would describe what the Prime Minister is saying today, and what the Minister of Finance said yesterday, as an outrageous copout and an outrageous betrayal of the unemployed. We have now doomed this generation to be a lost generation without any hope of obtaining jobs.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Can the Prime Minister tell the House if it is the policy of the Government that full economic recovery means full employment which, in the estimation of the Government, is an unemployment rate of 8 per cent? Is that the view of the Government? If it is, the people of Canada find it totally unacceptable.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member misquoted me when he said I would leave it to other. I was telling members of the press who were asking me the same question as the Hon. Member that they could worry about what was going to happen in seven or eight years from now and whether it would happen in any particular way, and that we were concerned with the current situation which is certainly a very difficult time for many, many Canadians.

We have presented a budget which is before the House. I find it typical of the Opposition that, not being able to deal with the budget or criticize it constructively, they are worrying about seven or eight years down the road. They should cooperate with getting this budget through; they should cooperate in improving it, if possible, and they should make the situation for Canadians here and now as good as is possible. Then we can start worrying about the longer term figures.

The budget itself has taken measures to ensure that over the medium term the deficit would be coming down and that Canadians would be able to compete more efficiently with other countries because in the next 18 months they would be putting a lot of expenditure into building our infrastructure. That is the position of the Government. I think the Hon. Member's constituents would be more satisfied if he showed himself a little more exercised about the present and stopped speculating about what happens seven or eight years down the road.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I am not speculating; I am quoting from the Economic Strategy of this Government contained in the budget that the Minister of Finance brought down in the House a few days ago.

• (1120)

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER RESIGN

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I would refer the Prime Minister to page 38 of the Government's Fiscal Plan which shows projections well into 1987 of over one million people unemployed. That means that five years after the Government's economic recovery plan, we will still have one million people unemployed.

Even with the Government's projected rate of recovery, unacceptable as it is, the Prime Minister knows that the last to be hired in economic recovery are young people, and today we have 600,000 young people unemployed, soon to be joined by another 300,000 graduates from our universities and post-secondary institutions. They have no hope for jobs because all we get from the budget is a possibility of 27,000 new jobs this year for young people. Is it the Prime Minister's view—because the young people are looking for an answer—that this country, blessed as it is, cannot provide opportunity for our young people coming onto the job market, because, if that is his view, why in the name of God does he not resign?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not think God has much to do with my decision to resign, and I do not know why the Hon. Member is using profanities in the House.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURPOSE OF LAY-OFFS—UNION DESCRIPTION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence but also involves the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It relates to their job-creation program in the Department of National Defence. On several occasions, Madam Speaker, both Ministers have denied the charge that the Department of National Defence has dismissed 1,027 employees in order to hire 3,000 people under the NEED Program. The Ministers say they are different jobs, but the Union of National Defence Employees, and others, say the jobs are exactly the same in many cases.

What I would like to know, and I believe what all Hon. Members want to know, is who is telling the truth? Is it the Executive Vice-President of the Union of National Defence Employees, who says that employees are being dismissed so that new ones can be hired in the name of job creation? Is he telling the truth, or are the Ministers telling the truth? If the executive Vice-President of the Union of National Defence Employees' association is not telling the truth, will the Minister kindly explain what is happening and why is there this horrible misunderstanding which is affecting hundreds of Government employees?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I believe yesterday I answered a question on what the Department is doing about job creation. As far as the matter related by the Hon. Member is concerned, I would like to say that the union has made no formal representations to me with respect to any perceived conflict with employees hired through the NEED Program. The persons referred to are employees who are term employees, employees who would have happened to be terminated at a certain point in time his constituents, "Look, do not bother with the dogs. Try to get some public works done, aqueducts—"

Mr. Waddell: You are the Prime Minister. It's your program.

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, yes, and that is what I am telling the people. However, it is hard to get through to the Hon. Member. Fortunately, some fourth grade people understand what we are doing.

AIR CANADA

INVESTIGATION BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of some of the incredible, recent revelations about financial and corporate machinations in Montreal, could the Minister, who is responsible for Air Canada, please stand in this House and tell us what the devil is going on in Air Canada in Montreal, with the RCMP raids on the office of the Chairman of the Board, and also on his office in Quebec?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I was told by the Minister of Justice that he would answer this question because it is essentially his domain, so I will let him do that.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, it is the long standing custom not to answer questions—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: —concerning investigations which may be under way or thought to be under way.

LEASING OF HEADQUARTERS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Transport as well, since it comes directly within his jurisdiction. Can he shed some light on what is transpiring, without getting into the details of an investigation, and certainly assure the House that the present investigation has nothing whatsoever to do with Canadair or the Mackasey hearings before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and, with more particular specifics, advise as to whether the investigation is directed against Mr. Rene Amyot—

Mr. Ouellet: Speculative questions.

Mr. Nowlan: —as the former director and secretary of Place Quebec Incorporated, which sold its interest to Trizec Company, which received the successful award on the building to which Air Canada has just transferred its headquarters?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will try. I have been asked a number of questions, by a number of newspapermen in particular. One asks, "What does it have to do with this?" And the other one asks, "Does it have to do with that?" And another one asks, "Does it have to do with this?" If I answer all these questions, people will have to know what it has to do with.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: We have a right to know.

Mr. Pepin: That is what the problem is. I am told by the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General that this is an RCMP inquiry, and I must not get involved in it because that is their business, and if I open my mouth on the subject I will be compromising the validity of an inquiry. I just thought I had to explain that, in order to get across to my hon. friend why I am saying nothing as opposed to my normal tendency, which is to tell him the whole truth. My hon. friend knows how much I like to answer questions he poses to me in committees and elsewhere. In this particular instance I must be abnormal, by my standards, and shut up.

Mr. Nowlan: We'll see how abnormal it is on Monday.

Mr. Nielsen: It must be Friday.

COMMUNICATIONS

IMPOSITION OF TAX ON TELEVISION CABLE SYSTEMS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. This week's federal budget imposed a new 6 per cent tax on cable. In addition to the cable rate increases which were permitted under the six and five program, which are being charged to cable customers, how does the Minister square this increase year over year, which is roughly double the six and five program, with the various injunctions from Cabinet Ministers that ordinary Canadians must tighten their belts?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that this has nothing to do with the six and five program. It is a question of the tax increase which was brought down by the Minister of Finance to raise general revenues. There is, as a result of the raising of these general revenues, a program production fund which has been set up which will total some $60 million a year and which will bring about a good deal of employment for Canadians who are engaged in creative work, particularly people in the artistic or cultural community in Canada.

I think that on all sides of the House there are people who want to say that they are delighted that we have indeed been able, perhaps for the first time in our history, to put as much money at the disposal of the private sector in the area of film production. I expect that this fund of $60 million will lead to the creation of over $180 million annually in new program production. That will obviously have a very real effect on employment, a very real effect on stimulating the private sector which is engaged in the production of films and television programs.

The Hon. Member knows, as well as I do, the number of new opportunities which will be made available in the creative community in Canada as a result of the setting up of this fund.

Mr. Beatty: If the Minister of Finance had not made his $200 million gaffe on Monday night, he would have had $200 million sitting there which could have been used for this production fund without increasing taxes. Apparently this money was just sitting there, ready to be used, but the Minister of Communications did not have access to it.

DEREGULATION OF SATELLITE RECEPTION EARTH STATIONS—ROLE OF CABLE COMPANIES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Let me ask a question relating to the Government's broadcasting strategy. In view of the fact that the announcement made by the Minister of Communications that the Government would be deregulating the use of earth stations has led to a number of institutions disconnecting from the cable system, yet cable companies are still being prevented from competing fairly and offering satellite services on cable, when will the Government act on its commitments and permit cable companies to compete fairly? Can the Minister confirm the fact that it could be up to a year before he actually delivers on the commitment that he made in his policy statement?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that a number of the matters that were contained in the broadcasting policy are matters that have to be implemented by the CRTC. We have indicated quite clearly the general direction that we see broadcasting heading over the next few years.

The Hon. Member, speaking on behalf of his Party, has not really indicated whether or not he thinks this is the direction in which we should be headed. I should add that there has indeed been a general consensus as far as I can tell, and I know the Hon. Member attended the same Financial Post conference on broadcasting that I did, that there seems to be a very strong support from the broadcasting community and the cable industry itself in Canada for the direction the Government intends to go in the area of broadcasting.

SHIPBUILDING

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It pertains to some provisions in that rather right wing budget that was presented in the House the other day. As an aside, it would appear that the Minister of Finance might be thinking seriously of challenging the Conservative leadership with his budget.

Much was made of the question of vessel acquisition and shipbuilding. There have been three programs over the years which seem to be hanging in limbo. First is the Patrol Frigate Program, second is the one that both the Conservatives and the Liberal Government announced, the $300 million Coast Guard Acquisition Program, and finally the extension of Canada's 200-mile limit in the recent shipbuilding program. We have seen nothing concrete laid down. Is this just another promise, or will the Minister give us an indication of when the Government will make those announcements concerning the Patrol Frigate Program, the Coast Guard Vessel Acquisition Program, and when it intends to implement the recent shipbuilding policy that it proposed in the House?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first with respect to the shipbuilding policy, that program is already under way. As a matter of fact we recently made an announcement to a shipyard of $1.7 million assistance for a major contract. Also, my colleague, the Minister of State for Economic Development, will be making some announcements next week. I think the Minister of Finance has already indicated that some of these projects will be in vessel procurement.

PATROL FRIGATE PROGRAM

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, certainly one of the largest programs in place is the Patrol Frigate Program. That certainly should have been out long ago. It was our understanding that we would be hearing about it in the late spring or early summer. It now appears that that Program has been pushed back even further. Can the Minister give some indication of when the Government will move on this Program and give a real shot in the arm to the shipbuilding industry?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, since the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program is one that comes under my responsibility, I am pleased to advise the hon. gentleman that, as I have indicated in the House previously, the Program is proceeding on schedule. I trust that we would be in a position to make the final decision in terms of the identification of the contractor by next July, 1983.

RAILWAYS

CROWNEST PASS RATE—SUPPORT FROM WESTERN CANADA FOR PROPOSED CHANGES

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Will he tell us which groups or individual producers in western Canada are in favour of his plan to restructure the Crow rate?

regardless. However, if there is any conflict between these two programs, I will certainly look into it because clearly the NEED Program is not meant to do that. The information I have at the moment is that there is no conflict between the two programs. If the union would like to make formal representations to me, I will receive them kindly and look into the matter very seriously.

NEED PROGRAM—REPLACEMENT OF EMPLOYEE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the union of National Defence employees has certainly made representations. I will pass them on to the Minister so that he can examine them.

Meanwhile, may I appeal to the Prime Minister in the case of one of the employees involved? His name is Stephen Dent. He is a married man with children, including a four-week old child. On March 25 he was dismissed from his employment in the Department of National Defence. He says, and I believe him, that a person was subsequently employed last week under the NEED Program, who is providing the same work services. Does the Prime Minister agree that this kind of activity in the name of job creation in a Government Department, the Department of National Defence, should not happen? And will he undertake to look into this case and make sure that this misunderstanding is clarified and that no employee, Stephen Dent or any other person, will have to suffer the hardships of unemployment in the name of Government job creation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member were genuinely interested in this case, I suspect he would have given me notice or given the Minister notice and we would have been able to look into it. He was not interested in this case. He was interested in making politics.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT JOB-CREATION STRATEGY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party are also concerned that there seems to be a growing acceptance of the high rate of unemployment almost as natural or normal. That is contrary to what the Bishops have said, and it seems to me to be contrary to any notion of a just society. I have a question for the Prime Minister—

Mr. Malone: The High Priest.

• (1125)

Mr. Waddell: Can we keep God out of this, please? My question is for the Prime Minister. One year ago the Government's job-creation strategy seemed to be to have job spin-offs from megaprojects. If the Prime Minister would visit southern Ontario, the industrial heartland, as I have recently, he would see that the Government's job-creation strategy, continued in the budget, is basically the NEED Program which offers jobs like the raking of leaves, cleaning up of brush, and so on. Is that the message the Prime Minister wants to give to the young people of Canada, that the Government's strategy is raking leaves and cleaning up brush, and that is what we are going to have in the future of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The short answer is no, Madam Speaker, that is not the strategy, that is not what the Minister of Finance has been talking about, and that is not what the Minister of Employment and Immigration has been talking about. The Hon. Member, I guess, shows the level of his ingenuity when he thinks that this $4.8 billion will be spent on raking leaves. He does not have much confidence in Canadians.

In so far as the rate of unemployment is concerned, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should be asked to examine his own political and economic thinking on this matter. What is a satisfying rate of unemployment? Is it 8 per cent? Is it 5 per cent? Is it 3 per cent? Or is it less? I remember a great socialist, Nye Bevan, saying that it should be 3 per cent. Now, is not 3 per cent very much unfair for the 3 per cent of unemployed people? How can a well thinking socialist—I am sure admired by the Hon. Member, as I admire Mr. Bevan myself—accept 3 per cent unemployment as not being unacceptable in a just society? The Hon. Member should do some thinking on these problems.

Mr. Waddell: Let me tell the Prime Minister that I have confidence in Canadians, but no confidence in this Government. If the Prime Minister did some reading instead of airy-fairy thinking, he would see that his budget talks about 11.5 per cent unemployment next year, and his own Minister of Finance, as quoted in The Toronto Sun yesterday, talks about 7 per cent unemployment. Those figures are totally unacceptable.

INQUIRY RESPECTING CANINE CENSUS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware that in Windsor, Ontario, one of his job-creation programs involves a canine census; that is, the counting of dogs? That is the nature of the program. Is the Prime Minister aware of that, and does he believe, as a reader of socialists and so on, that that is the kind of job-creation program that anyone who is at all progressive would introduce?

Mr. McKnight: Lucky you are not a tree.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about 7 per cent unemployment as being unacceptable. What is acceptable to the Hon. Member? Six per cent? Five per cent? Four per cent? Three per cent? Or what? He could just invent some figure that is acceptable to him. If we knew what his principles were, then perhaps we could discuss the practices.

Oral Questions

PENITENTIARIES

OBSERVANCE OF NATIVE SPIRITUAL RIGHTS—HUNGER STRIKE AT B.C. INSTITUTION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Will the Minister say what his Department is doing to resolve the serious situation at the Kent Maximum Security Penitentiary in British Columbia where several Indian inmates are in the twenty-third day of a hunger strike because they have been restricted from carrying out their Indian spiritual ceremonies. Would the Minister intervene to resolve this serious situation as soon as possible and take steps to see that Indians have the same spiritual rights in penitentiaries as do other religious groups, which I believe is a basic principle in the New Charter of Rights?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, as a matter of interest, native religious ceremonies have not been permitted in Canadian penitentiaries in the past. I decided to change that. I asked the Correctional Service of Canada to design a policy permitting native spiritual observances in institutions. They have designed a policy. The native people in Kent are dissatisfied with that policy, and tried to get an injunction under the Charter. The court has held that the policy which CSC devised was a satisfactory one so far as the Charter is concerned, from my understanding of the judgment. I have asked to see that policy myself. I am now in the process of reviewing it to see whether changes can be made. However, I think the Indians are going a long way when they characterize this new policy, which first allows religious observance in institutions and native observance, as a form of genocide, and I think it not unreasonable that there should be some restrictions on the amount of religious material and equipment which each Indian should be allowed to have in his cell. I want to review the policy, as I say, but I am very pleased that a great deal of progress has been made on this subject in a very short time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I was not yet finished with the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: He's on his last legs, too.

Mr. Waddell: I wonder if I could ask him a further question, seriously. I have in my hand a letter from an action group of unemployed people. These groups are going up all over the country, and they cannot direct a question to the Prime Minister, so maybe I can.

In the letter the writer states that he asked some grade four students what they would do if they were Prime Minister. One of them said, "If I were Prime Minister, I would gather taxes for the poor and help them to find jobs."

I therefore want to direct this final question to the Prime Minister. If we are to have a high rate of unemployment, which seems to be Government policy in the budget, in the statements of the Minister—I believe in full employment, but apparently the Government does not—I want to ask the Prime Minister how he will get money, real money, to these people. How will he redistribute money to these people who will suffer among the 11 per cent or 12 per cent unemployed in our society? Is this his idea of a just society? If it is not, how will he redistribute some income to these people so that they will have satisfactory and full lives like the rest of us who are working?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Hon. Member repeats again that he is in favour of full employment. He has failed, in my three attempts to get a view from him—

Mr. Waddell: I'm asking the question. Why don't I get some answers?

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, this is a cross-examination, Madam Speaker. I still do not know how the Hon. Member can speak of full employment and not be able to define it, at what statistical level he would find unemployment to be correct for a just society. However, I think he has quoted to me a good source for an answer to his question. I think that fourth grade student gave a very good answer. If the Hon. Member goes and meets with the fourth grade student, I bet he will get explanations as to why the Minister of Finance is doing the right thing, because if I understood correctly, the fourth grade student said that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister should gather taxes and give jobs to people. That is what the Minister of Finance is doing in his budget, with some $4.8 billion which the budget has—

Mr. Waddell: And jobs counting dogs?

Mr. Trudeau: —earmarked in order to give jobs to people. Some of it will be given to the private sector, with some $2.4 billion having been set aside for that. The other will be job creation in infrastructure by the federal Government. I would think that even the fourth grade student would be able to explain to the Hon. Member that one does not have to count dogs in order to build the infrastructure. I do not see how that would help.

What one can do is build airports, harbours, public works programs, encourage all kinds of—well, the Minister of Finance was giving examples to the Hon. Member for St. John's East the other day—make sure that the search and rescue apparatus is upgraded, make sure that Coast Guard ships are built. All these are things which Canada needs.

The kind of idea that Nye Bevan and the other Bevan were developing some 30 or 40 years ago should reach the Hon. Member. He should know that there are more things on the shelf than projects for counting dogs. He should be able to tell

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, you would not allow me to list them all. In the farm community there are groups like UGG, Unifarm, and Palliser. There are many groups in the West on the farm side who are strongly in favour of what they think the Bill is all about.

In the non-farm community it is generally accepted that this is the way to proceed. I will send my hon. friend a copy this afternoon of the list of people who have expressed a desire to see a Bill of this kind introduced.

Mr. Kilgour: Some of those groups were in favour of the Gilson plan. My understanding is that a much lesser number of them are in favour of the Minister's plan.

SASKATCHEWAN PETITION OPPOSING CHANGES

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, will the Minister give us his reaction to the 108,000 people in Saskatchewan who signed a petition opposing his plan? Will he tell us again why he thinks his plan is fair and equitable for the farming and urban communities in western Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, obviously I cannot do that today, but when the Bill comes in I will do so. The difficulty to which my hon. friend alludes is one that inevitably comes with attempts to compromise. With respect to the method of payment, some say that 100 per cent should be paid to producers while others say that 100 per cent should be paid to the railways. Gilson himself compromised with 81 per cent to the producers and 19 per cent to the railways. So there has to be a compromise. You cannot accommodate everyone 100 per cent.

That is what we have done with the 50-50, in the knowledge that we did not have a monopoly on good intentions or intelligence and that, after a period of time, there would be a major review. This is the commonsense approach that we have taken. I regret that it has not yet gained unanimity in the West, but it is on its way.

FINANCE

PLIGHT OF BORROWERS COMMITTED TO HIGH INTEREST RATES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I wish to address a question to the Minister of State for Finance. He will know that the Minister of Finance has repeated in the House on several occasions that he feels people who are locked into high interest rate morgages for a long period of time should be treated fairly and equitably by the lending institutions.

Is the Minister aware that the Farm Credit Corporation has people locked into mortgages at 16.75 per cent, and that the Federal Business Development Bank has Canadian businesses locked into interest rates of 22 per cent for long periods of time? Does he think that it should not be possible for them to refinance with the same institutions?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, when the Minister of Finance was asked that question, I recall that it was in regard to people who had mortgages on homes. So the specific question and the answer of the Minister related to home purchases.

Obviously the principles must be the same. First, the response is that over the last two years most of the mortgages have been short term rather than long term because of the high interest rates. The majority of people who are so-called locked in, are under contracts that are not of a long duration. Second, the Minister indicated that those companies that let mortgages at the high rates of course had to take money at rates that would cover their operations.

Having said that, the Minister undertook to talk to representatives of the banks and trust companies who are handling mortgages so that they would be as sensitive as possible to difficulties in particular cases.

RATES CHARGED BY CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. I think he made the point precisely that the Minister of Finance was indeed talking about home owners, perhaps over 700,000, who are locked into high interest rate mortgages for periods of time, both short and long.

The federal Government does have the responsibility for two Crown corporations; the Farm Credit Corporation and the Federal Business Development Bank. Both of those are lending money over long periods of time. If the Minister can find $200 million out of thin air overnight for some programs, why is it not possible for the federal Government to have the sensitivity that it is asking of the traditional lending institutions, on behalf of the people who are committed to long term mortgages with those two Crown corporations?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I think if we accepted the Hon. Member's invitation to transfer $200 million to the banks of Canada or the trust companies of Canada, the next complaint we would hear from the Opposition is that it is a give away program to the private sector. Rather, the Minister indicated that the additional $200 million would be on top of the $4.6 billion infrastructure program. Of that, $2.4 billion goes toward immediate job creation in the country. We know that people are concerned about high interest rates, but there are many Canadians concerned about jobs immediately. That is why that $200 million was allocated toward jobs. I do not understand the Opposition's criticizing that move to put an additional $200 million toward the creation of jobs for Canadians.

REVIEW OF PREPARATORY PROCESS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. During the course of the last week, with the unfortunate events surrounding the Minister of Finance, he made some suggestion that he was not happy with the closed atmosphere that surrounds budget making, that he thought it was too secret a process. Could the Minister tell the House whether or not the Government has under review the question of opening up the budget process? If that is being actively considered, in a broad, general way, how is that process envisaged by the Government?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. That is a very important aspect of Government structure and parliamentary business. It was as a result of that kind of question and the concern raised by the Hon. Member that, for example, in June last year the then Minister of Finance issued a Green Paper calling for public discussion on this very issue. That suggestion was further developed by the present Minister of Finance, by working with the Canadian Tax Foundation in arranging a symposium on the subject with members of the Foundation, I believe scheduled for June or July. These two specific steps were taken to engage response by the public, with the opportunity for the Government to work with that private response on a very difficult subject.

EXAMINATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Minister will be aware that the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure of the House of Commons indicated as part of its future mandate that reforms relating to the opening up of the budget process would be considered. When the Committee undertakes that kind of investigation, can it be assured of assistance and help by the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Finance, other Government colleagues and the Public Service of Canada, in examining this very important procedure that goes right to the heart of the events which occurred last week since budget making is not only a financial but a social policy process?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, of course I cannot speak for the agenda or the timing of Committees of the House, or what will be their work schedules, but I can say to the Hon. Member that the Minister is very concerned about it. There is no question that he will engage all Canadians, as well as Members of Parliament, because of their very constructive concerns about the process. The Minister has indicated—and it is my perception as well—that the time has long come for an examination of the entire process in order to move what I think is an antiquated procedure, into this century.

COMMUNICATIONS

SATELLITE TELEVISION RECEPTION DISHES—OWNERS' DILEMMA

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. It concerns the reception of television broadcasts via satellites. The Minister has announced a new policy on the Government's approach to this, but there seems to be a gap between the policy announcements of the Minister and the law as it exists. For those individuals and organizations who have satellite receivers in place receiving off satellites, legally according to the Minister's new projected policy, but illegally according to the law as it now exists, are they to take down their receivers and wait for the law to be changed, or will they be allowed to continue to receive according to the Minister's new law? What has to be done to end this confusion?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, actually there is no confusion. If the Hon. Member reads the policy documents he will see very clearly that we have indeed liberalized individual receptions of satellite signals for individual purposes. Also we have indicated that in months to come the CRTC would be considering applications from present licence holders to increase the range of signals being made available to licensed operations such as cable operations. I can only suggest to the Hon. Member that any of the licensed cable operations in his area that are interested in increasing the number of available signals could make application to the CRTC.

Also I point out that less than a month ago the CRTC brought down a decision increasing the range of television services available to northern communities by modifying the licence issued to the CANCOM operations, allowing them to put on Canadian satellites the three plus one services which are available to other parts of the country. Indeed there have been a number of measures taken, not only the measures indicated in policy documents but ones of a concrete nature which have allowed over the past year an equalization of service opportunities throughout Canada.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEDIATE TO SECURE NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREEZE

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it has to do with the growing concern of people globally about the nuclear arms race, particularly the proposed testing of the Cruise missile in Canada. Many people do not believe that a further build-up would be any kind of a deterrent. In light of the fact that the Prime Minister has a very good international reputation—it might be as good as any Canadian Prime Minister has ever had; certainly much better than his reputation in Canada—instead of involving Canada further in a nuclear arms build-up in the world, would he offer himself and the Government of Canada as mediators to work toward a meaningful freeze of nuclear weapons, and at some point in the future to work toward the elimination of nuclear arms?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member would know that I have done a great deal in Canada to denuclearize our whole approach to defence. I did that in Canada, and I did that in NATO by denuclearizing our planes in Germany.

In so far as the over-all progress toward the reduction of nuclear arms is concerned, the Hon. Member would understand that it is not something Canada can do directly. It will depend ultimately upon negotiations between the two super powers. Canada as a member of an alliance, of which the United States is also a member, has made many suggestions in order to improve progress toward nuclear arms reduction.

I do not happen to think that the freeze is a good solution, certainly not a unilateral freeze. If we are talking about a freeze, and a verifiable one, it would certainly involve negotiations as to what we freeze, how, at what rate and how it is verified, which would be extraordinarily complex, intricate and lengthy. Rather than talk about a freeze, I think our side is correct in talking about a reduction which will take the same kind of verification and detailed negotiations. It is those negotiations which are going on now between the super powers. It is these negotiations which Canada is monitoring as closely as it can.

I think there is an honest division of opinion in Canada on whether or not the Cruise should be tested here. All I know is that that matter in a real sense, whichever way it is decided, will not be the crucial decision. The crucial decision is how quickly the two super powers are prepared to begin reducing their arsenal of atomic weapons.

Mr. Anguish: I was not talking about unilateral disarmament. I think the Prime Minister can play a meaningful role as the Prime Minister in mediation between the super powers because of his international reputation.

PROPOSED TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. We have come one step closer this week to testing the Cruise missile in Canada. I think that is unfortunate. There has been a great deal of secrecy around the agreement leading up to the testing of the Cruise missile. Will the Prime Minister assure the House that there will be a ministerial statement made by either himself, the Minister of National Defence or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, outlining the steps which have been taken so far and what will be the future stpes leading up to the proposed testing of that missile, before any further agreements are signed allowing Cruise testing to take place?

Tabling of Documents

• (1200)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I could make a short statement within the framework of the Question Period. I suppose the next step would be for the United States to reach the conclusion that it is ready to ask to test the Cruise Missile in Canada. The step after that would be for the Cabinet to examine whether we should accede to that request or not. We would be happy to have views from the Hon. Member on the subject.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, April 21, 1983, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, seeing that you have found my petition correct as to form, I would ask that the Clerk now read the petition.

Madam Speaker: As the Hon. Member knows, that request can only be complied with by unanimous consent. Does the House give its unanimous consent to the reading of the petition?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member does not have unanimous consent.

THE BUDGET

TABLING OF REVISED BUDGET TABLES

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 46(2), I am tabling in both official languages revised budget tables dated April 22, 1983.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) whether this is in response to the request by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens).

Madam Speaker: I suppose the Leader of the Opposition may find that out when he consults the documents which have now been tabled.

Mr. Nielsen: I doubt it.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—REQUEST FOR INDEX TO PERMANENT AND PROVISIONAL STANDING ORDERS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My recollection is that when we agreed to the Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders taking effect at the beginning of this part of this very long session to be accepted for use in this particular part of the session for this calendar year, there was an undertaking that there would be an index provided to supplement the Table of Contents.

I have raised this question on a number of occasions. I raised it on that first day. I have raised it quite frequently since then. I understand there were requirements of the Queen's Printer, as I hope she is still called, to produce the index as soon as the budget papers have been corrected, amended, re-corrected, re-edited and now revised. I gather that that process is now complete. It may or may not be complete; there may be more revisions.

The index to our Standing Orders, permanent and provisional though they may be, is a matter that concerns all of us. I am just reminded once again that we are all waiting, not with bated breath because we would be out of breath if we were to continue bating our breath like this, for this index. I hope that within a measurable period of time we will see that index to the Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

Madam Speaker: I have to thank the Hon. Member for his patience because I know how eagerly he is waiting for this index in order to be able to refer more easily to the Standing Orders. His patience is only equal to mine because I need this index even more than the Hon. Member. I must tell the Hon. Member that the Queen's Printer is actually printing the index, but there is trouble with the cover. The last news is that 200 copies will be ready on Monday. I will be getting those 200 copies. I am not in a position to determine, but I guess they will be distributed on a first come, first served basis.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Is the cover coming out in a blushing red, Madam Speaker?

Madam Speaker: I have no idea!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): May I respectfully suggest that the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) get the first copy and that it be autographed by you, Madam Speaker!

Madam Speaker: Good idea.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the following question will be answered today: 4,721.

[Text]

JOHNS-MANVILLE CANADA INC.

Question No. 4,721—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Has the Government received a request from Johns-Manville Canada Incorporated for a grant for $35 million to maintain its mine operation in Asbestos, Quebec?

2. Has the Government advanced any money by grant or loan or loan guarantee during any of the past five years to this company?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion are concerned:

1. Both of these Departments do not make public, for reasons of commercial confidentiality, information on whether a company application for assistance has been received unless and until it results in an accepted offer of assistance.

2. Both of these Departments have not advanced any money to this company by grant or loan or loan guarantee during any of the past five years.

FOLLOW-UP OF GILSON PROPOSALS

Question No. 4,712—Mr. Althouse:

1. Were four working groups established to do follow-up work on the Gilson proposals and, if so, how many of the persons appointed to serve on the groups were paid for their services from government funds?

2. What was the individual per diem or salary paid in each case where per diems or salaries were paid?

3. What were the specific functions of each of the four working groups?

4. (a) What was the membership of each group (b) what was the name of each member and whom did he/she represent?

5. What amount of Government funds have been expended by each of the working groups to date?

6. What is the total cost of this project expected to be?

7. On what date is the work of each group expected to be at an end?

Return tabled.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Shall all orders listed under Private Member's Public Bills preceding No. 454 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I again raise the point that I made the other day with regard to the other Private Members' Business and the calling of Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered in the 400s and 600s are not being called. There was a procedure laid down which was followed with regard to Members getting a draw and then Bills were listed in the order that they were presented. It is a simple matter for those who may be in charge, whoever they may be, and God only knows because no one else knows, to draw up the precise order.

It is my view that many of the Bills in the 200s and 300s should have been called. Those persons doing the staff work should see if Members are prepared to discuss their Bills. Many of us should have been called, but we did not receive any calls. Lo and behold, out of the blue some Bill comes up for discussion on Private Members' Day. I object to that system. Those of us who have had Bills on the Order Paper for three years should bet a call long before those who have placed Bills on the Order Paper in the last six or nine months and, in some cases, within the last six weeks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is in somewhat of a difficulty. Perhaps I can take a moment to explain. Private Members' Bills, Notices of Motions and Motions for Papers were organized some years ago by the office of the President of the Privy Council. It would be beyond my scope to speak knowledgeably as to how these Bills are brought forward from day to day. I know from personal conversations I have had that an effort is made to give every Hon. Member the opportunity to present and debate his Bill, Motion or Notice of Motion for Papers seriatim in the order in which it has been called from the draw.

Many Members, as the Hon. Member knows, will find they are busy on the particular day they are called, or for one reason or another they may not want to proceed. I have indicated that that is not within the scope of the Chair. The Hon. Member may want to argue that it ought to be within the scope of the Chair and under the responsibility of the Table. But even if he does so wish to argue, I think we would have to look to some further form of discussion in order to arrive at that point. For the moment, the Chair presumes that there has been what I might call a good faith organization of this material, and what I put before the House is the result of a procedure that is followed elsewhere and is hopefully to the satisfaction of the Members.

I do not know that I can now take the discussion any further. Perhaps the Hon. Member himself may wish to comment further. The Chair and the Members will be pleased to hear his comments.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I believe I made it clear from the very beginning that I certainly do not impute responsibility on the Chair but on the system behind the Chair. The Chair's original role is to preside at the draw for the 50 priority places and the Members then have the right to elect within those 50 places whatever Bill they wish to bring forward. But beyond that there must be a system.

I do recall, not so long ago, when the prior Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council would come to the Opposition or whoever had Bills and say: "Is the Hon. Member prepared to go forward with his Bill either this week or next week?" That way, there was some order to the sequence.

I do not raise this objection simply because I am not on this week's list, but someone indicated to me that if I were ready to go forward with the first of the Bills that I have, then I would likely come forward. That is not my point. The system at the present time is just not working right.

The appearance of debate today almost seems to suggest that every week someone in the Privy Council office—and why it should be the Privy Council office handling Private Members' legislation is beyond me—merely dips into a basket and comes up with two or three names, and depending upon the order of business to be dealt with, either papers or Private Bills or Private Members' Public Bills, we then proceed. I object to that because it means that we are to keep filing our Private Bills, and if the luck of the week's draw happens to favour you, it is like winning one of the lotteries. That is not right.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, may I make a brief intervention with respect to the problems and questions raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West. I share his concern about the conduct of Private Members' Business. I know it is of concern to a number of Members and it bears some close examination.

I would like in passing to record a very simplistic suggestion which I think might relieve some of the concern of Members with respect to the notification of what is to transpire regarding Private Members' Business. In particular, may I put on the record a suggestion that could be considered at some subsequent point by the Chair and by the Officers of the House of Commons. We now receive in some cases notification of what are the projected items for Private Members' Business. In fact, I have in my hand a document that is dated April 21, 1983 that lists the items to be considered or projected to be considered today in Private Members' Business.

I would simply make the suggestion that once this projection of Private Members' Business is known, it be communicated as quickly as possible to all Members so at least they will know as quickly as possible what the projected business is. I realize that similar notification can be posted and so on, but that has proved not to be successful.

I would ask the Chair and Officers of the House to consider whether there might be some more effective method for notifying Members, and preferably as much in advance of the time for considering Private Members' Business as possible. In the normal operation of the new Standing Orders, Private Members' Business is considered on a Wednesday, so that such a notification should be given no later than the preceding Monday.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I agree wholeheartedly with the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West. I do not know how these matters are chosen. Surely there is some kind of a system. But here we are dealing with Bills going right back to No. 22, and, we are now dealing with those in the 400s and the 600s. I do not know how this is dealt with.

For weeks the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil was requesting papers from us and Bills were not even considered. I have a hunch that part of this difficulty is because the Government refuses to follow precedent by calling a session each year. We should have had a session called in 1981. There should have been a new session in 1982. There should have been a new session in 1983. Instead of that, we are still in the same session.

I know what the Government is trying to do. It gypped Private Members out of two days a week for several weeks, because after the first 200 hours of Private Members' Business only two days a week are allowed. Now under the new rules we are still gypped out of at least one Private Members' hour with the three hours allowed on Wednesday, and for this week on Friday. If the Government would follow precedent and start thinking about the country instead of itself, we would not have this difficulty. Many of these things would be taken care of.

The British House of Commons invariably starts a new session every October except when there is an election in the middle of the year. Invariably the Queen reads the Speech from the Throne. If the Government does not have its Bills finished, too bad. It is the Government's responsibility to get important legislation into the House in time for it to be finished. In the British House, if this important legislation is not finished, too bad. The House must start over again the next year. That is the way it should be.

We in Canada should follow this precedent by having one session a year, not one session that is now in its fourth year. Here is where the difficulties arise, and the responsibility for that rests entirely on the doorstep of the Prime Minister and the Government.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of the House that we are at this time engaged in debate on something that I fail to understand. The Speaker asked if there was unanimous consent to hold all Bills prior to No. 454. I have agreed.

I understand the concerns of some Members and I share those concerns. Sometimes we are not consulted as to the order in which Private Members' Bills are to be called on days like today. But I do not want to take any more time from the Hon. Member whose Bill has been called. I agree, and I did not hear anyone disagree, that we should proceed with Bill C-454.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will hear my comments although they may not be entirely relevant to the discussion. Since you are listening to grievances regarding Private Members' Business, I thought perhaps I would take this opportunity to cite my grievance. I can leave it for the learned Officers at the Table to muse over and perhaps advise Your Honour.

I had a Private Member's Bill which was considered by the House last fall. The precise time last fall escapes me at the moment but it was late last fall. There was an agreement in the House that the subject matter of the Bill would be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. It was referred but it has not yet been considered by the Committee. I have no control over that because I am not a Member of the Committee. It is a Private Member's Bill and has nothing to do with the policy of this Party. It is strictly my own personal opinion that is reflected in the Bill.

If the House agrees to discharge the Bill and I agree to have the order withdrawn on condition that the subject matter is referred to the Committee, then it becomes an order of the House and is referred to the Committee. If the Committee refuses to deal with it, however, where does that leave me?

What recourse do I have? I should like the Committee to take that under consideration.

I did not raise this matter earlier because I did not want to take up the time of Private Members, but now that we are into this grievance session I raise it. It is a Bill that I have had for ten years or more and deals with our attitude toward children on television and how we use children as surrogates with regard to advertising. It would open up the whole area of Government policy with regard to television and how it deals with children's programming and that kind of thing. There was general interest in it throughout the country but it reflects my personal opinion.

I agreed to having the order withdrawn on condition that the subject matter be referred to the Committee. That was done and the order of the House was made. The Bill was referred to the Committee but the Committee has not dealt with it to date, and I would like to know what my position is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think it is obvious to the House that there is some measure of dissatisfaction with the procedure being followed with respect to Private Members' Public Bills, Motions and Notices of Motions. The Table has provided me with a copy of the ruling by the then Deputy Speaker Laniel dated December 5, 1977 in which he reviewed the practice. He indicated that in his view the House at that time had found satisfaction. I make reference to that ruling and the date because I think it will relate to my next suggestion.

It seems to me that if the Hon. Member for Edmonton West were simply to indicate, or make a motion perhaps seconded by such other Hon. Member as may feel the same way, that in view of the fact that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization is reviewing all of the Standing Orders and procedures of the House and that there is a strong feeling about this, the Standing Committee should examine this issue to the eventual satisfaction of Members. That might be a very direct and satisfactory way of putting the matter before the Standing Committee.

Mr. Lambert: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, I would be attempting to put on a debatable motion and I do not think that I could. I have already intruded into the time of the Hon. Member who had the first item. I would agree that he be given an hour and that we just extend the time to so provide. I raised the point of order with regard to the drawing of Bills but I do not want to cut in on whoever is on the list for today. I shall write a very positive letter to the Chairman of the Committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It seems to me that the Hon. Member has resolved the point of the order. In that case perhaps we could proceed with the Bill standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

AMENDMENT TO ESTABLISH PARK ON MORESBY ISLAND AND ADJACENT ISLANDS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved that Bill C-454, an Act respecting a national park on Moresby Island and its adjacent islands, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill involves the creation of a park on south Moresby Island, which is in the Queen Charlotte Islands off the northwest coast of British Columbia amid the rainswept fiords and rugged mountains in the former ancestral home of the Haida Indians. Hon. Members may recognize the geography if they recall some of the wonderful pictures of the last remaining Haida totem poles in a state of nature on the West Coast.

I have a problem with my Bill. I found out that another Bill has been presented in the British Columbia Legislature by Mr. Lea, an Opposition MLAS. It is Bill M-208, the Southern Moresby Wilderness Park Act. His Bill is more detailed than mine and the area is better defined. In my Bill I had some problems with the definition of the area and so on.

I would ask leave of the House to let my Bill stand. Mr. Lea may shortly be in a position to implement his Bill. For other reasons as well I should like to have a chance to redraw the boundaries in a better way in my Bill. Whether we do it federally or provincially, in the end we should retain this unique area in Canada. It is a world ecological site, along with the pyramids and things like that. We should retain it for the future.

I know that many Members have indicated support for the Bill but I would ask that it stand until I can deal with the changes I have outlined.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the Hon. Member's motion. Is it agreed that Bill C-454 be withdrawn from debate for today and allowed to stand?

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, what I am concerned about is whether this should not be in the form of a resolution. A very considerable expenditure of funds is involved in the creation of a national park. The Hon. Member's idea is very commendable but I would have thought it would be presented in the form of a resolution that the Government of Canada give favourable consideration to the creation of such a national park. To that extent I would say that I think he would be wise to withdraw his Bill because I think it is entirely out of order.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member. He has been around the House a lot longer than I have and I appreciate his wisdom. I was hoping that I could achieve what I want by other methods, perhaps in the provincial area. I would ask the Hon. Member for Edmonton West if he would bear with me and agree to allow the Bill to stand. When I have another look at it I may want to withdraw it and put it in the form of a resolution. But I would like to have the option, so I would ask the Hon. Member not to stand in the way of consenting to have the Bill stand.

Mr. Lambert: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is the understanding of the Chair that there is unanimous consent that the Bill shall stand.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill stood.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I now have to put the question which Hon. Members will realize is basically the issue which took up the time of the House for half an hour under points of order.

Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceding No. 318 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, what would you do if we said no?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I would begin by calling the order numbers seriatim. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO ESTABLISH MOBILE POLLING STATIONS FOR NON-AMBULATORY ELECTORS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich) moved that Bill C-518, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (mobile polling stations), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this has been an interesting interlude, if I may call it that, with respect to the order and manner in which Private Members' Bills are chosen. I do not have the actual Order Paper here describing the three Bills which were to be discussed today, but they are not in any order which one could determine from their numbering.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) did raise the question of how the selection is made. I could indicate, as I am sure any other Hon. Member who has a Private Member's Bill come forward could indicate, that notice comes about as a result of a telephone call. I received such a call yesterday or the day before asking whether I would be prepared to have my particular Bill come forward. I was ready for it, but I am not satisfied, like many other Hon. Members, that this is the best way to proceed. We could revert to the practices of the past, which sometimes proved to be a pretty good order of doing business, and have the Bills selected in order after discussion with the Hon. Members involved to assure they would be here on the day their Bills are to come forward.

Another aspect of the Private Member's Bill is Private Members' Day, itself, which was not mentioned. It does not have anything to do with the change from the Wednesday to the Friday. It has to do simply with the matter of the three hours. There are never three full hours for debate on Private Members' Bills even on a Wednesday, Mr. Speaker. There are always matters such as Questions on the Order Paper and all sorts of other items which are brought forward.

I do feel, therefore, that we should take that into account. I am going to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the proceedings of today, particularly the matter which was raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West and the discussion which followed, all of which contributed to this particular matter, be especially referred to the Special Committee on Procedural Reform so that it might consider the wishes of the Hon. Members as to the disposition of the three Bills on Private Members' Day.

I am delighted that my particular Bill has finally come forward for discussion. It was given first reading three years ago almost to the day, on May 2, 1980. One of the criticisms which we all have of Private Members' Business is that there is an undue delay. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) mentioned that it is largely as a result of the failure of the Government to have a second session in this particular Parliament, or probably now a third session, so that there would be some order in the numbering of our Private Members' Bills. That may be one of the reasons why my Bill, which has the number 518, is unusually high on the list. The draw should work and then one should go through the other Bills, seriatim, but with plenty of advance notice.

Another matter related to these current rules which provide for the consideration of three Private Members' Bills on Wednesdays is that there be sufficient advance notice for the Hon. Member whose Bill is being brought forward so that he may find friendly disposition in his own Party or in other Parties of the House to have the Bill discussed in a suitable manner. Therefore, I do suggest that today's proceedings be referred to that Special Committee so they might consider the views expressed here today.

I have another complaint, Mr. Speaker, if that is the way to describe it, and that is that this Bill was introduced on May 2, 1980, very shortly after it was re-written and re-presented, immediately following the election in 1980. That is a time when all of us come back here with memories of errors or corrections which we want to make in the Elections Act—and I am talking about revisions in the Elections Act. I have talked about the permanent voters' list, for example. That is something which I have felt for a long time ought to be inaugurated. It would shorten the length of the election period, for one thing, and I believe it would also be cheaper, although I have had arguments to the contrary. While the memory is still fresh in our minds, Mr. Speaker, that is the time to discuss a matter such as we have been asked to discuss today, not three years after the event.

There is another element which I have had in mind to suggest as a modification to the Elections Act. I believe that the same privileges which exist for rural voters should be transferred to urban voters and urban voting stations. If these people, rural voters, are away during the time of the enumeration, they should still be sworn in and able to be put on the list. These things are forgotten three years after the event. I cite those examples as the most obvious.

This present Bill, Mr. Speaker, has a special purpose. I feel that it is time we made better provisions for the disabled, the handicapped, the aged and the shut-in so that they might vote.

There is one other category which I feel I should include, and that is the person who is in an emergency situation. If they are taken to the hospital because of an accident or because of sudden illness and they are deprived of their vote because they did not vote during the advance poll, they should have that opportunity. The proxy vote provision I believe is generally acknowledged as a complete mess and a failure. It does not work. I suggest, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that this particular Bill is intended to deal with that situation.

I tried the same idea once before back in 1976 after my second election. It appeared as Bill C-336. The subject matter was referred to committee where it was discussed. I have now been through four elections. On that earlier occasion I had been through only two and was perhaps not as conversant with the manner of dealing with a subject matter of that sort in Committee. However, if the subject matter of this Bill could be referred to Committee, which I would be very happy to see happen, I would be much better prepared to defend what I am intending to do through this Bill before that committee.

The last time I was before the committee on this subject I heard some of the most extraordinary rationalizations trotted out by a number of Hon. Members as to why this particular notion is not practical. What I am intending to do in this Bill, Mr. Speaker, in its simplest terms is to bring the ballot box to those who have difficulty getting out on voting day, for whatever reason.

The regulations for working out such a system should not be too complicated. We already have over 100 rules in the Canada Elections Act, falling into two categories under Appendix A and Appendix B. Another one or two rules to deal with mobile polling stations could be inserted without too much difficulty. Of course, the rules would have to deal with the security measures required to make sure that the ballot boxes are properly looked after at all times. That is done in any event by the polling clerk and scrutineers who should accompany the mobile van.

How do we ensure that those who vote by this method are struck off the voters' list in the place they would normally vote, so that second votes do not take place? I think that is very important and can be done. This Bill does not deal with the particulars of the manner of notification of a desire to make use of the mobile voting station. It might be two weeks or three weeks advance notice. When might the mobile poll be taken? Well, for example, on the days of the advance poll, or even a week prior to voting day. It might be two or three weeks prior, once the voters' list is stabilized.

How are the votes to be counted and distributed to the various constituencies where they belong once they have been deposited in the ballot box? Of course, there will have to be provision for the write-in vote because, as was suggested in the last committee hearing, it would be quite impossible that there be a collection of printed ballots for Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver. They are huge cities with several hospitals, for example, where the mobile poll would go and there would be people in those hospitals from several constituencies. I think there must be a method whereby, once the ballots are collected, they be distributed to the appropriate balloting station.

What service then is to be offered? To my mind, Mr. Speaker, the mobile poll should on appropriate notification call at hospitals as well as extended care facilities or nursing homes for the elderly. Even individual homes for individual voters. The proof of the need for the service can be dealt with, of course, in the regulations.

As has already been mentioned, provision will have to be made for advance notice of this particular need.

There have been many arguments put forward against this idea and that polls can even now be installed in hospitals. Well, all hospitals are not prepared to have these comings and goings. For example, a minimum of 25 people is required in order to have a poll installed in a hospital. The polling boxes are taken around from bed to bed. That is fair enough and that can be done. But if it can be done that way, I do not see why it cannot be done with a mobile poll. Having a separate polling station there to which the general public in the surrounding area might attend I think is not a very practical solution because of the unwanted and unneeded traffic withing a hospital. This applies to extended care facilities and nursing homes as well. I do not think they are prepared to put up with that sort of thing. So that many of the arguments advanced during the hearings I felt were trifling.

I think we should also bear in mind that there is provision in a number of provincial Elections Acts for this very matter. In Alberta, British Columbia and Manitoba, if I remember correctly, there is provision within the Elections Act for mobile polling stations. If it can work provincially, I see no reason why it cannot work federally.

As to notification of the person's home riding once he has voted in a mobile polling station, I think that is a very simple matter. Alexander Graham Bell is pretty well known in this country. There was some mention in one of the hearings that when you get to a hospital in a border area you might have people from another Province voting in that hospital. Still, that can be dealt with. Constituencies do stop at provincial borders, true, but there is a means of contacting the polling officer even in another Province. That comment notwithstanding, I suggest the facility is probably more useful within an urban context than in a rural context.

The write-in ballot provisions may have to be taken into account because, as I say, it would not be easy to have the printed ballots from a number of constituencies carried around. There are travellers in Canada who unfortunately might suffer an automobile accident and be taken to a hospital and deprived of their vote. Why should they not be able to vote?

For these reasons alone, Mr. Speaker, I urge that this particular Bill be given full consideration and, if possible, referred to committee and that the committee have hearings on it. We have all heard of Bills that get lost when they go to committee. I would like to think that perhaps if we set a six-week or two-month limit, some defineable limit within which this particular subject matter would be heard and a resolution arrived at that would satisfy that problem.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I will only take a moment of the time of the House on this Bill, the intent of which is certainly correct and proper. I certainly agree with the Hon. Member who moved the Bill that this provision is required in a riding such as my own consisting of 6,500 square miles and we have several hospitals. The only problem I have with it, though, is that to establish one mobile polling station would mean they would never make the rounds in one day within my constituency. So that the Bill could be construed to mean that we have only one mobile polling station in each electoral district.

For this reason, I think that a suggestion to refer this Bill to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections is quite proper. It is the Hon. Member's second attempt to have this particular convenience to the voters introduced into the Canada Elections Act, with his first attempt made in 1976 when he introduced a Private Member's Bill in the same fashion. That Bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections after second reading. It was never reported back to the House.

Therefore, I would move at this point:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-518, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act, be not now read a second time, but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn, and the subject matter therein referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections".

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that Your Honour called me to second the motion. It is the second time I have had occasion to offer to second a motion presented by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson). Now it has actually happened that I have done it. I will not occupy the time of the House for very long because I understand that the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) would like to speak for a few moments. He has always had an interest in the Bill.

When the Bill does go to Committee, I hope no one will be concerned about the fact that it appears to speak about a mobile voting station, as if it were singular, per riding. I think that the Interpretations Act would allow the singular to include the plupart and that the regulatory power of the Chief Electoral Officer could be used to deal with that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair has made an error. I saw the sense of agreement of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and, of course, then proposed his name as the seconder. However, that was an error because the Hon. Member is in fact rising to speak on the subject, and perhaps, with agreement, someone else will second the motion. We will consider the amendment seconded by Mr. Maltais.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it ought not to come as a surprise to any Hon. Member of the House, but your ruling is quite correct. I think that the rule concerning the seconder is something forgotten. I had hoped it would be forgotten today, but it was not.

At any rate, concerning problems, I think that the Chief Electoral Officer tries to meet the problems concerning apartment buildings, extended care and nursing homes. There is a singular problem with respect to hospitals. I must say, representing a constituency with both a rural and suburban make-up, that it would be particularly useful in rural areas. I must say that I can envisage it would be extremely useful in rural areas, where, for instance, extended care facilities are not large enough to warrant a polling station for itself. The people there have as much right to vote as people who live in larger areas.

All in all, I am delighted that my friend, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), has once again demonstrated his concern and brought the Bill forward and, as indicated by the Parliamentary Secretary, that it has been accepted by the Government side for consideration, as evident in the motion to withdraw the Bill and send the subject matter to the committee. I support it and look forward to hearing the words of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) for his Bill. I join with other Hon. Members in congratulating him on his success in having his Bill withdrawn, and having the subject matter referred to committee for study and consideration. I say this with tongue in cheek because I tried the same thing not less than a month ago concerning a matter similar to this one, and I was not as successful as the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich in convincing the Government.

The Bill I presented dealt with the right of Canadians to vote wherever they are at a time of general election, be they travelling abroad, in an embassy, on business, or working for the Canadian Forces overseas, but not as a teacher or as a member of the Forces. I thought the Bill made sense. However, I was not as lucky as the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich and I will have to go to him to learn a few tricks as to how one gets his Bill through and convinces the Government to act positively in such matters.

I just want to put a couple of comments on the record. I was told at the time that the Chief Electoral Officer, by statute, must come before Parliament at every session and present a report within 10 days after the convening of the session. I was told that we would have a session, God knows when, some time in the future, at which time the Chief Electoral Officer would be presenting certain recommendations. My argument at the time which, I think, would support the argument of the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich, was that we indeed did pass a Constitution not a year ago, a resolution adopted by the House. I want to read Article 3 of the Constitution for the Hon. Member because I think it would be very useful in his debate. Article 3 states:

> Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

In my opinion, that includes those who are physically handicapped, those who are disabled or temporarily in shut-in situations, perhaps as the result of an accident, in a hospital or otherwise. To me, every Canadian, whether he works abroad or is travelling abroad, should also have the right to vote. If I understand it correctly, the idea of a mobile polling station is one which should be seriously considered by the Chief Electoral Officer in areas such as the base at Lahr, where a substantial number of Canadians are working for us who are not eligible to vote at this time because they are not members of the regular Forces or teachers on the base, but are perhaps working in administration or as doctors. A cousin of mine is in charge of radio broadcasting there. He cannot vote, nor can his wife and children.

I find it disgraceful that in a country in which we passed our Constitution less than a year ago, there are still situations where Canadians working for our own Government would not be able to vote if a general election were to be called, and would be disenfranchised because they are outside the country.

I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich on his success with the Bill. I agree with the Parliamentary Secretary that it should go to committee. I would hope that he would use the argument that it is a constitutional right. It is one which we have earned and is to be followed and obeyed. He should also present argument concerning the costs involved. If the Committee is to argue costs, for God's sake, let us be frank. Not very many expenditures will be involved, although I know someone will raise it because it was raised before. I am sure the Hon. Member can get around that by saying that we are not adding any extraordinary costs to the process.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Not $200 million anyway.

Mr. Gauthier: We are just giving more Canadians, all Canadians, a basic democratic right to vote in any federal election.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words about some of my concerns about Bill C-518. I am definitely very supportive of this particular Bill. It is time we did introduce the measures which are espoused in the Bill. There are already some similar examples in Canada. I am referring to the fact that Manitoba is the leading light in the matter of mobile polling stations.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): One of the leading lights.

Mr. Lewycky: A number of provisions exist for those electors who are not ambulatory or who live in remote areas. For example, there is provision for mail ballots for individuals who are confined to their own homes. The returning officer, himself or herself, will personally deliver and pick up those ballots. From my own involvement in provincial and federal elections, I have noticed a great contrast.

• (1300)

There is also the provision of a travelling ballot that can be transported by car, together with the ballot box, the poll book, the district returning officers, the scrutineers and poll clerks. Certain areas are designated, such as senior residences, and a poll is held in these areas at a prearranged time.

I wonder if I should call it one o'clock and continue my few remaining comments at two o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I was allowing time to go by. I thought the Hon. Member wanted to put the matter through prior to one o'clock but I think, from his comments, that he has further remarks to make. In that case we will call it one o'clock and I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1:02 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) had the floor.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to continue the discussion on this excellent Bill in the name of the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich. Bill C-518 is an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act with regard to mobile polling stations.

Before we adjourned for lunch, I was referring to the fact that in Manitoba we have had a very profitable experience for a number of years regarding the provisions of voting facilities for the disabled and handicapped. I am very grateful to have had the opportunity to work for three years with the Society for Crippled Children and Adults of Manitoba. During that time the executive director was Mr. Archie Carmichael who was responsible for sensitizing myself and many other people to the needs of the disabled and the handicapped. It is because of pressure from individuals such as he that we were able to introduce changes to the Manitoba Elections Act.

For the benefit of the House I would like to share some of the provisions which are available in the Province of Manitoba.

I believe they would be very helpful and very instructive, assuming that this Bill will be going on to Committee. There are provisions for people who are in hospital. First I should mention that mobile polls in Manitoba are called moving polls. I invite Hon. Members to take a look at the Manitoba Elections Act because some of its provisions have been tested for a long period of time.

As I was saying, people in hospitals are able to vote either in their own stations or in mobile stations. If one happens to be confined to hospital outside his or her district—and of course this is very important for people in rural areas—there is provision for special blank forms which can be used. They can be placed into mobile polling stations as well. In addition there are special provisions for the blind and for those who are in various remand centres. These polling stations are available for those people who are charged with offences but are in detention centres awaiting trial. There is no minimum number of eligible voters necessary to receive this type of ballot service. Returning officers conduct surveys to determine the need. I am very glad to report to the House that to date this has worked very well.

Also there is provision in the Manitoba Elections Act for moving polls for sparse populations. Of course, northern areas pose certain problems. The Chief Electoral Officer has the power to declare any area remote and to have a mail-in ballot. In addition, there are regular polls in as many places as possible in northern areas. For example, in Churchill a ballot box is put on a train and voting is conducted on the train at various sidings. I do not know what will happen now that VIA Rail has cut out services in that area. I notice the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is present in the Chamber. Knowing his work and concern for the handicapped, I am sure he will take this matter under consideration and ensure that people in northern areas have these opportunities. I know he is aware that there will be experiments in regard to providing a rail-bus service. Perhaps he could assist in ensuring that these things come into effect so that people in northern areas qualify.

There is another interesting provision which I would like to highlight for the benefit of the House. It deals with disabled persons who may come to polling stations but because of the physical facilities at the polls may not be able to vote there. There is a provision whereby the deputy returning officer can move the ballot box to the disabled person. Of course there is a restriction that the ballot box cannot be moved more than 50 metres from an entrance to the building where a polling station is. I think we might want to look at that provision federally because I know such concerns have been raised with the Chief Electoral Officer. I am pleased to indicate that some of these provisions are under consideration.

In Section 45(22) of the current Act there is provision, where a polling station has been set up in a sanitorium, a home for the aged, a chronic hospital or similar institution, whereby the deputy returning officer can move the ballot box from room to room to people confined in bed. Furthermore, it has been known for the ballot box to be brought outside the polling station to people who are disabled. However, this is not strictly legal. The only provision in the current Act for such situations is that of proxy voting. With the new Charter of Rights and Freedoms individuals will want to vote and cast their ballots by themselves. The current provisions are clearly inadequate, and I mentioned the situation in Manitoba because we have additional provisions there which have been found to be very successful.

I would like to emphasize another point rather strongly. I refer specifically to the Obstacles Report. It is a nice, slick document but I think we should look at the substance of it as well. We ought to look beyond the gloss and glare and at its recommendations. It contains four recommendations which directly refer to voting rights and voting provisions for the disabled. Recommendation No. 5 is that we establish a postal vote system similar to Manitoba's. That is recommendation No. 5 of the Obstacles Report, which has received widespread circulation. It is important that we set up the appropriate machinery and programs recommended in the report to meet the needs of the disabled. It is a report that was worked on by many people.

Recommendation No. 6 is with regard to ceasing the policy of centralizing polling places. It specifically refers to Section 33(9) of the current Elections Act which gives discretionary power to centralize polls. The specific recommendation is that we deal with this and take into consideration the mobility problems of the disabled, the aged and the infirm.

Recommendation No. 7 talks of establishing orientation sessions for polling place personnel on the needs of disabled voters. This is something that should definitely be done. Returning officers of all constituencies and their staff should be provided with special training to ensure that the needs of the disabled are highlighted and provisions for the disabled are understood by all the staff.

Recommendation No. 8 of the Obstacles Report recommends that questions regarding accessibility for disabled voters be referred to a standing committee. Bill C-518 fits into the broader scope mentioned in the Obstacles Report. I wanted to emphasize that because I know the Government has highlighted the Obstacles Report. However, we have not seen much action on the specific recommendations. I hope we will very shortly.

In summary, there must be greater provision for the non-ambulatory federal electorate, the disabled. Providing a mobile polling station fits into that category. It is encouraging to see advances in various Provinces. I again refer to the Manitoba experience. I am also encouraged by the fact that the Chief Electoral Officer has indicated that he is studying what is being done in the Provinces and is having a dialogue with them. He has also stated that he is looking at the Obstacles Report presented by the committee.

The New Democratic Party is very much in favour of extending the voting franchise. Therefore, we wholeheartedly support the principal of the Bill. I do have one slight reservation with regard to the requirement that there have to be 50 electors before the service is offered. However, that is something that can be considered in Committee.

On behalf of the New Democratic Party, I commend the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich for his Bill. We hope it will receive speedy action, perhaps even before the next session.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the amendment which is before us. I do not want to repeat the procedural disputation we had previously. In this matter of considering the qualifications of those able to vote in a federal election, we start from the basic premise that a voter must be a person in a constituency and living within a certain polling subdivision. That is the basic rule.

As we know, a person who has moved during the election period may be able to correct his or her non-enumeration by going to a court of revision. In the usual instance of two months for the electoral period, the individual must return to his or her constituency to ensure they are on the electoral roll or that they get inscribed thereon through a court of revision. Conditions vary around the country with regard to ambulatory patients, those restricted persons and patients in hospitals.

First of all, I do not want to throw a wet blanket on this, but I suppose an electoral officer and his officials would be as welcome as a skunk at a hen party in a treatment hospital, going up and down the corridors to take the vote. The first consideration of health would immediately throw out that suggestion.

It used to be in some of the teaching hospitals that the polling station was set up in the nurses' residence. Under the present act, persons who are resident for a certain period prior to enumeration and resident at the time of the election could vote at the hospital. Other than that, patients in hospitals must return to their home, either on advance polling day or on election day.

There is one restriction that should be imposed. I cannot go so far as to say that ambulatory Canadians waltzing around in other parts of the country or the world should have the right to vote by dropping in at some point of reference and voting either by mail or otherwise. We have seen in other countries the gross difficulties that are caused by the mail-in vote. Usually most of the mail-in stuff has to be done before election day. People do not know for whom they are voting. There are any number of difficulties about voting.

There is a high proportion of Canadians who, resident in their homes, do not go out to vote. Either they are tired, it is raining or for some other reason they cannot be bothered going out to vote. It is not as though 95 per cent of Canadians vote and 5 per cent are disenfranchised because there are some restrictions on them.

In the case of hospitals, many doctors would hit you on the head for suggesting that their patients be disturbed in order to vote, to be placed on a gurney and transported to some central point in the hospital to vote, or have a troop consisting of the DRO, a porter, and scrutineers traipsing from room to room to take the ballots of patients.

Who knows the constituency of residence of the individual patients? Who are the candidates? What are the types of official ballots? These are important points. I am not saying that technically it cannot be done; certainly it can be done. You could arrange to have almost 100 per cent of the population vote if you wanted to spend the money and go to all the trouble and possibly follow up the reasons for people not voting.

In any event, with a mobile van moving around in a city constituency where there is a higher concentration of hospitals, the question is whether the van can get to all of them. It would certainly require more than one van in certain places and none in others. I do not know how one would cover the area in rural constituencies. Perhaps my Hon. colleague's riding of Esquimalt-Saanich may be covered by a mobile van moving at speed during the day. Perhaps Victoria could be covered. I am wondering about northern constituencies such as Skeena and Prince George and Peace River. There is no way that these constituencies could be covered even if there were several mobile vans. These questions need to be looked into.

In so far as persons who are restricted to their homes are concerned, I would think that that would present the greatest difficulty. A dear young thing with a couple of small children may say, "I cannot get away from home right now". A van would have to call at that home. That is nonsense because her husband has four hours at the end of the day free from employment to go and vote. Those people who want to vote will find the opportunity. In many cases, if people want to vote, they can. It must be remembered that people have a duty to vote. It is a freedom. People have the right to vote. That is what this democratic country must have as its foundation. Surely to goodness it is not up to the Government of Canada to take these people by the hand and lead them along a plush carpet to the polling station.

In any event, I am in agreement with the motion that the subject matter of this Bill be referred to the committee. There are many things that have been discussed by Hon. Members today with regard to electoral reform, and there are many other things that can be discussed.

The question was raised about prisoners. Well, there I draw the line. I was one of the first to participate in bringing polling stations to mental hospitals where there is a voluntary section. May I say that I do not know whether these patients gained anything by the visits of people electioneering in the hospital. Not very many patients exercised their right to vote. If patients in a mental hospital are attached to a poll and an address is given, in many instances that would stigmatize all those persons who are on the voters' list as being people who are patients in a mental hospital. I do not think that that is information that must necessarily be made public.

With those few remarks, I hope that the committee will get on with this subject and will not emulate the committee that was charged with looking after the subject matter of the Bill presented by my colleague for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceding Order 440 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Ferguson) agreed to.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Accordingly the order is discharged, the Bill withdrawn, and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Bill withdrawn and order discharged.

THE SENATE OF CANADA REFORM ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East) moved that Bill C-640, an Act to provide for structural reform of the Senate of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I thank you and the House for the opportunity to speak on my Private Members' Bill C-640, an Act to provide for structural reform of the Canadian Senate.

My intense interest in Senate reform began in 1978 after I had resigned my ministerial post in the Government of Alberta. Since then, I have pursued several initiatives in regard to Senate reform.

This House is aware that on November 18, 1981, I introduced a motion to establish a joint committee of this House and the Senate to bring before Parliament a Bill to provide for structural reform of the Senate. That motion was seconded by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and was debated in the House on June 4, 1982.

On November 3, 1981, I introduced Bill C-640, an Act to provide for the structural reform of the Senate of Canada. We are today debating this Bill, and I trust that Members will not hesitate to participate in the discussion.

On December 20, 1982, I released a major report entitled "Renewed Federalism; Structural Reform of the Canadian Senate". This is a major study on the origin of the Senate, its mechanics and composition, followed by a review of recent Senate reform proposals. It includes an analysis of the consequences of the Constitution Act 1981 and the new amending formula on the future of Senate reform. It also discusses the need for legitimacy, accountability, independence, and stability as well as continuity in a reformed Senate.

This is followed by an in-depth analysis of structure and content, the foundation and analysis that underlie the evolution of Bill C-640. Every Member received a copy of this report. Several thousand copies have been distributed and it is now listed as a Parliamentary Library document. The report fully discusses Bill C-640.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the report has been translated into French and 500 copies in this official language were recently distributed. I wish to publicly apologize that it has taken so long to get the report translated and printed in French.

Many people have received a copy of the report and have commented on its content. In particular, Senator Eugene Forsey examined the document in depth. His comments have been both pertinent and useful, and I publicly thank him very much for them. All political observers acknowledge that Senate reform is urgent and is the first priority for additional constitutional reform.

On December 16, 1982 the Government introduced in the Senate a notice of motion to establish a Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons to consider Senate structural reform and to bring forth a proposal no later than December 1, 1983. The Government resolution is very similar; in fact, it is almost a copy of the resolution that I introduced on November 18, 1981. The Government resolution originating in the Senate on December 16, 1982 was approved by the House months ago. Why has the Government not moved sooner with the resolution to get the Joint Committee working? Why did it wait until yesterday after it knew we were going to debate Senate reform through Bill C-640 today? It seems to me that the Government only moves when it is prodded. Nevertheless, we must get on with the process of Senate structural reform.

Certainly the first priority is the economy of the nation, but the sickness of that very economy to a large degree is the result of a weak, ineffective and uncaring Senate. The economic failures can be attributed to the failure of federal provincial relations, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in one of his latest interviews, and the lack of meaningful regional and provincial input into national economic and social policies. This input and restraint was partially the function of the Senate. But it failed to restrain the Government throughout the seventies and it completely capitulated to the Government in the eighties.

The Senate must be reformed. The function of the Senate is to represent adequately in the Canadian Parliament the national interest, the regional interests and the provincial interests. With respect to the national interest, its over-riding function is national unity, national cohesiveness and national accountability. Where was the Senate voice during the Quebec referendum, or during the growth of separatism in the West? It was not heard.

Where was the voice of the Senate in regard to regional interests during the entire debate over the National Energy Program? It was not heard.

Indeed, where was the collective voice of the Senate during the constitutional drama in regard to protecting provincial interests such as that of Quebec? Its voice was barely a whisper. Indeed, it gave up its constitutional veto with barely a whimper. A suspensive veto was appropriate, but surely not for all possible constitutional change. Surely the Fathers of Confederation set up the Senate to protect minority rights such as Quebec's language and cultural rights in a vast sea of language and cultural homogenization. Surely the Senate should have retained a narrow selective veto over certain provincial and regional interests and rights.

Yes, the Senate must be reformed—but how? In my view, Bill C-640 shows the way—a compromise between two extremes, if approval by Parliament and seven Provinces having 50 per cent of the population of Canada is to be a reality.

What are the two extremes? The first is the provincial view and that is to scrap the existing Senate and replace it with a totally provincially appointed Senate, completely subservient to provincial Governments and their interests. Such is the fundamental basis of the Ontario proposal from 1978, British Columbia's 1978 proposal, the Quebec Beige Paper proposal of 1980, the Alberta Government's proposal of 1982, and even the Pepin-Robarts 1979 proposal. This extreme is simply not acceptable to the Canadian Parliament. In my view it never will be.

The other extreme is a fully elected Senate on a regional or provincial basis. Such an elected Senate would be powerful, overshadowing and compromising the authority and influence of Premiers, provincial Governments and legislatures in federal provincial relations and bargaining. Indeed, such an elected Senate would seriously compromise the fundamental authority of the House of Commons itself. Such an elected Senate is becoming increasingly popular with proponents such as Senators Roblin, Manning and Frith and Gordon Robertson, the former Clerk of the Privy Council.

A fully elected Senate at this time is an emotional illusion. It is not a practical reality at this time. The Provinces will never accept this extreme, nor will the House of Commons. An elected Senate can only be accomplished step by step, not in one leap. Such is the essence of Bill C-640. The Bill, through the introduction of the reconfirmation principle, is a possible step by step process to a fully elected Senate on a provincial and regional basis.

What then is the reality, the direction, or solution to reform? Death of the Senate through atrophy is one solution, and it will surely be the reality soon if reform is not forthcoming. It would not be particularly difficult for a new Government in Ottawa to find agreement with seven Provinces having 50 per cent of the Canadian population to scrap the Senate, especially now that it has been reduced to a suspensive veto on constitutional change.

Is there a solution which would retain the Senate? Yes there is, and it is a compromise between the two extremes I just mentioned—a compromise acceptable to the Provinces, to the federal Government and to the people of Canada. It was just such a compromise or middle ground proposal that I put together in Bill C-640. The Senate has all the powers that it needs. What it requires is structural reform.

The key is to have a Senate of two parts—one part being provincially appointed Senators, and the other part being federally appointed Senators on a regional basis. But the structure must meet the needs for legitimacy, independence and stability. Bill C-640 does meet these needs.

To represent both the regional and provincial interests in Parliament a reformed Senate must have provincially appointed and/or elected Senators and regionally appointed and/or elected Senators. The ratio of provincial Senators to regional Senators in a restructured Senate is fundamental. In Bill C-640, this ratio is one-third provincial and two-thirds regional or federal. Some argue that this ratio should be 50-50 as in Bill C-60 or 60-40 in favour of the Provinces.

Bill C-640 recognizes five regions in Canada with each being assigned 30 Senators, mainly because the Atlantic region now has 30 Senators, for a total structure of 150 Senators. The five regions are the Atlantic, Quebec, Ontario, Central and Pacific. Of the 30 Senators in each region, each Province would appoint five to maintain equality of provincial status, and the difference would be regional Senators appointed by a Standing Committee of the House of Commons, not solely by the Prime Minister. Under Bill C-640 the Atlantic region would have 20 provincial Senators and 10 regional or federally appointed Senators. Quebec and Ontario would each have 5 provincial Senators and 25 regional, federally appointed Senators. The Central region would have 15 provincial and 15 regional Senators, and the Pacific region would have 10 provincial and 20 regional Senators.

Each Senator would be appointed for a six-year term and at the end of the term would have to seek reconfirmation or election by the people to continue in a second or third term.

Equality of provincial status in regard to provincial appointments is desirable but idealistic and has been discarded by all the provincial proposals. Indeed, provincial senatorial appointments in all provincial proposals are weighted according to population. Alberta's proposal of five population weighted categories is reasonable. There are other reasonable proposals. Therefore Bill C-640 can be altered effectively to incorporate the Alberta proposal.

The Atlantic region would, therefore, have 16 federally appointed Senators and 14 provincially appointed Senators. In other words, of the provincial Senators, Prince Edward Island would have two; Newfoundland, four; New Brunswick, four; Nova Scotia, four; and the rest would be regionally federally appointed Senators. The Quebec and Ontario regions would have 20 federally appointed Senators and 10 provincially appointed Senators. The Central region would have 12 federally appointed Senators and 18 provincially appointed Senators. The Pacific region would have 20 federal and 10 provincial appointments, and that is eight for British Columbia and two for the Yukon. The over-all Senate with this variation in Bill

C-640 would have 62 provincially appointed Senators and 88 federally appointed regional Senators. Provincially appointed Senators could, of course, be elected Members of provincial Legislatures, indeed even Ministers.

I structured Bill C-640 prior to the patriation of the Constitution and before an amending formula was agreed upon. If I were doing it today, I would make several modifications. The first change I would make is to provide the Provinces with the right to recall their appointed Senators by a two-thirds vote of their Legislative Assembly. Second, I would use Alberta's suggested weighting formula of provincially appointed Senators, rather than 5 appointments by each province. Third, I would limit the total Senate to 125 Members, of which 62 would be provincially appointed and 63 federally appointed or regional Senators. Each of the five regions would then have 25 Senators. It would not be necessary to maintain the Atlantic region at 30 Senators with the new Constitution. The Atlantic region would have 14 provincial Senators and 11 federally appointed Senators. Both Ontario and Quebec regions would have 10 provincial appointments and 15 federal appointments. The Central region would have 18 provincial—Alberta 8, Manitoba 6, and Saskatchewan 4—appointments and seven federal appointments. The Pacific region would have ten provincial appointments that is, British Columbia, eight; Yukon, two provincial Senators, and fifteen federal appointments.

Such a mix would surely be more acceptable to the Provinces than the mix suggested in Bill C-640. I shall be following closely the meetings and hearings of the Joint Committee on Senate Structural Reform, and I trust that each Hon. Member of this House will also be following closely those meetings. I trust that many Hon. Members will read the report which my office has presented. I will make myself available to explain any part of it to any Hon. Member of this House. This is a topic, Mr. Speaker, which I can speak on for hours, but I see my time is up. I hope that other Hon. Members will participate in this debate.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, before I discuss some of the details of the Bill before us this afternoon, I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) on his long-standing efforts to encourage public debate on Senate reform. He has acquired an in-depth knowledge of many of the intricacies associated with reform of the other place. He has demonstrated a grasp of the main issues to be addressed in Senate reform, and of the obstacles which may need to be overcome before it can be achieved. Moreover, he has done his best to expand the discussion on Senate reform, both among Hon. Members and among the general public. The Hon. Member for Edmonton East has been very dedicated on the subject. The Bill which we are discussing today was introduced in November, 1981, nearly a year and a half ago. At that time the Hon. Member circulated a few pages of explanatory notes about Bill C-640. That was a useful step, since I am sure many would agree that parts of this Bill are somewhat complex. A couple of weeks later, the Hon. Member presented a motion asking that a special joint committee of both Houses be established to report on "structural reform of the Senate". This motion requested that the proposed Committee consider a number of reports on Senate reform published in recent years, along with the federal Government's Bill C-60 of 1978, and this Bill.

The Hon. Member's motion was debated on June 4, 1982, but was not adopted. However, he had a chance to present his ideas on Senate reform on that occasion, as did a number of others from all political Parties. Even though his motion was not adopted, he was not daunted. He published a concise article in the well respected journal "Policy Options" in September-October 1982. Last December, he circulated a detailed and, I feel, a useful study prepared by him and his research assistant. The study is called "Renewed Federalism: Structural Reform of the Canadian Senate". It contains a great deal of information on the history of Senate reform and on several major proposals for reform of the past several years. And, as we might expect, in that report Bill C-640 appears as the Hon. Member's recommendation for Senate reform. I was interested to hear today that he has other suggestions regarding the question of Senate reform which, perhaps are not reflected in Bill C-60. Nevertheless, his concern and his contribution to this question is certainly formidable.

As Hon. Members can see, the sponsor of today's Bill has become a determined advocate of Senate reform. While his own particular remedy may not be considered perfect, it has a number of good points. More important, perhaps, is the way in which he has stimulated a debate on Senate reform through the various efforts which I have described. These efforts have been timely. Last December, as we all know, the terms of reference of a Special Joint Committee were announced and agreed to by the House and by the other place. The Committee will soon begin its work. I hope that a public debate on Senate reform will ensue as a result of the appointment of this Committee and that a large number of Canadians will become involved in this very important question. The Hon. Member has helped to encourage such a debate and I hope he will continue his work as the Committee carries out its task.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, it would be useful to consider just why the Hon. Member has pursued the subject of Senate reform so assiduously. I know his sincerity is unquestioned, and I believe many Hon. Members would agree with his reasons for arguing that Senate reform should be seriously considered. When he spoke on his motion on June 4, 1982, the Hon. Member for Edmonton East pointed out that with patriation an amending formula was incorporated in the Canadian Constitution along with a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. He went on to say, "We must now take the reform process one step further". In his remarks that day, and on other occasions, he implied that this next stage in the reform process should involve an examination of our national political institutions. In the notes which he circulated with Bill C-640, he stated:

> The fact is that reform of the Senate won't wait much longer. We have reached a point in our national development where we must make our institutions more responsive to every facet of Canadian society.

The Hon. Member's views on the phases through which constitutional reform might proceed accord with the feelings of many Hon. Members on this side of the House. Since at least 1968, Liberal Ministers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have said that once patriation was achieved, once we had the means to amend all parts of our Constitution in Canada, we might then turn our attention to national institutions. We can now amend all our Constitution here, Mr. Speaker, through the amending formula with its various procedures for different items of constitutional change. I feel that with the establishment of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform we are embarking on that second phase.

When I quoted from the notes the Hon. Member for Edmonton East circulated with Bill C-640, I referred to his view that our institutions should be more responsive. I think it is fair to say that this notion of responsiveness is closely connected to the desire of many to see the Senate's role in regional representation strengthened. In his article in "Policy Options" the Hon. Member wrote:

> Unless steps are taken to provide the regions and provinces with a more meaningful input and role in the institutions of the central Government, there is every indication that national unity will be increasingly threatened.

It is no exaggeration to say, Mr. Speaker, that these words strike a cord among many of those who have been looking at Senate reform in the past few years. The Canada West Foundation examined how the Senate might better speak for the regions in its 1981 report entitled "Regional Representation". All the details of their proposed reform may not find favour with everyone, but I encourage Hon. Members to consider the analysis in this very interesting report. The former Secretary to the Cabinet, Gordon Robertson, has written about Senate reform on several occasions. He is very concerned about regional representation in national institutions, as was evident in a speech he made in Quebec City only a month ago when he said:

> In Canada ... our regional differences are unusually wide and deep. They require to be effectively represented, voiced and discussed as a part of the operation of our central governing structure.

It is clear that this concern about regional representation in Parliament is shared by the Government. The Special Joint Committee's terms of reference make this very clear. That Committee has been asked:

> To consider and report upon ways by which the Senate of Canada could be reformed in order to strengthen its role in representing people from all regions of Canada and to enhance the authority of Parliament to speak and act on behalf of Canadians in all parts of the country;

So, Mr. Speaker, it is plain that the Hon. Member is far from a lone voice calling for a serious examination of regional representation in the other place. Rather, he is one among a growing number who feel that the Senate should, through some kind of reform, be better able to speak on behalf of the various regions of this country. This theme of regional representation is evident in Bill C-640 which allocates 30 Senators to each of five regions, even though direct representation of the Provinces is also included.

While I feel the Hon. Member should be given a great deal of credit for this Bill, some parts of it puzzle me. In the remainder of my remarks I would like to raise a few questions. Others may wish to comment on some of these points later in the debate. The Bill's sponsor may himself think about some of them if he plans to develop further his ideas on Senate reform. I understand from listening to him, and I think it is to his credit, that he is prepared to keep an open mind and develop this very important question and policy as he goes.

First of all, I must ask why a Senate of 150 Members is proposed. At present, there are 104 seats in the other place.

Mr. McGrath: One hundred and six.

Mr. MacLellan: One hundred and six.

Mr. McGrath: Six from Newfoundland.

Mr. McKinnon: The same as B.C.

Mr. MacLellan: Well, 104, 106, but in that general framework.

Mr. McGrath: There was 100; is that right?

Mr. MacLellan: There was 100. Therefore, why increase its size by almost 50 per cent? Other proposals in recent years have raised the total membership somewhat as well. The Goldenberg-Lamontagne Committee report proposed 126 seats; Bill C-60 suggested 188; others, however, like the Pepin-Robarts task force, suggested a smaller Senate of around 60 members. It is useful to make some comparisons with second Chambers in other federal countries. The American Senate, for example, has 100 members. In Australia, there are 64 Senators, and in the Federal Republic of Germany there are only 45 members in the federal second Chamber, the Bundesrat. I offer this only as a thought, but I wonder whether Canadians would readily accept such an increase in the size of the Senate, especially when this House is to increase by 28 Members after redistribution.

I would also like to comment on the Bill's provision, namely Clause 10, for Senators to have their terms reconfirmed on the basis of a so-called non-partisan campaign. That Clause reads as follows:

> A Senator campaigning for reconfirmation shall do so on a non-partisan basis, identifying with no official political party represented in the House of Commons but identifying only with the role and performance of the Senate of Canada.

In the report he prepared last December, the Hon. Member explained the purpose of this Clause, namely to remove the process of reconfirmation from the realm of partisan politics as much as possible. Senators seeking reconfirmation would not be able to fall back on their Party affiliation. They would be compelled to campaign exclusively on their "record of achievement" in terms of legislative review or regional representation.

Now, if I might say so, this sounds rather unidealistic, Mr. Speaker. How could Senators divorce themselves from their political parties? After all, according to this Bill, 50 of them would be appointed by provincial Governments and the rest by what is called a Regional Appointments Standing Committee of this House. Why should we expect that some six years after their appointment Senators would conduct a reconfirmation campaign as "neutral" representatives? In fact, perhaps the Members of a reformed Senate could help to strengthen our national political Parties in areas where representation is now lacking. In this case, why should they want to hide their Party's allegiance? I know the Hon. Member would like to see regional representation emphasized above other considerations in a reformed Senate, but I am not sure we should go as far as he proposes, even if Section 10 of Bill C-640 were practical.

There are other questions about this Bill that come to mind but I know other Hon. Members wish to participate in what I consider a very timely debate. Once again, I commend the Hon. Member for Edmonton East for his hard work and thoughtful presentations on Senate reform. He has helped to show how the Parliament of Canada can help lead a public debate on Senate reform. I hope other Members will follow his example in the coming months as our Special Joint Committee carries out its work. I would think, as a personal observation, that members of the Special Joint Committee would be remiss if they did not include the Hon. Member for Edmonton East as one of their witnesses. I hope that they will give very careful attention to the Hon. Member's Bill C-640. It is a good piece of work which serves the Parliament and people of Canada well, and I would like to commend the Hon. Member.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) for bringing Bill C-640 before the House. I think the question of Senate reform is one which has been appropriate in Canada for many years. As has been said before, everyone knows we need Senate reform because, quite frankly, the Senate has not served the cause of Canadian democracy. In fact, it has very often served to undermine it. We should not be surprised because, in fact, the Senate was not designed to enhance democracy; rather, it was designed to keep a check on it. It is to prevent a surfeit of democracy. Sir John A. Macdonald, in one of his more cynical comments, said, "We must protect the interests of minorities, and the rich are always fewer in number than the poor". So much for the protection of minorities, those whom the Senate is supposed to look after.

The Senate does not have a terribly distinguished history. In 1896, allegations were made that Senate seats were on sale at a bargain basement rate of $10,000. The money was supposed to go into the coffers of the Party which was in power at that time, which just happened to be the Liberal Party.

Mr. Nickerson: Things haven't changed very much.

Mr. Manly: I do not believe that Senate seats are being sold these days. I believe that they are being given away.

In our time we have seen a steady stream of appointments by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who has appointed friends and cronies. Therefore, I welcome the Hon. Member's initiative in bringing forth the Bill.

Bill C-640 attempts to deal with some of the problems in Senate appointment. One of the basic problems, as those of us from western Canada know, is the present regional imbalance. I am not sure whether it is laughable or lamentable, but considering the low opinion which most of us have of the Senate, I suppose it is laughable that a Province like British Columbia, with 2.8 million people, has six Senators, and Prince Edward Island has four Senators. Perhaps six Senators is enough for British Columbia. However, the Hon. Member wants to get around this imbalance by creating an extra region in the Pacific which would take in British Columbia and the Yukon. That seems to be a reasonable compromise if we are to have a Senate. However, we must ask if we really need more Senators. Is this really the route by which to go?

I am concerned that Bill C-640 has a very cumbersome process of appointment. The Hon. Member for Edmonton East outlined a two-tiered system of appointments by which some would be appointed on a regional basis through the federal Government and others would be appointed provincially by provincial Governments. The process seems to me to be cumbersome and rather difficult to understand. It would mean that ordinary people would not really know how their Senators were appointed. Of course, that would be no different from now when many people wonder how the Senators are appointed.

The Hon. Member pointed to the problem that a fully-elected Senate would overshadow the House of Commons. To me this seems to rather beg the question. If a Senate which was to be elected and had real power would overshadow the House of Commons, and that is really what we are afraid of, then what is this whole exercise about? If we need to strengthen the House of Commons so that we have the power to do the things that we need to do to serve the people of Canada, let us do that, but let us not just tinker with the system and have a Senate which is neither fish nor fowl, nor even a good red herring.

The appointments of Senators by the Provinces, which the Hon. Member would retain, would continue to retain the patronage elements which I think all of us, or at least all of us within this Party, would want to see eliminated.

The possibility of the reconfirmation of present Senators when they reach the age of 75 rather boggles the mind. Some of these Senators whom we have seen appointed over the last few months will not reach the mandatory age of retirement until well into the twenty-first century. To think that 25 years from now, these tired old Senators would come up and people would actually have to vote as to whether or not they wanted them to retire finally or not, seems to me to be a little bit ludicrous.

However, apart from the specific merits or demerits of Bill C-640, it seems to me that there are two fundamental questions which we must ask about Senate reform. The first is, will any genuine reform of the Senate be acceptable to the Government? The quick answer to that is no. The Government does not want Senate reform because there is no point in it from the point of view of the Government. There is no point in reforming the Senate because it is ideally designed to serve its two main functions, those functions being to serve as the top prize in the pyramid of patronage and to serve as an internal lobby for business interests. I would just like to make a couple of comment on each of those points.

In terms of patronage, we have seen the appointments made by the present Prime Minister over the last several years, We have seen former executive assistants appointed. We have seen the appointment of a Conservative Member to the Senate, a Member from a seat which, in all probability, would go Liberal in a byelection and which, indeed, did go Liberal. We have seen the appointment of a former Member for Spadina to the Senate, a Member whose main qualification, according to Saturday Night magazine, was that he travelled well. He was appointed in order to make way for a parachute candidate who was supposed to land in Spadina and take that seat for the Liberals and, hopefully, have a seat in the Cabinet. Unfortunately, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), managed to win that seat for the New Democratic Party because the people of Spadina and the people of Canada just do not like the kind of patronage associated with that kind of parachute candidate.

We have seen the appointment of the former Clerk of the Privy Council to the Senate. Yesterday, the announcement came that one of the Prime Minister's long-time friends and travelling companions was appointed. The list continues. In addition, the Senate has been used as a plum and a safe haven for Party organizers and bagmen, by both the Liberals and the Conservatives. It has been used as a source for pseudo-representation on the Cabinet from regions where those particular Parties have not had the ability to elect Members, the Conservatives from Quebec, the Liberals from the Prairies and British Columbia. Therefore, we see very well that the Senate has served the interests of the Government as the top prize in patronage appointments.

Second, the Government is not particularly anxious to see the Senate disappear because its friends and big business want the Senate there. It serves as an internal lobby for business interests. In a study of the Canadian Senate by Colin Campbell, called "The Canadian Senate: A Lobby from Within", at page 71, he quotes two Senators who discussed their method of operation. One said:

> Without us, the Cabinet and the bureaucracy would never get the type of cooperation out of the private sector which is needed to make the system run.

Mr. Campbell continued:

> The second corporation lawyer emphasizes the tactics which business reviewers employ. He says that they frequently ask members of their law firms to help them draft amendments to Bills. Then they lobby according to an established pattern: "I go to the Minister in charge and show him what I think should be changed in the Bill and ask for his cooperation; then I go over to the Commons and start lobbying among the M.P.s, pointing out, of course, that I have been to see the Minister and that I have his blessing."

● (1510)

> Another Senator touches upon some of these points when he summarizes his perception of business review. Although the role emerges from the business and legal expertise of senators, he says, it relates most fundamentally to an appreciation of the legislative process. Bureaucrats want to 'cover the waterfront' in legislation. Senators, on the other hand, ask two crucial questions of each Bill before they vote on it. First, does it preserve Parliament's ultimate authority to make law, especially by denying Ministers excessive discretionary powers? Second, does it meet those requirements of the business community which are essential to maintenance of the free enterprise system? This Senator's view, then, is explicitly oligarchic. In fact, he voluntarily suggests that the Founding Fathers established the Senate because "they were worried about the possibility, without an Upper House, of popular swings which would take command in the House of Commons and generate legislation that throws the whole system out of whack."

Campbell details the efforts of Senators in restricting progressive tax changes or in the dilution of FIRA.

We all recognize that business has legitimate interests and that those interests need to be represented in Parliament. But those interests should be seen in context with other legitimate interests; the interests of consumers and labour. Any conflicts between those different interests should be fought out in the public arena. Business should not have the privileged access to the ears of Ministers and to caucus which the Senate gives them and does not give to other groups. Yet this is the very basic reason for the existence of the Senate.

It seems to me that from the point of view of the Government which can use the Senate as a patronage plum and wants to represent the interests of business, it has the Senate as a convenient lobby to keep it informed and it has no real interest in Senate reform.

That leads me to the second question and perhaps the most basic of all: is the Senate worth reforming? Do we need a Senate? From the point of view of our Party, the answer is no. The Senate has not served the Canadian people in the past. We do not see any useful functions that the Senate can be serving in the present or in the future, and the most meaningful contribution we can make to Senate reform in our time is to push for its abolition. I urge that upon my hon. friends.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to stand and speak on Bill C-640 today.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Our Party has not yet had a chance to take part in this debate. Surely we are entitled to one speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kilgour): I was misinformed. In that case I will recognize the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I will give the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) a little time so that he can have the privilege of talking out the Bill. I will leave that honour and distinction to him.

The question that was posed to us by the Hon. Member who just took his seat is: do we need a Senate? I believe that we do. I believe that the federal system does require a bicameral legislature. I do not believe that there is a federal state in the world that does not have a bicameral legislature. It is for the very obvious and fundamental reason that varying sizes of states or provinces mean various sizes in the representation of those states and provinces. Therefore it is necessary to have an upper Chamber to balance the disproportionate representation which often takes place in the elected Chamber or House.

The subject of Senate reform is almost as old as the nation itself. It has been in existence since shortly after we became a nation. It is interesting and ironic that we should be talking today about Senate reform when we look around this place and find, I suspect, that we ourselves are desperately in need of a little reform in this institution.

I would hesitate to draw to the attention of the House the fact that we may be operating with something less than a quorum, although there is a quorum within the environs of this Chamber. If there were to be a quorum called we would have a quorum very quickly.

The fact of the matter is that we are dealing with reforming the other House of our Parliament. When one sees the attendance here today, I suppose it is commensurate with the interest that there is here in that particular subject.

I am one who believes that the Senate can and does serve a very useful function. If we go back over the committees of the Senate, I can think of the Committee on Poverty which conducted an excellent study and brought in excellent recommendations under Senator Croll. I think of the Senate Committee on Aging, and the Committee on the Media. There are a number of Senate and standing committees of the Senate which do very good work on an ongoing basis. The problem is that no one knows what is going on there because no one pays any attention to it, least of all the press. I believe that is unfortunate.

We find ourselves in a position today where events have overtaken the Hon. Member's Bill. Only yesterday, the House agreed to a joint resolution for a Senate-House committee on the subject of Senate reform. It is interesting that that initiative came from the Senate, and it is to the credit of the Senate that it would include Members of the House of Commons on a joint committee. They did not have to proceed in that manner and could have carried on their study with their own committee, as we are indeed doing with our special committee on our rules. They felt, quite rightly and to their credit, that the elected representatives of the people should have some say in reforming the Senate of our Parliament.

To my knowledge there will be, for the first time, a Joint Committee on Senate reform. That is not to suggest that it has not been studied before. One only has to go to the Library of Parliament to see the reams and reams of paper from numerous studies over the past 70 years. I believe this is the first time, however, that it has been the subject of a joint committee of both Houses.

Having said that events have overtaken the Bill in terms of the joint resolution setting up the Joint Committee, I believe that we have to give that Committee an opportunity to do its work. We should not prematurely judge what our representatives on that Committee will put forward and whatever consensus they will arrive at with the representatives from the other place. Hence, one resists the temptation of putting forward one's own particular views on how one sees Senate reform.

I do believe that we will continue to require a Senate if our federation is to survive and prosper. How else can smaller Provinces be assured of an equal voice in the affairs of the nation unless we have an upper House that tends to balance the disproportionate representation by population that we have in this, the elected Chamber?

It is interesting to note that that great democracy to the south of us only got around to having an elected Senate after the turn of the century. I stand to be corrected, but I believe it was around 1912 that the U.S. Senate became an elected House. Prior to that time I believe it was appointed by the States of the Union. Today, of course, it is not only an elected Senate but, in terms of the U.S. Congress, it is a very powerful Senate and one that has caused many problems in regard to the division of power within the U.S. Constitution. Indeed, an example of that is the Canada-U.S. Boundaries and Fisheries Agreement. That was an agreement that was painfully worked out between the Governments of Canada and the United States over a period of two years, only to be killed on the floor of the Senate by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. This gives some idea of the scope and the power which has grown in the elected Senate of the United States. Which should we have in Canada? Should we have an elected Senate? There is an argument to be made for that, and I tend to opt for it. Should we have a Senate of term appointments? Some suggest ten-year appointments. Members could certainly put forward arguments to support that thesis.

I certainly do not believe that the tenure right now is acceptable. I believe the life tenure, or what virtually amounts to a life tenure, retirement at 75 years of age, is not acceptable. Should we have appointments made solely by the Provinces? Should we have appointments made by the Provinces and the federal Government, or should we opt for an elected Senate? These are the questions which will be studied by the Joint Committee. I look forward to the report of that Committee. Perhaps it will generate a more lively debate than we have had in this place today.

Having said all that, I suspect that if we come back here in 25 or 50 years' time, we will still be talking about Senate reform. The point can be made and has to be made that there is a role in our federal system for the Senate. Whether it should take the form of an elected Senate, a term-appointed Senate, a life-appointed Senate, a Senate of regional representation, a Senate elected by some form of proportional representation or a combination of all these, are questions which seize the imagination. One can only hope that the Joint Committee will once and for all put the subject to rest. In any event, whatever evidence comes before the Joint Committee, I hope we will still have a bicameral legislature. If our country is to survive as a federal state, we have to have a bicameral legislature.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the time remaining I would like to make a few comments in the area of Senate reform. I agree with the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) that there should be a bicameral system in Canada. I disagree strongly with the position of the New Democratic Party which, strangely enough, is precisely that of the Labour Party of Britain. That Party believes the House of Lords should be done away with, just as the New Democratic Party thinks that our Senate should be done away with.

The real issue before us with regard to Senate reform is not so much the question of whether or not there should be a second Chamber. I think reasonable people can see very strong grounds for the continuance of a second Chamber, a Chamber of sober second thought, of serious deliberation on particular issues; a Chamber whose membership does have a longer or more permanent tenure than the membership of the House of Commons, which gives rise to the development of the necessary expertise for sober second thought. For example, the United States Senate has terms of six years, whereas the United States House of Representatives has terms of two years.

Mr. Kilgour: Tell us something we do not know.

Mr. Evans: The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) knows so very little that just about anything I could say would be a great improvement.

The point of the Senate is to provide that sober second thought which perhaps is not possible with an elected House of Commons.

The question raised by the Hon. Member for St. John's East was whether the Senate should be elected. I think that is a very serious issue, and I happen to disagree with it. The Senate should not be elected because we do not have a system which has a separation of the executive and the legislative such as the one in the United States that gives rise to the possibility of and rationale for having an elected Senate.

If we had an elected Senate and an elected House of Commons where the Government sat in the House of Commons, where the legislative and the executive were melded together, we would have serious conflict of interest problems between the two bodies. At what point would the power of the Senate cease to over-ride the power of the House of Commons, in which the Government would presumably sit, or would the Prime Minister and the Government sit in the Senate from time to time?

These kinds of questions where you do not have the separation of the executive and the legislative mean that it is very difficult to have an elected second Chamber. We have to have a second Chamber, but it cannot be elected in a popular fashion so that its jurisdiction and authority over-rides that of the legitimately elected Members of the House of Commons.

I see my time is up. If the House would allow me, I would certainly continue, but I understand the time allotted for the debate has expired.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) is quite correct. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2) it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and to call it four o'clock.

It being four o'clock, pursuant to order made Thursday, April 14, 1983, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

At 3.27 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Thursday, April 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Miss Carney (p. 24689).

• (1110)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, you will remember that last autumn before unemployment reached the present unacceptable level of two million Canadians, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) treated us to a series of television homilies in which, above all else, he appealed to the Canadian people for trust. I have gone back over newspaper reports with such headlines as "Trudeau urges Canadians to show trust", "Lower prices through trust, Trudeau asks". That is from The Globe and Mail of October 21, 1982.

In his speech on October 20, 1982 he said:

> I dwell on the need for trust because what we have achieved so far is young and fragile. We must strengthen our trust in each other because trust is the only bond that will allow us to unite our efforts and combine our strengths to meet the challenge we face.

That is what the Prime Minister said six months ago—that we were to trust him and his colleagues to exercise the kind of leadership that would be necessary to overcome our economic ills; we were to work together; we were to have faith in him and to trust him. Here we are six months later, six tortuous months later, hundreds of thousands more Canadians are without jobs, the deficit has soared to astronomical levels and the Government brings down a supposed, cure-all budget. I will deal with some of the budget measures in a few minutes.

First of all, I want to draw attention to the Prime Minister's latest musings or, I could say diatribe, about the word "trust". What he has had to say is far from philosophical. In his press conference on April 22, just last Friday, again he dealt with trust between Canadians. Turning his back on his appeal of six months ago for trust among Canadians, he lectured, he berated them, because he does not think they can be trusted to spend their money as they should.

Look at the headlines that followed that oration by the Prime Minister. "Can't trust the public with tax cuts, the Prime Minister said", as reported in the Montreal Gazette for April 23. "Canadian buyers can't be trusted to spend at home, Trudeau says" is highlighted in the Kingston Whig Standard of April 23. The Prime Minister says that the budget did not provide for sales tax breaks to consumers because they would not spend money at home; they could not be trusted to spend money unless on imports or perhaps on travelling abroad. He went on to say that he did not give a tax break to manufacturers because they could not be trusted to pass on the extra revenues to consumers. He did not want to see the Provinces getting any additional moneys because they could not be trusted to do anything but pocket the funds.

There we have the Prime Minister's current view of trust between Canadians and their Government. It is quite a different view from that which he expressed six months ago.

What does he say now? Canadians cannot be trusted to act in the best interests of the country. They would be liable to spend any additional money travelling abroad. This, sir, from the Prime Minister who, when he was travelling through Southeast Asia earlier this year, commented that he was not particularly concerned about the plight of Canadians because they would probably all be sunning themselves in southern climes or would be out on the ski hills having themselves a good time.

The Prime Minister's understanding of ordinary Canadians, indeed, sir, "passeth all understanding". He thinks that Canadians cannot be trusted, that given the chance they will goof off somewhere. The real problem with the Prime Minister is that he insists on applying his own personal standards to other Canadians. Nothing could more clearly underline how out of touch with reality he really is. How can he believe that two million unemployed Canadians would be out cavorting on the ski hills? How can he imagine that home owners, farmers and small-business people, who have gone through the agonies of loss of their homes, their businesses and their families' farms, would now be lolling on some beach somewhere in the knowledge that their financial problems are all a thing of the past?

The Prime Minister is out of touch and Hon. Members of the Government's benches are out of touch, and I say that to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) if he believes what the Prime Minister said in his press conference of last Friday about having no trust in Canadians, about Canadians not being trusted to do the right thing by their country. He had better find out what is actually happening with ordinary Canadians across this country. He had better find out that Canadians can be trusted. That is what I say to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Fisher: Talk about the budget.

Miss MacDonald: I will certainly talk about measures in the budget because not only is the Prime Minister out of touch with reality, but so in many ways is his Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). What they do not comprehend is that the people of Canada are no longer willing to buy their prescriptions. Even less are they willing to be made the butt of jokes and ridicule by the Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance. People have had too much suffering, too much uncertainty, too much frustration and of being stretched to the limits of their human and physical endurance by this Government now to be made the butt of sick jokes by the Prime Minister.

The treatment accorded the critical unemployment problem in Canada today by the budget of the Minister of Finance was also little more than a sick joke, although he did not use the same terminology as the Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance couched his approach to the issue in seemingly appropriate words. He said: "My dominant concern in preparing this budget has been to help the more than 1.5 million Canadians who want to work but cannot find jobs". That is his dominant concern. Did he really mean it or did he only say it?

I find it difficult, Mr. Speaker, if not impossible, to accept the words of the Minister of Finance as sincere when his budget provides for 182,000 more Canadians out of work this year than last, when it estimates that there will be more unemployed in 1985 than in 1982, and that there will still be a million-plus unemployed by 1987 and beyond. Either his "dominant" concern is really for the unemployed or it is not. His words say one thing but his budget says something entirely different.

This approach by the Minister of Finance, this "say one thing, mean another" phenomenon, touches many aspects of the budget. Taxpayers are promised a break but in the next few years they are going to have to pay additional taxes of $3.570 billion. The housing industry, through a number of measures, has been promised a building boom, all these measures which are going to bring about a building boom. I ask the Minister responsible for housing why, at the same time that this was done, did the Government propose to jack up the federal tax on construction materials? What help is that to the construction industry?

Mr. Fisher: What date does that tax begin?

Miss MacDonald: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) asks what date is the increase in building tax to begin. It begins in 1984, but what confidence does it instil in the construction industry when the Government threatens to impose higher taxes on it? Businessmen and investors are promised inflation indexing of capital gains, but they will be taxed year by year on those gains whether or not they have materialized. Small business is promised help with its losses when the greatest concern they now have is with expansion and trying to rebuild profits.

Parents are promised an increased Child Tax Credit indexed to inflation, but the income threshold will be frozen, as will the $710 dependant child tax deduction. The progress of time and inflation will effectively and not too distantly eliminate both these benefits.

What, then, does the Minister really mean by the budget, so complex that it took almost two months of delay before he could bring it in and twice the normal length to explain? Yet as we have all seen, the deficit and spending program was adjusted upward by $200 million within a matter of a mere 24 hours.

We are told that the private sector is to be the cutting edge of both recovery and new employment. The Minister's predecessor deliberately threw two million people out of work in this country—deliberately threw them out of work—by the measures he introduced which crippled the private sector. Now this Minister of Finance hopes that with the timely application of a few band-aids, the private sector will not only walk again but carry everything else along with it.

Sir, if anyone or anything in our economy can work a miracle with such slender resources, I have no doubt it will be the private sector, those manufacturers and industries, large and small, that are the real producers of our national wealth. But at the same time as the Minister is giving the private sector this half-hearted boost, he continues to tell us there will be little or no change until the world economy changes. This, of course, is part of the ongoing Liberal litany that all our problems are the fault of someone else. Our difficulties are created elsewhere and so, too, will be our solutions. The Minister sits before the media, Mr. Speaker, and explains that British Columbia coal will not get moving again until Japanese steel picks up. That will not be until people in the United States start buying again.

The argument of interlocking economies would be more valid were all our trading partners to have an equally dismal economic record as Canada has. Then the Government might have something to base that claim on. It would be more compelling if Japan also had a 12.5 per cent rate of unemployment, which it does not; or West Germany with double-digit inflation these past several years, which it has not; or the U.S., even with its huge deficit spending, which is nowhere near equivalent to our own $31.3 billion deficit.

The truth is that we are not the helpless dependants of international welfare that the Minister of Finance would make us out to be. We do not need to wait for others, sir, to pull ourselves out of the economic mess that this Government has put us in. There is much we ourselves can do to raise this country out of the financial quagmire. But there is precious little that this budget will allow us to do along those lines.

Yes, I will agree that the budget has given the business communities some of the incentives and tools it needs to modernize, to invest in plant and machinery, to expand its research and development facilities, to get back on the road to productivity and world competitiveness. And, like the business community itself, we can applaud these long overdue measures in this direction. We have been urging them, sir, for many months now. But even at that, there is only so much a leaner and hungrier private sector can achieve until people start buying.

That, sir, has to be the basis of our economic recovery. Until businesses and manufacturers start increasing their inventory, until consumers start purchasing the end product, until that comes about there will be no significant reduction in unemployment in this country. Yet what encouragement is there for consumers in this budget to start that whole process moving? There is precious little, according to the Consumers Association of Canada. It gave this Budget a C minus, and I would say it was being generous in doing that.

The biggest purchase which most consumers will make during their lifetime is their own home. As I mentioned earlier, there are measures promising a boom in housing purchase and building. There is the topping up proposal for the RHOSPs, the Home Ownership Stimulation Plan, the Home Renovation Plan and the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Plan. Obviously, those are supportive measures and they are to be applauded. I have said that before and I now say that to the Minister responsible for housing. However, I want to give him a piece of advice coming from home owners; these measures do not amount to a critical factor in trying to trigger a boom in home building or home buying. What the potential home purchaser and owner wants more than anything else is confidence, confidence that the roller coaster of interest rates will not return two, three or four years down the road.

If inflation is truly beaten as Hon. Members opposite claim, if we are on the road to recovery as the Minister believes, then a program guaranteeing mortgage deductibility on payments over a given rate of interest would have cost the Government nothing, if that is what they truly believe. However, it would do more toward encouraging home buying and, therefore, home building than any of the measures which the Minister of Finance has placed in his budget. I see that the Minister responsible for housing is shaking his head. Obviously, he is not speaking to the same prospective home buyers as I am. It is the question of interest rates which is uppermost in their minds. It is the major concern of those who have lost homes and those who are still paying high interest rates.

Of course, the budget does provide for some direct initiative for consumer spending in the withdrawal provisions for RHOSPs. However, perhaps the Minister responsible for housing can explain why the Minister of Finance did not stipulate in that measure that the provision would apply to goods, furniture and appliances made in Canada. Why did he not add that provision? Why not boost our own manufacturers? Why not put them before others? That would have immediately stimulated and triggered jobs here in Canada. Surely that is what the Minister of Finance said was his dominant concern in the budget. When he had the opportunity to do something about it, why did he not direct that one measure to the whole question of job creation for Canadians in Canada?

Thomas Maxwell, the chief economist of the Conference Board of Canada, points out that firms will only begin to invest when they can see that consumers are beginning to spend. Without that spending by consumers, he concludes, there will simply be no durable recovery.

I can see that Your Honour is awaiting the conclusion of my remarks, but I would like to say that without that commitment by consumers, that encouragement of consumers to spend, there will be no real improvement in the tremendous unemployment situation that we face in the country today. The Government simply did not come to grips with that in the budget.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken? If not, the Chair will recognize the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts).

• (1130)

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, a few minutes ago my colleague, the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), announced some of the details and fundamentals of the Special Recovery Projects Program which the Canadian Government is mounting as an important part of its response to the economic challenge to the country. That response is one of the major elements in the budget that was presented by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, which is a recovery budget. It is a budget which is designed to bring, and will bring, the country on track, to respond to our economic problems and particularly to create jobs in our economy. It is a recovery budget designed to create jobs both in the short term and in the longer term.

The rationale for that budget has been clearly expressed by a variety of Members in the House. It is a budget based on the belief that the strong motor force for creating jobs must be through the private sector's efforts. It is a budget designed to continue the efforts we have made in the past to create a stronger and more positive context for the private sector's activities.

There also is another important wing of our efforts, and that is through the federal Government's own activities to create jobs in the Canadian economy. We are not a Government imbued with a Reaganomic spirit which believes that only the private sector can create jobs and that the only responsibility of Government is to create an atmosphere in which the private sector can do so. We also believe as a Government that there are appropriate times for it to step in and directly assist in the creation of jobs within the Canadian economy.

The budget made it clear that it is important that the Government takes such steps now. While we may look forward to the impact of the very favourable changes which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has introduced to encourage the private sector and the investment intentions of the private sector, it is clear that major private sector investment will only be more active as we move toward the end of 1983 and well into 1984. There is a need to create jobs and strengthen productive capacity now, in preparation for the renewed private sector efforts which we believe will take place as a result of the positive suggestions in the budget.

That is the rationale underlying the Special Recovery Projects Program we have brought forward. It is to find and move forward projects which the federal Government can undertake to create jobs in the very short term which leave lasting benefits of strengthening the productive infrastructure and capacity of our country.

When the Minister of Finance presented the budget last week, he outlined two central recovery goals. The first goal is to ensure that the recent stirrings of growth start to pervade the whole economy of Canada as quickly as possible; the second is to make sure that the recovery is strong and durable in order to create good, permanent, satisfying and well-paying jobs for Canadians.

The Special Recovery Projects Program is the cornerstone of the foundation which the federal Government is laying to meet these two goals. This Special Recovery Projects Program is the largest Special Capital Investment Program ever undertaken by the Government of Canada. It will create jobs now, both in the communities where facilities will be built and in the centres where orders will be placed for goods and services. It will assist in several currently weak sectors, including construction, shipbuilding, fisheries and forest products. I hope I will have time to expand considerably on the forest sector which, of course, given my responsibility to the Canadian forest service, is one area of particular interest to me and I believe to many Members in the House.

The Special Capital Investment Program will put key infrastructures into place to improve the productivity of Canadian industry and meet the competitive challenges that will arise during world wide recovery.

At the outset I should say something about the economic environment in which this federal recovery investment is taking place. Total capital spending in all sectors of the Canadian economy, public and private, is expected to decline at the present time by more than 3 per cent in 1983. Even more significant is the expected decline of 8.2 per cent in investment in the private sector. That decline follows a decline of over 5 per cent in capital investment last year.

Through accelerating planned federal spending we will make up some of this investment short-fall and contribute substantially to national economic recovery. By bringing forward our investment projects we will improve the pace of recovery within the country.

Of the $2.4 billion directed to the special projects over the next four years, $1.7 billion will constitute a new injection of funds. In 1983-84 we are adding $600 million to our already forecast expenditures for construction and for the purchase of goods and services, which is an increase of approximately 35 per cent. In 1984-85 we will add $700 million to the forecast expenditures for an augmentation of about 33 per cent. In 1985-86 the additional expenditures will amount to approximately $400 million, which is an increase of about 22 per cent over our forecast of expenditures.

This program will put in place the financing of over 100 capital projects. I should stress how these projects have been selected. They are not make-work projects in the sense of being directed only to the creation of jobs. We believe that they will create jobs quickly in the Canadian economy, but, they are jobs which are also designed to enhance the productive capacity of the country. These are projects which departments have considered necessary over the coming decade for the development of the infrastructure. What we are simply doing is bringing them forward to make sure that they are paced properly within the perspective of economic recovery.

During the early stages of budget planning the Government asked departments to review their capital spending plans for future years and identify those projects which were useful, constructive and could be brought forward for early implementation. These projects were tested against a variety of key selection criteria. We were looking for initiatives that could be started within six months. The projects were screened according to the contribution they could make to investment and growth in key sectors and regions.

One of our important efforts in relation to these projects is to try to cut through some of the bureaucratic red tape that so often seems to surround Government decision-making. We have established a special Cabinet committee to accelerate the process of decision-making. Tendering and contracting times are being shortened and we will be working closely with key groups in the private sector to get their support for fast-tracking projects, not only at the selection and approval stages but throughout implementation.

The Special Recovery Projects Board, comprising a variety of senior civil servants, has been established to work with all the departments that are involved in this program in order to monitor its progress and expedite the process wherever possible.

In effect, 100 capital projects are being brought forward. The $1.5 billion of expenditures which would have taken place later in the decade is being brought forward to create jobs now in a way which will enhance the productive capacity of our country and speed its recovery. Special efforts are being made to provide quick administrative implementation measures to ensure this happens quickly. Two of these 100 major projects were announced today. My colleague the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) announced the addition of $630 million in expenditure over the next four years to upgrade the quality of the Canadian Coast Guard, which is obviously a key need in our society, one which will have considerable technological and spin-off benefits.

I announced today that the federal Government is prepared to spend up to $147 million over the next four years under the capital program to strengthen in conjunction with the Provinces the capacity of Canada to fight forest fires across the country through the purchase of up to 20 CL-215 fire bombers from Canadair.

Mr. McDermid: Bail that company out one way or the other.

Mr. Roberts: I am sorry that the Hon. Member opposite does not seem to understand the importance of this step and the importance of the forest industry in Canada. I would like to stress that this important step takes place within the context of the general forest strategy which the Government brought forward and implemented. It is an example of how the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program can help strengthen some of these industries in Canada which are the foundation industries of this country. We can help strengthen the resource sector, help it through some of its current difficulties and respond to the long-term opportunities it provides to our country.

Approximately 18 months ago the federal Government brought forward its forest sector strategy paper. It outlined the key areas where there is a need for action on the part of the provincial Governments, the private sector and the federal Government. We isolated those areas in the forest industry structure where there is a special need for Government assistance, a need to upgrade human resources in the forest sector and a need to strengthen the marketing systems for it.

There is an essential need to focus on the problem of reforestation and provide programs which will lead Canadian industry to transform itself from an industry that is simply exploiting a given resource to one which treats the forest as it properly should be treated, as a renewable resource. We need policies to put into place the reforestation which the forest industry so badly needs. The fourth key area of action which we saw that had to be met was the need to fight disease and fires throughout Canada.

The federal Government has acted in each of those specific, crucial areas of the industry. On the human resources side it brought forward an initiative of over $15 million for the next three years to assist through block grants to forest faculties across the country, and through a human resources program that is awarding 20 Canadian forestry scholarships this year and up to 50 by 1985-86. We brought forward a program under the federal internship program to employ 300 forestry students over the summer. We increased contract research to universities. Overall, there is a $15 million program to strengthen the human resources side and meet the human resources needs of the industry.

We have entered into arrangements with the provincial Governments in relation to reforestation. The federal Government has committed $130 million in expenditure by the year 1985-86. We are now in the process of signing with each of the provincial Governments a reforestation accord. One has been signed with the Province of Nova Scotia, we are ready to sign one with the Province of Prince Edward Island and I expect that in the next two years we will sign agreements with each of the provincial Governments, agreements which attach criteria designed to ensure that, through federal-provincial co-operation, we tackle the needs of reforestation in this country. We have signed research agreements with over half of the Provinces and expect to sign such an agreement with each of the ten Provinces by the end of this year. In this fiscal year we expanded our commitment to research by over $5 million.

One of the important areas where action still needs to be taken is in relation to the control of disease and in relation to the control of fire. The Special Recovery Capital Projects Program and the purchase of fire bombers which I have announced today will be supplemented by further announcements in the next few weeks. We will be using the over-all Special Recovery Projects Program to support the forest strategy. It will be used to bring federal forest research facilities up to the standards needed to carry out the federal share of responsibility in the forestry sector. We are going to ensure that the facilities are adequate to develop the skills required in the modern forest industry. It will be used to protect our Canadian forestry resource. We have acted in the past through our support for the establishment of the Canadian Inter-Agency Fire Centre in Winnipeg, a very much needed step to improve co-operation and co-ordination between the Provinces and the federal Government.

I want to give Members some idea of the importance of combatting fire in Canada each year and the reason why this purchase of water bombers is such an essential step for us to take at this time. The forest area lost to fire in Canada each year regularly exceeds the area harvested. Over the last five years there have been some extreme fire seasons. During that period, forest fires have burned on the average of three and a half times more forest land than was harvested. Clearly, losses of that magnitude cannot be borne.

To put it every more graphically, in a record fire season like 1980 forest fires burned an area in Canada equivalent to a six-kilometre-wide strip from coast to coast, a six-kilometre strip right across the country. That is the size of forest area that we lost in one year to fire alone. It is a bit difficult to determine the exact economic impact of that. Obviously it is substantial. Estimates place the loss of such dimensions as something in the order of $350 million. Average annual fire losses are in the order of $53 million per year.

Action is required, action which involves both the federal and provincial Government, to improve our capacity both to suppress and to combat fires. That is why I announced today that we are prepared to spend $147 million over the next four years to purchase up to 20 CL-215 water bombers from Canadair in Montreal to combat the menace of forest fires.

Four of these aircraft will be for use in the Yukon and Northwest Territories and 16 will be available for a national fleet of water bombers to be operated by the Provinces. These aircraft are to be obtained under the terms of a federal-provincial co-operative supply agreement which the Government is considering as a request from the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers on behalf of the Provinces.

Under the terms of such an agreement, the federal Government will purchase one aircraft for each one purchased by the Provinces. Apart from the four which we will buy for the Yukon and Northwest Territories, it will be a matching program. Each CL-215 will cost about $6 million. Consultations are under way with the Provinces to finalize their arrangements for participation in the water bomber purchase program.

The Canadian CL-215 is the only aircraft specifically designed as a water-scooping fire bomber and it is the only modern fire bomber in production. This aircraft is a Canadian concept and it is a major achievement of the Canadian aerospace industry. It has a proven track record and it has earned an excellent reputation both in Canada and overseas.

The water bombers purchased by the federal Government will constitute a national fleet to meet peak fire season needs when provincial firefighting resources are fully committed. That is when the failure to have enough "flying fire trucks" results in hundreds of millions of dollars worth of timber losses, such as in the 1980 fire season when forest losses were estimated to be over $350 million.

The aircraft will be assigned to individual Provinces to operate and they will be responsible for all operating costs. Allocation of these aircraft for firefighting duty during peak forest fire periods will be co-ordinated by the Canadian Inter-Agency Forest Fire Centre in Winnipeg. The Department of Transport will own the national fleet of aircraft on behalf of the federal Government. The Provinces and Territories will operate the national fleet as part of their present fire bomber fleets.

Besides keeping a technologically important production line in operation, the water bomber purchase will enable the federal and provincial Governments to command a large enough production run to allow for both continued and for economic production. As a result, Canadair will have a viable production schedule that will benefit the company, the forest industry and the labour forces of both the aerospace and forestry sectors.

If I still have a moment, I would like to spell out in a little more detail some of the job implications of such an effort. Of course, I cannot give a specific commitment on job creation in relation to the program because it will depend upon the co-operation of the Provinces and the finalization of our agreements with them. It will depend to some extent as well on whether the international orders which we expect will follow through from this program. We believe there will be an international market for at least 20 of these CL-215s. If one takes into account the four that we are purchasing, the 16 which we are prepared to purchase if matched by the Provinces, the 16 which the Provinces purchase to meet that commitment and another 20 which we expect to sell internationally, we are talking about potential sales of 56 CL-215s over the next four-year period. That will create jobs for Canadair in Montreal. It will also create jobs elsewhere such as Fort Erie, Sault Ste. Marie, Winnipeg and Vancouver. There is that additional spin-off effect. Repair, overhaul and maintenance is expected to create more jobs as well.

In total, we believe this program could create 1,200 direct jobs and 265 sub-contract jobs. If the orders go out for all 56 planes as we expect, it will provide something like 9,000 person-years of work over the first stage of the program.

Mr. Speaker, I have dwelt on this one example because it is of particular concern to me as the Minister responsible for forests, but I hope it illustrates how, through the Special Recovery Projects Program, we can at the same time bring forward projects and start them now. This will have the effect of enhancing the productivity of our country, of realizing its potential, and of creating jobs in the immediate short term. That is what the program is about. That is what it is designed to do. Mr. Speaker, that is what it will do.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Minister. First, can he assure the taxpayers in the country that the amount paid Canadair for these water bombers will be the market value of those water bombers and not inflated prices such as it appears the Canadian Government has paid for the Canadair jets? It paid a higher price for the same jet that the private sector would pay a much less amount for. Can the Minister assure us that we will be paying the fair market price and not a price that is inflated because it is being purchased by the Government?

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that negotiations for the purchase of these planes will be carried on by the Minister of Supply and Services, a tendering and negotiation process which is exactly and explicitly on a commercial basis. I would remind him as well that—

Mr. McDermid: Tendering.

Mr. Roberts: Tendering and negotiation process on a commercial basis, as Supply and Services always does. If the Hon. Member would stop talking for a minute and listen, I would point out to him that the federal Government will be purchasing four of these planes. The others will be purchased through programs with the Provinces so that the Provinces will be undertaking negotiations with Canadair. Twenty of them we expect to be bought on the international market and negotiations will take place internationally by those purchasers. So the bulk of these planes will be purchased by provincial Governments with our co-operation. The Hon. Member is talking about a process of negotiation with Canadair carried on through ordinary competitive arrangements and on a commercial basis by Supply and Services and by provincial Governments.

Mr. McDermid: I have two quick questions for the Minister. Has he any guarantees from any of the Provinces that they will participate in this program? Second, the Ontario Government traded in their Canadair jet for two water bombers. Are those two water bombers included in the 16 that the Minister is referring to that the Provinces will be negotiating?

Mr. Roberts: The answer to the second question is no, that arrangement is one which has already been made by, as I understand it, the Province of Ontario. It has nothing to do with the federal Government or this program announced today.

The answer to the first question is yes. It was clear at the meeting of the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers in September that the Provinces are anxious to participate in the program. The committee of provincial officials has prepared proposals which are supported by at least half of the Provinces. I could tell the Hon. Member which Provinces these are if I had a moment. The arrangements have yet to be finalized, but clearly there is a determined volition on the part of a large number of the Provinces to participate in the program. Specific details of the contracts, arrangements and so on still have to finalized.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have a question based on the shipbuilding part of the program. I appreciate that this is not necessarily within the Minister's administrative domain, but he did mention the $630 million for shipbuilding. I have a wire service story on that release. I would ask the Minister how much of that $630 million is new money as opposed to recycled money; and has there been a definition as to the division of that money between the regions, as mentioned in the press release?

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member said, this is an area that goes beyond my administrative responsibilities. I cannot reply to the second part of his question, though I am sure my colleague the Minister of Supply and Services will be in the House at Question Period and ready to respond if the Hon. Member wishes to put the question to him.

In answer to the first part of the Hon. Member's question, I believe I am correct in saying that this is all new money above and beyond what has previously been directed to the program. This is an addition of funds, not the reworking of existing funds.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would first congratulate the Minister on this concept of a national fleet of water bombers. He has graphically portrayed the advantages this will have to the country in terms of the loss from fires every year.

I would ask the Minister whether the national fleet of 16 planes as he has described it will include only eight aircraft, or half of them, owned by the federal Government that will be available to be moved to wherever in the country the fire danger is the worst or where in fact there are losses from fires, or will they all be stationed in certain Provinces? It seems to me that it would be advantageous to have 16 planes available on a national basis to go to wherever the fire hazards were the worst.

Second, a press report this morning, I believe from The Globe and Mail, indicated that the laboratory research facilities were going to be increased, I believe in Eastern Canada, Northern Ontario, and Western Canada. Is any of that funding under the Special Recovery Projects going to be allocated to increase the laboratory facilities at the Great Lakes Forest Research Laboratory in Sault Ste. Marie, which essentially serves, at the federal level, research programs for Northern Ontario?

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether there is a failure of communication between the Hon. Member and myself in relation to the first part of his question. I hope that there is not. Four of the water bombers will be in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. Clearly they will be federally operated. We are agreeing to purchase 16 more on a matching basis with the Provinces. I cannot tell the Hon. Member exactly where they will be because I cannot tell him which Province is going to buy five and which is going to buy three and so on. The extra 16 planes purchased by the federal Government would match the 16 purchases of planes by the Provinces and will be allocated to match the provincial contribution. If, hypothetically, Ontario bought four planes, the federal Government would buy four planes which would be owned by the Ministry of Transport but operated and maintained in conjunction with the four planes the Province had purchased. It will not be, as it were, one massive national fleet that goes swinging from place to place.

The Hon. Member may be concerned about the question of how these national efforts are going to be directed to specific locations as the fire problem shifts from Province to Province or area to area during the fire season. The answer is that we have established, with the provincial Governments, the Inter-Agency Co-ordinating Centre at Winnipeg to co-ordinate all of these efforts. Thus, the federally owned planes plus the provincially owned planes from all of the Provinces will be allocated to meet the pressing fire need wherever it may occur. I do not want to get too trapped by semantics, but in a sense both the provincially owned planes from all of the Provinces and the federally owned planes will be available to focus on the current fire threat in whatever part of Canada it is to be found.

This is a first step on the part of the federal Government. We have never been involved in the purchasing of water bomber equipment before. We believe, however, that the need is so pressing and so great and that forestry is such a fundamental resource for Canada that we should participate. We must participate in a co-operative and co-ordinating way with the Provinces, since they are the owners and managers of the resource and already do have major firefighting installations at work. I may have gone on too long, but I am trying to answer the Hon. Member's question as specifically as I can.

In terms of research centres across the country and the Canadian Forest Service efforts, I cannot make any announcement to the Hon. Member at the present time about what will happen there. I can say that within the next few weeks I hope to be able to say some things with respect to it which I hope he will find encouraging.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, the CP wire story with respect to the recovery programs quotes officials as saying that "there will be a sleek publicity campaign over the next several weeks to attract maximum attention." I have no quarrel with "sleek" or "publicity" but I wonder if, attendant upon the program, there is a paid advertising campaign in order not to ask for supplementary funds. I would remind the Minister how counter-productive the paid Government advertising was with both the National Energy Program and the Constitution, given the size of the deficit. I wonder if he could assure me that with regard to the merchandising justified by the Government there will or will not be a paid advertising campaign with respect to these capital programs?

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, in terms of publicity or public relations, I should say that my colleagues and I believe it is important to communicate these proposals to the regions of the country. Some of the projects will have local significance and others will have national importance.

We are going to make a special effort and I think you will see the Ministers and Members on the Government side travelling the country talking about these things. I think that is entirely appropriate.

No special advertising campaign is presently envisaged. In the nature of things I cannot say that no informational material will be produced or distributed. We intend to communicate the program which I think is the legitimate responsibility of the Government, but we do not have in mind some massive paid advertising campaign.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and answers has expired and regretfully, without unanimous consent to continue, I have to call on the next speaker. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak so early in the budget debate. I must say that I was rather taken with one particular feature of it. That was not the hubbub about the so-called disclosure of a page or two of the budget, but that at the end of the Minister's delivery Government backbenchers and Ministers stood up and applauded in a frenzy, calling "more, more, more".

Watching them during the debate I notice that every time the Minister said there would be $80 million for this or $120 million for that, they applauded. They reminded me of a nest of bird chicks—every time the parent bird came near the nest there was a great squawking and mouths opened wide. Every Hon. Member opposite gave the visual impression that the $80 million or $120 million was destined for his or her riding. That is precisely what was happening.

I hope Hon. Members have now examined the budget in detail. If they have they will see that the money is not there. All those investments they thought they were going to get are figments of the Minister's imagination, trying to sell something that does not exist.

Let us look at some of the incentive programs. In so far as they shall be tax deductible, there will be tax allowances. For the firm in a loss or break-even position a tax credit may be carried forward. But is that sufficient to induce the management to enter into hard cash expenditures for additional facilities at this time? If a firm or industry is operating at two-thirds or three-quarters capacity, what good are incentives to improve plant and machinery if the goods are not saleable? This is a very subtly acceptable delusion. At other times in the past this practice has been in effect, and not only espoused by Liberal Cabinet Ministers.

I recall the recession that started in 1956 and ran through 1957-58 and 1959. Attempts were made to induce businessmen and manufacturers to invest in more machinery and plant through double depreciation allowances and that sort of thing. Subsequent Liberal Cabinet Ministers did the same sort of thing. I thought this was a good idea until I talked to members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. They unanimously said that, notwithstanding what appeared to be an interesting proposition, it was a non-starter. They asked: "Why should I, as a machine tool manufacturer, for instance, invest some $2 million in new machinery—$2 million of hard earned money that I am going to have to spend—if the industry is operating at two-thirds capacity and I will sell additional production only if I lower my price or gain some other competitive advantage? Should I do that so that I can get a double depreciation break on new equipment, when I am not making much money? What good is that to me?" Is that the argument about many of the incentive programs that the Minister indicated are the stars of his budget?

We will see about the accelerated capital projects program, the one to which we added the $200 million—the Minister's "save my reputation" addition to the budget.

This morning's The Globe and Mail listed certain things that are going to be done—public works buildings in Halifax and Vancouver, additions to Dorval Airport—things that are going to be judiciously placed in Liberal ridings. When we see the list we will see how they will benefit the country.

Another thing that struck me is how the word "incentives" has been rehabilitated in the Department of Finance. On November 12, 1981 when the Department of Finance was under the jurisdiction of the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), tax incentives were tax havens. They had become tax expenditures. They were to be obliterated. Not only in the November 12, 1981 budget were they anathema to Government financing, but even the Parliamentary Secretary will agree that on June 28 we still had some of the same language. During the summer the tax advisers were again saying that incentives were bad for the system. Now they have been rediscovered, and we hear them talking about incentives.

I hear the Hon. Member from Newfoundland making a remark. He strikes me as one of these big seagull chicks that opens its mouth every time there is mention of more funds being provided for this incentive or for that grant. The incentives, of course, do not cost the Government anything. Unless something is done, no allowance is claimed. In any event, most of the industrial incentives are on the basis of tax credits.

Again, if nothing is done there is no cost to Government. Therefore, take all the sponge and water out of a good part of the budget and what is there?

The one area on which I want to comment before my time expires is the removal of the $100 allowance for charitable and medical expenses and its replacement with actual expenditures based upon receipts. All I can say is that I think about two-thirds of all personal taxpayers do not make that $100 contribution to charity. All you have to do is to ask any clergyman, any parish priest, what is the average donation within his or her parish. All you have to do is ask national charitable organizations what is the average contribution. The sum total is far less than $100. Therefore, taxpayers will lose on this provision. Those, however, who do contribute to charity in excess of $100 based upon this marginal rate will get a benefit of maybe $8 to $20. The Government will gain up to $80 and more on this particular provision.

Socially I think there is something I should draw to the attention of Hon. Members. In many instances gifts to private or voluntary organizations that qualify under the charitable gifts donation clause in the Income Tax Act were for $100. A gift of less than $100 gave no advantage and no incentive to the taxpayer because the taxpayer already had the deduction under the Income Tax Act.

There is a great deal to be said for gifts to voluntary organizations. I know some of my colleagues will be saying a good deal more about this during the debate on the Income Tax Act. But I feel that as much as possible we should encourage gifts to charitable organizations. I do not say there should be a tax credit dollar for dollar, but what is wrong with setting up—I am not the author of this particular suggestion, it has been made several times—a scheme similar to that given to people who make political donations within certain rules? On the first $100 there should be a tax credit of, say, $75 and then on up through the limits, but not a limit of $1,000. I know there are many people who are well endowed with worldly goods who are quite prepared to donate to a university, a church, a museum, an art gallery or what have you, gifts far in excess of $1,000. They should receive some encouragement. But all we do with the Income Tax Act at the present time is deter these individuals from making gifts to what you might call posterity. At the present time it is only in particularly artificial and devious ways, devious in that they are complicated, that major gifts may be made of collections of art to public purposes by donating the whole of the collection to the state and releasing for $1, say, to the individual concerned who can keep the collection in his home or in his own particular gallery.

There are other matters which I think I should talk about at this time. We will do this much more thoroughly when considering the particular Bills in detail. As for those measures dealing with excise tax, we will see some fancy footwork with regard to the excise sales tax on aircraft tickets and journeys. We will see an increase next year in the excise tax to 10 per cent. What on earth will this do to the proposal now under discussion with the public to change the impact of the sales tax from the manufacturers to the wholesale level, and a reduction of it to 8 per cent, without any concurrent reduction on building materials from 5 per cent to 4 per cent? The former Minister of Finance simply dismissed my question on that by saying "I need the revenue". It is a standard ploy with Government to say "We need the revenue", regardless of how wise the legislation is under which the Government will spend the revenue. There will also be an increase in the excise tax on domestic wines to 13 per cent. We will also see the continuation of indexation.

There is one point I want to mention favourably which we will be discussing later. I am speaking of the Index Security Investment Plan which arose from the Lortie Report. There were some changes from those offered in the Lortie Report. I do not know if everything is in good order because there are some hooks with it. It is not all gravy, but it may provide an incentive for investment in Canadian securities if they are grouped under this particular heading.

The last thing on which I want to comment is to say that we are now into the fourth year of this session of Parliament. There are some proposals which went through the Income Tax Act in 1980 and subsequently through Bill C-139 which, unfortunately, we cannot move now to strike out. As you know, Mr. Speaker, it is a rule that within the same session of Parliament a motion may not be introduced to reverse an earlier decision taken in that Parliament. Now we are into the fourth year and we cannot start to undo some of the nonsense which was imposed on this Parliament under the Income Tax Act and under the Excise Tax Act by a Government which was not thinking clearly.

For instance, a vicious principle of the indexation of excise tax based upon cost of living was introduced in a section of the Excise Tax Act. It is absolutely self-defeating, except for Government. Government can continue to tax at a higher level simply based upon an increasing cost of living without coming back to Parliament for approval. Talk about Government being interested in inflation! That is a classic example, Mr. Speaker.

I believe my time has expired but I hope I will be able to take up a number of other subjects when the various Bills come up.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, many different yardsticks will be applied to this budget to determine its success. How many jobs will it create? How will it benefit consumers? To what extent will this budget serve to stimulate the economy? These yardsticks and many others, I know, will be applied to determine the sucess of the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

I want you to know, Mr. Speaker, that I also intend to apply a yardstick to this budget. How far does this budget go to address the particular problems in the electoral riding of Burin-St. George's, which it is my honour to represent in this Parliament? There are those who will argue that my yardstick is too specific, that a budget ought to be concerned instead with the greater good of all Canadians. I have no quarrel with that particular yardstick, either. I submit only that the greater good of Canada can best be served by addressing the problems and the realities which exist at the individual constituency level.

For the people of Burin-St. George's, which is on the South and Southwest coast of Newfoundland, the most graphic economic and social reality is the fishery. The fortunes of my people are tied up in the offshore and the inshore fishery. The same can be said for Newfoundland as a whole. In my Province, fully 15 per cent of the jobs are in the fishery. That compares to about 5 per cent in Nova Scotia and a lesser percentage in the other Canadian Provinces. In Newfoundland and Labrador, the fishery is the most important source of employment. But, Mr. Speaker, it is much, much more than that. It is the economic and social underpinning for literally hundreds of Newfoundland communities. Without the fishery, most of these settlements, these towns and villages, would cease to exist or would become welfare ghettos, permanent wards of the state.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, an important segment of the fishing industry in Newfoundland and, indeed, in Atlantic Canada generally has come upon hard times. The simplistic view is that the current crisis in the fishery results from the nature of the industry itself, that it is a marginal enterprise at best, forever requiring Government hand-outs. That is the simplistic view. It is also the wrong view. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, much of the fishing industry is thriving today. I can cite for you many examples of that fact. Instead, I would like to confine my remarks today to that segment which is in trouble, to say why it is in trouble and to say what the Government, and specifically this budget, can do to deal with the problem.

It is the management, the large fishing companies, which must bear the lion's share of the blame and responsibility for the current fisheries fiasco, and rightly so, because it is the managements of those companies which have made incredibly bad decisions. These have been decisions on the unwarranted over expansion of fish processing capacity, shortsighted practices in marketing strategies, and financial undertakings which have resulted in unmanageable debt-to-equity ratios. The solution to the problem lies, first and foremost, therefore, in ridding the industry of that kind of incompetence. It is here, Mr. Speaker, that both the federal and provincial Governments have key roles to play.

It would be easy, Mr. Speaker, to stand here and blame the Newfoundland provincial Government for its failure to act in the face of the current fisheries crisis. After all, it is the provincial Government which, under the Constitution, has jurisdiction in the fish processing sector. As a Newfoundlander, I am shocked and shamed at how callously the present provincial Government has dealt with this issue to date. I have long since learned, however, that pointing fingers of blame, however well directed, has not solved very many problems.

What is more important, the federal Government also has a key role to play for two reasons; first, because of the shared federal-provincial jurisdiction for fisheries which is provided for the Constitution; and, second, because the problem has been dumped in our laps by an irresponsible provincial Government.

I am pleased to say that the federal Government has already made some important decisions which are aimed at dealing with the fisheries crisis. A team of negotiators has been appointed and given a mandate to deal with the fisheries restructuring issue. A substantial sum of federal money has been labelled for that purpose. All of this constitutes an important step in the right direction because the result will, hopefully, include putting the offshore fishery on a more stable footing, ridding the industry of the incompetent management, and providing some much needed capital.

However, Mr. Speaker, there remains one crucial item of unfinished business. That is the future of several of the fish plants which have been closed or are under threat of being closed as a direct result of the terribly incompetent management which I mentioned a moment ago. You may ask, Mr. Speaker, where, then, are those plants located? On the Northern tip of Newfoundland, perhaps, where local and Arctic ice conditions allow their operation on a seasonal basis only? Are they located some place far removed from the groundfish stocks which are so important to their operation? Not quite. These plants, Mr. Speaker, whose very future is now at stake are situated along Newfoundland's South and Southwest coast, a coast which is completely ice-free at all times of the year, so that these plants can operate year round and have regularly done so for decades upon decades.

Further, because of that location, these plants are literally on the doorstep of the richest groundfish stocks in the entire world. Who among us has not heard of the renowned Grand Banks of Newfoundland with its wealth of codfish and other species?

So you may ask, Mr. Speaker, who in his or her right mind would want to close a fish processing plant in that situation. Who indeed? The answer is: The very same incompetent people who made those other bad decisions about overexpansion, marketing and financing which I talked about a few minutes ago.

It is important to understand, Mr. Speaker, that those plants have been there a long time. They are not fly-by-night operations begun a few weeks, a few months or maybe a year or two ago as the result of some state of euphoria in some management office in St. John's or Halifax. I say to my good friend, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), that well before the Leduc oil well signalled Alberta's prosperity, fish plants at Burin and Grand Bank were pumping money into the pockets of fishermen and fish plant workers on the Burin Peninsula of Newfoundland. Decades before high technology came here to the Ottawa valley, the Gaultois fish plant had become a way of life for 700 people on an isolated island in Hermitage Bay.

Many, many years prior to the coming of the aerospace industry to Toronto and Montreal the 1,500 people who inhabit a tiny island in the Atlantic Ocean miles off the Newfoundland shore had come to know and rely on the economic and social stability provided by the Ramea fish plant. Burin, Grand Bank, Gaultois and Ramea. I could also mention Harbour Breton which serves not only the immediate community but many others for miles up and down the coast. After all those years, are those plants to be allowed to close, to fold, along with dozens of communities and thousands of jobs, at a time when we are searching so diligently, and so desperately at times, for new ways to create jobs? I cannot accept that as a sensible thing to do; therefore I will not stand by and allow that kind of thing to happen.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is important to understand that the Government of Canada did not create this problem, but it is equally important to understand that the Government of Canada will surely have to bear a lot of the blame if those plant closings go ahead. We have waited long enough for the fish companies to do the right thing but they lack the confidence to do so. We have waited long enough for the provincial Government to step in, but we all know the present provincial Government of Newfoundland would rather pick a fight than solve the problem. We have seen that with the offshore resources issue. We are seeing it right now in the way Premier Peckford and his administration are dealing with the Province's teachers. And the list goes on.

We cannot depend on the fish companies to do the right thing. We certainly cannot depend on the provincial Government to do the right thing for those communities, those fish plants and those people. That means, Mr. Speaker, that the ball is in our court. If the federal Government does not take action, those plants will close, perhaps forever.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am making an urgent appeal to the federal Government to wait no longer for the provincial Government to act. My suggestion is simple: Provide the necessary funding to allow those plants to operate. The sums involved are by no means astronomical. Indeed, it is my understanding that the per job cost of the federal Government's current employment initiatives program is actually higher than the per job cost required to ensure the continued operation of those plants.

I have chosen to make my appeal public today at this time, Mr. Speaker, not because I fear the federal Government lacks the will to act in this important matter, but because, frankly, I have been fighting behind the scenes against a sweet reasonableness among federal Cabinet Ministers, a reasonableness which argues that surely the provincial Government can be expected to bear its responsibility for keeping those plants open. It is a reasonableness that argues that the shared fisheries jurisdiction requires that the federal Government must act in collaboration with the provincial Government in this matter.

I agree with all those arguments because I, too, am a reasonable man. Unfortunately, the same cannot be said for Premier Peckford. Therein lies the problem. That is why it is essential that we wait for the provincial Government no longer. Jobs are at stake. Employment opportunities are slipping through our fingers, the economic and social fabric of many communities along Newfoundland's South and Southwest coast is being threatened. My appeal is that the federal Government do now what clearly has to be done: instruct our federal negotiators in the fisheries restructuring issue to take the necessary steps to have those plants opened. Forget the constitutional niceties; accept as fact Mr. Peckford's total inability to participate in civilized federal-provincial arrangements, even when the jobs of thousands of Newfoundlanders are at stake. Act now in the spirit of the Minister of Finance's budget by stabilizing the economy of the South and Southwest coast of Newfoundland and by preserving so many thousands of permanent jobs.

At the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I talked about applying yardsticks to this latest budget. I said that the appropriate yardstick from my vantage point is, how far does this budget go in addressing the particular problems in the riding of Burin-St. George's? If it does not address those problems, then the budget will be a dismal failure in my books, an affront to the people I represent here. To address those problems adequately, it must deal with the fisheries issue. The Government must do its part in ensuring the continued operation of those plants.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions? If not, I recognize the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to have the opportunity to say a few words on this budget this morning and perhaps talk about a slightly different issue which I think is very important in terms of economic performance in our country. Over the last 25 or 30 years there have been a number of trends in Canada that I find very, very frightening. For example, our standard of living has fallen since 1960 from the second highest in the world to around nineteenth. If we exclude the oil-producing states, we are somewhere around tenth or twelfth in the world. Our performance as a member of the OECD is such that we find we are now 24th out of 24 nations.

I think, Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons for this is that so much of our economy is so foreign owned and controlled that in times of world recession, in times of major structural readjustments such as the technological revolution we are going through, this tremendous amount of foreign control causes us problems more severe than elsewhere around the world.

As a nation we seem to have gotten away from the politics of the past where certain people did have visions of developing our country, whether it was Sir John A. Macdonald or others. As a nation we seem to have accepted the ideas of C.D. Howe and continentalism. I think that is very wrong. I do not believe that foreign ownership and control or our economy makes us rich. I believe that is a myth. Indeed, foreign control of our economy, when we consider the costs and benefits on balance, has made us poorer and has cost us many jobs as a nation.

We should consider some of the statistics. We find, for example, that about 26 per cent of Canadian industry is now foreign owned, in comparison with about 3 per cent in the United States, 3 per cent in Great Britain, 3 per cent in France and less than 1 per cent in the booming country of Japan. If we consider it sector by sector, we see that many of our key sectors are really foreign controlled and dominated. In manufacturing, it is about 41 per cent; in the rubber industry it is around 90 per cent; and in the chemical industry it is around 76 per cent. One could go on and on. In fact, in 1982, 19 of the 50 largest firms in Canada were in the hands and control of foreigners.

When one considers foreign investment and ownership, one must consider both the costs and the benefits. As I said earlier, my assertion is that the costs far outweigh the benefits in our country at this particular time, as has been the case, indeed, throughout most of our history. In terms of benefits, foreign investment is only a benefit if it is working for Canadians, if it is controlled for Canadians, if it does pass a really meaningful, tough, foreign benefit undertaking or control test. However, we have an organization in Canada today called FIRA which is by no means strong enough when it comes to policing foreign investment in Canada.

The only other way by which foreign investment would be meaningful or helpful would be through joint ventures, where there is Canadian control, where we do carry out some research and development, where we do have some markets in other countries because of the fact that they are joint ventures. However, it is very important that Canadians remain in control of joint ventures of that sort.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if foreign control of our economy is so beneficial, then perhaps someone could explain why, as revealed in a study on the economic performance of twenty-four countries published three or four months ago by the OECD, Canada happens to rank twenty-fourth. Perhaps someone could also explain why some Latin American countries, where the multinationals have made large scale investments, are among the poorest in the world.

[English]

The costs of foreign investment are indeed very great. It is one of the reasons we have so many major structural and performance problems today. For example, consider the tremendous fragmentation of the Canadian market, the tremendous distortion of Canadian trade when it comes to both exports and imports, the lack of R and D, the lack of manufacturing and processing in Canada and, indeed, the outflow profits and dividends from our country.

First, the fragmentation of the Canadian market. As long as Canada has existed, we have tended to be a mini version of the United States. We have tended to be a shadow economy or a tag-along economy of the United States. Where the Americans have had ten large firms, we have tended to have eight or ten branch plants in this country. Because of that, many of our industries have been very inefficient and have been very costly to the Canadian people and, as a result, have not exported. In fact, in 1968, during a major study, the Government of the day found one example which pretty well sums up the fragmentation of the Canadian market. In 1968, there were nine refrigerator subsidiaries in operation in Canada in a market, according to the Government, which could only support two such operations in an efficient way according to the economy of scale. This is a good example of the lack of rationalization of our industry, because so much of our industry is foreign controlled and owned, to a degree which is not permitted by any other developed country around the world.

I have mentioned four or five areas of real concern to me. The second involves the whole area of research and development. In 1973 only 2.7 per cent of Canada's manufacturing firms carried out any research and development whatsoever. In 1981, a year and a half ago, we as a nation spent only 1.2 per cent of our Gross National Product on R and D. Most of that was spent by Canadian firms. In comparison with other countries, we find that the United States spends around 2.5 per cent of its GNP on R and D and that the Japanese spend around 2 per cent of their Gross National Product on R and D. By the way, very little of the Japanese R and D expenditures are on the military, while in the United States, of course, the opposite is true. In France, around 1.8 per cent of GNP is spent on research and development.

I am not proud of the level in our country. It is lower than in countries such as Sweden, Norway, Belgium or Yugoslavia and is probably on a par with countries such as Egypt and Ireland. That is one reason our economy is not performing very well. The major reason we do not have R and D in this country is that foreign firms dominate many of our industries, and it is a natural tendency for research and development to occur at home base. This lack is something which we as Canadians must change.

I am particularly concerned about this aspect of foreign control when I consider technology in our society today. In the last year, for example, we have had a trade deficit of $8 billion in high technology alone, and by the year 1990 many people in the field are predicting that our deficit in computers alone will be around $10 billion.

The third cost of such overwhelming control of our economy by foreigners is in terms of the trade distortions in Canada. Once again, one can consider many examples from the past. In the early 1970s, the Gray Report stated that of the foreign manufacturing firms which were exporting—I want to make it very clear that it only concerned those which were exporting because some were not allowed to export at all—about 58 per cent had some kind of export restriction placed on them by their parent company. For example, 31 per cent were excluded from exporting into the American market.

Recently some papers from the 1960s of the Trade Commissioner were made public in this country. The Trade Commissioner said that in those days over three-quarters of foreign firms operating in Canada had export restrictions placed on them by their parent firm in the United States. In 1980 there was a repetition of this in a Cabinet document which was referred to the Cabinet by the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who was from Windsor, in which he requested stronger legislation for the Foreign Investment Review Act and that amendments promised in 1980 be made. Of course, he was turned down by the Cabinet.

Another example involves the Nelson muffler company, a firm in the United States with its headquarters in Wisconsin. In 1980 it applied to the Foreign Investment Review Agency to establish a plant in Canada and was granted permission to establish a firm in Ontario. Two years later, in a licensing agreement between Nelson Industries Incorporated in Wisconsin and Nelson Muffler Canada signed in July of 1982, it was found that the Canadian plant was subject to export restrictions. In fact, page 4 of the licence agreement stated that the Canadian branch plant could not export anywhere in the world without written consent from the head office in the United States. I believe that to be very unfair. It is an attack upon the economic sovereignty of Canada. It is the type of thing which no self-respecting sovereign nation in the world would allow to continue.

In addition, in terms of trade distortion on the import side, we find that Statistics Canada reported last November that in 1981 foreign owned or controlled firms in Canada imported about four times as much as Canadian controlled firms in the same areas. Once again it is evident that a Candian owned and controlled firm is more likely to purchase in Canada in terms of its procurement policy and do its processing, fabricating, its research and development and its expansion in this country, than those firms which are controlled and owned from outside our borders. This means that foreign control makes us poor as a nation since many jobs are lost in Canada and created elsewhere.

During the 1960s there was a study conducted by the Department of Commerce in the United States which showed that American investment in Canada essentially replaced investment that otherwise would have been there. This resulted in a net benefit to the Americans of millions of dollars per year.

My fourth area of concern over the cost of foreign control deals with the lack of manufacturing and processing in Canada. In 1981 we had a trade deficit in manufacturing of $21 billion, yet manufacturing is the sector in which we have the most labour intensive dollars. It is one of the major reasons why our country's unemployment record is much worse than most industrialized states. Even when we have international agreements with other countries, such as the autopact with the United States, we have tended to come out on the short side of the deal as a result of foreign ownership in companies like General Motors and Ford. The accumulated deficit in the auto parts industry has now reached approximately $41 billion. This has also caused the loss of many jobs. In 1982 the deficit in the auto industry was some $5 billion.

The high degree of foreign ownership of the manufacturing industry in this country is costing us millions of dollars, making Canadians poor, increasing our tax burden and losing many jobs for Canadians. We have even seen evidence of foreign owned companies that are economically profitable curtailing work in plants or closing them down. A good example of this is Bowater in Newfoundland which made profits in the millions of dollars in this country but was closed down as a result of balance sheet considerations by the head office of the multinational. There is also the example of Brian Mulroney's Iron Ore Company of Canada. In that case Schefferville has become a ghost town because of foreign control in our economy.

The fifth reason why foreign control of our economy is costing jobs and making our nation poorer is the outflow of funds from our country. Between 1976 and 1981, the net outflow of funds from Canada was $38 billion. This was an outflow of direct capital that was made as a result of the productivity of Canadian workers, farmers and the business community. As well, there is the outflow of dividends and interest payments. This amount represents a net loss after taking into account the difference between inflow and outflow.

In the gas and oil industry alone, between 1975 and 1979 there was an outflow of $2.1 billion in direct capital from this country to be invested or enjoyed as profit elsewhere. As well, there was an outflow of $1.6 billion in interest payments and dividend payments abroad to foreign shareholders. The total outflow of profits in the oil and gas industry during those four years was $3.7 billion.

I believe I have generally summarized the five areas in which foreign control of our economy has made our nation poorer and has cost Canadians many jobs and has cost taxpayers more. We are not masters in our own house.

I would like to deal with the argument which questions where the money will come from. We often hear that we Canadians are not competent to conduct our own affairs. In fact, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), who is running for the leadership of the Conservative Party, believes that we should have even stronger ties with foreign investors and an even greater influx of money from the United States. I suspect that he is not running for the leadership of the Conservative Party but to be Governor of Canada after some of the statements he has made recently.

According to reports in 1972 and previously, 80 per cent of the funds that foreign investors use in this country come from Canadian sources. Those sources include retained earnings that are reinvested, funds borrowed from Canadian banks, pension funds and other funds that are available to foreigners. In effect, we are financing our own sell-out with our own money and it must stop.

For example, it appears that during the 1970s over half of the bank loans that were made in Canada from Canadian banks went to foreign companies. Some of these loans went to companies that invested in Canada while others went to companies that invested outside of our boundaries. Today, it appears that 65 per cent of the bank loans in this country are going to foreign firms.

The other area of concern is FIRA, the Foreign Investment Review Agency in this country. Contrary to the message we hear from many people in the business community, FIRA is a very timid organization. It is a watchdog with very dull teeth. That agency must be reinforced. As an example of its ineffectiveness, it will only screen about 8 per cent of the foreign expansion in this country, because it only screens new investment, foreign takeovers and the expansion of foreign firms into unrelated areas. It does not have the authority to screen the much larger incidence of expansion of existing foreign firms into areas in which they are currently operating.

In 1980 the Liberal Party promised the electorate of this country that it would expand FIRA and give it the power to make periodic performance reviews of all foreign firms in this country to ensure that they are operating for the significant benefit of Canada. This was one of the reasons Canadians voted for the Liberals, but they have not taken such action.

Mr. Lambert: Who says that that is not right?

Mr. Nystrom: I am very surprised at the Conservatives. At one time they were a nationalist Party in this country in the tradition of Macdonald, Diefenbaker and others. Suddenly they have adopted the philosophy of C. D. Howe and continentalism. That is not the direction in which Canadians want to head. Canadians want a Canadian vision with Canadian goals and objectives. They want to see Parliamentarians, in cooperation with others in the country, make 1983 the year in which we begin to patriate the Canadian economy and make us masters in our own House and of our own destiny.

It is time for us to begin that process. Other developed countries in the world have already done so, including Japan, Germany and France, all of which were virtually destoyed in the Second World War. If they can do it with fewer resources, a smaller geographical area and without the energy base which we have, surely we can do it better than they can and become a nation that is economically sovereign.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in what the Hon. Member said about foreign ownership. He has made similar speeches in the past and has made very good sense in regard to the need for Canadians to control their own economy.

How would he, then, rationalize his position with that of his own Party, which opposes the budget because it puts too much emphasis on savings and investment and on encouraging Canadians to invest in their own country and to own shares of companies in their own country? His Party believes that the budget should emphasize consumption and give greater tax breaks for increased consumption at the expense of savings and investment by Canadians. How does he rationalize his concern over foreign ownership when he is opposed to incentives being implemented to encourage Canadians to buy up Canadian industries and invest in our own country?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member will have to rationalize after Orders of the Day this afternoon.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p. m. the House took recess.

ENERGY

HIGH COST OF GASOLINE IN QUEBEC—DEPARTURE OF QUEBECERS TO OTHER PROVINCES

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, I would like to read into the record part of an article that appeared in the Journal de Québec on Friday, April 22, 1983, and I quote:

> Paying for gas in Quebec is like being robbed, but Quebecers, like willing victims, are not complaining, although filling the tank certainly burns a hole in the budget. It is outrageous.
> If your car consumes 14 litres per 100 kilometres, in other words, does 20 miles per gallon, and you drive 12,000 miles a year, it costs you $491 more per year to buy gas in Quebec than in Ontario. Nearly $500! Five hundred dollars more in taxes.
> If you drive 20,000 or 50,000 miles per year, the difference is incredible. For 20,000 miles per year, the difference between Quebec and Ontario is $818, and for 50,000 miles for a travelling salesman, for instance the difference is $2,045 per year, for gas alone.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Is the Hon. Member still quoting an article? I would like to point out that long quotes are not allowed in statements by Members. Just a few lines are acceptable, but this is not the place to read articles.

Mr. Gourde: Madam Speaker, I was quoting from an article in the Journal de Québec, and I wanted to read parts of the article into the record. In quoting last Friday's Journal de Québec, I merely wanted to point out that the cost of gas in Quebec is exorbitant, compared to taxes paid by Canadians in other provinces, because of Mr. Parizeau's elevator tax. The journalist, who unfortunately did not sign the article, tells us in his article that he understands why over 100,000 Quebecers have left the province since 1976. It is an absolutely untenable situation, which has helped to convince Quebecers to move to the other provinces.

POLICY GOVERNING PURCHASE OF MEAT PRODUCTS—DENIAL OF CONTRACT TO CANADIAN SUPPLIER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in his budget address pleaded with private enterprise to invest and expand and to provide jobs. The Minister of Finance should have told the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), "Now, listen to this. A Canadian oil drilling company placed an order for $100,000 for food which included $30,000 for beef, with a merchant in Cochrane, Alberta. This would have meant increased jobs, increased purchases from farmers, et cetera, et cetera." But the federal Agriculture officials in Calgary said "No." Why? "Because you sell fresh meat over the counter in your store."

The federal officials were clinging to a regulation that was placed on the books some 70 or 80 years ago. "Besides", the civil servant said gleefully, "you would require a wholesale permit." The merchant had a wholesale permit. "Well," said the civil servant, "you still cannot do it because you sell fresh meat over the counter in your store." So the order went out of the country.

A little later the oil company wanted 1,000 steaks to celebrate the launching of a new ship. Again the merchant was told, "Nothing doing. You sell fresh meat over the counter." So the company bought the steaks in Japan.

This merchant runs a top notch business; he sells only government inspected meat, a high quality meat, and he employs Canadian help. This merchant, typical of hundreds of others, wants only to create jobs, to sell goods and to expand his business, but he is frustrated. Would the Hon. Minister of Finance speak to the Hon. Minister of Agriculture, that is, if they are still on speaking terms?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DENIAL OF BENEFITS TO ADOPTIVE MOTHERS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): There is currently a discrepancy in providing unemployment insurance benefits to working mothers who have given birth and benefits given to mothers of adopted infants. The discriminatory status exists in the immediate pre and post birth or adoptive periods.

It is argued that adoptive mothers should not be given unemployment insurance benefits inasmuch as they can systematically plan for the occasion of the arrival of the infants and make necessary preparations at their convenience. The error in this reasoning is as follows. In light of the extreme shortage of infants for adoptions, and with the ever-increasing number of married couples wanting infants, there is no correlation between the date of application for such a child and the date of its arrival. The period varies drastically and the waiting period maybe up to two or three years. The expectant parents when forewarned about the availability of such a child are usually busily engaged in their own particular regulated workday pattern. They must then make a very concentrated effort to make necessary preparation to receive the child. This requires an infringement on their days of work.

I feel that the policy of granting UIC benefits to adoptive parents should be reviewed, keeping in mind the loss of work entailed in making provisions to provide a home for the adopted infant, at times on very short notice.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN NIAGARA REGION OF ONTARIO

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, some 8,000 people in Niagara gave up looking for work last month, writing "finis" to their Canadian dream. Another 26,000 people, 17 per cent of the labour force, continued pounding the pavement looking for jobs that have disappeared at the rate of 1,000 a month over the past two years.

The ILAP Program has managed to bypass our region altogether, and the Labour Adjustment Benefit Program has been of assistance to only one plant. Hopes have again been fanned by the Special Recovery Capital Projects announced in the budget, but dampened just about as quickly by the list of projects published by Canadian Press. No Niagara area projects appear to be in the running despite the fact that Niagara would fit into any one of the Minister's six target areas, particularly land and tourism development, transportation, and vessel procurement. This is intolerable.

There are any number of projects that could and should be undertaken, starting with the Welland Canal. We know that in time improvements to meet demand will have to be made. The old canal lands are ideal land for tourism development. Our ship builders and dry docks are fully capable of filling any number of the Government's vessel procurement orders. We ask, Madam Speaker, that the Niagara region receive a fair share of the Special Recovery Capital Projects, a share that is fair, equitable and commensurate with the appalling unemployment situation that now exists in our region.

EMPLOYMENT

DEFINITION OF FULL EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, the Government over the last year has been selling Canadians the idea that they have to lower their expectations in terms of income under the six and five propaganda program. The Government has now switched to selling the idea that more and more Canadians have to accept unemployment as a part of the Government's new economic and political thrust.

Last Friday the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) taunted my colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway, asking him to think what an acceptable level of unemployment would be, talking about figures like 8 per cent, 5 per cent, and 3 per cent. We know that the Government is now pushing 8 per cent as an acceptable level of unemployment.

We, in this Party, believe that all people who want to work, who are healthy and capable of working, have a right to work, not just at the whim of the private market or of international economic forces.

To put some hard figures on this, particularly for the enlightenment of our esteemed Prime Minister, when the Unemployment Insurance Program was established, 4 per cent was the goal for unemployment. When the parliamentary Task Force on Employment in the 1980s was established, all Parties accepted the goal of full employment and defined that as being 4 per cent.

The budget was a businessman's budget to solve the cash flow problems of business. It did little or nothing for consumers and did virtually nothing for employment. I want to remind this House—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

PENSIONS

TAXATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, an abnormality and apparent injustice contained within the income tax system as it applies to certain highly remunerated federal Government employees such as judges, medical doctors, and very senior officials, should be put to right.

Pursuant to the Superannuation Contributions Agreement such people are obliged to contribute a fixed proportion of their income toward superannuation, and this frequently exceeds the $3,500 maximum allowed by Revenue Canada as a deduction against taxable income. Payments in excess of $3,500 are therefore taxable as income, but are subject to double taxation as they are again taxable when they are withdrawn from superannuation.

For someone with a marginal tax rate of 50 per cent, both at the time of paying in and also at the time of withdrawal, the combined effect results in a 100 per cent tax rate on superannuation payments in excess of $3,500 per annum. This amounts to total confiscation and, as such, is grossly unfair. Either the superannuation legislation of the Income Tax Act ought to be amended so as to avoid this type of confiscatory double taxation.

FOOD AND DRUGS

ADVERSE INTERACTIONS—CALL FOR DISTRIBUTION OF FOOD LIST

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, it is only in recent years that researchers have begun to focus attention on some of the adverse interactions of drugs and food. Such interactions are very important, whether people are on constant medication of for short intervals of time. A typical label on a prescription drug tells a patient how many pills to take and when. What does not always get through to the patient, however, is the interaction between nutrients and drugs. Not only do some foods affect the way drugs behave, but some drugs adversely affect the way the body uses food. Certain types of medication can lead to vitamin deficiencies and poor nutrition.

A number of drugs affect specific vitamins and minerals. Some drugs inhibit nutrient absorption in the system. Nutrient specialists have developed definite guides of what foods to avoid when taking certain drugs and antibiotics. This list is available and very comprehensive, but has not been widely distributed.

I would ask that the Department of National Health and Welfare make it mandatory that such lists be supplied to doctors and pharmacists all across Canada, and to make the information available to all people who either buy drugs over the counter or by prescription. This information should, as well, be part of the labelling.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

INCREASE IN PERSONAL IMPORT EXEMPTIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is quoted in an article in The Toronto Star as saying there is no consumer tax break because we would just blow it on foreign goods. He said:

> They would spend half of it—and sometimes more—on imported goods which would be creating jobs in other countries and not in ours.

That is the justification which the Prime Minister and the Government have used for not giving the consumers a tax break. In the same budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) announced an increase in the exemptions for those who travel abroad. The quarterly exemption for goods bought abroad will be increased from $50 to $100, and the annual exemption from $150 to $300. That means the Prime Minister is saying to those Canadians who stay at home that they may not have a tax break because they may spend some of their money on foreign goods, but for those Canadians who have money and can afford to travel, it is okay for them to buy foreign goods and bring them back to Canada. That is a double standard. It is not only hurting ordinary Canadians but hurting people who would have jobs if Canadians had a tax break and could spend money on goods made in Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DENIAL OF CIVIL RIGHTS TO PALESTINIAN PEOPLE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, President Reagan is quoted as proposing that the Middle East peace talks concerning the future of the land of Palestine be conducted without the participation of a representative from the Palestinian Liberation Organization. He is basing his proposal on the fact that the PLO has never been elected.

All knowledgeable people, including our own Government and President Reagan, know that the Israeli occupiers of the West Bank and Gaza have not allowed the Palestinians to hold elections. They have ejected from office all the elected Palestinian mayors except one. Several polls conducted among the Palestinians show an overwhelming support of the PLO, including one recently held by Time magazine which indicated that over 85 per cent of the Palestinian people considered the PLO to be their sole legitimate representative. There is not another group that even purports to speak for the Palestinians.

I urge our Government to tell President Reagan that, if he wishes to see an elected group speak for the Palestinians, then let there be elections. Advise the President that if he cannot convince the Israelis that they must allow the Palestinians civil rights, including elected representation, then his Government should withhold the amount of funding from their support that it is costing to build the illegal settlements in the occupied territories, to divert Palestinian water to Israeli water systems, to pay for the education that is being denied to Palestinian youth, to pay for the destruction of the Palestinian hospitals, schools, orphanages, daycare centres, clinics, et cetera, that were destroyed in Lebanon, until the Israeli Government realizes it cannot deny others that for which it struggled so long, the right to self-determination and the right to a homeland.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

SHIPBUILDING

ANNOUNCEMENT OF COAST GUARD RENOVATION PROGRAM

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services or the Minister of State for Economic Development, whomever cares to answer. It is with reference to this morning's announcement that $630 million will be spent on a Coast Guard Renovation Program. How many jobs will that create this year and how many over the four years of the Program, in what regions, and how much will be new money and not money that was previously designated for Coast Guard renovation?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the total amount of money involved is $780 million of which, as mentioned by the Hon. Member, $630 million will be spent over the next four years. Of that, $185 million is new money. In terms of the number of jobs, we envisage 20,000 person-years over the four-year period. That is within the shipbuilding industry. There are, of course, all sorts of offsets and spin-offs that will be created within the Canadian marketplace because, as the Hon. Member well knows, Canadian content in the shipbuilding industry is very high.

There is one question the Hon. Member asked to which I cannot reply, that is, how many jobs will be created this year. As the hon. gentleman knows, all these projects are on the fast track. We are trying to bring the jobs into the shipyards as rapidly as possible. They will be going in within the time that has been identified and within the criteria, namely, within the next six months. Hopefully the Hon. Member will support us in those initiatives.

LOCATION OF NEW JOBS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, in principle I am in favour of anything that is constructive with regard to renovating the Coast Guard. I could be even more in favour if I knew more of the details. The fundamental question that I asked was how many jobs there would be this year. The Minister overlooked the other part, how those jobs are going to be broken down. As I understand from the press release, there are six regions with a Coast Guard. Has there been any planning within the Department or the Government as to where those jobs, 20,000 person-year over four years, will be located in that period?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman recognizes that, wherever those jobs may go, they will be in areas of high unemployment. If he thinks about where the shipyards are located, he will see that all those areas presently suffer from very high unemployment. We are attempting to have the investments go into all of the various regions as fairly and equitably as possible. However, as the Hon. Member knows, contracts will be awarded on a competitive basis, as is fair. Therefore, the regional distribution is subject to the competitive basis of the award of the contracts.

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, coming to the contracts, when will tenders be let so that the unemployed in Atlantic Canada and other areas of the country will have the chance of some jobs and some hope, rather than just being suffocated with press releases?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, contracts will be let as rapidly as possible in order to accomplish that. There have been a number of changes in the process of awarding contracts so as to bring them on to a fast track. That means that my Department, in the shipbuilding area in particular, will be front and centre in terms of the awarding of contracts. We have had an increase in the level of delegation of authority for contracting purposes.

Also, as the Hon. Member knows, there has been the establishment of a special board of officials that will review the contract process in order to remove all the bureaucratic impediments that could be placed in the way of fast tracking. As well, there is a subcommittee on priorities and planning composed of ministers, which will, of course, try to eliminate as many of the political hindrances as there may be.

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS PROGRAM

INQUIRY RESPECTING ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO NIAGARA REGION

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister stated that the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program would form an integral part, if not the key part, of his job-creation plan, and an announcement was made this morning with respect to sharing of work among regions. The Minister knows that in very few regions of the country is unemployment higher than it is in the Niagara region. I ask the Minister what criteria he is using and what steps he has taken to assure that the largess and funding of the 100 select programs to which he has referred, dealing with transportation and vessel procurement, will be distributed fairly across the country as was stated in the budget speech? More particularly, what allocation of funds or projects has been designated for the Niagara region?

• (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would first advise my hon. friend to look more carefully at the statistics. Unfortunately, he will find that there are other regions of the country that have higher unemployment levels than does the Niagara Peninsula, much higher indeed. This having been said, my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services, has indicated that tenders for the construction of ships, for instance, would be out on a competitive basis and that shipyards across Canada will have the opportunity to bid and compete for those projects.

I would also like to remind my hon. friend that the budget had two elements. One was public investment to the tune of $2.4 billion, and the other was incentives to the private sector to the tune of $2.4 billion as well.

As my hon. friend knows very well, the Niagara area is a heavily industrialized area. It is a great centre of manufacturing. The benefits contained in the budget for the private sector will be felt very, very strongly by the manufacturing and industrial sector. If my hon. friend looks at that very important aspect, he will find out that his own area will be a very large beneficiary of the incentives contained in the budget. If he has been to his riding last weekend, he probably found that members of the private sector have welcomed the budget and are really enthusiastically supporting the measures announced last Tuesday. His own area will be a very significant beneficiary of those measures.

ALLOCATION OF PROJECTS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, in light of the comments made by the Minister of Finance I would like to direct my supplementary question to him rather than to another Minister. The Minister of Finance knows full well that the Niagara region was bypassed with respect to ILAP programs, and again, only one plant in the whole Niagara region received any benefit from the Benefits Adjustment Act.

What assistance may the Niagara region expect under the Minister's budget program? The Minister has said that he is considering 100 selected special projects. Is any one of them related to the Niagara Peninsula? Can we look to any increase in job-creation activity in the Niagara area to belie Statistics Canada's figures? The Minister has discarded those figures by saying that other regions have just as much unemployment, but we have been pointed out as having one of the highest levels, above the national average in urban industrial unemployment, presently at 17.6 per cent, but having 134—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as I have indicated, the Minister of State for Economic Development is processing the various projects. Once he has reached a point where decisions can be announced, he will make these decisions known in so far as they affect the various regions of the country. But I would like to stress to my hon. colleague that he should be looking at the very large incentives provided under the budget for the manufacturing and industrial sector and the construction sector generally.

The Niagara Peninsula being what it is will be proportionately a very large beneficiary of the measures contained in the budget. If the Hon. Member compares this to most other areas of the country, he will probably find that, under the budget, the measures for the private sector will have a much larger impact in his own area than any other measures I could have announced.

I think one has to look at the budget in its totality and look at its total impact upon the situation in Canada. The budget was geared to try to get the business sector going again. As I have said, if we can get business back to business, we will get workers back to work in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HOUSING

CALCULATION OF FAMILY BENEFITS PROVIDED BY REGISTERED HOME OWNERSHIP SAVINGS PLAN

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In the budget brought down last week, changes were announced for the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan. While at first glance it appears as if this measure will provide assistance to home buyers, after closer examination it is clear that it does not provide as much assistance to lower and middle income earners as did the straight $3,000 grant under the CHOSP program.

I would ask the Minister to confirm for the Members of this House and for Canadians the fact that a family earning about $32,000 will only receive a $2,400 benefit from the new changes to RHOSP, while a family earning in the neighbourhood of $57,000 will receive a $5,280 benefit.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I do not know if I follow the Hon. Member's arithmetic accurately. I will examine the figures he used and give him a response. I should point out to the Hon. Member that the Home Ownership Program which was instituted by my predecessor was put into place at a time when interest rates were at an all-time high, and a time when the economic situation had not stabilized. I think we should, in our own minds, divorce the two programs. Otherwise we may end up coming to some misleading conclusions.

NEED FOR SOCIAL HOUSING

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the same Minister. Can he explain to the House why, within the Cabinet, he was unable to pry from the Minister of Finance more than $1 million to create an additional 2,500 social housing units—which is really not an addition but a catch-up from the overspending last year—when he knows full well that we need a minimum of 50,000 social housing units a year?

An expenditure, for example, of $500 million, only half the monthly expenditure in the UI fund to the unemployed, would have created those 50,000 badly needed housing units for the poor in this country. It would have created an additional 5,000 jobs, and people would not be sleeping in subways and church basements and old wrecks of hotels across the country. Those people deserve something better from the Minister.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, when the Hon. Member is talking about job creation and social housing, I think he would do well to examine the implications of his statement. The cost per job in social housing is estimated at $30,000 per person-year of employment. That is a very high cost considering that home renovation at $5,200, or new construction at $7,000 per job per year, appear to be a better investment in terms of job creation.

I do not quibble with the Hon. Member's assertion that there is a need for more social housing. I underline to him, though, that it is a very, very expensive program in terms of the people who are served by it. We are trying to find a way to get more bang for the buck in that area of social housing. I hope that he will support us when we come down with some changes.

PLEA FOR HOMELESS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I gather the Minister is presently considering increasing the housing units for the poor, by one means or another. I would ask the Minister when we can expect some alleviation of this very critical problem. When will he be reporting to the House on a plan to get people out of subways and old wrecks of hotels and get them into decent, affordable housing? These are the forgotten people in Canada. It is not just the biggest bang for the buck that is required, it is also decent, affordable shelter for our own Canadian citizens.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, obviously I do not follow the Hon. Member in his rhetoric. The fact is that we are looking at alternatives. Some of the municipalities play a role in this sector, and some of them do not.

The Hon. Member will have to decide whether he wants to go the route of the old public housing system which created ghettos for a smaller amount of money per family, or whether he wants to continue in the present system which is expensive but which is giving the people who are living in these houses the dignity of not being considered residents of ghettos. I think all Parties will have some interest in discussing the changes in policy that may be required.

IMMIGRATION

TRANSFER OF DETAINEES IN LEG-IRONS AND HANDCUFFS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. A week ago I asked him about the circumstances surrounding the transfer to Ottawa from Toronto of 11 detainees under the Immigration Act, most if not all of them in leg-irons and handcuffs. I wanted to know the reason they came to Ottawa and the reason they were so restricted.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and for drawing that particular issue to my attention. I would point out to him that the immigration enforcement branch itself does not have the facilities or the capability of transferring people from one area to another who are detained for a refugee hearing.

In this case we contracted with the Ontario Correctional Services to provide that movement for us. In the circumstances they applied the procedures that they normally apply to all people under detention. As the Hon. Member indicated that included leg-irons and other forms of incarceration described. I find that to be a reprehensible way of transferring such people. I have asked the Department to look into changing such procedures to ensure that such things will not happen again.

REASONS FOR TRANSFER

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, will the Minister advise us why the 11 persons were being brought to Ottawa from Toronto? Would he also advise why they were turned around, to be brought back here today for a hearing? Is there not a possibility that someone can foresee what is going to happen so that the expenditure and the incident can be avoided?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, under the Immigration Act people who have had their refugee appeals turned down by the Refugee Advisory Committee or Appeal Board have recourse to the court system and are free to exercise that. In some cases the inquiry officers determine that some individuals must be kept in detention because they are not responsible for their actions, or because they have shown, as some of these individuals have in the past, an inclination to escape or not to show up for their hearings. The reason for the movement here was that their hearings could be held before the court system or the Appeal Board.

As the Hon. Member may know, we are going through a pretty major revision of the entire refugee determination procedures. We have worked on changing the Refugee Advisory Committee, and the Appeal Board will be working on other parts of the system. That was the reason for such movement. We are looking closely at the way in which this is done so that such incidents will not be repeated in the future.

DETENTION PRACTICES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, in addition to this particular incident of a refugee being legironed and handcuffed when guilty of no crime, are there not other areas where the Minister has spoken about the special officers who, on their own opinion, determine that a person may not return for a hearing and on which there is no appeal or review of that opinion? In most jurisdictions this means the tank in either the local jail or the remand centre.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I want to ensure that the Hon. Member understands that, in the case of these particular individuals, most had a past record of some fairly violent behaviour or unwillingness to abide by the rules. In fact during the course of the transfer here two or three of them tried to escape and had to be detained again. This is not the normal procedure that we use; it is only used in exceptional cases. Even though I find the methods to be unacceptable, they were applied because of the behaviour of the particular individuals.

As far as the other part of the Hon. Member's question is concerned, I would remind him that the Immigration Act allows a number of areas of discretion. We are dealing with individual cases; no standard rule can be applied universally and we allow immigration officers such discretion.

We also have a very foolproof and open appeal system. By the number of appeals that I receive each week, I can attest to the fact that this is a very open system and we try to maintain a high degree of fairness in the system.

NATIONAL PARKS

HIRING OF SURF GUARDS IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Parks Canada, and I have sent him notice of it. The Minister is well aware of the situation in Prince Edward Island regarding Parks Canada employees, using criteria that are different from those used in previous years for hiring surf guards. In view of the fact that there are qualified, experienced surf guards, some even possessing seven years' experience, available for work in Prince Edward Island, could the Minister inform the House why his officials hired four surf guards from outside the Province?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the situation. My colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs has been assiduous in drawing it to my attention.

Unfortunately there still seems to be some dispute about the essential facts of the situation and I am trying to disentangle those. It is my understanding that while some off-Island people have been employed as surf guards, by far the majority are people who have previously worked in the park in Prince Edward Island. The process for selection has been to go through the Canada Employment Centre of the Island and, as well, to consider those people who worked in the park in past years.

There has not been a specific shift this year compared to other years in the terms of the opportunity for people from off-Island to apply for jobs and be considered for them. Indeed, some of the off-Island people that I know the Hon. Member is particularly concerned about have worked in the Park in previous years. So there has not been a shift in approach from that point of view. Indeed, the hiring approach in using the Canada Employment Centre follows that used in other parks in the Atlantic Provinces where people are able to apply for jobs even though they are not from the specific Province concerned.

I also want to tell the Hon. Member that some of the facts in the matter seem to be in dispute. I am trying to find out exactly what the situation is. To the best of my knowledge the answer I have given is accurate.

PREFERENCE SOUGHT FOR ISLAND RESIDENTS

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, the Minister said other Provinces have similar hiring practices. I should like to point out to him that Prince Edward Island is the only park in eastern Canada where Parks Canada employees interview and hire lifeguards directly.

I should like to draw his attention to the terms of reference that Parks Canada gives to the contractor who, in turn, has to use them to hire surf guards for national parks other than in Prince Edward Island. In the beach patrol service, for Cape Breton Highlands National Park, in the terms of reference it is provided that in the selection of beach patrol the contractor shall ensure that preference is given to equally—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Gass: Madam Speaker, the Minister said that no preference was given. Why are residents of Prince Edward Island not given the preference as in other Provinces? In other Provinces the reference that is given by Parks Canada to the contractor stipulates that the persons hired have to be residents of the Province.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, in terms of off-Island or on-Island employment, the situation is much the same. In the past there have people who have worked in the Park who were not from Prince Edward Island. That is still the case, but in this case as well people who are off-Island have been employed again.

The Hon. Member has referred to other parks. I indicated to him earlier that there is some confusion in the advice that I have received on what the facts are in other parks in comparison with Prince Edward Island. I do not want to mislead the Hon. Member, and so I do not want to confirm specifically or deny specifically what he has suggested. I have conflicting advice on what are the facts. I want to make sure that when I give him the information it is as accurate as I can make it. That is what I am trying to do at the present time.

BILINGUALISM

KATIMAVIK PROGRAM—REFUSAL TO HIRE ANGLOPHONE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, last week in the House I asked the Secretary of State to explain what he meant in a speech to a Francophone crowd, when he said that he intended to make Canada a French state, and I received an unsatisfactory answer.

In an advertisement that appeared in a Peterborough newspaper recently, the Minister advertised for students or people to apply for work in Katimavik, a program to bring Anglophones and Francophones together to understand each other better. The qualification was that the applicants should show a willingness to become bilingual. I ask the Minister why his senior official refused employment to an Anglophone because he could not speak French and was applying for a job with Katimavik to work in Ontario?

• (1440)

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the Katimavik program is specifically aimed at bringing Canadians together from all parts of the country, to learn about Canada's diversity and be given an opportunity to work in communities that differ from their usual environment, and thus get first-hand knowledge of the many facets of our country. When we ask a student to indicate his or her interest in the other official language, this is done so that we can direct this student to the appropriate language community where he or she will be able to communicate with his or her environment.

The purpose of Katimavik is not to provide courses in either official language of Canada, but to enable young people taking part in the program to become familiar with Canada's diversity through their contacts with the communities in which they are to work. However, if the person in question does not show any particular interest in this aspect, he or she is then directed to a community where his or her language is spoken.

[English]

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, the Minister intentionally avoided answering the question.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT ADVERTISING FUNDS BE SPENT ON CREATING JOBS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I asked the Prime Minister last week if he would consider using some of his advertising budget to employ students, rather than using hundreds of millions of dollars for advocacy advertising to promote the Government's own programs. The Prime Minister said my question was a silly one. So my question to the Prime Minister today is as follows. Why is he adding to an already exorbitant advertising budget in announcing his intention to use advocacy dollars to promote a budget which is well known to all Canadians for what it really is? Would the Prime Minister not consider using some of those advertising dollars, some of the $800 million or $400 million spent on advertising, for the creation of jobs for the youth of the country? This is not, Madam Speaker, put as a silly question but as a constructive proposal from the Opposition.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has heard the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Employment and Immigration many times give an answer to the effect that almost half the money which we were spending for direct job creation or for retraining was going to the youth of the country. Therefore, it is difficult to follow his reasoning that the Government is not concerned with the youth of this country.

As far as advertising is concerned, Madam Speaker, I have not recently been briefed on the amounts of money which the Government is spending on this. I would wager that it is proportionately the same as that spent by any of the Conservative provincial Governments, proportionate to their representations.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

DEMONSTRATIONS AGAINST POSSIBLE CRUISE MISSILE TESTING—REQUEST FOR DEBATE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The people of Canada are voting with their feet for world-wide nuclear disarmament. In fact, just two days ago more than 80,000 Canadians took to the streets in many cities in Canada to demonstrate their opposition to the Cruise missile testing. It must be clear, even to the Prime Minister, that Canadians want to send a message to the war planners both in Moscow and in Washington. Is the Prime Minister not prepared to listen to the wishes of the people to be free of nuclear threat, no matter from which camp it comes? Will he assure this House that, as a first step, no final decision on Cruise testing in Canada will be taken until there is a full debate in this Chamber? Will he also permit that debate to be open and free of party restrictions, allowing each Member to vote according to his or her conscience?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, Hon. Members on this side are always encouraged to vote according to their consciences.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: In asking the question the Hon. Member is implying that in the New Democratic Party this is not the case. We hope they will vote according to their conscience if ever such a debate is held. There has been a debate before on this whole problem. I certainly would welcome another one. The Opposition Parties have a multiplicity of days between now and the end of June when they can choose the subject they want to debate. I would hope that in the debate, Madam Speaker, there would be a reminder to all of us that the danger of nuclear escalation is not a one-sided one. I believe the Hon. Member is making that point in his question and, if he is, I certainly agree with him.

As I indicated before, I understand the pangs of conscience of those in Canada who are protesting against the eventual testing of the Cruise. I have indicated that I have been somewhat surprised that there was no similar protestations during the several years when the Soviets were deploying their SS-20s, replacing their SS-3s and SS-4s by a much more sophisticated and dangerous weapon, which I believe can only be justified as a weapon of terror for western Europe. I was surprised that there was no such demonstrations as the Hon. Member commends, during that period, Madam Speaker.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, this Party is on record as opposing all escalation in this mad dance in which both super powers are involved. In fact, in this day and age there are no longer good guys and bad guys. When both sides can destroy all human life several times over, no one is a good guy any more. They are both crazy, Madam Speaker. The intent of 80,000 Canadians is to plead with the Government to disentangle Canada—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is on his feet and I believe he should be reminded that he must ask a question.

Mr. de Jong: My question, Madam Speaker, is again directed to the Prime Minister. Canadians wish to know, really, what the situation is. Has the United States made a formal request or has it not made a formal request for Canada to test the Cruise? Has Canada given a commitment, or have we not given a commitment? Are 80,000 Canadians marching in the streets over a decision which has already been made? Can the Prime Minister tell us what the situation is? Has a request been made, and have we given a commitment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the situation has not changed since this question has been answered repeatedly by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and myself. The request has not been made yet. We have not, therefore, made any commitment. I would point out, however, to this House and to the Hon. Member, that it is surprising to me, when he used such balanced language in his first question, that there is not a sign in any of these demonstrations, and no energy is expended by the NDP, which I know of, to militate against the Soviet SS-20s. Has the Hon. Member ever seen in that band of people signs protesting against the Soviet Union? Has the Hon. Member's Party expressed disappointment with Secretary Andropov's non-reply to President Reagan's offer to go away from the zero option to find some compromise level? That is the kind of question, Madam Speaker, that I throw back to the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

REGISTERED CHARITIES' TAX PROPOSAL

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last week the Minister said he had accepted one recommendation of the Coalition of National Voluntary Organizations to do away with the $100 automatic deduction, and rejected the other recommendation for a tax credit for receiptable charitable donations. Will the Minister confirm that what is at issue is a recommendation called the "give and take proposal", under which a new incentive would be given to taxpayers to contribute to the nation's 47,000 registered charities which do such an important job in building up community life in Canada? Thus the Minister has distorted the precise proposal which has been before this House for several years.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there has been no distortion by requiring that charitable donations be receipted. I have given a great incentive to Canadians to give to charitable organizations during the course of the following years rather than receiving a deduction for which they have not contributed anything to charitable organizations. The Hon. Member is right in saying that I had accepted one out of the two recommendations made, as I have indicated. If you get a 500 batting average in any baseball league, you are way at the top. That is a pretty good average for anyone who is making representations to the Government.

CALCULATION OF BENEFITS TO GOVERNMENT AND CHARITIES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, has the Minister studied the protest launched by the Coalition of National Voluntary Organizations? Taking the 500 batting average, has the Minister personally examined the statistics and estimates presented by the voluntary organizations in a brief which has been before this House for some time, and which shows the Government would be ahead financially with the give and take proposal, and that the charitable agencies would be helped in their valuable work? Those statistics were put on the record by myself in a Private Members' Motion some time ago.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I cannot blame anyone for trying for a 1000 batting average. But if you compare this with various other representations made by other groups to the Government, particularly with relation to the budget, I would argue that the voluntary organizations have done extremely well and I hope they will see it that way. If they feel that the measures taken are not appropriate, then obviously I would be ready to listen to them, as I have done in the past. If they feel I should abandon this proposal, I will be ready to listen to them again.

BANKS AND BANKING

RENEGOTIATION OF LOANS—AMOUNT OF PENALTY

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Bank of Canada sets the bank rate weekly, which affects every Canadian who has cause to borrow money. The fluctuations in this rate are quite often artificial in nature, for the purpose of maintaining the status of the Canadian dollar. Thousands of Canadians who took out loans when the rate was forced to record highs last summer are now faced with prohibitive penalties if they wish to buy down to the present rates. Will the Minister provide a tax credit to banks to allow them to permit relatively penalty-free buy-downs of loans to current interest rates?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the bank rate is not established or determined by the Bank of Canada. It is determined weekly by the auction of Government of Canada Treasury Bills, and it is that auction which in the final instance sets the bank rate each week. I hope my hon. colleague sees reason to rejoice in the fact that the bank rate has dropped substantially since last year and that interest rates in Canada are now the lowest they have been in four years or even five. I hope my hon. colleague appreciates that fact.

As for the Hon. Member's proposal, I do not intend to give it further consideration.

[English]

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, I think we all agree that the bank rate is down. I do not know whether that is altogether due to the Minister of Finance, or not.

PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS WITH HIGH INTEREST MORTGAGES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, what about the people who borrowed money to buy homes or finance businesses and who are paying as high as 23 per cent? Now the bank rate has dropped and they can buy mortgages at 11 per cent to 13 per cent. What about these people caught in a bind? Is there any relief in his mind for these people to get them on a more competitive basis so that they can afford the homes in which they are now living?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my hon. colleague is probably aware that in most cases, these are short-term loans which are being renegotiated and are or will be due very soon. My hon. colleague is also aware that in many cases, there is a clause under which the borrower may pay back a loan before the due date, subject to payment of a penalty. Such clauses are customary and are available in most loan contracts.

PROMISE TO CHANGE VALUATION DATE FOR FARMS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance as well, and it concerns the long-term future of farming. In the last election campaign the Liberal Party promised to change the valuation day for capital gains on farms from 1971, and to index it to reflect the real increase in inflation.

Mr. Lalonde: Nineteen seventy-four.

Mr. Nystrom: From 1971 to 1974, and then index it after that. The Minister of Agriculture said this would happen soon, and then last month he said sooner than soon. Why was this not in the budget last week?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I must have received thousands of suggestions and proposals regarding the budget. Some of them I considered but others had to be dropped because of the Government's financial obligations and the tax burden on the Canadian public. I believe that the proposals I set forth in my budget speech provide a very sensible balance, in view of the needs of the country's various economic sectors. I hope my hon. colleague realizes that the measures announced last week already included an additional $100 million for farmers in need, in the form of subsidized interest rates, and that every single measure concerning investment credit as well as the business loss allowance are available to farmers just as they are to small-, medium-sized and large businesses.

Therefore, there are a number of very useful measures available to farmers, who, I hope, will use them to good advantage.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, the Liberal Party should not make an election promise if it does not intend to keep that promise.

INCOME TAX

DEDUCTION FOR FARM LOSSES—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, as the Minister knows, farm incomes are down and many farmers, particularly young ones, are forced to work part-time off their farms. Yet under Section 31 of the Income Tax Act they cannot deduct more than $5,000 of their farm losses against their income. That Section has not been changed since 1951 and we have had a lot of inflation since then. Why has the Minister not indexed this aspect of the Income Tax Act as he has for many corporations and so on? And if he does not index it, why has he not deleted this Section of the Income Tax Act so it would be more fair to the farmers?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that the reason is the same one I gave in answer to a previous question.

COLLECTION OF TAX FROM SENIOR CITIZENS—DEMAND FOR QUARTERLY PAYMENTS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue whose Department, for the first time, has compelled many thousands of senior citizens to pay income tax installments rather than waiting until they completed their returns. Having regard to the fact that many of these people have additional taxable income because of their frugal living and having denied themselves many things during their working lives, on what basis is the Minister now compelling these thousands of senior citizens—I understand the legal rights the Department has—to pay tax installments four times a year?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I must admit I am a little surprised at the line of reasoning followed by the Hon. Member, because he says that the Act prescribes that this is how the Department of National Revenue must proceed, because that is what is provided under the Act.

An Hon. Member: May proceed.

Mr. Bussières: No, not may, must proceed. The Hon. Member should take another look at the wording of the Act, and he will see that officials of the Department of National Revenue cannot choose whether or not to enforce compliance by certain groups of taxpayers. I have already answered a similar question here in the House, and I indicated our concern within the Department of National Revenue regarding enforcement of these provisions of the Income Tax Act. However, the Hon. Member will understand that until this provision is changed on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, we must enforce it, and at the same time be as flexible as we can in considering each specific case.

[English]

Mr. Jarvis: Madam Speaker, if the Minister and his officials have been compelled to act that way, I wonder what they have been doing for the last few years, because these are people whose income has not changed, but they are being asked to do this for the first time.

TREATMENT OF ANNUAL BOND INCOME

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, given a case, and I am sure it is not unique, where a senior citizen receives bond income all in the month of December and that is the only additional income to her pension, is the Department going to be sufficiently flexible so that a taxpayer like that may go to the district taxation office and make an arrangement to pay just the one installment, rather than four installments, when she receives that additional taxable income? Is there going to be any flexibility in the implementation of this program?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, Hon. Members must understand that I cannot establish a general rule on the basis of one example, one specific case, submitted by the Hon. Member. I think that if he reviews the provisions of the Income Tax Act, he will see that for there to be an obligation to pay income tax in quarterly instalments, a certain percentage of income must be paid to the person concerned at certain times of the year, so that I cannot establish a general rule, on the basis of one case or specific example, like the one submitted by the Hon. Member. I think the Hon. Member should remember that we are trying to be as flexible as we can. However, we have no choice, when the provisions of the Income Tax Act do not allow us that discretion, but to ask people to comply with these provisions.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—ALLEGED UNAUTHORIZED INTRUSION INTO OFFICES OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, you will recall that I raised a question of privilege last Thursday. I rise now simply to ask whether or not the Chair has yet had time to make its investigation or whether the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) has an explanation. If not, how much further time will be necessary before the inquiry is completed?

Madam Speaker: I am hopeful that by tomorrow I will have all the facts. There is one report which I have not received in writing, and I would prefer to have it in writing. However, as soon as the investigation is completed, I will certainly be able to rule on it.

PERMANENT AND PROVISIONAL STANDING ORDERS

PUBLICATION OF INDEX

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, on this particular occasion may I thank the Table for having prepared the Index to the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. I state for the record that persistence sometimes has its just reward. The Index is ready. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATION IN CANADA AND EASTERN EUROPE

Question No. 3,750—Mr. MacKay:

1. As of (a) January, 1982 (b) January, 1977, what was the total staff, stationed in Canada and enjoying diplomatic immunity, of (i) the U.S.S.R. (ii) Czechoslovakia (iii) Poland (iv) Hungary (v) Romania (vi) Bulgaria?

2. As of (a) January, 1982 (b) January, 1977, what was the total staff, employed at diplomatic missions in Canada and not enjoying diplomatic immunity, of (i) the U.S.S.R. (ii) Czechoslovakia (iii) Poland (iv) Hungary (v) Romania (vi) Bulgaria?

3. Were any of the employees in Part 2 Canadian citizens and, if so, how many?

4. As of (a) January, 1982 (b) January, 1977, what was the total staff enjoying diplomatic immunity stationed at the Canadian missions in (i) the U.S.S.R. (ii) Czechoslovakia (iii) Poland (iv) Hungary (v) Romania (vi) Bulgaria?

5. As of (a) January, 1982 (b) January, 1977, what was the total staff not enjoying diplomatic immunity employed at the Canadian missions in (i) the U.S.S.R. (ii) Czechoslovakia (iii) Poland (iv) Hungary (v) Romania (vi) Bulgaria and, in each case, what was the breakdown between Canadian citizens and locally-employed staff?

6. What travelling restrictions are currently in force for the employees of the foreign missions in Canada of (a) the U.S.S.R. (b) Czechoslovakia (c) Poland (d) Hungary (e) Romania (f) Bulgaria?

7. What travelling restrictions are currently in force for Canadian diplomatic personnel in (a) the U.S.S.R. (b) Czechoslovakia (c) Poland (d) Hungary (e) Romania (f) Bulgaria?

8. Since 1952, were any employees of the diplomatic missions in Canada of (a) the U.S.S.R. (b) Czechoslovakia (c) Poland (d) Hungary (e) Romania (f) Bulgaria expelled from Canada as personae non gratae or otherwise and, if so, in each case, what was the (i) name of the employee (ii) country (iii) date (iv) reason for expulsion?

9. Since 1952, were any employees of Canadian diplomatic missions in (a) the U.S.S.R. (b) Czechoslovakia (c) Poland (d) Hungary (e) Romania (f) Bulgaria expelled as personae non gratae or otherwise and, if so, in each case, what was the (i) name of the employee (ii) country from which he/she was expelled (iii) date (iv) reason for expulsion?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. As of (a) January, 1982 and (b) January, 1977, the total staff stationed in Canada and enjoying diplomatic immunity numbered as follows for the following countries:

(i)	U.S.S.R.	38	31
(ii)	Czechoslovakia	7	4
(iii)	Poland	9	15
(iv)	Hungary	6	5
(v)	Romania	3	7
(vi)	Bulgaria	5	2

Order Paper Questions

2. As of (a) January, 1982 and (b) January, 1977, the total staff not enjoying diplomatic immunity was as follows for the following countries:

		1982	1977
(i)	U.S.S.R.	24	30
(ii)	Czechoslovakia	5	figures not available
(iii)	Poland	2	figures not available
(iv)	Hungary	10	figures not available
(v)	Romania	5	figures not available
(vi)	Bulgaria	5	figures not available

3. The Embassy of Bulgaria employed three Canadians as of January, 1982.

4. As of (a) January, 1982 and (b) January, 1977, the total staff enjoying diplomatic immunity numbered as follows at the following Canadian Embassies:

(i)	U.S.S.R.	14	16
(ii)	Czechoslovakia	16	6
(iii)	Poland	20	9
(iv)	Hungary	4	4
(v)	Romania	11	3
(vi)	Bulgaria	non-resident	non-resident

5. As of (a) January, 1982 and (b) January, 1977, the total staff not enjoying diplomatic immunity numbered as follows at the following Canadian Embassies:

		1982	1977
(i)	U.S.S.R.	62 (including 34 Soviets)	61 (including 32 Soviets)
(ii)	Czechoslovakia	19 (all Czechoslovaks)	27 (including 16 Czechoslovaks)
(iii)	Poland	27 (including 23 Poles)	39 (including 26 Poles)
(iv)	Hungary	20 (including 12 Hungarians)	19 (including 11 Hungarians)
(v)	Romania	14 (all Romanians)	19 (including 11 Romanians)
(vi)	Bulgaria	non-resident	non-resident

6. (a) In reciprocity for travel restrictions imposed on members of the Canadian Embassy in Moscow, Soviet diplomats resident in Ottawa may travel freely only within the National Capital region. If they wish to travel outside these limits, the Soviet Embassy must give the Department of External Affairs 48 hours' notice. The time for advance notice is reduced to 24 hours for travel to Mirabel airport and to Montréal.

Soviet personnel serving at the U.S.S.R. Consulate General in Montréal may travel freely within a 40 km radius of Montréal City Hall. If they wish to travel outside these limits, 48 hours advance notice is required. The time for advance notice is reduced to 24 hours for travel to Mirabel and Ottawa.

(b), (c), (d), (e) and (f) There are no travel restrictions for Czechoslovak, Polish, Hungarian, Romanian and Bulgarian officials serving in Canada.

7. (a) Canadian personnel may travel freely within a 40 km radius from the center of Moscow. Forty-eight hours advance notice is required when travelling to all areas outside of Moscow with the exception of Leningrad where only 24 hour notification is required.

(b), (c), (d), (e) and (f) There are no travel restrictions on Canadian staff serving in Czechoslovakia, Poland, Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria.

8. See reply to question 4,167 answered on June 23, 1982.

9. Since 1952 no employees of Canadian diplomatic missions were expelled from Poland, Romania or Bulgaria, but a total of four were expelled from the U.S.S.R., Czechoslovakia and Hungary. Particulars of three of those four incidents are as follows:

(i) Name	(ii) Expelled from	(iii) Date	(iv) Reason
1. Lt. Col. J. Watson Military Attaché Canadian Embassy Moscow	U.S.S.R.	May, 1968	Accused of spying against the U.S.S.R.
2. S. G. Noble Visa Officer Canadian Embassy Budapest	Hungary	January, 1970	Alleged to have engaged in activities inconsistent with his official duties
3. Col. H. Gold Defence Attaché Canadian Embassy Moscow	U.S.S.R.	January, 1980	Alleged to have carried out intelligence activities in the U.S.S.R.

4. The fourth expulsion was from Czechoslovakia, and was not publicized at the time. Having reviewed the circumstances the government abides by the earlier decision not to disclose details concerning the matter.

MIGRATORY BIRDS REGULATION

Question No. 4,744—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Did the Government give a permit to Messrs. Peter Knapton and Ian Weir, both of Mississauga, to use firearms to kill migratory birds out of season within the corporate limits of Mississauga?

2. Is it the policy of the Department of the Environment to allow migratory birds to be killed for the purposes of display in museums?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): 1. A scientific permit was issued under Section 19 of the Migratory Birds Regulation to Mr. Peter Knapton to use a firearm to collect migratory bird specimens outside of existing season on behalf of the Royal Ontario Museum. No permit was issued to Mr. Ian Weir.

2. Yes.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Miss Carney (page 24689).

Madam Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette).

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to speak in this particular debate because, for the first time in a long time, we as Parliamentarians and as Canadians—

Mr. Taylor: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) rises on a point of order?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that when the House adjourned at one o'clock noon, a question had been asked by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), and you stated that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) would have a chance to reply right after lunch. I think the Hon. Member should have a chance to reply.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) wish to reply to the question?

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Yes, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member has asked a question about supporting Canadian investors and a general tax cut, and he asked why I cannot support the budget. I do not support it because I do not see anything approaching a general economic strategy for Canada. The Government does not appear to have any vision of where it wants the country to go. It does not appear to have any alternative philosophy in terms of the economic development of our country as spelled out in the budget. As a matter of fact, the budget does not even pose many questions about where the Government wants the country to go. For reasons like that, I certainly cannot support the budget.

The other reason is that I do not think there is much in it of importance to small business. We all know that small business creates many more jobs than big business. So far the Government has been more content to give incentives to the large business community.

In terms of the select tax cuts, the Parliamentary Secretary made an excellent point. He pointed out some of the structural problems we have in this country because of the fact that we have so much more foreign ownership and we import more manufactured goods per capita than any other developed nation in the world. When we do have selective tax cuts and when consumers do spend their money on consumer goods, much or perhaps the greatest majority would come from abroad. That is one of the problems. As an alternative, I would suggest that we consider selective tax cuts.

I note that a few years ago in Quebec the Finance Minister, Mr. Parizeau, provided a sales tax cut for goods produced in this country like shoes, clothing and furniture, giving consumers a real break and also stimulating Canadian industry. Perhaps we could do something similar at the federal level.

As a last point on the tax cut, once again, because of the structural problem we have in our economy, we are left with a pretty difficult choice as to whether we should have a tax cut and stimulate foreign enterprises or whether we should not have a tax cut at all. There is also a good argument, just for equity reasons, to have a tax cut for low income people, even though much of the stimulus which would result would, of course, go to the benefit of industry in Japan, the United States and elsewhere. Therefore, I would favour an across the board tax cut for low income people, but I realize the problems which would be created in terms of more goods coming in from abroad.

Therefore, I suggest that we consider making a selective tax cut which would perhaps satisfy both principles of having a more fair and equal tax system for the ordinary citizen who would spend the money to create more jobs, but the tax cut should be provided in areas where we do have Canadian industry, such as textiles and shoes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) seeking to ask a question?

Mr. Clarke: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville if he included, in his opposition to foreign investment, the type of investment which would see the Japanese establishing a wheel plant in Richmond, British Columbia, creating some kind of employment out there. Is that included?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I did say at the outset that there are some benefits from foreign investment, as long as we had control of foreign investment as Canadians and as long as we had agreements with other countries. I would like to see some kind of auto pact with the Japanese so that we would produce Japanese cars and plants in this country, which would provide some jobs here. I think that is something we should try to negotiate.

We must also determine what kind of foreign capital we want in the country. I have nothing against foreign debt capital, for example. I am more concerned about foreign equity capital because that gives control over industries to foreigners. In my own province of Saskatchewan, for example, our people decided many years ago to take over the electrical facilities in our Province. Much of the money to do so came from the United States and was borrowed on American financial markets. Once we paid off the mortgages, we owned the industry, which is the Saskatchewan Power Corporation. The other example is the Saskatchewan Potash Corporation. Again, part of the money to take over the foreign mines was American money, but it was money we borrowed in United States. Once we paid off the debt, the people of Saskatchewan owned that particular enterprise.

Therefore, I suggest that the federal Government consider those types of examples when it comes to foreign investment in this country. The important question is: Who will be in control of the particular enterprise once there is foreign money in it? I maintain that it is to the benefit of Canada that control remain in the hands of Canadians.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question. The Hon. Member had a quick throw away line, which I think deserves comment on my part and additional comment on his part, to the effect that the budget does not do very much for small business. I differ with that statement. I quickly remembered five items suggested to us by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. We followed all five of these items in the budget.

First, we used the tax system generally, instead of a system of grants, because the Federation felt it was a more direct way to send our aid to those in small business. We helped them write off their losses and put an emphasis on equity rather than debt. We have avoided payroll taxes and have used solid public works which will have ongoing benefits instead of adding make-work programs.

I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell us how he reacts to that when those were five of the key points recommended by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business when its representatives came to see us before the budget was announced.

• (1510)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, of course there is something in the budget for small business but, in my opinion, it does not go far enough to help the small business people in Canada. I think that will be the reaction of the small business community within this calendar year. I think there are many more incentives that the small business community needs, such as low interest loans to help them expand their operations—

Mr. Fisher: The Federal Business Development Bank.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member mentions the Federal Business Development Bank. I think that if he did a survey among the small business community in Canada—

Mr. Benjamin: They quit going.

Mr. Nystrom: —he would find that they quit going, as my friend from Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) says. I think he would also find that they were very dissatisfied with the type of help that is available from that institution.

The federal Government has generally been more content to aid big business in this country through the tax system and its policies rather than small business. Small business tends to be Canadian owned and controlled and tends to create many more jobs than the massive, foreign owned enterprises.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for jumping too quickly to my feet a few moments ago before the previous speaker's question period had ended.

It is indeed a happy occasion for a Member on the Government side to speak in this budget debate. For the last year and a half, Members of our Party, supporters of the Government and all Canadians generally have been on the defensive as a result of the problems that have been caused by the recession in our country. It is indeed a pleasure to be able to stand up in the House at last and talk about some good economic news.

There is no doubt in my mind that we are well on our way to restoring economic health in Canada, and this can be borne out by looking at the leading economic indicators in the country. But we must ensure that while on this road to economic recovery we enhance its growth which is expected to occur in the coming year. This Parliament, the federal Government and provincial Governments as well must not do anything to undermine that economic recovery.

As I have said, the aim of this budget has been to enhance the recovery and create an underpinning of sustained long-term growth. I believe all Canadians want to see this happen. Not only Members of our Party but Members opposite believe that these goals should be realized. While we may have some differences as to the nuances of policies to enhance economic recovery, there cannot be any quarrel with the basic objective outlined by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in his budget.

I would like to digress for a moment and talk about the Minister of Finance. He came into the portfolio last October during a very difficult time for the Government and the country as a whole. Without a doubt he has performed admirably in that portfolio. As a Member from Metropolitan Toronto, which I believe is the leading business centre in the country, I may say that the Minister has won many friends as a result of his determined effort to consult widely with the business community, labour, consumer groups and individual citizens. Indeed, I have no doubt that certainly in Metro Toronto the Minister has been tireless in the number of visits he has made to the communities and in the amount of time he has spent meeting with people to discuss the economic future of the country.

I spoke a moment ago about the signs of economic recovery taking place. I would like to highlight two or three of those signs which have given me the confidence that it is taking place. First, there has been increased confidence in the stock market in the past six months. There is an old adage which states that the stock market always anticipates the real economic climate on the street about a year to 18 months ahead of time. If that is true, the real signs of economic recovery will be felt strongly by ordinary Canadians, including those who are trying to keep their jobs, manage their businesses and those who are seeking work, later this year and early next spring.

There has been a rise in the leading industrial indicators both here and in the United States. We have seen inflation dropping. I understand that the inflation rate in the United States has been approximately zero for the last two or three months, which is an admirable performance in that country. I will talk about the differences between inflation in the United States and Canada in a few moments because several factors must be taken into account when comparing inflation between the two countries.

However, the six and five program which was instituted in this country last summer has been an overwhelming success. We have seen the inflation rate drop to 6.5 per cent or 7 per cent in the last four months. June 28 of this year will be the anniversary of the announcement of the program last year and there is every indication that the inflation rate will be down to 6 per cent for the 12-month period from June 28, 1982 to June 28, 1983. If we reach that goal, which I am sure we will, our goal of 5 per cent inflation for the next year will easily be attainable if we take the right steps as a Government and as citizens.

While there has been a slight resumption of consumer spending, it has been enough to make our retailers smile at least a little. It is our hope that people will begin to spend more as increased confidence continues over the next few months.

Members on the Opposition side will say that Canadians do not have the money to spend. While that is true for the 12 per cent who are out of work and those who are fearful of losing their jobs, we must remember that 88 per cent of the work force is employed. We must also remember that the Canadian savings rate are at an all-time high. My constituency in Metro Toronto is by no means wealthy. It consists of lower and middle income Canadians. As I travelled through my constituency I found that many of my constituents have been very prudent, putting money aside in the good years to provide for the lean years. They are still working but they are reluctant to purchase. Their fear has caused them to keep their money in a nest egg.

A comparison shows that the Canadian savings rate is also double that of the United States. Disposable income in the United States is 6 per cent whereas it is 13 per cent in Canada. I suggest that this indicates there is room for ordinary citizens to begin once again to make those purchases which they have held back on in the last years because of their fear of the economic climate in the country. Indeed, we have seen some resumption in consumer spending and I think we will see more.

Let me deal with housing for a moment. Housing has been the traditional bellwether index in this country. I am pleased to say that housing starts have increased significantly over the past year.

The important strategy for all Governments in Canada to use is to enhance the economic recovery that is now under way. There has been much discussion up to this point in the debate about how this budget benefits the business community. My opinion that this is true has been reinforced as a result of talking to my friends in the Toronto business community. They are absolutely ecstatic about the measures that have been introduced which will improve the investor and the business climate generally. We have heard a great deal in this debate about the federal investment tax credit and the initiation of the Special Recovery Investment Fund and the Special Recovery Export Financing Fund. As well there is the indexed Securities Investment Plan and the changes in the tax treatment regarding business losses. These have been very well accepted by people both in the big business community and the small business community.

I recently went to the opening of a refurbished landmark in my community, a local restaurant that has been renovated. Its owners are very enthused about the way the budget will help their small business. Clearly small business as well as big business is happy about the budget.

It is important that the budget makes provisions to help business because the private sector must be the engine for economic growth in the long run. The Government and the public sector can do a lot by levering funds from the private sector, but they cannot bring about the resumption of economic health and the creation of more jobs on their own.

However, we must not lose sight of the fact that the budget does more than just help business. Let us look at how ordinary citizens will be helped by this budget. Let us take a look at housing. Housing is one of the bellwether industries of this country. It has suffered severely in the last couple of years but it is now seeing its recovery under way. The theme is to enhance the recovery occurring within the housing industry. As interest rates have declined, housing sales have started to surge. In Metropolitan Toronto where very few houses moved last year we are now seeing quite a surge in sales. That means people will be moving out into the suburbs and buying newer houses. Those people in apartments who have been saving up over the last few years will now look to moving out and buying their own homes.

An amount of $250 million has been set aside for housing and related measures in this budget for 1983-1984. New housing starts are expected to be boosted to over 175,000 this year alone and to 200,000 in 1984. Those are not quite the levels we saw a few years ago but the number is indeed significant. As houses are being built, building materials are in great demand, which helps every single sector in the country. The forest products industry and other allied building industries that have suffered so much in the last year will also be helped.

The Canadian Home Renovation Plan, which has been a great success in my area, provides up to 30 per cent of the cost of home improvement to a maximum of $3,000 and will be continued and enhanced. This will help all Canadians in the moderate income bracket.

The Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan, which I think has helped to spur the housing sale resurgence that we have seen in the last year or so, has been extended another month. That is very important in the Spring season because people will be able to take advantage of the program, which provides a $3,000 grant to buyers of new homes.

The Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan has allowed people for the past ten years or so to set aside $1,000 a year up to $10,000 tax-free to help toward the purchase of their homes. This will be adjusted and allow people to build up that $10,000 ahead of schedule. It will accelerate the achievement of $10,000 to 1984. This will give a real boost to people who have a bit of extra cash. There are people around who have considerable savings as a result of the high savings rate that we have had in the country. Hopefully, this will encourage people to buy those houses now rather than wait two or three years.

Then we have the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program which has been designed to upgrade sub-standard housing in designated areas. The money for that program has also been increased. That, I think, is a pretty good group of measures for the ordinary taxpayers in the country, not those concerned with capital gains and other tax and business incentives, but the ordinary taxpayers.

But there is more in this budget which makes it a document to which I am proud to give support in the House of Commons. First, the child care expense deduction will be doubled to $2,000 per child, up to $8,000 per family. That means a lot to working parents, especially in my constituency and in all those constituencies in the country which are made up of lower and middle-income groups.

Getting back to the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, there is now a provision whereby the money in existing plans this year can be freed up to be used not just for purchase of homes but for the purchase of furnishings and appliances. It is funny but about a month ago one of my constituents came to me with that specific request. The individual is a lady 66 years of age. She and her husband I suppose, when the plan first started, were in their middle 50s. They had intended to buy a house. All Canadians, I think, have the dream of owning their own home at one time or another. This couple had that dream. They put aside $2,000 or $3,000. But the husband died and the surviving wife fell upon tough times. There was no way she could afford to buy that home. The lady is now living in assisted housing in my constituency, assisted by the Metropolitan Housing Corporation, CMHC and the provincial Government. She is living a life with dignity as a senior citizen, but she had $2,000 or $3,000 in a RHOSP and she wanted to make use of that money. I made a request of the Minister of Finance and I got a nice answer from him. He said he was sorry but the plan did not cover taking money out for furnishings. That was all the lady wanted. She wanted a new fridge, stove, a chesterfield and that type of thing in order to furnish her apartment in a proper manner. Then low and behold we have a proposed change in the budget which will help this particular lady.

I will not be so immodest as to suggest that this was my idea, but I am very glad the representations I made, and which I am sure other Members made, on this particular point were accepted by the Minister of Finance. It shows how sensitive he is, not only to opinions of interest groups in the country but also to those of Members of this House. I have at least one happy constituent and I am sure there are a number of others who have the same kind of circumstances this lady had. These people are no doubt quite pleased by that particular budget measure.

Of course, this measure will also help the retail furniture industry which has been hard hit in the last year. This measure will help the industries that produce appliances, chesterfields and other home furnishings.

One particular matter about which I am very glad is the proposal to make the Student Loans Program applicable to part-time students. We tend to think that there are two categories of students. First are the ones full-time at school who work in the summer but live at home with their parents. They really do not have too much in the way of difficulty getting through from year to year. Second are the part-time students who are cribbing at night upgrading themselves, and working in the day.

There is another group of people who do not have the luxury of living in their family homes and are perhaps working part-time in service industries in particular. They live with two or three other young people away from home. As I understand it, these people have been ineligible for student loans. Now we have a proposal where the student loans program can be applied to part-time students. I think that is a very laudable measure.

In the budget the Government has also allocated an additional $170 million for the job creation program. There have been a few problems in Toronto with the NEED Program starting up, but that has more to do with the fact that the officials at Employment and Immigration branches in Metropolitan Toronto have been swamped with the work they have been expected to perform in job creation. They have the normal summer and winter job creation programs and now they have the NEED Program. With the general retrenchment in Government hiring the past few years, these people are working literally night after night—I know this has occurred in Toronto—trying to make these programs work. We have had some problems in my own area of the Borough of East York, but I have been fortunate enough to have had the co-operation of the Department. Some senior officials have spoken to the Mayor to help speed up the projects.

An additional $170 million will be pumped into the job creation program over the next couple of years, which means another 120,000 jobs will be created in the short term. Much of this budget is geared to long-term growth and stability and long-term job creation. However, we have to realize there are an unacceptably large number of people out of work. This is one measure that will help increase and create employment in the short term. I might just say that $280 million has also been allocated to help youth employment.

There is one item of $2.4 billion on which I want to touch briefly. This will be pumped into the economy by the large capital projects. This morning the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) made announcements. Others followed up on that. I will not go into the details.

One message has been given to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) over the past six months by the Provinces and municipalities. The message is that large scale federal projects can help get the economy going. The Ministers announced such programs as the purchase of water bombers from Canadair and modernization of the Coast Guard, $147 million for the water bombers and $630 million for the Coast Guard modernization. The Provinces and municipalities will try to build on this. This is perhaps one of the largest areas of control we have whereby we can increase the job-making potential in this country. I refer to public procurement.

In my brief sojourn in the private sector when the Thirty-first Parliament was elected and I was not, I was involved with public procurement in private industry. With the amount of money at the disposal of federal, provincial and municipal Governments, there is no doubt in my mind that an imaginative use of Government procurement policy can be of much help.

In addition to the announcements today, other projects will be announced in the next few weeks such as the core area, industrial parks and harbour-front improvements. I could go on, but my time is up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Members rising to ask questions? If not, the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke).

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am shocked to be standing here today to debate a budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) who has earned the reputation or nickname of the $200 million Minister. The Minister demonstrated such a total lack of ministerial responsibility with at least three breaches of the oath of secrecy that I am astonished and shocked that he was allowed to present his budget and that this debate is allowed to proceed.

I referred to three leaks. One is well-known. It was the infamous photo opportunity in which the Minister invited the press to come to his rooms where he joked about telephoto lenses. He unwittingly allowed telephoto lens exposure of pages of his budget, revealing a very important $4.6 billion recovery program. That $4.6 billion figure was deceitfully changed between the exposure and the delivery of the budget speech to $4.8 billion. The result is that taxpayers must pay an additional $200 million to save the skin of the Minister of Finance.

Less well known perhaps were two other information leaks from the budget. On Tuesday, before the budget was announced, Ian Morrison, President of the National Voluntary Organization, sent a telegram to members of that organization saying that reliable reports from Government were that the $100 deduction for charitable purposes would be reduced or eliminated. That became a fact when the Minister of Finance announced it on budget night. I may have more to say about that later.

The third not so well known leak occurred the week before budget night, about ten days ago. There were front page news reports of high Government officials indicating that the child care expense deduction would be doubled. Sure enough, we saw that on budget night. After the budget, the Minister said that budget secrecy was outdated. The Party opposite has shown it can change principles to suit whatever circumstances it happens to find itself in. This is just one, and I suppose we should not be too surprised.

This is the Government which was confronted with breaches of conflict of interest guidelines by Alastair Gillespie, a former Minister and the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The evidence was clear. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that, after all, they were only guidelines, they were not carved in stone. He even stated in the House that they would be happy to change the guidelines if Members opposite would rather see the guidelines more closely fit current practices.

I am not surprised to see such behaviour from a Government led by a man who uttered unprintable or at least unparliamentary words to striking workers in Quebec from the back of his limousine. This Cabinet includes a self-confessed forger, another who was convicted of contempt of court. Another, now departed, admitted dialing a judge in an attempt to influence a court. A couple of others who have fled the scene gave us such incidents as "Nannygate" and "Coalgate". At present we have an expert on sex who told one of his colleagues that everyone knows that after you get laid you get hungry. With behaviour like that, we should not be shocked by anything this Minister does. It seems the only way to get out of the Cabinet is to tell the truth. I am sure a few occupants of the front bench would attest to that.

In the 30 or so hours during which this debate will carry on, about 70 Members of Parliament will be called upon to speak. They will cover many different topics. I want to touch on some areas covering the treatment of individual Canadians. Before the business community smiles too broadly about this budget, businessmen should look at the effects it will have on individual Canadians. It is these individuals on whom businessmen rely for their fortunes and futures.

I should say something good about the budget before I comment on the sneaky and deceitful things that I see in it.

Mr. Blais: Come on, now.

Mr. Clarke: The good thing is that the child care expense deduction has been doubled. I say amen. I also say it is about time. I want to make reference to efforts that I have made to get increases in this deduction. At least ten times in this House, on motions under Standing Order 43 under the old rules, in Question Period, in speeches, in letters to Ministers and as recently as in January, 1983, in Question Period, I have raised the matter of the child care expense deduction that has not changed since 1976. For a deduction of that sort to not change in seven years is unforgivable. Those who need that deduction are the working mothers and single fathers. They should get the whole deduction of costs, not just $2,000. A decent daycare facility in any centre in Canada costs at least $4,000. This Government is finally willing to permit a $2,000 deduction. A working mother or single father who had to hire a clerk to stock shelves in his or her store would be allowed to deduct the total cost of that expense, but not if it is for child care.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker, there are two important changes of principle that are proposed in this budget. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) took objection to my use of the word "sneaky".

Mr. Blais: Deceitful.

Mr. Clarke: Well, deceitful. I will repeat it. These changes were introduced in a sneaky and deceitful way. Mr. Speaker, I will outline the problems and I will show you where those actions occur in the Minister's speech.

The first principle to be proposed in an underhanded way is to freeze personal exemptions. That trial balloon had been flown by another Minister earlier in the year and that Minister was shot down in flames. So this Minister of Finance has proposed that it is only the child exemption for children under the age of 18 that will be frozen at the present level of $710. What exactly did he say? On page 14 of the budget speech, he said:

—I propose to keep at its current level of $710 the tax exemption for children—

In other words, he is deindexing the child tax exemption even though indexing was introduced by one of his predecessors ten years ago. Mr. Speaker, I say it is deceitful because when one reads "keep at its current level", one does not think that it is being frozen or that it is being deindexed.

The Minister used similar terminology in that same section of the budget speech when he was referring to the income threshold above which the Child Tax Credit will be phased out. He used the soothing words, "hold at the present level" the family income threshold. Mr. Speaker, what he meant to say and what he would have said if he had been truthful is that he is freezing the family income threshold. In other words, the family income threshold has been deindexed. This is a very important principle that has been changed in a sneaky and deceitful way by this Minister in this budget.

Another very important principle is being changed by this budget, the principle of imposing tax on unreceived income. The Minister of Finance did not stand up and say, "Fellow Canadians, I am going to start now taxing your unreceived income". No, he gave the people a little gift. On page 7 of his budget he introduced the Indexed Securities Investment Plan. He said:

The Indexed Securities Investment Plan is also a significant step in our systematic search for ways to remove the distorting effects of inflation from our tax system.

That sounds great. We would applaud it on this side of the House. In fact, four years ago I chaired a committee of this Party which recommended the very same thing. So that sounds great, but we cannot just read the Minister's speech. We have to go to the multi-paged booklet on the Indexed Security Investment Plan. I would just excerpt a few statements taken from pages 2 and 3 so that people will realize what this Minister was up to in his underhanded way. To establish an ISIP—an Indexed Security Investment Plan, Mr. Speaker—one needs an administrator in much the same way as one needs an administrator for an RRSP. The booklet contains these words:

At the end of the year, the administrator will give the investor an information slip with all the information necessary for inclusion in the investor's tax return.

A little room is left for doubt there, Mr. Speaker, but on the next page he goes on about the calculations:

The second calculation is the determination of the portion of real capital gains or losses required to be recognized for tax purposes each year.

Further down on page 3 of the booklet he goes on to say:

Only 25 per cent of the real gain is required to be reported for tax purposes each year—

Can there be any doubt of the intent to tax unreceived gains? When he says "real capital gains", Mr. Speaker, he is referring to the capital gains in excess of the rate of inflation. If we did not have a Government that encouraged that kind of policy, we would be better off and would not need all of these plans to overcome our problems.

Mr. Speaker, on page 17 of his speech, the Minister was again being very nice. About other tax changes, he says:

Representatives of voluntary organizations have expressed concern that this—

That is, $100 deduction for charitable donations.

—reduces the tax incentive for charitable giving since the deduction is not directly related to actual amounts given.

That is true only as far as it goes. The Minister failed to say that in discussions with delegations from the voluntary sector, the Minister had been told that it was important that the $100 exemption be removed, but it was equally important that it be coupled with a tax credit system so that gifts to charitable organizations could be offset by a tax credit. We have a system given to us by the Government opposite which allows contributions to a political Party a more beneficial tax treatment than it allows contributions to a church. That is inequitable and wrong.

The Government had the opportunity to put things right. Instead it has angered the whole voluntary organization sector in Canada by removing the $100 deduction. This means that all of those organizations are going to incur enormous costs in sending out receipts which people formerly did not want. If people had only given $5 to a charity and had the $100 exemption, they could give $5 to half a dozen or ten or 15 other charities and still not need receipts. Now they are going to need those receipts and the voluntary sector is going to have to bear the cost of producing and mailing out those receipts.

Mr. Speaker, that is not the worst feature of the underhanded and unfair removal of the $100 deduction. It amounts to an $80 million tax grab by the Government. That is the exact figure that appears on page 25 of the Minister's budget papers. He says that the loss of the $100 charitable exemption will produce an extra $80 million in revenues for the Government in 1984, lest anyone think that I am being unfair.

That is not the only tax grab from individuals that is contained in this budget. The Minister announced that he is going to reduce the federal tax reduction for many Canadians. That will result in an extra revenue in 1984 of $265 million. The freeze on the exemption for children will produce an extra $35 million. The Child Tax Credit adjustments will produce an extra $235 million, and then there is the consumer tax of 6 per cent on cable services. The Minister says that will raise $50 million. The so-called special recovery tax of 1 per cent on manufacturers' sales and 1 per cent on building materials, etc., will produce $70 million. This amounts to a total tax grab of $735 million by the time those policies have matured in 1984. Goodness knows what it will be after that, but that is what it will be then.

In his comments this morning, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) made reference to an announcement that his colleague, the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), had made earlier today. I was surprised because the Minister of the Environment spoke at about 11.15, just after the House met this morning. What does that tell us, Mr. Speaker? It tells me that the Minister of State for Economic Development revealed some more details about the recovery program. But where did he reveal these details? Before what forum did he make these announcements? We are in the budget debate. This is the third day of the budget debate. The Minister of State for Economic Development is revealing budget information, but where? Not in the House of Commons, not in the budget debate, but in some other forum. I suppose we will have to read about it in the newspapers.

The Minister of Finance also made reference to business in his speech. He said that Canadian businesses have been battered by the recession, and he went on to describe what he would do for businesses. I think he should have said that Canadian businesses have been battered by the Government over the past decade or so. They have been battered by Government policies such as the National Energy Program, higher interest rates and many other interventionist policies.

The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette) spoke about people saving their money because they were afraid. Of course they were afraid; they were afraid for their jobs and for their homes. He did not say that they were afraid of this Government. They were saving their money, Mr. Speaker, because they did not know when they would be in dire need of savings. As a result, businesses suffer and bankruptcies abound.

The Government introduced cruel job programs that only lead to dead ends. After three or four months on a job program people find themselves out of work again and perhaps not eligible for Unemployment Insurance benefits. Young people do not want short-term jobs; they want careers. Unless the Government comes forward with a policy to get the economy back on the rails they are not going to get permanent jobs. In fact some of them are displacing people who have permanent jobs. Some of the Mickey Mouse programs that the Minister has introduced at various times encourage businesses to hire young, subsidized workers by paying part of their wages. That just results in long-term expert workers being laid off. They then apply for Unemployment Insurance benefits. That kind of program just incurs more deficits Mr. Speaker.

The Minister is proposing continued record deficits. As somebody or other said, "We ain't seen nothing yet". The total projected deficits for the next four years are higher than the total deficits for the last 11 years. Already about 25 per cent of every dollar taken in by the Government is paid out in interest. That has to stop, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do any Hon. Members wish to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken?

Mr. Blais: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member ended his remarks by dealing with the national debt. Hon. Members opposite do not often deal with the question, by whom is the national debt owed? The Hon. Member has undoubtedly read a recent article in The Toronto Star by Reuben C. Bellan with the headline "Recovery blocked by myth". Does he recognize that the national debt is owed by the Government of Canada to the people of Canada? Does he know that the holders of the national debt are the holders of Canada Savings Bonds who in effect are being paid the interest rate that the bonds bear?

Would he like to indicate to the House that he agrees that is the case and that although the national debt tends to increase from time to time as it did during World War II, as prosperity returns that debt is discharged and is paid back to Canadian citizens who are the holders of Government securities?

Mr. Clarke: Of course I realize who is owed the national debt, Mr. Speaker. But that is the tragedy. Those Canadians should not be buying Canada Savings Bonds, just to allow the money to be dissipated by the Government opposite which has no idea what it is doing. People should be investing their savings in Canadian business. Those people who invest in Canada Savings Bonds are being robbed by the Government which allows inflation to increase. The person who invests $100 is lucky to get $50 in purchasing power back—if he ever does. Some people who invested in Government bonds in 1936 will never get their money back.

The Minister raises the point that there is nothing wrong with debt. Of course there is not. There is no businessman who does not have debt and no one expects the Government to exist without debt, but we all expect the debt to be under control. Any businessman who borrowed in the ratio that the Government has borrowed and continues to borrow, would be bankrupt. Anyone must be able to service the debt. Every individual or business borrows for capital projects, whether it be a car or a house or a plant or a fleet of trucks, and there is nothing wrong with that. Sometimes I think that I have more debt than I would like myself. Debt must be serviced, Mr. Speaker and the Government's debt is rising to the point where it will not be able to service it. That is when the collapse comes, but Hon. Members opposite do not seem to realize it.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the hon. gentleman is trying to extricate himself from difficult assertions, but he is not doing very well. May I ask him whether he knows of any stockbroker or investment counsellor in the country who would advise his clients against investing in Canada Savings Bonds, or whether he knows of any investment which is more secure than Canada Savings Bonds?

May I also ask him whether he knows what the rate of savings is today in Canada? It is upwards of 13.8 per cent, the highest it has ever been. Would the Hon. Member address the question of any hindrance to individuals who are saving their money today, not in bonds but in other forms of saving, from investing that money in equity, especially in view of the budgetary provisions that have been announced by the Minister to encourage this?

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any self-respecting stockbroker who would advise any normal investor to buy Canada Savings Bonds. I will give the Minister some credit however. I did advise my mother to invest in Canada Savings Bonds, but she is 85 years old. She is not looking too far ahead and she needs liquid capital. She needs security, not long-term growth. The only individuals in Canada who should ever invest in Canada Savings Bonds are those who need short-term security of capital—a short-term home for interest-bearing securities.

As far as the rate of savings is concerned, the Minister says it is 13.8 per cent. I knew it was very high and I explained why that was so. Those who are working are afraid they are going to join the ranks of the unemployed. They are afraid of what the Government is going to do to them. That is why the rate of savings is so high. The Government ought to be ashamed that the rate of savings in that kind of security is high. Canadians should be encouraged to invest in the country and make their savings work.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, my last question to the Hon. Member is whether he has read the budget.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to put before the House some of my views concerning the federal budget introduced by my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

I listened to the last speaker very carefully. I hope the Hon. Member will stick to giving financial advice to his mother!

I should like to comment on the measures announced by the Minister, particularly those designed to generate jobs. While I know that Hon. Members are concerned about the tragically high levels of unemployment in the country, few areas have been hit as hard as the Miramichi area of New Brunswick which I have the honour to represent.

• (1600)

There are a number of reasons for the high unemployment in our region and I am pleased to see that the Minister has taken steps to address some of them. The Miramichi economy has been sustained by two principal sources of employment over the years. The first, and by far the most important, is the pulp and paper industry and the forest industry generally. This industry has been among the hardest hit by the severe recession in the western industrialized world. A significant fall in pulp and paper prices, severe decline in consumption, complicated by devaluation by a major competitor, have all combined to bring this industry to the brink of disaster. The industry itself has taken steps to reduce costs and become more competitive and that, of course, is all to the good. Markets have begun to improve. Most of the factors which lead to the layoffs in this industry were foreign induced, however, and therefore most of the solutions will also come from abroad.

There are, however, steps which the Government can take to hasten the recovery and to make it a more sustained one. The Minister has included in his budget two initiatives which will assist in the recovery and the provision of jobs in the Miramichi. As a result of high interest rates and declining sales, the balance sheets of many of the firms in the pulp and paper sector have taken a beating. Any increased cash flow as a result of firmer prices and sales would go to paying down vastly higher debt loads than normal. A number of the tax incentives announced by the Minister will permit a faster restoration of healthy balance sheets and a more rapid recall of the thousands of workers who have been laid off during the past two years. As well, in announcing increased outlays of capital projects, the Minister can assist in the effort to make industries in the Miramichi more competitive.

I have been working in co-operation with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to ensure the construction of new port facilities in the Newcastle-Chatham area. I am confident that the announcement of new funds allocated for capital works will mean that these facilities will be commenced this year. The construction of these facilities alone will mean a significant reduction in costs for Miramichi and area pulp and paper producers, and will most assuredly lead to new jobs as well as the maintenance of existing employment. When this investment in port facilities occurs, Mr. Speaker, it will mean that this Government has invested somewhere between $25 million and $30 million in an increased navigational system for the Miramichi.

It is my belief that the combination of the tax changes announced by the Minister, plus the allocated funds for capital construction, could lead in the near future not only to the rehiring of previously laid off workers but to significant new investment in the pulp and paper industry in the Miramichi, investment which would help to diversify and upgrade the product shipped from our area and to make us less vulnerable to the peaks and valleys of this industry. I believe there are also incentives in the budget which will help the mining and mineral companies to reverse the situation in which they have found themselves in the last few years, and I hope that Noranda, and the owner of Heath steel mines, which has announced major lay-offs for the end of this month, will take a new look at the situation under the terms and provisions of the budget and other existing incentives provided by Government to keep facilities such as these functioning, in the hope that this company also will be able to find a way to keep that mill open and its people employed.

There is one comment I would like to make with regard to the Minister's announcement of a Committee under the chairmanship of the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) to avoid delays in implementing newly announced projects. While I welcome the creation of this Committee, I must caution the Minister that eternal vigilance will be necessary to avoid the mounds of red tape which have accumulated in the federal bureaucracy over the years. In my opinion, red tape and interminable studies are two of the greatest stumbling blocks to solving problems with respect to the provision of employment. While I applaud the Minister's intentions, I am sure he will understand that I will reserve a standing ovation until I witness actual performance.

The second sustaining employment factor in my area, Mr. Speaker, has largely been the presence and investment of the federal Government there. I spoke a moment ago of the $25 million to $30 million investment in port and navigational improvements. Besides that, of course, we have benefited largely from the job-creation projects which the Government has designed over the years. We have in our riding a major military base, and I would like to comment briefly on that. That is proving to be a very difficult problem which, if it is not solved, will help to worsen the unemployment situation. I am referring, of course, to the Government's rather poorly timed, unwise and in fact unnecessary decision to stand down the 416 Squadron at CFB Chatham at the end of 1984. It is difficult for me, as an Hon. Member from a district with unemployment approaching 50 per cent, to explain how the Government can announce measures to increase employment in the Armed Forces as a job-creation measure while generating unemployment in one of the hardest hit regions of the country as a result of actions having to do with the same Armed Forces. It is imperative, therefore, during the next few weeks—and I emphasize "weeks", Mr. Speaker, I am not saying months—as Ministers make decisions on projects to aid in the national recovery plan, that they not forget the special obligation they have to the residents of the Miramichi. As the Member of Parliament from this area, I can assure the House that I will continue to remind my colleagues of this special obligation for as long as I represent my electors. I am convinced that the Government will respond to its commitments and work with me to broaden the economic base of the Miramichi region. However, we need some concrete evidence of that commitment, and we need it without further delay. The Minister of Finance has taken some action in his budget which will help in this regard. I caution my colleagues, however, that the people of the Miramichi, and I as their elected Member, will measure this Government's commitments by its actions rather than its words.

A new prison is under construction at Renous, the site of another former military establishment. It is making progress and, of course, I welcome that. In fact, I must say that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), in my opinion, has been a "doer" rather than just a "sayer". I appreciate his efforts and his co-operation. However, vis-à-vis CFB Chatham, it has been now some 18 months since the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) made the announcement with respect to the 416 Squadron. In that time the Minister has announced that the Department's directorate of pay services will be transferred to Chatham. That will provide 350 much needed jobs. We of the Miramichi appreciate this move, but it still leaves 1,150 positions to be replaced. Those are 1,150 military positions, not civilian. Whether they are replaced with military or civilian personnel makes little difference to me, but the fact they must be replaced makes a great deal of difference. Our patience is wearing thin. It is time for some decisive action with concrete results. I sense that in the budget there are means and mechanisms to resolve problems such as CFB Chatham, to cut through the red tape and get it done. I remind the Government again that this is a problem of the Government's own making. I expect to see these provisions used forthwith to effect solutions and to provide desperately needed employment.

I shall be voting for this budget, Mr. Speaker, because it is a good budget. In fact, it is one of the best I have seen since I have been here. The provisions can be used to bring relief for hard hit areas. No Member elected under our system looks for opportunities to vote against the Party or the Government he is elected to support, and our system demands loyalty to sustain stability in Government. I shall stand or fall politically as a Liberal. I was elected as a Liberal and I shall remain one. But I was sent here—

Mr. McKinnon: No ambition.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): —to represent the electors of Northumberland-Miramichi. I notice the hens yonder are starting to cackle again. Obviously they do not understand what a bit of loyalty means.

Mr. McKinnon: We are laughing.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): It is to the electors of Northumberland-Miramichi that I owe and willingly dedicate my first loyalty and I always will, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. members rising to ask questions? If not, I recognize the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean).

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in entering into this budget debate I do so in concurrence with the amendment before the House to the effect that this House condemns the Government and rejects the budget for its failure to address adequately the human tragedy of unemployment. It goes on to speak about the unmanageable deficit and the greater tax burden on Canadians.

In entering the debate let me identify with the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), who spoke to one particular aspect, namely, the removal of the $100 charitable deduction. He spoke of it as a tax grab on the part of the Government as it pretends to be helping the voluntary sector. Earlier today in Question Period, in response to questions by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), we heard the Minister trying to persuade the House that somehow, in ignoring the give and take tax proposals and in somehow removing the $100 tax deduction, he was giving an incentive to Canadians by allowing them to file receipts. We also heard him arguing that the voluntary sector had done fairly well in Canada, and that somehow by having all its proposals ignored it had been encouraged.

In these few moments, as Opposition spokesperson for the Department of the Secretary of State I want to lay before the House the failure of this Government with relation to any effective measure in support of the voluntary sector. Let me begin not just by referring to the leaders of the national voluntary agencies of Canada, the 100 major agencies, but rather by referring to my own riding and sharing with Members of the House comments which come from Ernie Ginsler, President of the Waterloo Region Social Planning Council. His reaction to the Government's proposal as it relates to the voluntary sector was as follows.

According to him there are no job creation rules set out for the voluntary sector. Make-work projects lack creativity. The cost effectiveness of the voluntary sector continues to be ignored by this big spending Government. He then went on to say that the documented effectiveness of the give and take tax proposals was ignored. The large capital public works projects which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said he was moving up from the end of the decade may create work for some of today's unemployed, but in his estimate it will be at the cost of greater unemployment at the end of the 1980s. He then went on to say that in seeking to motivate the voluntary sector in that part of southwestern Ontario, he sees no acknowledgement of the fact that 50 weeks of UIC benefits is not good enough in this economy. Community support services are already stretched to the breaking point by the imposition of six and five on the social service section of the Established Programs Financing Agreement, and the federal Government is merely shifting the load of the whole UIC exhaustee problem to another level of Government, namely, the municipal level. He ended his comments by saying that this Government quite clearly has demonstrated absolutely no understanding of the complexity of the services delivered by the voluntary sector into the life of Canada. With this, Mr. Speaker, I concur.

I want to remind the House that in Committee, in public utterances, and in the House, the Government has been indicating that it intended to take seriously the proposals and the input of the voluntary sector. On March 2, 1983 I wrote to the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal), and I want to share with the House the contents of that letter in which I outlined my Party's willingness to work with the Government in laying incentives before the voluntary sector. I said:

> As I told you during the Proceedings of the Standing Committee on Culture and Communications, on November 23, 1982, and as I have subsequently underlined in Question Period interventions, the Official Opposition is eager to participate in the Parliamentary investigation of fiscal and legal situations facing Canada's voluntary sector which you announced in Toronto earlier that month.
> In the nearly four months since you made the announcement, I have become increasingly concerned about the penalties being imposed on the voluntary sector by the inconsistent and unco-ordinated actions of various Departments in the Federal Government. Failing the establishment of a recognizable umbrella policy for voluntary action, a promise of Secretary's of States since 1976, this sector as a whole, and individual agencies in particular, are increasingly forced to contend with operational disincentives laid in their paths as a result of short-sighted rulings emanating from the Departments of National Revenue and Finance.

I went on to remind the Minister that:

> I have always felt that an energetic Parliamentary review of this situation could be a first step in encouraging Canada's voluntary sector to maintain and expand those services for which it has received well-earned recognition. The current economic situation has brought another level of urgency to such an investigation. You will recall that a predecessor of yours, Hon. David MacDonald, P.C., M.P., announced on November 2nd, 1979, the creation of a special Task Force of the House of Commons, "to report its conclusions and recommendations with respect to the measures that could be taken by the Federal Government to strengthen the role of the voluntary sector:
> 1. as an objective that is desirable in its own right,
> 2. as an alternative to public dependence on Government services, and
> 3. in ways that would enhance the ability of such groups to operate independently of Government".
>
> In the intervening years, the National Voluntary Organizations have made an important contribution to the development of public policy in this area by identifying specific problem areas, such as:
> 1. tax reform
> 2. the legal definition of charitable activity
> 3. the fiscal position of non-profit corporations, and
> 4. the co-ordination of the relationship between various branches of the Federal Government and the voluntary sector.
> Research conducted by voluntary agencies and several Canadian Universities, has demonstrated the cost-effect-capacity of the voluntary sector as an "engine for job creation and skills training". Now more than ever, the country needs this capacity operating at the highest possible levels of activity. As you noted on November 23rd, the Federal Government has yet to recognize the need to support this documented ability to create employment—

● (1620)

> I must stress, however, the contention of my colleagues and I in the Official Opposition, that we do not need another exhaustive study of the "situation" of a voluntary sector. What we need is a swift and efficient review of current research and experience. This would result in concrete recommendations for early government action . . . You will remember that the 1979 Orders of Reference required a final report to be tabled within six months.

I also reminded the Minister in outlining our agreement that Statistics Canada finally released the results of a 1980 survey showing that the economic activity generated by the 47,000 charitable agencies in Canada amounted to 3 per cent of our Gross National Product.

Surely it is time the Government recognized the contribution of the voluntary sector to Canadian society by launching a parliamentary investigation. I outline that to indicate that my colleagues and I have given this matter considerable thought and are prepared to move in the direction the Government has been indicating it wished to go through the years.

I received a response from the Secretary of State on March 25 thanking me for my letter outlining these proposals on March 2, expressing support "for the proposal to establish a parliamentary task force regarding the fiscal and legal issues of our governmental policy on voluntary action". He stated:

> I was pleased to receive such an enthusiastic reaction and I consider your offer of participation in our initiatives on voluntary action as an expression of support you are willing to give to my plan of action.

That was the context in which we came to the budget. That was one of the expectations, one of nearly a decade of signals form the Government that it intended to take this sector seriously.

Then we received the budget which claims that representatives of the voluntary organizations have expressed their agreement to the $100 standard deduction removal and that somehow it has their blessing. However, I have in my hand the paper from the February 22 meeting with the Minister of Finance. In fact, during their meeting face to face with the Minister on February 22, representatives of the voluntary agencies made it very clear that a removal of the standard deduction which was not combined with some form of tax credit for charitable donations would constitute "an absence of substantive benefit for the Canadian voluntary sector". This action creates no new incentive for either charitable donations or the current inequitable situation which allows the rich more credit, more reason for giving, than the lower income taxpayer.

The Minister, as we listen to his comments, makes it sound as though he were removing the standard deduction only because the voluntary sector asked him to do so. In fact, it would appear that the Secretary of State has not been able to deliver on his promise. He had promised to set up a task force on the legal and fiscal situation of the voluntary sector. He had said, "Wait for the budget". The change has been made against the advice given in consultation sessions and without the benefit of sector-wide incentives, without the three-to-one job-creation cost efficiency of the voluntary sector, for example.

As one of the leaders of the national voluntary agency said to me, removal of the standard deduction constitutes a "tax on the un-generous", the 90 per cent of taxpayers who do not give, but further cements the control of the central Government over the voluntary sector by reinforcing the need for individual agencies to rely on federal Government funding to continue their activity. Without a review of the definition of charitable activity, the federal Government has essentially ensured that the voluntary sector will continue to toe the line or else.

Looking at the budget from the perspective of those in the voluntary sector of Canada, we might call the budget a "do as you are told" budget. If they do as they are told, the Government will, from time to time, give them some funding, but only when it suits it. The real beneficiary of the removal will be the federal Treasury, with an increase of $80 million in general revenues, a tax grab by any definition and, as has been mutually agreed, it may go as high as $300 million over a period of five years.

In a budget which has nothing to offer UIC exhaustees, and at a time when the voluntary sector has demonstrated its superior ability to deliver the services required by this swelling segment of our population, and the budget speaks of a continued 11.4 per cent unemployment rate through 1984, the Minister is still able to turn a blind eye on the obviously under employed expertise of the voluntary sector. Of course, in an effort to try to increase employment, there was an announcement of an increase of $40 million for Katimavik. The YMCA has already demonstrated, both on paper and in the field, that it could have stretched the real value of the $40 million to $120 million worth of lasting job training.

In the moments remaining to me, let me pose to the Government the question as to why it has chosen to ignore all the consultations which have gone on through the study, People in Action, Consultation 1981, and the commitments of Secretaries of State, both before the Government's defeat in 1979 and after its return in 1980. Why has the Government chosen to overlook all the facts and figures which have now been laid out by Statistics Canada and by the research departments?

Earlier in this session I proposed Bill C-233, an Act to encourage the role of the voluntary sector in Canadian society. At that time the then Secretary of State, the present Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), responded to those who were supporting my Bill. In a letter dated June 5, 1981, he said, "I am sure that you will understand why the Government will not support the Bill". He stated:

> We are already past the point of determining what is essential to the encouragement of the voluntary sector and are now dealing with specific areas, such as a redefinition of "charity" and the National Voluntary Organizations' "Give and Take" tax proposal. Officials of Voluntary Action Programme are committed to coordinating the development of the voluntary action policy within the Government and as well will be responsible for the day to day liaison with the Committee of National Voluntary Organizations.

Where is that study? The letter was written two years ago. We were told that the matter was under study, that the policies had been reviewed, that my Bill encouraging goods and services which are paid for by the taxpayers would be made available to the voluntary agencies, that somehow that was all in hand.

I want to suggest to Your Honour that the budget, in terms of its expectations and politial impact, has not only misrepresented, but has also alienated many in the voluntary sector in terms of the contributions that they are prepared to make. In their presentation, the leaders of the national voluntary organizations of Canada laid before the Minister of Finance facts and figures about the impact of that sector on Canadian life, of those nearly 40,000 registered charitable organizations, charities which took in $5.6 billion in 1980, equivalent to 11 per cent of all federal Government revenue, almost 2 per cent of the Gross National Product. Their wage benefit bill was $1.7 billion in 1980, estimated to compensate 173,000 workers, 23 per cent of whom were part-time. This represents 1.6 employed workers in Canada, twice as many as are directly employed in forestry, or one-quarter of all those employed in public administration by all levels of Government, or all employed workers in Newfoundland.

There were 2.7 million Canadians who volunteered 373 million hours in 1979-80. If compensated at the average wage for the service sector, this would be worth $2 billion, which is almost as large a sum as the agricultural sector's wage bill. An application of this value-added concept to financial data on these 40,000 charities suggests that this sector added $4.5 billion to Canada's output in 1980, which is 1.7 per cent of the GNP.

In conclusion I want to remind the Government of the information that was before it and remind the Canadian public of the Government's misrepresentation of the proposals. I want to call upon the Government to go back to the drawing board quickly and come clean with Canadians, particularly the nearly three million Canadians who volunteer their time and give generously of their money.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions, comments and answers?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta)—Railways—Oilseed freight rate policy—Exclusion of sunflower seed. (b) Plea for sunflower industry; the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon)—Mines and Mining—Cyprus Anvil mine in Yukon. (b) Government position; the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Labour conditions—Wage equality for women. (b) Compilation of statistics.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government, and the amendment of Miss Carney (p. 24689).

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I was very pleased today when the transportation critic for the Official Opposition, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), led off the Question Period by asking a series of questions regarding the federal Government's Special Recovery Projects Program to modernize the Canadian Coast Guard fleet which was announced this morning by the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) on behalf of my Minister, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin).

In his first question the Hon. Member asked how many jobs this project will create. The Minister for Supply and Services answered that this program will generate 20,000 person years of employment within and outside the shipbuilding industry across Canada. He went on to say that since the Canadian content in these projects is very high there will be many offsets and spin-offs for Canadian industries and Canadian workers.

The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants then wanted specific information on the Coast Guard acquisition program, such as, which vessels will be replaced, in what areas of Canada the jobs will be created and where the vessels will be deployed. It is impossible to answer all those questions during the brief Question Period. I would therefore like to give him further details during this budget debate.

As he knows, the Coast Guard operates in five regions of Canada. First, the Newfoundland region, which covers the coast of Newfoundland, Cabot Strait and the Labrador Coast up to the 60th parallel. Second, the Maritimes, covering the eastern Gulf of the St. Lawrence, the coastal waters of Nova Scotia, the Bay of Fundy and the waters down to the U.S. border. Third, the Laurentian region from the Beauharnois locks in the St. Lawrence Seaway, the St. Lawrence and Saguenay Rivers, the Western Gulf and the eastern part of James Bay and Hudson Bay and the Hudson Strait. Fourth, there is the central Canada region, which includes the navigable waters in the Provinces of Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan and the western part of James Bay and Hudson Bay. Finally, there is the western region west from the Manitoba border, the West Coast and the western Arctic including the Mackenzie River system. The new vessels will be allocated to these regions based on operational and seasonal requirements.

I would like to outline what is being acquired under this program. First, a new $100 million heavy icebreaker, type 1200, will replace the 35-year old Labrador now operating in the Atlantic Provinces. The program will further include six type 1100 tenders which are designed to supply navigational aids such as buoys, markers and lights and to act as light icebreakers. There are two type 1050 tenders designed after an existing offshore supply vessel built for petroleum exploration. They will be used to supply navigational aids and for icebreaking. There are two type 800 small navigational aid tenders. A number of small shore-based craft will also be acquired. These are used for routine maintenance work and other duties close to shore, often in support of larger ships. As well, there is a refit and modernization program for the Sir Humphrey Gilbert, the Narwhal and the Simon Fraser. All three provide aids to navigation and do icebreaking work. Upgrading these vessels will enable them to carry out their missions with a high degree of competence for another 10 to 15 years.

The total cost of these vessels is approximately $780 million. Under the accelerated program announced earlier today, $185 million of new money is being added to current spending plans to allow the construction to get under way very much sooner.

As the Minister said in his press release this morning:

> The over-all capability of the Coast Guard fleet will be greatly improved with these new ships in the areas of aids-to-navigation and icebreaking. The new vessels will also have an important secondary role in search and rescue operations.

He went on to say that the program is one of the most important in the Coast Guard's history. I would agree with him on that point.

The second portion of the April, 1983, budget that I would like to address is the announcement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) regarding the importance of the Government's western transportation initiative for national recovery. The program proposed by the Minister of Transport calls for federal expenditures of $3.7 billion over the next four years. The Government's Crow benefit payments and other investments such as hopper cars and a rehabilitation of branch lines, the producers paying a little more for shipping their grain and the railways' investment of $16.5 billion over the next decade, will provide 400,000 person years of work for Canadians over the next decade. That is what can be achieved with all sectors and Government working together.

I would like to take this opportunity to explain in greater detail what we mean by the western transportation initiative which will create 375,000 person years of work. In February of this year the Government of Canada announced the policy which will result in the statutory fixed rate for moving grain by rail being replaced by new legislation, the western Canada grain transportation Bill, for determining rates and ensuring railway performance.

The Government will legislate payment of $651.6 million a year. This amount, known as the Crow benefit, represents the difference between the real cost in 1981-82 of moving 31.1 million tonnes of grain and the amount the producer now pays, the Crow benefit, which is only $152 million. Future transportation cost increases will be shared by producers and the Government. The producer will pay the first three percentage points of annual cost increases from 1983 to 1985. The Government will pay everything above the first three percentage points. After 1985, the producer will pay the first six percentage points of cost increases. The Government will pay everything above that. This is a protection against high rates of inflation, a protection that is provided to no other industry. No other sector of our economy has this kind of protection against inflation rates.

As Canada's grain exports increase the producer will be expected to pay the full cost of shipping amounts of grain beyond the record 31.1 million tonnes shipped in 1982. The full rate on this additional volume will be blended with the lower subsidized rate on the initial 31.1 million tonnes, to establish a single rate to apply on all deliveries in a crop year. Therefore, there will be no disincentive to increased production such as that being charged by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the National Farmers' Union or other interest groups. By 1986, the Crow benefit and the Government's share of transportation cost increases will be paid, about 50 per cent directly to the railways and about 50 per cent to the producers through an acreage payment. This is a very controversial point because about half the producers in western Canada would like us to make these payments directly to the producers. The other half of the producers in western Canada would like us to make these payments directly to the railways. Therein lies the debate. My Minister, I think very wisely, is suggesting a compromise. The payments will start with payments to the railroads and increase to the producers, so that by the end of 1985 about 50 per cent of these payments will go to the producers and about 50 per cent to the railways. At the end of that period the legislation will recommend a review process. These methods of payments will be reviewed at that time. At that time it will be up to Parliament to decide whether the payments will be increased to the producers, increased to the railways, or continued as suggested by the Minister presently, a fifty-fifty distribution.

The producers' new grain transportation rate beginning in the 1983 crop year will be the Crow rate plus the producers' share of increased costs, blended with the costs of moving additional volume, if any. Rates as always will be generally distance-related.

The Government's contribution to the Crow benefit sharing of increased costs and other direct support measures will be $3.7 billion in the four crop years to 1985-1986. This amount will represent 80 per cent of the over-all cost of transporting grain in that period. By 1990, the Government's ongoing expenditures will be about $820 million annually.

As a result of the western transportation initiative, the railways will receive adequate compensation for moving grain. This means that if the legislation is passed, the railways will be in a position where all their traffic pays its way and the railways can proceed with the necessary and vital $16.5 billion capital investment program. This does not mean that the western grain producers will be paying the freight to move more coal. The Saskatchewan provincial Government is misinforming the producers. In fact, the western grain producers will not pay for the movement of one tonne of any commodity, except grain. Indeed, the western grain producer will not even be paying the full cost of moving grain.

What will the producer pay? What all this means is that in the 1983-1984 crop year, the producer will pay, on average, 15 cents a bushel to ship his wheat, compared with what he pays at present, which is about 13 cents. This is a 2 cent per bushel increase. This amount will increase to about 25 cents a bushel in 1985-1986.

In 1897, the Crow rate was 20 per cent of the price of wheat. In 1982 it was 3 per cent. In 1983-1984, if wheat prices do not change—hopefully they will increase—the new rate will be less than 4 per cent, and it will be 6 per cent in 1985-1986. Although no cost increase is welcome, this increase in freight rates is reasonable.

The railways will spend up to $16.5 billion in the next ten years to improve the rail system. The Government will monitor the railways' investment program.

Another concern of the producers is what guarantee they have the railways will live up to their commitment.

Mr. Blaikie: None.

Mr. Flis: The railways must submit an annual plan prior to each crop year.

Mr. Blaikie: They never will.

Mr. Flis: There will also be penalties to the railways if they do not meet these objectives as set down prior to each crop year.

Mr. Blaikie: You do not have the guts to penalize them.

Mr. Flis: The Government will continue the branch line rehabilitation program estimated at $1 billion until 1988-1989. In 1977, $700 million was committed. The Government will spend $290 million to purchase more hopper cars. This will bring the total federal purchases since 1972 to about 15,000 hopper cars, valued at about $630 million.

The Grain Transportation Agency, formerly the Grain Transportation Co-ordinator, will be strengthened with power to co-ordinate rail car movements, foster efficiency, and monitor performance guarantees by the railways.

It is difficult to know what the future will bring in terms of grain volumes, grain prices and inflation. For this reason, the Government will, in legislation, commit itself to a review in 1985. This will enable us to actually quantify the impact of Crow changes and make any necessary adjustments to ensure that changes work to the benefit of producers, all producers.

In closing I would like to reiterate that the problem before us today on the western transportation initiatives is not how we are going to move grain in 1983, but how we are going to ensure that grain goes to market consistently four or five years from now. This is why we need to begin to add the necessary capacity today. For example, the Beaver Tunnel will take five years to complete, and we have not yet begun construction. If the legislation is passed by June, which is our hope and objective, producers will face freight increases which will barely double by 1985, but the railways will have begun to add the necessary rail capacity to ensure that never again will the Canadian Wheat Board have to defer or forgo sales of Saskatchewan grain due to transportation constraints.

I just gave two examples of what was contained in the present budget as far as job creation is concerned. There are 20,000 person years in the first project and 375,000 person years over the next decade in the second project. I think you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that this budget should receive full support from the Official Opposition and from the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I believe I heard him refer to a small or a slight increase in freight rates for grain producers. Does he call a $21 million increase in freight charges in the coming crop year, 1983-1984, small? Or let us go to another year. The Hon. Member mentioned 1985-1986. Does he call an increase of $155 million a small increase? He also mentioned 1991 and 1992 when there will be a $1.110 billion increase. Does he call that a small increase in freight charges for grain producers?

Mr. Flis: Yes, I will be very pleased to reply to those questions, Mr. Speaker. The figures do look large when you give totals for a whole Province or for all the Prairie Provinces. But look at what the increase is per bushel. Right now it costs the producer 13 cents per bushel to ship grain. In the next crop year that price will go to 15 cents, a 2-cent per bushel increase. In 1985-1986 the price will go up 25 cents a bushel. Hopefully by then the price of grain will also increase. We do not know because the price of grain is dictated by world markets. It would be great if we could set the price ourselves, but we cannot. In ten years from now, yes, it looks like a large figure which the official transport critic for the New Democratic Party is giving, but even in the 1990-1991 crop year the producer will be paying only 60 per cent of transporting his or her grain to market. The federal Government, the taxpayers of Canada, will still be subsidizing the purchaser to the tune of 40 per cent.

The Hon. Members should also take note of the protection against inflation increases. As I mentioned, for the years 1983, 1984 and 1985, any increases beyond 3 per cent will be picked up by the Government, and 6 per cent after that. If in three years inflation reaches 15 per cent, heaven forbid, 12 per cent of that increase will be covered by the Government, the taxpayers of Canada. I was very pleased that a couple of Members of the New Democratic Party invited me to speak to Saskatchewan farmers, which I did this past weekend. When they heard these kinds of explanations, they were more inclined to accept the western transportation initiative.

Mr. Benjamin: The Hon. Member spoke about the amount of money to be paid to the railroads by the Government and by the grain producers under the Gilson-Snavely formula. Obviously the Government and the Hon. Member consider that to be a proper formula. Do the Government and the Hon. Member consider that to be a fair formula for other sectors of the economy?

For the benefit of the Hon. Member let me say that the point I am making is that if you applied that formula to the price of grain, No. 1 Red Spring wheat would be $12.90 a bushel instead of about $4.50 a bushel. In that case, probably most grain producers would be willing to pay more freight charges. Does the Hon. Member consider this formula, which the draft legislation is based upon, to be a proper formula for the railroads? Is it equally proper for grain producers, other farmers and others sectors of the economy in computing their costs to compute also a 39.5 per cent return on investment for the railroads, which has to be some kind of chicanery? Does the Hon. Member consider it fair for grain producers as well as the railroads to get 39.5 per cent when last year all the grain producer got on his return on investment was 3.5 per cent? The Government and the Hon. Member want to guarantee the railroads 39.5 per cent, half of which is straight add-on profit.

He tells me that a billion dollars by the end of the decade is a small payment for grain producers with no guarantee on their incomes and prices. This is not a megaproject but a megaplunder, a guarantee of railroad profits and dividends for shareholders. What does the Hon. Member have to say about the Gilson-Snavely formula for grain producers and maybe a few other sectors of the economy?

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, it is no wonder the producers in the West are confused and angry with the wild kinds of figures being tossed around by the NDP. I visited two NDP ridings in Saskatchewan. It was stated there that we were guaranteeing the railroads a 20 per cent return on their investment. Between the weekend and Monday that figure has gone up to a 39.5 per cent return on investment. That is what the Hon. Member is saying. No wonder the farmers get confused and angry. What we have to look at—

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member has either misinterpreted or misunderstood what I said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. Regretably, that is not a point of order.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, it is sad that someone who has been in the House so long still has not learned what is a point of order.

We have to look at what the railroads are making or losing in the transporting of grain. In the last crop year, the railroads lost over $200 million transporting grain. The Hon. Member would like to throw in coal transportation and sulphur transportation on which the railroads are making money. It is only natural that the railroads will invest in and give priority to the shipping of coal and sulphur and forget all about grain.

Our concern is that in five or ten years, when exports increase and people want our grain, we may not have a railroad transportation system to get that grain to market. All the NDP look at is price competitiveness, saying that our producers have to be price-competitive in the world market. I suggest that to be competitive you have to be price-competitive, delivery-competitive and quality-competitive. You have to get the grain to market in a good, dry condition, on time and at a competitive price.

I am pleasantly amazed, and I congratulate the grain producers in Saskatchewan and the other western Provinces on the high degree of efficiency they have achieved. Grain producers in Canada are probably the most efficient grain producers in the world. By increasing this efficiency, and with the world price of grain going up, we hope, the farmers will get an even greater return on their investment. I agree that the cost of fertilizer, chemicals and equipment is going up. It only makes sense that the cost of grain should go up accordingly. Will the NDP Members tell us how we are to dictate the price of grain to the world? Do they want to nationalize not only Canada but the whole world, which I guess they would want to do if they were in power?

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal budget of April 19, 1983 is really only the latest stage in the progressive and now almost completed capitulation of the Liberal Party to the neo-Conservative view that the only solution to our various problems is to put overselves at the mercy of the combined effect, for good or ill, of thousands of unconnected and unintegrated small and large private sector business decisions, decisions which are all made in the self-interest of the individual or corporation involved, but which the Government hopes will combine in some mysterious way to lead us out of the economic wilderness in which we find ourselves. This unabashed rehabilitation of laissez-faire rhetoric by the Liberal Party demonstrates once again, and all too tragically, that he who pays the piper calls the tune.

The corporate bagmen of the Liberal Party have clearly made their wishes known to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). What they have told him is to mind his own business, reduce corporate taxes, provide more tax breaks for business, increase taxes for middle-income working Canadians to pay for these reductions and breaks and let the corporate sector find its own way out of the mess that it has got us all into, while the poor and the unemployed will simply have to wait it out as best they can. Above all, the bagmen have instructed the Minister of Finance not to ask, let alone answer, any fundamental questions about the structure of the Canadian or global economy, the values they embody or the human dimension of the bloodless statistical world in which the one-eyed Government and corporate economists massage their stunted intellect and shrivelled souls with the deceptive brilliance of their latest graph or mathematical illusion.

The Minister of Finance has been a good little boy, Mr. Speaker. And all thinking Canadians are that much more full of shame at what has become of us as a nation, a nation that watches in agony as a Government, long since bereft of courage or integrity, lives on its knees and degrades the whole notion of an independent Canadian nation through its subservience to American economic policy and its subservience to American foreign policy. This budget and the budget papers which accompany it are cowardly documents which completely avoid facing up to known economic and political realities, realities which have to be faced if we are ever to solve our admittedly great economic problems.

It is some of these realities that I would like to deal with today, Mr. Speaker. I will not pretend to have all of the answers, but I am absolutely convinced that unless we ask the right questions, we will not have a chance of finding helpful answers. This is what I believe this budget has failed to do, and failed utterly.

The Canadian people were, in my view, ready to hear how difficult the problems are and what lies at the root of them and how complicated some of these problems are. They were ready for the truth, and they are still ready. They were ready for bread but the Liberals gave them a stone, that same stone that the Conservatives have been polishing for years and that the Conservatives will give the Canadian people if, in their understandable desperation, Canadians opt for the Conservatives in the next election because they, historically and numerically, have the best chance of forming a new Government.

So what are these realities, Mr. Speaker, that this Liberal-Conservative budget has not faced up to? First there is absolutely no acknowledgement anywhere in this budget, in the economic outlook or in any of the accompanying papers, of the special role multinational corporations play in the Canadian economy and indeed in the global economy and how Government can or cannot protect the common good when it conflicts with the global profit strategies of these giants. There is no analysis whatsoever of the effects of the behaviour of these institutions, which are often larger in power and assets than many of the nation states of the world. In this sense, the budget is comparable to trying to describe and understand what is going on on a football field by studiously pretending that the largest and the key players are not even on the field. This omission alone is enough to disqualify the budget as a credible piece of economic and political analysis.

Second, and related to the omission of the multinationals, there is no evidence in the budget that there was ever anything known as the North-South dialogue or that there is a need for Canada as a country to try to articulate what kind of new, just and sustainable international economic order it wishes to work for, and to foreshadow in its short and long-term economic planning. But then a Government which has abdicated its role in the market-place can neither plan nor work for a new and more just international economic order because both planning and working to that end are contrary to the spirit of letting the private sector make the key decisions. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), known at one time for the quality of his North-South rhetoric at least, has added another layer of terrifying emptiness to the countenance which must confront him in the mirror every morning as Canada's answer to "the Picture of Dorian Gray".

Third, there is no attempt in this budget or any of the analyses which accompany it to face up to the real economic crisis of the welfare state, a crisis which is not, incidentally, caused by too many average Canadians looking for a free lunch from the welfare state. The real crisis is that for too long, the corporate sector in this country has been having a free economic lunch at the expense of the social and environmental future of this country and its present and future citizens. The bill for this free lunch is now coming due.

Yet those on the right wing of the political spectrum who do so much talking about user-pay theories when it comes to medicare, who do so much talking about hard work and responsibility, are themselves unwilling to face up to their obligations as those who have used up certain human and environmental resources in this country. Indeed, they are even less able to hear arguments about responsibility and obligation as over the years the ideology of competition and self-interest and rugged individualism have eroded our moral capital, to use an analogy that I hope some of my right wing colleagues would understand.

Those who appeal to the common good or to ethical concepts, as did the churches or the Bishops in their recent statement, are ridiculed as idealistic and naive and out of their element. We have come a long way, Mr. Speaker, only to stand at the edge of the abyss with the Liberals whistling while they saunter into the darkness and the Tories urging us to jump headlong into the darkness in the name of renewed social Darwinism and the world view of Amway.

Where is the cry for the need to enshrine the responsibilities and obligations of property and not just the rights of property? Whatever happened to the language of responsibility? The corporate sector in this country, and indeed around the world, has been successful to the extent that it has because it has been parasitic upon the natural strengths of the human community and the planet Earth, taking for granted certain social factors like families and certain environmental factors like clean air and water. But this can only go on for so long.

As the environment is fouled and as human communities and families break down thanks to the untrammelled virtues of the maximization of profits and the reduction of human beings to disposable commodities, the social and environmental costs begin to come due. And the Government cannot be expected to address all of these costs if the very people who have had the free lunch for years, that is the corporate sector, are going to rebel in the name of profit against a tax regime and an economic model which would require them to pay their just share of the cost incurred by their economic activities and to be accountable in other ways for the impact of their actions. Indeed, most of the so-called free enterprises are, more than ever, standing at the door of the public Treasury looking for various handouts.

This is what is happening, Mr. Speaker, and what the Liberals have failed to do in this budget is to challenge Canadians to face up to this reality and to decide whether they want finally to stand up and work for an economic future that takes all of this into account and ends all of the hidden free lunches.

Instead, what have the Liberals done? They have conceded without a fight. They have conceded without even honestly asking the Canadian people what they would prefer and engaging them in conversation about what the consequences of various decisions might be.

Do Canadians want a Government which will continue to fall for the corporate sector's false argument that productivity is declining because something is wrong with Canadian workers and Canadian society, or do they want a Government that is prepared to fund the maintenance and the expansion of the role Government must play in addressing the social and environmental costs of our economic system and in working toward an economy in which these costs will not be incurred in the first place?

Most economists and all Liberals and Conservatives talk alike about the decline in productivity. From their limited point of view, it may look as though productivity is declining. However, as Hazel Henderson, U.S. lecturer, futurist and author of "The Politics of the Solar Age, Alternatives to Economics" says, productivity appears to be declining, and I quote:

—only because they have over-stated it for decades, and swept the real costs under the rug.

Mr. Speaker, why is it always labour productivity that is under scrutiny and not the productivity of our entire economic way of life? That is where the productivity crisis is. Energy use is a good example. Is it any wonder that there is declining productivity and profitability in Canadian oil and gas when the economic model we have operated under for years has called for and succeeded in accomplishing the rapid sale and depletion of easily accessible reserves?

• (1710)

We have a crisis all right but it is not a crisis of productivity as such; it is a crisis of our failure to husband wisely, easily accessible resources, which resulted in our being increasingly dependent now on expensive, hard to get at and socially and environmentally destructive oil extraction in the North and in the sea.

It is in analyses like this, Mr. Speaker, that I believe we are getting to the heart of the profitability crisis in the western economic system. It is not that Governments are spending too much, as the Conservatives and the Liberals seem to believe; it is that Governments have not had the mandate to collect, to spend and do what was necessary to keep up with the social and environmental costs of our economic values and our way of life. Nor have many had the ideological capacity, inclination, or insight to do so.

The solution is not to get Government out of the marketplace but, through Government at all levels and through other forms of co-operative and community action, make the marketplace finally become a place where all the costs of any particular economic activity are taken into account and where social and environmental sustainability are equal to other considerations.

Yet when Governments try to do that from time to time, their citizens suffer great consequences. We have to face up to this as well, which brings me back to my first two claims about the way in which the budget avoids reality in pretending that there are no multinational corporations and in ignoring the need for a new international economic order. At present countries which try to achieve social, economic and environmental justice are likely to be boycotted by the multinationals economically and branded as suspect by the Americans politically, if not actively persecuted.

The multinationals can and do use their almost lethal global mobility to invest elsewhere when their profit margins are threatened. The Americans actively prevent that global dialogue, which is crucial, by filling the councils of the world with their deadly innocent rhetoric about free enterprise and the communist conspiracy. The only country allowed to defend itself economically, even if it violates the principles of free enterprise, is the United States. Somehow that is all right.

The three issues that I have raised are all related. We cannot, in Canada hope to build a socially and environmentally sound future unless we find a way to control our own economic destiny and make it significantly less vulnerable to decisions taken outside our border in the board rooms of foreign multinationals. We cannot hope to do this apart from a new and just international economic order in which the power of the multinationals will either be dissipated or made accountable to the planetary common good and in which they will be unable to play nation off against nation. We have to work on all fronts simultaneously.

There is a new social and economic order taking shape, both domestically and internationally, within the deteriorating shell of the system we have known for decades. New things are happening, technologically speaking and in the international division of labour, resources and wealth. This can be the greatest opportunity that humankind has ever had if we take advantage of our present dilemma to evaluate honestly, objectively and ethically, the problems that we have as a human community.

We must resolve to co-operate in building a world in which new technologies will serve real human needs, not narrowly commercial priorities, in which Third World development means real human development and not exporting raw capitalism to countries without the political culture to stand up to it, and the de-industrialization of countries like Canada, in which all economic development is designed and judged according to the needs of present and future generations for a liveable environment, and in which countries like Canada do not have to give up all they have accomplished in social policy, like medicare, for example, in order to remain competitive—competitive being the word for responding to the present blackmail.

This is the challenge from which the Liberals, with the advice and consent of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, have walked away by not acting now to stimulate debate on these crucial matters. Canadians are to remain spectators to a game which involves their very survival.

As I said before, a new world order is taking shape within the existing one—a new economic world order. It will not conform to the theories of Keynesians, Marxists, monetarists or supply-side economists or, for that matter, to the traditional expectations of any political tradition. All of us in the near future will have to re-examine our assumptions.

What I have argued today is that the prevailing political views, that of the neo-conservative, Liberal and Progressive Conservatives, does not have the conceptual capacity or the political room to understand and then show us the way out. They are in retreat from the pressures we are experiencing. They are trying to go back instead of going through to the other side of the problems we are experiencing.

Nevertheless it is still an open future. As free human beings and as a free human community it seems to me that we cannot believe or act otherwise. Therefore, let us not hand over our future to the global corporate and technocratic planning elite and its political vassals, the Liberals and the Conservatives.

As democratic socialists we believe that we have something special and crucial to offer in the debate about what kind of shape the new order ought to take and what we can do as a country and as individuals to help it become that new opportunity for justice and survival that I spoke of earlier.

Democratic socialists by their very name have always held to the basic insights that the present economic crisis is revealing to more and more people who look at it closely; that is, first, that our economic system must be made accountable to the common good in all its dimensions and that this can only be done through increasing democratic control of the economy in various ways.

Second, the so-called economic realities are really social realities and cannot be understood in narrow economic terms. That is why we call ourselves democratic socialists.

We want to see a world in which people as individuals and as comunities have more control in co-operation with all our fellow inhabitants on the planet over the economic decisions which affect the social, environmental and political quality of their respective futures. This can only be done through activist Governments, democratically mandated to seek this kind of world. It is this kind of mandate which I and my NDP colleagues are seeking from the Canadian people. The failure of this budget to face reality only makes our task more urgent.

The ideological battle lines are drawn and are becoming more clear every day as Liberals and Conservatives fall into line behind each other. I invite our opponents to justify their stances at this conceptual level and try to refute what I have to say. In the final analysis I still believe it will be in the serious exchange of ideas and not in partisan exchange of competitive number crunching that Canadians may yet come to see the need for, and have a desire to find, ways to have real economic and human growth that is more than just the last destructive fling of so-called free enterprise. That is a fling which could fatally damage the long-term health of the economy and society and the planet earth.

But that kind of debate is not in the interests of either the Liberals or the Conservatives, and also we will likely continue to see their relationship continue as it has, the goal of which can only be described as the perfection of the superficial and the elevation of parliamentary confrontation to the be all and end all of politics in this country, at the expense of the Canadian people and ultimately of the global community, as a country which has the political and economic resource to be an example to the world, Canada, shirks its responsibility and backslides into the pit.

It is this same lack of will to face up to the need for fundamental change that explains why the Government will continue to spend $12 billion per year on unemployment rather than spending an equivalent sum on meaningful work instead of cosmetic, short-term, revolving door job-creation programs.

As difficult as the burden of $12 billion is on the federal Treasury, it is preferred by the Liberals to facing the retaliation of the international and domestic investment community which would regard the spending of money to actually give people meaningful work as a threat to its dominance of the economic order.

• (1720)

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, there is a distortion or two in the Hon. Member's speech which I believe deserves correcting, and perhaps we can put some of these items into a little better perspective. The Hon. Member, for example, went on about how discussions of productivity are often anti-labour. I would like to quote to him from the budget and then get an expansion on that bias of his and some additional comments. I will quote from page 24666 of Hansard. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said:

> Many people are under the impression that productivity gains cause unemployment.

Then he continues further on:

> We should recognize, for example, that the concerns of the labour movement for working conditions, the quality and safety of the work place, the involvement of workers in what they are doing, and the possibilities for self-development offered to them, are entirely legitimate and can, if properly addressed, improve our productivity performance.

A little further on he says:

> There will always be tensions between labour, business and Government. But that should not prevent labour, business and Government from co-operating to improve the productivity and competitiveness of the Canadian economy. This is the key to higher wages and better profits.

That is precisely the opposite of the implication raised by the Hon. Member, and I believe the Hon. Member might appreciate the opportunity to stand up and admit in the House, first, that labour has a legitimate voice on productivity issues and, second, to recognize that the Government is listening to that voice.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity, not to admit that what I said was wrong but rather to elaborate on why the Hon. Member, in speaking for the Government, completely missed the point. In fact, he has reinforced what I had to say. He can only think of productivity in terms of labour-management relations. The whole statement from the budget which he quoted ignores completely the other matter of productivity, which I rightly condemn the Government for not bringing into the analysis, and that is the productivity of our traditional investment models, the productivity of the way we organize our whole economy. What I am saying is there is no fundamental critique of the way in which productivity has been lessened over the years by the way we do things in general. The Member, when he rose to quote to me a paragraph from the budget which only refers to labour management relations, reinforces the point I made. It does not go against my point at all. The Hon. Member should take a course in logic and spare us all these non sequiturs.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I have heard the Hon. Member talk a great deal about productivity. Could he define it for us in precise and concise terms, please?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I know enough about the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) to know that he knows what is meant when people speak about productivity. The point which I have been trying to make is that we have too narrow a view of what we mean when we talk about productivity. That is precisely the point. For me to give a traditional definition of what productivity means would seem to be pointless. I would hope that he would have something more important to ask me.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would not want the Hon. Member to give me a traditional view of productivity. I would like him to define in precise and concise terms precisely what he means by "productivity".

Mr. Blaikie: Let me put it this way, Mr. Speaker: You cannot call something productive which over time eats up the social and environmental resources of a country or a planet, for that matter. I am saying that only those things which are sustainable socially and environmentally can be called productive. Those are the kinds of things which ought to be taken into consideration when one is talking about productivity, and we have not done that to date. We have talked about profits, how many widgets we can get out in an hour, how the new technologies will improve delivery times, and what we can get out of a factory in a certain time compared to what we used to be able to do. I am saying that is not all we should be thinking about when we talk about productivity. We need to look at the big picture both domestically and internationally. If the Hon. Member does not understand that point then we are in serious trouble, indeed. Of course, we are in serious trouble because it is people like him who man the back benches of the Government.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that there are a great many things which have to be included within the concept of productivity. However, in light of the fact that he spent a great deal of his speech dealing with the concept of productivity and how it was wrongly defined traditionally, I still would like to have him define what he means by productivity and not beat around the bush, as he just did, in trying to answer my question.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am not trying to beat around the bush. Perhaps it is just a habit of mind I have that I do not easily come up with examples. I will give you an example, however. I was on a tour a while ago in northwestern Ontario. Tell me what is productive about cutting down millions and millions of acres of forest and not re-seeding the trees, thereby putting the Canadian forestry workers in a position where they now have to go farther and farther afield for products upon which we are dependent for our balance of trade and that sort of thing, not to mention the need for wood domestically. What has been so grandly productive about that way of managing our forests in this country? There is nothing productive about it at all. What was so productive about the mercury poisoning of the English-Wabigoon river system? What is so productive about what our economy has done to the inner cities of our country? I could go on for hours, Mr. Speaker, about cancers in the workplace, long-term health problems, etc. The list is endless. If the Hon. Member does not know what I am talking about, then he has a very serious problem. We all do.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member is beginning to give us some useful and concrete examples, and I would like to follow up a little further on the question asked by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). It would help the House considerably, I believe, if we could distinguish between the vague dogmatism of the Hon. Member and the much more specific and useful concrete examples which he has put forward. Could he try and bridge the gap between his examples and his dogmatism by answering the question put by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre and tell us how he defines productivity.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making my point again. I asked why do we not talk about something at the level of ideas, for a change. I know that is really hard for Liberals. I know they have to have examples, little pictures and story books to help them along. There is nothing wrong with what I had to say, Mr. Speaker, and I was not being vaguely dogmatic. Indeed, I hinted that we all had to re-examine our basic economic assumptions. However, that is something which the Liberals are unwilling to do. They are unwilling to think. They want to rise and be cute and tell me that if I do not have a long list of examples there is something wrong with my arguments. I challenge any one of them—because neither one of them has done this yet—to get up and address the argument I have made head on. They have not done that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Hon. Member, with respect to a definition of productivity, it seems to me one cannot talk about ideas when one is refusing to define the concepts in terms of the word he is using. The Hon. Member refuses to define what he means by productivity. I would define it as being the amount of output, the amount of Gross National Product, not in just narrow terms of dollars but in terms of quality of life, in broad terms, which all of us can share among ourselves. If that is going up, then productivity is obviously increasing, the standard of living is increasing. Productivity is all about increasing the well-being of Canadians. That is my definition. Now I have not been able to extract a definition of exactly what it is the Hon. Member is talking about, but if he is going to talk about ideas, it seems to me that he must define what it is that his ideas are referring to.

Mr. Blaikie: Precisely, Mr. Speaker. For too long we have measured productivity in terms of the Gross National Product. When you talk about GNP, traffic accidents in which young people are killed are equal to anything else in term of generating economic activities. All things are equal when you add them up into the GNP. Precisely what I am saying is that for too long our way of measuring productivity, or well-being, to use the Hon. Member's phrase, has been too narrowly construed in terms of money, in terms of input and output, and the very kind of depersonalized and dehumanized concepts which the Member just used when he started talking about the input and output and the GNP. That is exactly what I am talking about. We have been prisoners of that. I said we have to get down and talk about what we mean about productivity, and the Hon. Member is not willing to do that.

I do not make any apologies for not having a whole new plan in order to be able to criticize what we have regarded as productivity to date. If we wait to get into that kind of debate until someone has an answer which is beyond criticism, we will be stuck for years within the conceptual prison you guys have foisted on this country for the last three decades.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the discussion we just heard was a private one between the Liberals and the NDP, but I would like to tell you what I as an ordinary, common, every-day rank and filer mean by productivity. I was raised in the coal mines. There was a miner who actually loaded the cars, and he tried to load 12 or 13 cars a day. You get paid so much per car. In the Newcastle Mine there was a competition on to see who could increase productivity by loading 14, 15 or 16 cars. Believe it or not, one man there loaded 20 cars in one day. He did this on his hands and knees in these low mine shafts. Well, that is increasing productivity. If another fellow was quite lazy and loaded only eight, that is the opposite of productivity.

A few years ago I was in the elevator of the Calgary Inn. I said to this fellow there with me, "Are you from Alberta?" He said, "No, I am from Newfoundland." I said, "How do you like Alberta?" He said, "I don't like it at all." I was rather shocked. I asked why. He said, "I am going back to Newfoundland. I am a bricklayer. I am used to laying as many bricks as I can per day and my boss is on my back because he tells me I am laying too many bricks. I am not going to work in conditions like that. I want to earn the money, I want to produce as much as I can." That is increasing productivity, men with that attitude. If they say, "I am going to do as little as I can, work to rule", that is not increasing productivity. That is what the man on the street understands by productivity. Unless we as Canadians, together, increase productivity, we lower the standard of those who do not work, the senior citizens, the crippled and the aged. They are the ones who are going to depend on productivity growing. That will happen if each individual does his part. That is what makes the country great. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it is a really worthwhile topic, but I did not stand up to talk about productivity.

I want to make an announcement, Mr. Speaker. Today, there was a baby born to Mr. and Mrs. Albert Cooper. He was six and a half pounds in weight, born at 11.30 this morning, and we are happy to say that the mother and baby are doing well and the father is enthusiastically excited.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order.

Mr. Stewart: Now, that is productivity.

Mr. Taylor: Now, I am going on to comment on the budget.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I hear indications from some Hon. Members that this announcement may be related to productivity. I have a dreadful feeling that the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is going to prove to me that the announcement he has just made is relevant to the budget. If he is going to continue with his announcement, he ought to prove that his comment is relevant to the budget.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am just about ready to make it relevant to the budget. I am going to tell Albert that next time he should have twins. But the point I really want to make—and I am sorry about this, as I am sure Mr. and Mrs. Cooper must be sorry about it too—is that every parent who has a baby like little baby Albert Brandon Cooper and every baby like him is born with a debt of $3,800 around his neck. That is how he is starting life in this country. It is increasing every time the Liberals bring in a budget and the poor little babies have a greater weight around their neck.

Is that relevant, Mr. Speaker? I think it is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: I would like to speak a little longer about babies and that debt, but I have several other things I want to talk about. I think the Minister touched a real chord when he said we have to build confidence in this country. That is one of the difficulties in Canada today, lack of confidence. A man on the street in Calgary said to me one day, "I just came back from the United States where I invested $10,000". I said, "How come you did not invest in Canada?" He is a Canadian. He said, "I wouldn't invest ten cents in Canada, I have no confidence in the Government." Hundreds of people are taking their money out, investing it somewhere else, because they do not have confidence in the Government. The Minister touched on the real heart of this whole thing when he said we have to build confidence in this country. I think we do, and today. I think the budget helps to build confidence to a degree. It is certainly building a lot more confidence than the last two budgets. The last two budgets destroyed confidence in this country. But there are too many people today making fun of the financial policies of the present Government. That does not help confidence at all. For instance, an ad appeared in the Calgary Herald on March 2, and one of my constituents sent it to me. This is what it said:

WANTED

Loyal Liberal Party member. Preferably ex-M.P. with $20,000 to invest in a feasibility study and pilot project to turn Alberta crude into N.B. coal. Must have suitable connections with top Liberal M.P.s to obtain a 10 million or more government grant.

Excellent return on investment assured.

Success of project not assured.

PHONE 289-5681

The newspaper contacted the man. He said he spent $121.50 for this ad, somewhat as a joke, because he was so angry with the Government. I do not know how many of my constituents have written to me and said there is no confidence in this Government. It has to build confidence and stop some of the things it is doing to destroy confidence, such as the "Coalgate" affair and the destruction of a beautiful part of Banff National Park.

There is another thing which is very important, too. If you are going to have confidence, it grows from each individual being satisfied. When I ran a business I tried to satisfy each individual who came in that store. I said to my staff, "It does not matter what you think of them". One of the girls had said to me, "Oh, he is a drunkard, he is no good". I said, "I do not care what you think of him, he is coming in here and he gets service. His money is just as good as the money from the millionaire. As a matter of fact, I would rather do him the service because he needs the help. I want everyone in this office to realize that. If that customer goes out satisfied, he tells somebody else and the business grows. But every dissatisfied one you send out, I tell you, it is not something that is going to lift you up or build confidence".

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have a story here that I never thought I would have to tell in the House of Commons. I am sorry the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) has gone because it certainly concerns his Department. It concerns a man and his family who are now frightened of this Government. Not only have they no confidence in the Government, they are frightened of it. Let me give you the story quickly. This man sent a $1,000 installment to Revenue Canada. The cheque was not only stamped by the Department but it was also credited to my constituent's account. Someone in the Department of Revenue decided that it had not been credited to the right account, so he transferred it. My constituent notified the Department of the mistake. It appeared that in transferring this money back and forth, it was finally lost. My constituent contacted the Department, and his bookkeeper went to the Calgary office time in and time out asking the Government, "What about this $1,000"? Each time he was told that it looked as if the money had been found and it would not be long. The bookkeeper was at the tax office on an average of once a week to obtain copies of the account and stamped cheques, proof of the remittance, but each time he was told that it was a simple computer mistake and would be corrected shortly. Each time he was told that it looked as if the money had been found. Around that time, the Department of National Revenue moved many records from Calgary and Edmonton to the Winnipeg office, and all the papers went to Winnipeg. The $1,000 was lost again.

At one point my constituent even phoned the Winnipeg office, which told him that after a certain number of years the account was closed and that he should have done something about it before. He had been trying to do something about it before. He had been trying to do something about it week by week, throughout the whole period.

I brought the matter to the attention of the Minister who said, "We have destroyed our records. This man kept paying his installments until his payments were down to less than $1,000. Then, on the strength of all his representations, he figured that the $1,000 would look after the $900 or so in tax. However, the first thing that my constituent knew was that the Department of National Revenue had gone to his bank and had taken $1,000 out of his account without even telling him, and then closed the case.

Do Hon. Members think that we can get anything from the Department? It says that the records have been destroyed, that it does not have them. I do not care whether or not it has the records. The $1,000 was received by the Department of National Revenue and it should be accounted for. The Department sent two cheques back to the bank in Calgary, but the bank in Calgary says that there are no notations. If the Department proves that it sent the $1,000 back to us, we will pay the $1,000, but the Department is not doing that. This cannot be simply wiped off and sloughed off. This amounts to $1,000 of hard work by that man. I am asking the Government, every backbencher, every Minister, to be honest enough to say to this man, "We will give you your $1,000, because the Department stamped and received it". This man should not be out that $1,000. That is the type of thing that undermines confidence.

I would like to mention something else with regard to asking private enterprise to help us out. I have high respect for the Hon. Members to our far left. I think they are sincere in the things in which they believe. I do not believe what they believe. I do not believe in nationalization. I believe in free enterprise. However, I do not like the way they slur free enterprise all the time. Maybe they do not like the way I slur nationalization, and I suppose we are even in that respect.

Mr. Blaikie: You're right.

Mr. Taylor: However, I want to tell Your Honour that many of the people who support the Hon. Members on the far left are free enterprisers, such as the farmers. They want to make a profit. They cannot stay in business unless they make a profit. What is wrong with making a profit? Making a profit has given us the highest standard of living in the world. We can say to someone, "You can invest your money and you can make a dollar. There is an incentive. When you make a dollar you can buy something else, you can give your family a better standard of living, buy better clothes and buy things you like. You can take your wife and family on a holiday. You can have extra furniture and good food". All of these things come from hard work and investing, increasing productivity, and then the country benefits as well. I believe in making a profit. I do not believe in exorbitant profit, but I believe that people who are working are entitled to a profit. That is what really keeps this country going. However, here the Government is asking free enterprise to cooperate.

When I listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) asking private enterprisers to cooperate in getting us out of the mess the country is in, I could not help but think that part of the mess was due to his national energy policy. It just about ruined our farms in the West as well as our oil and gas industry. It went right down into the stores and lunch counters in the small towns. The effect of the national energy policy really hurt the country. It was a destructive policy, but now the same Minister is asking free enterprisers to expand their businesses, to hire more people, to invest more money, because that is what will get us out of this slump, and I agree with him.

If we can get thousands and thousands of entrepreneurs to hire one to ten people, it will not be long before we have 1 million or 2 million people employed. I do not accept the theory that we cannot have a country in which everyone who is able to work is employed. There may be a few who do not want to work, but most people want to work provided they can make a decent wage and see a chance of giving their families a better standard of living, perhaps sending their boys and girls to university.

I was raised in a poor home and I know how people feel. We did not think we could ever send anyone in our family to university because we did not have the money. There were ten children to feed. The mines were only working four or five months a year. Finally, through the help of my brothers I was sent, the first out of the ten, to university or normal school so that I could obtain a teacher's certificate. Then, after that, we were able to send my sister by working together. However, they were willing to work and sacrifice so that they could provide a better education for the rest of us, and it is even more so with parents. They want to do that. The Minister is certainly tapping the right source. If he can build confidence, he can certainly get people working. This is true, provided that too many obstacles are not put in the way.

Earlier today I mentioned the story of a man in Cochrane who received an order amounting to $103,000 from an oil company. The oil company had built a couple of ships in Japan. I am running that down. I do not know why they were built in Japan, because it is a Canadian oil company. Anyhow, it had two ships built in Japan—

Mr. Blaikie: Got a better price. That's free enterprise!

Mr. Taylor: —and the company wanted to have a celebration and give Canada the business. So an employee of the company went to the Cochrane store, an excellent store with a coffee shop, groceries and a meat counter, and said, "We will give you a $103,000 order". Beef amounted to $32,000 of the order. The owner buys his beef from Canada Packers and the federal inspectors inspect the meat. However, when he went to the federal inspectors and said, "I want an export permit", they said, "Nothing doing". He asked why, and they said, "It is because there is a regulation on the books which was passed about 70 or 80 years ago which states that you cannot export meat if you keep a fresh meat counter and sell meat over the counter". That might have made sense back in 1915 or 1930, but it is not sensible today. Why should a man who sells excellent meat over the counter not be permitted an export permit? The civil servant in Calgary said to him, "And besides, you must have a wholesale licence." He said, "I have a wholesale licence". He was told, "You cannot have it anyhow, because you sell meat over the fresh meat counter". Therefore, he lost $103,000. I do not know whether the business went to the States or to Japan. I am not sure about that part. However, a couple of weeks later the same company man came back and wanted to order 1,000 steaks. One can imagine the thrill of having someone come into one's store and order 1,000 steaks.

It reminds me of a story about someone who ordered 1,000 hamburgers from MacDonalds and everyone in the place became very excited over 1,000 hamburgers being ordered all at once. This is a situation involving 1,000 steaks. The oil company wanted all of the friends, builders and workers to celebrate the great event of building two ships. The storekeeper said that he would love to provide them with a thousand steaks. He went to the federal agricultural people again, but they said that if he sold fresh meat over the counter he could not have an export permit.

How ridiculous is the situation in this country when a thousand steaks, which could have come from the cattle of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba or even Ontario and could have provided work in Canada, were not allowed to be sold. Instead, the situation became so frustrating that the man said he could not bother with the officialdom any longer. He went back to Japan and bought his thousand steaks in Japan. In the meantime we talk about building up Canadian industry, we talk about unemployment.

Free enterprise will work but not if it continues to be shackled. It will not work half as well when it is handcuffed. Let free enterprise work by eliminating these ridiculous Government regulations. I see, Mr. Speaker, that your are pointing to your watch, but I have barely started.

In the one minute that I have remaining I wish to say something about the deficit. One thing that bothers me when talking about recovery is that the deficit is increasing continually. How can we eventually recover if we do not begin reducing the deficit? I have figures for 1972 which indicate that the deficit was $999 million. It kept increasing until 1979 when the Progressive Conservatives came to power. It then dropped slightly to $11.48 billion from $12 billion. When the Progressive Conservatives went out, the deficit rose again to a level higher than it was in 1979; it rose to $12.6 billion. In the next year it went to $13.6 billion, and then to $25 billion the next year after that. The deficit this year is $31.3 billion.

How will Canadians be able to face this deficit? We cannot pull ourselves up by the bootstraps or by borrowing ourselves out of the deficit.

The Government must begin to reduce its expenditures and it can only do so by cutting down on those unnecessary expenditures. It should not do so, as some have suggested, by cutting old age pensions. It should take the money from those areas which can afford it. There is a lot of lard in this Government and in its budget. Let us cut out some of that lard. One example is the metric system. It is not necessary to spend $25 million a year on a program that half of the people of Canada do not want. Expenditures on programs such as that should be cut from the budget.

I wish I had more time to deal with the deficit. While I am in favour of some of the budgetary measures, those that encourage people to work and get us out of this mess, some of its other measures are bad. I hope to have the opportunity to deal with some of the pros and cons of the budget at a later time.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). I do not have to put it in the form of a question because I know he will respond to my comments.

The Hon. Member for Bow River is known for the clarity and vigour with which he puts forward his views of the world. Given the argument about the nature of productivity that ensued just before he rose, I was grateful to him for the manner in which he so clearly described the limited view of productivity which I rejected in the previous argument. The Hon. Member was giving us the example of coal miners working on their hands and knees in the mines. In his opinion productivity meant that if they could double the amount of coal they mined on their hands and knees on a particular day, that was productivity. As well, he suggested that the bricklayer who laid as many bricks in a day as possible was another example of productivity. I agree with the Hon. Member to the extent that his argument relates to the value and meaning of not only work, but hard work.

However, to use the coal mining example, I do not agree with the Hon. Member's view of productivity or lack thereof, in the general scheme, when one considers the destructive impact that that kind of productivity related mining has had on the lives and families and the environment of coal mining communities.

It was precisely my point that it is not enough to think only about productivity in terms of output which, in this case, is coal. One must consider the long-term social and environmental costs of a particular economic activity. That is the kind of productivity analysis that I was trying to have Members of the House consider.

The Hon. Member asked what is wrong with profit. If he had listened clearly to what I said, he would know I always talked about the maximization of profit, which might be another word for exorbitant profit which the Hon. Member used. Whenever there is an economy in which people are driven to the maximization of profit in order to stay competitive, it is a bad situation.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what the Hon. Member says but I want to give him an actual illustration of what was happening in a mining town. We had a good life as long as we were able to produce coal and my father and brothers were able to work in the mine. The more coal that one of my brothers loaded, the more money he received and the more he was able to keep us at school, and the more he could give us on payday.

We had a good life while the mines were busy. Productivity increased our happiness, our prospects and our standard of living. When productivity started to decline, we started to suffer. Productivity started to decline when people felt they were making too much for the company and decided to cut their productivity in half. We suddenly realized that we were not competing with other forms of fuels.

Of course, with the arrival of oil and gas, productivity became a vital factor in remaining competitive with oil and gas. It was almost impossible to compete in those days, and the whole coal mining industry almost collapsed.

After I was elected, I remember being on a committee which went to Crowsnest Pass to see what could be done for the miners whose lives had suddenly become empty because the mines had closed. They did not know what to do since mining was all they knew. We tried to work out programs of rehabilitation for them. The point is that it was the lack of productivity that destroyed our coal mines. The same thing will happen in any industry. If people take the attitude that they should do as little as they can, that will be the result, as compared to the person who will do all he can.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, on page 10 of the budget speech of April 19, the Minister made reference to the Government's $3.7 billion for the western transportation initiative. In the few minutes remaining could the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) give the House his opinion, his Party's opinion, the Alberta Government's opinion and the Alberta producers' position, on the changes to the Crowsnest Pass rate?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I certainly cannot do that in 30 seconds but I will respond partially by saying that I like many of the proposals, one of which is the inclusion of several segments of agriculture. It was always my opinion that instead of dealing with producers of different types of grain separately, all producers should be combined.

While I am in favour of other proposals, I do not like the assumption that the freight rates on the farmers' grain will rise quite significantly by 1990. While the Government makes an assumption on the freight rate, it does not make any assumption on the price of grain. I hope to have a chance to deal with this properly during a proper debate in the House. If the Minister were to tie that increase in freight rate to the price of grain, the farmers would have a chance to understand it. But for the Government to say that it will charge them so much more on their freight, not even knowing if there will be that much more in wheat, oats or barley, would frighten anyone.

The farmers and their families are frightened because they do not know where they will get the money to pay those rates. I wish I had more time because it is an interesting problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I must indicate to Hon. Members that it is six o'clock. It is totally out of order for the Chair to express the hope that Mr. and Mrs. Cooper and child are well, but then I thought that the Hon. Member as well was totally out of order in doing it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

RAILWAYS—OILSEED FREIGHT RATE POLICY—EXCLUSION OF SUNFLOWER SEED. (B) PLEA FOR SUNFLOWER INDUSTRY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, the question I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) on April 18 is related to the matter about which we have just been talking in the last few minutes, the whole question of the western transportation initiatives announced last February by the Minister.

The concern I have, and the concern I expressed in my question on April 18, is for a segment of that whole initiative that was left out, the sunflower seed industry and its associated products, the various brands of sunflower oil which compete with soyabean oil used in cooking.

The background of this industry is interesting. It was the first special crops industry established in western Canada back in the 1940s. It has been a major industry since that time and it continues to grow. It shares a place in the hearts of producers in western Canada along with rapeseed or canola in terms of an alternative crop to wheat, oats and barley.

Under the proposals of the Minister of Transport, if the freight rate parity does not include sunflowers along with canola, rapeseed, linseed oil, and flaxseed, the sunflower seed industry is in danger of becoming extinct in western Canada.

There is about a $60 disparity per tonne between the cost to move rapeseed oil and sunflower oil from a crushing plant in Altona, southern Manitoba. Of course, an industry cannot survive with that type of disparity. Nobody will buy the products. Why would they? It would not only cost the industry more, it would certainly cost the consumer more. Sunflower seed is the only western Canadian oil seed crop not included in the statutory freight rate structure. As such, the much higher commercial rates continue to apply, both domestically and for export. This further erodes the competitive position of this very important crop to western Canada. In the context of Manitoba, the sunflower seed industry amounts to $35 million to $50 million. That is for the Province of Manitoba. It is a substantial industry in Saskatchewan and also Alberta.

The proposed rate structure actually increases the freight rate disparity between sunflower and canola products to almost $60 per tonne. As I said before, the crop itself, unless something can be done, is under threat of extinction.

If we were looking at the cost to include this very important crop—in the context of Manitoba some $35 million—into the total plan which the Government has proposed, using a multiplier factor of 5.2 times the existing Crow rate, which I think is realistic, the cost to the federal Government of removing this anomaly and providing statutory rates for sunflower seed is estimated to be only $750,000 for the period August 1, 1982 to July 31, 1983. It will cost only $750,000 to save an industry in Manitoba that represents $35 million to $50 million to the producers. This has to be looked at and acted upon by the Government in a positive manner to ensure that sunflower seeds and by-products retain their rightful place in the whole agricultural industry in western Canada.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I first want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) for taking advantage of this parliamentary process of going to bat for the oilseed crushing industry.

In its announcement of February 1 on the western transportation initiative, the Government accepted the recommendation of Dr. Gilson that only canola meal and oil and linseed meal and oil be included under the new statutory rate regime. The inclusion of other crops and products such as sunflower seed and oil and alfalfa was examined. The prime reason for adding canola and linseed oil and meal is that there has been a long-standing disparity between the western rates for the movement of raw seed and the rates for the movement of the corresponding product. For example, canola and flaxseed move under the statutory rate whereas their products in general do not. Since sunflower seed does not move under the statutory rate, the question of parity between seed and product does not arise in this case.

The sunflower seed industry will benefit, however, from the Government's decision on the method of payment of the Crow benefit. To the extent that payments are made to producers, they will be made on the basis of all cultivated acreage. Sunflower acreage is therefore eligible and the distortion between sunflower and the so-called "Crow crops" will be reduced.

The sunflower seed industry will also benefit from the agricultural adjustment payments recommended by Dr. Gilson. These payments will be at a level of $204 million over three years to 1985-86 and are designed to offset the dilution effect on grain producers of extending the Crow benefit to all cultivated acreage. The payments will be made to all producers, thereby benefiting sunflower producers as well.

MINES AND MINING—CYPRUS ANVIL MINE IN YUKON. (B) GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, on February 14 in this House I asked questions of the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) with regard to the reopening of the Cyprus Anvil mine at Faro in Yukon. On March 17, and again last week, I questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about the Government's failure to deal with this long neglected problem which has been devastating for the economy of Yukon.

In asking my question on April 20, I asked the Prime Minister to confirm reports that the Government had finally reached a decision on the long-sought aid for the Cyprus Anvil mine. Even though the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) was at that very moment in Whitehorse making an announcement on this matter, the Prime Minister refused to confirm the announcement in this House, thereby denying me and other Members an opportunity to question him on the specifics of the assistance and the delays in reaching this decision.

The federal Government has done irreparable damage to the mine, the Town of Faro and all of Yukon through the manner in which the Cyprus Anvil problem has been handled. The inordinate delays in the approval of this assistance have seriously undermined the future viability of the mine and the Government has done nothing to offset the damage it has done over the past five months.

Until it closed in June of last year, the Cyprus Anvil mine was the largest private sector employer in the territory. It represented 40 per cent of the income to Yukon's economy. Obviously, a permanent shutdown of the mine would devastate the Territory of Yukon, yet it took the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development five months before he indicated the Government would be prepared to take action. That was last October.

The Minister agreed in early October of 1982 to assist in reviving the mine if the company, the workers, and the people in the Government of Yukon would meet a number of conditions. By early December, the Minister's requirements relating to the settlement of a labour contract and coming to some decision on the northern benefits taxation question had all been met. Yet the Minister still balked at fulfilling his part of the bargain. Meanwhile, workers continued to leave Faro, Yukon's economy continued to deteriorate.

This reluctance on the part of the Government is hard to understand. It appears it is always ready to provide assistance and low interest or no interest loans for projects of questionable merit in other countries, whether it be for transit cars for the citizens of New York City, or the opening of new mining developments in various South American countries that end up competing with Canadian mines. In those cases, the Government responds very quickly.

The delays in this case are also vexing because the federal Government can be blamed for many of the financial problems at the Faro mine. It has ignored calls for improvements to the power and transportation systems in Yukon. It was the Liberal Government's policies on foreign investment that resulted in the mine coming under the control of Dome Petroleum, a move that may be a crucial factor in the mine's current financial difficulties.

Clearly the Government of Canada had every reason and had a responsibility to move quickly, but it allowed the mine to sit idle for almost a year. This unbelievable delay has magnified the problem several times over. The effects of the Government's inaction were highlighted in January by the decision to indefinitely shut down the White Pass and Yukon Railway.

Every day that this railway is shut down its old narrow gauge track deteriorates further and the cost of re-opening the line escalates. The cost to re-open the railway will eventually have to be borne by the Cyprus Anvil mine as it is the major user of the railway. This problem will not be solved by merely clearing overburden at the mine site over the next several months, a solution which is the essence of the aid package unveiled last week.

Short term aid such as that announced by the Minister in Whitehorse on April 20 is obviously necessary in view of the desperate situation in Yukon. But will this aid ensure that the Cyprus Anvil mine will be re-opened? Is there a requirement on the part of the Cyprus Anvil Mining Company to guarantee the re-opening of the mine? Does the deal in which the federal Government is to put up a loan and grant amounting to $25 million then require that the mining company convey to the Government of Canada a piece of equity interest in the mining company? I believe Members of this House would like to have these questions answered, Mr. Speaker.

What is also needed, however, is action that will ensure the long-term viability of the Cyprus Anvil mine. The Government should, for example, scrap the obnoxious northern benefits tax which has already seriously impeded any efforts to resume full mineral production at the mine. The tax will hurt Cyprus Anvil's chances of becoming competitive and winning back the Japanese customers who have already been lost during this long shutdown. The Government should also launch work on infrastructure that would show a commitment to reviving the northern mining industry.

Will the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House this evening whether any of the 100 capital projects discussed in the budget speech will be of direct benefit to Yukon mining? For example, is the Government prepared to open the road to the port of Skagway or to launch power projects that could provide Yukon industry with reasonable electricity costs for the future? If this is not the case, then last week's announcement of aid to the Cyprus Anvil mine is obviously too little, too late.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to answer the hon. gentleman's question tonight because having spent a week in Whitehorse, Yukon, just before Christmas, I heard and listened to the concerns of the unemployed miners in that part of Canada.

Following intensive negotiations between Cyprus Anvil and the federal Government which concluded on April 20, the federal Government has agreed to accept Cyprus Anvil's proposal to re-open the mine. Implementation of the $50 million package is subject to certain technical and financial conditions that remain to be negotiated with Cyprus Anvil and its financial backers.

• (1815)

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) has informed Cyprus Anvil about the Government's decision. The company will now present its mine re-opening plan as accepted by the federal Government to a steering committee of Dome's main creditors within the agreement in principle. If the package is acceptable, Government and company officials will prepare a detailed agreement. The Government is optimistic that this agreement will enable the mine to re-open, and that stripping operations will commence as soon as possible.

As described in the communiqué issued by the Minister on April 20 in Whitehorse, the agreement was achieved after ten months of intense negotiations. Implementation which is contingent on resolution of certain financial details to protect the federal Government's investment, means the recall of 210 employees.

The Minister is convinced that this plan will result in a more competitive mine, one that will be a continuing source of stability in the coming decades for Yukon generally and for Faro in particular. He also noted that Cyprus Anvil is the bedrock of the Yukon's economy and its continued closure threatened the territory's very livelihood.

The two-year plan calls for the federal Government and Cyprus Anvil to invest $25 million each in the Faro operation. The agreement will stipulate that the federal contribution, with the exception of money Cyprus Anvil receives under existing federal programs, is fully repayable and is intended solely to re-open the Faro mine.

The Minister also paid tribute to both the Yukon Territorial Government and organized labour, whose actions helped in the efforts to re-open the mine. The Yukon Government has agreed to contribute roughly $2 million toward topping up employees' wages, plus further assistance when the mine resumes full production. In the case of organized labour, the Steelworkers Union signed a new contract boosting productivity by an estimated 20 per cent. It was also instrumental in organizing a delegation of Yukoners who supported the Minister's efforts to obtain Cabinet approval for the agreement.

The federal Government is fully aware that Cyprus Anvil is but one of many mining companies in Canada currently experiencing financial difficulty. However, Cabinet agreed that Cyprus Anvil is a unique case largely because of the federal Government's quasi-provincial responsibility in relation to Yukon's economy. Furthermore, Cyprus Anvil accounts for about 40 per cent of the territory's economic base. Failure to act would have resulted in the Government assuming direct financial and social costs far in excess of the assistance announced.

The agreement is a symbol of what can be achieved through the co-operation of the federal and territorial Governments, business, labour and Yukoners in general.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—WAGE EQUALITY FOR WOMEN. (B) COMPILATION OF STATISTICS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to pursue a question asked of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) regarding equal pay for work of equal value, and particularly the Minister's responsibility to see that this is effected.

I should like to begin by recounting the importance of equal pay for work of equal value to the women's movement of Canada. The women's movement settled on equal pay for work of equal value as its main object in the economic field because of the inadequacy of provincial equal pay for the same job legislation. Women want to see women workers paid as men are, on the basis of skill, effort, responsibility and working conditions, according to objective criteria.

Yet, while women are ghettoized into different jobs from men, simply requiring them to have exactly the same jobs as men means that many women do not get any protection from legislation. This was a recommendation of the ILO, Convention 100 and it was taken up by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada, and recommended in 1970. Many groups lobbied for it and unions supported it after that date. Finally it was made law under the Canadian Human Rights Act. We have it on paper at least federally and we have a similar provision in Quebec for equal pay for travail équivalent.

I whould like to say that the Canadian Human Rights Commission enforces equal pay for work of equal value better than any Province enforces its equal pay legislation at the present time. But the Commission is short staffed and procees is slow. Cases take years to be investigated. The process was deliberately made to be cumbersome, and certainly when women's organizations were lobbying for it they wanted to see it speeded up. There is a complaint stage, an investigation stage and a separate conciliation stage; all this takes an enormous amount of time.

The difficulty is, Mr. Speaker, that the wrong problem is addressed. The model is wrong. Equal pay for work of equal value treats discrimination as an anomoly; that there is an exception when women are paid less than men for doing whatever their job is. This is seen as a failure in human relations. If we could only get the employer and employee together, then we could have reason prevail.

The human rights model, which I would suggest is the incorrect model for labour relations is a model which has worked best for landlord and tenant relations, particularly to get a landlord to accept a tenant of a minority racial or ethnic group. The point is, however, the landlord will be getting the same rent when he does this.

The difference here with equal pay for work of equal value is that paying women less is profitable for companies. The employer will make more money if he can hire women workers who will do the work for less money than male workers. Therefore, it is not a failure of good will, but simply economics.

There is a growing library of literature which shows as well that equal pay legislation at the provincial level has not been successful. That is the case-by-case approach which the Canadian Human Rights Act also uses. Let me give you a few statistics for wages and salaries for full-year employees for all of Canada.

In 1969 women's wages and salaries on average as a per cent of men's salaries was 55.6 per cent; in 1971 it was 55.3 per cent; in 1973 it was 55.8 per cent; in 1975 it was 56.1 per cent; and in 1977 it was up to 57.8 per cent. The latest year for which we have statistics available is 1980, and then the percentage was 58.3. All of these figures are under 60 per cent. The figures fluctuate a little from year to year so that I do not even think we can be enthusiastic that we have gone up from 55 per cent to 58 per cent. We are not sure that this is a lasting increase or just one of the fluctuations; that figure may have gone down in the following year.

Women, therefore, are earning somewhat under 60 per cent of men's wages and salaries for full-time work. Studies show that roughly half of this 40 per cent difference can be attributed to women being paid less than men for doing the same job, and roughly half because they are doing different work. If provincial legislation were working, we would see that women would be earning about 80 per cent of what men do. That is, they would be receiving this 80 per cent figure and the other 20 per cent would be because of women being in job ghettos.

If the federal legislation were working however, that is equal pay for work of equal value, women would be earning on average the same, roughly 100 per cent of what men are earning. And if the federal legislation were working, we would see that wage and salary gap for federal employees declining, and we would see it decline, but not as fast, for provincial employees. If the Minister of Labour had relevant statistics it would be possible to look at this. I do not believe there are any such statistics, and that is regrettable. There should be. The Minister of Labour should be able to show this. If he wants to argue, as he did in replying to me, that the Canadian Human Rights Act is such a good thing, he should show that the gap is declining for people who are under this legislation.

I suggest it is very clear that the legislation is not effective and that there is a lot more that can be done. I suggest that the Minister of Labour himself has some responsibility. It is not enough to say that 90 per cent of Canadian workers are under provincial jurisdiction. He should still be doing something for those 10 per cent of Canadian women workers who come under his jurisdiction. Furthermore, the Canada Labour Code specifies what the Ministry of Labour can do. In Part III, Division 11.1, Section 38.1(1) we learn that employers are required to live up to the same expectations of Section 11 of the Canadian Human Rights Act. I will quote from Section 38.1(2):

> Where an inspector has reasonable grounds at any time for believing that an employer is engaging or has engaged in a discriminatory practice described in subsection (1), the inspector may notify the Canadian Human Rights Commission or file a complaint with the Commission—

In other words, inspectors could be filing complaints. But are they? In 1981 there were only one or two filed by inspectors and we have 127 labour inspectors in Canada for all provisions of the Code. No complaints were filed in 1982. The Department of Labour, Women's Bureau, had an ad campaign on equal pay, but it did not have a phone-in number. It did not facilitate complaints. They had a campaign on sexual harassment and they received a lot of phone calls. I suggest they should be welcoming phone calls and they should be acting on them, taking up complaints to the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

I would like to suggest further that the Minister could be helping the women's movement and union groups which are working for equal pay for work of equal value. These people need statistics as part of their campaign. Instead of doing this, however, we see the Ministry of Labour, which does publish material, not publishing what it should.

This book, "Facts and Figures", is an old and useful handbook which is no longer available in this form. There were complaints that it was not useful enough because it was inconsistent. Instead, what we have now is a glorified computer print-out. We also have discontinued series, Mr. Speaker, for average weekly and hourly earnings. They were extremely useful statistics. They showed a long and stable wage and salary gap. The Department of Labour discontinued this series.

To conclude, I would like to suggest that if the Minister is concerned about equal pay for work of equal value, and if he is concerned about justice for Canadian women workers, there is a lot he could be doing.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) is very much committed to the policy of equal pay for work of equal value. That is the policy of this Government and always has been. We as the Government, and I know the Minister of Labour, are anxiously waiting for the day when, not only in the public service but in the private sector, the philosophy practiced will be equal pay for work of equal value.

Judging by the original question of the Hon. Member and by her remarks today, she seems to imply that Labour Canada has discontinued its annual survey of wages in Canadian industry. In fact, the Labour Data Branch has conducted surveys annually since at least 1974, and continues to publish the results annually in the publication "Wage Rates, Salaries and Hours of Labour". This report presents information on wage rates and salaries for selected cross-industry and specific industry occupations by sex and union status. Information pertaining to the standard hours of work for office and non-office employees is also shown.

"Wage Rates, Salaries and Hours of Labour" is published separately for Canada as a whole and for selected Canadian cities, including St. John's, Charlottetown, Trois-Rivières, Saskatoon, Regina, Victoria, Saint John, Halifax-Dartmouth, St. Catharines-Niagara, Ottawa-Hull, Thunder Bay, Kitchener-Waterloo, Windsor, London-St.Thomas, Vancouver, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton, Quebec City, Montreal and Toronto. As the Hon. Members can see, no city is omitted.

In addition, the Women's Bureau of Labour Canada annually publishes a three part report entitled "Women in the Labour Force". Part 1 deals with participation rates of women. Part 2 is entitled "Earnings of Men and Women", and provides data on male-female earnings by sex, age, occupation and education. These data are obtained from surveys conducted by Statistics Canada and, as mentioned, from Labour Canada. Part 3 of the report provides a variety of facts and figures on such issues as unionization, pensions, day care, and complaints of discrimination on the basis of sex, as registered with the Human Rights Commission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 6.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James) moved:

That this House condemn the tragic implications of monetarist economic policies adopted by this Government that resulted in 24 per cent unemployment among young Canadians and that deny reasonable job prospects for the 300,000 young Canadians graduating from post-secondary institutions this Spring.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise today to open this debate with regard to youth unemployment in the country. That is an ironic statement in light of the tragedy that is facing our youth today. It is absolutely necessary to bring to the attention of the House the plight of our young people and it is crucial that we bring to the attention of the Government the concern that we on this side of the House have for them and their need for jobs. It is important that we bring to the attention of the Government the feelings, the concerns, the hopes and aspirations of young people across the country. That is why we put forward the motion with regard to youth unemployment and that is why we chose to make this the priority of the day for the House.

Young people in Canada today, according to Statistics Canada, are unemployed at the rate of 34.4 per cent in the month of March, which means that there are some 650,000 young Canadians out of work. This compares, Mr. Speaker, with an unemployment rate for adults in the country as a whole of 13.9 per cent—that is unadjusted, Mr. Speaker—and some 1,658,000 Canadians out of work, again according to Statistics Canada. These statistics do not take into account the discouraged or underemployed worker. If one compares the 650,000 unemployed young people with the 1,658,000 of the general population who are unemployed, one finds that somewhere between one-third and one-half of unemployed Canadians today are young people between the ages of 15 and 24. Therefore to a very large extent the unemployment problem in this country is a problem of unemployed young people.

Clearly today there are previously unheard of numbers of middle-aged people, heads of households, who are used to steady, well paid employment and are without work. This is, indeed, an unprecedented tragedy which is happening in our country, certainly since the great Depression of the 1930s. However, a very significant and very important part of the unemployment problem today is the unemployed young people which comprise one-third to one-half of the general population.

One of the reasons it is important to bring this tragedy to the attention of this House today, Mr. Speaker, is the over-all economic policies of the Government of the day and the failure of those economic policies to provide work for Canadians. The young people of Canada suffer much more from unemployment than many of their older brethren due to the policies of this Government as illustrated in its budget, which gives very little hope to people who are unemployed. The Government, by its own actions, by its own economic analyses and its own economic papers, has accepted the extremely high levels of unemployment. It has accepted that for this year there will be some 12.4 per cent unemployed overall. It has accepted that in the medium to long term there will be at least 10 per cent unemployment.

Looking from the perspective of a whole decade, the Government will be seeking to bring down unemployment to something like 7 per cent or 8 per cent, which shows that the Government has really accepted a very harsh view of the world, a view which leaves a very significant proportion of our people unemployed and an even higher level of unemployment among young people. This Government with its policies and actions, therefore, leaves very little hope for the future to young people in the present circumstances.

Young people suffer particularly from unemployment, Mr. Speaker, because, first of all, they lack experience in the job market. When they go to an employer to ask for a job they are told they must have experience, so this lack becomes a barrier to their getting work. This problem is particularly difficult these days because even people who have considerable experience and demonstrated capabilities in a particular occupation are unemployed. Young people also lack training. There is a waiting list for all the training programs in this country. Many people who apply for training under these programs find themselves on those waiting lists. Even many of those people today who are trained and have skills are unemployed, so it is doubly difficult for the young person today to get work because of lack of experience and training in a world where many who have that experience and training are themselves unemployed.

It is particularly important, Mr. Speaker, to pay attention to the plight of young people today because they are forming their first impressions, their views of the working world. Work, Mr. Speaker, should be a satisfying and self-fulfilling activity, something which gives a person an opportunity to serve the community and grow and learn. But by today's standards young people's impression of the work world and work is just the opposite. They are unable to find work or, when they do, it is insecure and short term. Their experience in the work world is one of frustration.

This is not a good attitude to be fostering in this land. It is important, if a nation is to be strong and its people are to be happy, that work be a satisfying, self-fulfilling activity and that people see work from that perspective. They cannot do it unless they experience it that way, and young people today entering the labour market are experiencing frustration, disillusionment and hopelessness. Young people entering the work world today find they cannot get work, even given their best efforts, and they are unable to deal with this new, harsh reality. They end up with a feeling of powerlessness.

It is important that we take note of that feeling, Mr. Speaker, because in Canada young people form their political ideas, a notion of themselves as an active citizenry, much later than they do in other western democracies such as the United States or Great Britain. The fact that young people coming on to the job market end up frustrated and powerless has great significance for our democracy. In the final analysis democracy depends upon the faith and belief that you can make a difference in your world, that you can have a real impact upon what is happening to you and your community. If the feeling is just the opposite, then their whole approach to democratic decision making is going to be one of apathy rather than one of participation. And it is crucial in a democracy to have an active citizenry.

The tragedy of youth unemployment is not only that they have a lack of income, Mr. Speaker. That is significant and it should be paid attention to by this House, but it also relates to the social sense, the quality of community and political life in this country. Not all young people are on the job market looking for work 12 months of the year. There is a significant number of young people in the training and educational institutes, colleges and universities. In fact, there are probably more people in university today than ever before, because they read the newspapers and see what is happening on the street and they know there are extremely high levels of unemployment. Therefore many have postponed their entering the job market and university enrolment levels have ballooned. We are going to have to keep an eye on this. These people are going to be graduating and when they do, they will need employment. The Government brought down its National Training Act a full year ago and started to train young people for new occupations. A year from now, when those young people start graduating from their community colleges, they are going to need work and if they do not get it they are going to start asking: Why have we trained? They are going to feel double disillusionment and disappointment and alienation.

Seeing no prospect in the budget of employment for these people when their training is up paints a picture of a dismal future, a future about which the Government has chosen not to do anything significant. However, the point I wanted to make about students is that they depend upon employment as well. While they are going to school, there are a number of months in which they are looking for work, and they look for work for a number of reasons. One of the reasons relates to the fact that students pay a significant proportion of their own education costs and, all across the country, tuition fees are rising, at least in part, because of the restraint in transfer payments from the federal Government to provincial Governments. However, tuition fees are rising and the percentage of the cost of education which a student pays is increasing. Therefore, the summer employment of students, the capacity of students to earn and save money for their own education, is very crucial and increasingly important.

However, not only do students seek summer employment to help pay for their own education, they also seek it for the experience of work, for the pleasure of productivity, in order to get out there in the world and find out what the work world is like so they can begin more clearly to define their aspirations for the future, what kind of services they want to provide to the community, what kind of employment they would like to engage in. Therefore, employment for students is crucial in terms of their being able to afford their education and also to learn from their experience.

I would like to say a few words about the student employment programs and youth employment programs of the Government. I have in my hand a copy of "The Budget in Brief". There is a section dealing with direct employment programs and one dealing with youth programs. Not only have the Government's general economic policies failed to provide employment for youths, but its specific youth employment programs fall far short of the mark as well. They do not reach the target, let alone score a bull's-eye.

I mention these programs rather than just economic policies in general because, even if we had a booming economy, we all know from experience over the last couple of decades that it would still be necessary to have special programs for youth in order to provide them with adequate employment programs.

On page 7 of "The Budget in Brief" of April 19, 1983, under "Youth Programs", there is reference to an additional $70 million which has been allocated for the Summer Canada Program, etc. This would leave one with the impression that on budget night, April 19, 1983, the Government took $70 million out of its pot and put it into the Summer Canada youth programs, $70 million of new money. It refers to "additional dollars". One would have thought that it found the money in the same pot that it found the $200 million to save the reputation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

I have consulted with a number of people including the Canadian Federation of Students. To the best that we can piece the information together, this additional $70 million has been announced at least twice now. Some time in December or January, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) announced some $100 million for Summer Canada youth programs and then some time later, in February or March, raised it to $170 million. The Government now takes that same additional $70 million and announces it again in the budget. Therefore, while the Government was able to find $200 million to save the reputation of the Minister of Finance, or at least to paper it over, it has simply reannounced the additional $70 million.

The additional disappointment about the $70 million is the fact that if one compares the amount which the Government is spending this year on youth programs, $170 million, to the amount that it spent in 1979—and I forget the exact figure but it was around $112 million—one finds that the amount of dollars which the Government is putting into Summer Canada for youth in real terms, taking inflation into account at about 10 per cent, is the same this year as it was in 1979. The real dollar commitment, adjusted for inflation, is at the same level as it was in 1979, even though we are all aware that the economic circumstances are very different from what they were a couple of years ago. As well, the need of young people for employment is much greater this summer than it was a couple of years ago. I point this out specifically because it is important for the Government to have adequate youth programs.

Let me briefly mention the two other announcements made in this document. One concerns Katimavik which provides $40 million for 4,000 participants. I must say that although that is commendable, Katimavik is not really an employment program. It is a program that provides an opportunity to young people to serve their communities. It is not a program which provides a full wage for a full day's work; it is an opportunity for youth to serve their community at below minimum wage. While it is a good program and a worthy idea, I suggest that to list it as direct support for employment is misleading. Once again, while it is a good opportunity it is not an employment program.

The other announcement of direct support for employment which I want to comment on briefly is the one under the Department of National Defence, which provides $75 million over two fiscal years to hire 5,000 young people. Obviously there will be many young people lining up at the Department of National Defence to take advantage of this opportunity because they need work wherever they can find it. Of course, young people will join the Armed Forces, like anyone else, since they want to serve their country and take advantage of this option. The difficulty is that if there are no other real options for young people, they will feel obliged to take this option when they should have choices.

This brings me to another aspect of my concern about youth. The value of youth is the hope that they bring to the country. Therefore it is important for us to provide significant employment for young people, so they can gain experience as well as pay for their education and ultimately grow and add to the strength of our country.

Youth are not only concerned about themselves. They are concerned about the survival of this planet upon which we live. The youth of today have taken a great deal of initiative to fight the efforts to test the Cruise missile in this country. They tie this issue to employment as well by pointing out that many more jobs can be provided through social spending than military spending.

I see that my time is almost up, but let me say that it is very important for the Government to support the efforts of youth to disarm this world because it is that kind of idealism that will build a better country for the future. Rather than adopting the hawkish attitude of the Government toward the world, we need the hope of youth and should support them in order to make that hope flower.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions or comments? Debate.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this because it certainly represents an issue that has been of primary concern to Members of the Government and to me personally as Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is an issue that I believe deserves a fair, open and good exchange of views. However, I would hope that we might avoid the traditionally expected Opposition tendency to wag fingers, lay blame and try to find a culprit or scapegoat by accusing the Government of acting improperly. I think the issue we are examining deserves much better than that.

• (1130)

It is an issue which requires a sensible and common sense approach. It is a problem which has been with us, is with us now and will continue to be with us and it represents one of the most significant, social and economic circumstances that we, as Canadians, face. But we do not face it just by ourselves. I do not know whether Members of the House have had an opportunity just recently to read the front page story in the New York Times. The story described the serious plight of European young people who are faced with this issue. Unemployment has been the subject of a wide number of papers and examinations by Governments around the world.

This phenomenon was born out of the baby boom of the Second World War. Over the past 10 or 12 years we have been watching the enormous acceleration of young people into the labour market. The numbers of young people coming into the job market in this decade has almost doubled that of decades before. We are dealing with very large volumes of young people who want a job and are expecting a job. In any of the traditional occupations, ways of providing employment are no longer there.

At the same time as we have been receiving large numbers of young people in the job market, we have also been experiencing a change in the job market. The questionable pattern of moving toward jobs that require high degrees of skill, far more training and background and the attempt to come to grips with that particular issue is at the centre, and should be at the centre, of our debate. What we have to recognize is the issue of youth employment. It is not simply a product of the existing recession that we are in; it is an ongoing problem which will represent one of the major issues with which we will have to contend for the rest of this decade.

I would recommend to Hon. Members that they look at the documents I tabled in this House last week during the budget debate entitled "Perspective and Labour Market Policy Framework for the 1980s". I believe it gives an accurate and a good account of the kind of demography and work force which we are looking at and how we as a Parliament will be asked to deal with those issues on a continuing basis.

It is wrong to suggest, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) is trying to suggest, that nothing is being done, that everything is going to hell in a hand basket and that no one cares. I want to take this opportunity to describe to Members of the House some of the issues into which we have been entering and as well describe some of the direct areas of progress that we are making in coming to grips with this issue.

First, I would like to say that if Hon. Members want to measure the efforts in which we are engaged by sheer dollar or volume terms, I would point out that in my own Department we spend about $2.5 million a day on the employment and training of young people. In fact, in the 1982-83 fiscal year we spent something like $900 million in a combination of training and employment programs directly targeted at the interests of young people. We provided unemployment and training services to over two million young people this past year alone. In the kind of wide-ranging activities we are able to provide, the largest clientele we serve is under the age of 24. We have been investing in a number of initiatives which I think will provide for a very hopeful future for young people.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James resides, as I do, in the Province of Manitoba. I draw to his attention the announcement that I made last Friday in our own Province. The announcement described that, as a result of the investment under the skills growth fund, we were able to invest in close to 1,000 additional training places in Manitoba alone in high technology areas. This has provided a wide range of new training opportunities in computers, robotics, advanced electronics and heavy machinery that we have developed in Manitoba through that investment by the federal Government's skills growth fund in the distribution of training facilities in northern Manitoba and on Indian reserves. We have taken mobile training vans into the rural areas and we are providing a brand-new training centre in the City of Winnipeg.

If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James is trying to suggest that we are standing still and are not actively engaged in doing things, I would say that he should probably invest 15 cents to buy a newspaper so that he can learn what is going on in his own area. He will be able to discover that the activity in which we are engaging is providing a very sound and important foundation for economic growth.

I can repeat those examples right across the country. We invested in Holland College in Prince Edward Island to train an additional 90 young people in marine technology. We have just put $4 million into the British Columbia Institute of Technology for a new CAD/CAM program, again providing major training for young people in those areas.

We invested something like $14 million in 17 different community colleges and institutions in the Province of Ontario. This will provide something like several thousand additional training opportunities. I could repeat those examples to demonstrate that we are aware of the necessity of addressing the employment needs of young people, primarily by investing in their future, thereby ensuring that they will have the skills and training to allow them to compete for the new kinds of jobs the decade will bring.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to point out the evolution that we have gone through in the development of the youth employment strategy that was announced in last week's budget. Last summer we were very conscious of the increasing problem of youth employment and a need to do something about it. We introduced a number of test programs. For example, we started ten experimental youth job corps programs in ten metropolitan centres across Canada. The job corps idea is to help young people who have been on the sidelines in the job market, those who are disadvantaged or who have been chronically unemployed, get counselling, guidance, work experience and training all at the same place. It will allow them to come out of the disadvantaged category and move into the job market.

We have also introduced a network of specialized youth employment centres across Canada. They will provide special placing and support for young people. We have also introduced a number of trial experiments on a wage-subsidy program through the PED Program. This will allow us to test how we can work with the private sector to provide an incentive for young people to get that first job. We used our opportunities last summer to test some of those new programs and to determine what worked well and what did not.

Following that, Mr. Speaker, in January, 1983 I met with all provincial Ministers of Labour and Manpower and introduced a paper on youth employment. I asked them for their co-operation and co-ordination in our youth strategy. Youth employment represents unquestionably one of the most serious issues facing all Governments. But this problem cannot be solved by one Government acting alone. It has to be a combination of efforts.

I am pleased to report that the provincial Ministers have responded. Since that time we have had a series of senior officials working at how we can co-ordinate the various youth employment training programs across Canada. What became very clear in those discussions last January was the necessity of dealing with a problem that has been endemic in our employment market for the last two decades. Young people face special difficulty in the job market getting that first time job experience. That is the breakthrough they have to make, and it is the major barrier which they have to overcome. Unlike many European countries that have a very well defined transition period between formal schooling and work, Canada does not. It is almost a two-year national apprenticeship program. In Canada we have never adopted that, partly because of our fragmented educational system. But we have never adopted the notion that there has to be a transition period between formal schooling and work so that a young person can get work skills and on-the-job training. That is an idea I put forward that we should grow toward, but how can we make it happen?

I think one of the most important productive results of the budget last Tuesday was that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) provided us with an opportunity to enter into a major new youth employment program, an interim program which will allow us to provide direct subsidies to private business, to small business in particular, to universities, to school boards and to non-profit organizations to hire young persons for on-the-job training, so that they are provided with job experience in the workplace combined with training. The $95 million to launch that program in the first year of operation will provide close to 35,000 young people with that opportunity. I did not hear the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James mention that particular initiative, probably because he knows that it is too good or too effective.

It was based upon the proposals we received from a number of youth organizations asking for the opportunity to break down the barrier. We now have that opportunity. We now have the resources to enter into that new interim youth program. It is my intention as Employment Minister to consult first with private business to gain its views on how it should operate and also to work with young people and youth organizations in its implementation. To carry that forward, we will be holding a national conference in August in Newfoundland on youth employment. We have invited a number of the major youth organizations to join with us in a discussion on how we can mount that major youth strategy.

I think this represents to all of us a major launch forward into a new kind of youth employment posture, one that will be combined with the continuation of the youth job corps system which we have established such as Katimavik, and the additional programs in the Department of National Defence, to supplement that. In the budget the Minister of Finance included $280 million in addition to the other moneys in Departments already going into youth employment. It is additional money to provide young people with that first-time opportunity.

It would be wrong to suggest that nothing is being done. In fact, what we see is a fairly well articulated strategy beginning last summer, moving through the proper steps of consultation and resulting in the budget announcement of a new youth employment strategy on the part of the Government. What we really need now is a full partnership with and participation of other sectors of the economy. We need the assistance of the school boards and provincial Governments. Certainly we need the full partnership of labour and business in helping us to mount this new youth employment initiative. It will be our intention to seek that consultation with the idea that it must be a national effort and commitment. It is not something one Government alone should be able to mount. All Canadians must concentrate and devote their attention toward coming to grips with the problems associated with young people. That is really the direction and thrust we are taking in Government to deal with the employment issue.

Also we recognize that we must deal with the other side of the ledger, the people who are still in school. As I pointed out, in that area we will be spending over $1 billion this year in providing new high technology training for close to 275,000 or 300,000 Canadians of whom over 50 per cent are young people. Also this year alone we will be investing $100 million in new training facilities, modernizing equipment and bringing in the new kinds of technology so that young people can be trained in the work of the future.

Also we have started a number of support systems which the Hon. Member mentioned, of summer employment for those who are still in school. The federal Government will be providing direct employment jobs this year for over 70,000 young people. We are hoping that that figure will be matched equally by the efforts of provincial and municipal Governments. If they will make a similar kind of effort, we could be providing double the number of jobs directly by Government.

In addition, we recognize that it is the private sector which must provide the major source of employment for young people. It often disturbs me that the New Democratic Party ignores that fact. It does not pay attention to the potential and capability of the private sector in providing young people with employment. That Party seems somehow to gloss over the necessity of ensuring that private employers play their role. In fact, we launched last week a major information campaign to get private employers to provide jobs for summer students. We will be opening some 400 youth employment centres across Canada which will provide places for employers to post available jobs on the market and opportunities for young people to obtain those jobs. We are not only making an appeal to traditional private sector employers but to people who want work done around their homes or offices. It will require a special effort this summer. The information and advertising campaign is designed to ensure that if they have any kind of job, they should contact one of the 400 youth employment centres, post it on the board and we will get a young person to do the job this summer.

It is my hope that through this debate Hon. Members of the Opposition will offer their services to make this program work and will co-operate in ensuring that activities within their own constituency offices will be directed toward that initiative. Rather than using their time and energies in the pursuit of criticism, hopefully they will turn them to somewhat more constructive pursuits during these very critical summer months. I know the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr.

Hnatyshyn) will be a major and active supporter of the program. I can see that he has already acknowledged it and given us his support. We will mark his name on the list.

These are the kinds of efforts we are attempting to provide, but I want to return to one fundamental issue. We must recognize that during this period there are no quick-fix solutions. In fact, it was interesting that the opening speaker for the New Democratic Party did not make any offers as to what he would do. He did not have any sort of magic solutions to the problem; he simply criticized what was being done. I think the issue requires much more than that. It will require the best of our creative abilities and energy as Parliamentarians to address this issue, to use our resources effectively and to provide for a better partnership among all major players in the economy.

What the economists call the structural problem of youth employment will be a continuing problem. We must work away at it. We must develop better techniques for bringing people into the labour market. We must make better use of our teaching and training institutions. We must go into the schools and try to give better guidance and information to young people so that they will choose careers which will lead to jobs.

When I talk to young people in the high schools in my constituency, it disturbs me greatly that many of them are preparing themselves in grades eight, nine and ten for jobs which will not be there four or five years from now. The basic information about the changing nature of the job world is not being transmitted or passed into their hands. In passing I want to say that we are trying to address that issue through the implementation of our new Canadian Occupational Projection System. We are trying to provide a much better navigational system for the job market by being able to predict and forecast where future job markets will be. We can obtain that information and give it to guidance counsellors in the schools, to teachers, parents and young people, so that they can begin preparing themselves for careers which will be real ones.

When we go into the schools and talk to young women in the system, they say that they are going to be clerks, stenographers or work in offices. We have to tell them that in four or five years maybe 40 per cent or 50 per cent of that work will be eliminated. They say that no one told them. This simply points out the necessity of working on all fronts with educators to ensure that the basic training and education they offer is relevant and contemporary to labour market needs and to ensure that young people have access to that information.

I am simply suggesting that the issue of youth employment cannot be solved by the wave of a magic wand. It will require a very major combined effort on the part of all sectors of our economy. I hope this debate will help generate that kind of interest, involvement and particularly that kind of co-operation, so that we can address what I consider to be the number one national priority.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is clearly aware that the NDP has long been calling for a serious industrial strategy in the country to create long-term employment for everyone who wants to work. In terms of immediate action, we have called for significant action on public works and a decent tax break for low and moderate income people to stimulate consumer demand.

I direct a question to the Minister. He talked about economists and structural unemployment among youth. This echoes the Minister of Finance's general statements about structural unemployment for the general population and leads into an acceptance of an extraordinarily high level of unemployment for the general population and for youth. Given the Minister's long list of activities that the Government is involved in and the fact that today there is an unemployment rate among youth of 23.4 per cent, and given his stated concern for students this summer, will he tell this House what level of youth unemployment he expects this summer during the months of June and July? Does he expect that his programs will have a significant impact on the unemployment rate among youth? What are his expectations in terms of their impact on the social reality of this country?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that this is the first time we have had a clear-cut endorsement of our budget from the New Democratic Party. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James says that the New Democratic Party wanted a public works program, and breaks for small business. They wanted these kinds of incentives. That is exactly what the Minister of Finance offered last Tuesday. Announcements are now being made in that regard. We certainly welcome the Member's full-scale endorsement of the initiatives taken last Tuesday and we will be glad to recognize that endorsement.

Mr. de Jong: Boy, are you slippery!

Mr. Axworthy: Slippery? I think it is wonderful that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James has now accepted the kind of strategy that we have put forward.

As for his question about statistics, I note how the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James has shifted his ground. He wants to talk about statistics now. As I said during the course of my remarks about the document I tabled last week, we recognize the reality that it is a very serious issue. But the problem will not be solved haranguing or by pointing out the failures of one group or the other. It will be solved by managing it and by coping with it.

We have tried to put forward a strategy that clearly enunciates the method that we believe will succeed in dealing with this problem by working with the private sector in developing a wage subsidy program for on-the-job training so that we can overcome the barrier that young people face, and by using the job corps program as a way of giving chronically unemployed young people the kind of support that they need. We are looking for the same endorsement of those kinds of programs that the Hon. Member just gave to the general budget. We are looking for a willingness to go back and persuade provincial Governments, municipal Governments, the private sector and labour to co-operate so that we can create a national coalition.

We are hoping that through those kinds of efforts yes, we can succeed in providing jobs for young people.

Mr. Speaker, because Members of the Opposition love to get hung up on statistical somersaults, I want to point out a statistical phenomenon that exists: the more jobs you create, the more people you are bringing back to the job market; therefore, the indicators do not change but more jobs are being provided. That is what the Government is interested in.

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister a question along the general philosophical line of what is seen in the future for work in general but particularly work for young people. I know the Minister is aware that the problem that exists in Canada is a very real one that is not going to go away instantly, and as he said, there is no magic wand that will take it away. However, one must look at the Canadian situation in relation to the whole world, particularly in relation to countries in Latin America where the majority of the population is young. The world population is growing at the greatest rate in the youth sector and any future planetary economy will be based on all the people in the world working somewhere.

I would ask the Minister if he has in his Department any sort of futuristic planners who are looking at what will happen to Canada in its relationship with the whole world as this massive number of young people come on to the labour markets of this planet. Does he have a futuristic group that will plan for other ways to look upon work in Canada? This may sound a little bit funny, but will it always be necessary for one to have a job to get an income as many of the traditional jobs that provided income in the past disappear? What group or groups will do the creative thinking for the future which, to my mind, will differ from even the recent past?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the question of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) will somewhat tax my well known capacity for being succinct, but I will attempt to answer his question very quickly: Yes, we do have a policy planning unit. I would refer him to the document that we tabled last week on employment perspectives in the 1980s, which does set out some of the forecasting projections that we see. He will notice in that document that we are projecting, by 1985 or 1986, at least in Canada, that the number of young people coming into the job market, people born during the post-war baby boom, will decline. In fact, the number of young people coming into the market will be almost cut in half by that time. Therefore, we will go back to a pattern of unemployment that will be closer to the norm than it has been for the past seven or eight years.

We believe the answer to the question of youth unemployment is to ensure that youth have adequate and effective skills to meet the new world of high technology and information that we are moving toward. That is why we are investing so many of our resources in a new training system across Canada, a program that is central to our strategy.

Mr. Speaker, in relation to the Hon. Member's larger question about what we are doing in the world, I do not know if we have quite been able to grasp the full global significance of that. I would point to one example that the Hon. Member would be interested in. We are starting to bring an increasing number of minors and young people from some of the refugee camps and displaced persons camps in Central America to Canada to start training them in new skills. An officer from my Department is in El Salvador at the present time negotiating a specific program for the training of young El Salvadorans in Canada so they can take those skills back to their own country.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I have a succinct question for the Minister that I hope will elicit a succinct response. There are now 600,000 young people unemployed. We are anticipating another 300,000 unemployed when the new graduates come on to the job market. So we are looking at one million young people unemployed in Canada. As a result of budget initiatives, can the Minister tell us how many jobs for young people he anticipates will be created this year both from indirect budget initiatives and from direct spending by his Department?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question, I refer the Hon. Member back to the statements made by the Minister of Finance indicating that over the next two years we expect some 600,000 new jobs to be created in this country. A large percentage of those new jobs will go to young people. As pointed out, in my own Department about 50 per cent of our clients are those under the age of 24.

The basic thrust of the budget is to start accelerating the pattern of recovery that we are now entering into. To facilitate that acceleration, we will provide the opening of a number of job opportunities. The announcements made yesterday by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) and the Minister of Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) in the Capital Works Program will provide many jobs. A large percentage of those jobs will go to young people. A large percentage of jobs in the housing field will go to young people. A large percentage of jobs in the area of new technology will go to young people.

In our own programs, my Department is trying to provide for a kind of bridging of the programs, such as the 35,000 new jobs that would be created directly through our wage subsidy, our new interim program that will be targeted at the young people who are most chronically unemployed, as well as the 125,000 young people who go into our training programs each year; but at this point I cannot add those programs up. I would say to the Hon. Member that I expect he and I will have the opportunity to exchange further information tomorrow when we get the estimates, and I will be glad to try to provide full totals for him at that time.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to enter the debate today as it is an important one. The whole issue of youth concerns all of us.

I was interested in the Minister's remarks. He started out by saying that we should not point to the sins of the Government. Why is that? Certainly the Government has to take responsibility for some of its actions that have contributed to youth unemployment in the country. The Minister spent a great deal of time talking about Government spending, Government programs and how they would solve all sorts of problems; then he talked about the need for the private sector to create the jobs. I believe that is only lip service, Mr. Speaker. There are some Government programs but the question remains about what they will do for the private sector.

The National Energy Program took away literally thousands of jobs in the country but that matter was not addressed in the budget. Those jobs will not be back on the market this year. There were no changes to the tax regime that would stimulate and encourage the private sector and small business.

What I think is most significant about the budget is the fact that there is a great deal of talk about helping the private sector. We were hoping for some recovery this year but next year new taxes will come in that may stifle any revitalization of the economy that could take place in 1983.

The Minister talked about creating 600,000 new jobs. As my colleague from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) stated, we find that 500,000 young people will be out looking for their first full-time job this year. They may get some of those jobs. The problem is serious when the Minister admits that unemployment is going to continue well into 1986 when we will still have an unemployment rate hovering around 10 per cent. That means youth unemployment will still be very high.

The problems that face all young people in Canada are staggering. At the moment we have 658,000 unemployed young Canadians, or 23.4 per cent. One out of every four young people in Canada is presently without a job. When we start to break the figures down we find that of the 2 million who are employed, roughly 700,000 are only employed part-time. Half the people who are employed part-time are looking for full-time jobs although they are not registered as unemployed. That brings in another 300,000 young people. They have a difficult time of it because they have no job security. Virtually always they receive low wages. I could give examples of businesses which keep people on part-time employment because they can pay them lower wages. Thus, they receive a sketchy training and have little opportunity in the future. The underemployed have a difficult time of it today.

The figures do not even consider what we call the "uncounted", the discouraged people who have quit looking for work and those who are making a tawdry living at best on the streets—the hidden unemployed. These young people are developing the worst possible attitude toward their future. They feel there is no future for them, and they have no pride because there is nothing they can do.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to the motion. The people we are talking about, the young people, are the last to be hired and the first to be fired. They certainly need our attention and consideration and they need to see a demonstration of our concern.

I am glad that the motion we are addressing includes consideration of the situation of this year's graduates and what they are going to face. Looking through some figures taken from various engineers' associations I find that since 1981 unemployment among engineers has risen by 500 per cent. This spring 7,000 graduates will be looking for new employment opportunities, and unemployment in the engineering field is already up by 500 per cent. Many of the graduates from last year have not found jobs, yet this new group is coming onstream. They will have little opportunity for employment.

When the Hon. Member drafted his motion he perhaps cast his net a little too narrowly. It is not monetarism alone that is responsible for the situation. There is a need for the Government to try and curb Government caused inflation. Its deficits, its intervention and its fiscal irresponsibility are among the root causes of youth and general unemployment in the country. In 1973 the gross debt was about $46 billion; we understand that today it is around $160 billion. That is certainly a significant increase, Mr. Speaker.

The Government does not seem inclined to do anything about its wasteful habits. It has looked around for someone to take the blame and has hit on the Bank of Canada. The Government chose not to do the necessary hard work itself. It did not stop the advocacy advertising that we have just seen on the Crow rate. That is the kind of thing that needs a great deal of money, just to bring the viewpoint of the Government to the public. It is a viewpoint that has not been discussed in Parliament and certainly is not reflected in legislation. It is what I call propaganda and is a considerable waste of Government funds. The Government has not watched the spending of Crown corporations and some examples of this have caused concern. A recent television program on Canadair's Challenger executive jet showed that it involved a cost of over $1.5 billion. Some jobs were created but Parliament still has to see a review of Canadair operations and has not had a chance to discuss the implications of the Government funds going into it.

Consolidated Computer has cost $125 million over the past ten years. That money has gone, Mr. Speaker; it is wasted. It could have been used to create jobs or as an incentive in the private sector, but instead it may well have contributed to inflation.

I am concerned that the motion does not really understand the impact of the broad range of Government policies. I mentioned the plight of engineering graduates. One of the major employers of engineers is the oil and gas industry. It used to employ a lot of engineering skills but neither that industry nor related industries have had a great need for engineers lately. That all came about as a result of the national energy policy. Two years ago I was in Calgary talking to employers of engineers and asking what opportunities were available to young engineers coming out of our universities. Formerly, those young people were able to go into head offices and negotiate a job as though they had five, 10 or 15 years' experience, the demand for their services was so strong. It is not there today. Since the National Energy Program was brought in those graduates have been looking for work.

The Minister from Quebec shakes his head, but I live in that area and I happen to know that people employed in that sector are no longer employed and no longer have that opportunity. That is true of those in related industries. There are a lot of industries which are related and are spin-offs from the energy sector. You do not see the growth that occurred in the towns and cities which once were booming and creating employment opportunities, not just for Albertans but for people right across the country. In my own riding there were people from Quebec, Ontario and virtually every Province in Canada who were employed. Today they do not have those jobs or that opportunity because of things like the National Energy Program.

We still import some 250,000 barrels of oil a day. The National Energy Program prices our petroleum products right out of the international market. We know those concerns are there because of the problems we are facing with natural gas exports. That programs which is demonstrative of what we could be encouraging in the private sector, is a real example of what is not being done. It is a contributor to our youth unemployment, not just for the engineers, as I mentioned, but for construction personnel. Anyone who knows anything about the energy sector knows that these projects which we have been talking about require literally thousands and thousands of people to work on them, from the unskilled to the most highly skilled. But that is not happening. There is no construction personnel. There are no "roughnecks" any more. In my area there used to be as many as 65 or 70 rigs going all the time, all of which employed young men and women. Today they are down to five, 10, 15. The jobs are gone.

What causes me some real concern is a new attitude which I sense is coming. I was very interested in the question which was just put to the Minister, and that is, where are we going in the future? What is the significance? What is happening? What causes me concern is this solution of work sharing, this idea of work sharing. Because we are not going to be able to provide employment for our young people in Canada on an ongoing basis, we are going to have them share jobs. I find that very offensive.

I come from a part of the country which is rich in resources, whether it be oil or gas, or the sands which can be turned into glass. There is the kind of opportunity in this country which is hard for us to imagine. People from other countries look at us and say: "My goodness, you have everything". We have everything and we still have a very small population. The question is, then, if we have all those opportunities and resources, why are our young people unemployed? I believe it has to be very clearly because of the fact that the Government has not provided any stimulus or incentive to see those resources brought onstream in order to create and provide opportunities for young people right across Canada.

Another concern, and I suppose this is the one most often referred to, is that of interest rates. I believe that interest rates over the last couple of years have had an impact on bankruptcies. In 1982 we had some 90 per cent more bankruptcies than in 1979. In 1982 there were some 10,700, close to 11,000 bankruptcies. In 1983 we find that we already have about 2,800 bankruptcies in the first three months of this year.

That is a very serious problem because those businesses, those private sector small businesses which are going bankrupt, are not doing business, are not hiring and are not creating jobs for young Canadians. There is now a modest reprieve from the high interest rates of last year and the year before, but the question still remains, what is coming next? The Government has just told us in this last budget that we are going to be looking at deficits of over $20 billion for the next decade. That is obviously going to put pressure on the market and on interest rates, and it has to. The Hon. Member opposite should know that. When interest rates climb, business opportunities in this country and employment opportunities for our young Canadians must be affected.

The great concern, however, is that of youth unemployment. I believe that the Government is responsible for this problem in a number of ways. The problems our young people are facing are massive. We have over 600,000 unemployed, we have over 300,000 underemployed, we have approximately 600,000 seeking summer jobs, and we have over 500,000 who will be seeking their first full-time job this year. If we total up those figures we will find that it has significant impact and is a problem of very serious magnitude.

It is no wonder that these young people have high levels of frustration and very little sense of hope or sense of where they can go in the future. But what is the Government doing about it? Something that really stunned me when I heard the Minister refer to it was the study called "Perspective on employment: A Labour Market Policy Framework for the 1980s". This report indicates that Government is redefining acceptable unemployment levels. My understanding is that it is now going to accept 8 per cent instead of 3 per cent. That is an acceptable level of unemployment in a country like Canada? That is an acceptable level of unemployment in a country of opportunity and potential? Right now we have unemployment running at 12 per cent to 12.5 per cent and we can virtually double that figure for our youth who are running at 24 per cent. Does that mean that if we have an acceptable level of unemployment in this country of 8 per cent across the board, then it is acceptable to have 16 per cent unemployment among our young people in this country? I find that, Mr. Speaker, very unacceptable. I feel that is something which is very serious and we should be looking at it, because historically our youth has had a hard time finding employment. Youth unemployment has always been high. Does this new definition mean that unemployment among the young is to be acceptable at 16 per cent or 18 per cent?

The Government has indicated it is making work for the young people of Canada. We just heard the Minister recite a number of programs which are coming forward. I applaud him for those programs, but in reality is the Government really doing very much? Take, for example, the youth internship and wage subsidies for the young, a program worth $95 million. If you break that down for the 500,000 young people who are seeking their first full-time job this year, it works out to about $190 per person. If we give them some sort of a wage subsidy of $2 or $3, what kind of an impact is that going to have? That amount of subsidy per person would hardly last more than a couple of weeks. So we must get this problem into perspective and realize just how serious it is and how much of a pittance that $95 million really becomes when you are talking about literally millions of young Canadians.

The Government has indicated it cannot spend very much more money; it cannot continue to spend more money than it has. The problem is that it spent the money when the economy did not need it. Now when we are in a situation where we desperately need some funding and some help, the money is not there because it was wasted in the past. We get lip service now that the private sector is going to be helped and encouraged, that the Government is going to do this and do that. I do not believe very much is going to happen.

I would like to conclude by saying that I believe this whole situation of youth and general unemployment is partly a result of this Government's cavalier attitude towards the private sector and of its massive and costly intrusion into the very private lives of Canadians. I believe the National Energy Program is probably one of the most prime examples of that. It is a program which could have been creating jobs in a sector which was alive and well and which had lots of potential, but which has now ground to a halt. We are left with a Minister who has to stand and list off Government programs, and we know that even if youth took every job which the Minister has just indicated will be created, it would barely employ those people who are taking their first full-time job this season. It is a serious problem, Mr. Speaker, and it will take an awful lot more incentive from this Government to create the very real jobs which are needed by the young people of Canada.

• (1220)

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the comments of the previous speaker, the Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper). After listening to him in English and then using my earphone to find out whether it sounded better in French, I realized that the Hon. Member used his entire twenty minutes to make a post mortem of the past recession. I sincerely believed there was a new generation of Members in the Progressive Conservative Party. When the Hon. Member rose, I felt that here was one of the younger elements of the Progressive Conservative Party who would use his imagination and avoid the usual clichés in criticizing inflation, which is going to be 6.3 per cent, and the deficit, as he has done. But then he said: Do more and spend less. That does not sound very sensible. He said: The Government is not doing enough, but he also said: No Government interference! Finally, he treated us to some weeping and gnashing of teeth about the energy problem in Canada, and he was very sorry to see that no large projects were being undertaken. I agree, but the Hon. Member should not blame everything on the National Energy Program. He should realize that oil prices have varied substantially since these projects were developed, and that to be financially viable, many of these projects depended on oil price levels of around $42, and are therefore entirely unrealistic today.

I think all Canadians are going to be disappointed in the speech by the youth critic of the Progressive Conservative Party, because for twenty minutes, he failed to offer any solutions at all. I think he is treading the same path as the leadership candidates. They have absolutely no recommendations to make, and the best they can do is to launch vicious attacks as they do on the leadership candidates in their own party, and I think that I heard the Hon. Member say that we might steal them. If they have any to steal, we would try and implement them, but they have nothing to steal, they have no ideas and I think this is very unfortunate, because the youth problem is one that requires serious study by both Opposition and Government Members.

Earlier, the New Democratic Party made some entirely meaningless comments. The same applies to the Progressive Conservatives. Fortunately, at least our Government Members are being imaginative and looking at programs that can deal with the concerns of young people. Of course, we would all like to have programs that would provide employment for 600,000 young Canadians, but that is impossible in the present situation.

I thought it was very interesting that just a few days after the budget, the New Democratic Party should ask for a debate on youth employment, because it is a subject that is worthy of the undivided attention of all the Members of this House. Unfortunately, I now realize that Hon. Members are more interested in making political points than in offering young Canadians any hope or solutions or jobs.

In fact, the Lalonde Budget has offered a great deal of hope to many people of my generation, if I may say so. In all parts of the country, the budget was received with great satisfaction by businessmen, who saw these programs and fiscal measures as the road to accelerated recovery, and in fact, according to the comments I heard during the last two weekends in my riding they were ready to start new projects and felt that economic recovery was imminent.

I know that, unfortunately in many cases employers will first have to call back employees on the lay-off list before recruiting people from outside, and that is why I welcome these temporary programs. People argue that these are not permanent solutions and are a bandaid approach to the present situation. Actually, I think the Government should not get involved in permanent job creation programs and that its role should be to provide relief in situations like the present one where it will be several months before private enterprise will be able to start hiring young people.

On the other hand, Hon. Members know perfectly well that this summer—in a few weeks—hundreds of thousands of students throughout their ridings are going to start working on projects they themselves proposed. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has set aside $170 million for the Summer Canada program, and when I hear the Members opposite say that we are doing nothing, I would like to point out that they are all delighted to announce these summer jobs in their ridings. I certainly am. Thirty-two projects will start in the riding of Shefford to provide students with interesting work during the summer. That is one of the many programs we are offering. Thanks to the Summer Canada program, and the funding it is able to provide, many young people will be able to pay for their education next year and at the same time acquire some useful experience on the labour market. I think this is an admirable initiative on the part of the Government. There are also summer programs in the Federal public service under which thousands of students will be able to acquire practical experience, and although these programs may not be attractive to everyone, anyone may apply, and applicants who are chosen will be able to work under these programs during the summer.

The Government also has other programs which I intend to discuss in greater detail later on, and these include the NEED program, community development, manpower training, worksharing, National Defence projects and the Katimavik program of the Department of the Secretary of State. At this point I would like to point out that this summer again, the main employer of young people in Canada will, of course, be the private sector.

In this connection, a national advertising campaign, urging the private sector, including industry, businessmen and even private citizens to hire a student this summer, has been launched by Employment and Immigration, under a very striking slogan: Profitez de l'énergie scolaire. Embauchez un étudiant cet été. Earlier, I heard the Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) say that we should not spend money on advertising. I beg to differ. This publicity campaign will help make potential employers aware of the services offered by student employment centres, and as a result, think about having certain jobs done by students. As Hon. Members will see in their own ridings, student employment centres are playing a very significant role throughout Canada.

I would therefore like to take advantage of this opportunity to ask Canadian employers to hire as many young people as they can this summer, either on their own or by asking the Canada Employment Centre or the Student Employment Centre to get the young workers they need.

Incidentally, we are trying to direct young people to entrepreneurs who are able to offer career-oriented job experience. In the past, we have seen that in many cases, such jobs have finally led to permanent employment. In fact, I would say that student employment centres are another important source of employment and experience for thousands of our young people, because these centres are, in fact, run by students.

In addition, one sometimes forgets the significant role played by the employment and counselling services of Employment and Immigration Canada. Are Hon. Members aware that, before the June 19 budget last year, the employment strategy for 1983-84 was expected to provide assistance to 2.2 million young Canadians thanks to a $145 million appropriation to Canada Employment and Youth Employment Centers. Are they aware that, in the area of job training, under the Act passed by Parliament last year, $589 million out of a total of over $1 billion allotted this year are to be spent directly for young Canadians and should provide assistance to 140,000 of them? Job-creation programs such as the CCDP, NEED, Katimavik and Summer Canada were allotted $338 million and will provide employment for 107,000 young people. Including the additional $70 million allotted to Summer Canada, which represent 24,000 jobs, the $18 million allotted to the youth-oriented element of the ACCESS Program, which will provide 9,500 jobs, as well as the $2 million granted to the Department of National Defence, which will provide employment for over 4,000 young people, and the additional $10 million provided to Katimavik, which will help another 1,000 young people, the recent federal budget provides an additional $160 million to create 38,000 more jobs for young Canadians. In view of the present economic conditions, Mr. Speaker, this allocation of funds indicates that the Government recognizes the unemployment problem among young people and is willing to spend a lot of money to alleviate it, since it intends to add $160 million to its existing programs and make a special effort to provide assistance during these difficult times.

I might add that the youth employment strategy proposed by the Canadian Government depends on the cooperation and the participation of the young people themselves, as well as of business, labour, and the Provincial and Federal Governments. Speaking of Provincial Governments, I would like to take this opportunity to deal with the NEED Program as it applies to municipalities in Quebec since the PQ Government has refused to cooperate with the Federal Government. We all know that the PQ Government reversed its decision at a time when we had already received from Quebec over 400 municipal projects which could have provided many jobs for young people. Moreover, last week, in my own region, the Minister of Municipal Affairs announced a subsidy program, and what is more, he made something of an overbidding by saying that the Provincial Government would in any cases spend $50 million, while providing a bit more for winter works, and so on. What he did not say publicly, but revealed privately was that all municipalities with employees subject to recall will have to rehire all of them before being eligible for the subsidy program. In other words, the city of Granby, for instance, which would have received thousands of dollars under the NEED Program if it had been approved for municipalities has 32 employees subject to recall, which means that it would have to rehire these 32 people to be eligible for the provincial subsidy program.

No municipality should consider this as a subsidy because all major cities in Quebec, such as Sherbrooke, Montreal and Quebec, have unionized employees that are subject to recall. This program is therefore nothing but a smokescreen. In my opinion, the Provincial Government is simply seeking wide publicity. However, young people in Granby will not be able to take part in municipal projects because none can be undertaken in the present circumstances.

To come back to youth employment and the Federal programs in this area, I said earlier that the contribution made by the private sector is its most important element. I was therefore glad to see that the NEED Program now provides an opening for the private sector. I would like to give an example of a project which was accepted in my constituency, namely the case of the Ezeflow company which has now decided to upgrade its plant and to relocate. When the NEED program was announced, the owner told me that thanks to the $120,000 grant, he would hire 15 temporary workers for a few weeks, and then he would have to hire 30 permanent workers after moving to the new plant. And if among the 15 employees hired through the NEED Program I find good workers, I will keep them. Consequently, the NEED Program in the private sector may turn out to be a program which will promote the creation of permanent jobs. That is one example among many others which I can now witness in my riding, and I am convinced that everywhere else in the province and throughout the country they have a similar experience. A Member opposite was trying to say earlier that there is too much Government intervention, but all the potential employers whom I met and to whom I mentioned the NEED Program are very anxious to participate in these economic recovery projects, and I am confident indeed that they will create not only temporary jobs for many young Canadians, but permanent jobs as well.

Last week the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) announced that twelve programs will be combined into four. I must admit that I welcome that initiative. Our colleagues opposite may not want to advertise so that people do not get to know our programs, but I for one feel that we do need a bit of publicity and that our programs ought to be as simple as possible to enable Canadians to derive real benefits from them without having to make 32 phone calls, arrange 43 appointments and write letters with umpteen copies. We all know that simplification is the order of the day in a crisis such as we have. Since the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) is in the House, I take this opportunity to commend him for the way he has launched the special projects. He has decided to shorten delays, to do away with bureaucratic red tape, and to get on with the job immediately. In my opinion, the Minister of Employment and Immigration is taking similar action through the NEED Program, the CLE Program, the ACCESS Program and the Summer Job Corps Program. The twelve federal programs will become four generously funded programs which will be easy to administer and which the interested groups will readily understand. That is why when I hear our colleagues opposite claim that indeed they are concerned about the youth unemployment issue, I am tempted to point out to them, particularly to the Progressive Conservatives, that the last time they raised the question of youth problems in the House was during the Tory convention when the young pro-Clark delegates were given expense accounts to come to Ottawa and fill up the galleries. As I recall, Mr. Speaker, that was the only time the Progressive Conservative Members devoted an oral questions period to the problems of young Canadians, the only time in their history, and it was nothing but a real show.

I am sure that even today they pay lip service to the issue without suggesting a solution because, ever since that convention, they have not given a thought to young people and right now they are less concerned about idle youths than they are about 13 or 14 year old youngsters who are still attending school and whom they want to parade on the convention floor. I hope that once and for all they will come to grips with the problems of young people, not only when they have their leadership brawls. That is the only time we see them.

I conclude my remarks by expressing the hope that within the next few weeks or months Members from both sides of the House will get together in parliamentary committees to examine the overall situation of young people in Canada with respect to unemployment and social issues. I hope as well that the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party will select Members who have a little bit of imagination, who will not look upon youngsters as so many more votes at the convention, and who will come up with ideas and solutions. The Government is now working alone, but I would suggest that the problem is so serious that everybody must come to grips with it. Mr. Speaker, I thank you for being so patient and so attentive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais).

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I should like in the first place to congratulate the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) who spoke so eloquently as usual. I also congratulate him for having dealt with the important issue of youth.

My question, Mr. Speaker, concerns a part of his speech in which he dealt with the NEED Program. I was recently in the Lac-Saint-Jean area and I was scandalized when I realized that federal-provincial co-operation was not only non-existent but even negative. He spoke about the PRIME program. I would like him to be more specific because if I remember well the NEED program was intended for the construction of wharves and various recreational facilities, but because of the Quebec regulations, it became impossible to hire people who otherwise would have been unemployed. The provincial regulations required higher wages than those we had expected to pay. As you know, I am a Member from Ontario, Mr. Speaker, and indeed in my province there is a high level of co-operation between the federal and provincial Governments especially with respect to labour-intensive programs. I ask the Hon. Member, especially in the wake of Mr. Parizeau's statements of last week when he recognized the lack of co-operation between the federal and provincial Governments, if he does not expect the removal of those regulations which prevent the NEED program from being successful?

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's question is quite in order, especially since close to 400 Quebec municipalities already have submitted projects under the NEED program. They were kept waiting for three months, and finally the Province in a gesture smacking of false modesty decided to opt out and have its own program. And that program, unfortunately, comes under the responsibility of the Quebec Construction Board. This means that even if we can provide $200 a week for people working on the projects, given the fact that a carpenter earns $21 per hour according to the QBC, we cannot under the NEED program hire a carpenter for $200 a week, which means in actual fact that many projects of significance to the community—there was reference earlier to infrastructures and recreational facilities—cannot go through unfortunately. This is unfortunate, because municipalities often are tremendous builders. They have needs, but lack the financial resources, and clearly they would like to make maximum use of those projects. I will give examples. In my home town, in Grandby township, parks and children's playgrounds should be developed. Unfortunately the Quebec Government has said: "As municipalities, you belong to us; you have no right to deal with the Federal Government".

And there is worse still. Last week the Minister for Municipal Affairs said: "If it so happened that indirectly, through your Recreation Committee, you were to get federal grants, we would deduct from any potential provincial grants the amounts received from the Federal Government. So I do not see much room for agreement, and I feel this is unfortunate. But on the other hand the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has given us the assurance that the $170 million in the budget earmarked for the Province of Quebec would be expended through the private sector, whom I urge to submit projects, as well as community organizations. Unfortunately for the municipalities, they will not benefit from the NEED program, and what with the terms of the provincial program PRIME, if they have a labour union and employees on the waiting list, they will get no help from the Quebec PRIME program. This is unfortunate because there are people who are unemployed, even though there may be unions and employees waiting to be recalled by their municipalities.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the last speaker waxed eloquently about the downside of the present Government in Quebec. I agree that there is a Government there committed to dividing and separating from the rest of the country, yet would he agree that when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) come to power, the Separatists were not in power but came to power in Quebec some eight years later? Would he agree that some of the policies of the national Government made the problems in Quebec worse so that it was easier for the Party Quebecois to be elected after eight years of Liberal Government here?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. As Hon. Members know, questions should relate to the comments of the previous speaker as much as possible. It may have escaped the Speaker's attention that the Hon. Member referred to the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker). Nevertheless, I thought that I should remind the House that there must be a relationship to the remarks made.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, there is indeed a relationship between this question and my remarks, for we were dealing with federal-provincial relations. The Hon. Member has overlooked the fact that there is a difference between federal and provincial politics. The same Quebecers who elected the PQ government in 1976, provided our party with some 60 seats in 1979, and then with 74 seats out of 75 in 1980. Had they been in any way disenchanted with the policies put forward by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I doubt very much that they would have given us such an overwhelming endorsement. On the other hand, the Hon. Member would be well advised to wonder about his own party, a party which finally managed to gain only one seat after nine months in the government. I suggest that the support the Prime Minister is getting from Quebecers is due mostly to his performance as Prime Minister of Canada. On the contrary, provincial politics have a great many connotations and depend to a large extent on circumstances. It is due in part to the lack of understanding demonstrated by some of his colleagues who have projected such a poor image of English Canada—including the leadership candidate who is always speaking against bilingualism; as a matter of fact, I could understand the Quebec people's desire to seek independance and elect a separatist government, if his colleague I have referred to were the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party.

But for the time being, judging from recent pools . . . When Quebecers had the opportunity to vote during a referendum on Quebec's separation from the rest of Canada, they voted no.

Therefore, there is not any relationship, of cause and effect for the Prime Minister's support in Quebec has continually increased since 1968.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) for a very interesting presentation. I have one question to ask him. I would disagree to a certain extent with his observation that the high level of youth unemployment is something that is very new. In my opinion, it is a matter that has simply become very much worse in the last year or so and the problem really goes back several years to the late 1970s.

The response of the Government at that time was to engage in these make-work programs—the alphabet soup programs. The problem was not alleviated and got worse year by year, culminating in what we have seen in the last year and at present. Again the response of the Government has been more of the alphabet soup, make-work programs. It does not seem to be working.

Has the Government Party given any thought to how it can get away from this make-work scheme where the taxpayers' money has to be paid out? It seems that we are on a roller-coaster with no end to it. Has any thought been given to the long-term solution of what appears to be a structural problem of youth unemployment in Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I was quite pleased to hear the comments made by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) because in closing my remarks, I called for the establishment of a special parliamentary committee which would precisely be given the mandate to deal with the problems of young Canadians and which could at the same time review the host of existing programs in this field. I think there is a total of 82 programs which directly or indirectly affect young Canadians and I believe it would be a very valuable exercise to sit down and review all of them, to estimate their value and to verify whether their existence is still justified in today's society. Obviously, this host of programs did not solve the problem, and that is why I would very much welcome the co-operation of the Hon. Member and of the Government. Indeed, I know all Hon. Members share my concern in these problems, but we must examine the whole matter of young Canadians' opportunities for the future. I know the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration is studying this question within his mandate, but it seems to me that the social aspect of this matter should be the responsibility of all Members of Parliament, and I would hope that we can count on the co-operation of all Members. Of course, even the implementation of some 52 new programs would not necessarily solve the fundamental problem, but I think at this point we can count on the co-operation of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, and I hope other Members will join us in calling for such a committee. In this way, the problems of the young would be drawn to our attention and we would be forced to think about them in a global way, to re-examine all budgetary items allocated within various programs which are—

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this New Democratic Party Opposition Day to join with Members of the NDP in condemning the Government on behalf of the youth of this country. You will note that the NDP has framed its motion to restrict criticism to condemning the tragic implications of the monetarist policies adopted by the Liberal Government. You will note from my comments, Mr. Speaker, that I will go well beyond restricting criticism to the monetarist policies. In fact, I will condemn the economic, social and fiscal policies of this Government.

I agree the Government has clearly botched the governing of this country. Let us look at the basics. Canada has a small population and we have tremendous resources over which, by the grace of God, we have stewardship. One must then look at the way in which the Government over the last 15 years has botched its stewardship of governing. It has not put in place policies which ensure that our small populace have work and satisfying careers.

I agree with the NDP that the Government has clearly botched its job. The Government has lost touch with reality. It has lost touch with the economic reality of Canada in global terms. It has so concentrated its efforts on internal conflicts, whether with the Government of Quebec, the Government of Alberta, or within the social classes of our country, and on its view of centralizing power, that the Government has forgotten that the primary role we have in this House is to deal with international affairs. If it were not for the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party allocating Opposition Days to discuss international affairs, the subject would never be discussed. Yet if you look at our Constitution, our prime responsibility is to deal with international affairs, international trade and defence matters. We never talk about them.

If we were to concentrate on what Canada should be doing in the world, this small population of 24 million people should be working flat out. No doubt people all over the world need our resources. They need to have the benefit of our many many generations of political stability, economic development and general maturity. Canada should be providing capital to the world. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the capital which 24 million Japanese would generate from the resources we have? Can you imagine the capital that 24 million Germans would generate? Canada would then be a source of wealth to the world. But instead, what are we doing? We are begging on our knees for money from Germany, Japan the the United States. By having to borrow that money we are competing against Third World countries, which in turn drives up interest rates. We are hurting that Third World countries far more than we need to. It is the same with energy. We are competing with Third World countries for energy. Canada should be a source of energy.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) gets a lot of praise in some branches of the media for his high international reputation. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the people to whom I talk internationally do not think our Prime Minister has done a good job; nor do they think that Canada is pulling its weight in the world in terms of defence, in terms of international energy or in terms of international capital flows. Canada has vast resources. We should not be out competing in the world; we should be providing skills to the world, not taking them away.

My point of departure with the NDP motion is that it puts total blame on the Government's abuse of monetary policy. I believe the Government has abused not only monetary policy but social policy, fiscal policy and economic policy. When a Government year after year after year piles on deficits, which is just another way of saying that the Government offers programs to people without a corresponding tax to pay for them, it defers payment to another generation. It is a mortgage on the future. When a Government does that year after year after year, it leads directly to inflation, which we have had; it leads directly to high interest rates, which we have had; and high interest rates lead directly to loss of jobs and bankruptcies, which we have had. Then we have an enormous period of adjustment that is so difficult. The Government has thus violated social policy.

Let me talk about those people who have retired. During all of those years they worked faithfully at their careers and put a little money aside for their pension. But when they were faced with 20 per cent inflation, the value of their pension dropped to half within four or five years. Therefore all our seniors are upset. Those same deficits led to people taking money out of the country rather than investing it here. That procedure has affected our youth because there is a direct correlation between investment of the capital of the nation and jobs. Resources do not mean anything if they are not used.

Let me cite one example. For hundreds of thousands of years, coal lay under the great western plains unused. The native people at the time had a different culture. They walked over it. They had social taboos against using the coal that stuck out of the banks in my own City of Lethbridge, Alberta. It was only when that resource was developed and used that it became wealth, which was redistributed to all parts of our society and generally raised our well-being.

Forests are worth nothing if the trees are left standing. The forests are of value only when the lumber is used. If I take a tree and cut it up, I can sell the lumber somewhere within or outside the country to build furniture, to build houses or factories. If I, as an individual, find oil, I realize that I can build a refinery and turn the oil into propane, butane, gasoline, kerosene and asphalt. But only by people having ideas and acting upon them does oil or other resource take on value.

Peter Pond found the Alberta tar sands 200 or 300 years ago. Yet the Alberta tar sands were nothing until a company, a collection of individuals, decided to put up a syncrude plant, process the oil by running it through hot water, skimming the oil off the top and then selling it. Only then did that resource take on value and increase our standard of living.

The Government, having driven away all that capital, has taken away jobs. This affects our youth and is why we have youth unemployment of 24 per cent.

All of these ad hoc programs that just keep people occupied for a few weeks at most do not direct themselves to the underlying problem, which is real jobs, not ad hoc jobs. Interestingly enough, the poor parts of the country become poorer and poorer under these ad hoc programs. Let us have a unified effort and develop this country, because the resources are here.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT QUEBEC REDUCE TAX ON GASOLINE

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, on November 7, 1981, the Quebec Minister of Finance introduced the 40 per cent escalator tax on gas in Quebec. In his speech at the time, the Minister said that the increase was necessary and temporary, and would be in effect until March 31, 1983. The tax is still in effect, however, although we are now past that date. Last weekend, the same Minister announced that the escalator tax is here to stay, and there is every reason to maintain this particular tax.

Madam Speaker, I feel the tax is having the worst possible impact on Quebecers. If we consider that Quebec is getting more than $1 billion in revenue from this tax and that agro-food-related activities represent 20 per cent of economic activity in Quebec, it means that there is a difference of $200 million between Quebec and Western Canada where gas taxes are low or altogether non-existent. This puts Quebec at a veritable disadvantage in the agro-food industry, and members of the Coalition for the Survival of the Agro-food Business should raise this point with the Government of Quebec. The same applies to tourism. Our American neighbours and Canadians from other provinces have every reason to avoid Quebec, considering the fact that a full tank of gas costs $10 more in Quebec than in Saskatchewan. I would therefore ask the Quebec Minister of Finance to make a substantial reduction and bring the tax back to its original rate of less than 20 per cent. If he does not, I hope the Canadian Government will once more come to the rescue of Quebecers.

PROVISION AFFECTING PART-TIME FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, on March 29, 1983, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) if he would at the very least increase the allowable deduction for part-time farmers under Section 31 of the Income Tax Act from $5,000 to $20,000 to reflect the general rate of inflation since 1952. Arbitrary interpretation of Section 31, by Revenue Canada auditors with little or no agricultural expertise, has financially crippled many farmers and ranchers to the point that they are now faced with bankruptcy. The Minister indicated that he would give the matter serious consideration and that he would consider the question as a suggestion for the budget.

The budget has come and gone and, judging from the lack of action on Section 31, the Minister did not give the matter his attention. In fact the Minister of Finance gave so little consideration to the agricultural sector that, according to an April 25 report in The Globe and Mail, several Liberal backbenchers have complained to the Minister.

The Minister of Finance should immediately introduce measures to increase the deductions allowable under Section 31 to reflect the fourfold increase in costs since this tax measure was first introduced some 31 years ago. In addition, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) should introduce a moratorium on farm audits until this measure has been implemented and, furthermore, limit back taxes already assessed to the current year.

The Minister of Finance introduced a $200 million budget change to save his job. Surely he can introduce simple measures which would correct the obvious inequities and ambiguities in Section 31, amendments which would provide incentive and assistance to farmers rather than the present harassment and destruction.

HEALTH CARE

CONSTRUCTION OF NURSING HOME WITHIN RESIDENCE FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, at a recent official opening of a nursing home for senior citizens in the Hamilton region, I was most favourably impressed with an innovation whereby a 32-bed nursing home was constructed within a 110-unit senior citizens residence. This was a very progressive step in which the continued need for nursing beds for senior citizens was met.

The details of the financing of this project were under the supervision of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, but it required a co-operative effort between the federal Government and Ontario provincial authorities to overcome the regulatory restrictions to make the project feasible.

The principal advantage of integrating a nursing home with a senior citizens residence is the reunification of elderly couples, one of whom requires nursing care, and the other, residential facilities. It also brings together medical and paramedical personnel available for the care of senior citizens in both wings of the building project.

My concern is the bureaucratic nightmare that presents itself to non-profit organizations in many areas of the country where similar projects are needed and could replace separate nursing homes and senior residences which currently preclude companionship and closeness of aging couples. Hopefully the results achieved at the Heritage Green senior citizens residence and nursing home in Stoney Creek, Ontario, which combines these two types of facilities, can be duplicated in other parts of the country through federal-provincial co-operation.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED UNITED STATES RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORTATION OF CANADIAN SCALLOPS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, the Canadian scallop fishing industry is in deep trouble. At the present time the count for scallops exported from Canada to the United States is 40 meats to the pound. On this basis the scallop fishery alone was worth $88 million last year to Canada. About 75 per cent of the 15,000 metric tonnes of scallops caught off the Atlantic Coast last year was exported to our friends south of the border. This market will be devastated if the United States follows through with its proposals to limit scallop imports to 30 meats to the pound on May 15.

The Americans have stated that the proposal to restrict scallop imports to the larger size is being implemented as a conservation measure. Yet when Canadians some three or four years ago requested the American scallop fishing industry to cut down on the number of pounds landed per trip from Georges Bank, they not only continued to overfish the Bank but the American fleet has more than doubled in size.

If the proposal to limit imports of scallops from Canada to 30 meats per pound is implemented by the United States, it will mean that Canada will no longer have a viable scallop fishery. I submit that the American proposal is a non-tariff barrier to trade. This is a fundamental basic resource industry, and I urge the Government to take this matter up with the Americans at the highest possible level.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

POSSIBLE TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE—CALL FOR PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) keeps suggesting that people in the thousands, including Members of this Party, who want a freeze on nuclear weapons testing, development and deployment, followed by massive reductions, want it to be on one side only. Of course this is not true. They want it on both sides and they want it to include SS-20s whether in eastern Europe or on the Chinese border.

The Prime Minister would know this if he attended any of the marches and rallies which have taken place or if indeed he listened to the people; or he could read anything I or others have said on the subject as reported in the proceedings of the Standing Committee, on radio, and on television. He would also discover that the United States Cruise missile is seen as particularly destabilizing, above all with the proposed stealth technology, because of its unverifiability. If we cannot verify the numbers and location of a weapon, we cannot have arms reduction. To test it, therefore, is a grave escalation of the nuclear arms race and an invitation to the Soviets to try to catch up with the newest United States technology.

The education of the Prime Minister would be immeasurably advanced if he would allow debate in the House, giving up a Government day for this purpose, and if he attended and participated in this debate and allowed a free vote to follow.

HOUSING

RRAP PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT CHMC EXPEDITE PROCESSING OF REQUESTS FROM DESIGNATED MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) brought down his budget on April 19, he mentioned the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, also known as RRAP. In fact, an additional $40 million has been allocated to this program, that is, $10 million for 1983-84 and $30 million for the year after. Before the budget, $155 million had been earmarked for 1983-84.

The purpose of my statement is to ask the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in view of the additional funding it has been granted, to examine forthwith applications by various municipalities who wish to be designated under the rural RRAP program although they are considered urban because they have a population of over 2,500. Many municipalities and towns in my riding have applied under this program. There are a number of points that must be discussed and negotiated, with the Provincial Government as well. However, with this additional funding, perhaps the Minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation could recommend to his officials that municipalities with a population of more than 2,500 be admitted to the program, considering the funds granted in the Budget, and I am sure that many Canadians and Quebecers would be very pleased to see this happen in the context of the urban RRAP program.

INDUSTRY

DEFENCE INDUSTRY—PARTICIPATION IN UNITED STATES MILITARY PRODUCTION

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, last week it was revealed that the Pentagon is planning to exclude Canada from access to U.S. defence industry development programs partially because Canada has been taking a free ride at U.S. expense, and, more significantly, because they feel our participation would result in the leakage of American secrets to the Soviet Union. The Government's refusal to prosecute Hugh Hambleton and the recent revelations concerning Long Knife, an ex-RCMP officer's betrayal of a Soviet source, serve to reinforce this opinion.

Canada's defence industry is not capable of survival without sharing U.S. research, development, design components and machine tools. Therefore it is time the present Government faced the reality that its leanings toward socialist friends while not protecting our own national security will result in severe limitations on Canada's historical participation in American military production, and no doubt could cause problems with the $3 billion Canadian offset package negotiated as part of Canada's $5 billion purchase of the McDonnell Douglas F-18, particularly if limits are placed on U.S. industrial offset agreements as per the monitoring Bill H.R. 2057 which is before Congress again this year. The close relations with our largest trading partner, neighbour and protector, must not be jeopardized by irresponsible Government policies, particularly from here onward.

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR ABANDONMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, in January of 1983, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops called upon the Government to introduce an option which called for economic policies which recognized that the needs of the poor have priority over the want of the rich. As the Bishops pointed out, working people, the unemployed, young people, and those on fixed incomes, are increasingly called upon to make sacrifices for the sake of the economy at the same time as tax changes favour the wealthy at the expense of the poor.

Since its re-election in 1980 the Liberal Government, in three successive budgets, has heightened these inequalities at the same time as it has called on all Canadians to accept sacrifice as the price of recovery.

We have discovered that Canadian Pacific and Canadian National have increased executive salaries up to 35.5 per cent, and averaging 20.7 per cent, at the same time as the federal Government has introduced six and five legislation for the workers at CP and CN.

In the spirit of sharing the burden of the recovery, this Party calls upon the Government to abandon its survival of the fittest theory which is used to rationalize the programs of the Government, and calls upon the Government to be concerned about the poor, the unemployed, the pensioners, those who are making the real sacrifices in Canada.

DEMAND THAT TAX ON FARM FUELS BE REDUCED

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, last Tuesday's budget was a very disappointing budget for farmers. Less than 1¼ per cent of the total budget goes toward agriculture, the major backbone of the country, at a time when farmers are faced with high rising costs of production and falling world prices for agricultural products sold.

I and my colleagues have called again and again in this House for the cutting back of the very high federal tax on farm fuels, a tax that is over 60 cents per gallon at this time when world prices are falling. This was obviously rejected in the budget.

In addition, there seems to be no positive direction for agriculture put forward by the Minister of Finance. It is obvious that the Minister of Agriculture has no clout in the Cabinet and has had absolutely no impact on the Minister of Finance and the Liberal Government in regard to the welfare of farmers and agriculture.

SPECIAL RECOVERY PROGRAM

ORDER FOR WATER BOMBERS MANUFACTURED BY CANADAIR

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my first question is directed to the Minister responsible for Economic Development who announced the Government's Special Recovery Program yesterday. He announced that Ottawa will commission up to 20 Canadair CL 215 water bombers on a shared cost program with the Provinces as part of the Special Recovery Program. Will the Minister confirm that this plane has been around since 1968, that it uses a World War II model engine, and that the other Provinces and other potential customers have rejected it in the past because its cost per flying hour is ten times as high as other planes? Is this the Minister's long awaited high tech policy?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the aircraft is, of course, of a 1967 design. It has been utilized very widely, not only in Canada but internationally, including China, France, and North Africa. It has been utilized with the engines that are now in the aircraft because of the specific use that is made of the aircraft.

The piston engines that are used in the CL 215 are desirable because of the necessity for the aircraft to accelerate at a very rapid rate in the environment within which the aircraft operates. If the hon. lady will recall, it flies in and scoops water out of lakes in order to dump it on forest fires. You cannot do that with a jet aircraft, Madam Speaker.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, I should point out that I had been flying in water bombers long before I ever came to Parliament. Ten times the cost per flying hour of a competitive aircraft is about par for the course for the Government.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

INCREASE IN DUTY-FREE EXEMPTION FOR RETURNING RESIDENTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I address my second question to the Prime Minister who said that his Government could not leave more money in the hands of consumers because they cannot be trusted to buy Canadian goods and would spend it on imports and trips abroad. We can only assume that the Prime Minister ignores the value added to the economy by Canadian-owned foreign car dealers and import companies.

If the Government has such a low opinion of the spending habits of Canadians, why did it increase the duty-free exemption by 100 per cent, a measure which encourages spending abroad and leads to the export of jobs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not know why the hon. lady deliberately misquoted me. I never used the words, "the consumer cannot be trusted". I enunciated the very simple economic proposition that I am sure that the Hon. Member would agree with, that when you stimulate consumer spending directly, some of that consumer spending leaks out of the country to purchase goods made in other countries. That is all I said.

Miss Carney: I should point out that the Prime Minister still did not answer the question.

FINANCE

FORECAST SIZE OF GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I direct my third question to the Prime Minister. Tomorrow the Conference Board of Canada will publish a forecast claiming that the Finance Minister is overstating his budget deficit by several billion dollars for 1983 and 1984, mainly because the projections for transfer payments seem too high. Transfer payments to persons will increase 14 per cent next year, although the two major programs, old age pensions and Family Allowances, are capped at 5 per cent.

Has the Government inflated the budget deficit, thereby putting pressure on interest rates, in order to provide the Liberals with an election slush fund for next year? If the Government can increase transfer payments in an election year, why can it not do so now when two million unemployed Canadians need the money?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking me to answer a question based on a publication of the Conference Board which is to come out tomorrow. I have not seen it, obviously; I have not had that privileged access. I would be happy to comment on it when it comes out, but I do see that the U.S. Conference Board announces today from New York, in a Canadian Press report, that an economic recovery is accelerating in Canada and it brings out several indices which show that that is the case.

Madam Speaker, in so far as creating jobs is concerned, I remind the Hon. Member that the Special Recovery Fund in the budget was divided into two parts. One was to have capital projects which would start immediately within six months, so-called shelved items or shelf items, which Departments could move forward and which would improve the Canadian infrastructure all across the land. We had some announcements yesterday of water bombers and, I believe, search and rescue facilities and Coast Guard ships. That creates jobs now. These jobs will start within six months, but the money will be spent now and it will be in the hands of workers and consumers to spend.

The other half of the Special Recovery Fund, the other $2.4 billion, is in terms of improving the private sector. This will create jobs, but not immediately. They have cash flow problems and an over capacity right now. The budget is bringing in some $2.4 billion worth of measures, substantially in the form of tax measures, which will permit the private sector to create jobs and to boost the economy.

That is the approach of the budget, to create jobs now through Government spending, and to create jobs in the middle term through private sector spending.

ENERGY

SHUT-IN OIL PRODUCTION

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As he knows, during April over 200,000 barrels per day of Canadian crude oil production is shut in. This shut-in problem has been in existence for months and months and is costing the Canadian economy hundreds of millions of dollars and thousands of jobs. Does he not agree that is absurd that Canadians should be losing this money and be denied the resulting jobs while we continue to import the equivalent amount of oil and to tax consumers to subsidize these imports? Would the Minister not agree that the problem must be solved, and will he tell the House when he will bring about the solution?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am well aware of the problem and I have discussed it many times with my counterpart in Alberta. We have discussed solutions. Of course, we cannot ship Alberta oil everywhere in Canada at this time.

One solution is to permit the export of light crude abroad. The NEB has said that if it were to receive applications it would consider them favourably. In fact I read in the paper, and I knew about it, that there are shipments of oil products going to Japan at this time. It is something new that we permit the export of oil products to that part of the world. For years we did not permit the export of light crude. At this time, however, the NEB is not receiving many applications from producers because the price is very soft in the United States. There is no demand at this time. Anyone who believes in the market economy knows that when there is no demand there is a shut-in problem.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT FACILITATE OIL EXPORTS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows full well that much more of the shut-in western crude could go to eastern Canada. Is he also aware that the reason the shut-in crude is not being sold offshore in the United States is because of the rigidity of Canadian prices, the rigidity of the export tax on crude oil, and National Energy Board red tape? He must realize that curing the shut-in problem will, in just two months, produce more benefits in terms of income and jobs to the Canadian economy than the entire Special Recovery Capital Projects Fund. If he wants to do something for the unemployed and for the terrible state of Canadian industry, looking after this problem would do more than all the flim-flam introduced in the budget.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is speaking very loudly. I have had many discussions with Mr. Zaozirny, the Minister in Alberta. He knows, for example, that the question of price is very important for them, just as it is for us. I do not think that the Hon. Member would ask us to sell Canadian oil to foreign markets at a lower price than the price Canadians have to pay for it.

We are looking at all these problems. Basically, if there is shut-in oil it is because there has been a great reduction in the demands in Canada for oil. Some of the oil coming into the East is subject to contracts that we have to respect. I do not think that the Hon. Member would ask me not to respect the contracts we have with some foreign nations.

DISARMAMENT

GENEVA NEGOTIATIONS—PROPOSAL TO REDUCE NUMBER OF NUCLEAR WARHEADS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. A few weeks ago the Prime Minister suggested that alternative proposals were necessary in order to break the deadlock in nuclear disarmament negotiations taking place in Geneva. George F. Kennan, a former ambassador of the United States to the Soviet Union, made one such proposal. He suggested that each of the nuclear powers accept an immediate reduction of some 50 per cent of nuclear warheads.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he agrees with the suggestion made by Mr. Kennan and, if so, when he meets with President Reagan in the near future would he present this constructive suggestion to him for his consideration and acceptance.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have not seen the Kennan proposal but I would imagine it has been brought to the attention of the President of the United States. Certainly if it is a good proposal I imagine it will become part of the panoply of negotiating possibilities in which the two great powers are involved.

As far as the earlier part of the question is concerned, the Hon. Member said that I suggested we should look at alternatives. I would point out to him that very recently, following the visit of Vice-President Bush to Canada, to European capitals and NATO countries, there has been a change in the U.S. policy in the intermediate-range nuclear force. The United States has departed from the zero option and has proposed a compromise which would lead to a reduction of the number of SS-20s which the Soviet Union is deploying against western Europe. It seems to me that is a step in the right direction. It is certainly a different negotiating posture than the zero option. I believe it corresponds to the will expressed by many NATO members. I would hope that the U.S.S.R. would indicate a positive response to that.

I would also hope that the pressure of many of the peace groups in Canada and elsewhere would turn at least in part to the Soviet Union so that they would show more flexibility.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, to keep this discussion at a serious level, I should like to say something to the Prime Minister on that point because I read what he said in the House yesterday.

For a long time my Party has made it clear that it has been opposed to the deployment of the SS-20 by the Soviet Union. I was speaking in Toronto yesterday and made that very clear. My external affairs critic has made it very clear on television and in a Committee of this House. I point that out to clarify the record so that the Prime Minister understands.

This is a two-way street, and we understand it. The two great powers, the Soviet Union and the United States, have obligations in this immensely important area.

The Prime Minister has indicated that there has been some shift on the part of the United States, and that is true. There has been another and related area of concern as the Prime Minister knows, about what nuclear weapons are to be included. The former head of arms negotiations for President Carter has made a suggestion which meshes with the shift made by President Reagan that, in future talks, the nuclear capacity of France—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member should come to his question.

Mr. Broadbent: I shall come right to the question, Madam Speaker.

SIZE OF INDEPENDENT EUROPEAN NUCLEAR FORCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Considering that it has been suggested that the nuclear strength and capacity in terms of weaponry of both the United Kingdom and France be included in the balancing of the nuclear totals in Europe, will the Prime Minister agree with this? If he agrees that their strength should be taken into account and added to the western equation, if you like, will he pass that suggestion on to the President of the United States, with his support?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asks several questions. He began by making one point about both great powers. I am happy that the NDP, perhaps having listened to my enjoinders to them, decided to protest last night in Toronto against the SS-20s. It is about time they did that.

Insofar as the French force de frappe and the British nuclear force are concerned, I would point out to the Hon. Member that the suggestion made by someone unnamed by the Hon. Member—

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Warnke.

Mr. Trudeau: If it was Warnke, that suggestion is probably addressed to the President of the United States. The Leader of the New Democratic Party will know that the answer to that suggestion has already been given by the President of France and by the Prime Minister of Great Britain.

The Hon. Member asked me to talk to the President of the United States. I would answer that it is not the President of the United States who controls the French force de frappe. It is President Mitterrand, of the same Party as the New Democrats, and I would hope that the NDP would be able to get President Mitterrand to answer its question.

• (1430)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I see the Prime Minister has returned to his usual lofty level of debate. I say to him that we have been on record on the SS-20 for a long, long time, well before he opened his mouth on the issue, I might add. Just for once would the Prime Minister show a smidgen of respect for the truth, just a wee bit? I willingly say to the Prime Minister that we disagree with the President of France on his policy in terms of—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —the inclusion of nuclear weapons, and we would like—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, will the Prime Minister for once show some initiative on his part, instead of just responding to what France is doing or what President Reagan is or is not doing? Will he stand front and centre and tell the people of Canada what his proposals are for bringing about nuclear disarmament?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have done that repeatedly. I did that at the two special sessions of the United Nations on disarmament. I did that in a speech at Notre Dame University. I did that just a couple of weeks ago in a toast on the occasion of the visit of Vice-President Bush. I have stated the position many times of this Government. I wish the Hon. Member would look at that and, rather than talk about his long record of participation, take it up with his own friends.

Once again, he asks me to take initiatives rather than to put pressure on others, and in the same breath and same Question Period, he asks me to put pressure on President Reagan. That is fair. I did that when I made a public speech a couple of weeks ago to Mr. Bush. I did that in private meetings with Vice-President Bush. I have not heard of the Hon. Member meeting with his socialist friends of France and making any great hullabaloo about the French force de frappe. Why does he not start there?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REMUNERATION OF PRESIDENT AND SENIOR EXECUTIVES

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It comes right back to earth, and we do not have to cruise around at all. The Minister could not give me any information on Friday, Madam Speaker, when I asked about the Chairman of Air Canada and RCMP investigations into activities of Air Canada and/or the Chairman. I would like to ask the Minister of Transport very directly today, Madam Speaker, about the Canadian National and the reports out of Washington that Canadian National high officials received a 20 per cent increase in pay this past year, and that the salary of the President, Mr. Le Clair, is $213,000, up from $151,000 a year ago?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the truth of the matter is that the salaries for high officers at CN have been frozen since January, 1981. What has happened is that, following the departure of Mr. Bandeen and others, there have been promotions, normal ones, at the top. Mr. Le Clair, who was a Vice-President, has become President. That is the explanation for his increase.

JUSTIFICATION FOR SIZE OF REMUNERATION

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, perhaps I will leave the President alone. He will appear before the Transport Committee, I believe, this week, perhaps with the Chairman also. The fact of the matter is, however, there is a report filed with the Securities Exchange Commission in the United States giving public information to the Americans on Canadian officials, which Canadians cannot get in Canada, showing that the remuneration for top officials in CN is now at an average of $92,000, up some 20 per cent since last year.

What is the justification for a 20 per cent increase for the top officials of CN, a Crown Corporation under the direction of the Minister, when the employees in the yard and along the tracks, be it fast track or greasy track, have settled contracts of six and five per cent under the law of the land? Does the Minister not think this represents moral deceit and decay of a Government which has to be corrected forthwith?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat what I have said, which is that the salaries at CN have been frozen since January, 1981. The salaries which are referred to which have been increased have to do with 1982 over 1981, which is not the period of the six and five application. The explanation I have given, I thought was a very good one, that when you have the President, his salary is consequently adjusted because of the promotion he receives. If you have a good number of people leaving at one time in the organization, you have, of course, a more general effect. The salaries of officers at CN have to be compared with the salaries of other leading administrators in the private sector of business, because CN is supposed to behave as a quasi commercial institution, which it is.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

INCREASE IN CHAIRMAN'S EMOLUMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister who engaged the services of Mr. Ian Sinclair, the Chairman of the Board of Canadian Pacific, to oversee this great six and five program. Has the Prime Minister discussed the increase of some 35 per cent given to the President of CPR, and has he asked Mr. Sinclair whether or not it is his philosophy, as part of this advisory board, to "Do as I say, not as I do"?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, this is the first I have heard of this whole matter. I was listening attentively to the answers given by the Minister of Transport. It seems to me that, in so far as CN is concerned, he gave perfectly valid answers, that the increases were before the six and five program, on one hand, and there was a promotion of a Vice-President to the job of President, on the other. He presumably received the salary which the President was receiving. I do not know about the—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What about the other "choo-choo"?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not know about the other "choo-choo", to quote the Hon. Member. Perhaps he will put the question either to the Minister of Transport or to Mr. Sinclair himself.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

PLIGHT OF FARMERS LOCKED INTO HIGH INTEREST RATE LOANS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister will know by now, I believe, of the very great disappointment felt by Canadian farmers following their almost total neglect in the latest Liberal budget. Is the Minister aware, first of all, of a very specific problem which was not dealt with in the budget which has to do with those farmers who are locked into loans from the Farm Credit Corporation at 16 3/4 per cent, and have not, in any way, been given an opportunity to refinance? And does the Minister in fact have a plan to deal with that situation? Did he make representations to the Minister of Finance on behalf on this group of Canadian farmers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, that does not have to be done within the budget, and the Hon. Member knows that. We have had discussions with the Board of Directors of the Farm Credit Corporation regarding this situation. We believe we can come up with a plan which will help those who are paying those fixed rates of 16.5 per cent—I believe that was the highest that we went. At that time it appeared to be a very good deal because it was about 5 per cent to 7 per cent cheaper than they could get anywhere else. We know that this rate is high. We believe we can come up with a solution within a month which will alleviate that problem with which those borrowers are confronted.

INCOME TAX

AUDITING OF FARMERS' INCOME—REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. It is with respect to Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. It was a great disappointment to the agricultural community in Canada, as well as to some of the Minister's own backbenchers, that this problem was not addressed. Many farmers across the country who have been faced with tough economic conditions over the last several years are now being audited by insensitive auditors of the Department of National Revenue who have little or no agricultural experience. Farmers are being shifted from one class to another and being assessed as much as four years in back taxes, plus interest. Because of the ambiguity of this Section of the Act, until it is amended, will the Minister agree to call a moratorium on tax audits done under provisions of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, first it must be recalled that Section 31 of the Income Tax Act is one of a series of sections aimed at establishing the losses which may be deducted from the income so as to figure out an individual's taxable income. Section 31, which is outlined in an Interpretation Bulletin issued by the Income Tax Division of Revenue Canada, relates particularly to agricultural producers and, to be eligible with respect to losses such as those provided for under the Income Tax Act, one must first be recognized as an agricultural producer. No one is so recognized unless he or she runs an agricultural operation which generates enough income to be eligible. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he examine each case submitted to him so as to make a distinction between a person who owns land and claims to be an agricultural producer, when in fact he or she is not, and who simply wants to deduct other income from other sources, which enables him or her to earn a living, and to deduct the losses incurred because of that property.

• (1440)

REQUEST FOR LIMITATION ON ASSESSMENT OF BACK TAXES

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, clearly the Minister does not really understand the problem or the gravity of the situation. There are many, many farmers who are literally facing bankruptcy because of this auditing process going on right now across the country. As I pointed out in my previous question, many of them are being assessed up to four years back taxes. In 1972, when this problem came up, the then Minister of Revenue allowed people to be assessed back taxes only for the current year. Would the Minister agree to that, to assess back taxes only for the current year if people are going to be reassessed under Section 31?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I challenge the Hon. Member to show me cases of farmers who really run an agricultural operation, who get their income from farms which generate revenues, and who are having problems because of Section 31. I challenge him to show me such cases, for I would be quite prepared to examine them closely. However, I want to point out to him that I make a distinction between an individual who earns an income from an operation other than a farm, but who owns a farm or a piece of land which he works as a hobby or as a second or third occupation during this leisure time and who wants to deduct his expenses incurred in that activity from his income earned from another source. To my mind, that is a very significant distinction to make and I would not call that individual a farmer.

INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF CONSOLIDATED BATHURST PLANT IN HAMILTON

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Consolidated Bathurst Company closed its plant in Hamilton today. Many of the workers who have worked there for over 20 years made an offer to Consolidated in Montreal to purchase the plant and equipment. The offer was turned down because the Company did not want the competition.

Given that this is not an isolated incident across the country, that many companies are doing similar things, is it not time that we had legislation to require major corporations to justify their actions which disrupt the lives of many families and many communities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not happen to be informed on this particular case, but I do know that there is a very general policy, one that is widely respected, of asking the private sector, when it is proposing to close down plants, to consult both levels of Government and that steps be taken in order to try to find solutions to the problems of the people who will be unemployed as a result. The Hon. Member is proposing a legal change which, at first blush, would seem to me to be within the clear jurisdiction of the Provinces. Obviously Consolidated Bathurst is a company operating within a Province, under provincial laws, and it is provincial labour laws which apply there. It is provincial laws which apply to the general operation of that company. Therefore it might be more useful if the suggestion were made to the provincial Premiers in various Provinces to consider that type of reform.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION AUTHORIZING INQUIRIES INTO PLANT CLOSURES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the advice. Given that I cannot do that, and given that the Consolidated Bathurst head office is in Montreal and they intend to put an additional shift on there which will replace the work done by the workers in Hamilton, and given that this happens in one Province after another across the country, is it not reasonable to think that we might require some federal legislation which would cover all the Provinces and would enable the federal Government to inquire into the reasons behind the closures taking place, to determine whether or not there are in fact justifiable economic reasons or whether it is simply another rationalization to improve profits at the expense of the workers and their families?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, once again I cannot deal with the substance of the suggestion since I have not looked into the presumably valid financial reasons why Consolidated Bathurst is doing this. But I reiterate to the Hon. Member the point that it is not because a problem exists in many Provinces that it suddenly becomes a matter under federal jurisdiction. Education, for instance, is a matter dealt with by all Provinces but it does not, because of that, become a matter under which—

Mr. Deans: They do not close a school in Ontario from a Quebec base.

Mr. Trudeau: —under which we can pass laws. So I ask the Hon. Member to reflect on the Constitution of this country and see if I am not right in suggesting that that problem is one for the Provinces. The Hon. Member says he cannot talk to the Provinces. He probably can talk to the Premier of Manitoba; would he pass such a law, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Deans: What the hell good is that? It is happening in Quebec and Ontario.

MINISTER'S POSITION ON BUDGET

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture who will recall that, two or three days prior to the budget, I asked the Minister whether or not he had made representations on behalf of the industry to his colleague, the Minister of Finance. We have had the budget now for seven days, the Minister has had an opportunity to assess its impact or lack of impact on the agricultural industry. Therefore, does the Minister stand by some comments and concerns expressed publicly by his Liberal backbench colleagues, or does he stand by the budget of his cabinet colleague, the Minister of Finance, and turn his back on the industry which he has represented in Cabinet for nearly 11 years?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I have just seen a publication called the "Conservative Agriculture Policy for Canada", published in some eastern newspapers. One of the things that document asks for, and the Minister of Finance put it in his budget, was $100 million extra for farmers who needed extra compensation because of the dire economic straits in which they found themselves. The Hon. Member did not say the Minister of Finance did what his Party requested. There are many other things in the budget for business people. Farmers have the same right to participate in those programs as do the business people.

I have studied the budget. There is not everything in there that I would have liked to have seen, but there is a lot in there for farmers. I have not seen the press article the Hon. Member is referring to when he says my colleagues have made some comment. I am not aware of that, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Wise: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the Minister has read the ten point agricultural program put out by the Conservative Party. I recognize the fact that the Government has accepted point number one, and it would do well to accept the remaining nine.

INFLUENCE EXERCISED BY MINISTER ON BUDGET PREPARATION

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question directly. I ask if he was pleased with the fact that the agri-bond concept was omitted? Was he pleased with the omission of any reduction in the farm fuel tax and assistance for greenhouse operators, who are particularly heavily concentrated in his own riding and in mine? Was he also pleased that indeed the Minister of National Revenue had no more influence on the Minister of Finance than he himself did with respect to bringing about any changes in Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, and the problems with it that have been caused by the Government?

• (1450)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that maybe the amendment to Section 31 was not there, but the very fact that they can write off their losses back three years and ahead ten years gives them practically the same privilege they were asking for in the amendment of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act.

An Hon. Member: No, it does not.

Mr. Whelan: Yes, it does. It gives them that, maybe not exactly, but practically gives them all they want.

If everyone got everything they wanted in the budget, the Minister of Finance, who talked for nearly two hours in the House the other night, would have talked for four hours. I did not get everything I wanted. You stay in the big leagues if you bat fifty-fifty.

PUBLIC WORKS

APPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM TO LA SOCIÉTÉ IMMOBILIÈRE DU CANADA

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. Somebody mentioned earlier that some Crown corporations will not comply with the 6 and 5 program. Can the Minister tell us whether it is true that la Société immobilière du Canada (Mirabel) Ltée was recently exempted from the provisions of the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I shall check, but I would be very surprised if that were true. In fact, as the Hon. Member already knows, in the case of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, because a mistake had been made and the ruling had not been submitted to the Treasury Board Committee as it should have been, the ruling was reversed and the necessary adjustments were made to conform to the 6 and 5 program.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have here a copy of an order from the Clerk of the Privy Council which states the following:

> His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the President of the Treasury Board, pursuant to section 16 of the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act, is pleased hereby to terminate the application of the said Act in respect of the employees of the corporation ... in clerical, technical, professional and middle management positions.

Under these circumstances, will the Minister make this ruling public as soon as possible and will he tell us how many employees are involved and why this corporation should be exempted from the Government restraint program?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, if I heard the Hon. Member correctly, he mentioned the President of the Treasury Board. I shall therefore consult my colleague and try to answer this question tomorrow.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

MORTGAGE PORTFOLIO MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Minister in charge of Central Mortgage and Housing a question which is further to the one I asked him on March 16. It concerns the efficiency, total cost, and satisfactory performance or otherwise of the mortgage portfolio management system of CMHC. He knows of my interest in it since this program had its genesis when I was Minister. I realize that he was not Minister during the critical period. However, will he tell the House and the country if he is satisfied with the way this program has evolved?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, this very morning I signed the answer to the Hon. Member's question which is on the Order paper. It will give some of the details that I may not have from memory.

The Hon. Member is correct to point out that the program did start some years ago, in the late 1970s. Around July of 1981, if I remember correctly, it was discovered that there were problems which really should be very carefully re-examined. This was done.

I might say that some months ago, around the end of 1982, the Board of Directors called in a consultant to examine the question, and in fact put a hold on the program until such time as they are satisfied. I might also add that the figures quoted by the Hon. Member, or attributed to him in the Toronto Sun, are highly inaccurate. In fact we are speaking of a maximum of $24 million instead of $60 million or $80 million.

Mr. MacKay: I recall yesterday when the Minister quoted the late U.S. Secretary of Defence, Engine Charlie Wilson, saying that he wanted a bigger bang for a buck. I would imagine that he would agree that a $24 million loss is hardly peanuts and could have provided for a lot of low cost housing.

CONSULTANT FEES

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, does the $24 million that the Minister is tossing about include all of the consultant fees, to companies like Systems House? Is he prepared to stand or fall on that $24 million figure?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would have to check the contents of that $24 million before I answer. I take the Hon. Member's question very seriously since he is the former Minister responsible for CMHC. I might suggest that the idea that this was all wasted is inaccurate, if that is the understanding of Hon. Members. The fact is that a certain amount of the equipment or hardware was utilized by the Corporation in other ways.

MINES AND MINING

CLOSING OF SHERRITT GORDON MINE AT LYNN LAKE, MAN.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question for the Prime Minister is supplementary to that asked of him by the Minister for Hamilton Mountain. The Prime Minister ended his answer by asking what the Province of Manitoba or the Premier of Manitoba would do.

In the case of Sherritt Gordon Mines in Manitoba, Sherritt Gordon has announced that it is closing the mine, laying off the workers, and will not do exploration in the region for base metals even with the assistance of money from the the Province of Manitoba because, quoting from the President of Sherritt Gordon, "They get a better deal with the private sector since the Government does not pay taxes where Governments do and therefore private enterprise could obtain—"

Madam Speaker: Order. I will not allow Hon. Members to start quoting in the course of the Question Period. That is going a bit too far.

Mr. Murphy: Since the quote indicates that the company will not accept money from the Province of Manitoba because of the federal Government's tax write-off procedures, will the Prime Minister check into the tax write-off procedures and make sure that there is a change so that, when companies refuse to do exploration because of these tax write-offs, the Government will have a stick as well as a carrot?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the question is one which I obviously cannot understand or answer without knowing the facts in more detail. But I do understand that the Hon. Member is alleging that tax write-offs are discouraging exploration rather than encouraging it. It would seem to me to be certainly contrary to the spirit of the budget, and would seem to be a good matter to raise in debate since we are in the middle of the budget debate right now.

Mr. Murphy: I intend to speak on this subject tomorrow when I do speak on the budget.

REQUEST THAT TAX WRITE-OFF PROVISIONS BE CHANGED

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): This matter affects the workers in Lynn Lake. If the tax measures of the federal Government are preventing the company from doing exploration because it would rather do so with private enterprise and not accept the money provided by the Government of Manitoba, will the Government change the tax write-off procedures, since it is a matter of Government policy?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think it would be important to correct the Hon. Member's assertion in the House. The fact of the matter is that, in the case of the proposed closing of the Sherritt Gordon Mine, negotiations were undertaken under the NEED Program to provide financial assistance under the joint program. Federal authority officials were quite prepared to help Sherritt Gordon under the NEED Program to keep the workers in place. It was the provincial Government that said no.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

PURCHASE OF WATER BOMBERS—CONTRACT FOR PAINTING PLANES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Can he assure me that the Government's decision to purchase 20 Canadair CL-215 water bombers will result in new jobs at Springer Aerospace near Sault Ste. Marie which has had the subcontract in the past for painting these planes, and is located in a very high unemployment area?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am very much aware of the Hon. Member's interest in that particular company and the work that it does. I understand that that company has done very good work indeed for Canadair in the past. Of course I remind the hon. gentleman that in circumstances such as those that he has described, the work will undoubtedly be allotted by Canadair on a competitive basis. However I would strongly urge him to make his representations known to Canadair.

FISHERIES

RESTRUCTURING OF EAST COAST PROCESSING INDUSTRY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, on April 15 the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans was asked if the Government had made a decision on the restructuring of the processing sector of the Atlantic fishing industry. Since that time we have had a budget with no reference in it to the belaboured and financially undercut fishing industry in Atlantic Canada. I would like to ask the Minister of State for Economic Development, who I understand has the responsibility in Cabinet for the restructuring of the Atlantic fishing industry, if a decision has been made. His colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, told us on April 15 that negotiations had reached the delicate stage, and he suggested that we take it up with his colleague, the Minister of State for Economic Development. I now ask him that question.

• (1500)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows full well, the negotiating team was given a mandate by the cabinet committee charged with the restructuring, and that negotiationg mandate is currently being carried out.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEVENS—REVISED BUDGET TABLES ALLEGED MISLEADING—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: Before ruling on the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) on April 21, I wish to inform the House of the sequence of events concerning the tabling of the budget documents on April 19 and 21.

Toward the end of his budget speech the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) tabled six printed budget documents which were authenticated as having been tabled by the Clerk Assistant on duty. Very shortly afterwards the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) handed to the Clerk Assistant some additional duplicated material which he said should have been tabled by the Minister with the printed documents. The Clerk Assistant accepted these additional documents but decided that he could not endorse them as having been tabled because they had not been delivered to the Table in accordance with the regular tabling practice. He sent the supplementary material to the Journals Branch together with the documents tabled by the Minister, and made a report to the Clerk of the House as to the action he had taken.

On the following day the Parliamentary Secretary inquired of the Clerk Assistant why he had not endorsed the supplementary material as having been tabled. The Clerk Assistant explained that because of the departure from normal practice he did not feel he was authorized to do so. He suggested to the Parliamentary Secretary that this material could be tabled by the Minister or by the Parliamentary Secretary on behalf of the Minister at the following sitting. In the event, the Parliamentary Secretary sought and obtained the unanimous consent of the House to table the additional material at 11 a.m. on April 21.

This leads me to the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for York-Peel. In the course of his presentation he alleged that, as a result of changes in the budget documents and the separate tabling of some revised tables, the Minister of Finance misled the House, breached his oath of secrecy and was in contempt of Parliament. The consumption here is that the Minister was in some way dishonest in his manner of furnishing the budget documents.

My predecessors and I have on various occasions ruled that charges of this kind cannot be made by way of a question of privilege but only on a substantive motion making clear and specific accusations. In any case, there is no evidence of what the Hon. Member alleges. It is clear from the report I have had from the Table that the Minister intended to table the supplementary material with the printed documents. The oversight was almost immediately realized and a minute or two later the Parliamentary Secretary handed the supplementary material to the Table. The Clerk Assistant, conscious of the importance of observing the regular practice of the House, did not treat the supplementary material as an integral part of the printed documents. Nothing more serious occurred than perhaps a misunderstanding concerning the practice relating to the tabling of documents.

On the matter of tabling documents, Standing Order 46(2) states quite clearly that:

A Minister of the Crown, or a Parliamentary Secretary acting on behalf of a Minister, may, in his or her place, in the House, state that he or she proposes to lay upon the Table of the House, any report or other paper dealing with a matter coming within the administrative responsibilities of the government, and, thereupon, the same shall be deemed for all purposes to have been laid before the House.

Ministers, and not the Chair, are responsible for anything they might table concerning the administrative responsibilities of the Government. The Chair is competent to determine whether or not the tabling procedure observed is correct. It is not responsible for the content of the documents themselves. In the present case, the printed budget documents were properly tabled on budget night and the supplementary material was properly tabled at a subsequent sitting. Neither the privileges nor the procedure of this House has been breached.

I must therefore find that the Hon. Member for York-Peel does not have a question of privilege.

PETITION

MR. OGLE—CLOSURE OF NATIONAL FILM BOARD OFFICES

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I have in my hand a petition which has been signed by people from the City of Saskatoon and citizens of the northern parts of Saskatchewan. It states that the offices of the National Film Board presently located in the City of Saskatoon, in the Province of Saskatchewan, are facing closure; that the services rendered by the offices of the National Film Board in Saskatoon have been of immeasurable value to the community; that there is no comparable service with resources to provide a similar public service to the community; that the closing of these offices would deny, to countless individuals in northern areas, rural communities and prairie cities, ready access to a form of Canadian culture and creativity which their tax dollars help to make possible; and that the closing of these offices represents an irreplaceable loss in the quality of service to the community.

Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to urge the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) to reverse the decision to close the National Film Board offices in Saskatoon. The petition has been presented by teachers, by professors from the university, by senior citizens and by a broad sector of people. I hope the Minister will listen attentively to it.

Order Paper Questions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE BENEFITS TO ADOPTING PARENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-683, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (benefits to adopting parent).

He said: Madam Speaker, this amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 would entitle an adopting parent, whether male or female, to benefits equivalent to pregnancy benefits currently accorded to natural mothers under the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 4,527 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 4,527 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EQUIFAX INC.

Question No. 4,527—Mr. Parker:

1. Have any government departments or agencies done business with the firm Equifax Inc. in the past two years and, if so, what was the nature of the work?

2. Is Equifax Inc. presently performing any work for any government agencies or departments and, if so, for each agency or department, what is the nature of the work?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, a question of mine is on the Order Paper. It is a starred question, which is supposed to incite a little haste on the Government side. It has now been on the Order Paper since May 19 of last year, and it concerns Mr. Geoff Wright. A clear case of petty discrimination has been made against this young gentleman, and the Department of National Defence is refusing to allow him to enrol in the reserves. No real acceptable reason has been given, and I ask that an oral answer be given in the House with the utmost dispatch. I also understand that the answer has been sitting on the Minister's desk for several weeks or months.

Mr. Smith: In the event that the Hon. Member's information is correct, I will do what I can to expedite the tabling of that answer.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I, too, have a question on the Order Paper which I would like to—

Mr. Smith: Which one is that?

Mr. Stevens: —gently remind the Parliamentary Secretary is still unanswered. This is undoubtedly an oversight, in that I asked it on January 29, 1981. It simply asked: "What was the total cost of the Prime Minister's December 1980-January 1981 world tour? What percentage of the total cost of the trip will be paid by the Canadian taxpayer?" It is question No. 2,042.

Mr. Lewis: Give us the percentages.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, it is correct that the Hon. Member has raised this matter before. I believe that at least one Department has not completed the necessary information to answer that question, but I will see what I can do to give it a great deal of priority and I will look into the matter on behalf of the Hon. Member.

• (1510)

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, while the Parliamentary Secretary is putting that on the fast track—I understand there is a new "clear all" bureaucracy process over there—could he also look at questions Nos. 3,216 through 3,220 inclusive, all of which deal with the Prime Minister's jaunts to various areas of the world, including Mexico, Australia, Korea, Fiji, Washington, D.C., New York and Algeria. These all go back to 1981. Could we please have an answer as soon as possible showing what it has really cost the Canadian taxpayer?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will be happy to look into that on behalf of the Hon. Member. I should point out to the Hon. Member that those trips, which he regrettably and mistakenly referred to as jaunts, have all been official business and they are every bit as legitimate as the frequent trips which the Hon. Member takes to return to his constituency. It goes with the job, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Stevens: All we want to know is the cost.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, would the Parliamentary Secretary please look into two questions of mine, one of which has been on the Order Paper since November 18, 1981. It has to do with Liberal Cabinet Ministers' travels. The question reads:

Did the (a) Minister of Supply and Services (b) Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (c) Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development take a Jetstar flight to Winnipeg for the official opening of General Aluminum Forgings Incorporated on October 30, 1981 and, if so, in each case, other than the Minister and the aircraft crew, who was on the flight?

That question has been on the Order Paper well over a year and a half. I am sure there has got to be some mistake to account for why there has been no reply. I would appreciate it if the Parliamentary Secretary would check into what is causing the delay.

Now for about the eighth time I have inquired about question No. 4,175. This question was placed on the Order Paper on March 24, 1982. This question inquires about the Government's hiring teams that are going to universities in apparently just two Provinces, according to the information I have. I have asked in my question for details as to whether these hiring teams will be going to any other Provinces and will they be going to universities in Manitoba. I have asked what nationalities in particular these teams are hiring. The information I have is that only one nationality is being hired for these Government jobs, which seems highly discriminatory.

I have spoken in committee to some of the Ministers, who have told me that they have filed the information with the proper sources. The Parliamentary Secretary has told me a number of times that he will get an answer for me as to what is causing the delay, Madam Speaker. I ask him once again to make some inquiries and inform me why the delay in answering question No. 4,175 which was placed on the Order Paper on March 24, 1982.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct; he has raised this matter in the House before. I regret at this point that I am not able to table the answer but I will be delighted to look into the matter on behalf of the Hon. Member.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Keeper:

That this House condemn the tragic implications of monetarist economic policies adopted by this Government that resulted in 24 per cent unemployment among young Canadians and that deny reasonable job prospects for the 300,000 young Canadians graduating from post-secondary institutions this Spring.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking to this non-confidence motion in the Government on which we will vote later today, it reminded me that we are once again giving Government backbenchers an opportunity to rise and do something for their constituents and for the nation; that is, to put the Liberal Cabinet out of power so the people of Canada can have a fresh choice as to which group of men and women and which Party they want to lead them over the next few years.

I was speaking about how the Liberal Party has truly botched the governing of this country over the last 15 years and how the Liberals have not only failed the country but our citizens and the world. Instead of being a nation of 24 million people sitting on the vast resources of half of this whole continent, instead of being a nation that is a source of capital to the world, a source of energy to the world, a source of food to the world, instead of being givers, we are takers. I think we will be judged harshly on that. Canada is made up of 24 million people sitting on vast resources, and only by being next to the United States could we get away with this. If Canada were sitting next to China, India or Russia, those countries would have taken us over long, long ago. We are not good stewards of the resources over which we have legal and international jurisdiction. The Government has to take that flat on the chin.

It was not always that way. If we think back fifteen years ago, we realize just how far down we have gone. Fifteen years ago we had a national debt of about $13 billion. That was after we had gone through an enormous depression and had also come through a world war in which 40,000 of our fellow men and women gave their lives to preserve our freedom and economic system. They fought so that our young people could have the opportunity to excel, to work and to do better for themselves and future generations.

We had a deficit on a yearly basis that was zero. We had balanced budgets at that time. We did not have the $30 billion debt that we are facing now; we had balanced budgets. Yet with that small national debt and with balanced budgets we had a hospital insurance program, so that people were protected if they went to hospital. We had a medicare program covering doctors' treatment. We had a post-secondary education system that turned out graduates by the tens of thousands. We had an economic system that was generating ten jobs for every one of us who came out of the university and college systems in 1968. As well, we had an Old Age Security system for our seniors which was fair. We had a Family Allowance system for mothers with young children. And we had a rate of inflation that was small enough that a man or woman could work 25 years or 30 years and put aside a little bit each year. They had a pension plan they knew would protect them in their later years. With low rates of inflation, that could be done. But where are we now, Mr. Speaker? Up to 1968 we had positive attitudes. We were building a nation, and we were building a nation on the basis of our resources.

Before lunch I was saying that resources are nothing if they are not developed. Resources only become available to people if we let our creative individuals and corporations develop them. Creative individuals are able to turn the tar sands oil into an asset. The tar sands oil has been sitting there for millions of years. It was worth nothing to no one until the Syncrude operation came along. Forests are worth nothing if the trees simply stand there. Once the trees are taken down, turned into lumber and converted into houses, this means jobs and infrastructure and our young people can have work. We were respected internationally because we carried our weight. We were a source of food, energy and capital to the nation. This is not the way it is today. We carried our weight in the international defence sphere.

Here we are 15 years later. We are into the troubles that I am setting forth not because there is anything wrong with the Canadian people, not because there is anything wrong with our Canadian Constitution. We have the problems we have today because of deliberate Government policies that were formulated by a Cabinet, put before this House and passed by this House, most often by closure. These policies were passed by the active collaboration of Members of the New Democratic Party when the Liberals were in power in a minority situation, and they are passed now by a Government majority. Members stand day after day on these closure motions and put through any sort of a Bill, whether it is a borrowing Bill for $14 billion or Bills that do not really reflect the genuine need of the nation.

Today the national debt, if we add the debt of the Crown corporations and the contingent liabilities of the Crown, is over $200 billion. The interest on that debt, which does not pay the debt back at all, takes one in three tax dollars that are paid in this country. We tax all of our citizens and that money flows into the Government. We take one of every three tax dollars and give it to someone, often our own citizens who have enough wealth to lend money to the Government. The rich are getting richer. We are reaching the situation where we have small but incredibly rich class of people, while the rest of us who do not have the wealth to lend to Government are becoming poorer and poorer. The programs are not there. Because the Government spends $1 in $3 on servicing debt, it does not have money for programs or for capital to develop resources so that the youth of the nation have jobs.

On a yearly basis we now have a deficit of $31 billion. That is $1.5 billion per month, compared with 1968 when we had balanced budgets. When people were offered programs in 1968, there was a corresponding tax. The deficit means that the Government offered programs with insufficient tax revenue. It stacked up the debt, and as we know young people are becoming painfully aware of the fact that the national debt will be paid by them. A deficit is really a mortgage on the future. Mr. Speaker, it is something you and I would never do in our personal lives. We would never encumber our children in this way. Surely the goal is to make things easier for our children. At the end of our lives we want to be able to say: "I carried my weight and left something better for my children and my grandchildren".

Certainly that is the Conservative philosophy. It is not a Liberal policy or philosophy, nor an NDP philosophy. Theirs is really a policy of greed—we will get all the benefit of these programs today and the next generation can pay for them and make its accommodation with the future. This almost shows that they do not have a thought for the future.

What has the Government done for the post-secondary educational system? The universities are turning out graduates, but there are ten graduates for every job. Through its fiscal policy is has destroyed the economic infrastructure necessary to develop resources and create jobs for young people. Our senior citizens are upset. There is a general attitude of fear. There is fear on the part of our young people that there will not be jobs for them. There is fear on the part of people with jobs that they will lose them. There is fear on the part of senior citizens that their pensions, because of high inflation, will not be adequate in a mere four or five years.

Mr. Gauthier: Nonsense.

Mr. Thacker: I hear the Hon. Member. That is precisely why we have this problem. For years we have seen that situation developing and have heard Hon. Members opposite saying "nonsense". If we carry on in the same fashion, the debt will get larger and rather than $1 in $3 being used to service the debt, it will be $2 out of every $3. What do we do when all revenue goes to pay interest on the debt? In that event we would be into a Third World situation—a small, incredibly wealthy class and a large poor class. Where would the Hon. Member opposite draw the line? I keep saying that it has to be in the area of 15 per cent to 20 per cent maximum. Perhaps he is saying 30 per cent is okay, or is he saying 50 per cent or 75 per cent? In any event, it is a mortgage on future generations. I do not think our young people will put up with it. Their only solution is to become politically active and help us defeat the Government.

How did we get into this jam? As I said earlier, it was by deliberate Government policies. The deficit is not the fault of the Canadian people, the Constitution or the French/English situation we have discussed in the House. It is not the problem of the poor versus the rich or the employed versus the unemployed. It is the problem of a Government which has been in power too long and has learned to exercise power to the full limit, plus an extra 25 per cent. It is still able to fool people. It is relying on the essentially good nature of Canadians who trust the people they elected. That is their first mistake. They should not trust the Government. They should call all of us back to find out what we are doing, particularly Government Members who should be called to account for most of the things they have done.

The National Energy Program was a deliberate policy. So was the policy on defence spending. There has been a deliberate policy of criticizing the United States, the nation with which we have to get along whether or not we like it. The Government cannot ride the free blanket of this defence spending and then kick them in the shins at the same time. It just will not work. We must sit down and reason with them in order to get them to recognize this, not kick the U.S. snipe at their sides and expect them not to retaliate. When an elephant retaliates, the mouse gets squashed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions. Comments. Debate.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, jobs and recovery were the two themes in the April 19 budget. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stated very clearly on budget night that he had two goals he wanted to accomplish in his budget. First, he wanted to encourage the early signs of recovery in our economy. Second, he wanted to make that recovery permanent and give Canadians the hope of a prosperous decade in the 1980s.

Job creation was at the centre of the budget. It was the reason for the incentives and the programs the Minister announced last Tuesday—jobs for young people, jobs to rehire workers who have been laid off, jobs to help people in the short run until the economy picks up permanently and rehires them permanently.

How are we to accomplish this? We will accomplish this through three steps. First, there is the massive injection of public works spending into the economy through Special Recovery Capital Projects. As we know, $2.4 billion will go into the economy immediately in the form of public works to stimulate the recovery. Second, private enterprise is being given encouragement to invest, to rehire and to expand—another $2.4 billion in special incentives to encourage business to get back on its feet and to get going again. Third, we are not waiting just for those two streams to come along. We are injecting $1.5 billion into the economy for direct job creation over the next year; $710 million of that money is new in 1983.

All three steps fit together. All three steps are important to job recovery and economic recovery. The Special Recovery Program will start right away. As its impact is felt throughout Canada, we will see a general economic recovery, particularly as businesses, consumers and trade get back on their feet. Equally, while that is going on we will find groups of people who need help the most receiving direct aid and job support.

What industries or areas will benefit from all this? The Special Recovery Capital Projects are being announced by various Ministers. For example, we have already heard about water bombers to fight forest fires and about a strengthened Coast Guard. We will hear more announcements from other Ministers over the next few days. Whatever the project, whatever the announcement, these public works must come onstream quickly. They must be there fast because we want the impact of this spending to be felt right away. At the same time they must be projects which have a lasting value, a permanence and a usefulness for all Canadians. They must be in industries where we have high unemployment and where our dollars will stimulate recovery quickly.

As I have mentioned, we have already heard about ships and about aircraft and we know that more announcements will be coming in the transport area. We know that public works will involve construction. Because of the announcements made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), we know that there will be a high priority placed on research and training in order to put our industries into a competitive position in the future. We know that one of the great foundations of our economy, resource development, is going to be emphasized. Tourism, an area in which young people and unskilled workers can find so much employment, will be one of the areas that will be targeted. Of course, high technology, the industry that holds out so much promise for us, will be part of the Special Recovery Capital Projects.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to know that these projects respond to the requests and the initiatives of the private sector that we heard during the pre-budget consultation. Over and over again, representatives from labour, from banks, from industry, from the retail sector, from all parts of Canada, told us that if we wanted to stimulate the creation of jobs, we should do it through public works that have a lasting value. We should, in effect, add to Canada's wealth and inventory. So it is important to know that the ideas for our first leg in this program, the Special Recovery Capital Projects, come not just from Government but from all Canadians, from people in all sectors and all regions, Canadians pulling together through public works to rebuild our economy. But we have not stopped there. As I mentioned, the private sector is receiving important incentives as well. Some of these incentives are in the form of grants, such as increased aid for exports, and some are in the form of tax breaks and new tax incentives. These will stimulate growth in the private sector.

From coast to coast, we have heard business groups on a national, regional and local level saying that we have taken the right course with this kind of priority. We have chosen ways to reach the biggest company right down to the smallest enterprise through tax incentives that will stimulate business into expansion, through refunds in special targeted areas, through help to businesses to get off the debt bandwagon and to start issuing equity, easing the pressure on their cash flow. These incentives are vital, and business has recognized the wisdom of the budget's approach.

In areas like small business, housing, construction, the furniture industry, the mining industry, the machinery industry, the heavy construction equipment industry, we are providing an extra incentive. We are not only providing tax breaks across the board, we are also providing more incentives in addition to all the other new ones that we have introduced. We are doing it because these areas need an extra boost to rehire their workers.

Areas such as small business or the furniture industry have been particularly hard hit by the recession. These sectors of our economy will hire workers back quickly. In our judgment, the best way that we could have created jobs in our economy was to stimulate sectors like the small business area that handle so many jobs and can react so very, very quickly to any changes and any improvement and recovery in the economy. So job creation especially is a target in these incentives.

The third area I would like to mention to you, Mr. Speaker, is support for direct employment. This is something that I am particularly proud of. We have undertaken a very, very agressive program to create jobs in the short term for people who need that help the most. We have, for example, put in another $100 million into our program to let communities take advantage of the special Section 38 regulation. People whose Unemployment Insurance is coming to an end, people who have had that kind of support, can look forward to additional help through the NEED Program. This help includes jobs and projects in communities, private organizations, co-operatives and businesses, jobs and projects that give them needed work and again that have a permanent and lasting value after the projects are over. In the NEED Program, we have added an extra $260 million as an important impetus for this vital project.

Young people have been the topic of today's discussion, Mr. Speaker. In the Minister's budget, direct aid for young people to find jobs totalled an extra $280 million. Obviously we are doing this to tide people over in an emergency, to provide them with a safety net when they need it the most. We are giving this help to targeted groups, to people who are most deserving of the help, and we are doing this to bridge the gap and to get people over these tough times.

This direct action, this targeting policy, is a continuation of past policies that have built up these vital safety nets. These programs have, over and over again, reached out into depressed communities across the country and given them a vital boost at a time when they have needed it the most. These programs have reached into homes where people are unemployed and given them some hope and comfort because the rest of the country is there to help them in their hour of greatest need.

In my community of Mississauga, I have been proud of the kind of projects that this direct aid has produced. My community has come forward with the kind of projects that every Member of Parliament has seen. We in Mississauga are not special. The projects we are promoting are typical of the projects that are being promoted in communities and constituencies from coast to coast.

Looking at the list of projects that I recommended for approval to create student work over the summer, there were several projects on child care, a couple of projects to help handicapped people, one project for the community non-profit housing authority, and another couple of projects for co-operative housing. There were several projects involving community service, and one project involving nursing care. Those projects are of permanent and valuable benefit to my city. I am proud that we have reached out to improve the quality of life in Mississauga through these kinds of student employment projects.

Equally, Mr. Speaker, the parks in my city, the libraries in my city, and the small businesses in my city have taken advantage of the NEED Program. Millions of dollars have gone to Metropolitan Toronto, and much of that has gone into Mississauga to support worth-while programs and to give people who need the help a job until the economy can recover. What could be better? What could be more typical, Mr. Speaker, than the $11 million that is being spent by the Catholic Church in Toronto, the Ontario Government and the federal Government, all three working together to make our city and our region a better place for people who are unemployed?

Through this same direct concern to create jobs and to bridge the tough times, we have also seen a massive investment in retraining. That, Mr. Speaker, is a massive investment in our future. We are teaching people new skills to match new jobs. In 1983 alone, the federal Government will spend over $1.2 billion in retraining, not the least of which is the $60 million going into student loans and aid for young people who want to stay in school a little longer and need help to meet the cost.

Today's motion treats youth unemployment as if it were isolated. I hope my comments will put that into a little bit of perspective. The federal Government sees youth unemployment as a particular tragedy. In the April budget an enormous amount of money was dedicated to solving the problem. We targeted over $200 million to help young people as a special group and to provide direct jobs for them right away. More important, we targeted billions of dollars to renewing our economy and giving young people a chance to look forward to a secure future. Equally important, we targeted hundreds of millions of dollars for skill training and retraining so that people will have the tools to deal with tomorrow's challenges.

That is the message of the April budget, Mr. Speaker. We said that jobs are at the heart of our concern and that we want an economy that will recover in a permanent way. We are boosting those forces in our economy that will make us permanently prosperous.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments or debate. The Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett).

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, as usual I listened with a great deal of interest to the contribution of the previous speaker to the debate. I was particularly interested, although not too impressed, with his closing words when he referred to the "heart" of the budget that was recently put forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Anyone who has read the budget and is knowledgeable in the affairs of the world of finance would realize that the budget does not have a heart. It has no heart at all.

When listening to the Hon. Member it was some time before I came to the conclusion that he was talking about the budget. His opening remarks certainly did not sound as if he were referring to the same document that I and hundreds of thousands of other Canadians were made aware of with the introduction of the budget. The Hon. Member referred to the $1.5 billion that would be injected into the economy over the next few months but he conveniently neglected to advise the House where that $1.5 billion was coming from. Mr. Speaker, eventually it has to come from the pockets of the taxpayers of the nation. Taxpayers will end up paying over $3,000 each for the deficit that the Government has imposed upon them. That is something that is going to be very difficult for them when added to the already overwhelming burden that they shoulder.

The Hon. Member mentioned several items, several projects, several areas that the Government was going to address to see that the economy was stimulated. He neglected several very important areas from the standpoint of our youth and he did not get around to addressing the problems of youth until his closing remarks. I felt that his speech addressed the plight of the youth of the nation about as much as the budget did, and that is very, very little. He spoke about rebuilding the economy, about giving people hope in time of need. The people who have been talking to me and my colleagues do not feel that the budget imparted a message that gives them any hope.

There are a number of things the Government could have addressed with reference to assistance to our youth population. Just about a year ago I stood in my place in this House and spoke about youth employment. If I recall, the date was around May 6. At that time I said that the unemployment figures of the day, which were in the vicinity of 1.25 million, had been referred to by the Government as being near the peak. The Government anticipated that at the most another 100,000 might be added. In this Party we expressed concern that the figures were inaccurate. Time has taught Canadians a cruel lesson. Over the period of a year we have seen not 100,000 people added to our unemployment rolls but close to 500,000. The real tragedy for the nation is that the people who seem to be hardest hit by the desperate unemployment are our youth. These are the people it seems to be affecting most.

In New Brunswick over-all employment is in the vicinity of 16.1 per cent, or 49,000 people out of a labour force of 305,000. In March, 1983, youth unemployment in New Brunswick was 28 per cent while just a year ago it was 23.2 per cent. It increased by 4.8 per cent over the past year. In my constituency of Fundy-Royal there is general unemployment. Albert County has 18.2 per cent, Kings County and Saint John's County have 12.9 per cent, while Queen's County and Sunbury County have 14.1 per cent.

Over-all unemployment in Canada is 12.6 per cent, and youth unemployment is 21.3 per cent. Unemployment in New Brunswick and Atlantic Canada is higher because of the uncaring attitude taken by the Government over the last number of months. Its policy is not directed toward healing that intolerable situation in my part of the country.

When another 12 months expire the budget will have done nothing to alleviate that unacceptable situation. What it means is that people coming out of school this year will not be able to find a job. That is going to be a very frustrating experience for them. It is going to be a very unplesant experience to face at a time when knowing their future and having confidence in their future is very important to them.

Last week I had occasion to visit a school in my constituency where grades 9, 10 and 11 were combined in a class. After class the teacher told me that she could only take comfort in the fact that her students are not going to be put into the work force this year as they do not graduate yet. In our area there is just no work available for these young people. She said, Mr. Speaker, "I hope that by the time these young people do graduate the situation will have improved to the point where they can have some hope for their future". Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that I would have liked to have given that woman some assurance that things were going to get better, I was not able to do so. We know from the projections of the Government itself that, indeed, that is not going to take place. Things are not going to get better in Canada over the next while. Unemployment is going to continue to grow and the youth of this nation will be among the hardest hit.

Most jobs in the workplace, Mr. Speaker, are interrelated. It goes without saying that if the industries of this nation do not have work there will be a spreading effect. If the shipyards, for example, do not have work, do not have ships to build, then the youth of the nation, who might like to take up an apprenticeship in the shipbuilding industry, will not have an opportunity to learn that trade. That is exactly what is taking place. The shipyards are experiencing lay-offs the like of which they have not experienced in years, and that is adversely affecting many of our young people who could otherwise and might otherwise look forward to obtaining long-term employment, even lifetime employment, by virtue of becoming apprentices in the shipbuilding industry.

That is a shame, Mr. Speaker, because our country has many young people who are capable of pursuing many meaningful careers in industries such as the shipbuilding industry. The Government has been repeatedly asked to accelerate its shipbuilding program, to no avail. We find now, within the last couple of days or so, that a program is expected to come into place in some meaningful fashion in the fall. But we have heard these promises before. We have heard them for months and months in days gone by and what has materialized? Nothing. There is little hope.

At least, at the beginning of this Government's reckless venture into the economic morass which it has created, there was some hope, but our citizens, our youth, are fast losing that hope. The only hope is for the Government to address itself to the problems our young people have now and the problems which they will face down the road, and give them an opportunity to establish themselves in our society in a meaningful way so that they may contribute to the future of this country, an opportunity of which they would have been assured if the economic affairs of our country had been managed in a way which was proper and responsible.

There is a group of young Canadians who are following in the footsteps of people who have contributed substantially to the solid foundation which Canada has had up to this point. I speak with pride of the young people who belong to the 4H Clubs across this nation, some of whom are visiting us in Ottawa and some of whom are visiting the House this afternoon. It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance in his budget speech did not address himself to the needs of the farming community in this country in a meaningful way. No hope has been given to the farming community that things will improve or that this Government recognizes the difficulties which the farming community is experiencing or recognizes the terrible problems and burdens of the high interest rate policy of this Government which has been in effect for the last number of months. The budget gave no hope to those farmers and their families who are facing a disastrous future, if they have not already succumbed to the disaster brought upon them.

It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that these young people will be returning home with only the memory of the sights and sounds of Ottawa as it is enveloped in its own pink crystal unreality which seems to blend into harmony on Parliament Hill, and which is so untypical of the situation which exists out there in the real world. That is the impression they will go home with, Mr. Speaker. They will experience a sense of despair because when they arrive back in their various areas they will see that things are very much different than they appear here in the nation's capital.

I would like to deal now with the incentives to which the budget did address itself in some ways as far as youth unemployment is concerned. Some programs have been introduced, including the Summer Student Employment Program which, according to the budget, is supposed to provide an extra $70 million for this year and will create 17,000 jobs over the 1982 job level. On examining the documentation, Mr. Speaker, we see that really all we are talking about is an additional $50 million increase over the 1981 funding program.

It is difficult to analyse how this Government can rationalize in its own thinking the fact that it is going to raise taxes in this country next year by something in the vicinity of $250 billion, which the consumers are going to have to pay directly into the coffers of the Government, in order to finance a program to help employ youths, when it is going to put a pittance of only $50 million additional funds into that Summer Student Employment Program. We cannot buy that, Mr. Speaker. We cannot accept it. What is that going to mean to the young people in Fundy-Royal, my constituency? What it is going to mean to them is that a program is going to be developed and that that constituency, which has counties with an unemployment rate which is considerably higher than the national average, will receive the smalles allotment in the Province of New Brunswick to assist youth to find summer employment. That is unrealistic, Mr. Speaker, and unacceptable. The people of this nation will not allow this Government to get away with it. They will not forget.

There are other programs, Mr. Speaker, such as youth internship and job-corps programs. The Department of National Defence is offering to enrol 5,000 more in its reserves. We see the program of Katimavik increased somewhat by $40 million over the next two years, which is going to provide 2,000 more jobs. But what kind of jobs are they? They are jobs which are paid at the rate of $1 a day. The reserves are not full-time jobs. They may possibly provide some training for some of those young people who will be fortunate enough to get into the program, but after that they will find themselves in a work place where there are no jobs for them. Now, what earthly use is that either to the nation or to the young people of the nation who want to go out into the country with some confidence? Mr. Speaker, it is of absolutely no use in the context in which it has been put forward through this budget. Even governmental officials are reported as saying, when asked about what this is going to do to help the youth of this nation or even the nation in general, "Don't hold your breath." Officials say that the program will not make more than a dent in the over-all unemployment problems this country is experiencing. What this nation needed, Mr. Speaker, what the people needed, was hope. Hope is something that we do not have.

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, we are considering an Opposition motion which seems to indicate that the New Democratic Party has developed some awareness of the employment situation of young people in Canada.

I intend to use the time allowed to give my personal impression of the last ten years and what they have meant to the development of the role played by young people and the Canadian Government. I can only applaud the fact that today, a Member of the New Democratic Party has moved a motion expressing his Party's concern for the young people of this country.

Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government realized well before 1983 that young people were having trouble finding employment in this beautiful country of ours, and took positive action and introduced policies aimed at helping young people to cope with this situation.

For ten years now, a Liberal Government, that is, the present Government and its predecessors, have introduced programs such as Opportunities for Youth, the Canada Community Development Program and Canada Works. I may recall that during its short period in power in 1979, the first action taken by the Progressive Conservative Party and one of the few decisions it did make, was to do away with Canada Works. This program, which for many years has been severely criticized by the Official Opposition, happens to be the most legitimate vehicle the Canadian Government or any government for that matter has ever given young people as a means of expressing themselves. The Canada Community Development Program and Opportunities for Youth—all these job creation programs constitute an act of trust by the Government in a group in our society that was faced with employment problems. Young people are being asked to design and submit their own projects, and the Canadian Government will give them the money they need to demonstrate that their concepts are workable and to set up their own development structures.

Mr. Speaker, our young people are extraordinary, because they are living in difficult times. However, I feel that in a country where life is becoming difficult for everyone, coping with that situation is feasible. Our young people grew up in nice homes with parents who are secure in their jobs and who are generally quite well off. Often they can afford quite a few luxuries such as travel, several cars or television sets, and so on. In fact, our young people have been surrounded since birth by what would be called affluence in any part of the world. I think that previous generations acquired, quite legitimately, a very high degree of material security, which in turn put our young people in a situation where the material security their parents had acquired in order to provide their children with the essentials of life finally led them to opt for other values, to make a choice. That is, they were told that jobs are important but jobs are not everything, and they discovered other values to defend such as the environment and peace throughout the world and a number of other concepts such as the co-operative system, group work, solidarity, and they made those decisions calmly and clearly. Today, I think we owe them some recognition, because for two years people have been talking about the recession all over North America and the Western world. It seems to be the only subject of conversation. When did people start talking about a recession, Mr. Speaker? When other people, and not only young people, started having trouble getting jobs. When young people had to cope with this, they did so in a positive way, and they are still doing so. They coped with this problem by developing ideas and trying to get people to accept them. To a certain extent, they have led the way as a result of certain views they have expressed on matters that we did not think were terribly important, such as acid rain, and now Canada is very busily defending those views. Young people made this happen. Today, the Canadian Government is being accused of a lack of concern for these young people. This surpises me, because since 1970, the Government of Canada has shown tremendous concern for young people and their future. Have union leaders shown the same concern for young people in our country during the last fifteen years? Has anyone ever seen a union leader get up and try to talk about the future of young people with his own union members, with the management of businesses with whom he negotiates and with various levels of Government?

Mr. Speaker, in the present Budget, the Canadian Government has earmarked billions of dollars for manpower training, which will be used more specifically for young people. Has anyone wondered why the Canadian Government has to train young people who are just out of school? After all, the same Canadian Government is already paying for 50 per cent of postsecondary education, which includes CEGEPs and universities, and 50 per cent of the cost of education in technical schools, plus equalization payments. So why, after paying all that, should the Canadian Government be obliged to pay for training people who have just finished their formal education? It is easy for the Opposition parties to stand up and blame a Government for adopting certain policies, but I want to point out that these policies based on co-operative federalism were originated by the Liberal Party of Canada over the years, and I think the Opposition parties are ill-advised to point a finger at a Liberal and Federal Government, while the people responsible for providing training programs, and for educating young people for 15, 16, 17, 18 or 19 years and supposedly preparing them for the labour market, are members of their own parties and happen to head our provincial governments. Those are the people to whom the Canadian Government has given a blank cheque to prepare our youth for the future, and they now criticize us because all that they have succeeded in doing is to put on the labour market untrained young people due to the lack of foresight or vision of provincial authorities.

I have no objection if someone wants to say to the Canadian Government: You must do more. We are indeed trying to do more. I do not agree, however, when someone tries to hide the truth from the Canadian people and to suggest that the Federal Government is to blame if young people today have greater problems than other members of our society. I have often been attacked in the past by members of other political parties because the Canadian Government allocated funds to young people in order to launch projects and set up cooperatives, corporations or non-profit organizations for humanitarian purposes, and so on. Such programs have often been branded as band-aid programs because funds were allocated to young people who had decided to help themselves. When the Federal Government said that it wanted to ensure not only freedom of speech, but also freedom of action to those who wanted to try something new, it was accused of taking stopgap measures. I can now laugh about it because the same people, namely the leaders of the Parti Québécois, who used to accuse us of every fault and of taking band-aid measures because of programs such as Canada Works and Opportunities for Youth, are now saying that they want to organize a summit of young Quebecers to learn what young people are thinking. I find this pure nonsense. One thing is certain, Mr. Speaker, I shall attend the summit of young Quebecers and young Liberals will also be there working. Why? Because the Liberal Party of Canada has always allowed young people to express themselves directly without requiring them to wave the banner of separatism or to wear maple leaves or fleur-de-lis, because it believes in human relationship and the basic concept that two heads are better than one and that, with all our resources, millions of Canadians together, regardless of their age, can work wonders.

Today, the New Democratic Party condemns the Canadian Government, that New Democratic Party which has shamelessly jumped on the bandwagon of Mr. McDermott and his cronies, a bunch of people who do not want to see much further than the end of their noses. That same Party now wants to take to task a Government which for many years has been spending millions of dollars to help young people enjoy their place under the sun like anyone else.

We know when we go back home, when we go back to our ridings ... Over the weekend I gave a small lunch talk to nearly 400 people on Sunday morning at Alma. I took that opportunity to announce that the Canadian Government will allocate $492,000 this summer under Youth Canada projects and that 261 students will have jobs. I did not make that announcement in the spirit of someone who was bringing gifts, but rather in the spirit of someone who thought that those young people who are now university or college students have an outstanding productive capacity and they represent the future. They are fully aware of their own problems and they are quite capable of proving it if they are given the chance. That is exactly what the Government did—it gave them confidence in themselves.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that we live in a society in constant evolution and progressing ever more rapidly towards electronic and mechanical improvement. We are entering the era of automation and, as I said, we have provided ourselves with a security structure over the years, with the result that one or two generations of our society have pulled much of that security blanket to their side to cover their own future.

Everything goes well until the day when the birth rate drops by almost 50 per cent in the country and, although we think that the labour market will easily absorb young people in the 1980s, it may turn out to be somewhat more difficult as a result of automation in the industrial sector and practically everywhere else. But the main thing is indeed to seek the experience which we can learn from young people. This may sound paradoxical, but it is pure truth. We know that young people have learned much in the past ten years. They have learned that there are very important values in life, more so than work itself. They also learned to respect themselves and to respect others who were relatively better off, but they are doing all this with a patience that will bring about a complete restructuring of our industry, based on optimism, on local initiative and on private enterprise. That is exactly what the Canadian Government announced in the Budget last week and that is what it wants to do.

Private enterprise, coupled with our native optimism ... If our pessimists would stop talking about deficits and having Canadians believe that when the Government has a deficit, everyone is in debt, if our pessimists would only stop talking about a recession and if Canadians would start taking the economy in their own hands, by taking their savings out of the bank and spending and investing, they could take advantage of some very real investment opportunities in the last Budget. The Canadian Government is well aware that part of the problem facing our young people is that unfortunately, Canadians have often found it easier to invest in a trip to Florida than to buy $3,000 worth of shares in a company. That is a major part of the problem facing our young people today, and I wish that from now on, Canadians would realize that the reason why today, two or three generations of Canadians have been able to find jobs easily is that Canadians before them worked their fingers to the bone and as soon as they had five cents, they spent it in Canada and concentrated all their energies on developing their own country and developing our industries, which as a result were always very advanced, always kept expanding and have always been able to provide jobs for Canadians.

In recent years, we have developed a taste, perhaps too much so, for spending our money outside the country, and we are also perhaps too much inclined to put our money in the bank and invest in loan capital rather than risk capital, because it is easier. The returns are more straightforward, there is no need to worry about where the money is going. All a person has to do is to get out the savings book and have it updated. I think that today, as a group, we should realize that Canada will have to be developed first of all by Canadians, and although 30 per cent of what we produce is exported, 70 per cent is sold right here in Canada, and if the generations who have the money fail to understand that they must buy a strict minimum to provide young people with enough jobs so that they can make a living in our society and continue to develop their skills, if the generations that have the financial resources fail to understand that they will have to do more than just invest in loan capital and that they should also finance part of the risk in order to provide for future generations, we may be in serious trouble. That is what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) tried to explain to the Canadian people last week. These are the tools the Minister has tried to give Canadians. These are the tools that will help Canadians invest in businesses by giving them a tax credit they will be able to spread over ten years. These are the tools that will help Canadians who have the resources to create jobs through direct investment. Sunday, I was telling young people in my riding: Stop wondering when to buy something you want. Go ahead and buy it. Do it for your children who are living at home and who are waiting for you to create jobs by purchasing goods. Go ahead, because the country you will give your children is the one you will build yourself.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I would like to say that no other government in the world is doing for its young people what the Canadian Government is doing for young Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), on a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DESIGNATION OF AN OPPOSITION DAY

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to formally designate this Friday as an Opposition day.

[English]

I indicated earlier to my colleagues, the House Leaders, that I might designate Friday this week as an Opposition day. That is what I am doing now. If they want to provide for a vote on their motions they will have the opportunity to discuss that in caucus tomorrow.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm)—Bilingualism—Katimavik Program—Refusal to hire anglophone; the Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott)—Banks and Banking—Renegotiation of loans—Amount of penalty, (b) Plight of home owners with high interest mortgages; the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche)—Finance—Registered charities tax proposal, (b) Calculation of benefits to Government and charities.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Keeper:

That this House condemn the tragic implications of monetarist economic policies adopted by this Government that resulted in 24 per cent unemployment among young Canadians and that deny reasonable job prospects for the 300,000 young Canadians graduating from post-secondary institutions this Spring.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating a motion that has been put forward by the NDP. It reads:

That this House condemn the tragic implications of monetarist economic policies adopted by this Government that resulted in 24 per cent unemployment among young Canadians and that deny reasonable job prospects for the 300,000 young Canadians graduating from post-secondary institutions this Spring.

This motion was introduced by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) but he conveniently or inadvertently neglected to include the NDP Government of Manitoba in the motion. The result of that Government's monetarist economic policies was to cause a real hardship to the businesses in Manitoba, which has, in turn, caused unemployment and lay-offs. All this is the result of the aggressive steps of the Manitoba Government's payroll tax that was introduced in that Province. It denies job opportunities for youth. Businesses in Manitoba are unable to hire apprentices for training in their businesses, with that additional burden placed on them. They have had to lay off people in order to pay for this regressive additional workers' tax that has been imposed by the NDP Government in Manitoba. That fact should have been included in the motion. The federal Members in the New Democratic Party should also be protesting that tax in Manitoba and asking that the Manitoba Government remove it.

Another reason for the difficulty in creating employment for youth, or anyone else, is the disastrous National Energy Program which was supported by the NDP Members in the House. As a result of the National Energy Program there was a loss of approximately 60,000 jobs across Canada. These nationalistic schemes do not create employment; they only chase investment money out of the country. This is what is occurring with the nationalistic and socialistic Governments led by the NDP and the Liberals. They are not attracting investment but driving it elsewhere.

Finding out whether a Government is good is very simple because a good Government attracts investment and does not chase it from the country with programs such as the National Energy Program.

Let me elaborate on how this workers' tax has affected businesses in Manitoba and how it will affect the young people in that Province, which is the subject matter of the motion today. This Manitoba payroll tax is just an unnecessary added burden on businesses in Manitoba, which are having a difficult time as it is without any additional taxes being imposed upon them. When this tax was first introduced, higher interest rates were in effect and consumer purchasing was down. Businesses could not pass this 1.5 per cent payroll tax on to the consumer. The only things this tax produced and stimulated was inflation and unemployment. Therefore, this is a rather facetious motion from the NDP, condemning as it does this socialist Government here, when its brothers and sisters in Manitoba are implementing exactly the same regressive type of monetarist policies. Hundreds of businesses have been stopped from hiring as a result of that payroll tax.

For example, in order for businesses in Manitoba to cope with this tax they would lay off people employed by their business to cover the amount of payroll tax they had to pay to the NDP Government in Manitoba. This tax discouraged businesses from investing in Manitoba, so they went to the Provinces that did not have this payroll tax. As well, farmers had to pay this payroll tax, as if they did not have enough problems to contend with.

The NDP Government in Manitoba is removing the five-year hydro freeze that was put in place by the previous Progressive Conservative Government. That five years has not expired and, as a result, hydro rates will increase by 9 per cent. This is another added burden on businesses and consumers in Manitoba. Increased hydro rates will result in businesses and farmers being unable to employ more people as it is an added cost to the operation of their businesses.

This NDP motion should have condemned the NDP Government in Manitoba for increasing the hydro rates and not letting the freeze remain in effect for five years. This increase in hydro will be another shock for businesses and farmers because Premier Pawley had promised in his election campaign that the freeze would not be lifted. So much for NDP campaign promises. Today's motion should have included a mention of the effects the increase of hydro rates has had on employment in Manitoba and the fact that it is a reason why we cannot find jobs for youth.

Kimberley Clark has left the Province of Manitoba and is now expanding in Ontario where there is no 1.5 per cent payroll tax. Shell Oil has closed its plant in Manitoba because it is just too expensive to stay in business there under the NDP Government.

The NDP raised questions in the House today about lay-offs at the Sherritt Gordon Mines. The workers' payroll tax was certainly not helping Sherritt Gordon to stay open. That should have been mentioned in the motion of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James. It is not only the taxes and monetarist policies of the Liberal Government but the regressive monetarist policies of the NDP Government in Manitoba as well that are affecting businesses and causing them to lay off people and not hire youth as apprentices. That should have been included in their motion.

This is one of the best articles I have read on this payroll, or workers' tax as it is referred to in Manitoba. It is an article written by Mr. John McCallum in the Winnipeg Free Press. He said:

> There are five other reasons why the payroll tax should go. First, unemployment is by far our greatest single problem at the moment, and the way to deal with that problem is not to put a tax on those who would put people to work.
> Second, the payroll tax promotes bad labour relations.

It causes serious problems for businesses when they have to lay people off so that they have enough money to pay the NDP Government this workers' tax.

He continued:

> Third, we are very definitely competing for jobs with Ontario, Saskatchewan and Alberta. None of these jurisdictions has a payroll tax.

He went on:

> Fourth, the payroll tax is a very unconventional tax, and an employer looking at Manitoba would probably say to himself, if they are willing to do that, what else might they do?

That is right. What else might an NDP Government do to business? The NDP Government is against business and it is against profit. It does not encourage investment. The NDP Government chases investment out of the Province. Because of opposition to the private sector, the New Democratic Party Government cannot attract business investment into the Province. You are on a treadmill going backwards with a socialist government in power, either provincial or federal, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McCallum's article continues:

> Fifth, some contend that because Quebec has a payroll tax, that somehow makes it okay. This is a very bad argument. Quebec's finances are not regarded as being run even close to well, and claiming that what you do is right because it's done in Quebec is not likely to impress anyone.

There have been some other comments in the Province of Manitoba about the regressive payroll tax put in place by the NDP Government. Mr. Lloyd McGinnis, President of the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce, said the city and the Province will have trouble attracting new industry if employers are faced with a payroll tax. This can be paralleled to the National Energy Program which drove the oil rigs out of Canada. Oil rigs were lined up for miles wanting to go to the United States where they would be welcome. What about all the industries that were affected in the Province of Ontario? Hundreds of them were affected by the National Energy Program. They were faced with lay-offs and loss of business because of this nationalistic National Energy Program put in place by the Liberal Government and fully supported by the NDP.

Alan McLaughlin, Chairman of the Manitoba branch of the Investment Dealears Association, said the tax could also force some firms to review their staffing needs. Leo Quigley, a salesman for CN Railways, said it could have a bad effect on employers. There is no question about that. Opposition Leader Sterling Lyon had been expecting a sales tax increase. We also have that in place, Mr. Speaker. Since we have had an NDP Government in Manitoba we have new taxes on gas, a workers' tax, new taxes on hydro, and an increase in the sales tax. So much for the so-called people's Party. Mr. Lyon called the payroll tax "a hidden sales tax." He said it will be passed along to consumers by employers. There is no question about that.

The Manitoba workers' tax has affected our hospitals. Municipal taxpayers may have to bail out rural hospitals. They are being swamped with red ink because of the Manitoba NDP payroll tax. Several hospital administrators said that the payroll tax is swelling their deficits. They do not know what they are going to do to get money.

Members of the NDP march around during federal elections stating that they are the only people interested in health care. But now the NDP Government has introduced a tax like this which puts an additional burden on our hospitals in the Province. I will be talking about that in the next federal election. I will be reminding the people of Manitoba of the false statements which the New Democratic Party always makes about health care when going into federal elections. The NDP Government says that all the fat has been sliced from its operations, and local municipalities may be asked to increase property taxes to help reduce the deficits. You can see that nobody has escaped this regressive tax in Manitoba. "The 1.5 per cent payroll tax is killing us", said one of the administrators who does not want to be identified. Taxpayers will not be happy about seeing a hospital tax. They certainly will not be happy about that. They will not be able to take on any additional employees in the hospitals because of the additional burden put on hospitals throughout Manitoba.

Also the NDP Government announced early in April that it would set up a venture capital plan and that it would be putting up a million dollars into this plan. It will be very interesting to see as time goes by how much venture capital the NDP attracts from other parts of Canada. All the NDP Government will attract to a venture capital scheme in an NDP Province is fly-by-night groups. No doubt there will be some high risk ventures, with the people of Manitoba putting up the money for these fly-by-night groups.

I have some statistics here going back to when the NDP Government was in power between 1969 and 1977. They show that we had a loss of employment and a loss of job opportunities for youth at that time. These are statistics I received from an investment counsellor who was very actively engaged in assisting businesses to move out of the Province of Manitoba between 1969 and 1977. He gives a list of the moneys that were moved out. These are not figures one can obtain very easily. Not many investors like to put an ad in the paper or make any kind of announcement that they are moving out of a Province or a country together with their money. This investment counsellor points out:

> Countries or for that matter provinces which have nationalistic, leftist or extremely strong bureaucratic tendencies make striving and successful entrepreneurs feel uncomfortable.

Businesses in Manitoba certainly are being left to feel uncomfortable with this Manitoba workers' tax.

I have statistics here of a number of businesses and individuals who moved their money out of the Province of Manitoba because they simply did not trust socialist Governments. I have statistics here from a number of firms and the billions of dollars that were driven out of the Province. This investment counsellor estimates there was a loss of up to 17,000 jobs for the group of individuals for whom he acted. So much for this venture capital deal being introduced by the NDP Government in Manitoba.

In closing I want to say that it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James did not include mention of the NDP Government in Manitoba and what provincial Governments can do when they introduce regressive employees' taxes and place additional burdens on businesses. These things affect youth unemployment as well as senior unemployment, both male and female. That is the weakness of this motion.

I am sure there will be some other NDP speakers this afternoon. I hope they will make some comments and suggestions to the House. I hope they will pass the message on to their NDP colleagues in Manitoba to remove this regressive workers' tax which has placed such a burden on the businesses of Manitoba. As long as that tax stays in effect, there will be no jobs for youth or anyone else.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie). There are two points on which I would like him to comment. He has been busy criticizing the Manitoba Government rather than the federal Liberal Government. I am really quite shocked that a Conservative Member would leave the Liberal Government unscathed when he talks about a payroll tax, particularly when that tax was brought in by a Manitoba Government because of federal cutbacks in transfer payments. I am quite puzzled why this particular Conservative Member would choose to attack the New Democrats but failed to point out—

An Hon. Member: He is a hidden Liberal.

Mr. Keeper: That is what I am beginning to suspect. I would not want to say that he is a hidden Liberal. I would not want to suggest that he belongs to the same Party as the Liberals. But I wonder why he does not attack the Liberals but only attacks the NDP.

The Hon. Member made many statements, mostly about the Manitoba Government. He said very little or nothing about the federal Liberal Government. He referred to false statements by the New Democratic Party, but it is he himself who made a statement which was clearly and unequivocally false. He said that the National Energy Program introduced by the Liberal Party was fully supported by the NDP. The Hon. Member knows that that is wrong and false. He knows that this Party opposed that program 100 per cent. Therefore I call upon him to withdraw that particular statement and explain to the House why he chose to attack the NDP and failed to go after the Liberal Party.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I will handle the last part of the question first. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James said that his Party did not support the National Energy Program. That Party might not have supported it in its entirety because it did not go far enough to nationalize and socialize the Canadian oil industry. That was the NDP objection.

Also the Hon. Member said that I did not attack the Liberal Government. I do not think he was in the House for my full speech. I mentioned the socialistic National Energy Program and its disastrous effect on businesses and industries across the country. I will send him copies of some of my speeches on the NEP and some of my attacks on the Government over the years. I have never taken a back seat in attacking the Government. My record is well known.

If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James said that his Party did not support the National Energy Program in its entirety, I will apologize. When I think about it now, the only reason why that Party did not support it fully was because it did not go far enough. If we went as far as the New Democratic Party wanted to go to nationalize the Canadian oil industry, we would have lost 200,000 jobs rather than the 60,000 we have lost.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions. Comments. Debate.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) which reads:

> That this House condemn the tragic implications of monetarist economic policies adopted by this Government that resulted in 24 per cent unemployment among young Canadians and that deny reasonable job prospects for the 300,000 young Canadians graduating from post-secondary institutions this Spring.

I join my colleague in condemning the Government for bringing about the disastrous situation in the country today.

Last Saturday I had the opportunity to visit the University of Saskatchewan which is in the heart of the constituency of Saskatoon East. In a sense, it is the very lifeblood of the constituency. The University goes back to 1911. It was built by our forefathers when they saw that education and the preparation of young people for jobs in the future were part and parcel of the prospects in western Canada. When the pioneers first broke the soil of the bare Prairies, it is interesting to note that they realized that if they did not go ahead immediately with establishing institutions to prepare their young people, the future would not be much of a future.

Some 3,000 people gathered together at the University of Saskatchewan on Saturday to take part in a peace march to City Hall. There were senior citizens and children taking part, but basically the majority were university students. Many of them were the organizers and had something to do with the campus. I was with them as they went down Twenty-fifth Street and over the bridge. I could not help but feel that these young people were facing the menace of an atomic war at the same time as huge problems in their own lives. After all the preparation they had made, with the assistance of their parents, teachers and communities, they were reaching a point in their lives when they would be unemployed persons and would join an army of unemployed of their own age group numbering 600,000 people. The 300,000 graduates who will be coming out will turn that army of people into almost a million.

I would like to put some flesh and bones on that number. Our society has become so accustomed to using huge numbers such as millions, billions and trillions that it is difficult to visualize a million people. Something we can feel and see to a certain extent is the Canadian expeditionary forces in the Second World War, the military forces which were established and grew up in Canada from 1939 to 1945. Those who are my age and older can remember just how many people that was, or what it felt like to have that many military people around. Actually I was told this afternoon that between 1939 and 1945 there were 1,086,771 Canadian men and women who joined the Armed Forces—over 730,000 in the army, 249,000 in the air force and 106,000 in the navy. Many of us can remember those days. We remember how many people were in the military. There were troup trains, army camps and a constant movement of people who were marked because they wore military uniforms. An entire economy developed around the building of military bases, aircraft, tanks and the whole business which was part of the war effort. When we talk about the unemployed today we are talking about a hidden army which is equal in size to the army Canada was able to build up during the Second World War.

Basically I have a philosophical problem today. I have a question which I cannot answer totally and with which I am sure people all over the world are struggling. Why was it possible to turn around a broken economy in 1939 and build up such a large war machine which went off to destroy, kill and burn—and other countries were doing the same thing to us—and today it is not possible to raise what I would call an army of peace? We all know that the problems of the world today are of such a magnitude that we should not have any unemployed at all. The workers required to bring clean water to the people of the world, to build roads, houses, sewer systems, hospitals and schools are innumerable. Why can we not do such things rather than begin to re-arm all over again in an attempt to blow apart the entire planet? This is a question which we all have to face at this time. I do not feel there is that much time left in which to face it.

As I walked with these young people on Saturday, I talked about the question of unemployment, the future of atomic warfare, their own futures, their probable marriages and the families they hoped to have. I felt a subtle but across-the-board silent despair in many of these people about future prospects. They did not know if there would be any prospects for them in the future.

Also on Saturday I had an interesting encounter with a young farmer from Saskatchewan, a person I have known for a number of years. He is married and has his own farm. During the spring and summer seasons he needs an extra hired man. This year he felt that it would only be fair, because of the large number of unemployed young people in his community, to advertise the job in a local newspaper. He advertised for one young farmhand to spend the summer working with him on his farm. He had never done this in previous years but he felt it was necessary this year. He was swamped with responses from strong, healthy, eager, energetic young men wanting the job. In the matter of a few hours he was able to pick his hired man. However, the flow of people continued in an attempt to obtain that one job. One morning there was a knock at the door. A young man had ridden out from the local town, a good number of miles away, on a bicycle. He was sweating and he was tired and he just simply said, "Can I have the job?" And of course the young farmer simply had to say, "The job is gone." And so they sat down and had a cup of coffee and the farmer's wife asked, "Would you like to have a ride back into town because I will be driving the truck back into town?" The young man said, "No, I will go back on my bicycle because I have nothing else to do."

That young man, Mr. Speaker, is the symbol of thousands, now becoming millions, of young people in our country.

This very day, my office was in contact with Simon Johnson, the President of the University of Saskatchewan Student Union. He told my assistant that only about one-third of the commerce and engineering students will get job interviews this year. Even less will get jobs. He, representing the student body which has swelled to a very large number this past year, was feeling the same kind of silent despair that I have been talking about. He was wondering what would happen to them, where it would all lead, what would be their future. Many of those students who get job interviews and finally get a job, the lucky ones, rarely get a job that they feel they are fit to handle right now.

Young people are caught in a dilemma. They could not get employment last year or two years ago, so what did they do? Well, many of them feel that as they are young and have the opportunity, and as we have a good university and good training facilities in other skills, they can take a year or two of their lives to go back to school to upgrade their education. But this has had an impact upon the university. It has swelled the student population.

Several months ago, I met with the faculty association at the University of Saskatchewan. The members of the faculty association were wondering what would happen to the university. They said, "We are now being in a sense overstocked with students, but at the same time our university budget is being cut back." The impact of the Government's six and five program on transfer payments to the Provinces with regard to education has been to cut back funds to the university. Professors at the university must teach these larger classes with less funds than they had previously. So we really have what could be called a Catch-22 situation.

Young people trying to upgrade themselves are going back to university and, at the same time, universities that are not able to cope with the present load are being burdened by this new load. In light of this, the faculty association is afraid that the quality of teaching will decline, that the quality of the education, the training, and the graduates that they have produced over many years will come under such intense pressure that, against their will, the students will come out into the work force ill-prepared to deal with the very complex situation that awaits them.

This complex situation is one that I believe must be looked at from a far broader perspective than simply the Canadian point of view. Earlier, when the Minister spoke on the subject, I asked him about serious futuristic planning for Canadian young people to enable them to fit into the whole work pattern on this planet, how they will fit into the whole system when the majority of the population of the world is under 25 years old. So the problems that face Canada are only a portion of the problems that face the rest of the world.

If we are serious about planning to solve the problems of our Canadian young people who are now under this kind of pressure, we must do that kind of planning within the reality of the whole world. Unless the planning is done in that sense and unless we look at it as a global question, rather than try to solve the problems bit by bit on an ad hoc basis within our own little country, the problems will not be solved. There is a necessity for a futurist vision, for people who can really look at the whole world around us and put our Canadian situation into that context. Unless that is done, I feel that there will be no solution at all to our own Canadian problems.

Interestingly enough, the Canadian Catholic Bishops' January statement spoke to one of the principles that they felt was necessary to resolve the question of the crisis in the Canadian economy. The thrust of their statement was that the right to a job is a human right, a right that everyone must have in order to develop as a human being. They indicated that the necessity to have a job, to be able to grow with that job, is the very essence of human life at this time.

While agreeing with the Bishops' assertion that jobs are necessary for every single person and that seeing to that should be the priority of any Government at any time, I would at the same time question the Bishops' statement in another area, an area that I think can reflect back on the present problem as well. I would criticize the Bishops' statement to the extent that they almost totally neglected agriculture. I think that it is very important in today's world to look at what has happened in modern agriculture as an indicator of what will happen in all other sectors of the work world.

Agriculture is an area that has entered into technology to a far larger extent and sooner, I believe, than many other areas. The University of Saskatchewan was built by pioneers who came to Saskatoon at the turn of the century and immediately began to build this university which includes a great agricultural school. At the time the university was founded, agriculture was a form of production that required a great number of people. These people are depicted in old pictures that can be seen all over the West, pictures of big threshing crews and of the trains that transported working people from the East out to the West to harvest the crops. To harvest even a small farm required maybe one machine and 40 men. Besides that there were bunkhouses and cookhouses and cooks and all the rest of the workers who went with this operation of harvesting let alone ploughing, sowing, and everything else involving a great number of people.

What happened to the farming industry was that it mechanized. It mechanized at a very high level so that for the same amount of land and higher production, one person or two at the most can now do what formerly took 40, 60, or 80 people to do. Those farmers who lost their jobs, one might say, had to get off the land, come to the city and build it. At that time, industry absorbed those people in the new jobs of manufacturing cars or whatever had to be done.

Now the industries in the cities are beginning to go the way of the old farm. What is happening now is that industry does not need that same number of people to produce what is needed. That problem must be faced, and it must be faced in the context of the whole planetary system.

Interestingly enough, some people may have seen last night on television the report that British Leyland, an automotive company in England that produces very high quality cars, has cut back over 25 per cent of its work force in the last two years but now produces three times as many cars. That is the same thing that happened in agriculture in the Prairies in the 1930s when they sold off their horses and bought a little tractor and began to do more cultivating than was possible with horses. It was a big breakthrough. Now it is happening in all industry. The robot system and new technology makes it possible to produce more goods with less people.

Basically we come to the question of what is human work. That question has to be faced by everyone. Traditionally, since the time of the industrial revolution people have associated income or livelihood with work. I would say that in general we are still talking in those terms, but I believe we must question that now. Will there be enough jobs? Will it be possible to produce anything more than we need and have everybody work, or does society have to look at a new way of distributing the products of industry and farming? There must be a serious rethinking about how goods produced by human beings are distributed by human beings. It is too big a question to put here, but I believe we must consider it when talking about unemployment in the present age.

To recapitulate, Mr. Speaker, as a people, as a Parliament, as a Government I believe we have to look at questions that we have not considered seriously before. We have to see that everyone has a job, but those jobs could be very different from anything we have known in the past.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do any Hon. Members rise to ask questions? If not, the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith).

Mr. Doug Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, before getting into the main part of my remarks I should like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) for adding a new dimension to the discussion this afternoon. He outlined quite properly some of the problems that face our youth today. Some of the issues he raised not only affect our youth but also affect most Canadians in the work force and not on the unemployment rolls. Some of the technological changes that he mentioned as having taken place in the last 30 or 40 years are still occurring every hour of every working day in Canada and in most western industrialized nations. Each of these technological changes that takes place means a loss of jobs for workers in any segment of the economy you wish to look at. The Hon. Member mentioned the massive mechanization of the agricultural sector not only in Canada but in most western countries. He pointed out that over a period of time workers who previously found work in the agricultural sector were able to move, as part of what Toffler calls "the second wave of the industrial revolution" into the metropolis and find jobs in the manufacturing sector.

The Hon. Member is well aware that in the last three or four years a technological revolution has taken place in the agricultural industry. The technological change is frightening to many people, but in industrialized countries they are going to have to be educated to it. It will accelerate over the next five to seven years and it is not going to go away. If anything, experience should dictate that as we get into what I term the post-industrialized age, robotics and microprocessors will become more common. Everyone talks about the computer revolution that is taking place today, but I believe that is only going to have a very small effect on employment patterns in the western world compared to the effect that microprocessors will have.

Over the years the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East has given me a list of reading material to educate me in some of the areas that affect all of us in today's world. I should like to recommend two books. First, Toffler's "Third Wave", but more important a book called "Megatrends" by Anderson. He attempts to put some semblance of order into a very chaotic changeover in our society. This does not necessarily mean that I think both authors have all the answers for Government and Members of Parliament attempting to come to grips with the problems created by the technological revolution in all sectors of our economy.

The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East mentioned that he wished there was some sort of forum where the best of our futurist thinkers could put their heads together and decide how the world economy is evolving. I agree because in today's complex society I believe that Government needs lead time to decide on policies that are better than the band-aid solutions which, as I frequently have to admit to my constituents in Sudbury, are not much more than stop-gap measures. They give us time to adjust to the technological changes that both Government and business have difficulty in coming to grips with, regardless of the sector of the economy, be it mining, agriculture or manufacturing.

I think it is safe to say that there is no Member of Parliament who does not have a youth unemployment problem in his riding. During my three years here it is one of the most difficult things I have had to come to grips with. When I have to replace an assistant, for instance, I look at the 60 or 70 resumés that I keep on file. Many of the applicants have masters degrees and are not working at all or are in work which is not related to the discipline they studied in university or community college.

Today the young people of Canada are facing an extremely serious situation trying to find their place in the labour market. It is with some regret that I say the situation is likely to exist for the next two or three years. Their problem is also Canada's problem because on our youth rests the economic future of the country. Their potential skills are essential to the well-being of the country.

An economic recovery is now taking place. I was surprised to see a Thompson newspaper with the courage to publish the kind of headline that appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail. Normally all they have been doing, in my view, is to place a negative interpretation on any Government policies that have been instituted to deal with our problems over the last three years. It now appears that all the indicators show that we are going to come out of this recession much quicker than was anticipated. However, as always, the recovery in youth employment will lag behind the unemployment rate of adults. That has been true throughout our economic history. In times of economic recession young people are the first to be laid off and the last to be rehired in an economic recovery. This is mainly because they have little experience and virtually no seniority.

From a federal Government standpoint, we realize the extent of the problem in the country. At the same time, when placing a budget before the public, we recognize that other constituents have needs that must be addressed because they also have valid concerns about the way in which Government programs should be tailored for them as well.

I can say that we are doing as much as we can in order to lower somewhat the youth unemployment rate in the country. If we take a look at the unemployment rate for youth between the ages of 15 and 24, we find that it is somewhere between 25 per cent and 30 per cent. I suppose you could argue effectively that there is nothing that the Government can do which would be good enough in order to put a serious dent in that unemployment rate among our youth.

What I would like to do is to outline to the people of Canada, its youth in particular, the programs which are specifically designed for them because I believe one of the problems we have in the House as Members of Parliament is that there is a multitude of Government programs which are specifically geared for certain segments of our population, and often, although the programs are there, the people are not sufficiently aware of them to use them effectively. As an example, this year the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission alone will be spending more than $1 billion on programs and services for youth. That is an increase of some 25.4 per cent over the year before.

Although we have heard mention before that the six and five program has dampened, in some cases, the amounts of moneys placed in university budgets in terms of the commitment of this Government to solve the overwhelming number one problem in this country, that is, inflation, the 25.4 per cent increase over last year's budget should indicate to Canadians that we view this problem of our youth unemployment in a serious way. We are making the greatest increase in money going toward that program as compared to any others we have in the present budget.

There are various programs available to our youth. One that comes to mind is the Canada Community Development Projects or CCDP. We have the NEED Program which is specifically designed for those Canadians or youth who are about to run out of UIC benefits. We have instituted that special program, NEED in order to help those individuals. One of the most successful programs—and I believe that is recognized by most Hon. Members in the House—is the introduction of Summer Canada. This year there is an increase in the amount of money placed into Summer Canada which specifically flows to our Canadian youth. We have had previously, I believe, good examples of programs such as LEAP and the LEDA Program, which provide immediate job assistance for our young people. Something else which has been instituted in the last couple of years by this Government is what we call the specialized youth units. They are among the new initiatives we have recently adopted. They are specifically designed to assist young people between the ages of 15 and 19 in gaining access to the labour market. These units have been established in some ten locations across the country, and five more are in the process of being established. In 1983-84, $10 million will be channelled to these units. Through specialized counselling and referral services, more than 43,000 young people will find employment this summer. These are what we term as chronically unemployed youth. We will aid them in setting realistic employment goals and show them how these goals may be reached. Some of these specialized units are involved in our Canada Employment Centres. Others are attached to Outreach projects. These Outreach projects are sponsored by community organizations and are another response to the needs of young Canadians for help in finding employment. Counselling and tests are given to find if we can place a student in a job for which he is skilled, whether he is a graduate from a secondary school, community college or university. The spending of Outreach for youth projects in 1983-84 is estimated at $2.6 million, and we are hopeful that some 48,000 young people will be assisted.

The Government is very sensitive to the situation facing secondary and post-secondary students and the capacity of our institutions to deal with the growing demands placed on them. Students themselves must be able to finance their own pursuit of knowledge and skills. In a year when there are indications that the private sector will be cautious in its hiring of students, I believe that clearly Governments must take up that slack. We must ensure that students who wish to stay in school can do so, particularly in fields of study for which there is likely to be a strong demand in the years ahead.

Summer Canada has been allocated additional funds this year to enable students to gain relevant work experience while accummulating an adequate income in order to ensure their financial viability to pursue another year of their educational studies. For instance, this summer some $140 million will be allocated to Summer Canada for summer employment programs for students. Some $28 million of this money has been allocated to fund one of Summer Canada's most successful elements, and that is called summer internships. These internships recognize that much of the difficulty faced by young people today can be traced to their problems in moving from school to work and the importance of combining work experience with formal education.

As an aside to that, Mr. Speaker, I might point out that in our country the work element is a means of furthering education. In other countries there has been a tendency to use education as a means of getting work. We are studying the experience of Germany and Austria where vocational education and on-the-job training are integral to the transition from school to work.

I might also point out that in the last several weeks I have had the occasion to visit both Washington and San Francisco where I visited both the Brookings Institute and the Hoover Institute and asked them some of the questions about what in fact the United States Government was planning on doing over the next several years in order to address its equally important problem of youth unemployment. It is interesting to note that the Canadian Government will be spending, over the next two years, roughly three times the amount of money per capita aimed at the youth employment market that the United States Government is spending. I mention this because I asked them if they had any sort of think-tank forums in an attempt to pinpoint where the United States Government feels there will be job opportunities for its young in the latter part of the eighties. The director of one of the think-tanks at the Brookings Institute said they had attempted to do that in the last three to four years and found they were not very successful at being able to predict which occupations would require employment five years down the road. I mention that because I know the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East has made that suggestion, and I would concur with him that we do need more kinds of conferences and futuristic thinking about where this world of ours is heading. However, I believe we must be realistic about what can be obtained from that kind of environment.

I believe, personally, that what we must do much more of in the future is to tie the moneys which are directed at youth unemployment to the private sector, because the private sector is much more on the leading edge of the changes in technology and is much more aware of the effect it is having on business than Government can ever be. I would think we should be working hand in hand with industry and companies to help pinpoint with them where they feel their skill shortages are going to occur. Rather than designing programs, I believe what we should be doing is allowing subsidies to encourage the private sector to retrain its own existing work force, to hire young Canadians in the areas where they feel they can get on-the-job experience, and tie it back to the educational system.

I believe that in the last several years, particularly at the post-secondary or community college level, there has been far too much feeling that the academia stays strictly within its own bounds of expertise or reality, or at least its feeling of reality, and does not tie those programs to industry. I find too often that if you take a look at the community college level, or the university level, you find far too many boom-bust cycles. For examples, in one case we were encouraging young people continuously for three years, to go into nursing saying there was going to be a massive shortage of nurses, and suddenly we found we had flooded the market with nurses, and so there is another occupational skill that has gone down in terms of the number of people qualified in that field.

I believe that as a Government we have to co-operate with both labour and business and with the educational facilities, whether those are community colleges or universities. We must work together to develop a long-range program which is going to aid all of us. If we could do that, I believe it would go a long way towards helping us work out our problems with youth unemployment.

I mentioned before that the Canadian Employment Information Centre operates more than 400 Canada Employment Centres for students between April and September of every year. I know most Members of Parliament have probably been invited over the next month or two to open up a particular centre in their own riding. This year we expect some 328,000 job placements from these centres. That is a massive accomplishment which has taken place over the last several years. I think business has responded to the requests from those centres. They have gone a long way toward giving students some employment, particularly in the last years when we have had an economic recession and businesses have not been able to hire students. The Canadian Government came out with programs which have effectively allowed thousands of students the opportunity to go back to university or community colleges and continue their education.

For those young people who have the education they need but are unable to get that very first good job, we have a new technology employment program. It offers employers a wage subsidy to hire recent graduates trained in scientific or technical areas but who are temporarily unable to find work in their own field. This year we expect to spend some $1.5 million on that program and thus help several thousand students. I would also like to mention new pilot projects being developed to meet the special needs of the young workers. These projects have been conducted at the University of Winnipeg and the University of Manitoba. About 580 students are benefiting from jobs which provide them with the money they need to continue their studies and at the same time gain the experience they need to enter into the labour market.

I am going to conclude by saying that unless we help our youth with the difficult transition from school to work, we risk losing their production potential. This issue crosses jurisdictional lines and it requires a concerted and co-operative effort on the part of the Provinces and the federal Government, and I think business, labour and educational institutions, to develop a new and effective strategy to aid our young people and hopefully bring down this tremendously high unemployment rate amongst that group.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Member presented a very thoughtful address to the House and I want to put a question to him in the same vein. The Hon. Member mentioned that he agreed with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) on the need for looking into the future for possible new definitions of work and that whole area. At first I thought, why is the Government not sponsoring such a forum in order to get this sort of thing done? But later on he said he thought, on the basis of his talks with people at the Brookings Institute who were not very successful at predicting needed jobs, that this whole question should be tied to the private sector. I want to put two thoughts forward and ask for the Hon. Member's reaction.

Why has the Government not yet chosen to support the Labour Market Institute, an institution created by business and labour with a view to finding a practical way of getting a handle on what kind of jobs are needed and what kind we should be training for? This kind of institution could have access to information from the business community which otherwise is not available. That would be a way of predicting what we need to train people for. The Hon. Member also emphasized the private sector and how education in Europe can be a way to get into the work environment and the marketplace. The National Training Act, when it came down, really continued the old system of simple subsidies—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member should make a brief point or ask a question.

Mr. Keeper: Thank you for the reminder, Mr. Speaker. The question is basically this: why has the Government not moved to put in place a training system located in the private sector? An example would be the grant and levy system which we proposed in earlier discussions.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, the Member mentioned two particular projects I am not familiar with. But if you look at the National Training Act, I know the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), when he introduced that Act, mentioned that it is flexible enough to utilize Government funds on creative projects. My suggestion to the Hon. Member is that he approach the Minister and ask him to take a look at them. It does not mean that every project put before the Minister is going to be funded, but I do know we have done some innovative things using the national training centres across the country. I think there is tremendous potential there. I am involved in a project, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) knows, with the University of British Columbia and the riding of Quadra, trying to utilize the Act to retain young Canadians in western Canada in the medical technology field. So it should be innovative that way.

As to the reference to the Brookings Institute. By no stretch of the imagination am I saying that we should not be funding these futurist conferences. One of the major things we as politicians will have to do, regardless of political Party, is to educate the Canadian public as to what is happening with respect to the information explosion and the effect it is going to have on all sectors of the economy and employment opportunities. This does not apply just to youth; it concerns the need to have continuous retraining throughout our lifetime in different fields. The conferences I mentioned can go a long way to achieve that goal. I think it is very important that we teach Canadians not to be afraid of the future, that change—even chaotic change—does not necessarily mean there has to be fear. Change, if it is properly harnessed by Government, business and labour, can be an enriching experience of great benefit to those affected by it.

Coming back to the other area, the experience in the United States, when you look at the amount of dollars being pumped into the system, you will find that in Canada we will spend on a per capita basis three times the amount of money spent in the United States. We are beginning to realize that you have to tie that to the private sector because it is on the leading edge of technological change and it sees it every day because it is out in the marketplace. I think that is where we should be putting more of our funds.

Mr. Gilchrist: Mr. Speaker, the subject raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) is of course a very sensitive point and an important subject. It has been responded to in a sensitive manner by the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), and I would like to pose a question to him.

I was distressed to hear him say that he felt the Government was unable to do very much about youth unemployment. He advocated looking at futuristic conferences and planning for the world of tomorrow. All of which, of course, any thinking person would agree with. But has he not been involved in discussions within his own Party and the Government on matters affecting the country today? Unemployment is not a new phenomenon, nor is the information society of which he speaks now. I am distressed that the budget papers say that the existing tax structure in support of research and future jobs is complicated and somewhat arbitrary and falls well short of the Government's to target assistance. The budget papers then go on to advocate more planning, thinking and discussion.

Does the Hon. Member not believe that the discussion part should be well behind us now and that it is time for action? It is clearly known what the opportunities of the information age are for Canadians, and that it will take massive support, but at the same time it provides massive opportunity. I would like to know what specifically he advocates rather than just talking around the subject.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks two questions. First he said that he is disappointed because I say that the youth unemployment level is going to remain high for the next two or three years. Let us say that someone asks you, right after the budget: what is this going to do for Canada's unemployed? The figures used show that in order to bring down effectively the unemployment rate in Canada from the present level of roughly 12.4 per cent to 10 per cent an additional stimulus of $12 billion to $13 billion to the economy would be needed. We clearly do not have that kind of manoeuvring room. The unemployment situation is a priority but, quite frankly, we cannot spend ourselves out of unemployment. That cost is far too high. When I say that, I do not want to create any false expectations among Canadian youths. The fact that we are placing this emphasis on increasing by some 25 per cent the amount of moneys put into youth employment programs this summer, does not necessarily mean that the problem will go away.

On behalf of many people on this side of the House I can say that we have been advocating research and development. I think the Government has listened, and Hon. Members opposite can argue that it has not listened well enough in terms of the Cabinet process. We should be putting far more money and emphasis on research and development. If we consider the commitment from the 1980 budget through to the 1983 budget, we find that there has been an increasing importance placed by the Government on the need to put more money into research and development. I could not agree more with Hon. Members of this institution. If I had my "druthers", I would place a tremendous amount of money into research and development because the spin-offs would ultimately do the largest amount of good with respect to unemployment four or five years down the road. If we do not put our money into research and development, we will not develop the leading technological edge and our share of the world market in the information system.

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in participating in the debate today, I identify with the concern raised in the Opposition motion, the concern which focuses on the tragic implications of the economic policies of the Government which have resulted in 24 per cent unemployment amongst Canadian young people, and which deny reasonable job prospects to the 300,000 young Canadians graduating from post-secondary institutions this Spring.

Today I have had the opportunity to be in touch with universities in my constituency. During the weekend, while attending a reception for the retiring student president at the University of Waterloo, a young man said to me, "Mr. McLean, I want to come to your office because I want to find some work. I am not just concerned about work and payments, but I would appreciate it if you could help me find work where I can gain some work experience, even if I am paid very little or nothing. After completing three years of study, it is most upsetting to find that I have been somehow relegated to a position where I find myself without meaningful entry into the work force". He reflects what we as parliamentarians are hearing across the country, the concern on the part of many young people that somehow they are not a part of society, that they are expected somehow to sit and wait at the convenience of the Government or powers that be and may then enter, if things work out, into the life of Canada.

At the moment, the statistics before us present not only a serious economic but also a serious social question. I want to suggest that the Government, in focusing on employment measures, has not focused on the social implications and the potential unrest of our energetic young people. Second, it has almost totally ignored the sector of our society best equipped to engage these young people, to give them an apprenticeship, to give them some type of internship which would permit them then to enter into the life of Canada.

As we engage in this debate on April 26, we are faced with the fact that 40 per cent of the 1.6 million Canadians who are unemployed are young people. We have been told that in March there were 621,000 unemployed young people. As we know, young people comprise only 25 per cent of the labour force, yet in March. Statistics Canada reported that the over-all unemployment rate for Canadians of all ages was 12.6 per cent. The percentage of unemployed young people is almost double the over-all percentage, reportedly 21.3 per cent.

Looking ahead through the fiscal year 1983-84, the Government suggests that it will spend $260 million on youth employment measures. As we know, $100 million was allocated to summer student employment schemes prior to the April 19 budget, and $160 million was allocated as a result of the new budgetary measures. As we look at these studied estimates for the 1983-84 year, we find that expenditures on youth employment measures are to be as follows: the Summer Canada Employment Program, $170 million; youth internships and job Corps, $20 million; Defence Youth Program, $60 million; and Katimavik, $10 million. As I consider these announcements, I do not find that they bring a great echo of encouragement.

In speaking today to the Registrar at Wilfrid Laurier University, he told me that approximately 940 students will be entering the work force this summer. However, his comment was that the university graduate is still the most likely to find employment, according to his statistics, because it is more advantageous to fund post-secondary education rather than the unemployment cushion. However, he suggested that of those going out, the great majority from the University are still without significant hope.

The Registrar's Office of the University of Waterloo, which has a world class program of cooperative education, stated that there will be approximately 2,600 students graduating at the convocation this Spring. The final figures, of course, have not been exactly determined. However, this is the estimate with respect to a university student population of close to 20,000. The head of graduate placement, Tom Fitzgerald, told me today that although no final figures are yet known, placement is definitely down from last year. The number of employers recruiting graduates is down by more than 50 per cent over the last calendar year. Approximately one in four engineering graduates has a permanent position to which to go. Only two areas are doing well: computer science and electrical engineering. Science graduates are doing about 25 per cent as well.

With this particular situation in mind, I want to turn my attention for a few moments to the capacity to absorb not only the university-trained graduates, the great majority of whom are not optimistic, but also many of those who are leaving secondary institutions. Where can they be incorporated? How can we somehow begin to take them into the life of the country? The Government proposes several areas, but they are relatively low in employment numbers. For example, the Defence Youth Program will provide work for 5,000 over two years, and Katimavik will provide experience for 4,000 over two years. We are dealing with large numbers in the universities in my own area. In terms of the national picture, we begin to realize the size of the problem we are facing.

We have been hearing from agencies such as the Canadian Council on Social Development and others about the social implications of not addressing the employment situation. For a moment let me share an excerpt from "Youth: The Forgotten Generation A Study of Skill. Training and Apprenticeship Programs in Metro Toronto", dated February of 1982. That report says:

• (1740)

In the past, society looked to its youth to be the future strength of communities. But even then too many youths were left behind. Now the problem has grown worse. The aged, the aging, the training of high-tech workers and other special needs groups gained most of the attention.

Today's youths are being forgotten as we are distracted by continual economic crises and rapidly changing technology. Personal alienation and the risks of social unrest have become substantial and appear to be worsening.

It was in the context of this social concern for the potential of this group that the YMCA, one of our significant national voluntary agencies, undertook a pilot project. It proposed 104 jobs to the CCSP Program of employment. They all had objectives related to the development of volunteers, staff development, social development and program benefits. They stated in their report that the support of jobs of this nature has double benefits in that jobs are created and at the same time some kind of community need is addressed that might otherwise have to be paid for by the Government.

I have a report from the YMCA Canada Community Service project study which was piloted by the YMCA here in Ottawa. This project report has some very interesting statistics which illustrate the information which has been brought forward by the National Voluntary Organizations Coalition. It suggests to the Government in its brief, addressed to both the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), that there is an enormous job creation and retraining capacity in the voluntary sector, and that this capacity in particular can be related to the high unemployment of our Canadian youth.

It is very interesting that the budget ignores the voluntary sector with the exception of the reduction of the $100 charitable deduction. The Minister of Finance tries to portray to the country and the House that he is somehow doing the voluntary sector a favour by removing that $100 deduction, but he has failed to give any incentives to the voluntary agencies of this country. As Members of the House know, there are over 40,000 registered charities.

I will return to this statistical analysis project conducted by the YMCA as an illustration of the capacity of this sector. Members of the House may ask who these groups are who have been excluded from the incentives that the Government has put forward. Let me go through the list of Members of the NVO Coalition. There we find the names of the churches of Canada, Big Brothers, the Boy Scouts of Canada. We find such groups as amateur hockey associations, associations for the prevention of crime, the Association for the Mentally Retarded, Neighbourhood Services and the Association for the Deaf. There is the Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women and the Council for Youth. We find the Mental Health Association, the Red Cross, the 4-H Council and the Girl Guides of Canada. There is the John Howard Society, the National Councils of the YM-YWCA, OXFAM, the Native Council of Canada, the Salvation Army and the Unitarian Service Committee. There is La fédération des femmes du Québec. There is an ongoing list of national voluntary agencies.

These agencies, which are represented in the brief that was presented to the Minister, are charities which took in some $5.6 billion in 1980, which is equivalent to 11 per cent of all federal Government revenues, or almost 2 per cent of the Gross National Product. Their wage bill alone was $1.7 billion in 1980 and was estimated to compensate 173,000 workers. This represents 1.6 per cent of the employed workers in Canada, twice as many as are directly employed in the forest industry, one-quarter of all employed in public administration at all levels of Government, or all the employed workers in Newfoundland. We are talking about a sector which has 2.7 million Canadians who volunteered 373 million hours in 1979-80.

This large economic unit is offered no incentive, no encouragement to be part of an employment strategy, particularly when so many of them are youth-related. Canada's 40,000 charities approximately must be seen as a considerable economic force and as part of the response to the current unemployment crisis, particularly as it concerns the youth focus.

I suggest that the Government can address the key issues which have been put forward by the Coalition. The Government has suggested that it has studied these proposals, but then it removed the $100 standard charitable deduction as if that were somehow an incentive to these agencies with all of their capacity to begin to use it for job creation and retraining.

While speaking of the capacity of this sector, let me elaborate on the pilot project of the YMCA. There are 45 associations which proposed 104 jobs for a total of $1,187,377. Thirty-six associations received support for 48 jobs, for a total of just over $500,000. Of the 48 jobs created, 36 of them are projected to be permanent. The success rate of permanent job creation is 75 per cent.

These categories of jobs include physical education and fitness, community development, pre-school children's programs, international development, rehabilitation services, education and program administration. Eighty-five per cent of those hired fall within one of the Government's affirmative action target groups. The estimated potential of new job creation at present is between 75 per cent and 80 per cent. I am trying to suggest to the House that given today's statistics of youth unemployment at double the national average and given the need to deal with the potential alienation of our young people, this Government ought to be censured and condemned for its failure to involve this sector in addressing this serious problem with all the implications for social unrest and alienation if young people are not considered.

I suggest that if the national voluntary agencies were offered an incentive through tax incentives, they could have their funding increased and be able to maintain their independence to do their own work. Instead, the Government chooses to tell these agencies that they will have grants available from time to time through existing programs if those agencies do what the Government says. If we are to maintain the vibrance and vitality of this sector, it is important that these agencies have a sense of making their own plans and are not beholden to anyone else or somehow forced to stay in line through the control of Government funding. Instead, there should be some trust in this sector.

One needs only to look at the list of agencies to understand the sense of involvement, the hours of voluntary activity and the skills of those volunteers. One can see their willingness to train others and in the process of helping our young people give them some sense of involvement in the community and eventually provide them with a skill which they can offer.

We are told that the unemployment rates will not decrease dramatically and that it will take time. It has been suggested that we must put some short-term operations in place while we wait. It is a proven fact that the voluntary sector of this country can engage young people quickly and place them in jobs, provide training and involve them in the life of the community.

The Canadian Federation of Students, a national post-secondary student organization representing almost half a million students, has been expressing its concerns to me. The students were responding to a proposal put forward by a Member, a supporter of the Government, regarding the youth employment capacity of our Canadian Forces. The suggestion was that there would be a creation of some 20,000 jobs. We notice now the figure is 5,000 over a two-year period. What the Government says in response to that is that this country's economy and the unemployed youth in this country do not need band-aid solutions to the chronic unemployment and under-employment crisis. They go on to call for the implementation of the strategy outlined in the Employment Opportunities for the 80s Task Force, "Work for Tomorrow". Rather than short-term schemes, they ask the Government to support projects which will have an involvement in the life of the community and will give some life skills of lasting duration. This is the direction the national voluntary agencies could offer that the proposals the Government has put forward do not offer.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in closing this debate for the NDP, I am grateful for the opportunity to say a few words. I understand I am to share my time with a Member of the Government Party and I thank him for giving me a few comments to put some comments and suggestions on the record.

The debate today has indicated the seriousness of the situation that confronts young people in terms of their future, in terms of employment, in terms of asking themselves where they are going. As human beings they must be asking themselves, what should they do with their lives? It is not just a question of youth unemployment; it is a question of unemployment generally. But it is our young people who are on the edge of experiencing a problem which all of society will be experiencing.

When we look at young people and the dilemma they face, we see the terrible social costs already. For example, the suicide rate among young people between the ages of 15 and 24 has quadrupled since 1940. There is a lack of sense of future, of hope, of a sense of direction and a sense of purpose which creates not just economic difficulties but psychological and social difficulties for the young, and I would say for society as a whole.

Perhaps instead of going through all the terrible frustration, anxiety and lack of hope that young people face, can I in the few moments I have try to flip the coin and talk about some of the hope that could exist but does not? Surely in this day and age of tremendous technological innovation and progress occurring at a rate that we did not even dream about a few decades ago, we should look at the calamity this is creating, particularly for our youth. We have to ask ourselves how this can be rectified. How can the potential of our age be fulfilled? The point has to be made that if we begin to fulfil that potential, it has to be among the young people. To resolve the dilemmas of our present economic and social system we should begin to utilize the energy and the ingenuity of our youth. Canada is a well educated nation. We have to utilize our potential. This is surely the challenge that we as Members of Parliament from all political Parties must face.

I think that in many ways the debate has been a non-partisan one. There is much to blame the Government for, but the problem goes deeper than just different political philosophies. The problem goes to the root of what is the purpose of life in this new coming age.

This is the beginning of the debate. It is a debate that we should have in this House on many more occasions. I look forward to opportunities to participate in these debates and to add my suggestions and the suggestions of my colleagues in the hope that solutions can be found before it is too late.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon two charges have been levied against the Government. The first is that the Government is unaware of the extent and the nature of the problem of youth unemployment. The second, besides this lack of awareness, is that we have done very little or nothing to respond to the problem in an effort to solve it.

I would like to demolish the first argument by saying that I doubt there is any Government or any politician in the western world who is not aware of this problem. I was delighted to hear the remarks of the last speaker which stand in contrast to the remarks of the speaker of this Party who initiated the debate. The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) said that this is really a non-partisan issue. He is absolutely right. This problem is so fundamental and the solution to it is so important that I believe it should stand above partisan politics, both in the House and in other institutions.

The second charge, that the Government has done nothing about the problem, is a charge I hear frequently from Members of the NDP. I heard it in my riding several months ago. I shared a platform with a Member of the New Democratic Party who told the audience that the Government had done nothing.

In reply I asked him what he would like us to do. He said that he thought we should put together a package of programs to retrain kids, counsel and direct them. I asked him what else he would like us to do and how much money he would spend on those programs. He told me $1 billion at least. I told him that is what we have done already. The National Training Act, which was proclaimed in 1982, did exactly that. It will spend close to $1 billion in retraining, counselling and directing youths. All the things the Opposition want us to do have been done. To supplement that program there will be money spent on the Skills Growth Fund, on the COPS Program and the various programs enunciated in the budget.

This afternoon I went through the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the provisions it has for youth unemployment. I counted up in excess of half a billion dollars worth of programs being directed toward youth. I imagine a lot of Members of the Opposition might say, "Well, $1.5 billion is a lot of money." But in the context of this problem it is not enough. These things only constitute ad hoc band-aid programs. But I would argue that any Government must respond with the tools that it has at its disposal. It does not matter whether the Government is a Liberal Government, a Social Credit Government, a Progressive Conservative Government, or a NDP Government. You always respond to the problem with the tools at hand. Frankly, I think any person who wants to be fair and reasonable in his judgment of the Government's response to this problem would have to conclude that this Government, using the tools and the limited resources it has at its disposal, has responded extremely well. I think it should get high marks from every fair critic for its response.

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

BILINGUALISM—KATIMAVIK PROGRAM—REFUSAL TO HIRE ANGLOPHONE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I sought this opportunity to clarify some points raised through a question in the House of Commons on April 25, at which time I asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) to explain why a constituent in Peterborough by the name of Geoffrey Webb was denied employment with Katimavik, a national program, because he was not bilingual. Mr. Webb took the opportunity to draw to my attention that he answered an advertisement which appeared in a Toronto newspaper. The advertisement indicated that Katimavik was seeking group leaders to work in the Toronto area. One qualification to become a group leader with Katimavik was that the applicant must indicate his willingness to become bilingual. I suggest that nowhere in the ad—and I will submit it for the record—does a statement appear which indicates that in order to apply one must be bilingual.

Mr. Webb received a reply from the Katimavik Human Resource Manager of the Ontario Regional Office, Chapel Street, Ottawa, Ontario, which very specifically indicated in its first reason for the denial of Mr. Webb's application for employment the following:

> We require leaders who are functionally bilingual and who pursue a conserver lifestyle in keeping with the Katimavik objectives.

On further investigation of his application I thought as far as a conserver lifestyle that with his involvement of three years with the armed services, his trips throughout Canada in the capacities of sales representative, production manager, and traffic manager, and his being stationed for three years as an armed service recruit in Calgary, Alberta, followed by another three years in Germany, the least they could have done was give this gentleman an interview.

However, in the interests of pursuing the issue, I asked Mr. Webb if he would be kind enough to apply for the other position, that of district co-ordinator. We must bear in mind that the job was in Toronto, Ontario. The advertisement indicated that it was located in a district comprising the Greater Toronto and surrounding area. He applied for the district co-ordinator's job and was not even given the courtesy of an interview for the following reason:

> Because of the large number of applications received in response to our organization's advertisement for the position of District Co-ordinator we have had to apply a screening process to reduce the number invited for personal interview to manageable proportions.

This resulted in a further inquiry on my part to find out exactly what were the terms of reference for jobs in Katimavik. I have had conversations with the body responsible for Katimavik known as OPCAN. I have had discussions with the staff of the office of the Secretary of State. A Mr. John O'Sullivan very kindly pointed out to me today that if a person was found to be bilingual this would be the ideal situation, meaning that if they could find a bilingual person in downtown Toronto for these programs he would be considered ideal and from there they would work with the remaining qualifications. I suggest that the House of Commons give serious consideration to the ramifications of that decision.

In the Province of Ontario we have over eight million people, of which only 475,000 are Francophones. I would suggest, and I stand to be corrected, that many of those Francophones might not even qualify because they themselves would not all be in Toronto. We are dealing with an ad in The Globe and Mail asking for workers in Toronto and we are immediately reducing potential Katimavik Program employees to somewhat less than 5 per cent of 8,264,000 the total population of the Province of Ontario.

The step that Mr. Geoffrey Webb of Peterborough is now pursuing is this letter which has been sent to the Human Rights Commission in Ottawa, Ontario, to the attention of Mr. Gordon Fairweather:

> I am lodging a complaint of discrimination against the Katimavik Programme.
> I answered an advertisement in the Toronto Newspaper in March 1983 for a Group leader (Copy enclosed) but my application was refused because I was not functionally Bilingual. Whereas the advertisement stated that I must indicate my willingness to become so.
> I also answered the next advertisement (Copy enclosed) for a district co-ordinator but again was refused this—

The reasons were given in that letter which I read into the record, in reply to in his second application. There were literally no reasons given for the refusal other than that he had one of far too many to consider being given an interview.

I would be interested in the Minister's response to the question whether he intends, through his Parliamentary Secretary, to assure this House that the qualifications as specified in the advertisement will be adhered to, so that totally bilingual people are not the only ones who can become part of the Katimavik leadership or district co-ordinator employee classification.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the comments made by the Hon. Member, I must say that he has amply demonstrated his ignorance with respect to the Katimavik Program. The Hon. Member is claiming that since Katimavik has projects in Toronto and the number of anglophones in Toronto is very substantial, the person in question would not have to use French. Now, I think most people are aware of the Hon. Member's views on the subject, and some people—I am not naming any names—would even go so far as to call him a frog basher. In any event, Katimavik projects cover a wide spectrum of Canadians, and a project leader must be able to communicate with participants. A representative sample of Canadians, although my hon. colleague opposite may find this most disturbing, would have to include Francophones, and these people must be able to communicate with their group leader. That has been the policy of Katimavik from the outset. Mr. Speaker, I would even say that the raison d'être of Katimavik is to bring Francophones and Anglophones together. It is too bad the Hon. Member has never taken part in this program, since it might have broadened his mind a bit.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is absolutely disgusting the way the Hon. Member is trying to launch an indirect attack on our policy of bringing together francophones and anglophones in Canada. He has been doing this since he became a Member of the House, and quite frankly, I think his francophobia is preventing him from learning what Canada is all about and from acquiring a proper appreciation of Katimavik, a program that was set up so that his children will not have the same aversion to bilingualism and to Francophones.

Mr. Speaker, I think Katimavik is entirely justified in wanting to have group leaders who are able to communicate with all participants, as is indeed the case throughout Canada.

BANKS AND BANKING—RENEGOTIATION OF LOANS—AMOUNT OF PENALTY. (B) PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS WITH HIGH INTEREST MORTGAGES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, on April 25 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) a question which I consider to be of vital importance.

Almost daily, I receive correspondence and telephone calls from constituents who were forced to renew mortgages and loans during the period of excessively high interest rates. I am sure the Minister remembers those rates. At the same time he was issuing Canada Savings Bonds at an interest rate of 19.5 per cent. Of course that lasted for only a year, and they were then renewed at 12 per cent.

The Minister in his answer said that the Bank of Canada does not establish the bank rate. He is of course technically correct in his answer, but we all know that the bank does play a role albeit behind the scenes in determining how the auction of treasury bills proceeds.

I find it incredible that he refuses to even consider the plight of those Canadians stuck with high interest rate loans and mortgages. In many cases the banks and trust companies are asking for penalties of $9,000 and $10,000 to bring loans down to current rates. Reports in the Toronto papers of two weeks ago state that a $10,000 penalty is not uncommon at banks and trust companies in Toronto.

Contradictory to the Minister's answer to my supplementary question, most of the cases I have been made aware of are not short-term loans and may not be renegotiated without a penalty clause, such as he mentions. The lending institutions have protected themselves, probably quite properly, with these clauses.

Who is going to help these people? Must they continue to pay up to twice the amount in loan payments for the next four years because they were forced to renew when this Government was sponsoring a policy of high interest rates? They are left with no alternative; they cannot afford the penalties required in their loan agreement. The federal Government is the only body that can do anything about this situation.

How can the Minister be so callous as to suggest that he has no responsibility toward these people. I repeat, this anwer is not acceptable to me or, I am sure, to any other Member of this House, as it indicates that the Government feels no responsibility at all to citizens adversely affected by its policy decisions.

The budget of April 19 is another example of this. The Minister of Finance reallocated some money to help farmers in financial distress, but just enough to say he had done something. He announced a great new special recovery plan. The announced capital projects under this plan will keep a number of people employed, but I do not see any new jobs. All I see is the acceleration of already planned projects and the propping up of troubled Canadair. Again, the Government is ignoring the long-term need of our constituents for jobs, just as the Minister chooses to ignore my request for assistance for those paying unduly high interest rates on their homes.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have to say that today is not a good day for the banks in the House of Commons. I have just come from the Agriculture Committee where we were talking about farmers needing to renegotiate loans. I was involved in giving a blast to the banks about disclosure of one farmer's private business and income. As I rise to answer this question about the banks affairs I must say I am doing so with a certain degree of impatience towards the banks.

In the past the Minister has welcomed Members of Parliament who came to him and told him about specific details of a given mortgage. I think that offer should be renewed to the Hon. Member as he seems to have forgotten it.

Let us be practical, Mr. Speaker. When a mortgage is short-term, a three-month penalty is too much to pay to renegotiate it. The three-month penalty would be higher than many of the benefits householders would gain by renegotiating. The Hon. Member has an obligation to stand up and admit that point, which he jumped over in his speech.

Officials have informed me that at one major lending institution 85 per cent of home loans negotiated last year were for a period of six months. What good would a three-month penalty do a home owner under those circumstances, yet a three-month penalty would be the very minimum anyone could hope to negotiate with the banks, be he an ordinary home owner or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

The three-month penalty is the standard that developed in the 1970s. For many home owners it would not be worth their while to take a three-month penalty for the sake of a lower interest rate. A little work with a pencil and paper would help the Hon. Member decide whether he is talking about a situation which is to the benefit of his constituents or is opposed to their interests. We need a little less rhetoric from him and more practical thinking.

The Minister is willing to hear when people have legitimate problems, but does not want to be drowned in requests that are made just to get the ordinary Member off the hook.

FINANCE—REGISTERED CHARITIES TAX PROPOSAL. (B) CALCULATION OF BENEFITS TO GOVERNMENT AND CHARITIES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to pursue the question I addressed yesterday to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) regarding the way he has distorted the position of the voluntary organizations of this country.

The budget removes the automatic $100 charitable deduction, while rejecting the recommendation for a tax credit on receiptable charitable donations. The Minister blithely says he has accepted one recommendation and has rejected the other. Let me quote from the letter of Andrew Cohen, chairperson of the National Voluntary Organizations Tax Reform Committee, who wrote to the Minister of Finance on April 20, 1983, the day after the budget, as follows:

—our suggestion for the removal of this provision (the $100 standard deduction) was inextricably linked to our proposal for a 50 per cent tax credit for all charitable donations.

As envisaged by the coalition of National Voluntary Organizations, the elimination of the standard $100 charitable deduction was proposed primarily as a logical means for Governments to realize the revenue which would be required to finance this 50 per cent tax credit. In short, the budget deceitfully ignores the "give and take" concept which I supported in my Private Member's Motion on June 8, 1980, and which has been put forward repeatedly by the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean).

Incidentally, the Minister of Finance himself supported "give and take" resoundingly in public three years ago. All he wants to do now is to take without any give. The Government's move is a thinly disguised tax grab which, according to Table 3.2 of The Fiscal Plan, will net Ottawa an estimated $380 million over the next four years. Yet, according to Mr. Cohen, finance officials have been opposing "give and take" on the grounds that the elimination of the $100 standard charitable deduction would not yield any significant revenue. They claim that most taxpayers were already giving close to this $100. Indeed, they even suggested that they would have no hesitation in implementing "give and take" if there was the assurance that the removal of the $100 deduction would generate the revenue to pay for it. They cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. Moreoever, given Government's well-known reluctance to forfeit a tax field once it has been occupied, charitable organizations have lost their strongest, self-financing card for pushing for "give and take".

From a narrow point of view, the idea of a charitable tax credit is much more progressive than that of personal tax exemptions which are based on marginal tax rates. Much more fundamentally, "give and take" would give real incentives to contribute to charities, providing the nation's voluntary sector with a badly needed firm financial foundation. Otherwise, they will be dependent on Government handouts, leaving all kinds of room for arbitrary and inefficient Government interference. This is especially worrisome at a time when the position of the voluntary sector remains tenuous, particularly in terms of the definition of a charity having regard to political activities.

In brief, this budget, Mr. Speaker, ignores the social and economic contribution which 47,000 registered charitable organizations make to Canada. They provide 175,000 jobs, more than the construction industry, with an annual wage bill of $1.7 billion and total revenues of $5.6 billion, which is fully 3 per cent of the GNP. And these jobs are labour-intensive by nature, giving work to the disadvantaged, such as women, youth, part-timers and so on. The voluntary sector creates one full-time position at a cost equal to one-third of that required for the federal Government. Why have these facts been ignored in a budget premised on fighting unemployment? Why does this Government refuse to give charities in this country their rightful place in the sun? Why has the Minister of Finance not brought in the "give and take" proposal?

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to comment. May I begin by quoting from the official briefing note I was given by the Department on this issue. The Department of Finance is currently undergoing careful study of this and alternative structures for charitable contributions. Until the study is completed it will not be possible to ascertain fully the relative merit of a flat credit or any alternative structure.

There seem to be three or four very important technical concerns at stake here, Mr. Speaker. First, we are concerned that a tax credit could easily turn into a disincentive. Tax credits, unless they are at a very high level, will not stimulate the people who traditionally give to certain types of charities. Education, arts and culture particularly, are charities which are sensitive to high income givers. A low tax credit will not be an effective stimulant for people in those income brackets. What we are looking at is a 50 per cent or higher tax credit which is needed in these areas. In order to finance that we would have to pay a minimum of $100 million in foregone tax revenues. This would also involve considerable complexity with regard to the income tax form, and there would be a need for federal-provincial agreements. None of these technical questions have been answered yet. The Department is taking them seriously but they do not have a ready, quick-witted answer to give the Hon. Member when he asks his question.

I would say, however, that the standard deduction was ended for two other reasons. First, it is not intended to be simply an extension of the personal deduction. Second, we were advised by charities that many people were using it that way rather than as an incentive or convenience to charitable giving. We wanted to move this issue along, we did not want to sit on it. We have listened to the charities and, as the Minister said to the Hon. Member yesterday, charities got half of that for which they were asking. I hope the Member will take our assurances that the other half is taken seriously, but we simply do not have ready answers for all the complexities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At 6.24 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE UKRAINE

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF GREAT FAMINE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, 1983 marks the 50th anniversary of the Great Famine of 1932-1933 in which over seven million Ukrainians perished. Besides its horrific magnitude, what makes this famine different from most is that it was a planned act of genocide on the part of Stalin's Soviet Government. In the words of journalist Malcolm Muggeridge who witnessed this event:

> The novelty of this particular famine, what made it so diabolical is that it was the deliberate creation of a bureaucratic mind, without any consideration whatever of the consequences in human suffering.

Planned famine was used as an instrument of national policy to break down resistance to Government efforts to collectivize the farming community. In the four years preceding 1932, Stalin and the Central Committee purposely estimated unrealistically high yields and thereupon established maximum supply quotas. When producers could not meet these quotas, they were accused of stealing, hoarding, and sabotage. In the fall of 1932 the authorities confiscated all food which could be found. By the spring of 1933, Ukrainian peasants were dying at a rate of 25,000 a day.

This tragedy must not be forgotten. It is important that history accurately portray the Stalinist régime for what it was, an unspeakably ruthless régime. The Ukrainian people have been the subject of many trials and tragedies, but none greater than this despicable famine. It in part explains why the Canadians of Ukrainian—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —and why they are willing to contribute so freely—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order. I would just like to remind Hon. Members that this is the first time an Hon. Member has not put an end to his statement when I indicated that the 90 seconds were over.

TOURISM

CONDEMNATION OF BUDGET MEASURES AFFECTING INDUSTRY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, as Hon. Members of the House are well aware, I have repeatedly urged the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that, because of its geographical dispersion, because of the volume of cash flow it generates, and because of the ripple effect it causes throughout the economy, any serious attempt to breathe life into the hoped for recovery should start with the tourist industry. This massive but unrecognized giant is the second largest industry in the country, employing 1,100,000 persons and generating $16.5 billion in revenues. More than any other, this sector can attract both Canadian and offshore money and spread it throughout the economy. Encouragement of this industry is the encouragement of the economy as a whole.

In light of these demonstrable facts, the recent budget has not only done nothing for this industry, it has in fact taken the opposite tack. Effective October 1, 1984, it increases the excise tax on alcoholic beverages, and the four-cent a gallon "Canadian ownership charge", despite the original reason for its existence having been accomplished, has been left intact on the price of gas at the pump. It is almost as though the Government is saying to Canadians, "Go and holiday somewhere else. We don't want your business!" Perhaps the Government does not, but let me assure you that the tourist operators of Parry Sound-Muskoka, and throughout the rest of Canada, do.

HOUSING

REGISTERED HOME OWNERSHIP SAVINGS PLANS—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, it was recently pointed out to me by a constituent who had signed an offer to purchase a residential property and subsequently verified that once an RHOSP is collapsed and the cheque representing the proceeds from the plan are cashed, there is no possibility of having the RHOSP re-instated. While I can appreciate the over-all rationale behind this provision, I believe that there should be exceptions to the rule. One which I have in mind concerns allowing re-instatement in the RHOSP in the event that, through no fault of the prospective purchaser, the property transaction does not close.

As the many lawyers in the House will appreciate, properties often fail to be conveyed at closing because of some condition not being met. At this stage of the transaction, financing has already been arranged by the purchaser, including collapsing the RHOSP.

While the regulations governing RHOSPs provide that the owner of the collapsed plan has up to three years within which to purchase a home and claim the deduction on his income tax, someone who collapses a RHOSP but whose attempt to buy a property falls through is no longer eligible to make tax-free contributions to it and collect tax-free interest on the funds contained in the plan. Since this seems unconscionable to me, I would strongly urge the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) to look into the possibility of allowing such unfortunate individuals as those referred to above to be re-instated in a RHOSP even if a reasonable administration fee has to be imposed.

HEALTH

HAZARDS TO CHILDREN FROM LEADED GASOLINE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, as the New Democratic Party health critic, I would like to urge the Government to respond quickly and decisively to the demands of various groups concerned with the health of Canadian children that action be taken to speed up the leaded gasoline phase-down program. As advertisements taken out by these groups have stressed, there has been repeated scientific proof of the hazards to the health of children posed by environmental lead and of the severe neurological damage caused by high blood levels.

Since lead is particularly toxic to the brain and nervous system of the growing child, and since children ingest and inhale more of the lead in their environments because of their play habits, Government inaction on this pollution issue constitutes a continuing health risk to Canadian children.

Urban children are most at risk. Measurements taken in downtown Canadian cities show lead levels three to six times greater than average levels. While Canada was a world leader in the removal of lead from many indoor paints in the 1930s, it now lags behind the United States and most European countries in addressing the problem of pollution from leaded gasoline.

On March 11 the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) announced his plans to speed up the leaded gasoline phase-down program and he initiated a 60-day period for discussion and input before he reaches his final recommendation. I urge him to listen to those who are interested in the health of Canadian children and not to those who may have an economic self-interest in the continued marketing of leaded gasoline.

THE CONSTITUTION

ENTRENCHMENT OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I wish to advise that I categorically favour the entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution. Nevertheless, the reality is that property and civil rights are provincial constitutional matters. Property rights have been entrenched in the Alberta Bill of Rights since 1972 and they have not been difficult to live with.

The proposal of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for a one-day debate on the matter, agreed to by the Progressive Conservative caucus, is laudable, as the debate has gone on since the introduction of the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights. However, all should realize that the Prime Minister's proposal, if approved by seven Provinces having 50 per cent of the Canadian population, would be subject to the "notwithstanding" Clause as well as to the opting-out feature, by three Provinces. What would therefore be accomplished except a checkerboard of jurisdictional puzzles across the country?

Perhaps it would be more meaningful if the resolution proposed by the Prime Minister included two additional clauses—first, that property rights would not be subjected to the provincial "notwithstanding" section, and second, that Provinces would be permitted to opt-in to such a constitutional provision, instead of opting out, in their own good time, or when they elected Governments favouring such a constitutional amendment.

METRIC CONVERSION

RESULTS OF POLL OPPOSING COMPULSORY IMPOSITION

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to release a poll commissioned by the CKO Radio network and carried out by the firm of Ron Rotenberg and Associates, a private polling company. This poll was conducted in Metro Toronto and confirms similar polls taken by Loblaws, Dominion Stores, the Canadian Federation of Retail Grocers, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which proves that the vast majority of Canadian people in all age brackets do not support compulsory metric. The results were as follows.

First of all, "Do you personally feel that the use of metric measurement, that is, litres, kilograms and kilometres, et cetera, should be voluntary, that is, left up to the individual to decide if they want to measure in metric, or should the Government establish compulsory metric measurement by legislation?" Those voting for voluntary—66.8 per cent; Government legislation making it mandatory—only 28.4 per cent.

The second question was "In general, which measurement do you personally prefer, the Imperial measurements such as quarts, pounds, miles, et cetera, or the metric measurements such as litres, kilograms and kilometres?" Imperials 64.8 per cent; metric 26.6 per cent. Most important, Madam Speaker, in the age bracket of 18 to 29 years of age the result was 73.3 per cent for voluntary; only 26.7 per cent for compulsory.

I strongly urge the people of Canada to write the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), with copies to myself, pleading for a return to voluntary metric conversion similar to the process used in the United States and Great Britain.

STATUS OF WOMEN

WAGES EARNED BY WOMEN WORKERS—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT EXAMPLE

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, recent census data confirm that incomes of women continue to lag far behind those of men. More than 1.5 million women have joined the labour force since 1970, yet in ten years the wage gap has been reduced by only 4 per cent. Women still earn only 64 cents for every dollar earned by a man.

Thousands of Canadian women are underpaid and are raising children in poverty as a result of Government inaction. The Minister responsible for the status of women blames provincial Governments for the continuing low wages of women. Instead of passing the buck the federal Government must set an example. Her Government has repeatedly refused to implement mandatory affirmative action for public servants and contract compliance for firms that do business with the Government.

The Liberals guarantee continuing low wages for women through the six and five wage restraint, and have curtailed their bargaining rights. They have ignored the hard won rights of clerks and general service workers, most of whom are women.

The federal Government must set the example for Provinces to follow. It must ensure equal pay for work of equal value for all public servants, and insist on mandatory affirmative action in all sections of our country.

FISHERIES

RESTRUCTURING OF EAST COAST INDUSTRY—PLEA FOR ACTION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the failure of the Government to act decisively and with a sense of urgency concerning restructuring is doing serious and perhaps even permanent damage to the fragile economy of the Atlantic Provinces, especially Newfoundland, which is so dependent on the fishing industry which provides direct and indirect employment to over 80,000 people in the region. This industry is in the midst of the worst crisis in its history, a fact which did not even warrant mention in the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

The Cabinet has before it a number of proposals on restructuring, on fleet management and replacement, and its failure to act could seriously undermine our markets and is in fact playing into the hands of Canada's competitors. Yet six months after the report of the Kirby task force, the only response from the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), who is responsible for restructuring, is that he has been given a mandate to negotiate and that these negotiations are ongoing.

Thousands of jobs are at stake, Madam Speaker, and I plead with the Government to act, and act now.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

NATIONAL DEFENCE PATROL FRIGATES—AWARDING OF CONTRACT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. The Cabinet will soon be making a decision on which of the two finalists in the patrol frigate competition, St. John Shipbuilding or Scan Marine, will win the contract. As the Minister is probably aware, the St. John Shipbuilding bid favours the approach which was taken by the Cabinet. Will the Minister assure the House that the contract will be awarded on the basis of defence requirements and not on the basis of political interest?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that the criteria will be the best ship, the best industrial benefits, and the best Canadian content.

OWNERSHIP OF COMPETING SHIPYARDS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, when the Liberals came to power in 1980 they stalled this program for six months while they claimed they were Canadianizing the various consortia. Scan Marine was created by and is 49 per cent owned by Pratt & Whitney which, in turn, is 100 per cent owned by United Technologies of Connecticut. Saint John Shipbuilding is 100 per cent owned by the Irving Group of New Brunswick. Has the Government, in making its decision, given due consideration to the ownership of these two finalists?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased that the hon. gentleman has drawn the attention of the public to the fact that we wanted to Canadianize the bids and that we wanted to ensure that there were Canadian companies which were the lead companies in both bids, which is the case.

In terms of the criteria which will apply to the final selection, I refer the hon. gentleman to the previous reply which I gave, and I ask the hon. gentleman to await the final decision which I hope will be made at the end of the month of June or the beginning of the month of July this year.

ALLOCATION OF WORK

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): I would like to ask the Minister if the Government carried out the Conservative plan to have the consortia include, in their bids, cost comparisons for building the actual ships in more than one location, say, two ships in the Maritimes, two in the St. Lawrence area, and two on the West Coast. Has the Government considered dividing the actual shipbuilding work among up to three shipyards in order to speed the delivery of these much needed frigates, and to spread the employment benefits on a national basis throughout this very depressed industry?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I will take the hon. gentleman's question as a representation.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Take it seriously.

Mr. Blais: Unfortunately, the Tories were involved in this particular procurement for such a brief period of time that the records of what their representations may have been are rather scarce.

ORDER FOR WATER BOMBERS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister has announced plans to spend up to $147 million to buy 20 Canadair CL-215 water bombers under the Special Recovery Project. However, when we read the fine print we find that the Government is committed to purchasing only four water bombers. The other 16 will be ordered only on a matching basis with the Provinces.

How much is the Government actually spending on its four plane fleet, and why did the Minister purposely inflate the job creation figures, since his claim of 650 jobs assumes that all 20 water bombers are being built?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member had been present at the announcement, and if she had been in the House and paid attention to what I said before the House, she would realize that what we stressed was that we were purchasing four planes for the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, and that we would be purchasing up to 16 more planes on a matching basis. We have already received indications from over half the Provinces that they will be participating. I am quite confident that that requisite number of planes will be bought.

There are very good possibilities that on this domestic base there will be a further 20 planes sold internationally. That, of course, I cannot guarantee, but there seem to be good indications that that kind of purchase is likely to take place. All of these points were made abundantly clear, both at the press conference and in the House. I am glad to discover that the Hon. Member is finally catching up to what the significance of the announcement is.

COST OF CL-215 FLYING TIME

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the Minister of the Environment, who stressed the creation of 650 jobs which will not be in place until two and a half years from now, only if 20 water bombers are built.

• (1420)

The reason that only three Provinces have ordered the CL-215 in the last 25 years is because of its horrendous cost. A study by the Alberta Forest Service in 1976 stated that, at $8,277 per total hourly cost, the CL-215 was 11 times more expensive than the Canso water bomber which only cost $707 per total hourly cost. If those figures are adjusted for inflation, the cost per hour for the Canadair plane would be $15,000.

Given this high price tag for the CL-215, what assurance can the Minister give us that the Provinces will come up with their $100 million share, or is he offering the Provinces a cut rate deal?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I wish that the Hon. Member was aware of the fact that the CL-215 is undoubtedly the most adept airplane for this operation. It is not only a leader in Canada, it is a world leader.

She seems to be surprised or concerned about the cost of the purchase of the airplanes. I wish the Hon. Member was much more concerned about the potential of up to $350 million a year in fire losses as a result of not having this kind of capacity from that airplane.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—RESOLUTIONS OF LEGISLATURES OPPOSING PROPOSED CHANGES

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is he aware that the Manitoba legislature unanimously passed a resolution on March 15, 1983, rejecting the Pepin proposal, and is he also aware that this resolution concurs with that of the Saskatchewan legislature which was also unanimously passed on February 22, 1983? How can he possibly interpret this as being a consensus in the West, which the Prime Minister said he would have to have before moving on the Crow rate?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am very much aware of that and many other things as well.

JUSTIFICATION FOR MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, if the Minister is so aware of it, does he feel it is morally right for him to determine what is most beneficial for the farmers of the West when he is only supported by MPs from eastern Canada? Can he justify this unilateral action with the type of attitude he has displayed that is akin to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, since the Soviets determined what was beneficial for Afghanistan? How can he justify this hammer and sickle approach to the farmers of western Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I knew I was going to be asked a supplementary question and be given a chance to explain what I meant by my cryptic answer. What I meant by my cryptic answer was that at this moment in the West and the East, many people, groups and associations of all kinds, are in a bargaining position. They are bargaining.

I am sorry that I do not have the quotation from the Minister of Agriculture in Saskatchewan who said recently, on stating these nine points referred to, "When I negotiate with the feds, I do not show all of my cards." My point is that people are putting forward extreme positions. The nine points expressed in Saskatchewan were one of those extreme positions. In the next breath, the press conference that follows the announcement of those points usually shows more willingness to compromise than was shown in the first statement. That is what I meant.

RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT POLICY

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, the Minister is obviously aware of the falling prices that farmers are experiencing. How can he justify what I would call harrassment of the western farmers, since he is giving them a double whammy? How can he justify contemplating the abolishment of the Crow rate while at the same time continuing the abolishment of rail lines under the rail line abandonment policy that his Government has been following? How can he possibly justify that double whammy action against the farmers of western Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, with respect to the abandonment of branch lines, I believe the record should be well known. Of the branch line system we had in the 1930s, we still have 88 per cent in place with all the technological changes that have taken place since then. If there is one thing that Governments in the history of Canada should not be accused of, it is of having deliberately presided over the destruction of the branch line system. I repeat that 88 per cent of it is still in place.

On the subject of losses that would be incurred by western farmers if the statement that I made on February 1 were implemented while I should not say everyone, since some have more respect for the truth—many have said that there would be tremendous losses to the Saskatchewan farmers, for example, of possibly $1 billion. They usually forget to mention that there would have been a commitment of an average of $900 million per year on the part of the federal Government alone for the continuation of this operation. Also, they have neglected to mention that there would have been an investment of $16.5 billion over the decade by the railways. These are small points that are usually not brought up by those who take the negative approach to the statement I made on February 1.

FINANCE

INCOME SECURITY INVESTMENT PLAN

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question, I suppose, is for the Minister of State for Finance in the absence of the Minister of Finance and of the Minister of State for Economic Development. The Minister of State will know that the Income Security Investment Plan protects those who invest in the stock market against inflationary gains. Would the Minister advise us why only the big and the powerful are protected, and why those who invest in small business do not have the same advantages and fairness given to the big companies which have their stocks listed on the market?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I would draw to the Hon. Member's attention, if indeed in seriousness I had to, the other provisions of the special recovery tax provisions of the budget that offer, for example, tax relief to small business people. The share purchase provision of that special recovery tax feature of the budget permits Canadians, both small and large investors, to invest in small and large companies in Canada. They get the advantage of a 25 per cent reduction on the amount of their share purchase. In addition, that will assist both small and larger companies to grow. This advantage is generally available right across the spectrum to small investors and to small and large companies.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, it is unfortunate the Minister of State for Finance is so lost in the clouds. He does not understand that investment tax credits are only available to those who invest, and put people out of work.

POTENTIAL OF SMALL BUSINESSES TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, will the Minister of State for Finance tell us, if this is a recovery budget, why the Minister did not make sure that protection against capital gains that are caused by inflation was made available to those businesses that really create the jobs, that is, the small businesses and the medium-sized businesses? The Minister knows that every test on job creation indicates jobs are created by small business. Why are we not looking at job creation instead of protecting the big and the powerful?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Special Recovery Program in the budget of $4.8 billion is designed to do that exactly. It is designed to address the question of job creation, which was in the opening and closing remarks of the Minister of Finance. The budget is designed to do exactly that. The $4.8 billion is split in two ways. First, the $2.4 billion for capital infrastructure is designed to get people working in Canada right away. Second, the $2.4 billion in the investment section of the budget is designed to provide building blocks to get Canadians investing, to get small businesses working. The small business sector in that $2.4 billion part of the Special Recovery Program is weighted. Small businesses are given almost a 100 per cent advantage over large companies. The program is all directed toward creating jobs. When business is back at business, workers will be back at work.

AIR CANADA

RENTAL OF MONTREAL HEADQUARTERS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Would he advise the House whether the present RCMP investigation into the rental of Air Canada's headquarters in Montreal results from alleged conspiracy to defraud between July 1, 1982, and November 14, 1982, concerning a $3.6 million secret sweetheart deal involving the Chairman of the Board of Air Canada and three other named individuals?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I said the other day, and I stood on my head to attract attention, that I was not in a position to say anything on this inquiry.

Mr. Stevens: Why?

Mr. Pepin: I said then why I was not. This is an inquiry which is under the responsibility of the Minister of Justice. He has said repeatedly that he could not say more at this time. I take it my hon. friend respects that view. Presumably, in due course, when the inquiry has been completed, the conclusion will be known.

• (1430)

NEGOTIATION OF LANDING RIGHTS FOR TAP PORTUGUESE AIRWAYS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, this matter has been dragging on far too long. The Minister or the Minister of Justice should be able to come into the House today and give some indication of when this investigation started, when it is to be completed, and whether it includes the allegation that the Chairman of the Board received or accepted from TAP Portuguese Airways tickets to and from Montreal and Lisbon, Portugal, so that the three named people in the original allegation of fraud could travel back and forth from Montreal to Lisbon for their influence or help in acquiring landing rights for TAP at Toronto.

Since I have been informed that the Department of External Affairs in June or July will be undertaking further negotiations on landing rights, surely there must be some declaration from some Minister of the Crown as to what is going on with what is in effect the largest airline in the country. It is a Crown corporation and it has some responsibility to report to the people of Canada.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, in the past my hon. friend has usually shown an understanding of the traditions of Canada. I hope he will continue to do so. This is a situation in which the hon. gentleman's question would suggest that we should have a trial in the House, or that we should have a report to the House on facts which are the subject of a long investigation. That is a new doctrine in this country, and I hope Hon. Members of the Opposition will be the first to repudiate it.

TOURISM

GOVERNMENT COMPETING WITH PRIVATE INDUSTRY

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism I will direct my question to the Minister of Transport because his Department has caused some of the problems the tourist industry is experiencing at this point in time. It has been brought to my attention by the Greater Ottawa Hotel/Motel Association, and Canada's Capital Visitor's Convention Bureau, that the federal Government is unfairly competing with privately owned accommodation, meeting, and training facilities, by offering federally owned facilities at one-third to one-sixth of what private hotels must charge in order to survive. Could the Minister explain to the House how the federal Government can justify such artificially low pricing of Government facilities and using unfair booking practices, when the accommodation business is in such economic trouble?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, obviously this is beyond the reach of my own Department. I will bring it to the attention of the Minister responsible for tourism, but I doubt that he can resolve the problem of competition in Canada between the private sector and the public sector in one shot. I would suggest that my hon. friend meet with him and tell him all the facts as he understands them. It is impossible for a Minister to answer questions of such breadth.

RATES CHARGED BY CORNWALL TRAINING CENTRE

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, there is a complex in Cornwall, Ontario, which is supposed to be operated by the Department of Transport. It has 700 rooms, meeting facilities and recreational facilities. The price per day for a single occupancy room with three meals is 20 bucks. The Government claims that it is operating it on a cost recovery basis. Would the Minister explain what portion of the costs the Government is recovering when it is only charging $20 per day?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this centre which the Department has in Cornwall is well known by everybody. It is used extensively for the training of personnel in the area of transportation—air traffic controllers, pilots and the like. It has been a success. We are now training at Cornwall people coming from other countries of the world. It is recognized as a great asset to the country. I am quite sure that people in the Cornwall area are delighted with it. If my hon. friend wants to pick a fight with those people, I suggest he be very careful and arm himself quite substantially in order to resist the pressure he will get from them.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

THREATENED LOSS OF JOBS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Yesterday the Prime Minister indicated that he had no intention of requiring plants which were closing or moving their operations from one part of Canada to another or, for that matter, from one part of Canada to any other part of the world, to disclose publicly the reasons for their moves. Today we discover that the Government has no intention or no over-all strategy to protect the close to 80,000 jobs in the garment industry, most of which are in small communities in Quebec, parts of Ontario, and Manitoba. If the Government does not have any over-all strategy to protect those workers from the inevitable loss of their jobs, where does the Minister propose those people will find work?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is incorrect when he says that the Government has no policy with respect to protecting jobs in the textile, clothing and footwear industries. As a matter of fact the Government has taken substantial steps over the last ten or 15 years in terms of setting quotas with respect to many textile, clothing and footwear products across the country. Also, if I am not mistaken, I think Members of his own Party from different parts of the country have said that the Government of Canada had been protecting some of those industries far too long and in many cases should open up the door for more of these goods to help Third World countries. I am a little surprised by the question of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deans: I suppose you would have to believe your own rhetoric to believe that.

MODERNIZATION OF PLANTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the Minister of State for International Trade has just indicated that he has no intention of accepting the proposal made to him by the director of the clothing workers union to apply under GATT for some assistance in combating the erosion of the garment industry in Canada. Is it reasonable to sit by and watch small one-industry towns being devastated by inevitable closures which will take place as a result of Canada's inability to provide reasonable protection and reasonable assistance for the garment industry that employs the majority of workers in many small communities in Ontario and Quebec? If it is unreasonable to expect that, why does the Government not come forward with an over-all program to modernize and assist in the redevelopment of those industries so that those towns will not ultimately disappear?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am a little disappointed in the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deans: I do not care about that.

Mr. Lumley: Two years ago the Government of Canada, this Government, introduced a program called CIRB, or OCRI en français, to provide $267 million to do the very thing about which the Hon. Member just asked a question—to modernize and restructure the textile, clothing and footwear industries.

Mr. Deans: It has not worked.

Mr. Lumley: I hate to disagree with the Hon. Member, but he had better talk to the companies that have taken advantage of the $100-odd million which has already been spent. We undertook this as well as negotiated quotas for textiles and clothing across the country under the MFA. In the footwear industry, if I am not mistaken, the Hon. Member made representations for companies in his own riding for quotas on shoes—

Mr. Deans: That is right.

Mr. Lumley: —and the Government took action six months ago. I do not understand what the Hon. Member is basing his question on.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED UNITED STATES RESTRICTION ON IMPORTATION OF CANADIAN SCALLOPS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans I am not certain whether I should direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but perhaps one of these gentlemen will answer it. At the present time the count for scallops exported from Canada to the United States is 40 meats to the pound. On this basis the scallop industry alone last year was worth $88 million to Canada.

Since the Canadian industry will be devastated if the Americans follow through with their proposal to limit scallop imports to 30 meats to the pound on May 15, which is not very far away, I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is aware of the situation. If so, has he taken any steps whatsoever to encourage the Americans to accept the Canadian counterproposal of allowing us to ship into the United States 35 meats to the pound?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I want to be frank and tell the Hon. Member that I am not aware of this particular problem. I will examine it immediately.

Mr. Crouse: I simply want to emphasize what I have stated. If the proposal to limit imports from Canada to 30 meats to the pound is implemented by the United States, Canada will no longer have a viable scallop fishery.

BARRIER TO TRADE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, since many Canadians consider that the American proposal is actually a non-tariff barrier to trade between our two countries, will the Minister discuss the matter with his United States counterpart in the hope of resolving this important issue?

• (1440)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have on a number of occasions raised these questions with my counterpart in the United States. I have certainly raised the proposed investigation by the American tariff authorities into fisheries importations into the United States from Canada. I raised that question as a matter of concern, expressing our view that it is unnecessary for the Government of the United States to undertake a further investigation as to whether countervail is justified against fishery products because of previous investigations that have been undertaken which have proved that the case could not be made. Therefore, I will have no hesitation of raising this and other fisherey matters with the Secretary of State for the United States.

RESTRUCTURING OF EAST COAST FISHING INDUSTRY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. The Government's failure to reach a decision on restructuring of the Atlantic fishing industry is costing thousands of jobs, including jobs in the Minister's own constituency. Why has the Government not reached a decision on restructuring, and fleet management and replacement, both of which are critical to the Atlantic Provinces and the Atlantic fishing industry?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is no doubt aware that the Government has given a negotiating mandate to Mr. Kirby to hold discussions with the Provinces, the industry, and all interested parties. That negotiation is under way at the present time, as I understand it. It will be our intention to reach a decision as quickly as possible when the negotiations take a form that it will be possible for Mr. Kirby to report to the Government, the ad hoc committee, and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

COMPETING WITH WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS FOR ADVERTISING REVENUE

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post. I am sure the Minister is aware that Postmasters in small communities are now selling advertising in flyers to be printed and distributed by the Post Office to all those who receive mail. This is having a detrimental effect on the weekly newspapers in these small communities which rely on advertising dollars to sustain themselves. Why is the Post Office moving in this direction in direct competition with the small weekly newspapers, by selling advertising in flyers? What is the Minister going to do about it?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I shall raise this matter with the President of the Canada Post Corporation, after which I shall give the Hon. Member my answer.

FISHERIES

NEGOTIATION OF NORTH PACIFIC SALMON FISHING AGREEMENT—PROTECTION OF CHINOOK AND COHO SPECIES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I had hoped to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In his absence, perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary can take the question. The North Pacific Salmon Fishing Agreement has not been ratified either in Canada or in the United States. That being so, does the Parliamentary Secretary know whether his Minister is satisfied that the appropriate measures have been taken by his officials and that they are in place with regard to quotas, area and type allocation, to ensure that the various species of salmon will not be eliminated, particularly the Chinook and Coho? Also, is he satisfied that any regulations that have been put in place will be enforceable?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister I might attempt to answer the Hon. Member's question. I understand that he is referring to the agreement that has been reached between Canada and the United States. We have concluded that negotiation, and an arrangement has been initialled. It has not been carried any further because, as I understand it at the present time, the United States authorities wish to raise some further points. I know they want to raise some further points. In fact, Secretary of State Shultz advised me of that particular matter when I was in Washington a short time ago. We have not advanced the negotiations since then, because at that time we thought we had concluded an arrangement that had a balance of interest for both countries. Certainly it would be our view that any modifications that might now be proposed by the United States would have to maintain a balance of advantage for both countries and, particularly, maintain the advantages in a comparable way for Canada with those for the United States.

DANGERS ARISING FROM OVER-FISHING

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has answered that question. He avoided the main thrust because, of course, it is a Canadian domestic affair. Since he was on his feet to speak about the international aspects, could he advise us whether he is satisfied that the arrangements that are in place, or ought to be in place, will prevent the exacerbation of the situation between Canada and the United States by over-fishing in areas around the International Boundary, out at the mouth of the Straits of Juan de Fuca or off the Queen Charlottes?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is our view that the conclusion of that arrangement, if it could be ratified, would remove from our bilateral arrangements an issue of long-standing importance. If we could conclude this matter, it would be of benefit to Canada.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The fishing season is open.

Mr. MacEachen: The Hon. Member says the fishing season is open. There is no possibility that this arrangement can be ratified quickly because of the new points that have been raised by the United States.

PUBLIC WORKS

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO ALBERTA

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Economic Development I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. Of the $2.4 billion for public works projects announced in the budget on April 19 by the Minister of Finance, what portion will be allocated to Alberta?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the Minister indicated that announcements under that program would be made in due course in the various regions of the country that are affected, for example, the areas that will benefit from those infrastructure projects. The water bombers program, for example, was one of the first announcements. There are over 100 projects in that program. A number of them involve approval of local councils, agencies and provincial Governments. There is a lot of co-ordination required. The difficulty was that had they been in place and firmed prior to the budget, any kind of pre-release of that information runs into the problem of secrecy of budget preparations. Those projects are being firmed up and will be announced in due course, I would say within the next few weeks.

CANADA PLACE PROJECT IN EDMONTON

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, I would like some concurrence from the Minister with regard to a telegram which the Mayor of the City of Edmonton sent to a number of the Minister's Cabinet colleagues, stressing the importance that Edmonton places on projects such as these, considering that the present local unemployment rate is in excess of 13 per cent. In particular, he stresses the importance of the Canada Place project. Can the Minister give us any indication whether this project is being considered. If it is being considered, when can we expect an announcement in regard to it, and how much money will be allocated to the Province?

• (1450)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the telegram that the Hon. Member refers to so I cannot make any comment on the project. The Hon. Member has not even identified the so-called project that is mentioned in the telegram.

Having said that, I am confident that there are many municipalities across the country that will welcome and will find great relief in the $2.4 billion that will be expended in every Province and many municipalities right across the country. There is no question that many municipal representatives are keenly aware of the problem of unemployment. No doubt, as these projects are announced they will be well received, particularly in those areas that have a high unemployment level.

PENITENTIARIES

NATIVE SPIRITUAL RIGHTS—INMATES' HUNGER STRIKE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. As the Minister knows, three Indian inmates, Gary Butler, Darelle Butler and Stuart Stonechild are in the twenty-ninth day of a spiritual fast in British Columbia and Alberta and are physically deteriorating. The prisoners are seeking full recognition of their spiritual religious practices, including the sweatlodge and the sacred pipe ceremony. In view of the fact that this practice of traditional native religions is a right and not a privilege that should have to be bargained for, what immediate action is the Minister prepared to take to recognize this fundamental right in all federal prison jurisdictions and to put an end to the historically racist policies of the Correctional Service of Canada in our prisons?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I can say to the Hon. Member that I have no sympathy at all for that hunger strike which is under way on the West Coast, especially since those Indians involved in it spent several weeks fattening up before the strike began.

We have an enlightened policy on native spirituality. The Indians took me to court in British Columbia and the policy was sustained as being consistent with the Charter of Rights. We have already built three sweatlodges at other institutions and federal penitentiaries across the country without the need for anyone going on hunger strike, and without the need for questions being asked of me by the NDP.

Further, two of these strikers are American citizens. If they would prefer to be imprisoned in the enlightened conditions in the United States, they can apply for a transfer to their own country. I can assure them that I will give my approval to that request for transfer.

APPLICATION OF POLICY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I would be interested to know whether the Minister believes there is one standard for Canadian prisoners and another standard for non-Canadian prisoners in his novel doctrine of prison discipline.

Last Friday the Minister admitted that native religious ceremonies have not been permitted in Canadian penitentiaries in the past, despite the disproportionate number of native people in Canadian prisons.

Will the Minister assure the House that, in drawing up new guidelines for these spiritual practices, he will fully involve Indian representatives from the Assembly of First Nations and prison Indian brotherhoods? Will he assure the House that there will be a very speedy resolution of this matter, particularly in view of the serious nature of the on-going spiritual fast which he blithely dismisses, despite the fact that human lives are involved?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, these individuals are striking on a volunteer basis. I think the Hon. Member should read the answer that I gave to the question on Friday.

In fact the policy has been changed. At present a policy is in effect which recognizes native spirituality and allows the expression of native spirituality in institutions although, as I indicated, that was not the case in the past. That policy is now in effect. It is an enlightened policy which is sustained by the courts.

I am reviewing all the practices myself, Madam Speaker. For example, I do not think the natives should have full control over the amount of sweet grass and rope that each individual can keep in his own cell, which is something that they want. I think a reasonable policy has been developed and I am reviewing it. I think it is a good policy.

As for the process and the speed with which we are building sweatlodges where there are native inmates in institutions, consistent with the other priorities of the Correctional Service of Canada I think we can be proud of the rate at which the new policy is being implemented.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO CORRECTIONAL SERVICE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. In the last nine months there has been a riot at Archambault when three guards and two inmates were left dead; there have been suicides and attempted suicides at Archambault, Edmonton, and other institutions; two weeks ago the three-member inmate committee at Archambault resigned en masse due to tension between guards and inmates; a week and a half ago two inmates were stabbed with picks at Archambault; last Friday a guard was murdered and an inmate wounded at Archambault, and last Sunday an inmate convicted of murdering a guard at Archambault last summer was—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Friesen: Rather than depend on a sanitized report by the Inspector General of Corrections, will the Minister call for a full, open public inquiry into the conditions and the calamitous situation that exist in the Correctional Service of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am keeping a very close watch on the problems at the Archambault Institute. Four investigations are now being conducted by the Inspector General, the police, the coroner and the Correctional Investigator who is also doing his jobs at Archambault.

In view of all the enquiries that are now being held, I can see no justification for adding another public enquiry at this time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

APPLICATION OF RESTRAINT PROGRAM TO PENSIONS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board which arises out of testimony which he gave to the Senate Health and Welfare Committee concerning Bill C-133, the act affecting the Public Service pensions and the application of the six and five program to that pension. At that time the Minister indicated that he would consider the Committee's recommendation to provide a threshold at the poverty level below which the recipients of superannuation whose total income was their pension, would be excluded from the six and five requirement. Has the Minister done that and, if so, what are the results of his undertaking with respect to this matter?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, this is something I would have to consider in consultation with my colleagues in Cabinet. In my view it is something we should do in the context of the debate on the Green Paper on reform of the pension system in Canada generally.

Madam Speaker: May I ask Members to conduct their private conversations at a little lower level. It is beginning to be very hard to understand what is going on.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It must be because it is spring, Madam Speaker. This is the first nice day we have had.

DELAY IN MAKING DECISION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Minister has indicated in his answer that he has not yet consulted his colleagues with respect to the matter. I would remind him that he undertook with the Senate on January 27 that such consultation would take place. Is there any reason for the delay in this matter? Is it absolutely the policy of the Government that we have to wait for the outcome of a parliamentary Committee which is studying another report, which is a report on another report, in order to deal with this matter which is very important to some Public Service pensioners?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I have been considering a number of issues connected with Public Service pensions, including that mentioned by my hon. friend, but they all relate to what might well be broad ranging issues connected with that plan. I think this is something that has to be the subject of careful consideration. One of the things to consider is whether this should be dealt with apart from considerations of the pension system available to Canadians generally.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—PROPOSAL TO VARY RATE ACCORDING TO WORLD GRAIN PRICE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In an earlier reply to a question put by the Hon. Member for Dauphin the Minister indicated that he was in a negotiating mood, or that he was always in a negotiating mood.

In terms of dealing with the problem of the Crowsnest Pass rate, the feeling on the Prairies is basically that the rate should be tied to the world price of grain so that it would rise or fall depending on what grain was selling for on the international market. Organizations like the Manitoba Pool Elevators have come out in support of this, as have a number of other organizations. Can the Minister indicate whether the Government is actively considering this as an alternative, or is it considering an amendment to the legislation that the Minister will introduce?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I thought that, in answer to a question put by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot a couple of Fridays ago, I went as far as I could on the subject. Some people thought that I might have ventured a bit too far. The idea which I expressed then was that obviously this was a concept, this was a wish, this was a desire, which seemed to find its way in the West quite consistently at this time. I expressed surprise that it was not brought up at the Gilson exercise at the time, but strangely enough it was not. It seems to have gained momentum now, and I indicated the Government was aware of that and could not be, I said, insensitive if there was a great request for it, but the request must be accompanied by a number of positive steps, because in a matter as complex as this, you cannot give everyone 100 per cent of what he is looking for. I was inviting people, therefore, to rally around that concept and leave aside some of their other wishes for example, the inclusion of other products, the elimination of variable rates, and all kinds of other matters which together constitute what is referred to as the "Crow" question.

PAYOUT OF GOVERNMENT FUNDS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Can the Minister assure the House that the Government has not moved in the direction of changing the basic proposal which it talked about some time ago, the Pepin proposal, and made a change in favour of paying all the money which would be paid out, to the railways, and not splitting the payment half to the farmers and half to the railways?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I cannot say that we have not, because the final decision has not been made yet. At the same time my hon. friend, who is a democrat, as I am, cannot fail to witness the fact that both in the West and in the East there has been a movement, and a number of representations made to that effect. I may not think that this is justified. I may very well think that what I announced on February 1 was a superior program, but I cannot, as a democrat, simply ignore the fact that there have been strong protests against that part of the announcement which I made on February 1.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—QUESTION DIRECTED TO MR. DE BANÉ

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, you will remember that during the Question Period I rose to address a question to the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané). In his absence, however, the reply was given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). Subsequently the Minister came into the Chamber at about ten minutes to the hour. This is not the first time, Madam Speaker, I have withheld, hoping that the Minister would show up. This time I asked the question and it was replied to rather unsatisfactorily by the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. If the Hon. Member is complaining about a Minister not being in the House, I must tell him that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Well, I just—

Madam Speaker: Well, it took quite a long time. I gathered from the Hon. Member's intervention that he was complaining because of the absence of a Minister. If it is something else he should come to the point very quickly.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): My further comment, Madam Speaker, was that I would hope the Minister would give me a reply to the questions I raised in writing.

Madam Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, may I say to the Hon. Member that there is a limit to how fast I can move. I left this City this morning for Toronto. I managed to be back before the end of Question Period.

Mr. Pinard: He should have waited.

Mr. De Bané: Surely, the Hon. Member could have waited. Surely he should not have to ask for permission of the Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: Point of order.

Mr. De Bané: —to write me a letter or to phone me—

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DOMM—ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF MR. LAPIERRE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw your attention, and the attention of the House, to a comment made last night, reported at page 24889 of Hansard, by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Lapierre). I would like to point out the Parliamentary Secretary's statement wherein he refers to the Hon. Member for Peterborough most indignantly as a "frog basher" and accuses me personally of "francophobia". I would like to ask, Madam Speaker, under a question of privilege which I rose on, for a retraction, and failing that, for a referral of this matter—

Madam Speaker: Order. First of all, the Hon. Member is now rising on a point of order. He is then telling me he is going to rise, or that he intends to rise, or did yesterday rise, on a question of privilege. If there was some unparliamentary language spoken in the House yesterday, the matter was probably dealt with by the Speaker who was then presiding over the proceedings. Obviously, the Speaker did not feel there had been any unparliamentary language, that whatever words the Hon. Member is referring to were the kind of sometimes violent, sometimes not so violent, debate which occurs in the House. There is no point of order and there is no question of privilege. At any rate, a question of privilege, I believe he knows, requires a written notice to the Speaker.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BLENKARN—VOTES IN MAIN ESTIMATES ALLEGED IRREGULAR

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I rise on three points of order with respect to the Main Estimates filed with this House, three matters which I believe the Chair should rule on, or at least I should draw to the attention of the Chair, so that when these matters are eventually brought to a vote the Chair can rule as to whether it is possible for the House to vote.

The first matter is Vote 40 for the Export Development Corporation. Under the estimates for External Affairs, on page 952 of the Main Estimates, under Vote 40, there is a vote required to allocate $35 million to cover losses of the Export Development Corporation. You will note, Madam Speaker, that the Export Development Corporation's financial statement has been filed with this House indicating that there are no losses. It would strike me that it is impossible, therefore, for the House to be asked to vote $35 million to cover losses for which the House is already apprised that there are no losses, the consequence being that that vote must, therefore, be stricken from the record or from the estimates presented.

Point of Order—Mr. Blenkarn

The second matter I draw to your attention, Madam Speaker, is a matter immediately following Vote 40 on the same page of the Main Estimates. It purports to be a statutory matter calling for $164 million to be transferred to the Export Development Corporation, presumably under a statutory authority contained in the Export Development Corporation's incorporating statute, being Chapter E-18 in the Revised Statutes, as amended. The only Section, Madam Speaker, under which any money can be possibly transferred to the Export Development Corporation is under the provisions of Section 11(2) of the Export Development Corporation Act. Under that Section there is a requirement for the Minister and the Cabinet to make a decision and then ask for the money. This particular matter is treated as a statutory non-budgetary matter. The fact is that it must be a budgetary matter because the terms of the Statute, being Section 11(2) of the Act, require that the Minister "may", if the Minister of Finance concurs, subscribe for shares. In other words, "may" is permissive. There is a requirement for a decision by the Governor General in Council. There therefore must be an appropriation which is directed to the House rather than the matter treated as a statutory matter. Therefore it must be put to the House for a vote. Unfortunately, the way the estimate is drawn and treated, it is a statutory, non-budgetary matter on which the House cannot express an opinion.

• (1510)

I therefore ask you to rule that the matter be treated as a budgetary matter, one that the House can direct attention to so we can express our opinion as to whether we should grant to the Export Development Corporation $164 million for subscribed capital and such other matters the Corporation may want or the Minister may seek.

The third matter I draw your attention to is Vote 25 under Industry, Trade and Commerce, found on page 14.6 of the Main Estimates. That deals with an appropriation for $185 million to be paid under the Small Business Investment Grants Act. Madam Speaker, you will know that this House dealt with that Act last week and it has now been dealt with by the Senate. The Bill provides that the entire Act expire as of April 1, 1983. Only applications applied for prior to that date could receive a grant.

The Minister has already received part of this $185 million under the advance payment we voted on earlier this year. There is certainly no grounds in the statutory law for any grant to be made under this Act, and therefore I ask that you rule that Vote 25 be ruled out of order, the matter having been dealt with by the House and no longer appropriately before the House.

Madam Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for raising these points. I will look into them and rule on them later.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DOMM—ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF MR. LAPIERRE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, immediately following Question Period this afternoon I rose on a question of privilege and you ruled that I did not have a point of order. Perhaps there was some misunderstanding as to why I rose at that time. According to the Standing Orders, as I interpret them, a question of privilege can be brought to the attention of the Speaker without notice if it arises from Hansard or discussions in the House. I rose on a question of privilege, not a point of order, and I would ask the Chair to give consideration to my question of privilege at this time.

Madam Speaker: I thought the Hon. Member had risen on a point of order. Let us now allow that he has risen on a question of privilege. Did he not tell me in his presentation that he was referring to proceedings which took place yesterday?

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, I was referring to proceedings which took place yesterday in this House during the adjournment debate. You will realize that at that time it is impossible to enter into a question of privilege; you have to wait until you have seen the remarks as printed in Hansard. In trying to present the case I would ask that you at least give me perhaps 45 seconds in which to make my points to show that this is a legitimate question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: First of all, the matter of unparliamentary language should be dealt with under points of order. That is why I thought the Hon. Member rose on a point of order. Therefore I do not see that he can deal with a matter of unparliamentary language under a question of privilege.

The point he is arguing now is that a question of privilege may be raised if it deals with the proceedings as shown in Hansard. I think he knows that a question of privilege may be raised without notice if it deals with proceedings of that day. The Hon. Member refers to yesterday's proceedings and that definitely requires a written notice. I am just putting the Hon. Member on notice now that the matter of unparliamentary language should be treated under a point of order. If it was not dealt with during the proceedings, it means that no one in the House had objection to it.

As I said, unparliamentary language has to be dealt with as it occurs. Sometimes Hansard has to be checked because it may involve interjections which the Chair might not have heard and an Hon. Member says that he does not think he uttered those particular words. There are two things that have to be considered, the actual words spoken and the fact that it created a disturbance in the House. Those two conditions have to be looked at in dealing with unparliamentary language.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, with all due respect, if the House is adjourned at six o'clock and there are no Members in the House, how do you raise a question of privilege?

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is equating debate with an adjournment. If it happened yesterday, the matter has to be dealt with today by notice. If the Hon. Member had risen at the time it occurred or immediately afterwards, he could have dealt with it then. If he wants to raise a question of privilege, I need a notice.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, on a point of order, I take it that the matter can be dealt with by proper notice from the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm). Words such as those used by the Hon. Parlimentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Lapierre) are absolutely objectionable. That is what the Hon. Member wants to clear up. They have appeared in Hansard, he has made his point that you cannot do it during the adjournment debate, and what he wants to ask the Chair is how he goes about seeing that language like that is stricken from the record. Surely what is at issue is the unparliamentary language of the Parliamentary Secretary.

Madam Speaker: Well, I have told the Hon. Member three times that he can send me a notice. If he sends me a notice and describes briefly what his question of privilege is all about, I will hear him as I always do. That is simple and I said it three times.

MR. TAYLOR—RECONSIDERATION OF BILL C-85

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I have great pleasure today in tabling another petition, this one signed by some 256 Canadians, mostly producers from many areas of Alberta. The petitioners pray that the Government will listen to their plea not to pass Bill C-85, an Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex, unless it first eliminates the clauses dealing with the buying and selling of all agricultural products.

These petitioners join with thousands of other producers in Canada in this request and all pray that the Government will hearken to their representations.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,720 and 4,768.

[Text]

PERSONNEL AT LACOMBE RESEARCH STATION

Question No. 4,720—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. How many persons were (a) employed in 1981 and 1982 (b) are projected to be employed in 1983 at the Lacombe, Alberta Research Station as (i) executive directors (ii) research scientists (iii) biologists (iv) technicians (v) general farm labour (vi) laboratory staff (vii) support staff (clerical staff, secretaries, etc.) (viii) information officers (ix) administrative officers?

2. Is there an expected increase in any of the categories in Part I in the future to cover the operation of (a) the new Meat Research Centre in Lacombe (b) any new research projects contemplated for this facility?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture):

1. As of April 1

		(a)		(b)
		1981	1982	1983
(i)	Director	1	1	1
(ii)	Research scientists	15	17	17
(iii)	Biologists	2	2	1
(iv and vi)	Technicians and laboratory staff	15	17	15
(v)	General farm labour	32	30	29
(vii)	Support staff (clerical and secretarial)	10	9	10
(viii)	Information officer	0	0	1
-	Computer programmer	1	1	1
		77	78	76

2. (a) and (b) No.

AMBASSADOR R. M. TAIT

Question No. 4,768—Mr. MacKay:

1. Was Ambassador R. M. Tait recalled from his job at the Canadian Mission to the European Communities in Brussels and, if so, what was the effective date of the recall?

2. What were the jobs to which Mr. Tait was assigned after his recall and, in each case, what was the (a) effective date (b) physical location of the assignment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. No. Mr. Tait returned to Ottawa at the normal conclusion of his tour of duty as Head of Mission and Ambassador to the European Communities in Brussels on September 9, 1982.

2. Upon Mr. Tait's return to Ottawa and following a period of duty in External Affairs for debriefing, he returned on September 20, 1982 to the Department of Employment and Immigration from which he had been seconded for his appointment to Brussels. He was appointed Assistant Under-Secretary for Cultural Affairs in the Department of External Affairs on February 16, 1983. He took up his duties in the Department of External Affairs in Ottawa On that date.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING UNION MEMBERSHIP

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River) moved that Bill C-267, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is not the first time that this particular Bill, Bill C-267, has been introduced in the House. It has been sponsored by myself for a number of years, and it will not be the first time that our friends in the NDP and Liberal Parties will combine in talking out this particular measure; in other words, defeating it in Parliament. The Bill attempts to correct what I consider to be some serious imbalances in our Canadian labour laws, both at the federal and provincial level. It attempts to bring Canada's labour laws into line with contemporary public attitudes and with practices in other industrial countries with which we compete in the international marketplace.

The Bill will be called "right to work legislation" by our NDP friends because it seeks to remove the closed shop and union shop provisions in the Labour Code. I prefer to call it a "freedom of association" bill.

Since the Bill was last debated in the House, certain important things have happened, not the least of which was the acceptance of entrenchment in our Constitution of certain cardinal principles of democracy, one being the freedom of association. Before our friends, the Liberals and New Democrats, decide to talk the Bill out, they may well be advised to take into consideration certain factors which have become evident since the Bill was debated the last time. We are in the midst of a very serious recession and it would be smart for them to consider the impact of our present labour laws on the average worker in light of the recession. They should also consider the impact of new entrenched provisions in our Constitution which deal with freedom of the individual, whether he be a worker or anyone else.

From the outset, let us not be stingy in giving full credit to the great pioneers or even heroes of the union movement. Let us give credit to their contribution over time, going back to the early time of the industrial revolution. Without doubt, their efforts resulted in a more equitable redistribution of that part of the industrial wealth and benefits and wealth which have been created by the machine, the benefits which have resulted from the multiplication of human energy by the machine.

We all agree that the role of unions in our society will become even more important, if not totally indispensable, as we make another transition from the era of the industrial society, and the revolution which was associated with the industrial society, to an even more profound revolution causing even greater social adjustment and upheaval. I am speaking, of course, of the transition into the information and microelectronic society.

Human energy is being multiplied at an ever-accelerating pace by the microchip, the computer and the robot. The benefits achieved by the industrial society over the last 200 years will be equalled over the next 20 years. It should not be very difficult for anyone to understand the incredible adjustments which must be made in our social structure to accommodate such rapid and profound change in the industrial workplace.

The effects of the industrial revolution have not been confined to the workplace and to the industrial relations process. Our society as a whole has undergone some very fundamental and profound changes in many other areas. One such fundamental change, of course, is the way by which the individual in our society relates to his Government. I make the comparison of this relationship today with the way it existed 200 years ago, in the pre-industrial society. In the agrarian society, it was important for a person to secure his comfort and economic well-being in old age by having a large and extended family.

There is no doubt but that the industrial society has brought with it a greater degree of freedom and a reliance by the individual, no longer on the extended family, but, rather, on the Government and organized society to which he is prepared to surrender a part of his personal freedom in return for the benefit of living in an organized society which affords very important social benefits. I am making this point to illustrate that the industrial revolution has brought with it a change from the large, extended family to the nuclear family, which is the order of the day today, just to illustrate how important the changes in the industrial workplace have become.

We are now moving into the information society which will produce even greater individualism and freedom, not so much in the political sense, but, rather, concerning economic comfort, freedom and security. However, that security and comfort will not be delivered by the large, extended family. We expect it will be left to the institution of government which we have chosen for ourselves to distribute in a fair and equitable way the benefits which were created by the industrial machine and which will now be created by a robot and a computer.

Unions can and must play a very important role in this new society, but it must be a responsible and equitable role. Union leaders must recognize and accept the fact that a third partner has entered the bargaining process, assuming the responsibility to protect the right and satisfy the aspirations of not only those in our society who can afford the protection of large, powerful, integrated unions, but of all workers in our society, including those who do not even have the opportunity to join unions. Of course, I speak of the Government and its many institutions as the third player in the future industrial relations process.

Let me talk about some of the institutions which we have already put in place to deliver some of the benefits that bring about this comfort and security. For instance, there is the minimum age law. No longer are there the sweat shops and 13 and 14-year old children working in the mines. There are very sophisticated laws respecting workmen's compensation and workers' safety. These are not laws that were brought about as a result of the unions' political power, although they certainly have played a role in it; they have also been brought about because of the incredible wealth that has been created and responsibly distributed by all participants in the workplace. We have a much more enlightened workplace than we had 200 years ago.

There is Unemployment Insurance that will carry us over the crises that occur from time to time as a result of the cyclical nature of our free market economy. The recent recession has been a perfect example of how important and beneficial these institutions are and how important it is to build on them. This recent recession could well have been as serious in social terms as the Depression in the 1930s if these institutions and insurance programs had not been in place. While there certainly was hardship and still is, it has been very much cushioned by the fact that we have these very important social institutions.

More of these institutions will be put in place. The Canada Pension Plan will be a most important social institution and I have no doubt that it will be actuarially sound because I believe that we all recognize, as partners in the industrial workplace, that this incredible wealth can be created with little human energy in the new information society. It will be shared equitably and a portion of that wealth will be put into a fund that will afford people who have made their contribution to the workplace at an earlier age a comfortable life with dignity and financial security. Again, unions will have a very influential role to play in persuading Governments, the third partner in this bargaining process, to bring about greater social benefits such as dental plans.

I do not speak of these benefits being affordable only for people who have the protection of a powerful union. I believe that if it is fair and right for a steelworker or a public servant to have a dental plan, it should be fair for everyone else, including those who are unable to belong to a union to enjoy those benefits.

The role of equitably distributing the wealth that will be generated in this new industrial workplace must be shared by the other two partners in the bargaining process. I have said that it is particularly important to recognize this fact because the unions in our country only represent one-third of our work force. Two-thirds of the people working in this country have no opportunity to join a union and the unions have not really been very interested in organizing them.

The recession has shown that workers' expectations of what their unions would deliver them have been betrayed and disappointed. In the crucial period during 1982 and 1983, the unions have not produced jobs or job security for those who are working. To the contrary, we have evidence throughout the country that, because of the irresponsible exercise of union power, some plants are shut down and people are out of work. Some have been deprived of work and have a more modest income than they were used to during the roaring 1970s as a result of the irresponsible exercise of union power.

Like the Depression in the 1930s, the recession will force us to adjust our attitudes, expectations and relationship in the workplace. For that reason, the long-term effects of this recession will be positive to some extent. While there is no excuse for the misery that was caused, there certainly will be long-term, positive effects, particularly if we all, Government, labour and business, draw important lessons from these crises.

The unions and their spokesmen in the socialist Party will have to adjust their attitudes as well. The best way they can do that would be to look around the world and see what other models are available for them to learn from and begin, in partnership with the other legitimate partners, the debate, and to build a new and more responsible and equitable union model in our country.

As I have said, there is even a more compelling reason. It is that Canadians are expecting certain fundamental institutional changes resulting from the patriation of our Constitution and the entrenchment of a Charter of Rights and certain principles of democracy in which we all believe. I am exaggerating somewhat because I doubt that our friends in the socialist Party believe in all of these principles. One such principle I wish to comment on is the freedom of association. That freedom permits the average citizen and indeed every individual which makes up the cornerstone of a free society to join any political party, church, religion or union of their choice and become an extra-parliamentary critic of Government. It is probably the most important, essential and precious element of democracy that we know.

That cardinal principle of democracy, freedom of choice, must be exercised both ways. No one should be compelled or coerced to join a political party, religious group, extra-parliamentary protest group or indeed a union, particularly if our laws are structured in such a way as to permit unions and their leaders to play a very active role in politics. By letting our labour law compelling a person to belong to a union remain in force, people are being deprived of some of their political freedoms.

I draw from the experience of other industrial countries with whom we compete in the markets of the world. I talk about socialist countries like Sweden, France and even Germany until recently. However, I should qualify that statement by calling these countries social democracies because unfortunately the New Democratic Party does not espouse principles of social democracy but principles of socialism. There is a very profound difference. In no other country in the world except the United Kingdom, where there is an equally irresponsible Labour Party from time to time, is this principle of freedom of association interpreted in any way other than I have just described—free to belong but free also to abstain. Free to be provided with the choice either to belong or to opt out is an important freedom.

This is Canada in a painful way working its way into the twenty-first century. I espouse a European-type model which would provide every Canadian worker with an opportunity to belong to a union. That would be a very important element in our labour law. Any union that wants to be certified would have to make itself available to every person who wishes to join, but no person should be compelled to join for no other reason than the right to work. No longer should we permit the sacrifice of this important and cardinal principle of democracy, the freedom of association. I hope that our Government, industrial leaders and union leaders will get together and this question will be tested in our Supreme Court. This, then, will be the last time that I have to stand up in Parliament to speak for the freedom of the individual in terms of his relationship with his union.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): I thank you for recognizing me today, Mr. Speaker. Listening to the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), I note his comments this time are basically the same arguments he put forward before. The Hon. Member from Prince George-Peace River is bringing before Parliament for the fourth time in a decade what, in my opinion, is an ill-considered and ill-advised proposed amendment to the Canada Labour Code. This particular incarnation is Private Member's Bill C-267.

On the last occasion he justified the repetition on the grounds that it gave him, and I quote:

—an opportunity to answer some of the criticisms levelled against the Bill the last time it was debated.

Will he consider it unfair if we take this opportunity to comment upon some of the arguments he raised before the House on February 6, 1979? I noted earlier that the Hon. Member virtually repeated himself in a number of instances. I will use some of his quotations from a previous speech to prove a point.

When the Hon. Member last spoke on this issue he was at pains to stress his view that opponents of the Bill deliberately had misnamed and misinterpreted the legislation. Although similar to American "right to work" laws, he preferred to call his Bill "freedom of association" legislation. He linked it to the contemporaneous debate over the entrenchment of a Bill of Rights, and this time he referred to the Charter of Rights, I believe, and said:

The cardinal principle of democracy is freedom of association, individual rights and collective rights.

He mentioned freedom of association again today. I suppose we are intended to read "liberty" for "democracy", but what relationship he meant "individual rights and collective rights" to bear to the principle clause is unclear in my view. Although their juxtaposition implies compatibility between the two terms, each being an integral part of "freedom of association" and "democracy", shortly after this assertion the speaker appeared to reverse himself asking:

To what extent, however, does the freedom of the individual have to yield to the collective rights of groups?

In spite of the speaker's apparent ambivalence his audience would, no doubt, have been all well disposed to forgive him his earlier confusion had he stuck to the high ground carved out and developed the important philosophical and practical issues posed by his question: To what extent does the freedom of the individual have to yield to the collective rights of groups? It is, after all, a debate stretching back probably at least to the first urban civilizations and counts among its more illustrious exponents such philosophers as Plato, Socrates, Aristotle, Hobbes, Locke, Rousseau, and even Hume in later years.

Unfortunately it soon became apparent in the Hon. Member's previous speech in February, 1979 that we could expect no such learned consideration of the question by the Member for Prince George-Peace River. In fact, the direction his comments took immediately following would appear to justify a suspicion that the question was raised primarily as an excuse to launch an invidious attack against what I say are Francophone Canadians and trade union members.

Let me explain, Mr. Speaker. What were the collective rights in Canada of which he most feared the exercise? The most dangerous apparently was:

The right of the Francophone majority in the Province of Quebec and the Francophone minorities in other parts of the country to speak their language.

His subsequent protest that he appreciates this collective right and respects it seems only to highlight his pronounced fear that the exercise of the right is likely to lead directly to separatism, since he went on to say:

I cannot help but wonder if it could in some instances be taken to the point where a minority language group says, "Look, you are not giving us our way, we don't like you any more, we are going to leave the country".

I note that the exercise of the collective linguistic rights which he fears are the rights of the minority. On the abuses of collective linguistic rights by the majority, he is silent. It is a curious tack for a man to take who professes to be introducing amendments to protect the interests of minorities of one.

He deplores separatism, and I do too, when it involves minority linguistic groups but is a staunch defender of the right of individuals to separate themselves from groups even when these individuals might continue to enjoy benefits obtained by the efforts of those groups. Is the Hon. Member in danger of giving the impression that his opinions are based not so much upon principle but rather upon his own interests and the interests of his particular group? I followed these questions and I intend to give my opinions and the answers to them.

Unfortunately, the impression the Hon. Member gives is reinforced by his second illustration. Coming finally to the point, he reveals his primary concern and motive which, evidently, again in my opinion and with all respect to the Hon. Member, is to weaken trade union solidarity and cohesiveness. It is not the rights of the individual which concern him really but, rather, the ability of the unions when he said:

They are not getting their way at the bargaining table, not only to withdraw their essential service but to opt out of the country.

He only confuses the issue when he concludes the phrase by saying:

—regardless of what that means to the individual rights of Canadians.

May I ask the Hon. Member, "What rights of which Canadians?" Doubtless he is referring to a supposed right of some people to receive a certain service. That this supposed right to receive a service might be assessed in relation to the right of other people to work or to withhold their work as they choose, obviously, is a question which the Hon. Member has not contemplated or has decided not to discuss.

Had he chosen to open up the issue, in all intellectual honesty he would have been forced to question the assumptions upon which his amendment lies. At the very least, if he has any real grasp of the terms he was tossing around so lightly and, I hope that he does, he would have been forced to admit that he was not discussing individual rights at all but rather the collective right of one group measured against the collective right of another which, of course, was the same problem with his analogy of competing linguistic claims.

Even if the Hon. Member failed to discuss effectively the issues arising from his question "To what extent does the freedom of the individual have to yield to the collective rights of groups?", it is, nevertheless, a question well worthy of consideration. He might have provided convincing arguments if he had, for example, raised the issue of the individual Francophone living in Prince George or, for that matter, the lone Anglophone in Rivière-du-Loup. To what extent is it incumbent upon the state to fund bilingual facilities to permit these individuals their claims to do business with the Government in their own language?

Let me make my point explicit. I am not referring to the language question only because the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River referred to it in the previous debate. There is a principle common here to the issues raised by his proposed amendment. In the case of the minority language question, the issue, as I see it, is to what extent the collectivity should be taxed to provide linguistic services to minorities, that is to say, to provide them their individual rights. It is a clear question of the collective or majority right not to be taxed against the individual right to receive services. There is the quid pro quo. Obviously there is no one right answer. I would not profess to have the only answer in Canada or in the world. I put forth my views for the consideration of the House.

As in all arguments over who gets what, the final choice will probably be made by a process of compromise. No doubt such a process is unsatisfying to the ideologues and extremists who would attempt to discuss the question in the absolute terms of rights, but it is precisely this sort of compromise that prevents countries from becoming unstuck. One great writer wrote at one time that the art of governing is in itself the art of compromise or the art of trying to move a country in the direction that the country itself wants to and should move, this by its own analyses.

The same arguments apply in the case of compulsory trade union membership and the payment of dues. The Hon. Member referred to this matter on three different occasions in his speech today. As one attempts to discuss these issues in terms of fundamental rights, one is inevitably thrown into endless and sometimes confused debate over the relative rights of the collectivity, meaning the group, versus the individual. Evidently the Hon. Member's failure to draw out the implications of the question posed is, in my view, an acknowledgement of the weakness of such an approach. However, since these are the grounds upon which the representative of Prince George-Peace River has chosen to base his arguments, we will have to take a closer look at them despite the unlikelihood of being able to draw any fundamental and definite conclusions.

At one point in his speech he asked rhetorically:

> Why do I have to be compelled to belong to my union?

He asked that again today. At another point he maintained that in West Germany workers "cannot be compelled to join" unions and stated:

> The right of the worker in an industry is that if he does not like what the union does he should not have to pay dues.

I believe I am quoting him correctly.

Mr. Oberle: Not at all.

Mr. Parent: The Hon. Member says that I am not quoting him correctly. I tell him that this passage was taken directly from his speech on February 6, 1979.

The last statement concluded a paragraph of argument in which the Hon. Member attempted to turn around the cogent reasoning of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in a previous debate on the amendment. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre is not present in the Chamber, but he argued that the amendment, if applied to other conditions, could result in the claim, that "Because I am not a Liberal", or for that matter a Conservative, "and I do not agree with everything this Government does"—and he was referring to the Government of the day—"I should not have to pay taxes". By some bizarre and unexplained leap of fancy, the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River said that the position of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre illustrated his argument that "the union power in this country puts itself on an equal footing with the power of this institution and the power of Government".

Whether or not there might be any truth in the Hon. Member's claim that unions believe that "if I do not agree with what the Government is doing, I do not have to pay taxes", it would appear to be a statement completely irrelevant to the issue under discussion unless it is to illustrate once again that the Hon. Member, with all respect, is not at all concerned with the rights of the individual and that it is union solidarity which his amendment attacks directly.

If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre will excuse me, I will attempt to explain the intent of his analogy to the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River. If I understand the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre correctly, he was referring to an old Conservative principle. What a disgrace that Liberals and socialists should have to lecture Tories on Conservative principles. I do so only with great deference. The principle is that once born into society we derive the benefits of society involuntarily. We could not live and develop without these benefits. However involuntarily we receive them, we are bound by our debt to society. When a child is born into Canadian society, he becomes a Canadian. He accepts all the rights of a Canadian and, by the same token, he accepts all the duties of a Canadian.

We discharge the debt referred to under the social contract by obeying society's laws. Those who seek to evade their obligations, we brand as criminals. Hence, whether or not we agree with the specific acts of a particular Government, our general debt to society is so overwhelming that we have no choice but to submit to these acts until, by the democratic process, we have the opportunity to seek redress. To act otherwise would be the limit of irrationality. General disobedience to the laws of established authority would lead only to anarchy, where the war of all against all in this state of nature would render life, in Hobbes' terms, "nasty, poor, solitary, brutish and short".

Very similar arguments are applicable to workers in industries governed by collective agreement. As anyone well grounded in Conservative principles ought to know, our social obligations are not limited only to the state. The state itself is a composite of corporate groups, each of which acts in its own sphere to regulate and civilize the life of the citizen. Just as the individual is bound to obey the national laws because he is the beneficiary of ordered conditions imposed by the state, so too where a worker is the beneficiary of conditions negotiated by a trade union, even where he is on involuntary beneficiary, by accepting these benefits he contracts certain obligations to that trade union, that is to say, the paying of dues.

As in the case with the laws promulgated by our Governments, the trade union has the option of joining in collective action at the time of union elections to change union officials, if he does not like them or should he believe the policies and actions of the leadership to be inadequate. I, for one, believe that these elections of trade unionists are free and democratic. Either as a citizen or a trade union member, the individual in Canada cannot be compelled to take part actively in political or union activities. That is a matter of law and is one of the basic tenets of democracy. Canadians have the right of non-participation in political and union affairs. We witness the fact that at election time sometimes only 75 per cent to 80 per cent of the people take advantage of the opportunity to vote.

Nor are all workers in all industries even required to take nominal union membership under the current provisions of the Canada Labour Code. For the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River to suggest it is a matter of natural right for individual workers to benefit from collective agreements and yet be exempt from contributing to the maintenance of those institutions is as irresponsible, in my view, as it would be for him to say that individuals should benefit from institutions of the state and yet not contract any obligation for their maintenance.

Does the Hon. Member object that these are not the things that he advocates, that all he wants to do is to redress a perceived increase in union strength? I put it to him, and this is my last statement, that the amendment he is advocating, if passed, would destabilize seriously the union system in this country. It would lead to increased union rating of members, would threaten the financing of trade unions and could seriously undermine the ability of union leaders to reach agreements and guarantee their observation, and would surely threaten a degeneration of industrial relations in this country.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) would permit me to ask a brief question before you recognize the next speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That could only be done with unanimous consent of the House. Is there consent to allow the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River to put a question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Government House,
Ottawa,

April 27, 1983

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Brian Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 27th day of April, 1983, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Esmond Butler
Secretary to the Governor General

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING UNION MEMBERSHIP

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Oberle that Bill C-267, An Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to respond to this Bill. I want to use that opportunity because, as a new Member of this House, I have not had occasion previously to engage in the ritual of answering the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) on the Bill which he apparently brings forward every couple of years. In fact, this is my first opportunity even to hear his argument. I do wish to answer.

The Hon. Member's Bill would clearly have the effect of undermining or destroying bargaining units that have been agreed upon between a union and an employer by permitting an individual to claim the benefits of membership while refusing the obligation.

The Hon. Member claims we should copy certain other countries. He disregards the fact that these laws were built up over many years, at least half a century in Canada. In fact, they were built up under Governments, Liberal, Conservative or Progressive Conservative, federal and provincial.

It is rather amusing to hear the Hon. Member describe the effect of these laws, by implication, as socialist. That means that Liberal federal Governments and Conservative provincial Governments are all socialist. In fact, the laws in Canada are closely aligned to the laws of the United States, and in some cases are modelled on United States laws. The Hon. Member is clearly implying that the United States is a socialist country. It is a very bizarre use of the word "socialist". When he asks us to copy selected aspects of certain European countries, which he calls democratic socialists by contrast with socialist Canada and socialist United States, it is really difficult to understand how he is using those words.

What we can understand is that as a matter of practical experience, with the help of a very famous Judge, the late Mr. Justice Ivan Rand, Canada did establish certain basic principles. I remember clearly the year after I came out of the army. There was considerable labour unrest in Canada. The famous Rand formula was established. It by and large resolved the very difficult situation of strikes and confusion in labour relations.

His principle ws that the workers in the unit must all receive the same benefits and services that are negotiated between the employer and the union. If a worker feels he has not received those benefits or services, he is entitled to sue his union in a court of law for not providing them. The union is compelled to provide those services. Therefore, Mr. Justice Rand argued that each member equally has an obligation at least to pay the dues of the union and in some cases to maintain memberhsip in it. This principle is said to be very strange, but I would point out that it has been adopted by all of the Governments of Canada and most Governments in the United States.

The previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent), pointed out the comparison with taxation. The minority must pay the taxes imposed and voted by the majority because the minority can also claim all the benefits of the programs carried out with those taxes.

Far from the unions arrogating unto themselves the position of Government, the fact is that in Canada the trade unionists are second-class citizens. Doctors can go on strike but they do not go to jail. Bankers can refuse their services but they do not go to jail. Storekeepers and oil companies can refuse to sell but they do not go to jail. Only union members are from time to time threatened with fines or jail if they do not work.

In that sense, they probably do lack something of the freedom of association that the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River claims to support. It is a deprivation of freedom that mere membership in a union should make a person vulnerable to fines and jail to which he would not be vulnerable if he were a member of a medical associaton, bankers' association or some such organization. The Hon. Member is not attempting to protect the members of the trade union from fines and/or jail in that sense. He never said a word on that side of the case. He wishes to protect them from having the ability to organize in solidarity so as to defend themselves when necessary against an employer.

The trade unionists have one basic, fundamental power. If they agree, they can withdraw their labour. The employer has a comparable fundamental power. By his decision, he can withdraw the opportunity to labour. He can shut the door.

In half a century we have developed a structure of law and balances within the law that enables workers and employers to bargain using those two powers which 99 per cent of the time are held in reserve and not exercised but are available as a real possibility. Membership in the bargaining unit, the dues-paying obligation of the bargaining unit, is a part of that structure. It does not make paid unionists fully first-class citizens as bankers and oil company presidents are, but it certainly protects them from being completely dominated and ground into nothing by the bankers, oil company presidents and large employers.

It is interesting that the Hon. Member has such a persistent desire to disrupt the labour law structure in Canada, and presumably if he were in the United States he would be trying to disrupt the labour law there. If he had his way there would be no security in any union contract. It would be impossible for either union or employer to know whether workers in that particular enterprise were going to consider themselves bound by the obligations of the union contract.

After 18 years' experience working as a labourer in a factory, including 12 years' experience on the bargaining committee of my union, I can assure the House that the employer has very great respect for the union contract. He may try to get around it but he does not want to do away with it.

About 20 years ago there was a strike at the Royal York Hotel in Toronto during which the employer fired the employees. He sent letters to all strikers telling them that they did not work there any more and not to come back when the strike was over. The union took the employer to court and the first decision of the Queen's Bench was in favour of the employer on the basis of some statute dating back to 1597 or somewhere relating to master and servant.

Across the country the response came from major employers and industrialists that they were horrified at the decision. In very short order the Superior Court reversed that decision and said that the workers had a quasi-legal right to their job; that when they went through all the arduous steps provided by labour law to the point where they could legally go on strike, they had not quit. They were still entitled to their jobs.

If the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River wants to wipe that out and have jungle law in every place of employment under the jurisdiction he is talking about, then he should be frank enough to say: "Let's wipe out unions as legally recognized bargaining agents; let us wipe out contracts". Then every day on every job the employer would not know whether he has workers or not. Often the union would much rather strike during the life of a contract. It is the contract that prevents this. The employer relies on that when he bargains.

It is strange that the Hon. Member keeps bringing this matter up without stating what he thinks would result from what he is after. He has given us some new arguments today and perhaps this is the first time he has used the argument about chip technology. He suggested that these benefits will come to people if the union leaders act responsibly. He never suggested that employers must be responsible. I assume he is content to have employers be irresponsible, and in fact some of them are in their treatment of labour.

The Hon. Member claims that benefits like workmen's compensation, the minimum wage, the Canada Pension and Unemployment Insurance came about because this is an enlightened country. He tried to do away almost entirely with the history of how those benefits were achieved. Each was won after a long campaign by organized labour. I do not remember any campaign by organized employers to provide these benefits. Employers conceded them as the most convenient way of regularizing certain situations, but in almost every case the thrust to develop those benefits came from organized labour and in many cases from the only parliamentary Party that sympathized with organized labour, the CCF-NDP.

We heard that two-thirds of the work force does not have the opportunity to join a union and that unions are not interested in organizing them. That is probably beside the point of the Hon. Member's argument but as a taunt it should be answered. It is false. The unions spend a great deal of energy, time and money trying to make it possible for workers to join unions. It is the employers who will spend and have spent thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars and at times even hire known criminals in order to intimidate, beat up, spy upon and lie against workers trying to organize a union or those engaged in the conduct of a legal strike. It shows ill grace for a supporter of business to taunt workers about not having the chance to join a union when the main obstacle to that is the action of many employers.

The Hon. Member also taunts unions with not having produced jobs. He must never have read a labour contract, at least not in the Province of Ontario. By law in Ontario every contract must have or is deemed to have a management rights clause which says that it is up to management to run the plant, to decide what work will be done and who will do it, subject only to its agreement with the union and the laws of the Province and the country. It is management's responsibility to provide jobs. To taunt the unions with not providing jobs suggests that the Hon. Member wants some kind of society entirely and exclusively ruled by unions. Whether he would call that socialist or not I leave it to him to say, but it is not what we have in Canada at the present time. As long as the company has the responsibility for providing the jobs, the unions do not.

Finally, we heard the plea for freedom of association. No person should be compelled to join a union or party. That is fair enough. The members have obviously voted for a union; if they had not there would be no union. They can choose whether to work in a union shop or not. I have friends who have refused jobs because they would not work without the protection of a union. Members can not only change the officers but can decertify the union if they do not think it is doing a good job, and this happens, Mr. Speaker.

There is freedom of choice within a union. If a union wishes to put some money into a political party campaign it must ask permission of members through legal channels at a union meeting. That is a different situation from that of the board of directors of a corporation which can and in many cases does spend shareholders' money supporting the Liberal Party or the Conservative Party without asking shareholders if that is what they want to do.

It borders on hypocrisy for the Hon. Member to accuse unions of taking away freedom of association when in fact there is far more freedom of association for members of a union than there is for either the employees of the company as employees or, in many cases, for the shareholders of the company.

I have attended shareholders' meetings of a large mining company in this country on two occasions. It was evident to me how little power the average shareholder had, attending one meeting in a year. He was not provided with the full information about what was going on in the company; a group at the head table monopolised the time. That does not happen to the same extent in a union.

An Hon. Member: He could sell his shares.

Mr. Heap: An Hon. Member said he could sell his shares. He might just as well say to the employee that he can quit his job. For many people that is a choice and for many others that is not a choice. It has nothing to do with the quality of the internal democracy either within the shareholders' group or within the union group.

• (1620)

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as long as the Hon. Member keeps being re-elected, we will probably have this debate every two years. I was glad to say my piece this time and I am sure the next time the Hon. Member brings it up there will be some new Members of the NDP caucus here to give him an answer.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

MOTION RESPECTING TREATMENT OF VETERANS AND SURVIVORS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of implementing Recommendation Number 7 of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science's Report entitled "They Served We Care" which called on the government to establish a Committee composed of officials from both government and veterans' associations to review and update those recommendations of the Woods Committee which have not been implemented and to identify, study and make recommendations about the anomalies which still exist in the treatment of veterans and their survivors and which also suggested that this Committee should study the apparent inequity to a divorced spouse who under existing legislation has no entitlement to benefits under the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act and which also suggested that the Committee study the apparent inequity of the manner in which veterans are compensated for periods spent as prisoners of war.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the reason I have presented this Motion at this time is to bring to your attention and to the attention of all our colleagues in the House of Commons the responsibility which falls on our shoulders regarding the treatment we give to the veterans of our country, and especially those veterans who were prisoners of war.

I have been concerned for some time that we have not dealt adequately or fairly in a great many cases with the pensions or benefits which our veterans are entitled to. In a great many cases we have a grey area, and I suppose in any given situation where there is a right and a wrong or a black and a white, you do have those grey areas. I believe that in these judgments which are handed down there are a considerable number of grey areas, and it falls to the judgment of the hon. members of the Commission to make the ultimate decision. In many of these cases, I feel there is not enough scope given to these areas and, perhaps, not enough consideration given to the ultimate decision.

The departmental comments on the 29th Dominion Convention Resolution of 1982, from the Department of Veterans Affairs, were issued by the Dominion Command of the Royal Canadian Legion in February, 1983. I find that the comment with regard to disability pensions and the benefit of doubt is dealt with. I will perhaps read this for the benefit of our colleagues:

Whereas the Pension Act clearly states that an applicant for pension is entitled to benefit of the doubt, which means it is not necessary for the applicant to adduce conclusive proof for applicable pension, but that the body adjudicating on the claim shall draw from the circumstances of the case and the evidence adduced, every reasonable inference in favour of the applicant:

Therefore be it resolved that all pension applicants continue to be given the benefit of the doubt as set out under Section 85 of the Pension Act.

Then, of course, the departmental comment on that, Mr. Speaker, is simply this:

In accordance with Section 85 of the Pension Act, all pension applicants continue to be given the benefit of the doubt with regard to decisions rendered by the Canadian Pension Commission and the Pension Review Board.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you have cases, as well as all Hon. Members of this House of Commons, with regard to requests for pensions on behalf of many of the applicants. I do not believe, sir, that the Commission goes far enough in the direction of giving the benefit of the doubt on these applications to the veterans. I believe we have room in which to move. I know that the question always comes up—it was mentioned in the decision which was made to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs last night—that it is a matter of finances. Of course, we should consider it really it would not cost that much in the long term. We have money, apparently, to move the Department of Veterans Affairs to Prince Edward Island. Far better, and I have always said this, to have taken that money and given it to the veterans for pension benefits rather than moving the whole Department out of Ottawa, because the veterans were very happy, and all the Legion members were happy and content to have the headquarters in Ottawa. They were very disturbed when their headquarters were moved. Certainly, the cost is a tremendous factor. How in the world can any Minister or any Department official say they do not have money to assist in the particular areas we are talking about when they can spend a massive amount of money to move the whole facility out of Ottawa?

In order to give credence to my Motion, I am going to deal with the conclusion of the report of the Senate of Canada Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Science. I will quote from it to explain what I am trying to accomplish as follows:

In the course of our research and the examination of witnesses your Committee was impressed by the many references to the Report of the Committee to Survey the Organization and Work of the Canadian Pension Commission. This task force, set up in 1965, was chaired by Mervyn Woods and submitted its Report in 1968. A great many of its recommendations were later incorporated in the 1970-1971 Amendments to the Pension Act and since then have been credited with having a major and beneficial effect on the treatment of veterans, ex-Prisoners of War and their dependents. On the other hand, many of its recommendations were not implemented. Our witnesses do not think that a massive study of all the legislation and bureaucratic structures dealing with veterans is necessary. They suggest, however, that the Woods report should be reviewed because a number of anomalies and inequities still exist in veterans' legislation and regulations. We agree with this suggestion. There are, for example, two inequities which require further study; namely, the treatment of the divorced spouses of veterans and the treatment of the Dieppe prisoners of war.

At present, the divorced spouse of a veteran has no entitlement to benefits under the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act. The Pension Act does provide that the Canadian Pension Commission has the discretion to make a grant to a divorced spouse. This discretion comes into play particularly if there is a court order or a maintenance order for some support during the lifetime of the veteran. Under the Canada Pension Plan, on the other hand, pension benefits are divided in half on the divorce of a contributor, if applied for at the time of divorce. We believe that this precedent as well as the new marriage and property legislation in a number of provinces should be taken into consideration in the proposed review in order to keep the legislation in step with present attitudes and new concepts of equality in the marriage partnerships.

● (1630)

Under the Prisoner of War Compensation Act veterans are paid disability pensions of from 10-20 per cent based on the length of time they were incarcerated. The Hong Kong veterans, however, have been entitled to a disability pension of 50 per cent because of the extreme severity of their long confinement. Other groups of veterans, such as the Dieppe POWs, were also held for long periods of time under abnormally harsh conditions but are entitled to a pension of no more than 20 per cent. Is it just to compensate those who were POWs for over 2½ years at a disability rate that is only twice the compensation offered those who were incarcerated for just 3 months?

We understand that there are other possible inequities, and therefore we recommend that:

This, Mr. Speaker, is the centrepiece of my notice of motion today. This is the recommendation we want to support. Incidentally, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) would like to have been here to take part in this debate today but he had to attend a funeral in Winnipeg of a friend. The recommendation is:

(a) the Government appoint a Committee composed of officials from both the government and veterans associations to review and update those recommendations of the Woods Committee which have not been implemented and to identify, study and make recommendations about the anomalies which still exist in the treatment of veterans and their survivors;

(b) the Committee study the apparent inequity to a divorced spouse who under existing legislation has no entitlement to benefits under the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act; and

(c) the Committee study the apparent inequity of the way in which veterans are compensated for periods spent as prisoners of war.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I defy anyone to establish completely the damage done to those people incarcerated in a prisoner of war camp. They never knew whether they were going to get out alive or when. They never knew whether or not they were ever going to see their loved ones again. I can understand the difficulty members of the Commission have, but I believe consideration should be given to this situation so that we can all feel these Canadians are receiving adequate and fair treatment.

Now, in the submission the Royal Canadian Legion made to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs last night, they said, with regard to another area of interest, deductions for income tax—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Is the Hon. Member presently quoting from a statement made before the Committee last night?

Mr. Towers: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I should caution the Hon. Member about doing that because the rules forbid debate in the House on matters currently before Standing Committees of the House. The principle is that a matter cannot be in both places at the same time. I hope the Hon. Member will use extreme prudence in the way he presents his arguments.

Mr. Towers: I accept your direction, Mr. Speaker; I always appreciate your guidance. This has to do with the Estimates and a submission made by the representatives of the Legion. They will not be back again. It cannot be said that we are dealing with the same situation both in Committee and in the House, so I would hope you would just let me make this one point because it is pertinent to the case I am trying to make.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. If I allow the Hon. Member to go ahead and quote directly from a presentation made before Committee, which Committee has not yet reported to the House, I would be encouraging him to breach the rules of the House. So the Hon. Member may still refer to the matter, if I may be helpful, by taking an indirect approach. Possibly if he did not say that the matter is before the Committee at this time, well, that would be quite fair.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your comments. Nevertheless, the point is simply this. The submission made by the Legion was that it had been told that the Act cannot be changed for another year or two. This concerns me because—I see the Chairman of the Committee here today and I am sure he would agree with me—we all know how slowly legislation moves in the House of Commons. When the suggestion is made that nothing will be forthcoming within the next year or two, you and I both know we should be into an election about that time and we will not have any opportunity of passing legislation then. Then when you go beyond the election, the matter is delayed further. So I find it very difficult to understand why these regulations cannot be studied to find out where these anomalies exist and action taken on them. We have to realize that these people we are talking about are getting older every year and we should do something along these lines for their benefit during this period of time. Otherwise, in a great many cases, it will be too late.

Therefore, I leave the suggestion with you, Mr. Speaker, that it is our responsibility as Members of the House to accept the recommendation from the other place and recognize that we too can fully appreciate that: "They Served, We Care".

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have a chance to participate in this debate. I do so not as Chairman of the Standing Committee and not to defend the Government, but as a war veteran. I do this as a duty to my friends who did not come back and to those who did but could not resume their activities in civilian life. I do this also because I have been involved with the work of the Committee for many years. I have been a witness to what not only this Government but many other Governments preceding this one have put in place, that is, what I consider to be perhaps the best veterans' social program anywhere on earth. That goes also for ex-prisoners of war. I do not think we could find anything comparable to the social and welfare programs we have adopted for war veterans. Because of this sense of satisfaction, I find I have a duty to take part in this debate and follow my friend, the esteemed and respected member of my Committee, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers).

The Hon. Member has three parts to his motion, but I would like to deal mainly with the Woods Committee report. I gather others will want to deal with other aspects of his motion. Having been a witness to the activities of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and the many times that the Legion has come before the Committee as a witness, I find it distressing and surprising that such a motion is introduced. To me, the record of the Canadian Legion speaks for itself. Reference was made a few minutes ago to the meeting last night. Without faulting anyone, I would nevertheless like to say that in the brief remarks made by the representative of members of the Canadian Legion, I was under the strong impression that this exercise of their coming to the committee was, for them, the best way to expose and to express the needs of the war veterans. At one point, they even expressed their satisfaction with the way the Government had always listened.

Mr. Speaker, whenever representatives of the Canadian Legion appear before the Committee, we must realize that it is an institution that was established by veterans themselves and which is heard, respected and also consulted by the Government. Only yesterday, someone was saying, and it is not the first time I have heard this, that the Canadian Legion is being consulted and that the Government, when it is considering legislation related to the welfare of veterans, consults the Canadian Legion. And in this connection, Mr. Speaker, we must not forget the tremendous sacrifices made by some of our veterans for this country.

The Royal Canadian Legion represents 99.9 per cent of our veterans, since it represents and works as we have already heard . . .It represents the Canadian Indian Veterans Association. There are local branches of the Royal Canadian Legion across the country, and every town, at least in Quebec, has its local branch of the Royal Canadian Legion, where veterans will go if they need financial or social assistance or if they have marriage problems.

I wonder whether my good friend, the Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) has considered the consequences if the Government agreed to form a new committee. I am sure my hon. colleague from Red Deer spoke in good faith, but I wonder whether this would not delay implementation of the measures proposed by the Woods Committee. It would be most unfortunate, and I am sure the Hon. Member would agree, if the implementation of certain programs were to be delayed, since when the Legion made its proposals as it did recently, when it asked for an increase in benefits for funeral expenses, I believe the Government considered this request and increased the benefits which were $125 at the time, to $500 or $600. The same applies to casual workers. A representation was made by the Royal Canadian Legion, asking Veterans Affairs and National Revenue to examine certain problems that arose for veterans. The petition submitted by the Royal Canadian Legion on behalf of veterans was accepted, and now, veterans are able to benefit. Thus, representations by veterans are routed to their local branches which are elected by other veterans. The local branches forward representations and requests to the provincial commands and the Dominion command each year, and these requests are forwarded and considered and in fact become a policy or representation of the Royal Canadian Legion.

Considering the record of the Legion and its success in taking such action, I wonder whether a new committee is really necessary. I wonder whether there is not a real risk that approval and implementation of certain measures will be postponed because a new committee would want to examine such proposals. Will this committee, like the present committee, if I am not mistaken, also have a majority of veterans who truly represent their former comrades at arms? I know that when petitions are made on behalf of constituents or a branch of the Legion in a municipality or riding, the Minister always listens very attentively to the grievances and representations put forward by Hon. Members, and the Ministers of Veterans Affairs I have known, the present Minister (Mr. Campbell) and his predecessor, have always been very attentive to petitions based on such representations. In fact, the Canadian Government and Canada have an outstanding record as far as veterans welfare programs are concerned. The measures that were approved to provide for the veterans of 1939-45 were adopted before I got back, since I was still in Europe when they were approved. This means that the Government—in fact all the Governments since the First World War—has been very receptive to the grievances and representations submitted through the Royal Canadian Legion by our veterans.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people are quite aware of the great sacrifices our veterans have made for their country, and I think that the words "They Serve We Care" do reflect how fairly we treat them. Indeed, our comrades in arms, be they from France or Great Britain, may very well feel somewhat envious of our veterans because of the benefits they enjoy. Besides, keeping in mind the care we have given them and the fact that we did go out of our way to make sure that justice was done to those who had given their lives to save democracy and everything else we held dear at that time when we were as young as 18, 19 or 20, I for one consider that the Governments, this one and others before, have fully discharged their responsibilities and, to those who have put their lives on the line and gave so much, we remembered and we can proudly say "They Serve We Care".

Once again, the representations we receive from the Royal Canadian Legion are passed along to the Government through the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. As I said earlier, the representations made by the Royal Canadian Legion are heard and examined, and we consult the Legion. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I do not see the need or even the wisdom of creating another institution which would be asked to do exactly what the Committee already does very well.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to speak too long on this particular motion by the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). It is a matter which I think has been studied, debated and discussed for many years. It seems to me that having a long discussion today will not add anything new to the debate. It is a motion which deserves the support of the House and should be acted upon by the Minister.

In his motion, the Hon. Member for Red Deer refers to recommendation No. 7 of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science entitled "They Served, We Care". The recommendations contained in the Senate report rely quite heavily, in their arguments, on the report of the Committee set up to survey the organization and work of the Canadian Pension Commission, which in abbreviated forum is called the Woods Committee.

• (1650)

In defence of the Government the previous speaker suggested that the Minister of Veterans Affairs have always listened to the needs of veterans. I think he is absolutely right, and surprisingly frank and straightforward when he says that. He is absolutely correct when he says that they have listened. In this particular case they have been listening since 1968 and have probably listened since 1965. When they saw the size of the problem at that time they implemented the usual Liberal strategy of referring it to a commission rather than dealing with it.

They did that in 1965 and the Woods Committee digested the reference for a period of three years until 1968, some 15 years ago, when the Woods Committee report was issued.

The Government then listened from 1968 to 1981, when even senators became impatient, which is somewhat remarkable and perhaps even encouraging. They decided to study the Woods report and issued their report entitled "They Served, We Care" in 1981, I believe. The Government has been listening, reading and considering the Senate report since it was issued in October, 1981, I believe.

The Senate report covered a number of areas in addition to the specific area that was referred to in the motion of the Hon. Member for Red Deer. The primary issue referred to in the motion deals with how a divorced spouse may be treated under the existing pension legislation. It is rather a serious question and I find it difficult to understand why the Government is being so slow and hesitant to improve the conditions of those individuals.

I am sure that other Members have letters, as I do, from women in Canada who are badly treated under the existing provisions of this particular piece of legislation. I know that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has been very actively involved in the development of veterans legislation, receives numerous letters from veterans across Canada. He brought one such letter to my attention in reference to this particular motion. It is from a woman who resides in Eastman, Quebec, and is in a very unfortunate predicament. She was married to two veterans. Her first husband is now deceased and she is divorced from her second husband. In addition to that, she is a battered wife and was defrauded of her life savings by her second husband from whom she was divorced in 1981.

This woman is a former public health nurse, is now terminally ill and is on welfare because she does not qualify for assistance under her late husband's entitlement, nor does she qualify for any benefits from her divorced husband. That is simply because divorce is not recognized by the War Veterans Allowance Program or the Canadian Pension Commission.

This is what the Minister said in a letter dated March 7, 1983, in response to a letter from the office of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre:

> I agree that this woman's situation is indeed a tragic one and I sincerely regret that under the veterans' legislation there is no provision to assist her financially.
> The Pension Act provides for the payment of pension to a divorced widow if she was awarded alimony or maintenance. In cases where the divorced widow was not awarded alimony or maintenance, the Commission may, in its discretion, award a pension to her if she is in a dependent condition and if, in the opinion of the Commission, she would have been entitled to an award of alimony or maintenance had she made application under due process of law. Dependent condition is defined, in the Pension Act, as being without sufficient income or assets, other than the premises in which the person resides, to maintain himself or herself.

I saw this letter last week and have gone over it numerous times since then. I have come to the conclusion that only a Philadelphia lawyer could possibly understand what the Minister means. I have still not figured out what the bureaucratic language would mean to a person who was trying to find out what his or her entitlement would be under that piece of legislation.

The Minister goes on to say:

> With regard to War Veterans Allowance, the legislation defines "widow" as a surviving spouse of a deceased veteran who has not remarried, and a surviving spouse of a deceased veteran who has remarried and whose spouse of that marriage dies within five years of the marriage. As this woman's situation does not correspond to this definition, she cannot qualify for War Veterans Allowance as the widow of her husband. In addition, as she is no longer the spouse of this particular person, since this marriage terminated in divorce, she does not qualify for any portion of the benefits that may be awarded to him under our legislation.

The Minister then goes on to say that again they are considering the matter as they have since 1965 at least and actively since 1968 and again since 1981. The Minister goes on to say:

> I am pleased to tell you that a thorough review of the War Veterans Allowance and Civilian War Allowance Acts has been in progress for several months. I can assure you that your suggestion with regard to remarried widows will be carefully considered in this review.

The woman since then wrote back to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre and said how encouraged she was by the last paragraph in the Minister's response. I am afraid that I will have to write her and tell her that, based on the information recently received from the Royal Canadian Legion, any hope for any positive result arising from that review will not take place for at least a further two-year period. At the end of that time, of course, we will have no idea whether the review will ultimately result in the Government's finally doing something to implement the recommendations in the Woods report of 1968 or the Senate report of 1981.

In addition to the recommendations made in the Senate report with respect to widowed spouses, they also made a number of recommendations about matters of continuing concern to the Canadian Legion. According to my discussion with representatives of the Canadian Legion, they are very supportive of a committee being established such as was recommended in the Senate report. That particular recommendation reads:

(a) the Government appoint a Committee composed of officials from both the Government and veterans' associations to review and update those recommendations of the Woods Committee which have not been implemented and to identify, study and make recommendations about the anomalies which still exist in the treatment of veterans and their survivors.

The Hon. Member who stood up to defend and support the Government by making arguments against that kind of committee being established is misreading the situation, in my opinion. The reason the Canadian Legion and I myself have come to the conclusion that such a committee should be established is, quite frankly, that the Government has given no indication that it intends to act on those recommendations. If veterans' associations were involved in recommending active implementation of his recommendations, then perhaps finally there will be some justice brought to this particular situation. After at least 15 years of study, consideration, thought, letter-writing and everything else, but never any concrete action, I think it is time there was some action.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have the opportunity of speaking in a debate in the House of Commons that is concerned about veterans and their dependants. I can speak with a certain degree of integrity, I hope, because I served in the forces at the tail end of World War II. Although I was not in the war very long, I was in it long enough to get my wings. I have served in the militia for over 30 years since that time. I have expressed my concern for veterans, their loved ones and their needs over many years.

The Royal Canadian Legion has done and still does a great deal for veterans and so do other veterans' organizations. As a matter of fact, I have four branches of the Legion in my constituency, Branch No. 1, Branch No. 101, Branch No. 210 and Branch No. 217, to which I belong. I have belonged to Branch 217 for 35 years since coming out of the service and I have been concerned about veterans' problems for many years during that period of time.

In the eyes of other countries, Canada is in the forefront. We have a most enviable record in the ongoing development of veterans' programs and benefits. It is our duty as Parliamentarians to uphold that reputation. I believe the Government has done this over the years, regardless which Government may have been in power at the time. Our Governments have always been concerned about veterans.

I am informed that the average age of veterans today is nudging 63 years. Our present challenge is to nurture programs that reflect the needs of an aging veterans' population. I suggest that instead of looking forward, we are, in effect, looking backward in this motion. All of the considerations have already been given and the facts are known.

I share the expressed opinion of other Members in their assessment of the Senate report entitled "They Served, We Care". Obviously the Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science did not restrict itself to narrow issues. It ranged over a great swath of questions. Many witnesses were called. The Committee clearly felt that it had performed a creditable task. The Committee ensured widespread circulation of a specially produced publication.

In arguing against the establishment of a special committee, I suggest that we have only to look at the publication itself "They Served, We Care". This committee has covered everything as far as I can see. There is no necessity at this time to recreate the wheel by setting up another committee.

Here are the recommendations of a committe that went to so much time and trouble. This committee found apparent inequities in the treatment of two groups, divorced spouses and prisoners of war. This committee, instead of stating its opinion, recommended that someone else look at the issues. The facts are known, Mr. Speaker. Like them or not, the decisions have been made and it is time to stop the merry-go-round. I will get back to these particular issues in my remarks, but first I want to take a look at some of the other recommendations in the report.

One recommendation had been acted upon before the report's ink was dry showing that Parliament's concerns are invariably answered in the normal course of events. Another recommendation called for an end to delays in processing applications. This has always been a concern of the Veterans Affairs Committee, on which I have been serving for many years. We have considered time and time again the length of time required in order to process a pension application. Here is another recommendation that has been made redundant. The facts are self-evident. At the end of December, 1981, it took 334 days to process a disability pension application at the first level. Twelve months later the processing time had been slashed to an average of 99.1 days. Last month it had dipped to less than 80 days, and we hope that time will be reduced even further in the future.

The Commission has to draw information from outside sources. Of necessity, this takes between 60 and 90 days. Therefore, there is no longer any backlog with regard to pension applications at the first level. I am sure that all Members applaud this dramatic improvement. When I remember the clamour that used to come from the Conservative benches about the size of the backlog, I can only take their present silence on the subject as an indication of admiration for the job that has been done and for the reduction in the length of time in processing these cases.

Some of the other recommendations deal with the War Veterans Allowance Act. Members will know that officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs are undertaking a comprehensive study of this legislation, including the matters raised in the Senate report.

What I am pointing out is that veterans have many advocates and their views are heard. Just last week the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the dean of critics on veterans' issues, congratulated the Minister on his achievements since he took over the portfolio. There is progress all the time.

What about recommendation No. 7 which is the basis of this debate? I will not talk about the implementation or non-implementation of the many recommendations of the Woods report. This report is nearly 15 years old and I would be surprised if many anomalies had not been unearthed during that period of time. Rather, I want to discuss the specific issues the Senate Committee wants to put under the microscope.

First, there is the question of the apparent inequity to a divorced spouse who, under existing legislation, has no entitlement to benefits under the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act. I ask Hon. Members, where is the need for a special committee to probe into this matter? The circumstances are well known. Either you believe there is inequity or you do not. It is not as if this were a new issue. It has been around for years and the facts have not changed. Veterans receive benefits as compensation for their individual service in a theatre of war. They are granted to male and female veterans alike. They are not awarded to families because families do not serve in a theatre of war. Widows can receive survivors' benefits because they had been, until the veteran's death, the spouse of an entitled veteran.

But in the case of a divorce, the veteran no longer has a spouse. The benefits earned by a veteran are not transferable, not to his parents, nor to an ex-spouse. Opponents of this principle point to the Canada Pension Plan where the benefits are divided in half at the time of divorce. But, Mr. Speaker, Canada Pension Plan benefits are earned through financial contributions over the years. War Veterans Allowances and disability pensions are not awarded in return for financial payments that otherwise might have been part of the household income. They are given in recognition of individual service in war time and, of course, in the case of disability pensions, as recompense for individual injury.

No amount of study is going to change these facts. Arguments have been made that War Veterans Allowances should be regarded as is the Canada Pension Plan and the Guaranteed Income Supplement. Such arguments have been rejected. So where is the need for further study? Take the case of a War Veterans Allowance recipient who is receiving the married rate. If this veteran is divorced, only the single rate is paid. Do we need a committee to decide if it is fair for that veteran to pay half the single rate allowance to an ex-spouse? I, for one, do not think so.

Now, let us look at the next matter officials would be called upon to examine. I want to quote verbatim from the conclusions in the Senate report. It reads:

> Under the Prisoner of War Compensation Act, veterans are paid disability pensions of from 10-20 per cent based on the length of time they were incarcerated. The Hong Kong veterans, however, have been entitled to a disability pension of 50 per cent because of the extreme severity of their long confinement. Other groups of veterans, such as the Dieppe veterans, were also held for long periods of time under abnormally harsh conditions but are entitled to a pension of no more than 20 per cent. Is it just to compensate those who were prisoners of war for over two and one-half years at a disability rate that is only twice the compensation offered those who were incarcerated for just three months?

There, concisely and accurately, is the issue. If the Senate Committee could not come to a definite conclusion, why does it expect another committee to do so? What else is there to investigate? That Committee has investigated it all. Any such investigation would centre on the demands by the Dieppe Veterans and Prisoners of War Association for larger pensions for its members. That Association is being well served by its President, Mr. Georges Giguere. Mr. Giguere has appeared before committees in both Houses and has forcefully stated his case. He has met with the Minister. I would suggest that no person could have been more diligent in presenting the case of Dieppe prisoners of war.

We can argue whether or not successive Governments have reacted properly to those presentations, but we cannot argue that Dieppe POWs have not been heard. We sometimes forget that Canada is one of very few countries in the world which has any prisoner of war compensation at all. We have every reason to be proud of our legislation. Surely our record shows that prisoner of war associations have been given sympathetic hearings over the years.

I know the Minister regularly reviews the claims of Dieppe prisoners of war and is in possession of any facts that would be brought before a committee. In conclusion, these issues have been exhaustively studied. They have been studied and difficult decisions have been made. There is no reason to slough off responsibility on another committee. Although I have every sympathy with the issue raised and I congratulate the Hon. Member for keeping issues pertaining to veterans and their families before the House of Commons, I do not see any need for the motion to consider further the advisability of implementing recommendation No. 7 since it has already been considered.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) accept a question?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): I will accept a question unless my time is up.

Mr. Towers: In view of the canned speech the Hon. Member has just presented, would he agree that the Government will take action immediately if it will not set up the committee as recommended by the Senate Committee? It is fine and dandy with me if he agrees that the Government will take some action immediately and not wait a year or a year and a half as has been suggested. Certainly a committee could meet and report back in two or three months. This does not necessarily mean that it has to go on so long. Will the Hon. Member guarantee that the Government will take some action on this matter, not just leave it sitting, as it has been for the past several years?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): I think the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) asked a very good question which he should put before the Minister when he is in the House during Question Period.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, in September 1981, Mr. A. D. McCracken was commissioned to examine the administrative and adjudicative procedures of the pension process. Mr. McCracken was asked to report to the Minister on possible changes in the pension system to allow a shorter period between the time veterans first apply for disability pension benefits and the disposition of their claims.

Mr. McCracken reported that from mid-1979 to mid-1981 the rate of decisions fell significantly and, as a result, the backlog of applications awaiting adjudication had risen by June 30, 1981 to 4,395 from some 2,800 in March, 1979. Of this total, over 16 per cent had been on hand for more than 12 months. Apart from these backlogs in the pension system, Mr. McCracken also reported that there were almost 3,000 cases with district pension advocates throughout the country, of which 37 per cent had been on hand for six months or more. That was 700 more than was normally the case.

As the Hon. Member opposite indicated, we are pleased to note that there has been significant change for the better. Recently the Minister reported that very substantial progress was made with respect not only to the question of dealing with the backlog of the Canadian Pension Commission but also dealing with the processing time. He noted that where formerly the process was taking around 334 days or nearly a year, it was reduced to some 79 days.

I want to contrast the optimistic report which gives all of us satisfaction with a letter I received yesterday from a constituent, Mr. G. Lars Thompson of Penticton. The letter revealed frustration and resentment as a result of a series of events that had affected him in his relationship with the Canadian Pension Commission. He began his letter by writing:

> I am asking for assistance in obtaining case histories of the experience of veterans with the Canadian Pension Commission. As you are aware it can take years for the Canadian Pension Commission to process a claim that could have been completed in a matter of days. The ridiculously long time that it can take to process a veteran's claim would indicate that the Commission wants the veteran to become discouraged or die before a pension award is made.

I do not believe that is the case, but the letter indicated a frustration in dealing with what veterans believe to be a cold, unfeeling bureaucracy. It revealed a resentment which develops in one who feels that he is being denied a benefit to which he is entitled.

The Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) in mentioning the provision of benefit of doubt that would affect those situations in which veterans cannot provide all specific proof but can produce evidence to substantiate the circumstances they present in their plea for help. Perhaps the frustration and resentment comes about because it appears that where doubt exists there is very little benefit extended to the claimant.

I had wished to bring a matter to the attention of the House concerning prisoners of war and the failure to settle accounts with certain prisoners of war who were held in Stalag III in Germany, however I do not have the time at my disposal today and I will leave it for another day. I also see that my friend across the way is anxious to get the floor, so I will terminate my remarks and give the floor to him.

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) for allowing me perhaps a minute or a minute and a half to speak very briefly on the motion of the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers).

The report entitled "They Served, We Care" prepared by the Committee in the other place has been justly praised in many quarters. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) has also added his praise of this report. It reflects a thorough and responsible look at the broad range of veterans' issues. As we know, it contained seven recommendations. I should point out that some of them no longer have relevance as they were answered in the normal course of time.

• (1720)

It would seem that the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) is really concerned about the last recommendation concerning the Woods report. We do know that these particular issues and subjects have been argued, analysed, discussed and dissected time and again.

Mr. Blaikie: Then let's have some action.

Mr. Burghardt: There has been action, as many veterans and veterans' organizations throughout the country know. It is quite evident to any member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs when representatives of the Veterans' organizations appear before the committee. In correspondence individual Members receive from veterans' groups, we see that a great deal of action has been taken.

I realize my time is up. I would like to have been able to further enunciate the actions that have been taken and certainly the broad policies which this current Minister in particular has undertaken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Before proposing the question on the motion for second reading and reference of Bill C-405, An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, (Benefits to adopting parent), the Chair ought to enter a caveat as to the procedural acceptability of this Bill.

When a private members' Bill provides for an enlargement of the class of possible claimants or for an increase in the benefits payable under the Act, the charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund would consequently be increased. Therefore, in my view, any such Bill would be a "money Bill" which must be introduced by a Minister of the Crown and accompanied by the recommendation of the Governor General. However, since the Chair does not want to take too much of Private Members' time to rule now, I intend to allow the debate to take place on this Bill until such debate comes to an end, and then I will rule on the acceptability of the Bill.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE BENEFITS TO ADOPTING PARENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved that Bill C-405, An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, (benefits to adopting parents), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, if I should be lucky enough to get to the point where you have to rule on the admissibility, or inadmissibility of the Bill, I will want to present an argument as to why it is admissible. In the meantime, may I say that the use of the term "parent" in this Bill is intentional. For too long our society has thought of the parenting function as the duty of women alone and has not included responsibility of fathers to their children. This Bill accepts that co-equal responsibility at the outset.

This Bill is not specifically about fathers or mothers, but about the arrival of children in new homes as a result of adoption. Some provisions are already in place to assist natural mothers with the arrival of their children. In our view, they are certainly not adequate or all-encompassing. Canadian maternity benefits, compared with those in Sweden, France, Italy and Israel are stingy. When you can take two years' leave with pay in other countries, the 15 weeks in Canada seems somewhat inadequate. This Bill would extend to adoptive parents the benefits that apply to natural parents. There are excellent reasons why it should be enacted.

In many provincial jurisdictions, adoptive parents are required to spend time at home with their new child. This is necessary for the health and development of these children. The time for settling in ranges from a few weeks to several months. It can be required by either provincial Act or regulation of a sponsoring agency. The number of families which can have only one wage earner and numerous other factors has led to today's situation where few families can afford, and as a result may not wish, to have someone adopted into their home.

Unemployment keeps a lot of people at home, but that would not qualify them for adoption. Someone must take time off from their employment to be with an adoptied child. This is a significant disincentive to potential adoptive parents. Why should that be so? If the Government and Parliament can do this for natural parents, it is equally as important for adoptive parents, particularly when it concerns young children. This Bill will redress this injustice by giving adoptive parents the same leave provisions as natural parents.

Second, but no less important, for the most part the person taking time off work would be the woman, the person who faced the most difficulty getting a job in the first place. This is all the more so if it is a good job. Without the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act extended to them, adoptive parents would have no right to return to their former place of employment, as does a natural parent. Surely that is another disincentive to becoming an adoptive parent.

This Bill attempts to provide the same privileges for those, who, bless their hearts, adopt a child, newborn to teenage, into their homes. Some time should be spent by one or both adoptive parents with the child. All we ask is that the 8 or 15 weeks be provided, as is the case with natural parents.

I have good reason to believe that Members from all Parties agree with this Bill. I am not wedded to my Bill being passed, whether or not it is in order. If the House is agreed, the subject matter of the Bill could be referred to the appropriate standing committee, particularly if the Chair rules that it is not in order. The subject matter could then be considered by an appropriate committee and incorporated into legislation. The Government can have all the credit, as far as I am concerned.

This measure is long overdue. This Bill has been placed on the Order Paper either by myself or by a former colleague for a number of years. I hope that today the House will agree to deal with the Bill. If Your Honour disputes its eligibility, I wish to make a number of arguments in favour of its being an appropriate Bill. Failing that, having the subject matter referred to the appropriate committee would be a small step toward implementing a necessary piece of social legislation under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). I commend him for his initiative in bringing this Bill forward. I have two immediate reactions to his suggestion that Unemployment Insurance benefits should be extended to adoptive parents.

The first is that this is not a new subject; it has been considered on many occasions over the last ten years. The second reaction which I should like to emphasize is that adoptive parents certainly deserve consideration in the special problems they face.

What is the most appropriate means of dealing with what appears to be a legitimate social concern? A proposal to extend Unemployment Insurance benefits to adoptive parents should not be dismissed lightly. We have to see how adoptive parents and natural parents differ under the Unemployment Insurance Act, and then decide how Unemployment Insurance can assist both groups. The adoptive parent plays an absolutely essential role in our society and the adoption process brings the joys of parenthood into many lives.

There have been dramatic changes in adoption in society over the last several years. At one time the majority of adoptive children were infants and there was a large number of infants available for adoption. Now, changing social values have radically altered this pattern; birth control measures are more sophisticated and acceptable, and single mothers are more and more tending to keep their babies instead of putting them out for adoption. For these reasons there is no longer a large surplus of babies available for an insufficient number of prospective parents. Quite the reverse is true in many cases.

Social values on adoption are also changing in many ways. For example, it would have been virtually unheard of 10 or 15 years ago for a single parent to adopt a child. This is happening more and more in today's world. Children's Aid Societies are encouraging the adoption of older children. In many cases these are children with behavioural, psychological or physical problems. Their needs and the needs of their parents are therefore different from the needs of many adoptive parents in the past.

It is evident to anyone who has studied the area that there are circumstances in which adoptive parents will have more difficulty in caring for their new child than is the case with many newborn infants. It is not difficult to imagine, for example, the pressures in an adoptive family attempting to care for a child who has been bounced from one foster family to another, a child who lacks a sense of security, of love and of family warmth. There is no question that in many cases such adoptive children have serious psychological problems and that the new parents must provide continuous care and supervision which will require one or other of the parents to remain at home. Consequently, there may very well be income problems in the family, and it is here that Governments and social agencies must become involved.

One of the criteria, not necessarily the most important, in arriving at a decision on adoption, is the financial circumstances of the family unit. Just as important is the question of whether the needs of the particular child can be met in the family environment of the adopting family. Children's Aid Societies pay a great deal of attention to the suitability of the family. Some of the factors involved in their evaluation are that the marriage situation be a stable one, that adequate emotional stability and security be provided. Parents must demonstrate their ability to handle the problems which will arise in adoptive situations. They must show that they are emotionally able to accept a child and that they will be able to understand and deal with the child's problems and point of view. These are extremely important considerations. They are sometimes complicated by the issue of financial security.

The core of my concern here is not whether adoptive parents may need some form of support. Some will, others will not. I believe the issue for us to consider now is that if we agree in principle that adoptive parents in general should get some form of support through the UI program, then what is the best legislation this House should support to do it?

I believe that this Bill does not represent the best this House could legislate. Let me explain. In general, the specific provisions of this Bill display a lack of understanding of the principles underlying the current provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The qualifying period and entrance requirement proposed is too stringent, given what is now in effect for maternity claimants. Why should adoptive parents be subjected to considerably more restrictive requirements than natural parents? It may well be that, upon further study and consultation we would see fit to have substantially different requirements for adoptive parents. But it does seem inequitable, at first glance, to treat the two groups of claimants differently.

Other provisions of this Bill relate to the way in which benefits could be paid and the length of the benefit period. First, the Bill does not provide for a waiting period, and in doing so conflicts with the insurance character of the UI program. We must remember that the waiting period is comparable to a deductibility clause in a private insurance plan. And, clearly, if there is a waiting period for maternity benefits and if, as the explanatory note to the Bill says, "an adopting parent should be entitled to benefits equivalent to pregnancy benefits", then why should there not be a waiting period in the case of benefits for adoptive parents?

The Bill also proposes to pay benefits for only eight weeks after the adopted child starts to live with the new parents. Some years ago this House legislated that maternity benefits should be paid within a more flexible time frame. It has tended to endorse a more generous attitude to providing modern women with income protection that is commensurate with the critical social role they play in the welfare of future generations. Parents with adopted children play an equally important role. Any motion to provide them with UI benefits should therefore reflect a reasonable and studied attempt to provide comparable income protection. The principle of equity demands it. Any motion to provide them with UI benefits should therefore reflect a reasonable and studied attempt to provide comparable income protection. Furthermore, the maternity benefit provisions themselves have been subjected to detailed scrutiny over the past few years, and many interested groups have made sensible suggestions that would streamline UI maternity provisions and make them more equitable. The Government has been reviewing the provision of the current legislation with a view to proposing changes.

Legislation on benefits for adoptive parents should, therefore, be considered in the context of this review to ensure they are both equitable and consistent with current trends to modernize legislation so that it can provide temporary income protection to those who cannot work due to the initial demands of post-adoption or post-natal care.

Let me stress again that I am not disputing the validity and worth of paying benefits to adoptive parents. Adoption plays, we all know, a vital role in our society, in providing good homes for disadvantaged and parentless children. It also makes it possible for those who cannot have natural children, or choose not to have them for whatever reason, to experience the rewards of becoming parents.

I am suggesting that it is our responsibility to look at this matter in more detail, to develop such legislation more carefully on the basis of consultations already held with various groups interested in such a decision before we bring in legislation to pay benefits to parents who adopt children. In opposing this Bill—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

• (1740)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but I understand we are going to be interrupted shortly. Since we have little enough time for private Members' Bills, and in order to facilitate dealing with my Bill, I would like to ask the unanimous consent of the House to agree to sit for whatever time past the hour of six o'clock in order to provide the complete one-hour debate for my Bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Does the House agree to the proposal put forth by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin)? Is there unanimous consent?

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent. The Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. McCauley) has the floor.

Mr. McCauley: Mr. Speaker, I will quickly conclude because I know my friend, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), has a few remarks he wishes to make on this Bill.

In opposing this Bill, this House would not be voting for or against adoption. Nor would this House be voting for or against giving some form of benefits for modern families who may need some temporary income support while caring for an adopted child during the first months. After all, in some ways, the role of parents who adopt children is often harder than that of the natural parent. But I find I cannot support this motion because its specific provisions do not accord with the principles underlying the existing provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act, the advice of qualified experts and the legitimate interests of private and public sector groups in Canadian society.

Mr. Blaikie: I would like it on the record, Mr. Speaker, that it was the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder) who denied unanimous consent to have this matter discussed—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. That is hardly a point of order. The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I echo the sentiments of my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), to the effect that it is regrettable that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder) refused unanimous consent.

I am pleased to rise in support of this Bill, Mr. Speaker. I believe, as expressed in the Bill, that an adoptive parent should be entitled to pregnancy benefits the same as natural parents. I addressed this matter in the House of Commons last Fall. I note, Mr. Speaker, that in 1981, a task force on Unemployment Insurance recommended that the change be made. That recommendation was made in the interests of equity and fairness on the theory that benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act should be extended to newly adoptive parents. Parents who adopt children face the same physical, mental, social and economic adjustments as natural parents, and they often have no advance notice of the date of adoption. I have received letters from concerned constituents. I would like to quote from a letter I received from a woman in Penetanguishene, who said:

> Even though, in my case, I have contributed to the UIC for approximately eight and a half years, I will not be eligible—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to deny unanimous consent to continue past six o'clock and allow the speaker to continue.

Mr. Lewis: You may understand that, I do not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Chair to take that as a withdrawal of the refusal to give unanimous consent? It was taken as such. The Chair should make absolutely sure that there is unanimous consent to prolong the debate beyond the normal time of adjournment, which is six o'clock in this case, so as to complete the full 60 minutes of debate provided for under Standing Orders. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is so ordered.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Parliamentary Secretary for reconsidering his position. I was quoting from a letter from a woman in Penetanguishene who made the point that she had contributed to UIC for approximately eight and a half years and that she will not be eligible to collect any benefits once her chosen child arrives. She also makes the point, Mr. Speaker, that the Children's Aid Society requires that a parent be in the home full time for a minimum of six months. The Children's Aid Society recognizes that there is indeed an adjustment period which in fact is even more vital in forming an adoptive family. I have another letter, Mr. Speaker, from a woman in Orillia who suggests that adoptive parents, both male and female, go through the same emotional adjustments as natural parents. I also have representations from the St. Columbkille's Catholic Women's League in which they agree that adoptive parents should receive Unemployment Insurance maternity benefits the same as natural parents.

I want to put this on the record, Mr. Speaker, because, with five natural children, I know there is an adjustment period. I know from our family friends who have adopted children that there is a physical and mental adjustment which should be addressed. I believe it is absolute discrimination that adoptive parents should not have the same rights under the Unemployment Insurance Act, and I would urge the Government to consider referring this matter to committee, or to include it in the upcoming revisions to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I listened as my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. McCauley), addressed the fact of adoption, but in my opinion I do not believe he addressed the discrimination which now exists. I do not believe this is a partisan issue. I do not believe it is something on which political Parties will rise or fall. I just believe it is something which the House should make right for adoptive parents. We should hurdle the red tape and the bureaucrats in this case. We should do what is right.

I would urge upon the Government to reconsider and re-open the Unemployment Insurance Act so that adoptive parents can have the same rights as natural parents, and that the present discrimination which exists under the Unemployment Insurance Act can be finished and terminated once and for all.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to speak to the Bill introduced by the Hon. Member. I feel this is an important Bill because adoption is becoming increasingly widespread in this country, and it is only sensible to have measures that will provide effective assistance to people who are helping others by adopting a child or even several children, because in many cases, people are adopting more than one child. The concept behind Bill C-405 is clearly explained as follows:

An adopting parent should be entitled to benefits equivalent to pregnancy benefits, considering that problems faced in adoption are as great as or greater than those occurring during pregnancy.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the basic concept of this Bill deserves to be supported. The problem is to find out how this piece of legislation could be implemented effectively, and I have taken the trouble to check with the Department to find out what can be done in terms of hearings for children who are adopted, and whether the measures proposed by the Hon. Member could be implemented immediately.

Mr. Speaker, this subject is not particularly new to our debates in the House of Commons. In 1980, the Canadian Human Rights Commission made a statement on the subject and said that something had to be done about—

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Madam Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Deputy Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned:

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Honour the Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, His Honour was pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

Bill C-136, an Act respecting Small Business Investment Grants—Chapter 147.

Bill C-142, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act—Chapter 148.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE BENEFITS TO ADOPTING PARENT

The House resumed consideration of the Motion of Mr. Benjamin that Bill C-405, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (Benefits to Adopting Parent), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment further on Bill C-405 which was introduced by the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

As I pointed out earlier, Mr. Speaker, this Bill is important because of its principle and because of the people it concerns. I think it is very important to increase the public's awareness with respect to families who adopt children and I also think the Department should be particularly concerned about this matter.

I would like to point out that Unemployment Insurance officials have been considering the problem for ten years, and during that time, Members on all sides of the House have regularly pointed out to the Minister of Employment and Immigration that adoption has become a specific phenomenon in our society.

However, I think we must be particularly careful when we consider parents who are going to adopt. I think the Department is having trouble at this point in properly defining various criteria that would make adopting parents eligible. For instance, there is an increasing tendency among unmarried mothers to keep their babies instead of giving them up to the Children's Aid. This is a new development. Before, it was much easier to adopt children because being an unmarried mother was socially more or less unacceptable, while today, we are seeing more and more single parent families, and it is becoming increasingly difficult for couples to adopt a child. As a result, there are fewer children available for adoption, while the number of people who want to adopt is rising. Orphanages are gradually disappearing.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we are seeing a shift in certain social attitudes, to the point that even single individuals are being considered as adoptive parents and do, in fact, adopt children. This would have been unthinkable a few years ago, while today, it is no longer the exception, since single people may adopt children. The profile of adoption has changed considerably over the years. People are adopting older children who may be suffering from physical or emotional problems. Such children and the parents who adopt them have specific needs, and it is important that they should be defined in legislation, because we need a set of criteria that will govern the subsequent implementation of the legislation and its regulations.

We must consider children who are passed from one family to another and are suffering from a lack of security and a lack of love and human warmth. Many of these children have serious behavioral problems which require special and constant attention. In addition, the people who are now considering an adoption have different expectations than those of the preceding generation. The same applies to children liable to be adopted.

We do not find such a definition in the Bill nor the scope of its enforcement. This is what I find difficult. As I said earlier, in the Explanatory Note to his Bill, the Hon. Member says and I quote:

> An adopting parent should be entitled to benefits equivalent to pregnancy benefits considering that problems faced in adoption are as great as or greater than those occurring during pregnancy.

As I said earlier, the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the minister responsible for the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act have been considering the problem for well over a decade due to the difficulty to delineate the scope of the legislation.

There is one other important issue, Mr. Speaker, i.e. the adopting family must comply with certain standards. Thus we should make sure that the couple is truly stable and that adopting parents will be able to face difficult situations, because the mere taking care of children should not be confused with an actually responsible and legal adoption. We see an ever increasing number of families who assume the responsibility of children without gaining their legal custody or actually adopting them. Now this Bill should be more specific on that subject.

People who are considering adoption must, in accordance with the requirements set forth by the adoption agencies, have a reasonable annual income since it is often required that one of the parents should leave his or her job during a period which could extend up to six months. Such a standard leads us to further consider possibility of providing some financial aid to those people, especially in the case of a two-income family. Moreover, the purpose of the unemployment insurance program is to provide with temporary assistance people who lose insurable jobs. We should make a distinction between an unemployment insurance scheme and social measures.

I believe however that some important matters must be cleared up in this respect. On the other hand, it has been established that most pregnant women work until one or two weeks before giving birth and receive maternity benefits during the weeks following the birth or births. It is therefore not very likely that most of these women could not go back to work until 17 weeks after the birth of their child. This is an important point with regard to the bill introduced by the Hon. Member. It is not that the principle itself is bad, but the Hon. Member tends to confuse a social measure with the Unemployment Insurance Act itself, which states that a woman must have at least 20 weeks of insurable employment to be eligible for pregnancy benefits on leaving her job, while the Hon. Member wants an adopting parent to be entitled to unemployment benefits. I imagine that the Hon. Member means people who are employed. Should benefits be paid to an adopting parent if the child is five days, two weeks or six months old? It is possible to adopt three, four and five year old children, but the bill does not make any distinction between cases.

Another point should be made. Not only has the Department been reviewing this problem for some time, but the Minister concerned, Mr. Axworthy, has made known his intention to speed up a review of all problems related to adopting parents. As I said earlier, everyone has been considering this problem for ten years, but Mr. Axworthy has promised to speed up the review—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. This is the second time that the Hon. Member has called the Minister of Employment and Immigration by his name. He should always refer to the Minister by his portfolio or his constituency.

Mr. Maltais: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Employment and Immigration has asked his Department to speed up its review so as to be able to better respond to the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member.

At the moment, it is impossible to grant benefits to adopting parents before this wide ranging study is completed. First, we must define clearly how the Act will apply to adopting parents, since there are a great number of possible solutions. There are many ways to meet the objective suggested by the Hon. Member. We would have to define clearly how such benefits would be provided. Would both parents be entitled to them at the same time? This is an important question since we are speaking about adoption. We are not dealing with pregnancy as such. If both parents work and one of them stays home, for instance the father, would the benefits be sent to the father, the mother or the child? What should we do?

Perhaps we might review the documents and reconsider the possibility of paying benefits for adopted children under the age of 6, in other words those who have not yet started school. This limit could be raised to cover older children because, as I pointed out earlier, a child can be adopted when he or she is one day old, or at the age of 8, 9 or 10. There is also the possibility of paying benefits only in cases where, in conformity with the requirements of the adoption agency, one of the parents has to stay home to look after the child; in other words, it would be a matter of establishing the cause and effect relationship between the child and the adopting parent. There is a strong possibility of excluding adoption through marriage as well as any other situation not directly related to adoption or birth.

Mr. Speaker, another aspect of the study has to do with cases where benefits could not be paid to the parents before the arrival of the child; then, the rules concerning regular or health benefits would apply to the natural mother during the period before delivery. It can readily be seen that this does indeed raise a few questions.

I think that this calls for serious consideration before we take a final decision and introduce a sound piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, we will have to consider as well the need to repeal the rule which restricts the maternity benefits to the first 15 weeks of the benefit period because, obviously, we are talking about adoption and not pregnancy. In the case of adopting parents, we will also have to re-examine the 10-week rule which might be irrelevant since then it would no longer be a matter of being unavailable for health reasons because there would have been no childbirth.

• (1810)

Finally, any change to include the adopting parents would be affected by existing conditions concerning maternity benefits. A full review of the Bill would be required so as to avoid any contradiction between conditions concerning natural parents and those concerning adopting parents. The Hon. Member has spelled out very specific provisions in his Bill. I think that Members on both sides of the House will agree on that. But still, the questions I raised earlier deserve more careful consideration because if we extend the general coverage of the law to all kinds of situations, the legislator will not be in a position to make all kinds of exceptions once the law has been adopted. We must therefore look into every aspect and every possibility to be quite sure that the law will still be operative under practically all circumstances. However, Mr. Speaker, the way it is worded I think that, in light of the questions I raised earlier, there will be a great many exceptions which will have to be examined if the Bill is adopted as is. And what the Department is recommending at this stage, is that its own studies be completed, and I think that it might then be useful that such information be made available to Hon. Members, to see whether actually the Hon. Member's concerns have indeed come up in the course of the studies currently in progress. It might also be important at that stage that departmental information be made available to Hon. Members so they know what is going on within the Department.

In that area the Government might be well advised to have Hon. Members involved to a greater extent in the studies and analyses carried out within the Department, because it is very difficult for any Hon. Member to draft a Bill all by himself, with very limited resources, when for ten years the whole Department has been studying and reviewing a problem that is indeed fundamental. It is so fundamental, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Rights and Freedoms Commission already has ruled that there is discrimination in adoption cases where no benefits are extended. Therefore, the Hon. Member's concerns are quite legitimate, but the Department might be urged to expedite matters, because increasingly adoption is becoming a wonderful fact of social life, and many foster families would like to suggest as a goal the implementation of the Hon. Member's proposals. There is however the problem of how to proceed with this. Where should the line be drawn between the plans for maternity and the plans for adoption? And where should the line be drawn between unemployment insurance as job insurance, and a social measure that would provide extra income to foster families?

So at this stage there are three important distinctions to be made, and, honestly, the Department would like, before taking a final position on the Hon. Member's proposal, to ensure that the Act can be reviewed in depth to allow to draw the lines between those three cases. Certainly the Hon. Member will recognize at this point in time that fairness is very hard to achieve on these three distinctions. And for the benefit of Hon. Members who have a genuine concern about this matter, it should be pointed out that when an overall assessment is made of the regulations to be applied in maternity cases, we see there is a very close link with the mother's health. That is why people are allowed to choose, either to quit working for a number of weeks before confinement or to keep working almost to the very moment of confinement and claiming those weeks thereafter. So this is strictly a matter of the mother's health. This is a decision to be made by the physician and the mother. And what we have there is someone who is contributing to the unemployment insurance scheme and is thus insuring her job. And this covers maternity cases.

Now where adoption is involved, is there a need that unemployment insurance benefits be the same as in maternity cases? A one-, two- or three-year old child, for instance, does not require the same kind of care as a newborn child. And if within the family there is help for the mother, for the family, is there a need to have benefits for a foster child? Because if one or two or three children are cared for, unemployment insurance benefits may not be required. Because in such a case, one receives family allowances and, in addition, the tax credit for children, and that is where the distinction must be made. The proposed legislation does not make this distinction. I will conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, because time is running out—

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member permit a couple of quick questions while he is completing his remarks?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Would the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary accept to answer questions?

Mr. Maltais: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Does the Hon. Member realize that this Bill has been on the Order Paper for some six years or more, in my name for the past three years and in the name of a former Member of Parliament for three or four years prior to that? He should realize this when he talks about the Department's considering the matter.

Also, does he realize that the Bill indicates that only people and their employers who have paid UIC premiums would be entitled to benefits as adoptive parents? All the other matters he is raising are totally irrelevant.

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, firstly, I agree with the Hon. Member for Regina West that the Department does not act very quickly. Moreover, I also agree that after six years of studies, it would seem to me that results should be coming. However, the Minister is presently indicating that, first the Department is moving at a faster pace in finalizing the research, the studies aimed at establishing the difference between the various situations I was referring to earlier. Second, I am fully aware, and that is underlined in the Bill proposed by the Hon. Member for Regina West, that, obviously, the person who is entitled to unemployment insurance benefits already has insurable employment, although presently, maternity benefits are much more related to a person's health situation than to an adoption case. There is a distinction to be made between these two situations. When you adopt a child who is two, three or four years old and when you already can count on help at home, does the child really need as much attention as if the mother had actually given birth to the child? In my opinion, there are distinctions to be made. That is what the Department is presently considering in a final evaluation, Mr. Speaker, before arriving at a final decision on the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Regina West.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly in support of the Bill to say how ironic and irritating it is to listen to Government Members complain about alleged inadequacies of the Bill, giving them as their reasons for not wanting it to be read a second time and sent to committee. As the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) pointed out, if they did not like the way this Bill was written, they have had some six years in which they could have brought in and tabled a Bill of their own that addressed some of the matters raised.

We clearly have here an attempt by the Government to prevent this Bill from going to Committee, to prevent its subject matter from being considered and to prevent any changes in the unemployment insurance legislation that would eliminate the discrimination which now exists against adoptive parents. If Government Members have that intention, why do they not just be honest with the Canadian people and come out and say so, rather than pretending that they sympathize with the Bill and agree with this or that? They will keep talking until the hour has expired in order to prevent it from going to Committee. That is exactly what I do not intend to do. I would like to continue, but I will not as I want this matter to go to Committee.

I hope the Government will have some second thoughts and let the matter go to Committee. What harm could be done by allowing this Bill to go to Committee so that Members of Parliament have an opportunity to discuss it and make some decisions regarding it? I have had constituents write to me on this issue and I have written to them indicating my support. In fact, I wrote to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) on the matter. There is no doubt a consensus within the House that some changes need to be made which would eliminate all discrimination. Why does the Government keep stonewalling the Bill? Why not let it go to committee?

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the concern of Members opposite who ask why we should not discuss this and let it go to committee when collectively we seem to be saying the same thing. We like some of the thoughts expressed in the Bill. As has been pointed out, it has been around for a good number of years in one form or another, so why talk it out now and procrastinate further?

Like other Members in this House, I too have received representations from my constituents on the subject. At first blush, it seems that fair is fair, that if we do it in one instance, why not another? Over time there are other instances that seem to be simple and clear-cut. However, when you examine them closely, they presents all kinds of problems.

Let me begin with the suggestion that it may be more appropriate for us to get into this legislation after the Department completes its studies.

Mr. Taylor: Why?

Mr. Masters: The Member opposite asks why. We are dealing with a matter in respect of which we have an Act that is designed to deliver protection to people who lose the benefit of jobs, whether through being dismissed, a plant shutdown or a period of natural pregnancy and birth. There is a physical reality that has to be addressed during that period and we have to take certain measures with regard to it.

We then get into another principle, if I can have the indulgence of the House to philosophize for a moment. While any proposals of this nature may be tiresome and take a long time to resolve, they must be the subject of thoughtful deliberation and much consultation. I believe the debate this afternoon adds to that.

We can all recall the time when people who could not work because of illness were not paid. If they were ill, that was too bad. In many instances people were not paid anything unless their employer was particularly benevolent or they where the sons or daughters of the owner.

There evolved a conscientious and great social system in which a period was allowed for sickness. The original intent was that people who were ill would be protected by others; the plant owners, and fellow workers who had to pick up the slack. Therefore, these people would not be out of pocket. After all, it is not the individuals fault that he is sick. There really were extenuating circumstances.

After a while, the notion seemed to creep into the system that if Charlie Brown had a week's sick time this year, whether or not I need sick time I should be given a week's sick leave, or at least have the benefit. There was a drastic change in the setup. It started out as a conscientious effort to be fair to people who under certain circumstances were not able to perform their work for a period of time.

We now come to the proposed legislation before us today. It is a kindred matter. We have recognized the need to assist many women who cannot work for a period of time during a natural pregnancy and after delivery. The legislative measure place is the Unemployment Insurance Act. It might perhaps have been designed in another fashion, but I think there is some justification for it. I do not quarrel with it.

My colleague mentioned the delivery system for social programs and I wonder about that when dealing with an insurance-type program. We have now a dilemma in that people adopting children say they experience the same kinds of things as the natural parents. They are not exactly the same things. I do not think we can have universality in the way we deliver services to the people of Canada. It would be nice if we could afford it, and that is the other difficulty I have with this piece of legislation—

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In most Provinces a parent who adopts a child is required by law to stay home for six months, so that parent loses his or her job. Why are the Liberals making so many excuses? If they do not want to pass the Bill why do they not say so instead of being so hypocritical.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That may be an interesting contribution to the debate but it is not a point of order.

Mr. Masters: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks whether we have been sincere. I do not think we want to impute different motives to different people. I am talking the Bill out, that is true. That is an honest statement. But that does not indicate that the Government is not interested in the subject matter.

I was trying to make the point that a problem of timing is involved. We are already being hit on all sides with difficulties under the UIC Act and are not able to deliver everything to people who require it. I believe that in the course of time we have to address these matters with great care and deliberation. There are many problems in our society that have been around longer than many of us would care to admit, but all things come about in due time.

I come back to the idea that the Hon. Member has done the House, the people of Canada and adoptive parents, a service by bringing forward legislation that underlines the sense of urgency which exists in many quarters to have something done in this area. That is worthwhile. What we say in this House has some significance in the process, otherwise we might as well stay in our ridings. This Bill should convey a sense of urgency to the responsible officials to deal with the matter with move vigour and enthusiasm.

The Hon. Member opposite reminded me of some of the technicalities of the adoption process and the law in most Provinces. We appreciate these facts, but we have to ask if we can come up with the money to do the things we would like to do, desirable as they may be, or whether we further weaken a system that is already weaked by further demands on it.

I find nothing wrong with the Government saying that it likes the idea, and that there is a need in many instances for the adoptive parents to be given due consideration, along with natural parents. I should like to see that happen, but this involves time for proper and thorough deliberation. The Member of the Official Opposition condemns the Government for taking precipitous action in other areas. He joins his colleagues in saying that there has not been enough discussion about this, that or the other thing, that there is not enough listening, yet when one tries to make the point that we have to examine the matter more thoroughly—

Mr. Taylor: How long, six years, seven years, ten years?

Mr. Masters: Six years, maybe ten years? There are some problems which have been around for thousands of years. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I am under the same pressures as the Hon. Members opposite from constituents who are adopting children, but I am satisfied—and I do not have the years of experience or the illustrious career of some Hon. Members opposite, and perhaps I am being naive—that my representations on the subject, which have been added to the many representations made here, have at least got me a very quick reply. This is something that occurred to me before I have had those representations made to me in my riding office. The response I received was immediate, it was sympathetic and it was logical. The response was, "We are now in the process of studying. We do have a problem of financing."

Perhaps one of the reasons this has been kicking around for so many years is that representations are being made in the wrong area. I do not see anything wrong with taking another look at that aspect of it. If we do not spend a little more time dealing with social problems—and all of us pride ourselves on our social conscience in this House—trying to bring them into a broader context to make sure they are not just ad hoc types of things or things done in isolation, we are going to have even more problems with budgetary matters. My memory is not that good, Mr. Speaker, but I do not believe the previous Government in its short time in office identified this as a burning issue which it wanted to get to immediately. I will say this, however, there has been good outcome as a result of this kind of a debate this afternoon. I do believe that the onus is now on the Government, and on Hon. Members of this side of the House, to look at this situation carefully and initiate some action.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Monday, April 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Miss Carney (p. 24689).

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me to participate in this budget debate. I think all Members would agree there is nothing more difficult in Government than drafting a budget, and as a colleague and as a fellow citizen, I want to express my heartiest congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on his superb effort.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: I cannot recall a budget which addressed in such a constructive fashion the fundamental issues facing the Canadian economy. As the Minister said in his budget speech, economic recovery is underway. The measures he announced will go a long way toward creating the climate of confidence necessary if the recovery is to be accelerated and our goal of creating secure jobs for Canadians is to be met.

The thrust of this recovery budget is divided into two main areas with respect to job creation. First and more immediate is the direct job creation and Special Recovery Capital Projects undertaken by the federal Government. The second phase, the strengthening of the private sector, I believe is the key to long-term prosperity for all Canadians. As the Minister responsible for Industrial and Regional Development, I would like to address my remarks today to this aspect of our economic renewal program. Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, time does not allow me to detail all the measures my Department will undertake in this regard. However, I will try and highlight the key instruments.

It has been said so often and so accurately that the main engine of growth in the Canadian economy always has been and always will be the private sector. However, let us be under no illusions.

Canada's industries have never before faced such a challenge. Increasingly, both developing and developed countries are competing with us for markets abroad. I do not refer just to foreign markets but also to our own domestic markets. This budget has offered specific assistance to Canadian firms so that they can meet this challenge.

The budget also addresses our current situation in a realistic way. It recognizes that the private sector has undergone tremendous pressure in the past few years as evidenced by the dramatic decline in corporate profits. I do not have to tell this House that without corporate profits there would be no corporate investment. Without investment there would be a continuing loss of competitiveness for our firms, by not maintaining a competitive position results in a reduction in employment. This budget has provided the means which will enable Canadian firms, particularly the small and medium-sized businesses which have a much smaller resource base to draw upon to restore their balance sheets, to get out from under the inordinate debt burden many have been carrying. They will then be able to divert moneys now spent on debt servicing to more productive, job creation activities.

The $300 million Special Recovery Investment Fund announced in the budget will be put to use immediately to lever investment in the private sector. When this year's $100 million and the $200 million next year is added to the approved reference levels for my Department, we will be delivering $2.5 billion of direct assistance to industry in that two-year period.

Our private sector consultations indicate that there are many projects being contemplated by Canadian corporations. We feel we can assist in accelerating these investments because of the incentives these additional funds will provide.

• (1110)

The Government, as Hon. Members know, has brought forward many of its own spending plans so that projects can proceed earlier. Not only does this Special Recovery Program assist in the provision of jobs in the shorter term, it ensures Government financing needs will be drawn from the available capital pool at a time when private sector borrowing will be lower. As private sector investment increases—and that is what we required for the long-term, sustainable recovery—Government borrowings will decrease.

It is clear that within this broad framework established by the budget some very specific activities will occur. One goal, that of increasing our productivity, must be stressed again and again. The Government and the private sector, which includes both industry and labour, must direct their resources to achieving a much more competitive position for our products if we are to maintain and increase our market share.

To facilitate this goal, the budget indicated the Government's intention to fund a National Centre for Productivity and Employment Growth that will be a joint industry-labour effort. My colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), with whom I share responsibility for the Government's participation in this centre, will be speaking in more detail about this project this afternoon.

The issue of technology and its place in our future is obviously critical. The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) will be speaking at more length on this subject during the budget debate. As far as the responsibilities of my Department are concerned, it is both the development of technology as well as the application of technology to industries in terms of innovation and productivity improvement, that is of importance. If time permitted, I would like to detail our efforts in that regard. However, I will have an excellent opportunity to address this issue in detail when I speak to the National Productivity Awards luncheon for the Canadian machinery and metal working industry in two weeks.

As I mentioned, small and medium-sized businesses are clearly of particular importance to our economic recovery and this budget has dealt with their needs in a number of ways. My departmental and Cabinet colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey), will be speaking about specific measures as well as outlining the new role which the Federal Business Development Bank will be playing.

The Minister of Finance has set out two major undertakings to assist industry. One consists of those projects in the short term that will be delivered directly by the Government. The second consists of measures which will enable the private sector to become more competitive. Only through the growth of our economic base can this country create the sustainable employment required. With the creation of a stronger private sector industrial base, this growth is sure to occur.

There is another aspect to this budget which to me, as Minister responsible for regional and industrial development, is particularly gratifying. The spirit that underlies the budget, the specific provisions it contains and its timing are all extremely fortunate in terms of the developments which have taken place with respect to our Department. I want to take this opportunity to explain to the House what these developments are.

When the Minister of Finance outlined the tax measures being put in place to assist Canadian business, he was describing one of the two major elements that our industry needs. That was one part of the effort to encourage private sector growth throughout Canada.

Today I would like to describe the other major component of that effort. The new Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion was set up to be the federal Government's principal instrument to provide direct assistance to Canadian industry. It will direct this federal assistance through a number of methods to manufacturers, processors, related service industries, the tourism industry, across the full range from small to large enterprises.

Over the past few months, the basic groundwork has been done to put into place the Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion, whose task will be to mount a major effort in industrial development across all sectors and in all regions of the country. The preparatory work, which I would like to describe today, is categorized under several headings: the mandate of the Department; the program structure; the organization which has been set up and the priorities which have been established.

As Your Honour knows, early last year the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced the reorganization of Economic Development Departments and the Economic Development Cabinet Committee. As a result of that announcement, the regional programs of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion were amalgamated with the domestic industry, small business and tourism components of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The integration of those two organizations has now been completed right across the country.

The mandate that has been struck for the Department is to stimulate national economic growth and help reduce regional disparities through leverage of investment and promotion of industrial development and trade.

Simply stated, the mandate of the new Department of DRIE will be to facilitate and support industrial development and adjustment in order to reduce economic disparities among regions and increase the prosperity of Canadians in all areas.

This will be done by stimulating the innovation of productivity improvement, encouraging the establishment, expansion and modernization of production facilities, promoting development of domestic sourcing to realize Canadian and international market opportunities, supporting industrial renewal, achieving industrial benefits from resource projects and supporting job creation and entrepreneurship.

Our Government remains firmly committed to regional development. Since the creation of DREE in 1969, the basic approach has remained essentially unaltered despite changed economic conditions due in no small measure to the substantial contribution DREE has made to building the basic economic infrastructure. We believe it is now time to adopt new approaches to achieve the same basic objective, reducing economic disparity.

We have had to examine the range of existing programs to see how well suited they are to achieving these aims. While the new Department inherited some programs from DREE and ITC that are well suited to the new mandate, it is a fact that over the years a broad range of programs has evolved serving various purposes, with some duplication and overlap and a great deal of variety in program instruments, program criteria, delivery system and decision mechanisms. Also, program gaps have been identified as, for example, in the areas of encouragement of innovation, productivity improvement, and marketing, areas of highest priority for the federal Government, as the Minister of Finance stated in his budget speech.

I am today announcing a new program, the Industrial and Regional Development Program, to be my Department's major instrument to achieve these goals. The program will be available to Canadian industry in all regions of Canada. Through the Industrial and Regional Development Program, the Department will actively assist the private sector as we move to strengthen our industrial base.

The new Industrial and Regional Development Program will offer industrial development support across the country. There will be four ranges of support. These will be graduated according to economic need, with the neediest regions eligible for the highest levels of support.

The basic level of support will be available to firms anywhere in Canada. More generous incentives will be available at the second and third levels, based on economic need. A fourth tier, comprising the most disadvantaged 5 per cent of Canada's population, would automatically receive the maximum level of assistance for eligible projects.

In order to develop which areas are at which level, I will propose to Parliament a development index. We have searched to find an index which is fair, equitable and objective. The index will take three major factors into account; level of unemployment, disposable income and the fiscal capacity of the Province. Obviously, we will have to weigh these factors as they are not all of equal importance. I want to thank members of the private sector from across the country with whom we have had substantial discussions in trying to develop this index.

We have carefully examined what was in place in both the Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion. With that as a starting point, we designed a Department with the best features of both. But in my view, that was not enough. The new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion goes considerably beyond simply merging these two Departments.

Our first imperative was to make the process of delivering federal assistance much simpler and more flexible. Over time we ended up with too many programs that were too complicated. As a consequence businesses, particularly small and medium-sized firms, were often confused as to what we were offering and how to obtain it. Further, it was almost impossible to deliver these programs on a regional basis because of this complexity.

Rather than the multiplicity of programs that were in ITC and DREE, the new Department of DRIE will focus on seven major programs, the principal one being the Industrial and Regional Development Program which will be flexible and efficient. It is designed to meet the needs of the private sector and to direct federal resources to where they will achieve our goal of industrial and regional development.

The program will be much simpler for the business community; it will have one set of criteria and one method of application. It will also be applicable to all stages of a firm's development and again it will be available in every region of the country.

The program has six main elements. The first is industrial infrastructure such as industrial parks. Another example would be federal support to institutions such as technology centres.

The second element is industrial innovation. I believe this to be a critical area for Canada's economic well-being. Eligible for assistance in this phase will be, among others, the development of technological capability, the development of new products and processes, and project feasibility studies.

• (1120)

Once products have completed the development stage, it is necessary, of course, to actually go into production. In some cases this requires the building of a plant and the purchase of equipment. For this reason we have made provision to assist with establishment in all areas except those in the most developed regions.

A fourth phase, one that offers significant opportunities, is modernization expansion. There are a number of elements that fit within this category, but one to be stressed is the building of new technologies into our existing products and processes to increase our competitiveness. This will be achieved by acquiring the most advanced machinery, equipment and plants. As I am sure we all agree, we must do more than develop new products to compete in the world markets. It is just as critical that we adapt new technologies to our traditional industries.

This leads me to another element in the process, that of marketing. My experience as Minister of Trade made it abundantly clear that we have to devote more effort in this area if we are to hold and maintain our markets. And I must emphasize that the potential for Canadian firms to replace imports here in Canada is just as important as increasing exports.

In our examination of what was available in the Departments, I have found that marketing has not received the attention it warranted. We have not paid sufficient attention to the marketing of our products, particularly here in Canada. Programs such as a more comprehensive shop Canadian program are being developed by my officials in conjunction with the private sector.

The final phase of our program is renewal. The Government recognizes that some industries must undergo a process of restructuring. We also realize that those who suffer the most in these instances are the workers. To facilitate the process, the Government is prepared in specific instances to offer loan guarantees to assist companies in the short-term assuring, of course, that with restructuring there is a reasonable chance that the firm can become viable.

In some cases a firm's long-term viability is in doubt if it remains as it is structured. In those instances, the Government will consider repayable grants to assist the company to diversify to create alternate employment.

While we have been developing this new program, the merged Departments have also been undergoing a major restructuring. This obviously had to occur if we were to achieve our objective of faster delivery and increased regional sensitivity. We have substantially strengthened the sectoral expertise in our regional offices. We have expanded the number of locations where DRIE has offices from the combined total of the old DREE/ITC. More are planned. Under the new Department, for the first time all federal industrial programs will be available in every part of the country.

With the new Industrial and Regional Development Program as the principal instrument of direct federal assistance to industry, coupled with the streamlined delivery mechanism, the only major element missing is the establishment of the priorities on a sectoral and regional basis. This work is already under way with my other Cabinet colleagues, Members of Parliament, provincial Governments and, of course, the private sector.

I wished I had time this morning to detail how everything I have talked about today facilitates the development of an industrial strategy in Canada. Contrary to one erroneous newspaper report, which unfortunately was picked up by several respected journalists and editorialists much to my surprise, I believe we are closer to developing this strategy than ever before.

What I stated in the Finance Committee was my belief that the Government cannot effectively by itself impose industrial development strategy upon Canadian industry. I believe that our strategy has to flow from the intelligent advice of the main actors in industry, namely business management and labour.

Also, I believe that the industrial structure of Canada is such that individual strategies by sector are more effective than any single, over-all industrial strategy. Once again, I believe that in order to achieve success these sector strategies have to be based on advice from business management and labour. That is why we established sector task forces or consultative committees in key sectors to assist in development of sectoral strategies.

These groups, co-chaired by industry and labour representatives, are not Government task forces but private sector task forces. They have been asked to examine their sectors and to report those findings. Other such groups will be established in the future. This process is by far the best way available to ensure Government is aware of specific industry concerns. Using this approach, we will be able to develop sector specific development plans.

There is no question that if we are to be successful in this area, it is imperative that the private and public sectors work in harmony. Perhaps the best example of this co-operative effort was the establishment of the Export Trade Development Board two years ago.

In this regard I will also establish an Industrial and Regional Development Board that will have regional representation, labour participation and sectoral interests. This Board will advise the Government through my Department on broad policy issues and will provide considerable assistance to ensure that the Government's industrial policy is based on a broad consensus.

I have briefly outlined to Hon. Members today a plan for industrial development in this country. I believe it builds on the budget and confirms that Canadians should have confidence in their future. The new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion is committed to working with industry and labour to ensure that Canadian firms become more productive and are competitive in the world markets. Through this partnership we will progress, our industry will grow in all regions of Canada, and this development will mean jobs.

The Government will shortly have before the House the legislation to create the Department and its programs. I would hope for agreement from all sides of the House that the proposal to provide efficient and effective support to our industries, so that we have early passage of the legislation. We will then be able to get on with the job at hand, to put in place the second half of this major industrial recovery program.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister. When the Government put its budget before the House, including its economic papers, it talked about a new reality in terms of unemployment of 12.4 per cent today and even in the long term unemployment coming down no lower than 7 per cent or 8 per cent. Part of the justification for this new reality was the regional nature of our economy.

Given the fact that the Minister announced an Industrial and Regional Development Program today to assist business and presumably to do something about employment, does he expect that the new program will deal with regional disparities in the country in such a way as to have a real impact on employment levels, or does he really expect very little from it other than assisting the private sector? Does he expect that there will be very little in this program in terms of jobs for people?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, I feel very strongly, after a substantial amount of time as Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and as Minister responsible for DREE, that the new program will address the issues the Hon. Member raised. There are two aspects of the Department's new mandate—industrial restructuring and also emphasis on reducing economic disparities across the country, which is very difficult to do over a period of time. Since 1969 the relative designations have not changed to that degree. Pockets of unemployment even in specific Provinces which do not have designation will rise from time to time. This program will address the real structural problems which exist in Canadian industry today. Much of our unemployment is caused by cyclical problems, as the Hon. Member knows, which will be rectified with not only the renewal of our own economy but the renewal of the international economy.

We need to ensure that the industry is competitive right across the country. There are not only the tax measures announced by the Minister of Finance, but based upon our discussion with businesses there are substantial numbers of projects which business would like to undertake. Because of the debt-equity ratio and cash flow problems, they have not been able to undertake these. We think this new streamlined program which will be delivered on a regional basis will address the major program elements in the life cycle of a company as well as the product. We will be able to achieve the goals we set. My guess is that in fact we will see a far greater change in employment creation in some of the regions that have severe structural problems.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I was most interested in the Minister's remarks. I hope he will verify that the new Department, DRIE, is not "dry" as far as a good many ridings in Ontario are concerned, including part of my own riding. The Minister will be well aware of my questions to him time and again as to when he would give serious consideration to extending some of the boundaries. I believe in his remarks he said that that would take place in certain areas of which he was aware. There is a certain section of Central Ontario which is not eligible for DRIE grants under the new set-up.

I am wondering whether the Minister will now have second thoughts in order to help the unemployment situation and speed up the possible enlargement of the area. The Minister, as a former chief magistrate of a very thriving municipality, is well aware how important are those grants. Would the Minister let me have his comments on that?

• (1130)

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, as I said in my speech, we will shortly be tabling the legislation. I know the Hon. Member has a sincere interest, having spent time in municipal and regional development, and I hope he will encourage his colleagues to give speedy passage to this legislation. Once that legislation is passed, every single area of this country will be designated. I will be coming out with more details in terms of the designation. The designation will be enriched, depending on the economic disparity in the various areas of the country. On the fundamental question the Hon. Member asked, every single area of the country will be designated for financial assistance, depending on the individual category.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister could indicate whether this new program is a drying up or recycling of DREE. Does it replace DREE? Where does it stand in the picture? Are the two programs running on a parallel basis? How much money will be available for this Industrial and Regional Development Program? How will that money be allocated on a regional basis?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, the money allocated, with the additional $300 million the Minister of Finance has given us for our programs next year, coupled with our existing reference levels, will represent approximately $2.5 billion over the next two years for delivery of financial assistance to companies right across the country. With the passage of Bill C-123, which has just had first reading in the House, and the passage of the legislation for the new mandate of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, there will no longer be a DREE Department as such.

As the Hon. Member knows, the various line Departments—Agriculture, Forestry, Transportation, for example—will be taking over the old general development sub-agreements as they pertain to their specific responsibility. The general development sub-agreements on, for example, industrial parks will come under the new mandate of DRIE. The Regional Development Incentives Program which formerly existed under DREE will now be rolled over into the new Industrial and Regional Development Program.

We have condensed a substantial number of programs into seven major programs. They will be put into a booklet which the Hon. Member can take to each and every small and medium-sized entrepreneur in his constituency. That plus the regional delivery will streamline the process. We will be able to assist small and medium-sized entrepreneurs in every part of the country in a much better way than they were addressed before.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I know that tourism comes under another Minister's portfolio, but with the Minister's enthusiasm for the budget today, can he tell us why the budget does not provide any incentive for the tourism industry? Many of these businesses are small, family-operated operations. Tourism is a labour-intensive industry and should have been addressed by the budget. The spinoff is tremendous. It affects building contractors, materials, furniture, appliances, food, entertainment and travel. It is a tremendous generator of taxes. It is a $16 billion industry. I wonder if the Minister would address that question.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, I have always made it a policy not to interfere in my colleague's direct responsibilities. As a former businessman, I think the big winner in the budget of the Minister of Finance was the small and medium-sized entrepreneurs in every single sector right across this country. For the first time in many years, the Minister of Finance has addressed the fundamental balancing problems of small and medium-sized entrepreneurs. When this economic recovery program works, I cannot think of an industry that will benefit more than the tourist industry because there will be more disposable income in the hands of a few, more Canadians working, more people travelling, more people spending disposable income. The main beneficiary of that will be the tourist industry.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, while the Minister is talking about disposable income, maybe he can tell us how a $5.7 billion increase in taxation helps disposable income. Can he tell us with regard to his new program called the IRDP when the applications will be available? Is it a grant program? Is it another program that everybody can get or is it subject to ministerial discretion? Who gets the money and on what criteria? We have now had another alphabet soup program announced. Perhaps the Minister can give us the details of this one.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised at the Hon. Member, who comes from the business community and who has been advocating a more streamlined approach. For example, his area will be designated for assistance for the first time that I can ever recall as a businessman. We have cut down the number of programs to seven major programs. We have a very fair, equitable, objective index now which will be updated once a year. Designation will no longer be by ministerial discretion. I thought he would have been one of the first Members in the House to strongly support the initiatives that the Government is going to take in this regard.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows the clothing and textile industries in all the industrialized countries are under tremendous pressure with competition from low wage countries because of the high labour content involved. The Government in recent years has done a number of things. It has given financial aid, loans, grants and established quotas to try and help the industry in Canada which employs about 200,000 people but despite that the industry continues to decline. Companies which have been in existence for 50 years or more are going out of business. People who have worked in the industry for 20 or 30 years are losing their jobs.

What new plans does the Government have either to help the industry maintain its present position and number of employees or to find alternative methods and fields for the people who work in the industry, many of them in one-industry towns in Ontario and Quebec? They face a disastrous situation if this decline cannot be prevented.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, I first want to say how much I appreciate the Hon. Member's kind comments with respect to the Government's efforts in terms of helping this industry restructure, providing some assistance and putting in quotas. I hope he passes on his comments to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) who obviously did not know that.

The Hon. Member raises a very important point. That is why we have decided to keep the CIRD Program. That program will not be rolled over to the new program. It will be reviewed when the CIRD Program comes up for renewal, I think in two years. Tomorrow, for example, I will be announcing approximately $55 million in financial assistance to the textile, clothing and footwear industries. Some of those grants and repayable contributions will go to companies to help them restructure, to do some new product innovation, to purchase new equipment, to ensure they are competitive, to ensure the stability of the jobs that exist in those plants.

Other companies will be receiving assistance to help diversify the economic base of those communities in which textile, clothing and footwear industries are the major employers. We will continue our efforts in this regard. With the $267 million budget just for the textile, clothing and footwear industries, we are hopeful that when the rationalization takes place and with the modernization of the industry, we will have one of the best in the world.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a pleasure to speak to the budget following my good friend, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley). I should say at the outset that I in no way question the sincerity of his commitment to the private sector and indeed the market economy, the spirit of enterprise and the need for Canada to be competitive because of the importance Canada places on its exports, the fact that we rely upon exports for 30 per cent of our GNP. Therefore I appreciate his comments.

I say at the same time that I have some difficulty in extending that confidence to other Members of his Cabinet, including the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). A brief historical review will clearly indicate that he is associated with the master intervenors of all time. In many respects, they do not have faith in the private sector. They do not have faith in the market economy. They do not have faith and confidence in individual Canadians' ability to do what is in the best interests of the country.

It is in that context that I wish to talk about the budget. I think it is fair to say that on its surface, the budget contains some positive elements. I think the Minister of Finance has used the right buzz words and said the right things. The questions that we must pose are, does he really mean what he says, is he in a position to back up what he is saying, or is it merely a political exercise recognizing that there is now no other way to go since the Government's intervention in the last three years has really killed the spirit of enterprise in the country.

We cannot overlook some of the things that the Minister of Finance has stated over the years. For example, in the introduction to the National Energy Program, at page 20 is the following:

> For most Canadians, the only way to ensure that they do share in the wealth generated by oil, and to have a say in companies exploiting that resource, is to have more companies . . . like Petro-Canada.

Again at page 51:

> The Government believes that a larger national public sector presence in oil and gas is the only equitable way to meet quickly our goal of increased Canadian ownership.

This is the master intervenor that has literally destroyed the Canadian private sector associated with the oil industry, particularly the drilling and the supply and service sector in Canada.

Turning now to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), has he really changed? I need only quote from the October 25 edition of Macleans's where the Right Hon. Prime Minister's words over the years are summarized. In 1975 he said this, and I quote:

> We can't rely on the free market system any more. We need rules even if they mean that you and I end up being called Communist or Socialist.

Again in 1975, he said:

> We haven't been able to make it work, the free market system ... the government is going to have to take a larger role in running institutions. It means there is going to be not less authority in our lives but perhaps more.

In 1976 he said, and I quote again:

> We haven't been able to make even a modified free market system work in Canada to prevent the kinds of problems we are now experiencing.

In 1977 the Prime Minister said:

> If Canadians don't discipline themselves, we will discipline them.

So it is with that backdrop that we must analyze this budget. On closer examination, it is clearly revealed that this is an interventionist budget, that it will rely very heavily on political decision making, that it will rely very heavily on the bureaucracy. The whole recovery program of tax increases and future deficits starting in 1984 will mean that the Government will have a much greater voice in the economic affairs of this country.

One must ask at the outset why, since Petro-Canada's acquisition of Petrofina is now complete, are we continuing the Canadian ownership charge? This will amass a $3½ billion slush fund that will probably be used for further intervention in the energy sector and for further nationalization of the oil industry. Because of the political decision making by Cabinet Ministers or their bureaucracies that will take place, we run the risk of creating further division and criticism in the country.

The Certified General Accountants of Alberta have already stated, and I quote from a release of April 19:

> Eastern Canadians will reap most benefits from Marc Lalonde's April 19th budget—

The release goes on to say:

> The labour intensive provinces of Ontario and Quebec will enjoy a massive immediate shot in the arm from the Finance Minister's $4.8 billion Special Recovery Program ... while the effects on the west will be mainly indirect.

Whether that is true or not, that impression prevails in the West. Whenever the Government makes those decisions, it runs the risk of creating that kind of further division and disharmony.

Westerners are now asking about what has happened to the $4 billion Western Development Fund heralded in the 1980 budget. Well, it was dribbled away by transfers into other programs and has disappeared.

The Mayor of the City of Edmonton sent a wire to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) with respect to the Capital Works Program. The wire reads:

> Today's announcement concerning the federal Govt's 2.4 billion dlrs capital works program made no mention of any projects in Edmonton.

That is the risk that is run when there is a heavy reliance upon the Government and its bureaucracies to make what really amounts to economic decisions.

I suppose when this budget is compared with previous budgets that were generally disastrous, one can say that it is quite likely that this budget will not make matters worse. It is questionable, however, whether it will improve things; the jury is still out on it.

Mr. Breau: It is a Conservative budget.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, I am glad that the budget contains some elements that are Conservative. That is quite true. It contains some Conservative elements, but there still is the hand of Government that will intervene because the Government does not have faith in the private sector and does not have faith in the average Canadian.

I suppose we can assume that this budget will not do as much harm as did the two previous budgets. In 1980 we had double-tracking and today we will have fast-tracking. That is one positive thing that can be said about the budget.

Mr. Speaker, when one looks at the budget, it can clearly be seen as essentially a budget of tinkering. There are really no new innovative measures that address the real chronic and structural problems that we face today. There are very few measures directed specifically toward creating jobs and thereby generating new wealth in the private sector. The budget contains very, very few innovative measures.

The Hon. Member shakes his head, but if he looks at the budget as a businessman would, I am sure in all honesty he would say: "You may be right". The budget contains a number of initiatives in so far as the public sector is concerned but not really quite that many in so far as initiating a resurgence in the private sector. The budget does not create the kind of positive environment that will generate real new wealth.

The Hon. Member mentions the equities. Yes, I support those. For example, I think the Index Security Investment Plan is a good plan. I am glad that it has been introduced. The treatment of investment tax credits, yes, will provide some new stimulus in the Special Recovery Share-Purchase Tax Credit. Yes, I believe those are all positive measures. I would be irresponsible if I failed to mention those and I do hope they will improve the climate. Perhaps the changes in income averaging is another good measure, although it is because of the Government inflicted recession that we are in the sort of situation that makes it attractive to use that kind of facility.

It appears that the Government cannot bring itself to trust the private sector. It does not have confidence in the private sector. This lack of trust is manifested in the Minister of Finance's reply when asked why there were no tax cuts in the budget. He replied something to the effect that Canadians cannot be trusted with extra money. He said that Canadians cannot be trusted with tax breaks because they would rush out and blow the extra money on imported goodies, or worse, might even use the extra bucks to go on a holiday abroad. With that kind of confidence in the people of Canada, how can the people of Canada in turn have confidence in the Government.

Mr. Speaker, again I say the budget talks a good line about faith and about revitalization of the private sector, but on close analysis one has to guard very carefully against praising the budget too magnanimously. There will be more programs that will involve more bureaucracy and more political decision making, and I believe we have had far too much of that.

• (1150)

I do not believe that the budget satisfactorily deals with the need to address the basic health of the economy. It has some very serious structural defects. I do not believe it addresses the issue of productivity in an effective manner, the technological impact of worker training, export development and the energy question. The Government has destroyed a good portion of the energy sector in Canada, and it needs to turn that very important and basic industry around because we have failed to turn our energy advantage into an economic advantage.

This budget is more of a publicity campaign than an economic recovery campaign. There is a lot of rhetoric in the budget and I believe it is basically designed to try to turn around the waning fortunes of the Liberal Party, which will probably continue to wane even though there is some interim, positive responses to this budget.

The fact is that we are in the worst recession in 50 years and this is largely due to the mismanagement of this Government. We have had 15 years of economic mismanagement. This Government has wasted its resources in the good years and failed to turn the very many natural advantages of this country into economic advantages. Government has failed to stimulate real growth in this country, to identify the realities of the world, the necessity to be competitive, the necessity for increased productivity and to encourage real growth. It has been redistributing wealth which has basically been borrowed, and the tinkering around in the budget is not going to improve that very much.

Our deficit is staggering. It is $31.3 billion this year and there is another $80.7 billion projected over the next three years. That is $112 billion worth of accumulated deficit over a four-year period and is absolutely irresponsible. That is on top of the $51.6 billion worth of deficit which has been accumulated since this Government was returned to office in 1980.

One has to ask, where will the money come from? We have a large level of personal savings in the country, something in excess of $30 billion. Over 80 per cent of Government's borrowing would be attributable to personal savings, and that will have the potential of raising interest rates. I say to you, sir, that it may very well lead to stalling any natural recovery which could occur. Our interest rates are far too high today. We have essentially a 6 per cent spread between the money which is paid by the banks to people who invest their money, which is at about 6.75 per cent, and their lending rate. For example, the Farm Credit Corporation is asking 12.75 per cent, which is a very reasonable rate in todays conditions. However, there is no reason for a spread of 6 per cent and that issue has not been addressed in this budget.

We must consider how we are going to pay for these horrendous deficits. They can only be paid for in two ways; either by taxing future generations or by printing more money, which will indeed cause inflation and we will find ourselves in the same old spiral we were in before. We have to look not only at the deficits of the current year and the past years, but we must look at the deficits of the future years. I share the view which was expressed by David Peterson, the Leader of the Liberal Party in Ontario. I would like to quote from the April 26 edition of The Globe and Mail. Mr. Peterson said, and I quote:

> Instead of building for the future, we have been stealing from it.

He points out that Canadians are running down the resources which belong to future generations through massive public borrowing and failure to invest in productive enterprise. I share that view. That is precisely what this Government has done. Mr. Peterson goes on to say, and I quote:

> We are no longer redistributing wealth from the rich to the poor. We are transferring it from the next generation to our own.

I say to you, sir, that that is indeed a sad legacy. Notwithstanding the huge borrowings and the huge accumulated deficit, we are predicting growth on an average of 4.5 per cent. We are looking at a deficit which is going to drop by maybe $2 billion a year. We are going to have deficits in excess of $25 billion over the foreseeable future.

The 4.5 per cent real growth will require large cash borrowings from the private sector, and with the Government calling on the massive amounts of money it requires to meet its spending programs, the private sector, with its real job-creating potential, will be hampered. We just cannot continue to run these enormous deficits.

The cost alone of servicing the debt this year is tremendous. For every three revenue dollars, one dollar goes to service the debt. By 1986, notwithstanding the so-called improvement and recovery which is suggested in this budget, we will still be paying $1 out of every $4 to service the debt. That is revenue dollars.

Therefore the Government must address this critical problem. It is not only a problem for today, it is a more serious problem for tomorrow. Government must bring its expenditures back into line, reduce the Government's share of the economy, and tranfer those resources to the private sector so they can be used to create long-term productive employment and long-term productive wealth. The Government, I submit, is not a generator of wealth. We particularly see that today, where all levels of Government are taking almost 50 per cent of the Gross National Product. The projections for the federal Government range from 20 per cent to 23 per cent over the next four-year period.

With respect to employment, Mr. Speaker, the main thrust of the budget was to provide jobs for those who cannot find work. Here again, the fact is that this budget will do very little to improve the employment fortunes of many Canadians, by the Government's own projections, which are 12.4 per cent this year, 11.4 per cent next year, and the unemployment rate will stay at 10 per cent until 1986. I should point out that by 1984 there will be 55,000 fewer jobs than there were in 1981.

If we look at the economic record of this Government, we know that since November, 1981 this economy has lost a total of 408,000 jobs, that over-all unemployment increased by 750,000, and by 1987 we will still have 1.1 million people unemployed. That is not very optimistic, Mr. Speaker. That is a very sad indictment for the future of Canada. We believe that this country could do better. We believe the budget could have been better in addressing the needs of Canadians and providing jobs. It has failed miserably in stimulating the small business sector, for example, which provides some two-thirds of all new jobs created on the North American continent.

I am sorry that time does not permit me to continue to outline some of the things which I would have liked to have seen in the budget as far as small business is concerned. The fact is that this Government has failed to consider the repeal of the 12.5 per cent corporate distribution tax. It failed to deal with the capital cost allowance. If it were genuinely interested in improving the employment prospects of our citizens, it could have provided for employment tax credits. It may have even considered a tax holiday for small business, perhaps on the first $100,000 worth of profit. There are many things which could have been done which would have helped that very important sector.

There could have been a number of new initiatives undertaken in the energy sector as well. For example, there could have been measures to stimulate once again the conventional oil sector, which is the most job productive sector in the whole energy area. That sector is hurting very badly. Out of 400 drilling rigs, only 50 to 60 are currently working. This Government has failed to turn our natural advantages into economic advantages: therefore the Canadian people are suffering; therefore we are going to continue to have massive and unwarranted unemployment.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I commend the Hon. Member for the way he puts forward his position and philosophy. In fact, over the years I have found that few Members can put forward so nicely and effectively a bad case. When he talks about economic philosophy, he has omitted one important question. In a time of recession, when it comes time for Governments to react, does he take a monetarist view, or the view that the Government should react-from the point of view of fiscal policy?

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, I think one has to handle the budgetary affairs of the nation not unlike one would handle one's own private affairs. To put it in layman's language, in the good years you have to put a little away for a rainy day. This particular Government has only had one balanced budget in its 15 years and that is a very sad record.

Mr. Breau: Answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am answering the question. The fact of the matter is that this Government has failed to save in the good times or contain Government expenditures in the good times so that now, when we need that stimulus to revitalize the economy and provide jobs, we are forced to borrow much more heavily than we were in the past. It seems to me that the Keynesian philosophy is that you can spend your way out of recession assuming that you are going to exercise good fiscal and monetary practices in good times. This Government has not done that.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member repeated a distortion which people in his Party seem to enjoy. I would like to exercise my right to make a very brief comment to correct that distortion. The Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) on April 26, said, as did the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) today, that the Government does not trust ordinary people, that we did not create incentives for consumers because of that mistrust on our part. The Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) answer to that question was most apt and I refer the Hon. Member to that answer in this House, as reported at page 24858 of Hansard:

> I never used the words, "the consumer cannot be trusted". I enunciated the very simple economic proposition that I am sure that the Hon. Member would agree with, that when you stimulate consumer spending directly, some of that consumer spending leaks out of the country to purchase goods made in other countries. That is all I said.

I would remind the Hon. Member, when he tries to distort that statement, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has clarified the matter right in this House.

I also remind him that we followed the advice of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business when we followed this policy. They told us not to use a tax cut for consumers because it would be spent on foreign goods and would amount to a Canadian subsidy for foreign manufacturers. They suggested instead that we target our consumer incentives and try and help business rebuild itself. That is not the kind of statement which the Hon. Member is trying to put into our mouths.

Mr. Taylor: You tell them how to spend their own money.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to clear away a bit of a contradiction. If that was not an accurate interpretation and the Government is not so concerned about Canadians going offshore to spend their money, then why did it see fit in the budget to double the value of goods which can be brought back to Canada duty free? I am not arguing with it, but it seems to be a bit of a contradiction.

Secondly, notwithstanding what the Prime Minister says—I mean, he says many things and we are not sure when he can pass the lie detector test—I go back to the statement he made in 1977 implying that Canadians do not discipline themselves. He said if they do not, "we will discipline them". Meaning that the master Government knows what is best for Canadians.

Mr. Fisher: The Hon. Member asks me a serious question and I am happy to provide him with the answer. He asks why we increased the tourism exemption. I can tell him it is pretty much a technical matter. The last time that exemption was increased, I believe, was 1974. This keeps us in line with the cost of living increases which have occurred since that time. If the Hon. Member takes the time to look at the budget papers he will see it is a pretty insignificant measure, costing the Government very small amounts of money this year and next year. As perhaps some of my colleagues have pointed out, it is further proof that the Government does trust Canadians and we are trying to pass this small benefit on to them.

Mr. Mazankowski: You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the House that over four years this budget gives some $4 billion to the private sector, the business community, through tax breaks and other incentives. At the same time it increases personal income taxes. My question to the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) is, how does that differ from his call for tax breaks to the private sector? Is this budget not in fact a supply side budget giving incentives to the private sector, and is essentially a Conservative budget, as mentioned by one of the Liberal Members?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it is basically a difference in philosophy. The Hon. Member would like the federal Government to take over the whole economy. As a matter of fact, their economic policy would see the total Canadian economy run like a massive National Energy Program. I do not share that view, Mr. Speaker. I share the view that the private sector can provide real, meaningful, long-term wealth and generate jobs. I do not believe the Government is most suited to do that. It is really a difference in philosophy.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes the case for depoliticization of the economy. He talks about trusting the private sector. I suggest to him that begs the question. The question is, who has the responsibility, politically and morally, for the affairs of the economy? It seems to me there is a need for both. Would he not agree that it is a question of political accountability and that judgment cannot be absolute as to when you trust the private sector more or trust the public sector more?

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, it may be compelling and interesting to talk about greater depoliticization of the economy, but the Hon. Member is a very practical politician. He issued on behalf of his caucus a statement some ten days ago which asks for greater politicization of the economy. How can he square his philosophy with the philosophy of the Lougheed Government, which has had the very good philosophy, in my view, of putting aside money for the future heritage of Alberta? That is clearly a great politicization of the economy which is unparalleled in this country, and I agree with it. So how can he square his philosophy as a Conservative from that Province with the philosophy of the Lougheed Government, which has been for greater politicization of the Alberta economy?

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, first of all, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I think it is a good question and I hope I can respond to it effectively. Essentially what I am saying, and what I think our Party is saying, is that we opt for a system of incentives rather than grants. Grants require that sort of discretionary power, whereas incentives can be applied in a more across the board fashion. I do not want to be simplistic, but essentially that is the way we view it.

With respect to the Heritage Trust Fund, I think upon reflection, if the Hon. Member would examine the accounts of that fund, he would see that a good portion of those dollars has indeed been invested in hospitals, schools, housing, and in really filling the public need, which would in most Provinces be filled through the normal budgetary process. In this particular case, we identify the resource revenue and ensure that future generations recognize the money was not squandered, that it was used to improve our lifestyle. I do not see it as politicization to look after the needs of senior citizens, to look after the sick and disabled, to improve education. I do not think that that is political. That is meeting a need.

Mr. Breau: It is not the private sector.

Mr. Mazankowski: The private sector is clearly involved to some extent. However, what I am saying is that that is quite different from generating real growth. I should also say that the Heritage Trust Fund does provide funding for agriculture and small business. There is nothing political about that. It is handled in the same manner as the Farm Credit Corporation.

Is the Hon. Member suggesting that the Farm Credit Corporation is a political organization? Is he suggesting that the Federal Business Development Bank makes its decisions on the basis of politics and not sound economic—

Mr. Breau: Yes.

Mr. Mazankowski: Oh, he says "Yes".

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Mazankowski: I find that to be very abhorrent, because I do not believe the Farm Credit Corporation—

Mr. Breau: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the Hon. Member and I were involved in an intelligent dialogue. The way the Hon. Member is using the word "politicization" is not the same way I was using it. It may be because of my background, or the translation from the French language. What the term means today, when I use the word "political" in debate, is the greater interest on the part of the public sector in the affairs of the nation or a Province. It does not imply partisan, political judgments. It means that a political act is on behalf of the public interest. That is all that it means. The real meaning of the word "political", from the Greek culture, is "caring for people".

Mr. Mazankowski: I appreciate the Hon. Member's remarks. I do not think that he and I really differ much concerning this issue except that I differentiate between the social need and the economic need. I have not criticized in my speech today, nor I have ever criticized, the Government for further advancing the facilities to meet the social needs, the needs of senior citizens, the disabled and those who are unable to care for themselves.

Mr. Breau: That's politicization.

Mr. Mazankowski: I do not see that as being politicization. I see that as serving a need. I guess that the Hon. Member and I have some differences, and perhaps it is a matter of interpretation, involving my belief that the Government should not intervene to the same extent in meeting economic needs. When I see the Heritage Trust Fund providing funds to a facility which we have in Alberta, known as the Alberta Opportunity Fund, which provides lower interest rates to small business and for the development of the economic infrastructure, when I see the Agricultural Development Program funds providing for new farmers, I see that as being done on a commercial basis, not on a political basis. One does not have to be a Progressive Conservative or live in a Progressive Conservative riding to receive such a loan.

Mr. Breau: That's not what politicization means.

Mr. Mazankowski: I see that in the budget and in previous programs which have been sponsored by this Government there has been much discretionary power placed in the hands of the Minister and his bureaucrats to determine who the losers and who the winners shall be. I would rather see tax incentives and measures applied more across the board than the kind of grants and grant programs we have which really require that sort of discretionary political decision making.

Mr. Breau: I wish we had more time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Mr. Speaker, the Budget, which is the subject of debate today, has responded so satisfactorily to the concerns of the Canadian people that the Opposition was taken by surprise and is now running out of arguments against the Budget. In fact, that explains why they tried to create a diversion the same evening the Budget was brought down and the next day, by trying to obtain a debate on the leak that allegedly occured. After spending last weekend in my riding, I must tell my Opposition colleagues that in trying to force a debate on this issue, they liberally made fools of themselves. In any case, I fail to see why they are trying to make such a big thing of what happened, because it had absolutely no impact on the tax system and there could have been no benefit to anyone at all as a result of this unfortunate occurrence. They just tried to make a mountain out of a molehill and they failed miserably.

Mr. Speaker, I think Opposition members who, like my friend from Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), are claiming that our policy with respect to small-and medium-sized businesses is a failure, were taught a devastating lesson on the day following the budget, and several days after, when the stock market reacted very positively. In Toronto, for instance, there was an increase of 43 points the very next day.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to respond to certain criticisms that were made. It has been said, for instance, that the Budget has nothing for consumers, and I remember a headline in La Presse which implied that the Government was giving to business what it was taking from the consumer.

Mr. Speaker, would it have made sense, at a time when consumers are saving 13 per cent of their personal disposable income, to increase those savings even more by granting income tax cuts across the board? I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. We must be realistic if we are to approach these problems seriously and responsibly. What is needed is to create confidence in the economy, and that is why we have emphasized tax cuts for businesses which will help create the jobs that will create confidence and encourage people to spend the money they have been saving in recent years and months.

Mr. Speaker, if we take a look at personal income tax for the year 1983-84, we see a drop of $75 million. This is partly due to the fact that the employment expense deduction will be increased from 3 per cent to 20 per cent of employment income, meaning a tax savings for working Canadians of $150 million. This measure will benefit four million taxpayers, of whom more than 80 per cent have an annual income of less than $16,700. We have also doubled the child care expense deduction, which will result in a tax savings of $50 million next year. Mr. Speaker, $355 million have been earmarked for our housing policy. Now, I am sure that the people who stand to benefit from this measure are consumers. The Government will be spending $120 million under the Canada Home Renovation Plan and $40 million on the RRAP program. Taxpayers will be saving $125 million as a result of changes in the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, and there is also $30 million for the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan. Are the people who will benefit from these programs consumers or are they not?

Over the next two financial years, this $355 million alone will balance the increase of $290 million in personal income tax. There is a drop of $75 million this year, but there will be an increase of $365 million in 1984-85, which means a net increase of $290, which is more than compensated for by our housing policy.

I would also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Indexed Securities Investment Plan and the Special Recovery Share-Purchase Tax Credit are policies that will benefit consumers. The stock market is not just for people in the upper income brackets. There are also people with more modest means who invest their savings in capital shares, and I think these tax measures will provide considerable benefits for small investors, who are also consumers. Mr. Speaker, it has also been our concern to make sure that any tax increases would be paid by Canadians who are in the best position to do so. For instance, we have changed the federal tax reduction. And how did we do this? Next year, as a result of this change, the Government will be receiving $455 million more in tax revenue. In 1984, the federal tax reduction will be maintained at $200 but will be phased out altogether for individuals earning more than $40,000. The federal tax reduction will be cut to $100 in 1985 and to $50 in 1986. That, Mr. Speaker, shows that this Government is concerned about social justice.

Mr. Speaker, this budget admirably combines both fiscal stimulation and fiscal responsibility. This year, because we know we must support economic recovery, we are accepting a deficit of more than $30 billion, which we intend to reduce next year as part of our fiscal responsibility, because while supporting economic recovery, we must also demonstrate that as far as the future is concerned, we intend to take advantage of that recovery and of additional tax revenues to gradually reduce the deficit. That is why the deficit will be $2.6 billion less next year, dropping from $31.3 to $28.7 billion.

Mr. Speaker, of course we realize it will be necessary to raise taxes to pay for our job creation programs, and I was surprised to hear my colleague from Vegreville, who said earlier, after condemning the Government because of its deficit, that we should have granted even bigger tax reductions to small- and medium-sized businesses. Mr. Speaker, over the next two years, we shall be granting $1.1 billion in tax reductions to small-, medium-sized and large businesses, part of which will be paid for by the special recovery tax, that is, by a 1 per cent increase in the federal sales tax, which next year will raise $300 million. I think that once economic recovery is well under way, and our economy is prosperous once more, Canadians will understand and agree to make this contribution towards reducing the deficit, because if we do not take such measures, we may set off another inflationary spiral.

Speaking of the deficit, Mr. Speaker, there has been some concern about the extent of the deficit, and I must say I was surprised at some comments made by the Quebec Minister of Finance, Mr. Parizeau, the day after the Budget speech. The Minister of Finance, a friend of our colleague, the Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), expressed his surprise and said that he was concerned about the extent of the deficit. He said that the Budget was not bad but that the deficit was too high. Mr. Speaker, this is the same Quebec Minister of Finance who, during negotiations on fiscal agreements, accused the Federal Government of strangling Quebec financially, and who, as far as equalization was concerned, would have preferred to keep on using the Canadian average as a criterion, which would have resulted in an additional expenditure of nearly $6 billion in 1982-83, and even more this year, $6 billion more than the Government would have paid to the provinces, including more than $2.5 billion to the Province of Ontario, which would have been eligible. The same Minister of Finance is saying today that he is worried about the extent of our deficit and that what we are doing now, is what he would have done last year, and in fact what he asked us to do last year.

Mr. Speaker, conditions have changed and that is why our policy this year is far more stimulative than it was last year. Last year, we had an inflation rate of nearly 12 per cent, and a policy of stimulation such as we are now proposing would certainly have pushed inflation up to 15, 18 or 20 per cent. But since we expect inflation to drop to about 5 per cent next year, we can implement such a policy without any problem.

Mr. Speaker, because of the policy implemented by the Government, we have gone through difficult times politically, as the polls show, but I believe that the Canadian people will understand that we acted in their best interests, that what we did, we had to do, and that we did not make the same mistake as the Socialist Government in France which resorted to political means to create employment after being elected in May 1981. That is all very well except that France is not any better off today. Unemployment in France is on the rise, while Canada is looking forward to economic recovery. The situation in France is now worse that it was in May 1981. The French Government now has to implement unprecedented restraint policies. I am certain that the Canadian people will understand that we acted in their best interests, even though it was not very pleasant. We often hear people say that we created unemployment voluntarily, but I can assure them that it also hurt us. Members on this side of the House do not find it any more pleasant than Members opposite to have an unemployed worker come to their office and feel powerless because of the economic situation.

Mr. Speaker, it has also been said that, in spite of these economic incentives, unemployment will decrease very little, namely from 12.4 to 11.4 per cent. What must be kept in mind is that these figures can be misleading. What is important is to know that there will be 600,000 new jobs created in Canada during the next two years. If the unemployment rate as such does not drop any further, it will be because the labour force participation rate will increase as people who had left the labour market will re-enter it. That is why the rate of unemployment itself will not drop as much as we would like.

I would like to say a word about the contents of the budget speech. Out of the $2.4 billion allotted to Special Recovery Capital Projects, 70 per cent will be spent between now and the end of 1984. It is important for the public sector to intervene because in spite of the tax incentives provided for businesses in the form of investment tax credits and various tax measures to promote investment by the private sector, we are well aware that there will be some delay, which means that the public sector must intervene, and it will do so through these Special Recovery Capital Projects. In this regard, I want to remind the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to include among these Special Recovery Capital Projects the construction of the intermodal station in Quebec City. Since 1975, we have had a temporary station in the suburb of Sainte-Foy, and I believe that it is time the railway service returned to the core area and a station worthy of the capital of Quebec was built.

Mr. Speaker, on the long term, I believe that the most beneficial proposals of this budget will probably be the Indexed Securities Investment Plan and the Special Recovery Share Purchase Tax Credit. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because our businesses generally have a deficient financial structure with a much too high debt-equity ratio. I would like to give a few figures to show what I mean. For instance, in 1978, 82 per cent of the investments of large industrial companies were financed by their own assets; in 1982, this percentage had dropped to only 38 per cent. As for the interest charges paid by these companies, they increased 32 per cent in 1980, 58 per cent in 1981 and 23 per cent in 1982.

Let me now refer to another interesting figure, namely the long term debt as a source of commercial investment. It amounted to $7.1 billion in 1978 as compared with $12.1 billion in 1982, and that, Mr. Speaker, is a significant increase.

As to stocks issued by businesses to raise new funds, they reached $5.9 billion in 1980 and only $4.4 billion two years later in 1982. Mr. Speaker, that points to the need to revamp the corporate financial structure because a company which has a lot of assets can pull through more easily. The worst thing that can happen is that it may be unable to declare dividends, whereas another one which relies heavily on its debt has to meet its contractual commitments, otherwise it might be forced into bankruptcy.

I therefore think that those measures may well be most important and most fundamental. We must also keep in mind our answer to those who would have the people believe that we are unduly partial to the corporate sector to the detriment of individual Canadians: the private sector will necessarily be the focus of the economic recovery and that is where new jobs will be created. It must be pointed out that, contrary to the views expressed by many people, corporate profits have declined sharply. Corporate profits in 1979 accounted for 13.2 per cent of Canada's gross national product, whereas three years later, in 1982, they had gone down by more than 50 per cent, which was only 6.2 per cent of the GNP. We must be wary of and keep an eye on those who claim that we as a Government have a tendency to favour big business, the wealthy and corporate owners at the expense of the helpless in our society.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like to end my remarks by highlighting some of our job creation programs. A moment ago, I referred briefly to our special recovery projects, and I mentioned as well the $2.4 billion tax incentives for businesses over the next four years. And then of course we have direct job creation programs for which an additional amount of $710 million was earmarked in the budget. All told, $1.5 billion will be spent for direct job creation this year, including $180 million more under the NEED Program, $100 million more under the provisions of Unemployment Insurance Act Section 38, special job creation measures of $150 million for labour intensive industries, and an extra $280 million so that young Canadians will find work rather than simply keep hoping. There will be $40 million available for Katimavik and $70 million more for Summer Canada. In addition, the Department of National Defence has set $75 million aside to recruit young people and, finally, companies will receive $95 million in salary grants to hire young Canadians and enable them to gain some experience on the labour market.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks by saying this: in the April 26 issue of La Presse, not very long ago then, one could read the following headlines: "World Economic Recovery Well On Its Way Canada Ahead With Strongest Recovery" 1739

And the reporter went on to say:

> The strength of Canada's economic recovery puts us first among the seven major industrialized nations.
> Although all countries are out of the recession, Canada ranks first for its dynamism.

Mr. Speaker, that is not the conclusion of a fancy analysis by an unknown economist, it is based on a study made public the day before, April 25, by the New York Conference Board.

We have therefore precious little to learn from Members opposite. They should not gloat over the results of the latest polls, for we all know that in horse racing the horse which is running seventh or eighth often waits until the last quarter mile to pull ahead and reach the wire first. I would invite the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. LaSalle) in particular to watch the race as of now, especially when we expect to see a leader elected by kids who unfortunately will not be eligible for the $280 million employment programs because they will be too young at 8 or 9. We have in mind youngsters from age 15 or 16. The others are too young. So we hope they will be kept in school.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by stating that Canadians must work shoulder to shoulder and that with mutual trust, if we can forget the far-fetched and ludicrous suggestions heard from the Opposition benches, we as Canadians will all manage to live through these difficulties and enjoy once again the good life of yesteryear.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have to say to the Hon. Member for Montmorency-Orléans (Mr. Duclos) that I am surprised by his speech. I have always thought of him as being on the left-wing of the Liberal Party, but he sounded today like a real Conservative. The Hon. Member did some pretty judicious summarizing of the Conference Board report. This morning's The Globe and Mail reports the Conference Board as follows:

The Canadian economy should show steady improvement this year but there will be no major success in battling unemployment over the short term—

The article goes on to state that unemployment is now 12.8 per cent, that it will come down to 12.3 per cent this year and to 11.5 per cent next year. Why is it with unemployment over 12.5 per cent and with very high unemployment in his Province of Quebec—I suppose the highest of any Province in Canada except Newfoundland—that his Government will spend $1 billion a month to keep the Unemployment Insurance Fund solvent but can find less that $2 billion for job creation? Where is the sense in paying 1.5 million Canadian workers to sit at home doing nothing rather than putting them to work doing the kinds of useful things which the Hon. Member talked about?

[Translation]

Mr. Duclos: This is the kind of language we have been used to, coming regularly as it does from people who know that they never will be in power. This is all so easy for people who can get 20, 30 or 12 Members elected at each general election and who have no sense of responsibilities. I explained why—maybe my hon. colleague was not listening, was sleeping, or whatever. But I explained that unemployment statistics are misleading since it is clear that with this economic recovery, there will be an increase in the labour force, and this means that instead of having 58 or 59 per cent—please correct me if I am wrong—but I know that in metropolitan Quebec City, there is possibly 58 per cent of all people between the ages of 15 and 64 on the labour market, whereas a normal rate might be 64 or 65 per cent. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, if you have people joining the labour force, at the unemployment statistics level, statistics that are based on the labour force, a reduction in the unemployment rate as such will not be as dramatic, as if the labour force were stable.

Now as concerns unemployment insurance, my view is that people drawing benefits are most respectable in the first place; they want to work but unfortunately the international situation is restricting this Government's room for manoeuvre, as in the case with every other Government, especially in the industrialized world.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I feel those points are not too easy to make, and I would invite my hon. colleague to visit us in Quebec during the next election. He will have a chance to express his views, and we will have a chance to answer, because it has been shown that Quebecers do trust the Liberal Party, and my belief is they will continue to do so, whatever the Hon. Member may say.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, this budget's first priority is to help the private sector. Job creation and helping the consumer are not this budget's first priority. My question to the Member for Montmorency-Orléans (Mr. Duclos) is as follows: How can the Hon. Member support this budget, considering the large number of unemployed workers in this country, especially in the Province of Quebec?

Mr. Duclos: Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to make the same preliminary remarks I made when answering the question put by the Member for Winnipeg-North (Mr. Orlikow). I fail to understand . . . Perhaps the Hon. Member is not living in the same country or on the same planet. How can anyone see job creation and helping small- and medium-sized businesses as two opposing factors? I remember that some time ago at a meeting organized by a union local in Quebec City, I met a group of unemployed workers, and I remember entering a hall, and feeling the hostility. After talking to these people, I said: Let me say one thing. Maybe you will shout me down, but wait thirty seconds after I tell you what I am going to say now: The workers' best friend is a company that makes profits. I hope my hon. colleague agrees with me on that. Personally, I do not know any entrepreneurs or businessmen who would stay in business if they kept losing money, just to keep people working.

What I mean is that these are complementary measures, and that we have decided to create jobs across Canada by stimulating the private sector, by helping it to invest more readily, by creating favourable conditions, by creating a climate of confidence. That is certainly not contrary to a job creation policy. If my hon. colleague thinks that with a deficit of $40 or $45 billion and a Government that would take 70 or 75 per cent of the gross national product, we could perhaps do more, well, I wish he would look at what is happening in socialist countries, which I suppose he has had a chance to visit. He will see that State control of the entire economy and of all production factors does not bring prosperity.

• (1240)

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that in countries which have or have had social democratic Governments, such as Sweden, Norway and West Germany—

Mr. Fisher: And France.

Mr. Orlikow: —and France, the rates of unemployment are much lower than that of Canada. In fact, Canada has the third highest rate of unemployment of all industrialized countries.

Does the Hon. Member not realize that the reason we have a large deficit is that such a high percentage of our labour force is unemployed? Does he not realize that when they are working they pay income taxes and have money to purchase goods on which the federal and provincial Governments receive sales tax and that companies make profits and pay corporation taxes? The Government has done nothing about unemployment. Since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office it has increased every year. If we got the country working and people were employed, does the Hon. Member not agree that the large deficit would disappear?

[Translation]

Mr. Duclos: Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely astonished at the Hon. Member's remarks. His examples are odd, to say the least. He mentions the Social Democratic government in the Federal Republic of Germany. Germany, like other industrialized countries, also happens to be in a recession, and I would like to put the following question to the Hon. Member. Did Germany not have elections not long ago? Did the Christian Democrats not win that election? Was the Social Democratic Party not defeated? And is that how German voters showed their appreciation of Mr. Schmidt's social democratic government? The Hon. Member's example is somewhat inappropriate and, by the way, I referred briefly to this in my speech. We have the example of the economically disastrous policy of the French Socialist Government since May 1981. Canada is looking forward to an interesting, major and lasting economic recovery, while France is in a deep recession. No later than yesterday, there were demonstrations in Paris and demonstrations by farmers in the provinces. We have to be serious. To reply more specifically to the question asked by the Hon. Member, I shall simply tell him that we are doing exactly what he said to reduce the deficit, because with fiscal incentives to promote investment by the private sector, we shall be able to create jobs, which will mean more Canadians being employed, more tax revenue for the Federal Government and a gradual reduction of the deficit.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, like many others before me, I would like to make a few comments on the budget speech delivered a few days ago. I was somewhat surprised to hear the Hon. Member for Montmorency-Orléans (Mr. Duclos) endorse so vigorously the administration of his Government. Like many others, I am convinced that he is very disappointed at what has been accomplished during the last fifteen years, and more particularly the last five years. The Hon. Member for Montmorency-Orléans is joking when he says that the youth employment incentive programs are not aimed at children of seven or eight, but I should remind him that his own Government is responsible for the mortgage of nearly $2,000 being imposed on every newborn child by our national debt. The Hon. Member forgot to mention it.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, I must recognize that the budget is an extremely important exercise in the administration of this country. It is difficult as well to give currency to the projections of the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) because over the past 15 years, since I first won a seat in the House, his predecessors have made umpteen projections which were all way off the mark. On the strength of projections based on unbelievably misleading factors and in light of the fact that for 15 years now the Government has been telling us that it will spur the economy and set the country back on the road to prosperity through increased spending, we have no choice but to admit that it has been quite the opposite. We ought to be very concerned indeed that history might repeat itself.

The Hon. Member for Montmorency-Orléans spoke about the catastrophic situation in certain countries of the world. I would suggest that Canadians are now in a catastrophic situation for which this Government must assume full responsibility. It has taken the wrong decisions, it has failed to take action at the right time in vulnerable sectors and, therefore, it must bear the blame and the responsibility. For a number of years now we have been urging the Government to steer its economic policies so as to encourage the private sector to show economic leadership because it is much better at it than the Government. Someone said earlier that it was a matter of confidence. Of course it is a matter of confidence, and from confidence flows credibility.

Does the Minister of Finance now have the necessary credibility to inspire confidence in investors, businessmen and Canadians generally? We say no. We say no because he has demonstrated unparalleled hypocrisy when he took action and then afterwards heeded pleas from this side of the House to listen to the private sector and promote private investment. That same Minister, when he held the energy, mines and ressources portfolio, drove private industries right out of a leading sector in Canada, and that same Minister, the Minister of Finance, was responsible for Canada's loss of $30 to $40 billion in investments and about 150,000 to 250,000 direct and indirect jobs, particularly in that area. That Minister of Finance carries a lot of weight in Cabinet, a lot more than the Hon. Member for Montmorency-Orléans, we know that. Not so long ago, the Minister of Finance took a bit of a beating in the Gillespie affair, and he made a major blunder when he partly disclosed his budget, an issue on which the lid has been clamped. But still this was a tremendous blunder on the part of a senior minister. How can this same Minister of Finance, with so large a smile on budget night, have the credibility needed to lead the country to the prosperity he referred to in his budget or in his comments? No way, Mr. Speaker! In forsaking that trust, he lost the credibility needed to give Canadians the confidence that is so needed. And on top of that, we see, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) rushing in to cover him up on two incidents that called for an immediate resignation, if honour had had its way.

Those are the rules by which we are governed today. For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I must recognize that the Government's current attempt to call upon the private sector, after having competed and fought with it, points first to unprecedented hypocrisy as I said, and, second, proves that we were right in enticing the private sector to do a better job than the state, which it can do. The Liberals are only now beginning to understand that.

How is it possible for us, Mr. Speaker, to accept the Government's invitation to put our trust in them in order to save the country? As we have seen these past 15 years, the more they are granted additional supplies, the bigger their deficits are getting. And the bigger the deficits, the heavier the cost of our national debt and the higher the unemployment rate. Certainly, the truth must be told in this House. I was literally shocked when I heard the Hon. Member for Montmorency-Orleans (Mr. Duclos) earlier today trying to defend this Government's unprecedented failure and incompetence. Such is the situation now, Mr. Speaker. Of course, they would not want us to say that in 1968, when I first came here, at the same time perhaps as the Hon. Member for Montmorency-Orléans, there were 358,000 unemployed, and the budget stood at a $12 billion. But in 1982, what a sad performance, Mr. Speaker, that is embarrassing for Liberal members and is reflected in this morning's Gallup polls. Of course, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals would rather not hear about it. They will tell the public at large that the race is not yet over. Indeed it is not, but Canadians are in an awful hurry to get this opportunity to say what they think of a Government that has been hurting them for too long. And I hope the message gets across: there were 358,000 unemployed in 1968, whereas we now have close to two millions. With a $12 billion budget! That is something Canadians understand. Now it is $100 billion. So they tell us: "We need money. We are going to straighten out the economy within the next 15 years." The budget has increased from $12 to $100 billion, the deficit has increased from $491 million in 1968 to $31 billion this year. The Minister of Finance with his usual big smile has told us in his budget that we are going to have $25 billion deficits over the next four years.

Despite a sad economic situation, those people are asking us to put our confidence in them although they are responsible for this country's unprecedented failure. That is the kind of administration we have, and now this is the kind of administration that we should condemn with all our energies just as we are now doing. Is there one businessman in this country who would have retained managers of that ilk in his business for more than six months? I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. Should Canadians also know that the national debt which amounted to $32 billion in 1968 has reached $160 billion this year? With such a record, the Government is seeking, with the investments which are provided for in this budget, and with the assurance that our economy is on the threshold of recovery—

Mr. Speaker, the Government is not telling the truth when it says that our economy is on the threshold of recovery, and when the Minister of Finance claims that unemployment will be maintained at its current level. Of course, our friends opposite will argue that newcomers will arrive on the labour market. But that was to be expected. If current statistics are good for the goose, they ought to be good for the gander too. The Government should have foreseen this, for they say that to govern is to foresee. The Government lacked both foresight and compassion in connection with the unemployment problem it had created. It was dishonest with the Canadian electorate by creating prosperity artificially, especially by going deeply into debt over the past 15 years. And it succeeded during the last election campaign in convincing a majority of Canadians that things were not so bad, since it was able to spend huge amounts of money and create social programs. Unfortunately, it started to compete with the private sector, the major provider of jobs, and now it is seeking its forgiveness.

We cannot forgive the Government for its poor performance. We cannot forgive the Government for wanting to compete on a daily basis with the provinces and the private sector, by setting unilateral guidelines. It is unthinkable. Good times are over for this Government. It has never felt the need to sit down with the business sector, the unions or the provinces and to behave as a good federalist should, respectful of the provinces, its partners, and to discuss national issues with them. That is the kind of administration we have had for the past 15 years. And it is not seeking the people's confidence. I suggest it is going too far, Mr. Speaker. It has waited too long. It will be judged on its actions. It is responsible for an impossible situation. Earlier, I heard an Hon. Member refer to the great strides made by the housing industry towards recovery. This Government is responsible, Mr. Speaker, because its lack of housing policy during the past three years, for the loss of 500,000 jobs in the construction industry. Today, I support the $3,000 grant for the purchase of a new home, but the Minister is not even in a position to state a specific date and this is disturbing and I think that the Government Members will realize the importance of the matter. The Minister said in his budget speech that the grant could be extended until the end of May. You can see what will happen, Mr. Speaker. Applications will be filed, but because the funds will have already been expended, the applicants will not be entitled to their $3,000. What is the exact date? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said that the $3,000 grants could be extended until the end of May. However, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is not convinced. Let us look at the budget. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is not really sure of that. Then let us imagine for a moment what people will . . . Surely that—

Mr. Ouellet: You did say 500,000 jobs!

Mr. La Salle: The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is not sure that 500,000 jobs will be lost but there are now some two million unemployed so I think that he should also check his statistics again.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think that such an irresponsible Minister is wrong when he does not provide for the termination date for the $3,000 grants. I urge the Minister of Finance to tell Canadians that they will be entitled to the grants up to a specific date and if it is May 31, that will be fine, but any application filed within that period should be accepted. If the Minister of Finance fears that the Government cannot promise to pay that $3,000 grant to new owners, he should be brave and honest enough to say so. I ask him to give us a specific date, to set a specific time.

Mr. Speaker, I should end now considering the time allotted to me but before doing so I should like to mention that this Government has lost public confidence as is evidenced by public opinion polls. This Government is responsible for the problems which Canadians are now experiencing and is asking us to support proposals which it never made. However, through the force of circumstances, because it was forced to act, because we demanded that the private sector be used in a certain way, it does no longer deserve our support and should be dumped as quickly as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[Translation]

THE BUDGET

MEASURE TO STIMULATE PURCHASES OF DURABLE GOODS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, there is a provision in the budget speech of April 19 which has not yet received all the attention it really deserves, for it will benefit Canadian families. Indeed, under that provision, Canadian taxpayers will be permitted to withdraw tax free part or all of their accumulated savings in RHOSP's, that is Registered Homeownership Savings Plans, provided such funds are used to purchase home furnishings and appliances before the end of 1983. They will not be required to close the plan for such withdrawals. Qualifying new home furnishings must generally be purchased between the date of the budget and December 31, 1983. That measure should stimulate consumer expenditures on durable goods. Thus, young couples will participate in the economic recovery. Through the purchase of furniture, refrigerators, washing machines or carpeting, they will contribute to inventory reduction and production of the manufacturing industry. Furthermore I think that mention should be made of that measure and, at the same time, those responsible for it, should be praised.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

COVERAGE OF FARM WORKERS—EFFECT ON EMPLOYERS

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, I am extremely concerned about the revocation of Regulation 16 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Not only are farmers being burdened with the additional difficulties encountered with the administrative obligation, coupled with high turnover and mobility of agricultural workers, but now, to add insult to injury, the federal Government, with its bureaucratic red tape and usual slowness, has not even made available the proper forms which it is forcing our farmers to use.

In my constituency the farmers of Haldimand-Norfolk will need at least 50,000 forms by June 10 when the 1983 strawberry harvest begins. That is less than eight weeks away. One farmer alone will need at least 2,000 forms by that date. The present forms, as I am sure the Minister knows, are only valid until April 30. That means the only forms available will be out of date for this season.

The new program requires filling out a daily form for each individual worker, complete with Social Insurance Number and other pertinent detailed information. This is a horrendous, time consuming, impossible task for farmers to perform at the eight of the season, especially when dealing with crops such as strawberries. Many farmers employ up to 400 seasonal workers per day.

I understand the Minister is reconsidering this stand and is meeting with the horticultural society this week. I urge the Minister to listen carefully to this group and to take immediate steps to offer some sort of relief to our frustrated farmers.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION FUND

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, it is no secret that agriculture as an industry is suffering along with many other sectors of Canada's economy. An Act that the Government could use to alleviate somewhat the problems in agriculture, particularly western agriculture, is the Western Grain Stabilization Act. That Act has been in place since 1976, and in the seven years since its inception has had a pay out twice, once in 1977 and once in 1978. Currently the fund has in excess of $600 million, and at the present rate of contribution there will be in excess of $800 million in the fund at the end of this year.

The Act is jointly funded by the producers and the federal Government on the basis of $2 of contribution by the federal Government for every $1 of contribution by producers. The producers' contribution is collected on the basis of 2 per cent of eligible grain sales.

S.O. 21

The Act is designed to stabilize net farm income over a period of five years. If the Government chose to do so, it could amend the Act so that it would stabilize income over a three-year period rather than a five-year period. If that amendment were made, there would be a payment triggered immediately of something approximating $150 million. That money would be injected into the western farm economy. It would be good for the economy and would not increase the deficit one bit. It would be a step that the Government could take to assist the agricultural industry at a time when it needs help, without increasing the Government's deficit.

THE JUDICIARY

APPOINTMENT OF WOMEN JUDGES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, the appointment of Madam Justice Constance Glube as Chief Justice of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court Trial Division is welcome news, though perhaps not for our friends in labour, as it is the elevation of a distinguished member of the Nova Scotia bench and she is the first woman to be appointed as a Chief Justice in Canada.

The appointment of women to the bench is of ever greater importance now that we have an entrenched Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Because of the Charter the judiciary will influence our lives much more than it has in the past.

Strong representation of women on the bench, indeed equal representation, was a demand of Canadian women's organizations in the Charter debate. Yet the proportion of women appointed to the bench over the last three years has been only 8.9 per cent, the very same as the proportion of women appointed to the bench in the United States by President Reagan, one whose leadership in the feminist cause is hardly to be emulated.

Some extremely bad decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada recently underscored the need to appoint men and women with sensitivity to women's issues. The Leatherdale case of last year repeats some of the horrors of the Murdoch case of ten years ago. Only yesterday a decision was announced which would put the victim of rape on trial for conduct after the offence, a possibility that would never be considered for victims of any other offence. It is time that sensitivity and competence on women's issues become criteria for the selection of members of the bench in Canada.

TRADE

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NON-DIPLOMATIC PRESENCE IN TAIWAN

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, unemployment is our number one problem today and international trade plays an important part in that problem. For every $1 billion spent on trade, approximately 25,000 new Canadian jobs are created.

Unlike most other countries, however, Canada has not reached its full potential in this regard. For example, one of the fastest growing economies in the world is Taiwan, and although not recognized diplomatically by many nations, virtually all non-communist countries have established some form of bilateral non-diplomatic presence with Taiwan for the sake of promoting trade.

I am pleased to announce today that members of the Canada-Taiwan Parliamentary Friendship Committee, consisting of some 50 Members of Parliament from both sides of the House, have received assurances in writing from the Minster of Foreign Affairs in Taiwan that serious consideration is being given to sending a procurement mission to Canada in the near future in order to buy Canadian goods and services. This, we believe, is only a small step toward utilizing the full trade potential between Canada and Taiwan, a potential that would create tens of thousands of jobs in Canada forthwith.

To this end we urge the Government to join virtually all other non-communist industrialized nations in establishing a non-diplomatic presence in Taiwan in order to take full advantage of the tremendous trade potential for the benefit of all Canadians.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—NEED FOR MEDICAL SUPPLIES

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, yesterday President Reagan addressed the combined Houses of the Senate and the Congress of the United States. He asked for more arms for the struggles in Central America. On the same day, Dr. Alfred Gelhorn of the Harvard School of Public Health, and three other U.S. professionals, tabled a report about their visit to El Salvador in recent months. They wrote:

> The rate of endemic diseases is rising drastically as social programs are sacrificed so that funds can be allocated to the military.

They went on to say:

> U.S. foreign aid must make abundant provisions for such essentials as food, medicine, vaccines, medical equipment, teaching materials for students, and other forms of economic assistance.

Furthermore, they said:

> Wherever we turned we found the chilling effects of the ever-widening devastation to health and health care that has been caused by the breakdown in education, the slashing of budgets for national health programs and the repression of human beings by the systematic use of terror.

The doctors went on to say that they had visited a hospital. Ten days after their visit, a doctor had been taken from that clinic by armed men and has not been seen again.

I would ask the Senators and Congressmen of the United States to check their facts carefully. They must realize that the United States was founded in 1776 by a group of people who were able to identify oppression. I believe that if George Washington and Benjamin Franklin were alive today, they would be on the side of the revolutionaries.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF 4-H CLUBS

TRIBUTE TO ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the 4-H organization has made Canada a better country. The first meetings of 4-H were held some 70 years ago. In 1933, under the Dominion Companies Act, 4-H was incorporated as a non-profit youth organization. Canada now has more than 5,500 clubs, with some 75,000 members who complete about 80,000 projects every year.

Every 4-H-er pledges the head for clearer thinking, the heart for greater loyalty and understanding, the hands for larger service, and health for a better and more worth-while life. Members learn to do by doing under the guidance of volunteer leaders who encourage special interests in agriculture and in living and in identifying leadership ability in the members of the club and in themselves.

• (1410)

The basic objective of this educational movement for young people is to provide a well balanced training in citizenship and to encourage the adoption of improved methods in farming and in homemaking. Fifty golden years of service, plus 20 years before incorporation in Canada, together with youth and leaders in some 80 countries of the world, building character by the four "H's", the "Head", "Heart", "Hand" and "Health", have had a tremendous impact for good throughout the world. I am sure every Hon. Member of this House will join with me in saying "Congratulations" and thanks to the 4-H Movement.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

CALL FOR SUPPORT OF CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, Canadians know that any economic recovery in this country will be led by the business community. The textile industry, which employs 13 per cent of the people in the manufacturing sector, continually finds that it must struggle with unfair foreign competition, and if this is allowed to continue it will seriously jeopardize the textile industry's more than 80,000 employees and add to the already two million Canadians who are out of work.

On behalf of the over 1,100 textile workers and their families who live in the federal constituency of Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington, as well as the other thousands of Canadians and their families who are currently employed in the textile industry, I ask that the responsible Minister and his Government support the Canadian domestic market. Canada cannot be allowed to sink gradually deeper and deeper into foreign control of our domestic market.

Canadians must provide for Canadians so that we are in the driver's seat for our future, and the Government must help us drive forward, not backward. I ask the Government to show the understanding and co-operation which will support and encourage industry to grow for the future, and thus prevent loss of jobs in Canada.

PETRO-CANADA

SELLING TIRES IN COMPETITION WITH INDEPENDENT DEALERS

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I would like to raise a matter which has been brought to my attention by the Atlantic Provinces Tire Dealers and Retreaders Association which represents approximately 30 tire dealers in the Atlantic Provinces. These dealers employ over 1,000 people and have built up their businesses over a number of years with private funds. They are deeply concerned over the fact that Petro-Canada Tire Centres are offering ridiculously low tire prices which make for extremely tough competition.

These privately owned businesses would like to question the Government's responsibility to the public when it has gotten into the business of selling tires as a Crown Corporation in competition with tax-paying businesses which have built up reputations in their local communities. The Government also pays out large sums of money to advertise special prices for huge sales of tires in full-page $1,000 advertisements, using taxpayers' money.

It is extremely difficult for business people to stay in business and make a profit in today's harsh economy, let alone compete with a company using subsidized tax dollars. I, on behalf of the Atlantic Provinces Tire Dealers and Retreaders Association, urge that an immediate halt to such business methods, at the cost of over-burdened taxpayers across the country, take place, and that the Government be held responsible for the detrimental effect this practice is having on our business sector.

HEALTH

FUNDING FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the House will be aware that as a result of the application of the six and five program to the funding for the Medical Research Council, only 12 per cent of the new applications for research funding which were made this year to the Medical Research Council were approved. This is the result of this cutback in funding.

The concern is that we may be sending the wrong message to young people who are studying in our universities in order to do important research. We may, perhaps, be sending them the message that they would have been better to go into land speculation because the Government does not have the right sense of priorities if it applies the six and five program to medical research. Government will create a sort of lost generation of young people for work in scientific research if it does not smarten up pretty soon and start making medical research a priority, instead of relying on devious and dubious means like the proposed sports pool for the funding of health research.

INQUIRY RESPECTING ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Special Recovery Program, and it relates to the disbursement of funds under this Program to the various regions of Canada. Bearing in mind that the unemployment rate in British Columbia has reached an all-time high, and one of the highest in Canada, will the Minister confirm for this House that some $400 million of funding under the Special Recovery Program is being allocated to British Columbia? And is he prepared now to designate those projects, those important public projects, which will qualify for portions of this funding?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, as I indicated yesterday in response to a question which should be directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, who has responsibility for this project, the $4.8 billion in the Special Recovery Program was split into two parts, one a $2.4 billion program designed to assist in the construction of capital works projects right across the country, which would create jobs immediately. The majority of that funding will be in place in the next six months. The second part, Madam Speaker, was the $2.4 billion which is tax related, connected with the Income Tax Act, and directed toward stimulation of the private sector.

I assume the Hon. Member is referring to the capital projects part of the Special Recovery Fund. I indicated yesterday that the Minister responsible will be making those announcements, or Ministers on his behalf, in the next few weeks. There are over 100 of such projects right across the country. The amount of money allocated to each project on a provincial basis or on a regional basis, Madam Speaker, will be apparent as the announcements are made.

SELECTION OF PROJECTS TO BE FUNDED

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, referring to the budget speech of last week, it is interesting to note that the Minister of Finance said, "More than 100 projects have been selected." I cannot, for the life of me, understand why the need for secrecy here. This is potentially the biggest patronage fund in Canadian history.

Will the Minister confirm that important public projects in British Columbia, such as the pipeline to Vancouver Island, the need for funding for important expanded post-secondary and technological training facilities, and other projects, will be funded to a degree proportional to British Columbia's population share of this major patronage fund?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, in addition to the 100 projects to which the Minister referred on budget evening, we know that an additional $200 million was allocated toward projects which fall into the category of capital works funds projects. The Hon. Member said, "have been selected". I responded by saying, yes, a lot of preliminary work was done prior to the budget, but actual approval for those projects had not been given prior to the budget.

I would like to assure Hon. Members that the announcements which have been made thus far, for example, the purchase of water bombers, were not made on a regional basis or on a political basis. Indeed, an announcement which will be made in Metropolitan Toronto tomorrow will be made in a riding which is not held by the Liberal Party. Therefore, Hon. Members, I argue, Madam Speaker, are going against the facts when there is an implication that these announcements apply to a particular part of the country, or to people of a particular political stripe.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, the Minister continues to hedge and stonewall. The budget said very clearly, "100 projects have been selected", and there is no need for secrecy in this matter.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

ACQUISITION OF COAST GUARD VESSELS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister, or someone else who is qualified to answer, as the Minister of Transport is not in the House, why a major contribution has been made to building large off-shore Coast Guard vessels when the Cross Report on Coast Guard revisions requires that small high speed pursuit vessels be acquired, and in fact those vessels are already being purchased from Britain? I would like to know why it is that the Minister, in allocating some of this special recovery funding to the building of large sea-going Coast Guard vessels, is completely contradicting and overlooking the recommendations of the interdepartmental report on search and rescue?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member is speaking of a report relating to search and rescue, I have not seen that report. I would be pleased to review its contents. However, I would call the attention of my hon. friend to the announcements we made on Monday relating to the Coast Guard acquisitions we are going to make. I indicated quite clearly that the allocation of the contracts would be sensitive to regional distribution. The Hon. Member's region is on the West Coast and we are sensitive to his interests concerning the alloaction of work under the Program to the West Coast. I am sure he will follow that very closely and I would be pleased, privately or otherwise, to provide him with any additional information I can freely give him.

AIR CANADA

ANNOUNCED LAYING OFF OF MECHANICS IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Air Canada has announced it is going to be laying off 420 workers on September 1 unless unions accept cost-savings agreements. There will be 120 mechanics laid off in the Winnipeg area. It is unfortunate that Air Canada does not practise what it preaches. I would like to ask the Minister if he will use the authority of the Government to have Air Canada stop its ridiculous $30 million move to elaborate new corporate headquarters, a move under investigation by the RCMP, and use that money to keep those 420 employees working in Air Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has made representations to the Government. I will draw these to the attention of the Minister of Transport.

REQUEST THAT LAY-OFFS BE HALTED

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Acting Prime Minister can bring this to the attention of the Minister of Labour. By law the airline is required to give four months' notice of a lay-off to the Department of Labour. I would like to point out to the Minister that many of these mechanics being laid off had to pay their own travel expenses from Dorval to Winnipeg recently, and were guaranteed employment. Will the Acting Prime Minister see that Air Canada is not allowed to lay off these employees, and will he use his influence to stop its unnecessary $30 million move to elaborate new headquarters?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member stated that Air Canada has violated the law, or that there was a law that ought to induce Air Canada to behave in a certain way. I believe that, if there is such a law, then Air Canada should obey it, like all other corporate bodies or persons in the country. I will also draw that matter to the attention of the Minister, in this case the Minister of Labour.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ACHIEVEMENT OF FULL EMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment. Yesterday in Committee the Minister accepted the view that we are going to continue to have high unemployment even in boom times. This follows the Minister of Finance's rather bizarre notion, as expressed last week, that 8 per cent or 9 per cent unemployment should really constitute full employment. Instead of dealing with the problem, the Government is really redefining the issue.

Considering that an all-Party Committee of this House, following the last election, recommended to the Government that it accept a level no higher than 4 per cent as the definition of full employment, why does the Government not accept this definition and then set targets to achieve it?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as I pointed out in Committee yesterday, and it is unfortunate that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party did not attend that meeting—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: He says he is interested in the issue of employment, and this would have been an ideal opportunity to have exchanged points of view.

Miss MacDonald: Tell him to come tonight.

Mr. Axworthy: I invite him to attend this evening, if he is free. If he does not have a social engagement he would be free to come tonight and talk about these issues.

What we pointed out during that discussion, Madam Speaker, was that we are very much committed to job creation. The budget was designed specifically to achieve that objective. But at the same time as we begin to create more jobs, and we have now had three consecutive months of increased job creation in the country, it also has the result of bringing more people into the labour market. So statistically you do not see the improvement because the participation rates continue to improve; going up at the same time and run in a simultaneous fashion.

It is certainly our intention, and it was very clearly stated by the Minister of Finance, because of the measures introduced in the budget to stimulate action in the private sector—supplemented by the major effort we are making in direct job creation—we will be in a position of creating about 600,000 jobs over the next two years, which will be a very high average in that period of time and will put a lot of people back to work.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Minister gets more banal every day. What he has just said is that the unemployment statistics continue to go up because the participation rate increases. What that amounts to saying is that unemployment continues to go up because men and women are looking for jobs. How ridiculous can the Minister get!

REQUEST THAT UNEMPLOYMENT TARGET LEVEL BE ESTABLISHED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, considering that certain countries in the world today have unemployment of 4 per cent or less—Austria, Sweden, and Japan, to name three—and considering that is because they have had political leadership which set that level as a target, why will the Minister not now answer the question I put to him in the first place and accept as a minimum target a level of unemployment of 4 per cent for this country?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is interesting that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party points to countries such as Austria and Japan as examples. I would point out that those two countries have adopted programs such as work sharing, which Members of his own caucus have spoken negatively about and have opposed. So I suggest that, if he is interested in achieving the results of some of those countries, Members of his caucus should get on side and support some of the initiatives we have taken, instead of always being critical.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, for a second time the Minister has refused to answer the question put to him. I simply say to him that the programs introduced in the countries he has alluded to were made more equitable in the first place, and they work. They make sense there, whereas the ones he has put into place here are not equitable and they do not work. That is why we oppose them.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, for the third time I would like the Minister to deal with my question. Why does he not set 4 per cent as a target to work toward? If the Government refuses to do that, will he acknowledge that what the Government is really saying to young men and women, although not to them alone, is that they have to give up looking for a job, they have to lower their expectations or do what the Prime Minister suggested a few years ago, leave our country in order to get a job? How despicable!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is an unfortunate tendency on the part of the Leader of the New Democratic Party and certain Members of his caucus always to think what is devised or developed in a foreign country is somehow preferable to what is happening in Canada. It seems to me it would be much more helpful to the Canadian public if he looked at what was happening in Canada rather than always looking at what is happening in Sweden, Japan or Austria.

Mr. Broadbent: We are looking at what is happening here.

Mr. Axworthy: They should be concerned about what is happening here. I would point out that, if he was prepared to do that, he would look at the report we tabled during the budget debate where we set out a very clear strategy to deal with the changing job market in Canada. In that document we have pointed out how, at the present time, training programs of this Government are helping over 120,000 young Canadians.

Mr. Broadbent: Now answer the question.

Mr. Axworthy: We are spending over $2.5 million per day for young Canadians. We have introduced a new youth employment program for young Canadians.

Mr. Kempling: With a million and a half unemployed.

Mr. Axworthy: It is about time that the Leader of the New Democratic Party started looking at what is happening in Canada rather than always looking abroad.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

VISIT BY INVESTIGATORS TO TORONTO NEWSPAPER OFFICE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On Tuesday RCMP investigators visited the offices of The Toronto Star in what appears to be an effort on the part of the Minister to plug leaks in his Department, as referred to in Frank Howard's column in The Ottawa Citizen this week. Apparently the RCMP were interested in questioning Mr. David Vienneau with respect to a report he had possession of, as a result of the questioning on the floor of the House of Commons concerning the Coalgate or Alastair Gillespie affair.

Why does the Minister feel it is necessary to bring in the RCMP and involve himself in this program of harrassment of the press and media of Canada, and also for the purpose of intimidating his own departmental employees with respect to items and information which should be available under the Freedom of Information Act which has been passed by this Parliament?

• (1430)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I did not call the RCMP at all. I think there is some internal procedure in every Department to deal with people who give information which should not be given outside. There are some rules presently in the regulations which were there when the Hon. Member was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The regulations have not been changed. If there is an inquiry, it is through the normal process of the Department, and I have not even been consulted about it.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR RCMP INVESTIGATIONS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General, who has responsibility in the House for the RCMP. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has now said that he did not instruct the RCMP or engage the RCMP to investigate leaks with respect to the Coalgate or Alistair Gillespie affair in this House.

There is a record by the Government of using the RCMP in order to cause investigations and raids to take place whenever there is a politically embarrassing situation which arises. I refer to the raid on the Toronto Sun in the Peter Worthington matter, under the provisions of the Official Secrets Act. I want to know whether the Solicitor General will direct the RCMP not to become involved in investigations the only purpose of which would be to save the political hide of the Government.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): I think the suggestion is totally unworthy of the Hon. Member. It is certainly unworthy of the RCMP. They are not directed by the Government in criminal investigation matters, and they do not require direction of the Government to investigate criminal matters. They have the code, the rules, their own traditions, and they are self-starting. The Minister may call on the police, or any citizen may call on them, when wrongdoing is suspected, but the suggestion that they are being used by the Government is totally unjustified.

AIR CANADA

INVESTIGATION CONDUCTED BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question was to be directed to the Minister of Transport, but in his absence, which is a little unexpected, I would like to ask the Solicitor General a question. Since yesterday, he and the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Justice have had 24 hours to consider the implications of my question. Could the Solicitor General please tell the House when the criminal investigation into the Air Canada matter started, and when it is to conclude?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Again, Madam Speaker, I do not think that question should be answered, and I have no intention of answering it. I am surprised that the Hon. Member is asking questions and making allegations which might prevent a fair trial from taking place in the event that a decision to lay charges is reached by the RCMP. I would ask him to respect the well-established tradition of allowing the investigations to proceed on their own, without the direction or allegation or suggestions or improvisations of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I will start to respect traditions when the Government starts to respect any type or tradition of political morality.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): My supplementary question, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, is unfortunately directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Separate and apart from the criminal investigation, would the Deputy Prime Minister check with his colleague, the Minister of Transport, to see whether the Minister of Transport is aware of and is investigating a series of serious abuses of the office of the Chairman of the Board of Air Canada which, if true, would require the immediate dismissal of the Chairman?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is polluting the atmosphere with these allegations which may or may not be valid, but in a way which may eventually prevent an individual from having a fair trial, and prevent a trial from taking place. I urge him not to lend the authority of his position as a Member of Parliament and spokesman for his Party to allegations which are nothing more than allegations at this point. An investigation is proceeding. That has been confirmed. I think he is entitled to ask about that. He has received his answer concerning that. Surely he can leave it at that, knowing that the RCMP are perfectly capable of conducting investigations without his input.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF BUDGET PROVISIONS—CONFERENCE BOARD FORECAST

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Yesterday, in a radio interview, Tom Maxwell, chief economist of the Conference Board of Canada, confirmed the Conservative Party's view that the high interest rates and tax increases generated by the Liberal budget in the future will abort the economic recovery under way.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: In our official response we said that the budget measures could derail the economy by increasing interest rates and imposing massive taxes as the recovery is gathering steam. Now the Conference Board states that these measures will bring the economy to a screeching halt in the next two years.

Since the budget admits that the Government cannot cope with unemployment, how does the Minister respond to the Conference Board forecast that the budget will put the brakes on the economy?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I have not had an opportunity of reading the report to which the Hon. Member has referred. She has indicated that she, herself, heard a news report by Mr. Maxwell. I similarly heard reports, and we must have heard different radio reports because the one which I heard, on the contrary, did not at all confirm the protestations of the Hon. Member.

The report of the Conference Board is at best neutral concerning the design of the budget, which is to add a stimulus to an economy which is presently growing and showing some strength, with a plan to support the economy immediately, through the next year and some months, and then to recoup those moneys added as a stimulus by way of taxation at a later date when it could be afforded by the private sector. That basic premise was not the subject of the report of the Conference Board. Indeed, if it had been, it would have been a prerelease of the budget which the Minister introduced Tuesday last.

Therefore, in reply to the Hon. Member's affirmation that the Conference Board criticized the strategy of the Minister of Finance, of adding stimulus at this time, but in a responsible way, putting a plan forward which would call for a reduction of the deficit at a time when the economy was strengthened, I suggest that that statement was not criticized by the Conference report, and the Hon. Member is distorting that report at best.

CONFERENCE BOARD ASSESSMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, it is yet to be seen whether the Government is acting in a responsible way or just adding more mad money to the pork barrel. I will send the Minister the transcript of the radio interview in which Mr. Maxwell made his assessment. I would like to point out that those in the Official Opposition are not the only people making this assessment of the Liberal budget. Mr. Maxwell stated in his interview, "I think we are very much in line with what most people are saying". Do these assessments disturb the Minister? Is the Goverment having sober second thoughts?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Not at all, Madam Speaker. We believe, for example, that the stock market has responded favourably to the strategy of the Government, of the Minister of Finance, that is, of moderate stimulus at this time. However, with the concern about a reduction in the long-term deficit, we think that that is why there has been an improvement on the stock market. We think that is why the budget has been well received on the international financial markets and why the Canadian dollar has strengthened. We believe that the strategy has been supported by the majority of writers, critics and economists who have studied it. Yes, of course, there are differences of opinion. There always will be. However, they are in a minority, just as is the Hon. Member.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT CONTRACT—GOVERNMENT PROMISE OF BENEFITS AND PLANT FOR QUEBEC

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Three years ago, during the referendum campaign in Quebec, the Federal Government promised $225 million in economic spin-offs, in the form of a production plant for the F-18 in Quebec. It appears that yesterday, a contract worth only $3 million was signed by McDonnell Douglas and UDT. My question, Madam Speaker, is as follows: Is this one more promise the Liberal Party has broken?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I do not quite understand the question. I think the contract signed Tuesday by UDT and McDonnell Douglas is one that was signed by two independent companies. The Government had no involvement in this matter as far as deciding who would get the contract or how it was to be signed. McDonnell Douglas decided which company best served their purpose, and it selected UDT.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. According to the newspaper La Presse, the Minister said, and I quote:

> It is not the first time politicians state figures they are later unable to support.

My question is as follows: Could the Minister give the House the assurance that in the near future, further contracts will be signed to make the total economic spin-offs for Quebec amount to $225 million, as promised by the Liberal Party three years ago?

Mr. Lamontagne: Madam Speaker, I think the question is related to a conclusion that was reached when some journalists reported that the economic spin-offs of the contract were estimated at about $225 million. When I was asked whether these figures were accurate, I answered, and I was correctly quoted in the press, that these were obviously projections.

When projections are made, and this applies to all contracts, the economic spin-offs may increase or decrease, depending on the contracts given to the company. And that was more or less what I answered.

As for the economic spin-offs in connection with the F-18, our concern is to see to it that Canada derives maximum benefits from the economic spin-offs of the F-18 purchase, and that both provinces, Quebec and Ontario, get their fair share of those spin-offs, and that is what we are going to do.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. I heard the Minister of National Defence dissociating himself from his Government's commitment during the referendum campaign. Can the Minister inform the House that he intends to meet the commitments made by his Government three years ago during the referendum campaign? To win over Quebecers, it was agreed that Quebec would benefit from this F-18 contract. I think the people of Quebec ought to know what the Minister's intentions are today.

Mr. Lamontagne: Madam Speaker, I think Quebecers know perfectly well what the Government's attitude is toward Quebec, that is, the Government is exploring all avenues to promote employment and economic spin-offs for the Province of Quebec. It is quite obvious that the friends of the Member for Joliette are using the F-18 issue to make political gains. I think it is important to ensure that Quebec's position in the aviation industry is preserved and that is what we are doing, with great diligence.

TRUST COMPANIES

WITHDRAWAL OF DEPOSITS FROM SEAWAY AND GREYMAC CORPORATIONS

Mr. Ray Chénier (Timmins-Chapleau): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I received a number of phone calls from Greymac and Seaway depositors who have $20,000 in mature GICs. These individuals were concerned about their inability to withdraw the accumulated interest. Following Royal Assent of the Bill concerning the new insurance limit, will they now be allowed to make such withdrawals?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Yes, Madam Speaker, I can confirm that these depositors with Seaway and Greymac will indeed be permitted withdrawal to the $60,000 limit as a result of the passage of that legislation yesterday. I would stress that there must be maturity of those instruments in order that they quality. I would point out as well that the waivers that have been requested thus far at the $20,000 limit will apply as well for those people who are now applying for the $60,000 limit.

I would also say that I think that the legislation's speedy passage by Parliament demonstrates that the Government and Opposition in Parliament working together can respond to the economic conditions in the country if they really want to.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM—USE OF REPAYMENT COLLECTION PROCEDURES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State on parliamentary business, I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. I am sorry that I could not give him notice, but I sent it to the Minister of Finance.

The Secretary of State and the Minister of Finance have recently announced measures to ease repayment of student loans for unemployed graduating students who are in financial difficulty. In the meantime many unemployed graduates are being relentlessly pressed with collection procedures used by the Government of Canada and its agencies. Will the Government cancel collection procedures until the new program is in place?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs) Madam Speaker, my experience is that there usually is not a relentless pursuit of these students who may be faced with financial difficulties. We have always taken a sympathetic attitude toward these students, and we will do the same in this particular instance.

Mr. Howie: I thank the Deputy Prime Minister for his answer and the sympathetic approach to students which he has mentioned. There are apparently incidents of which the hon. gentleman may not be aware and of which I will advise him.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SUSPEND COLLECTIONS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, the pursuit has been relatively aggressive by some collection agencies. I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister, in keeping with the sympathetic policy he has announced, if he would consider suspending collections until the Secretary of State and the Minister of Finance have had an opportunity to place before Parliament what are, on the surface at least, some good measures?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Madam Speaker, I could not undertake to suspend these procedures but I will draw the Hon. Member's representations to the attention of both Ministers.

Oral Questions

PETRO-CANADA

RESULTS OF POLL

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Canada's special ownership charge on oil was ostensibly placed to pay for the purchase of Petrofina. It has not been rescinded in the recent budget. The Gallup Poll shows that some 69 per cent of Canadians make absolutely no effort to buy their gasoline at Petro-Canada stations and 45 per cent think that the Crown corporation should be sold. Will the Minister tell the House that the Government is now willing to accept the fact that this is a costly and obviously unpopular burden to the taxpayer?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have to disagree with the Hon. Member because the difference between the Gallup Poll and the reality is that the reality is that, last year, Petro-Canada increased its share of the Canadian market while the private sector lost a share of the Canadian market. It is a good opportunity to show the Hon. Member that he should not pay too much attention to Gallup Polls.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart: There is one particular Gallup Poll which Members opposite should look at. It says that 52 per cent of Canadians want the Conservative Party to form the next Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADVERTISING SLOGAN

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, if the biggest fraud that is now being perpetrated is not the claim of Petro-Canada advertising "its ours", then I would like to know what is. If it is ours, will the Minister tell the House and the Canadian people when he will be issuing the shares and/or dividends to the Canadian people so that it is theirs?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would do well to take a closer look at Petro-Canada's activities. It is one of the companies that are most active in developing oil exploration both in the Canadian North and on the Atlantic coast, and it is also involved in retail sales. As I said earlier, last year Petro-Canada considerably increased its retail sales while other companies saw their share of the market diminish. In fact, Canadian taxpayers have really benefited from the establishment of this company, since by buying gas from Petro-Canada, they demonstrate their preference for buying from Petro-Canada rather than from the multinationals established in Canada.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG WOMEN

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who has been arguing lately that if we had the same kind of participation in the labour force as in the 1960s, the unemployment rate would be down to only 5 per cent. I presume that the Minister is aware that we are in fact in the 1980s and not the 1960s. Would the Minister tell us what he proposes to do? Would he like to see women leave the labour force and go back home at a time when we have no pensions for homemakers, for example? Or does the Minister have any concrete proposals to meet the conditions of the 1980s when there are large numbers of women and young people wanting to have jobs?

• (1450)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, once again I would invite the Hon. Member to attend the discussions we have been having on my Departmental Estimates where we have had the opportunity to open up these discussions in a much broader way.

Mr. Parker: Do something.

Mr. Axworthy: If she had attended those meetings she would know that what we have done is put forward—

Mr. Broadbent: Bring it in the House.

Mr. Axworthy: —for the interest and, in some cases, the education of Members of the House, a document on employment in the 1980s in which we have set out not only the reality which Hon. Members over there refuse to face, but also a strategy designed to open up access to employment for all groups in our society. In this document we have put forward very specific proposals relating to new training programs, new job creation programs, new employment service programs and new job adjustment programs. I would recommend very highly that the Hon. Member read this document, and then we will have an exchange about it.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, some of my colleagues have attended those meetings, and I do not think that has helped very much.

UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS IN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, we do have evidence from other countries. Reference was made earlier to Sweden, to Austria, to West Germany and to a number of European countries where unemployment is at the 2 per cent 4 per cent and 5 per cent levels. Women in those countries have a long history of labour force participation. Since the Minister pooh-poohs using any of these countries as a model country for a great deal more economic planning, would he consider the fact that there are other countries which do combine low rates of unemployment with high levels of participation by young people and women in the labour force?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, that was an interesting statement. I am not sure what the question was.

Mr. Broadbent: You wouldn't answer it anyway.

Mr. Axworthy: In fact, I am not sure there was a question at all. Perhaps we cannot hear the question because the Leader of the New Democratic Party is bellowing so loudly.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: But what we have tried to do in the "Perspectives on Employment" is outline the reality in Canada in our own country, based upon the kinds of projections that we have and the fact that the policies of this Government have gone a long way to encourage substantially the growth of women in the labour force, and the recognition that we have devoted a number of new programs to ensure that women get access to the new skills they will need to meet new jobs.

Mr. Parker: Give us some hope.

Mr. Axworthy: I would suggest again to the Hon. Member that there are some very important issues that must be faced, but we will not face them simply by hiding our heads in the sand or always looking elsewhere. We must look at our own country first.

LABOUR RELATIONS

EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS PILOTS' STRIKE—ISSUE OF JOINT AIR FARES

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour and concerns a strike that has been going on for five months and is affecting all Canadians living in the Atlantic Provinces. Madam Speaker, the purpose of my question is to find out what the situation is with respect to negotiations with the CTC, and also with EPA and CP Air, regarding the issue of joint air fares, and other negotiations that are going on with the president, manager and administration of EPA and senior officials of CP Air.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Restigouche has raised a matter that is of great interest to us all, and I would like to inform the House that the Chairman of the Labour Relations Board had many meetings last week to discuss the strike and has started preparing a decision that is expected to be submitted in the near future.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Agriculture, but since they are not here perhaps I could ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Minister for Western Canada, a question having to do with the Western Grain Stabilization Act. This Act was designed to stabilize farm income over a period of five years. Would he be prepared to make representations to the Minister of Transport on behalf of western farmers to see that that Act is changed so that the stabilization period would be three years instead of five? In doing so, it would immediately trigger a pay out of approximately $150,000—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, but that question should be addressed to another Minister, not to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. McDermid: He is the only Minister from the West.

FORESTRY

APPOINTMENT OF ADVISORY GROUP

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Forestry. It has to do with the announcement made by his colleague, the Minister of Industry, last week of the establishment of another task force and permanent study group to advise that particular Minister and the Government on the difficulties, and on the opportunities available to the forest industry and sector. What is it that the Government is confused about?

Mr. Nielsen: Everything.

Mr. Oberle: Why can that Minister not rely on the excellent advice the Minister of Forestry is already getting from the forest sector advisory committee and, indeed, the Council of Environment and Forest Ministers of the Provinces?

Madam Speaker: There is not a Minister of Forestry in the House as far as I know. That is the Minister of the Environment.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, if I may be permitted to answer the question, I think that if there is any confusion it exists in the mind of the Hon. Member, not on this side of the House. It is well known, and I think the Hon. Member knows it because we discussed it in the parliamentary committee, that a very important aspect of issues relating to the forest industry falls within the purview of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, that is on the marketing and the industrial support side. The Minister has, I think quite wisely, established this committee which we think will be a great help in advising the Government on improvements in policies in that area.

There is an overlap between that committee and the Canadian Forest Advisory Committee which relates to me as the Minister responsible for the Canadian Forestry Service. The two committees are working together. We have, in fact, a co-ordinated approach. We have taken several recent decisions, of which I hope the Hon. Member is aware, which will have dramatic impact in supporting the forest industry.

What we have done is put together a system of streamlined committees which advise the Government to co-ordinate better the activities of a variety of Departments as they focus on our forestry problems. We have done that with extraordinary success, and I hope the Hon. Member recognizes that.

DEPARTMENTAL ORGANIZATION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I would prefer it if the results and the evidence could prove on the forest floor how successful this cold war between Industry and Commerce and the Canadian Forestry Service has been. The reason the forest industry is in the dilemma it is, and the reason it is running out of feedstock for our mills is precisely because there are too many bureaucrats fighting among themselves in different Departments of Government.

Does the Minister not agree that what has been done now is the rekindling of the cold war that has been going on, at least since 1965, between his Department and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce? When will this Minister responsible for forestry assume his responsibility and restore the Canadian Forestry Service to its rightful place and, in so doing, restore our inventory?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, that is really a most extraordinary statement coming from a Member of Parliament who, I know, actually does know something about what is happening in forestry. It is a most extraordinary statement. He knows that we have increased the funding for human development on the forestry side by over $15 million. He knows we have upgraded the status of the Canadian Forestry Service. He knows that we have announced we are signing reforestation agreements with the Provinces which will lead to expenditures of something close to $130 million by 1985-1986, over virtually nothing.

Mr. Paproski: Do you know?

Mr. Roberts: He knows we have just announced that we are going to purchase, through a $147 million commitment, something like 20 planes to fight forest fires. He knows that we are going to make further announcements in the next couple of weeks which will emphasize the strengthening of the forestry research facilities. Virtually everything the Hon. Member has asked us to do we have done, and he does not have the simple grace to stand up and say thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—USE AND DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS LANDS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question once again is for the Minister of Public Works. I have asked a number of questions in this House regarding Mirabel, and I hope he has some answers. First, has the Minister checked the number of subdivisions of farms in the Mirabel property? Second, can the Minister give me the number of properties that were sold to civil servants and resold before the closing? Third, is the Minister going to sell the additional 50,000 acres that is surplus to the airport property?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have learned by experience that, when the Hon. Member asks a question, I not only have to check for the answer but I have to check the assertions in the question. For example, he said something about dividing land in Mirabel, indicating that we had allowed a greater subdivision. The reality is that we have fostered and encouraged land assembly. If he were to look at the agricultural profile of Mirabel he would see real signs of improvement. On his question as to whether or not houses were bought and sold by public servants, I know some were and they were very carefully controlled. I will check the second allegation to see whether there is any validity to it, but I really must say that it is my experience that the Hon. Member is receiving his information from a very narrow and very limited spectrum of the information.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—ALLEGED UNAUTHORISED INTRUSION INTO OFFICES OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I would like today to rule on the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr.

Nielsen) concerning the removal from his office of certain carvings. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition was good enough to write to me on April 22 and draw my attention to a ruling given by Speaker Lamoureux on September 4, 1973 in relation to another case, as he did allude to it in the course of his presentation.

I have made an investigation, as I promised, into the matter and ascertained that the carvings were in fact removed by officials of the Department of Public Works from the conference room of the Leader of the Opposition just next to his office. They were removed in order that certain work which had been authorized could be carried out. Nevertheless, the Department should have contacted the Sergeant-at-Arms to seek his permission before doing so. The fact that they did not do so is regrettable, and I apologize to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition. But I am satisfied that it was an honest oversight and was not done with any questionable intention. No break-in occurred and the employees were accompanied by a security guard when the carvings were removed.

The purpose of removing the carvings was to comply with our bilingualism policy—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Members are not in favour of that? The purpose was to translate the postings and inscriptions so that they should appear in both languages. However, upon examination of that particular case it became obvious to me that it would not be proper to attempt a translation of these particular inscriptions which turn out to be part of our anecdotal history. They should be left as they are. I have ordered that the carvings be replaced in the conference room. They were removed on a Monday; the matter was raised on a Thursday, and they are now in place as of yesterday morning at eight o'clock, I might add with the full permission of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

There is no doubt that unauthorized entry into the office of a Member of Parliament can constitute a breach of privilege and a break-in would certainly do so. There are precedents to this effect. However, the precedent quoted by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition in his letter to me and in his presentation did not really involve unauthorized entry. In that case police officers entered a Member's office and questioned her staff without having first sought permission from the Speaker to do so. The offence lay in the actual interrogation of the staff, not in the entry into the Member's office. This was ruled by my predecessor to be "an apparent breach of a Member's privilege", even though no actual break-in was involved.

On the matter of entering Members' offices, it is important to distinguish between unauthorized entry for a nefarious purpose and entry for a legitimate reason. I refer Hon. Members to the fact that if a fire broke out in a Member's office, someone would obviously have to enter it. Cleaning personnel and security enter Members' offices, but of course these two particular instances are understood and accepted.

In the case of which the Hon. Leader of the Opposition complained there was no break-in, although it is acknowledged that the officials concerned should first have sought the permission of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition before removing the carvings. The circumstances of the entry were not consistent with anything which could constitute a contempt of Parliament or a breach of the Hon. Member's privilege. Therefore I rule that there is no question of privilege, but I thank the Hon. Member for having raised the matter.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I regret my absence over the last couple of days, thus delaying the explanation which you had undertaken to bring down. Upon entering the office this afternoon I noted that the carvings had been returned to their original place and for that I thank the Chair, if indeed it was the Chair that gave those instructions.

However, I am concerned about the fact that this could have happened at all. The Chair has stated that the offices were entered for the purpose of performing work which had been authorized. It has not yet been explained to Hon. Members of the House, particularly myself, who was the authority that authorized the work. The purpose has been laid out by the Chair. The concern I have now is—and this would apply, for instance, to the French words on the coat of arms above the door to my personal office, "Dieu est mon roi"—that it would be ravaging the historical nature of this building to attempt to add the English translation to those words on that inscription.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I am as concerned as the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) will be, whose responsibility it is for the maintenance of these buildings, about changes which are occurring without the knowledge of Hon. Members. I do not think Members realize that there is some authority for bringing about these changes. If changes are to be made to the historical or heritage nature of these buildings, surely there should be an all-Party Committee of the House which could be consulted before they are carried out.

I have read various accounts in the media. Whether or not they are accurate I do not propose to say. Apparently there may exist some committee of bureaucrats—and I use that term in the kindest possible sense—that is making these decisions. Surely these decisions should be made in consultation with Members of the House, because alterations to these buildings or premises are the direct concern of all Hon. Members of the House. All Members have a right to be consulted before any such changes are made.

I would like to have the assurance of the Chair that it will examine the feasibility of requesting the House leaders to consult their caucuses in regard to setting up such an all-Party committee for the purpose of consultation and to work with whatever other machinery may be in place so that we achieve not only the letter but the spirit of the law of the Official Languages Act and at the same time keep within the determination to preserve the heritage nature of these buildings.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am just wondering whether the Hon. Member rose on a point of order or on a new question of privilege.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member just rose, I guess; he was asking a question which I am pleased to answer. I reassure the Hon. Leader of the Opposition that some of the inscriptions, such as the one he just mentioned, "Dieu le veut", "Honour the King" and others should not be translated and cannot be translated in any circumstance. In this particular case there was a divergence of opinion among committee members who had to deal with the matter and somehow instructions were given to deal with the inscriptions in the conference room. Having myself examined them, as I said in my ruling I feel the particular expressions should not be translated.

• (1510)

As for the broader matter of who gave the instructions, the initiative to have the law on bilingualism apply to the House of Commons is, of course, left to the Speaker. Obviously the Department of Public Works, which looks after the physical aspects of the House of Commons buildings, would not act except on instructions or a request from the Speaker. That is exactly the procedure which was followed. Advice was sought from experts such as architects in all cases where it was thought the postings should be bilingual. I think this was done, if I may express an opinion, in the best of taste because we did require the advice of those who are knowledgeable in these matters.

As for the matter of consultations which the Hon. Member touched upon, I must say that it is very difficult for the Speaker to administer the budget of the House of Commons, which is quite considerable, $141 million, through constant consultations. At some point the Speaker consults because the Speaker feels there is a controversial matter that will in some way disturb some Members. Therefore the Speaker does have consultations. In general, that is my approach.

Sometimes I do proceed without informing a committee or consulting caucus because I interpret it as being my responsibility and administrative duty to proceed. There was a committee set up, not of Members of all Parties, but all of those who have a responsibility for the physical buildings in which we carry out our function. It is a matter of choice as to when to form a committee and when not to proceed in that fashion. Hon. Members must understand that I cannot constantly be forming committees to proceed with most of the administrative decisions that I have to make. I am vested with certain authority and I exercise that authority, I hope, to the satisfaction of Hon. Members.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I do not intend to take up further time of the House with this matter. I intend to write to you formally, Madam Speaker, on behalf of my Party requesting in a formal way, not to be consulted on everything concerning the discharge of your proper responsibilities, but certainly to be consulted in an all-Party sense when it comes to changing the heritage nature of these buildings.

That is going to be extremely important 100 years from now, just as it is important 50 years from the time these buildings were completed and those carvings, incidentally, were placed on those walls. It is just as important from the point of view of all sides of the House as it is for both English and French-speaking Members that those heritage features of these buildings be retained. We have a responsibility as Members.

I am sure you will, Madam Speaker, be willing to consult and advise members of that committee as to what the next steps are going to be if any further changes are contemplated. I will expand on those views in a personal letter to you, Madam Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, this being Thursday, I would like to ask the Government House Leader if he can give us some idea as to the business for the next week. Since we did not have the opportunity for a meeting, I remind the Government House Leader that last week, in referring to the property rights amendment, the Prime Minister said: "If we can have the agreement of the Conservative Party to introduce an amendment on property rights and pass it in 24 hours, I will undertake to do this".

After caucus discussion, the Leader of my Party indicated to the Government House Leader that the agreement was there, that the only agreement required was the agreement of the Conservative Party to a debate. As far as we were concerned, the agreement was completed. I would ask the Government House Leader when it will be possible to deal with that very important amendment to the Constitution on a one-day debate as agreed.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as far as the last question is concerned, I answered this last week. In so far as House business is concerned, tomorrow is an Opposition Day.

[Translation]

Next week Monday we shall resume and complete debate on the Budget, Monday being the fifth appointed day for this debate. Tuesday will be the sixth and last day of debate on the Budget, and the proceedings will therefore be interrupted at 5:45 p.m., pursuant to Standing Orders, for the final vote on the Budget. Next Wednesday will be Private Members' day, and Thursday we shall either proceed with debate on second reading of a Bill that will be tabled within the next few days, enabling the Government to borrow certain sums of money, or it will be designated as an Opposition day. I shall be in a position to confirm our decision to the House Leaders of the two Opposition Parties at the beginning of next week. That will be the business of the House for next week, Madam Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: With all respect to the Government House Leader, is this an indication of a change of heart on the part of the Government with respect to the property rights amendment? We undertook to give it a one-day debate. That is all the Prime Minister required. It was discussed in our caucus. We feel very strongly that we met our terms of the agreement as laid down by the Prime Minister. We very much want that amendment to the Constitution and the Prime Minister indicated that the Government did as well. We understand from the media that the NDP have dealt with it. Perhaps next Thursday, May 5, we could deal with it early in the day.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the answer to the question is no. I do not like to repeat myself. The same question was put to me last week; I have given a full answer. The answer to the Hon. Member's question is no, we have not changed our mind.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I have a question relating to Government business. As the Government House Leader will know, the legislation respecting access to information has passed both Houses and is awaiting proclamation. The Government House Leader has indicated that a resolution appointing the information commissioner and the privacy commissioner is to be an important item of business, but that for some reason this is apparently to be the last item of business of this session.

Why is he refusing to bring this important resolution before Parliament immediately in view of the fact that at least this Party is prepared to give immediate consent to that resolution? There have been consultations with both Parties. We are prepared to give immediate consent without debate to the resolution appointing the two commissioners in question. As I understand it, proclamation of the Bill is to follow passage of that resolution. Why is the Government House Leader apparently holding the House up to ransom and blackmail, suggesting that not until the last day of this session will this resolution be brought forward?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member is asking that question. He is rather late in expressing his concern on this very interesting subject. I must tell him that this matter was raised on the floor of the House many weeks ago by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton and by our own caucus. Also, it was raised at the House Leaders' level a few weeks ago. I indicated to the Hon. Member's House Leader and to the House Leader of the Conservative Party that this resolution will be introduced in the House as early as possible after the debate on the budget is completed. The Hon. Member should talk to his colleagues and not waste the time of the House asking questions that were asked here a month ago.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, questions may have been asked and discussions may have been had, but certainly the position that my House Leader took was that we were prepared to have this resolution introduced immediately and not await the budget debate. Once again, if this Government is serious about openness in Government, I hope it would introduce the resolution immediately.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member has talked to his House Leader, maybe he can indicate whether his Party is that keen to proceed with including property rights in the Constitution.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DOMM—ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF MR. LAPIERRE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw your attention and the attention of the House to a comment made on page 24889 of Hansard by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Lapierre). Immediately following my discussion dealing with the important question of bilingualism, the Parliamentary Secretary had the audacity to refer to me as "frog basher" and accuses me personally of "francophobia" as well as "rancœur" as applied to bilingualism.

This scurrilous remark by a Member of Parliament is not only disgraceful, it is a malicious act quite unbecoming a Member of Parliament, and if far from the truth of the reported record in Hansard. The Parliamentary Secretary's statement is in itself an unwarranted and contemptuous act. It smacks of prejudice, discrimination, and very much of bias. It is quite demeaning and disgraceful not only with respect to me personally but to all French Canadians as well.

In fact, the Parliamentary Secretary's slanderous comments seriously damage the reputation of this entire institution and, as such, I would like to draw your attention to a recent case involving the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) who stated on page 23834 of Hansard:

> Madam Speaker, these false and slanderous accusations ... tarnished my reputation and, if left unchallenged, could even blemish the reputation of this institution and those who serve in it; for as I noted just two weeks ago in debate, the reputation of the House reflects the individual and collective integrity of its Members.

As the Hon. Member for Lincoln also stated:

> The privileges of this House, of its Members, are privileges which have been accumulated through the centuries, privileges which we guard jealously in this House.

As such, we share a common obligation to avoid committing an offence which would question the reputation of this institution. As Madam Speaker accurately stated on page 24028 of Hansard:

> The Member enjoys his privileges on behalf of those he represents, not for his personal advantage. Defamation of a Member of Parliament certainly falls within the ambit of privilege.

I therefore believe, as the Member of Parliament for Peterborough, that the remarks attributed to me by the Parliamentary Secretary firmly constitute a breach of privilege as defined on page 11 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms of the House of Commons of Canada:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law.

It goes on to state:

> The privileges of Parliament are rights which are—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Chair is quite aware of what the privileges of a Member are. It is not necessary to remind the Chair of those privileges; I know them backwards. So it would be helpful if the Hon. Member would please simply argue his point.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, in accordance with the rules established in Beauchesne, I would indulge this House to consider the precedent-setting case of John Macdonnell versus L.S. Huntingdon. I will not read the case to you as you may refer to page 18 of Beauchesne.

Madam Speaker, I submit that within the context of the discussion during the late night adjournment debate of Tuesday, April 26, 1983, the references to myself as a frog basher and accusations of francophobia and the French word "rancœur" are equally as damaging as those in the above-mentioned cases.

I must therefore agree with what Erskine May states on page 11 of Beauchesne. If you would prefer me not to read it, as you may refer to it, I will dispense with it.

I therefore respectfully ask, in light of the facts that I have presented and the historical precedents that I have cited, that I be afforded the right attributed to all members of the House.

In order to fulfil effectively my obligations as a representative of the constituency of Peterborough and an elected Member of the House of Commons, I ask that Madam Speaker consider this a breach of privilege. In fact, connotations derived from these derogatory comments such as "frog basher" have already received public scrutiny by not only being recorded in Hansard but also by appearing in a major Canadian newspaper. The unsavoury remarks portray me in a most uncomplimentary and negative manner with respect to bilingualism. I said none of those things in that debate. Publication in a daily newspaper recorded as a result of the Parliamentary Secretary's statements present an image of "hating bilingualism", to use the media's words. This image is not evident from any of my remarks on the night in question or any other references made by me with respect to this policy.

I might point out that while I was Warden of Peterborough County in 1979, I was instrumental in the establishment of full French immersion not only in Peterborough County but in the City of Peterborough separate and public school systems.

So that I may dispel this blemish on my reputation as well as its detrimental effect on the House of Commons, I ask that the Parliamentary Secretary be called to the Bar whereby he is obligated to submit a formal apology. One of the citations I referred you to, Madam Speaker, deals specifically with such a situation.

In conclusion, I would like to point out in answer to a Member of the Government side that the tactic of using this kind of an attack against a Member of Parliament, regardless of what political Party that Member of Parliament represents, does a disservice to this House and is a discredit to the person that speaks it. It would be far better to somehow bring importance to this kind of slander.

Using as an example the statement of Madam Speaker on page 24906 of Hansard:

> —a question of privilege may be raised without notice if it deals with the proceedings of that day.

I regret that I was unable to do so that day because of the French translation. I determined from a dictionary of French to English that the translation of the French word "rancœur" is "rancour". I then went to the Oxford Dictionary and looked up the meaning of the English word "rancour". There is an entirely different word used in Hansard than in the English translation of Hansard as recorded. Hansard translation reports that I said "an aversion to bilingualism". This was never substantiated but I was accused of an aversion to bilingualism. I have proven that I do not have that aversion.

Mr. Fisher: Where?

Mr. Domm: Where? By involvement in our school system.

Madam Speaker: Order. Surely the Hon. Member is conscious that he is now debating this issue. I would like him to conclude in just one minute because I think the Chair now has a good idea of what his question of privilege is all about.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, I must continue with the definition of rancour because that is the case. The case rests on frog bashing, rancœur, and my attitude toward bilingualism. These are untruths. They are slanderous to my reputation. The press is covering these remarks as being the truth.

I would ask for a correction in either the English translation of Hansard or the French translation of Hansard, both of which are wrong and do not report what I said on the same page in the debate. I am trying to make the point that this kind of action needs the attention of this whole House in order that the people of Canada may retain respect for this institution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member recognizes that he is dealing with a point of order, though he did raise it on a question of privilege through proper notice given my office. I have heard him because I know that he has not been in a position to raise that question in any other manner. So I will deal with it referring to it sometimes as a point of order and some other times as a question of privilege.

• (1530)

I do not know whether I will be able to square that exactly, but I hope we can solve this particular matter in the House today. What I would like to point out to the Hon. Member first is that the expression in French, "mangeur des Canadiens", translated as "frog basher", that translation results in a much stronger word in the English language than "mange-Canadiens" is in the French language. I am not in any way suggesting that that translation was bad because I do not believe there is any equivalent expression to it in English, and "frog basher" is possibly the closest translation that one could possibly get. It remains, however, that it comes out as a much stronger expression than it is in French, and since the Hon. Member had to refer to many dictionaries in order to tell us what all of these expressions meant, I can assure him that, being French speaking, what I am saying is exact, that is to say, that "frog basher" is much stronger in English than it is in French. That is to begin with, if I can help the Hon. Member to feel better.

As for the other expressions, I believe account has to be taken of the kind of debate which takes place in the House. The only way in which a Speaker can restrain an Hon. Member in his language is if he is using unparliamentary expressions, and the unparliamentary expressions are listed in Beauchesne's. Some expressions are pretty strong and they are not listed in Beauchesne's, and I have often been tempted to take the initiative to determine that certain expressions are unparliamentary, and I might do that some day because I do feel that it is in the interest of the House to conduct a debate in a manner which is certainly acceptable to us.

I do want to tell the House, however, and the people who watch the proceedings, that some of our debates are very vigorous, and although people might not understand why we address each other in such vigorous terms on certain occasions, I do want to tell them that this is not at all outside of parliamentary tradition.

The freedom of speech, which I must protect, and which is only limited by the kind of expressions which are listed as unparliamentary, expresses itself in a well couched speech, but it also expresses itself in the passion with which certain Members choose to express themselves. That is part of parliamentary tradition. However, what I believe should not be part of parliamentary tradition is name calling. I personally do not approve of that.

I am unable to declare that those particular expressions which were used by the Parliamentary Secretary are unparliamentary. They are not as far as our list is concerned. Therefore, I have to say that the Hon. Member does not have a question of privilege, although, in saying that, I want to add, for the benefit of all Hon. Members, that Hon. Members should restrain themselves and refrain from name calling and they should demonstrate good manners when debating in the House.

PETITIONS

MR. FRIESEN—PREVENTION OF PROFITING FROM CRIME

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, about a year ago a man by the name of Mr. Shoesmith, from Sarnia, presented to me a petition which he wanted to have presented in the House in order to sensitize this House about the injustice he feels is being perpetrated on Canadians when a criminal benefits from his crime. The specific case is that of Mr. Clifford Olson whose family was given $100,000. Mr. Shoesmith presented to me a petition at that time. He has since then presented me with another petition which I would like to present at this time.

MR. TAYLOR—CALL FOR EXECUTION OF CLIFFORD OLSON

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting this petition on behalf of another 503 persons, bringing the total to date to 2,919 Canadians from many parts of Canada who pray that the Members of this House will vote in favour of having Clifford Robert Olson executed for the terrible crimes which he has committed. Without cause or reason he murdered at least 11 young people who had their whole lives ahead of them and he now talks of "his rights". This man lost his rights when he destroyed the rights of the young Canadians he killed and he should now receive the penalty of death.

MR. ROBINSON (BURNABY)—CALL FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF MINORITY REPORT ON SECURITY AND DISARMAMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of over 2,000 residents of Burnaby, British Columbia, who point out that the human race is confronted with a choice between halting the arms race and agreeing to disarmament or facing nuclear annihilation. They call upon the Government to implement the four key elements of the minority report on Security and Disarmament, including a refusal of the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada. I strongly support this petition and I would hope the Governmnent would implement the recommendations contained therein.

MR. MALONE—CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I am duty bound to present today a petition on behalf of a number of farm persons in the communities of Munson, Morrin and Delia, Alberta, with respect to what is referred to as the "Pepin" initiatives or changes to the Crow rate. What these persons have stated in their petition in essence is contained in six points or reasons why they find the initiatives unacceptable.

I submit that in effect what the petitioners are doing is suggesting that if those six points can be rectified, the proposal will then be more acceptable.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,755 and 4,808.

[Text]

IMPACT OF INTEREST RATES ON GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Question No. 4,755—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is the Economic Council of Canada's econometric model capable of estimating the impact on short-term and long-term interest rates in Canada for varying levels of the Government deficit and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, what change in short-term and long-term interest rates from current levels does it predict if the deficit were (i) 0 (ii) $10 billion (iii) $20 billion?

2. What impact would the changes in interest rates have on the cost of servicing the national debt?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. Yes. (a) Not applicable. (b) (i), (ii) and (iii) Precise changes in short-term and long-term interest rates from current levels cannot be predicted unless the way in which the deficit is to be reduced to the specified levels is also indicated by the questioner. In general, however, lower deficits would influence interest rates downward.

2. The direct effect is clearly positive; that is, changes in interest rates lead to changes in debt servicing costs, in the same direction, given no change in the Government debt portfolio.

Indirect effects of interest rate changes on national debt servicing costs can also occur. For example, rising interest rates may lead to decreased economic growth which, in the absence of policy change, would reduce Government revenues and increase Government expenditures, thereby raising the level of the stock of Government debt or changing the composition of the Government debt portfolio toward higher yield debt instruments. This would also increase the cost of servicing the debt.

A full response to the question would require consideration of the causes of changes in interest rates, over-all economic responses to these changes, and Government policy and program reaction to both the direct and indirect effects of interest rate changes.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

Question No. 4,808—Mr. Herbert:

Can a subsidiary of a foreign-owned corporation operate in Canada as a branch business and, if so, is such a business excluded from the provisions of the Foreign Investment Review Act?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned:

Yes, a foreign-owned corporation can operate in Canada either through an incorporated Canadian subsidiary or through an unincorporated Canadian branch business. The Foreign Investment Review Act applies to both incorporated and unincorporated foreign-controlled businesses. However, the acquisition of a foreign-controlled unincorporated branch business is subject to review only when there is an acquisition of the assets of the business.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary two questions of mine which go back to 1981. The first question is No. 3,506, which I put on the Order Paper—I wonder if I could draw the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary away from the other Minister? Question No. 3,506, which I placed on the Order Paper on December 2, had to do with the Government's policy with regard to public opinion surveys. The Minister to whom the Parliamentary Secretary was talking will remember an exchange we had before the Justice Committee in which I raised the matter of public opinion surveys which were commissioned by the Canadian Unity Information Office. Yet, Madam Speaker, information as to the contents of the surveys, and even the number which were commissioned, is still being withheld from Parliament.

I would like also to draw to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary, Question No. 2,672 which was placed on the Order Paper on June 23, 1981, which again asked for information with regard to the numbers and types of public opinion surveys conducted at public expense. Will the Parliamentary Secretary indicate for what reason Parliament is denied this information? Is the reason that he has not followed up on these questions, or is it that a deliberate attempt is being made not to answer parliamentary questions about public opinion surveys which are paid for out of tax dollars?

Mr. Smith: No, Madam Speaker, it is not because I have not followed up on these questions. I follow up on all requests. The office which co-ordinates the responses to these questions automatically follows up on all questions filed. The reason is we have not yet received the answers from the Ministers concerned, and I will be happy to bring the Hon. Member's representations to their attention.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Miss Carney (page 24689).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House is in the situation where questions, answers and comments might be addressed with respect to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). I might point out that his absence does not prohibit Hon. Members from making comments if they see fit. If there are none, I recognize the Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia).

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to express my pleasure in participating in this budget debate. More important than that, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) for producing a budget document which focuses primarily on the creation of jobs and the reduction in unemployment.

It is becoming increasingly clear, Mr. Speaker, that in order to meet the competition in the 1980s and beyond, Canadians are questioning actively whether we need to reorganize ourselves. We feel, unless we improve our competitive position, that Canada could slide into third rate power status and our standard of living drop.

To respond to this challenge the Government has a responsibility to set the tone and to foster a climate of co-operation with business and labour in a way acceptable to both Parties and consistent with the national interest.

This is one of the reasons why, prior to bringing down the budget, the Minister of Finance and other Cabinet Ministers embarked upon an intensive round of discussions with so many people. Mr. Speaker, I want to focus most of my remarks on the labour discussions. We listened carefully to labour's concerns and responded to their suggestions with initiatives designed to improve labour's role. Let me give you some examples.

Labour called for stimulative spending, encouragement of economic growth, extended Unemployment Insurance and increases in public investment. The budget did not and, under the current circumstances of restraint, could not deliver all that labour, or indeed any other group wanted. But the $4.8 billion recovery program announced in the budget goes a long way to meeting their concerns. Let us look at what the Government has done in reply.

Labour proposed long-term low interest loans for home ownership. They argued that individuals should be permitted to withdraw up to $2,000 tax free from their RHOSPs, and recommended a broad reduction of taxes for low and middle income earners.

Recognizing the recent fall in interest rates that has rendered less pressing labour's demand for lower interest rates, the Government focused its efforts on specific stimulation. Five existing housing programs were expanded and extended by the addition of $120 million to the Canadian Home Renovation Plan, $40 million to the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, $40 million for Indian-on-Reserve Housing, and $30 million to the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan. The 1983 allocation for social housing units was established at the original level of 25,000 units. The Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan has been strengthened so as to allow withdrawals to purchase furnishings, appliances, and new homes. Until the end of 1984, individuals can deduct from taxable income, in one lump sum, up to $10,000 for the purchase of a new home.

Labour recommended a broad reduction of taxes. Low and middle income earners will benefit from several tax concessions. In addition to the RHOSP amendments, the restructured child benefit package doubles the child care expense deduction from $1,000 to $2,000 per child and from $4,000 to $8,000 per family. Low income earners also benefit from more generous employment expense deductions which have been increased from 3 per cent to 20 per cent of employment income up to $500 per employee.

Labour made a number of recommendations for the encouragement of economic growth including, for example, the expansion of research and development and measures to improve productivity.

The Special Recovery Program expands budgets for research and development, and encourages the application and use of high technology. Specifically, $290 million will be spent on research facilities, $180 million is allocated for high technology procurement, $100 million has been earmarked for new technology initiatives, and as well, proposed tax incentives worth $185 million are contained in the budget paper, "Tax Policies for R and D". These are responses to labour's suggestions.

Labour groups in the pre-budget consultations argued for measures to ease some of the impacts of the recession. Some of these recommendations included the continuation of benefits to those who have exhausted their Unemployed Insurance, a moratorium on foreclosures and a stabilization of mortgage rates, the improvement of retirement income, and a continuation of the work-sharing program. In reply, the Government will expand the NEED Program and Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. In addition, $2.4 billion will be spent on the new Capital Projects Program. These programs, coupled with the construction incentives, should create jobs and ease the level of unemployment. New tax treatment of business losses and increased access to investment tax credits and the refundable investment tax credit should go a long way in assisting farmers and small business out of their financial difficulties. All of these measures will help to create more jobs.

Many specific initiatives that labour proposed are addressed by the $2.4 billion Special Recovery Capital Projects. The new projects will include transportation as one of six key areas and could include assets needed for resource development, including expanded reforestation efforts. The Special Recovery Capital Project Board announced in the budget will seek the co-operation of management, labour and the Provinces in implementing such projects.

Why this examination, you may ask, of what labour has proposed and what has been included in the budget? Why this comparison between what has been suggested and what has been accepted? Because it is important for labour to know that it has been listened to, that it has had an influence on the shaping of the budget. Many of the major items proposed by labour have won the recognition of the Government. Why is it important to establish this fact? At a time when mistrust and cynicism seem to prevail in society, trust is needed more than ever. Trust it like cement. It bonds lasting relationships. Without trust, a society is doomed to fall apart. With trust, it can face difficulties with confidence and build the institutions it needs for a better future.

In the April, 1983 budget the Government has responded positively to the proposals received from labour. The essence of the labour proposals is threaded through the budget with its focus on economic recovery. There is abundant evidence for labour to conclude that the Government, because of its budget performance, can be trusted. We hope that this trust will lay the grounds for a new coalition of interests which will search energetically for solutions to our industrial problems.

For workers and their organizations, the stakes are high. As new technologies take hold, unions risk becoming participants in a struggle between present workers seeking to retain a shrinking number of jobs in existing companies and the employment expectations of younger applicants seeking a first job.

Recently unions in Canada and the United States have begun, consciously, to adapt themselves to the kind of future I have tried to describe. The report from the communication workers of America's Committee on the Future is a calm, tough-minded and remarkably lucid proposal for a union which faces both changes and opportunities in a newly deregulated industry. In appealing to the union's members, the committee asked:

> Are we going to let ourselves be overtaken by explosive social and technological change? Are we going to let ourselves be stuck with obsolete skills, competing against younger workers who are better trained for new-era jobs? Are we going to let ourselves just be swept along with the information age tide?

It would be easy for any organization to give pro forma and ritual answers to these questions. It will be hard to address real changes in collective and individual attitudes.

• (1550)

For all the difficulties, I am unrepentantly confident that we can make those changes in business, in labour and in Government. We cannot congratulate ourselves on the state of labour management relations in Canada, nor can we bury past experience, without which we would be children indeed. Fortunately, we are not compelled forever to wage old battles. It is in the future we are fated to live. We alone will be responsible for its shape. We designed a budget with these considerations in mind. It is intended to set a course for improved and extended co-operation between labour and management and all Canadians.

The budget contains a proposal to establish a national centre to focus on the areas of employment growth, technology and productivity. This follows up on one of the main recommendations contained in the Labour Canada task report on microelectronics and employment, entitled "In The Chips: Opportunities, People and Partnerships". It was released last November.

When we speak of a centre for employment growth, technology and productivity, we speak of an institution which requires trust in order to get off the ground, an institution which could provide a vehicle for consultation and co-operation, one which could provide practical advice and direction on managing technological change, one which could help to educate business, labour and other interested parties about these problems, and one which could find ways to increase jobs and improve the human aspects of employment.

Furthermore, we speak of an institution which may, for instance, assist workers and management to develop and implement new methods of co-operative management in their place of work, one which may acquire and disseminate information on technological change, productivity improvements, co-operative management methods, training methods and related methods, and one which may sponsor training courses for workers and managers related to the centre's objectives. We speak of an institution from which labour could derive immense benefits.

Labour has a major role to play in shaping Canada's technological future, a role it already plays by participating in Hamilton at the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, and in Ottawa, at the Labour Adjustment Benefits Board, at the Textile Advisory Board and at the Export Development Board.

We know that for the national centre for technology, productivity and employment growth to get off the ground, it will require consultations with all the partners together, to establish terms of reference, structure and mandate. Therefore, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) and I will begin consultations to seek common ground on the makeup and mission of such a centre.

The success of these consultations is crucial. Workers often fear, from experience, that they could be excluded from key decisions and they might be expected to bear the bitter costs of job displacement and outmoding of hard-earned skills learned over the years and employment-related stress. As consumers, working Canadians will be the beneficiaries of change, but as workers, they see themselves, more often than not, as victims. Microelectronic innovations are seen to liberate workers, not just from drudgery but also from their jobs. Electronic monitoring can offer the employer a fool-proof check on individual performance and productivity. In an adversarial system, innovation can become the ally of one side and the enemy of the other. The inevitable outcome is a struggle which workers cannot win and Canada cannot afford.

Every example from our experience shows that Canadians are a future-minded, adaptive people, yet we are also a humane people with a profound sense of justice. Among our saving virtues is a commitment to social solidarity and an equal rejection of the devil-take-the-hindmost philosophy or the equally repelling notion of class warfare. The Government believes that the fruits of improved productivity must be distributed fairly and must not be won at the expense of workers but, rather, in co-operation with them.

Because of the history of their development, neither business nor labour in Canada have developed structures or traditions which make consultation easy. At the plant and shop level, it is true that the bargaining unit gives Canadian workers a basis for industrial democracy which is largely missing from the European structure. In some industries, there is a matching of labour and employer organizations, which has helped make our sectoral task forces a preliminary model for the kind of effective co-operation we are seeking.

What we are proposing now is a further evolution in our means of securing an effective degree of co-operation among all sectors. This is why we have proposed a centre for the practical consideration of employment growth and of technological and productivity issues. If all the potential partners in this venture have the determination to tackle, with open minds, the difficult problems facing us, we will be equal to the task of ensuring Canadians a future they can manage.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister relates to his remark that in the budget his Government had responded positively to labour. The Minister must know, along with other Canadians, that the budget is in fact a supply side document, which means that the financial elbow room which the Government has had has been turned over to the private sector in the hope that jobs will eventually result. However, when we are in the middle of the recession, there is no way that that will result in increased jobs. In fact, labour has called for immediate stimulus of consumer spending and for direct job creation by way of public works. What I am wondering is how the Minister can say that the Government has responded positively in the budget to labour when, in fact, he has adopted a supply side economic budget rather than one which stimulates the economy and consumer spending.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I cannot blame the Hon. Member, perhaps, for not having listened carefully to what I had said. I had to move quickly because of the limitation of time. However, it is very regrettable that he has not taken the trouble to read the budget. Otherwise, he would not be asking such a question.

He should know that in the budget there is a provision of $2.4 billion in the Special Recovery Capital Projects. Perhaps he does not realize that. Perhaps he does not realize that in the budget there is a provision for $120 million for the Canadian Home Renovation Program. There is a provision of $40 million for residential rehabilitation assistance programs, provision of $40 million for housing for Indians on reserves, and $30 million for the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan.

The measures which are embodied in the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, those which come into effect between now and the end of the year, and the other measure coming into effect between now and the end of 1984, are stimulative measures. Therefore, I find it unbelievable that the Hon. Member would ask such a question, revealing such ignorance about the content of the budget, which he evidently has not taken the trouble to read, to study and to analyse. If he had done so, he would not have asked such a question.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Minister that the budget increases personal income tax and therefore takes money out of the pockets of Canadians.

Mr. Fisher: When does it do that?

Mr. Keeper: It is therefore a brake on the economy rather than a stimulative budget. At the same time it turns over these same dollars to the private corporations in the country. This budget is a brake on the economy rather than a stimulus. I wish that the Minister himself would take a look at the budget.

• (1600)

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, evidently the Hon. Member does not want to hear what is really in the budget. He would like to have people believe what he thinks is in the budget which is quite different from the reality.

As I explained to him, there are a number of stimulative measures in the budget, such as those that relate to personal income tax as it relates to daycare and personal exemptions that relate to work expenditures. It is clear that the Government has put together a budget with $4.8 billion of stimulus in a variety of ways. Perhaps the Hon. Member does not agree with how that stimulus is divided among a variety of sectors. The Hon. Member does not seem prepared to admit that there is $4.8 billion worth of measures in the budget aimed at the creation of jobs. That is the bottom line.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Minister claims that Members of our Party have not read the budget, and he will not admit that it is a stimulative budget. The fact is that almost every commentator, whether one looks at the comments made by economic research organizations, business columnists or anyone else who has analysed the budget, has said that it is not really a stimulative budget but a stand pat one.

In the last few years we have seen a constant and serious decline in the number of people working in our manufacturing industries. Some of those industries have been almost completely eliminated while many are facing a continuing erosion.

This matter has been raised repeatedly by representatives of the unions concerned and others. Supposedly there have been attempts to deal with the problems which are continuing and accelerating through the so-called sectoral committees which brought together representatives of labour, management and Government. To a large extent, certainly in the view of labour representatives, the proposals made by the sectoral committees have been virtually ignored.

Since the Minister's Department is supposedly concerned with the needs and interests of working people in the country, what will it do to help the country face up to the necessity of changing and modernizing our traditional manufacturing industries in order to bring them itno the era of the 1980s and provide work for millions of people who have always worked in the manufacturing industry and are now being faced with lay-offs in the next few years?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. If he had been here this morning he would have heard the answer to his question from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He outlined in broad terms not just what Labour Canada would do but what the entire Government has to do in order to address itself to the necessity of switching to the upcoming industries and modernizing the existing industries in this country at the same time.

With respect to the claim made by the Hon. Member that the sectoral task force's report has been ignored, I would at least draw his attention to the fact that as far as the shoe, textile, clothing and tannery industries are concerned, some of those recommendations found their way to being expressed and implemented in the policy represented by the Industrial Labour Adjustment Program which came into effect in 1981. Its aim is to do exactly what the Hon. Member is proposing, that is, providing for a transition and early retirement for workers aged 54 and over in those four industries. We may also perhaps draw from the particular experience the conclusions that are necessary for a long-term plan that may apply to other industries as well.

Returning to the original question asked by the Hon. Member, with respect to fear, I find it amusing that Members of the NDP would become upset at hearing an interpretation of the budget which does, in essence, take into account and implement a number of the submissions made by labour. Evidently, this is something that the Members of the NDP do not like or want to hear. Evidently they are afraid of something and do not like the possibility of our reaching out and developing not only a dialogue with labour but a constructive form of co-operation as well. I can detect this and perhaps understand well the fact that the Members of the NDP are feeling so edgy about it and are finding it necessary to ask questions about this very aspect, namely, the interpretation of the budget.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a point to supplement what we have heard in an excellent form from the Minister. I want to remind the Members of the NDP, who chose to distort an important point, that the tax measures that are coming on-stream will do so late in 1984 when every forecast indicates that we will be well into a recovery and when our economy can afford it.

I would refer the Members to the Minister's own comment when he presented the budget, as found on page 24670 of Hansard. They would be well advised to read the budget statement for the first time in order to understand that we are stimulating the economy now and collecting the taxes later.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on the budget as introduced to the House on April 19 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). It is not my intention at this time to debate the rights or wrongs as they apply to the method that was used by the Minister of Finance when introducing his budget. However, from discussions which I have held personally with my constituents following the budget's two presentations—one on television on Monday and the other in the House on Tuesday—I could not help but notice that the average citizen believes that the Minister broke his oath of secrecy by allowing television cameras to photograph his budget before its presentation. This was, unfortunately, another example of the contempt shown by this administration for the House of Commons.

Those who support the Government will have their work cut out for them in order to prove otherwise. They are the ones who have to answer for the additional $200 million added to our debts as a result of the leak.

This budget is filled with clichés, promises and high-sounding rhetoric. However, we have a saying on the South Shore of Nova Scotia that action speaks louder than words. It will be interesting to see in the months ahead whether this budget is all sham and shadow or whether it is one of substance. The jury is still out and a decision has not yet been made.

Since all Canadians will be helping to pay their share of what the Minister calls his Special Recovery Program in the amount of $4.6 billion, it will be interesting to note whether those Canadians most in need in some areas of Canada will be recognized, or whether this entire program will be an extension of pork barrelling in ridings that are held by Government supporters. Unfortunately this is what has happened in the past.

The Government would be amazed if it left its Ottawa ivory tower and met with rank and file Canadians who resent and abhor present Government spending priorities. One thing of which all Canadians are certain is the amount by which our national debt will increase as a result of this budget. The fiscal plan is a four-year projection of Ottawa revenues and expenditures that show the federal Government heading deeper and deeper into debt. It predicts a deficit of $31.3 billion in 1983-84, of $28.7 billion in 1984-85, of $26.6 billion deficit in 1985-86, and of $25.6 billion in 1986-87. These predicted deficits total $112 billion over four years, which will bring Ottawa's net accumulated debt to $232 billion, which is a 1000 per cent increase over the $22.6 billion in federal debt in 1969 shortly after the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his Government took office. These are the predictions, but unfortunately the performance never keeps in step with the promise, and final deficits are always higher than the estimated deficits.

The Federal Deficit In Perspective is a 78-page report that is intended to be an explanation, a defence of our massive debts and mounting deficits. In fact, however, it provides evidence of the gross mismanagement that has typified federal fiscal policy since 1974. You might well ask what happened, Mr. Speaker. The key discretionary tax measure, it turns out, was indexation of personal income taxes. This was an immensely popular vote-getting measure in 1974 but as a result, the annual federal budgetary deficits began to mount. By 1979 our total debt had doubled to $44 billion. At no time from 1974 to the present time did the Government ever attempt to bring its spending Estimates in line with Government revenues. The result is the budget of the present Minister of Finance which predicts a massive increase in taxation over the next four years. All told, the proposed new tax measures will net more than $6 billion in personal and corporate taxes through to the end of 1987. In other taxes, the federal sales tax to be increased next year will take another $2.2 billion out of our economy while the extension of the Canadian ownership special charge on gasoline to pay for Petrofina, the BP oil takeover and any other socialistic measures which the Government plans, will add another $3.3 billion.

This is really the bottom line. What the Government has done in this budget is what the present Liberal Government has been doing irresponsibly for almost a decade, namely, spending now and passing the burden on to our children and our children's children; a burden that we do not have the courage to face today. This type of action is creating fear and uncertainty among young and old alike.

This is why the grass roots voters have already made up their minds to change the Government at the next federal election, as indicated by recent Gallup polls. It is easy to understand the voters' concerns. Let us face it. This Government is composed of 37 Ministers, 27 Parliamentary Secretaries, and the largest number of advisers to a Prime Minister in Canada's history. To support that Government, Canadians are helping to pay for the largest number of Deputy Ministers and supporting bureaucracy since Canada became a nation. Yet, with all these advisers the Right Hon. Member for Mount Royal established a third level of Government, the Donald Macdonald Commission composed of 12 members, almost one-third of this massive cabinet, along with an unknown number of supporting staff with a three-year mandate to which, in simple terms, the Prime Minister said, "Please, Mr. Macdonald, tell the Liberals what to do. Tell us where to go".

I say to the Government through you, Sir, that Canadians right now would like to tell the present Liberal Government where to go, but in order to do so they would have to use the language of the Right Hon. Member for Mount Royal, and this is sometimes offensive.

This third tier of Government has already spent $1 million for Mr. Macdonald and his eleven commissioners. They are not exactly your ordinary deckhands or farmhands. At $925 a day they are building up quite a bill for the taxpayer to pay, and the supporting staff for this Commission do not come cheap either.

This is where some of the present horrendous deficit is being spent as "Big Mac" meanders throughout the nation. It is this type of policy that is literally creating a crisis in Canada, a crisis of confidence in this Government and in the present system.

Confidence is an intangible thing. Without confidence no one would ever enter an automobile, a railway car or an airplane. You must have confidence that you have a chance of arriving safely at your destination or you would not even depart on your journey. This Government has lost the confidence of the Canadian public. I seriously doubt whether the present group is capable or is able to restore that confidence.

There are a number of statements in this budget that are conflicting and confusing, especially if you have been studying the Ottawa scene. For example, on page 3 of the budget, under the heading "Special Recovery Program", I read:

> The program will provide equal support for private and public investment, but all initiatives are designed ultimately to improve the financial position, growth prospects and job creation capacity of the private sector.

This is like Alice in Wonderland talking to the Mad Hatter. If the private investor is nimble on his feet, he may get some of this $4.6 billion before the public sector gets it, but he will have to act fast. Up to this point private industry has been practically ignored while assets have been milked dry by excessive tax rates, ruinous inflation and high interest rates. While this has been happening and Canadians have faced the largest number of business failures on a monthly basis in the history of this nation, this Government, through a series of Orders in Council, rather than by Acts of Parliament in the House where I and all other elected Members have a say, what has the Government been doing? The Government has been passing Orders in Council that have enabled Senator Jack Austin to build up a massive business empire under the umbrella of the Canadian Investment Development Corporation. To date, this Government has been following an ad hoc strategy of reinforcing business failures rather than supporting business successes. This leads me to ask what is the true guiding philosophy of this Government as it applies to business development in Canada? I have read the budget from cover to cover. Certainly the budget, in my estimation, is very ambiguous on this particular point.

In Atlantic Canada the fishing industry is facing troubled times, and in spite of the $1 million spent on the Kirby Royal Commission report in its investigations of the industry, the Minister of Finance seems oblivious of our problems since he scarcely mentioned the fishing industry in his budget statement.

The major issues for change, in fact the raw material, if I may use that term, had been pointed out by Mr. Kirby, issues such as fleet restructuring, quality improvements, marketing structures and advanced technologies. The problems that might prevent the rebuilding of this dynamic growth industry based on a traditional, renewable resource, can and must be overcome. However, this Ministry needs more than fine words, it needs immediate action. For all too long this industry has been denied even the rudimentary assistance it requires to make it viable. Here I refer to the rebuilding of breakwaters and wharves, and to the dredging of harbours and skidways used by the fishermen. In my riding alone, the ports of Lunenburg, Bridgewater, Liverpool, Lockeport, Shelburne, Sandy Point, Ingomar and Clark's Harbour, just to name a few, are all in need of one or the other of the facilities I have just mentioned. Ever since 1980 Liverpool has been seeking new and extensive harbour dredging to accommodate the larger ships being used by Mersey Seafoods Limited, Steel and Engine Products Ltd. and Bowater Mersey Paper Company Limited. To date their pleas have fallen on deaf ears.

The budget stated that the Government is committing $2.2 billion for Special Recovery Capital Projects. Due to the leak, that has been amended to $2.4 billion, so we cannot ever be quite certain of the figures given to us even here in the House. The Government is committing $2.4 billion for Special Recovery Capital Projects selected and designed to build, expand or improve public facilities which directly support private sector expansion and the steady improvement of our economic performance essential for recovery. In the words of the Minister, "There will be no red tape and no delays. All projects are being put on fast track to ensure that they start on time, progress as planned and are completed as quickly as possible". That is a commendable objective, but I say that it is high-sounding rhetoric. But we as Members of Parliament must accept the Minister's statement. We must accept his word and hope that he backs it up with performance.

Therefore, I wish to place on the record this afternoon only some of the many requests I have received from my constituency which definitely meet the criteria laid down by the Minister. For example, the citizens of Liverpool have requested the right to meet with the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) at their earliest convenience to present documentation outlining the great need for dredging in Liverpool Bay and harbour, together with repairs to and extension of the breakwater located at Brooklyn, Herring Cove, in Liverpool Bay.

The representatives of Bowater Mersey Paper Company, Steel and Engine Products Ltd. and Mersey Seafoods Ltd. have stated in their brief on April 21—and I might say that the brief has been presented to both Ministers—that dredging is required for the continued development of the town of Liverpool and to maintain the three major industries in the Port. These industries are important stabilizing influences in the economy of Queens County.

I will explain to the House how the lack of dredging, breakwaters and wharves is affecting the town, its industries and its people. Steel and Engine Products Ltd. have upgraded and enlarged its ship repair facilities to a degree where it is now capable of handling very large ships. However, such opportunities are denied them simply because when they successfully bid, masters of larger vessels, whether they be commercial vessels or the Government of Canada refuse to bring their ships into the Port of Liverpool due to restrictive silting in the harbour.

Mersey Seafoods Ltd. have ships today which can come to its wharves only at high tide, that is about three or four hours out of every 24, and then only if the weather is favourable and if the tide is high enough to enable them to get over the bar. Without ships landing in that Port, there is no shore employment or jobs for those of the area.

Bowater Mersey Paper must accept larger ships in order to expand in the export market. Because of the expansion in the American newsprint industry, Bowater is being forced to seek offshore markets, and to export they need even larger vessels which require a greater depth of water and an improved breakwater to protect them.

In all these three industries employment opportunities are now threatened due to Government inaction. The Government cannot say that it was not informed. There are lists upon lists in my office of submissions and presentations to the Government going back to 1980.

My home town of Lunenburg desperately needs repairs to the existing Government wharf, plus an extension, plus harbour dredging, if this Port is to continue to serve the large offshore fleet. At present half the existing wharf is unstable and requires lateral bracing. The restrictions on the use of this wharf cause an emergency situation as far as the repair and maintenance of the National Sea Products Nova Scotian fleet is concerned. It should be possible to design reinforcement bracing into the existing wharf, and if it were extended an additional 15 metres, then the entire structure would be more rigid and helpful to the fishing industry. In addition, the harbour master of that Port has drawn up a plan for a marginal wharf leading from Battery Point toward Rouse Brook, the place where the settlers first landed in 1753. This, if constructed, would enable some 15 or 20 large ships to tie up in the harbour. It would service the offshore development which is occurring in gas and oil off the coast of Nova Scotia.

Moving farther down the coast, we find that the Port of Shelburne could also use additional docking space and dredging, for it too is one of Canada's finest harbours which at present is underutilized because of the depth of water and Government inaction.

The mayor of Lockeport has also made a special plea to me on behalf of the town, pointing out that additional dredging is required immediately opposite the new National Sea Products plant in the town. Some of this is to be done, but when they made the assessment they forgot completely about the fish plant adjoining the one of National Sea Products which is owned by Pierce Fisheries Ltd. and where dredging is also required.

In conclusion, there are many other smaller harbours which need upgrading. I would be only too happy to supply the Government with details of make-work programs which will provide jobs immediately, will stabilize existing industries and improve the infrastructure of Nova Scotia. I mentioned these projects to show that it is unnecessary to lend money in the amount of $2.4 billion, as mentioned in the budget for the Export Financing Fund. We have many areas requiring attention and development right here in Canada. I have mentioned some. I hope the Government will give serious consideration to the proposals I have made and amend its spending priorities so that the projects carried out will in the end be of benefit to Canadians who must eventually pay their cost through increased taxes. Since billions of dollars are to be spent within the next year, I beg the Government to review and re-examine its spending priorities in the interest of building a better Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions. Answers. Comments. Debate.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the budget debate. Since the budget was delivered by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on April 19 in the House, it has been received and perceived as a boost for Canadian people. It has given them a lift and a buoyant feeling of hope because it is a "people budget". It is a budget for the people of Canada. It is positive, objective and appropriate for the times.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bockstael: The budget presents a balanced approach in that an equitable amount of money is being used to stimulate the economy and to create jobs within the range of a manageable deficit that we have to face.

Over the past few days in the House we have heard Members of the Opposition state, on the one hand, that we should not increase the deficit. On the other hand they state that we are not putting enough money in the budget to stimulate the economy. Those statements are contradictory. They cannot have it both ways. I suggest that the Minister of Finance has found a good balance between those two situations.

I realize that the population at large must be very happy to note that at this time the inflation rate is at its lowest point in three years. Similarly, interest rates, the cost of borrowing money for housing projects and everything we need, are at their lowest level in the last three years.

Some may say that there are many reasons for this situation. Among other factors the federal six and five program is working, is on target and is meeting the objective it was set up to meet. There is an observation made by Canadians that the public sector and people who draw from Government programs have been guaranteed an increase of 6 per cent this year and an increase of 5 per cent next year. That is more than we can say for the private sector. In the private sector professional people who are on their own or who work as representatives of manufacturing companies have often faced a freeze of their salaries. Some have had to take pay cuts. Other workers have had to submit to work-sharing programs. People who work four days a week and draw benefits under work-sharing programs can thank the Government for making it possible and for helping them get over the rough spots.

• (1630)

As soon as a budget is delivered, it is typical of an Opposition to criticize and try to shoot holes in it. I dare say that because the Opposition could not find much fault with the content of this budget, they have criticized the process. On Monday last, as reported at page 24835 of Hansard, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) said:

> While I am in favour of some of the budgetary measures, those that encourage people to work and get us out of this mess, some of its other measures are bad.

Again I say that the role of the Opposition is to criticize the budget. As a Member of the Government, I see a great deal of good in this budget. A federal budget is a natural phenomenon. Some people are indifferent to it. There are those who think it is good and those who say it is bad. That is because they operate from the perspective of looking at the budget and saying "What is in it for me? What will it do for me?"

This budget addresses the needs of seniors, working people, their families, youth, labour, small business, and is a stimulus for investment in this country. I would rather look at it in terms of what it will do for Canada.

A senior citizen in my constituency told me he was not happy with the budget. Although he is getting a 6 per cent increase, he objects to the two things he likes, liquor and smokes, being taxed. Those are petty arguments against a budget that will put this country on the road to recovery.

In delivering his budget, the Minister of Finance said that his primary objective is to develop a sustained economic recovery for Canada and his dominant concern is to get jobs for people who need work. Therefore, $710 million over two years is going to be put into the economy for direct job-creation.

We are all aware that technological advances are rendering certain jobs obsolete. An article in the Monday, April 25 edition of The Winnipeg Free Press states:

> Robots will radically change the role of labour in a factory—

It states that structural employment will make certain jobs disappear for good. We have to face this fact. When I was a young lad in St. Boniface, there were three blacksmith shops. They disappeared over a period of 20 years. In this day and age, we see jobs disappear within months because of new technology. You cannot create artificial jobs. Those who are or have been involved in seasonal work realize that when the season is past, there are just no jobs in that line. I have had 33 years' experience in construction. As a building contractor I know that it was difficult, but when a contract was completed and I was not successful in tendering for another job, I had to lay off my workers. I could not create work where there was none. It is demand that creates jobs. That is why this Government has taken a two-pronged approach. One is to stimulate projects that will make work immediately, and the other is to develop our human resources. I commend the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) for the forward look he has taken at the needs of the country. We have added $155 million to develop our human resources, bringing our input to $1.2 billion. We will provide training facilities and retraining programs for those whose type of work is no longer required. An important fact of life is shelter. It is one of man's basic needs. It is also a basic right. I am happy to report that housing will receive an additional $355 million. Starts on new homes are up and continuing to go up because under the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Program whereby new housing starts receive a $3,000 grant, we are injecting $30 million more that will, hopefully, extend the program to the latter part of May. If the funds run out before the end of May, that is the end of the subsidy. If the funds last, it will continue until May 31.

We have added $120 million to the Canadian Home Renovation Program which makes available $3,000 forgivable loans. The Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program calls for another $40 million. There are many other programs for native housing and other types of habitation that are being provided for. To stimulate the economy, the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan has been boosted so that this can be applied to new homes and also to buy new furnishings and appliances. This will encourage consumers to create demand which the manufacturers will be expected to meet.

I would like to emphasize construction. I have long been an advocate of capital projects that have enduring value and lasting benefit. In the United States in 1935 there was a works project administration, the WPA. On a visit to Los Angeles, I saw dry concrete spillways coming down from the mountains. I wondered what they were for. Those spillways were built in 1935 to take the rush of water down from the mountains when the snow at the cap was melting in order to prevent flooding in downtown Los Angeles. Almost 50 years later these spillways are still functioning and protecting the City of Los Angeles. It is that type of capital works project we endorse.

In post-war Europe there was naturally a great deal of reconstruction required. The huge six-lane auto routes, the EU-4 and EU-b, have a lasting benefit. They were built in the post-war years of 1946-1950 and later and have been serving the public for more than 30 years.

In my home Province of Manitoba, the City of Winnipeg was subjected to annual floods. The federal Government put millions of dollars into an $81 million project, building a floodway around the city so that the city would not be flooded. That is foresight. That flood prevention project will give long and lasting benefits. Therefore, I am in favour of the Special Recovery Capital Projects proposed in this budget.

There are transport facilities that are needed. We know through projections that they are going to be required. They are inevitable. If we can bring them onstream a little earlier to the benefit of the Canadian public, I am all for it.

I said earlier that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has called for research and training facilities. Last Friday it was announced in Winnipeg that by joint agreement with the Province of Manitoba a technical vocational school will be built in South Winnipeg at a cost of $5.7 million as part of an $8 million school being provided by the federal Government. I am in favour of many more small projects. The reason I mentioned smaller projects is that, rather than seeing something like Expo that goes on for three years and hires many people but concentrates in one locale, I would prefer to see several smaller projects that employ more engineers, more architects, more designers, more contractors and allow wider distribution of the investment of the Canadian Government in such smaller projects rather than in one single massive one.

There are other spin-offs and benefits that flow from this budget that are too numerous to mention. Under tax legislation, family child care expenses have been doubled and a family can deduct as much as $8,000 under that program. The Child Tax Credit Program has also been increased. There are other tax changes that apply to employment expense being increased to the benefit of people who earn less than $26,000 a year.

The Government's proposal in its April 19 budget will go a long way to instil confidence in our economy. This morning on television and on radio we saw and heard that officials of the Royal Bank of Canada and top investment consultants are saying that Canada is on its way to recovery, that we are on the right track and are doing what is necessary to bring that about as quickly as possible. This budget will instil confidence in investors, in business people, both large and small. It will restore consumer confidence and encourage Canadians to put some of their savings back into circulation in order to start the wheels of industry humming again. We are on the road to recovery and we are on the right track. It is thanks to the Minister of Finance and the Liberal Government that we are now able to see the light at the end of the tunnel.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to make certain comments about the Conservative budget that the Liberals have put forward. I will not deal with every item in the budget. The Liberals and Members of the Government have already covered sufficiently some of the smaller items that they hope will distract our attention. They have pointed out some of the very small concessions made to the public and to the ordinary working people. I will not discuss the fact that the Liberals have apparently undertaken to buy, with our money, another term of office by proposing a budget that can only take effect after the latest possible date of the next election.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize that this budget is not a recovery budget, as it has been called, let alone a job creation budget, as has been suggested. It is a budget that will undertake to spend in the next four years $4.8 billion for recovery but will take in at least $6 billion of extra taxation to cover that. At the same time, it makes no serious effort to restore Canada to full employment.

The budget does not seriously consider what is the problem that causes our present record unemployment levels. Unemployment levels are at a record high for anybody who is less than 43 years old. The problem, I suggest, is that unemployment afflicts Canada regularly, first, because of the tendency for our present type of economy to boom and bust. It has a regular pattern of boom and bust. Second, unemployment afflicts Canada now especially because of a new development which Members of the Government from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) down have declared publicly as a new fact, namely, a permanent base of unemployment.

I can remember coming out of the army at the end of the war and our being told that we would have full employment, and because, of course, there is always a turnover of jobs and a turnover of workers, we would have a new system called Unemployment Insurance which would provide a transitional income for workers moving between jobs. It was a great idea, and it worked for several years. We are told now that that system is out of date, that system which set the unemployment rate at a maximum of 3 per cent of the work force, and that moving from job to job has now been scrapped by this Government. We are told that at least 7 or 8 per cent, and probably 10 per cent, is to be the basic level of unemployment. These are not workers moving from job to job; these are unemployed workers going nowhere. That is the the minimum that the Government has offered us.

Part of the reason for this problem is that, by the Government's taxation policies, the buying power of the great majority of Canadians has been permanently reduced below the level that is necessary to produce a healthy economy. One way the Government has reduced the buying power of Canadians is to switch priorities between the revenues from corporate income tax and personal income tax. In 1950, personal income tax provided 50.7 per cent of the Government's revenue and corporate tax provided 49.2 per cent. These figures simply treat corporate and personal tax in proportion because, though they are not the only sources of income tax, they are the main sources. Of this total, personal income tax was 50.7 per cent, corporate income tax was 49.2 per cent.

In 1960, ten years later, personal income tax had gone up to 58.6 per cent and corporate income tax had gone down to 41.3 per cent. Ten years later, in 1970, personal income tax was 71.3 per cent, and corporate income tax was down to 28.6 per cent. In 1980, personal income tax accounted for over three-quarters of the total, or 76.6 per cent; corporate income tax accounted for only 23.3 per cent of the Government's revenue. In other words, the working people of Canada, not to mention farmers and pensioners and the rest, are not being allowed a disposable income large enough to maintain the buying power that is necessary for a healthy economy. Instead, through the tax system a larger and larger share is being diverted by default to the banks and the other groups who clearly have shown a pattern of not spending that money in Canada. The banks now boast that 40 per cent of their investments are made overseas, some of them in countries where they clearly will not be seen again. This is the first way the Government has injured the economy. The present budget, as I will point out later, continues that pattern.

Second, the manufacturing industries of Canada, with one exception, have been harassed. They have been burdened and injured by comparison with the mining industry, the finance industry and the oil industry, even though the manufacturing industries still have one and three-quarter million employees, whereas the mining and oil industries together have only 151,000 employees and the finance industry has only 562,000 employees. In spite of the fact that manufacturing supports a far larger section of the economy, it must pay an extortionate rate of taxation.

Over the ten years from 1969 to 1978, the mining industry paid a 19.8 per cent taxation rate, finance paid a 23.7 per cent taxation rate, oil and gas paid a 23.4 per cent taxation rate, but textiles, knitting and clothing paid a 41 per cent taxation rate. In fact, the whole manufacturing industry except for petroleum and coal products paid a 34.8 per cent taxation rate. The average rate for all industries was 38.3 per cent. So mining, finance and oil, the richest industries in this country, are being compulsorily subsidized through the Government's taxation system by the workers in manufacturing and, most particularly, by the workers in the chief manufacturing industry in the riding I represent, namely the clothing and textile industries. No wonder Canadian workers are accused by housing sales people and others of buyer resistance. Buyer resistance means empty pockets. It is the Government that has emptied the pockets of the buyers and continues to do so in the budget.

There is another policy, a matter of background, which the Government continues in the budget. The Government has been knowingly encouraging an increased importation of clothing and textiles and other manufactured goods from low wage countries. In this budget the Minister explicitly referred to a further extension of that policy of reducing the restrictions against importation from low wage countries. This is in spite of the fact that the industry most affected by that policy at the present time has already lost 50,000 jobs out of 200,000 in the last two years. A quarter of the jobs have disappeared largely because of the action of encouraging imports from countries which pay 50 cents or $1 wages. This is done in spite of the fact that the industry, contrary to the Government's statement and the statement of the former President of the Treasury Board, spent $2 billion during the 1970s in modernizing, and is still modernizing at a higher rate than most other secondary manufacturing industries. Whereas the cost of living rose by 167.5 points from 1971 to 1982, clothing only went up by 104.9 points, about two-thirds of the rate of increase. Imported clothing went up by 214 points, which is a far greater rate of interest. Therefore, the clothing industry has in fact been anti-inflationary by helping to keep down the price Canadians pay for clothing. Yet the Government insists on destroying the clothing industry by its import policy.

• (1650)

The textile industry has shown a higher rate of value added per worker than the average of the Canadian manufacturing industry, and a rate as high as the American clothing and textile industry. The textile and clothing industry in Canada receives little help from the Government in modernizing. Although it has employed about 11 per cent of the workers in manufacturing, it receives only 3 per cent of the aid. My point, Mr. Speaker, is that this Government has, in these several ways, undermined and weakened the clothing and garment industry, not to mention some other Canadian manufacturing industries, and has then had the bad grace to taunt it with being weak.

Government first of all wounds it, injures it, then taunts it with being weak, putting out false propaganda about inefficient workers and management which does not modernize, and using that as an excuse for killing off the industry entirely in favour of imports from countries which pay very low wages, including police state countries. This is no way, Mr. Speaker, to build a high morale for recovery. Whether or not this Government feels this policy is good for Canadian investors, I can tell you, Sir, that this Government is producing great anger among hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers because it is damaging their chances of earning a living and then insulting them with accusations of inefficiency.

The Government is continuing a pattern of damaging this economy by its support of the mushrooming of interest payments. Interest payments, Mr. Speaker, as a percentage of the gross domestic product, have almost trebled in 15 years. In 1966, 6.3 per cent of the growth of the domestic product went to interest payments. By 1981 it was 15.2 per cent. That is a growth of 140 per cent in 15 years. By comparison, wages only grew 14 per cent, one-tenth of the rate of the banker's take, from 48.21 per cent in 1966 to 54.99 per cent in 1981. Yet we have had the Ministers of Finance and other Ministers of the Government stand in their places and accuse the Canadian workers of being inefficient, lazy and greedy, of taking too much money for their work, and wages and salaries being the cause of inflation. That, Mr. Speaker, is patently false and anyone who can read the Government's own figures on taxation—as I suppose the Minister can—knows that that accusation is false. It is the cancerous growth of revenues to the banks and the lending companies which has damaged our economy. Yet the Government continues in this budget to direct more money to that same place. The result of this kind of activity by the Government is that the working people of Canada chronically lack the power to buy what the employers and investors of Canada need to sell in order to stay in business.

One old pensioner said to me recently, very simply, "Mr. Heap, I'm not complaining that my pension cheque is too small. I understand that Mr. Lalonde hasn't got very much cash to give out. But I only want to say there is too much month at the end of the cash." That tells the story in one line, Mr. Speaker. There simply is not the amount of money necessary in the hands of ordinary people of Canada to keep this economy in a healthy state. Therefore, we shut down factories. Therefore, we have heavy unemployment, reminding us of the 1930s. Yes, there may be a recovery. The newspapers tell us there has been a little recovery in the last two or three months, a recovery at a higher rate of profit and at a lower rate of real wages. That is what it is all about, and that is what this Government has procured. It is also a higher rate of recovery with the now 8 per cent to 10 per cent permanent unemployment, as the Government announced this week and last week. This is, Mr. Speaker, really a conservative budget. In the increase of personal income tax, in its share over four years, we now have a budget which says there will be $3.5 billion more in personal income tax taken over the next four years, $2.5 billion taken from the same people in sales tax and $2.5 billion given back to the corporations by way of a cut in their corporate income tax. This will mean, because of this budget, less disposable income, more buyer resistance.

With respect to its treatment of the manufacturing industries, what we have is a gift of nearly $1 billion to the richest industry in the country, the oil industry, probably half of it to Dome Petroleum. In fact, the whole $2.5 billion increase in the deficit goes to profits, so that the rich corporations will become richer and the domestic market will fail to grow. As to the share of interest payments, the Government is increasing its deficit by over $2 billion, which might be all right and I might be willing to support it if it were being used productively, but it is not. The whole of that increase goes to the tax give-away programs. It goes to private capital. And there is absolutely no assurance that it will be invested in Canada. There is no assurance that it will be invested so as to create jobs in Canada. And there is no assurance that it will do anything to create buying power among the people of Canada.

As an example of this wasteful piling in of investment, which is supposed to create jobs and does not, MacMillan-Bloedel bought the factory where I used to work and, as a result, 100 people have lost their jobs. They did that with borrowed money that upped the interest rates for everyone else and created no new jobs whatsoever. More recently, John Inglis, with $4 million from the federal and the Ontario Governments took over Admiral and is now killing 250 jobs. Thanks very much for the $4 million, but 250 jobs will be wiped out as a result. We now hear that Massey-Ferguson may finally close down its Toronto operation after receiving tremendous handouts from this Government and the Ontario Government. To say that these gifts to capital produce jobs flies in the face of all our experience over the last ten years. Yet the Government will continue to borrow. We have just been told today there will be another borrowing Bill and yet we have just passed one. We have no time to discuss the Cruise missile or property rights; we have to get another borrowing Bill passed. By that means the Government will increase its inflationary share of interest payments without increasing jobs or the incomes of ordinary people.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that this is a very conservative budget in the sense that the Liberals and Conservatives have teamed up, as usual, to increase the revenue of investors without any assurance that those investors will use that money to create any more jobs for Canada. We have a lot of what one Conservative Member called smoke and mirrors. We have it in Spadina, for example, where there are almost no assurances that any of the NEED projects, some of them entered four months ago, will be approved and funded. The Minister says there are 1,200 jobs approved for Spadina, but he is talking about the whole of Ontario because the Government of Ontario happens to be in Spadina. I am proud of that, but that does not mean it makes jobs in Spadina. So we have these misleading statements by which the Government pretends to create 300,000 jobs when in fact there will probably be no more than 50,000 jobs created under this Government's programs. Furthermore, the Government will continue to pay out $1 billion every month in Unemployment Insurance to people to do nothing.

The effect of this budget, Mr. Speaker, will be to increase profits, reduce real wages after this recession as part of the recovery, and ensure that the recession will return soon and much stronger.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to follow up on what appears to be the Hon. Member's favourite topic, which is quotas and protectionism for the textile industry. It is interesting that he is promoting this in what he calls low wage countries. He is attacking people who come from what he calls low wage countries. He should repeat that charge in the presence of his current seatmate who is always arguing the other way.

However, I would like to ask him specifically what he considers an appropriate level of quotas in the textile industry. How would he reach that conclusion?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, first I want to disabuse anyone listening of the mistaken understanding that might be gained if they took the Hon. Member seriously. I have in no way attacked the people from low wage countries. I do publicly oppose police state governments in certain countries which the Hon. Member's Government is not willing to oppose. It is those governments which help to keep wages down. The Hon. Member's Government has not yet shown the courage and honesty to come out publicly and oppose such injustice. I am on the side of those low wage earners, but the Hon. Member has not yet shown that he is.

My point, and I am very glad to have a chance to explain it to the Hon. Member, is that Canadian workers and Canadian industry should be able to produce primarily for the Canadian workers, which is also the desire of the Philippino workers in the Philippines. This has been expressed to me by a leader of the Philippine labour movement with whom I talked a few days ago. He agrees with the policy I am advocating.

The Hon. Member wants a figure; I would suggest that imports should be reduced in a broad, global sense to 20 per cent of the Canadian market. Of course, we will buy and sell, but we do not need to live exclusively for export, have the Philippinos living exclusively for export and everyone else living exclusively for export and nobody able buying because there are no jobs.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the discussion about police states and textiles and general export theory. I appreciated hearing, finally, that what the Hon. Member wants to do is to reduce imports to 20 per cent of the Canadian market. I doubt that people in my riding would agree with him on that. He also said that tax incentives will not create jobs in Canada. I wonder if he could tell us, for example, what he thinks the RHOSP incentives will do for the housing and construction industry if they do not create jobs in Canada? Whose jobs will they create?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I agree that there are a few small items in the budget. I said at the beginning that I am not going to go over all the small items the Government is undertaking to use to garnish and disguise this conservative budget. The RHOSP provision is one of them. Yes, the houses will be built, but it is a poor way to use the Government's money. There would be a far better result if the Government would reverse its policy toward social and non-profit housing because that gives a far better result in the long run for the subsidies put into it. Housing for profit often results in very high prices to the consumer, and the Government subsidy often does the consumer no good at all. Therefore, the subsidy is not producing any general effect in the economy. It is simply making a few individuals rich. I have seen this many, may times over the last ten years in the City of Toronto, and if the Hon. Member had used his eyes around the City of Toronto he would have seen it too.

Mr. Axworthy: I would like to pose a few questions to the Hon. Member to see if he is able to correct some of the lapses in memory or information contained in his speech. He seems to make some great effort to develop the argument that the federal Government is in no way helping the textile or clothing industries. I wonder if he is aware of a program called the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board which has a budget of something like $250 million and has now provided well over $100 million in grants to a variety of textile firms to help them obtain new machinery, equipment and technology? Does he know that accompanying that Program, my own Department has been delivering retraining and upgrading programs for tens of thousands of textile workers which will allow them to develop the skills necessary to respond to the new technological age? It seems he has conveniently forgotten those facts.

In the course of his speech the Hon. Member also said that Inglis had taken over Admiral Corporation with a loss of 200 jobs. I wonder if he would like to correct that statement and recognize that the Admiral Corporation closed down, but as a result of provisions of the ILAP Program, Inglis was able to reinstitute that company and open up those factories. Is he saying they would have preferred the federal Government not provide help to a company in order to rescue close to 600 or 700 jobs for people who had previously worked for Admiral? Is he saying that that is the position of the NDP, that they would rather stand on their ideological rigidities as opposed to having people go back to work?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Minister for those two questions. On the matter of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, it is true that I have been told in statements by the Minister that $100 million has been spent. We have no accounting of that. There are no textile and clothing industrialists on the Board, not one; only money lenders and one trade unionist who got on there with the assistance of pressure from the Canadian Labour Congress. So it is not a Board likely to act in the interests of the industry. Members of the industry, employers I have talked to in Toronto, say they have never heard of any of this grant money, although they could use it.

• (1710)

As to the training, the Government was about to abolish four technical training courses at George Brown College last fall until members of the industry and the labour movement and the local Member of Parliament, myself, intervened, and a curious letter was sent saying, "You misunderstood. The word, 'terminate', does not mean it is ended. It just means that it is under review". Therefore, the Government is not speaking straight when it speaks of its training program. It is trying to phase out the clothing industry in the places where it exists, that is, in Ontario and in Quebec.

As to the John Inglis Program, as the Minister well knows, what I am referring to is the fact that whereas John Inglis claimed it would create 130 jobs if the Government provided funding in the takeover, it will now discontinue 250 jobs as part of the phasing of its takeover. That was recently announced. As well, questions were asked of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) in the House about a month ago as to whether the Government would require John Inglis to keep its promise in return for the money, $3 million from here and $1 million from Queen's Park, and we have not yet had a serious answer from the Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is time for one brief question.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask one question of the Hon. Member, again partly to demonstrate that I do not think the House can necessarily take his statement at full face value, because I realize that he made some statements to the Toronto press about the NEED Program a few days ago, saying that nothing had been funded in his riding when, in fact, 74 projects, at a total cost of over $7 million and providing 1,200 jobs, had already been approved for his area.

Mr. Heap: That's false.

Mr. Axworthy: As a result, I think that the Hon. Member's ability to understand what is going on in his constituency is reasonably suspect. However, I would ask him a question in this area—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. If the Hon. Member is to be given time to respond, it should be now, because the Hon. Member—

Mr. Axworthy: I am just raising a further question about the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I am sorry, but I think that we should allow the Hon. Member to contribute a brief reply.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, what the Minister knows but is not telling is that a great many of the programs which he attributes to Spadina are programs under the city of Toronto, Metro Toronto, the provincial Government and the City School Board. In other words, he calls jobs in Kenora or Timmins jobs in Spadina.

Some Hon. Members: Wrong.

Mr. Heap: So much for the misleading statements of the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Fisher: Do you know where your own riding is?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. For debate, I recognize the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

Mr. Darling: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fisher: I rise on a point of order. Would it not be in order for the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) to be recognized at this stage? It seems to me that she was on her feet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. As Hon. Members know, the Chair is given considerable discretion in recognizing Hon. Members. Hon. Members, of course, must stand. I was seated in the Chair about half an hour ago and I was informed at that time that the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka should be the Hon. Member to speak following the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). In any case, there will be time for the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier to be recognized.

Mr. De Bané: I rise on a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I readily recognize that I cannot say it is a question of privilege that the Hon. Member for Spadina does not know what is going on in his own riding. But surely it is a point of privilege to say that when he alleges that an Hon. Member from this side misled the House, and that is the word he used, Your Honour should ask him to withdraw that word, even if the other one, that he does not know what is going on in his own riding, is asked seriously, but—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I appreciate the Minister's comments, but the word "mislead" is currently used. As long as the qualification "deliberately" is not attached, to the word "mislead" it is quite acceptable in parliamentary practice.

Mr. Fisher: I rise on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I recognize that you are working from a list. I wonder if it would be possible to supplement the list with the observation that we have heard an Hon. Member from the Opposition speaking, and now I believe it would be normal for an Hon. Member from the Government to speak, given the normal rotation of speakers, despite whatever some list may say.

Mr. Beatty: I wish to rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I wish to respond briefly to the comment just made by the Parliamentary Secretary and, of course, time is flying by.

Mr. Taylor: It's a waste of time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair does not work from lists. I should make that very clear. Speakers do jot names down as a general guide, but we do not operate on the basis of lists. Parties supply to the Chair a list of Hon. Members who wish to speak so that a Speaker may be aware of the names of Hon. Members put forward by each Party when their turn comes for debate. However, strictly speaking, there is no list. In any case, I am guided by the wisdom of the previous occupant of the Chair. I was advised to recognize next the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

I am prepared, if there is agreement in the House, to recognize another Hon. Member, short of making a formal motion, which I think would be quite legitimate but disruptive.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I think it is regrettable that this matter is being raised when there is a very limited period of time before a vote takes place.

Mr. Fisher: That's exactly the point.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, you gave the floor to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. He legitimately has the floor. The Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) has no right to attempt to take it from him.

Mr. Roberts: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I do not want to draw this matter out very long either. However, is it not the normal practice at this stage of debate to alternate between the Opposition and the Government side? It does seem to me to be the procedure which is generally followed. The Hon. Member on this side was on her feet and ready to speak, and it seems to me that Your Honour is in the unfortunate position of having come into the Chair in the last few minutes and are therefore perhaps not really quite sure of what had happened before. Should we not really follow our normal practice of alternating Hon. Members from one side to the other?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I think we want to be fair. We heard a Liberal speak, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), then we heard a P.C., then a Liberal, then a New Democrat.

Mr. Fisher: Now we are back over here. That's normal.

Mr. Taylor: Quite often the movement has been this way, and we have let that go on several times. I do not think the Liberals should be wasting our time now simply because the Speaker did come our way this time. The other time it was the Government's way.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, on the same point raised by my good friend, the Hon. Member for Bow River, I would point out that if, at any time, the Speaker has moved from the NDP to the Conservative Party and back, it is because the Government has not seen fit to have one of its Members speak in between. However, we are entitled to our opportunity to speak. I know that the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier has put a good deal of work into preparation of her speech for this time.

Mr. Taylor: So has our man. He has been sitting here all afternoon. Your Member hasn't.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. If there was any unfortunate and, I assure Hon. Members, unintentional mix-up in the order of speakers, the Chair will assume full responsibility. However, I would like to quote from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, Page 111, wherein Citation 121 states:

> There should not be a list of Speakers with an order of precedence in the House of Commons. Any Member who wishes to speak may rise and endeavour to catch the Speaker's eye.

The eye of the Speaker was caught by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I apologize to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier, but we would have had time for the Hon. Member to contribute to the debate. In any case, having recognized the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, I must invite him to pursue his remarks.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, after wasting some ten minutes or more which I believe could have been used by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette), I am delighted to have the opportunity to say a few words on the budget. As has been pointed out, there are another two days in which to debate, and I am sure the Hon. Member will have an opportunity to stand and speak in the House.

• (1720)

First, let me cite some of the positive measures in this budget before I get to some that might not be quite as flattering and perhaps a little more negative. From the vantage point of hindsight, some measure of congratulations are due to the Minister for producing what is unquestionably the best budget since the restoration of "Pierre the Last". I was going to name it, after Allan Fotheringham, "The Liberal Reincarnation", but in the interest of accuracy it might be more perceptive to speak of it as their joining the ranks of the undead.

However, to say that this budget was an improvement over the efforts of the Minister's predecessor is in the same order as saying that public health statistics were showing a remarkably positive trend the summer after the Black Death. I have no doubt that that is exactly how a Liberal Government would have described it.

The budget has already been described as a "buy now, pay later" budget. Its ultimate epitaph will probably be "it could have been worse".

For the moment let us put aside the fact that the entire thrust of the document is to further postpone payment to the piper until another Government is in place to take the heat. It is a matter of a "Government on credit", and we will look at its attendant effects later. I am certain that is true because we are all aware of the polls that came out today that showed the Progressive Conservatives in the lead with 52 per cent and the Liberal Government with 27 per cent. It is evident that they will be coming over to this side of the House at the next election.

Those of us who have been around here for any length of time recognize that there are two levels of perception at which a budget may be appraised. The first is the superficial impression created by the budget speech and the first cursory reading of the accompanying document. Generally this budget was favourably received except, of course, by the overt socialists to my left, as opposed to the crypto-socialists across the aisle who will not be happy until everyone is dependent on Government handouts, paid for exclusively by corporate taxation.

The second level of perception is the product of a slower, deeper and more careful appraisal. It is here that the subsurface flaws of the program show up.

The first thing that should be observed is that the whole operation was based, while perhaps not exactly on fraud, certainly on the old smoke and mirrors trick which has already been mentioned in the House. The budget was billed as a triumph of consultation. We were assured, prior to its presentation, that the Minister had communed with all sectors of the economy, had listened to their concerns and recommendations and had made use of their particular expertise in its preparation.

While I obviously have not had the time to examine every submission made to the Minister, I selected that of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce as probably being one of the ones of greatest value to the Minister, given the declared aims of his budget.

The first recommendation made by the Chamber was that the Minister institute a $2 billion retail sales tax cut. The result was that he increased it by one per cent. The Chamber recommended that initiatives directed at the direct stimulation of the economy be limited in scope and have an explicit termination date. The Minister gave us his Special Recovery Capital Projects totalling $2.2 billion, with a termination date some four years down the road. That is not an explicit termination date. In the present economic climate, that is open-ended never-never land.

The Chamber recommended that individuals be allowed to withdraw funds from RHOSPs to buy home furnishings, and this bit of counsel the Minister did accept. We can give him full marks for that. In this regard I might say that when they heard the budget speech, those merchants and people considering buying white goods, such as stoves, fridges and deep freezers, were elated over being allowed to purchase them tax free. But of course when this measure was studied further, it was seen that only those people with money in RHOSPs would be eligible. Certainly the glamour of the benefits of that proposal was dispelled very quickly. It was similar to having the Minister say that he will allow a certain sector of the economy to buy fridges and stoves tax free for a certain period of time—I believe October 1, 1984—but qualifying it by saying that he will only make it available to people who are 25 or 26 years of age with blue eyes. One can see what little impact that will have on that particular industry.

The Chamber urged that job creation initiatives be funded by reallocating funds from other less urgent programs, just as businesses must forgo attractive investment opportunities when funds are insufficient to finance them, or as individuals must give up consumer purchases. When wants exceed the family budget, so too the Government must give up some otherwise good programs when the country cannot afford them.

Surely this is the most sage and germane advice that could have been given. Furthermore, it is advice the truth of which must be evident to every housewife in the nation.

The Minister is the man who spent money like water when he was Minister of Health, and who singlehandedly destroyed the resource industry in western Canada when he was Minister of Energy but who is now widely known as the pro business Minister and the Minister who listens. What did our Minister do? He went on a $4.8 billion spending spree, which is eventually to be paid for largely by the taxpayers of 1984 to 1987 on a sort of "fly now, pay later" plan.

How responsible of him! How encouraging for the confidence of those upon whose confidence our ultimate recovery must be built! I sincerely hope that it is not he who manages the finances of his family, or we are about to see one more indigent dependent upon those anonymous sources who take care of down-and-out Liberals. Anyway, the score so far is one up, three down for the "Minister of Consultation".

The Chamber went on to say:

> Only serious efforts to reduce the rate of growth in Government spending will convince business and consumers that the Government is serious in its commitment to non inflationary growth, and only an improvement in confidence will lead to the spending and investment necessary to generate a recovery.

That is quite a comprehensive description of what the budget is not.

Far from a serious effort to reduce the rate of growth of Government spending, we see a Main Estimates to Main Estimates jump of 18 per cent, a projected deficit that would have financed all the Government operations only nine years ago. What must surely rank as the most classic case of fiscal insouciance since Marie Antoinette said "Let them eat cake", is the plucking of a non-existent $200 million out of thin air purely to salve the Minister's own ego after his celebrated photo opportunity. I am sure all Members would agree that this $200 million was the most expensive allotment of funds for saving one job. Perhaps, for the duration of this Government, we should amend our Commonwealth anthem from "God Save the Queen" to "God save us all".

The Chamber next pointed out that corporations, when they are confronted by a liquidity crisis, are forced to dispose of assets in order to bring things into balance. It pointed to the number of Crown corporations that languish as dependants on the public purse that might move into a profit position if they were to be sold to the private sector. Needless to say, the Minister did nothing to disturb the status quo with that particular set of Liberal NDP sacred cows.

The Chamber then refers to the preamble of their submission which states:

> It is absolutely essential that our longer term problems not be overlooked in any effort to improve the near-term outlook.

It goes on to ask for measures to help business produce and provide jobs in the long term.

We all know what the Minister's reaction was to that. For the first time in history, we see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) throwing around short-term freebees and commiting the country's tottering economy to pay for them over the ensuing four years.

• (1730)

And finally, the Chamber listed a handful of activities that it said the Government should not undertake, such as the raising of personal taxes and the further deindexing of personal income taxes. The Minister's response was, as we all know, to do just the opposite in both cases.

That is quite a record for a Minister who made such a show of consulting with and listening to those in the private sector who, from first-hand experience, have demonstrated that they know what they are talking about. Or is it really, as so many of us have long suspected, that it has actually become part of the Liberal dogma that nobody knows more about anything than a Minister in a Liberal Government?

I would point out to the Minister that the word "consult" means more than merely allowing people to talk in his presence. It also implies a certain taking into consideration and a seeking of advice that has clearly not been among his activities since assuming the portfolio of finance, any more than it was before then.

What then would it have been reasonable to expect to find in this budget if it had been aimed at achieving an improvement in the lot of Canadians? First, while recognizing that our future prospects depend directly on our ability to contain inflation, the situation at the moment demands that he take some meaingful measures to attack the level of unemployment. And by "meaningful measures" I do not mean declaring it to be his "dominant concern" in the opening line of his speech and then dismissing it from further consideration for the rest of the exercise, which I believe took one hour and forty minutes.

The fact is that by the budget's own projections, some 262,000 fewer Canadians will be working at the end of what he presents as the first year of the recovery than were working in the fourth quarter of 1981. The fact is he calculates that it will be 1986 before unemployment drops to the level that seemed so terrible in 1982. The fact is that the sum total of jobs provided under his direct employment creation programs come to no more than 81,600; 17,000 of which are only summer jobs, and 36,000 of which under the NEED Program are so brief as to boil down to a total of only 2,000 person years all told. We are back to the smoke and mirrors deal again.

The flagship program, the "Special Recovery Capital Projects", is proudly announced as consisting of $2.2 billion in funded projects. Unfortunately, it appears on deeper inspection that only $1.5 billion of that represents new spending, and no more than $460 million of that is to be spent this fiscal year. On top of that, when we take a look at the administrative procedures involved, projects will be under way within six months of approval by some Cabinet committee that has not even been set up yet. It is pretty obvious that it will be next Spring at the earliest before there is any serious impact from this source. From over here it sounds more as though the program were directed to benefit the Liberal Party rather than the unemployed. Six hundred and twenty one thousand young people were unemployed in March. The rate of unemployment in this critical segment of the population stands at 21.3 per cent.

So let us look at the Minister's special youth initiatives. Once again it is smoke and mirrors. There will be, he tells us, an extra $70 million for summer student employment programs over last year. What he does not say is that last year funding for this program dropped from $120 million to $100 million. So his celebrated $170 million program represents an increase of only $50 million over two years. Not quite six and five, but in no way the magnificent gesture it is pretended to be. I must say that at first glance the youth internship program appears to have merit, and I extend my congratulations to the Minister on it. But at the same time, I must say that his job corps leaves me somewhat confused.

Page 17 of his budget papers tells me that this program will provide "temporary employment opportunities, personal and career assessment, counselling, training and other support services." With all due respect, it seems to me that, given a choice between "personal and career assessment, counselling" and getting a job, I think quite a few of our young Canadians would opt for the job. Or perhaps I have it all wrong and those "temporary employment opportunities" are as "personal and career assessors", or as counsellors. Now there is an idea, the sociological equivalent of perpetual motion. Little by little, all the youngsters will be hired as counsellors and assessors to counsel and assess those whose turn it is to be unemployed from their jobs as counsellors and assessors. The perfect solution!

This brings us to the Department of National Defence which is to be given $75 million over the next two years to enroll 5,000 young Canadians in the reserves. I give the Government full marks for this, and in particular the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne). But what happens to them then? Suppose they want to stay in the military and pursue a military career, as I am quite sure many would if they find it to their liking. Are they simply told "No, your time is up, you have to go now."? If so, it will make a mockery of our once-proud military and all that it once was. But if not, does that mean that entry to the forces will be limited to those who have come through the Government's make-work program? Somebody over there had better be thinking about this sort of thing right now.

Now I want to move on to the most important issue bar none in the entire budgetary question. What should have been done to stimulate recovery? It is certainly the most important issue for the country at large, and I assume that next to the prosperity of the Government and the Liberal Party it is important to those opposite as well.

Most experts, I think, are of the opinion that any recovery is likely to be consumer led. I have argued for months now that the best way of triggering a widespread recovery is by encouraging the small-business sector, thus spreading both the likelihood of strengthening employment and of increasing consumer demand over the widest possible base. Here, surely, there was room for Government initiative because there is not likely to be much increase in private investment until consumption starts to increse. So what did the Government do?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Questions. Comments. Debate.

The Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier).

Mr. Ray Chénier (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Cabinet for the very human budget they submitted to Parliament this time around. This is the type of budget which is a job-creation budget. It is job-creation at two levels, in direct job-creation and in permanent job creation for Canada.

If you look at my riding, I have one major centre, that of Timmins. Timmins is very prosperous, it is probably one of the most prosperous cities in Canada. But also I have many small communities, towns and hamlets, hamlets without an economic base at all. If I look at this budget and at the $280 million we have added to the NEED Program, I can see places like Biscotasing that will be able to get its dock built. If I look at Chapleau, it will have the benefit of some public works. If I look at Iroquois Falls, in the same way it will have some work done. If I look at small-business people in my community who have suffered in the last while, I see them reviving various projects. I am sure they will do more of the same when the NEED Program takes over in a month or so.

As I said, Timmins is a prosperous city. Its airport very badly needs a general aviation area. I hope through the fast tracking of the Special Recovery Program we will see fit to put in approximately $1.5 million to develop that general aviation area, to provide maintenance hangars and warehousing in that area of our city.

Timmins is primarily a mining community. A number of companies have been taking part in gold explorations in the area. These small companies are ready not only to continue exploration but to go into production. The Liberal Cabinet has seen fit to help them and bring them onstream. Through tax incentives the cost of exploration for these junior companies can be spread over all their revenues, instead of exploration costs being recoverable only from their mining revenues. Under the investment credits given to Canadian investors in Canadian companies, we will see the money so badly needed by these junior companies being invested in them. Then there will be additional gold mines or other basic mineral mines developed in the Timmins area. Those are the investments which will create permanent jobs in my City and in my riding.

Mr. Nickerson: Put it in your householder.

Mr. Chénier: That is what I did. The people of Canada must be made aware that the Government at this time decided to put the Canadian economy back on track. This is what the Conservatives have never been able to do. Every time they assume power they put Canada into a depression. They came to power in 1979, and things have gone wrong ever since then.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chénier: Finally we have been able to bring Canada back on track. Many small businesses have encountered serious losses during the past recession. The budget indicated that these losses are recoverable. By going backwards for three years and forward for seven, we see light at the end of the tunnel. These small businesses will now show a profit. They will be paying taxes again. Because of this very humane measure these companies will not have to close. They will continue their operations and keep their employees. In some cases they may even be able to expand.

In the City of Timmins we need housing. We are so short of housing that people are living in various kinds of accommodations. When I look at the additional $30 million in $3,000 grants, I see 20 to 50 houses being built in the next month which people will be able to purchase so that they can live in decent accommodations. Over the last year the Home Renovation Program and RRAP have been so popular in Chapleau that there is a list of hundreds of people awaiting moneys to do renovations to their homes in rural and depressed areas. We had not been able to give it to them, but now RRAP will be getting $40 million, and the Home Renovation Program will be getting $100 million and the people of Chapleau will receive additional moneys to repair their homes. This will put people back to work. This is what the budget is all about. When I look at the home ownership program—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being 5:45 p.m., pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 64(7), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment.

[English]

The question, therefore, is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Miss Carney), which was negatived on the following division:

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REQUEST THAT PETRO-CANADA SIGNS IN QUEBEC BE REVISED

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, in the past few weeks, I have received a steady stream of complaints from my constituents regarding Petro-Canada and the fact that its signs in Quebec are in French only, unfortunately. My constituents are indignant about the fact that this is a Crown corporation, which is supposed to deal with all Canadians, whether they are Francophones or Anglophones. It is understandable, to a certain extent, that the people who rent the signs never stopped to think about this aspect, because of Bill 101, but it is hard to accept from Petro-Canada, which seems to be ignoring a potentially large number of anglophone customers. I agreed that the Government should urge Canadians to fill up at Petro-Canada service stations, but the Corporation could at least meet their language requirements. I therefore hope, Madam Speaker, that this unfortunate situation will be corrected.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—LITIGATION SEEKING RETURN OF EXPROPRIATED LANDS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, admittedly the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) is charming, but his continual attitude of je ne sais quoi on matters relating to the expropriated lands at Mirabel antagonizes the people of the Province of Quebec. Yesterday the Minister made an obviously defensive statement implying that my concern with Mirabel is misplaced, based, as he said, on a very narrow and very limited spectrum.

The membership of this so-called very narrow and very limited spectrum is a group of more than 500 expropriatees who are endorsed by the Liberal Opposition and the Government of the Province of Quebec. This group is issuing a writ and will confront the federal Government in Federal Court to obtain the retrocession of 50,000 surplus acres of land.

The people of Mirabel are totally exasperated with a Government which has supplied Public Works Ministers who are incapable of answering any legitimate questions. The decision to take the federal Government to court has grown out of 14 years of frustration with the Government. My vision, which is neither narrow nor limited, is supported by the majority of the people of "la belle Province".

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFITS SOUGHT FOR ADOPTIVE PARENTS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, it is well known that our unemployment insurance legislation has a number of inequities involving maternity benefits, including the magic ten rule, Section 46, and provisions dealing with adoptive parents. Not only the New Democratic Party but also women's groups, a Government task force, and the Canadian Human Rights Commission have been calling for changes in this area.

Last night the Minister offered to legislate in this matter with a one-day debate. If the Minister was serious, rather than just playing a parliamentary put-down game, I would ask him to table this legislation in the House or, on private member's day, to pass the legislation proposed by my colleague to change this law as it affects adoptive parents.

BANK PENALTIES ON HOME OWNERS RENEGOTIATING MORTGAGES

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Madam Speaker, recent announcements that short-term mortgage rates have fallen below the 10 per cent mark for the first time in almost ten years, actually 9.25 per cent, together with the announcement that the rates on three and five year mortgage terms are expected to fall one to two points, to the 11 per cent range, before the end of the year, are extremely encouraging. This news is of great benefit to prospective home purchasers and for home owners who are in a position to renegotiate mortgage terms. However, this very good news must be tempered with the realization that there are many home owners who are not in a position to take advantage of these developments.

S.O. 21

Just one year ago thousands of Canadian home owners were forced to negotiate mortgages at rates in the area of 20 per cent. Today these home owners find themselves locked into record-high interest rate mortgages, unable to renegotiate at today's lower rates unless they pay outrageous penalties of as much as $7,000 to $10,000. These penalties are scandalous. By applying them, the banks are effectively holding home owners hostage to interest rates which have since subsided. The banks should not be permitted to continue their draconian policies.

I urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to do everything in his power to see that the banks and trust companies change their policies on mortgage renegotiation in order that all Canadian home owners will be able to benefit from today's lower mortgage rates.

EFFECT OF BEEF MARKETING PRACTICES ON FARMERS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in the past several years there have been numerous studies done on beef marketing which have revealed a number of marketing concerns, some of which I have listed, as follows. First, direct sales to packing plants reduce the presence of competitive bidding. Second, there are price inequities for cattle of equal value sold by producers in the same market. Third, there is increased concentration of market power by the packing houses and retail chains. Fourth, there is a grading system for slaughter cattle which is not totally compatible with retail requirements, thus creating a multiplicity of price differentials. Fifth, there is an absence of grade identification at the retail level. Sixth, the market information system is often insufficient, often inaccurate, and fragmented. It appears that farmers have little or no marketing power.

Consumers continue to buy beef at more than reasonable prices, but at the expense of the farmers. In periods of low feed grain prices, the grain producer bears the burden. In periods of higher feed prices, the cow-calf producer bears the burden.

Beef farmers do not have market power to bargain with other sectors of the economy, leaving them at the bottom of the totem pole. Beef farmers must organize themselves if they are to stave off bankruptcy and survive.

The establishment of a national beef marketing board would go a long way toward bringing stability to the industry, with a fair profit for the producers, and fair, steady prices for the consumer. Hopefully this will become a reality in the near future.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—ALTERNATIVES TO MINISTER'S PLAN FOR CHANGES

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, the Pepin plan for changing the Crow is massively flawed. Such a plan would rattle and wound the agricultural sector in western Canada, which is the backbone of the region. The Pepin plan must be changed.

A workable solution should incorporate the following policy in cognizance of the promises made at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference. First, the Crow rate should be allowed to increase annually by the annual inflation rate. Second, as compensation for inflation indexing, the federal Government should annually deposit $250 million in a non-taxable western farmers' trust administered by a board of directors selected by various western agricultural commodity groups. This would be a farmers' heritage trust, providing assistance to farmers in unprofitable years caused by adverse weather conditions or low grain prices. It would also be used for maintaining branch lines and local country elevators and so forth.

Third, more extensive federal-provincial co-operation is vital and mandatory. The federal Government should hold extensive discussions and collaborate with the western provincial Governments in regard to upgrading and rebuilding the western grain transportation system.

Capital cost-sharing agreements with the Provinces should be negotiated. Some Provinces have already invested vast sums in freight cars and other facilities—

Madam Speaker: Order.

INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF PATENT LAW ON PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, in the 1960s the Canadian Government, concerned over the higher prices for drugs that Canadian consumers were paying in comparison to Consumers in other countries, attempted to ameliorate the problem. The Government amended the Patent Act in 1969 and extended compulsory licensing rights to include the right to import an invention or medicine.

While the objective of the new Section was to lower drug prices by increasing competition, it has succeeded in producing a steady decline in real growth of research and development, as well as a reduced growth rate in manufacturing, investment and employment in the pharmaceutical and associated industries in Canada.

Even though Canada offers generally suitable tax incentives and an excellent health care program for the development of the pharmaceutical industry, the 1969 amendment to our Patent Act has created an unfavourable environment for investment by the pharmaceutical industry.

Patents are essential to protect the immense costs necessary in R and D investment in this industry. It takes an average of $80 million to $100 million, and ten to 12 years to bring a single new product from the laboratory conception to the market and to establish a market for the product.

Since a resolution of the compulsory licence issue could change the perception of the pharmaceutical industries concerning the investment climate in Canada, I suggest that the Government should strongly consider repealing Section 41 of the Patent Act.

Madam Speaker: Order.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROPOSED BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, one month to the day from the time that the Government passed the largest and least justified borrowing Bill in our history, we have been put on notice to expect yet another. That Bill was for $19 billion, a sum larger than the total of all Government expenditures a scant dozen years before. Of that sum, $14 billion was specific borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1983-84.

Granted that this is a period of heavy cash outflows due to income tax refunds, we are, however, informed that cash balances are up by about $2 billion over last year.

What, then, is the Government playing at? Is it merely trying to get so much borrowing authority under its belt now that, regardless of how badly it further mismanages the economy it will not have to come back to this House until after the next election? Or are our wildest fears coming true? Are the nation's finances so wildly out of control that they are beyond the managerial capabilities of the Government?

In the name of God, I say to the Government, no. It must not ask us, as the elected representatives of the people, to give it more authority until it has adequately justified that request, not in terms of its own narrow political interest, but in that of the public whom we on this side and the Government represent.

BANKS AND BANKING

CREDIT CARD USER FEES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, once again Canadian banks are putting the screws on thousands of consumers who hold credit cards. They are introducing a transaction fee and an annual service charge.

While the banks refuse to release their profit figures on credit card operations, they are charging in excess of 20 per cent interest on outstanding balances already, despite the recent significant drop in interest rates. As well, they charge all merchants an average fee of 3 per cent to 5 per cent on all credit card transactions, which is absorbed by everybody, cash customers as well as credit card customers.

• (1115)

At a time when bank profits are already extraordinarily high, this additional charge for the use of credit cards is totally unfounded. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) should insist that the Inspector General of banks require full public disclosure of all profit and loss statements of the banks before allowing this consumer rip-off to continue.

As one Canadian who has had a bank credit card for several years, I have finally had enough. I am now taking the step, which many consumers have already taken, of cutting up my credit card to show my protest against this blatant revenue grab by the fat cat Canadian banking community. Enough is enough.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: May I remind the Hon. Member he is not allowed to proceed with any displays or dramatics in the House. I have pointed this out to him several times. It seems that he takes a long time to understand exactly what it means.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REDUCE TAX ON FARM FUELS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, we have just witnessed another Member of the NDP cutting up in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture which has to do with farm finances this spring, to which I hope I will get a substantive answer. The Minister will be aware that there are many farmers facing financial difficulties, particularly at this time when they are getting ready to put their crops in the ground. One of the problems is that of obtaining financing to buy fertilizer, to buy fuel, to buy seed. It is well known that a large portion of the amount of costs associated with farm fuels is federal tax. First, is the Minister of Agriculture in favour of reducing the portion of federal tax on farm fuels? For instance, the 9 per cent federal excise tax amounts to about 20 cents a gallon on farm fuels. Is the Minister in favour of reducing that?

Second, there is a 50-cent per mcf tax on natural gas used in the production of fertilizer. If we could remove that tax it would reduce that cost of a tonne of 11-55 fertilizer by something like $15 to $20 a tonne. Is the Minister in favour of that? If he is, will he make representation to the Minister of Finance to see that those taxes are reduced to assist farmers this spring in getting their crops into the ground?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member said that a lot of members of his farming commnity are having difficulty financing their spring operations. I would like to know if he could be more specific and let me know what farmers and with what lending institutions they are having that difficulty, because no one has given their names to me at this time.

Farmers have the best repayment ability of any group of businessmen in all of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: If the lending institutions are not allowing them to have proper financing to plant their crops, I would like to know that.

When the Hon. Member talks about whether I am in favour of lessening taxes, I would like to be able to say that we could abolish all taxes in Canada. But we have to be more realistic than that. When the Hon. Member talks about the cost of fuel and he talks about the cost of energy for farming, he knows and I know, that that cost is about 3 per cent of the cost of farming operations. It is not one of the major costs as the Hon. Member has outlined to you, Madam Speaker, at the present time.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture displays a great lack of awareness and ignorance of what is going on in the farming community this spring. I have sent the Minister letters on behalf of constituents of mine, in the last two weeks, who have made suggestions as to how they would like to see the situation improve. If the Minister is looking for names, all he has to do is to go to his files and he will see the names I have sent to him in the last two weeks.

COST OF REFUNDING TAX IN MANITOBA

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, my next question is also for the Minister of Agriculture. Specifically, in Manitoba's case there is a situation where the federal Government collects 7 cents a gallon on farm fuels and then refunds it. If that portion of that tax is not collected it will not have to be refunded. This would save the Government money in terms of the bureaucracy and it would mean that farmers would not have to pay 7 cents a gallon right now. Would the Minister of Agriculture be in favour of doing that, and will he see that that kind of representation is made to the Minister of National Revenue?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, on certain volume buying, et cetera, farmers do not pay tax on diesel fuel, et cetera, when they receive it. There has been representation made to me about that.

• (1120)

If the Hon. Member has written letters to me and has given me specific names, et cetera, I have not seen them as yet. I will check my files, et cetera, to make sure. I am talking about the lending institutions being named and the exact types of operations. I believe there were one or two farmers I am very much aware of in the Members' area, but the specific mention to me was about getting long-term credit in those areas with the Farm Credit Corporation or arranging financing through their own local credit unions. I cannot remember being told about not being able to get operating capital for this spring.

I have had meetings with the head of the Farm Credit Corporation. We are looking at how we can even make further amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act, to use that kind of a lending institution to assist farmers with capital if, say, lending institutions decide not to allow financing to this group of people who are some of the most productive people and, as I said, have one of the best repayment records of any group of business people in Canada.

Mr. Mayer: It is well known in the farm community—and the Minister could check with fertilizer dealers—that the use of fertilizers will go down this year as a direct result of producers having trouble obtaining financing.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

REQUEST FOR EARLIER PAYOUT PROVISION

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a further supplementary question to the Minister of Transport who is responsible for the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Would the Minister be prepared to look at amending that Act so that the stabilization period would go from five years to three years? In effect that would trigger a payout in this crop year, almost immediately, or as quickly as the arithmetic could be done, of something like $150 million. That would not put the fund in jeopardy.

The fund currently sits with in excess of $600 million in it. With the current rate of contributions, at the end of 1983 it will have approximately $800 million. This is a case where there is some farmers' money and some Government contributions. If the Government were willing to look at that Act to see if we could go from five years to three years, it would trigger a payout in western Canada of $150 million, put money in circulation, and assist—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. When is the Hon. Member going to finish his question?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as far as I am concerned he could have gone on all day.

When the Western Grain Stabilization Act was passed we witnessed a debate on the same question as the one raised today, whether it was to be three years or five years. The decision was made at that time that five years was the better base because it co-ordinated better with other pieces of legislation in the Canadian system. Obviously that debate has gone on, and obviously each time farmers run into some kind of difficulty somebody rises and asks, "Why not the three years?" The answer is the same as the one given when the bill was introduced in the first place. I am told that this, nevertheless, is an idea which is constantly reviewed by the Government and that there is a review of this issue at this particular time being undertaken by people in the Department of Agriculture.

AGRICULTURE

COST OF FUEL TO FARMERS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture who likes to use the words "et cetera". I once understood et cetera meant that the speaker did not have any more knowledge, but he knew there was more he should know.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I was taking it for granted that you knew something.

Mr. Epp: In view of fuel prices—and the Minister says they are only 3 per cent of production costs—which impact on fertilizers, herbicides and costs of production, does the Minister of Agriculture favour the Government's position which now accepts that Canadians, specifically Canadian farmers, should pay more than 75 per cent of world price for their fuel?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that we have an energy policy in Canada—I could use the words et cetera, because I know he knows that very well. He knows what it amounts to and what we are trying to do with that energy program. A year ago, before world prices changed, American farmers paid more than Canadian farmers. In fact all farmers in the rest of the world paid more. He was not asking at that time, "Will you go to more than 75 per cent of world price?" or, "What will you do?" He was not saying a thing about it at that time when farmers were receiving a benefit under the program. They are not at that much of a disadvantage at the present time when one checks out all the figures.

SPECIAL RECOVERY PROGRAM

IDENTIFICATION OF MANITOBAN PROJECTS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question deals with western Canada, and specifically Manitoba. It is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Of the hundred so-called recovery projects that are to be put on "fast-track, no-delays", is there any program specifically identified for western Manitoba?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not have a list here of the projects that have been under consideration. I can assure the Hon. Member that these projects will be distributed all across Canada. The program will contribute to every Province and ensure that there will be employment development in each of the Provinces. The Hon. Member will have to await specific announcements to determine whether the projects are in the particular area he has mentioned.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING—STATEMENT BY UNITED STATES OFFICIAL

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. A story in yesterday's Le Devoir quoted a highly-placed Pentagon official as saying that Canadian testing of Cruise missiles is not really necessary. This official, who has close involvement with the Geneva negotiations, says that tests of the Cruise in the United States are almost finished and further testing in Canada would change nothing. I would like to ask the Minister if he plans to take this information to Cabinet, which in turn could state its position to the Pentagon that, if testing is not necessary, then Canada will not participate.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, it is well known that before this Government takes a decision with regard to testing the Cruise missile, every allegation will be taken into consideration. The Prime Minister is in Washington. I suppose there was some discussion there about this. If we have a request from the United States, the appropriate steps will be taken by Cabinet in reaching a decision.

DEMONSTRATIONS AGAINST POSSIBLE TESTING

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, given the fact that hundreds of thousands of Canadians have taken to the streets, and more will do the same this Sunday in Ottawa, to protest the proposed testing of the Cruise missile in Canada, and in light of the fact that this missile represents a backward step in attempts to negotiate verifiable arms control treaties, will the Minister give this House his assurance that he will raise this matter with the Prime Minister with a view to informing our American neighbours of our unwillingness to test this missile in our country?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Prime Minister is already aware, without me having to talk to him, of these peace demonstrations in the streets. He is also aware of the implications of testing and not testing the Cruise missiles in this country. I share the view of the Hon. Member that we have to take decisions to see how we can promote peace in the world. In many ways I have great sympathy for those who are demonstrating. I believe that everyone in this Chamber, including those in the galleries, are in favour of peace and disarmament. Where we do not agree is how we should obtain that objective.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Minister to be candid with the House and the Canadian public for a moment. Given the reports of the Prime Minister's recent meetings with the United States Vice-President, and yesterday with the President, will the Minister tell us whether, in his opinion, this whole idea of Canada testing the Cruise missile has gone too far for Canada to turn back? Is there still a possibility that Canadian reluctance to test this missile could result in the whole idea being scrapped?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the policy of the Government is well known. We are part of the NATO alliance. The Hon. Member knows that we agreed with the two-track decision in 1979. We are in favour of meaningful negotiations in Geneva. The only way to have that is to have credible deterrents in order that the negotiations will be meaningful.

LABOUR RELATIONS

EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS DISPUTE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my question involves the settlement of the strike between the pilots and Eastern Provincial Airways which has dragged on for several months. I know, in the absence of the Minister of Labour, that the Deputy Prime Minister, like all Members from Atlantic Canada, has a real interest in the settlement of this dispute. The matter is now before the Canada Labour Relations Board and the final matters in dispute should be decided by the Board.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he can give us the assurances of his Government that when the decision of the Canada Labour Relations Board is made known, and if it provides for the settlement of the strike and return to full services at Eastern Provincial Airways, the Government will give the matter its full and quick consideration so that this disastrous strike may be ended and full service restored so that people in Atlantic Canada can benefit from their regional airline.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I cannot add much to the Member's question except to answer yes, indeed, we are keeping in close touch with that particular situation. My hon. friend may appreciate some background of the situation that he may or may not know about. What is happening now in Canadian air transportation is the realization that the good old days are, if not gone, at least not going to be with us again for a while. So there is a tightening of efficiency in the air industry. That is one of the reasons why that strike occured in the first place.

Eastern Provincial Airways finds itself in a situation where it has hired other pilots for a period of time. Now that the previous pilots want to go back to the company, the company must balance this situation. It is a very difficult one. I have promised the Member that I will keep in close touch with the situation, although this is essentially the responsibility of the Minister of Labour whose efforts I will support.

ENFORCEMENT OF SAFETY REGULATIONS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I want to assure the Minister that the pilots of EPA have every interest in the efficiency of the airline and will co-operate in any way possible. They made that clear publicly.

Now that the Minister has mentioned the specific dispute between the pilots and the management of EPA, he must be aware that this kind of dispute with pilots hired during the course of a legal strike could cause difficulties aboard the aircraft. I would like the Minister of Transport to give us the assurance that his Department is monitoring this situation and will see that air safety regulations are very strictly enforced. He knows, as all of us in this House know, that one airline accident will destroy the credibility not only of the airline but of the whole Canadian aviation industry, and particularly the credibility of his Department and its enforcement of air safety regulations.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am aware of that. I thank my hon. friend for making the public aware of it. I can assure him that the situation is being monitored. I have been assured that particular attention is being given to this particular aspect of air safety during these particularly difficult times.

FISHERIES

KIRBY TASK FORCE REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance has billed the budget as an instrument of economic recovery. Yet the budget fails altogether to address the Kirby Report's call for a multi-million dollar program of recovery for the Atlantic fishing industry in which some 100,000 jobs are in jeopardy.

I would like to ask the Minister, apart from oblique or vague references to the fishing industry such as Special Recovery Capital Projects, why has the budget failed to address directly the single most important unemployment problem in the entire Atlantic region.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that no problem has received more attention from the Government than has the problem of the Atlantic fisheries. We have made public our response to the Kirby Report in which the Government has indicated its concurrence with almost all of the recommendations made by that task force.

In addition to that, we have authorized a negotiating team to enter into discussions with the Provinces and with the plants in an effort to arrive at a restructuring of the industry that would make it possible for the industry to operate in a viable and efficient way and to provide secure jobs and secure incomes for those dependent upon the industry. I want to remove from the Hon. Member's mind the impression that this industry is being neglected. On the contrary, it has received even greater attention than could possibly be provided to it through a specific reference in the budget.

NECESSITY TO FUND EAST COAST INDUSTRY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. All of the concurrence in the world will not put fishermen and fish processing plants back to work, so I will ask the Deputy Prime Minister the question again. The Kirby Report has made it clear that the Atlantic fishery needs an all-embracing industrial strategy, not money for a wharf here and a vessel there, as contemplated by the budget right up until 1986. How could the Government produce $200 million out of thin air within 24 hours to save what little is left of the reputation of the Minister of Finance with regard to his budget leak, when it cannot come up with the hard, cold cash that is needed to resuscitate the Atlantic fishery, an industry that is on its knees?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I believe that the Hon. Member seriously misunderstands the situation that prevails with respect to the fish processing sector of the industry. He has referred to that misunderstanding specifically in his question and alleges that no attention is being paid to that situation.

May I repeat that currently there are negotiations ongoing with the Provinces that have a very direct stake in the outcome. There are negotiations also going on with the fish plants and with the banks that also have an important stake in the outcome. Out of those negotiations it is hoped that a plan can be agreed to which will receive the endorsement of all parties and the support of the Government of Canada.

Nobody is under the illusion that there will not be financial obligations incurred by the Government of Canada as a result of the implementation of the Kirby Report, and indeed, a successful conclusion to the negotiations related to restructuring. If the Hon. Member has any other idea in mind, I urge him to abandon it as it is not based upon solid evidence.

INCOME TAX

CRITERIA USED BY AUDITORS OF FARM INCOME

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue and again has to do with Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. The Minister will know that interpretation of this legislation is leading to much trouble in the farming community. I would like to point out to him that, in one case in my riding, auditors have said that in order to have a viable beef cattle ranch, one must have a minimum of 100 cows. Now, Statistics Canada says that the average rate of cows per farm is 30.8. Is the Minister's Department saying that in order to have a viable farm one must have 100 cows? Is that the policy of the Department?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think that if we start looking at specific cases that concern the Department of National Revenue, we will spend hours on discussion here in the House. I do not think there is a policy, based on a given number of cattle, for establishing what constitutes a farm. The people who examine income tax returns from taxpayers claiming expenses for farming operations are doing so on the basis of the income generated by the operation over a certain period of time, compared to the expenses being claimed by the taxpayer. It is on that basis that they determine whether there is a legitimate farming operation as opposed to the so-called hobby farms.

[English]

STIPULATION REGARDING AMOUNT OF PROFIT

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Auditors are also telling the people in my riding that they must have an expectation of profit in order to have their farms called a legitimate farming operation. What they are saying is that they must show a profit within two years of startup on a farm and that it must be 33.33 per cent. Is this the policy of the Minister's Department?

• (1140)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, as I said before, to find out whether there is a legitimate farming operation, there must be some expectation of profit to be generated by the operation. I think this is a principle or an assumption that we must accept. Furthermore, regarding the period of time over which the profit will be generated, I feel that people in my Department use some degree of discretion. They make a distinction between the profit potential of a dairy operation and another type of farming operation involving beef cattle, where it would take longer to get a return on one's investment or, another example, an apple growing operation. It takes longer to produce fruit, and therefore to make a profit, than with a dairy farm or some other kind of livestock operation. I think that these distinctions are considered in establishing the viability of a farming operation and its expectation of profit.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR RED MEAT STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Bankruptcy is a growing problem among Canada's farmers as costs rise and commodity prices continue to be soft. Today's newspapers carry a story about receivers going so far as to seize a 13-year old boy's pet steers because his father was bankrupt.

What program is the Minister contemplating to alleviate the cost-price squeeze? Specifically, is he doing anything about creating a meaningful cost-based red meat stabilization program in order that hundreds of other farm families may stave off bankruptcy?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned a case that took place yesterday. We are very much aware of that case, and members of my staff were involved with this family in trying to work out some kind of proper arrangement for them. Even the Farmers' Survival Group that was at that farm a week ago withdrew its representations when it felt nothing could be done because of the indebtedness that the family had accumulated over the last three years.

I am sympathetic. I should like to do everything for everybody, but there are limitations on what we can and cannot do for them.

If the Hon. Member has any suggestions that would increase commodity prices, besides national stabilization which has been implanted in many minds as being the saviour of the red meat industry, I would welcome them. The Hon. Member knows as well as I do that it is not going to be the saviour and that that idea should not be implanted in people's minds.

I met with one of my provincial colleagues in the past week to discuss this problem. The people who have been holding meetings across Canada are no closer to a decision on how they would work that kind of national program than they were in 1978. At that time I offered them a program that would be better than what they are suggesting now. They are suggesting practically the same thing. They will not agree to stop top loading, that is, the rich Provinces having top-loading programs against the have not Provinces with programs that they cannot afford. I cannot have that kind of national program with its inequities. I will not go along with a program that provides more inequity than there is at the present time.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON PROPOSAL FOR CHANGE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport who is dealing with a program that impacts very heavily on the cost side of the cost-price squeeze.

Since Crow rate retention is a serious option which the Government must consider as a continued cost-reducing policy that the Government should have in place, and in light of the alarming increase in farm bankrupticies across Canada, will the Minister respond favourably to the request by the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool that there be a three-year moratorium on Crow change and that rail upgrading continue during a consultation process that involves all Canadians?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there are only two categories of people in Canada—in western Canada in particular—who believe that there should not be any change whatsoever in the Crow rate. These are the members of the National Farmers Union and some members of the NDP. That is about all we have by way of reactionaries in the country at the moment.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DENIAL OF BENEFITS TO FRESHWATER FISHERMEN

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans I should like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Over the past three years I have made a number of representations to the Minister of Finance, the old one and the new one, and to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the old one and the new one, with regard to the inequity of freshwater fishermen having to pay into the Unemployment Insurance fund and, by legislation, being unable to draw benefits because their fishing season does not coincide with the fishing season on the coasts. When will the Deputy Prime Minister have the Government do something to eliminate this injustice?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I should like to answer the Hon. Member's question. He will be aware that three or four weeks ago the Supreme Court handed down a decision in the Vicky Silk case which abolishes any special regulations that can be applied to fishermen's benefits and which will create substantial confusion in the fishing areas and also in the application of benefits. It is our intention to bring in amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act to clarify the situation and to deal with the problem that the Hon. Member recognizes.

I hope that Hon. Members opposite will ensure that such amendment, along with other improvements to the Unemployment Insurance Act, receive speedy dispatch in the House so that people like this will not be unduly affected by those kinds of decisions.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF ACT TO ASSIST FISHERMEN

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, would the Minister of Employment and Immigration consider bringing in that single amendment on one day and not tying it to a bunch of other conditions, so that this injustice can be corrected immediately?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would think it important that a number of other issues related to the Unemployment Insurance Act be dealt with at the same time. I think of the entrance requirement, which has a sunset clause which expires on June 4 this year. I am sure the Hon. Member and his Party would not like to see the entrance requirement for the application of the Unemployment Insurance Act changed at the same time. Many Members of his Party have been making strong recommendations on things like maternity benefits. If we could get the full approval and co-operation of both Parties, when we could do as he wishes and have the amending Bill passed in one day. I am sure that a lot of Canadians would be very grateful for that.

THE ADMINISTRATION

PENALTIES FOR BREAKING PRIVY COUNCIL OATH

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I wonder if the Minister could tell the House what the penalties are for a Privy Councillor who breaks his or her oath?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, this being one of the most serious oaths in our society, it is interesting that the Deputy Prime Minister will not share with us what the penalties are.

COMPLIANCE WITH OATH

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister could share with us what mechanisms are in place for determining whether or not a Privy Councillor has broken the oath?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking for legal opinions. One of the established rules of the House is not to provide them in the Question Period.

PUBLIC WORKS

TORONTO HARBOURFRONT ANNOUNCEMENT—PLEA FOR DEVELOPMENT OF CNE GROUNDS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. I notice that four Ministers from Toronto are absent today. Obviously they are announcing that the Government is sinking more money into Harbourfront.

Has the Government contemplated the fact that this is an entertainment area and that the Canadian National Exhibition grounds require broadening and upgrading to provide better trade facilities? Would the money not be better spent on the Canadian National Exhibition grounds, which are a year-round trade area?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have had occasion to visit the site where this work has been undertaken. I was very much impressed by what has been done and by the potential of the area.

As Hon. Members know, the development of waterfronts in many of our major cities is very much tied to the improvement of the life of the citizens who live there. In fact I looked at the figures, and it is obvious that the citizens of Toronto are voting with their feet by visiting the site and using it. As we improve it, and I think the announcement was made today, the site will be used more and more. In fact I would like to take this opportunity to invite Hon. Members to visit the site and see its potential.

• (1150)

With your permission, Madam Speaker, while I am on my feet I would like to answer a second question that the Hon. Member put to me yesterday.

Madam Speaker: I do not think I can allow that.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, I have made my point on Mirabel already today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT NATIONAL PARK BE CREATED

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, what the Government is doing is concentrating all the entertainment for Ontario right in downtown Toronto. Now, the Minister has 18,000 acres in close proximity to Toronto. Why does he not turn that into a national park which could be used by all Ontarians, and get people out of Toronto into the fresh air?

Mr. Gauthier: Put him on display.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, it is quite obvious that the Hon. Member does not want to know the facts about Mirabel; he only puts misstatements of fact in questions and does not bother to ask questions the next day. As to the question of entertainment in Ontario, I am really surprised that the Hon. Member gratuitously insults the Government of Ontario which has done a great deal to benefit its citizens by developing Ontario Place. I think there is room for both projects, and that is what we are doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR ACCELERATED AID TO SHIPYARDS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns the shipbuilding industry and budget allocations to increase shipbuilding and jobs in Canada. In Burrard Yarrow shipyards in Vancouver, over 500 workers were laid off recently. I understand Marine Industries, in Sorel, Quebec, has laid off 250 or more workers, and the same is happening in the Atlantic region. Since the Government has money in the budget for shipbuilding as a job-creation and industrial strategy, why can this not be speeded up with money made available quickly for these industries rather than spending over $1 million in unnecessary unemployment insurance payments for these people? What is going to be done about this, how quickly can this money get out to keep those shipyards open and workers working?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there must be a misunderstanding on the part of my hon. friend because what she suggests is exactly what is happening. In the announcement made in Montreal the other day it was said there would be 11 new ships, the upgrading of three other ships, and the acquisition of a number of small craft for the Department of Transport. If my hon. friend cares to note, the budget involved is $780 million and in that amount there is an acceleration to the value of $185 million. So what she seems to want is exactly what is going to take place.

As far as my Department is concerned, these were Coast Guard ships and they were supposed to be built two, three, four, five years from now. There is an acceleration of this program now, particularly for the benefit of workers in the different shipyards of the country. I have seen a distribution on a national basis and I will be glad to send a copy of that to my hon. friend. But what she has in mind is served by the announcement made the other day.

LETTING OF CONTRACTS FOR FRIGATE PATROL VESSELS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. As he knows, there has been considerable speculation in Saint John, New Brunswick, about the Government's handling of the contract for the Canadian Frigate Program. Has the Government made any decision yet about the letting of contracts for this major shipbuilding program? Are in fact any shipyards specifically not being considered for those contracts? When does the Minister anticipate a decision will be made on the letting of these contracts?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think as far as the Frigate Program is concerned it is well known that the responsibility of my Department was to make a very objective evaluation of the proposals from both contractors and then present them to the Cabinet Committee at the appropriate time. I hope to be able to do that in the middle of the month of May, with a view to getting a decision on contracts at the end of June.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EMPLOYMENT OF NATIVE PEOPLE

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. According to the federal-provincial relations office in a report to Treasury Board for the fiscal year 1981-82, it is planned that starting in 1982-83 referrals of candidates qualified for the types and levels of positions within the federal-provincial relations office will be made available to the Department of Indian Affairs on an ongoing basis by the Public Service Commission. I am wondering why there is no system recruitment policy being pursued by the Treasury Board, why there is no Indian involvement in employment selection boards, and when will aboriginal people be recruited in greater numbers by the Public Service.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I understand that as yet there has been no staffing action taken to recruit candidates to the positions in question. But I am confident that those doing the staffing will be keeping in line with our desire to increase participation of indigenous people in the federal Public Service and involve native persons in the staffing process for positions in which they require their input. The kind of concern raised by my hon. friend is very much the concern of the Government, and I am optimistic that we will be able to make a very good response in the area in question.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—BENEFIT FOR RAILWAYS UNDER PROPOSAL FOR CHANGE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Will the proposed Bill that the Minister is bringing in give the total Crow benefit to the railways?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I alluded yesterday and in days before to the fact that the Government was reviewing the question of the method of payment. My hon. friend remembers that in my statement of February 1 I indicated a 50/50 distribution, 50 per cent to the railways and 50 per cent to the producers. This is being reviewed now and I should be in a position to announce the result of the Government's re-examination in a very few days.

EFFECT OF INCREASED RATES ON FARMERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, if the total Crow benefit is given to the railways and they have the authority to raise the rates for all agricultural products, where would the farmers secure the necessary money to pay these vastly increased rates? I would suggest that might be taken into consideration.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am not sure if I catch the whole purport of the question, I can only say that when the Bill is introduced it will be fully debated on second reading, it will go to committee, and then third reading. We will do an exhaustive job of answering all the questions which have been raised. Obviously what has happened, and I have said it quite bluntly, is that a number of people take exception to the mode of payment to the producers. We will analyse that, we will call in psychoanalysts, economists, and sociologists to explain that particular reaction.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEED PROGRAM—NON-HIRING OF FORMER CASUAL EMPLOYEES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and relates to a question by the Hon. Member for Victoria and the answer from the Hon. Minister a few days ago. It had to do with the replacement of employees of the Department of National Defence, this time particularly at Uplands, with people hired under the NEED Program. The Hon. Minister will recall that he said:

> The employees hired by the NEED Program will be over and above the normal term employees that we have.

● (1200)

Is the hon. gentleman aware that at Canadian Forces Base Uplands the casual employees in the trades have not been taken back, and that the stated reason they have not been taken back is because the Department is hiring under the NEED Program? Today I ask the Minister if he would investigate that matter, because there is a problem out there to which I would ask him to devote his personal attention.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I understand the concern of the hon. gentleman and, if it were true, if it were the case, I would be concerned myself.

Mr. Crosby: Come on. It is the case.

Mr. Lamontagne: The report I have received in this case is that it is not true.

Mr. Nielsen: It is the case.

Mr. Lamontagne: The employees hired through NEED do not supersede the ones whom we have had under casual employment.

Some Hon. Members: That's not so.

Mr. Lamontagne: The Hon. Member knows very well that every year we have so many person-years given for temporary employment.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): How many are there for Esquimalt?

Mr. Crosby: How many are there for Halifax?

Mr. Lamontagne: The regulators are set by the Treasury Board with regard to how many we may hire on term. These are set every year. At one point, on March 31, we will have to lay term employees off until we can get a new allocation of person-years from Treasury Board. However, I can assure the hon. gentleman that I will look into the facts of the case he is presenting to me. I will give the Hon. Member a written answer, which I am sure would satisfy him.

Petitions

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONDUCT INVESTIGATION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, as the hon. gentleman can judge, there are a number of Members of Parliament in the House, from Halifax, Ottawa and other places, and now Victoria—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): And Esquimalt.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —and Esquimalt, where this kind of thing is happening. If the Hon. Members of the House of Commons who have this kind of case could bring these cases to the Minister's attention, would he look into them? The fact is that it may well be that the Minister is being misdirected by his staff.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I hope it is not the case as he suggested that I am being misdirected by my staff, but I can assure the hon. gentleman that I will inquire about it because I am very concerned, if it is indeed the truth.

Mr. Nielsen: It is.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, April 28, 1983, and finds that the petitions meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Madam Speaker: Presenting reports from Standing and Special Committees—

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising from a statement made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). I have lost him. I am sorry, Madam Speaker, but the Minister has left his seat.

Madam Speaker: If it is a point of order, I will hear it, but—

Mr. McKnight: That is all right, Madam Speaker.

PETITIONS

MR. PARKER—COAL PRODUCTION IN SOUTHEASTERN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of my constituents in Kootenay East-Revelstoke with regard to the federal involvement in the coal fields there. The Government of Canada has helped finance and develop new coal projects in northeastern British Columbia which could have serious effects on coal production in southeastern British Columbia and the production of coal in terms of markets available to British Columbia, threatening already existing jobs in communities in southeastern British Columbia. Over 2,000 people signed this petition. The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to guarantee that the presently existing coal projects in southeastern British Columbia will be permitted to supply coal to all British Columbian markets until such time as they approach their production capacity.

As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. MALONE—CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I am duty bound, as the Member of Parliament for Crowfoot, to table today a petition from a number of constituents, 1,277 in total, from the southeast region of my constituency, with respect to the western transport initiative by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). The petitioners outline six principles by which they find the proposal to be unacceptable and would ask that these principles be involved in any amending changes to the impending legislation.

NARCOTIC CONTROL ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING THERAPEUTIC USE OF HEROIN

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-684 to amend the Narcotic Control Act (therapeutic use of heroin).

He said: Madam Speaker, the purpose of the Bill is to permit designated physicians in defined hospitals, particularly in cancer clinics, to prescribe heroin to alleviate pain and to provide against diversion of heroin for improper purposes and to permit a public debate and decision on this important question. It also responds to a favourable reply from 91 per cent of the people of Nepean-Carleton in a questionnaire on this subject.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. E. F. Whelan (for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-147 to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act (No. 2).

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,704 and 4,727.

[Text]

MORTGAGE PORTFOLIO MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

Question No. 4,704—Mr. MacKay:

1. What is the Mortgage Portfolio Management System (MPMS)?

2. What were the original objectives of implementing such a system?

3. Which major external consultants were hired to assist in the design and implementation of MPMS and on what basis were these consultants selected?

4. Was there any public tendering for the proposal related to the design and implementation of MPMS and, if so (a) what were the results (b) what were the projected costs and benefits of MPMS as outlined by the successful proponent or proponents?

5. With reference to the answer to question No. 4,380 which stated that a review of the MPMS was underway, is the review now completed and, if so, what were the concrete results of the review?

Order Paper Questions

6. What were/are the number of person-years, either by contract or by regular employment, within the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation committed to MPMS in (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 (d) 1982 (e) 1983?

7. How many persons were hired on a contract basis and, generally speaking, what were the usual terms of such contracts?

8. What has been the cumulative capital and operating costs to date for the design and implementation of MPMS?

9. What have been the cumulative costs related to (a) the design and purchase of MPMS software (b) the purchase or leasing of computer hardware?

10. What are the terms of any purchase or lease of computer hardware?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1 and 2. Mortgage Portfolio Management System (MPMS) was to be a major business information system undertaking, employing current data processing technology. The system was to embrace most of CMHC's business operations and to include a new major supporting financial system together with vastly improved management information systems.

3. Industrial Life—Technical Services (IST), Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., Stevenson, Kellogg, Ducros, Meilleur, Roy & Associés Ltée. (DMR), La Fontaine, Gauthier & Shatner, These consultants were selected on the basis of their recognized expertise and copabilities for specific assignments in this field.

4. No.

5. (a) No. (b) Not applicable.

6. MPMS staff-year distribution.

Year	Corporate	Non-corporate	Total
1979	16	39	55
1980	35	48	83
1981	78	87	165
1982–June 30	41	17	58
1983–None

7. Within the above non-corporate staff years, persons are hired on contract basis with terms varying between three to 12 months.

8. To mid-1982, $18M was spent on design and development of MPMS.

9. (a) See part 8 above. (b) A further $5.9M was expended for improvements to CMHC's computer hardware and infrastructure required to support MPMS as well as other systems development initiatives. This upgraded capability continues to be used to satisfy many of the Corporation's data processing requirements.

10. The mainframe is rented on a month-to-month basis. This can be terminated on "90 day" notice. Peripheral equipment and terminals are leased on a one to five-year term.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM ON FUEL SUBSTITUTION

Question No. 4,727—Mr. Gurbin:

1. By year, what amount did departments expend under the National Energy Program of Fuel Substitution to promote propane in transportation?

Order Paper Questions

2. What amount was spent and is planned to be spent on joint federal-provincial demonstration projects for propane in transportation?

3. Are funds available to the departments to promote electric vehicle transportation and, if so (a) what are such funds (b) what proportion of the available funds has been spent?

4. What objective criteria are used to direct funding for promotion of one alternative transportation option in contrast to another?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Energy, Mines and Resources and Transport Canada as follows:

1. The following amounts were expended under the Propane Vehicle Grant Program in the form of contributions to commercial vehicle owners:

September 1, 1981—December 31, 1981	$ 243,600
January 1, 1982—December 31, 1982	$ 6,013,120
January 1, 1983—March 4, 1983	$ 1,819,600

Under the Federal Propane Vehicle Program, the following amounts were expended to convert federal government vehicles:

1981-82	$ 770,000
1982-83	$ 1,830,000

2. No funds have been spent on joint federal-provincial demonstration projects for propane in transportation, and there are no plans to spend any.

3. Yes: for electric vehicle transportation research, development and demonstration through the Transportation Development Centre of Transport Canada. (a) Expenditures were $442,134 in 1981/82 and $433,500 in 1982/83 (estimated to year end). In 1983/84, a similar level of expenditure is planned. (b) All funds made available have been spent.

4. Criteria for funding under the federal energy R & D program on alternative transportation include: the degree of support for energy policy objectives; the relative maturity of the technology; the potential market impact (including fuel consumption share); the potential for Canadian industry and economic benefits; and the degree of support for areas of responsibility under Transport Canada.

[English]

Mr. Burghardt: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION TO INCLUDE PROPERTY RIGHTS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher) moved:

That, whereas the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof;

Now Therefore the House of Commons resolves that His Excellency the Governor General be authorized to issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada amending the Constitution of Canada as follows:

PROCLAMATION AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. Section 7 of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:

"60.1 A reference to the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982 shall be deemed to include a reference to the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983 (property rights)."

3. This Proclamation may be cited as the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983 (property rights).

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me today to present on behalf of my Party a resolution to the House of Commons which, if passed in the House and the Senate and approved by seven Provinces having at least 50 per cent of the population, will become part of our Constitution. Members of the House will note that the wording is exactly that which was presented by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to our Party last week. In a few moments I will deal with some of the history surrounding this question and what has led us to this present state.

I want to spell out for the House and for Canadians what the Government's commitment on property rights was back on July 9, 1980, when the Minister of Justice at that time, now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), said when presenting the question of property rights to the Provinces. He said:

In deciding which rights should be included in this Charter we have selected only those which we feel reflect the central values of our society. Each of the rights we have listed is an essential ingredient for the Charter and all are rights which all Canadians should have regardless of where they live in our country.

We agree with those words. That was the Government's commitment to property rights at one time. That was there before the debate and the wheeling and dealing began. Suddenly, we found that that which was regarded as fundamental at one time or which was shared by most Canadians as being a value of our society, was suddenly not that. It was suddenly value of our society, was suddenly not that. It was suddenly not that when the Government began wheeling and dealing in its attempts to get its resolution through the House of Commons at earlier times.

Second, the overwhelming majority of Canadians favoured the inclusion of property rights in the Charter. There are historical reasons for that. Canada has always had the lure of the land. Its people have always had pride of ownership. That land has always given its people security of possession. It is fundamental to our country and is therefore one of the reasons that this Party has been so overwhelmingly and absolutely forceful in proposing the inclusion of property rights in the Constitution at every stage available to it.

The principle that property belongs to men or women is steeped in British common law. When immigrants came to this country there were two fundamental reasons for their coming here. One was the right to religious freedom and the freedom of thought which is now embodied in the Charter. Equally they saw economic freedom. That economic freedom was always embodied in the right to own property.

When I speak of historical reasons, I think it is well established within our own Canadian society that property rights are fundamental to a Canadian's view of himself and his rights as a citizen. In the British context, private property has always been historically associated with the development of free institutions. It goes back to 1215, when the Magna Carta referred to it. It is referred to in the Bill of Rights of 1627. We can refer to the United States Constitution, if we want to draw on the experience of our neighbours, in 1783. All these documents have reference to private ownership of land. They recognized that not only should these rights be recognized in fact, they should also be a constitutional reality.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Article 17, includes property rights. The 1962 Canadian Bill of Rights enshrined the right to property. In fact, this House passed that provision at that time.

Today our amendment, which we are proud to move, will guarantee for ordinary Canadians that they will have the fullest protection possible of the right of ownership of property.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: We want that for Canadians. If the Charter is to have further meaning, it is for that reason, and others on which I cannot elaborate now, that we are again taking the opportunity to propose this amendment. Other Members of our Party will speak on the other fundamental reasons for our amendment.

What has brought us to this stage? I have already referred to the Government's proposal back on July 9, 1980. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, the number of meetings that took place that summer between the Provinces and the federal Government. In the October resolution presented to the House, property rights were suddenly absent. During the hearings of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, this Party again moved an amendment to property rights. In fact, it was moved on January 23, 1981. At that time, Members will recall, the then Minister of Justice was not representing the Government at the Special Joint Committee. The present Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) was there, and he gave an unequivocal understanding and assurance, a Minister's word, that the Government would support a property rights amendment.

Strangely enough, when the Minister of Justice returned after the weekend to represent the Government at the Committee, the word was no longer the word of a Minister. It was gone, and consequently property rights have not been included in the Charter of Rights to this day.

It is interesting to note why the Government's commitment, which I have read into the record, had suddenly changed over a weekend. It was quite clearly understood that the reason it had changed was that the NDP had said that if the Government wants its support for this resolution it must take out property rights. The Government was willing to break the word of a Minister. It was willing to break the oath that a Minister gives. It was willing to embarrass the then Minister of Justice because it wanted the support of the NDP in the House.

Furthermore, the then NDP Government of Saskatchewan, which was then still sitting on the fence as to whether it would support the resolution, indicated clearly during that weekend that if property rights were in the constitutional resolution it would not support it. That is also an historical fact.

I remember those days very clearly when the Prime Minister would get up and say, "You want to bargain for fish, for what, for rights?" What was he bargaining for? He was bargaining property rights for support.

The Supreme Court also indicated in its ruling that the federal Government's resolution did not have sufficient consent among the Provinces.

But that is all history now. What is more interesting is what has happened in the last two weeks in the House. The Prime Minister was asked whether he would include property rights since April 17 marked the first anniversary of the patriation of the Constitution. He said he was willing to do it, but under what conditions? He was willing to do it in a one-day debate, and he wanted the support of only the Official Opposition. What has happened subsequently? Are we to believe the Government? Are we to trust it? We would like to trust it, and today we are giving them the opportunity to earn that trust.

While I cannot go through all the details because of lack of time, twice yesterday my House Leader asked the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) when the Government would bring forth property rights. We were suddenly noticing that the Government wanted more support than just from the Official Opposition; there was concern about the NDP. If the press is to be believed, the New Democratic Party's constitutional spokesman said that they are not opposed to property rights, per se, but "we are not so sure about the one-day debate". He might have been misquoted, and of course I will allow him to clear the record. However, the President of the Privy Council was asked whether he would bring forward the resolution, because in our minds we had fully complied with the Prime Minister's conditions. I want to read the statement by the President of the Privy Council into the record once again. You will find it in yesterday's Hansard at page 24961 as follows:

• (1220)

Madam Speaker, the answer to the question is no. I do not like to repeat myself. The same question was put to me last week; I have given a full answer. The answer to the Hon. Member's question is no, we have not changed our mind.

What is today before us is a confidence motion. It will have one of two effects. The Government may vote for property rights and finally fulfil its word. It will be interesting to see what the New Democratic Party will do, whether its Members will be in favour of the entrenchment of property rights per se. It will be interesting. We will wait for their word. The other possibility is that Government Members might say that this is a confidence motion and what we are asking them to do is to defeat themselves. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of Canadians who would enjoy that scenario.

An Hon. Member: Yes, 52 per cent of them.

Mr. Epp: But I want to make a proposal to the Liberal Government. Being a person that would like at best to make life as easy for the Government as possible, especially in view of the difficulties it is now facing in the country, the proposal I make is very simple. The vote is to take place on this resolution on Monday, right after Orders of the Day are called at 3 p.m. or 3.15 p.m.

The proposal is this. On Monday at 11 a.m. a Member of the Government might rise in his or her place and say, "We support our own resolution, the Government's resolution, and we will designate this day for the passage of this property rights clause." By Monday night we will finally have ended, at least in this House, this question of how the House divides on property rights. I make that offer to the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Try and weasel out of that one.

Mr. Epp: There are some aspects of the resolution which cause me concern. I think they should be put on the record. One is the question of fundamental justice versus natural justice. The best definition that I have been able to find on natural justice is by Reid and David. It is from a book entitled "Administrative Law and Practice." In Chapter 6 under the heading "Natural Justice", we find this definition:

Natural justice is a simple concept that may be defined completely in simple terms: natural justice is fair play, nothing more.

What we are asking for Canadians is fair play, Mr. Speaker, nothing more. What we are asking of the Government is exactly that, fair play. I say to Government Members, "Put action to your words."

The other charge that can be made is that we are foisting something on the Provinces. This Party obviously made quite a case of that during the constitutional debate that that was not our right. The argument can be made that property, proprietary, rights are under provincial jurisdiction and, therefore, why are we accepting this motion?

Since the passage of the Constitution, things have changed somewhat. Not only are proprietary rights, for instance, in land. I do not think we have to spell that out. There are others. For instance, there ar copyright laws which take us to the other jurisdiction and the division of powers. But after passage of the Constitution there is now a way to amend the Constitution. It is found in Section 38 of the Constitution. I will not quote it, but an amendment can be made by way of a proclamation and a resolution of the Senate and the House of Commons. That is the process we are starting today; that the House of Commons will pass the resolution, and we are hopeful Members of the other place will do the same, as will seven Provinces with 50 per cent of the population, whenever they have passed a similar resolution in their legislative assemblies, which will result in the amendment being enshrined in our Constitution.

We are pleased that Provinces latterly have come to the position we took in the Committee and that they themselves, including the Province of British Columbia, in a unanimous resolution, I understand—there is also one being proposed in the Manitoba Legislature by the PC Opposition—have agreed that we now enshrine property rights in the Constitution.

All we are asking today from the Government is fair play. All we are asking of the Government is to put action to its words. All we are asking of the Government is to restore the historical value that people have always placed on property. Lastly, we have even given the Government an opportunity to escape the evaluation of the people of Canada through an election by accepting the proposal I have made.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments.

Mr. Nielsen: Do you accept the offer?

Miss MacDonald: Is the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) not accepting our offer?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Debate. The Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon).

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) has put the resolution before the House this afternoon, but I would like to broaden to some extent the reasons why we in the Progressive Conservative Party now feel it is timely and essential that the offer made in the House by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) be accepted and supported by Members of all three Parties in the House.

I would like to refer to exhanges that took place in the House earlier this month. I shall quote from the undertaking which the Prime Minsiter made to Members present during Question Period on April 18, 1983. The Prime Minister's words will be found in Hansard at page 24576, as follows:

I will make an offer now which I hope that the Acting Leader of the Opposition will accept on behalf of his Party. If we can have all-Party agreement—I would not even say "all-Party agreement"—I would say that if we can have agreement of the Conservative Party to introduce an amendment on property rights and to pass it in 24 hours, I will undertake to do that, to convince the Minister of Justice that it would be done.

Later that day and in subsequent discussion, the Prime Minister even goaded Members of this Party to get on with making a commitment to accept the wording as first proposed by the Government during the summer of 1980 and subsequently by way of the Solicitor General's (Mr. Kaplan) acceptance of our amendment to the Constitution on January 23, 1981. The Prime Minister urged us, once again as recorded in Hansard at page 24578, by saying the following in reply to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen):

That is what is always lacking in the question of the Hon. Member—

The Hon. Member to whom he is referring is the Leader of the Opposition. The Prime Minister continued:

—any undertaking by his party to do anything except try to push the Government, but it never sticks its own commitment out. I would like to see it.

In other words, the Prime Minister was admonishing the Opposition and urging us to stick to our commitment. This is clearly what we have done in the House and it is embodied in the resolution before us today for debate.

Continuing with exchanges in the House, we note on page 24675 of Hansard for April 20, 1983, that in response to a request from the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition gave the wording of the amendment which had been included in the amendment put by our Party to the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution on Janaruy 23, 1981. That amendment contained the following provision:

Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with principles of natural justice.

In a paragraph further down on that same page of Hansard it is indicated that the Prime Minister responded by specifying the wording of the amendment to be accepted. It is identical to that put forward in our amendment on January 23, 1981, except for one slight change of one word, as pointed out by the Hon. Member for Provencher.

The amendment which the Prime Minister chose to accept reads as follows:

Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

If you look at the motion on the Order Paper today, Mr. Speaker, you will find that this Party has consented to the Prime Minister's slight modification, albeit with some reservations because, in our view, the term "natural" would imply that justice would be applied in a spirit of fair play. The Prime Minister's wish is that the word "fundamental" be substituted for the word "natural". This implies a more institutionalized interpretation of justice which we feel may abridge the interpretation of the clause. Nonetheless, this Party is prepared to accept, with that one slight modification, the amendment as proposed in the House on April 20 by the Prime Minister which is before the House today in the form of a motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Provencher. Reading from the Order Paper, it is an amendment to Section 7 of the Constitution Act, 1982, which reads:

Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

We want to find out today what is the precise position of the Liberal Party on this question. We do not want any more game playing. The Hon. Member for Provencher put forward a very simple message whereby, if the Government wishes to avoid a confidence vote on the issue on Monday afternoon, we are prepared to have introduced to the House on Monday morning the same motion in the name of the Government and to pass it within 24 hours, by the end of the sitting day next Monday.

The people of Canada want to know, without any further debate or public discussion for which the NDP are calling, where Members of Parliament stand on one of the two fundamental rights that first brought Canadians to this country. It brought our forefathers and various immigrants to this country. It took them West. I am referring to the benefit of grants of land to build their own futures, to practise their religion freely, to speak freely and to realize the highest and best use of that God given land to which they then could feel entitled. We want to know now, or by Monday when the vote is taken, whether the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party are prepared to extend to Canadians as free Canadians that right to ownership and enjoyment of property.

If we go back in history we find that not only the right to own and enjoy property is fundamental to Canadian history. As the Hon. Member for Provencher pointed out, it goes back to the time of King John, the Magna Carta and the constant struggle through history, which went hand in hand with the evolution of the parliamentary system and with the evolution of property rights and individual rights as a means of escape from monarchism, feudalism and the baronial entitlements, previous systems under which some citizens had many more rights, powers and privileges than others.

The principle of equality in a democratic society evolves around the fundamental right of individuals and citizens to be able to call things their own, to be able to say, "That is mine", whether it be a piece of land, a building, a business, an automobile, a diamond ring or the widow's lowly mite. We in this Party believe that the right to enjoy property is something that is inalienable and that Governments cannot abridge, except as provided for in the amendment, with certain provisions for justice to apply where the interests of the larger community might be offended against or restricted by the demands of a property owner to do something contrary to the well-being of those around that individual.

It is interesting that the Canadian Bill of Rights incorporated this provision. Mr. Diefenbaker had the foresight. In fact, he was even a little more generous. He said that these rights, including the right to own and enjoy property, should continue without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex. Human rights, including the right to own property, were thereby instated in the Canadian Bill of Rights. Because of the unusual flip-flop which occurred before the Special Committee subsequent to January 23, 1981, the Government opposite and the New Democratic Party conspired to constrict and limit those rights and to deny all Canadians that basic constitutional provision.

The New Democratic Party will argue that this is a provincial matter, but it is not solely a provincial matter. It is a matter of common law, which is as old as the parliamentary system. Now that the House, with the consent of the Senate and the approval of the British House of Commons, has adopted the Canadian Constitution Act, 1982, we have a provision to obtain consent of Provinces and to grant recognition of their autonomous right to engage in the process of constitutional revision through the amending formula, the very fair and proper amending formula which was established as a result of long days and months of debate. The amendment formula allows Provinces up to seven in number to be able to opt in to an amendment proposed by any other Province or by the federal Government. Such a constitutional amendment would not be adopted until seven Provinces, encompassing more than 50 per cent of the Canadian population, agreed along with the federal Government to such an amendment.

The point I am making is that there is nothing holding back Hon. Members of the House, if they truly believe in the significance and importance of the property rights amendment being incorporated in our Constitution. They can go ahead and not concern themselves with what the Premier of Alberta, the Premier of Ontario or the Premier of Manitoba might feel on the matter.

I would like to digress for a moment and just talk about what I feel the concept of ownership implies. Ownership really means that you have something. It does not matter whether or not there is a piece of paper that says it is yours. It is something, and if one needs to convert it to some other form of commodity, one can disperse it, sell it, trade it or barter it. When the Government tells us about these concepts of ownership couched in the phraseology of statism, such as our petroleum company, Petro-Canada, our airline, Air Canada, CBC or CDIC, it is perpetrating a hoax upon Canadians. We do not own anything merely because the Government says that it is sharing its generosity with all of us by establishing some Crown entitlement over a particular asset. We do not own it unless we have a piece of paper or an object which we can trade and barter to improve whatever it is we are trying to achieve in terms of the acquisition of our own resources or assets. We do not own Petro-Canada. We do not own Air Canada even though it was refinanced with some $600 million. The Government issued a whole lot of shares to itself, but those shares are non-negotiable and meaningless because Air Canada was already owned by the Government of Canada. It does not mean that because the people feel the quality of ownership they have the option to sell at their discretion.

Of course, there is a need for some over-riding powers in the interests of the community at large. That then leads to statutory provisions under provincial law for expropriation. Those expropriation powers have often been abused, particularly by the federal Government. One need only think about cases involving airport lands at Mirabel, Vancouver International Airport and Pickering. There are certain cases in my own riding regarding expropriation for the purpose of dike construction. Where a Government has the power of expropriation, it also has the power to send out a land agent to assess the worth of the property and then to stonewall and delay any action for years. In one case in my riding it has been going on for 25 years because the people whose land was being expropriated for airport purposes did not happen to be good Liberals. Senator Arthur Laing and a few others owned a lot of other interests in that area. The claims of these particular individuals were held up in the courts for 25 years and are still held up in the courts with a 1955 assessment of $5,000 being offered for their land. Appeals are not being heard because the court system has not chosen to expedite the matter properly.

What I am saying is that the courts of Canada, in provincial and federal jurisdiction and under the direction of Governments as sometimes happens, although it is not supposed to, can in fact interfere in the expropriation process and ensure that citizens are not entitled to their right and proper due under the law.

This is one very important reason why this right has to be enshrined in the Constitution of Canada. I saw a constituent lose his family, his business, virtually his life, stand off the police with a gun and fight a municipality for five years, finally to be vindicated because his property had been expropriated improperly. You could never restore to that man the loss of his wife, family, health and all his financial resources because of the arrogant and ruthless way Governments set out to expropriate his land to build a dike.

There are provisions in this amendment, provincial statutes and provincial Bills of Rights, including that of the Province of Alberta, for these types of expropriations, to ensure that they are conducted in a spirit of fairness and before the courts of Canada, assuming that the courts are operating in the best interests of all citizens. To suggest that somehow the inclusion of this amendment would abridge the powers of Government is to evade the central issue and to make excuses for certain political philosophies in Canada according to which Canadians should not be granted the right to control and enjoy their own property. We should get to the point on this matter.

With reference to British Columbia, if I might be permitted another moment or two, during the constitutional debate it was made quite clear by the Leader of the New Democratic Party what was the position of his Party on this issue. It has not changed today, although a Premier friend of his lost an election overwhelmingly in the Province of Saskatchewan because the people in that Province disagreed with the stand he took on this issue.

I would like to quote what the Leader of the New Democratic Party said on January 25, 1981. That was the very key weekend when the Leader of the New Democratic Party induced the Government to flip-flop and to withdraw its support for the property rights amendment that our Party proposed at that time. The Leader of the New Democratic Party said then:

> There's no way we can accept the constitutional resolution with that amendment in it.
> The NDP fears the amendment could not only prevent provincial legislation restricting foreign owners—

If I might interject, you can get around this.

> —but could hinder Governments wishing to nationalize industries as Saskatchewan did with potash and as Quebec is attempting with asbestos.
> The Conservative amendment flies in the face of what we're attempting to do in the resource sector . . . tightening up management control—

That is really the nub of it. There is a certain political philosophy in this country that advocates mixed enterprise and distrusts and disregards the fundamental and historical role the private sector has played in creating wealth and opportunity for all Canadians. That other political mind-set is loathe to grant Canadian citizens the right to ownership and enjoyment of property.

This is why the debate today and the vote on Monday is so crucial. We want to find where the Liberal Party and its Leader, who is often put in the same boat with my friends to my left, truly stand on this issue. We want no more game-playing. We want to find out if they will support this very important initiative.

There is an important provincial election under way at the present time in the Province of British Columbia. The Leader of the NDP in British Columbia has now flip-flopped on his policies on mining to the extent that he is trying to cosy up to the mining industries which employ so many B.C. people whom he devastated so miserably between 1972 and 1974 by weaseling away from the property rights amendment question.

His adversaries, the other free enterprise Party which presently governs in the Province of British Columbia, was one of the first provincial Governments to bring forward and pass in its Legislature the same property rights amendment that we are debating here today. Therefore, we must put that in context.

The former NDP Premier of British Columbia is now trying to say he is all for property rights. It will be interesting to see what his colleagues from British Columbia who sit to our left have to say about that. One of his colleagues from Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) spoke in the House at the time of the constitutional resolution. I do not have the exact quote, but I will paraphrase him. He said it was important that the question of resource ownership be maintained and that property ownership be maintained under Government control because it was the objective of Governments, to which he would subscribe to have the power to acquire property and to nationalize industry and enterprise if it were deemed to be in the public interest.

The New Democratic Party in a recent policy paper, discussed and approved by that Party's branch in British Columbia, passed resolutions which essentially resolve that the powers of control over the mineral industry be abridged and over-ridden by the creation of a Crown-owned minerals marketing corporation by a provincial agency which would control the export marketing of coal. They would use a last-resort provision if private companies would not comply with their desire to stockpile or subsidize, that in such cases the Government, as a last resort, should have the power to recapture for the Crown the mineral rights where such a company refuses or ignores offers of such help.

The point I want to make is that that type of threat and intimidation against the private sector and the statist socialist philosophy that it reflects represent a genuine danger to Canadians. We have seen examples of it in the attitude and practices of the federal Government through the National Energy Program and its use of expropriation powers. We saw it in British Columbia under a previous New Democratic Party Government.

We want to find out between today and Monday where the New Democratic Party stands on this important fundamental issue. They cannot say they want to wait for the court of public opinion and hold public hearings. Their caucus came to a conclusion of that sort on Wednesday. We want to know where they stand on this issue. We know where the public stands; 95 per cent of the Canadian people agree with this Party on this motion. They want to see it reinstated in the Constitution of Canada so that we can get on with the important economic matters before us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, answers, comments.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I refrained from rising after the address of the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) because I wanted to give the Members of the New Democratic Party the opportunity to put their position squarely on the record. I thought we needed it because the state of play with respect to the offer which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made last week is that the Official Opposition has agreed to a one-day debate, culminating in a vote on this very important question, and the New Democratic Party has not yet given us a reply as to its position on this. We have been waiting for their reply to try to determine how to manage the business of the House effectively.

I am pleased to enter this debate to endorse the idea of an amendment to the Constitution which would provide better protection to the property rights of Canadians. I regret, and it is rather tragic, that the Official Opposition has put this proposed amendment to the Constitution in such a form that it is impossible for Members on this side of the House to support it. They have put it in the form of a motion of non-confidence. Obviously it is not possible for this side to support it. The Hon.

Member for Provencher said the motion had to be passed by the Senate and the House. However, he posed it under a Standing Order that assures that if the motion were carried, Parliament would be immediately dissolved and, of course, there would be no consideration by the Senate of this important question.

• (1250)

The spurious device that he has offered us of somehow avoiding this question on Monday is not possible under the rules. If this motion comes to a vote today, it will be deferred until three o'clock on Monday. At three o'clock on Monday, whatever else the business of the House may be at that time, the vote will take priority. The greatest tragedy of this, with Members of the Opposition so shamelessly playing politics, is that without unanimous consent, they prevent us from considering this question again in this session.

Mr. Speaker, let me refer you to page 328 of Bourinot's. Bourinot's reads:

> It is, however, an ancient rule of parliament that "no question or motion can regularly be offered if it is substantially the same with one on which the judgment of the house has already been expressed during the current session". The old rule of parliament reads: "That a question being once made, and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again, but must stand as a judgment of the house".

Mr. Epp: That is why you should introduce it first.

Mr. MacGuigan: The Hon. Member says that that is why we should introduce it first. But this has been introduced first. This has been introduced before we could obtain a reply from the Members of the New Democratic Party.

To continue to quote from page 329 of Bourinot's, it is stated there that:

> —when a question has once been negatived, it is not allowable to propose it again, even if the form and words of the motion are different from those of the previous motion.

Turning to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Mr. Speaker, reading from paragraph 416, it states:

> (1) An old rule of Parliament reads: "That a question being once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again but must stand as the judgment of the House." Unless such a rule were in existence, the time of the House might be used in the discussion of a motion of the same nature and contradictory decisions would be sometimes arrived at in the course of the same session.

Beauchesne then quotes Bourinot.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that these rules make it impossible to carry out the device suggested by the Hon. Members because after three o'clock on Monday when this is voted on, this question, without unanimous consent, will not be dealt with again in the House during this present session.

I do not know why the Opposition would have chosen this course. I can only speculate that it wanted to put the Members of the New Democratic Party on the spot before the election in British Columbia takes place next week. Perhaps that is what motivates the Members of the Opposition. Perhaps the Official Opposition thinks it can persuade the Canadian people that, because Members of this side of the House have to vote against this as a matter of non-confidence, we are not in favour of the substance of the motion. If that is their motivation, the Members opposite should know that the people of Canada will see through that device as well.

Whatever their intention, it is quite clear that the Members opposite are playing politics. Whether they are playing politics to get at the NDP or to get at our Party, or to get at both, they are playing politics with this issue that they consider to be so sacred, this issue that could have been dealt with effectively during this session of Parliament which they, by taking this parliamentary tactic, have now made impossible.

Mr. McKnight: Do it on Monday. You still have the opportunity to do it on Monday.

Mr. MacGuigan: If the Hon. Member does not understand that this cannot be done on Monday because this motion has to be voted on, which will preclude dealing with any other motion on the same subject, then he should consider this matter further.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I suppose we know now why the Opposition is so sensitive about this question. For one thing, it would wish to avoid the discussion of any other constitutional subjects. Let me refer to the controversy that is going on within the Opposition Party on the question of opting out for Provinces with or without compensation. Mr. Brian Mulroney, one of the candidates for the Conservative Party leadership, says of the views of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark):

> "To try to curry the favor of the Parti Québécois organization during a leadership campaign is dangerous to the candidate who does it, it's dangerous for the future of the party he seeks to lead and it's dangerous to the future of the united country he seeks to govern".

Mr. Mulroney said that this week.

The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead is quoted as replying:

> "Perhaps one of the disabilities of not having served in the House is that a man is not fully acquainted with the positions the party took."

Well, I wonder what the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead would say about the positions taken by the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble), for instance, who takes the same position as does Mr. Mulroney in this debate within their Party. Of course, they would not want to have a discussion like that before Members of the House.

Even more than that, obviously the Members of the Opposition are pretty embarrassed about this situation. The Hon. Member for Provencher said that his Party has always at every stage been in favour of the inclusion of property rights in the protections of the Constitution. Well, that may have a certain logic, but it has no reality, because in fact they opposed the inclusion of all guarantees in the Constitution. They are Johnny-come-latelies as far as the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is concerned. They are trying to jump on the bandwagon now. They say they want the protection of property. They did not want the protection of anything, and it is only because this Government stood firm that we now have a Charter and that there is even the possibility of considering the inclusion of property rights.

There is obviously no question of principle, taking the Opposition at its present position, dividing the Government and the Official Opposition when it comes to the constitutional protection of property rights. As recently as April 18, the Prime Minister made it clear in the House that he was prepared to introduce a motion for this purpose if the Opposition would agree to limiting the time for debate so that it could fit within the heavy schedule of the House. The Prime Minister also delivered to the Leader of the Opposition the text of a resolution for this purpose. The Leader of the Opposition obviously liked it because his Party has now introduced the same resolution but within a context of—

An Hon. Member: You are trying to make it sound as if it were your idea.

Mr. MacGuigan: I can say to the Members opposite that the text of the resolution was indeed our idea, but they have now introduced it within the context of non-confidence, which makes it impossible for Members of this Government to vote for it.

I do not think that this Government or this Party need any lessons from the Hon. Members opposite in the virtues of property or the importance of providing constitutional protection for it. If Members of the Official Opposition really want to promote the constitutional entrenchement of property rights, instead of bringing this motion here, they should talk to their political friends in the various Provinces who have consistently opposed such entrenchment in the past and obviously have very little enthusiasm for it today.

As for the Government, the present Prime Minister, as early as 1968 when he was Minister of Justice, strongly advocated the adoption of a constitutional Charter of Rights. In preparation for the Constitutional Conference of February, 1968, he published a booklet entitled "A Canadian Charter of Human Rights", which made the arguments for having certain rights entrenched in the Constitution. He also suggested a number of rights that should be entrenched, and among those was:

> The right of the individual to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property.

That was in 1968, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, a year later, as Prime Minister, he published The Constitution and the People of Canada, in which he again emphasized the importance of entrenching a Charter of Rights in the Constitution. I shall quote, if I may, what he said at the time:

> To enshrine a right in a constitutional charter is to make an important judgement, to give to that right of the individual a higher order of value than the right of government to infringe it. The proposal of the Government of Canada embodies those rights most commonly protected by legislation in Canada, or in the constitutions and laws of other modern democracies whose ideals we share.

In the same document, he goes on to specify the rights that should be included in this Charter, and I note the right of the individual to use and enjoy property, with the assurance that there will be no deprivation of property except in accordance with proper legal procedures.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, before we rose for lunch I was speaking about the position that the Prime Minister took in 1968 in favour of inserting protection for the enjoyment of property in the Charter of Rights that he was proposing.

For three years, from 1968 to 1971, the Prime Minister and the Government argued strenuously for the entrenchment of all these rights in the Constitution. In this they were opposed by many of the provincial Governments, most notably the Conservative Government, up to 1969, in Manitoba, the home Province of the sponsor of the motion. When a successor Government to that Progressive Conservative Government took power in the late 1970s, it followed exactly the same policy of opposition to the Charter of Rights. It finally became apparent that an agreement was impossible at that time on an extended Charter of Rights.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that there was very little talk of constitutional reform during the 70's. In 1978, however, the Prime Minister once again took the initiative when he tabled in the House Bill C-60, the Constitution Act of 1978. The purpose of this Bill was basically to start the debate on the Constitution. In fact, it gave rise to very lively discussions both in Parliament and within the context of federal-provincial negotiations. Bill C-60 contained a Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which guaranteed the right to use and enjoy property, without being deprived thereof except in accordance with proper legal procedures. The right recognized in this Bill would have come into effect for matters under federal jurisdiction but would not become effective in the provinces without the prior consent of the provincial legislatures. The Bill also provided for the possibility of enshrining the Charter in the Constitution once it had been ratified by a sufficient number of provinces.

[English]

We know pretty well what happened to that proposal. Once again the Provinces made strenuous objections, particularly the Conservative Government of Manitoba.

Once again agreement was made impossible on the entrenchment of property rights. After the Quebec referendum in May 1980, the Government again took an initiative. There were meetings throughout the summer of 1980 of Ministers and officials, and in July, 1980, the federal Government put forward a working draft of a charter which proposed the guarantee as follows:

> Everyone has the right to the use and enjoyment of property, individually or in association with others, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with law and for reasonable compensation.

This proposal went on to try to reassure provincial Governments by saying that such a guarantee would not preclude the enactment of laws, saying: Controlling or restricting the use of property in the public interest or securing against property the payment of taxes or duties or other levies or penalties.

• (1410)

Although this proposal was carefully worded to try to meet the concerns expressed by provincial representatives, a majority of provincial Governments continued adamantly to oppose the inclusion of property rights in any charter.

So, Mr. Speaker, when the federal Government went to the first Minister's conference in September, 1980, to seek agreement on a package of constitutional changes, it put forward a revised draft of the Charter which did not include property rights because it had become apparent that a Charter which did include them had no chance to be accepted by the Provinces. Similarly, the Government introduced a resolution in October, 1980, that again followed the same pattern, but it was still hoped that a text could be found which would be acceptable to the Provinces. Therefore, a Charter of Rights and Freedoms was proposed in a weaker form than the Government would have preferred because it was trying to meet the objections of the provincial Governments and build a concensus through the work of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution.

Property rights were left out not because the Government was opposed to the constitutional entrenchment of property rights, but because it could not find a national consensus in which a majority of Provinces would join in the entrenchment of property rights. That national consensus never emerged during the proceedings of the Special Joint Committee, and in fact it is not clear that it has yet emerged. But the Prime Minister has made it clear that he is prepared once again to take the initiative in proposing a constitutional amendment to entrench property rights and once again to invite the Provinces to give their support to this important change by submitting it for the approval of their respective legislatures.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, is one of political mischief of a destructive character.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: If the Opposition had wanted to be politically mischievous in a constructive way, it could have taken this up with provincial Governments of the same political stripe and urged them to support this kind of resolution.

Mr. Lewis: We trusted the Prime Minister.

Mr. MacGuigan: It would have been better had they been patient for few more days to enable the Government to bring forward the same proposal in the form of a motion to amend the Constitution. But by having done this today, Mr. Speaker, they have prevented this from happening. They give us specious arguments for meaningless procedures on Monday which they say would allow us to have this voted on in a different context. Once the question is put at 4.45 this afternoon, there is no way that this vote can be avoided except with unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Siddon: Put it to the test.

Mr. MacGuigan: The action the Conservatives have taken today puts us at the mercy of the unanimous consent of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to give unanimous consent that this motion not be treated as a vote of non-confidence in the Government. If the Opposition were to make that kind of proposal and if they can get the agreement of the Members of the NDP, then obviously we are in a different ballgame. But they did not think of any of this beforehand. Instead of following the regular procedures, which would have allowed us to proceed without the necessity for unanimous consent, by moving this motion they know—

Mr. Epp: Methinks he doth protest too much.

Mr. MacGuigan: —and we all know that the NDP is not going to give unanimous consent.

Mr. Siddon: Let's find out.

Mr. MacGuigan: We will find out. If they can get unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, we will be pleased to treat this as other than a motion of non-confidence.

Mr. Epp: We will accept.

Mr. MacGuigan: The Opposition did not make that proposal this morning; they made a specious proposal, and I am glad they are now undertaking to get the consent of the Members of the NDP to the present proposal. Political mischief, Mr. Speaker, of this destructive kind is hard to justify in a matter of such importance. They need not have done this. All they had to do was to wait a few days—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: —when the motion would have been brought forward.

Mr. Bosley: We have been waiting for three years.

Mr. MacGuigan: As soon we had a reply from the NDP as to whether they would agree to a one-day debate, at that point the motion would have been brought forward. But they were to play politics with it. They have debased this issue and the cause they pretend to support.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You have never done anything like that.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, so that I am totally clear, is the Minister saying that the way in which he will support property rights is if he gets an agreement that the matter does not matter? In other words, if he gets agreement from both sides of the House that it will not be treated as a non-confidence matter, will his Members get up this afternoon and vote for what they say they believe in, that is, property rights?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had been here earlier he might have understood the matter. The point is that his Party has proposed a motion of non-confidence in the Government based on this clause. We on this side of the House obviously cannot support a motion of non-confidence in the Government. If they are prepared to put it in a different context, then obviously we would want to support the content of the motion. We are the ones who introduced it; it is our motion as far as the content is concerned.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, just so that we are perfectly clear about this, if the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) will come into the House on Monday morning at 11 a.m. with the same motion exactly, the Prime Minister's motion, and if the Minister of Justice will propose that as a Government motion, we will grant unanimous consent to that vote being held either immediately then or immediately prior to the recorded division on this non-confidence motion. Then, I submit to the Minister of Justice, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will have what he claims he wanted, that is his motion; he will have had one day's debate and the question of property rights will be enshrined in the Constitution.

Is the Minister of Justice prepared to come into the House on Monday morning at 11 o'clock, ask for unanimous consent and take that route?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. House Leader of the Opposition still apparently does not seem to understand.

Mr. Epp: He understands perfectly.

Mr. MacGuigan: This is the same kind of nonsensical proposal put forward this morning. Once the question is put this afternoon, as a result of citations I gave from Bourinot and Beauchesne's, there is no way for us to avoid a vote except on the basis of unanimous consent. Now it is not for us to move unanimous consent. The Opposition has moved a motion declaring non-confidence in the Government. They are the movers of this motion. If they want to propose that it should no longer—

Mr. Siddon: You are weaseling.

Mr. MacGuigan: —that this motion should no longer be interpreted as the rules require, then we are prepared to agree to that.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice referred the House to some citations. I would ask him if he has considered Citation 451 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which reads:

> Sometimes the House may not be prepared to rescind a resolution, but may be willing to modify its judgment by considering and agreeing to another resolution relating to the same subject.

Would the Minister not agree that, using that Citation, if the Government does not accept what I suggest is a reasonable proposition as put forward, we might apply citation 451 of Beauchesne's and achieve the same goal?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, obviously the House can do anything by unanimous consent. Therefore, if the Opposition is prepared to say that this motion of non-confidence is not a motion of non-confidence, we are prepared to accept that and have a vote on just the substance of the motion.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has made a proposal. I believe he has done so in good faith. He would like to see the matter resolved, as would I. That being the case, to make sure that we do not debate and therefore have difficulty in terms of the exact procedure on the floor of the House, I am sure my House Leader and others would be willing to sit down with him and possibly we can resolve it this afternoon.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I think we all appreciated the lesson in history and the intensity with which the Minister engaged in debate and made his point. I only have one very simple question for the Minister, irrespective of the technical matters we have discussed and whether or not agreement can be reached to move this matter quickly through the House. I would like to ask the Minister if he personally favours the inclusion in the Constitution of Canada of the phrase "Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person and enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof". Does the Minister of Justice personally favour the inclusion of that phrase in the Constitution? I would like a simple yes or no answer.

• (1420)

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what my personal preferences have to do with this, but I am certainly stating my personal preference as well as the Government's position when I say that not only are we prepared to see the inclusion of the enjoyment of property in the constitutional protections in the Charter but, as well, it was actually our idea. We were the one who brought it forward, and they agreed to our draft.

Mr. Siddon: Let us get on with it.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I certainly remember the Liberal Party voting against it in the constitutional hearings and here in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Nonsense.

Mr. Hawkes: I would like to bring to the Minister's attention the fact that under the British North America Act, a jurisdiction is in fact a property held in right of the people who live in a particular Province. When we speak of provincial jurisdiction, we are speaking of provincial property in the broadest sense of the term "property". For instance, under the British North America Act, land and the control and use of land falls under provincial jurisdiction, and certainly that is in the sense of property. When we were forced to vote in this Chamber, we were forced to vote on an amending formula which did not include full financial compensation for Provinces which chose to retain their existing jurisdiction. As I am asking the Minister a question, I hope he is not leaving the Chamber.

The Conservative Party, federally, and eight provincial Premiers wanted an amending formula which would give them full compensation if they opted out of a jurisdictional switch. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Liberal Party would not allow that to come before the House of Commons in the form in which the Constitution was finally passed.

Given this newfound concern for property, can we have a commitment from the Government that the full compensation clause, which eight Premiers wanted and which this Party wanted to protect provincial jurisdiction and the property rights of people in Provinces, will be included? Can we have the Minister's assurance that he will bring it back to the House so that very important aspect of property will be protected for the future?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I thought the Hon. Member was making a speech; I did not realize that it was a question. That is why I was leaving for a moment for further consultation with my colleagues. However, now that I appreciate that it is a question, I would have to question, in turn, the position of his Party. He said that his Party is in favour of the right to full compensation in the case of opting out. In that case, I wonder what it is that the right hon. gentleman from Yellowhead and Mr. Mulroney are disputing and what it is that the Hon. Member for York North is disputing with the Hon. Member for Yellowhead. I understood that his Party was entirely split and that the two chief leadership contenders were split on this very question. Therefore, I do not know how he can say what his Party's position is. We do not know who his Leader is, so how do we know what his Party's position is?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I think he doth equivocate too much.

An Hon. Member: We have a Leader.

Mr. Fisher: Are we dealing with the western rump or the eastern rump?

Mr. MacGuigan: Our position on this matter is well known. We do not favour the right of opting out with full compensation. We did believe that we had a better amending formula. We had to give way on that in order to get the Charter, the Charter which our friends on the other side did nothing to get. They say that they had always wanted property rights in the Constitution. I do not doubt that they wanted them as much as they wanted other rights, and that was not at all.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order on this matter of considerable interest to the people of Canada. One concern of our Party, among others, is that the process which the House has embarked upon is a complete abomination in terms of a traditional view of constitutional change.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I hear the constitutional critic for the Conservative Party, the same man who, not long ago, argued that it was very important for committees of the House to hear constitutional amendments proposed, to hear—

Mr. Epp: We've done that.

Mr. Broadbent: —witnesses. As the critic for our Party will point out in just a few minutes, in the last 48 hours all kinds of groups across Canada have expressed deep concern about this matter, have expressed the desire to appear before a commitee.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): This is a speech.

Mr. Lewis: Will he come to a point of order?

Mr. Broadbent: If the two other Parties in the House are quite serious about the legitimate constitutional changing process in this country, involving some seriousness, some sober consideration of the issues involved, then I think they would agree that we should deal with the motion on the subject matter, that the matter would then be referred to a House committee, and that the committe would then listen to witnesses and report back to the House. There would be no expediting of the process, nor would there be any delay. It would be the appropriate thing to do concerning a constitutional amendment.

The spokesperson for the Conservative Party, its House Leader, has made reference to Beauchesne's Citation 451, under which it is possible to substitute a motion . If we could receive unanimous consent to do that, and I have one which is one the same subject matter and which would enable a committee of this House to deal with the issue, then all Parties would have an opportunity to express their views, to listen to witnesses and then to vote.

I give the assurances of my Party that we are not interested in delaying or expediting. We are respecting what we think ought to be done in terms of the proper rules of constitutional change. Therefore, I turn this issue right around to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), who ought to be concerned about this matter, and to the Conservative Party which, if it lived up to its name, in the authentic conservative tradition would not act with haste when making a serious change.

Mr. Siddon: It's been three years.

Mr. Broadbent: I would now urge the Hon. Member who is blabbering away to read Edmund Burke some day.

Mr. Siddon: Do a little polling.

Mr. Broadbent: In any case, on my part it is a very serious proposal. It could be done very quickly. I now simply await the responses of both the Minister of Justice and the Conservative Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair has a small difficulty: in the ordinary course of events, and pursuant to the Standing Orders, following the speech by some particular Hon. Member, in this case the Minister of Justice, a period of ten minutes is accorded for questions, answers and comments. I recognized the Leader of the New Democratic Party and did so, not so much because I accepted the idea that he was raising a point of order but, rather, because it was my view that the ten-minute period could be extended slightly to permit him to enter that period.

If there is to be a point of order, I would naturally ask the Hon. Member for Oshawa if he would state his point of order. If, on the other hand, he wants to continue the debate on behalf of his Party, then the Chair is quite obviously prepared to recognize him for the purpose of speaking on the subject matter of debate, and that would permit him to move any motion he desired. However, the Chair has noticed that some negotiations or discussions seem to be taking place outside the Chamber and some are taking place inside. I can only be responsible for those taking place inside.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), on a point of order.

Mr. Lachance: I just want to point out again, Mr. Speaker, that it is not customary to discuss on the floor of the House aspects of the Standing Orders concerning the business of the House. I would like to suggest that perhaps representatives of the parties could, in the two or three hours remaining today, find some way to meet and discuss these propositions so that a proposal could be made before the House, which could then dispose of it, rather than having such discussions or negotiations on the floor of the House.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think that the Hon. Member for Rosemont has made his point. Perhaps even better than—very well, perhaps better than the Chair has.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fennell: Be careful.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I wanted to avoid going too much into the problem.

Mr. Epp: We never do that in committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If there are discussions taking place outside the Chamber, the Chair can in no way have any influence on that. If Hon. Members want to have discussions within the Chamber, that is perfectly acceptable. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Oshawa, but at this point I think I must recognize him in debate unless, of course, he wishes to state his point of order.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is a well known tradition in the House that Members can rise on a point of order at any time to address a possible new concern that might obtain unanimous support.

I made a suggestion and I noticed that the Conservative House Leader seemed to be showing some interest in the proposition, if I understand the situation correctly. The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) is nodding his head and showing some interest in the proposition as well.

With unanimous consent, I wonder if we could either continue the debate or suspend it for five minutes. We in this Party are open to either option. We could continue the debate and have another speaker rise to speak. We would be very happy to do that, and I see there is agreement on that process. We can continue with the debate and discuss this possibility in the meantime.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I believe I should seek the views of the House. Would there be agreement to the Chair suspending debate for ten minutes, or shall I recognize another Hon. Member?

Some Hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Then we are in the process of debate. The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in the course of my speech I will introduce the motion that the Leader of our Party wishes to present. It is a proposal that would allow for a proper method of dealing with the constitutional amendment, and it is one that does not keep the public in the dark. It is a proposal that allows for those who have deep concerns about the process of constitutional amendments in this country to appear before a committee of the House and explain why they are in favour of or against the inclusion of a property rights amendment in the Constitution, or perhaps to suggest a wording for the amendment which would make the entrenchment of the right of property in the Constitution more acceptable. At the same time it would allow Government and other individuals protection from any abuse of property rights.

The NDP has always supported the right of Canadians to own their own homes and family farms. Home ownership and family farms are central features of the Canadian way of life. They are privileges enjoyed by Members of this caucus who own their own homes and their own farms. They enjoy that ownership of property. Throughout the history of the CCF and the NDP we have continually supported legislation which secured these rights against threats of high interest rates, the ruthlessness of banks and the uncertainty of the market.

The present proposal is of the upmost importance and demands the full attention of the House and the country. As a result of using this particular process, the Conservatives are doing a disservice to this debate. They are asking the House and the Canadian people to pass our first amendment to the new Canadian Constitution after a four-hour debate. They are saying to Canadians who are concerned about this issue that they have no right to come before a House of Commons committee to express their concerns. They are denying Canadians the right to petition the House of Commons with regard to their concerns because this motion will already have been dealt with. In the name of property rights they are denying Canadians every other liberty that they should have and do have in the Constitution. They have become the Party of property and not the Party of the people.

The legal definition of property is not that of a clump of land with grass on it. The legal definition of property is much more than that. The Conservatives are making a mockery of justice and truth when they rise in the House and pretend that the ownership of a family farm or house is being threatened without this provision being entrenched in the Constitution.

If we are to protect Canadians, we in the House of Commons must allow them to speak to their Members in the House of Commons and give us their opinions and concerns. Any attempt by the Official Opposition and any attempt by the Government to rush this through the House of Commons without that public participation will not be supported by this Party.

I find the whole procedure that has been used by the Conservative Party somewhat abhorrent. They have introduced a non-confidence motion which, by its nature, requires the Government to vote against it. Its purpose is basically to embarrass the Government. Our Party also has no confidence in the Government. We could take the narrow view that the only reason we would support the motion of the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) is so as to oppose the Government. That would be an option we could follow and it may be a consideration in the final vote.

I am more concerned that, by introducing this motion at this time, the Conservative Party is denying us in the House of Commons the right to deal with this matter again during the remaining part of this session. The rules of the House are quite clear that once it has been discussed and voted upon the first time, it cannot be reintroduced, even with new wording. I suggest that it is a plot against property for the Conservative Party to introduce this motion in this manner. The House is being subjected to political games, perhaps to help the Socreds win an election or lose an election in British Columbia. Certainly the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) gave a speech which had nothing to do with property rights but was strictly a paid advertisement for the Socred Party in that Province.

We are concerned about property rights. We want to ensure that if we pass a new constitutional amendment, our first amendment, that it be one of which Canadians are proud and can understand and use. We should not pass a constitutional amendment in four hours for the political benefit of one group or another in terms of what the immediate political expediency of the issue is. It is a matter that will not only affect us all, but all of our children, our grandchildren and Canadians for generations to come. A four-hour debate on this matter is completely unacceptable.

We are concerned about the contents of this amendment as well. If this amendment is passed as it is, will it prevent us from passing laws prohibiting foreign corporations from owning foreign land? Will it mean that data banks can collect all types of information on individual Canadians and be allowed to sell that information because it is their property? Will it mean that legislation cannot be passed to prevent foreclosures because the mortgage is the property of the bank? Will this prevent provincial legislatures from passing laws to protect the environment, enforce minimum wages or for the proper recreational use of lands? Will it prevent legislatures from reforming family law because it may affect property? Those are all questions that we have and which demand answers when we discuss property rights.

• (1440)

Many groups in our society have expressed concern about the quick passage of this legislation. Many of the speakers earlier somehow implied it was the New Democratic Party of Saskatchewan which stopped this from being in the present Constitution of this country. But let me read from the Alberta Hansard for April 19, 1983 the words of the Minister of Federal and Intergovernmental Affairs, Mr. Horsman. When talking about the Alberta Government's position he said:

> —the debate made clear that the Government of Alberta's position is that the constitutional responsibility for property and civil rights being that of the Provinces, should properly remain there and not be entrenched in the Charter of Rights and thus become subject in any way to the control of the federal Government—

Mr. Siddon: That is their prerogative.

Mr. Murphy: The same Minister for the Alberta Government said, with reference to the last constitutional conference held basically on aboriginal rights, the following:

> It is true that the case for inclusion was put forward by the Province of British Columbia at those meetings, but no extensive discussion took place relative to that matter. After a brief survey of the various Provinces, it was clear that there was very little support by other Provinces for inclusion of the subject of property rights in the Charter.

I think the point to be made is this. There are seven Conservative provincial Governments, including the Province of Ontario—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It speaks well for the country.

Mr. Murphy: —and there are enough provincial Governments under Conservative control that they can initiate and get the required provincial consent. They can do that. But they are not doing that. The Alberta Government is saying that there is not that desire among the Provinces. Those are Conservative Provinces.

Let me speak to my other concern, Mr. Speaker, the concern that the public is being left out. We have received, as my Leader indicated earlier, telegrams and letters from the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, from other groups, such as the Ottawa Council for Low Income Support Services, from Legal Aid Societies and from Tenant Associations, which ask only one thing. They say that this amendment to the Constitution requires public input, parliamentary debate, before it is passed.

This motion is something that has resulted from a quick exchange between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen), a high noon scenario over short time in the House of Commons when they threatened each other and called each other chicken, if you want to use that terminology, in order to pass this amendment quickly. If we had more notice there would be more groups in our society who would like to speak out against quick, undebated passage of this amendment.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Where do they stand on property rights?

Mr. Murphy: Those groups cannot be denied their request by this House, Mr. Speaker.

I see that my time is almost up. Therefore, I move:

That the motion be amended to strike the words after "Now therefore the House of Commons resolves" and substitute therefore the following:

"That it favours a constitutional amendment to entrench the principle of the right of Canadians to own their own homes and farms; that such entrenchment in the Constitution must embody wording which does not create new problems for Canadians; for example, for provincial governments and others who wish to ensure that the ownership of recreational land be restricted to Canadian citizens, or that good farmland be restricted to agricultural use only, or that labour rights, native peoples' rights or environmental protection not be jeopardized.

To prepare the ground for such an amendment, the House of Commons now resolves that the subject matter of propety rights be referred to a committee consisting of representatives of all parties in the House of Commons, which committee will hold hearings to ascertain the views of interested groups and individuals."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have, of course, heard the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). I want to indicate to him that I have the most serious reservations as to whether or not such an amendment is acceptable. I will not give a ruling immediately because it may be that other Members may want to contribute to the subject or that there will simply not be enough time for further consideration.

In the first case, my objection would be that the two different paragraphs are contradictory to one another. My second objection is that it is not logically coherent in terms of the resolution put forward in the name of the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). What I have said serves only as a warning to the Hon. Member. In due course I may want to see whether or not other Hon. Members want to contribute to the subject. I will at that time give a ruling as to whether or not the amendment is in order. In the meantime, as a courtesy to the Hon. Member and to the House, the Chair will find no objection if Hon. Members wish to continue debate including the proposed amendment.

Are there any questions, answers or comments?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could a copy of that motion be circulated immediately among Members so that we may be in a position to assist you if called upon?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member will see that I have just arranged that. I think we can ask the Chief of Pages to see that copies be distributed to all Members in the House at the moment and a further supply made available.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is important to me, important indeed, that you give an indication as to when you will give your ruling on the legitimacy of the amendment. By way of a point of order I would like to put forward an argument that substantively changes the fundamental motion that we have and, therefore, it is not an amendment but a substitution of motions. If you are hearing those points of order now, I would want to put forward an argument. If not, how will we know at what time you will be hearing arguments, or are you signalling now when you will be hearing those arguments?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I appreciate the point made by the Hon. Member. I would suggest that the Chair take the motion under consideration for the duration of the questions, answers and comments period which relates to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) together with that of the next speech made by an Hon. Member. At the end of that period, the Chair will give a ruling on the proposed amendment. That, I think, is something in the order of half an hour, when people will have time to consider it. The Chair is well served.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). I note that he dwelt at some length about the position of the Province of Alberta. That was interesting. Of course he realizes that each Province would have an opportunity to make its own determination of its position on this issue. His role is that of a federal Member of Parliament representing a constituency in the Province of Manitoba.

I would ask the Hon. Member for Churchill, because it is closer to his own heart I am sure, whether he agrees with the position taken by the former Premier of the Province of British Columbia, who is presently the Leader of the Opposition in British Columbia, when he and the New Democratic Party caucus agreed unanimously with the Government of the Province of British Columbia in adopting a resolution to amend the Constitution of Canada which contains wording identical to that of the resolution before the House today. Does the Hon. Member for Churchill agree with the Leader of the New Democratic Party in the Province of British Columbia who, with his caucus, gave unanimous support to a resolution to amend Clause 7 of the Constitution of Canada containing exactly the same wording as the motion before us today?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, in response to the question of the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon), it should be very obvious from the amendment which the Speaker has in front of him at the present time that we have presented a motion on property rights supporting the entrenchment of property rights, but also allowing the public of Canada a chance to participate. My Leader has already expressed in the House our view that we are not asking for many drawn-out hearings, thus preventing the debate from ending or preventing the matter from coming to a vote. We are saying that we must ensure, when we pass this first constitutional amendment, that it is practical and can be used, not something rushed through the House after a short four-hour debate.

• (1450)

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary question for the Hon. Member for Churchill. The Hon. Member has conceded that he does not agree with the support given by the former NDP Premier of the Province of British Columbia. Does the Hon. Member support the inclusion in the Constitution of Canada of the phrase, "Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property," etc.? The reason I ask the question is that I think it is important for the House to determine whether the New Democratic Party still stands by the concerns its Leader expressed in February 1980 when he said that this amendment would deny Governments in Canada the right to expropriate and nationalize certain industries which they wish to nationalize for particular political purposes.

I think it is important for the New Democratic Party to come clean and tell the people of Canada why it is opposing this very important amendment. Once again I ask the Hon. Member for Churchill whether he personally supports the inclusion of the phrase, "Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property," in the Constitution of Canada?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta seems to be unaware of the fact that most of the rights about which he is talking are already in the Constitution. The only one lacking is the enjoyment of property. We have said very clearly that we are in favour of having a property rights clause in the Constitution. We have said that. I have certainly pointed out in the debate that we wanted to ensure we have wording which is acceptable to Canadians and to the majority of the House of Commons and does not prevent Governments from acting.

I for one would be concerned that we ensure provincial Governments can still set aside land for recreational use. I hope that whatever we pass does not prevent that. Also I hope that whatever we pass does not give banks more rights than workers. I would also want to ensure—and I hope all Hon. Members of the House would want it ensured—that the individual maintains and retains as many rights or at least equal rights to those possessed by men of property. That is our concern.

I do not know how often we have to say it for the sake of some Hon. Members, but we have said that we favour a clause on property rights in the Constitution. That is fairly clear.

If they are asking us whether we are willing to say yes to their proposal and yes to a short four-hour debate after which the first constitutional amendment would be passed, I have to express concern and say that I may favour the motion but I will certainly not allow it to pass after only four hours of debate and absolutely no public participation.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). I have noted that our good friends across the way keep insisting upon the phrase, "The right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property". Would the Hon. Member care to join me in a commentary on the phrase, "life, liberty, security of the person," as it relates to the petitions of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) who keeps calling on us to hang Clifford Olson?

Mr. Taylor: You want him to go on living.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, that is an interesting remark, but I do not believe it belongs in the present debate. This debate is quite simply on whether or not the House of Commons will rush through and rubberstamp its first amendment to the Constitution. We have said—and we will continue to say it until it becomes clear to Members of the Conservative Party and some Members of the Liberal Party—that we do not want to pass a constitutional amendment in that way.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party are trying to play a word game while practising a very different action game. I want to put a question to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). Since the time of the Magna Carta, property ownership has been reenshrined in the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights and has been part of the concept and practices of the country. The concept in their amendment of owning their own homes and farms simply speaks of symptoms. Property rights is a concept far beyond that. Property rights implies the right to have first draw on the fruits of labour. The Communist Manifesto clearly lays out that one can extend to all citizens all privileges and all rights because if the state controls property then all other rights are for nought. What value is freedom of speech when the state owns every place where one can speak? What right is the freedom of assembly when the state owns every place of assembly? Surely the New Democratic Party should come clean and tell us that the reason it does not want property rights is that it wants the control of the state and it is willing to give Canadians homes and farms. Property rights go to the right of first draw on the fruits of labour. NDP Members should know that what they are doing is a socialistic scam on what has been a 700-year tradition in the democratic system of Parliament.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the House gets treated to a lot of rubbish from time to time, and I suspect that is how we can treat those last remarks. The right of property has to be balanced by the right of individuals. We have heard people speaking in terms of property rights. I read an article in one of last week's editions of the Winnipeg Free Press that reported a mortgageholder saying that they have more rights to the assets of a company than the workers working there on the basis of property rights. That is something which scares me and that is something which we are saying must be clarified before we pass a constitutional amendment.

There are other concerns which have to be addressed when we are looking at the Constitution. At the present time there are things in the Canadian Bill of Rights which should be in the Constitution. One such thing is the inclusion of the right to a fair hearing. The provision of that right would protect Canadians as well. There are many protections which could be enshrined in the Constitution.

I wish the Conservatives would get off their rhetoric and actually help us. We are the ones who are trying. We are the ones who are introducing a motion which allows for the public to come and talk to us about their concerns about property rights and express why they would like them in the Constitution, and if we put them in the Constitution, we would like to know what wording would best suit the needs of all Canadians. That is reasonable. I hope the Conservative and Liberal speakers who follow me will support the proposal put forward by our Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), that substitutes the completely unacceptable Conservative motion with something which will allow public participation and allow Canadians to debate for more than four hours the first amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, I have what I think even the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) will find a simple question. Why does the Hon. Member's motion create two limitations to the concept of property rights? First, it defines property rights as only home ownership or farm ownership. In other words, it eliminates the right of someone who owns an office building to own it.

• (1500)

Second, why does it not even entrench that limited right but rather say that it wishes to entrench the principle? Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to indicate why he believes that people who work in a building ought to have greater property rights than the people who own it.

Mr. Murphy: With regard to the first suggestion—

An Hon. Member: Where does it say that?

Mr. Malone: The Communist Manifesto says that.

Mr. Murphy: The last word from the Conservative Party suggest it was the Communist Manifesto. I have never read the Communist Manifesto. If he has, I will certainly take his expertise over mine.

Mr. Epp: Did you read the Regina Manifesto?

Mr. Murphy: In the amendment we have proposed, we talk about the principle of the right of Canadians to own their own homes and farms. Let us not restrict this to one definition. It is the whole subject of property rights. We have said that the whole subject must be sent to a committee of this House where all Parties will be participating and where Canadians can come forward and speak about their concerns. That is simple. I find it so obvious and necessary to the democratic system that I really wonder why these so-called defenders of property are afraid of the Canadian public. Why are they afraid to let the Canadian public come forward and talk about property rights? What is their fear?

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, when I was initially asked to speak in this debate I wondered how I was going to fill up my 20 minutes. After the last two speakers, my problem has been solved. This amendment, and I am sure your judgment will be sound, Mr. Speaker, has to be the greatest pile of garbage I have seen in my life. First, the Hon. Member wants to protect people's homes and farms, but he does not protect the people's sofas, stoves, refrigerators, cars or anything else. On the farms, the state can own the cattle, tractors, trucks and whatever else is around. This is absolute garbage. They are terrified that democracy is going to come back to Canada. They are terrified that we may get some democracy in this country. They like socialism as it has been practised over the last 13 years. They want to put this into another committee. It has been in committee for two and one-half years. We are respecting the will of the people. It is the lack of rights, about which the people of this country are concerned.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) protesteth too much. He was terribly worried about his bedmates during the Constitution debate, that he could not cosy them along, so he will use any excuse to disrupt this debate. He was waiting for the NDP reply. I am sorry the Minister of Justice was not here to hear the NDP reply. I would like to have heard him ask some questions about it.

We placed this motion before this House of Commons because it is the will of the Canadian public to get this measure adopted, and adopted in one day as agreed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of our Party. We worded it in such away as to respect the will of the people of Canada.

The one question I am asked day after day is when is there going to be an election. This would have been our opportunity to have an election, but that is not as important as getting the Charter changed to include property rights.

Mr. Evans: What have you been smoking over there, Scott?

Mr. Fennell: My friend for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) is as close to the socialist left of the Liberal Party as you can get, so I can appreciate his comment. We have always had a yelling match because he does not like some of my views about individual freedoms and independent business. That is the other point I want to make.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) continually stands up in this House of Commons asking what the Government is doing for small business. His confreres stand up and say "We are not going to protect your rights, we are going to nationalize small business". Where are they going to stop? It is going to be "small business-Can, farm-Can, and every other "Can" you want to put in. This is disgraceful. The Minister of Justice then stands up and says that in 1968 the Prime Minister wanted property rights. When he talks about flip-flops, he is one of the greatest flip-flop artists we have ever had. He will flip and flop whenever he has to in order to move up in the polls. He brought in property rights because he saw the 52 per cent figure.

We were wondering how we were going to get to 55 per cent. I found out today that they have 19 per cent. They will drop 3 per cent, be down to 16 per cent and we will be up to 55 per cent. The speech of the New Democratic Party Member is absolute fodder for the next election. It gives me great joy that he came out and said the only thing you can own is your home and your farm. That will give me the total vote of the small business people and all the apartment dwellers in my riding who own their own furniture. I have eliminated the NDP in my riding with the help of the NDP. I am delighted they brought in that amendment, yet I believe it is garbage, and I believe, Mr. Speaker, you agree with me on that point.

Our Party is probably the sole representative of freedom left in Canada. Libra is the Latin word for freedom, and Liberals were for freedom at one point, but they lost sight of it for a period of time. They are trying to recover because they have looked at the polls. We have always been in favour of individual rights, individual ownership and individual freedom.

If you go back to the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights which my colleague for Richmond South Delta (Mr. Siddon) referred to many times during his speech, that is where we expressed very clearly what we wanted. We never changed our plan. We never stated we would remove property rights from the Constitution. We were always in favour of their retention. It was hard for me to stand up and vote for the Constitution because property rights were not entrenched, and I only did so because of my constituents' request. We were taking something away from the Canadian citizens.

Other speakers have mentioned that the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) spent six months in committee bringing this forward as being very important to the people of Canada. It is not a matter for debate for another six months, six weeks or six days. This measure should be brought forward by the Minister of Justice at 11 o'clock on Monday morning. Let us put it to a vote, pass the motion and satisfy the will of the Canadian people we represent. Their voices must be heard in this House.

It is amazing how the Liberals and the NDP are now trying to negotiate how many days this should be considered in committee. This right to property was taken out to get NDP support. They knew we were not going to support it. They know we were against it. Fortunately they may be getting a little bit of sense. It is amazing how they go up and down like a roller-coaster ride, flip-flopping. This is something of which they accuse us, but they are the greatest offenders. Their last budget, Mr. Speaker, was a classic flip-flop. They went from total socialism to extreme capitalism for multinationals, not for the little guy. They went right over. They took such a dramatic swing that they missed all of the little people in the middle. I do not think they did anything for the people that are really hurting.

• (1510)

I feel sorry for the NDP because they are between a rock and a hard place. The Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) bows in deference to the Premier of his Province. What about the Members from British Columbia? How are they going to go home and knock on doors next week when they are against property rights, while the Leader of the Opposition in British Columbia is for property rights? The people of British Columbia will not understand what it is all about.

Having a Charter of Rights and Freedoms that includes property rights is a part of our heritage. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) brought up the Magna Carta, but I cannot go back that far. I look only to our basic rights and our heritage.

Mr. Malone: That is where it all began.

Mr. Fennell: I appreciate that. I know where it all began, but my memory is not as long as yours. I can only remember that my father had a farm and that I ended up with a farm. That is what I look at. That is our heritage. That is our freedom.

The Hon. Member for Crowfoot gave me some ideas but he has used most of them by now. One of his points is very important. I think the principle of property rights is symbolic of the effort we put into our lives, of the effort we put into our work, of the effort we put into owning things. One of his points was about the right of assembly and what would happen if the Government owned all buildings. As an example, the Government does own all buildings in Poland. I think the NDP should look at what has happened to the Solidarity Union. That union exemplifies what happens when there are no property rights. The NDP should keep that in mind; they are great supporters of the Solidarity Union. I am very supportive of Lech Walesa and what he has had to go through in an effort to bring democracy back to his country, even though he knows it is a lost cause. What happened in the Hungarian revolution? That happened because Hungarians were not allowed the rights of their heritage. Those rights were taken away. Why are the Russians so obedient? Because if they are not, they are shipped up to Siberia to make Ladas.

My main point is that property rights go beyond owning a home. Property rights include farmland, vacation properties for people who have worked hard and saved their money to buy a vacation home, small properties owned by businesses to manufacture products in Canada so they can put labels on those products that say "made in Canada". These property rights mean jobs in this country and job creation is what we must get down to. Furthermore, building houses means job creation.

Medium-sized businesses that are not necessarily listed on the public exchange are owned by groups of people. This is ownership of productive units that create jobs and profit and allows capital to go back into the country. Those are the property rights we are talking about. Investors who have a small piece of large Canadian corporations or multinational corporations have property rights too.

Trucking fleets such as Maislin do not own their trucks any more, they were given to them by the Liberal Party. But most trucking companies must own their own trucks. Those are property rights. If these rights are not entrenched in our Constitution, the police would be able to say: "You broke the law so we are going to take your trucks away from you." This must not happen because the trucking industry is a productive industry that creates jobs; driving jobs, mechanics' jobs, all kinds of jobs.

An Hon. Member: What about fishermen?

Mr. Fennell: My hon. colleague refers me to fishermen. They own their boats. If they were to break the law and the coast guard were to say, "We are taking your boats away because you really do not own them as there are no property rights," that would be a cruel situation.

I believe we must give Canadians back their confidence in the country. We have lost the confidence of investment in Canada, we have lost confidence in the country. I believe that entrenching property rights in the Constitution will quickly give Canadians back a feeling of confidence, a feeling of pride in their accomplishments, a feeling of pride in what they have to show for their hard work and for their blood, sweat and tears. It will give the veteran back a feeling of confidence in our belief that he went overseas to fight for our rights on our behalf. There are many people in Canada who are looking to find this feeling of confidence. The abominable legislation and budgets we have had to put up with over the last three years have brought on a lack of confidence.

Entrenching the property rights in the Constitution is only one thing that will help to accomplish this. We must guarantee Canadians their birthright. We must implement programs that will make property rights a reality. I am referring to those people who find it difficult to own a home. We must introduce tax provisions that will make it easier for them to own homes because nobody wants to live like a rat in an apartment building. I live in an apartment building in Ottawa. Though it is a very nice apartment building, it makes me feel like a caged rat. That is what happens to people when they live in apartment buildings.

Having regard to broadening the opportunity for ownership, I would like to see a move away from grants for small and medium business and a move toward a stabilized interest rate so that people do not lose their business because the Government and the world are experiencing a recession or when interest rates go up because the country has such a demand for money. In addition to property rights, we can introduce proper legislation to encourage people to own property. Ownership is what it is all about. It is knowing that you have earned the money to buy property with your integrity, with your hard work, and with your blood, sweat and tears.

Earlier I referred to a flexible interest rate to protect industry from the tremendous increases we have seen over the last few years. Industry and small business cannot take that rise in interest rates. Grants are not really helping them. Another solution has been put forward in this House that I think should be explored, that is that the responsibility for that flexible rate could even be shared by the banks and the federal Government.

I understand the argument about provincial rights, but I think that here we are putting a blanket over the rights of all Canadians to protect the mobility of Canadians so that people will have the same rights no matter which Province they are in. For instance, if this is only passed by seven out of ten Provinces, those other three Provinces may not have basic rights entrenched in their Constitutions that are as good as we require. We talk about mobility under the Constitution. We must protect that mobility and give people an equal chance, wherever they are in this country.

I stress the importance of property rights because of my exposure to expropriation and the difficulties I have seen arising from expropriation. I know the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) agrees with me and has talked to me about this. Expropriation forces a great hardship on Canadians. I have seen people get seriously ill following expropriation; people who have had heart conditions, people who have ended up with ulcers, people whose families have split up because of expropriation. Expropriation means that you not only take their homes from them, you take away their way of life. Expropriation to me is a sour process, yet I know that expropriation is not easy and that no matter what you do, you can never satisfy everybody.

I have talked to the Hon. Minister about the difference between expropriation in the Pickering area and in the Mirabel area. He acknowledges that that was a problem. Basically it was a problem because the people in Pickering yelled louder. I think he would agree with that. The people in Pickering got a group together led by Charles Godfrey, a former NDP Member of the provincial parliament who is now a supporter and a member of my riding. He saw the light. He saw that they were reasonable people.

I do not want to drag this out, as the last speaker did with the junk he tried to put forward as to what they were going to give the people. We must move this through the House quickly and get an agreement to have property rights entrenched in the Constitution. We must give people a chance to enjoy what they earn by their sweat. We have to do it now, Mr. Speaker. We cannot delay for another six months because people want this right now. They are entitled to it, and they will re-elect us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As I indicated earlier, at this point, prior to the ten-minute period for questions and answers relating to the speech of the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), the Chair will rule on the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

It is my intention to rule against the admissibility of that amendment. In fairness, therefore, if any Hon. Member wishes to give advice to the Chair in support of the admissibility of the amendment, I will hear that. I do not think there is much point in speaking in support of the Chair's finding that the amendment is not admissible. However, I do not see any Member standing so I shall proceed.

There is a minor difficulty with the amendment in that it was not seconded. I shall rectify that oversight by indicating that the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) has seconded the amendment.

I would refer Hon. Members to the amendment itself. I find that the amendment is self-contradictory as between the first and second paragraphs. That in itself would be sufficient to dispose of it, but I want to go further and cover other aspects of the subject.

I would refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 435.(1) which reads as follows:

It is not an amendment to a motion to move that the question go to a committee.

Citation 437.(2) says:

An amendment may not raise a new question which can only be considered as a distinct motion after proper notice.

It is in respect of the second Citation that I would refer Hon. Members to the ruling given by the Deputy Speaker on May 13, 1977 at page 794 of the House of Commons Journals. I want to quote a brief paragraph which is applicable to the situation:

The amendment seeks to widen the scope of the debate by asking the House, not simply to accept or reject the proposition contained in the main motion—

In this case the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). It continues:

—but to consider whether the Berger Report ought to be studied by a committee of this House. That was not part of the main motion. To my mind this is a new proposition.

That is the essence of what I find inadmissible in terms of the amendment of the Hon. Member for Churchill. It is not logically cohesive to the main motion, nor is it philosophically so. Accordingly, I have to find that it is not procedurally acceptable.

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member a very simple question. Although I agree with some of the sentiments he attributed to me, does he recognize that in some cases expropriation remains a tool preferred by those who are to be expropriated? Second, it is still a legitimate activity, accepted and put into legislation by this Parliament. Does the Hon. Member recognize that I did not really express a judgment on the Pickering and Mirabel differences? I would have to look at the file on those historical events in more depth if I were to make such a judgment.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to be able to answer questions from the Minister. He is extremely kind.

I was indicating the differences between Mirabel and Pickering and the pressure the Pickering people exerted compared to the lack of pressure by the Mirabel people.

I agree that expropriation must take place but it must be fair. It is a very difficult measure, and one I know the Minister said he would only use as a last necessity. The fact that there was too much land expropriated in one area at one time, is too bad. It fragmented the fabric of society. That is the kind of thing I was getting at. I do not deny that it must be used, but it must be used very carefully. I think the Minister appreciates that.

I have known some people whose land was expropriated who went to Florida afterwards, and others who are still farming, so there is a difference in different parts of the country. The economic values may be different and pressure groups can make the difference.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Hon. Member for Ontario gave a very good description of what happens when lands are taken. He said, and I quote, "People get heartsick; families break up sometimes; it is not just taking away a home but a way of life."

The reason I recall his words to him is that while it may be fine to go back to Runnymede to determine property rights in terms of common law, this is Canada and the original property was held not by dukes, earls and kings—it did not reside in the Crown but in an original people who in many cases watched that land taken away. They have become heartsick; they have had family breakups and they have lost more than just a home in seeing their way of life abolished.

Since the Hon. Member proposes a quick amendment to the Constitution on property rights, I should like to know how it will affect almost half the territory of this country which has never been ceded to the people of Canada or given in treaty by the original inhabitants of this land. Could we take a few months to find out what they think of our concept of property rights? Since this involves half the territory of the country, is it not important enough to spend more than four or five hours on it?

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I should like the Hon. Member to come to my riding and see the Pickering Airport property, see the different homes and barns that have fallen down. I should like to introduce him to some of the families that have split up as a result of this so that he might understand the psychological damage. It has removed the fabric of a farming community. I know the Hon. Member can appreciate that. It removed that way of life for a part of my riding. That is sad. It is beautiful agricultural land.

The original land in Ontario was Crown land. I think within all of Canada the land was either Crown land or that vast part the CPR got. I am never too sympathetic toward the CPR for that reason.

As far as natives are concerned, during the debate on the National Energy Program I spoke about the 25 per cent being held back for the federal Government. I think it should be held back for the original owners of the land.

If we put in property rights the argument might be put that a large portion of that land belongs to them. They are the people inhabiting it so why should they not own it and control their destiny as we do in the south? I do not see any difference. There is a great deal of land and it is not very viable economically, but if those people want to use it, make it productive, maybe that is what we should do. So I would be delighted to see that go through and accept your suggestion that native rights be respected.

• (1530)

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell). I want to put the proposition very carefully so he understands what I am getting at.

Section 7 of the Constitution is subject to the provincial notwithstanding clause. Therefore property rights, if entrenched in the Constitution, would be subject to the provincial notwithstanding clause. Therefore, every Province when it wished could pass an act providing a municipality with extensive powers for expropriation, providing the Government itself with extensive powers in terms of dealing with property irrespective of its entrenchment in the Constitution, and I happen to know this because we have had to deal very substantively with it in Alberta since 1972. Does the Member agree that the clause this House wishes to entrench in the Constitution of Canada should be subject to a provincial notwithstanding clause, because its meaning is substantively different depending on whether the answer is yes or no on this particular point?

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, that is a non obstante clause, the provincial notwithstanding clause you are referring to, that is true, but political pressure would not permit any provincial legislature to remove it from the Constitution. I do not know what the point is because it is not going to happen in the Provinces.

An Hon. Member: What about Quebec?

Mr. Fennell: It is not going to remove anything. Quebec is a different situation. I am talking about Alberta. This is not changing anything in Alberta. The point I made earlier is that it gives mobility to people anywhere in Canada. Even Alberta has it in its Bill of Rights, as you must know.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I think this is not a very auspicious moment for me to speak to the motion tabled today by the Member from Provencher (Mr. Epp). From the exchange of comments that took place about forty-five minutes ago between the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and several Members of the Official Opposition who are supporting this motion, I think it is clear that discussions are now going on in an attempt to find a neat way around a serious procedural problem, and I shall get back to this in a few moments. Parliamentary practice and the rules of debate in the House are such that we must be recognized by the Chair in a certain order, and when I decided to speak in this debate, Mr. Speaker, what was relevant this morning is perhaps less so at this time, and may no longer be relevant at all in an hour or an hour and a half, assuming that discussions between representatives of the three parties will result in an agreement which, once again, would enable us to resolve the problems described earlier by the Minister of Justice.

In fact, what is rather curious today, is that we are not having a debate on the substance of the motion—nothwithstanding various nuances, comments and problems raised mainly by Members of the New Democratic Party—so much as a debate on form, and not on the form of the motion as such but on the procedure followed by the Progressive Conservative Party to discuss this matter in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out, if I may, that the Progressive Conservative Party is treading a very dangerous path. In fact, if I wanted to be nasty, I would go so far as to say or to accuse them of political irresponsibility. In any case, if a proposal is made later today for resolving the dilemma with which Hon. Members are faced at the present time which may explain the noise we are hearing in the House any agreement will have to be ratified by unanimous consent. We all know that since 282 Members sit in the House and each Member has the right to speak and to speak freely, there is always a risk that one Member may decide to withhold his or her consent.

What would happen if the House did not give unanimous consent to a proposition that might be made in a few moments? If that were the case, we would again be in a procedural mess, which was clearly explained by the Minister of Justice. And exactly what is the issue, Mr. Speaker? Aside from all the considerations underlying this debate, considerations that are ideological, sociological, legal, historical, symbolic, constitutional, and so forth, there are also, unfortunately, considerations relating purely to parliamentary procedure. The Opposition has decided to move this motion as part of the Business of Supply on a so-called Opposition day, and even went so far as to insist on a vote, which it did not have to do, a vote that by definition is a vote of no-confidence in the Government. As a result, aside from our individual opinions on either side of the House, we cannot do otherwise but to divide according to the principles of confidence, with Government Members supporting the Government, especially since this is a matter the Government itself decided to put before the House, with the Opposition dissociating itself from the Government and supporting the motion since it is their own.

Therefore, by definition, we shall divide on a question of confidence, although we agree on the substance of the motion, and since we have a majority Government, if all goes as it should, the motion will be defeated. What happens then, Mr. Speaker? The Minister of Justice gave some indication of that himself in his speech, but I would like to say it again. The rules of the House are very specific in this respect. There is an old Parliamentary rule that goes back almost to the stone age, namely, that when a question has been decided on by the House, the same question may not be reintroduced, in the form decided by the House, during the same session. Beauchesne has already been quoted. I shall, if I may, refer to Bourinot, Fourth Edition, page 328, paragraph 9, where he refers to Renewal of a question during a session. Some reference was made to this a few minutes ago.

It is always possible to introduce a much different motion which would be basically the same as the one previously defeated in the House. Then again, Mr. Speaker, a Member could still argue that the motion is, for all practical purposes, basically the same as the one already disposed of by the House, which could lead to a long debate as to whether this new motion is in order or not as it basically reflects one which was previously defeated. I must therefore say once more, and that is why I wanted to take part in this debate in the first place, that the procedure followed by the sponsor of this motion, as well, of course, as by his party, is extremely dangerous because, even if these negotiations, which are very delicate since there is no unanimity on all elements of the motion, were to be successful, if only one Member refuses to give his consent, we shall automatically be faced with a non-confidence vote at 3 o'clock on Monday afternoon. Obviously, the government would have to vote against the motion at that time, and this would automatically mean that what most of us want to do, mainly entrench property rights in the Constitution, could no longer be done during this session.

The procedural aspect is therefore a matter of substance and not simply of form, because the procedure followed by the Opposition in debating this motion could lead to a Parliamentary deadlock which, and I emphasize this point, would prevent us from re-introducing a motion to do what we all want or what the majority of us want, namely to entrench property rights in the Canadian Constitution.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, I hope that reason will prevail when the time comes in a few minutes or half-hour when someone rises to submit to the Chair the wording of an eventual agreement that might break this deadlock.

I would like to use the little time left to me to say a few words about the substance of this motion. I said at the outset that I am basically in favour of what it proposes, and so I am. I believe that, for various reasons, including those I gave earlier, it is probably a good thing to entrench the right to the enjoyment of property, even though nothing would be changed since this right already exists. Reference was made to the common law. Reference was also made to our whole legal history, from the Magna Carta to the Star Chamber and the quashing of general mandates by the British courts a few centuries ago, and because of all this history, property rights are sacred in our legal system. These rights exist. We would therefore not be granting new rights, but even if this does not change the law as such, it is important symbolically, as the previous speaker said, to recognize the value of this right which is fundamental in our society and to entrench it in our Constitution.

• (1540)

Many considerations are involved. Of course, there are ideological considerations as collectivism runs counter to ownership and property rights. We live in a society which is not collectivistic and where property rights exist. I believe that we must not only recognize this fact but also proclaim it, because this is a characteristic of our society of which we are proud. Of course, there is also legal considerations—I mentioned some of them earlier—not because this creates a new right, but rather because, by entrenching it in the Constitution, even though the Hon. Member for Edmonton-East (Mr. Yurko) suggested that this provision would be subject to the nonwithstanding clause, we would give rise to a major political debate, and in his reply, the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) was partly right in expressing the wish that this right, if entrenched, would at least prevent obvious abuses and infringements by the various jurisdictions, whether provincial or federal. A proper public debate would therefore have to take place beforehand. Naturally there are strictly constitutional considerations, and here is one of them: will these constitutional rights, because they are constitutional, and these property rights, because they are constitutionally enshrined, take on a special meaning which will give Canadian courts the impulse they may need to look beyond their own jurisdiction and put them in their appropriate sociological context? Considering that none of the cases now before the courts have been referred to the Supreme Court, I would suggest that we all hope that in the next few years the Supreme Court will be called upon to rule on the interpretation of several provisions of the Candaian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We hope, I repeat, that the highest court in the land will set the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in an appropriate judicial context which will transcend the restrictive interpretation it gave to the Canadian Bill of Rights. But, of course, it is an issue which has yet to be defined because it will be up to the courts themselves to assume that responsibility which they might possibly prefer not to take on.

And of course there are psychological considerations as well. As one of the previous speakers said, the property right is the fact that once you are home, you feel well, you feel secure, you like to be there and fully enjoy that right. I think we should not minimize that aspect, the hope of Canadians to become homeowners. When you talk about property—and I must admit that the NDP Members were right on in their amendment which the Chair ruled out of order, Mr. Speaker—you mean a home, your house, your property. But that goes beyond those considerations, and anything which becomes a property acquired in the normal course of events must indeed be protected against undue encroachment by the state.

So that the NDP Members may be reassured—and I do not quite understand what prompted them to introduce their amendment to the motion—they should keep in mind the fact that Section 1 of the Charter itself provides that certain limits to the full enjoyment of all those protected and enshrined rights may be prescribed by duly constituted and elected bodies when such limits are normal within the structure of a democratic society. I should think that nobody can object to the fact that certain restrictions must be applied on the full and sometimes undue exercise of property rights when it goes beyond reasonable limits.

For all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, because I think that the Constitution is properly balanced—first, Section 1 which provides for those restraints, second, the notwithstanding clause and, third, the fact that even if enshrinement does not guarantee anything more in terms of rights, at least it gives special significance to that enshrined right—for all those reasons, I think it is altogether fitting that, the Charter having been in force for one year, the House should now agree to consider enshrining that new right. We have, of course, to keep hoping because it is a beginning or an impulse given to the mechanism of constitutional amendment. Let us hope that the Provinces will be willing to support that measure. We all know that if they were to refuse to do so, we would be unable on our own to attain that entrenchment, provided we can solve the problems or the procedural imbroglio now under consideration. I hope that once that resolution is passed under one form or another the Provinces will be willing to participate in that process and that, eventually, the property right will be entrenched in the Constitution.

[English]

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, individual rights and privileges are at the very heart of a democratic and free society. The nature of Government is such that even though a Government is democratic, the very passage of law tends to erode and regulate against individual right and privilege in favour of collective rights and collective privileges of the community itself. Most law tends to be restrictive rather than opting for a broader freedom of choice.

• (1550)

Because of the tendency of the democratic process to erode freedom of choice and individual rights and privileges rather than enhance them, it is essential that the right to ownerhsip and enjoyment of private property be entrenched in the Constitution. This is particularly true now since we have a written Constitution. Prior to the written Constitution property rights were possibly better protected under common law.

Property rights are not just a constitutional expression. They stand for much more because they are a demonstration of philosophical intent and indicate the nature and direction of the Government and how Canadians really view their basic values. In this sense, property rights are more a statement of philosophy and value.

Since we could have a democratic society in which there is no enjoyment of ownership of private property, that right of ownership is at risk when it is not enshrined. The degree of that risk depends upon the values expressed by whichever Government may be in power from time to time. Without constitutional protection, that particular philosophy which ebbs and flows could abuse and destroy this very basic right of private ownership of property. I would not want to see these rights subjected to the whims of one particular Party in power, either federally or provincially.

British Columbians assumed that private property was in fact intact under the old unwritten Constitution under common law. However, within weeks of being elected in 1972, one of the first philosophic values that the NDP Government brought in was to have expropriation without even compensation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wenman: That was in the first bill that came before the British Columbia legislature.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): No.

Mr. Wenman: It is true. That expropriation without guaranteed compensation contained in that bill was forced to be withdrawn. Public outcry forced them to change it.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Will the Hon. Member be prepared to accept a question?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Lachance): The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is rising on a point of order? The Hon. Member has the floor. This is not a point of order. As the Hon. Member is no doubt aware, speeches by Hon. Members are followed by a question-and-answer period, and he will be able to speak at that time.

[English]

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member knows that he is misleading the House. The first legislation brought before the British Columbia House was—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Lachance): This is debate, and I think the Hon. Member will have an opportunity to discuss the matter later on. Furthermore, this does not constitute a point of order. The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Wenman: What a foolish point of order. I said in my speech, if the Hon. Member will listen—and I see I have his attention now—that one of the first steps within the first few weeks—

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): You said the first one.

Mr. Wenman: It was certainly the first one that caught the attention of the public in British Columbia. I know why he is sensitive though, because along with many other British Columbians I began a movement and the whole Province took fire. Busloads of people went to the legislture and we changed that legislation and then defeated the Government as a result of that legislation. We went to the British Columbia legislature and held conferences with 23 out of 28 MLAs at that time. We asked them if they were in favour of private ownership of property and 18 out of those 23 said outright, no, and the other five hedged somewhat. That occurred when they were fresh from victory and had gained new power.

We now know that private property can be threatened in Canada through our legislatures and our House of Commons by an NDP type of Government, whether it is found in British Columbia, Saskatchewan with threats to its land prior to the last election, or Manitoba.

We have talked today about the need for urgency. There is a new urgency in Canada and particularly in British Columbia because that same premier, with the same hacks that were there that many years ago, are now challenging the Government in an election on May 5.

Mr. Fisher: Are you saying they are going to win?

Mr. Wenman: I do not know if they will win or lose but I do not want to take a chance for the people of British Columbia or Canada. It is a perfect example of how much at risk and open our Constitution is. It could be threatened as soon as May 5 or May 6. That former Government in British Columbia still holds that basic philosophy and it is rising again. The rest of the political spectrum such as the Liberals and the NDP, are trying to become more conservative. They are trying to rush to our position.

The legislation which was introduced in British Columbia did not only include a person's home for expropriation, it included a person's car, tractor, and all real property. It could be expropriated without compensation under that Bill. We now see how far the NDP has come since 1972. They are now willing to let us own our own homes and farms. They have come a long way.

The Government of British Columbia initiated this legislation because it saw what the NDP would do in British Columbia and Canada and did not want to take that chance. The British Columbia Government was the first to call for this piece of legislation and I support them for that.

I can understand why the New Democratic Members from British Columbia are so concerned now, because they know that this amendment will force a debate on this issue in British Columbia, require the former premier to take a stand which will unmask their intent, as does this particular disgusting amendment.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): They are talking about health care in British Columbia.

Mr. Wenman: The property rights of all Canadians are at risk at this time. We are in danger, because just before I spoke here, I saw again—

Mr. Murphy: Halleluiah!

Mr. Wenman: You are darn right, halleluiah!

It is about time we protected our basic rights. You are darn right it is. If you do not stand up for property rights, stand up and tell your constituents that. I want them to hear you say that.

An Hon. Member: Speak to the Chair.

Mr. Wenman: Of course I am speaking to the Chair, Mr. Speaker. One of the Liberals asks if I would charge the Chair over property rights. I have once, and if I had to do it again I am sure that I would.

These very basic values must be upheld and enshrined and that is what the fight was about. We can see that the NDP and the Liberals are worried. They are being unmasked; what will they do?

Although this is a Friday afternoon, this issue is one of the most important and basic ones to come before the House of Commons. It is a very serious issue and one about which Canadians are concerned. They want to know where we stand. I hope that Members of the New Democratic Party will stand up and indicate whether they are in favour of private ownership of property.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): You should have run for the Socreds.

Mr. Wenman: I would like to see if they will in fact state, those who are ideologically as far left as the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), that they support and uphold the right to private ownership of property. I would like to see the Hon. Member stand up in Burnaby and say that he is not in favour of the private ownership and enjoyment of property. I would like to see him do that. If he would do that, he would not be back here and that would please me too. As a human being I would like to see him here, but with his political philosophy that does not support the private ownership of property I would just as soon not have him here.

• (1600)

The constitutional debate of 1981 saw the Liberal-NDP coalition vote against the entrenchment of property rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Conservative Party fought ardently for the inclusion of property rights because we recognized that one of the inherent flaws in entrenching a Charter of Rights was the potential exclusion of certain fundamental principles and values. One of the major objections and disappointments I had over the finalization of the constitutional process was the lack of a provision to entrench property rights.

If we do not entrench property rights this country will be much the poorer for it, and we will see the poverty and the non-production situation that we see in the socialistic nations of the world like the Soviet Union and others under their collectivization and non-ownership of property.

On September 21, 1982, the British Columbia Legislature unanimously passed a resolution calling for entrenchment of property rights. I must add that was unanimously passed. The New Democratic Party in 1972 would not support this concept but changed its mind. That Party wants to win an election.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): We are going to win.

Mr. Wenman: But the thing that is so dishonest is that the NDP then brings in a motion, and here is the old NDP socialist philosophy of non-ownership, which refers to the home and farm only. The limitations are coming.

Because British Columbia put this initiative forward, because I am a Member of Parliament for British Columbia and because I support this concept so strongly, on January 21, 1983, I placed the following motion on the Order Paper for consideration.

Motion No. 83;

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider holding a constitutional conference to discuss amending the Constitution Act, 1982 so that Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms reads as follows:

"7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and the ownership and enjoyment of private property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

Most recently, on April 18, 1983, the local council of the community I represent in Langley, B.C. passed a resolution that property rights be included in the Constitution. Broad support for this concept exists at all three levels of Government in an expression of grass roots support across the Canadian spectrum from the municipal to the provincial to the federal.

I urge municipal councils across Canada to listen to this debate this week, and each municipal council close to the people know they want this property right, and should call for resolutions of support from municipal Governments in order to get those property rights entrenched, as Langley, B.C. has done, and as I hope Surrey, B.C. and other councils across B.C. and Canada will do.

Property has been a fundamental concept in the tradition of parliamentary democracy and western democratic philosophy from the ancient Greeks to the classical Liberals such as John Locke, Jeremy Bentham and John Stuart Mill. John Locke was the first to make the case for property of unlimited amount as a natural right of the individual, with precedence over the rights of Government. In fact, Locke's primary justification for the existene of limited Government was its role in protecting unlimited property for the individual.

I would much prefer this resolution to read "as a natural right". I would much prefer that it were in keeping with the definition I have just read, because the natural right is a broader protection than the fundamental right. I would prefer that it were there, but I am accepting the compromise because I am desperate to have this entrenched while we have the agreement, and again, as I have mentioned earlier, because of the threat to property that an election of an NDP Government in British Columbia would pose as early as next week.

Mr. Fisher: They might win.

Mr. Wenman: Hopefully in a democracy, any time there is an election and Parties are running, one Party wins. Otherwise, there would be no point in having an election and you would not have a democracy. That opportunity is certainly there.

Mr. Siddon: The Liberals do not understand that.

Mr. Wenman: One of the factors as to whether or not the NDP will win in B.C. will be how the NDP responds to the Government and the Opposition Motion in the Parliament of Canada. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) can substantially influence how B.C. will react and what will happen in British Columbia. If this debate on this amendment is any indication, he has done the damage we anticipated would come from the basic position that says no property rights for Canadians in this natural sense I have just described.

Property as a natural right in the Lockean sense therefore means unlimited ownership. This amendment is limited ownership, considerably limited ownership. Is this the definition of natural justice that the Liberal Government is putting forward? I wonder whether someone from the Government or the Minister intends to define what they mean by the limits to the enjoyment of property? Is the Minister going to assure us that he is going to use the word "ownership"? I would like to have seen in the motion the word "ownership", just to have an indication of that little extra piece of guarantee. I would prefer to have seen in the motion another word, the word "private". I would like to see both the words "private" and "ownership" included. I feel the motion is incomplete without them, but again in a parliamentary sense I must accept some measure of compromise.

The American Constitution is based to a large extent on Lockean principles; Article V (5) states that no person shall "be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." Article XIV also guarantees property through due process of law. The American Constitution has a double guarantee.

The Rousseauan concept of property also derives from natural right but states that property of a limited amount that a man could work on by himself was a sacred right while unlimited property was unjustified because it deprived most men of any property at all and therefore contradicted natural right.

Jean Jacques Rousseau's philosophy was a prime force behind the French Constitution and the declaration of the rights of man, which states that property is an inviolable and sacred right.

I wish somewhere in our Constitution we had chosen the words "sacred and inviolable right" from our French heritage. That is how the French Constitution sees it. I have spoken of the American Constitution and the French; ours is kind of a weak middle.

Article 16 of the French Constitution of 1793 also provides that the right of property is a natural result of the fruit of one's labour and industriousness.

I would hope, as people will look at this debate in the future that they will keep that in mind as one of the intents expressed here, that the right of property is the natural result of the fruit of one's labour and industriousness.

The Constitution of the Federal Republic of Germany, a more modern document, also guarantees in Article 14 Section 1, property and the right of inheritance.

Other philosophers have addressed the issue of property, and their views have formed the basis of certain nation's Constitutions. Karl Marx in the Communist Manifesto indicated that ten steps had to be taken for the advancement of revolutionary communism and the dictatorship of the proletariat. Step number one was "the abolishment of property and land and application of all rents of land to public purposes." The Soviet Union and other socialist-communist states work on the precept of state ownership. The inherent fallacy of this approach to ensuring equality is that the deprivation of fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual by the state leads to repression and tyrannical oligarchy and the degradation of human essence.

Any limitation on freedom limits the ability of individuals to freely express themselves and create, prosper and grow to the benefit of themselves and their society. Society is best served by the free expression of the individuals within it, not by the state dictating to individuals what is best for society. Any limitation of freedom of the individual detracts from society as a whole.

The historical precedents of the British parliamentary democratic tradition is a far superior method for obtaining justice and equality. We in Canada are incredibly fortunate to be enriched by this heritage as part of our founding.

• (1610)

The first major constitutional pact in the western world was signed in a meadow called Runnymede in 1215 by King John, the bishops and the barons, and it was deemed the Magna Carta or Great Charter.

This historical document arose primarily out of the concern for property rights and has had an impact of enormous proportions on the evolution of our way of life and system of Government. In fact, the very root or basis of the fact that we exist today in this format involves the issue of property rights. It is from this historical basis that we draw for definition in determining what our society constitutes and how we should live our lives in relation to our fellow citizens.

I can see Mr. Speaker indicating that I am out of time. Indeed I regret that time is so short in this debate at the request of the Government, but in the hope of getting the protection through as quickly as possible I accept that provision and look forward to speaking on the matter in other forms of debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions. Answers. Comments. Debate.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful for the chance to say a few words in this debate. I know the people in my riding are very concerned about the question of their property rights. I simply want to add my own support to the idea that property rights should be included in our Constitution in a sensible and intelligent way.

When the debate was going on about the Constitution from 1980 to 1982, I received a steady stream of inquiries from business people, home owners, real estate people, developers and even our own city council, asking whether I supported the inclusion of property rights in the Constitution. I told them all that indeed I supported a proper recognition of such rights in the Constitution. I think it is important for us to put property rights on a par with other basic rights that we enjoy in the country. Such a move, putting property rights in our Constitution, would recognize the high importance which all of us place on the ownership of goods and lands and, more important, it would recognize the need for due process when the individual and the community have different opinions about the treatment of property.

I do not think people want an absolute veto by property owners, but equally they do not want the community or society generally to run roughshod over a specific property owner. Therefore, with that balance in mind, I favour the inclusion of some comment in the Constitution.

I have always been gratified by the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Government have placed property rights as a high priority on their agenda. When we ran into difficulty in 1980 during negotiations, the Prime Minister made it clear that he intended to bring up this matter as quickly as possible. This spring when he was challenged in the House of Commons about his timetable, he indicated that he would like the issue settled by the summertime. I think this indicates the Government's high priority for the issue. Again that is something people in my riding will find reassuring.

I would like to read the amendment before us today. It is an amendment to Section 7 of the Constitution Act, 1982, and it reads:

> Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

The Prime Minister, the Government and Hon. Members on this side of the House are in agreement with that point of view. I am not sure whether those are the specific words with which we would end up, but in that phrase there are proper balances between the rights of the community on the one hand and the rights of the individual on the other.

In 1980 when we were trying to launch the Constitution we proposed precisely this sentiment. We put this idea before the Canadian people and the Premiers. During that period we received some pretty serious objections, particularly from the Provinces. We had a simple choice. We could have pushed property rights and lost everything, or we could have accommodated the Provinces, reached a compromise and had other equally important rights permanently enshrined. It was a practical choice. It was the kind of decision people are forced to make in Government. Obviously, with the practical solution in mind, we dropped the contentious area in order to get the majority of the issues passed. Then we followed our promise and continued to seek a way to include this clause in the Constitution. We compromised and backed off during the 1980 period. Then later we promoted the idea and pursued every opportunity for it.

I am not a lawyer, but I have been assured that under federal law and federal jurisdiction Canadian taxpayers already have a great deal of protection of property rights. For example, the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights has not disappeared. It supplements the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Constitution. The protection provided in the Bill of Rights affects all federal legislation. Of course the courts have to weigh the two because the Bill of Rights is legally regarded, I am told, as one law among many. However it is an important guide to the courts and it provides an important window into federal thinking and priorities. When a taxpayer is faced with an attack on his property rights from the federal sector, at least he has recourse through the Bill of Rights, and if not that, the later version in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Of course provincial jurisdictions can override the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights in their own area. This was graphically demonstrated by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). I have no idea whether his specific examples are accurate, but certainly he showed some potential courses of action. The Diefenbaker Bill of Rights could never be used as a defence by a citizen in a provincial area because it is limited to federal jurisdiction.

As additional protection for taxpayers there were also legal precedents in the common law which we have heard discussed today to help ordinary citizens who have concerns with the federal jurisdiction. We would like to make that tougher. Along with Hon. Members of the Conservative Party we would like to see this enshrined in the actual Constitution so that all law in every part of the country—federal, provincial and municipal—is filtered through a screen of protection for the property rights of ordinary citizens.

I have listened to some of the claims in the House today. I think they have been badly overblown. Comparisons of Canada with Hungary, comparisons of one Party's political platform with the writing of Karl Marx or such arguments are really hysterical and I think rejected by the vast majority of Canadian voters. Property owners today are not under seige. Instead we are seeing an opportunity for improvement of an already good situation. I think that is laudable.

I think examples which compare the New Democratic Party of British Columbia with Poland, as we heard one Member say, or with the writings of Karl Marx, degrade the argument. I think people who use those lines of thought should be embarrassed, but unfortunately they are not. People who are watching this debate or will read about it in the future will be a little confused by the nature of the discussion today. They have heard me agree with it. They have heard other Hon. Members of the House agree with it. They must wonder why we in the Government are so concerned and why we will not vote in favour of this motion if in fact we support it.

It is because some parliamentary clumsiness has occurred on the part of the movers of the motion. I am surprised because one of the most clever parliamentary strategists and tacticians is now the Acting Leader of the Conservative Party. I thought he would recognize that he puts his Party into a lamentable situation today.

What do we have here? We have a motion of non-confidence. That is a fact which the Government can never escape. When there is a motion of non-confidence, no matter how laudable the content, that motion must either be defeated or the Government must be prepared to hold an election. Today the Conservative Party would like to see an election. They are riding pretty high. We could have one wing of the Party running Quebec under Mr. Mulroney, one wing of the Party running Ontario under Mr. Davis, another wing running the Party on the Prairies under the leadership of their former leader. Who knows, they may even have one wing being run in the Arctic under the leadership of the present Leader. They could have a lot of leaders for different parts of the country.

The Government does not think it would be all that wise to go ahead with an election today. On that basis, we will be forced to vote against this motion. That would not be such a bad thing. It would not be so bad to defeat this motion if it were only limited to a small embarrassment. That is where the trap begins for the Conservatives. That is where their clumsiness comes in. They would love to give us a small embarrassment and leave it at that. We could live with that. They are here to oppose and embarrass, something they are pretty good at. I suggest they continue to do that. We will govern and they can embarrass. We can rely on their experience in that quarter.

The issue, however, has ramifications beyond this one small embarrassment. The Prime Minister made a pledge but with their manoeuvre the Conservatives have closed that avenue. Earlier today the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) said it would be impossible for the Government to defeat this motion and then bring it back in. We cannot do that. We cannot manoeuvre in a satisfactory fashion in order to get around the trap laid by the Conservative Party. The Conservative Party's clumsiness forces the Government to either have an election on this issue, which would ruin the issue because it would die right away, or wait until a new session of Parliament is called. I do not believe Canadians want to wait.

In their anxiety to embarrass the Government, the Conservatives have potentially threatened the very idea that all of us support. We have the pledge of the Prime Minister to progress with this issue before we leave for the summer. However, the way this motion is phrased prevents us from following through with that pledge. That is sloppy homework on the part of the Tory Party.

I believe the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) genuinely wants this issue addressed in the Constitution. I do not think he objects to embarrassing me and the Members of the Government. He likes that, thinks it is great sport, but he does not want that sport carried to the point where it would kill the very issue. He does not want to throw out the baby with the bath water.

By introducing this as a non-confidence motion, the Conservative Party is forcing the Government to vote against it, effectively closing off avenues of debate over the rest of the spring. I think they were delighted when the Prime Minister offered action a week or so ago. We were happy about it.

The Members of the New Democratic Party did raise a legitimate point when they urged some caution. They say there are some questions to be clarified. Reasonable people know that. Reasonable people see that it is all right to send something to a committee for a little bit of second thought. Reasonable people know that provincial Premiers and municipal leaders and all kinds of interested groups would like to express an opinion.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Name one.

Mr. Fisher: The Hon. Member asks me to name one. I would say that the Government of Prince Edward Island would probably like to be represented here and follow through with their established practice of warning us about their special circumstances. That Conservative Government would like to warn us. It should be given the chance.

The NDP has been right in urging us to go carefully, not to trample into this because of our basic enthusiasm. We can preserve our enthusiasm. We do not have to capitulate. We should be careful and give it some thought.

What we have is a bit of a box. In their enthusiasm, the Conservatives are trying to force the issue too much. The Government has no choice but to oppose the way the issue is presented. We support the issue but we oppose the tactic being used today. We do not agree with the absolute refusal of the NDP to provide any protection, but we agree we need some second thought and more study.

I understand that the various Parties have been negotiating on this issue and will try to present an alternative. I wish the negotiators well. I hope they do not come up with a trap similar to the one we are experiencing because people in my riding would like to see this issue carried forward without a lot of fooling around.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, answers, comments?

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this very important debate, let me say I and many other Canadians have been waiting overly long to have property rights entrenched in the Constitution. Considerable time and effort went into the Constitution. Witnesses from all across the country spoke of the necessity of putting property rights into it.

I see the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) is leaving. With the unanimous consent of the House, I would now like to introduce the following motion:

That the motion now before the House be taken without being considered as a motion of non-confidence and that at the conclusion of this day's sitting, the motion shall be deemed to have been referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, that the committee shall report thereon no later than June 7, 1983 and that the said report shall be disposed of no later than June 30, 1983.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I explain to the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members that I had understood and had been given official information that a different motion would be presented. I will have to ask for the indulgence of the House while we ascertain the admissibility of the present motion. While doing that, perhaps the Hon. Member could continue his remarks.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped for the unanimous consent of the House in presenting this motion in order to get out of what the Hon. Member for Mississauga North described as a box.

Looking back at the constitutional debate, we do not see the need for additional committee hearings. I draw to the attention of the House that the committee which studied the Constitution in 1981 and 1982 sat for 57 full days. We debated the matter of sending the resolution to the committee for 15 days in the House of Commons.

• (1630)

Mr. Speaker, the original resolution was debated in this House for 29 days. The resolution as amended in this House was debated for ten days. That is a total of 54 full days of debate within the House of Commons plus the 57 days within the Committee. I believe that anyone who was concerned or wished to express a view opposing property rights certainly had ample opportunity to do so within that time period.

When I look at the motion presented by the New Democratic Party, which was ruled out of order, I look upon it with some suspicion. I am sure that, with the group of advisors I saw in the lobby available to the New Democratic Party, and with the Clerk of the Table at the disposal of the New Democratic Party, if they favoured any form of property rights being put in the Constitution of Canada they certainly could have done so in a form that would have been found acceptable.

The proposal of the New Democratic Party does not say that they wish to entrench property rights within the Constitution of Canada. It says that they wish to entrench the principle of property rights within the Constitution of Canada; only some principles of property rights and only some property rights. When I read the motion which only extends to the people of Canada the right of property for a house and a farm, I wonder what happens to the mines of Canada that are owned by individual Canadians. I wonder what happens to the timber reserves, or if they are considered farms owned by individual Canadians. I wonder what happens to business dwellings that are owned by individual Canadians, and on and on. I wonder what happens to the implements and tools that are used to produce goods which are not protected as property of individual Canadians.

Within the context of property rights, there must be a principle that states that property rights are important to the well-being of the democratic process because, Mr. Speaker, if you are without the ability to own your own property, and through that property either derive protection or derive an income, you are without the benefit of an economic independence that creates the opportunity to carry on a democratic Government within Canada.

When we look at the history of the property rights question as proposed, when we go back in time to the amendment that was put forward by the Progressive Conservative Members within the Constitutional Committee and when it was placed there in good faith—Mr. Speaker, are you motioning to me?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I was not motioning to the Hon. Member but perhaps I may. In order to be of some assistance to the House I was about to indicate that I should interrupt the Hon. Member to seek the unanimous consent he would require in order to proceed and to succeed in his goal.

I do not want to read the motion again, but my understanding is that the motion, which I find to be in order, proposes to do away with an earlier House order, in the sense that the normal voting procedures would not be given at 4.45, nor would they be deferred until Monday, but rather there would not be a vote and the motion would be deemed to have been referred to the standing committee. We can dispose of that. We now need unanimous consent in order that the Hon. Member may put his motion. If there is unanimous consent to that effect, then I will read the motion again and see if there is unanimous consent to the terms of the motion.

Accordingly, the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: On behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate our unanimous consent to the motion.

Mr. Murphy: Our problem, Mr. Speaker, is that we do not have a copy of what was presented by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). If we may see a copy of it, then you could pose the question again.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that you defer putting the motion for two minutes and that you let the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster go on with his speech so that the New Democratic Member may have a copy of the motion.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I would just say that we would be prepared to agree, both to the putting of the motion and to the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It has been suggested that copies be distributed. Accordingly, again I would invite the Hon. Member, if he is willing, to continue with his speech and copies will be distributed shortly.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly pleased to say I do not have a specific place to start or stop, so these interruptions do not cause me a great deal of difficulty.

As we look historically at the debate on property rights, we see that the proposed introduction of property rights within the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in our new Constitution was proposed within Committee and supported by the Members of the Progressive Conservative Party and that Committee at that time. At the same time, the Minister representing the Government, the present Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), gave his consent to the inclusion of property rights within the Constitution of Canada. Over a short period of time, I think a weekend, there was a change of mind and property rights were traded off for support in other areas of the constitutional issue.

At that time, I felt that without the inclusion of property rights, the other rights that were entrenched within the Constitution of Canada in the Constitution Act of 1982 were not as meaningful as they could have been. Since that time, during debate in this House, we have heard some Members say that the Progressive Conservative Party is again speaking of property rights again. I would like to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that the constituents of Kindersley-Lloyminster, and indeed I am sure Members' constituents all across this great land, have not stopped wishing since the Constitution was ascended to in 1982 that property rights would be included in the Constitution of Canada.

The reason that some Members of the NDP do not wish to have constitutional rights to property entrenched in the Constitution, I suppose, goes back to the old Regina Manifesto and the doctrine it put forth. At that time, it may have been a cause of concern to the people of Saskatchewan and Regina, but that was some 50 years ago. I think there has been considerable change since that time.

Mr. Speaker, I see that you have something in your hand. I would hope that I could carry on later.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I trust that by this time, as per the request of one of the Hon. Members, that all Hon. Members have received copies of the proposed motion. Is there a point of order? Is the Hon. Member for Churchill rising on a point of order.

Mr. Murphy: No, Mr. Speaker, but with reference to your previous request for unanimous consent, in discussion with other parties we have indicated that our caucus would meet on Monday to discuss this motion and determine at that time whether or not we would give unanimous consent. At the present time, we cannot give unanimous consent. We have not had the opportunity to have a caucus meeting.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): For the sake of formality, I have yet to put the issue to the House as to whether there is unanimous consent. Since I have already been advised in advance that there will not be unanimous consent to permit the Hon. Member to put a motion, then I think we can take it as agreed that what we will deal with at 4:45 is the original motion. If there are any other contributions to that subject matter, I will be glad to recognize Hon. Members.

Appropriately, I must say that the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster who has been interrupted two or three times, would now quite properly be the Hon. Member to continue the debate until 4.45.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I spoke of 57 days in the Committee, of 15 days in the House, of 29 days in the House, of 10 days in the House, and an additional 54 days. This can be checked in Hansard Index on page 167 where there appears reference after reference to pages where property rights were discussed. The motion was put on behalf of this Party, but really on behalf of all Members of this House except the Members of the New Democratic Party who wish to see property rights entrenched in the Constitution. It was a very reasonable proposal. It allowed for additional debate in committee. It allowed for the people of Canada to have the constitutional right to have property rights entrenched in their Constitution by June 30, 1983.

• (1640)

In a spirit of continuing co-operation in order to try and get something for the people of Canada—never mind the concerns of the NDP, I see one Member of that Party arriving now though I have not seen him in the House earlier—I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion. It may drag the NDP kicking and screaming toward property rights, but the people of Canada deserve that the NDP have whatever consideration it needs to allow it to consent to property rights being put into the Constitution. When I present my motion I hope that the Members of that Party who are not in the House, especially those from my Province, will be able to express their concerns to their colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill who, I am not sure whether on behalf of himself or of the Party, denied property rights.

I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move:

That notwithstanding Standing 62(9) the putting of the question or questions later this day be deferred until the conclusion of Routine Proceedings on Monday, May 2, 1983.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair seeks to determine whether there is unanimous consent to put the motion.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. Member for Kindersly-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) would be prepared to answer a question before you put the motion. Soon we will not have time to question him at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to put the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is not consent.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate the unanimous consent of the Progressive Conservative Party to putting the motion.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate that we also wish to see this motion passed.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the record show that I am fully in support of the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminister.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I find it incredible—

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Although one Member of our Party did not grant unanimous consent at this time, we do not believe that the motion is necessary. If there are some negotiations to finding a way of putting property rights in the Constitution—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, in the short time left to me I should like to calmly and rationally express the concerns of my constituents and constituents all across Canada, represented by Members of Parliament in the Progressive Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and, indeed, the New Democratic Party, who wish to have the right to property enshrined in the Constitution.

I find this more repugnant than I can say, and I cannot understand why, when Members of this Party and of the Goverhment and, indeed, the Independent Member who sits in the House, have done everything in our power and within the rules to provide that the people of Canada can have the right of property enshrined in the Constitution which all people of Canada wish to have—

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster was ready to answer a question. Is he still ready to do that now?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In accordance with an order made earlier by the House I am unable to recognize points of order or to permit the Hon. Member to continue his address.

It being 4.45 o'clock, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the business of supply in accordance with Standing Order

62(9). The question is on the motion of the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). All those in favour of the motion, please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing 12(3) the recorded division stands deferred until three o'clock, Monday, May 2, 1983.

It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 4.46 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Thursday, April 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to engage in this debate on the budget. Since I realize that there is a certain amount of latitude allowed in the debate, I want to go on record now as stating how disappointed the Progressive Conservative Party is in the attitude of the New Democratic Party toward property rights when, on Friday, they refused unanimous consent to send the question of property rights to committee.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member must address the budget in the debate and not deal with completely extraneous matters.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) has barely begun his speech. The Chair is astutely conscious of the problem of relevance, as is any occupant of the chair.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I too am distressed that the NDP, having refused consent, now feel so concerned about the decision they made on Friday when they refused to allow the motion to be treated as a non-confidence matter, refused to allow it to go to committee and, in effect, refused to allow Canadians the protection of property rights in the Constitution.

I examined the budget from the perspective of my constituents. Simcoe North is representative of Ontario, being half urban and half rural, close enough to Metro Toronto to understand its problems but far enough away so that we do not get confused. For a nation with the promise that Canada has, we in Simcoe North are concerned about the way the country is suffering under the Liberals. Our economy should be leading the world. Canada's human and economic resources are second to none, but for too long Liberal administrations have pursued a "buy the vote now, our children pay later" policy. While the Liberals chased a Charter of Rights, Canadians watched their jobs, their businesses, their homes, their farms, their hopes and their dreams slide down the drain.

• (1110)

Before discussing the budget directly, I want to address the general economic situation facing Canada on budget day. Our unemployment stood at 12.6 per cent, a post-depression record. We had youth unemployment at 21.3 per cent. Over two million Canadians were unemployed or had given up looking for work.

In Midland, Ontario, the Midland Free Press reported that a staggering 4,300 people were registered with the Canada Employment Centre. Midland has 33 per cent unemployment.

Canadians wanted a budget that would produce jobs, but they did not get it. Business bankruptcies in Canada in 1982 were 33 per cent higher than in 1981, 63 per cent higher than in 1980 and 91 per cent higher than in 1979. As we can see, business bankruptcies have doubled. The economy of the riding of Simcoe North is based on small business. Canadians wanted a budget that would address the problems of small business. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that they did not get it.

Home owners in Simcoe North, as did home owners everywhere, suffered through the horrendous mortgage interest rates created by the Liberal Party's high interest rate policy. Mortgage interest rates rose as high as 21 per cent and 22 per cent, causing misery to my constituents and to all Canadians during 1981 and 1982. Power of sale and foreclosure proceedings became the order of the day as a result of Liberal policies. Canadians were looking for a provision for the deduction of mortgage interest from taxable income or mortgage interest rate protection in the budget. They got neither.

As I have mentioned, Simcoe North is half rural and half urban. My farm constituents engage in beef and dairy cattle operations as well as in hog and lamb operations. My constituents also grow cash crops. During the past two years farmers have faced the problems that small business faced, including high interest rates and restricted credit. They were looking for a budget that addressed the problems of farmers. The budget did not do that.

What about the taxpayer? Disposable income has shrunk considerably due to inflation and high unemployment. The taxpayers in my riding were not looking for a budget that increased taxes, but it did. The budget increased taxes on the lower and middle class, not directly but in the traditional Liberal way, that is by deception.

People in Simcoe North were also concerned about the deficit. We do not want to mortgage our children's future with horrendous deficits; we want spending controlled. We want to eliminate the waste.

Given those problems facing us today, Mr. Speaker, what is our position on the budget? How do we view it? Did it address job creation, the problems of small business, mortgage interest rates, the plight of farmers, the lower and middle class taxpayer and the deficit? Those are the points on which I want to base my remarks today.

Faced with record high unemployment as a result of Liberal policies, what did the Finance Minister do to reverse the trend? First—and I approach this with some spirit that the Government has recognized something—the Minister acknowledged what Progressive Conservatives have been saying for years, namely that the private sector creates jobs, not the bureaucrats. I must admit that there is great interest in how the Finance Minister ever made the bureaucrats swallow that pill, but having swallowed it, let us look at the budget itself to see whether or not the Minister, in true Liberal tradition, was saying one thing and doing another.

The budget unveiled Special Recovery Programs designed to dazzle the Canadian people into thinking that the Liberals are doing something. The Liberals are going to spend $4.8 billion on capital projects next year. Of course, all Canadians realize that figure was originally $4.6 billion, which was adjusted overnight as a result of what is known colloquially throughout Canada as the "Lalonde leak". That is a good indication to Canadians of how much care went into the preparation of the program. We are asked to believe that this will accelerate the recovery of the economy. In fact, we all know that it is another Liberal pork-barrel scheme to buy votes and favours.

The area of Midland-Penetanguishene will be shocked to find that the ILAP designation has been eliminated in the budget. After three months of waiting for that designation, after all the time and money spent on its application, the hopes and dreams of those people were dashed by the Government when it abandoned the ILAP concept.

We honestly thought that the Liberal Government would understand the crying need to create jobs in Canada. Once again we are amazed that they do not. Instead of quick and easy programs designed to encourage business, to hire people and to train them with a minimum amount of fuss and paperwork, we are besieged with short-term projects of devious long-range value. The programs referred to under the budget initiatives boggle the mind. Their end value as vehicles for employment are doubtful.

However, I would suggest that the enrolment of 5,000 young people in the reserve and regular forces of the Canadian Forces is a step in the right direction. In my opinion those young people will be enrolled and learning a trade and preparing themselves to make a contribution to Canada long before the bureaucrats in Ottawa have designed the forms for the other so-called job-creation programs. After all that, after enunciating the fancy programs, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) admits that unemployment will average an unacceptable 12.4 per cent in 1983 and that there will be 55,000 fewer jobs in 1984 than there were in 1981. What a sad commentary on an economic statement which, in the words of the Minister of Finance, was to help more than 1.5 million Canadians who want to work but cannot find jobs.

What did the budget do for small business? Canadians know that the Liberal Party is responsible for the current joke about small business: "Do you want to own a small business while the Liberals are in power? That is easy, buy a big one and wait." As I suggested, the investment tax credit provisions are complex. They presume the availability of funds to make investment and thus qualify for the tax credit. In fact, the available capital of small business has been severely impacted as a result of the Liberal-created recession. Small business has very little money to invest.

The other investment provisions are, in my opinion, for stockmarket investors, not for small business. What about the Federal Business Development Bank? I see the Minister responsible for small business in the House today. I understand he will make an announcement when he speaks, so let me deal with that announcement. What about the noises concerning what will be done through the FBDB? As a lawyer who worked with small business until becoming involved in politics, I want to say that when I see the Federal Business Development Bank doing something for small business, that is when I will believe it; not with announcements, not with brochures, but when I see it actually doing something for small business.

Let me quote from a letter I received from a constituent that deals with the Federal Business Development Bank, the "people's bank":

> As you have been advised, prior to the completion of our investigation of your request for financial assistance the Federal Business Development Bank will require a prepaid commitment in the amount of $3,950.

• (1120)

That is the kind of help we are giving small business. It is a bank of last resort. If you are going broke and have $3,950, it will look at what you are doing. If the Liberals are serious about helping small business, they will act immediately to improve that image. They will put money into loans, not bureaucrats who pretend they understand business.

When the Minister makes the announcement about the Federal Business Development Bank becoming an investment bank and taking shares in small business, the question I will have for the Minister is how will the FBDB maintain its objectivity as a banker when it puts on the investor's hat? Why, when it is not the policy of the chartered banks in Canada to ask for a commitment from small business before looking at a loan proposition, is the Federal Business Development Bank demanding that kind of money?

Lastly, under the guise of helping small business, I want to deal with the loss carryforward provisions, called the loss carryovers. The Minister makes a big deal about increasing the loss carryover provision as a boon to small business. The suggestion is that this will provide increased certainty to firms so that they can benefit more effectively from tax losses that they sustain. That is ridiculous. What kind of economy operates on the hope of tax losses? What kind of businessman or woman is proud of tax losses and wants them so they can carry them forward? I suggest to the Liberal Party that if they tell that to any bank manager in any small branch, they will laugh. That is what the business community will do to the Liberal Party with that provision.

Let us now move on to homes. The Minister of Finance helped the well-to-do invest in the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan. They are encouraged to release funds for the purchase of homes, furniture and appliances. What about the great bulk of Canadian home owners, the home owners who suffered through the Liberal high interest rate policy years? They are ignored. There is no provision in the budget to protect home owners against the ravages of high mortgage interest rates. Our policy, well stated and well enunciated, is that Canadians should be able to write off mortgage interest against other income. We would also consider mortgage interest rate insurance. However, the budget completely ignores Canadians who pay 20 per cent and 21 per cent on homes as a result of the high interest rate policy.

I suggest that Canadians who presently own homes will not forgive the inaction of the Liberal Party from 1980 to 1982. We cannot allow the wrath of power of sale and foreclosure proceedings to continue to visit Canadian home owners without mercy. It may be Liberal policy, but it certainly is not Conservative policy.

What about the farmers? After the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), the most embarrassed Minister of this Government on budget night had to be the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). The budget is an insult to farmers. The only thing they are promised is the great boondoggle—being able to carry their losses back further and forward further. Isn't that an incentive? One can see the bureaucrats on Sparks Street coming up with that line. The budget proposed changes to enhance the ability of all farmers and fishermen to utilize losses in one year to reduce taxes in the other year. In other words, they intend to see that these people keep losing money which they can write off over a longer period of time. That is nonsense.

At the same time as the Minister of Finance is promoting farm losses to enhance farming as an occupation, he is ignoring a very real problem. I refer to Section 31 of the Income Tax Act which states that farmers who incur losses on their farming operations are denied the opportunity to apply that loss to reduce non-farm income in excess of $5,000. In other words, the loss is levelled out to $5,000, a 1960 figure. Many of my constituents in Simcoe North have two jobs. They work very hard at farming and of necessity work on a full or part-time basis at another job.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that farmers do not farm to lose money. Because of the Government's interest rate policy and lack of concern for the farming community, farmers are losing more than $5,000 a year and yet are working off the farm as well. When will the Liberal Government wake up to the reality of the situation in this country? When will it understand what is going on out there? Mr. Speaker, we support the review of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act in order to bring it up to modern day standards.

What did the Minister of Finance do to the taxpayer on budget night? I am interested in what he did for the middle and lower income Canadians who foot the bill of the Government for Liberal wastefulness. He increased taxes. Federal sales tax will be increased by one percentage point October 1, 1984. Tax exemptions for children will no longer be indexed for inflation. The federal tax reduction will be reduced. The standard deduction of $100 for charitable donations will be removed. The Canadian ownership special charge will be maintained, although we have no plans to buy anything. Telecommunications charges will be subject to a 6 per cent sales tax.

Only a Liberal Finance Minister could increase the taxes of lower and middle income Canadians and then claim that the economy will improve because lower and middle income Canadians will spend more money as consumers. It is twisted logic, but then again, the definition of Liberal logic is twisted logic.

What about the deficit? What is $31.3 billion? That is the projected deficit. It is more than Ottawa spent in total in 1974-1975. A $31.3 billion deficit is equal to $3,120 per taxpayer, $1,200 for every man, woman and child in Canada. One tax dollar in three goes to service the debt. Given that problem, what did the Minister do to address it in the budget? Nothing. There is no indication of restraint in the budget. There is no provision in the budget to cut spending, just a provision for future spending. The Government is gambling. It is gambling that revenues will increase rather than taking action to control and reduce spending.

Government spending was up 17.6 per cent in 1981-1982; 16.8 per cent in 1982-1983, the year of the six and five provision; and it will go to 12.7 per cent in 1983-1984. When will the Government balance its books? Similary, the Government accepts the fact that over 12 per cent of Canadians will remain out of work. That is a national tragedy.

On budget night the budget looked reasonable to us but detailed examination of it has revealed the usual Liberal flim-flam. It contains no depth of stimulation, no depth of concern. Once again, the Liberals have failed to help the unemployed, small business people, farmers, the home owner and the lower and middle class.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken? If not, the Chair recognizes the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey).

The Budget—Mr. Rompkey

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by thanking my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), for the particular attention he has paid to my client group, the medium-sized businesses of Canada. As I have travelled across the country in the past months to speak with business people, it has become clear that there were a number of specific issues that could be dealt with in the budget that would go a long way toward helping this dynamic part of our economy play a major role in the economic recovery. I am pleased to say that the budget incorporates many of those measures.

My own Committee, the Consultative Committee on Small Business, has been discussing many of these initiatives over the past few months. They were of the view that the adoption of these initiatives would provide a significant stimulus to this segment of the private sector and contribute to our industrial and regional economic development objectives. I could not help but be pleased to see how many of the recommendations that I made on behalf of the Small Business Consultative Committee became part of the budget. There is a growing awareness of the tremendous value of small business to Canada's economic well-being. Perhaps these businesses do not stand out individually, with some particular exceptions, but collectively they provide the base on which our industrial strength stands. The analogy would be to compare it to a hockey game. The superstars get all the credit but they could not do their job unless the rest of the team did theirs.

I believe this budget will significantly help small business do its job. Clearly, a first priority was to take action directed at providing employment. Bringing forward a number of major capital projects will project a stimulus into the economy in the short term. These undertakings have their own direct, beneficial impact. They also have a spin-off impact on the small business community which supplies the needs of the larger firms. This group will benefit from the pick up in demand.

At the same time the budget recognizes another immediate need—the need to provide assistance to companies that have undergone a tremendous period of pressure during this global recession. Smaller firms were particularly hurt through this period. They do not have internally generated resources to draw upon to the same extent as large firms and they do not have the same access to externally generated funds. The Minister of Finance has been sensitive to this debt-equity problem of small business.

I must concur with the Minister of Finance when he said:

> The way in which so many have managed to pull through the recession is a tribute to the dedication and entrepreneurial spirit of Canadians.

He was referring to small firms which he described as "one of the most dynamic and innovative elements in the private sector". The budget takes a number of positive measures that will enable our small firms to restore their balance sheets. It is the first step necessary to provision themselves to take advantage of the economic recovery now building momentum.

Improving the investment climate and increasing the availability of internally generated funds will allow our industries to invest in innovative activities. These are the very activities that Canada needs most to ensure our competitive position both at home and in world markets.

I should like to draw the attention of the House to the way the specific measures in the budget are of benefit to small and medium-sized firms. While the provisions are beneficial to all Canadian industries, I believe that small business people can see themselves singled out as a major vehicle of our economic recovery.

The measures addressing business losses will provide a major improvement to the cash flow of businesses, increasing the carryback to three years instead of one and providing the alternative of carrying losses forward for seven years instead of the previous five. This will have an immediate impact on small business. More important, this measure will stabilize the small business cash flow once the recovery takes hold and profitability returns. The provision for the carryback of capital losses to be increased to three years from one will have a similar impact and will improve a company's cash flow.

Additional changes, such as removing the upper limit of the investment tax credit, will be welcomed by small business. So too will be the provision for the remission of a portion of the tax credit directly to the business. This, of course, provides significant benefit to those firms without taxable income. It is a major measure in view of the serious erosion of small business profits in the past year.

As the House is aware, the budget proposes to refund 40 per cent of our new tax credits directly to the firm. This will be particularly valuable in assisting firms to finance research and development or purchase certain manufacturing, transportation and construction capital assets. Firms that combine this measure with the tax credit to purchase common shares will find that they are able to reduce their cost of new equity issue. The tax credit to common share purchasers will also encourage the injection of new permanent capital and liquidity into businesses. This must happen if companies are to redress their serious debt to equity ratio problems. It has been a long-standing problem for smaller businesses to raise equity. This budget measure, by appealing to venture capitalists and individuals, will help overcome that problem.

Hon. Members will also note that the Minister of Finance proposed a number of measures for discussion that will enhance the ability of firms, particularly small firms, to benefit from R and D tax incentives and to attract financing for R and D ventures.

In my discussions with the small business community in Canada it was clear that its major request was that its needs should be addressed through the tax system. The small business community was saying that the programs are there but people did not necessarily have the time to read the brochures and fill out the applications. It was asking for a break within the tax system. It held that this approach would provide the framework within which it could adjust to its own particular circumstances. I am pleased to note that the budget does exactly that.

That is not all the budget has done to assist small business; other specific measures will also be beneficial. I note the increase in funding for the program of export market development and would point out to the House that the principal beneficiaries of this measure will be small businesses. The Government has repeatedly stressed the value of exports to our economy. It is perhaps not well known that small firms play a major role in our export business. To encourage even more participation—because it is particularly difficult for small businesses to break into this highly competitive area—additional funding is being made available.

Here in Canada, the construction industry will be particularly helped by the budget. The Minister of Finance has provided an additional $355 million to speed a continued recovery in the housing industry as well as the funds that will be spent as part of the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program. I point out to this House that almost 97 per cent of the construction firms in Canada are small businesses. It is evident that they will benefit significantly.

Also in the budget, I am pleased to note, is a proposal that responds to another major consideration of small businesses. The Minister of Finance, in responding to a request from many associations and groups, announced that the Canada Tax Foundation will hold a national symposium this summer on the subject of simplifying the tax system. As a former Minister of Revenue I applaud that. As we know, simplifying a tax system is far from a simple process, but I look forward to participating in this endeavour that will be of such benefit to Canadian firms.

In his budget address the Minister indicated that I would be providing information on the expanded role of the Federal Business Development Bank. The Bank has long played a valuable role in assisting the needs of smaller businesses. As it evolved from its beginning as the Industrial Development Bank, the need to modify the Bank's role became evident.

I am announcing today that the Federal Business Development Bank, while maintaining its traditional functions of term lending, will expand and refocus its client services and progressively embark on its role as a merchant banker. This latter role will enable the bank actively to identify new business ventures and participate in their development. In doing so, the FBDB will usually take a minority position with the intention of selling the shares after a few years. The Bank's new role will continue to focus on the needs of the small firms and it will complement the tax measures outlined in this budget. Taken together, the two thrusts will substantially improve the business environment for Canadian firms.

The basic service of the Bank has been term lending and this will continue. At the same time we must recognize that the Bank has been facing increasing competition from Canadian chartered banks and other lending institutions in this area. That is as it should be. In fact, I believe that the Federal Business Development Bank has, in a way, been instrumental in creating this competition for itself. By demonstrating that term lending can be profitable in a number of cases that the other institutions had already rejected, it caused these other institutions to re-examine their practices. Their examination obviously led them to conclude that many Canadian firms who had already been turned down were in fact good prospects.

As a consequence, as I have noted, commercial institutions have moved to increase their lendings to smaller firms on terms which they can afford. I would hope that the role of FBDB as a catalyst will continue, believing as I do that Canadian banks can go much further in their efforts to help the smaller firms.

I have met with the Bankers' Association and I am meeting with each bank individually. In those meetings I have asked them to review their collateral demands which, I believe, are often excessive and to consider additional training of their staff in how to deal with the special needs of smaller firms. I have stressed to them that there appear to be different levels of service across Canada, with firms in British Columbia and Newfoundland expressing particular concerns.

There is one consequence of the increase in term lending by the banks which we cannot ignore. FBDB has increasingly moved to provide term lending to higher risk firms. It is clearly the lender of last resort for Canadian companies and is, therefore, the institution which is running the greatest risk. It is reasonable, then, to expect that it will incur losses in its term lending portfolio. When one considers that the chartered banks, with their choice of loans and their emphasis on collateral, incurred losses in 1982 of $1 billion more than they had anticipated, it is evident that the FBDB would have even greater problems. I believe this is a reasonable cost of doing business with the Government operating in partnership with Canadian firms. If we had no losses, I would believe we were not taking sufficient risk.

The Bank does not restrict itself to term lending. Without question, a major need for many Canadian small businesses is information and advice about the management of their operations. Additional funding will be provided so that FBDB's current business and information services can be expanded. The client services offered by the Bank have proven invaluable to many firms in the establishment of their long-term viability. The Bank will particularly emphasize the delivery of these services outside the major urban centres of Canada. So we hope, Mr. Speaker, that the FBDB will particularly focus on small business and on small business in rural Canada. Small businesses will be assisted in the preparation of their proposals which they will be taking to the private sector financial institutions. In this way we will be meeting a demonstrated need and, I hope, will also spur the chartered banks to greater effort in this regard.

These services must be offered at a cost which smaller firms can afford, and to do this the Bank has traditionally subsidized this service from the profits made on its term lending role. As I have pointed out, these profits will be harder and harder to achieve as the other lending institutions move into areas that the FBDB has shown to be money makers. In spite of this, we believe this service to be invaluable to the Bank's clients and as a consequence the costs must be absorbed.

The progressive expansion of the "merchant banking" function of the FBDB will fill this gap which exists for small firms seeking financing. As the Bank develops its investment banking capability FBDB will address the equity and other financial requirements of promising small businesses. These are the very businesses upon which we depend for innovation but for whom the raising of equity presents the greatest difficulty. Essentially, the Bank will be a deal maker for these smaller firms. It will package financing arrangements for a fee or it may participate directly as an equity partner or holder of stock options.

In conclusion, I repeat that I believe this budget recognizes the tremendous value of small businesses to our economy. These firms will play a significant role in leading us on our road to recovery. They have the flexibility to move quickly into promising new ventures. They are the innovators who provide new products and processes. They are the network of suppliers who enable larger firms to continue. It has often been noted that employment creation is largely done by Canada's smaller enterprises. This budget, by providing significant assistance to them, will clearly assist us to achieve our overriding goal, that of providing long-term, meaningful work to Canadians in all parts of the country.

Again, I congratulate the Minister of Finance for presenting the small businesses of Canada with a package of tax measures and other stimulative initiatives which will enable them to grow and flourish. This budget has responded to the needs of, and to the requests made by, the small business community. When they take advantage of the opportunities which are presented, as I am sure they will, Canada's industrial capability will be enhanced.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Minister responsible for small business. In a letter from the Federal Business Development Bank to a constituent of mine it was stated, in part: "Prior to the completion of our investigation of your request for financial assistance, the Federal Business Development Bank will require a prepaid commitment in the amount of $3,950". By contrast, the standard practice of the Canadian banking system, as received this morning from the Director of Public Affairs, is: "It is not standard practice for the chartered banks to level a commitment or standby fee on loans". The only exception might be in the case of a large multi-million dollar loan with a fixed rate.

Will the Federal Business Development Bank abandon its practice of requiring commitment fees from Canadians who go to them for loans?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, before commenting on the particular instance, I would like to receive the details from the Hon. Member. I can assure him that I will take it up with the Bank. I would say in general that the people to whom I am listening, who are on the Consultative Committee which I have and, moreover, the study done by the Federation of Independent Business, which is certainly not the great defender of the chartered banks has shown that collateral was too high and that service was not given to small business, particularly in the rural areas where there was no competition. My effort has not been to get FBDB to respond to small business because, indeed, they have been responded to by and large. For example, 23 per cent of the portfolio of FBDB is in tourism, which is essentially all small business.

I will be glad to look into the individual case which the Hon. Member has raised because I know of his sincere concern in this area. I do feel, however, that the reality is that in the past FBDB has been a lender of last resort but has been focusing on small business; and in my speech this morning I pointed out that we want them to do even more of that in the future.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my question is: Will the Federal Business Development Bank abandon its practice of charging commitment fees?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that it is the practice of the Bank to do this. I undertook to look into this particular case, but I do not want to comment further on it until I have had a chance to examine exactly the point the Hon. Member is raising. As far as I know, however, it is not the practice to do that.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, we all listened with interest to the announcement of the Minister of State for Small Businesses concerning the terms of reference being changed for the FBDB and the re-focusing, to use his words, I believe, of banking interest into the business community; that is to say, taking minority positions or inventing for equity in the small business. It is shades of Nordair or Maislin Trucking, where you go into a situation in dire straits, invest money and in return take an interest. It is shades of General Motors, and on and on the list goes.

My question to the Minister is a very direct one. Is there an opportunity in those investments in small business by the Federal Business Development Bank for the business to purchase back without bonus, without penalty and without notice? In other words, if they invest in the company in order to bail it out of its difficulty, as a Government moves into the private sector, can the private sector buy back without notice, bonus or penalty?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, it is important to recognize the main thrust of this budget. The main message here is that if recovery is to come, and it will, then private enterprise has to be the main engine of the economy. To go even further, I would say that small business is the drive shaft, and that is exactly what we are emphasizing here this morning.

The main point is, however, that the preferred option, obviously, is to let the private sector do the job. If it needs some help, then how is that help going to be given? In the whole process of merchant banking, I do not think the first option would be to take an equity position. Possibly if there is other capital available from private sources, that might be the preferred option, and in my opinion would be. I have seen certain cases in my own area, although I do not know whether the Hon. Member has seen them in his area, where unless that is done, the deal just does not fly. So there is a provision here for taking an equity position.

I do not think we should necessarily target that as being the first option, because I repeat that the main thrust is to let private enterprise do the job wherever possible. As far as unloading afterwards is concerned, I mentioned in my speech that there were certainly provisions for doing that and I would hope it would be done as easily and as quickly as possible.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, that question was not answered satisfactorily. The question was a very direct one. If the Government is to take an equity interest in the private sector for the purposes of bailing out that business or helping it over a difficult period in its economic development, is the Minister prepared, as the Minister responsible for small business, to assure the House and the Canadian business community that there are no strings attached in a permanent investment by the Government of Canada into the private sector? In other words, will the Minister guarantee the House that that equity can be purchased back by the business from the Government without notice, bonus or penalty? What could be more simple than that question? Answer yes or no.

Mr. Rompkey: The answer is that it can be purchased back from the Government. With regard to the details of how that will be done, I would say to the Hon. Member that in the next couple of days I hope to give more details of the change in the FBDB. However, the general answer to the question is "yes", without saying "yes" to each one of the individual points which he raised, because within the next couple of days I hope to make a more specific announcement as to exactly how these functions will be carried out.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, one of the problems which now seems to be confronting many smaller, older municipalities is that plants which have been the mainstay of employment in those municipalities are now closing and moving away, sometimes moving to other municipalities, sometimes closing entirely and just moving out of the country. I can see nothing proposed by the Government in its budget which begins to address that question. The question really involves responsibility to the municipality for the money which was spent in developing the infrastructure from which the company benefited, responsibility to the workers and their families who are totally disrupted and, in many cases, destroyed by the decision, without being given adequate notice or opportunity to participate in any discussion or decision making.

Does the Minister not feel that we have reached a point in time in this country when corporate behaviour must be altered somewhat and we must place some additional demands on those who make very important economic decisions which affect not only individuals but also entire communities? If so, would he subscribe to the idea that there might be some need to demand from the corporate dicision makers, large and small, that they sit down, well in advance of a decision to close, so as to discuss the problem with their employees, municipal officials and various levels of Government, and to discuss the way in which they are reaching their decision so that the solution might be found and those companies are not placed in the position of having to move and the employees are not placed in the position of probably being unemployed, perhaps some of them for the rest of their lives?

Mr. Rompkey: It is first of all important to point out that the budget will hopefully help companies to expand. Whereas companies have suffered losses before and have had to close down, the budget may indeed make others change their minds. People in my constituency are saying: "Look, have the companies looked at these new tax provisions? Maybe they can change their minds. Maybe they can take advantage of these provisions and rethink the whole process." Some closedowns may be affected because of the tax provisions here, but I do agree that the private sector has responsibilities, not only in getting the economy moving, but also in letting people know of their exact plans. There is a responsibility to the community. I know of cases where banks have pulled out local branches. It is the only game in town. One cannot pull out the hospital or the school.

Mr. Deans: That's right.

Mr. Rompkey: However, one can pull out the banks. I think banks have some responsibility to provide a service. They should not simply take money out of the community but should show some responsibility toward it. The same kind of responsibility applies to corporations. I might even say that it applies to Crown corporations. They have not always been the most responsive to the needs of communities either, even though they are creatures of the Government.

I think the point is well taken, but I do not think we should be focusing on the past. Hopefully, things that have happened in the past might be rethought in the light of the budget provisions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period of questions and answers has expired.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, basically I have two main threads to follow in my remarks today, the first being specifically directed to some of the unusual features surrounding and, indeed, leading up to the presentation of the budget of April 19. The second, while more general, is still related to the conduct of the Government in the fiscal field and its effects on economic recovery.

The springboard, if I may use the term, for my first series of comments was that utterly childish but, at the same time, rather frightening mélange of arrogance, pettiness and teenage tomfoolery indulged in by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on Monday, or perhaps it was Tuesday, a fortnight ago, once he had bought his new shoes. I refer, of course, to his date with the cameraman. This was followed, as we all remember, by a quite unbelievable sequence of arrant stupidities which could have been either intentional or the result of poor staff work. Again, I refer to the tabling first of one set of budget papers, followed by another, and finally, it would seem, by a third and possibly even a fourth.

The sleight-of-hand involved or the bad staff work calculated to cover up an inexcusable slip brought on by the arrogance to which I have already referred, or which was perhaps intended to do not more than lay this sort of smokescreen or create a diversionary issue around the matter, ended up in an exhibition of such sniggering self-justification on the part of the Minister as to be an egregious insult, I suggest, to the proprieties and the dignity of the House. It will stand forever as a blot on the record the Minister of Finance.

This was indeed a budget of recovery, as it was called by the Minister. It was fixed up at the last minute in an effort to effect the recovery of the Minister from an unpardonable lapse from orthodox parliamentary practice. At the last minute he quite obviously fudged the books by adding an extra $200 million to his proposed expenditures. He did not have time, however, to determine either where the $200 million was to be spent—

Mr. Cosgrove: Job creation.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): —or from whose pocket it was to come. In this fashion he tried to extricate himself unscrupulously from a very sticky and thoroughly demeaning situation, that of exposing his budget in public before budget night. Surely a case of indecent exposure. I will leave it at that for a moment.

Yet this performance, planned or not, contrived or simply stumbled upon or into, was, in a manner of speaking, no more than the most recent in a sequence of events surrounding budget presentations. I hesitate to suggest that it could be the culmination but it was at least the last in a three-year series of distortive manipulations of the rules and traditions of the House surrounding budgets, their presentation and their consequences.

With all due respect, before the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey) leaves the Chamber, I would suggest that he contrived another one today. He might more properly have introduced his suggestions on Statements by Ministers in order to allow a debate. Instead, like some other Ministers, he worked it into his budget speech and had only ten minutes of questions. As I say, this is probably not the culmination but just one in a series.

• (1200)

Not content with playing with the documents that had to be tabled, the Minister of Finance announced one or two days later that the whole business of budget secrecy was outmoded and we should follow the U.S. practice. As far as the U.S. practice is concerned, I hope his staff will bring to his attention the comments made in a letter published in The Globe and Mail on April 27 by the Hon. Eugene Forsey in which he indicated that there is no possibility of drawing a parallel between that performance and the United States practice.

Of course, the Minister reversed himself on the logic of that comment by suggesting in a later comment that the T.V. cameraman whom he had teased and tormented even to the length of suggesting that he might like to use his zoom lens, was no better than a thief. Who is to say what other monstrous charges are still to come after that suggestion?

The history of budget presentations by this Government is not a very reputable one on other accounts, because it is breaking new ground in parliamentary tradition, whether intentionally or not, by allowing a single session to extend beyond three years. That is a revolution in itself. It is a record for which the Government, or at least some of its Ministers, are apparently unaccountably proud. Today is the five hundred and first sitting in our fourth year of this first session of the Thirty-second Parliament. However, that is another story which will have to be saved for another day because the mess surrounding the budget presentation is what we are concerned with here. Whether a parliamentary session extending into a fourth year is legal is a completely different issue.

To return to the budget, matters arose as far back as April, 1980 when the then Minister of Finance who is presently the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), used most of his time during the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne on April 21, 1980 to introduce a mini-budget statement—it is even called that in the Hansard index—and a Ways and Means motion. This is to be found at page 243 of Hansard of April 21, 1980. This is probably the first time that a Ways and Means motion has been introduced in such a manner.

This is only the first break with parliamentary traditions in the fiscal field during this session. The record over the next three years is just as startling, as I propose to outline.

A question of privilege that followed from that unusual performance in April of 1980 was raised by Members from this side of the House, because to accept such a practice without comment was to deprive Members of their rights to consider the budgetary proposals that were then being outlined. That is an important point. The debate on the address was almost completely concluded by that time and the Minister, therefore, was not subjected to questioning on the presentation of his mini-budget. Paragraphs 516 and 517 of Beauchesne were extensively quoted but to no avail, as seen by the ruling of the Speaker at page 459 of Hansard of April 28, 1980.

The next unusual performance with respect to budget presentations which I believe deserves being recounted occurred on October 28, 1980 when, in addition to announcing proposals to increase sales and excise taxes, customs tariff changes and changes in unemployment insurance premiums both for employees and employers, the same Minister of Finance then sneaked in an entirely new program under the guise of taxation proposals, one which has come to be known as the National Energy Program, a plan to governmentalize the energy industry.

It is a program that has had at least two serious consequences, as we are now finding out. First, it drove a great deal of exploration activity out of the country and thereby deferred sine die the achievement of one of the laudible objectives of the plan, namely energy self-sufficiency. Second, it aggravated in a needless way and to an unusual degree our relation with offshore investors except, I must add, those who would be overwhelmingly advantaged before very long by the governmentalization process. An example of this is the acquisition of the Canadian operation of a foreign owned chain of service stations at inflated prices. Of course, I refer to Petro-Canada's acquisition of Petrofina at a cost of $1.6 billion which was in itself a gross overpayment for a static service station asset. This governmentalization proposal made in the course of that budget presentation was a further departure from the normal practices of the House.

We next come to the budget of November 12, 1981, still in the same session of Parliament, 20 months into the Thirty-second Parliament. We must remember that this was the budget that was torn to shreds bit by bit, as the days went by, by the very Minister who presented it. In all, some 90 changes were announced to the budgetary proposals that had been made public on the night of November 12.

This budget of November 12, 1981 was eventually approved, if that is the right word, on December 8. It was approved but nibbled away at as though by mice. There were 90 changes to a budget that was approved. What, then, is the value of approval? What are Government backbenchers doing supporting their Government and then watching it shoot that approval full of 90 holes? Is there no honour left in this House? I am compelled to ask that question.

Even the budgetary deficit forecast in that budget of November, 1981 was repudiated in the Minister's next budget of June 28, 1982, which was some 26 months into the same session. In the previous November the Minister had forecast a $10.5 billion deficit. By June, only eight months later, he was obliged to announce that that deficit had almost doubled, from $10.5 billion to $19.6 billion, and that the financial requirements, instead of being the $6.6 billion announced in November, 1981, had virtually tripled to $17.1 billion only eight months later.

The budgetary process was obviously breaking down in a number of ways. Its provisions were being altered and withdrawn. Its forecasts both as to deficits and expenditures were being completely revised.

Another mini-budget was introduced by the new and present Minister of Finance on October 27, 1982. This was done by means of a statement introducing a Bill to secure authority to borrow an additional $4 billion. Again it was a break in tradition and an outright denial by the Government of the right of Parliament to discuss budgetary proposals when they are made. Bill C-128, the borrowing authority Bill, was passed within the week. It was approved by the silent majority on the other side of the House on November 2, 1982.

On December 7, 1982, a month later, Bill C-139 was introduced to amend the income tax law as a result of the provisions of the June budget. That Bill was not passed until March 24, 1983. It received Royal Assent on March 30, 1983, the day the Easter break began.

What do you think happened next, Mr. Speaker? The next chapter of the budget saga began. Believe it or not, five days after the income tax Bill had been given Royal Assent, the Minister made public a document entitled "Draft Amendments to the Income Tax Act" claiming that time had not permitted him to introduce these amendments during the debate on Bill C-139. This was his assertion when the Bill had been before the House for over three months, since December 7, 1981. It was another breakdown in the budgetary process. The amendments to the Income Tax Act consequent upon certain provisions of earlier budgets had been before Parliament for three and a half months and had only just been passed. Lo, a new set of proposed amendments was made public during a parliamentary recess. That document reached my desk on April 6 while I was in my riding during Easter recess. Is it any wonder that we ask ourselves where our Parliament is heading?

But that is still not the end of the story. We now come to the events of April 18 and 19 last. Those irregularities have been gone over at some length in the House and by the media, and the Chair has ruled that they do not constitute a breach of privilege. Breach of privilege or not—and I insist on my right as a Member of Parliament to remain unconvinced by the argumentation used to uphold the Minister of Finance—the events surrounding that occurrence of the zoom lens and the Minister of Finance's recovery proposals remain one of the sadder happenings of this overextended first session of this Thirty-second Parliament, which is now over 36 months old and going into its fourth year.

The Minister even had to compound his arrogant disregard for Parliament. The nature of his offence, though it may not have been regarded by the Speaker as a breach of privilege, was outlined by my colleague the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) on April 21, the first opportunity he had really to speak after seeing the material on the budget that had been tabled two evenings before on April 19. The account of the tabling of the various documents during and just following the presentation is provided by the Speaker in her ruling. There were so many documents involved, however, that it is difficult to extract from the Speaker's comments the exact documents or tables to which reference is made.

I know for a fact that I received one correcting document that very evening in the lobby. It was called an "addendum" and was intended as an insert after paragraph one on page three of the budget speech. It was in effect the Minister's apologia. It was not his recitation of mea culpa or meum delictum, his self-redeeming rationalization and the discovery of $200 million to add to the year's expenditures on recovery, but his own recovery.

I also received, upon request to the Table, as the Hon. Member for York-Peel was spelling out his question of privilege, a much more complete set of corrections to a number of pages of a budget document entitled "Fiscal Plan". These corrections were in manuscript. It is a disgraceful looking document, one that ought not to have been tabled even to save the Minister's face and his skin. I am glad to say that document was not stamped by the Table. We have not only the "addendum" to the budget speech but also "the unrevised version" and the "hand-corrected version" of these budget papers. The confusion that these documents caused on their own, merited something more than the big, self-satisfied grin with which the Minister favoured us once he had been excused for his outrageous behaviour. It is worth noting the dates that I have already mentioned of these outrageous events.

Then on April 26 we had the ruling of the Speaker that there was no question of privilege. Surely there is a lesson to be drawn from this whole experience.

Given this history of shifts and changes, budget presentation and budget alterations—90 of them remember in one budget—and given that record of reversals and revisions, how can we be sure that the income tax provisions as they now stand, even for 1982-83 will remain intact? And because of that uncertainty, how are corporations in particular, and individuals to a lesser degree, to plan their financial future?

A stable tax climate, accent on stability, is all-important for healthy economic growth in the nation. That stability we have not had in Canada for at least four years now. Uncertainty and the burdensome national debt load, I suggest, are two of the principal obstacles to economic resurgence in Canada.

A word of caution therefore. Before we get out into the streets to sing the praises of this budget, let us think on these things. Let us dwell on the atmosphere of uncertainty that has been generated, and let us remember with respect to the debt load, to quote the lead editorial of the Financial Times of April 25, 1983:

> The legacy of the past eight years is a collapse of federal revenues from 18.7 per cent of GNP in 1974-1975 to 15.7 per cent last year and a jump in expenditures from 19.9 per cent to 23.1 per cent.

This jump in expenditures is over the same period. A sobering summary, especially when coupled with the prospect of having to deal shortly with another borrowing Bill, this time for $19 billion. This will be on top of the $62.6 billion—let me repeat, on top of the $62.6 billion—already authorized during the life of this session of Parliament.

Having said all that, I am still at a bit of a loss, I must admit, to determine whether this whole budgetary fiasco in the Thirty-second Parliament can be laid at the door of carelessness or whether there may not be a deliberate scheme to downgrade the entire parliamentary process. In any event, the warning is worth sounding: once we are completely enmeshed in these devious toils, there will be no escape. Let us, therefore, be perpetually vigilant, lest we lose this instrument of democracy that has been so long in the making.

That being said, I would like to turn to another review of this Government's performance, but I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are rising.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt but the Hon. Member's time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). The Hon. Member was in the House when I raised the question, which I think is vital in terms of the economic direction in which the country is going, with the Minister in charge of Small Business.

In reviewing the budget and looking at the economic conditions of the country, particularly as they apply to unemployment and even more particularly as they apply to single industry towns and older cities where municipalities have come to rely on established companies for their employment opportunities, does the Hon. Member have any comment to make on the proposal that we have reached a point where corporate decision making is not just simply the responsibility of the directors or for that matter the shareholders of each and every private corporation, that in order to develop a sense of responsibility to the municipality from which corporations derive significant benefit in terms of the infrastructure that is paid for by the citizens of the municipality—the roads, the sewers and the other things that go into making municipalities places where workers work and live—workers and their families who at times are totally ignored by decisions made to close plants—and I am sure that in the area the Hon. Member represents and from his past experience he has seen—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member will have an opportunity to participate in the debate; therefore, would he put his question to the Hon. Member?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what you are saying, but the rule says that I may ask a question or make a brief comment.

Some Hon. Members: "Brief".

Mr. Deans: That is fine. Would the Hon. Member support a new code of corporate conduct that would require some prior consultation with those who are most affected in order that some solutions might be found to eliminate the need to close some of the plants that are being closed in this country and thus establish some stability in many municipalities?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, this is an approach that is very similar to the approach being offered by the Government. What the Hon. Member fails to see is that within the taxation climate with which we are compelled to live, corporations are facing difficulties, grave difficulties. They are quite capable of managing their affairs, carrying on their business, and producing and employing if the tax structure allows them; but this proposal that came across the floor this morning, for example, is just another foot in the door for the socialist horde, if you like: "Let me get a hold of some of the equity of your company, and once we get in, we will take it over".

There is another solution, the solution of tax incentives, tax incentives to employ, to produce and to export. Those are the solutions which give the man who has the initiative pride in his work to expand.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Socialism has not worked. It cannot work. The other solution is the only one.

• (1220)

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member just out of curiosity. If the tax incentive method is the one the Hon. Member is proposing, how does he rationalize it with a budget deficit that must grow as a result of reductions in taxes and as a result of tax incentives? How does he rationalize those two points?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, that is socialist economics if we ever heard it. The Hon. Member does not seem to realize that with increasing production and increasing employment there will be increasing taxes. It is as simple as that. The socialist approach has been tried in the country by this Government for over 15 years. The Hon. Member is able to talk about corporate responsibility and use that term without blushing. I am suggesting that corporate responsibility is what the Conservative philosophy engenders, encourages and rewards.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a short question to the Hon. Member. He says that the socialist approach is the one being used in the budget. Why is it, then, that commentators are calling it a Conservative budget and the stock market has kind of gone ape over it? The index has gone up and so on. Also he used the term "socialist hordes". Does he think the socialist hordes are at the gates of the Government of British Columbia?

Mr. Taylor: We hope they stay outside.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Yes, I think so. I recommend to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) the April 25 edition of the Financial Times from which I drew some comments. All the media are not commenting favourably on the budget.

Mr. Cosgrove: Ninety-eight per cent are.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): If the Hon. Minister wants to go by the 98 percentage, there are other percentages which I could bring to the attention of the House. For example, the drawdown of the earnings of Canadians is a very high percentage with which we should deal. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway should not get out on the streets and laud this Budget too highly, because he will come down with a bump one of these days.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, having just heard from the far right of the House and also from the far left of the House, I would like to say a few words on behalf of the common, practical, middle group in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: Let us take a look at the budget and its reality. I, like many other members in the House, have been here for some time and have seen many budgets brought in. We have always witnessed the same procedures prior to budgets, with Hon. Members rising and asking the Minister of Finance questions about what will be in them. When the Minister does not tell them, he is accused of being too secretive; when something happens, he is accused of a leak. Even when it is taken out of his office he is accused of a leak. Following the presentation of a budget, our mail load either lightens or strengthens according to what is in the budget. Of all the budgets I have seen going through the House, my mail load is the lightest it has ever been on any budget in the last 17 years. This is a clear indication that many people out there are satisfied with it and are willing to give it an honest and fair trial period.

I will talk about a number of matters this morning. One relates to a question which I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in the House a few days ago about the policies of Canadian chartered banks. I do not want my comments to be portrayed as bank beating. I think it is a problem which must be solved if we are to improve the unemployment situation in Canada. I am referring to the matter of projects financing of small businesses and small industry.

The chartered banks of Canada have lately had policies whereby they will not release funds to small industries to help them pay their labour or buy material so that they can produce manufactured goods, fill contracts and orders. As a result, I know of one company which recently had to turn down a $3 million contract. I want to make it very clear that there is very little sense in the Government putting up billions of dollars in an attempt to promote employment and asking members of the private sector to put their money on the line to try to improve the economy and the unemployment situation, if we do not have the total co-operation of the Canadian financial structure. I hope the Minister of Finance continues his discussions with the Canadian banking community so that small industries can get on with the job of producing goods, paying labour and creating more jobs.

In answer to my question the Minister of Finance indicated that he expected all sectors of the economy to carry their weight. That is the answer to the problem at which I am looking.

I was glad to see in the budget the Extended Youth Training and Employment Program whereby 5,000 young people will be taken into the Canadian Armed Forces to be trained in basic and general trades. The sum of $75 million will be allocated toward this Program. It will also provide vocational training. It will help young people make the transition from school eventually into the work force with trades and vocational training to their credit. The Canadian Armed Forces has some very good instructors in the fields in which these young people will be studying. I want to tell the military community how much we appreciate the way they welcomed the Program with open arms. I am sure that they will do an excellent job.

I would like to refer to another area of activity which is a relatively untapped resource in the over-all structure of the Canadian economy. I am referring to the tourist industry. Over the years the Provinces have really not had an aggressive policy to develop or assist tourism. Of course, the federal Government is limited by jurisdiction, but I would like to give an example of an entrepreneurial effort that deserves a lot of credit. It is an area of the economy by which we can increase jobs and the tax flow into the treasury of Canada by helping others and providing them with a framework within which to work.

There is a great future in tourism. A case in point is the white water rafting business which operates on the Upper Ottawa River in the Beachburg-Forester's Falls area. Three companies have been playing a lead role in the development of white water rafting on the Upper Ottawa. Last year Wilderness Tours took 32,000 people down the white waters of the Ottawa River. Another company known as Ottawa River White Water Rafting brought down about 12,000 people. Another company, the OWL, Ottawa white water leaders, took down 5,000 people in 1982. In 1983 Wilderness Tours in particular is expected to go from the 32,000 in 1982 to 47,000. That is entrepreneurialship of the first order. This is why I wanted to put it on the record today.

I think both Governments, provincial and federal, must place a great deal more emphasis upon tourism because there is great future job potential. It is not an area which will be totally invaded by technology like industrial jobs. We could provide more jobs for general labour through the tourist industry than through any other existing industry at the present time.

These companies place a great emphasis upon safety. They have outstanding records in terms of safe operations. It is in their best interests for customers to have the benefit of good equipment and expert employees. These employees are well trained and the people who go on white water tours are in safe hands. To date they have not had an accident. This is a relatively new industry in Canada, approximately 12 years old. It is catching on fast and has great potential. The employment potential is outstanding.

There is something the Government must look at and do something about. Companies in the white water rafting business want safety regulations set by Government. This is not to protect their image, which they look after themselves. They want to be protected against others coming in with cheaper equipment which is not safe. This could cause accidents and give the whole industry a bad name.

I have been working with the Coast Guard people in the Department of Transport and with other levels of Government to try and bring this about. The industry will be submitting regulations for our perusal and, hopefully, adoption. That is the route to go. Those in the industry are the experts. Regulations they submit will protect their interests and the safety of people. They know best. This is a good example where industry can work hand in hand with Government, bringing in regulations which will protect an important segment of the tourist industry in Canada.

I will retract a bit to point out that there is no Act of Parliament dealing with tourism safety, something that is needed. I hope we will see something along this line in the Throne Speech. At present, responsibility for regulations governing the safety of this industry is under, of all things, the Canada Shipping Act. Under the regulations of that Act, operators on the Fraser River in British Columbia are covered. There are general regulations which affect all operators, whether they be on B.C. rivers or on the Ottawa River between Ontario and Quebec.

There is need for a second set of regulations which are more technical. Obviously the equipment required on the Fraser River is different from that required on the Ottawa River. There should be two phases of regulations, a section of which should be more technical, related to the geography of an area such as that in which the white water rafters operate.

I wish to add to my argument with regard to how important that industry is to tourism. A large complex is to be built in Ross Township on the Ottawa River. The company building it, Wilderness Tours, will put up $800,000 of its own money. That is how much faith they have in the industry. They have received $110,000 in 50-50 federal-provincial funding from the Eastern Ontario subsidiary agreement. By next year, Wilderness Tours expect to have over 200 employees. That is a sizeable number and shows the employment potential.

Before my time runs out, I also want to deal with airports. Airports have been referred to in some of the follow-up documentation of the capital projects listed in the budget. I want to emphasize this very strongly. I hope the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pépin) and other Cabinet Ministers will take note of this point. Regional airports are very important. Some emphasis must be placed on capital funding for small regional airports. It is part of the infrastructure of those communities. You can try to attract industry, jobs, small and large businesses, but without proper facilities to provide the rapid transit which people demand you will not have the infrastructure which appeals to business leaders.

There are regional airports in Kapuskasing, Cochrane and other parts of Ontario. Pembroke is a case in point. The airport is owned by 12 municipalities. There are two return flights to Toronto a day. These small airports are important because they are feeder lines for the larger airlines. People can get where they want to go. These airports can handle private aircraft, both pleasure and business. Such an airport is an attraction for business.

There is little sense in Government spending millions of dollars on industrial parks and other infrastructure without providing the total package. We must never forget the transportation factor. Any member of the northern Ontario caucus knows how important the transportation factor is. Flying schools are also very important. Many of these smaller airports provide such instruction. I repeat, these airports attract business to the area.

I do not want to conclude before saying something about forestry. As Hon. Members are aware, the northern Ontario caucus sponsored a forestry conference in Thunder Bay the first weekend in February. It was a major success. Business people from the various sectors of the industry across northern Ontario attended that conference. It provided good input. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), to whom the Canadian Forestry Service reports, attended that conference, as did three or four other Cabinet ministers. I thank them. It is that type of interest and personal relationship that builds up confidence in the business community. Business people realize that the Government is interested in them. This is important if we want their help in improving the economy and, therefore, the employment situation in Canada.

At that conference we discussed basic issues involving the forest industry, including tax problems. I know there are special tax measures in the budget for those in the forestry business. There is something crucial in the future for the forest industry.

Those with a basic knowledge of the business realize that one of the major problems over the last number of years has been a lack of forest management. The federal Government is inhibited to a large degree with regard to upgrading our forests because of the jurisdictional problems. I have a note here which is rather revealing. It is headlined "Ownership". Approximately 92 per cent of Canadian forest lands, excluding the Yukon and Northwest Territories, is owned by the Provinces. Seven per cent is privately owned and less than 1 per cent is federal Crown land. That shows how inhibited the federal Government is without built-in federal-provincial agreements to upgrade the forests and put people to work in the forests.

Private ownership in the forest industry is significant in some parts of the Atlantic Provinces, the southern agricultural regions of Ontario and Quebec and in some of the prime forest areas of the B.C. coast. Domestic ownership of the pulp and paper industry was 70 per cent in 1980 and domestic ownership of sawmills and other wood industries was over 80 per cent. Approximately 75 per cent of Canada's combined forest products industries are domestically owned.

While the forestry sector is of obvious value to Canadians, employing over 11 per cent of our work force when in full production, several key variables present a challenge to the industry's continued strength. These include export trade, timber supply and general economic trends. It behooves us as a federal Government to keep in place tax measures that will be an incentive to the industry through difficult times and through good times as well so that a balance can be struck that will keep the industry intact. The forestry sector plays a major role in upgrading the forests in our land. I cannot emphasize the importance of research and development in the forestry field strongly enough.

We must come to grips with the jurisdictional problem in Canada at the federal-provincial level so that the federal Government will be legally able to have greater input into reforestation programs and into improving Canada's forest species, as we now have a situation where there is far too much second and third grade timber. Many operators who have been in the business for years find this a real danger to their future. If there is anything that discourages them from expanding and creating more employment in those areas, it is the poor quality of timber.

Since the Minister of the Environment is here today, I would like to see this particular jurisdictional issue dealing with the forest industry of Canada go to a full-scale federal-provincial conference with forest resource Ministers from the various Provinces and appropriate Ministers from the federal Cabinet involved. I would like to see them come to a sound agreement so that there will be no more jockeying back and forth saying: "You cannot come into my backyard and I do not want you bringing in this money because you are interfering in my jurisdiction," and so on. If we are to have a mature forest, we must act like mature people and develop a good, sound program.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, you can understand the interest I have in the last part of the Hon. Member's speech. I was particularly struck by his recommendation of a conference of forestry Ministers who will meet to avoid any irritations or possible objections to expenditures by the federal Government in this area, a request for more co-ordination.

I would first like to salute his speech and thank him for it. However, does he not think that the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers is the appropriate forum in which those consultations should take place? If he does believe that that would be the case, would he furnish to me some suggestions about which of the issues he has described might be raised with the ministers of forestry under that umbrella?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Minister's suggestion that the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers would be a good route to go. I would hope that they would consider those strong recommendations and that both levels of Government would indeed act on them, because this is an issue that must not be discussed ad infinitum. I know how strongly the Minister feels about this and I know that that would not be his intention.

Personally, I do not care how it is done as long as it is done effectively, as long as the agreement that is made works smoothly, as long as there will not be continued wranglings down the road, and as long as real emphasis will be put on the reforestation problems of this country in order to upgrade the timber and give businesses a more profitable operation and a better route to go.

Mr. Speaker, I would just say in closing that I appreciate the Minister's question because it is not every day that Cabinet Ministers question backbenchers.

Mr. Deans: Or even ask for their opinions.

Mr. Hopkins: Oh, yes, Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the Hon. Minister asks for my opinion. I will certainly vouch for that and I appreciate that. I would like to give him every encouragement to go ahead with this. I would certainly lend all the support I can to him in his efforts to bring this about. As I say, go the route that will be productive and useful for years to come.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a related matter with the Hon. Member. I share his concern about the shortage of fibre which at one point appeared to be reaching crisis proportions in certain parts of Canada. However, because of a serious decline in sales of forest products, the fibre shortage problem at the moment seems to be taking second place to the more serious problem of how the forest products industry can sell their products. The industry has been exceedingly dependent upon the U.S. market, a market that has been very soft as of late. The result in Canada has been very high unemployment in that sector of our economy.

I would ask the Hon. Member if he has made any assessment of other possible markets that the forest industry could look to, and is he satisfied that the Government of Canada is doing all within its power to assist the industry in opening up those markets? If he has thought about this, what areas other than the U.S. market are areas the forest industry could look to with some optimism?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question. The Hon. Member has noted that because of the downturn in the forest industry, there has not been the same demand for forest products. As a result, there is no longer a fibre shortage. That is my understanding of his statement. However, I would have to state that that is a poor way to improve the fibre shortage problem in Canada. I would hope that we would be able to bring in a program that, as I mentioned to the Minister of the Environment, will continue to improve and increase the wood fibre industry in Canada so that we can gear it to a strong economy and fibre will be in supply on a constant basis rather than only during future downturns in the economy.

As for trade, it is rather interesting that the Hon. Member should ask that question as I recently asked the Minister of Industry (Mr. Lumley) who is also the Minister in charge of DREE, a similar question in the Finance Committee. He informed me that his Department, prior to his taking on new duties, and when he was Trade Minister, worked in the Middle East and other areas of the world in an attempt to create more markets for Canadian wood products. I believe he mentioned a program that he recently initiated with the B.C. Government, the federal Government and the forest industry of B.C., each one paying a third of the cost to promote international sales. I believe that program is still ongoing. If the industry is willing to participate in that program, it will be of benefit to the program itself because the industry will want to see a very aggressive policy of searching for markets for their business. I think the fact that they are part of the act will probably cause them to spur on Canadian Trade commissioners and others involved in the process. This is necessary, Mr. Speaker.

The recent problem we have gone through, safely for the time being, with the United States market is one that we do not want to see again for a long time. As the Hon. Member noted, it is a warning that we cannot rely forever and a day on the traditional markets but will have to go out and dig for new markets. Obviously the Middle East has to be one of the areas and the more emphasis we place on this, the better. Because the Hon. Member has raised the question and others have shown an interest in it, I think it would be interesting for Members of the House to receive the official update on where the program stands. We must review our sales programs from time to time in order to make sure that they are working well and that they are producing.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I had been looking forward with some degree of anticipation to the budget. As a result of some of the questions asked by Members of this Party and the answers received, I had come to believe that it is entirely possible that the Liberal Government had at last begun to understand the real problems of the land. I hoped that for the first time in the three years that I have been in this House it would acknowledge that unemployment was a matter of considerable seriousness, and that the majority of the unemployed were faced with severe economic dislocation that could affect many of them permanently. I had hoped that the Government was going to address that particular problem directly as a priority.

I confess to a sense of disappointment on budget night. I listened with interest; in fact, I was rigidly fixed as I watched the Minister go through his budget. I waited, as did many Canadians, at least two million and maybe more, for that point in the budget statement where he would begin to speak about their problems.

Many of these people have worked in factories and offices for 25, 30 or 35 years. They have gone to work every day, doing what they were asked, producing what was required of them. For this they received a remuneration that allowed them to live at an average level and perhaps buy a home some years ago and raise their families. Now they are unemployed at an age when finding an alternative occupation is extremely difficult, if not impossible for some of them. They are unemployed at a time when they were looking forward to building a nest egg for their retirement, at a time when unemployment means a cessation of contributions to the pension plan to which they belong. In the final analysis, that means their pension will be less when they reach age 65 or whatever is retirement age in their occupation. They are people between the ages of 54 and 62 primarily who look to us for some sense of how their problems can be resolved.

The budget did not even recognize that was happening. Neither did the budget recognize that there are literally tens of thousands of young people, some in the 20 to 30 age group, recently married with families to raise and pretty bleak job prospects. There are others who are leaving institutions of higher learning, university or post-secondary schools, who do not know where to look for the employment that we have long said was the desire of this society.

A week ago today, at just about this time of day, I spoke in Hamilton to 300 high school students. They asked me, quite justifiably, what kind of employment opportunities there are for them. They are not able to go on to post-secondary education, nor do they see the benefit of it. Where are the jobs that successive Governments have led them to believe would be available for them? They are willing and eager to work but they do not know where to turn. In many instances their parents are unemployed, so they know that if they are unable to find employment with the experience they have, their own chances are severely reduced. They asked what is going to happen to the country and where it is going.

Why did this come about, Mr. Speaker? It is all too easy to suggest that current economic conditions are the result of decisions made or economic downturns that occurred in other parts of the world. That is a cop out. Of course we were affected by the world downturn, but we did little if anything to try to compensate for that by improving and increasing economic activity in Canada. We took the view that we—meaning the Government, and I might go so far as to say the Conservatives—were not required to support the kind of measures proposed by this Party two years ago when it was evident what we were about to face. They were not prepared to support the kinds of measures that would have resulted in job creation in the municipalities across the country that even then were beginning to show an economic downturn.

When we were talking about building the railroad and providing job opportunities and a decent transportation system for Canada, the Tories and Liberals said it could not be done and that we could not afford it. When we were talking about building homes to accommodate those who could not find a decent place to live at a price they could afford, it was the Tories and the Liberals who said we could not afford it.

When we were saying we ought to be going ahead with the completion of the east-west pipeline in order that we could be truly energy self-sufficient and at the same time create jobs and build an infrastructure that would enable the country to grow, it was the Tories and the Liberals who said we could not afford it. They said that when there were 900,000 people unemployed and the deficit was $11 billion. That is when they said we could not afford it. Now we have two million people unemployed, the deficit will be over $30 billion, and, more important, we are spending about $1 billion per day to keep people unemployed.

When we look at that we must say there was gross mismanagement based upon the Conservative-based policy of fiscal abuse and an inability to understand that investment in Canadians is good investment. The Tories and the Liberals said that we could not afford it.

I will come back to that after one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

SHIPBUILDING

SPECIAL RECOVERY PROJECTS—EQUITABLE SHARING AT REGIONAL LEVEL

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, on April 25, 1983, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) announced on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) that under the Special Recovery Program, the Federal Government would be spending $630 million over the next four years to renovate the Coast Guard fleet. The program provides for the construction of eleven new ships, refitting of three other ships and the purchase of several smaller vessels. According to the Minister of Supply and Services, both the construction projects and refitting operations will have a very high Canadian content and are expected to create 20,000 jobs between now and 1986.

Madam Speaker, this is very encouraging news for Canadian shipyard workers. However, I am also counting on the Canadian Government to give these recovery projects a more regional flavour, and I therefore hope that in the interest of fairness, Quebec shipyard workers will also benefit, particularly at Davie Shipbuilding Ltd. in Lauzon. Although the Government has shown an interest in awarding contracts to this particular shipyard, Davie Shipbuilding Ltd. is now operating at 33 per cent of its normal employment capacity. I hope that this message will be heard by the powers that be.

TRADE

CALL FOR ECONOMIC CONTACT WITH TAIWAN

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, the Republic of Taiwan has made great economic strides over the last 20 years. Despite its small size, Taiwan has attained a per capita income of some $3,000 American, and an ever-increasing economy for the needs of its 20 million people. Their economy and living standards are now second only to Japan in Asia. In an amazingly short time Taiwan has narrowed the gap between the top wage earners and the ones on the lower end of the scale from 20-to-one to four-to-one. There is every indication as well that even this gap will become smaller in the years ahead.

Although Canada has some trade relations with Taiwan, this is only the tip of the iceberg of what could really be accomplished. Taiwan is steadily increasing its economic and political contacts with the West. However, Canada is the only one of the developed countries which does not have trade or liaison offices in Taiwan. The establishment of such trade offices would be the first step and would advantageously increase trade between our two countries. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I call upon the Government to recognize this fact and start immediate negotiations toward this end.

THE BUDGET

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT IN SAGUENAY-LAC-SAINT-JEAN REGION AND PARTICIPATION OF PRIVATE INDUSTRY

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, the last budget brought down by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is an economic recovery budget. Madam Speaker, a $34 million investment project has been announced for Chicoutimi, for the relocation of the port of Chicoutimi and rehabilitation of the port facilities in the centre of town. Since Transport Canada will be vacating seventeen hectares of land in the centre of Chicoutimi, this space will be used to establish parks, and the private sector will be invited to participate in the construction of homes on this truly exceptional site, on the Saguenay. As far as the Port of Chicoutimi is concerned, Madam Speaker, I am very proud to be announcing this project because it is an outstanding example of economic development involving the private sector, for the purpose of developing remote areas. Once again, I was very proud to be associated with this announcement and I am sure that the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area will benefit from these investments which are extremely important to our area.

LEVEL OF RESEARCH EXPENDITURES

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, despite the current recession, agriculture continues to be one of the strongest contributors to our economy. Consequently one would expect that the commitment to agricultural research and development, which is so essential to the future viability of this sector, would be uppermost in any well-meaning Minister's mind. However, agricultural research does not seem to fit within the hierarchy of the Liberal Cabinet's priorities.

Over the past decade the annual increase of Agriculture Canada expenditures on agricultural research and development represented about 1 per cent. This lack of growth in spending on research has meant that our country has fallen behind in terms of adequate facilities, equipment, and research staff. Recent studies show that money spent on agricultural research provides benefits to the Canadian society of 30 to 70 times that of the original amount spent. If nothing else, this should make the Liberal Cabinet think twice when it considers further reductions in research investment.

If the present policies of the Liberal Cabinet toward agricultural research and development persist, our farmers will find it difficult to meet the target of doubling food production by the year 2000. The Cabinet must be urged by all Members of Parliament and citizens to abandon its shortsighted measures aimed at short-term political gains, because the long-term implications pose a serious threat, both to our resources and to the country's capability to feed our people and the many peoples of the world.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—PROPOSAL THAT REFERENDUM BE HELD

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), in his flippant answer to my serious question on Friday, suggested that he had more support for his position on Crow than the New Democratic Party. I would suggest to the Minister that he has not been reading his mail, or else the pressure is getting to him. I challenge the Minister here and now to hold a referendum in western Canada with farmers offered a choice between the Pepin-Gilson proposal and the New Democratic Party proposal.

We have letters and petitions from pool committees, co-op boards, municipal councils, farm union locals, Chambers of Commerce, and from tens of thousands of individual farmers, all opposed to the Pepin-Gilson plan. We have proof presented here in the House of massive approval of our proposal.

The rumours of many drafts and of many meetings of Cabinet on Crow legislation are evidence of a Government furiously backpedalling from an unpalatable and unworkable proposal. I plead with the Minister to stop this process, to take a good look at the NDP plan, which is sensible and farsighted, which will build a revitalized and publicly responsible railroad, and which will provide more jobs in the short and long run as well as providing massive support among farmers in western Canada. The NDP plan should be the one put into law.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

EFFECT OF CRTC TELEPHONE EQUIPMENT DECISION

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the CRTC's telecom decision on hearing aid compatibility of telephones, granted residential and business telephone subscribers the right to buy their telephones from any manufacturer, but did not require that the newly purchased phones have the same "fluxcoil" contained in the Bell Canada phones, which allows them to be used by any hearing aid wearers.

• (1410)

The pending proliferation of incompatible phones will require the 200,000 hearing aid wearers to buy and carry around a battery-powered, hockey puck shaped, acoustic coupler and hold it between telephone handsets and their hearing aids. The CRTC decision could also force Bell Canada to stop including fluxcoils, which cost slightly over one dollar, in their telephones, in order to be able to match the prices at which those companies that do not include the fluxcoil will sell their phones.

I view the CRTC decision as a major blow to the hearing impaired and one which contravenes the objectives contained in the 1981 special committee report, "Obstacles", namely, increasing the accessibility and participation by the disabled in Canadian society.

In addition, I feel that fluxcoils in receivers should be treated simply as a basic part of the telephone network, the cost of which all users should share in order to preserve and enhance universality of telephone service.

For these reasons, I urge the Cabinet to consider reversing—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CONDEMNATION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC POSITION ON PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, on Friday the House debated an amendment to the Constitution which would have enshrined property rights in the Canadian Constitution. The NDP refused to allow the question of property rights to be considered by a committee of the House. The NDP refused to allow this matter to be treated as a non-confidence motion in order that it would proceed. In short, the House and the country should know that the NDP has clearly refused to guarantee property rights for Canadians.

S.O. 21

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

CHANGE SOUGHT OF CRTC TELEPHONE EQUIPMENT DECISION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, last November the CRTC decided not to require that all telephones meet a technical standard which would ensure that telephones would be compatible with the use of hearing aids. By making this decision, the CRTC missed a golden opportunity to demonstrate leadership in the telecommunications field and to advance the human rights of hearing impaired Canadians.

Telephone accessibility is a vital issue for Canada's 1.5 million hearing impaired citizens. The CRTC's decision will have a profound effect on employment opportunities for the hearing impaired, and on their ability to have contact with family and friends, as well as their ability to communicate within the community generally. To the hearing impaired it also means a frustration of their right to live independently.

The Canadian-Co-ordinating Council on Deafness, the Canadian Hard of Hearing Association, the Canadian Hearing Society, and the Hard of Hearing Club of Ottawa have requested, through a petition to the Cabinet, that the CRTC decision be changed. In all of these circumstances it is inappropriate, and not in accordance with acceptable public policy, to allow this obstacle to be placed before the right of the hearing impaired to equal, universal use of the telephone system.

DISARMAMENT

SUPPORT FOR ARMS CONTROL

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, a year ago I spoke to 30,000 people in Vancouver at a rally supporting nuclear disarmament. A week ago 65,000 people attended a similar rally. Another 20,000 came out in Toronto and several other communities.

Earlier this year a Gallup Poll showed that of those who had an opinion nearly 60 per cent opted for not testing the Cruise missile.

Last week a Gallup Poll in the U.S. showed that 64 per cent of Americans supported a freeze motion calling for a mutual, verifiable freeze, including a freeze on the testing of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems, which would include flight testing of the Cruise missile. This weekend the American Catholic Bishops called for a halt in the production of new nuclear weapons systems, reminiscent of the statement of the leaders of Canada's major churches last December.

In 1984 Canadians and Americans will be expressing themselves at the polls. Can anyone doubt that the majority on both sides of the border will deal harshly with politicians who are not serious about arms control?

Oral Questions

THE ADMINISTRATION

PLEA THAT ELECTORATE REGISTER DISPLEASURE

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, it comes to mind that there have been some rather notable and prestigious "Rows". Included among these would be Saville Row, King's Row, and Ontario's former Lieutenant-Governor, Earl Rowe, all evoking thoughts of quality and honour.

How unfortunate it is for Canada that those who occupy the front and centre seats across this Chamber from me have done nothing to command, in this context, equal respect. Rather, they, by their actions, individually and collectively, reinforce my position with respect to the need for capital punishment. The latest Gallup Poll indicates how strongly the vast majority of Canadians share my distaste.

The public realizes that Parliament is being robbed of its dignity, responsibilities, and rights. There is no such thing as freedom of information, only cover-up, corruption, and ineptness. The Government does not uphold the tenets of democracy. It exists only to reward chicanery, deceit, and personal gain, whether that of past or present Ministers. The names Lalonde, Gillespie, and Mackasey are famous or, rather infamous.

The examples of telephone calls to judges, forged signatures, hit and run drivers, lobbying, Senate appointments, free Air Canada passes, the uranium cartel and the refusal to prosecute enemy agents are included on a list which is endless, and everything is condoned by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

What we see across from us is not King's Row; it is Skid Row. I appeal and have every confidence that the Canadian electorate will register its displeasure and disgust at the polls when the next general election is called.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PRACTICE INVOLVED IN LAYING OFF TERM EMPLOYEES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. When questioned about the Department of National Defence layoffs the Minister has implied that at the end of each fiscal year the Department lays off its term employees, and he has insinuated that nothing unusual is happening this year. Is it not true that, for the past many years, the end of March layoffs have been a legalistic bookkeeping operation and that, up until this year, the employees laid off on March 31 have been almost invariably rehired on April 1?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I understand the question of the Hon. Member for Victoria, because many Members of Parliament wanted to ask a question on this subject last Friday during Question Period. It concerns the policy of the Department with respect to laying off term employees versus some of the employees it hired through the NEED Program.

I can very clearly state, concerning this question of the normal employment in the Department versus the NEED Program, that the instructions given to my Department were very clear, and I have them here. The departmental managers of the CTE, which is the NEED Program, have been well warned and also very severely instructed to ensure that the CTE employees are to be employed in jobs that are incremental to those planned by the NEED Program or planned before April of 1983. Therefore, what I have to say on that is that, NEED or no NEED Program, some of our term employees had to be laid off on March 31. Because of the NEED Program which was then implemented and given to the Department of National Defence, we were able to hire some employees to do some jobs which would not have been done without the NEED Program.

NEED PROGRAM—EFFECT ON REHIRING TERM EMPLOYEES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. First, I wonder if the Minister would guarantee that he will table the document from which he has just been quoting, as is the custom in the House.

Further, is it not true that this year hundreds of so-called term employees, many of whom have worked for the Department of National Defence for several years without missing a single day, have been laid off and are now drawing unemployment insurance? Is it not correct that in many cases, particularly in the low skill trades, their jobs have been taken by people hired under the NEED Program of the Minister of Employment and Immigration?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I would say that the Hon. Member for Victoria is correct in part. Following the question of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton on Friday, I told him that I would send him all the information required to explain the process of the laying off or employment of the term employees, and also the procedures and instructions given by the Department of Employment and Immigration in so far as the requirements which we must fulfil, to employ employees, under the NEED Program is concerned.

Therefore, in one way or another, I can assure the Hon. Member that if we did not have the required amount of money and the help of the NEED Program, there would be more people unemployed than there are at the moment. This is indeed the principle of the issue concerning the NEED Program versus the layoff of some of our term employees.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, the Minister forgot to assure me that he would table the document from which he quoted in answer to my first question.

LAY-OFFS AT ESQUIMALT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, on Canadian Forces Base Esquimalt 114 term employees were laid off on March 31, about half of them from the construction engineering department which looks after the maintenance of buildings, roads and grounds, and the remainder from the ship repair unit. This was done in line with a budget restriction on term employees. Since April 1 dozens of replacements have been hired using funds allocated in support of the Minister of Employment and Immigration's NEED Program. Will the Minister not now admit that this is really a totally non productive boondoggle that is going on which will be at a cost of millions of dollars to the UIC fund?

• (1420)

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I do not think that I can question the well thought out NEED Program, which I think is a good one for employment in general. In that respect the question can be asked of the Minister of Employment and Immigration and I think he will defend his Program very ably, and I might add that I agree with whatever he says about it. I believe it is a very good program.

With respect to the document which was requested by the Hon. Member for Victoria, I can give him this note that I have in my hand. I can assure the Hon. Member that we studied Chilliwack, CFB Ottawa, and many other bases across the country, to determine what would happen by laying off our term employees versus the implications of some employees coming in under the NEED Program. I can give the Hon. Member details of what happened in all of these different areas. There will be a letter sent to the Hon. Member—

Mr. Broadbent: I wrote you, too.

Mr. Lamontagne: Yes. Each of your requests will be given an explanation of what happened and why it happened. It is all done regularly in the course of normal practice. We will also stress the fact that the NEED Program has helped tremendously in giving further employment to some who did not have employment, allowing us to carry out work which would have stopped on March 1.

HIRING AND LAYING OFF OF EMPLOYEES AT HALIFAX

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Defence as well. I first want to point out to him that the matter of the administration of the NEED Program in the Department of National Defence is a real problem involving real people. Therefore I want to put this case to him.

At Willow Park, an installation connected with CFB Halifax, there were four term employees laid off at the end of March. In April, six employees were hired. My information is that they are performing identical services in identical jobs. Given that information, will the Minister now look into the situation to find out exactly what is happening? If these newly hired persons are in fact performing the same work and services as the term employees who were laid off, will he now undertake to take immediate action to rectify the situation? These people need their jobs.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I understand the intervention of the Hon. Member very well, I know he was one of the first to ask for information about the situation. While I recognize that, Madam Speaker, as I said before we will try to get to all those particular cases at each base.

If you have names, such as the Hon. Member for Halifax West had, who, I know, asked me about a cetain person who had been laid off because of the NEED Program, according to his allegation, whose name is Mr. Dent, I believe, I can give information as soon as it is requested. We have all the particulars. It will be very clear as to why they were laid off and the terms under which they could be re-employed; if for example we had more regular person-years coming in from Treasury Board. As well, we can describe all the benefits that the NEED Program has provided to Defence at the moment.

Mr. Crosby: May I state for the record that the employee to whom the Minister of National Defence has referred is Stephen Dent. He resides in Halifax West. He is the very person with a young family, mortgage, and other debt payments, who was dismissed from his job.

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

APPLICATION OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Since he has heard the presentation of all these cases in the House of Commons and has heard of the complaints about the application of the NEED Program, and gave an explanation before the committee, what does he now say about these allegations of misapplication of the provisions of the NEED Program? What does he say about these people who are being hired in the name of job creation while term employees are being dismissed from their jobs to make room for these new hirings?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, there is not much that I can add to the explanation already given by the Minister of National Defence, other than to emphasize the fact that the program is established to provide incremental and additional work that would not normally be supplied in terms of whatever business or organization is employing these funds.

If there are cases, whether in federal, provincial, municipal or private sector departments, where there seems to be a transgression of that purpose, we would be prepared to look into them. We have already taken the concerns raised by Members of the House and met with the Minister of National Defence about them. He has provided the explanation which he has given today which is, in fact, that the term contracts came to an end at the end of April, I believe. That was the reason for the termination. It had nothing to do with the NEED Program.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—REPRESENTATIONS MADE TO UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. A week ago he said that there were, in his view, major differences between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States concerning policies affecting Latin America. Specifically, he said:

> We object to the interference in the internal affairs of other countries by any major power, even if that power is a friend.

Considering that since the Prime Minister made that statement the President of the United States has said that his Government intends to continue financing and training groups who will be making invasions into Nicaragua from Honduras, does the Prime Minister stand by what he said just over a week ago? Did he make that clear to the President of the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, I do. What I indicated clearly to the President of the United States is that I thought he had made a very positive suggestion when he proposed in his statement to Congress that there be an agreement by all parties, an international verifiable agreement, that neither side—the U.S., Soviet Union, Cuba nor any other power in this case—intervene in the internal affairs of the Central American States. I thought that was a very positive suggestion. I hope it would have the support from my hon. friend.

Mr. Broadbent: I am pleased to indicate to the Prime Minister that that kind of proposal has our unequivocal support. We have said that a number of times.

TRAINING OF INSURGENTS BY UNITED STATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, in the President's address to Congress which seemed to be aimed very clearly at getting additional funds for military related activities in that region, he also said that the reason the United States was financing and training groups in Honduras that were making attacks in Nicaragua was to prevent the flow of arms from Nicaragua to El Salvador. Since then, just yesterday in fact, the head of the largest insurgent group that has been financed and trained by the United States, denied the truth of what President Reagan said. He said in fact that the groups have nothing to do with stopping the flow of arms to El Salvador but that their main purpose is "ousting the present government in Nicaragua".

Considering tht the insurgent groups themselves are saying that, will the Prime Minister follow up on his earlier criticism of such activity by indicating to the United States that the Government of Canada disapproves of this kind of interference that is being encouraged by the United States, and that costs lives?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I made it clear to my interlocutors that, as far as the objectives and historical analysis of the events in Central America were concerned, Canada was not in agreement with the United States, and I know that my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, also made that point to Secretary Shultz.

With respect to the point of non interference by outside powers in that area, I am very happy to hear that the NDP has stated, and I quote its Leader, "The President of the United States has unequivocal support of the NDP on that point". I think it is important to put that on the record because very often the Leader of the NDP makes light of my support for the President of the United States. I think he should be thanked now for having made it clear that he also unequivocally supports the President of the United States on that point.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that the fact that lives are being lost every day in that region merits a little more concern than scoring what seems to be rather trivial debating points. I indicated our clear support for that part of the statement of the President of the United States where he called for a treaty among all states involved in the region that would be verifiable and would prohibit interference in other States' activities. I also mentioned that the Government of Nicaragua has long indicated support for that.

• (1430)

I come back to my question to the Prime Minister. Will he now make his position clear that the United States activity in financing and training groups—the head of which in the past 24 hours, said that their purpose is to bring down the Government of Nicaragua—must stop, and the Canadian Government takes an unequivocal position on it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am just as unequivocal as the Hon. Member when I condemn the interference by other countries in the affairs of Central American countries, just as I condemned certain countries in the area for their interference in countries of that area. I think I had the support of the President of the United States when I re-enunciated my expression of Canadian Government policy that what happens in a country is its own affair. When a country begins to export its revolution to other countries then we begin to worry.

The reason I underscored the support of the Leader of the New Democratic Party for the President's policy is not to make a trivial debating point. It is because so often the Leader of the NDP, because we support the Americans in some things, assumes that we support them in all things and that in some way we are in a position of solidarity with their position on Central America. Just as with the NDP, there are some things that we think the United States does well and some things on which we do not support them. My answer was making that quite clear. I am glad I am sharing the same ground as the Leader of the NDP on this.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REFUSAL TO RE-EMPLOY TERM EMPLOYEES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National defence. I hope he is satisfied of the need under the NEED Program for refusing to employ a number of people who have a good employment record and who are being replaced by people who may not be as well trained to fulfil the jobs they are being asked to fulfil. Can he explain to the satisfaction of this House and to those who have been laid off the criteria for refusing to re-employ term employees and for replacing them with others who may not be appropriately trained to fill the jobs?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I agree with the hon. gentleman that we have some term employees who are very competent and very efficient but they still are, according to us, term employees. It was well understood during the 1982-83 budget year that these people were employed as term employees and that on March 31 their terms would expire and they would be without jobs. Then, at that time, we had a reduction in man-years from the previous year for term employees. Therefore, we had to lay off many of them. Then came the NEED Program which gave us some money and supplementary man-years to hire some people under certain conditions. But the normal term employees are still on the list for recall if we have the man-years to hire them. But the Hon. Member must not mix the two programs together. No program is supplementing the other. The NEED Program should be incremental to the existing program for our term employees.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, the Minister may have satisfied himself that they are incremental to those but he has not satisfied the House nor those who have been laid off. Those people are being replaced by people who may not be qualified.

PLIGHT OF FORMER EMPLOYEES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, could the Minister of National Defence or the Minister of Employment and Immigration tell us what criteria are used to choose those who are going to replace the people who have been laid off and who have built their futures on the expectation—over many years as the Minister knows perfectly well—of term employment terminating and then being reinaugurated at the beginning of the next fiscal year?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I agree again that some of our term employees have been hired by us for many years in a row, but they were always term employees and they understood, maybe better than the Hon. Member, that at one point their jobs would be terminated because they were not regular employees. This is what I am trying to make the Hon. Member understand. There are two programs. The NEED Program people who are employed are not replacing our regular term employees. This Program is incremental to what is already in existence. Our term employees in 1982-1983 would not have a job anyway on April 1, 1983, because we do not have the person-years to hire them.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

INQUIRY WHETHER COMMEMORATIVE STAMP WILL CELEBRATE 450TH ANNIVERSARY OF DISCOVERY OF CANADA, AT GASPÉ

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Several months ago, I wrote to the Minister to draw his attention to the fact that 1984 will be the 450th anniversary of the discovery of Canada by Jacques Cartier at Gaspé, and I asked him whether the Canada Post Corporation intended to issue a stamp commemorating this event. Could the Hon. Minister inform the House whether he is considering such action, and does he intend to give a favourable reply very shortly to the people of Gaspé and to all Canadians?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am happy to confirm that the French Minister of Postal, Telecommunications and Broadcasting Operations (PTT), Mr. Louis Mexandeau, and myself have agreed to have a joint issue in 1984 of a stamp commemorating the 450th anniversary of the discovery of Canada by Jacques Cartier.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FUNDS FOR CASUAL EMPLOYMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. He knows perfectly well the only reason we have term and indeterminate employees in National Defence is so that we can lay them off once a year and not pay them pensions from the Public Service of Canada.

Why has the Minister deliberately chosen to cut back on the casual funds for the various branches within his Department, within National Defence, construction engineering being one example where we will lose 35 men because the Government cut back the funds and the Minister is going to replace them, as my colleague from British Columbia has just suggested, with people who are not qualified and trained? Can the Minister tell me why he would deliberately choose to do that? And while the Minister is on his feet, Madam Speaker, will he tell us why there is a clear direction that anybody hired under the NEED Program within his Department may work only three weeks, or that period of time which is required to qualify for unemployment insurance?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I would not like the Hon. Member to mislead this House by saying that our term employees are just hired year after year just so we do not have to pay them pensions or something like that. There is a whole area of term employees. Some work for a month, three months, four months, six months, and sometimes a year. So you see, there is a whole range of term employees.

Mr. Lewis: There are five year term employees.

Mr. Lamontagne: The Hon. Member knows very well that if we could employ them all and make them regular, I would be much happier, but we have instructions from the Treasury Board which year to year asks what our requirements are. We give Treasury Board our requirements. Treasury Board judges whether it can give so many man-years or not. This year, 1983-1984, there have been cuts in man-years as far as term employees are concerned. This is why we have to rearrange our priorities every year. We have to decide where we will use our term employees and where we need them for priority jobs. This is why sometimes there is a shift from one base to another depending upon the priority of the work to be done by the Department of National Defence. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Forrestall: That is balderdash, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: I do not doubt the Minister's sincerity about wishing he could hire everybody on a permanent basis, but the Minister must not mislead the troops and must not play games with them. The situation is too serious, Madam Speaker.

• (1440)

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

LENGTH OF EMPLOYMENT FOR WORKERS HIRED UNDER PROGRAM

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I would like the Minister to respond to the second part of my question. Has he, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, or Treasury Board in fact, sent out a directive with instructions that within his or any other Government Department that men and women hired under NEED shall work only for the period of time required to make them eligible for unemployment insurance benefits and that thereafter their employment shall be terminated and they will be replaced under or within the NEED Program? Are those the instructions which he sent out? If so, do they apply specifically to the Department of National Defence, or in fact to all Government Departments where there are a significant proportion of employees under the category of either casual, term, indeterminate, or whatever combination of those terms is applicable?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member I could categorically tell him that there is no such guideline nor has one ever been promulgated by my Department.

Mr. Forrestall: You should have a chat with your colleague.

Mr. Axworthy: I would like to continue, if the Hon. Member would allow me to answer his question. The guidelines for the NEED Program are very clear. They will allow sponsors to make applications for employment lasting anywhere between 12 weeks and 52 weeks. The range of length of a project is up to the sponsor, whether a federal Department, agency, private sector or whatever. That is the full range of those projects. Those are the guidelines, and no other guidelines have been issued saying that they will be terminated after a certain period of time.

INCOME TAX

DEDUCTIONS FOR CHILD CARE EXPENSES

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the inequities in the income tax policy concerning the child care expense deduction. It is our understanding that in order to qualify for the $2,000 per child tax deduction for child care expenses both parents must be working, unless the lower income spouse is infirm, in an institution, or is a full-time student. Will the Minister agree that this policy discriminates against thousands of unemployed parents who are in a situation quite frequently these days where a father or mother is laid off but he or she must have child care in order to seek employment? Such a family is not eligible to deduct child care costs nor are the increasing numbers of low-income families who pay little or no income tax. What will he do about these inequities?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have indicated that people who are unemployed and are searching for jobs are obviously in situations where they do not have jobs. This is a situation similar to other cases under the Income Tax Act where some benefits are available only to those in a particular situation. In this case the requirement is that one has to have child care expenses because one is not at home to look after children.

The fact is that most people who are unemployed find work during the course of the year. If we look at the statistics we see this. There is no doubt about it. In order to claim the total Child Tax Credit one does not need to have a high income during the course of the year. For example, a family with two children will be able to claim the full $4,000 child care expense if the lower income earner makes $6,000 in the year. This example demonstrates the accessibility of this particular program and the relative ease with which one can benefit from it.

Mrs. Mitchell: My understanding of the figures is that one out of five unemployed people is unemployed over a year and certainly would be paying very little income tax, and therefore would not be eligible for this benefit.

REQUEST THAT TAX CREDIT REPLACE CURRENT PROVISION

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, we believe that all families, regardless of income, must have access to affordable quality daycare. However, the Minister knows that tax deductions are regressive, providing a bigger break to people with higher incomes and no break at all to families who pay little or no income tax and who can least afford child care costs. I know the Minister is a humanitarian person. Would he consider a fairer system which would convert the child care deduction into a child care tax credit with higher benefits for low-income people? It would not cost any more but it would provide the greatest benefits to those with the greatest needs. How about that?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the responsibility for daycare services is a provincial one, as the Hon. Member well knows. The federal Government contributes to daycare expenses under the Canada Assistance Plan, and has been over the years. However, it is not the responsibility of the federal Government to assume the administration of daycare centres in the country. It is a provincial responsibility.

As far as the Hon. Member's suggestion is concerned, I remind her that in the budget I have maintained the Child Tax Credit at a higher level than would have been otherwise, exactly for the reasons referred to by the Hon. Member. At the same time I think a case can be made for exemptions, credits or tax measures which are related to the incomes of individuals.

IMMIGRATION

PROCESSING OF CLAIMS FOR REFUGEE STATUS

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He knows there has been great concern expressed by Members of the House with respect to the time required for the processing of claims for refugee status under the Immigration Act. Can the Minister tell the House how he will deal with the problem, and when?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I should point out to Hon. Members of the House that, because of the increasing incidents of difficulty in other parts of the world, the number of refugee claims in Canada went up in 1982 to over 3,500. Obviously that has put a very severe strain on the system that was elaborated under the Immigration Act, 1978, particularly the one requiring that there be a series of appeals from the Refugee Advisory Committee to the Appeal Board. In order to speed up that system substantially we are starting today two major projects—one in Toronto and one in Montreal, the two international centres—in which oral hearings will be allowed in front of the Refugee Advisory Committee. This will substantially increase both the fairness and, we hope, the speed.

Our estimate is that we should be able to speed up the processing by close to a year and therefore make a substantial inroad into the backlog which has developed because of the enormous volume of refugee claims we are now receiving.

FISHERIES

NEGOTIATIONS ON RESTRUCTURING EAST COAST INDUSTRY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. I direct it to that Minister because he and his Cabinet Committee have usurped some of the powers vested in the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans by a statute of Parliament. Negotiations for restructuring of the deep sea fleet and the plants in Newfoundland and the Atlantic Provinces has been ongoing now for four months. The Minister is charged with the responsibility of these ongoing negotiations. Many of the plants involved have been down for a year or more. On behalf of the thousands of unemployed plant workers, fishermen and trawlermen who are entitled to an answer, when will the Government reach the end of these negotiations? When can we expect a decision? What are the options the Government is considering?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the negotiations are ongoing. There has been no usurpation of power whatsoever by anyone. I notice the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is not in the House. If he were in the House I presume the Hon. Member's question would be directed to him. It is true that I chair a Cabinet Subcommittee charged with over-all direction of these ongoing negotiations which are being actively pursued at the present time.

Mr. McGrath: The Minister put his finger on the problem. The last time we raised a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans on the restructuring we were told that we had to take it up with the Minister of State for Economic Development who now has the responsibility, and that is on the record.

NEWFOUNDLAND PROPOSAL

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, today in St. John's the Fisheries Council of Canada is holding its annual meeting. There is a conference taking place, sponsored by some of the downed plant workers and the Newfoundland Fish Food and Allied Workers' Union. They are expressing their great concern over the failure of the Government to act, and over the failure of the Government to protect the interests of plant workers and fishermen. This Government seems to be more intent on protecting certain corporate interests.

I want to ask the Minister of Fisheries—I am sorry, that was a Freudian slip—I want to ask the Minister of State for Economic Development who has now assumed his role, what position the Government is taking on the proposal which he has now had from the Government of Newfoundland for the past month or more, and on the proposal he already has from a number of the downed plants in Newfoundland, with regard to the management of the fleet and the integration restructuring of some of the affected companies.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I do not think that was a Freudian slip. As I said when I answered the first question, I suspect that had the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans been in the House these questions would have been directed to him. When one talks about the lack of Government concern, one should realize that it is the Government which has taken this initiative. It is the Government which has constituted the subcommittee of Cabinet Ministers to oversee these negotiations. It is the Government which commissioned the Kirby Report, the recommendations of which are on the record, and it is the Government which is addressing the need and the issue of restructuring. How can the Hon. Member say that the Government is not concerned? It is one of our primary concerns, one that we are actively working on and one that we hope to bring to fruition in the very near future.

TIME TAKEN IN REACHING DECISION

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. A few days ago—and it was only a few days ago—the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, when asked the very question my hon. friend put to the Minister, said that this question should be put to the Minister of State for Economic Development.

• (1450)

It was a year ago January that the Government announced the Kirby inquiry into the Atlantic fishery. The Government had known that events were difficult and times were troublesome, from the summer of the year before. How can the Minister come into the House at this time and say that this is not a question for him to answer when the Minister heads the very committee that is studying it? How in the name of Heaven can anybody do any planning in the Atlantic fishery while the Minister and his committee dither and dither, and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans keeps sloughing the question off to the very Minister who is the head of the Cabinet committee which is supposed to come up with some answers?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I am flattered that the Minister of Fisheries apparently referred the question to me to be answered, and I answered it in his absence.

Mr. McGrath: You did not.

Mr. Johnston: The question has been answered.

As far as dithering is concerned, the amount of concentrated effort put in by Ministers, the Minister of Fisheries in particular, Mr. Kirby and the members of the task force, is probably without precedent in trying to bring this problem to a satisfactory solution for all concerned. On that basis I do not think the Hon. Member has really founded his question upon reality.

EMPLOYMENT

DISCUSSIONS ON CREATING JOBS IN PETERBOROUGH AREA

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. It stems from the fact that the Mayor, a warden, and a representative from the Peterborough Labour Council have continually tried to get a meeting in Ottawa to discuss job creation in a high unemployment area in the Peterborough region. They have been passed from Minister to Minister.

We read in the paper this past weekend that there was, to use the words in the paper, a private secret meeting between a Minister of the Crown and the President of the Liberal Riding Association of Peterborough, along with two other association officials. The purpose, as reported in the paper, was to discuss job creation in the Peterborough area.

How do you get on the preferred list to see a Minister about job creation in a marketing area of Canada if you happen to be in one of the 135 ridings in Canada that is not represented by a Liberal Member? Do you have to go through the Liberal riding association president in order to have a meeting on economic development anywhere in this country?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, clearly you do not have to go through the president of any Liberal association, but if Liberal presidents are active in their ridings in trying to support job creation in those districts, they are to be commended.

The fact is that Members of this Government meet regularly with representatives of municipalities, economic regional councils and so on, on a continuing basis. In fact on Friday I met with a group of such representatives in Trail, B.C., working in that area of the Kootenays. If there are any members or people who wish to make representations directly to Ministers of the Crown on job creation, the door is always open to do so.

CRITERIA FOR MEETING WITH MINISTERS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the Mayor of Peterborough, Bob Barker, Warden Bob Allan representing 18 municipalities of the County of Peterborough, and Paul Crough, member of the Peterborough Labour Council, were referred first to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is not in the Chamber at the moment, and then to the Minister of State for Economic Development. To this date they have not had an answer. Simultaneously, a Minister of the Crown met in a private confidential meeting in the City of Oshawa. How does a mayor, warden, reeve, or elected official from the Peterborough area get a meeting if he does not happen to be a president of a Liberal riding association?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, if the Mayor of Peterborough had called my office, he could have requested a meeting. I have not met with him, but I will be glad to follow the matter up. I can certainly assure Hon. Members that that would be an exception and not the rule. I have met with groups, as have my colleagues, from all across the country, including many areas of Ontario, many ridings not represented by Liberal Members of Parliament. If the Hon. Member wishes to bring the mayor to my office, I will be more than pleased to meet with him.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

APPEAL AGAINST CRTC TELEPHONE EQUIPMENT DECISION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State who is also the Minister responsible for co-ordinating the Government's response to the "Obstacles" report. The Minister knows that last Fall the CRTC made a decision that all telephones in Canada did not have to be made compatible with hearing aids. The Minister also knows that a part of that decision was based on the cost of modifying telephone sets. Since a number of associations representing hearing impaired individuals in Canada have since appealed that decision to the Cabinet and pointed out that the information which the CRTC had was wrong, will the Minister tell us whether Cabinet has made a decision on this question and, if not, when will it?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question and confirm that representatives of the Canadian Hard of Hearing Association have written to me in recent months to draw my attention to this very important aspect of the rights of the handicapped in Canada of having the same access to telephone services as their fellow citizens. I personally replied that I was very sympathetic to their request, which I fully supported, and that I intended to support their representations in Cabinet when the decision in question was discussed.

Consequently, I can assure the Hon. Member as well as those who are supporting this request that we shall be very seriously considering the need to give the rights of the handicapped full recognition.

All Bell Canada telephone sets are equipped with fluxcoils that can be activated by the T-switch on hearing aids.

As for telephone sets provided by B.C. Telephone, only 79 out of 1.7 million are equipped with fluxcoils. Madam Speaker, I certainly agree that all handicapped persons in Canada should have exactly the same rights in this respect.

EMPLOYEE LAID OFF IN VANCOUVER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. I have before me a contract of Mr. Edward Hershey, a part-time employee in Vancouver, in my riding. He tells me that he applied for a job, went through the test, and so on. He says that the Department is no sloppy budgeter. Will the Minister please tell me what I should say to Mr. Hershey who said, and I agree with him, that he is a victim of the Government's willingness to lay him off in order to hire some NEED employees so that the Government can pad the job-creation figures? Will the Minister agree that this is unfair to these employees? Is he prepared to do something about it in reply to the letter I wrote him about Mr. Hershey's case? This is now going on coast to coast.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I suggest the Hon. Member send me the details of the case, and I will look into it very carefully. I do not think there is any question of my Department acting unfairly to any of its employees. We have a very good relationship with our union. I know the union has protested about some cases. We investigate these cases very conscientiously.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

INQUIRY RESPECTING RURAL SERVICE IN ALBERTA

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. It is a question about big versus small. How is it in a society where urban people can get a multitude of television channels and in central Alberta and west central Alberta they can scarcely get two, where urban people can get telephone service for a fee and rural people do business while their neighbours listen in, that the Minister can justify that our city cousins get free delivery door-to-door while the post offices in the communities of Cadogan, Metiskow, Veteran, Oyen and Hanna, will have rural postal service removed, in the very areas where, by reasons of distance, that is the service that is needed, and actually distance is used as an excuse for taking the service away?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the service in rural Canada is a service that has been given throughout the years by the Post Office. It is not only an obligation but a goal of the Canada Post Corporation to maintain postal customer service in all areas of Canada, including rural and remote areas, at a price that is equivalent to the one charged in other parts of the country. The Hon. Member will realize that it is much more expensive to deliver the mail in these remote areas of the country than it is in urban Canada. Throughout the years the Post Office has maintained this type of service and will continue in the future, despite the fact it is incurring heavy losses in performing this service.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION TO INCLUDE PROPERTY RIGHTS

The House resumed, from Friday, April 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp:

That, whereas the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada were so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof;

Now Therefore the House of Commons resolves that His Excellency the Governor General be authorized to issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada amending the Constitution of Canada as follows:

PROCLAMATION AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. Section 7 of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:

"60.1 A reference to the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982 shall be deemed to include a reference to the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983 (property rights),"

3. This Proclamation may be cited as the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983 (property rights).

Madam Speaker: It being 3 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 12(3), the House will now proceed with the deferred division on the motion of Mr. Epp, seconded by Miss MacDonald, respecting a proclamation amending the Constitution of Canada with respect to property rights. Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion of Mr. Epp, which was negatived on the following division:

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 4,660.

[Text]

CANADIAN UNIVERSITY SERVICE OVERSEAS

Question No. 4,660—Mr. Stewart:

1. At any time, did the Cuban government give free airline tickets to any Canadian University Service Overseas personnel and, if so (a) what were the tickets worth (b) does the Government approve of CUSO-funded personnel accepting subsidies from communist governments?

2. At a recent meeting, did CUSO pass a resolution calling on the Government to adopt a neutralist policy and to pull out of NATO and NORAD and, if so, was the intent of the resolution to allow Canada to free itself from commitments that would permit the manufacture of components for the Cruise missile and permit the testing of the missile in Canada?

3. Is Mrs. Iona Campagnolo a member of the CUSO board and, if so, does this membership conflict with her position as President of the Liberal Party of Canada?

4. Does Treasury Board intend to restore a $500,000 cut from CUSO's budget, in light of CUSO's threat to close its Tanzania project?

5. Was CUSO's budget cut by the Canadian International Development Agency and, if so (a) by what percentage (b) does the cut reflect a real dollar reduction or just a reduction in the rate of increase (c) how does the cut compare with cuts by CIDA in grants to other non-governmental organizations?

6. Are CUSO personnel in Zambia involved in support for national liberation (terrorist) movements and, if so, to what extent?

7. What is the Third World Foundation and is this organization being established as a successor to the Futures Secretariat?

8. At a recent meeting, did CUSO consider setting up a United States foundation for fund-raising purposes and, if so (a) was this matter referred to a committee for further consideration (b) does the Government approve of CUSO raising funds in a foreign country?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canadian International Development Agency and the Treasury Board Secretariat as follows:

1. (a) CUSO, an international development agency, is a private, non-governmental organization and therefore, this question should be directed to that organization. (b) CUSO is a private, non-governmental organization. In addition to any programs which the Government of Canada assists financially through the Canadian International Development Agency, CUSO may undertake programs in developing countries and in such cases the recipient organization, governmental or non-governmental, may contribute to some of the costs of the program.

2. See 1. (a) above.

3. See 1. (a) above.

4. At its meeting of March 10, the Treasury Board considered and approved an appeal from the Secretary of State for External Affairs to restore $522,000 to the approved two-year contribution to CUSO by CIDA.

The Board's decision reflects present expectations concerning the performance of foreign inflation and the provision of a small contingency allowance to provide for unexpected financial requirements associated with emergency and medical evacuations and other unforeseen but urgent demands.

5. No.

6. See 1. (a) above.

7. The possibility of a new organization called the Canada/Third World Foundation, or by another title, is one of a number of options being considered to improve the implementation of Canadian technical assistance programs with developing countries. The foundation has no official status and is at the idea stage only. The suggestion of such an option was raised even before the Futures Secretariat was organized.

8. (a) See 1. (a) above. (b) CUSO is a private, non-governmental organization which raises its own funds from a variety of sources. See also Part 1. (b) above.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, If question No. 4,733 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PERCENTAGE FOOD AID COMPRISES FOREIGN AID CONTRIBUTIONS

Question No. 4,733—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. What percentage of Canada's total foreign aid contributions in (a) 1981-82 (b) 1982-83 were comprised of food aid?

2. For each recipient country and as a total, what were the volumes and dollar values for each food commodity supplied by Canada as foreign aid in (a) 1981-82 (b) 1982-83?

3. By commodity, what percentage of Canada's agricultural exports in (a) 1981-82 (b) 1982-83 were represented by food aid contributions?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions by allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I was in the midst of putting on the record my views with regard to the complicity between the Tories on the one hand and the Liberal Party on the other hand in an attempt to deprive Canadians of an opportunity to work.

I know that there are in this country a large number of people who, when the budget was presented slightly less than a week ago, were very disappointed. They had hoped to be able to see some signs that the budget would bring about the economic recovery which would ultimately put them back to work. They had also hoped, in the area which I represent, to see some indication on the part of the Government that it understood the destruction which was taking place in some of the older municipalities in Canada as a result of decisions being made by companies, some of long standing, to close their doors and to walk away. Some were leaving to go to other municipalities, maybe because they were being offered additional incentives. Some were rationalizing their enterprises, as they like to put it, in order to maximize profits. Others were moving from Canada altogether, some to the United States, to allow their home base manufacturing operation to have more of the North American market production, and others still were moving offshore altogether.

Last week, in a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and in a subsequent question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley), I suggested that it was time that we in Canada began to understand the devastation created by the unilateral moves being made by these companies. I suggested that it was time for us to demand some quite different corporate behaviour and that it is necessary for the decision-makers in the corporate sector to recognize the investment which municipalities have laid out in providing the necessary infrastructure which made it possible for them to locate there in the first place. It is time for those same corporate decision makers to understand the destructive nature of their decisions as they relate to workers and their families and the problems which occur when the main breadwinner, be it a male or a female, is suddenly found no longer to have employment. Often this happens to them at an age when finding alternative employment is virtually impossible.

Today, when the Minister in charge of small businesses was speaking in the debate, I asked him whether he did not think it was time that the Government presented to the House of Commons some measure on behalf of the people of Canada to try to come to grips with the destruction which has now become a part of all too many communities in every part of the country.

Let me just tell Hon. Members about Hamilton. In the last two weeks, we have heard three major announcements involving companies of some long standing. In two cases, the companies were closing entirely. In another case, the company was laying off its entire work force, with no real date for return in sight. We were speaking of hundreds of people who had put out everything they had on behalf of those companies. In no instance was there prior consultation or opportunity for the employees, their representatives, the municipality representing the taxpayers in Hamilton, the provincial Government representing a substantial investment in our municipality or the federal Government to meet with the companies involved to discuss an alternative.

After years in Hamilton, Consolidated Bathurst sent its employees a letter at Christmas last year thanking them for the hard work they had done which had resulted, in part, in the company having a substantially better year than it had had in many years. In fact, it was enjoying a profit. The letter stated, "We look forward to your cooperation next year in making 1983 an even better year". The company then sat down with those same employees and their representatives at the negotiating table in January and they reached a decision as to the contract. There was not one single hint that the plant was planning to close, not a whisper that it proposed to move out of the community altogether.

In March, not two months later, an announcement came out of the blue that the plant would be closed, the equipment would be sold and the production would be moved to the Montreal base. That is just not good enough. That kind of behaviour is obscene. It was a clear indication of a lack of corporate understanding. If it were one isolated case, one might say that this must certainly be considered, but over and against everything else, it is unusual. However, it is not an isolated case. Just last week we discovered that Allan Industries had decided not to reopen its plant. There was no one single hint that it proposed to close. There was no discussion, no opportunity to consider the possibility of assistance in finding markets. There was no opportunity to discuss whether assistance of one kind or another might enable it to create a more profitable position for itself and, therefore, for its employees. We discovered it was closing because a reporter from the Hamilton Spectator called to ask when the company expected to return to production. It was mentioned that the company had prepared a press release dated approximately two weeks previously, which it had not bothered releasing, indicating that the plant was to be closed and that the work was to be done in the parent plant in the United States.

Then, of course, International Harvester was once the mainstay of the Hamilton community, but we find that now it is in dire straits. What do we see? We see these workers accepting a vastly reduced contract arrangement but, even at that, there is still no work for them.

One goes through the municipality and finds that there are places where we could in fact have been creating employment directly. National Steel Car has an idle capacity of almost 100 per cent. The Government could and should be ordering its hopper cars but it has not yet placed its order, keeping those workers unemployed, making it less and less likely that the plant will return to full production. I am saying to Your Honour that there are examples after examples in my community of decisions to close which have detrimentally affected people and where the companies involved have not even had the common decency to discuss the matter in advance. On the other hand, companies which ought to be working at a much greater level of production, or even at all as in the case of National Steel Car, are being impeded by decisions that are either being made or not made by the Government.

● (1540)

The Government has brought forward a budget which states that if a company wishes to retool its operation to make it more productive, the Government will help. But that is not the problem in this country. There is up to 30 per cent or 35 per cent of unused productive capacity now. Who in his right mind who has a plant with 30 per cent of its capacity idle would borrow money to create an entirely new productive capacity far in excess of what he has now and have 50 per cent or 60 per cent of it sitting idle? That is not where the problem lies. The problem is at the consuming end where consumers have lost confidence in this Government. Consumers have lost confidence that the Government's measures will help them in any beneficial way.

Interestingly enough, the Government is supported right down the line by its Conservative allies at every single turn. When we proposed that there ought to be stronger measures to make it more profitable for consumers to purchase now and better measures to get plants into production now, all that we heard from both the Conservatives and the Liberals was that we cannot afford it.

We should not ask whether we can afford to embark upon the necessary projects in this country that will create work, establish a strong and viable infrastructure in order to transport our goods and have the port facilities capable of handling those goods, to make ourselves energy self-sufficient from coast to coast and be able to use our skilled industries properly. Rather, the question should be, can we afford not to do it? Our answer is clearly that we cannot afford not to embark on projects like that. They should be undertaken now so that people can be put to work instead of being paid to sit at home.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support these measures I would first like to commend my colleague, the Minister of Finance, (Mr. Lalonde), for the imaginative approach to the economic challenges which face us. Many of the measures which he set out are meant to encourage Canadians to invest in their own industries, to facilitate the growth of our productive capacity and to create the type of climate in which productive enterprises will thrive.

The Minister of Finance has made it clear that the Government's first concern is to help those Canadians who want to work and cannot find jobs. That goal calls for what the Minister of Finance has described as a new partnership for recovery, involving labour, business and Government united by a sense of national purpose.

This is what this Government has done in housing. It has provided incentives and encouraged Canadians to purchase and repair their homes. In fact, the annual rate of starts has increased from 86,000 last summer to 177,000 in March. This improvement in housing starts translates directly into jobs. Given the estimates by the industry associations, these figures suggest that employment related to residential construction will increase from about 176,000 to approximately 354,000.

Yet that is not the full story. The Government's home renovation assistance has added a further 20,000 person-years of employment. These achievements clearly demonstrate the Government's concern for the unemployed.

We have taken a realistic course and one which will see jobs created. But it is a course that recognizes that any sustained growth must come from the private sector. This budget recognizes that no matter how well the private sector may operate as an engine of economic growth, there will be people who still need help to provide for themselves the necessities of life. In difficult times their lot is painful. I share my colleague's pride that this Government has not removed the social program protection for those who need help the most, especially for those who are not organized in order to negotiate from a position of strength.

I particularly welcome the measures which strenghthen our traditional social programs and make special provisions to assist low income families with the raising of children. The Government's commitment to economic recovery and job creation and its concern for those in greatest need apply equally in one of my areas of responsibility, which is housing. A total of $335 million in additional resources over the next 18 months has been allocated to housing in this budget. It is designated for the purpose of stimulating economic activity, creating jobs and extending assistance to those people, including native peoples, who are living in inadequate, crowded or unaffordable accommodation. This is in addition to over $1 billion that has been channelled into housing measures over the past year, over and above the regular CMHC budget of some $2 billion.

I welcome the decision to allocate another $30 million to the Canadian Home Ownership stimulation Plan because this extension will enable assistance to be available to small builders, in particular to those who could not start houses through difficult winter conditions. This new allocation will approach the figure of $750 million as the total Government investment in the home ownership plan, and that means that already more than 200,000 Canadian households have been assisted in buying a home.

The Minister of Finance also announced significant modifications to the Registered Home Onwership Savings Plan. These changes will encourage those who have invested in Registered Home Onwership Savings to use these savings to purchase a new home and furniture and appliances. It will continue the stimulus that has already been provided to the housing sector. It will encourage savings to be taken out of bank accounts and put to work creating employment, generating housing starts and demands for furniture and appliances.

This measure has been criticized as being inequitable and as offering greater benefits to the wealthy. Let me say that over 80 per cent of RHOSP contributors have incomes between $10,000 and $30,000. Less than 2 per cent have incomes over $50,000. First-time homebuyers are not wealthy.

As I said earlier, starts in March were at an annual rate of 177,000. With the extension of the Home Ownership Stimulation Plan and the additional incentives provided through the changes that I have just described, we will have a good chance of exceeding the 150,000 starts predicted for 1983. I think we might go well beyond that mark if we can continue to instil confidence in the housing market, especially if there are no jumps in the interest rate situation that we have at present.

The housing industry associations have responded very favourably to these measures. The Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada has said that it is very happy with the budget and has predicted that these measures will increase housing starts by as much as 10,000. This means an additional 20,000 to 25,000 person-years of employment.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, besides, the Chairman of the Retail Council of Quebec stated that the changes in provisions with respect to furnishings and household appliances will provide a new stimulus for the purchase of expensive items which has been a major problem in the retail trade during the last eighteen months. The Director General of the Quebec Furniture Manufacturers' Association, an organization representing about 500 furniture manufacturers, said that the Budget would make a big difference to them.

I also would like to point out that the Government has not forgotten tenants. There has been an encouraging improvement in the vacancy rate recently, but there is still a shortage of rental accommodation in certain areas. I shall recall, if I may, that the Canada Rental Supply Plan introduced last year was, in fact, aimed at correcting local shortages. To date, some 14,000 rental units have benefited from this plan and 16,000 more may do so in 1983.

I would like to add that our Home Ownership Stimulation Plan, by helping tenants to purchase a home, is helping to increase the number of housing units available. As I mentioned before, the Government has not forgotten its social responsibility. In the housing area, steps have been taken to implement programs that will help Canadians with low or modest incomes to improve their homes or to acquire one. These measures are also helping to create jobs. Some $325 million has been provided in the budget for helping low-or middle-income families through home renovation programs, non-profit housing programs, co-operative housing and Indian on-reserve housing.

• (1550)

[English]

Our housing stock is getting older. More and more attention will need to be paid to maintaining and improving the existing stock. Close to one million houses are in need of some major repair. The Government's decision to provide an additional $160 million for home renovation combines good housing policy, its concern with low and moderate income households, and job creation.

Of this $160 million, $120 million has been provided for the Canadian Home Renovation Plan. This has proved to be a popular and successful program. It is very effective in generating employment and stimulating economic activity since home owners are required to put up $3 of their own for every $1 of Government grant. By those terms, the additional $120 million announced by the Finance Minister will result in a total new investment of $480 million. The average income of households benefiting under this plan has been assessed at between $20,000 and $24,000.

A further $40 million has been allocated to the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, commonly known as RRAP. RRAP helps low income households maintain their homes in a safe, healthy and satisfying condition.

The RRAP Program is a sensitive Program, preserving both the housing stock and the social fabric of the community. In fact, one of my colleagues at an international conference said recently that under the Program houses are repaired with the use of the wheelbarrow and not the bulldozer.

I know all Members of this House will agree that our native people face housing conditions which are often unacceptable. This Government has provided a further $40 million for building and improving housing on Indian reserves. That program is administered by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), but in terms of my own portfolio, I want to tell Hon. Members that funds for the rural and native housing program were recently increased by $6.7 million for 1983 and by $20 million for 1984 and succeeding years.

But the budget did not stop there, Mr. Speaker. The budget increased by 2,500 to 25,000 the number of units that will be supported this year under our social housing programs. This represents a commitment of some $125 million over the life of these projects.

It is easy to talk about these housing measures in terms of units and dollars and it is easy to speak about this in a somewhat impersonal way, but these measures affect real people, real households, in a direct way. They are not just dollars. They dramatically affect the well-being of low income households, be they in our cities, in our rural areas or on reserves. We are talking about programs which assist the elderly. Yesterday in my own riding I saw the opening of some 20 units for the elderly. These programs also assist the disabled. I recently saw a co-operative housing project which counted among its occupants a good number of handicapped people. These programs assist single parent families, victims of family violence, and our native peoples. There can be no doubt that this budget, while good for business, also addressed many pressing housing needs faced by low income Canadians.

During the year ahead, as in months past, housing will continue to play a vital part in putting more people to work, not just on the building sites but in all those sectors of business which produce building materials and supplies and which make and distribute the furnishings, appliances and household goods and services that people buy when they move into a new house. These materials, supplies, goods and services are mainly produced in Canada. Through housing, the Government has provided economic stimulation while at the same time rendering an essential social service by providing good, affordable shelter in a safe community environment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any Hon. Members rising to ask questions?

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, I have one or two questions for the Minister. While we in this Party welcome several of the initiatives in the budget to stimulate the housing industry in general and we agree it will generate a fairly significant number of jobs in the construction, home appliances and furniture sectors, I would like to come back to what I asked the Minister in Question Period last week or the week before with respect to the housing envelope. I am sure the Minister is doing what he can within Cabinet to promote the construction of a sufficient number of units for low rental accommodation, but he knows that in this country we need, over the next five years—and this is not a ballpark guess, it is a pretty close figure—50,000 units a year. I am not suggesting that we build new ghettos, as we have come to call some of the old housing, but an equitable mix in our various communities. Could the Minister give me any encouragement that the figure he mentioned in his speech for social housing for low-rental people will be increased, and increased significantly, in the next two or three years? This is a very serious matter, Mr. Speaker. I have one supplementary question to follow.

• (1600)

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member and I disagree on the issue; I think we may disagree on some of the wording. I take issue with him somewhat when he refers to social housing being limited to the 25,000 units, as important as they are. I might say that some $160 million—and I would have to check the exact figure—is spent under RRAP which is really directed to low-income families. It provides forgivable loans and in many cases allows people in rural areas—and I have seen some in my own Province—to remain in their own homes and in fact continue to enjoy the milieu in which they have grown up and spent their adult lives. In a way this program is a social housing program as well.

The condition of the housing of native people certainly allows me to refer to the very considerable budget increased by $40 million by the Minister of Finance a few days ago. This is social housing of the highest priority. Because of the per unit cost of the program, in other words the cost of finding a housing solution for a relatively small number of people compared with the need, my predecessor ordered an evaluation of social housing programs. That evaluation is now in our hands. I hope it will be made available to Hon. Members who are interested in housing in the coming weeks or months so that we may have a discussion. Organizations including the co-operative housing movement recognize that we must find a way to bring in more people under social housing programs. As the Hon. Member indicated, the queue of people waiting is very long.

I do not want to return to the creation of ghettos. I do not think anyone in the House would want that. As I said a few days ago, we must find a way to get a bit more bang for the buck. I recognize this and I continue to impress it on my colleagues, but I think it will require a fair amount of imagination by all those concerned in the area of social programs to find a way, be it a rental allowance that has some pros and cons or some other, to accommodate more people who are waiting.

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. It is a more specific question. It relates entirely to the City of Montreal. I know there are housing needs in every city small or large across Canada, but Montreal has the highest density of renters per capita of any Canadian city. It also has the most critical housing shortage for low-income families. It is reaching critical proportions. The high figure is estimated at between 300,000 and 400,000 people in the City of Montreal who are in desperate need now of adequate geared-to-income housing.

What specific initiatives is the Minister presently addressing for the City of Montreal? Could he also inform the House if any groups in the City of Montreal have approached him or his departmental officials directly requesting a broader program and a more liberal program, if you will pardon the expression, to assist the 400,000 people who are in desperate need of adequate and decent housing in the City of Montreal alone?

Mr. LeBlanc: I have had some discussions with the representatives of the City of Montreal in past months. I will meet with them again. The Hon. Member is correct when he says that Montreal with its high percentage of renters presents special problems. In fact, the City itself is addressing this issue. In co-operation with the City we were able to bring forward 2,400 units in the past year. Also the City has rather imaginative projects which it is bringing forward, including the use of some former railway land. We are discussing as well a way to improve the situation in terms of older stock of small apartment blocks of three units or six units where the owner resides in one and rents the remaining units. A lot of this housing, if it were upgraded, would afford perfectly good housing in communities or in parts of the city from where residents simply do not want to move or where they prefer to remain.

We are taking an approach which is as flexible as we are allowed under the law, recognizing that Montreal's problem is not exactly the same as that of other large cities which have peculiar and particular problems. Perhaps I have not been precise enough. If the Hon. Member wants to be more precise, I will try to answer him.

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, I just have one more question. In his speech the Minister made passing reference to co-operative housing. Some time ago I asked him a question on co-op housing and I believe that his response was to the effect that it was the most expensive kind of social housing. Of course that point is debated by the Canadian Co-operative Housing Association. Its figures tend to differ from the Minister's departmental figures, but I do not want to get into that kind of an argument at this point. Since the Minister is responsible for that kind of housing initiative, would he be prepared to sit down soon with representatives of the Canadian Co-operative Housing Association in Ottawa to see if they could get their figures more closely together, to see who is right and who is wrong? Perhaps both are wrong or both are right; I do not know. Would he be prepared to meet with them to explore better ways of expanding the co-operative public non-profit program? To my way of thinking, it may be expensive—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the Hon. Member expects a response, he should allow some time for the Minister.

Mr. LeBlanc: I will try to be as brief as possible. I said recently that social housing, because of its very nature, is expensive. I simply mean that the program which writes down interest rates to 2 per cent over a 35 year period will obviously be costly. I do not apologize for that. As I said earlier, my concern is to try to get as many people as possible covered by the program or by the amount of money, which will always be finite, even if we doubled the number of units in the social housing program.

The co-operative housing group falls under the general umbrella of 25,000 units. I understand their feeling. Perhaps they are not getting as many units as they would like. I have had discussions with them. In fact, I met at some length with a co-operative group in Toronto. We had what I thought was a very positive discussion on the number of units that should be assisted housing or low-income housing. We tended to define the ideal situation as being between 15 per cent and 25 per cent. I think the co-op movement has made an interesting case. I listened very carefully to its suggestion of increasing the percentage of assistance to apartment or home dwellers in order to cover a larger percentage of people when we invest in a large project. That discussion will continue. I have certainly met with them and I will meet with them again. I think the debate on whether or not—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, since the presentation of the budget on April 19 many Hon. Members who have spoken in this debate have dealt with many of its varied aspects in very concrete ways. Therefore, in order not to be repetitive, I will direct my comments on this budget to two specific areas, agriculture and tourism. In real terms, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) gave only token assistance to these two sectors of the economy that today face serious difficulty. With regard to agriculture, the extra $100 million available in the budget is available only to farmers in distress. This is characterized by many producers as nothing more than a band-aid solution since in Ontario there are only 5,000 to 8,000 farmers who would qualify as being in dire straits.

• (1610)

With regard to the Finance Minister's announcement that he will allow farmers to carry their losses over ten years instead of seven, this too is not much more than a band-aid solution. If the Minister were inflicted with a serious physical wound, I am sure he would expect more than a band-aid, yet that is all he offers to the farmers in distress, many of whom are being forced to leave farms which their families have occupied for generations.

Members opposite have asked what our Party would do and what solutions we have for agriculture. First, our Party would provide up to $100 million to assist producers in re-negotiating their existing high interest loans to levels more in line with current rates. We would establish farm financial review boards which would be used as an advisory and appeal mechanism and would be set up in each Farm Credit Corporation region.

In addition, we would implement the agri-bond concept which would encourage retired farmers and others to invest their savings with the Farm Credit Corporation and thus provide tax incentives, including a waiver of capital gains tax. This would pave the way for stable and low interest rates and a continuing source of available capital for agriculture. As this House knows, the agri-bond concept has wide support across the country, including the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

We also advocate the elimination of the 9 per cent federal sales tax on farm fuels. Although Canadian farmers use only 3 per cent of all energy consumed in Canada, they use 6 per cent of the gasoline and 10 per cent of the diesel fuel. About one-quarter of the farm operating expenses are owing to the direct and indirect cost of energy. The removal of the 9 per cent sales tax would reduce the cost of diesel fuel by 20 cents per gallon, and the elimination of a natural gax and gas liquids tax would result in reducing the price of natural gas and fertilizers, thereby lowering the general cost of farm operations. All these measures Canadian farmers would have welcomed from the Minister of Finance with, I dare say, open arms.

In today's desperate economic conditions, many farmers have been forced to engage in other off-farm activities to maintain a semblance of cash flow and to help maintain their farm operations. Therefore, we support repealing Section 31 of the Income Tax Act which is being used by Revenue Canada as a means of reclassifying such farmers as part-time farmers, thereby limiting farm loss to only $5,000. This reclassifying has resulted in many farmers being hit with back taxes in the thousands of dollars at a time when many such farmers are on the brink of financial collapse.

We strongly urge the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières), and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to take a long, hard look on what this section is doing to the agriculture industry. Indeed, because of the present Government's over-zealous enforcement of Section 31, many in the agricultural industry have the impression that the Government's secret goal is to replace the independent family farm with the large corporate farm.

I would be remiss if I did not mention tourism as far as this budget is concerned. There is a conspicuous absence of any concrete mention of tourism in this budget. Tourism is an industry that needs a lot of help and support, but it is not getting it from this Government. It gets lots of rhetoric, lip service, but no concrete assistance. This was well expressed by a constituent of mine, Mr. Gordon Canning, president of Blue Mountain Resorts Ltd. of Collingwood, Ontario, in a letter dated April 25, in which he said to me:

> We are certainly having our problems as an industry in being recognized by the federal Government. The recent budget just reinforces our unhappiness and exasperations. In a brief to the Hon. Paul Cosgrove, Minister of State for Finance, the Tourism Industry Association of Canada asked simply for a recognition in the budget that tourism was of vital importance to Canada's economy. That recognition was not given and indeed the policies announced have a negative impact on the tourist industry or give support to other industries. For example, the tax on liquor has been increased—and although we can claim tax credits for certain kitchen equipment, other equipment such as snowmaking, grooming and chair-lift equipment did not apply because they are not used to produce goods for sale or lease. Prior to the last budget we were allowed full capital costs allowance in the first year on new investments, but that was reduced to half and no change was made to that ruling in last week's budget.

He went on to say that in helping to do its share, the provincial Government has already committed $12 million for municipal services in the Blue Mountain/Craig Leith area. The official plan for the development of the area, if it occurs, will involve over $100 million worth of construction.

The acceleration of this plan will depend on the federal-provincial tourist agreement that has been forthcoming for the last two and a half years. This is indeed a long time to discuss any agreement. In the meantime, everything is at a standstill just because some politicians and some bureaucrats cannot make up their minds. This is indeed a sad state of affairs.

The plight of the tourist industry in Canada was well documented in the debate that took place in the House of Commons on Thursday, April 13 of this year. Possible solutions were well documented. The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey) took part in the debate and seemed to be in accord with many of the recommendations made in the debate. It only remains to be seen what action will spring forth as the result. All of us hope, for the sake and for the survival of the tourist industry in Canada, that some long-awaited positive initiatives will be undertaken.

Although I stated that my comments will be mainly directed to agriculture and tourism as dealt with in the budget of the Minister of Finance, there are other areas of this budget that require a brief comment. For example, there is the bleak prospect for the unemployed to whom the Minister of Finance offered yet another band-aid. Today over two million Canadians are unemployed. Unemployed people want to work but cannot find jobs.

It is hard to take the Minister of Finance seriously when one considers that by March 31, 1983, only 32 per cent of the greatly-touted NEED Program was committed, never mind spent. Regardless of how you look at it, the bottom line of this Program is not really to get people back to permanent work but to help them re-qualify for UIC benefits. The unemployed want real and lasting jobs, not Government handouts. By and large this new budget does nothing to give the unemployed any real hope for bona fide jobs.

As for youth unemployment, this is indeed a national disaster. On budget night, the Finance Minister proudly announced an extra $70 million for this summer's student employment program. However, when one considers that in 1982 the program was cut from $120 million in 1981 to $100 million, this budget's $170 million program really represents only a $50 million increase from 1981.

The Minister of Finance is playing a numbers game regarding the 621,000 unemployed young Canadians under the age of 25. Perhaps what is even more serious is that this Government by its policies seems to be trying to create the idea among young Canadians and saying to them, "Don't worry, we'll find you a temporary Government-sponsored make-work job. When that runs out, we will give you unemployment insurance. When that runs out, we will introduce another Government program just long enough to requalify you for Unemployment Insurance benefits once again." I wonder about the lasting effect that attitude will have on our country's future productivity levels and on the young people of Canada.

It should also be noted, Mr. Speaker, that despite the Finance Minister's glowing description of the employment programs, the true fact is that in 1984, there will be 55,000 fewer people with jobs than there were in 1981.

As we are all aware, a great concern of our Party is the financing of this budget. There is the old saying that there are two things a person cannot escape in this life, death and taxes. There is a third word that this administration will add to that old saying, and I will return to that in a moment.

To finance this recovery program, the Finance Minister announced that the 1982-1983 deficit will be about $25.3 billion and in 1983-1984 will be $31.3 billion. To help finance this so-called budget that is supposed to get business going and increase employment, he will increase the federal manufacturers' sales tax from 9 per cent to 10 per cent effective October 1, 1984. As this tax is imposed at the manufacturer's level, it will be a hidden tax. This also means that this increase will not filter down to the retail level until a few months later, in plenty of time for the 1984 election to have come and gone. In addition, this increase will probably be passed on to consumers who will likely blame the merchant, not the Government. How does the Minister of Finance expect to get business going in these economically precarious times with a policy of increasing the costs of business? How does he expect the embattled and cautious consumer to spend money when he raises the price of products?

I have never before heard of a policy that will get consumers to spend, make industries more productive and lower employment by increasing production costs and that is just what this tax increase does. In fact, this tax increase violates the main theme in the Minister of Finance's budget of getting the unemployed back to work.

The third word which the Minister of Finance has inserted into the old phrase is deficits. "All Canadians can look forward to death, deficits and increased taxes." This is how he and his predecessors have changed this old phrase. To help finance his so-called $4.8 billion recovery program, he will increase the 1983-1984 deficit to $31.3 billion.

Many economists tell us that there are not enough private savings or private sector moneys available to finance this deficit without interest and mortgage rates rising as they did one and a half years ago. So the Canadian consumer has another bright prospect to look forward to. In addition to record high taxes and record high unemployment, we now have record high deficits, an unsavoury epitaph in memory of a Government's term of office and one that is regarded by most Canadians today and will be regarded by many Canadians in the future as a terrible episode in Canada's history. It is a terrible nightmare that it will take us a very long time to overcome. It will take a long time to make right the terrible damage and terrible afflictions that this Government has forced upon the country and upon the people.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have been present to hear the address of the hon. gentleman. Since the Member was very positive the day after the budget in his own analysis of the budget and its provisions, I wonder what since then has had him change his views. I am amazed that the hon. gentleman who represents an area that includes the Collingwood Shipyards would not have commended the Government for its initiative in introducing a major program of acceleration in shipbuilding which undoubtedly, because of the highly competitive nature of the Collingwood Shipyards, would provide them with an opportunity to get a portion of that business.

Mr. Mitges: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I did not comment on the whole budget in my speech. I more or less emphasized its impact on the agriculture and the tourist industries. The agriculture industry, as I mentioned, is still in dire straits and needs a great deal of assistance.

The budget contained a few provisions that I did not think were too bad at all. Commenting on the assistance to the Collingwood Shipyards, my main concern is the 1,300-foot drydock that we have been trying to get now for many, many years. This has been sloughed off by perhaps both the federal and the provincial Governments claiming that more and more studies are needed. This has had a detrimental effect on the shipyards, and we are no closer to a solution to the problem than we were several years ago. This does not take away from the fact that we did get some assistance for a new crane at a value of some $2.5 million, for which I would like to thank the Minister. I have no objection to that.

Mr. Neil: Taxpayers' money.

Mr. Mitges: As the Hon. Member has said, it is taxpayers' money, money that is going to a good cause and will create more jobs. However, the bottom line is the drydock. Now that the Minister has spoken about this, I wish that something would be done to make the drydock a reality rather than a lot of rhetoric.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the hon. gentleman referred to the drydock and also to the assistance provided relating to the crane. I am also sure that the hon. gentleman has noted the public announcement relating to the two floating crane contracts for direct export that have been obtained by Collingwood as of April 20 last. Again, of course, the Government is pleased to have been involved, along with the Canadian Commercial Corporation and the export supply directorate which negotiated the contract.

I am pleased that the hon. gentleman has raised the question of the drydock because I would like him to advise me whether he has made representations to the Province of Ontario relating to their joining the federal Government in the market survey affecting the necessity of a floating drydock. The hon. gentleman will recall that, on the occasion of my last visit to Collingwood, there was an indication that we were ready to proceed with that market survey. No market survey had been conducted before to my knowledge. There was also an indication that while the obligation of the provincial Government was only $6 million, the obligation of the federal Government would be in the vicinity of $25 million. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he might approach officials of the Province of Ontario and ask if they would like to switch positions with us. We will pay the $6 million and the Province will pay $25 million. Then perhaps we would not need a market survey.

Mr. Mitges: Mr. Speaker, I am not questioning the Minister's $6 million and $25 million figures. I think they are bona fide figures. For his information, I have made representations to the provincial Government to have this market survey done, but I would also like to point out that, if the Minister will remember, I talked to him on that very occasion back in Collingwood. At that time, I asked him whether, if the market survey showed a favourable position for a 1,300-foot drydock and the Province went along with its share, he would be inclined to go ahead with the federal Government's share of the $25 million. I do not think I received a direct answer from him in that respect.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to be able to comment on the budget statement.

I would like to begin by talking about the amount of money that is being invested by the Government of Canada on behalf of the people of Canada to help us continue on the road to recovery. I think all Hon. Members and the country recognize that at last we seem to be on the road to recovery. Everything indicates that it will continue if we behave responsibly and recognize it will be a slow and fragile recovery.

● (1630)

The Government has put out $4.8 billion in investment money to try to assist that recovery as appropriately as possible. The danger in tossing big figures around is that they sound impressive and certainly a great of capital is going back into the system.

What pleases me about the budget is that the Minister has recognized that all we can do is take funds and try to use them for leverage in the private sector so that we can have a permanent recovery with permanent jobs that will last for many years to come. We recognize, even though we do not always articulate it, that Government by itself can do very little to create long-term jobs and that they must come from the private sector. As a nation we must have confidence in our ability to look after ourselves and compete in world markets.

While a great deal of money goes into immediate job creation—and I will go into the reasons why I think that is appropriate in a moment—I think that is one of the salient features of the budget. It is part of a necessary trend in the country that I hope will continue. It is part of the consultation process.

The truth, whether we are being politically partisan or worrying about our vested interest as businessmen, as labour leaders or educators, is that there is a tendency to fall into the trap of working in a vacuum. We know that it cannot work that way but we all have our individual horse to ride. We have to be concerned with whatever our constituency might be.

In the long run it takes a lot of honest disagreement to come together in the right forum of discussion, starting with the idea that we agree to disagree but will still communicate with each other so that a consensus can be reached. We can then start to move in the direction of looking after the common good of most of the people in Canada.

I believe we see, to a very large degree, the fruits of the proper consultation that has taken place across Canada in the last budget. Many Hon. Members feel that they are part of the consultation process, as I do having had the opportunity to work with many groups in my constituency of Thunder Bay-Nipigon and to hear their concerns and ideas and transmit those to the Government. I believe that some of those ideas and thoughts are represented in a budget that makes a lot of good sense to the people of Canada. It is not perfect, but there is not much perfection in this world as yet, Mr. Speaker.

I think people have recognized that a budget has been put together that takes steps to try to create jobs immediately and do the necessary work to put the country in a position to do better in the future and to create long-term jobs. It has also established a climate whereby business, labour, Government and educators can work together to create those jobs and build upon the upturn that we see in the economy.

There are many general benefits to Canada in this, Mr. Speaker. The consultation process is one very important and often overlooked device that has been improved upon in the budget. We are concentrating on putting Canada in a position of better competition. We are going to build the infrastructure of the country in such a way that we can better serve the people we want to serve. More important, as a trading nation we are doing those things that will put us in a more competitive position to meet the changes that are rapidly taking place in international trade.

As a trading nation I think the fact that the budget addresses ways to help us identify new markets is very basic. It will help us to be more competitive in finding those markets and it will help us be more sophisticated in our approaches to foreign trade in more parts of the country. Thunder Bay is a world port, a national port, the second busiest in Canada, so it is very much concerned with what happens in world trade.

During the economic downturn many people have asked why we blame our problems on people offshore. When you live in a part of the world where about 80 per cent of the product goes offshore, whether it be to the United States or to other nations of the world, you begin to realize that you are a part of a global community. You welcome items in the budget that will help the Export Development Corporation to be more aggressive, to work more closely with the manufacturers and suppliers of services in regions such as Thunder Bay. You also become very interested in DRIE which is the device that will bring together the indicators in the economic field that will more properly address the regions of the country and help them share in the development of industry. It will play a major part in the economy of Canada but will also be available to the people of the regions who are alert enough to want to secure export markets.

To digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, let me say that throughout this budget and other budgets there is a threat that has to be remembered and that is, that Government can do certain things to help but the prime motivator of the economy is the entrepreneurial spirit that is present in the business community with labour leaders and educators, and that is important. Therefore I would urge people in my region and in other regions of the country to seek ways to work in harmony by utilizing existing Government programs, examining options in business that will lead to future development, remembering all the while that it takes the entrepreneurial spirit of the people of Canada to achieve this. That, in turn, will bring about the long-term receovery that we want and will help us face an even more confident future.

The national training program and the additional moneys going to help youth is a very important aspect of the budget. We will make that money available to students who have to borrow in order to complete their education. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has identified the need to work harder with the young people of the country so that we will find options and be able to look confidently to the future. I think we cannot spend enough money in that area. There is never enough money for it. As a nation, we must look at how we treat our youth, how we encourage them and what values we give them so that they can join in the spirit of the entrepreneur and be able to find their future.

I should like to speak about some of the comments I have received in Thunder Bay and northwestern Ontario about the budget. In all honesty, I have to tell you that the comments by and large have been very positive from all groups. We will always have an element that wishes for more, but there are some measures in the budget on which I should like to comment. There are efforts to stimulate home building, home renovation; for example, the allowance within the budget that first-time purchasers, if they are not ready to buy their home right now, will be able to buy furniture and appliances. These stimulation methods have been applauded, Mr. Speaker, not because of what they do right now but because of what they will accomplish in the future. Home construction and apartment construction have increased in Thunder Bay and are continuing to do so. That is the kind of enterprise which really turns on the economy in a fast way and in the short term. I can see our sawmills becoming busier, our retailers becoming more active. I can see the very positive effects of a sudden upturn in the sale of homes, whether brand new homes or resale homes. Once people start moving in that direction, the spin-off effect is well known. That is happening now in northwestern Ontario, and that is why I am happy to see that the budget zeroed in on that crying need for housing.

A while back a comment was made about the shipbuilding program. We have a shipyard in Thunder Bay and I have been in contact with them to ensure that they will be alert in bidding for any new contracts which will be forthcoming. However, I would just like to make a point about programs such as the shipbuilding program which is getting under way in Canada. It is not always possible to target the money to a specific yard. The important thing to remember, however, is that once that industry becomes busy, such as the Collingwood yard, then Thunder Bay automatically becomes busier. I would hope that some of the direct orders can be placed in our particular yard, although that would depend upon a number of factors; the position of the yard to compete for a particular program, its desire to get into it, and so on. But as soon as one very important sector of the economy, such as the shipbuilding industry, becomes busy, all yards gain. So that program, besides answering a very particular need right now, will do many parts of Canada great good because whether a shipyard receives a direct order or not, it will still benefit from that program.

Recently, Mr. Speaker, a seminar on forestry was held in Thunder Bay called "Focus on Forestry". All these people were gathered in Thunder Bay, educators, environmental people, labour people, as well as six Ministers. We invited everyone we could think of who would be interested in the forestry industry, an industry which forms so much of the wealth of northwestern Ontario and of Canada. We had a long, serious discussion to see how the Government of Canada could become more involved in encouraging that particular industry, and we have seen some positive results. One of the items discussed was the need to provide more protection for our forests, to protect them from disease, to protect them from fire, and so on. Therefore, the purchase of more water bombers, which was announced, is very important to the forest industry in northwestern Ontario, as well as to all of Canada. We see annually too many of our trees going up in smoke which could be used to better serve the economy of this nation. I would like to see many more things come out of the "Focus on Forestry" seminar and I detect signs of that in the budget.

The community of Nipigon is most interested in a forestry research station for northwestern Ontario. Quite naturally, they would like to see it in Nipigon, and so would I, if it is at all possible. I believe that we have to spend more money on forestry research. Whether or not it is located specifically in Nipigon—although I make the plea for it to go to that community—the main point is that the Government of Canada is moving more and more into increasing its already fairly substantial assistance to the forest industry. Research will be of great benefit to the entire forestry industry in Canada. Forgive me if I sound parochial, but I would be pleased to see northwestern Ontario considered as the site for such an enterprise.

Northwestern Ontario has several universities. Lakehead University is already benefiting from increased dollars going into forestry research through programs which it has in place. I would like to see more done in that area, and I make the pitch for Thunder Bay and northwestern Ontario simply because we have such a large percentage of that industry. I believe, however, that there are other economic benefits for the forest industry which are inherent in the budget, and that is that we are encouraging people to examine ways to manufacture more products for various industries, including the pulp and paper industry. What I believe is happening as a result of the budget is an upturn in the economy. People are finding more confidence in themselves and saying, "We have gone through difficult times. It is now time to go ahead." Since the budget, I have received a large number of representations from business people within northwestern Ontario, and I am pleased to say there is a very positive response from various levels of Government, asking, "How can we work with you? How can we help you to develop this new product line for the pulp and paper industry? How can we help you to export your lumber products, your paper products more efficiently to points around the world?" I also have found that the business community, in line with the budget, is saying, "We have to expand our thinking. We have to think of finding a better balance of markets around the world." That is an area where we can more properly work with the federal Government, and that industry is beginning to do so. I believe that that is materializing out of the budget. However, the budget itself, Mr. Speaker, is a guide.

I believe we in northwestern Ontario have already recognized that there is much good in the budget, and that there is room for more suggestions, for more improvements. I am hearing from constituents on that score also. I believe we must recognize that the budget has tried to identify where the most good could be done for the business community of Canada, to help create permanent jobs while at the same time not abandoning our need to maintain the social services of the nation. In that respect, the verdict seems to be "Northwestern Ontario", and it is very positive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, answers, comments?

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to have the opportunity to speak today on the budget. There have been many before me who have spoken well on measures contained in this budget, putting forth excellent argument in favour of it and also about what the budget fails to do. I do not profess to be an economist. Indeed, many in this Chamber are not. The Chamber is made up of Hon. Members with various areas of expertise. However, as the elected Member for Leeds-Grenville, I do feel the need to put on the record the feelings of my constituents, which indeed are the same as those of many Canadians across this country, with respect to how the measures in this budget are going to affect their lives.

Canadians have been putting up with months of frustration, dejection and hardship in the fervent hope that the much anticipated April budget would provide them with some relief. In many cases they were disappointed. Canadians were even more disappointed with the circumstances surrounding the bringing down of the budget, a budget we hoped would give Canada new direction.

• (1650)

After years of high unemployment, high interest rates, record bankruptcies, sky-rocketing deficits, two disastrous budgets and financial statements, it was understandable that so many voters were demanding a new, sound fiscal policy to put Canada on the road toward economic recovery. Canadians were desperately wanting to place their trust again in the Government. They were waiting to hear that, with perseverance, things would get better. The last thing Canadians wanted to hear was the call for the resignation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) because of the careless budget leak. Canadians were looking to the Minister of Finance for responsible action on their behalf, not the irresponsible action of a Minister seeking headlines. Yes, indeed, he did receive those headlines, but not the kind that he expected.

The Minister of Finance attempted to do what he could to salvage a sagging economy, a direct result of past Government policy. Of course, there are some positive aspects to the budget. Hopefully, by utilizing the private sector, we can maintain that slight progress which has been made toward economic recovery.

In introducing his budget, the Minister acknowledged the seriousness of the unemployment situation by saying, "We must do all we can to relieve the anguish and hardship that unemployment is inflicting on Canadian workers and their families". Although the Minister would have us believe that he is genuinely concerned about the plight of so many of Canada's citizens who are struggling to survive these devastating economic times, he has failed to do more than just acknowledge this. What he has done has been to sugarcoat a budget which miserably fails in addressing this vital problem. He has done nothing to relieve the anguish and hardship being felt by unemployed Canadians.

Today unemployment is at an incredibly high rate of 12.6 per cent. according to the Government's official rate. Sadly, however, the Government has neglected and ignored the other .5 per cent of Canadians who have become so dejected and despairing that they have given up on their search for work. They are desperate people who have a right to have jobs. They are two million Canadians living in absolute fear of their futures, with no security. That does not speak well of the Government's record.

The Minister of Finance fell short when he addressed the unemployment situation and beamingly predicted that he expected the unemployment rate to continue to be over 10 per cent by the end of the fiscal year 1986-87. In other words, he was telling us that he expected we would still have high unemployment. The prediction was based on a growth rate of 4.5 per cent. If we consider the other side of the coin and do not maintain that 4.5 per cent growth rate, we will be in an even graver position.

Unemployment and its effects permeate every aspect of Canadian life. It is not only imperative to put people back to work, but also to keep them working. How can the Minister of Finance expect us to put our faith and trust in a budget which contains measures we know have failed in the past?

The job creation programs are not new. They are perhaps reorganized, but they are definitely not new. We have heard of Summer Canada Programs, Work Experience and NEED, all short-term job creation programs, and we should be considering long-term employment opportunities. These job creation programs are designed to help create jobs immediately, but experience has taught us to know better.

The NEED Program is a prime example of how quickly the Government can move on its urgent job creation initiatives. Announced last November, in 18 months it was to have started 60,000 jobs, but six months have gone by and only 10 per cent of those jobs have actually been created. It was only with the constant pressure of the Opposition that the Government was forced to come good with its promise and get these jobs started. But how many new jobs are actually being created by this program? In fact, some of these jobs are ones which, under normal circumstances, would be filled by people already employed by the federal Government or other agencies.

In a desperate attempt to make itself look good, the Government has approved projects en masse and juggled figures with abandon. One wonders again how the Government can expect the Canadian people to trust and have faith in it.

I am deeply concerned about the type of jobs the Government is creating for our unemployed. These jobs are averaging up to 20 weeks in length, just long enough to qualify the recipient for Unemployment Insurance benefits. Short-term employment might work well for students, but for a parent with mouths to feed and a mortgage to pay it will only offer temporary relief. I desperately want to see these people off the unemployment lines, as much as they do themselves, and that thought is shared by everyone in this Chamber.

Record rates of unemployment are placing a serious drain on the Unemployment Insurance fund. The Government has already added to the large deficit by borrowing money to meet the high demands of this fund. If unemployment does not drastically decrease, the Government will be required to borrow more and more to meet the ever-increasing demands. We cannot afford to continue to fuel a deficit which has already reached proportions never before known. Reducing unemployment would reduce the deficit and halt this trend which can only lead to permanent debt and ruin for Canada.

The Minister has predicted a deficit reduced from $31.6 billion this year to over $25 billion for the fiscal year 1986-87. It is certainly not a very optimistic outlook. Canada can no longer sustain an accumulated deficit which is expected to reach over $282 billion by March 31, 1987. Again, this is all based on the expected growth rate of 4.5 per cent being achieved.

Of special concern to me are the youth of our country. Over 30 per cent of our young people will be unemployed this year, a disastrous situation for the future of our great nation. Without the energy and new ideas of our young people, Canada has no future. As that energy stagnates, enthusiasm wanes and new ideas crumble into a feeling of frustration and anger, with Canada's future becoming bleaker and bleaker.

The future of Canada is in the youth of today, and they need all the encouragement that we can provide. However, the economics of youth unemployment are matched only by the devastating social and psychological effects of this constant struggle on hundreds of thousands of young people who are just plain giving up. Soon we will be faced with a massive group of young people with no spirit, drive, ambition or experience. We cannot continue to allow them to pay for the effects of a sluggish economy. We should be nurturing the minds and spirit of our young because they hold in their hands Canada's future. They need optimism to meet their dreams and ideals, and opportunities to allow them to utilize their initiative. We must be very careful not to stifle their natural willingness to produce. They, too, were hoping once again to be able to replace their dejection over the Government with faith and hope contained in measures in the budget. The Government has recognized the problem and budgeted $95 million for wage subsidies for employers who take on young workers on an internship basis to provide training.

Even the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has said that the youth employment situation was to reach a danger point this fall when new graduates would discover their job prospects were very scarce. Let us hope that this program will help to head off that very grave situation.

Let us consider what the Minister included in his budget which would supposedly bring about immediate employment. The new Special Recovery Capital Projects which are being announced faster than the notices can be printed are supposedly to be of high priority and of an urgent nature. However, the first of these projects will not get under way until next fall, six months from now. This is the Minister's response to the serious situation facing two million Canadians. Most of them cannot afford to sit around and wait until next fall for jobs.

• (1700)

In his speech, the Finance Minister indicated his support for incentives to the private sector to help it increase productivity and create long-term jobs. It is only by restoring consumer and investor confidence that Canada can once again begin to grow. Fortunately, the Finance Minister has taken heed of the many economists and the Opposition Members who have stated time and time again that the key to economic recovery is in the private sector. We now have a Finance Minister who is willing to put his faith and trust in the private sector.

However, his incentives for small business do fall short of achieving the stimulus needed to promote growth. He has, in effect, ignored the desperate financial state of many of our small businesses today. Businesses which are already on the verge of bankruptcy cannot go out and spend money they do not have on new equipment to get a tax credit. We have what I call a "spend now pay later budget". On the one hand there are incentives to stimulate the housing industry and provide employment. Fortunately we are already beginning to see the effects of that incentive since real estate is beginning to pick up appreciably. On the other hand, the Finance Minister will curb that stimulus by imposing a one per cent increase on the cost of construction materials.

We are also receiving a left handed stimulus through the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan where funds can be withdrawn from the plan to purchase items for the home without being subject to income tax, thereby stimulating the need for products and services, but next year we will see that stimulus curbed with the imposition of a one per cent increase in the federal sales tax.

We all know that revenues are desperately needed to meet the spending needs of the Government but I question the way with which this Government is collecting those revenues.

The best way to increase Government revenues is by putting people back to work, having them contribute to the public trough and stimulating the need for services and products through their increased purchasing power. Of course, the means of doing this is the most difficult task of all, but I believe there are many areas that have not been looked into with a view to realizing this goal. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), so adequately pointed out earlier, the tourism industry was sadly neglected and the farming community received an additional $100 million through the Farm Credit Corporation to finance farmers who are already in debt.

The Finance Minister's task is not easy and his budget can only succeed if the people of this country have trust and faith in their Government. A budget which was brought down in the manner that it was has destroyed that faith and trust and destroyed the confidence which Canadians were hoping to regain. A budget that had the possibility of doing so much for the confidence of Canadians lost it when it was brought down with the shuffling of figures to bail out a Finance Minister's reputation.

In conclusion, I want to read into the record a copy of a letter that had been addressed to the Minister of Finance. It was sent to me and I feel that it expresses very well the opinion of many Canadians. It says:

> It is 8:22 p.m. April 19/83 and it is in utter frustration and desperation that I write this letter to express my total humiliation at your disgusting performance of the past 24 hours. Very briefly put, you have leaked a budget on Monday evening and in Parliament, in front of the entire Canadian populace, told me that you 'were forced' to change certain figures to take care of your 'fiscal responsibility'. Just to fully insult me, you laughed at me while you heard the honourable (compared to you and your band of hoodlums) Opposition express their disgust at your actions.
> All this while, after doing nothing for any business community in this country except tax them more and more for Monique Bégin's social handouts, you hand me a $31 billion deficit budget, higher than world price oil costs, endless expansion of the bilingual Civil Service and day to day demonstration of the Liberal inability to operate in any but a cover-up mode.
>
> You and your Government are beyond words. You are living proof that absolute power corrupts absolutely.
>
> In total seriousness—

He signed his letter. His wife added a P.S. which is very indicative of the feelings across Canada. It reads:

> If my husband and I ran our household like you run our country, we would be out on the street in rags. The Liberal Party's complete arrogance in their attitude towards the people who support them through taxes, leaves me aghast. My only weapon is my vote and you can be sure I will use it.

I conclude with those comments which I do feel have been very indicative of the lack of trust, confidence and faith that the Canadian people have in their present Government.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. lady's speech with a great deal of interest. I found that her comments were very objective and thoughtful for the most part and, taking into account the necessary partisan attitude that must be taken in this place, tended to be very constructive.

However, the letter which she read from one of her constituents tended, in my view, not only to be rather inappropriate but undoubtedly motivated by philosophies that the hon. lady just does not share. By reading that letter is she attempting to indicate that she supports the comments and allegations that are made within that particular letter?

Mrs. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Minister's comments with respect to my remarks. This letter was sent to me but it was addressed to the Hon. Minister of Finance. Of course it would be interesting to learn of the response that he has given to my constituent.

While I may be very objective in my view of the measures contained in the budget, I do agree with many of the views contained in this letter, such as that the budget does miss some very important ways to bring about continued employment in Canada.

The letter is here, if the Hon. Minister has challenged its content and validity. If he would confer with the Hon. Minister of Finance, I am sure that he could get a copy of that letter from his files.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the question was whether the hon. lady agreed with the comments made in that letter. There are two areas in it which, in my view, she would want to reflect upon. One concerns the author's remarks which indicated that he considered the social security system in Canada as being "Bégin's handouts", if memory serves me correctly. The second area was with reference to the Government's misspending funds for bilingualism. Knowing the area from which the hon. lady comes, I trust that that may be a popular view. I was wondering if those were her views?

Mrs. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, the general thrust of this letter is certainly one with which I agree. The Hon. Minister brings up the matter of bilingualism. As he well knows, in the area of Leeds-Grenville that I represent, bilingualism has been a very volatile issue. It is an issue that I would not want to comment on at this particular time because it cannot be dealt with adequately in a space of a minute or two. It encompasses a great deal, not just with respect to bilingualism in the Public Service but to the whole aspect of unity within Canada, both of French and English Canadians. As I said, it cannot be commented on adequately in a couple of minutes' time.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be taking part in the debate on the Budget that was brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on April 19 of this year.

First of all, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Finance, for two reasons. My first reason is that before bringing down his Budget, the Minister arranged for consultations with various socio-economic partners across the country, during which he met with directors of financial institutions, heads of large corporations and small- and medium-sized businesses, and labour officials across Canada. Secondly, I wish to congratulate the Minister of Finance for having brought down a Budget that not only meets the needs and aspirations of all Canadians but also, and first and foremost, deals with our main problem here in Canada unemployment since the Minister has given us a Budget aimed at economic recovery and job creation.

Mr. Speaker, the Budget contains a special recovery program that provides $4.8 billion, over the next four years, to accelerate economic recovery and provide new capital facilities that will increase competitiveness and generate the new jobs

Canadians need. The program provides $2.4 billion in investment support to stimulate job creation through the private sector. First of all, it will allow businesses fuller use of the investment tax credit, which will cost more than $1 billion.

Second, the scope of investments qualifying for the 7-percent investment tax credit is being broadened to cover heavy construction equipment, thus providing about $125 million of tax support.

Third, a special investment tax credit will be refundable and will allow companies which otherwise would have been unable to claim the present tax credit to be refunded a portion thereof, which represents a cost of about $400 million.

Fourth, a special recovery share-purchase tax credit will reduce the cost of new equity issued before 1987 by firms undertaking investments after the budget and this will cost about $240 million.

Fifth, a $300 million special recovery investment fund will be used to provide additional assistance for economic development projects of national and regional importance.

Sixth, a special recovery export financing fund will provide $180 million to help Canadian exporters.

Mr. Speaker, this program also includes public investment projects worth $2.4 billion. About 100 public projects will be implemented throughout Canada, and last Friday, I joined my colleague, the Member for Verdun (Mr. Savard) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), in announcing a $40 million investment project for the Société du vieux port de Montréal, which will be used to build capital facilities and cycle paths and a pedestrian walk along this area. I feel that this investment will enhance tourism and create jobs, and I am sure that further announcements of this kind will be made in the Montreal area to help the people of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, as far as employment is concerned, with a more vigorous, more dynamic and more productive private sector, new employment opportunities will be created for Canadians. The Canadian Government is trying to create an economic climate that will promote and stimulate the creation of permanent and productive jobs. However, the Government is aware that it is also necessary to provide assistance to the million and a half Canadians who are unemployed but willing to work. In 1983-84, more than $1.5 million will be spent by the Government on direct job creation. This is the largest program of its kind ever introduced in Canada, and under this program, nearly $900 million more will be spent than last year. The Canadian Government has given serious consideration to the basic needs of Canadians who have been exposed to prolonged periods of unemployment. Last October, the NEED program was an initiative that was very successful, contrary to what our Progressive Conservative colleagues may have said, and the provincial governments have also provided financial support for this job creation effort. In Quebec, however, the PQ Government has refused to co-operate. Nevertheless, Quebecers will not lose out, because the Canadian Government and all the Liberal caucusses from Québec will see to it that these funds are distributed through the job creation programs of community organizations or through the private sector.

The Government of Canada has decided to provide $280 million more for the NEED program and an additional $150 million goes to the Special Employment Initiatives Program for increased spending on employment intensive projects under existing construction programs and so on. An increase of $100 million is approved for expenditures on job creation projects under the Unemployment Insurance Act, which allows laid-off workers to continue to receive UI benefits when doing voluntary work on community projects.

The Canadian Government is meeting the needs of Canadians, despite our present economic problems. The Liberal Government has kept its promise to help Canadians who need help most. Canadian young people are among the groups that will benefit most from the Lalonde Budget. The Canadian Government has recognized the need for a co-operative strategy for manpower training involving all governments, business and workers. The purpose of this new strategy is to help ease the difficult transition from school to work. That is why the Canadian Government has decided to commit an additional $280 million to meet the needs of young Canadians who have not been able to find jobs. A sum of $60 million will be added to the Canada Student Loans Program, raising total funding to $141 million. This year, some 185,000 students will benefit from the program.

● (1710)

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance did not forget Canadian families. The Liberal Government realizes that child care expenses can put a considerable burden on single-parent families. The child tax credit has therefore been increased in order to help families that need it most. At the present time, single parents and working mothers may deduct child-care expenses for which they have receipts, totalling $1,000 per child up to the age of 14. The Budget proposes to double that amount by raising the ceiling from $1,000 to $2,000 per child, to a maximum of $8,000 for a family. In addition, the new Budget has maintained the child tax credit. This year, it will be $343. The threshold of family income, below which the maximum credit will be paid, will be $26,330. Mr. Speaker, farmers and fishermen also stand to benefit from this budget. Although it may seem rather surprising that a Member from downtown Montreal should be referring to the benefits for farmers and fishermen, like all consumers I am well aware that by helping farmers we are helping consumers, because if the Government does not meet the needs of these people, we consumers in the urban areas would have to pay more for what our farmers and fishermen bring on the market.

In fact, farmers will derive benefits from the Minister of Finance's budget because an additional $100 million will be provided this year for special FCC loans to farmers in financial distress. Eligible recipients will be entitled to interest rebates of four percentage points for the first two years. A particular advantage to them will be the special provision allowing farming losses to be carried forward ten years rather than the seven years applying before. Farmers and fishermen will be benefitting from the same measures, and they will now have more time to make their operations commercially viable, before the period during which losses suffered during the last year of operation can be deducted expires.

Mr. Speaker, we must not forget small businesses. Hon. Members are aware that the small business sector is one of the most important industries in Quebec as far as economic activity is concerned, and some of the proposals made by the Minister of Finance are aimed at this sector. Small businesses have always been one of the most dynamic and creative elements in the Canadian private sector. The Canadian Government wanted to do something for them and allow them to take immediate advantage of all the proposals contained in this budget. With this in mind, a Special Recovery Refundable Investment Tax Credit of 40 per cent has been provided. The Government has also decided that they alone would be immediately eligible for the three-year carryback provision. Finally, there will be major changes in the terms of reference of the Federal Business Development Bank to enable it to play a more dynamic and supportive role in advising small businesses on their total financial needs and assisting them in meeting those needs. It is readily apparent that this budget is the result of intensive consultations between the Government and representatives from the private sector, labour, business and industry. Another very important area which affects every Canadian man and woman is housing. In his budget, the Minister of Finance has committed $335 million over the next 18 months to promote housing, create jobs and provide assistance to those of our fellow-citizens who are harder hit.

I am pleased that the Government has decided to allocate $30 million more to the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan. This increase will enable small contractors who were unable to make new housing starts during the winter to get the assistance they need and allow thousands of Canadians to buy a home. These new allocations will bring up to nearly $750 million the amounts invested by the Government in this program, which has already helped over 200,000 Canadian families to buy a home.

The Minister has also announced significant changes to the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan. These changes will encourage those who have invested in a RHOSP to use their savings to buy new homes, furnishings and appliances. The impetus already given to the housing sector will thus be maintained. Canadians will be encouraged to withdraw their savings from the bank and use that money to create jobs, promote housing starts and create a demand on the furniture and appliance market.

Last March, the annual rate of housing starts was 177,000. With the extension of the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan and the further incentives provided by the changes to the RHOSP's, we are confident that the level of 150,000 housing starts forecast for 1983 will be exceeded.

Another very important program, Mr. Speaker, is the Canadian Home Renovation Plan, which provides grants of up to $3,000 to people wishing to renovate their homes and improve their housing conditions, but which is also very effective in creating jobs. Indeed, $120 million of extra funding were announced by the Minister of Finance, bringing total new investments to $480 million. This will create 20,000 new jobs, and the average income of families benefiting from the program ranges from $20,000 to $24,000. Moreover, an additional amount of $40 million was added to the very important Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. The RRAP is helping low income families maintain their homes in adequate health and safety conditions. Certainly all Members here recognize the importance of that program and will welcome as I do the extra $40 million to be expended over the next two years. In addition to creating jobs, the RRAP program helps low income families improve their homes and maintain safety standards.

There is another important aspect for low and medium income people, those I call LMIP, just like small and medium-sized businesses are referred to as SMB. The Minister of Finance has agreed to add 2,500 units to the social housing program, which will bring the total target to 25,000 units all across Canada. This represents a commitment of some $125 million to be spread out over the duration of those residential projects.

● (1720)

Mr. Speaker, before I conclude, I would like to remind you and Hon. Members of what the Canadian Government has done in the area of housing in Quebec. We seldom can rely on the PQ Government to show what the Government of Canada is investing or doing in Quebec, so I think it is important today to remind all of our fellow-citizens of what the Canadian Government is doing in the area of housing. First, since the inception of the Canadian Home Renovation Plan, which provides for individual grants of up to $3,000 for house renovation, that program has been available to citizens who own a single-family dwelling or what we call a duplex. I can state that in recent days, further to the representations made by my caucus colleagues from the Montreal area where the so-called triplex and quadriplex buildings are popular, I have asked the Minister and the management of the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation whether the program could not be amended in order that a larger number of people may use the program. I can state that since its inception, the program has helped well over 14,000 families for a total expenditure of $24,332,000.

I should mention another very important program, intended for the renovation and improvement of housing throughout Quebec, namely the RRAP program, involving as it does 13,294 families for a total of $42 million in the Province of Quebec alone. Those two programs have been set up to improve housing conditions and create jobs.

I also wish to point out another really efficient program accepted by Canadians, by Quebecers generally, that is the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan. Indeed, since its inception, 45,000 families have taken advantage of the program thanks to $135 million in grants earmarked for Quebec.

An Hon. Member, that is my colleague from Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne) has pointed out that the Loginove Program in Quebec seems to be effective. I wish to say to my colleague that under the Canada Home Ownership Stimulation Plan, 30,025 new housing units have been financed. Recently I read a report where with reference to a statement made by a spokesman of C.N.T.U. Construction, it was pointed out that the Loginove Program had been a fiasco since the construction of 50,000 units had been expected under that program and unfortunately there had been only 3,800 units. If we compare those 3,800 units with the 3,000 financed by the federal Government I think that the latter can be proud of having stimulated the recovery of the building industry in Quebec.

Another major program is the program for subsidized housing which is being implemented under Section 56(1) and which can be either public, that is, administrated by non profit organizations, or private, that is, administered by co-operative organizations. Part of subsidized housing becomes a provincial responsibility.

In 1982, some 6,807 housing units were built in the province of Quebec, some 3,456 of which were turned over to the Government to be used for low cost lodging or shelter. Again, unfortunately, we could not rely on our PQ colleagues, for either through dishonesty or ignorance, they never acknowledge the fact that these funds are coming from the Canadian Government. Also, there is the home building program which provided the province of Quebec with 1,000 new units at a cost of $7 million.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, and considering that my time is almost expired, I should like to say that over $245 million were spent by the Canadian Government on construction I suggest, in view of the additional funds which the Minister of Finance has provided in 1983, that there is evidence of recovery in the housing industry and better housing prospects in Canada, as a result of the Canadian Government's policies.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) has the floor.

Mr. Blais: I wonder if the Hon. Member could advise the House of the situation in the building industry in Montreal and whether he is aware of the recent increase in the number of new starts in his own region as a result of this Government's policies in the area of residential housing.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying a moment ago, statistics show that the $3,000 grant to people buying a house has certainly resulted in a significant rise in the number of housing starts in the province of Quebec. There is also collaboration between the Canadian Government and the municipalities. As an example, the City of Montreal has also established a program of grants within the framework of a project calling for the construction of 20,000 dwellings and called—and as the minister responsible for Housing said earlier, there have been meetings with representatives of the City of Montreal in order to establish some coordination in the planning for house building and renovation. Just last Friday, I had the pleasure of meeting with the heads of the construction section of the FTQ and with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) in order to consider another possibility in the area of house building in Quebec—although there was a salary increase—a possibility which would help some elements of the population, some people who are experiencing difficulties in the renovation sector. I am convinced that the meeting was quite productive and will have positive results.

I gave some figures a few moments ago. If we draw a comparison with the Corvée habitation program under which 11 per cent financing over three years was then available, only 3,800 units were built under that program, whereas Quebec recorded 30,000 housing starts mainly because of the $3,000 grant per unit and thanks to the Federal Government. I think that all building associations spokesmen will agree with that. But there is another aspect which people have a tendency to forget, namely our housing rehabilitation programs which are not accounted for under housing starts. It is therefore important to recall that when we talk about housing starts we should keep in mind that a good many contractors in the home rehabilitation field create jobs which are not reflected in statistics on housing starts.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, in my riding as well people are very interested in housing. I come from a suburban area just west of the City of Toronto. The housing industry is one of our major employers. I must say, as a quick comment, that the $3,000 grant, together with the lower interest rates last year, gave an enormous boost to the housing industry in Mississauga. It is also important to note at this stage that the continuing commitment this Government has to social housing has been very well received in Mississauga. We have an active co-operative movement, a good non-profit agency for the city and a good private non-profit organization. They take advantage of the social housing units that we have included, and the 2,500 extra were very welcome.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us about some of the mechanics of the RHOSP Program for new home purchasers? Some people in my riding are very interested. On the weekend I received a complaint that it might take a month or two for this program to be set up and operated. Does the Parliamentary Secretary know when the Program will come into effect and how quickly people can start to take advantage of it?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: In answer to the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, I think he is right when he suggests that the Canadian Government has been active on the social housing market, and the Minister of Finance did add 2,500 units to meet the demand in that area.

As to the new RHOSP Program, I know that there were some meetings recently to open up lines of communications with various circles and to keep people informed. I feel confident that in the near future all Hon. Members and Canadians generally will be made aware of the application procedures for this program so that people will be able to benefit as early as possible from the grants the Government made available to home buyers.

Another very significant initiative is the Home Ownership Program for Canadians which is designed to spur the construction industry and under which loan insurance is available. Last year, more than 24,000 Quebec families took out loan insurance through the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation program. Some 24,000 families were able to buy a home and guaranteed loans amounted to over $7 million.

That is just another program which deserves mention because it is available throughout Canada and has given encouraging results, not to mention the $3,000 grants and the home rehabilitation projects. In that respect, I think we can be proud of those programs, as well as of our staff and of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials who play a major role and keep people well informed.

[English]

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I always find it interesting to listen to Members opposite and Government Ministers talk about what the Government has done or what their program has been. They take the credit and overlook the fact that if it was not for the taxpayer of Canada, who pays the taxes and who pays the interest on the tremendous amount of debt that this Government has incurred over the years, these programs would not be available. Therefore, the thanks should go to the taxpayers of Canada rather than to this Government.

I listened with interest on Tuesday, April 19, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) presented his budget in the House. It was interesting to hear him say that much will depend on the collective behaviour of Canadians and on the response of the private sector to the measures that he was proposing in his budget. It has taken the Government about 15 years to understand the importance of the private sector as it relates to the economy of our country.

One of the largest parts of the private sector, the free enterprise sector in Canada, is the farming community. When I came into the House to listen to the Minister present his budget, I anticipated there would be something of substance in it with respect to the farming population. Quite frankly, I was disappointed because it was not until the Minister reached page 9 of his budget that the question of farming was raised, and then it was very disappointing. Those things that Members on this side of the House and the farming community in general had hoped would be in the budget just were not there.

There were two items, basically. One is referred to on page 9. It refers to the provision which allows farming losses to be carried forward ten years rather than the seven years applicable to other businesses. If you are not making any profit and there is no profit in sight in the immediate future, the fact that you can carry forward your losses for a period of ten years is of little satisfaction to those in financial difficulty.

The second item in the budget on page 10 refers to an additional $100 million which would be made available to the special Farm Credit Corporation loans to help farmers in financial distress. That is important. When I listened to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) say how great the budget was with respect to the farming population, I wondered what budget he was referring to. Then I realized that he really does not represent a farming area; he represents an area in the City of Montreal, and I suspect that his knowledge of farming and of the problems that farmers and the farming community are facing today is very limited.

That the Minister of Finance has ignored agriculture in this budget is not surprising or unexpected. Over the years, agriculture has not had a high priority with the Government. This sector of our economy has been ignored by the Government despite the fact that agriculture is the backbone of our country. For example, grain sales are one of the largest factors with respect to our balance of payments.

Without a healthy agricultural economy, we cannot expect to have a healthy economy throughout the country. When agriculture is in the doldrums and things are tight in the agricultural economy, machinery manufacturers and dealers throughout the country suffer, the manufacturers of cars and trucks suffer, those in the retail trade suffer—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Fertilizer.

Mr. Neil: Fertilizer, as my hon. friend has said, and those in the small business area—

Mr. Blais: He is always talking about fertilizer.

Mr. Neil: The Hon. Member on the other side has said that my colleague is always talking about fertilizer. I would suggest to him that there is a great deal of fertilizer on the Government side and it is not a very productive type of fertilizer.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it clear that the agricultural community does not expect handouts. It is a free enterprise system, and all it asks is the opportunity to produce, to sell and to make a reasonable profit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Neil: Increased production in the agricultural area requires research and development. What has happened in agricultural research and development over the last ten or fifteen years? The portion of the budget dedicated to agricultural research and development has increased at a rate of approximately 1 per cent per year. In other words, it has fallen behind the rate of inflation in the country over this period of time.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) does not seem to be interested in research and development. Some $9 million has been available from the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund since 1972, money that belonged to the farmers, and an attempt was made to persuade the Minister and the Government, first, to pay interest on that money because it was in a non-interest-bearing account and, second, to turn that money over for research and development. I submitted a Private Members' Bill in the House which was referred to committee. Subsequently, the agricultural groups in the West created an association for research and development, yet it took the Minister over two years to release the funds. He said, "I do not know how we can do it. It is complicated. I would like to give you the money, but," he said, "Treasury Board says that it does not know how to do it." It was finally done two or three weeks ago. I do not know how he did it, but it was a simple process. If he had problems, all he would have to do is bring a simple Bill into the House repealing the old Prairie Farm Assistance Act and turn the money over to the research group. But he did not understand that.

Today the farmer is faced with a cost-price freeze. Grain prices are lower than they have been for many years. There have been increasing input costs year after year, not only with respect to farm machinery, fertilizer and fuel oil, but everything the farmer buys has gone up in price. Yet the price of grain has gone down. It is becoming increasingly harder for the farmer to carry on.

One of the biggest features of input costs to many farmers has been interest costs, which in many cases have been as high as 25 per cent. Even the Farm Credit Corporation, a body that was set up to enable farmers to borrow on relatively easy terms, was charging interest rates in excess of 16 per cent. Presently that rate is down, of course, to 12.125 per cent. On the other hand, farmers who borrowed money from the Farm Credit Corporation at those high interest rates are locked into them for ten, 15 and even 20 years.

Doing a quick calculation, Mr. Speaker, it means that on an acre of land at a purchase price of $1,000 an acre with an interest rate of 12.125 per cent the interest per year is $121.25. The farmer will not receive $5 a bushel for his wheat this year, but if you consider the price of wheat as being $5 a bushel, he would require a yield of 25 bushels to the acre to pay the interest alone on the purchase price of that acre of land. The farmer would have to farm his land on a continuous crop basis in order to generate enough money on an annual basis. Most farmers operate on a two-year crop rotation cycle. They summerfallow half and they crop half. In other words, only half of the farmer's land is producing grain in any one year. If this is the case, then you must double the yield on that land. At a 12.125 per cent interest rate on land for $1,000 an acre, a farmer would have to produce 48 bushels per acre just to pay the interest. He would not be paying anything on the principal, he would not be covering his fuel costs, his fertilizer costs or the other input costs.

Interest rates have been a concern of our Party for many years. Over the years, we have put forth proposals to the Government and to the Farm Credit Corporation that would see the Farm Credit Corporation acquire money at very reasonable rates so it could loan it to the farmer at probably half the rate being charged at the present time. We recommended the agri-bond program whereby an individual in the farming area or a retired farmer could lend money to the Farm Credit Corporation at a low interest rate on the basis that the interest that he received would not be taxable, or at least would be taxable at a lower rate than normal. We also recommended a capital gains investment program whereby a retired or retiring farmer would invest the capital gains portion of the selling price of his land with the Farm Credit Corporation at a low interest rate for a period of five years and the capital gains tax would be waived. Such programs would eliminate the need for the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow offshore. This is precisely what it did. On February 21, 1983 the Minister of Agriculture, through the Farm Credit Corporation, made this announcement, and I quote him as follows:

● (1750)

Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan today announced that Farm Credit Corporation Canada has undertaken its first venture in the international capital markets.

FCC has issued $50 million worth of notes at 12⅛ per cent due March 31, 1993. The notes are non-callable prior to maturity and have been listed on the Luxembourg Stock Exchange.

The Farm Credit Corporation has tied itself to 12⅛ per cent for ten years. The Government has refused to consider the recommendation from this side of the House for the agri-bond program or the capital gains investment program. This means that the Government is prepared to subsidize offshore lenders, probably for a period of ten years, but is not prepared to consider cheap money from a source where it is readily available.

It is interesting that before the budget came down the Minister of Agriculture and the Manager of the Farm Credit Corporation appeared before the Agriculture Committee and were questioned with respect to the agri-bond and the capital gains investment programs. We asked if there was any possibility that these programs, a combination of them or some other relief, would be dealt with in the budget. While they said they were not privy to the budget, they indicated that they had made presentations to the Minister of Finance with respect to these programs and were optimistic that something would be in the budget to enable the Farm Credit Corporation to obtain funds within this country at a low rate of interest, in this way enabling it to service the farming population. It must have been a great disappointment to them when they listened to the budget speech on April 19 and learned that there was nothing in it with respect to these programs. It would appear to me that the Government is more interested in subsidizing foreign lenders than it is in doing a proper job for the farming community.

I spoke earlier about the cost-price squeeze with respect to farmers and about low grain prices. A short time ago the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board announced a reduction in the initial price over the previous year. As well, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) made an announcement which indicated that the cost of transporting grain from western Canada to the shipping points would double in three years and would increase five times by the year 1990. If the Government continues in power and continues to ignore the agricultural community it will do a great deal of harm to those people who are the backbone of the country.

I hope that the Minister and Members of the Government will give some thought to what can be done to help the agricultural community. I assume that this Session of Parliament will end shortly and that we will have a Speech from the Throne in the fall. I hope that by that time the Government will have listened to some of the advice and the pleas offered by Members on this side on behalf of the farmers.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. gentleman. In view of the fact that he claims the Government is not interested in agriculture, when it introduced one of the most important initiatives in this House relative to agriculture, why did his Party systematically oppose passage of that measure? I speak of the Canagrex Bill which has been systematically opposed by the Official Opposition. Could he explain why that Party is opposing that very, very progressive piece of legislation?

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister's knowledge of agriculture and farming is limited. If he had read the debates or the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture when we dealt with Canagrex, he would understand our concerns. He would also understand there are few if any agricultural organizations left which support Canagrex in the form in which it was presented to the House.

A short time ago the Minister of Agriculture cited the Canadian Federation of Agriculture as an example of a national organization that was behind him 100 per cent with respect to Canagrex. If he had read the news reports he would have noted that the support was qualified. It did not support the Bill in the form it now takes.

I could stand here for an hour and tell the Minister why we do not support Canagrex, Mr. Speaker, but it is all on the record.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, if that is the case then why is it that on another measure—although it is a transportation matter it has a great deal of implication for the agriculture industry—which was introduced by the Government for the improvement of the transportation system and which would save agriculture—the Tory Party has not supported the Government in the handling of the Crow? Why does it not insist that the Crow be dealt with expeditioulsy so that the legislation can be in place in time for the next major grain season starting in August of this year?

Mr. Neil: That is an interesting question and an interesting observation by the Minister. The legislation he refers to is not before the House. All we have are statements the Minister of Transport made to us three months ago which were followed by a Government advertising campaign worth almost $1 million, to try to sell the program. The advertising in the Province of Quebec said one thing and the advertising in western Canada said entirely the opposite.

How does the Minister expect the Opposition to support any program until it knows what is in it? We do not know. It is rumoured that what was announced two or three months ago is going to be entirely different from what he will bring before the House, if he ever does.

• (1800)

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has agreed by his comments that indeed Canagrex is a major agricultural issue which this Government has introduced. The hon. gentleman has agreed, in dealing with the Crow issue, that it is a major initiative that this Government has introduced which impacts on agriculture. How can the hon. gentleman then honestly say, having recognized that we have introduced major agricultural issues and having recognized the initiatives which we have been instrumental in bringing forward, that this Government does not care about agriculture?

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, the Crow rate changes as proposed by the Minister of Transport have not been introduced in the House. The Minister is reading into my answer his own conception from his Liberal mind. He makes his own decisions and tries to twist things around to make them agree with what he thinks.

As far as Canagrex is concerned, had the Minister of Agriculture listened and accepted the amendments which we proposed, that legislation could have been passed a long time ago. However, the Minister of Agriculture has been so stubborn that he will not listen to the Opposition Members and accept any amendments.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS—ADMINISTRATION COSTS. THE CONSTITUTION—COST OF PATRIATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, on November 17, 1982 I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) what the total cost was going to be for administering the Charter of Rights and repatriating the Constitution. The Minister of Justice would not give us the cost. I followed up with a question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) as to whether he had conducted a cost-benefit analysis in these instances. Again, I did not receive an answer. Canadians have a right to answers regarding how their tax dollars are being spent, and for what reasons. They also have a right to know what, if any benefits Government expenditures will give them.

The Auditor General has said that the Government has lost control of the public purse. The Auditor General has also reported sloppy accounting practices in the Government. The estimated deficit for the fiscal year 1983-84 was $29 billion. But, with the new budget, the Liberal Government has once again broken its record. The projected deficit is now $31.3 billion. Negligence on the part of the Government has given rise to various inefficient and costly Government policies. Cost-effectiveness is not a consideration.

On November 9, 1976 I cautioned the House that the Government should investigate Canadair expenditures. I also said the Government should table all documents regarding Canadair aircraft and how many tax dollars are committed to Canadair.

On December 2, 1976 I warned the Government again of Canadair's disaster course. I said the Government should come clean and state its plans and expectations for Canadair and that the Government should start revealing true information about Canadair's financial position.

On February 24, 1977 I moved that the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce be instructed to appoint an independent committee to investigate the structural problems Canadair was then experiencing with production of new aircraft.

Here I am again, seven years later, reiterating my warning. Once again, the Government is bailing out Canadair, another Crown Corporation, which is, and has been, on a disaster course. Last fall Canadair's financial assets were turned over to another Government-owned company, the Canada Development Investment Corporation. Since that time a financial report has been prepared but the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has refused to make it public. The Prime Minister has told Canadians that "We would be on the road to financial disaster if nothing was done to bring spending under control". In spite of these comments, the Liberal Government is allowing further funding of this Crown Corporation which has consistently mismanaged its finances. We now learn that Canadair is planning to lay off 570 people by mid-July. The taxpayers' bill to bail out Canadair will amount to $2.3 billion.

The Liberal Government has lost control of spending. The taxpayer does not know where his tax dollars are going. The Liberal Government's lack of accountability and lack of cost-benefit analysis has been reported time and time again by the Auditor General. In 1962, there were only 28 Crown Corporations, controlling $8.4 billion in assets. Today there are over 300 Crown corporations controlling $67 billion in assets. Revenues of Crown corporations in the most recent fiscal year were $31.9 billion and expenses were $33.6 billion.

• (1805)

In 1982, the Auditor General reported the following concerning Crown corporations:

> Most corporations are virtually known even to the best informed members of the tax paying public. Yet . . . they represent a hole in the taxpayer's pocket . . . a consistent negative return on investment.

There are no adequate provisions for Parliament to review the budgets of over 300 corporations in which the Canadian public has an interest.

The next excerpt from the Auditor General's report of 1982 is a true representation of what is occurring in Canadair, innumerable other corporations and, no doubt, in many federal Government departments and agencies:

> Without public exposure, the temptation is overwhelming to send good money after bad in the hope of reversing the situation, no matter how hopeless the situation has become—

The Progressive Conservative Government wanted tighter control over Crown corporations by Government. We started introducing legislation to act upon the recommendations along these lines from the Lambert Commission, the Auditor General and the Public Accounts Committee. As we were defeated, we could not implement the legislation.

The Government owned Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation wasted more than $20 million in public funds developing a computer system which was technically impossible to use.

On April 26, 1982, I informed the House that the National Energy Program drove investment out of the country, which resulted in a loss of approximately 60,000 jobs across Canada. The Liberal Government could not possibly have been considering cost effectiveness when implementing this program.

As the House is aware, the Liberal Government and the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) made public their intention to make Canada a French state. Cost benefit analysis has received absolutely no consideration in this regard, as demonstrated by the Secretary of State in the following excerpt from his speech:

> Francophone rights cannot be bought, sold, substracted from, divided or multiplied in terms of dollars and cents in the budgets of a troubled economy, and that will apply, I promise you, for as long as I am Secretary of State of Canada. If I have to cut back some programs—and I've already done so—there is one area in which I have no intention of using the scissors: the advancement of Francophone rights in Canada. Another thing that needs to be said: as we say in French, "like it or not", it is going to take a little more money—

There has been no White Paper or Green Paper on the proposal to make Canada a French state, and no permission from the Canadian people. In the future, all Government programs should have a cost benefit analysis done before being implemented.

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I intend to address the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) in a supplementary question of November 17. I do not intend to address the various spurious allegations which he has made with regard to numerous topics, from Francophone rights to Crown corporation policy, from the Auditor General's Report to Canadair, et cetera. I will try to keep my response relevant to his original question which related to spending on the Constitution.

A number of events and activities were immediately associated—

Mr. Mitges: Author.

Mr. Lang: —with the proclamation of the Constitution Act on April 17, 1982. Parliamentary authorization for supplementary spending in the amount of $1.8 million has been approved by Parliament to offset the cost of these, including the cost of the visit of Her Majesty The Queen. The $1.8 million also provided for costs incurred by the Canada Broadcasting Corporation in covering the proclamation ceremony and in mounting the gala concert which celebrated the proclamation. It also provided for costs incurred by the National Arts Centre, the Department of National Defence, Public Works Canada, Parliament itself, the Prime Minister's office and the Conference Centre. These funds voted to the Secretary of State of Canada are to reimburse the Departments and agencies I have just noted.

● (1810)

In addition to funding the visit of the Queen, the Secretary of State of Canada also funded various official receptions, lunches and dinners, including the dinner for young achievers hosted by the Prime Minister; travel and living expenses of senior officials from Britain who were our guests; travelling expenses of guests invited to the dinner for young achievers; expenses of the choirs from Calgary and Moncton which entertained during the ceremonies and the printing of programs, menus and invitations.

These items are only those for which the Government has obtained supplementary authorization from Parliament. Additional expenditures were incurred by several departments and agencies, including the RCMP, National Defence and the Canadian Unity Information Office which were covered out of appropriations voted by Parliament in relation to Main Estimates for 1982-83.

All of this relates, of course, only to the proclamation itself. Patriation has taken time and the process goes back at least a decade. Over the last ten years or so a series of federal-provincial conferences have been held in relation to the constitutional question. The last of these prior to the proclamation resulted in expenditures by the Canadian Intergovernmental Conference Secretariat of about $113,000. The constitutional reviews leading up to patriation involved some costs, mostly in the form of legal fees for lawyers consulted on the significant issues involved. About $1 million has been spent by Justice Canada on legal costs over recent years.

As the Hon. Member himself has pointed out, the effects of patriation will also be felt into the future. Would one wish or expect otherwise? The Department of Justice will be spending $3.3 million in 1982-83 in order to review its statutes and regulations in relation to the Charter of Rights. Undoubtedly, additional costs will emerge, perhaps within Justice, perhaps within the courts themselves, or perhaps elsewhere.

FISHERIES—NEGOTIATION OF NORTH PACIFIC SALMON FISHING AGREEMENT—PROTECTION OF CHINOOK AND COHO SPECIES. (B) DANGERS ARISING FROM OVER-FISHING

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker. I notice that the Member from the Government side who will presumably be the spokesman on behalf of the government for the fisheries question is the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lang). He knows even less about fisheries than the man who answered the original question which I am debating today.

I wanted to ask the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) a question on April 27. I waited for some time to do so. I eventually had to direct the question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), who knows a little bit about international relations but not very much about fisheries. Therefore I feel I am being slighted. The parliamentary process is not working properly when we cannot get someone who knows about fisheries to answer questions about fisheries.

It was known that my questions today would be about negotiations of the North Pacific Salmon fisheries. These questions are quite detailed. The questions I asked were about the regulations related to the fishing season that is now in process and the dangers of the absence of an agreement between Canada and the United States. That question was originally designated for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He was not in the House. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and Deputy Prime Minister answered the question, but he obviously was not listening to it. He was talking about the treaty. I knew that the treaty had not been ratified. Everyone on the West Coast knows that the treaty has not been ratified. He dealt with my first question, which was purely domestic, by telling me that the agreement had not been ratified between Canada and the United States. I knew that.

● (1815)

My second question related to the international agreement in the absence of ratification. However, I find it absolutely intolerable that I should be expected to accept a reply from a Minister who is landlocked in the middle of Ontario, knows nothing about West Coast fisheries, but gives me a prepared statement in answer to my question. Therefore, I feel I am entitled to withdraw from this particular operation today, the late show or whatever it is called now, be allowed to rise again soon and have someone who knows what he is talking about answer the question I tried to ask on April 27, as reported at page 24901 of Hansard. I do not feel there is any point in the world listening to any reply that has been written for the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. McDermid: He does not know what he is reading either.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is not in a position, under the Standing Orders, to prohibit a reply by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lang). The Parliamentary Secretary may choose to try to assist the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) with a later reference, and as he suggested, I am really not empowered to recognize points of order or questions of privilege during the adjournment motion. I shall recognize the Parliamentary Secretary and we shall have to take it from there.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Without preventing me from raising the question again, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am not able to assure the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) that he will have an opportunity to raise this question again in any way other than in the ordinary course of events. I think his points have been understood. It is not up to the Chair to rule on whether or not this question for debate ought to be made the subject of another question to be heard earlier than those of other Hon. Members.

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) is not satisfied with the answer even before he has heard it. The Department has taken the time to investigate and has come up with a response to the questions he has asked. I understand the purpose of the late show is to respond to a question in more detail when an Hon. Member is not satisfied with a first response. I will give him the response that has been prepared by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

The draft Pacific salmon treaty between Canada and the United States was initiated in its present form by the two countries' negotiators on February 1, 1983.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I know.

Mr. Lang: The negotiators submitted the text to the two Governments with the recommendation that they approve the drafts and take action to implement the treaty's provisions beginning in 1983.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That I know too.

Mr. Lang: The treaty itself contains fishery management annexes which set out how the two countries should manage their intercepting salmon fisheries in 1983.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Exactly.

Mr. Lang: However, it quickly became evident that there was a great deal of opposition to the draft treaty in the State of Alaska.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): What about the fish?

Mr. Lang: The new Alaskan governor responded to this discontent by establishing a three-man task force to advise him on to whether or not Alaska should support the treaty. The task force reported negatively, and the Alaska governor informer the U.S. Secretary of State on March 28, 1983 that there were six areas in the treaty which required, in his words, renegotiation.

In the meantime, the Governors of the States of Washington, Oregon and Idaho—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): What about the regulations?

Mr. Lang: —all of which have a key interest in the treaty, came out with strong public support for it. The support by the Governor of Washington overrode considerable opposition in that state from fishing interests which felt they would be adversely affected by the treaty's provisions.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): None of this is new.

Mr. Lang: Despite this support, the United States has indicated its desire to see changes to the treaty in a number of areas, most of which correspond to the areas of concern identified by the Governor of Alaska.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Meanwhile the fisheries will be destroyed.

Mr. Lang: Canada indicated in early March that if the U.S.A. could not or would not implement the Treaty's terms on a provisional basis in 1983, nor would Canada. Therefore, on April 27, 1983, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans announced fishing plans for 1983 that are not entirely consistent with the treaty. This action was taken after careful consideration and discussion with the industry advisers who had served as members of the Canadian negotiating team. Many of these advisers have been part of the delegation since negotiations began in 1970.

Canada's action in not implementing the treaty could have significant effects on the conservation of chinook salmon in particular.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Exactly.

Mr. Lang: Unless a treaty can be put in place, Canadian catches of salmon bound for the U.S.A. are likely to increase, and our catches of our own Fraser River sockeye and pink salmon will far outweigh expectations in the U.S.A., which normally shares that harvest inside Juan de Fuca Strait.

Canada remains hopeful that accommodation can be reached, but the United States cannot expect Canada to accept unbalanced changes to a treaty which took much effort to negotiate and demanded many compromises.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): But meanwhile?

Mr. Lang: It is clear that the treaty would be in everyone's interest and would lay the groundwork for significant benefits to be gained by the fishermen of both countries in the future.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): No question.

Mr. Lang: And it is the only route which will allow us to prevent the kind of misunderstandings that have guided the opinions of Alaskan fishermen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There was a third question under the adjournment motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr.

Friesen). That Hon. Member is not present and I would presume that his question will be placed back on the list in the normal course of events.

That being the case, I do now adjourn the House until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 6.21 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Monday, May 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair should inform Hon. Members that when the debate was adjourned yesterday there were six minutes left in the period allotted for questions, comments and answers following the speech by the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). Therefore I should inquire at this time whether there are any further questions or comments before recognizing another Hon. Member.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). The Hon. Member has had extensive experience in banking. He carries a law degree and is also a farmer. It is very thrilling to see the emphasis which the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw puts on farming. I enjoyed his remarks very much indeed but the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw did not have time to deal with the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. Does he have any suggestions as to how we can make the Western Grain Stabilization Fund a little more palatable to the western Members?

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, at the present time the Western Grain Stabilization Fund pay-out is based on a five-year average. It does not appear there will be a pay-out this year. The farmers in the west are suffering from financial difficulties because of low grain prices and high input costs. If the Government were prepared to bring in an amendment to the Act which would base a pay-out on a three-year average rather than a five-year average, there would probably be a payment of $150 million this year which would be quite an injection of money into the economy of western Canada. This would not only help the farmers but the machinery dealers and the whole economy of western Canada.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I do not have a further question for the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw but because of his extensive knowledge of agricultural matters I would like his comment. At the present time many farmers in the Province of Alberta, I suppose all through western Canada and perhaps right across Canada, are having such a difficult time on the land that they are taking other jobs to keep their farms viable and ongoing. When a farmer works out he puts himself in a position under the Income Tax Act where he can claim only a $5,000 loss. Does the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw have any suggestions with regard to the Income Tax section?

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that many of the farmers who are taking extra jobs are doing so because they are having difficulty meeting their financial commitments. It would require just a simple amendment to the Income Tax Act to enable farmers to benefit from the write-offs of their usual expenses in farming. I can understand the situation of hobby farmers not being entitled to claim their full deduction of expenses in their farming operations, but certainly where a bona fide farmer is doing his utmost to raise money to keep his farming operation going, the Government, I think, is obligated to bring in the necessary amendment to enable him to write off his normal expenses.

• (1110)

Mr. Bloomfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member is not in his seat; therefore I cannot recognize him.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a privilege to rise today to express my support, optimism and enthusiasm for the budget which was presented in the House by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). The budget offers strong medicine, not only to deal with the acute problem of unemployment today, but also with the chronic problem of slow productivity growth that Canada has experienced over the past decade.

Technology development is central to both these issues. I am confident that the proposals I present today for a technology policy for Canada will restore our ability to confront the demands of the 1990s with a healthy, productive and vigorous economy. I am pleased that the budget has dedicated over $700 million for technology development in the next two years. Never in the history of the country has such an effort been made to enhance the Canadian technology base.

Technology is changing many dimensions of our lives at an unprecedented pace. Communications, automation, new materials and consumer electronics are all having a profound effect on our livelihoods and on our view of the world. Some of these changes we welcome; some we resist. But either way they represent a force that we cannot ignore.

[Translation]

Technological innovation in the work place may create new jobs and new wealth, but it may also eliminate existing jobs. This Government is determined to show leadership in supporting the development of new technology that will be to Canada's best advantage. We are also determined to have all Canadians share in the benefits that new technologies will bring. Changes are always upsetting and can often be painful. On the other hand, we must realize that we have no choice. We must keep pace with developments and change when the world changes. If we want to continue to enjoy the high standard of living we have today, we must be ready for the opportunities tomorrow will bring. Canada is not the only country that is faced with this climate of uncertainty.

[English]

At the Economic Summit held last June in Versailles, this issue was of such priority that a special working group was established to address the world-wide concern about technological change and development. The group reached a consensus on many issues, especially on the awareness of the profound effects of technological change on all nations. Its final report emphasized the theme that technology, while not a panacea for our economic ills, is a powerful instrument which can forge a better future for us and for our children.

Any period of transition such as the one we are now experiencing through technological change is exacting and stressful. The working group emphasized the need for a special program to promote the flexibility, adaptability and mobility of labour. Its report is optimistic that technological innovation will build the jobs of tomorrow. Canada has been quick to respond to this challenge, and, over the past few months we have been examining how a technology policy can best work for us. We have had to take a hard look at the nature of technology itself and to take an equally hard look at how technology interacts with our Government and with our economy.

Technology is all-pervasive. It touches each and every aspect of our lives. Any policy that addresses technology development must recognize this. To be fully effective, a technology policy for Canada has to act with and through economic, fiscal and industrial policies. Technological advances give the lifeblood to our manufacturing and resource industries, but a technology policy also has to influence, and be influenced by, our social policies. It has a profound effect on employment, our health, our environment and even our general lifestyles.

Nor can technology policy be considered in isolation from science policy. The basic research fundamental to scientific progress has often provided the inspirational source for remarkable leaps in technological development. The time has passed when we can comfortably address each of these areas separately. If we are to compete in this increasingly competitive world, and still maintain our standing of living, we must have a forum that can address technology development as an integrated policy with separate but synergistic components.

Because, as I said, science policy and technology are all-pervasive and because at the federal level science and technology range across programs in all major Departments—Communications, Environment, Agriculture, Energy, Fisheries, Health and Welfare, National Research Council, to name a few—I am pleased to report that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has established a special subcommittee of Cabinet on technology development which will be dedicated to achieving the integration of policy elements and to advancing technology development in all sectors. Each Minister of the subcommittee has the authority, the resources and the influence to bring about the required changes through creating new programs or through adapting existing ones to specific policy areas. Each Minister contributes a unique and essential point of view to the continuing development of a technology policy for Canada.

The first task of the subcommittee has been to confirm our policy direction for technology development in Canada. This has been done. Our objectives are set. Indeed, some of these objectives have already been translated into action in the budget. We have also, however, established a policy framework which will maintain the budget momentum, guide our progress and concentrate our energies on long-term objectives. It is this technology policy which I would like to present to my colleagues in the House of Commons today.

The first objective of the technology policy is to strengthen the Canadian economy through the creation, application and diffusion of state of the art technologies. Second, we intend to manage the process of technological development so that Canadians are aware both of the opportunities and the problems that may arise. Well-informed Canadians will make the right choices for themselves and for this country. Third, we must ensure that the benefits of technology development are shared equitably among all Canadians in every region. Last, but by no means least, we must encourage a social climate that places a premium on scientific and technological excellence, curiosity and innovation. These are the values that will guarantee our progress.

[Translation]

These are the general objectives for technology development in Canada and they set the parameters of the party by which we shall be guided. A detailed technology policy, however, must also consider the contribution that each sector of our society can make to technology development and the impact of technological change on every aspect of our lives. In this respect, the Federal Government has specifically defined the objectives related to each particular sector. Here are a few of the objectives that illustrate the extent of the present Government's commitment to our technological future.

[English]

Our objectives relating to the business sector reflect the primacy of the private sector in initiating innovation and new investment. We will support the initiatives of the private sector by encouraging an over-all business environment that supports investment, innovation and enterprise. Our commitment here can be seen in the tax structure we have established to encourage investment in research and innovation. Canadian tax incentives for research and development, even before this budget, have been among the world's richest. We can look at Japan, West Germany, United States, France, Great Britain or Sweden and we find that, with the single exception of Singapore, Canada has the most beneficial over-all tax structure for research and development. Tax benefits for industry in terms of forgone revenue to the Government are calculated to be over $200 million in 1983.

The budget has significantly enriched this package. It has, for example, introduced important changes to the investment tax credit which will particularly benefit small firms and significantly broaden the application of the tax credits. The budget has also made proposals which, as a former tax lawyer, I am particularly pleased to see as they simplify the research and development tax incentives and make them more effective. These proposals are expected to contribute a further $100 million in industrial incentives for research and development. They have been put forward in the form of a paper for consultation which calls for comments by July 1, 1983, to ensure early implementation of the proposals.

Another federal Government objective in relation to the business sector will ensure that current industrial support programs for technology development continue to be effective and that Canadian firms have access to the most productive, up to date technologies available. In support of this objective, the Government will spend $20 million over the next two years to expand the National Research Council's Industrial Research Assistance Program. In particular, the Field Advisory Service and the Technical Information Service will now expand their current services to include small and medium-sized businesses, greatly assisting the diffusion of needed technologies to all companies across Canada. This is one part of the $100 million that the Government has committed to new technology initiatives over the next two years.

[Translation]

As far as labour is concerned, the federal Government's main objectives concern our ability to predict the effects of technological change in order to minimize its negative aspects. Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that most people will welcome the realization that new technologies will do away with many boring and repetitive tasks. I have every reason to believe that people are eagerly waiting for a chance to get one of the interesting and better-paid jobs that will be created as a result of new technologies. In fact, under the heading of training assistance, the Budget has earmarked an additional $155 million for human resource development programs.

[English]

Another objective of our technology policy is to encourage labour-management mechanisms on all levels to encourage joint planning for technological change. We will also support organized labour in its study of issues brought about by this change and its preparation and efforts to deal with them. The federal Government has approved $10 million to be spent over the next two years to encourage business and labour to establish a centre for productivity and employment growth. Negotiations with respect to the establishment of this centre will be led by my colleagues, the Hon. Charles Caccia, Minister of Labour, and the Hon. Ed Lumley, Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

The federal Government would also like to foster a core of excellence within the university structure which conducts research relevant to industry. To support university research and enhance its contribution to technology development, the federal Government will increase the funding of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council by almost $27 million over the next two years.

It is also an objective of our technology policy that industry become more aware of the research done in universities, and at the same time that science in the universities and federal laboratories be better attuned to the opportunities in the industrial world. The federal Government will spend $9 million over the next two years to strengthen joint university-industry research and technology efforts.

[Translation]

This Government intends to make sure that R&D carried out in federal laboratories will support the requirements of industry within the framework of our economic objectives. Our programs and policies will be designed in accordance with these objectives. We shall be examining federal research programs to find out whether there are certain areas in which they could be better attuned to the needs of industry. The communications sector is one in which we are particularly interested. Canada has a world reputation for excellence in this field, and so that we may continue in this direction, my colleague, the Hon. Francis Fox, who is in the House today, the Minister of Communications—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order! This is the second time the Hon. Minister has mentioned the name of one of his colleagues in the House. I must remind him that he should refer to his hon. colleagues by their title, the name of their riding or their position and not by their own name.

Mr. Johnston: I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), who is in the House right now, has proposed establishing a non-profit corporation that would belong to the Government and others and would carry out R&D in the related fields of telecommunications, space technology and information processing. A task force, consisting of representatives from industry, the universities, and Government, will be established to assess the viability of this proposal. We have earmarked $250,000 for conducting this study.

[English]

The federal Government is also determined that Canada meet the challenge of the emerging new technologies.

To make sure that Canada benefits fully from new developments in the increasingly important field of biotechnology, the federal Government is committing $22 million toward implementing a national biotechnology strategy. This strategy will support research networks—involving Government, universities and industry—which will concentrate on using biotechnology to improve the use of Canada's resource base and industrial development.

Microelectronics is also an important area for Canada's technological future. The federal Government will be establishing an initial fund of $7.5 million over two years to support the development of a national microelectronics design network. The funds will help establish a university-based, computer-linked network of design and testing stations for very large scale integrated circuits. About thirty universities are expected to participate in the expanded design network which will be closely integrated with the current work of industry in the microelectronics field. These facilities will help train the manpower critical to the expansion of the Canadian microelectronics industry and make an important contribution toward the creation of a technologically oriented work force for Canada.

Success in all these initiatives depends on the awareness of science and technology on the part of the public.

I am pleased to announce that the federal Government will sponsor a national "Canada Tomorrow" conference in the fall of 1983 which will highlight the effective management of technological change, especially as it affects the working Canadian and industry and trade in this country. This forum will bring the various sectors involved in technology development together—that is, labour, business, universities and Government—to form a deeper understanding of each other's requirements and concerns.

[Translation]

The provinces also have an important role to play in the technological development of our country. Over the last few years, our activities in this field have increased tremendously. The federal Government intends to work together with the provinces in order to achieve a co-ordinated and harmonious blend of objectives, policies and programs that will launch Canada's recovery.

[English]

The Government's commitment to technology is evident, both in the level of current support to research and innovation and in the strong support which the budget has given to research and technology.

The Special Recovery Capital Projects Program has allocated $290 million over the next four years to establish 15 new or expanded research and training facilities. Projects are expected to substantially expand research capabilities to serve the forest products, fisheries, agri-food, manufacturing and mining industries. In addition, $180 million has been allocated for the accelerated procurement of high-technology electronic and communications equipment.

As part of this program I am pleased to inform the House that my colleague, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne), has just announced today in St. John's, Newfoundland, the purchase of high technology communications equipment for the Canadian Forces valued at more than $67 million. These purchases include: $19.5 million for the search and rescue satellite project which will provide advanced technology to help locate aircraft and ships in distress; $38 million for a military aeronautical communications system which will be installed at various bases across Canada; $5 million for new high frequency receivers to upgrade the current communications networks; and $5 million for new CW20 microwave communications systems at selected bases across Canada. In addition, the Minister of National Defence announced the allocation of over $20 million to improve helicopter search and rescue capabilities in Canada.

As I said at the outset, over $700 million has been set aside in the budget for technology development. This is in addition to the $3 billion that the federal Government had already budgeted for technology support in the 1983-84 Estimates. It also does not include, and I emphasize this, the $200 million of forgone tax revenues for current R and D expenditures, nor the $185 million the new tax changes and proposals would add to that basic figure.

We must now turn that large and important investment into action. Central to this success is the concerted, co-operative and combined action of all sectors. We now have the policy structure and the fiscal support to push forward Canada's technological advance. It is now up to us to take advantage of the opportunities at hand to build towards a prosperous 1990.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Minister. One of the most recent high technology programs which could be brought in by the Government is the long baseline radio telescope which is proposed for across the country. Does the Minister know if that project is going to go ahead? Second, would its headquarters be at the University of Lethbridge, which I gather from the scientific data is the logical place for that headquarters?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, there has been no decision taken as yet with respect to the baseline array. Much interest has been expressed in the Hon. Member's own constituency of Lethbridge. I myself, as the Hon. Member may know, have met with representatives of that community, including the President of the University of Lethbridge. Of course, it is a very exciting proposal and a very expensive proposal. It is, indeed, one that deserves close study and that is being done, I understand, by the National Research Council at the present time. However, no decision has been taken with respect to that particular project.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the Minister might comment as to whether he, in his own mind, believes that it is a high technology project and whether it would fit within the 100 projects which the Government has envisaged. However, my second question goes on to another very important research facility in my riding at Lethbridge called the Animal Diseases Research Institute. The Minister knows from his days in the Treasury Board that we have some very top scientists working under very antiquated conditions and in outdated buildings. I am wondering if one of the 100 projects would be new capital spending for the Research Institute in Lethbridge.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member probably knows, I have over-all responsibility for the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program in terms of its moving forward and its co-ordination and implementation. I have said in the past, and would reiterate today for the benefit of Hon. Members of the House, that the specific projects will be announced in the very near future, as they become ready for announcement, by the line Ministers responsible in each case. I would hope that all of the projects will be announced within the next several weeks. I would only ask the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) to bide his time and await those announcements as they are made.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister's colleague about the whole question of plants which just simply close down and move away without any concern for the community or the workers involved, and there are many examples. The Minister speaks about technological changes which must take place and the new technology which must be introduced into Canada. I do not disagree with him for one moment. However, has he addressed the question of what corporate behaviour we could require from those companies which operate here, which receive considerable benefit from our tax structure and which demand in many ways that communities expend tax dollars to create an infrastructure which enables them to operate efficiently and effectively? And how do we demand from them a level of corporate behaviour which requires them at least to sit down with the people most affected, the Governments, the employees, the municipal officials, to discuss their plans in advance and the way in which they might live up to their responsibility to those communities?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I would emphasize that, with respect to this whole question of management of technological change, I doubt that there is any area more important and of more concern to the Government, and obviously to the Hon. Member, than the issue of appropriate measures for labour adjustment. That is why there has been proposed the establishment of a national technology productivity centre, whatever the name may ultimately be, to address the very issues which the Hon. Member raises in his question. I am convinced, and I believe members of the community who are very familiar with technological changes as they are taking place across the western world are convinced, that the pace of change and the capacity of our system to take advantage of change in order to improve our productivity would depend very much on the extent to which we address that very issue.

We intend to move forward and do everything we can, Mr. Speaker, to identify the extent of the problem which, as the Hon. Member probably knows, is a subject of some debate—the extent to which these changes will impact on the workplace in the short term and, perhaps more importantly, in the long term. We see short-term impacts, for example, in the clothing, textile and footwear sectors.

As the Hon. Member knows, we have established the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board which has as one of its mandates attempted to address adjustment, to bring new industries into communities affected either through the reduced activity in plants or through the modernization of plants. Because both have their impact on employment levels; there is no doubt about that.

All I would say, Mr. Speaker, is that the question raised by the Hon. Member is very much on our minds and is specifically addressed in the technology policy paper, and will be specifically addressed by my colleagues, the Minister of Labour and the Minister responsible for DRIE, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, as they go forth to try to set the terms and conditions among labour and industry leaders for the establishment and operation of the centre.

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows, microtechnology, microprocessing and robotronics will be replacing assemblers in many of our industries; in fact, they already have. This is a process which has been going on for a number of years. In fact, Alvin Toffler told us about it five years ago. In view of the fact that it is estimated that some 400,000 assemblers in Canada will be displaced by robotics and microprocessing by 1985, in view of the fact that at the present time there are virtually no facilities for retraining anywhere in Canada which would accommodate a substantial number of employees, and in view of the fact—and I will give a specific example—that in Brantford, Ontario, at Mohawk College, if your Unemployment Insurance benefits have run out, if you are on a retraining program in high-tech, if you are married and have two children, you receive $106 a week to exist on, I would like to know what the Minister and his Department are going to do specifically to address this problem of 400,000 assemblers being displaced by robotronics and microprocessing, with woefully inadequate facilities not only at the present time, but which will continue to be woefully inadequate right down to 1985? What is being done to assist them?

Mr. Johnston: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that I can verify the number of 400,000, but whatever the number may be it is clear, as I mentioned in my earlier response, that Government, industry, the labour movement itself and the provincial Governments all have to be brought together in a concerted action plan to address the issue of job displacement and retraining.

I infer from the Hon. Member's question that he feels that steps which have been taken today have been inadequate. I believe the programs which have been designed and brought forward by my colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) have been very creative and very effective. In fact, I doubt that at any other time in the history of this country, or in the history of many other countries, there has been such ambitious programs brought forward to address the very problem which the Hon. Member raises in his question. I point out that in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance, when dealing with the issue of technology, the Minister said, and I quote from Hansard at page 24667:

> Moreover, workers will have to acquire new skills and knowledge throughout their working lives. With this in mind, I am allocating tonight an additional $155 million for human resource development programs. This will bring to $1.2 billion this year the funds allocated for skills development in occupations that are significant for economic growth.

I would suggest, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that indeed the Government has made a very important and major contribution in addressing the very problem which the Hon. Member raises.

Mr. Bockstael: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) referred in his talk a little earlier to the budget proposals to create industrial incentives for research and development. I would like to ask if these industrial incentives are to take the form of a tax incentive for research and development. This may be applicable to some corporations but there are corporations which may not want, or be in a position to take advantage of, tax incentives. Are there any recommendations which the Minister wants to make in that regard?

Mr. Johnston: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is not so much a question of making a recommendation; it is a question of identifying what is being provided. There are special tax investment incentive provisions provided, including the flow out of a tax incentive to new equity purchasers of corporations, which I suggest could be very valuable indeed to some of the firms who are not in a position to take advantage of some of the write-offs which would enable them to acquire effectively more equity.

In addition to that, of course, I referred during the course of my comments to certain specific proposals—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I really regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister, but the time allotted for questions and comments has expired.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, there is a lot wrong with this budget. It is a real travesty. It is shortsighted. It looks up to the next election, but it does not look much beyond it. It does not look to the long-term future of the country. Therefore it is irresponsible. It is unfair. It continues the practice of "Those who have, get more", and it is hypocritical. It is full of contradictions throughout. There is the appearance and then there is the reality when you look underneath the appearance and see who actually is going to pay for the programs and is going to benefit from them.

[Translation]

This is not a recovery budget, it is a wait-and-see budget. As an instrument for creating jobs, it is entirely inadequate and powerless. The special recovery program will spend $4.8 billion over the next four years, in other words, an average of $1.2 billion per year. However, if we consider that the Government's monthly bill for unemployment insurance benefits is over $1 billion, the so-called recovery program is certainly not much, compared with this country's unemployment problem. This is wait-and-see, not recovery. We are waiting for the economy to recover elsewhere, especially in the United States, Japan and Europe, and then Canada will resume its traditional role as a supplier of natural resources. The budget mentions programs to encourage research and development in industry, but the proposals it contains will, in our opinion, be totally ineffective. When a problem is not fully understood, the remedy is often useless, due to poor diagnosis. In this case, the Minister has failed to realize that the reason for the lack of research in industry in Canada is the multinational system. Canadian branch plants and multinationals do not invest in research and development here, because their parent companies do not want them to.

The budget goes on to mention that it is not the fault of Canadian tax incentives, because they are at least as substantial, if not more so, than in other countries. So what does the Government propose to do. Increase tax incentives! There is no mention of the structural reasons for a lack of investment in research and development, and there is no discussion of the real problems. It is a fact that countries like Japan, the United States, Sweden and the Federal Republic of Germany devote a far greater percentage of their gross national product for research and development than we do. Let us consider countries that are financially more independent than we are, where the economy is controlled by that country's citizens, and where companies tend to invest more in research and development than we do with our financial dependent economy, that is controlled from outside by the multinationals. I am afraid that unless we tackle the basic structural problems, we shall not be able to provide the remedies that are required.

[English]

There are two parts to this Special Recovery Program; Public Works and Special Recovery Capital Projects. While these may be good in themselves and some projects will certainly be useful, they are generally small projects because it is a pork-barrel budget. These projects are opportunities for Cabinet Ministers to tour the country to announce projects, hold press conferences, turn sod and cut ribbons.

There is no doubt that some needed work will be done; facilities will be built, transportation improved and tourist facilities upgraded. But in certain respects the budget reveals a serious lack of understanding of what is essential, especially with regard to research and development and high technology procurement.

In this respect the budget is drastically in error by what it does not do. It does not begin to ask why we do not conduct adequate research and development in Canada, why we do not export enough and why our enterprises do not have enough incentives to do this. The budget does not address the root causes. However, the budget attempts to be more than just a summary of expenditures and revenue for the next year. There are four-year projects mentioned. There are copious supporting documents. There are projections and analyses, but these are self-serving analyses. No matter how many appendices, tables and graphs are provided to the Minister, they will do very little good if the right questions are not asked.

There are Special Recovery Incentives for Private Investment. This is where the budget moves from a slight touch of Keynesian economics to an enthusiastic endorsement of Reaganomics. The rich have to be bribed with ever more generous gifts to invest their money while low and middle income Canadians are called upon to make sacrifices for national recovery, as in the six and five program or later in the budget when there are tax increases.

This part of the budget is wrong not only because of its inequities, it is misguided. Incentives are provided for businesses to expand but Canadian businesses are working at an average of only 70 per cent capacity. They could be expanding considerably now, a full 30 per cent, without adding any new capacity simply because of under-utilization.

As well, there is the Special Recovery Export Financing Fund. Certainly we are all in favour of stimulating exports, but what this budget proposes is hopelessly inadequate because it does not address the real structural problems inhibiting export in the multinational system. Many branch plants are forbidden to export because they are not to compete with the companies in the parent system.

The Minister is concerned in this program about increasing the deficit and crowding out investment in future years when the recession will presumably be over. Therefore, he has funded it by a special recovery tax. Who is to pay this tax? Consumers are to pay. There is an increase in the manufacturing sales tax from 9 per cent to 10 per cent and a similar increase for construction materials, alcohol and tobacco, although not to be effective until October, 1984 or probably after the next election. An increase in the sales tax is wrong because it certainly is regressive. People with lower incomes pay a higher proportion of their income in sales tax than those with higher incomes. It continues the trend of Liberal Governments to raise taxes mostly from individuals. We will see more evidence of this later in the budget.

The next part of the budget consists of tax giveaways to corporations. Again, we see the trend continued with the manufacturing sales tax where the tax burden on corporations is reduced and increased on individuals. During the 1950s, taxes in Canada were paid roughly half and half between corporations and individuals. Presently, four-fifths are paid by individuals and only one-fifth by corporations.

There are changes to the mining depletion allowance, which is already high. It will be made deductible against non-resource income of those who finance mining ventures. While we are all agreed that mining is an important industry, should it be given this much favouritism? Mining has been hard hit not for lack of investment but because of the world recession. It is already highly favoured in taxes compared to other Canadian industries, such as the textile industry, which is an important employer in Canada and pays a much higher proportion of its income in taxes than do mines. Mining provides jobs in the mines and associated services but does not provide manufacturing jobs where there is a better return for the investment dollar in terms of job creation.

Furthermore, Canada imports almost all of its mining machinery and equipment, so that means that we will be providing more jobs for people in other countries, mainly the United States and Europe. Yet we have been given as a reason for not cutting income taxes the fact that Canadians would purchase imported goods. It seems the Minister does not realize that corporations import too, and mining companies import enormously. This is why the NDP has advocated in its industrial strategy the development of a manufacturing sector that could serve our resource industries instead of developing natural resources only. The two should go together; but we see no attempt to move in that direction in this budget.

In housing we see the continuation of the principle that "those who have get more". There is an increase of only 2,500 units planned in the 1980s for social housing. This is an area where we badly need additional housing, certainly in my riding and across the country. But most of the program is devoted to those who can afford to buy a new home.

The demand for more co-ops is often met with the argument that middle-income people are subsidized in co-ops, people who do not need it, yet here we are seeing subsidies of $3,000 in home owner grants to people who can afford a new home. There are provisions in the RHOSP Program, which is a system of tax deductions and as such is an advantage to people who are better off. This plan allows people to withdraw funds for the purchase of furniture and appliances. Certainly we are in favour of stimulating consumption to get people back to work but our concern would be to find efficacious and equitable ways of doing it. Using the tax deduction system to do it is regressive and unfair.

In child benefits, again we see that the appearance and the reality are different. Measures are announced "to provide additional income support for lower income families, working parents and others in need". The child care expense deduction is increased and this, of course, is welcome for the reason that existing provisions were certainly inadequate. But the way the additional relief has been given in objectionable. Tax deductions benefit high earners more than low earners, and people below the taxable income level not at all.

A great commotion was made over continuing the Child Tax Credit, which is advantageous to low and middle income earners. It will be continued at the present level when otherwise it would have been dropped. But this is simply giving back what had been taken away. Why was the Child Tax Credit increased? Well, because the Family Allowance was reduced. If the Minister had not reduced Family Allowances in the first place, he would not have had to get into this juggling act of changing funds from source to source.

The Minister is paying for the so-called additional benefits by deindexing the child tax exemption. Since the exemption system is regressive, this is not a bad idea; but a better way would have been to reform fundamentally the whole child support system. It is fraught with inequities and this budget does not address those inequities; it does not come up with a better system, which is what we need. The end result is that people with children will be paying higher taxes in the future, so that this so-called additional income support disappears. The net gain to the Government over the next four years is $585 million from people with children. It is a juggling act. The Minister bounces money from one hand to another, and in the end he ends up with more and families end up with less.

Finally, the budget announces a few innovations which are presumably supposed to make us think the Government is really looking to the future and dealing with basic problems. We are going to have a national centre for productivity and employment growth, and who can be against that? But what confidence do we have that it will even direct the required attention to the real problems? Certainly the budget does not. Is it just going to be another bureaucracy putting out glossy annual reports? Is it going to focus attention on productivity of the worker and not on the structure of industry? Is it going to follow the advice of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), who does not seem to be against importing mining machinery from Sweden or foreign control of our economy, but becomes a positive nationalist when it comes to looking at other countries for their ideas on how to control their own economy. We recommend considering social democratic experiments in Western Europe and looking at the low rates of unemployment. According to him, it is not Canadian to look at social democratic countries in Western Europe, but it is okay to import massively from them and not develop our own economy. If this is the kind of thinking we are going to see at the national centre for productivity and employment growth, we can predict it will not do any good.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, there is a lot wrong with this budget. It is a Conservative budget, full of giveaways to corporations. It is a sly and tricky budget, a pork-barrel, pre-election budget. It is unfair. It continues the trend of shifting the burden of taxation on to individuals from corporations. It is shortsighted and does not deal with the real problems of our economy.

The Minister's kerfuffle with the zoom lens has been a boon to the Tories who otherwise would have had very little to criticize in this budget. But to anyone concerned with long-term welfare in this country, it is a pitiful miserable exercise.

I must compliment the Minister for the opportunity he has provided to Cabinet Ministers to pretend something is happening and the clever way he has disguised tax increases in delayed sales taxes and deindexing deductions. But I want to assure him that my Party will do all in its power to expose these sneaky tricks and provide constructive criticism, to outline alternatives, and to direct attention to the real problems undermining our economy and to stress equitable ways of raising taxes so that the burden of running our national economy will be fairly shared. We have an entirely different approach to the budget from what we have seen so far, Mr. Speaker, and we will continue to work for those kinds of alternatives.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I note with interest the comments of the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), and I must say that I would agree largely with her general comments regarding the budget. But she referred to the provisions regarding housing, specifically the $3,000 grant to the people who want to buy a house, and then compared that to the minuscule amount provided to co-op housing. Does the Hon. Member know what the subsidy is for co-op housing per unit on the life of the mortgage, since she is casting aspersions on that program?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I could not give a figure and no figure is given in this budget. No amount is given, even for the assistance to co-op housing, simply the number of units; 2,500 units are specified at no particular amount.

Mr. Friesen: Well, Mr. Speaker, if she will check with CMHC officials, she will understand that this is 2 per cent money we are talking about concerning co-op housing. That is, the Government pay in subsidy form all the money on the mortgage except for 2 per cent which the co-op picks up. When interest rates were highest the subsidy per unit was in the area of $500,000 over the life of a mortgage. Now, with rates lower. I am sure it must be down to about $250,000 or $300,000, which is still a substantial subsidy for those co-ops. It is by no means low-cost housing. It may be low rent housing but not low-cost housing.

I ask her to comment on the relative subsidy comparison between the $3,000 grant for first-time home buyers and a subsidy for co-op housing which could be as high as $300,000 over the life of the mortgage. I then ask her to comment as to whether or not the provisions of CMHC are adequate in making sure that only low-income people live in those co-op housing units, because I can assure her that many middle-class people are taking advantage of that good benefit.

Ms. McDonald: Well, we have to compare unit by unit. To my knowledge CMHC does not provide the necessary material to do this. Right now co-ops normally have a 25 per cent limit on the number of people at subsidized levels. Many co-ops would be quite happy to go up to 50 per cent but the rules forbid them from doing this, so they would have a much higher proportion of people with low incomes in them. Co-ops certainly in my riding are comprised on average of low-income people but the Member certainly is right, there are some people in the middle income level.

I think CMHC should provide data so that comparisons can be made in a careful way. CMHC does not do this. They do not analyse their subsidies by income level at all. There is no ceiling on this and we do not know to what income group the subsidies are actually going. I tried to find out at the time I was housing critic and the information was not available. CMHC had never collected the information. So I am afraid I cannot answer questions when CMHC does not collect the data.

• (1200)

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to rise on this occasion to deal with the question before us in the House today, which is the introduction of the new technologies into the structure of Canada's productive machinery; in other words, our economics in Canada.

First, I would like to outline several of the measures that have been taken in the past which bring us to this point in our discussion of the budget today. In 1979 we decided that Canada's performance in terms of research and development was far too low. In 1967 we had reached a level of 1.2 per cent of Gross National Product that was being spent on research and development of the new technologies. From 1967 to 1976 this level of 1.2 per cent of Gross National Product fell to an all-time low of .96 per cent of Gross National Product. In 1978 and 1979 in a responsible fashion we set out to do a great deal about this. We set new, realistic targets. We set a target of 1.5 per cent of Gross National Product by the year 1985 that would be devoted to the new technologies through research and development.

This is not something which the NDP would like perhaps because it is not all being done by the Government alone, but by the Government and the private sector. We felt the major responsibility for creating new research and development in Canada rested with the private sector, that it rested with those firms making the products and having the responsibility for marketing them. Fully one-half of our increased commitment of 1.5 per cent of GNP would have to be satisfied by the private sector. One-third would come from the federal Government and the remaining one-sixth would come from universities, foundations and provincial Governments.

I am very pleased to announce today that we have more than met our targets to date. At the end of 1982 we reached 1.34 per cent of GNP being spent on R and D. I project that we will surpass our 1.5 per cent target by 1985, and I am pleased to announce that both the federal Government and the private sector have exceeded their targets in bringing us to this level.

I must respond to some comments made by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), primarily because I think she is doing a disservice to the people we are endeavouring to serve and because she is in total conflict with the official Opposition critic of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

I want to talk about the $2.4 billion in programs that we are using to generate immediate employment. We have been in favour of infrastructure improvements in order to get jobs going and to accelerate the deployment of capital to bring the jobs onstream now that have been waiting a couple of years on shelves in various areas. These are things that are needed to improve our competitive structure. Perhaps they are institutions which we have to have but which might have been delayed because of the tough economic times we have been facing. We are bringing these forward with $2.4 billion in projects. For the Hon. Member from Broadview-Greenwood to have the audacity to criticize this type of thing—the job creation, the infrastucture improvements and the improvements that will take place in our competitive position because of what we are doing in this area—is, in my view, nothing more than cheap politics.

The Hon. Member from Broadview-Greenwood failed to mention the Special Recovery Program of another $2.4 billion which will be directed over the next three years to help accelerate our recovery from this recession. This includes many incentives for the private sector to help it build up equity bases and to help sell equity capital, to help investors get involved and to increase our exports. What I am particularly proud of is the help this program will give to our industrial infrastructure based on numerous technologies.

Why, I ask in this House, must we always be looking for the cheap shot and why must we always be against something? I have heard some good ideas from Opposition Members in the past. Certainly our capital works project is one project that is agreed to by the official NDP Finance critic. I think when we face serious economic times we should pool our collective expertise, not make cheap political points. We should try to find solutions to the problems that we face.

I would like to comment on what I think are some of the roads that we should be taking in the future so as to increase Canada's productivity and our ability to compete. If we cannot compete internationally, then I am not really sure that we will ever be able to make an economic recovery. We are a trading country. We are dependent upon foreign markets for our produce. But just as important as our raw materials, we are dependent upon foreign markets for the type of manufactured goods that will create jobs in the future. Here again we get into the whole area of high technology.

I believe the public sector and the federal Government have an opportunity to lead in implementing new technologies and in making the public sector more productive. The taxpayers have a right to the best productivity that we can generate. The new technologies, computers, word processors and so on will help us here.

There is a second aspect to the federal Government's role in this area. By using the capacity we have—because we are a huge employer of white collar workers—and by using the federal Government as a laboratory, not only do we improve our own productivity but we can set the lead for the private sector to follow in terms of the new techniques that we can develop which can in turn be passed to the private sector. In other words, we have an opportunity to be leaders in the public sector in terms of increased productivity by utilizing new technologies.

I was somewhat alarmed to learn the results of a study done by the Ontario Government task force on microtechnology. It indicated certain attitudinal barriers in Canada, that Americans are much more optimistic about what new technologies will do for workers. Canadians, on the other hand, are much more afraid they will be displaced by new technologies and that they will lose their jobs. Americans felt that new technologies will increase their productivity and will make their jobs more interesting. They are far less concerned about displacement.

I want to address that issue particularly because it affects a great number of women in our workplace today. There is a fear that women will be displaced by utilization of new technologies, new machinery and new techniques. To those who are concerned generally and to those who might have concerns arising out of the Ontario Government's task force report, I would refer them to the commission of inquiry into technological change in Australia. That study indicated that there would be an adverse impact on female employment in areas such as telephone operators, bank tellers who are being replaced by the Green Machine, or cashiers being faced with automated cash registers. On the other hand, the study found that there would be incredible opportunities for women in the work force because of the new technologies.

Recent studies conducted in Ontario pointed out that this depended upon the structure of our industry and our business. For example, there are 46,000 charitable organizations in Canada, each of which has at least one female worker. They will not be displaced by new technologies. They can become more productive, more efficient and accomplish a great deal more using the new technologies. They will not be replaced.

Another study indicated that in Ontario the average number of employees in a firm was only four. Almost every one of them employs women. These women will not be replaced by machines which can do things ten times as quickly as the old method. They will have their productivity improved; they will not be replaced. We have to ensure that each new business in Ontariao or, for that matter, throughout Canada has access to the new technologies and knows how to use them.

Approximately 40 per cent of businesses are using updated or newer technologies at present in Canada. This means there is a tremendous market for new machines, new software and new programs. Also this means that many more people have to be trained in how to use them. I am not sure whether this should be strickly the responsibility of the federal Government, as the New Democratic Party implies. It seems to me that the vendors of this equipment who want to have it in the workplace, sell it or lease it, can play that role very adequately. They can train people in the new technologies. This does not mean that the Government does not have a role to play in retraining. Despite the fact that it is not within our constitutional confidence we, the federal Government, by default have had to make enormous commitments to new training techniques.

I look to a higher level of sophistication and specialization by women in the work force. Their role will not simply be to process data but to interpret it and to make management decisions which are necessary and inexorably flow from the new technologies and data they produce. The education of women is of some concern to me. By 1985 it is predicted that we will need 8,000 engineers and Ph.D. graduates in science and will fall short of that mark by 50 per cent.

The Science Council of Canada has just published an excellent booklet entitled "The Science Education of Women in Canada". It shows that girls in high school 15 years of age and under who drop out of the sciences, physics and maths are doing so at twice the rate of boys. In other words, women are not taking those subjects in high school which will equip them to deal with the new types of technologies which Toffler's "The Third Wave" has brought upon us. This deprives many women of flexibility in career choices. Also it means that in the future we will have fewer women who are capable of assuming management and leadership roles in universities, Governments and industry. We have a duty to bring this type of information to the attention of young people who are at that critical path in their lives when they must determine their career opportunities.

We have a great opportunity in our service sector not to worry about losing jobs but actually about increasing them. "The World Challenge", published by Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber, referred to the opportunities that align us, the developed world, by helping to develop the Third World. Not only do we have a moral obligation to see that the Third World becomes industrialized, developed and that its people achieve a higher standard of living, but in so doing there lies tremendous opportunities for Canadians.

I do not want to see our foreign aid budgets cut back, particularly as they apply to Canadian consultants being hired to go abroad and help disseminate these new technologies which will have the possibility of elevating the standard of living of the Third World. In so doing they will also increase the ability of the Third World to buy Canadian technology and services.

Another route at which we should look is one which would take advantage of Canada's unique position in North America and the existing strength of our service sectors. By looking creatively at our system of international tax treaties for the avoidance of double taxation and which deal with withholding taxes, international capital flows and amendments to the Income Tax Act, Canada could become an international financial capital centre, and multinational companies around the world would use Canada as a basis for servicing their capital. They would be taking advantage of our financial institutions, banks, trust companies, loan companies, insurance companies as well as our accountants and legal profession. Money would be coming into Canada which would otherwise have never had an opportunity or a need to come here. This type of approach could vastly increase employment in our service sector and it could put Canada at a crossroads in international capital flows in order to bring Canada even more to the centre of what is our true destiny, that is, a leader in international business and international trade. It could bring our country even more to the forefront of what really is our true future.

I have tried to address what I think are some of the concerns I hear expressed by the electorate of Willowdale and by people who come to see me. The point has been raised by Opposition Members that the new technology is something to fear because it will get rid of jobs. It will require new investment in human capital. It will require individuals themselves to make the effort to learn new ideas and to retrain themselves to cope with the new world they face. I do not look upon this as a threat. It is a challenge and a tremendous opportunity for Canadians to increase their productivity by bringing onstream the new technologies, by working with them, and by using them as our servants in order to increase our standard of living and our ability to compete. We can do it. It is an opportunity that is not a threat. The new technologies are the bit that we will use to drill our way into a new world of international competitiveness based upon exports, long production runs, manufacturing, and a much greater use of the new technologies.

I am pleased that the thrust of the new technologies is one of the linchpins of our new budget. It is one of the reasons the budget was so well received by Canadians from all walks of life.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I do not very often congratulate a Member of the Government on his comments, but the Hon. Member's speech was very constructive. It was a good speech. I agree with him about the importance of research and development and to make public corporations and the various levels of Government aware of that importance.

I have one or two questions I would like to put to the Hon. Member. He indicated that the Government had met its target as far as expenditures on research and development are concerned. He gave a figure of 1.5 per cent of the Gross National Product. Could he indicate the Government's target for research and development in agriculture and whether he feels that target has been met?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to obtain that information. I do not have the figures on the specific breakdown. I know that we have taken a lead in terms of the new installations in Saskatchewan in dealing with hydrology and the very important impact that has on agricultural producers. You cannot produce crops in Saskatchewan without having a very good reading of the types of soil conditions and particularly the water content.

I am proud to say that Canada has been a leader in the area of agriculture. Our agricultural sector deserves a tremendous compliment. The Holstein cow, for example, is regarded throughout the world as probably the best giver of milk. With the new open transplants and the ability to preserve and ship semen around the world, Canadian cows are probably in almost every country of the world that is a milk producer.

We have in the past developed the single best type of wheat, No. 1 Northern. This has required a great deal of innovation, research and development. It does not mean that we have achieved everything we want to in the realm of agriculture, but the agricultural technology developed in Canada is probably without parallel in the world.

Part of our CIDA program involves disseminating this new technology for agriculture around the world. The Hon. Member makes a very valid point. There is probably as much value added in science and technology that goes into producing that kernel of wheat which is now a world leader in export markets as in some of our newer manufacturing plants.

If the Hon. Member's point is that we are going to neglect our traditional industries as they may not appear to have high-tech involved in them, it is a misunderstanding and I hope Members on all sides of the House will address and deal with that directly.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the research that has been done by the Department of Agriculture over the years is some of the finest in the world. Unfortunately, however, if one examines the Estimates over the past number of years, one will note that the increase in the budget for research and development in agriculture is about 1 per cent. It has fallen far behind the rate of inflation in this country. This is unfortunate, because if we are to increase our production of grain and other crops, we must not only keep up to date but keep ahead of other countries as far as research and development is concerned. If nothing else, I hope that the Hon. Member will impress upon the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) the importance of research and development in agriculture, not only by the Government but by the private sector.

It is rather unfortunate that it took the Minister of Agriculture a number of years to release some $9 million of prairie farm assistance money to an organization in the prairies interested in research and development. The matter has been discussed for several years. Only today a news release came across my desk showing that some $9 million had been turned over to this organization from the old PFRA fund, $9 million of farmers' money that had been held since 1972, non-interest bearing. If that money had been turned over years ago for research and development, just think of the progress that could have been made in the private sector in co-operation with the public sector.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the particular issue raised by the Hon. Member but I will certainly be pleased to look into it. The point he makes about the necessity for continually re-evaluating what we are doing in the field of agriculture is critical. I look at opportunities which Canadian consumers have to save money and to buy Canadian. Why do people necessarily have to purchase fresh fruit and vegetables from abroad during our winter months? During our summer months we can grow more than enough to feed all Canadians, if we are prepared to put it into cans. With a little research and development, possibly using solar energy or the new types of energy which we have in abundance, we can grow fresh fruits and vegetables all winter at very little cost, maybe even at a saving compared to the cost of imports.

This goes back to one of my other pet projects in this area. Why are Canadian consumers not more aware of the tremendous opportunities we have to exercise the sovereignty of our buying dollar when we go into the stores to "Buy Canadian"? Why do they not look for the "Made in Canada" label? I would venture to say that in the stores you can find comparable quality at a comparable price for Canadian-made goods. Even if you have to pay a couple of pennies more because other countries have an advantage in certain areas, why do Canadians not exercise their right as consumers to help their fellow producers?

Why do all Canadians not engage in a mutual self-help exercise? The agricultural area is a perfect place to start looking at this. This is something we can do every week when we visit the shopping market. Another point which the Hon. Member makes—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Under the procedure, a Member should not abuse the time for questions and replies. The point has been replied to and another Member is seeking the floor.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I am very interested in and totally in agreement with the statement of the Hon. Member regarding self-sufficiency in food and more production of food in Canada. The Hon. Member has a little more influence in Government than we do. Would he actively support a job-creation program and economic development project that would encourage and give assistance to the development of food producer co-operatives and consumer food co-operatives? If every community could have solar greenhouses which were operated co-operatively, with start-up funds from the Government, this could be greatly expanded. Would the Hon. Member consider this special project and work within his Party and Government to that end?

• (1230)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Parliamentary Secretary has 30 seconds to reply.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, yes, I certainly see the co-op movement as one which has taken off on its own without the necessity of Government intervention, because enterprising individuals feel that they can derive benefits by working together. They do not need the heavy hand of Government to legislate or fund them. There are many co-ops that have established themselves without Government support. I have a great deal of respect for many of the co-ops I have seen. We see co-ops in financial institutions, we see them in many small towns in rural Ontario, we see huge co-ops that work very effectively in the west. If enabling legislation and the removal of some red tape impediments is all that is necessary, fine. I want to consider the question of how much public funding must go into these co-ops, since they have already demonstrated in many areas that they can produce dividends without the necessity of dipping into the taxpayers' pockets in order to make them feasible.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise and take part in this debate today. It is indeed a very important debate on a very important budget. In many regards this budget is like no other budget we have had. I realize that there is to be a vote on the budget. There was a vote last Thursday, one that was remarkably close. Only 15 votes separated the two sides. Unfortunately, the NDP was otherwise engaged, 12 of their Members being absent for the vote. This prevented the difference from being narrowed down to three votes. One must realize that 12 Members, nearly 40 per cent of the NDP's strength, were away; it is 37.5 per cent, I believe. We have grown to expect that when the Liberal Government is in danger, the NDP will rush to their rescue, whether it means rushing away from the House or rushing into it.

This budget has a deficit of a size that is astonishing to the world, I suppose. I was listening to the radio this morning and heard that there is concern that the American deficit is not being looked after by the United States Government. If the United States Government does not do something about the size of its deficit, it will have a dramatic effect on the markets in the world.

On a per capita basis, their deficit is about two-thirds of that of Canada. In other words, our deficit is about 50 per cent higher per person than that of the United States. The deficit in the United States is causing some concern throughout the world, though their deficit is relatively modest compared to ours.

The budget has created this enormous deficit of $31.4 billion. We seem now to have the worst of all possible worlds. It is bad that the deficit is extraordinarily high, but this can usually be excused on the basis that it will create jobs. However, reading the figures of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on the job situation and when he expects the unemployment rate to ease off, it is not apparent that the unemployment rate will ease off in the future. We have both worlds at their very worst; high unemployment and a high deficit running side by side into the future.

In the past, budget speeches and Throne Speeches provided an opportunity for Members with special interests to present speeches that were not necessarily relevant to either the budget speech or the Throne Speech. Things are getting worse these years. As Mr. Speaker will well remember, it has been so long since we have had a Throne Speech that I am not certain that anybody will remember how we deported ourselves. It seems to me that the last Throne Speech in recent memory was way back several years ago. At that time, Members had the opportunity to speak during those speeches. New Members of the House could make mainden speeches on any subject they chose. I must say that I miss the free and easy-going debates of those days. I would highly recommend to the Government that it screw up its courage and try to have one more Throne Speech while it is still in power.

The budget debate to date has been extremely interesting. There have been some remarkably good speeches. We have just heard a couple of speeches that I thought were of outstanding quality. While I disagree with almost everything the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) said, I believe her words accurately represent her feelings. We have just heard a good speech on the budget from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Peterson) as well. I feel it is a pity that the Minister of Finance never gets to hear any budget speech but his own. We listened to his speech and I feel he should return the compliment once in a while and appear in the House to hear what the rest of us, including some Members of his own Party, think of his budget.

I would like to speak about the effect the budget and the fiscal policy of the Government might have on the defences of this country. The projected budget of the Department of National Defence looks fairly good on paper, but it is based upon a faulty premise. For many, many years the Department of National Defence has operated according to its own inflation model. That is, calculations were conducted every few months to indicate what the inflation rate would be over the next few years.

As the years go by, the Department of National Defence has become a very large user of high technology equipment and materials. The Department of National Defence has more expenses and a higher inflation rate than any other Department. Consequently, because of the inflation model that is followed, the DND index would likely show an inflation factor of 15 per cent when the CPI was running at, say, 12 per cent. Treasury Board accepted this rate and would use it in its calculations to give the Department of National Defence an increase in real terms, as it is known. Treasury Board would add in the 15 per cent plus 3 per cent if it was hoping for a 3 per cent increase.

The Department of National Defence must now take a different tack. The Minister of Finance, presumably with the concurrence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), has decided that this is too good for DND so he will force it to use the Department of Finance's model to calculate the inflation rate starting next year. This will result in an entirely false figure for an increase in real terms based on a inflation rate that will be considerably lower than the actual inflation rate on the commodities that Defence must buy, particularly if it is re-equipping itself.

The Department of National Defence certainly needs an increase in purchasing power in real terms because, particularly in the early years of what have come to be known as the Trudeau years, the Government was so determined to wither the Department of National Defence and reduce it in size that it froze the budget in an inflationary cycle and consequently the Department had a bitter choice to make. It was thought that this choice would only affect the Department for one year, perhaps 1969 or 1970. The Department decided that it would hold on to its strength in manpower and cease to maintain buildings and buy equipment, believing that the following year, as it had been assured, things would be back to normal. Well, things did not get back to normal for three or four years, and by the end of that time not only was DND without replacement equipment for those four years, but in addition it finally had to cut its manpowers strength, and down it went to its present level.

The Department of National Defence sunk so low that at one time its capital budget represented only 9 per cent of its total budget. This is really a shocking figure because in this modern world between 25 per cent and 30 per cent of the defence budget must be spent on capital equipment such as tanks, ships and planes to maintain a modern, capable force that can accomplish the tasks that one would expect of one's national defence forces. In the forecast of the Minister of Finance, between the 1981-82 budget and the 1985-86 budget spending will suddenly be cut by $392 million on top of the other cuts.

• (1240)

The budget produced in June, 1982 by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), when he was Finance Minister, as a kind of last gasp effort to do a job of which he was incapable, cut $200 million off the DND budget, to be spread over the next two years. The present Minister cut a further $230 million as a kind of rival gift, to be spread over 1983-84 and 1984-85. When making the cuts at that time the Minister of Finance noted that they would "require some adjustment in the nature of the programs we had planned to undertake". How much more adjusting can we expect the Department of National Defence to make?

We then have the rather ridiculous scene of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) at a conference of defence associations pointing out that DND is due to receive $20 million for "increased readiness and sustainability". This could take the form of ammunition, equipment, spares or even personnel and could involve either the regular or reserve forces. When compared with the $430 million that has been taken from the Department within a year, it can be seen that this leaves quite a deficit. Even with the current budget which allocates $75 million to DND, it is still down $335 million. This is not going to make a difficult cash flow situation for equipment programs any easier.

I should like to say a few words about employment programs that are being discussed these days, Mr. Speaker. DND is supposed to receive $60 million this year and $15 million next year for the Extended Youth Training and Employment Program. Under this program 5,000 people are to be trained and paid the same as recruits in the regular force, but they will officially be Class C reservists with no pension or benefits. They can be had a little cheaper that way. DND officials have been quoted as saying they were as surprised as I was at the low 5,000 figure, as they had expected as many as 20,000.

What will happen to these 5,000 people when their training is completed? Why will the Government not build on this program and make use of the young people who have one year's training? That would be an ideal time to increase the manpower ceiling for the regular forces and to make use of the people who have already gone through an extensive part of their training. It would give them the opportunity of staying on after the employment program ends.

In the last few days we have heard of a conflict between the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), who has been trumpeting his great NEED Program over the land. The purpose of this program is to employ on a short-term basis people who have exhausted their Unemployment Insurance benefits. The Department of National Defence is to be one of the beneficiaries of this. But it must have work that needs to be done, so it simply fired term employees to make room for NEED employees. Many of these term employees have worked for the Department for years. After a fixed term they must be rehired if they are to continue working there. It is an "in" joke in the Department that the term ends on March 31 and on April 1 these people are rehired. In the last five years only 15 term employees have been discharged and that includes, as far as we can discover, 14 who went out on pension.

The two Ministers seem to be working a double shuffle using a revolving-door principle. They have let hundreds go from what those people had considered to be fairly permanent jobs and they apparently intend to hire people who have exhausted their Unemployment Insurance benefits. A year from now the process can be reversed: they can rehire those who were let go last month and let the people go who were hired this month. The result simply is a doubling of the cost of the work being done.

I should like to move on to the capital programs now and concentrate on the navy because I worry more about the naval equipment program than about anything else when it comes to re-equipping the forces at the present time. The Leopard program to supply the army with a certain number of tanks has pretty well been completed. The CF-18 program is moving along to help the air force. Unfortunately, the equipment for the navy is so long in production that I believe politicians do not like to support it as they are not likely to see the finished product within three elections or so. That makes it difficult for politicians to give the program the support they should.

A year and a half ago the Minister of National Defence, speaking to the Conference of Defence Associations, issued a press release saying that we needed five more Gate vessels to replace the old ones that had been in service for years. Strangely enough, this item disappeared from the Estimates this year. When we asked about them we were told that they were still somewhere but were not a high priority, despite the fact that when the Minister announced them with some fanfare a year ago last January they had a very high priority. Now they have just disappeared.

There is a long list of naval equipment programs, Mr. Speaker. In the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence Committee on March 17 this year I asked for a list of programs but I have not received it. There are many major equipment programs that have not been approved by Cabinet. The Canadian patrol frigate program will run into billions of dollars, but only $60 million has ever been approved by Treasury Board. The Minister has turned over to Cabinet the decision as to which of two consortia will build the patrol frigates. We are very concerned about the rumours we hear from the Treasury benches—"skid row" as it is otherwise known—about the possibility of that choice being made for political reasons rather than on the basis of the best plan for the best ship. I hope the fact that Scan Marine is totally surrounded by Liberal constituencies will not direct the contract to the wrong consortium simply for political reasons.

While I am on the subject of the Canadian patrol frigates, Mr. Speaker, I might say that there is no way any shipyard in Canada can find the skilled personnel needed to complete the program. If one shipyard were to get the order for the six frigates, there is no way it could build them within the time frame that has been set out. There are not that many technicians who are able to work in any of the existing shipyards in one location. This Party had suggested—although we do not demand author's rights—that it might be a very good idea to build two ships in the Maritimes, two in the St. Lawrence valley and two on the West Coast. That would help not only to maintain a withering industry but to revitalize it. We do have the skills in our people to be able to carry out this kind of work, and I hope that when the Government makes the decision, first, it will not be on political grounds and, second, it will be one that will spread the benefits across this country the way they should be, and not concentrated where the Party which is temporarily in power has a greater strength.

I see that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I would like to compliment the previous speakers on their presentations in this important debate and I look forward to any questions they might have.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member speaks out of a wealth of experience. The one area he did not touch on, however, in the budget had to do with the recruitment program for cadet training and, I suppose, in other jocular terms, getting young people involved in the Armed Forces for a one-year training program. Would the Hon. Member comment on the budget provision in that area in terms of the number of people it would affect and how prepared the Armed Forces are to help?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, General Withers, the Chief of Defence Staff, pointed out not too long ago that they would not be able to train people with their present budget. If they had a sudden requirement for training large numbers, they simply would not be able to provide it. This is a situation which would get much worse if there was an emergency where they would not only have to provide for any reinforcements, but it would take their most experienced people away from their regular units. There is a terrible shortage in that particular area.

As far as cadet training is concerned, there is really nothing more important. There is no particular area of the force which is more important than cadet training. We did have some wonderful cadet training camps but they have been starved for funds over the years. That seems to be one of the places, unfortunately, which the Government has restricted far more than it should have over the last few years. Consequently, all kinds of cadets who wish to go to summer camps are not able to do so because of lack of funds.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question regarding the frigate program which the Hon. Member mentioned. Does he see any movement on the part of the Government to do any of this construction in the Vancouver-Victoria area?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, the fact that that would make an awful lot of sense does not mean that the Government is going to do it. As I said earlier, there is no shipyard anywhere in the country which could take on the job of building six frigates and finish them in the time frame which has been laid down for the ships to be ready. As everyone knows who has studied the situation, by 1991 we are going to have a ten-ship navy at the rate we are going. If they were to put those six frigates into one shipyard to be constructed, it would be 1993 before we get back up to a ten-ship navy, which is generally not thought to be satisfactory to any Canadian.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Hon. Member is with respect to the Cruise missile, the discussions which have gone on and the confrontations about the possibility of having Canada provide air space for the plan to test the guidance system of the Cruise missile. Has the Hon. Member and his Party taken an official position on whether or not this is desirable?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, it is the position of the Conservative Party of Canada that we should encourage, and our Government should encourage, the superpowers to negotiate at the disarmement table in Geneva in order to make enough progress towards restricting and controlling nuclear weapons in Europe that it would not be necessary to deploy the Pershing II or the Cruise missile in Europe. These talks are going on. President Reagan has made a major concession in that he no longer insists on the zero-zero option which seemed to be the main stumbling block at the time. He has given ground on that. I hope that the U.S.S.R. would make a counter offer at this time.

If all else fails, if these negotiations are non-productive, then NATO is going to have to go ahead with the commitment it made in 1979 to the West European nations that it would deploy the Cruise missile and the Pershing II. If it comes to that—and that will be the last resort—then this Party will not complain about the Government authorizing the testing of the Cruise missile at Cold Lake.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): I would assume from that answer, then, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member and his Party accept the logic of the NATO two-track proposition.

Mr. McKinnon: I hesitate to point out to the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, that this Party was in power when the two-track system was adopted.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): That has not prevented the Conservative Party, Mr. Speaker, now that they have moved to the Opposition, from changing their policy on other things. Therefore I wanted to ensure that at least in this policy the Conservative Party has continued to carry on a one-track policy.

My second question for the Hon. Member concerns the testing of the Cruise in Canada, particularly guidance systems. As I understand the purpose of the testing of the Cruise in Canada, it is not necessarily to test the guidance system which would be used in a European context, but rather to test the guidance system which would be useful in a North American context as well; in other words, a more elaborate testing of guidance systems as they have developed.

In the event that the two-track policy fails, that there is an unwillingness or inability to come to an accommodation, would the Hon. Member then be prepared to proceed with the testing of the Cruise missile for North American purposes as opposed to testing the Cruise missile guidance system for European purposes?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal made by uninformed people about this testing of one type of missile when there is a different kind going to be deployed in Western Europe. If we were to test the Cruise missile, that is, air launched, in Cold Lake, if it comes to that, and if the Government decides to go ahead with it—it has kept its option open—the purpose of the test is to test the guidance system and it is identical in both of these otherwise not similar weapons. They are both Cruise missiles, but there are two kinds. One is made by one company and one is made by another. They are both going to use exactly the same guidance system, and that is the connecting link. It really makes no difference. It simply is cheaper in one way to launch it from the air in order to carry out the guidance system test, which is what my understanding is of what is going to be tested at Cold Lake, if indeed any tests are going to be conducted at Cold Lake.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there a disposition to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SHIPBUILDING

ADJUDICATION OF FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT—BENEFITS FOR QUEBEC

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, the final adjudication of the frigate construction contract for the Department of National Defence is approaching. The Minister repeated not long ago that he was expecting a final decision before the House adjourns for the summer. In its April 30 issue, the Financial Post gave an analysis of the situation and indicated quite clearly that National Defence officials tended to favour the offer made by the consortium located in St. John.

Madam Speaker, in a speech I made not long ago on the subject, I indicated that Quebec shipyards have demonstrated their leadership in the Canadian shipbuilding industry. The decision to be made by departmental officials and Cabinet will, of course, be based on considerations of a technical and qualitative nature. However, they will also have to consider, first of all, the extent of the benefits to Quebec, and second, the quality of the workmanship involved, and third, the considerable technological advantage to our province if a Quebec shipyard is awarded what appears to be the contract of the century.

Speaking on behalf of the riding of Lévis, I am counting on a decision that will be based on all of these considerations.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DELAYS IN MAILING REMITTANCE FORMS

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a problem that a small business in my constituency is experiencing with Revenue Canada. A machinery dealer called Layton Green Incorporated, which operates out of Albany, P.E.I., has been fined by Revenue Canada for sending its taxation remittance forms in late for the months of January and February, 1983.

The taxation remittance forms, which are a record of paid deductions, in the form of Canada Pension Plan, unemployment insurance and income tax, which are deducted for the employees' salaries, must be sent to Revenue Canada in St. John's, Newfoundland, by the tenth of the following month. Layton Green Incorporated has, on occasion, not received these forms until on or past the due date. Therefore it is unable to have these forms mailed to St. John's on time. The firm is prompt in completing the forms and mailing them once they are received, but cannot help the fact that it does not receive the forms in time to meet the due date. It has been unjustly fined a percentage of what was listed in the taxation remittance forms for January and February, 1983.

I urge that Revenue Canada ensure that its taxation remittance forms are mailed in time to allow businesses to send them back before the tenth of the following month and not expect businesses to pay fines for a delay which Revenue Canada or Canada Post has caused.

DISARMAMENT

GOVERNMENT'S CONCERN FOR PEACE

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier): Madam Speaker, in view of the statements made by the New Democratic Party and groups of citizens concerned for peace, I would like to state in this House that I will march and work with pacifist movements when they demonstrate for disarmament in front of Communist countries' embassies as often and as strongly as they do in front of the Parliament buildings. As an elected Member of this House, it is my duty to preserve the fundamental values recognized by the Canadian Parliament, such as the freedom of speech. That is why I urge all Canadians concerned for world peace to denounce the presence of Soviet weapons and military advisors in Cuba if American assistance to El Salvador is to stop. I also urge them to protest against the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, the Soviet repression in Poland against union members and the Polish people, the installation of Soviet missiles in Syria and the presence of 330 SS-20 missiles with three war heads all aimed at European capitals.

Madam Speaker, the freedom we enjoy in our democratic countries cannot be based on the naïvety of unilateral pacifists. Working for peace is part of our duty as Canadian parliamentarians. That is why I would like all Members of this House to reflect seriously on the consequences of an intervention not intended to result in a controllable bilateral disarmament. Canada must continue to support this option which is the only valid one, so as to safeguard the freedom of all Canadian men and women.

AIR TRANSPORT

FEE CHARGED FOR LIGHT AIRCRAFT RADIO LICENCES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, last year a radio licence for a light aircraft was increased to $40 and representations were made to the Department and to the Minister, and it appeared that the price would be reduced in 1983. It has not been reduced, and again farmers and businessmen who operate light aircraft are being charged $40 for a licence for the radios in their aircraft while Canadian registered ocean liners, the largest ships afloat, operating out of Canadian ports, only pay $20 per annum.

In the United States there is no fee at all for licences for radios in aircraft because the Americans recognize that the radio is not an entertainment item but a safety item. The Canadian Government requires the radio, and then charges an excessive fee for the licence. These same farmers and businessmen are asked to apply the six and five restraint program to their operations, but the Government sticks them with this enormous increase.

I strongly urge the Minister to roll back this fee or, alternately, make it the fee for a five-year period or, better still, wipe it out altogether, as radio is an integral part of the aircraft. Will carburetors be licensed next? Surely the Government and the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) know that the private aircraft industry already contributes substantial sums of money to the federal Treasury through taxes collected for fuel, and also provides jobs. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is pleading with the private sector to co-operate. Here is an opportunity for the Government to show that co-operation is a two way street.

BANKS AND BANKING

PUBLIC RELATIONS EXERCISE—CONDEMNATION OF MAGAZINE ARTICLE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, today in The Globe and Mail we read how a bank magazine is telling bankers how to close down plants successfully, keep information away from Opposition MPs, manipulate the press, and hold press conferences away from the affected plants so the workers cannot respond. At a time when Bishops in Canada have talked about economic morality, it is disgusting and typical to see banks looking at PR techniques which are not concerned about the workers or the people who are suffering through foreclosures.

Madam Speaker, I call on the Canadian Bankers Association, which owns the magazine, to disavow that statement, to disavow any claim of authorship for the remarks made in that article. Canadians are suspicious of banks at a time when houses and farms are being foreclosed, but if they are going to allow that kind of article to stand it will be just another nail in the coffin of the Canadian banking system.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

NECESSITY TO AMEND MATERNITY BENEFIT PROVISIONS

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Last Friday, Madam Speaker, I was very interested and almost delighted to read the statement of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) concerning amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act with respect to maternity benefits. The night before, during a committee meeting, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) stated that he was prepared to introduce amendments with a view to including maternity benefits and other changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act if the New Democratic Party would agree to adopt that Bill quickly so as to enable the Government to implement those changes, keeping in mind the heavy work load of Parliament.

After that conciliatory offer by the Minister, Madam Speaker, we have yet to hear from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James whether his party would be prepared to agree to such amendments, and especially to give unanimous consent so that the Bill might be adopted as quickly as possible. Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is posing as the defender of women's interests throughout the country, so he should now give us a clear and final answer to pave the way for that Bill including those amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

NECESSITY FOR RESEARCH FUNDING

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, research and development are the essence of progress in any society. This truism, however, receives hardly any recognition in our country where research, and agricultural research in particular, are given second priority. As a result the challenges offered by developing new varieties and new crops and more productive ways of farming can be lost to us forever. This, in turn, will hamper Canada's future capability to catch up with increasingly competitive international markets and to meet the targets set up by our agri-food strategists.

It is essential that our researchers start now to build the foundations for research in subjects like genetic engineering, improved energy efficiency, and waste utilization.

Researchers and scientists have expressed their concern about the curtailment of research funding and the shortage of qualified staff. Yet Cabinet appears to turn a deaf ear to all the criticism and continues to defend cutbacks in research staff so badly needed and so short in supply.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is obviously aware of the publication by his own Department "Challenge for Growth—an Agri-food Strategy for Canada". The authors of the publication do not share the Minister's contentment with the status quo in our research, and point out losses in Canadian agriculture due to the inadequate support of research.

May I suggest that the Minister have a closer look at this document and familiarize himself with the lost opportunities.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—SUPPORT FOR RETENTION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to the misrepresentations being made by the Minister of Transport concerning Crow rate retention. The Minister told the House on Friday that retention is the position of only the New Democratic Party and the National Farmers Union. That is not so. Crow retention is also the position of a majority of grain producers and people of the West.

I can demonstrate this quite easily by referring to my own Prince Albert region, which is a typical grain growing area. To date I have received one single letter backing the Pepin proposal for Crow change. For Crow retention, I have tabled 3,500 signatures on petitions in the House and I have 2,000 individual endorsements of retention. I have also received specific letters backing retention from 23 towns, villages, and rural councils. They include the communities of Hudson Bay, Choiceland, Canwood, Marcelin, Rosthern, Carrot River and Shell Lake. The same support came from the rural municipalities of Kinistino, Spiritwood, Garden River, Kelvington, Ponass Lake, Arborfield, Buckland, Torch River, Willow Creek, Blaine Lake, Fleet's Springs, Canwood and Birch Hills.

The Council and Chamber of Commerce of the City of Prince Albert have also supported retention. This is support from one small segment of the Province of Saskatchewan. The essence of democracy is having the consent of the governed. The Minister has ignored that essence.

Madam Speaker: Order.

RACISM

ANTI-SEMITISM TAUGHT BY ALBERTA SCHOOLTEACHER

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it was with utter disbelief that I watched a report carried on the CBC Journal last night concerning the firing of an Alberta teacher, Mr. Keegstra, who had been teaching anti-Semitic trash to his students for over 14 years.

In an interview Mr. Keegstra confirmed his belief that Jewish conspirators had caused the French Revolution, the U.S. Civil War, the assasination of Lincoln, and he also trotted out the ridiculous allegation that the Jews had started the First and Second World Wars.

He went on to defend some of the ideas of Adolf Hitler, and even questioned whether the Holocaust had, in fact, occurred. He challenged the interviewer to produce the evidence.

What shocked and horrified me, and I speak as one who visited the Holocaust memorial in Jerusalem last month, was that, notwithstanding his own admission that he had been teaching his students this garbage, numerous school officials, including his principal, schoolboard officials, fellow teachers and officials of the Teacher's Association, had continued to defend his right for some time to continue teaching, on the assumption that it would stimulate discussion. As a Canadian and a Christian I was stunned to learn of this seeming indifference of responsible people in our school system to such blatant racism. Hopefully, we will all learn something from this sad episode, namely, that we must be ever vigilant to prevent the ugly seeds of racism in any form, including anti-Semitism, from poisoning the schoolchildren and the minds of our youth.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEFINITION OF HANDICAPPED PERSON

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, National Revenue has an interpretation bulletin number IT-225 which defines a handicapped person for income tax purposes. For its purposes, a handicapped person is one who is confined to a bed or wheelchair for more than 12 hours a day, a substantial part of the day or night. That is a definition not designed to help the handicapped but to help income tax officials make easy decisions in classifying people.

Some three and a half years ago this House unanimously passed a resolution during Private Member's Hour asking Finance officials to redefine that particular bulletin and change the definition of a handicapped person for income tax purposes. That still has to be done.

I note with interest that in the last budget presented by the Minister of Finance he has graciously doubled the deduction allowed to parents for educational purposes of their children because he wants to help comfortable, middle-class parents. Meanwhile, those parents who want to assume the responsibility for the training of their children who happen to be handicapped are left out and not taken care of.

It is time that the officials of the Tax Department of National Revenue took their responsibility seriously and looked beyond the pretty "obstacles" report which does not require the Government to do anything. It seems to me that the goal of this Government is to do all things that are pretty but that do not obligate it to spend any money.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—CONTRACT BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND GERMAN FIRM

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my first question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He will recall saying last February 18, as reported at page 22982 of Hansard, in answering questions and participating in debate with respect to the Coalgate coverup:

> This money was under the control of the Government of Nova Scotia.

He will also recall saying, as reported at page 23193 of Hansard:

> There is no direct or indirect payment to Mr. Gillespie of Government money.

Can the Minister say whether he was aware, at the time he made those and other statements, recorded in Hansard with respect to that matter, of the existence of the contract between the Government of Canada and Veba Oel Entwicklungs-Gesellschaft (Voeg) of Gelsenkirchen-Buer, in Germany, amounting to $17,000 of Canadian Government money going to this firm for the purpose of conducting a study with respect to the reduction of coal to oil for the Cape Breton Synfuels Project? Was he aware of that contract when he made those statements?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I was not aware of that contract, but I have checked the record today. Indeed, there was a contract with that company which was signed in January.

As the Hon. Member should know, there are about 20 liquefaction projects that have been studied over a long period of time with the help of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The nature of this contract was to make sure that the technique used by Veba was one that should be explored. In fact, none of the projects has taken that technique as a means to liquefy coal into natural gas. In fact this contract was signed so that this other form of liquefaction could be explored. We did that with a company which had the best experience, the one which operates in Germany.

The information that we have, or will be receiving from it, will make it possible for the Government to decide which is the best way to liquefy coal. Indeed, the study has proven so far that the Veba technique is even better than any of the others that have been proposed by the 20 different groups that have made proposals to the Canadian Government. The purpose was to explore a technique that had not been proposed by the Synfuels Projects or any of the other 19 projects that the Department was studying.

Mr. Nielsen: The length of that answer reminds me of Shakespeare, "Methinks thou doth protest too much." Simply translated, the answer is yes, the Minister was aware of the existence of the January 28 contract. It is passing strange that the only project for the liquefaction of coal happened to be in Cape Breton.

INQUIRY RESPECTING ANY KNOWLEDGE BY DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER OF CONTRACT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my next question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On February 21, 1983, as reported at page 23039 of Hansard, he said, when speaking of the funds with respect to the Coalgate coverup:

> The funds are not within the . . . decision of the Government of Canada.

Can he say at the time that he made that and other statements of record on Hansard, on this matter last February, whether he was aware of the January 28 signed contract between the Government of Canada and Veba Oel with respect to this matter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Madam Speaker, I was not aware of any such contract.

Mr. Nielsen: That rather surprises me because I thought that the Deputy Prime Minister was fully familiar with every aspect of this arrangement that was going to be conducted in his own riding.

My next question was to be for the Minister of Finance who is not here. He made similar statements last February.

• (1420)

REQUEST THAT CONTRACT BE TABLED

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my fourth question was for the Prime Minister who also made more emphatic statements, and he is not here. Therefore I will put my final question to the Minister of Supply and Services.

Is there available for tabling in the House the contract of January 28 between the Government of Canada and Veba Oel which allotted $17,000 of moneys of the Government of Canada for the purpose of investigating the feasibility of the liquefaction of coal for the Cape Breton project? If it is available, will the Minister please table it?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, a contract was indeed concluded at the request of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources between my Department and the Voeg Company of Germany for an amount of $17,000 and as this contract involved a marketable development in high technology, one of the terms of the contract was that it remain confidential.

[English]

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, this now seems to be a clear indication of the extension of the original coverup. We have the admission of the contract by the Minister of Energy, the admission of the contract by the Minister of Supply and Services, the bald statement by an officer of Veba Oel that that contract concerns the Cape Breton Synfuels project, and that project alone, and the Minister is now telling this House that he is not prepared to table the contract.

In view of this extension of the coverup, will the Deputy Prime Minister now reconsider what the Government refused us last February, namely, an investigation of this whole affair by a standing committee of this House so that we can have that contract produced, get to the bottom of the facts in this case, and wipe aside this continual coverup of the Coalgate affair?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan. J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member had received all the information he required.

Mr. Nielsen: You didn't tell us about this one.

Mr. MacEachen: I was going to say there were bushels of documents tabled in the House by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—

Mr. Nielsen: You didn't tell us about this one.

Mr. MacEachen: —with respect to the synfuels project that may occur at some point, hopefully, on the island of Cape Breton. I do not see what additional information the Hon. Member could possibly want.

Mr. Nielsen: Just the contract.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON USE OF FEDERAL FUNDS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In February when this Coalgate affair came up, the first excuse the Government provided was that it was outside the two-year quarantine period. When that would not stand up to examination, the Deputy Prime Minister said that the guidelines were really just guidelines and not rules. When that would not stand up the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said not a cent was coming out of the federal Consolidated Revenue Fund, that the money was all coming out of the Nova Scotia Consolidated Revenue Fund. We now find that third and final answer does not stand up to examination either.

Will the Minister, who said he did not know about this contract, at least have the decency to stand up and withdraw the statements he made in February that, in fact, no federal funds were spent on this project from which Mr. Gillespie stands to make so much profit?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member wants to stir a controversy about nothing. I said there were 20 projects—and I have the list here—of different organizations in Canada that proposed to the Department and engaged with the Department in a liquefaction process for Canadian coal. There are universities and research groups all across Canada. None of these 20 groups has proposed to the federal Government this technique that has been used effectively in Germany by that company for over 50 years. The Department said it was just normal to find out whether this technique would apply to the 20 projects. We had a contract with the operators of the technique in Germany for the amount of money revealed. They have processed some coal to make natural gas. The technique was to be asserted against all the 20 projects, not only the one referred to by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Nielsen: There was only one.

Mr. Chrétien: If Hon. Members want, I could read into the record the 20 other groups that have had some liquefaction projects under study with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, the Minister is trying to get us to believe there are 20 groups looking at Cape Breton coal. The scientist with Voeg, Ulrich Graeser, said that his understanding of his discussions here in Ottawa was that the test was for the Cape Breton synfuels project, Mr. Gillespie's project—the project he is continuing to cover up. The Minister is in danger of extending his misinformation to this House, in danger of misleading the House even more than he has, if he continues on that line.

REQUEST THAT CONTRACT BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated when he tabled his documents that all documents relevant to the Cape Breton synfuels project had been tabled.

Mr. Nielsen: Not this one.

Mr. Andre: We now know that was an inaccurate statement. If the Minister did not deliberately mislead the House at that time, will he admit that he did not have all of the documents because of his lack of information, and will he now carry through on his commitment and make sure that contract is a part of the documents revealed to the public?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I said earlier that we are dealing with 20 different coal liquifaction projects to transform coal into natural gas. We received various proposals and the scientists of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources noticed that none of the groups involved had suggested the Veba system. They therefore concluded that, in order to have a realistic view of the whole situation, the possible application of this system to Canadian coal in the 20 projects submitted to us had to be determined. With this in mind, a contract was signed with this company to determine whether the German Veba system might be adapted Canadian coal. Cape Breton coal was sent to the company. Alberta or British Columbia coal could also have been sent. Moreover, the studies show that the project mentioned by the Hon. Member this afternoon was not the only one involving Nova Scotia coal. Once again, I would like to point out that this project is not directly related to Synfuels, since it was a comprehensive study that included the 20 projects. I stand by what I said during the debate last February. Since then, I have tabled all relevant documents in my possession concerning the facts directly related to the Synfuels project.

INCOME TAX

SHIFT IN IMPACT ON LOWER INCOME LEVELS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I want to raise a real scandal with the Prime Minister. The Government expects to recover $4 billion from Canadian taxpayers over the next four years by reducing the benefits from the federal Tax Reduction Allowance. It is quite clear that this will shift the burden from those who can afford to pay to many who cannot afford to pay.

For example, a family earning $15,000 a year will be faced with a 281.9 per cent increase; a family earning $20,000 a year will be faced with a 22 per cent increase, and a family earning $100,000 will face only a 1.3 per cent increase. Surely the Prime Minister recognizes this is regressive, that this shifts the burden of tax from those who can afford to pay to those who cannot afford to pay. Is the Prime Minister prepared to reconsider this move in an effort to try to balance the tax burden in Canada.?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the point raised by the Hon. Member really was the thrust of an article appearing in The Globe and Mail this morning which put it in terms of regressivity. I would urge the Hon. Member to consider that his reference is merely to one aspect of the budget. He must consider, for example, the result of the budget in providing some additional 600,000 jobs to Canadians of low and moderate income, between 1982 and 1984. This is of importance to those Canadians looking for help or for the ability not only to pay taxes at whatever rate but the ability to have meaningful and well paid jobs, or jobs, period.

• (1430)

I urge the Hon. Member to consider that the major thrust of the budget with all its changes is geared to providing meaningful employment to thousands of Canadians who will then be in positions to address the issue of minor changes in tax structures.

Mr. Deans: If the Minister should ever rise again to answer a question, perhaps he might consider why those who can afford it are being asked to pay less in this effort to provide jobs for people, and those who cannot afford it are being asked to pay substantially more.

TAX REDUCTION SOUGHT FOR AVERAGE WORKERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I want to return to the Prime Minister, if I may. Two years ago the Government similarly reduced the tax rate for those people in upper income brackets. It lowered the tax rate by nine points for those persons earning $134,000 or more. At the time the Government said that this was compensated for by the closing of loopholes. Quite clearly the budget of the former Minister of Finance did not in fact close the loopholes; many of them were left in place.

Is the Prime Minister now prepared to consider, given that we need jobs and that Canadians must be able to purchase in consumer products manufactured in Canada, a similar kind of tax reduction for average Canadians who are working hard but are only earning $15,000 or $20,000 per year?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is being very selective in his choice of initiatives in the budget and his analysis of the budget of 1981. For example, he did not take into account the employment expense deduction for lower income workers which was specifically requested by members of his caucus. Representations were made specifically to the Minister of Finance on that particular change in income tax. He did not take into account the child benefit system and the increased child care expense deductions in the budget. He totally ignored them. He gave us a one-sided imbalanced picture of the budget. I wish he would be more forthcoming in those areas where there is assistance over and above providing jobs to Canadians of low and middle income.

Mr. Deans: It is apparent that I will have to deal with this Minister anyway.

TAX BURDEN OF LOWER INCOME GROUPS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, will the Minister explain why people earning $15,000 or $20,000 a year should be asked to carry far more of the burden of cost than those earning $100,000 a year and above?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I thought I indicated that the provisions of the budget—for example those provisions dealing with incentives for housing—are designed not only to provide affordable housing to Canadians, not only to provide jobs for Canadians in the construction and repair of housing, but to provide grants of $3,000, for example, for Canadians buying homes and grants of $3,000 for Canadians of low and moderate income. These grants are not reflected in the figures about which the Hon. Member has talked.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: They are immediate benefits available to Canadians which impact upon their income, upon their ability to pay taxes and, more important, upon their ability to have employment and to have affordable homes.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS ON FEDERAL FUNDING

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister made reference to funding for the liquefaction process applying to 20 companies, yet I have in my hand a Cabinet document dated September 13, 1982. It is a memorandum to Ministers on the financial, energy and regional development implications of supporting a coal liquefaction facility in Cape Breton Island. It made two recommendations to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. One was an offer to the consortium—and we are talking here about Scotia Coal Synfuels—"of additional federal financial support for a technical re-evaluation of the project, focusing particularly upon processes which would utilize higher ratios of natural gas to coal and offer a higher saleable product yield". That is the end of the quotation from the Cabinet briefing document of September 13, 1982, just about the time the Minister was assuming his present responsibility.

Also I have a letter of January 7 from Mr. Gillespie—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member cannot quote from too many documents. He should be asking his question. I am sure from the quotes he is now trying to give the House that he could just ask his question, not give the quotes.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, very simply I want to ask the Minister how he reconciles that with his reply in the House today to the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre, and also with the replies in the House in February, whereby the Government explicitly denied that there was any direct or indirect federal funding to this project.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the contract with Veba was undertaken in order to have a new technique that could apply to the 20 projects. It was not directed to the synfuel project. It was to know this technology that none of the 20 project sponsors had discussed in their presentations to the Government.

Mr. Nielsen: Table the contract.

Mr. Chrétien: We wanted to know what was possible with that other technology, and to have the information from the ones who controlled the technology, the German firm. This is why we signed a contract with them. We wanted information to permit us to evaluate the 20 projects as presented to the Government.

MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF CONTRACT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, could the Minister tell us specifically—and I am making reference to the replies in the House on February 21 as reported at page 23042 of Hansard—when he became aware of this particular contract for $17,000 which was signed in January with a West German firm specifically in aid of the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I learned about this contract yesterday.

LETTER FROM ALASTAIR GILLESPIE—PURPOSE OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The question before the House is not the matter of Mr. Gillespie's involvement but the question of whether or not Ministers must tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, in this House—the question of morality in Government.

Mr. Gillespie suggested to Dr. Phillip Read in a letter of January 7, 1981, that the particular German company, Voeg, which is the one we are talking about, should be consulted at a preliminary stage. He said, "Phase I is a technical and economic evaluation of the proven process, Sasol, and near term processes under development particularly in the United States by the Department of Energy and others, and at least one in Germany." Will the Minister not now admit that moneys have been spent by the Government, not through Nova Scotia, but directly for the benefit of Mr. Gillespie's project?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, it is to the contrary. The Gillespie project was proposing a different technique and we wanted to know about all techniques. We wanted to find out if the German technique could apply in the Canadian situation, if it would be useful in all the projects, not only Synfuels but every one of them. I mentioned 20 different projects—some in British Columbia, some in Alberta, some in Ontario and some in Nova Scotia—that were proposing liquefaction as a technique to utilize coal. We wanted to know about the Veba technology. We signed a contract with that company to know if the technology could apply to every one of the projects in Canada, not only the Synfuels one.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Minister in effect is calling Mr. Graeser of Voeg and Mr. James Kelly of the coal liquefaction section of his own Department liars. That is really what it is when he says that this was not to be used for Mr. Gillespie's benefit and project.

MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister in terms of information given to the House how many times the Minister is able to mislead the House, and how many times he is able to give us wrong information before the Prime Minister asks for his resignation.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have been very candid with the House. I know the Hon. Member likes to indulge in dirt throwing. I will not go to his level. I would rather be cleaner. I gave the explanation which I received from the officials of my Department today, that there were 20 projects and that we wanted to know about this German technology. If he wants to play in the dirt, he will be alone.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—NEGOTIATION OF PEACE—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with Central America. I would like to tell the Prime Minister that I was very happy with his statements in the press conference in which he indicated that Canada had a separate and distinct policy in Central America, but I was extremely unhappy with what I would call the wishy-washy approach that came out of his meetings in Washington.

Yesterday, Guillermo Ungo, President of the Democratic Revolutionary Front in El Salvador, in a press statement, declared that the United States has a right to stop the spread of communism. That is true. That is what Ungo said. What is the Government of Canada prepared to do now to help the initiatives to bring about negotiations in the El Salvadoran war?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, since I had that meeting last week with the President, I do not believe we have taken any recent initiatives. I indicated that our position was one of support for the President of the United States when he suggested that all parties be party to an agreement not to interfere in any way in Central America. I remind the Hon. Member that his Leader, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, said that he agreed with President Reagan on that.

Mr. Ogle: I think what my Leader was agreeing with was staying out of the situation.

LATIN AMERICAN COUNTRIES' PEACE INITIATIVE

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, this morning I was informed by the Nicaraguan Embassy that a new wave of 1,200 men, including Hondurans, is invading Nicaragua at this time. Last week I spoke to Bishop Raul Corriveau, a Canadian bishop in Honduras in the Diocese of Choluteca. He informed me that in that region next to the Honduran border there are some Somocista camps, as well as an airport taking in supplies. Would the Prime Minister of Canada be willing to have Canada take more serious initiatives to become involved with the Contadora Pact, a group of nations trying to bring about a peaceful solution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware that a group of Latin American countries—Mexico, Venezuela, Panama, and Columbia I believe—have taken some initiatives to try to bring peace to the area. That seems to be a very worth-while initiative. We hope that they in some way wish to assist all of us to achieve the end that apparently the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Government, and President Reagan agree on, the end that there be no outside interference in the area. Certainly we are willing to assist in the attaining of that objective.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—EXPENDITURE OF FEDERAL FUNDS—POSSIBLE BENEFIT TO ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It relates back to the liquefaction project. Throughout the questioning in February on this issue the Prime Minister kept insisting that the money was not federal money, but in fact came from Nova Scotia. As reported at page 22982 of Hansard for February 18, 1983, among other things the Prime Minister said, "These funds were the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the Government of Nova Scotia." It is quite clear now that the federal Government in fact did sign agreements, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources just finished stating that they wanted this information and that it could apply to all projects and, therefore, would also apply to the Gillespie project as well, no matter how he puts it.

How could the Prime Minister make the statement on February 18 that it was Nova Scotia money, not federal money, and therefore there was no benefit to Mr. Gillespie, and yet today we find that the federal government has committed at least $17,000 to Veba Oel Entwicklungs-Gesellschaft?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have not followed this question enough today to know that any funds have been paid to Mr. Gillespie. I have not gathered that in the questions asked or in the answers given. Is there an allegation that Mr. Gillespie has received some of this money that the federal Government has paid to this German company?

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has constantly been saying that there was no federal money and, therefore, there was no direct or indirect benefit to Mr. Gillespie. He said both. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources now says that they wanted to know this technique because it could apply to various projects, and obviously the Gillespie project would be one of them, so that is both a direct and indirect benefit to Mr. Gillespie. How can the Prime Minister keep insisting that his Government, signing contracts and committing federal funds, is not giving any of these benefits directly to Mr. Gillespie?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I must apologize again, Madam Speaker. I am really not conversant with the details of this, but just listening to the questions of the Hon. Member it seems to me a little bit fanciful to suggest that if some research company discovers knowledge which will be available to all Canadians that in some way is a benefit paid to Mr. Gillespie by the federal Government, directly or indirectly. Is that what the Hon. Member is saying?

CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING SIGNING OF CONTRACT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. The Minister is obviously aware of the existence of the $17,000 contract which was signed in late January. Did the Minister then undertake to advise the Prime Minister, and indeed other Members of the Cabinet, of the existence of this contract? If so, what was the Prime Minister's response? If he did not advise him, why did he choose not to do so?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the contract is a relatively small contract. The Hon. Member will note it is for $17,000. It is a contract which would have been negotiated and executed by my officials in accordance with their delegated authority. Therefore, I was not made aware of this contract until this morning, which is the normal course of events because it became a matter of inquiry by the press.

I might indicate, as was indicated by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that the contract is one of many that my Department has negotiated in the research and development area, indeed, in the liquefaction research area. I can name a number of others. I have a list here: Nova Scotia Research Foundation Corporation, Catalytic Enterprises Limited of Sarnia, University of Regina, Sandwell-Beak Research Group, Toronto, University of Victoria, Ontario Ministry of Energy—

Madam Speaker: Order.

INQUIRY RESPECTING MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Supply and Services is clearly aware of the Cabinet document dated September 13 which offered the consortium the kind of funding assistance to which he has referred. When this issue was raised in the House of Commons in February, the Cape Breton coal liquefaction project, several of the Minister's colleagues denied that any federal funds were spent on behalf of that project.

We have before us an admission by a representative of the Germany company with which the contract was made that, indeed, the contract will have a direct relationship and direct bearing upon the Cape Breton coal liquefaction project. The Minister should have had the knowledge that this contract was awarded, if he was doing his job. Having regard to the statements in the House of Commons, why did the Minister not undertake to apprise himself of the contracts that would have been signed? Why did he not attempt to set the record straight rather than acquiesce in and foster the kind of coverup in which his Cabinet colleagues and the Prime Minister were engaged?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman must know, having read the release that he received in his office yesterday, that in the month of March alone my Department dealt with more than $36 million worth of research and development contracts. There are a large number of contracts that we negotiate on behalf of Energy, Mines and Resources on a regular basis. Indeed, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is involved in acquiring technology in the areas of its interest, including coal liquefaction.

There is nothing unusual about this contract. The amounts were payable to the German company. There are a large number of contracts that have a clause which protects the confidentiality of the dealings between the parties because of the sensitive nature of the technology that is being acquired by the Government of Canada. There is nothing unusual about that.

In terms of this particular technology, and this company, West Coast Transmission had a contract with this company with reference to this technology, for testing western coal. The Saskatchewan Oil and Gas Corporation evaluated its own lignite coals as a result of the use of this particular technology. Does the hon. gentleman across the way suggest that Mr. Gillespie was somehow involved in that particular transaction as well?

• (1450)

REQUEST THAT CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO CONTRACT BE TABLED

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. He has indicated that his officials negotiated a contract with the West German company. Am I correct in presuming that related to or pertinent to that contract was correspondence between the company in West Germany and his Department, and likely between Energy, Mines and Resources and that company? If that presumption is correct, would the Minister then undertake to table the correspondence related to or pertinent to that contract?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, usually the exchanges that are sensitive are embodied in communications of all sorts. I will review the terms of the contract to see if any of the communications can be transmitted.

Mr. Jarvis: Correspondence.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, that is the current practice, including correspondence. I wish to reiterate, though, that the contract was a perfectly normal contract like a large number of contracts of similar kind that my Department has negotiated.

CONTENTS OF CONTRACT

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): I look forward to the Minister's review of that correspondence and its eventual tabling. With respect to the contract itself, the Minister has said that the only reason for his refusal to table was the sensitive marketing conditions contained in the terms of the contract. I therefore ask the Minister of Supply and Services if he would be willing to table that contract having deleted therefrom those provisions related only to marketing, the apparent reason that the Minister is unwilling to table the document.

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, something has obviously been lost in the translation. The sensitive issue did not relate only to marketing, but to all the technology exchanged between the various parties, and if Canada is to acquire a share of the world technological market, Members opposite will have to recognize that we must often meet the requirements of the exporters of this technology in order to protect the confidentiality of the information given to us.

HOUSING

ACCOMMODATION FOR OLDER WOMEN

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment I direct my question to the Minister responsible for housing. My question concerns a task force on older women, the recommendations of which were released today. The task force made a number of very important recommendations, one of which concerns the lack of affordable housing and accommodation for women, particularly women in their middle years who are living alone, as well as older women on pensions. There is a great need for affordable housing for these women. I would ask the Minister if he will study the recommendations in this report and consult the CMHC to provide special priority for funding to the particular housing needs of older women, including renovations of existing homes, and more accommodation for single women in their middle years, as most of the present accommodation is for families or pensioners, and a number of other specific recommendations.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have not yet seen this report but I will obviously look at its recommendations to see if we can go some way toward implementing the Hon. Member's suggestions.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR OLDER WOMEN

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and concerns the recommendations regarding extension of employment opportunities for older women. We on the task force were told that older women wanted jobs so they can remain independent and so that they can pay into the Canada Pension Plan. They have raised Canada's children and they now want a fair break. They want a job and they want a paycheque. I know the Minister has some programs in effect, but will he give higher priority to employment strategies for mature women, and will he also expand training and support services, help to change the prejudiced attitudes of employers, and expand essential community service jobs in other fields of employment that are particularly relevant to older women?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question I would say that I certainly agree with the sentiments expressed in that report. That particular group of people in our society is a group that does deserve special attention.

I would like to point out, Madam Speaker, that in the past year we have substantially expanded employment services directly targeted for women who are in those circumstances. We have opened some 10 special women's employment centres in major metropolitan centres, and we have also expanded the Outreach Program for women from some 14 projects to some 33 projects, all designed to provide that kind of support, counselling and guidance. I would also report to the House that, under the new National Training Act, we are now in consultation and discussion with women's groups across Canada to develop strategy related to women and training. I hope to be in a position to bring forward the details of that strategy some time in the next month or two.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL REVENUE

INCOME TAX FORMS—SUGGESTED USE OF GRAPHICS TO ASSIST ILLITERATE

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Movement for Canadian Literacy states that 70 per cent of Canadians read so poorly that they cannot understand information brochures sent them in the mail by governments.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): The Movement for Canadian Literacy also states that nearly seven million Canadians are unable to complete their income tax returns for the same reason. In view of the complicated nature of the income tax form and tax brochures, will the Minister consider implementing in his Department the graphics approach to the income tax return form that I had illustrated and demonstrated for his predecessor?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, naturally, I would appreciate any simplification of the forms that taxpayers must complete to file their income tax returns, and if the Hon. Member has any suggestion, I shall be very happy to listen to him.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—ORIGIN OF COAL TESTED BY GERMAN FIRM

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. The Minister of Energy has suggested that there were 20 companies involved in the consortium that were interested in the Synfuels Project and the research project. Does the Minister of Energy know the difference in the chemical composition of coal deposits from Province to Province and from deposit to deposit, the difference in sulphur content, the difference in hydrogen carbon ratios, and does he know whether or not it was coal from the Cape Breton area that was to be tested?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): That is what I said, Madam Speaker. In this case, the coal sent to the German company came from Cape Breton, but in fact, there have been several Cape Breton coal liquefaction projects involving several companies and not only Synfuels. There have been other similar projects, and since the chemical composition of coal from one place can be completely different from that of coal from somewhere else, it was important for us to know whether the German method could be used with Canadian coal. The German company made its first test on Cape Breton coal, but additional tests could be carried out later on Alberta or British Columbia coal.

[English]

POSSIBILITY OF REGIONAL BENEFIT

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Will the Minister at least admit that the most direct benefit that could be gained by this project would be for the area where the deposit came from and for the consortium that is applying for that Synfuels Project?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I believe that every region that has coal would benefit from the application of that technology. Of course, if they had received the coal from Cape Breton first, we would have had that information first. I concede that point, but it is completely outside the scope of the Synfuels Project. It was meant to equip the Department with enough information to appreciate the value of all of the projects.

While I am on my feet, may I say I am very surprised to see all these people who propose to support the Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), who is involved in having children of seven years of age voting at the convention, being sanctimonious today. That makes me sick.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEWIS—SCOTIA COAL SYNFUELS PROJECT—REPLIES GIVEN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising from responses today by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) and the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais), especially in response to questions which were raised in the House in February of this year. Each of these Ministers of the Crown has misled the House with respect to the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project and the financial role of the federal Government.

• (1500)

There is no obligation on any Minister to answer a question posed in this House. We are even prepared to admit that there was no intention to mislead the House in this case. But surely when Ministers answer questions about their areas of responsibility, they are obliged to make sure that those answers are as accurate and truthful as possible. That obligation is on every Minister of the House. It is incumbent on them to make sure of this when something comes to their attention or when they have tabled a document and have said, as did the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on February 24, as reported at page 23193 of Hansard:

> Yesterday I tabled in the House—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member seems to be raising a question of privilege because he feels that some of the facts given to him by certain Ministers are not exactly accurate. I must remind the Hon. Member that a dispute arising between two Members on an allegation of facts does not fulfil the requirements of parliamentary privilege according to Article 19 of Beauchesne.

Hon. Members know that these disputes about facts are marvellous subjects for debate, but they do not meet the requirements necessary to raise a question of privilege in the House. I would urge the Hon. Member to try to ascertain the facts through other means, namely through Question Period, which was abundantly done in the course of today's Question Period.

There will be other occasions when the Hon. Member will be able to find out about the facts or even to prove that they are not accurate, but this cannot be done through a question of privilege. I am sure he knows that.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate your suggestion, Madam Speaker. Specifically on February 24 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said:

> Yesterday I tabled in the House all the documents I had in my possession.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is simply continuing his remarks. Will the Hon. Member please resume his seat. I can see the Hon. Member is simply continuing his presentation. He was interrupted precisely at that part of his presentation for a very good reason. I felt to begin with that he was arguing a potential question of privilege. I have now told him that he does not have grounds for a question of privilege so I cannot see how he can continue to argue it. At any rate, the argumentation of a question of privilege cannot take place in the first instance, only when the Speaker has found a prima facie case of privilege.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: No, the Hon. Member cannot keep getting up and arguing. There is no question of privilege in these particular circumstances. The Hon. Member has to accept that. Those are the rules.

Is the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Chair first. I thought I was aware of the precedents. I recall in particular a decision by the then Speaker, the Hon. James Jerome, on a question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) regarding whether it is a breach of the privileges of the House for a Minister of the Crown deliberately to mislead the House. That arose in the kind of paradox that we are in today, because it is contrary to the rules to make an accusation of deliberately misleading—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker reads minds?

Madam Speaker: I have determined there is no question of privilege in the presentation made by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North. The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre is talking about some precedent which might have occurred in the past and is asking a question of the Speaker. The Speaker does not teach procedure in the House, only indirectly through an accumulation of the knowledge that can come out of the rules. The Speaker certainly is not going to answer a question from the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre on some hypothetical situation which might occur in the House or one which has occurred in the past on which he wants me to comment. This is not the role of the Speaker. That is why I am interrupting the Hon. Member.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I have a point of order. I should like to serve notice that my privileges as a Member may have been breached because I am unable to make argument; and Madam Speaker is reaching a decision about my argument before she hears the argument. That is a breach of my privileges.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry. I just want to remind the Hon. Member that he prefaced his presentation with "First I want to ask a question of the Speaker". I have told the Hon. Member that I will not answer questions about matters of procedure; I rule only on matters of procedure. I do not answer questions on matters of procedure. Members are at liberty to study procedure and come into the House and make points of procedure, but the Speaker does not answer questions on procedure.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. LEWIS—MOTION OF MR. EPP ON PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I gave you notice of this point of order earlier.

Notwithstanding the provisions of any Standing Order, I rise seeking the unanimous consent of the House to restore to the Order Paper the motion moved by my colleague the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), and negatived by the House yesterday, which called for the inclusion of property rights in the Charter of Rights.

On behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition I would be prepared to offer that an Opposition Day be turned over to the consideration of the motion, and that, at the end of the day, the motion be deemed to have been referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; that the Committee report thereon no later than June 7, 1983; and that the said report be disposed of no later than June 30, 1983.

If unanimous consent is forthcoming, Madam Speaker, I would be prepared to move that motion at this time. I point out to the catcallers on the other side that there have been discussions with the Government House Leader and he may wish to reply to this proposal.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, basically, the proposal is acceptable to the Government. However, those of my colleagues who expressed certain reservations were quite right to do so, since it is not clear from the proposed wording that the motion would not challenge the confidence of the House in the Government. When we spoke a while ago, I suggested to my colleague a version that would dissipate any doubt in this respect and that would make it abundantly clear that the motion would not be considered as a motion of non-confidence in the Government. Therefore, if that aspect were included, the proposal would be far more acceptable than it is now.

Furthermore, the proposal is also acceptable, and again I say basically, since the wording used to include property rights in the Constitution is substantially that proposed by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) himself. And it is also basically acceptable because everything would be settled before the end of June. However, I had one reservation regarding the debate on the report prepared by the committee, and I believe my colleague, the Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), agreed with my suggestion to limit debate to a maximum of one day. Therefore, if my hon. colleague has in fact agreed, this should be included in the text, with the indication that the motion is not to be considered as a motion of non-confidence.

Finally, I think it is important that at tomorrow's meeting of Parliamentary House Leaders, we should decide whether, even if the Opposition relinquishes an Opposition Day, it would be in order for an Opposition Member to move the motion. It could be moved by the Government and seconded by the Opposition parties. That is a matter that should be discussed. We could also proceed on a day set aside for Private Members' Business. Therefore, as far as the minor but significant details are concerned, I think the text should be improved, but basically, in any event, we are in full agreement with the Official Opposition.

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I wondered why the House Leaders for the Government and the Official Opposition were sneaking around behind the curtain; now it becomes clear. I had delivered to me not five minutes ago the proposal that they have been discussing for a while. I will need some time to discuss it with my caucus before we give any response to the request.

• (1510)

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I would like to make it clear to my colleague that I have never refused a House Leader, whether of the Official Opposition or of the New Democratic Party, the opportunity to come and talk to me. The proposal comes from the House Leader of the Tory Party (Mr. Lewis). He came and talked to me. I took it for granted that he would talk to the House Leader of the NDP (Mr. Deans). In so far as I am concerned I would never refuse to talk to the hon. gentleman or refuse to talk to the House Leader of the Opposition. They are making the proposition. I am willing to listen.

The Hon. Member says he wants to consult his caucus. That is fine with me. We have a House Leaders' meeting tomorrow at 1.30; therefore he will have the time to consult with his caucus tomorrow morning.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, the whole idea of the discussion between myself and the Government House Leader was to try to reach some agreement which would bring property rights into the Constitution. The position of the NDP on this matter has been well known for some time. As a matter of respect to the Speaker and this House, we do meet behind the curtains, but we do not meet with sneaks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, there are two questions which have not been answered with respect to the questions put by the Government House Leader. First, we make very clear that in giving up one of our Opposition days to the Government, the relinquishment of that day would not carry a vote and would not be considered as a want of confidence motion. The vote is not attached. Second, his suggestion with respect to the report stage lasting one day is acceptable to us, particularly in light of the fact that there would be almost six or seven weeks of committee study on top of the several months which have already gone by in discussing the matter before the Special Joint Committee of the House and the Senate and in the House itself. I believe those are the two conditions which he mentioned. To set his mind at rest, it will not be a want of confidence matter; and we are perfectly agreeable to the one day at report stage.

Mr. Pinard: Very briefly, Madam Speaker, if it is that clear, I suppose the hon. gentleman will have no opposition to being included in the text of the motion that it is not a non-confidence motion, and that not more than one day will be required once the report is made. The only point left which I raise is that if we are to proceed on Government time, even if it is a day given by the Opposition, we might want to discuss tomorrow who should move the motion. Since we are dealing with this on Government time, I have never seen a motion moved by an Opposition Member. The question will be, therefore, should it be moved by the Government, seconded by the Opposition, the two Opposition Parties, or should we proceed on a Wednesday on Private Members' Business? That remains to be settled.

Mr. Nielsen: As for Private Members' Business, we cannot answer for that. That is a matter for Private Members and not any Party. However, with respect to the formalities of moving the motion, it really does not make any difference to us. The main thing is to have property rights entrenched in the Constitution. Since it was our idea initially, we would be perfectly happy to have the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or a Minister of the Crown move the motion and we can second it. In all other respects, with respect to the intervention by the Government House Leader, nous sommes d'accord.

Mr. Pinard: In that case, Madam Speaker, it is clear. Provided that consent on the three points is included in the motion, there is absolutely no problem with us. We agree and we are proud because the wording is that which was proposed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself at the beginning.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, we will certainly give this proposition all the consideration it deseves. As you know, Madam Speaker, we are very eager to see the rights of Canadians to own their own homes and farms in the Constitution, and we will do whatever we can to expedite getting that right into the Constitution. I will be in a position on behalf of this caucus to meet with the two—

An Hon. Member: Sneaks.

Mr. Deans: —fellows from the other Parties to discuss a suitable way of accomplishing this tomorrow. Until then I hope to be able to have time to look at the implications and determine whether there are any further negotiations required in order to come up with a satisfactory motion which will satisfy everyone's needs.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Speaker is certainly not against the House Leaders of the different Parties reaching an agreement on certain matters. However, it seems to me that a lot of negotiation has taken place on the floor of the House. Indeed, the real place for those negotiations to take place is either behind the curtains or in somebody's office. I understand that there is no point in my asking if there is unanimous consent; more negotiations must take place and I take note of that.

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—REPLIES GIVEN DURING ADJOURNMENT DEBATE UNSATISFACTORY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order which arises out of the proceedings last evening during the adjournment debate. My understanding of the adjournment debate is that it is to permit an Hon. Member who has a question to obtain more information during the adjournment debate than is possible during the Question Period. I had hoped to put a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) in Question Period on April 27, but he was not present. The question was taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), who misheard my question, I suppose. In any event, he did not answer it. I therefore asked if I might go on the adjournment debate.

Last evening the Adjournment Debate took place, and believe it or not, Madam Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lang), who knows even less about West Coast fisheries than the Secretary of State for External Affairs, stood in his place to answer my question. He was the only Hon. Member on that side during these discussions and I felt it right and proper to bring to his attention through Hansard, and I am bringing it to your attention, Madam Speaker, as a point of order, that this is not a very satisfactory way to have the adjournment debate. One is not getting the amplification in the answers to the questions one has put—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member might have a very legitimate grievance but it certainly is not a point of order. It has nothing to do with any rules having been transgressed. The Hon. Member obviously is not satisfied with the kind of debate which he was able to have last evening, but perhaps he will seek an occasion to provoke that debate at some other time and I trust that he will then receive satisfaction.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would just like to point out that the Parliamentary Secretary was in fact speaking for the Government last night.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Do I take it, Madam Speaker, that I must raise this question as a question of privilege in order to obtain satisfaction in the House?

Madam Speaker: No, that is not what the Hon. Member should understand from what I just said. I told him he did not have a point of order. I told him that he possibly had a grievance. He can pursue that grievance in other circumstances, but it is not a question of privilege. A grievance is not a question of privilege; the Hon. Member knows that. I would refer him to the authors, whom he knows as well as I do, in order to refresh his mind as to what does constitute a question of privilege; but a grievance does not. Dissatisfaction with the manner in which a debate has taken place in the House of Commons certainly is not a question of privilege. I can understand the Hon. Member's frustration. I can sympathize with it, but I cannot hear him on a question of privilege nor even on a point of order.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,568 and 4,729.

[Text]

CONFECTIONERY MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

Question No. 4,568—Mr. Hawkes:

1. Did the Minister of National Health and Welfare write a letter to Mr. E. J. Korhomem, President of the Confectionery Manufacturers Association of Canada, dated October 14, 1982 and, if so, is the Prime Minister aware of this fact?

2. Does the Prime Minister and his Cabinet condone the implied threat of unspecified government action that is inherent in the letter and, if not, what action does the Prime Minister intend to take to reassure Canadian companies and their employees that they will not be subjected to ministerial threats for obeying the laws of Canada?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. As a result of this question and consequent inquiries, the Prime Minister is now aware that the Minister of National Health and Welfare wrote a letter to Mr. E. J. Korhomem, President of the Confectionery Manufacturers Association of Canada, on October 14, 1982.

2. Having examined a copy of the letter in question, the Prime Minister sees only an appeal to Mr. Korhomem for his assistance in achieving the government's objective of not encouraging Canadian children to take up the tobacco smoking habit in later life; a habit that creates serious health risks.

INCOME TAX

Question No. 4,729—Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton):

1. How many senior citizens were required to pay income tax quarterly in 1982?

2. What amount of revenue was generated from installment payments by senior citizens in 1982?

3. What amount of revenue was generated in penalties from senior citizens who did not properly make installment payments in 1982?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Data for the 1982 taxation year are not yet available. The data for the 1981 taxation year are as follows:

1. 312,389 senior citizens were required to remit installments on a quarterly basis.

2. Amount of revenue generated from installment payments: $720,422,778

3. Amount of revenue generated from installment interest: $31,479,968

[English]

Mr. Smith: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. Although it is drawing to a close, there are still certain points deserving public attention.

First of all, I should like to commend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) for bringing forward an excellent document which has gained almost general acceptance. Of course, such acceptance stems from the fact that many Canadians have rightfully claimed to be the authors of one part or another of that document.

[English]

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it has never been previously my experience that so many individuals and groups of Canadians have claimed some portion of the budget as their own. Within our own Liberal Party caucus we have had indications from individual Members of Parliament that such and such a measure was included in the budget as a result of their intervention. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, even Members on the other side have claimed some authorship. No doubt that is because there has been a large measure of consultation.

I want to give some examples. Two Opposition Members who spoke yesterday in this House indeed indicated previously their approbation of the budget. I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the Midland Free Press in which the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) described the budget thus:

The MP said Tuesday he was pleased with the Government's plan to expand the mandate of the Federal Business Development Bank. The FBDB will provide greater support for small business and include a new investment banking capability to help meet the capital needs of promising small companies.

"That's what small business is looking for," said Lewis.

The MP also was pleased with the phasing out of the standard $100 tax deduction claimed in lieu of itemized deductions for charitable donations and medical expenses.

The lifting of existing limits on investment tax credits is "healthy," said Lewis, the Conservative House Leader.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that with that sort of endorsement we will see the Opposition House Leader vote with the Liberal Party and the Government on the occasion of the final adoption of this measure. I call your attention as well to the Enterpriser Bulletin of Collingwood, Ontario, where the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) is quoted as follows:

Grey-Simcoe MP Dr. Gus Mitges said the special projects should help the unemployment situation.

"A lot of the budget is pointed in that direction," he said.

"You've got some good things for farmers and the doubling of the child care deduction is a good thing," he said.

I say again that I invite that Hon. gentleman, when the time comes for the vote, to vote in favour of the budget and join the Government Party in so doing.

The last Member I would like to quote is the new Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall), which is just north of my particular region. He is quoted as follows:

For Mr. MacDougall, the budget did contain some good news. He cited the one month extension of the $3,000 federal grant to new home buyers, to the end of May, 1983. He also praised the Home Ownership Savings Program referred to in the budget.

While he approved of the investment tax incentives introduced by the Finance Minister—

That shows the high level of excellence of this particular document and the amount of approbation it is receiving throughout the whole of the community.

I would also like to indicate what happened on the street the day after the budget was brought down. The Toronto Stock Exchange rose by 43.75 points, the most impressive post-budget rise since records have been kept at the Toronto Stock Exchange. The dollar went up two-fifths of a cent as a result of this budget. Indeed, Wall Street indicated that it praised the budget for its philosophy and structure. For Wall Street to have indicated approbation of this budget based upon economic philosophy and structure, Madam Speaker, is really a welcome development.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. If the Hon. Member was addressing his remarks to the Chair, he would notice that I am not wearing robes or a skirt!

Mr. Blais: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

I apologize, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the other problem is that I would like to speak to the issue of capital projects because, as it has been pointed out, over $1 billion will be allocated through procurement.

[English]

Indeed, when the $2.4 billion was approved in the budget for capital projects I was most pleased, because of that amount over $1 billion will be invested through procurement. As you know, Mr. Speaker, my Department is very interested in showing its colours in terms of effective negotiation of contracts. Comments have been made by Opposition Members to the effect that indeed there might be some difficulties through the allocation process where there may be some favouritism manifested. I want the House to rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that the total operation will be in accordance with the contract regulations and the Financial Administration Act, and it is our responsibility and the responsibility of this House so to ensure.

There is going to be fast-tracking—and I think the word is well chosen—of the operation within my Department because preliminary approval of the projects is granted immediately by a subcommittee of the Priorities and Planning Committee. I sit on that subcommittee, Mr. Speaker, and I can assure you that the process is being followed very expeditiously and that most of the projects have already received approval.

The other way in which fast-tracking is accomplished is through increased contract delegation to individual Departments, which means that we can go into the marketplace and through the tendering process negotiate contracts for higher amounts without having to submit the application to Treasury Board for approval. That is one way of fast-tracking. The other way is by setting up a special recovery projects board which involves Deputy Ministers who will ensure that all of the bureaucratic impediments are removed in order to accelerate the process. Again, I spoke of the approval process which has been delegated to a subcommittee of Ministers of the Priorities and Planning Committee.

You will recall that we made the claim that we would reduce the approval time from the time the requirement was identified to the time the work was put in place by 50 per cent. That is exactly our intention and it is exactly what we will do. We are killing two birds with one stone, Mr. Speaker. First of all we are creating jobs, there is no doubt about that. The second point is that we are putting in place a highly desirable infrastructure, and we are procuring goods required by the Government of Canada and its agencies. I would like to quote from the Minister's budget speech. He said:

• (1530)

The projects will focus on six key areas; transportation, research and training facilities, resource development, vessel procurement, land and tourism development and high technology procurement. The projects are future-oriented, aiming to build and upgrade research and high technology centres, transportation infrastructure and other facilities and services that will enhance the long-term growth potential of Canadian industry. They will provide much needed support for several currently weak sectors of the economy, such as construction, shipbuilding, fisheries and forestry.

Hon. Members will recall that we announced two of those major projects on Monday of last week. One was the purchase of the water bomber. In effect, we are putting $147 million aside in order to purchase up to 36 water-bombers form Canadair in Montreal.

May I indicate that this is the first example of co-operative procurement between the federal and provincial Governments. It is fitting that this should take place because we are dealing with a typically Canadian technology. The Canadair CL-215 water bomber is known internationally as the "Canadair". It is the aircraft that is most often identified with the Canadian Aerospace Industry in the International field.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is the Minister prepared to table some documents testifying to the comment that he just made that it is known internationally as a great airplane?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That is hardly a point of order. Hon. Members should know that there is a provision for questions following an Hon. Member's speech. Perhaps he could wait until that time.

Mr. Blais: If the hon. gentleman was as well travelled as he claims, he would have known that countries including China and France refer to this aircraft as the "Canadair". It is the only aircraft manufactured specifically for waterbombing activities.

In addition to that, I announced the acceleration of the construction of the 11 Coast Guard ships. That is a program involving $780 million. We will be building six 1100 series icebreakers nav-aid tenders. We will also be building two 1050 series nav-aid tenders with icebreaking capacity and two smaller 800 series. Furthermore, we will be replacing the Labrador which is now 33 years old and is one of the fleet icebreakers of the Canadian coastguard. That involves a contract that we estimate in the vicinity of $100 million.

In sum total, the amount to be invested is approximately $780 million. Of course, that does not include the frigate program which we will be approving at the end of June or beginning of July. It does not include the DLEX, the destroyer life extension program that DND has in place for which I am letting contracts to shipyards throughout the country on a regular basis. It does not include the TRUP, the Tribal Class Update Program which has not yet been approved by Cabinet. We are dealing with sizeable amounts that will be invested by the Government of Canada in the shipbuilding industry in the very near future. In these particular instances that I have described, the criteria that has been identified for fast-tracking are being met. The major amounts of the expenditures will be expended within the next two years and the work will begin within the next six months.

In addition to that, the selection of the process of the specific projects was based upon Canadian content. We insisted that those projects which were selected had to maximize Canadian value added in order to create jobs in the Canadian marketplace. Moreover, we wanted a large number of the dollars to go into the manufacturing sector because that is where the jobs are and where our experience has not been the best.

One would recognize that, when considering the creation of jobs, the incidence of job creation is greatest where the value added to the product of service is the greatest. In the extracting industries, the jobs tend to be fewer per dollar invested than in the manufacturing sector. We have a rule of thumb in my Department which states that if we invest $1 million in the resource extraction sector we create one job; if we invest $1 million in the manufacturing sector, we create 15 jobs. The ratio is quite impressive.

Canada's weakness in the past has been its lack of concentration on the manufacturing sector. The proof is in the pudding. When one studies our DRIE figures and breaks them down, although we have a surplus in trade, it can be seen that we have a major and growing deficit in end products. I am not talking about semi-processed goods but end products or manufactured goods. We rose to over $20 billion in end products deficit in 1981. The last figures I have show that we will not be very far from that mark for 1982. Therefore, we are looking at a deficit of $20 billion in end products in Canada.

Another rule of thumb in my Department is that for every million dollars we spend on procurement on end products we create or maintain 70 direct or indirect jobs. If you eliminated that $20 billion in end products deficit and multiplied it by the 70 jobs per million dollars expended, you would create 1.4 million jobs, which is very close to the total number of unemployed as defined by Statistics Canada today. Indeed, we must increase our activity in the manufacturing sector.

I am pleased to find that I have a very strong ally in that opinion. I read an article in Monday's Globe and Mail which was entitled "Canada at Crossroads: Crosbie. Tory Candidate Outlines His Plans". I would like to refer to some of the comments that the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has made because I agree with them. I believe that he is at last showing his true Grit colours by espousing quite openly in his leadership campaign some of those policies that we have been developing and implementing for many years now. In dealing with manufacturing, which of course is the thrust of my speech, he said:

> The Canadian Manufacturing sector faces some severe problems in the near future.
> We must limit the fragmentation of the Canadian market by negotiating a Code of Conduct binding on all Governments. In particular, we must seek an agreement limiting By-Provincial procurement policies.

I agree fully with him and I have been doing that for the past two years. Indeed, I have met twice with my colleagues at the provincial level to deal with this exact issue.

The benefits we have obtained from those progressive policies have been the water bomber which I have just described. The water bomber procurement is the first prime example of strategic goods being purchased jointly by the federal and provincial Governments. We are contributing our $147 million and asking the provincial Governments to do the same. They have already indicated that they are prepared to do so.

The Hon. Member also talked about the question of world product mandating. I have been dealing with that issue since I have been Minister of Supply and Services. I have implemented world product mandating with every large corporation that has been supplying goods to the Government of Canada and doing so with a great deal of success.

We are removing any remaining tax disincentives to exports. This budget deals exactly with that. It says that for Canadians working abroad on specified activities, the current deduction for overseas employment income will be replaced by a tax credit of 80 per cent of the Canadian tax payable on up to $100,000 of such overseas income. In the past there have been some complaints that people would not want to go abroad because they face a burden on their income as a result of doing that. We had representations by exporters to put in this provision and we put it in. An amount of $180 million was put into the budget in order to promote exports.

• (1540)

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are getting up, and that means you want me to sit down. I will be pleased to do that. But I just want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Members of the Opposition have recognized, as I indicated initially, the excellence of this budget, and I am looking to their support when the time comes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Minister dealt at length with the fact that his Department will be responsible for many of the contracts that will be let as a result of this budget. Is it the policy of his Department to grant contracts to individuals—with respect to the budget or outside of it—who are reserve officers of the Canadian Armed Forces and, therefore, are paid by the Canadian Government, or would the Government consider that a conflict of interest?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, we are not in the business of granting contracts to individuals who are otherwise employed by the Government of Canada. In effect, I would have to look at the specific instance which the Hon. Member wishes to call to my attention before I could give additional responses. If there is any conflict of interest, then that conflict of interest is called to our attention and, of course, it disqualifies the bidder.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I would draw to the Minister's attention Contract No. VAN-32-07838A—

Mr. Peterson: I know it well.

Mr. Friesen: I would point out to the Minister that that is a contract let for the second year in a row over the objections of other businesses in the area. For the second year in a row a contract was let to a reserve officer of the Canadian Armed Forces, and supposedly there has been some embarrassment. Is it the policy of the Government to grant contracts to reserve officers? Purportedly the Government has done so. If I can believe the Minister, he has just said that that would be considered to be a conflict of interest. If that is the case, will the Minister look into this and see what happened?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I did not say in this particular sense there was a conflict of interest because I do not know this particular case. I am a bit concerned that the hon. gentleman, knowing that I was defending my Estimates in committee this morning, did not ask this question or give me notice of it so that I could provide him with a better reply. As to what sort of limitations are imposed upon reserve officers in terms of dealing with the Government of Canada, I cannot provide him with an answer immediately. But surely reserve officers or personnel with the reserve forces are usually people carrying on their normal businesses in the private market. Whether there is a conflict of interest depends upon the specific case drawn to one's attention and what the circumstances are surrounding the particular case.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister about the Canadair water bomber sale to which he alluded in his speech. While I share the Minister's assessment of the plane as to its quality, I cannot be quite as enthusiastic about the sale. Last week when the announcement was made, we were led to believe the sale would be for 36 water bombers. However, in the Minister's speech today he said the sale was for up to 36 water bombers. As I understand it, the federal Government's commitment is for four only at this point but for another 16 if the Provinces match the federal Government. In other words, if a province buys one, the federal Government will buy one. It seems to me that if the Provinces do not buy any of these water bombers, then it is not much of a deal at all. If some of the Provinces do not agree to buy any, then it is less of a deal than the big deal the Government would have us believe. Would the Minister care to comment on that, please?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for agreeing with me that this is the best aircraft for the purpose in the world. Often Canadians do not take sufficient pride in their own accomplishments in the technological area. I commend the hon. gentleman for recognizing that this particular aircraft is indeed very worthwhile. I invite the hon. gentleman to see a demonstration—

Mr. Sargeant: I have seen one. The Manitoba Government flies them.

Mr. Blais: That is right. The Manitoba Government has been interested in the water bombers for some time. As a matter of fact, if one looks at the experience of those Provinces that have the CL-215s, one will see how effective they have been in controlling forest fires. Manitoba and Quebec are two examples. As far as Quebec is concerned, that Government has already agreed to purchase additional numbers. The Province of Ontario is going to cabinet and will be purchasing additional numbers as well. We have every hope other Provinces will see the usefulness of the aircraft and will purchase their first aircraft. I might point out to the hon. gentleman that we were in a position where we had to put our cash on the table before the Provinces came in. We went to the Provinces with two officials. There were negotiations and the Provinces saw the necessity of acquiring a water bomber fleet. They indicated the number to us. They said to us that before they could act credibly on this matter they would have to have some indication of seriousness on the part of the Government of Canada, and until the budget was brought down there have been no indications that the money would be put on the table and that it would be made available for the procurement. Until that time it was very difficult for individual cabinets at the provincial level to start dealing with the issue. Now they are dealing with the issue and I am very optimistic they will be meeting our expectations.

The other point, of course, is that by having a production run at Canadair at Montreal one is in a position to be competitive in the international markets. Because there were so few domestic orders for the CL-215, Canadair's marketing efforts in the international marketplace were not very aggressive. Indeed, one of the conditions we have imposed in terms of this particular program is that Canadair seize this opportunity to resume aggressive international marketing in order to sell those 20 aircraft that we described in the plan we made public last Monday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Are there other questions or comments? Debate.

The Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski).

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to make a few comments on what I call the Rip Van Winkle budget. Suddenly the Government woke up to the facts of life, suddenly it realized what was happening in the country; and suddenly in its sleep it rolled over on the other side. Suddenly the Government realized that there are out there two million people who are unemployed. To a large extent this Government contributed to that figure.

Over the years as I have watched the operation of the Liberals in office I have often seen them introduce legislation which goes to the extreme. Liberal Governments go too far and then allow considerable debate in the House, out in the country. Then they slowly withdraw. We hear Liberals, say, "Look how wonderful we are. Look at what we are doing for you." What Liberal Governments do is draw in the reins and then loosen them. It is much like going fishing. Liberals think the public will forget what they have done to them. The Liberals wonder what happened to the Gallup poll and why they are down in the polls. Can you imagine anyone who has been a lifelong Liberal losing his business, losing the result of his efforts over the years, and yet still turning to this very Government and voting Liberal again, Mr. Speaker? Why should anyone do that only to get kicked in the teeth again? After all, some of these businesses could not be sold because they are defunct, and who would buy a business going broke? Who would buy a collapsing business? Where would that businessman turn to for his retirement income? He has nowhere to turn, and suddenly the Government comes along and starts lending money. Most of us have just gone through the exercise of preparing our income tax returns. High income and low income earners alike have to contribute toward the recovery program which the Government is initiating.

Why is it necessary to destroy the initiative and expertise of businesses, in some cases forever, and then turn around and say that it is necessary to retrain? Retrain for what? Can we imagine what students leaving high school or perhaps dropouts think about their future? They know that the Government is offering a plan but they do not know where to go. They wonder what is the future of this particular industry or that particular field. Can we imagine what they are faced with when trying to make up their minds about what to do?

All of us in our teens had to make decisions as to what we hoped to do with our lives. Oftentimes our plans did not turn out, but at least we were able to sit and ponder and hopefully plan and train ourselves for the future. It was an agonizing experience, even at the best of times, to decide in which direction to go. Can we imagine what any young student goes through today when trying to make that decision?

The Government is going to retrain and it is designating the particular fields in which to retrain. I have visited some Communist countries and I was told that once Governments decide that a person should go into a particular field he or she is stuck for life. Regardless of whether or not one likes the particular field after a few years of experience, one is stuck for life. There is no longer any room for initiative or incentive in our country because the Government has destroyed it.

Government Members talk about wrestling inflation to the ground. They did not wrestle inflation to the ground; they wrestled the people to the ground. People are flat on their backs, and the Government comes along with programs and says, "Look at these wonderful things".

A few years ago the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board came through with the LIFT Program. I referred to it as the "Lower Income For Tomorrow" program because he told farmers to take land out of production and to put it into summer fallow. Today we have another LIFT Program. This time I call it, "Lower Incentives for the Troubled". The Government still has a LIFT Program because it has a LIFT mentality.

The Government comes along and destroys incentives and then it says that it will do things for Canadians. We have a $31 billion deficit. It is spending money which it does not have. The Special Recovery Program itself will not be paid for immediately. It is to be paid for later. As if we would not notice it, it will sneak up from behind and hit us when we are not watching. It is part of the Government's "fly now pay later" program. This is exactly what the Government has been doing with its deficits. Deficits are only deferred tax.

Members of the Government seem to have a fixed mentality. They simply come up with programs, and then a few years down the road ask the people to pay for them. They think that we will not notice it, that it will just be another burden. They take great pride in their six and five program and say that it was responsible for controlling inflation. How silly can they get? The six and five program was not responsible for controlling inflation. High interest rates made it impossible for businessmen to replace the stock on their shelves. High interest rates stopped farmers from purchasing machinery. High interest rates caused manufacturers to wonder whether or not they should expand, and of course they did not. When they use that type of mechanism they do not take into account the fact that people make plans. When they make plans, they anticipate that their incomes will be such and such. They look at their returns for the past few years, they know what they are manufacturing or producing, they anticipate the market and perhaps calculate the price. They know what their revenues should be and what some of their fixed costs will be. They plan over a period of years. Then they buy pieces of equipment based upon the fact that the interest rate will be 12 per cent. They project five years down the road and, lo and behold, the Government intercedes and slaps on a 23 per cent interest rate. How can such individuals, as intelligent as they may be with all their expertise and knowledge in their fields, cope with that situation? What for?

Today we have to reverse our thinking. We will not find such people. Does the Government think they are silly enough to go back into the fields, uncertain as they are as to what it will do next? If the Government had wanted to provide these people with initiatives, it should have taken into account some of the purchases which were calculated on the basis of their projections and anticipated expenditures. It could have categorized the interest rate and taken those purchases into account. It was possible. Those who had already made purchases based upon anticipated income could have been left at a fixed rate of interest. Another level could have been set for those people who had to replace inventory or stock. If it wanted to create incentive, it could have increased the rate at another level and made it possible for businessmen to stay in business. It could have taken into account the undesirability of an over-expanded or over-heated economy. It could have said that it would restrict the money available and told people not to expand at this particular time because inflation was a great problem. It could have restricted it without having to destroy business at the same time. That would have retained many people in jobs and many businesses in place. Instead, the Government pounced on everyone—the ones with low incomes, the ones with high incomes, the ones who had purchased refrigerators or some other essential for their homes. It pummelled manufacturers that had been in business for many years, and then it provided a little incentive. It gave a few grants here and there. It said, "We will be good to you and give you grants in order to create jobs". It was a kind of hat trick.

I recall a man by the name of John Turner standing across the way as the Minister of Finance. At that time he introduced a measure to remove the ceiling on farm improvement loans. The press says that some day John Turner will be the Leader of the Liberal Party. The Liberals may want him, but I certainly do not want him around this place. When he removed the ceiling, he said that a lot of money would be available. We warned him of the danger of removing that 5 per cent ceiling, but he said there would be more money available.

• (1600)

For a while his prediction came true. Then the rate rose from 5 per cent to 7 per cent and then 8 per cent. People grumbled a bit, but they were still accommodating. When it shot up to 12 per cent, people became jittery, wondering where the economy was going, but they adjusted. When it reached 23 per cent, lo and behold, they could not pay the interest, never mind the principal. The banks, financial institutions and the Farm Credit Corporation said there was a lot of money and that to get it, you need only sign on the dotted line. Today these same institutions are calling in the loans saying, "That's it. There is no more money".

What happened to the money that John Turner predicted would be available? If you look at Hansard for that time, you will see that that is what was said. What has happened to that money?

I receive many calls and letters from people in financial trouble. Farmers are going bankrupt. They are being taken to court and their assets are being sold. A Bill has been introduced by a Private Member to try to help those who took the advice of the Government and the banks.

I have had experience with the banks. When I was refused money by one banker, I went to another banker. I am sick and tired of these bankers who obviously are not accommodating. They will not even listen to you. They ask why you were not a customer previously. That banker may not realize that I am sick and tired of trying to deal with my former banker who is no longer accommodating but only interested in a profit for his branch. His interest is not my interest, but I have to live with it. When you try another bank, you get the same result. It is as though there were a network between the banks.

My constituents who call and write to me are telling me the same story. Over the years one of my constituents, a farmer, purchased land from other farmers. He has created jobs in that area. He has built up assets. Because of inflation, the land value went up to $2.5 million. He controlled a large part of that area. All of a sudden he had to dispose of everything. In the process, he will put a dozen companies out of business because he was their major customer.

The Government does not have to use the taxpayers' money. It need only talk to the banks. I have written to the Minister with regard to the Small Business Development Bond. His reply was that he cannot interfere. If he cannot talk to the bankers, who can? Certainly not the man who needs the money. It is only as a last resort that people write to their Member of Parliament, who in turn contacts the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), the same Minister who says he cannot do anything about it. The Minister can do something about it. He can ask the banks to be more accommodating, to allow a little more time. It is not necessary to tax those earning the minimum wage in order to make a recovery. This can be done without using the taxpayers' money if only the Government will take the initiative. The Government is slapping the wrist of the businessman. It is not able to talk to the bankers.

I now want to deal with the housing aspect. The Government announced an increase of 2,500 units in the social housing area. This is a sensitive area. As soon as you talk about social housing, people immediately think of the penniless and the destitute. I have access to information which leads me to believe that when there is a vacancy, it is filled by the next in line, even though that person may be borderline and might better fit into another scheme.

Once someone is in such a housing unit, you cannot put him out. Then there are those who, knowing something about an individual in social housing, because they do not have as much revenue, believe that they should be entitled to social housing as well. Because one person is entitled to social housing, there could soon be a line-up of people who believe they are entitled to it as well because they think it is Government policy. Therefore, the Government must be very careful. It may be necessary to have a rental supplement or possibly some kind of means test and not have to use the taxpayers' money as a subsidy. I understand the average subsidy is approximately $4,000 per unit. I understand that not in all cases is the taxpayers' money used for people who are in desperate need of shelter and have no other way of obtaining it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time provided for his speech has expired.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. With regard to the need for housing, has the Hon. Member any comments on how the budget could provide incentives to home buyers without adding to the budgetary deficit?

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, there are several ways of accomplishing this. One item sadly missing from the budget was an insurance scheme so that those having to renew their mortgages will not be saddled with the high interest rate simply because they must renew their mortgage at a time when interest rates are high. I asked the Miniter in the House whether any consideration was being given to this. I believe that an averaging out scheme can be accomplished without using any taxpayers' money. This does not necessarily have to be compulsory nor does it have to cost the Government—when I say Government, I mean the taxpayers—money because additional insurance can be taken out at a small additional premium to ensure that over the next few years your mortgage will not suddenly be increased from 12 per cent to 19 per cent or 20 per cent.
