If the Government could work out the details of such a scheme, then the people who pay for the mortgages and pay for the premiums would not be playing what I call "renewable roulette". Renewable roulette means that if your mortgage rates are high, you are stuck paying that high rate. In my own case, I had a mortgage at 12¾ per cent, and lo and behold, the time for renewal came and I had to renew at 16¾ per cent. If my mortgage were to come due today, I would be lucky. But it is not so. In other words, it is possible to work out such a scheme.

While I am on my feet, I would just like to comment on one other aspect and that is the $10,000—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. That is hardly allowable under the rules of the recent practice of questions and comments. Are there further questions? The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have one further question for the Hon. Member for Mackenzie. With reference to the western transportation initiative, has the Hon. Member any comments on how this proposal would affect a recovery program?

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I can comment on that because the Minister of Finance mentioned that in his budget and suggested that this would be one of those megaprojects that he talks about. On the one hand he will create jobs by building a railway, he calls it double-tracking or fast-tracking, but where will he get the money to do this? He will get the money from the farmer.

You know that the farmer is one of those enterprising individuals who does not need to be spurred on. He does not need to have salesmen knocking at his door. He is looking for salesmen because he always has need for a battery, for a tire, for electrical equipment, for new machinery, for new saws, for new hammers, for new refrigeration equipment, you name it. The farmer has need of everything. His needs do not fall into one particular category. A homeowner can only buy so many items, but out on the farm it is an entirely different story. Every industry benefits from the farmer.

Lo and behold, the Government wants to withdraw out of Saskatchewan alone $1 million a year that it claims will help create jobs. Why withdraw that money? That money might best be left in the hands of the farmer because he is a great purchaser. Why do you think farmers are so deeply in debt to the Farm Credit Corporation and to the banks? Because they enjoy buying products that will enable them to work as efficiently as anybody else does. In fact, the farmer is more efficient because he has been buying implements.

The Government's program will supposedly create jobs, but it will create jobs for only a few years. In the meantime, the program will destroy the established farmer. I personally know farmers who are hanging on by their fingertips. The Government is going to take more money away from that individual who is a great spender in order to create jobs. That again is a typical Liberal philosophy: take away and then give back.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski).

I certainly do not think that pessimistic speeches like the one we just heard are going to help Canada's economy. Anyone who reads the newspapers will see that this budget, which has been called by some people the key to Canada's future, can give the economy a boost if we are all willing to give it a chance.

When the Hon. Member said the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) should have taken action and spoken to the banks' representatives, I would have liked him to give us further details, because he did not indicate what the Minister of Finance was supposed to say to the banks. Was he referring to the need for lower interest rates in Canada compared with the United States? I may remind him that, when he says the Minister of Finance is mortgaging Canadians, in Canada savings represent about 13 per cent of disposable income, which is twice as much as in the United States. The message given by the Minister of Finance is a message of optimism which appeals to the private sector and is aimed at developing our economy.

I would have liked to hear what the Hon. Member has to say about interest rates.

[English]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had made that clear, though the Hon. Member thinks I did not. Perhaps my message did not come across as clearly as I had hoped. At that time I did say that I expected the Minister of Finance to sit down with the bankers and tell them that rather than foreclose and take these people to court, they should just give them an extension and let the farmers work out their own salvation, give them a little more time. There is no point in destroying an enterprise that has been built up through hard work, borrowed money and a lot of sweat, only to find out that another job must be created. Rather than calling in the debts immediately, all the banks need to do is to give the borrower more time. I suppose the banks are entitled to operate their own business, but it is strange that the banks spend so much money in other countries. They lost a lot of money in other countries and now they are trying to recover it on the backs of the enterprising individuals who create the jobs in Canada. If the banks can lose money outside of Canada, then they can take a chance on Canadians. That is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said. All I am asking the banks to do is to take a chance on Canadians.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I would mention that the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) introduced a Bill to help those farmers to whom the Member has referred, but the Tories are against that Bill. We on this side want to help the farmer through this legislation introduced by the Member for Lambton-Middlesex.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had been following the comments made with reference to that particular Bill, he also would have followed the criticism that came from people who are in the business themselves. One of the criticisms is that their source of credit would dry up. That is the danger involved in this. You do not introduce a Bill simply because the title sounds good. You are really deceiving a lot of people because a lot of farmers out there believe that the banks will not foreclose the minute that Bill is passed. That may happen, but at the same time the source of credit is dried up. What farmers need today is credit and cash to buy fertilizer, feed, fuel, tractors, repairs, chemicals, everything. If you dry up that source of credit, then you put them out of business right away. That is just what that Bill might do.

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I think that for well over a week now, Hon. Members, especially on the Government side, have been very pleased not only with the kind of budget that was brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) but also with the enthusiasm it has generated across the country. I think that a sensible person reading the general comments made in various circles would agree that this budget is indeed a budget of hope and economic recovery, and also one that gives Canadians an opportunity to put the economy on the right track by using the comprehensive measures it contains. I think Canadians were ready for this budget.

Mr. Speaker, for the information of my colleagues, I would like to quote part of a speech made by Mr. Frazee at the Canadian Club of Montreal on April 25, that is, after the budget was brought down. Mr. Frazee, who never minces his words when referring to the economic policies of the Liberal Party of Canada, said that on the whole, the budget deserved praise. It acknowledged that creating permanent jobs was exclusively up to the private sector, and it would undoubtedly create a favourable climate in that sector. Since Mr. Frazee is one of many businessmen who for several years has been urging Ottawa to take action in this respect, I must say that I am very pleased. The construction industry needed strong stimulation, and it received it. Protectionism had to be firmly rejected and it was. The specific problems of farmers were taken into consideration. A short respite was granted to the energy sector. The mining industry and research and development were stimulated and the purchase of capital goods encouraged.

Mr. Speaker, in other words, the wishes of all Canadians who were consulted in recent months by the Minister of Finance, who managed to hold one of the broadest and most comprehensive rounds of consultations among all social groups in Canada and who produced this budget—the wishes of all these people were given consideration, and I think the budget is able to create a climate that will restore confidence to all our constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal more specifically with two measures that interested me in this budget, since my colleagues have already had a chance to discuss other aspects. First, however, I would like to point that this economic recovery budget will provide for direct job creation in the short term and stimulate investment as well, with $2.4 billion being earmarked for longer term investments, and all this without cutting social programs. Mr. Speaker, I was one of those who worried that family allowances might be affected by the budget. A number of groups had emphasized the need for a more restrictive reallocation of funds, but I think that the principle of universality was nevertheless maintained by the Minister of Finance, and as a Liberal, I am very proud of this fact.

The same applies to pensions, Mr. Speaker. The Government did not yield to the temptation to select groups that were in serious trouble, and we have been given the assurance that the income supplement for pensioners will remain fully indexed. I believe that this recovery budget has remained true to the traditional concept of liberalism, which is that the poor should not have to suffer because of the country's economic problems and that economic recovery is to be achieved by harnessing the efforts of all members of society.

Personally, I find that one of the dynamic aspects of this budget is the measures that will stimulate recovery in the construction industry. The latest figures published April 26, 1983, show that Canadians are gaining confidence and that a drop in interest rates, as a result of our successful monetary policy, means that the forecast for 1984 is for from 165,000 to 185,000 units compared with 80,000 in 1982. I think that is very significant and that this will not only help to stimulate the construction industry, which is the driving force of the economy, but also all related sectors such as electrical appliances and home furnishings. In this area, the Minister of Finance kept his word and introduced measures that will remain in effect from April 19 until December 31, 1984, including the possibility for Canadians to save up to $10,000 of their income tax free for the purpose of building a home. As a precautionary measure, the Minister has maintained the $3,000 program for the time being, but since the transition period will be very short, I think the emphasis should be on the $10,000 plan. This proposal is not discriminatory. It is aimed at all those who want to build a home, and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that, as forecast by the Royal Bank, Canadian men and women will be confident enough to build these 180,000 homes in the coming year, thus providing regular, satisfying and well paid jobs to Canadians throughout the country.

Those who were well advised to invest in a Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan before April 19, 1983 will, of course, benefit from a proposal which will encourage the purchase of consumer goods, and I believe that this program will be very challenging. Those who had already thought of buying a home but had not yet done so and who would now like to use what they had invested in an RHOSP to purchase furniture, appliances and other furnishing for their home, will now be able to use the money they have saved over the years tax free; in this regard, I share the hope of the Minister of Finance that those Canadians will buy Canadian in the knowledge that our Canadian industry always strives for competitive quality and prices.

Mr. Speaker, the second matter I want to deal with is another very dynamic program which will be implemented later this year and which, in my opinion, will enable Canadian businessmen to put their business back on a sound financial footing. I am talking, of course, about the Special Recovery Share Purchase Tax Credit. After presiding on a House subcommittee on finance which produced a unanimous report on this subject, in June 1982, I believe that in the end we can be proud of the fact that the Minister of Finance decided to introduce this incentive which will encourage Canadians to purchase equity in Canadian businesses. We have known trying times when interest rates were going up and the only alternative was to wait for the demand to go down. If we ever have to go through that experience again, and I trust this will never happen, I believe that a better business capital structure will allow us to absorb such pressures much more easily and at much less cost and that measures such as this one will enable us to meet more than one objective.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, if Canadians begin to invest through equity in their own companies, not only will they benefit from the increased value of their equity through dividends—taxable, of course, but not at prohibitive rates—they will also be able to promote their ideas and combine their efforts, particularly if they are employees. That was the idea behind our Committee on employee participation in profits, equity and decision-making. When we tabled our report, Mr. Speaker, we were convinced that the Government would have to introduce tax measures to spur business financing simply through investment of profits in companies and the issue of shares to employees instead of higher wages, something which makes competition ever more difficult.

Mr. Speaker, the measure which was adopted by the Minister of Finance will lower the cost of new shares issued to investors and make it a more interesting proposition. Investors will be allowed to use that 25 per cent tax credit to reduce their federal income tax. I suggest that the figure of 25 per cent is very significant, showing as it does that the Minister of Finance is firmly committed to the economic recovery which is the central thrust of this budget. I think that the budget amply demonstrates the will of the Liberal Government to guarantee the recovery through the private sector.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would remind businessmen and small companies in my riding—or even larger corporations which are sometimes already financed through shares issued on the public market—that even private companies are eligible under the program, which will make it easier for employees to sit at the bargaining table with management officials and have a say in the decision making process. In my opinion, we cannot emphasize strongly enough the fact that an incentive mechanism such as the special tax credit will pave the way for much closer co-operation between labour and management.

Mr. Speaker, the budget contains many other outstanding measures. I wanted to single out the construction recovery program and the special recovery capital projects because I was among those who were concerned with the lack of job creation measures for groups of workers who found themselves in difficulty. I think that the budget meets all my aspirations as a Member and, thanks to this initiative, I hope that all businessmen—all men and women in Quebec as far as I am concerned—will do their share and avail themselves of the measures in the Lalonde budget.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments? Debate.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to commend my colleagues who have participated in this debate and who have made very valuable contributions.

My remarks relate to development measures contained in the budget and focus on the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which we refer to as DREE. The division of DREE into two parts and its burial in two other Departments of Government, is not a matter of rejoicing in the areas of Canada which suffer most from problems of regional disparity. The Government is announcing the funeral of DREE, not the celebration of the birth of a more effective instrument of regional development. Those of us who mourn DREE's demise do so for the lack of direct successor. We are not blind to imperfections in DREE's concept and execution. Nor, on the other hand, do we seize this occasion merely to blame the Government for all the deficiencies of DREE. It is imperative, however, to ask what we can learn from the experiences of DREE and from the Government's regional development policies generally over the last ten to 15 years. Only in light of answers to these questions can we judge the appropriateness of measures introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and by the Minister responsible for DREE in his excellent comments a little earlier in this debate.

In 1969, the Government made a strong commitment to reduce regional economic disparities with the formation of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The Department's expenditures expressed as a percentage of gross general expenditure peaked in 1970-71 at $330.8 million, or 2.1 per cent of gross general expenditure. These expenditures have declined each year since then, hovering at about 1.1 per cent of gross general expenditure in each year since 1978-79. In terms of constant 1971 dollars, departmental expenditures in the Atlantic region peaked in 1970-71 at $184 million. They declined to $108 million in 1977-78. During that period, DREE's spending in Atlantic Canada declined by 41.2 percent. Despite all the rhetoric concerning current and future initiatives, the record clearly shows that the Government's commitment to regional economic expansion has been severely diminished in recent years.

Let us look at some of the lessons of DREE. There is no lack of documentation on the subject: annual departmental reports, specially commissioned evaluations, and coincidentally—since it was not done in anticipation of DREE's demise—the report of the Senate Finance Committee on Government Policy and Regional Development. Differences of opinion exist within these documents, but there is also a remarkable degree of consensus. Clearly, the effectiveness of incentives to regional economic development is tied closely to other Departmental policies and activities. There have been many cases where two policies or programs have worked directly against each other. But beyond that, there has been a generally unfavourable climate for regional development, created by measures not specifically formulated with an eye to reducing regional disparities. Transportation policy is a good example. Just when a revolution in communications technology would make it possible for firms to locate head offices away from the largest population centres, the Government guts the regional passenger transportation system in the Maritimes.

The tax structure in this country, to the extent that it has discouraged risk and innovation, has actually worked against new initiatives in less developed regions. Government procurement policies have systematically discriminated against smaller firms. The targets of regional development policies have not always been thoroughly defined. There has clearly been a political temptation to draw the circle too widely. The inclusion of a huge population centre negates the object of incentives for firms to locate some distance from large makets.

In economic development there are federal responsibilities, provincial responsibilities, and shared responsibilities. The provincial Governments in the wealthier Provinces are better able to discharge their responsibilities than are Governments of less wealthy Provinces. The General Development Agreements recognized this and provided for assistance from the federal Government to less wealthy Provinces to help them in their development efforts. The weakness of the GDA was that it did not provide for the integration of programs in the area of federal jurisdiction into the total development effort of the Province. Divided responsibility for economic development should be recognized, and the need for co-ordinated federal and provincial efforts should also be recognized, so that all development activity is oriented to the achievement of common objectives.

The federal Government should have a primary interest in regional economic development since only through an effective federal regional development effort can Canadians in all parts of the country achieve reasonably similar employment and income levels. Furthermore, in the less wealthy Provinces, it is only with federal Government assistance that smaller areas of high unemployment and low income can move toward national standards.

With respect to research and development, it is essential to close the technology gap between richer and poorer regions. Once our most skilled people are able to stay in the poorer regions, we will begin to achieve the critical mass needed for further innovation and expansion. Scientific and technical research and development simply must take place within the regions if they are to address the particular needs and opportunities which exist there for economic expansion. The Government, with the co-operation of provincial Governments, can foster this kind of regional opportunity. It is in this light, that the Government's stalling on a project such as the Maritime forestry complex in Fredericton is inexcusable, all the more so when the declared reasons for this stalling are so blatantly partisan and when the Government is ready to go ahead with a similar project in Thailand.

DREE followed a sound strategy when it focused on growth centres within depressed regions, but in latter years has signalled a departure from the practice of building on strengths. We have a classic example in New Brunswick where the Fredericton, Saint John, Moncton triangle was excluded from the 50 per cent investment tax incentive credit. The Government's scatter-gun kind of approach has often been inefficient and unreliable. It has occasionally involved heavy expenditure on infrastructure and incentives, only to have the project collapse or require permanent subsidization because of particular localized conditions in an industry or a company. The case by case approach has also inevitably ignored or conflicted with provincial planning and priorities. It is not surprising in this regard, that DREE's greatest successes have occurred under the auspices of the General Development Agreements.

We have learned from DREE that the best investments of Government funds are generally in viable, productive enterprises. DREE grants have found consistently better returns when used for expansion and modernization as opposed to start-ups. We need more effort to determine which are viable manufacturing enterprises in the long run—usually those related to the resource base of the region—and more willingness to promote the appropriate market research and management and manpower training. Apart from infrastructure, planning has been too much of the short-term variety. Again, we have been up against political temptations, as even a Senate Committee with a Liberal majority has admitted. Ultimately, only a viable manufacturing enterprise has the potential to move a depressed region toward self-sufficiency.

Transfers of various kinds are unquestionably necessary to ensure to all Canadians a satisfactory standard of living and acceptable social and educational services. But study after study demonstrates that transfer payments alone just find their way back to the wealthier parts of the country. They do not have a permanently stimulative effect, and they do nothing about the causes of regional disparity. Even the well-intended policy of moving some federal bureaucratic establishments out of Ottawa to the regions had a very limited effect on local demand, especially beyond the construction phase. We have learned from DREE that the goal of regional development must be to lessen dependency. This is the only permanent way to narrow down disparities. This approach is unfortunately being impaired by the federal Government's continuing deficit crisis.

In the fat years, the Government's generous transfer programs promoted dependency. Now that Ottawa is having to cut back, it is picking fights with the Provinces over medicare and post-secondary education—in short, finding any possible pretext for financial retrenchment. Tragically, despite many genuine accomplishments, DREE has scarcely made a dent in the problem of dependency. With these lessons of DREE in mind, Mr. Speaker, I would like to outline some of my specific concerns regarding the breakup of DREE and the new initiatives for regional development which have been introduced in the federal budget and elaborated by the Minister responsible for DREE.

First, to replace DREE in part with the Ministry of State responsible for economic regional development and to require it to inflict a developmental dimension on other Departments of Government is like asking a fly to chase an elephant. The fanfare that has preceded MSERD is, I fear, little more than bureaucratic jargon. Unless the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) personally heads MSERD and unless he personally leads the attack on regional disparity, line Departments in times of restraint will not accept any challenge other than the existing bare bones of their responsibilities. The absence of a single Department or Minister exclusively committed to regional development does not augur well. The mandate to foster development in all regions is double-talk. It is the negation of a concerted attack on regional disparity. In that sense it can truly be said that MSERD may be absurd.

The principle that all Government Departments should be sensitive to regional needs is fine in theory, and particularly appropriate now that regional equality is a goal enshrined in the Constitution. But it is meaningless without a specific designation of responsibility within each Department. We have no assurance that such a designation will be made. I am specifically concerned about how, after all the bureaucratic shuffling has been accomplished and areas of responsibility redesignated, certain obvious priorities for regional development are going to be realized. One of these priorities is the identification of possible foreign markets and the establishment of contact with potential foreign joint investors who already have their own market contacts. Yet that portion of the old Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce with its international expertise is now going to External Affairs, which is not likely to give much attention to the needs of, for example, the Atlantic region, unless it is specifically directed to do so.

Another major area of concern is the General Development Agreements. The decision of the Government to allow existing GDAs and the subsidiary agreements under the umbrella provisions of the GDAs to expire on termination is indeed regrettable. Nothing could be simpler than the General Development Agreements themselves, and nothing could be more appropriate to the needs of the areas being served by the subsidiary agreements than those agreements which, in fact, are the product of negotiation and study by the two levels of Government involved.

Now it is clear that the Government has less determination than ever to co-ordinate its initiatives with those of the Provinces. It has no designated successor to the GDAs. It proposes a Regional Development Fund, which invites a political and bureaucratic free-for-all, the search for winners rather than a consistent long-term policy.

When we discuss disparities, the Atlantic region comes first to mind because its underdevelopment is long-standing and pervasive in contrast to pockets of underdevelopment within wealthier regions forced into temporary economic hardship caused by specific dislocations such as market demand or changes in technology. It is therefore appropriate for us to focus our efforts in this region. There are other reasons as well. Historically, the Atlantic region has been a victim not only of natural economic forces but also of political decisions, going back at least to the First World War. These political factors have been well-documented by historians and Royal Commissions, and I need not dwell on old grievances.

Politically and culturally, the Atlantic Provinces are identifiable societies with historic roots, a record of substantial contributions to the life of all Canada and the collective will and capacity to reverse the trend toward stifling dependency which has characterized their recent past. In our generation, we have witnessed the remarkable revitalization accomplished by our neighbouring society in Quebec. The support of the federal Government has been crucial to that revival.

I would strongly insist that while smaller, less powerful politically and less developed industrially than Quebec was, even at the start of the quiet revolution, the Maritime communities are equally worthy of such consideration. To deny that consideration would constitute clear evidence of discrimination, to use the term which certain Hon. Members opposite are fond of using when their ambitions are frustrated. I would like to believe that the bold new programs and initiatives announced by the Government will conscientiously avoid that kind of discrimination. But I do not see assurances that they will.

Mr. Campbell (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member who just concluded his comments. I would like his view on one of the observations he made. If I understand him correctly, he has the view that there are limited permanent benefits from relocation of federal Government Departments or sections of federal Government Departments. I suppose I have a vested interest in this matter, but in my view the effect is exactly the opposite in that at the beginning you have the additional salary dollars going into a particular area. That naturally creates demand for goods and services both for the Department and also for the additional employees working in the area. I wonder if the Hon. Member might clarify exactly what he means by little or limited permanent benefits?

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Minister for his question. He correctly interpreted it as being limited because there is certainly a benefit from any Government Department relocation in terms of salaries, personnel and employment, and most particularly in terms of initial construction. I use the adjective "limited" quite advisedly because I have differentiated in my remarks between a Government Department and industry. An industry generates other line industries, perhaps small component parts industries in terms of spin-offs, and other industries. There are differing estimates as to the job creation factor; for every one in industry, it is five outside in terms of spin-offs. For Government Departments, it is one in and two out. Government Departments buy supplies for individuals, some centrally and some locally, but they do not have quite the magnitude of impact that an industrial development would have in terms of buying primary products, components or elements which can be reshaped, remanufactured with value added, and create more jobs through this stimulation. Certainly we in the Maritime Provinces very much welcome both factors, but the point of my address was this. The Maritime Provinces have approximately 47 per cent of their gross revenues coming in the form of transfer payments from Ottawa. We desperately need a tax base established by secondary manufacturing in order to enable our Governments through increased tax revenue, both personal and corporate, to increase their incomes and decrease their dependency on the central Government. We cannot tax Government Departments, and this is one salient difference and another reason why I used the word "limited".

I appreciate the impact that Departments have in that region, particularly of Veterans Affairs in Charlottetown. It employs many people and does have a good impact. As well, there is the Pensions Branch in New Brunswick. These are important, necessary and very welcome employers in the Maritimes.

But we also need industries. We need an industrial base which we do not have now. As the Hon. Member knows, the Island is heavily dependent economically on its primary resource base. A primary resource based economy is the first hit, the hardest hit and the last to recover in times of a recession. We most certainly need all the help we can get, and I thank the Hon. Member for his contribution.

Mr. Campbell (Cardigan): I have a brief supplementary question. Would the Hon. Member not agree that the relocation of Departments and agencies to the area would not only provide salary dollars and expenditures in the area but create the potential for the establishment of a processing or manufacturing industry? Would he agree that a relocated Department or agency could foster the development of a small industry in an area where the demand might not have existed at the time? In other words, I do not disagree with his observations in terms of getting the maximum spin-off, but would he not agree that the relocation can in fact complement the development of that demand which could lead to further manufacturing opportunities within Atlantic Canada, for example?

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the Hon. Member that an increase in the consumer population can stimulate and create a market for industrial development.

We have two basic concepts. One is that if we are to look at efficiency in terms of industry, we must have regard for industries that can be built in terms of their optimum capacity. Many of our resource based industries, particularly in forestry, not only require our domestic markets but world markets as well in order to operate to optimum capacity. Industries that are looking at world capacity require very different incentives than industries that require domestic market capacity.

We certainly have need for both in the Atlantic Provinces. We still are net importers of much of our major food components. There is substantial room for expansion in this particular field.

Our fisheries industry has not been mentioned in the budget but it has been shown that our processing plants have a lot of unused capacity. Yet our fisheries industry is a substantial importer of deck hardware, navigational aids and equipment. This is where the big money is and it is another area in which I think we can move toward a transformation of the unused capacity that exists in this particular primary product area to a manufacturing concept that can employ more Canadians who live in the Atlantic Provinces.

I certainly agree with the Hon. Minister that we have a great need to increase our consumer demand and population in this regard. That essentially was his question and I do agree with him. I expect, seeing him nod, that he agrees with me that we also need a secondary manufacturing base.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak during the last hour of the budget debate which has been taking place for six days. We will soon be voting on the budget.

I would like to direct my remarks to two areas that have been touched upon by other Members but not explained, in my opinion, in any great detail. Members from both sides of the House have particular areas of concern that affect them and their constituencies. As well, Members on the Government side have special areas of concern either in the role of Minister or Parliamentary Secretary to a Minister.

Hon. Members and Canadians will remember that at the beginning of this year the social action department of the Canadian Catholic Conference of Bishops presented a statement which concerned ethical reflections on the present economic situation. As we are all aware, that document received a great deal of discussion. Many supported all of its contents and some supported certain sections while others disagreed with certain sections, with the entire document or with the whole basic principle that the Bishops had no right to speak on economic matters. While I have a special link with the Bishops, it is my personal belief that they do have a right to speak on moral matters, economic matters and social matters which concern the lives of people.

Yesterday, the American Catholic Bishops spoke very strongly against the arms build-up. There will be Americans who will be upset about that today. I believe that the Bishops had a perfect right and a duty to speak on a subject that is causing so much immorality, that is, the destruction of the planet.

The Bishops' statement in Canada had two basic principles upon which they built their reflections. The first concerned the preferential option for the poor, afflicted and oppressed. The Bishops said:

> In the tradition of the prophets, Jesus dedicated his ministry to bringing "good news to the poor" and "liberty to the oppressed". As Christians, we are called to follow Jesus by identifying with the victims of injustice, by analysing the dominant attitudes and structures that cause human suffering, and by actively supporting the poor and oppressed in their struggles to transform society. For, as Jesus declared, "when you did it unto these, the least of my brethren, you did it unto me".

The second principle that the Bishops' statement was structured upon was this:

> The second principle concerns the special value and dignity of human work in God's plan for Creation. It is through the activity of work that people are able to exercise their creative spirit, realize their human dignity, and share in Creation. By interacting with fellow workers in a common task, men and women have an opportunity to further develop their personalities and sense of self-worth. In so doing, people participate in the development of their society and give meaning to their existence as human beings. Indeed, the importance of human labour is illustrated in the life of Jesus who was himself a worker, "a craftsman like Joseph of Nazareth".

In light of those two principles, I would like to speak on what this budget has done in general and whether it fulfilled what the Bishops were speaking about when they issued their statement.

The first principle of preferential option for the poor is one that has developed in Latin America in the last 20 years. It is a social principle based primarily on the teachings of the Catholic Church and others as well, but particularly on the social teachings of the Pope. That principle was that when it came to the necessity of taking an option in any particular economic situation, the option would be for the poor, unemployed, aged, sick, children, and those without power. They should be looked after first, and the other areas of society could then have the opportunity to be cared for.

I suggest that in the preparation of the budget that principle was never even considered. The unemployed, the aged, the students without jobs and those without power in the society are still without power and not looked after.

• (1700)

The Minister has indicated that the unemployment rate is not going to change. The budget is not directed toward changing the number of people who would go to work. The budget is directed at starting a stimulus in the economy somehow but the number of people still suffering as underprivileged will remain the same. Perhaps for all intents and purposes the number could go up. Twelve per cent of the work force is out of work. The Government admits that unemployment is not going to go below 11 per cent for four years. Again, that is only a supposition. The figure could still rise.

In Canada at the present time, as you are aware, Mr. Speaker, and as Members of the House are aware, the top 20 per cent of Canadians receive 42.5 per cent of the total personal income, while the bottom 20 per cent receive only 4 per cent.

It is figures such as these that indicate to me at least that this budget does not change the basic situation in Canada and that the poor are still the ones who will suffer because of what the budget does not do.

On the other hand, to show that the preferential option has not been made on behalf of the poor, the Government is giving $2.67 billion in corporate tax breaks while personal income tax, again taking in a mass of people at the bottom, the poor in society, will be up by $3.5 billion and sales taxes will be up by $2.4 billion over the next four years. This indicates that the people at the bottom, the poor, are the ones who will benefit least from the budget.

The second principle which the Bishops outlined in their document of January is the principle that human work is a right for people. A person cannot really grow, perform his or her role and be perfect unless he or she has the opportunity to do something creative and to do it in companionship with other people.

The burden of just being unemployed, the anger of a person who cannot do anything is a terrible thing. I am sure anybody who does his constituency work knows what it is like to have people who are unemployed come to see him. These are people who have looked for work, have been to the employment agency and have tried to get a job but cannot, and this is dreadful. They carry a tremendous burden. They feel they are worthless. They say they are no good. I hear it said all the time. I am sure you have heard it said, Mr. Speaker, because I am sure you are doing your constituency work. It is that feeling that shows the second principle has not been respected and that in this budget the right for all people to have a job has not been respected.

The budget indicates that businesses would benefit. I have heard many Members say in the House, and Members who represent the business sector have all quite clearly said, that businesses will benefit. The bishops have warned that even if companies recover and increase their profit margins, the additional revenues are likely to be reinvested in more labour saving technology, exported to other countries or spent on market speculation or luxury goods. If money moves in that direction, it does not necessarily mean that more people will work. All of us who have any sense at all of how technology is moving into society are aware that jobs will be harder and harder to find and create in the present economic situation unless it is planned that everyone in society will have a job. It may mean in the future that we will have to start looking for areas of activity in human life that we do not classify as jobs now. We will have to find other ways in which all of the wealth that a country like Canada can produce can be redistributed in a way that all people will benefit from it in a just way. At the same time they must experience the value, the feeling and the knowledge that they are doing something creative. The distribution should not be simply because a person does not have a traditional kind of job. There will be less and less of the traditional kinds of jobs. Another way will have to be found so that distribution will take place. In that respect I would say the budget does not fulfil the principles outlined by the Bishops in their statement of early January, 1983.

I want to speak now for a few minutes about my area as a critic, which is international aid and development, and how the budget has affected that area as far as I can see it. First, I was happy to see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) did pay some attention to the international scene in his budget. Unfortunately it was more of a passing scene. Likewise I would be critical of the Bishops' statement on the ground that, although, to my mind, it correctly identified the fact that the problem Canada was suffering from was not unique, that it was an international problem, in their judgment of how the problems could be remedied they did not in my view address it in an international way. I criticize the Biships' statement for being incomplete in that respect.

The Minister in his budget speech did outline some points on the international scene. He indicated the interdependence of nations and that we cannot forget the least fortunate ones. I might mention, for instance, the North-South dialogue in which the problem of the recession, the depression, or whatever you want to call it, that has taken place was correctly phrophesied and seen prior to its occurrence by the independent committee under Willy Brandt. This North-South study was done several years ago. That same group of people are now working on their own because their commission has officially come to an end. They produced just recently a new little booklet called "Common Crisis" which updated their previous positions on how the world has to tie together—the North and the South, the rich and the poor—to bring about some kind of human existence to the whole planet. In this booklet, to which the Minister alluded in his budget, they indicate the area of trade. There were other areas not specifically mentioned by the Minister in relation to the international situation because the Brandt people indicated it is necessary to have employment resolved in an international manner. Aid would have to be looked at in an international way, and the great problem of international credit and the massive debt load of the Third World creates a special problem. The debt load of the South amounts to at least $600 billion or more. Many of the countries that were just beginning to develop and were making a few breakthroughs have fallen behind and have almost crashed under the load of their debt. This is not only true of little countries, which are in the worst situation, but it is true also of large countries such as Brazil, Mexico, Nigeria and others. Even though they have wealth and an economic base that was beginning to build, that same economic base has fallen, it fell in the last year. All those different setbacks because of the North-South link will affect Canada as well. These things are not mentioned in the budget as far as I can see.

The Minister stated in the little budget booklet entitled "Budget in brief" that tariff rates will be looked at in a special way. On page 14 we find:

> Lower rates of customs duty on some $10 million in annual imports from developing countries, under the General Preferential Tariff, are being implemented as recommended by the Tariff Board.

That is good. However, let us put that in relation to the fact that the capacity of developing countries to import has fallen $100 billion, according to the Brandt people. That is what the developing countries are not able to buy from or trade with those who are rich, in other words, the North.

Now we come to how Canadians in general look upon what Canada should be doing as a country in its aid to the developing world. This is a complicated and large field. The difficulty we have right now is in knowing where the Canadian aid program is going. We have not had a president of CIDA for almost six months. I feel the frustration of the people in CIDA because they do not have a president to enunciate clear policies.

In the past year, in non-governmental organizations, such as church organizations, the YMCA and various funds for the care of children in the developing world, Canadians gave more percentage-wise than the year before, even though it was during a period of recession. Canadian people still have a generous attitude toward help. That is an extremely important matter of which the Government should be aware. We have heard Members of the House speak against aid. They have the right to speak against some aid because it is not aiding anyone other than some company in Canada. Canadians are interested in aid and have shown their interest by raising private donations to help other countries in the developing world. I have been told by people in charge of non-governmental organizations that that is generally the case across the board.

It is important for the Government to remember, when it talks about international institutions and replenishing the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank or any one of the development banks around the world, that Canadians are basically generous when it comes to helping those who are in worse straits than themselves. This is true across society, including those who are poor in Canada.

Referring to the book entitled, "Common Crisis", the writers of it, under the chairmanship of Willy Brandt, identified the same thing about which I am talking, how people by themselves, one on one, in small non-governmental organizations have a natural desire to help other people. They have noticed this trait in other countries as well. One thing they proposed—and I would like to go on the record here as proposing it—is that Canada should join with other countries that have this powerful non-governmental orientation to see whether or not there should be an international body of non-governmental organizations around the world so that the direction and the work of these private agencies in communities throughout the world could be channelled through an international facility not unlike the IMF or the World Bank.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question with respect to the first part of his speech. I was unable to determine whether he was running for the job of a Cabinet Minister or a cardinal. I would like to know what makes the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) think that God is a socialist.

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his very clear and quite obviously unbiased question. I assure him that I am not running for cardinal or for a Cabinet seat. I really do not think that God has voted recently. I am sure that on many occasions He must have a difficult time understanding the struggles of human beings.

Mrs. Mitchell: Or she.

Mr. Ogle: "Or she" as the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) just said. He must have a difficult time understanding how human beings struggle to solve the problems of the human condition.

I would like to relate my feelings to the Hon. Member. I learned about God in the Judeo-Christian tradition. My tradition—and I would expect his tradition—has come down through the Bible and the Judaic background of the Christian principles of the New Testament.

In my understanding of those books, beginning with the Old Testament, they clearly identify the role of a good Jew as being to love God with his whole heart, whole soul and whole mind and to love his neighbour with the same force. That was redefined by Jesus when He came to give us the principles of Christianity. In that tradition that is the way I understand God.

The words we use today to describe how people treat each other in economics vary. Some people lump it under the term "free enterprise". I would be glad to ask my colleague whether he would be willing to enter into a discussion on whether God is a free enterpriser. On the other hand, other people will lump the way men and women treat others under the term "Communism". I could ask anybody whether God is a Communist, and they could answer whatever they wanted. But according to my conscience and according to the way I understand what both charity and justice mean in the Christian tradition, I quite clearly believe that the socialist way of thinking about taking the creation of the world and distributing it in such a way that all people benefit from it is closer to my understanding of how God asks us to live our lives than are other principles which could be set out. I would be glad if the Hon. Member would rise and explain to me whether he thinks God is a free enterpriser.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member has reflected upon this very serious question in the past in view of what he has chosen to do in life.

Turning to the intervention of the Bishops in questions of the economy or questions of society generally, does the Hon. Member agree that when people make interventions with the authority of God, or are perceived by the public to be speaking with the authority of the church, it is important to draw a line between being an inspirational force for Catholics, all Christians or all members of society, and commenting, analyzing or criticizing the means used by Government, which really brings people into the political arena? I realize that the Hon. Member has chosen to be in the political arena. That is all right because when he does that I believe he does not speak with the authority of God or of the church. Does he see the difference which I see clearly? If so, where does he think the line should be drawn?

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, the question of the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) is definitely on target in the discussion that I initiated in my speech today. However, it is a little too complicated to answer fully in the time allotted to me.

First, let me say that the Bishops, in teaching people about morality, have the right to speak about the morality of any sector of the society. For example, they have the right to speak about the Hon. Member's marriage, whether or not he is living it properly. I believe they have a right to speak in areas concerning morality.

Mr. Breau: In public?

Mr. Ogle: I am just talking about different areas of peoples' lives which involve moral issues. There are moral issues involved in their personal lives and in their social lives. I believe the Bishops have the right to speak about the morality in the military. To speak about morality and put it into a kind of cloudy area has no meaning. They have to talk about what is going on. They have to risk talking about what is going on, even at the expense of being inaccurate in some of their appraisals. As a group of Canadians, people who are part and parcel of our society, in the same way that medical, industrial and labour people or any other group of society, they have a right to speak as Canadians, speaking from their base and from their authority on the questions of society, including the economy. It is easy to make judgments sometimes about particular moral events, but when it comes to the social fibre, the structures that oppress people in real situations, it is much more difficult to speak clearly, but it has to be spoken and spoken in the concrete.

• (1720)

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I have never heard the Member speak elsewhere. He knows what I mean. He is pretty good here at skirting a question. He has not answered my question. I was not asking about the right of the Bishops to speak. Everyone in this country has the right to speak; bishops, priests, members of Parliament and the public. There are no absolutes in this. It is a question of judgment and balance.

What is the Hon. Member's view as to where the line is drawn between being an inspirational force for society and discussing the means of Government, which is really politics? I am not asking him to talk about the rights of the Bishops or the wisdom of the Bishops. Everyone in this country has the right to speak. I am asking for his judgment as a politician who has been elected to this House on where the line should be drawn.

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, first, what the Hon. Member said would give the impression that there are two camps in the world, one in which there is religion and one in which there is not. I do not agree with that principle. I believe there is only one world, and that morality takes place throughout the world. If you are going to speak precisely about a moral question, you have to do it in the context of what is taking place. For that reason, I believe the Bishops have a right to speak about a moral question in the here and now.

The Member indicated that if they did so, they would lose their inspirational value. I challenge that. I feel the Bishops became much more inspirational to many more Christians in Canada because they spoke about the realities of what is going on. It may be that they did not inspire the Member because they spoke against what his Government is doing.

Mr. Breau: Be serious.

Mr. Ogle: I am serious. I remember well the statement the Hon. Member made to the press. I feel that they, as well as other moral leaders, have a right to speak on that. Maybe the Hon. Member and I should continue this discussion outside the Chamber.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question and answer period having expired, the debate may be continued only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimity.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I notice that the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) was very anxious to shake his head.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the other day the Hon. Member for Mississauga North raised a great hullabaloo because the movement in our debate went from one side to the other.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me finally to get a chance to talk on a budget that I have personally been involved with since the Minister started his pre-budget consultation last December with so many groups from the private sector.

As I listened to his decisions on budget night, I came to the conclusion that this budget is one that stresses fast action on job-creation, especially for those who need jobs the most. This is a budget that stresses rapid action by Government in key economic areas right across the country to get our recovery going. This is a budget that stresses relief for business to finance and to encourage their growth so that long-term recovery and long-term job-creation will be possible.

I personally welcome the considerable public support that we have heard since budget night. Let me quote a few examples from the private sector. In the area of small business, John

Bulloch, President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, was quoted by Canadian Press on April 19 as saying:

A combination of good politics and sound economics. Business will generally give high marks.

Mr. John Kyle of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce was quoted in The Gazette of April 20 as saying:

It sounds as if he listened to the business community.

Mr. Brian Aune of the Investment Dealers Association of Canada said:

A carefully thought out program to help the private sector in the recovery.

On jobs, another issue that has been contentious in this debate, let us listen to our constituents. Mr. Norman Godfrey of the Housing and Urban Development Association, a good Torontonian, is quoted in the April 20 Globe and Mail as having said:

The pro-business budget will generate confidence and create jobs.

Mr. Kenneth Nisbet of Westinghouse Canada Limited was quoted as follows in The Globe and Mail of April 21:

The Government's sudden attention to job-creation in the private sector is encouraging. It adds up to a better climate for the people who employ people.

John Grant, an investment economist, on the April 20 CTV National News said:

There is going to be a stronger expansion than we had guessed the night before the budget.

Pat Johnston of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business was quoted on CTV Canada AM as saying:

So on balance we are very pleased. People are now more confident. And confidence actually will create more jobs than tax breaks.

Those are important statements from the private sector on small business and jobs. When you look at a more general reaction to the budget, you get equally positive feedback. Terry Elder of the accounting firm of Deloitte Haskins and Sells is quoted in the April 26 Toronto Sun as follows:

It demonstrated Finance Minister Marc Lalonde is willing to listen—and act upon—the requests of the small business community.

In its editorial, the Ottawa Citizen on April 27 stated:

Evidence of Canada's economic recovery is mounting, and tends to confirm that the federal Government's approach in last week's budget was the right one.

Those are all positive comments from people in the private sector, key replies to some of the criticisms we have heard here.

How is it that this budget came about? I mentioned that I was involved in the consultation process from December onward. We met with representatives from every corner of the country, from every part of the private sector. I personally sat in on meetings with mayors, reeves, housing industry representatives, the Canadian Labour Congress, the co-operative and credit unions, small business, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Bankers' Association. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) canvassed as many representatives of Canadians as he could find. He listened to them. He took their ideas and threaded them together to create the budget. That, Mr. Speaker, is why we are now hearing so many Canadians say that they approve the budget. He listened, he absorbed the ideas, he acted on them, and people are now gaining confidence in his decisions.

What did the people tell us during that long process? Well, first they told us not to be afraid of more Government spending, as long as it is wise spending. We got that input from both business and labour. We were encouraged to take up a program of permanent public works that would add to the wealth and the inventory of our country. We have done that. Take a look at what is contained in the budget. There are 100 projects that will stimulate key sectors from coast to coast. Look at the efforts in housing. Look at the efforts in construction. All of these will add up and create lasting monuments to our recovery.

Mr. Speaker, you and I know about the marvelous impact such efforts can have. For example, take a look from coast to coast at the heritage left from centennial year. What town, what corner of this country does not have a little library or a little monument to centennial year? In the same way, we are now embarking upon key efforts to stimulate the recovery with permanent public works.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, that is something that the private sector advised us to do, and we are doing it.

The second thing the private sector told us to do is to use tax incentives and to rely on the private sector, and especially to allow the private sector to alleviate its losses through the tax system. We have done that. Take a look at the $2.4 billion in tax incentives and growth incentives that are contained in the private sector portion of the budget. That $2.4 billion will make the recovery permanent for small and big business coast to coast. That was an idea that we received from the private sector and we acted on it.

Finally, the private sector told us that confidence and recovery would go hand in hand. Take a look at how the private sector has reacted since that time. Eric Owen of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in the April 23 Financial Post said, and I quote him proudly:

The Minister has done his homework and taken constructive criticism.

Barbara Morrison of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business said to the Vancouver Sun on April 20:

The most important thing about this budget is the attitude. It's the change of attitude that will give business encouragement.

Sam Hughes of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce said to the CBC program "Sunday Morning" on April 24:

We do have to offer him constructive balanced advice and as long as he keeps acting on it we're going to keep applauding.

Finally, returning to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, John Bulloch told the CBC program "The House" on April 23:

It's going to make our members feel more positive about the country, it's going to make them feel more positive about reinvestment.

That, Mr. Speaker, means that business will be more positive about growth and new opportunity and new jobs because the Government had listened to them. They are enthusiastic because, right from the beginning, we went to Canadians and listened to them. We heard their advice and acted on it.

The private sector is excited because we have given it a chance to recover and to recover permanently. We have given it a chance to expand and to create jobs and to go back to work. All Canadians join us in applauding that goal.

As I have said, there are three basic themes in this budget. One is to create work quickly for those people who do not have work now, and we have dedicated over $700 million in the budget above and beyond money already dedicated by previous budgets. So today we have a total of almost $1.5 billion dedicated to direct job creation.

We went to the private sector and asked them to start growing through tax incentives and through incentives for investment. That is the second part of our budget. $2.4 billion will go into that. As I mentioned, the public works program will start to accelerate the recovery in key areas right away, and $2.4 billion more will go into that.

What has the Opposition had to say about this? Frankly, I have listened to six days of debate here, debate that I believe has been kind of dispirited and disjointed. I do not see any real focus to the criticism. There are some points, however, that I would like to raise and answer right now.

The Tories, for example, have taken up their classic wail about the level of the deficit. In doing so, they have demanded that we cut Government spending despite the benefits I described that will be derived from that spending. Of course, we have heard a variety of voices over there, some saying, "Well, let us get busy and cut the deficit," and others saying, "Let us get busy and increase our programs". Well, having listened to all of that, I suppose we should take our advice from one of the leadership candidates, Mr. Michael Wilson from Etobicoke Centre, who said, as reported in the Globe and Mail—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is the usual practice to refer to Hon. Members by their constituencies.

Mr. Fisher: The Member for Etobicoke Centre, Mr. Speaker, and I stand corrected. I apologize for my error. The Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) said in the Globe and Mail two days ago that if he went to work at his very hardest, the best he could do is to get the deficit down to $29 billion. One does not know where those $2 billion would have been cut from. I suspect that if we were to follow the typical Tory example, those cuts would come from the backs of working Canadians.

Mr. Thomas Maxwell, from the prestigious Conference Board In Canada said to the CBC program "As It Happens" on April 20:

> I can't see any major financial problems associated with the deficit or the projections they have in their budget.

I agree with Dr. Maxwell. I believe that the spending we have undertaken in the budget will be a key element in our recovery at this time. It was not done flippantly or carelessly. It was done to stimulate recovery and to use the great mechanism of the Government's influence to help lift the level of economic activity as swiftly as possible.

Another complaint we have heard from the Conservative benches, particularly from Members like the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), is the great complaint that we are raising taxes. That complaint ignores the previous advice they gave us about cutting the deficit. It also ignores the fact that the tax increases we have in this budget will come at a time when the recovery is here and we will be able to afford the extra taxes. We are not implementing these taxes now when the recovery is still young. We will wait until it is in its full maturity, until people can afford to pay a bit extra. In late 1984 and early 1985, we will begin to ask for a little extra money to pay for the recovery that we will be enjoying then.

Equally, we have heard from our friends from the NDP the same kind of twisted logic. The Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) just told us that every Canadian has the right to work. This is a significant change from the debate that we have heard previously both from Members of that Party and other Members in the House. Previously we urged and fought for 50 years to give Canadians the support of their community when they cannot get work. That is a very important difference. Yet when we do find ways to create jobs through youth employment programs, summer programs, the NEED Program, how are these programs described by the NDP? They are described as a process of raking leaves as if efforts to create genuine work can be written off and demeaned by that kind of slander. I do not agree, Mr. Speaker.

In my riding the budget has brought a real benefit to consumers. In my riding the incentives offered in the RHOSP are going to stimulate home building and the furniture industry. Our home builders, developers, construction people and their employees are going to benefit from that new program.

I have received a letter from Erindale College, University of Toronto, written by Dr. Paul Fox, the Principal of that outstanding institution. As we know, the federal Government will put $290 million into 15 new research centres across the country. Dr. Fox writes:

> I am glad to hear that the government is considering sponsoring fifteen high tech centres. Jeff Fawcett, the Dean of Science, and I would like to discuss the matter with you at your earliest convenience.

I will be happy to tell Dr. Fox that I will be pursuing one of those centres for Mississauga to complement the vigorous research industries there, with computers, the defence industry and in the electronics industry. I hope the Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) and his associate, the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) are listening because I want one of those centres in Mississauga, the heart of research and development in Canada.

In my riding jobs are a key issue. People see how we have stabilized business opportunities, the way we have put cash back into the hands of business and the way we have given them incentives to expand. These are the ways to create permanent jobs and that is welcomed.

Ordinary families in my riding welcome the high Child Tax Credit that has been continued. People in my riding welcome the high child care expense deduction at $2,000 per child. That is a welcome benefit for working parents in Mississauga and all across Canada. Ordinary working people in Mississauga welcome the higher work expense deduction so that people can claim either $500 or up to 20 per cent of taxable income.

Young people in my area want to join Katimavik. When the Streetsville Secondary School band played on the steps of Parliament Hill last week, members of the band asked me for application forms as several students wanted to work there for the year. Young people in my riding welcome the higher student loans. They welcome the extra money for Summer Canada. They are glad to see the Youth Internship Program and the extra opportunity in the Armed Forces.

Above all, Mr. Speaker, families in Mississauga and across Canada welcome the extra money in direct job creation. In my city we have seen improvements made to our parks. We have seen a new computer program brought into the library system. Co-operative housing has been upgraded. Private business is starting to take advantage of NEED grants. All of this is happening in Mississauga, and it is typical of the job-creation programs that are going on from coast to coast.

I should like to conclude by quoting a comment made by Dr. William Mackness, chief economist of the Bank of Nova Scotia who said:

> I think that there is a tremendous amount of pent-up demand in the North American economy. We've not built enough automobiles, appliances, homes now for several years. The biggest impediment, I think, in the way of a long and sustained recovery is the level of interest rates. They are too high. I'm optimistic that they'll come down considerably, and on that basis, I'd look forward to a long vigorous, sustained recovery.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 64(8), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the motion now before the House.

[English]

The question is on the main motion.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division:

FORTHCOMING VISIT OF THE POPE

RECOMMENDATION THAT GOVERNMENT OFFER ASSISTANCE TO CANADIAN CONFERENCE OF CATHOLIC BISHOPS

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, this morning I heard the news on the radio that Pope John Paul II will be visiting Canada in September 1984. The Pope will be in Canada for ten days, and will be staying three days in my own province, the Province of Quebec. I would like to point out how important this visit is, considering the fact that over 25 per cent of the people of this great country of ours are Catholic, and I also wish to say how pleased I am, as a Member of this House, with the news of this visit. I think it is a great honour that is being bestowed on the Catholics of this country by the leader of 500 million Catholics throughout the world.

I hope that on this occasion, the Government of Canada will offer the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops any help they may require in preparing for this important trip which will be the first time the Pope, who is well loved throughout the world, sets foot on Canadian soil.

INCOME TAX

INDEXED SECURITY INVESTMENT PLAN

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in the budget papers the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) filed detail of an Indexed Security Investment Plan, including a detailed ways and means motion, draft amendments to the Income Tax Act, and a full explanation of how the system will work. The Indexed Security Investment Plan is a method whereby those persons who invest in listed securities of public companies can escape paying capital gains tax on the investment where the gain is referrable to inflation.

The scheme proposed is highly bureaucratic and favours only stockbrokers and investors investing in listed securities. It is small and medium sized businesses that create the new jobs required in the country. This scheme does absolutely nothing for those who invest in small and medium sized businesses to protect them from the unfair gains tax caused by inflation.

The House should form today a special committee to investigate the scheme proposed by the Minister. That committee should determine how it would be possible to provide for small and medium sized businesses the same protection as the Minister proposes to give the big boys in this Indexed Security Investment Plan. Surely if we are to allow those who invest in big businesses to escape tax on inflationary gains, then in the name of all that is fair and all that is decent the same privilege should be extended to those who invest in small and medium sized businesses, businesses that by their very nature cannot be listed on the stock exchange—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

DISARMAMENT

UNITED STATES BISHOPS' PASTORAL LETTER

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Catholic Bishops of the United States in a special meeting in Chicago produced a new pastoral letter directed specifically toward world disarmament. It is basically a pastoral statement, it is called "The Challenge of Peace—God's Promise and Our Response". In the statement the Bishops condemned all use of nuclear weapons, they questioned the morality of their possession in any country, and they endorsed the concept of a nuclear freeze in the whole world. Basically the Bishops have clearly said "no". Their statement is definitive and precise. It is based upon the fact that the planet which has been given to us to be used by all peoples is in danger of being totally destroyed.

In their statement they have changed one four letter word to another four letter word. The first such word was "curb" arms build-up. It is now "halt" arms build-up. In that light, I remind the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that in the month of December, 1982, the leaders of the six major denominations in Canada gave him almost the same approach and material. I want the Government of Canada to rethink seriously its position on testing the Cruise missile in light of the new moral position proposed by the American Bishops.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUPPORT FOR EXTENSION OF MATERNITY BENEFITS TO ADOPTIVE PARENTS

Mr. Maurice Bossy (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, on behalf of many concerned constituents of Kent, I want to join Hon. Members on both sides of the House who have indicated their support for an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act to extend maternity leave benefits to adoptive parents.

This amendment was proposed by the recent Task Force on Unemployment Insurance in the 1980s and is currently receiving intensive evaluation by the federal Government. Unemployment insurance maternity leave benefits are presently extended to employed women during and immediately after their pregnancy not only to allow these individuals the time required to recover and adapt to the physical element of childbirth, but also to give the new parents an opportunity to become acquainted with their new child during his or her first weeks of life.

The requirements are not so different when a child is adopted. All three partners in this new relationship require time and financial assistance to establish a firm base from which the entire family can grow. This assistance and time are unavailable to many working families who have adopted a child, under the current provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act. A move by the federal Government to change this situation would be of great service to the social fabric of the Canadian community. Therefore I urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and his officials to continue their valuable discussions with an eye toward presenting a workable proposal in this regard in the near future.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

CHANGES SUGGESTED TO AID OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, the oil and gas industry in western Canada is on its knees. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), the Deputy Minister of Energy, and most senior officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources all know that the National Energy Program is an unmitigated disaster. But does the Government do anything to remedy the situation? No. It will not make the changes it knows should be made because that would be an admission of error. The Government does not have the guts to admit a mistake.

If the Government truly wants the oil and gas industry to contribute to economic recovery it should create an environment which will encourage the industry. Tinkering will never restore confidence. Investors will not play as long as politicians and bureaucrats want to fine tune.

The changes that must be made to the National Energy Program are straightforward. First, prices for all domestic production should be allowed to move to world levels, whether they be up or down. Second, it should eliminate the grant system. Petroleum incentive payments are costly and discriminatory. We are the only country in the world where the Government pays cash for drilling a dry hole. Replace the grant system with an incentive system that is equitable and non-discriminatory. Third, with the savings from the petroleum incentives program, reduce the front-end tax load and negotiate with the provincial Governments—

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

CALL FOR CANCELLATION OF DECENTRALIZATION PROPOSAL

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, the Department of National Health and Welfare is proposing to decentralize its income security branch now located in Toronto, Ottawa, and Halifax. The Minister has said that the transfer of some 505 jobs from the present locations would create a similar number of jobs in areas of high unemployment. The Department also estimates it will cost approximately $34 million to create 505 more unemployed in Toronto, Ottawa, and Halifax in order to reduce unemployment elsewhere.

The Public Service Alliance of Canada has made a number of proposals and made concrete suggestions on how this $34 million could be used to create 772 full-time jobs if this decentralization program were cancelled. It also points out that if the $34 million were used for short-term job-creation, fully 2,000 person years of employment could be created.

The PSAC also questions the accuracy of the Department's cost estimates of this move and suggests it will be closer to $100 million rather than $34 million. Given the preaching we have been subjected to from the Minister about fiscal restraint, and the attacks the Government has waged on pension incomes, family allowances, and public service salaries, under its six and five program, the Minister should cancel this proposed decentralization—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN WILDLIFE FEDERATION

USE OF FUNDS ON CAMPAIGN AGAINST ACID RAIN

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, an article appeared in The Globe and Mail of last Saturday which dealt with the fund-raising practices of the Canadian Wildlife Federation, the largest non-profit charitable organization in the country in the field of conservation. This article quoted Mr. Kenneth Brynaert, executive director of the CWF, as saying that the foundation had collected some $343,228 from the public for the purpose of conducting an anti-acid rain campaign in the United States, while at the same time accepting an $80,000 contract from the federal Department of the Environment for the same purpose. In any event, the sum it spent on the project was less than the contract figure, leaving the foundation more than $350,000 in pocket after a public appeal for funds that were not spent for the purpose for which they were solicited.

This is a situation that reflects badly on other groups in the conservation field and, further, leaves the Government open to the accusation that it is allowing charitable status, with all that that implies from a tax standpoint, to an organization whose of that status is questionable.

As a person vitally concerned with the problem of acid rain, these revelations leave me most upset. Surely the Government owes some answers to this House and the public, who have contributed to the CWF fund drives and who have supported this and other foundations in the acid rain battle and on other conservation issues.

AIR CANADA

REPORT OF BONUSES PAID TO QUEBEC EMPLOYEES

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I would like to comment on the report in this morning's Gazette that secret bonuses of around 4 per cent have been paid to Air Canada executives earning over $45,000 a year. I have three comments only: first, why help only those earning over $45,000? Do other Quebec employees not pay Quebec taxes as well? What is the rationale or principle here?

Second, why pay any bonus when the airline lost $32.6 million last year? Is not the idea of a bonus that it will only be paid in good years?

Third, recently Air Canada laid off 585 ground service workers. I understand they did not get a bonus. They did not get the golden handshake that was given to 600 white collar workers who took early retirement.

At the same time that our airline had a large loss last year, it is arbitrarily selecting a few employees to pay secret bonuses to, selecting other groups to buy into fancy pension plans, and selecting another group to lay off without any such benefit at all.

What sort of management is this? How can such capricious behaviour demand respect anywhere among Canadians? It is as though management feels that the end is nigh and that the privileged classes have to be taken care of before everything goes down the tube.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

LEVEL OF FUNDING

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In light of the budget provision which claims to put another $700 million behind research and development in Canada over the next two years, bringing the total Canadian commitment to about 1.4 per cent of the Gross National Product at best, which will leave us just as far behind in the future as we have been in the past 15 years, I would like to ask the Minister if he can explain to the House how that clearly inadequate amount of funding will create jobs needed by Canadians in the future, and how it will even prevent the loss of jobs to those nations whose Governments have looked after their responsibilities in the high technology and the modest technology fields.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I am disappointed that the Hon. Member, who is the Official Opposition's critic for Science and Technology, was not in the House yesterday to exchange questions and answers at the end of my speech. I would have thought that he would have shown delight at the commitment that the Government has made, not only for funding in the area of technology, not only for research and development, but for human resource development as well. But instead, he rises to criticize. I am glad to see that he is prepared to push for an ever greater involvement in the area of research and development.

It is not only the federal Government that is an active player. Industry, the university sector, and the Provinces are also playing an active part. We hope that the lead we have taken will be followed by them. In fact, because of the goal of 1.5 per cent of GNP to be devoted to research and development by 1985, the Hon. Member, from his own figures, will now recognize that we are very much on track. To my recollection, he did not go that way the last time he spoke in the House.

GOVERNMENT POLICY—UNEMPLOYMENT PROJECTION

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, I thank the Minister for his invitation to follow him. We will not only follow him, we will greatly surpass his commitment in the next Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilchrist: I would like to quote from the Minister's speech of May 3, the speech of which he said I am unaware.

> Canada has been quick to respond to this challenge and over the past few months we have been examining how a technology policy can best work for us.

Is the Minister now asking us to believe that in the past few months the Government has discovered the value of research and technology, after 15 years of serious neglect? How can he explain the glowing speech he made yesterday when in fact he has had on his desk for those same few months, from his own Department, a report which predicts that there will be as many as two million Canadians lacking jobs by the end of this very decade?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, it is difficult to take that question seriously given the commitment the Government has shown in the area of research and development for many years. It is pointed out in the budget documents, and I reiterated in my speech yesterday, that Canada's fiscal regime for research and development is second only to Singapore in terms of the richness of incentives for the private sector. That is something for which the Hon. Member has been pushing. The Minister of Finance, as you know, has tabled a white paper for discussion on that subject.

There should be no misrepresentations made with respect to the two million jobs lost. There will be two million people looking for work. There may be jobs lost. There always have been jobs lost through technology and technological innovation. The farming sector is a good example. There is now 4 per cent of our work force in the farming sector. Some 25 per cent of our work force was in the farming sector in 1946. What has happened to those workers? Would you call those jobs lost? Those people have been integrated into other areas such as, the manufacturing sector and the service sector. That is what we are witnessing today. Instead of wringing our hands, we are identifying these problems, discussing them, and bringing them to the attention of the public.

• (1420)

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, it was not my report that showed there would be two million jobs too few by the end of the decade; it was the Minister's own report.

Does the Minister realize that the population of Canada comprises something less than .5 per cent of the world's population? There are billions of people out there who are ready, willing and able to buy products which Canadians can produce if the Government ever gets its act together and gets the technology development that the country needs.

I should like to know when the Government and the Minister are going to deal honestly with the problem of Canadian job loss and give research and development the urgent priority it requires to match the 1979 Conservative Government's objective of 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product for job-creation research goals. The Minister will realize that, as the National Research Council says, the extra 1 per cent could virtually cut unemployment in the country in half.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I note that the Conservative Government of 1979 had many worthy objectives, one of which was to remain in office for four years.

Numbers mean nothing. The question is whether we are on track, and whether we have set realistic objectives. I think we have. I have pointed out to the Hon. Member, and I will point it out again, that we look at this as a period of opportunity, identifying the new jobs that are emerging and identifying the opportunities that will become available to Canadians. More important, we are making Canadians aware of those opportunities so that in the basic educational system they will be equipped to take on new responsibilities, and higher paying jobs. That is what has happened in the past. Admittedly this technology revolution is moving very quickly.That is why we have made such an effort in this budget and will continue to make such an effort to equip Canadians to meet those challenges.

The Minister of Finance pointed out in his budget that $1.2 billion has been dedicated in this period to human-resource development. He supplemented it, by raising it to that amount with an additional $155 million in the budget itself.

I really do not think the Hon. Member has much to complain about unless he simply believes more money should be thrown at problems, which is normally the position of our friends in the NDP. I wish he would read the technology paper, analyze it, and put forward some constructive criticism. We would be very happy to listen to him.

SPECIAL RECOVERY PROGRAM

FUNDING FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA TRAINING INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Will he confirm that of the $2.4 billion assigned to the Special Recovery Program $400 million has been assigned to British Columbia? In that context, the Government has failed to anticipate the future as indicated by the report to the Minister of State for Economic Development. We now find that, according to that report, there could be 15 per cent unemployment by 1991. Youth in particular are going to be in anguish over this since they cannot plan their futures.

Will the Minister commit himself to allocating funds to colleges like Kwantlen and BCIT, and other colleges, that are concentrating on training programs for hi-tech industries so that the young people who are facing a frustrating future can plan for that future and not suffer the social dislocation that the Government has not anticipated?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked a question which I think goes to the heart of the matter about the kinds of changes we are facing, and that is that the degree to which the country deals with a problem is how we manage it. The recommendations he has just made, we have already undertaken. If he had been aware he would know that we announced, two weeks ago in British Columbia, major grants to BCIT for the establishment of a robotics CAD/CAM training centre. That was preceded by announcements three or four weeks earlier in some seven different community colleges throughout British Columbia, as they have been throughout the country, that we are substantially modernizing and re-equipping community colleges to train people for that new technology so that we can offset the kinds of projections that are being made.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, the major industry the Government is interested in is recycling, because those funds have been recycled several times already.

I would still like to have a statement from the Minister of Finance on whether the report is true that $400 million has been assigned to the Province of British Columbia.

INQUIRY RESPECTING AID FOR INDUSTRY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. The Government has again been taken by surprise by the impending calamity in the forestry industry in that a report by the National Research Council indicates that in 15 years the forest industry could be decimated in Canada. That means that in British Columbia the major source of jobs and the major source of income by export market, is going to be lost.

What specific programs is the Minister planning for the forest industry, and specifically for British Columbia, in relation to the silviculture and pest control in the forest industry, and projects like that, in order to save those jobs for the future?

• (1425)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment who would be very able to provide specifics from the vast array of programs in the natural forestry policy, I would certainly say to the Hon. Member that we all recognize on this side of the House, and I hope on the other side of the House, that the forestry industry is one of the underpinnings of the Canadian economy. You can be sure that the issues which are raised are being addressed. The whole area of silviculture is one of priority, not only in British Columbia but in other regions of the country as well. The Government has pursued, and will continue actively to pursue techniques, research and development, other procedures and other programs to ensure that it remains one of our strengths.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE TABLED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. Yesterday he painted a pretty rosy picture with regard to technological change and employment. He was talking about moving from boring, tedious jobs, to exciting, well paid jobs. Canadians this morning were shocked to find out that the Minister had on his desk a report which projected the loss of some two million jobs for the Canadian economy. What we need to know today, Madam Speaker, is whether the Minister has taken off his rosy coloured glasses and whether he is ready to engage Canadians in a full and open debate on technological change. Will he table that secret report, and will he refer it to the committee on employment?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, when one is involved in economic development it is difficult not to have "rosy glasses" about the future of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: When we talk about issues of job dislocation through technology, we are indeed engaging in a debate which is one of the most important and one of the most topical, not only here in Canada, but in the United States, West Germany, France, and Britain; every industrialized country. There is no choice but to embark with new technologies. That is what we are doing through our technology policy. That was discussed yesterday and I was here in this House. I am sorry that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James was not here to take part in the lively debate on the subject.

The fact of the matter is, Madam Speaker, that certainly there will be jobs lost, but there will be new jobs created. We created in Canada three million jobs from 1971 to 1981, during one of the most difficult economic climates in terms of inflation and energy costs which this country has ever faced. There is no reason to believe that we will not be able to do the same thing, given the opportunities which are arising from these new technologies. That is what we have to look forward to. We have opportunities, not liabilities, ahead.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT TO PROVIDE JOBS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I did not say that we should turn a blind eye to technological change. I said we should examine it in all its hues, not just the rosy hues. We should look at the workers who are going to be black and blue from the employment policies of the Government.

This study yesterday indicated that alcoholism, family breakup and vandalism would be the result of the very high levels of unemployment. What we need to know is if the Government is willing to go beyond redefining full employment upwards, which is clearly unacceptable to Canadians, and is it willing to renew a commitment to "A job for every Canadian"?

Let me remind the Minister that he still has not answered my question about whether he will table this report and whether he will refer it to the committee on employment.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): First of all, Madam Speaker, I am not aware of a study, per se. I am aware of background documents.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: Would the Hon. Member be happier if he thought that the Government was not involved in an active consideration of what the impacts of the new technology might be, what the impact might be on our competitiveness internationally, and so on? Of course we are looking at these issues. In fact the budget specifically addresses these issues, not only by strengthening the technology centre, but also by proposing a national centre which will be subject to negotiations with labour and with industry, led by my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the Minister of Labour, with a view to addressing these very issues.

I do not know what the Hon. Member is essentially complaining about. Is he saying we should not back away from the new technologies? We are addressing the problems. We are putting programs into effect to provide for human resource development. Perhaps the Hon. Member could be more specific as to what he thinks we should do, besides tabling a report, and I am not even sure what report it is.

NEED FOR PUBLIC SECTOR INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. The Government has been preaching for some time an almost exclusive reliance on the private sector. Given this background document which shows the devastating impact that technological change is going to have on employment, is this Minister now willing to recognize the need for the lead to be taken by the public sector in order to develop an industrial strategy which has, as its first priority, employment for all Canadians? Does he not realize that Canadians are not right-wing ideologues and slaves to the scribblings of Adam Smith, and that we want jobs not just for ourselves but for our neighbours as well?

• (1430)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): I would certainly agree, Madam Speaker, that Canadians are not right-wing ideologues. But they certainly are not left-wing ideologues either. That seems to be the point the Hon. Member is making. I gather he would like the Government to embark upon a public employment program to ensure that the Public Service expands and absorbs all the unemployment out there. That is not the thrust of the budget. The thrust of the budget is to support the private sector which has created the jobs in the past, three million jobs from 1971 to 1981, and to ensure that this scenario repeats itself in the 1980s and 1990s.

POSITION OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Since the Government has made no response whatsoever concerning the status of the RCMP investigation into the Air Canada matter, has the Prime Minister discussed with his friend, René Amyot, whom he appointed as a chairman of Air Canada, the propriety of a leave of absence pending completion of the investigation?

INQUIRY RESPECTING REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, separate and apart from any criminal investigation, is it the policy of the Government that Prime Ministerial appointees to public office—

Mr. Lalonde: They are cabinet appointments.

Mr. Nowlan: —can use public facilities for personal gain and promotion? Specifically, has he discussed with Mr. Amyot the use of Air Canada property in meetings with fugitives from Canadian justice, and others, in promoting personal real estate deals both here and abroad?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer to both questions is again no, Madam Speaker. I would just add that on this side of the House we also have respect for the rule of law, which the Hon. Member does not.

HOUSING

CANADIAN HOME OWNERSHIP STIMULATION PROGRAM—LEVEL OF FUNDING

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works responsible for housing. I am disturbed about the number of calls I am getting from people who have applied for a $3,000 grant under the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Program. The offices of CMHC are telling these people that they do not have any money and they do not know whether they will be able to meet the applicants' requests. Can the Minister assure the House that all applications made up until May 31 will be met and the Government will have sufficient funds for all the applicants?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I will ask your patience for a moment because I have had many questions from Members on this issue. I would remind the House that the Minister of Finance, when he announced an extra $30 million for this program, made it very clear that this was a program which was administered to budget, and that it would come to an end when the allocation was used up. If it was before the end of May, Minister's statement was to finish the program after the extra $30 million had been allotted. The Hon. Member is one of those who raised the issue which made me go to the Minister of Finance to try to help Northern areas and isolated regions where people could not easily build during the winter months, including April. This we did. In fact, Madam Speaker, the success of the program is such that the flood of applications which came in during the last couple of weeks has probably committed the full amount except for a reserve we have kept for northern areas and isolated communities. We will be examining these cases as they come in.

What my officers are saying to people who come into the offices is that it is doubtful that we will have enough funds to meet all the demands. But they are taking the applications in order, and maintaining that list of priorities established for those who have applied. I might say, Madam Speaker, that the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan will go a long way to meet the same type of grant advantage that we are talking about in the Canadian Home Ownership Program.

TREATMENT OF NORTHERN APPLICANTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Government is about to embark on another borrowing proposal which it will be putting before the House of Commons for approval, does the Minister not consider that this might be an appropriate time for him to request additional funds so that all these people who live in Northern Canada and cannot qualify during the winter months may also qualify in the same manner as people living in southern Canada, and that people will not be treated on a first come first serve basis but that all, absolutely all applicants who have made application up until May 31, will receive this grant?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I will check the language I used but I certainly intended to say that we have put aside a reserve in order to protect those from northern and isolated areas. These are mainly single or very small builder applications. We have put aside some money to accommodate them. I very much hope that this will go all the way to protecting those communities, in whose name in fact I asked the Minister of Finance to grant some extra money.

TRADE

REQUEST THAT TRADE OFFICES BE ESTABLISHED IN TAIWAN

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Because of the record number of unemployed Canadians I am sure that the Prime Minister is aware of statistics which conclude that, for every $1 billion of international trade, 25,000 new jobs are created in Canada. Unfortunately we have been missing out on numerous trade opportunities, for example in Taiwan, where most other non-Communist nations have established non-diplomatic trade offices in order to take advantage of the tremendous growth and trade potential in that country without—and I emphasize without—jeopardizing relations with mainland China.

Is the Government now prepared to take initiatives to promote realistic trade and travel arrangements in Taiwan and join the rest of the modern world in international trade and commerce for the benefit of all Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member may be making a suggestion which is different in degree from the Government's policy, but we do encourage trade with Taiwan. There is a fair amount of it between the private sectors of Canada and the Taiwanese people. I know that Members of Parliament have gone repeatedly to Taiwan, and if the Hon. Member wants to suggest that I take a trip to Taiwan I will entertain the suggestion.

Mr. Nielsen: Why don't you go to Timbuktu?

POSSIBLE SALE OF CANDU NUCLEAR REACTOR TO TAIWAN

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister of course did not answer the question of whether he would join the rest of the industrialized world in establishing trade offices in Taiwan.

Specifically, if the Prime Minister could guarantee export permits to Atomic Energy of Canada for the sale of Candus to Taiwan in return for safety and other control regulations similar to those on the Candu sales to South Korea, I can assure the Prime Minister and the House today that the immediate sale of at least one $1 billion Candu reactor to Taiwan can be made, thereby creating at least 25,000 new jobs in Canada today. Is the Prime Minister willing to give us the assurance that he will give the export permits to the AECL?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is assuring us of a $1 billion sale. If it is as simple as that, why should we have trade offices? I will do business with the Hon. Member.

Mr. Stewart: Good idea. You would learn something.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS' TREATMENT OF SMALL BUSINESSES AND FARMERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday The New York Times carried a report that Nu-West Group Limited of Calgary, a real estate developer, announced a large loss of 1982, and said that it and its lenders, the banks, have agreed that Nu-West would stop making interest and principal payments on $562 million in loans. The Company has been unable to pay either principal or interest since last fall.

There is an increasing number of small business concerns and farmers who have been pushed into bankruptcy, and their assets, including machinery, livestock and homes, are being taken over by the banks because they cannot meet their loan payments. Would the Minister not agree that the banks are treating their large corporate customers in an entirely different way than they are treating their other customers, including small-businessmen and farmers? Would the Minister consider what steps are necessary or possible to ensure that the banks treat all Canadians in an equally fair and equitable manner?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would hope that the banks would pay even more attention to their small borrowers, the small-business men and farmers to whom the Hon. Member has referred. I have made representations myself in that regard. The Prime Minister has done the same. We have certainly had evidence of hundreds of cases where good Members of Parliament, at least on this side of the House, have done their job on behalf of many of their constituents by approaching the institutions concerned and persuading them to help those concerned. I have had numerous reports from Liberal Members of Parliament who have done their job in that regard. I would hope that Members of the NDP would do the same.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO PROTECT INDIVIDUAL BORROWERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Hon. Members from all Parties have been in touch with the Minister, as I have, concerning home owners who have not been able to make their mortgage payments and have lost their homes, and farmers in every Province who have been pushed into bankruptcy. What I am saying to the Minister is that the people of Canada who are in difficulty do not just need kind words from the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister. They need some action which would ensure that the banks would treat the ordinary people who are in difficulty in the same way they have treated Nu-West and dozens of other large corporations which now owe $4 billion or more in loans, on which they are paying neither the principal nor the interest. I am asking the Minister whether, instead of just kind words, we will see some legislation which will give protection to ordinary people in this country.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have already stated that I know of hundreds of cases where, indeed, the financial institutions have taken exceptional steps to accommodate some of their smaller clients who are in difficulty. I suggest to my hon. friend that, indeed, if he wants to check, he will find that to be the case.

I am always suspicious of questions coming from the NDP, because the other day when the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, in a question in the House, said that there had not been any instances in his riding when steps had been taken to help his constituents. I checked this matter with one particular bank, and found that there had been support and help amounting to millions of dollars in the riding of Kamloops-Shuswap, where the Hon. Member said nothing was taking place.

Mr. Trudeau: He doesn't know what's going on.

Mr. Lalonde: I can only conclude that Hon. Members of the NDP are not following very carefully what is happening in their ridings.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

SOVIET OFFER TO NEGOTIATE ON NUMBER OF NUCLEAR WARHEADS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday Mr. Andropov of the Soviet Union offered to count warheads as well as missiles at the intermediate range nuclear force talks. This is quite a change from his previous negotiating stance. As the Prime Minister likes to take credit for the policies of the President of the United States when he agrees with them, would he tell the House whether he will be asking the United States to accept this offer as a new bargaining base, or will he suggest that the United States reject it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I was told that the suggestion by Mr. Andropov is a very positive one. I would hope that it would not be rejected, that it would, on the contrary, be examined with great interest and a positive outlook. Thus far, my information is that the United States have not rejected it, but that they want to examine it. Therefore, we are very happy for any movement by either side toward a halt, an eventual reduction in nuclear arms of the INF variety or of the strategic variety. We think it is a step in the right direction.

POSSIBLE RELOCATION OF SOVIET MISSILES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Mr. Andropov seems to have avoided mentioning what he intends to do with the SS-20s which would be withdrawn from Europe if his offer is accepted. If these weapons are not dismantled but are merely relocated, the site of the relocation is a very important factor. If they are to be relocated just beyond the Urals, they will still be within range of all their present targets in Europe, although technically the missiles would have been withdrawn from Europe.

As reported at page 24114 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said:

—our judgment of how the other track was proceeding would influence us in deciding whether we would go with the Cruise or not.

Does the Prime Minister consider that Mr. Andropov's statement fulfils the requirement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe I answered that by saying that we thought it was a positive gesture. Of course there are difficulties such as that mentioned by the Hon. Member, that if they are withdrawn into the Asian part of the Soviet Union it is still conceivable that they could be targeted on western Europe. Indeed, if they are moved far east in the Soviet Union, they could be targeted on parts of North America. These are obviously questions which must be examined. That is why it is impossible to give an absolute approval or disapproval now, but we think that the proposal is positive in the sense that it suggests a reduction in the number of nuclear warheads.

To those who oppose the possibility in Canada of testing of the Cruise or, indeed, of the possibility of having Euromissiles on the NATO side, I would point out that it is unlikely that Secretary Andropov would have made his December offer for reducing SS-20s, or yesterday's offer for reducing SS-20s, just out of the goodness of his heart. If the Soviets are suggesting a reduction in missiles, it is probably because they are afraid that we will deploy ours. That should therefore be an argument not to lose our cool too soon and not to decide that we will not deploy ours at any cost. On the contrary, there should be a bargaining going on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

U.S. AND U.S.S.R. OFFERS TO REDUCE NUCLEAR ARSENALS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister indicate to the House the nature of the study which he is making concerning the proposals for nuclear reductions made by both President Reagan and Soviet Leader Andropov related to the exact amount of nuclear weaponry which both sides possess? Will the Canadian Government be prepared to make recommendations to both sides so that true progress can be made at the Geneva negotiations on nuclear arms reduction?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to a study. I do not know of any particular piece of work being done. I know that there is a whole series of studies going on and examinations by the Department of National Defence and by the Department of External Affairs, those two Departments in particular. They are not only being kept informed by the United States but as well, as the Hon. Member knows, the Secretary of State for External Affairs went to Geneva and personally met with the Soviet negotiators. We are obviously in contact all the time with the Soviet ambassador here, and we try to get the Soviets' side of the story in negotiations.

It is with the objective in mind of making a balanced assessment of progress and a will to progress by both sides that we are conducting our policy. Therefore, I cannot refer, once again, to a particular study, but I can assure the Hon. Member that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in particular, has been in contact with both sides to ensure that both sides negotiate seriously and make progress.

Mr. Roche: The purpose of my question was to indicate that the Canadian Government ought to be making recommendations for the Geneva negotiations, based on an informed study.

PROPOSAL TO HOLD SUMMIT MEETING

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, I now want to ask the Prime Minister whether he has taken note of the recent proposal of Chancellor Kohl of West Germany that a Summit meeting be held between President Reagan and Soviet Leader Andropov for the purpose of giving a new impetus to the nuclear arms negotiations in Geneva. Can the Prime Minister confirm whether he raised the subject of a Summit during his recent meeting with President Reagan? Will he now support this proposal in the name of the people all over the world who want, in an even-handed approach, both the Soviet Union and the United States to stop the nuclear arms race?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member and the House that I did raise the subject of a Summit with President Reagan. I enjoined him—indeed, I pleaded with him—to work toward such a Summit. I think the timing must be left to the United States in terms of not having a Summit in which progress would be negative or counter-productive.

I pointed out to the President of the United States that in our view time was running out, not only politically for him, and perhaps others, but it is running out in terms of the future of humanity so that both sides who are holders of these terrible weapons of destruction be urged on by every group and every member of NATO, at least on our side, to make progress which at some point might be better made at a Summit than elsewhere. But once again we are monitoring the discussions in Geneva. I repeat the Secretary of State for External Affairs was there. Short of going to Moscow myself, I am not sure what else I could do at this time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You have been there. We remember.

SPECIAL RECOVERY PROGRAM

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS FOR PUBLIC WORKS PROJECTS IN ALBERTA

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Can he indicate to the House what portion of the $2.4 billion announced in the budget for public works projects will be allocated to the Province of Alberta?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I said at the time we announced the national program that the individual projects would be announced by the responsible Ministers during the forthcoming weeks, in fact, in the very near term. I am afraid the Hon. Member will simply have to wait until the announcements are made.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

GOVERNMENTS CONTRACTS—BUY CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Would the Minister tell us what the Government's policy is with regard to Government contracts which come up for tender? Given the recent budget announcements that Canadian businesses will be steered out of the recession with a helping hand from the Government, will the Minister tell us whether Canadian firms are given priority when tenders are called for contracts involving the Government? Put simply, is it the Government's policy to buy Canadian whenever possible when it comes to contracts with Government Departments?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased the hon. gentleman has asked that question. I know he is very favourable toward my ministry's policy of attempting to obtain a larger portion of our procurement from Canadian sources with a high Canadian value added.

In terms of fast tracking and in terms of the projects that we have identified within the budget, the Hon. Member will recognize that roughly 49 per cent of them will be administered through my Department, the Department of Supply and Services. Indeed, the projects have been selected as a result of their high Canadian content and our ability to source the requirements from Canadian firms.

Mr. Sargeant: Madam Speaker, I am supportive of efforts to ensure Canadian content, but I am also critical of cases where this does not happen.

AWARDING OF CONTRACT TO FLORIDA FIRM

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister about a specific case. Since 1981 an American firm from Florida, called Lifeskil Corporation, has been given contracts totalling more than $340,000 for drug and alcohol prevention and treatment programs at Canadian Forces Bases across Canada. It is currently in line for another soon to be awarded contract of some $150,000 while Canadian firms that bid on these contracts are passed over. Is the Minister aware of some special reason why this American firm should receive these contracts while Canadian firms and workers are left out in the cold?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman is dealing with one contract. I would have thought that he had had enough experience with my Department by now to know the large number of daily contracts that we let amount to over $10 million and also that the Hon. Member would have given me notice of his particular question. Had he done that, I would have been able to provide him with the details he requests. I will take his question as notice, review the details, and provide him with a reply as soon as practical.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT CONTRACT WITH GERMAN COMPANY

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising out of the answers which he and other Ministers supplied to the House yesterday concerning the $17,000 contract between Veba Oel and the Government of Canada concerning the liquefaction of Cape Breton coal. First, representatives of the company itself told Canadian Press that the work they were to carry out had to do with the project in question. Second, they also told Canadian Press that they were first approached to do such work in Canada by Mr. R. H. Shannon, an agent for Mr. Gillespie. Third, Mr. James Kelly of the Minister's own Department, identifies the contract as one dealing with the Cape Breton Synfuels Project.

Also, since page 1 of Appendix A of the contract, in assuming that positive test results on Nova Scotia coal occur, asks that information be provided in relation to a "commercial sized plant", of which there is only one on the drawing boards anywhere in Canada using Nova Scotia coal, will the Minister not now come clean and admit to the House that the contract in question was a contract between the Government of Canada relating specifically to the Nova Scotia Synfuels Project at Cape Breton?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have to repeat exactly what I said yesterday. It was a contract between my Department and Veba to test Nova Scotia coal for the benefit of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It was a contract between a corporation and the Department and it was provided in the contract that the information has to be kept in the Department and not transmitted to anybody else outside of the Government.

TERMS OF CONTRACT—MINISTER'S STATEMENT—REQUEST THAT CONTRACT BE TABLED

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services because the Minister of Energy now has made the same statement that the Minister of Supply and Services made yesterday, as reported at page 29,095 of Hansard, as follows:

—one of the terms of the contract was that it remain confidential.

I have a copy of that contract here which in no way is classified, and which I have studied. In no way is there any condition in it which stipulates that the contract is in any way confidential.

Having regard to that fact, Madam Speaker, will the Minister admit that he misled the House yesterday in making that statement, and will the Minister deny the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when he himself just now said that the contract is confidential? There is not a confidential provision in that contract. Will the Minister table it so that we can all see it?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman will recall my reply yesterday. Indeed I have reviewed the contract. There is a document that accompanied the contract which made the information and the exchange of information between the parties confidential.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: I have reviewed the contract itself, and I have asked my legal officers to review it in terms of whether I could table it and whether I could, indeed, table any correspondence, as requested by the Hon. Member for Perth yesterday. I am receiving the opinion of my officers momentarily and I will also be communicating with the contractor in Germany to secure his permission to table the document.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL EXPLANATION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, surely the Minister should have checked with his legal advisers before he made the flat, bald statement yesterday that one of the provisions of the contract required that it remain confidential, which is not a fact. I have all of the attachments, all three of them, to this contract, and nowhere is there any reference to any confidentiality as a contractual provision of the contract or any of its appendices. I suggest that the Minister owes this House an explanation as to why he deliberately misled the House. I am prepared to accept any reasonable explanation, as we all are, but he owes that to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition might want to rephrase that. He knows that he cannot say that any other Member has deliberately misled the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am afraid that you might have misheard. What I am saying to the Minister is—The Speaker shakes her head, but there is a possibility that she may have misheard.

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Trudeau: Don't horse around.

Mr. Nielsen: I am not going to withdraw. I will repeat what I said to the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: If you will listen, I will repeat what I said to the Minister. I am and other Members of this House are prepared to accept his explanation, if there is one, that would deny the conclusion that he was deliberately misleading the House yesterday when he made that statement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: If the Hon. Member will now tell the House that is rephrasing what he said previously, which was that the Minister had deliberately misled the House, I would accept that.

• (1500)

The Hon. Member has to follow the rules of the House. It is not permissible to say that a Member has deliberately misled the House. The second formulation was quite different from his first question, but I cannot accept that the Hon. Member will not withdraw that first part.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have not accused the Minister directly of misleading the House. I have not made that accusation. What I have done is ask him for an explanation which will allow us to come to a conclusion other than that he was deliberately misleading the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Point of Order—Mr. Johnston

Madam Speaker: Order. Would the Hon. Member tell me on his second try whether he was reformulating his question?

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the record is clear. I am asking the Minister for an explanation which would allow the Members of this House to come to a conclusion other than that he was deliberately misleading the House yesterday.

Madam Speaker: I take it that that is the Hon. Member's reformulation of his question.

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the answer I gave yesterday contained information I was given by my officials. Actually, as I pointed out in replying to the Member for Vegreville, I became aware of the existence of the contract yesterday morning, and I have not had an opportunity to review all the documentation. After question period yesterday, I asked my officials to review the contracts and to give me an opinion on whether or not I could table the contract with all the documents exchanged by my department, as the contracting party for the Government of Canada, and the German company. As I indicated earlier, I am waiting to receive an opinion from my officials, and Madam Speaker, I am also waiting for permission from the German contracting company to table the documents in question.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

TABLING OF REPORT OF THE ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSION FOR THE PROVINCE OF NOVA SCOTIA, 1983

Madam Speaker: It is my duty pursuant to Section 19 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, to lay upon the table a certified copy of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Nova Scotia, 1983. Pursuant to Standing Order 46(4), this report is deemed to be permanently referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. JOHNSTON—REFERENCE TO SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY REPORT BY MR. KEEPER

Madam Speaker: Is the Hon. Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) seeking the floor on a point of order or on a question of privilege?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I believe I am rising on a question of privilege. I would not want to be accused of misleading the House in my response to a question by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper). The House may recall that he asked that a report be tabled, presumably a report or a study referred to in The Globe and Mail article by Thomas Walkom of May 4.

The fact is that I am not aware of any such study, but perhaps I would be misleading the House if I left the impression that I was not aware of the existence of such a document. I do not know what version the journalist in question had, but I think I may have left the impression that I was not aware of the existence of such a document. I am, but I do not know what specific version or edition he looked at. I do not want to be accused of misleading the House by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James.

Madam Speaker: That was a point of order.

MR. TOBIN—REFERENCE TO MINISTER BY MR. NIELSEN

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, I have a serious question as to whether or not my privileges as a Member of the House have been trampled on today. I heard Madam Speaker indicate to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) that he had used an unparliamentary phrase, "deliberately misled the House", referring to a Minister. I heard the Hon. Leader of the Opposition refuse to withdraw—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Tobin: I believe that my privileges and those of all Hon. Members of the House have been—

Madam Speaker: Order. That question has been resolved to the satisfaction of the Speaker.

Mr. Tobin: On a point of privilege, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Tobin: On a point of privilege—

Madam Speaker: I have told the Hon. Member that the matter has been resolved to the satisfaction of the Speaker.

Mr. Tobin: But, Madam Speaker, I feel that my privileges—

Madam Speaker: No—

PETITION

MR. NYSTROM—ASSISTANCE TO SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, it is a great honour for me today to present a petition in the House of Commons on behalf of the Saskatchewan Senior Citizens "Action Now" Association. I have had a chance to examine the petition. It contains nearly 5,000 names of people mostly from the Province of Saskatchewan, some of whom I recognize. These are senior citizens who are in financial difficulty at this time.

The rules do not allow me to read the entire petition, but I want to point out that it calls for the establishment of a Department of Senior Citizens Affairs, for a substantial increase in pensions, for the means test to be eliminated and also for a pension which is equal to some 70 per cent to 75 per cent of the average industrial wage index in Canada.

I ask my fellow Members of Parliament to examine the petition very carefully and to act upon it because these are the people who built this country of Canada. They deserve better from us who sit in the House of Commons today than they have been given recently.

TENDERS IN SAUDI ARABIA

Question No. 4,736—Mr. Herbert:

1. Were tenders received for the construction of a Canadian Embassy in Saudi Arabia and, if so (a) on what date (b) what were the names and addresses of the companies that submitted tenders and what were their prices?

2. What was the budget figure for the project?

3. Was a percentage Canadian content a requirement in the tender call and, if so, did the bidders conform to the Canadian content requirement?

4. Were the tenders subject to a ninety day acceptance clause and, if so, on what date did that period expire?

5. Is it still intended to build a Canadian Embassy in Saudi Arabia?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) After prequalification, invited tenders for the construction of a New Canadian Embassy Complex in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia were received on Dec. 14, 1982.

(b) The list of names and addresses as well as the tender prices of the five prequalified general contractors who submitted prices is attached. This list was approved by Treasury Board on Oct. 15, 1982.

2. The budget for the overall project, as approved by Treasury Board on July 22, 1982 is $32,762,000 which includes provision for design fees, furniture, and as well, the cost of construction.

3. Canadian products were specified in the tender documents wherever it was reasonable and practical to do so for the construction context of Saudi Arabia. Bidders did conform to the Canadian material content requirement.

4. The tenders were subject to a ninety day acceptance period which expired on Mar. 14, 1982.

5. Although the main construction contract has not yet been awarded, it is still intended to eventually build a new Canadian Embassy in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ISSUANCE OF FIREARMS PROFICIENCY CERTIFICATE

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills) moved that Bill C-588, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (gun control), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, once a gain it is Wednesday afternoon when we are permitted to put forth Private Members' Bills. In my mind this is the most important part of the entire parliamentary process because it is an opportunity for ordinary Canadians to have their views, expectations and aspirations brought forth for consideration by all of us as Parliamentarians.

Therefore I rise to move second reading of Bill C-588 and its reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs so that the Standing Committee can give it detailed study and interested goups of people can present their views on the whole question of gun control.

The Bill specifically relates to the 1978 amendments that have had such a dramatic effect in the minds of many people, particularly those who care about freedom. This is a good opportunity for the public in 1983 to have somne input on a law that was passed in 1978. I hope Members opposite will agree that this is a worthy Bill, will give it second reading and send it to committee. I commend the law officers of the Crown for the excellent assistance they have given me to put this Bill into the proper legal form.

The purpose of the Bill, as I said earlier, is to respond to the honest and legitimate concerns, both practical and philosophical, of ordinary law-abiding Canadians who were and are opposed to the 1978 amendments on gun control. The second purpose is to remove the expensive administrative costs of registering long guns.

Whatever reference is made to guns, certain people think that all guns should be taken away. Others believe we have the right to own a gun, including a hand gun. This Bill in no way affects the existing law as it relates to hand guns.

For many years in this country there has been a system of registration and a rather restricted use of guns. This Bill is not designed to affect that general law. It is designed to respond to those in the west and in the north, because in those rural areas long guns, shotguns and rifles are an everyday part of their lives. Members from downtown Montreal or Toronto have no feeling for this Bill. They have never been in places where a grizzly bear in the backyard is a reality. This is the case for people in my riding and throughout the northern country. This Bill should be given serious consideration. It simplifies the procedure dramatically. For that reason it should be worthy of merit at this time when we have a $30 billion deficit and are trying to find ways to cut down costs.

This Bill will repeal the 1978 amendment which brought in firearms acquisition certificates and the associated registration of guns. It substitutes a requirement anticipated in the 1978 amendments which was never proclaimed. It would have only one condition: before any citizen over 18 can purchase a gun, he or she would need a certificate of proficiency. They would need to know how to care for guns, know the safety aspects as well as the statistics as to how dangerous they can be. As gun owners point out, it is not the gun that causes the problem but the guy who pulls the trigger.

Section 104(2)(c) of the existing law, which was not proclaimed, had a requirement whereby you had to take a course before purchasing a gun. My point is that we do not need all of those other sections in terms of firearms' acquisition certificates, firearms officers across the country and investigations into our individual lives.

When you go to buy a gun, a firearms officer inquires into your life. He can tap all sources in Government to find out whether there is something in your background which would make it undesirable for you to own a gun. That is an invasion of privacy to an amazing degree. This Bill states that before you can purchase a gun, you need a certificate from a recognized gun club or wildlife association, that you know about guns and can handle them safely.

This Bill anticipates that such a certificate would be given by a wildlife association or gun club recognized by the provincial Attorney General. The advantage is that it takes the control out of Ottawa and puts it in the hands of provincial Governments which are more responsive in their particular regions. An Attorney General in Alberta or the Yukon would have a set of requirements and would approve recognized clubs in that Province as bona fide clubs. There would be a similar situation in Ontario and Quebec.

As a result of this Bill, I have received many letters from Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario. I have not received one letter of criticism. Many state that this is the first common-sense approach to the whole question of gun control in a long time and they hope it will pass.

I would like to speak briefly about the practical objections of the original Bill C-51; they are well-known to many Members. The first is related to the cost of the firearms officers, the investigations, the applications and the red tape involved in purchasing a gun. There is also red tape in the police administration—for example, the paper work. There is no doubt that gun store owners are greatly hampered. This red tape has increased the cost of their business dramatically. As a result, there is less revenue going into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. Certainly citizens have been inconvenienced, there is no doubt about that.

The irony is that the existing law did not stop the criminal element. In 1977 there were 13,432 offences and in 1981 17,706, an increase of 32 per cent. In 1977 there were 7,500 robberies with firearms. In 1981 there were 9,040. All the evidence shows that ordinary law-abiding citizens have been dramatically inconvenienced. If you, Mr. Speaker, and I go into the field to shoot ducks, you do not have a firearms acquisition certificate and I lend you my gun, you and I are both criminals under this law. However, the real criminals, those who obtain their guns in the underworld or smuggle them across the border, still continue to use their guns to kill our citizens at an ever-increasing rate.

Beyond the practical is the more difficult philsophical question affecting those who have been born and raised in this country. I speak to many people who come from Eastern European countries such as Poland and the Ukraine on an almost daily basis. Poland, for example, has a long history of great power. They are a highly sophisticated people. There are musicians, artists, in fact the whole gamut of what we call civilization. However, after World War II the first thing the Government did was to take away their guns. That was the start of the loss of their freedom.

They tell me that if individuals cannot have guns, in 10, 20 or 30 years from now the Government will be able to take over. If the ordinary citizen cannot have a gun to protect his home, family and community, it could be that the military would have control. It is hard for native-born Canadians to understand that. We think we are too civilized for that to happen here, but it has happened before. We would be foolish to believe that could not happen in Canada.

These citizens, Mr. Speaker, primarily Canadians from other countries, also point out that the registration of guns has a very large downside in the long run. When we purchase a gun, it must be registered so that any Government knows that you, Mr. Speaker, have 14 guns, I have six guns and our fellow colleagues have so many guns. The Government can come to you at some point in the future and say: "Mr. Speaker, you have 14 guns and we want them. We want your guns or your life." You see, it is an invasion of your privacy.

We do not need that invasion of privacy in this country because surely the objective of gun control is the safe handling of guns. The way to achieve that objective is to make sure that people know how to handle guns rather than have them go through an inquisition to obtain a firearms acquisition certificate and then be able to purchase any number of guns as long as they are registered. Why should the issue not be approached from this other perspective?

People have the right to own guns just as they have the right to own cars. But they have to know how to drive those cars because public safety is at stake; therefore they must take a course to learn how to drive a car properly. I would say that is the route to follow, Mr. Speaker, in gun control.

In conclusion, I want to say that we need this Bill. I am hoping that other Members will let it go through because it will save money, It will meet the legitimate philosophical and practical needs of our fellow citizens, and I think it will be for the good of the country in the long run. Let us have the Bill go to committee so that our fellow Canadians may testify as to what they believe we should do, and then, for a change, let us act on it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): I am very pleased with this opportunity to take part in the debate and to comment on the suggestion put forward by my hon. colleague.

I am sure Hon. Members will remember—I know I do, because I was a Member of the House at the time—all the controversy about Bill C-51. It was not surprising, if we consider that gun control is a subject on which public opinion is very clearly divided and which gives rise to heated debate.

This is understandable, because the subject is one that is literally a matter of life and death and concerns the very essence of our individual freedoms as Canadian citizens. We have all heard the arguments on gun control before. Positions go from one extreme to another, from outlawing guns altogether to removing all controls. A gun control system reconciling these extreme positions would necessarily be complex and in itself highly controversial.

The gun control measures tabled in Parliament as part of Bill C-51 and passed by Parliament as part of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1977, have brought about basic changes in Canadian gun control legislation. The Government has introduced a control system which I myself, and I think most of us, will recognize as being effective, and which is based on the principle that guns have a legitimate, sometimes essential and often enviable place in the lives of many Canadians.

Guns have played an important role in Canada's history, from the times of the explorers and frontier days till the present time. Throughout this period, Canada has maintained a tradition of responsibility in the use of firearms, and that is what has led us to avoid extreme solutions, such as registering all firearms or setting up depots for firearms that are not in use. The Government has not changed its position, and this philosophy is reflected in the legislation.

Since the introduction on January 1, 1979 of the Firearms Acquisition Certificate system, it is now clear, I hope, that the system was designed to ensure that there would be as little inconvenience as possible to the responsible person who wishes to own and use guns.

Increasingly, it is being recognized that the measures adopted by the Government have been very helpful to police forces in controlling the irresponsible and criminal use of firearms and thereby reducing the number of homicides, accidents and suicides that occur in Canada every year. The proposals being made by my hon. friend deal directly with this matter, and although the procedures he is suggesting are not those I myself would favour, I think his approach is positive and that it has the same objective we all have, which is to use firearms as they ought to be used and not as a means of violence and destruction.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of the fact that the Firearms Acquisition Certificate system was introduced unobstrusively and without any real problems, that it was very well accepted by Canadians and that since it became effective, the system, as shown by studies made by independent groups, has helped to contribute, together with other gun control measures, towards reducing the number of homicides, accidents and suicides caused by the use of firearms.

I am sure that on the other side, my Opposition colleague is just as anxious as we are to stop the violence that is so often present in our society. I think his suggestions may be useful.

However, I must say I deeply regret the fact that the Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) is now sponsoring Bill C-588, which would replace our present efficient system with new, untested measures that are less strict and that might destroy the progress we have made in the last four years. I listened carefully to the Hon. Member's speech, and although the measures he is proposing would not, according to him, have that effect, I am not so sure he is right. He has good ideas, and I realize that if his proposals were to destroy the gains we have made, that is certainly not my hon. colleague's intention.

By substituting for the Fireams Acquisition Certificate system the measures proposed in Bill C-588, we would seriously compromise the effectiveness of Canadian gun control legislation. I am convinced that all Hon. Members will reach the same conclusion after looking at the purpose of the Firearms Acquisition Certificate system and at the very extensive screening measures provided by the system which would no longer be applied once Bill C-588 is passed, as proposed by my colleague in the Official Opposition.

For the information of the House, I shall now review briefly the objectives of our gun control legislation and the specific means provided to attain those objectives.

Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, give the three general objectives of the Criminal Law Amendment Act. They are first of all, to prevent the irresponsible use of firearms, second, to promote and safeguard the sensible possession and use of firearms, and third, to punish and discourage the criminal use of firearms.

I am sure that my colleague opposite will agree that these objectives are valid ones and should be followed. However, I submit that the means he is suggesting are not necessarily one we would be willing to support at this point. The firearms acquisition certificate system helps to meet the first two objectives through specific control mechanisms. The provisions concerning this system came into effect on January 1, 1979. Since then, anyone aged at least 16 who wants to acquire a firearm by whatever means must obtain a firearms acquisition certificate. This certificate is valid for five years and allows the individual to acquire an unspecified number of unrestricted long-barrelled guns, such as shotguns and rifles. The certificate is usually issued by the firearms officer of the local police force and provides for extensive screening mechanisms. All this might seem somewhat elementary, but since a few years have now elapsed, I feel it is important to go over the objectives and contents of this legislation which has played a significant role, as my Hon. friend reminded us today in making his suggestions.

A certificate will not be issued if the officer is aware of any fact that could make it desirable in the interests of the safety of others or of the applicant that he not be authorized to acquire firearms. Moreover, the certificate will not be issued if, within five years immediately preceding the date of the application, the applicant has been treated for a mental disorder, whether in a hospital, mental institute or psychiatric clinic or otherwise, and whether or not he was confined to such an institution when his disorder was associated with violence.

How can we determine whether the applicant comes under one of these provisions? First of all, in his application, he must indicate whether any one of them applies to him and a penalty is provided for anyone who makes a false statement. Second, all applications are examined by the centralized records service. In addition, all applications are referred to the local police division of the region where the applicant resides. My friend and colleague said earlier that there is a lot of red tape involved and that many provisions seem to delay application of the law, but I believe that those I have just described are essential and that it would be difficult to replace them by other provisions which may expedite matters, but would not meet the objectives of the law. Several important provisions to which I have just referred would be removed with Bill C-588. Under the present system, firearms acquisition certificate is issued by a firearms officer and it is an important provision since it guarantees an effective screening to prevent irresponsible individuals from acquiring firearms. The police has access to some information which is unavailable to others and this enables them to eliminate applicants who could eventually imperil their own lives and those of other people.

Applying for and obtaining a certificate may appear to be a complex exercise at first glance, as my colleague pointed out, but few Canadians are taking exception to the screening process and to what is considered to be troublesome paperwork for law-abiding citizens. However, it has been clearly established that Canadians are quite ready to abide by the law. This does not mean that I do not agree with my colleague that we should try to avoid some procedures which may perhaps seem cumbersome but to the extent that wherever the purpose of the legislation remains valid, we should not, under the pretence of speeding up the system, be prevented from pursuing our priorities which warranted the legislation which came into force in 1979.

We should not forget that in the first year of implementation of that system, well over 250,000 Canadians were granted firearms acquisition certificates, which means somewhow that the problems met by some individuals did not deter a considerable number of Canadians from obtaining it.

More than 629,000 applications were processed in the first three years. Most Canadians have shown willingness to abide by these provisions and, in light of my own experience and of official reports I can say that, considering the number of applications received, there were few problems and criticisms indeed. I presume that my colleague might point to certain instances in his area where the law may have been difficult to apply, I quite agree. Still, I would suggest that the significant aspect is whether the implementation of the law generally has proved useful, reasonable and acceptable. Given the information I have to date, it does seem that the over-all legislation is quite acceptable, even though certain sections might be better amended.

And what about the selection process? Figures show that in the first three years the numbers of rejected applications were 997, 1,107 and 1,006 respectively. In each of those three years, the rejection rate has been well below 1 per cent of the total number of applications. During that period, appeals were made in 6 to 7 per cent of rejections and, before 1981, 57 per cent of those appeals were submitted by institutions.

Mr. Speaker, it would seem that, generally speaking, the purposes of the legislation have been achieved and, although some applications may have resulted in delays and injustices for people who normally would have been issued those certificates more rapidly, I must conclude that the over-all situation is promising indeed. Again I say that my colleague of the Official Opposition has raised a very challenging and valid issue. I have tried to take a positive approach today and my intention was not to play down the purpose of the Bill which my colleague proposed and perhaps to express a different opinion concerning the various objectives we may share.

I respectfully submit to the House that at this stage it would be premature to consider such major and controversial amendments as those advocated by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills. Before considering any radical change to our legislation on firearms control, we would be well advised to give the public and the numerous groups of people concerned an opportunity to study the final conclusions of the assessment review and express their opinions and suggestions on appropriate amendments. Again I thank my colleague for this opportunity to air my views on this subject. In the course of the debate, perhaps we will be able to find even more effective formulas to reach the goal we share, namely help Canadians achieve positive rather than negative results with firearms.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The rules and procedures do not permit questions and answers at this time.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak against this Private Member's Bill. I do not believe it is well thought out. I feel some of the provisions in it could actually be quite harmful.

The Bill is intended to substitute a proficiency test for the existing requirements in the Criminal Code for the acquisition of a firearms certificate. What the Hon. Member neglects to do in discussing the matter is to specify what the different conditions are which his new Bill would omit from the controls on possession of a gun. Let me summarize them: "A person who has been convicted within five years immediately preceding the date of his application of an indictable offence; an offence in the commission of which violence is used against another person, threatened or attempted; within five years immediately preceding the date of the application has been treated for a mental disorder in various places; where the disorder for which he was so treated was associated with violence, threatened or attempted; has a history of behaviour occurring within five years immediately preceding the date of his application which included violence or threatened or attempted violence on the part of the applicant".

These are all rather serious matters. As for the Hon. Member's suggestion that everyone has a right to own a gun even if he has attempted, threatened or used violence in the last five years, well, I suggest that such a person has forfeited the right to possession of a gun. Merely to undergo a proficiency test which shows that the person knows how to use a gun is hardly a substitute for showing responsible behaviour and being a person who can be trusted with a weapon which can be and has been used to kill people.

The Hon. Member also neglected to look carefully into the statistics. He was rather glib in talking about crime increasing. He suggests that the current provisions only cause a nuisance to law-abiding citizens and have not had any effect on crime. This is not so. The Solicitor General's Department commissioned a study to look into the effects of gun control legislation after it was passed in 1977. There is also an independent study by Professor Martin Friedland of the University of Toronto, Faculty of Law. These studies show there has been an impact on violent crime. There has been a reduction in the rate of homicides since introduction of gun control legislation. There has also been a reduction in the number of hunting accidents and in the number of suicides using firearms since the introdution, showing that the legislation has actually been fairly successful.

It is always difficult to pinpoint precisely what caused the reduction in homicides, accidents and suicides because the Provinces have been taking steps in the meantime to improve gun control by virtue of requiring hunting licences. All of the Provinces have gun safety programs. Indeed, six Provinces, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia, have compulsory proficiency tests. New Brunswick is planning to institute these shortly and Newfoundland has a test for one kind of hunting only. So that the Provinces are taking steps and that, combined with better gun control legislation at the federal level, has seen reductions, which of course is what we want. It is actually fortunate that in Canada we do not have a tradition of violence. We have a long tradition of gun control legislation. I suggest these are very healthy signs we want to keep the good traditions we have.

In 1979 less than 60 homicides were committed with hand guns in Canada, only four in Toronto, a City of two million. In comparison, in the City of New York there were 900 hand gun killings. Hand gun homicides were 20 times higher per capita in the United States, and hand gun acquisitions are ten times higher in the U.S. So, the legislation and traditions we have have been extremely healthy and we certainly want to keep them; we do not want to go in the opposite direction. In fact, a Gallup poll indicated that Canadians would be happier to have tighter gun control legislation, and this includes the West where the Hon. Member suggests that people see this as such a great right. Canadians do not recognize this so-called right, and they are very concerned to keep violence down to the lowest level possible.

Another point I would like to raise, Mr. Speaker, is the provision in the current legislation for proficiency tests which the Hon. Member would make the only requirement for the acquisition of a firearm. There is an existing provision for the Provinces to make a proficiency test compulsory in order to get an acquisition certificate. Thus we can add requirements under the existing legislation which would not be the case under the proposed Bill. No Province so far has instituted this compulsory proficiency test for the acquisition of a firearm, but they are working in that direction. There have been discussions and the Provinces do want to go that way. Certainly they have been going that way with regard to hunting legislation. It would seem to me the best course is to let the current legislation continue to work, that consultation between the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and the Provinces be pursued on the best way to handle proficiency tests which will probably be proclaimed when the Provinces are ready for it. We have effective legislation right now, the problems are not terribly great, but neither should we introduce new problems by slackening legislation which has actually been successful.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to have the opportunity of speaking on this Bill. The subject matter has been before this House previously and I note in particular that it was the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) who first presented a similar Bill in Bill C-451.

Mr. Huntington: Similar? There is something wrong here; you have not read the Bill.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): The purpose of that Bill was to extend the present law relating to firearms acquisition certificates to the ownership, possession and use of firearms and to change the name "firearm acquisition certificate" to "firearm possession certificate". The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) who presented this Bill today has substantially the same kind of Bill except he changes the term from "firearms possession certificate" as outlined in Bill C-451 to "firearms proficiency certificate". I am suggesting that basically the two Bills are on all fours.

Mr. Thacker: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would not want anyone reading Hansard to have even the faintest impression that there is a similarity between Bill C-451 and my Bill, C-588. There is absolutely no similarity at all.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Well, Mr. Speaker, in spite of what the Hon. Member says, it appears to me that the difference between the two Bills is basically terminology, as I have outlined. I suggest that is really the basic change.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this raises in my mind some very serious concerns not only for this House but for the well-being of the Canadian public. First of all, there is a provision in the present legislation, as yet unproclaimed, calling for the applicant for a firearms acquisition certificate to have successfully completed a course or test relating to the safe handling and use of firearms prior to the certificate being issued by the local police. This provision can be implemented upon provincial request. It is necessary to work out the administrative mechanisms to proclaim this provision and we are attempting to do just that with the Provinces at the present time. The House will recall that the whole firearms acquisition certificate system was delayed so we could have extensive consultations with the Provinces on the smooth implementation of this system.

What worries me most is that this Bill requires only that the individual be able to handle a firearm proficiently. The Hon. Member has done away with all the screening procedures presently required. I suggest to him that it is absolutely essential that there be some kind of screening procedure to make sure that people who are habitual criminals or inclined to violence will not have the opportunity of owning a hand gun, or even a rifle for that matter. An individual would be able to obtain a firearm simply by fulfilling the proficiency provision. Obviously in our prisons today there are many people who are proficient at handling firearms and there are many people who would not be using a firearm anyway unless they were proficient in the handling of it. But I suggest there are other criteria to be considered.

Even those not in favour of all aspects of our present legislation do not want those with criminal records involving violence, perhaps a history of violence with firearms, to obtain further weapons. This is what the Hon. Member's Bill proposes to allow. The applicant will not have to complete an application form on which he is questioned about indictable criminal convictions, or treatment for mental disorder for that matter. There will be no requirement for a police check on any individual as long as he can produce a proficiency certificate, regardless of where it was obtained. This, in my view, is not gun control. This is not keeping firearms out of the hands of dangerous persons. This is simply ensuring that the individual knows how to use the firearm. Although this is a very important item in itself, it is certainly not the only one with which we are concerned.

Our jails are filled with people who know how to use firearms, have used them well in the past and would most likely use them well in future if they had the opportunity to do so. The Bill, in fact, means that one of these people can leave jail one day, successfully take his course in handling a firearm the next day, and right after that he can buy a gun. With the possession of the gun he is able to commit crimes if he wishes to do so. Does the House really want to support this kind of legislation? I suggest that it does not?

How does the Hon. Member intend to establish these proficiency courses or test? Are the tests to be uniform in all Provinces or will it be left to each Province to establish its own test, thus making it easier in one Province to obtain a proficiency certificate than in another? There should at least be some standardization, some uniformity in the kind of test which would be required before a proficiency licence would be issued to the individual requesting same.

Another question is, what association does the Hon. Member have in mind to issue proficiency certificates? There are just too many questions left unanswered, I suggest, with regard to the proposal of the Hon. Member.

In terms of the present firearms program and its provision for a course or test in the safe handling of firearms, I can tell the House that the federal Government is working with the Provinces and, in particular, the hunter safety co-ordinators to develop a uniform set of guidelines to be used across Canada for courses in the safe handling of firearms when their requirements is proclaimed.

Besides that, the federal Government has begun several other initiatives to promote gun safety. We have produced a series of educational film strips on firearms, use and safety, for northern and remote students in Canada. I note that this is one of the areas with which the Hon. Member was basically concerned, I believe, with regard to the people in the north and those who might also be considered our native people who require long guns. I suggest to the Hon. Member that there is definitely a distinction between the use of long guns and the use of hand guns. Perhaps the Hon. Member's real concern with the legislation totally involves long guns rather than hand guns. If this is so, I think that that kind of distinction should have properly been made; but I did not hear it in his remarks today.

I am pleased to tell the House that the response and reaction to this kit has been most positive and that its use is being expanded by the Provinces in all areas of the country, including urban centres.

In order to bring the gun safety message to those who use firearms but do not necessarily belong to organized groups, we have developed a display card and pamphlets containing the so-called ten commandments on gun safety and information as to where individuals may obtain their firearm safety courses.

This is an important subject and I congratulate the Hon. Member for bringing it forward because it is of continuing interest and concern. However, I do not feel that I can support the legislation proposed by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills in its present form. With the proposals, the universal principle of keeping guns out of the hands of dangerous individuals is completely destroyed. I would, however, commend to all and sundry that the pamphlet on the so-called ten commandments on gun safety should be widely distributed to everyone. I commend it to the Hon. Member as well. I note that it pertains to safety in all of its aspects. At the beginning it states:

> The safe use of your firearm can provide enjoyable sport and recreation. Misuse can injure or kill.

It is the whole intent and purpose of the present Government legislation to see to it that the individual does understand safety and the use of weapons and does, in fact, have proficiency in using a weapon before being licensed in any way, shape or form. This, of course, is to ensure that accidents are prevented in the use of firearms, to ensure that those who are using the firearms are properly instructed in how to use them and to ensure that they are used for no unlawful or illegal purpose.

I want to commend the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) as well for the point she made with regard to the studies which have taken place in the Department of the Solicitor General concerning the effects of gun control. The statistics do show that the present legislation has, in effect, been successful and has provided a great boon to safety in the country.

Therefore, to the Hon. Member I say I appreciate that he has brought this matter of continuing concern before the House today, and I support his suggestion in part, if it refers only to long guns and not short guns. Unfortunately, the way the Bill is phrased today, I cannot support the legislation.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, no one in his right mind would argue against a proficiency course or training on how to use guns, when to use guns and so on. That is not the point which is being raised here. The present gun laws are not working satisfactorily. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and one of the Liberal Members have been indicating that the present gun laws are reducing casualties and robberies, which is not so. The police of our country know more about this subject than anyone else. They are the ones who must deal with it.

Let us consider what the police told five judges of the appellate court in Edmonton. The Edmonton Journal of November 30, 1982, states:

> The five judges of the appellate court were told that city police statistics show there were 562 armed robberies in Edmonton in 1981 of which 242 involved knives, 169 firearms and 151 other weapons.

The figure is taken as though all of these deaths were caused by guns. Guns are really instruments used by individuals who want to kill, to harm, to hurt. The present gun law is bothering innocent people who obey the law. The laws are not keeping guns out of the hands of the criminals. The Canadian people certainly want guns taken out of the hands of the criminals, but they do not want them taken out of every home, out of the hands of every individual; not at all.

In Edmonton only 70 per cent of these armed robberies were committed without using guns. Baseball bats, knives, swords, axes and hatchets are all instruments which can kill. If I were to be killed, I would much rather be killed by a gun than by a hatchet or a baseball bat. However, I do not want to get killed in either manner and we do not want anyone else to get killed in either manner.

We are discussing safety. We are trying to improve the gun laws of this country because the present gun laws are not working. The first paragraph in an article in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of February 10, 1983, states:

> The police are still not happy with Ottawa's gun control legislation because it is not proving to be sufficiently effective in controlling the criminal use of firearms.

That should be the purpose of gun control rather than control over everyone, which the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood wants. I do not want control over everyone. We live in a free society. I do not want the Government telling me that I cannot have a shotgun or a rifle. I have a lot of fun with a shotgun or a rifle and I do not hurt anyone. I give the birds a chance. I never shoot at a duck when it is sitting on the water. I wait until it starts to fly and then if it is a better flyer than I am a shooter, it lives. If it is not, it comes home in my pocket for dinner.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: I have seen hunters shoot ducks sitting on the water by crawling up to the water and then shooting them. They also crawl up on a deer. Sometimes it is possible to kill one, if one is really good at that type of thing. However, I believe in giving an animal a chance, and all hunters do to. Hunters are probably the best people in the world for ensuring that guns are used properly and in the proper sense. However, the control of the criminal element is why we want gun control and our present laws are not effecting that control.

• (1600)

Let me go on with the article in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald:

> Spokesmen from the police forces in Halifax and Dartmouth have indicated that criminal use of firearms has increased—

The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood is not here but she should be listening. The article continues:

> —in the past 10 years. Even with the gun-control legislation, it is not difficult to obtain a firearm and, of course, there are illegal channels through which purchases may be made.

Further on in the article we find this:

> It is a responsibility of government to protect the people of this country from criminal activity.

It is not the Government's responsibility to control the use of guns in anybody's home and in anybody's hands. As a matter of fact, there is a good effect to having a gun in your home. Robbers who want to kill and want to rob who know there is a gun in my home are going to think twice about coming in. Then we need also to give some common sense to some of these laws.

With regard to short hand guns, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) did not mention or refer to them at all. Today you can get permission to own a hand gun but the regulations are so ridiculous that if I want to move my hand gun from my home to my farm where I use it and practice with it—and I do not want to leave it there all the time because someone might steal it and then I am responsible for it—I have to go to the police to get permission. I cannot take it from my home to my farm which is two miles away without permission from the police. What kind of regulations are we trying to impose on the people of Canada? Can we not be given a little credit for some maturity?

With regard to the firearms acquisition certificate, I know a case where the police simply walked in and took two shotguns from a home and the person had to prove that he was not irresponsible. He had to prove that he had the right to use those guns. He was guilty before he was even tried. He had to go to a magistrate and prove that he was a responsible citizen. Such rules are not the kind we want in this country. If the police think I am irresponsible, let them go to a Justice of the Peace or a magistrate and let them prove I am irresponsible before they say I am guilty and before they come into my home and take my guns.

Yes, there are a lot of regulations that need to be improved with regard to this present gun legislation. It is not working. It is controlling the peaceful citizens and those who obey the law. It is not controlling the criminals. Members on the other side of the House and Members of the New Democratic Party had better wake up before something really serious happens in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, when I hear my colleague opposite say, in connection with Bill C-588, that something must be done to prevent people from being killed or wounded, I do not think anything will be achieved by adopting this bill, just because it happens to be called an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Gun Control). This kind of bill is not going to change the situation for criminals in Canada or prevent anyone from attacking someone else with a firearm, and in fact I think the present version of the Act is far more adequate than what my colleague opposite has been proposing this afternoon with a great deal of emphasis and rhetoric. The Bill explains, and I quote:

Since January 1, 1978, the acquisition of firearms has been subject to the issuance of a firearms acquisition certificate. The purpose of this Bill is to replace such a requirement by an obligation to produce a firearms proficiency certificate.

A number of serious questions arise if we consider the difference between the Firearms Acquisition Certificate and the Firearms Proficiency Certificate, and if we look at various provisions, especially the present Section 95 of the Criminal Code which provides all the information regarding Firearms Acquisition Certificates. I think we are much better off with the provisions of Section 104 which provides what must be done when a person receives an application for a Firearms Acquisition Certificate—that person must be satisfied that the information provided is relevant, and if the applicant has some kind of record, the application may be denied. The point I am trying to make is that if someone does not have the first certificate but does have a Proficiency Certificate, criminals and people liable to commit criminal acts will meet other people and commit armed robbery or something else, and obviously, they are far more proficient than some of my colleagues here in the House of Commons. These will most probably be people who either have not yet come before the courts or have been convicted and are now on parole or have returned to society to be rehabilitated and who then apply for a Proficiency Certificate in order to be able to use a firearm. It is clear that this kind of situation would open up the field considerably, and contrary to what my hon. colleague just said, it would be even worse than the serious situation he himself was predicting. What is important and what I wish to emphasize is the present wording of Section 104 which deals with firearms acquisition certificates. If I may, I would like to read a few paragraphs of this Section which I find quite relevant. It reads as follows:

"104. (1) Where a firearms officer to whom an application for a firearms acquisition certificate is made, after considering the information contained in the application, any further information that is submitted to him pursuant to a requirement made under subsection (8) and such other information as may reasonably be regarded as relevant to the application, does not have notice of any matter that may render it desirable in the interests of the safety of the applicant or any other person that the applicant should not acquire a firearm, he shall, subject to subsection (2) and on receipt by him of the appropriate fee, if any, issue a firearms acquisition certificate to the applicant.

The next part sets out prohibitions and even penalties. It reads as follows:

(2) No firearms acquisition certificate may be issued to a person who

(a) is under the age of sixteen years;

(b) is prohibited by an order made pursuant to section 98 or 101 or by a condition of a probation order referred to in paragraph 663(2)(d) from having a firearm in his possession; or

(c) fails to produce evidence in conjunction with his application for a firearms acquisition certificate that he has

(i) completed—

—and I believe this is very important—

—a course in the safe handling and use of firearms, or

(ii) successfully completed a test relating to the safe handling and use of firearms

I would like to point out another very important aspect of the firearms acquisition certificate, namely the fact that the certificate will not be issued if the applicant, and I quote:

(a) has been convicted within five years immediately preceding the date of his application, in proceedings on indictment, of

(i) an offence in the commission of which violence against another person was used, threatened or attempted, or

(ii) an offence under this Part,

Or if the applicant:

(b) within five years immediately preceding the date of his application, has been treated for a mental disorder, whether in a hospital, mental institute or psychiatric clinic or otherwise and whether or not he was, during that period, confined to such a hospital, institute or clinic, where the disorder for which he was so treated was associated with violence or threatened or attempted violence on the part of the applicant against himself or any other person;

The fact is that all this is now provided in the case of firearms acquisition certificate applications. Obviously, no system can be perfect either in this area or anywhere else, whether in the Quebec Civil Code or the common law of English-speaking provinces. Nothing is perfect, but there is quite a difference between admitting this and suggesting proficiency tests, and that is why I do not support this bill.

The Constitution

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

THE CONSTITUTION

AMENDMENT RESPECTING FEDERAL GENERAL ELECTIONS

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South) moved that Bill C-483, an Act to amend the Constitution of Canada (duration of House of Commons), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to speak on Bill C-483, an Act to amend the Constitution of Canada, in particular its provisions relating to the duration of the House of Commons. The purpose of this Bill is to provide an element of predictability in the calling of federal general elections.

At present there is almost total discretion in the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to choose a time that is convenient to the Government. Under this Bill elections would be held regularly at four-year intervals, except where a term was cut short by the defeat of a Government on a matter of confidence. In the latter event the newly-elected Government would start a fresh four-year mandate. Nothing in this Bill would prevent the Governor General, where a Government lost the confidence of the House of Commons, from calling upon the Opposition to form a new Government in circumstances where the Governor General already has such power.

Through this Bill I would therefore propose that the Constitution of Canada be amended under appropriate procedures in the following manner:

That the term of Parliament be so structured as to allow the House of Commons to continue until dissolved by the Governor General, which shall be not sooner than four years less 40 days, nor later than four years plus 40 days, from the day that the last preceding Parliament was dissolved.

I further propose notwithstanding this set term that:

The Governor General may dissolve a House of Commons at any time if the Government is defeated on a motion for the approval of its budgetary policy, a motion to concur in interim supply or Main Estimates, or a motion expressing loss of confidence in the Government by the House.

This setting of a specific four-year term for Parliament would as a result require a change to the Canada Elections Act. Through this Bill I propose an amendment to the Canada Elections Act, such amendment to enshrine in statute law the constitutional convention that writs for an election are to be issued immediately upon dissolution of Parliament. I propose that writs of election for a general election shall be issued on the day that Parliament is dissolved, and further:

That the Governor in Council shall fix the day on which the poll shall be held at an election which shall not be later than 80 days after the day that the writ of election was issued, and that day shall be named in the writ of election.

I feel this would ensure that general elections and by-elections are always held within a reasonable time from the day the writs are issued. I do not have to point out that this is not the case today and refer to the inequities which have occurred. At present, as Hon. Members are well aware, the maximum period for the duration of Parliament is five years.

In our history there has been one exception. During the First World War the Parliament which was assembled in 1911 was extended to 1917 by a special amendment to the British North America Act because of the exceptional circumstances of that war. As there was a section in the British North America Act, there is also a Section in the Canada Act which also allows for the continuation of Parliament. We are all very familiar with the following well-known phrase:

—in time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection, if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the House, or the legislative assembly, as the case may be.

This statement has been very controversial in the past. On three occasions Parliament has run its full five-year limit. In 1896 and in 1935 the Governments of the day were each defeated during the following general elections. On the third occasion, in 1945, the Government just barely managed re-election, which is indicative of my point and of this Bill.

The shortest Canadian Parliament, in 1957-58, was technically less than six months, while the Parliament of 1925-26 was slightly more than six months.

Despite the frequency of elections during the decade following 1957, Parliament usually lasts about four years. Our five-year limit for the duration of Parliament is based upon the British model. I am a strong supporter of the British parliamentary system but I believe that a four-year term is an improvement which can be made, much as I dislike criticizing the system of Government because I think we enjoy the best in the world.

In Britain, prior to 1715 there was no limit to the duration of Parliament. In that year the term was set at seven years. With the proclamation of the British Parliament Act in 1911, the duration of Parliament was reduced to five years. Only twice since then has the limit been extended and both times, similar to Canada, because of world wars. The Parliament which began in January, 1911 was extended to eight years; and the Parliament which began in November, 1935 was extended to ten years. Thank heavens for Winston Churchill. The duration of Parliament in Britain, like that in Canada, rarely lasts the specified five years; the British average is between three and four years.

I have provided this information as background to illustrate to the House why I feel the five-year limit to the duration of the Canadian Parliament must be changed. As I have shown, the limit is rarely adhered to and is therefore somewhat meaningless. By practical tradition five years has only been a "not beyond" date and not a fixed and practical limit to the life of a Parliament. The extending of the duration of Parliament in very exceptional circumstances may indeed be acceptable, but on those three occasions when Parliament lasted the full five years it did so for political expediency only. This, I submit, is not a sound or democratic practice. By having what is in essence a "not beyond" but "anything before" date, the democratic process is in the hands of a small group or in many instances in the hands of one man. From what I have seen of this Government in action, that one man frightens me like no one since Adolf Hitler.

As long as there is an alternative time for an election, the Prime Minister is able to pick and choose the time most favourable to him. His own interests become paramount, not those of the nation. This right to select a most appropriate time is of tremendous advantage to a Government—and let there be no mistake—and particularly to its leader. If the situation in the country is not encouraging, to put it mildly, the Government can cling to power, hoping to wait out the storm like right now, unmindful of the harm it continues to inflict upon the nation. What such a Government must realize is that a Government which puts off calling an election until the last possible moment is sure to be criticized during the election campaign for not having the courage to face the voters sooner. Such was the case, as I so well remember, in 1979.

In the situation of a maximum five-year duration it is also very relevant to draw attention to the right of a Government to call an election any time after Parliament convenes. This, too, is a travesty which must not be allowed to continue. Again the Government of the day is permitted to pick and choose issues and circumstances most favourable to itself. There is always the temptation for a Prime Minister to use his power to retain power or to promote Party ends, even though such ends might not be in the public good.

A Prime Minister and a Government, knowing privately when an election will be called, can set about lavishly spending taxpayers' dollars on a host of projects. Have we not seen that? They are known as election goodies for the simple purpose of purchasing goodwill for themselves prior to the election. I am sure we all recall the ringing phrases and the claims of "the just society" and repeatedly being told that "the land is strong". Just as easily we can remember being assured that there would be no wage and price controls.

If specific four-year terms were set for Parliament, the public would realize instantly what was being done at the time it was being done and respond accordingly at the polls when they put that crucial X on their ballots.

The ability to call snap elections, especially in times when the Government's popularity is negligible, is also a powerful tool in the hands of the Prime Minister. When the electorate clearly indicates, primarily through public opinion polls, that it sees the Government as the source of its problems, the Prime Minister can use the threat of an election to keep his Party under control. I think we have seen that displayed dramatically across the way.

Backbenchers on the Government side would be very reluctant to vote against the Party line in the House of Commons or to voice disagreement with Cabinet policy—or perfidy—if threatened with an election. This is a situation very familiar these days to Members across the way. Many of the 74 Quebec-bloc Members are shuddering right now. How many Government Members feel secure right now? How many would like the election to be called in February next, which would be the case if the four-year term were in place? I am sure they would be shivering in their boots.

A committed 52 per cent of Canadians would like to see a Progressive Conservative Government in office right now. We would welcome an election tomorrow. This Government, knowing just how unpopular it is, is doing everything in its power to try and convince Canadians that it is really doing a bang-up, marvellous job.

The Government is spending the money of Canadians to try and get this false message across. This all bears relevance to a four-year term. The largest advertiser in Canada is not a giant multinational corporation. It is the federal Government telling Canadians how proud they should be of it, and it has to advertise to do it.

It has been estimated that the Government spends about $70 million on advertising a year, and the figure is growing. This is three times the amount spent by the second largest advertiser, can you imagine, General Foods. British parliamentarians have recognized the problems inherent in the system, including the undue advantage given the Government, and there have been many proposals to that Parliament for fixed terms like those of the United States Congress. To my knowledge, this Bill represents the first time a proposal of this nature has been presented to this House.

The system in the United States is a little different from that of Canada and Great Britain in that the nation's leader, the President, is elected by an independent popular vote and does not achieve office by virtue of being the head of the party obtaining the majority of seats in Congress. I do not agree with the system but I do agree with the fixed term.

Those in Congress, in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, as we are all aware, are elected for specific terms. Every two years the entire House of Representatives faces a general election. Senators are elected for six-year terms, but the system is such that only one-third of the terms expire every two years. I am not going to get into Senate reform and an elected Senate, which is long overdue.

Elections for both are held on the first Tuesday following the first Monday in November of even-numbered years. Their term of office begins at noon on January 3 in the year following the election. It is simple, predictable and it works.

The President of the United States is elected for a four-year term, so he is held accountable for his actions at the end of that time. We in Canada would do well seriously to consider placing the same onus of accountability on our Prime Minister in this year of parliamentary reform. We perhaps should consider limiting the term of office of the Canadian Prime Minister to two four-year terms. I hope to introduce a subsequent Bill in this House in the near future to address this issue.

The need to place a firm and fixed limit on the duration of Parliament has many other advantages besides limiting those of Government. In keeping with our efforts at parliamentary reform, the specific time limit would provide for a more orderly and practical resolution of the business of Government. It would enable potential and declared candidates from all political parties and those running as independents to plan their election or re-election campaigns in a less costly and more practical manner.

In my own case, I was nominated in March, 1978. At that time it was generally thought the election call was imminent. All the signs pointed to it. However, the election was not called until May of the following year, a period of 14 months; a maiden-in-waiting, if you will!

I am sure such a move would also be welcomed by the Chief Electoral Officer whose duty it is to conduct the general election process. Sometimes the materials are received way ahead of an election, and sometimes not. I understand that some have already been received in my riding. Eliminated would be the chaotic, last minute scramble to implement the gigantic task of enumeration and the vote itself. I am positive the majority of Canadians would support such a cyclical system of Government.

If we wish to restore the public's esteem of Parliament and its respect for the institution, we must think seriously of presenting ourselves to the public on a regular basis for approval or disapproval and not spring emotional surprises on them.

We are the representatives of the public and those we represent must have the opportunity to express their judgment of us at specifically designated intervals. We must not have the right to pick and choose when we will allow Canadians to sit in judgment, particularly if the times chosen are for political purposes and not for the public good.

I am presenting this Bill to the House at this time and by doing so I feel I am giving my clear support to this desirable system of accountability, accountability sadly lacking at this juncture in our history. A four-year term in this Parliament would give the Canadian people some hope after the classic mismanagement of the economy by the present Prime Minister, a Prime Minister supported by a horde of docile, spineless followers who, regardless of the issue or of thoughts for their constituents, rush blindly in his wake saying "Me too".

No matter what the duration of this Parliament, which is the longest in Canadian history with 504 sitting days, I have great faith that the Canadian people will remember the waffling on the budget, the Canadian people being absolutely subjugated. They will remember the pay-offs, the pork-barrelling, the subterfuge, the chicanery, the lack of intestinal fortitude, the deceit and the duplicity of the present regime.

Most Canadians, thank God, have awakened to the fact that the Prime Minister is a man who believes he has the right to rule instead of govern. That sort of thing went out with the divine right of kings. A four-year term would do much to alleviate this sort of action. The character of the left-wing, demagogic Prime Minister is most aptly described by the statement of Lord Acton when he said "Power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely".

When thinking of a four-year term, I am sure the Canadian people would like to see it in place right now so that in February they could throw these rascals out. This time, regardless of when the election is held, no amount of bluff will help our chameleon Prime Minister. The people will not be fooled by a budget purporting to support free enterprise, by the last minute wooing of President Reagan or by a supposed stand that we saw in the House of Commons today against the U.S.S.R. in the Cruise missile situation. The socialist policies of the Prime Minister are now well known and documented. The lack of honour will be remembered. Voters will remember the fact that there were no resignations from discredited Ministers Lalonde, Chrétien and MacEachen over the Gillespie affair or budget leaks. I am sorry, I should not mention names, Mr. Speaker; I apologize.

The "Kings Row" across the way is in reality "Skid Row". It is occupied by a group of derelicts who have forged signatures, approached judges, lobbied for contracts, provided free Air Canada passes, refused to prosecute known enemy agents, allowing our allies to do it for us, elevated cronies to the Senate, been involved in the uranium cartel and then imposed an official silence on the issue. The list is as shameful as it is endless. It is condoned by the leader of this country. Their greed, incompetence and indifference will not be countenanced for much longer.

With the assistance of a public now fed up with the actions of this Government, I am more than confident that our Party as the only alternative will form the next Government. If this Bill passes into law, our Government will be the one charged with the responsibility of putting this four-year time limit into effect. I can assure this House and Canadians in general that we will not be afraid to face them after four years in office.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, I came here this afternoon to participate in Private Members' hour, being a great supporter of the right of the Private Member to bring forward ideas into the House of Commons. I looked at the Bill of the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), C-483. I thought it was a serious proposal and I prepared some remarks in a serious vein. I will make those serious remarks. In listening to the arguments the Hon. Member put forward this afternoon, we can see that he is not particularly serious in trying to get the House to accept this proposal.

As one of those which the Hon. Member calls a spineless, docile Government supporter, I am pleased to stand here and respond to the argument of someone I would consider an intellectual dwarf. The Hon. Member has recited the most superfluous, trite criticisms of the present Government that really reflect the opinions of the lowest common denominator in society, all in support of an argument that I thought at least merited debate. So let us deal with the serious aspects first and the trite and ridiculous later. Mr. Speaker, I hate to respond to someone such as the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr.

Stewart) but, quite frankly, if I do not, someone else must. We must talk this measure out.

• (1630)

I am a member of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders and Procedural reform, and I respect the rights of Hon. Members to bring matters to the House of Commons for serious debate. However, upon hearing the kind of argument put forward this afternoon by the Hon. Member for Simcoe South in support of his Bill, one sometimes wonders whether or not it is worthwhile to give private Members an entire Wednesday afternoon or to enhance Private Members' Hour at all because of the kind of arguments that have been presented.

Let us take the Hon. Member's proposal at face value and deal with it seriously. Then I will respond to the ridiculous things that were said earlier. First, the Bill would provide a situation where every four years on could expect an election. Now, to say that an election would fall on every anniversary date four years hence would, I think, cause some logistical problems. For example, the most recent election was held in February of 1980. This Bill would therefore commit us for a long period of time to having elections during the winter. Now, I suppose the Hon. Member for Simcoe South would propose to allow the Government 40 days, either before or after the anniversary date, in which to call an election, giving the Government three months' leeway. Clause 3 of the Bill would fix a maximum length for any federal election of 80 days.

This Bill would lead to what I would consider to be radical changes in the operation of Canada's current political system. I wonder to what extent short Private Member's Bill should be the avenue for radically changing the parliamentary system. The Hon. Member has said that he is a great student of British parliamentary democracy. One would have to question that statement given the arguments that he has marshalled this afternoon.

Let us look at the specific content of this piece of legislation. The first Clause would repeal Section 50 of the Constitution Act, 1867, by substituting the following:

50. (1) A House of Commons shall continue until dissolved by the Governor General, which shall be not sooner than four years less forty days, nor later than four years plus forty days, from the day that the last preceding Parliament was dissolved.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the Governor General may dissolve a House of Commons at any time if the Government is defeated on a motion for the approval of its budgetary policy, a motion to concur in interim supply or main estimates, or a motion expressing loss of confidence in the Government by the House.

This amendment to the Constitution Act, 1867, would create a great deal of confusion since it could be interpreted as being in conflict with Section 4 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which reads:

4. (1) No House of Commons and no legislative assembly shall continue for longer than five years from the date fixed for the return of the writs at a general election of its members.

(2) In time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection, a House of Commons may be continued by Parliament and a legislative assembly may be continued by the legislature beyond five years if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of the House of Commons or the legislative assembly, as the case may be.

What will be the limit? Will it be four years, five years? Will the Government be authorized to carry on in time of war or invasion? The Hon. Member does not address that particular concern. He pointed out three examples of Parliament going to its full limit, and I take him at his word as I have not researched it. He said it happened in 1896, 1935, and 1945. He dismisses this by saying that Parliament went to its full limit for political reasons. Well, he did not elaborate on those political reasons. Perhaps I can help him. First, in 1896, the incumbent Conservative Government was fearful of going to the polls and decided to wait for the full five years. In fact, I think it went a little beyond the five years, but it did not do anything wrong. To my understanding, that was not made an issue in the election. There were no charges brought against that particular Government of doing something anti-democratic.

Similarly, it was Mr. Bennett, another Conservative Prime Minister, who went the full limit in 1935. That was not the issue in the election campaign. People did not accuse him of subverting the democratic process.

In 1945, under the Government of Mackenzie King, there was a legitimate reason. The country was still at war and it would have been absolutely irresponsible to have an election take place during the war. There was an election in 1940, just after the war had started, but that was before Canada had fully mobilized and before the attitude of the Canadian society had fully changed to accommodating the war effort. Those are the three examples that he has given.

The Hon. Member goes on to state that he wants to amend Clause 3 of the Bill which, if adopted, would modify Subsection 22.(1) of the Canada Elections Act in such a way that a maximum length for any electoral campaign would be created. Thus we would have in the Canada Elections Act two series of provisions. One would concern the minimum length of a campaign, being Subsection 6(3.1) of the Canada Elections Act which reads:

6.(3.1) Notwithstanding subsection (2) and (3), in no case shall a writ of election be dated or issued on a day that is later than the fiftieth day before polling day.

Another provision would concern the maximum length of a campaign, the proposed Subsection 22(1) which would read:

22.(1) The Governor in Council shall fix the day on which the poll shall be held at any election, which shall be not later than eighty days after the day that the writ of election was issued, and that day shall be named in the writ of election.

Therefore, the combined effect of these two provisions would be that once the writ had been issued, the election should be held no carlier than 50 days and no later than 80 days from the day that the writ was issued.

The global result of these proposed amendments and of the existing provisions of the Canada Elections Act is that a Government would be in a position to call an election any time in four years less forty days from the last election, which election could be held 50 days later, that is, four years plus ten days from the previous election; and four years plus forty days, which election could be held 90 days later, that is, four years plus 130 days from the previous election. This means that the Government would have a real leeway of over four months, leaving a certain amount of discretion with the Prime Minister, something that the Hon. Member for Simcoe South has decried in his speech this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, let us get down to the real issue. It is really necessary to have set dates for elections? Would that improve our electoral system? There are three countries where elections are held at fixed dates. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member mentioned all three countries, but he did mention the United States. Let us look at France, West Germany and the United States.

In the case of France, the constitution of that country fixes the normal length of a legislative mandate to four years, and elections are held within 60 days of the end of the incumbent's mandate. But the President also has the power to dissolve the National Assembly on special occasion, and he often uses this prerogative. As a matter of fact, only half the number of French legislative elections were called at the end of a four-year mandate.

In the case of West Germany, the Government of that country has found a way to get around the constitution provisions by provoking its own defeat in the Bundestag. We saw this occur last fall. Such a thing would be possible here too since the Prime Minister could arrange to lose a non-confidence motion when he saw fit, or any time within the four-year period.

In the case of the United States to which the Hon. Member referred, the President is, after only two years in office, already back on the campaign trail. We are seeing this happen right now. President Reagan as the incumbent President is supposedly above politics, but he is campaigning day in and day out for his re-election bid later next year. This forces the office of the President to be more responsive to organized lobbies and, in my view, handicaps seriously his margin of manoeuvre. This is one of the main problems with fixed elections. It handicaps the power of the Government and often places the Government at the mercy of organized sectorial interests from inside or outside the country. If federal elections in Canada were held at fixed dates, to be sure some provincial Governments would take advantage of that. We have seen what kind of political games the Provinces have played in the last ten years.

I also have a concern about byelections, one which I do not particularly want to go into at this time.

The Hon. Member is a great admirer of the British parliamentary system, yet from my reading, I do not recall any demand on the part of the Opposition or of the Government in Great Britain to change the system. It is a well established rule in the British parliamentary system that five years is the normal term except where there are extreme circumstances as occured in Great Britain between 1935 and 1945 and as occurred here in Canada from 1911 to 1917 in the case of the war. As I mentioned earlier, it was unnecessary to invoke that special provision in 1945 because the Government still had its mandate intact, but the ending of the war more or less coincided with the ending of the mandate of Mackenzie King's Government. If we look to the mother of Parliaments, I do not believe that that issue has ever been raised. I do not say categorically, but I do not remember from my reading that this matter is of great concern to the people of Great Britain.

The real reason why the Hon. Member has brought this bill before the House this afternoon has been given by him. His Party has been somewhat frustrated by its inability to gain the favour of the electorate in this country. The Conservatives seeing themselves positioned rather well in the opinion polls, want to change the whole nature of the British and Canadian parliamentary system simply to accommodate their somewhat distasteful lust for power. That is really what it is all about, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Hon. Member, is this the official position of the Conservative Party? He has stated unequivocally that, should a Conservative Government ever be elected again, this would be the Party policy.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is Private Members' Hour. It is not the opinion of our Party, unless I interpret the rules of the House incorrectly. I ask the Hon. Member to read the date on the Bill.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is perhaps in a bit of a fog. He is the one who stated that if the present polls continue, and if his Party comes to power—

Mr. Stewart: If, if.

Mr. Collenette: Yes, those are great "if's", and the Hon. Members have great reason to say "if" because it is by no means assured. I believe the action today by the Premier of Ontario, William Davis, has pointed to the fact that there is a very big "if" about those opinion polls. If it was so assured, I am sure he would have entered the race. However, Mr. Speaker, I did not want to digress too much into partisan politics. The point is, though, the Hon. Member for Simcoe South has said, whether or not he knows what his Party's position is, that if the Conservative Party forms the next Government or a subsequent Government, then that Party would change the rules and have a fixed term. I have not heard any of the Leaders of the Opposition, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) or the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), or any of the leadership candidates state a position on this particular policy.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, there is no desire for this kind of change in Great Britain because there is alternation between the major Parties. I believe the longest period of time one Party has dominated in the British House of Commons in this century has been the 13 years of Conservative rule between 1951 and 1964. The remainder of the time there has been alternation. Of course, in Canada, we have seen the dominance of the Liberal Party in this century nearly 60 years out of the 80.

Mr. Cullen: For good reason.

Mr. Collenette: My colleague, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), says, for good reason. It is because the Liberal Party has answered the needs of the Canadian public, and I am sure we will do so in the next election and be triumphant, notwithstanding what the ups and downs of the opinion polls might reflect. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, this Bill really reflects the frustration of the Conservative Party at not being able to organize itself and so present itself to the country as the Party that can form the Government with some regularity.

I believe one only has to look at the debate which took place on Saturday in Toronto between the leadership candidates to realize the Conservative Party is still not ready to assume national office. It still cannot debate the major national concerns of the day, and it certainly cannot be trusted in terms of forming a new Government. That is why the Hon. Member is frustrated. To be charitable, Mr. Speaker, I can understand his frustration. He has not been here very long so I believe he is a bit impatient, but some of his colleagues have been around for a quarter of a century or more and I believe perhaps they have the right to be frustrated. The answer is not in changing the constitutional system in this country, the parliamentary system, and our constitutional heritage. That is not the answer. The answer is for the Conservative Party to try to get its own act together so that it can curry the favour of the voters and form the next Government.

I have talked just about long enough. I could be accused of killing time, and no Hon. Member likes to be accused of that. I do admit, however, that this afternoon I have tried to kill time simply because this measure, as it is written in Bill form, is a legitimate intellectual proposal which has come before the House. However, the arguments which have been martialed behind it by the Hon. Member for Simcoe South have shown that this Bill deserves to be talked out.

I hope other Hon. Members of the House will not let this Bill see the light of day because if it ever did get to committee it would do so for the wrong reasons. It would get to committee for reasons of narrow partisanship, answering a weakness of the Conservative Party and a frustration. I do not believe Private Members' Hour should be taken up with the frustrations of the Conservative Party, and certainly no committee should deal with this further, given the fact that that is the real reason the Hon. Member has brought forward this Bill today.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not wish to speak this Bill out. I would like to express some concerns with regards to the proposed legislation. I would like to support some of the concepts which are in it. I found that much of the earlier debate on both sides of the House really deviated from the merits and the disadvantages inherent in the legislation. I feel that is unfortunate. The previous speaker was right in one respect, that is that Private Members' Hour—Private Members' day as it is now becoming—is the only opportunity which private Members have to talk about legislation and concerns which should be dealt with in a legislative manner. That is a right which is in some ways abused in this House, in that almost every piece of Private Members' legislation is talked out. It is not allowed to go to committee for further action. I find that unfortunate. There is no monopoly on brains and good ideas, and we should have a system in the House of Commons which allows reasonable pieces of private Members' legislation to be studied by appropriate committees of the House, and if there is a consensus within that committee, that it be referred back to the House of Commons for further resolution.

I believe we in the Opposition do ourselves harm when, in the interest of promoting our Bill, we sometimes use all the wrong rhetoric. I can agree with some of the sentiments in that rhetoric, but I feel that to bring it in at this particular time is probably inappropriate and probably did hurt the valuable suggestions in the legislation which the Hon. Member proposed. I believe one of the remarks of the last Liberal speaker points out why I can support this particular Bill. He said, and I will paraphrase, "It maybe inconvenient for the Government in terms of its dealings with lobbying groups and others if it had a fixed date for an election." I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the full concept of when an election should be called is no longer a matter which should just affect the Government and its ability to survive. We in this House should all agree that elections are really the property of the people. Certainly, if various lobbyist groups wanted to speak out on disarmament, on the issue of abortion or on the issue of wage and price controls, they have that right. We may condemn some of the procedures which lobbyist groups use, and from time to time I am sure all of us do that. However, they have the right to speak out during an election, before an election and, of course, after an election. I do not feel, therefore, that is a valid argument on behalf of the Liberal Government.

In terms of an election itself, Canadians should know when the next election is going to be held. They should be in a situation, as well as the Government, to be able to plan for a certain time period for that election. I believe that is reasonable and has much value for Canadian society as a whole. I also believe it has a great advantage for people who would like to run for public office. Many people who would like to seek election are not in a position to run campaigns which may last from 18 months to two years, depending on when the election is finally called. Many people simply cannot afford it. Many people, by the nature of where they work and what they do cannot afford a long-drawn-out period of time prior to an election being called. I am sure that the fact the 1979 election was not called much earlier created economic hardship on some candidates. I certainly remember hearing about candidates who withdrew after nomination. I think there would be great democratic value in knowing exactly when an election was going to take place, not only regarding where you work but because of the cost involved which many people cannot afford. If they have to wait around, as I said, a year or two years for an election to be finally called, that effectively takes away from the rights of many Canadians to actually take part in an election.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, there is another democratic value to a fixed term of the House of Commons. Under the present laws of this land federal Government workers must resign their employment as soon as they indicate they are going to run for nomination. In this country, over 300,000 Canadians are prevented from seeking election unless they resign their jobs.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Leave of absence. There is a difference.

Mr. Murphy: Leave of absence, I am sorry. The Hon. Conservative Member says there is a difference, certainly technically there is, but being unemployed for two years is an economic harship for people and that is my concern with the present arrangement. We have had situations where people who say they wish to run for a Party nomination are immediately told they must take that leave of absence. The nomination may not take place for five or six months, and the election may not take place for another year or year and a half. So they may be in a position where for two full years they cannot take part in their regular employment. Most Government workers cannot afford that. So I think there is a lot to be gained for the individual.

I think some of the concerns expressed by the Government Member are also legitimate. So I favour this legislation going forward to committee for study. I think many Members on all sides would take part in that study and, if it was possible, come back to the House of Commons with proposals which I think almost all of us, certainly most Canadians, could accept. It would enhance the democratic right of Canadians not only to change the Government when that is their desire, but also to run in elections when that is their desire.

Let me say in closing, Mr. Speaker, that in light of the events which have taken place over the last few days in this House, it is interesting to note that this Private Members' Bill, which changes the Constitution, asks for committee study but does not put a deadline on it and does not insist that the House of Commons pass it after a one-day debate. If you remember the discussions and games-playing to which we have been subjected in the last few days in the House on the important issue of property rights, people want to speed it through the process and they want deadlines for each step of the process. I suggest that sending this Bill to committee for study for whatever length of time is necessary and allowing the House of Commons to debate it for whatever length of time is necessary before we actually pass or fail to pass the legislation, is probably closer to the proper process that we should use for a constitutional amendment. I hope that once we get past the games-playing on the issue of property rights we in this House will sit down and look at a way of dealing with all the proposed amendments which will be made to the Canadian Constitution.

We know that there is an effort to have property rights put into the Constitution. We know that there is still the unresolved issue of what special rights the Province of Quebec should have with regard to the amending formula and other items in the Constitution. We know that we will be asked in the next little while to deal with the issue of aboriginal rights in some proposals which came out of the First Ministers' Conference. Yet we in this House really do not have a process or understanding of how we wish to deal with constitutional amendments. I might add that as a result of some court decisions which are likely to occur over the next few years we can expect to find things in the present Constitution we did not realize we put there, and that the House of Commons may wish to make some corrections. If we decide to make those corrections we should not make them as a result of political expediency or public outcries by one group in society but because we want to make constitutional changes—and we are not talking about changing the whole things as we did two years ago, but rather, of making one or two amendments at a time—and we should think of how we want to do it. This Bill has given me a chance to speak on that, and I think it is something all Members of the House are concerned about and would like to see resolved.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be afforded the opportunity to speak on this subject. I commend the Hon. Member for his attempt to change the Constitution. There are some aspects of this particular Bill which I find interesting and perhaps could support. There are some aspects that I cannot support and I would like to deal with both of them.

I think the obvious weakness in the Bill, of course, is that although the Hon. Member wants a fixed term, he gives all kinds of reasons why the term should not be fixed. Of course one of them would be that a Government decided it would like to go to the people at a certain time because it was to its advantage and it was before the four-year period was up. I submit that the reason the Hon. Member is sitting on the opposite side is precisely that the Government, which came in in May of 1979, let itself be defeated in December of 1979. There was no reason in the world for that Government to have been defeated had it wanted to stay on. Certainly on this side we gave the Government the one opportunity they had to go on, and that was, to defer discussion of that budget to a later date.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) could explain why a longstanding tradition of this House was broken on that particular occasion when the Secretary of State—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. If the Hon. Member wishes to ask a question he should follow the procedure and ask if the Hon. Member would accept a question at this time.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Oh, I am sure he would accept a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Would the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan accept a question at this time?

Mr. McRae: I accept a short question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Thank you for the correction, Mr. Speaker. Can the Hon. Member explain why the Government broke a tradition of long standing in this House, offending all the traditions of this House, by having the spokesman on foreign affairs stand up in this House and vote when he knew perfectly well that the then Secretary of State for External Affairs was away on Government business? Never before had it happened, and may it never happen again.

Mr. McRae: I find this quite incredible. I have sat in this House and it seems to me that we do not have any rules in this House that if there is a vote on any subject, a vote of confidence, and if the Minister is away, the critic would not vote.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Just check your traditions.

Mr. McRae: It certainly has not been the case so far as I can recall. The point is that had that vote been held two weeks later and, as expected, we had continued to sit through the Christmas break, I am sure that a good many Hon. Members on this side would not have been here. The fact is that it was the decision of that Government, as far as I am concerned, that it could do well by going to the polls at that particular time. When there is this sort of clause which says that there are all kinds of reasons the Government can be defeated, such as by votes of confidence, the real basis of the first section is really removed, because an election can be held at any given time.

I am basically not opposed to a fixed term, but what bothers me about this particular statement is that it still leaves in this whole business of votes of confidence. I have been in this place for many years, and the longer I am here the more I believe that the really serious breakdown in the House concerns its adversarial nature. One of the advantages of a fixed term is that people would not necessarily be bound or forced into elections if we voted against something or if groups teamed up and did different things. It is the adversarial concern which would lead me to believe that perhaps a fixed term would be good. However, if we are to have a fixed term, we should get rid of the notion of motions of confidence, and so forth.

The Canadian public, especially now, after years of watching Question Period on television, are appalled at the adversarial nature of our system. They must believe that when we get outside the door we have fistfights because the way we act in the House would certainly lead them to believe that we would "have it out" once outside the door. Of course, such is not the case. However, no matter what the Government brings in, and I suppose that if we were in Opposition we would do the same, the Opposition must almost inevitably oppose it. That is the nature of the game. There must be opposition.

Mr. Siddon: Constructively.

Mr. McRae: We bring in a good budget, one which the business community says is a good budget, and the Opposition opposes it because there is nothing in it for business. I do not blame Hon. Members opposite for doing that because it is part of the game. However, the problem is the process under which we work. We are constantly in an adversarial position. If I want to say a certain thing concerning a Government Bill, and I am on this side, I will speak to the Government. However, if the Opposition wants the same change, I will not speak to the Opposition and we will have a fight over it. It is this kind of thing which is the most bothersome.

There is something to be said for a fixed term, if it is a fixed term. The Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) spoke of the U.S. fixed term system, but he did not speak of a term in which the Government is defeated and an election is held in a short period of time. It is a fixed term. We speak of that Monday in November every two years. There is no way that Mr. Reagan or the Democrats can be defeated in the House. There are some advantages and disadvantages. However, we must start to consider how we can work things out together.

If any of us were Congressmen or Senators in the United States Government, we would be provided with many more employees than we have in our offices here. However, in such an office, everyone, from the receptionist at the front desk to the Congressman or Senator, would be constantly lobbying. I might lobby someone. The Hon. Member for Simcoe South is a good example. I respect his views. In fact, he is very articulate. I intensely disagree with what he says, but there might be a time when he and I would have to say, "Look, we both want the same thing because it will be good for our constituencies in Thunder Bay-Atikokan and Simcoe South". We might not sit down and sign an agreement, but we would make a deal. That is the way we would work, even though we had quite divergent political philosophies. As I see it, that is impossible to do in this House at this particular time.

A few of us from all sides of the House have been working on the issue of disarmament. We have certain views on it. I know the Hon. Member for Simcoe South does not agree with those views because I have heard him speaking differently in committee. The point is that it is very difficult for a handful of us to work together in an effective way, simply because of our adversarial system. We must vote pretty consistently in accordance with our Party's views. Once in a while Liberals can vote against the Government or an Hon. Member opposite may vote against a Party view, but it does not work very often or very well. It is a system which is different.

I always have some difficulty when someone says to me, "I believe in the British system". I have accepted the British system. Much of its value has been passed through to our parliamentary system. However, since we are on the North American continent, we are always being buffeted by what happens in the United States. We in Canada are influenced by both sides. Sometimes we have the worst of both worlds, and maybe this is one of them. For instance, concerning the trade union movement, I think we have the worst of both sides because the American trade union movement is not nearly as adversarial and works together.

However, in the House we should be working, not toward taking over the American system but, rather, toward adjusting ourselves to an idea which is part British, part American—sort of North American. From the American example we should come to realize that we are not elected by the people of this country to fight against each other. However, that is what happens. Question Period is a show, almost a three-ringed circus. It is always adversarial. A Liberal may ask a question which is either favourable to the Government or to the Opposition, but it does not seem to matter. It does not make sense. It is entirely ridiculous, and I am sure that the Canadian people, seeing this constantly, feel the same way.

Therefore, I believe we can borrow from the United States to some extent. Mind you, when we start borrowing, we must be careful. One of the problems in the American system is that because there is so much lobbying, people believe that politicians always have their fingers in the till. This is rather reinforced by American television programs.

It is very seldom that I have a chance to make a deal with someone from the other side. It simply does not happen. We are labelled as politicians because people feel that we are somewhat like American politicians, but we are not. We do not sit down frequently and decide that the two of us will push something. That type of thing does not go on between Parties in this country, and maybe it is good. We must be very careful that when we borrow, we borrow only the best and that we do it in such a way as to avoid becoming involved in the kind of lobbying which is very bad in the United States.

I would be inclined to study the first Clause, but I would not like to speak about the Clause which says that we—

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PUBLICATION OF THE RESULT OF OPINION POLLS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel) moved that Bill C-555, to amend the Canada Elections Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: If I may, first I would like to inform Hon. Members of the main thrust of Bill C-555. As I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, it is a Bill designed to amend the Canada Elections Act, so that if it carried, no opinion polls would be published between the twenty-eighth day prior to polling day and the day on which the polls are closed. By publishing we refer to publishing by radio, television, newspaper, news sheet, poster, billboard, hand bill or in any other manner.

Mr. Smith: Word of mouth.

Mr. Stevens: In answer to the Hon. Member, who will undoubtedly have an opportunity to speak on this Bill, we are not prohibiting private polls and we are not prohibiting whatever organizations political Parties feel they need to sense whether a Party is doing well or poorly. What we are saying is that surely, if we want to maintain a responsible democracy, we must as least consider whether it is right to have people, in some cases people who may be well qualified and in other cases people who may not be very professional in their approach, coming out with public opinion polls with a view to publishing them and possibly influencing the election dramatically.

Let me give an example of what happened in the last election. I have here a copy of the Saturday Star, for February 16, 1980, which you will notice, Mr. Speaker, has a well chosen picture of the then Prime Minister of Canada, I would say a picture deliberately included in that edition of the Saturday Star to put the Prime Minister of the nation in the worst possible light. Offsetting that picture is the headline "Liberals lead Gallup by 20 points." The article is written by Peter Regenstreif, copyright, incidentally, by the Toronto Star, 1980. The article commences with:

> A solid 20-point lead in the Gallup Poll for the Liberals over the Conservatives points to a probable Liberal majority government after Monday's election.

The truth is that that poll was totally inaccurate. The pollster goes on to say that their records show that 48 per cent of decided voters would be voting Liberal in the ensuing election, 28 per cent would be voting Conservative, and 23 per cent would be voting NDP. In short, the thrust of the poll and the way the article was written was that the Liberals had an unbeatable 20-point lead over the Conservatives, which meant a majority Government.

The fact was that the result in the election showed that the Liberals did not have 48 per cent but 44 per cent of the results and the Conservatives did not have 28 per cent but 33 per cent. While the pollsters portrayed the image of a 20-point gap between the then Government of Canada and the Opposition, on election day the gap in points turned out to be about half of that.

The reason I introduced this Bill, Mr. Speaker, which incidentally was introduced on May 2, three years ago, was that, having lived with the consequence of what the pollsters did in that 1980 election, I felt the time had come when we needed some type of constraint on those that publish polls prior to elections. If you check the repercussions of this type of thing, you will find that most people in this House will tell you that during the 1980 campaign, when meeting people on the doorstep or at public meetings, rather than hearing them say, "Tell us more about the issues or tell us about your leader as opposed to other leaders", the almost inevitable statement was, "It looks like you are going to lose". People told us that they were reading in the paper of a 20-point gap and because of that they would say to us, "Somehow, you cannot make it." The issue became not who should govern this country but who a pollster said was going to win on election day.

Naturally, there are two ways to look at that, both of them wrong. You could say the bandwagon approach is going to favour a person or the Party that looks to be in the lead. That, I suggest, is wrong. Or you could argue exactly the reverse and say that perhaps it will garner a lot of support for the underdog. Taking that scenario, if it is going to be one or the other, I would much sooner be on the bandwagon side than be worrying about getting support for the underdog.

Mr. Smith: That is why you are with Mulroney.

Mr. Stevens: The Parliamentary Secretary can catcall and treat this lightly, but to me the people of Canada are concerned about this issue. While the Grits may laugh, the tragedy that has beset this nation for the last few years is partly a result of those election results which, in turn, were partly triggered by unfair polling right up to election day. It is something which that Member should not be laughing about any longer.

Mr. Smith: You don't believe that!

Mr. Stevens: What are the disadvantages of publishing polls right up to election day, as it can be done now? Let me put it succinctly. Think of the effect if it were seriously suggested that a newspaper could take a group of polls—if this could be done—and have the people vote in those polls in some kind of a preliminary election. Let us take the advance polls. What if we published the results of the advance polls prior to election day? Surely there is not a person in this House who would say that that should be done. Why should it not be done? In their heart they would know somehow or other that that is counter to democracy.

How people vote at five advance polls or 100 advance polls should be kept secret to the day the election results are actually tabulated. It would be grossly unfair to have certain advance polls published prior to an election. I do not think there is any doubt about that. If, under the proper scrutiny of the electoral process, we agree that an advance poll should not be published, what on earth is the justification for having people, for a fee or otherwise, poll 1,000 people or 2,000 people? First of all, it is an invasion of their right to keep how they vote secret by asking them how they are going to vote. Second, what is the justification for taking the totals of, let us say, 2,000 people who have been contacted and issuing the results as if they were indicative of what would happen in the ensuing election?

If we agree that the publishing of an advance poll is wrong—which, after all, would be properly supervised—why should we say that an amateur poll or a professional poll of a random sampling of people is somehow or other okay, is part of freedom of speech or God only knows what, and should not be restrained? We must add to that the fact that any pollster will tell us he can influence the results of a poll by the method he uses in gaining whatever data he needs and how he frames the question. If he wants to be completely fraudulent, he only has to make sure to call the right people who will give the right answers. If all these things are true, I would say the time has come for Parliament at least to consider whether there should be some restriction on this complete, carte blanche publishing of polls literally right up to the day when Canadians are asked to vote.

How often have we heard how people in western Canada resent watching television on election night and seeing the results from eastern Canada being reported? They realize that virtually whatever they have done in the form of voting is almost immaterial. If voters in western Canada feel that way, surely we must ask ourselves why. The reason is that they sense a certain futility. If they feel that way, why is it right to let some amateur or professional group of pollsters tell them in effect the same thing one or two days before?

Some Grits must feel warm all over as they remember the 1980 election and how the polling published in The Toronto Star helped them in the Toronto area. If they want to rise in the House today and defend it, let them also tell us why it was necessary in the Canada Elections Act to prohibit the publication of results in Newfoundland in another time zone in Canada, prior to the polls being closed in that time zone. Obviously it was included because it was felt that if people in British Coumbia knew how the vote had gone in Newfoundland, it would have some influence before the polls closed in British Columbia. If they think that such results should be blacked out on election day and not openly disseminated in British Columbia, why is it all right to have an amateur or professional pollster in effect doing the same thing right up to voting day for whatever devious or other reasons he wants to do it?

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, you might ask, "Yes, but what other country has ever been so bold as to prevent this type of publication?" First, I point out that the Province of British Columbia has a ban on public opinion polls during elections. We have Hon. Members from British Columbia here. Perhaps they could correct me if I am wrong, but I understand that the ban has been in place for almost 30 years. For example, a radio station in Nelson was actually prosecuted in the last election in British Columbia on the basis that its poll contravened the regulations. In France, no polls may be made public during the last week of an election campaign. Australia has a ban, but I am not sure how extensive it is. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert)—who said that he would like Hon. Members to know that if he were in the House he would certainly support my Bill—pointed out that this has become quite an issue in that part of the democratic world. Australia feels that a ban on this type of polling is necessary.

We could argue that the publishing of polls is something that may either hurt a Party in one election or help it in the next, but that is not what we are talking about today. We are talking about how we can ensure that our elections are as open, fair and democratic as possible. This entails no preliminary glimpses of how people will vote, because that type of thing becomes self-fulfilling. Those who have the wherewithal to commission polls can commission them as they see fit. They can ask whatever questions they see fit and publish the results as they see fit. I do not think anyone in Canada should have such a right if we want to respect our free democratic system.

Let me point out the types of things a pollster generally will not tell a person making inquiries. I went to see certain officials of the Gallup poll organization and questioned them about the 1980 results. I asked them whether they would reveal who exactly was surveyed, when they were surveyed and where. Other than being given general data, such as between dates and that type of thing, they say that that information is private, and they will not disclose it. If we ask who commissioned the poll or who actually paid them for it, of course we are told that that is private. If we ask whether the interviews that resulted in the data they felt was necessary were conducted by telephone or in person, we may or may not obtain an answer.

I think all these things should be open. If people are to be allowed to continue to publish polls and to show them to whatever advantage or disadvantage they feel will result, surely we should have the right to know who exactly they surveyed, who commissioned it, who paid for the poll and whether the interviews were conducted by telephone or in person.

Professional pollsters have told me that there is a tremendous difference in responses. For example, if they telephone persons, they obtain much more guarded answers than if a professional interviewer sat down with the person, led him up to the question and finally got the answer out of him. The tactics are another matter which I will get into at another time, but we are never furnished with the knowledge of what exactly was the breakdown in terms of number of males polled, number of females polled or the language, how heavily it was oriented to the French, to the English or to any other ethnic group. It was never related, and of course it could not be related, to such things as the total population. Most pollsters will say that they can never be entirely sure of turnout. In complete good faith they may come up with a poll showing that there will be a vote similar to the one I indicated and if, because of weather or other reasons, a disproportionate number of voters do not turn up, their poll will be automatically inaccurate. They acknowledge the fact that some elections have heavy turnouts and others have comparatively light turnouts. This is something a pollster cannot judge.

The point I am making is that poll results are written up, as they were in The Toronto Star to which I referred, as if they were Gospel on which people can count, but the pollsters tell us that they are accurate, within 4 per cent either way, 95 per cent of the time.

If we cherish our free democratic system, is it right that we allow people to publish polls that can be and literally are admitted to be often inaccurate? That is what we are talking about today.

I would hope that Hon. Members who choose to either talk out this Bill or possibly even speak against it will hesitate to do so. If they believe in democracy in Canada, let them show it by saying that they do not feel there should be this unfair polling of the public leading up to general elections such as happened in 1980.

[Translation]

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in the debate on Bill C-555. I begin my remarks by saying to my colleague who has spoken in favour of this Bill that I have too much respect for the intelligent electors of Canada to think they might be swayed by public opinion polls during electoral campaigns. I would remind him that we Quebecers have lived through much more trying times during the referendum campaign when many opinion polls gave contradictory results, yet that did not prevent men and women in Quebec from choosing Canada.

[English]

The purpose of Bill C-555 is identical to that in two Bills which have already been debated during the present session. The first one, Bill C-208, was introduced by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) and debated on June 20, 1980. The second one, Bill C-262, was sponsored by the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates) and was debated on November 26, 1981.

One may wonder if all that could be said about this topic has been exhausted. Maybe the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) was absent when the two Bills I mentioned were debated. In any case, for his benefit I would like to repeat some of the comments previously made about this kind of Bill.

The purpose of his proposed amendment to the Canada Elections Act is to prohibit the publication in any manner during the 28 clear days preceding the time that polls are closed in an electoral district in which an election is being held of the result or purported result of a poll of the political opinions of the electors in relation to the election. That is totally unacceptable to me. It is an insult to the intelligence of the Canadian electorate and is a denial of their right to information about themselves.

At first glance it seems rather shocking to have such a proposal to muzzle the press and to deny information to people coming from a Member of the Conservative Party, a Party which has been an energetic champion of the cause of freedom of information. It is interesting that this comes at a time when that Party is out of office and is running 52 per cent in the Gallup poll. It is apparently now in the best interests of this country. However, Members of that Party have not been known for their consistency.

The Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester, who is a guiding light in his Party and is trying to assist his Leader in many ways, sponsored Bill C-262 which would prohibit the publication of the results of opinion polls for the entire election period. This may be a little sterner stuff, but I think the real problem of what we are talking about here is that such a Bill really does not treat the Canadian people with much respect. I think it more or less implies that they are like lemmings, that they are like sheep, or like buffalo on the prairies stampeding in one direction, and that direction is whichever way the polls seem to be following.

These fears for the ignorance and gullibility of the electorate for only four weeks do not make much sense to me. I am reminded of the phrase of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Fear nothing but fear itself, and he should have known. In 1936 there was a very famous poll conducted during the U.S. presidential election which showed that Alf Landon would thump Franklin Roosevelt. What in fact happened was that Roosevelt thumped Landon, but the Literary Digest only consulted people who subscribed to the magazine. In the middle of the Depression, the only people who could afford magazine subscriptions were Republicans. Not too long after that, the Literary Digest went out of business.

One can only hope that this House will give this Bill the treatment it so richly deserves, that which was meted out to similar Bills sponsored by the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester and the Hon. Member for Athabasca. Both Bills, Bill C-208 and Bill C-262 respectively, would have prohibited the publication of the results of opinion polls during an election, as is proposed by the Hon. Member for York-Peel at this time; three times in two years.

I might note that a very distinguished Member of this House, no less a distinguished a Member than yourself, Mr. Speaker, said, and I will quote from the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for Tuesday, April 13, 1976, as follows:

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did a little research on this. I believe it was the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), not the present incumbent of the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In any case, Hon. Members should avoid attempting to draw the Speaker into the debate, please.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. It is the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis). I apologize for the error. The Hon. Member for Ottawa West said this about the poll, and I quote:

> Well, if you were to try to do it on a national basis, you would have the kind of thing where the Detroit paper would do a poll on Canada and publish it in Detroit. The United Kingdom tried to do this and they had it from radio Luxembourg, beamed at the United Kingdom, back and forth. I just do not think it is enforceable. And, while I do not like opinion polls, and while I understand why someone presented the bill, and I wish I could think of a good, ultimate, valid reason why I could achieve the same result, I have to say, deep in my heart, I think it is wrong.

The point raised in that Committee is a good point. What would happen if a Detroit radio station decided to make public the results of a poll done in Canada? With the cable network and with the techniques we have now, such as the satellite discs, you could have an Atlanta television station broadcast the results of a poll. Are we going to try to stop this? It raises rather horrendous scenes.

You can picture people in eastern Europe huddled beside their radio with the lights out or turned down very low, listening to the "Voice of America" waiting for the police to break down the door. I can think of many movies of the Second World War where the Gestapo would storm in and find somebody with the earphones on. Is that the sort of thing we are going to do? It does not seem very realistic. Once we start muzzling the press and denying the press the right to publish information, where do we stop and, I should say, where do we start?

I understand the motivation behind the Bill presented by the Hon. Member, but it is a very slippery slope. Once you start that sort of process, I do not think there is any guarantee that it will not creep away from us and eat into very fundamental and precious rights. We have always had a free press in this country. A person such as myself on the Liberal side can say that we have enjoyed criticism and all sorts of remarks. We have survived over the years. What would happen if someone would take a poll and then we had a version of a Hyde Park corner in this country? Are you going to extend the Bill to preclude somebody from taking a poll and then standing up on a soapbox to announce it?

Where do you draw the line? The final week ban on publication of poll results involves a clear and obvious abridgement of freedom of expressions. It would restrict individuals, the press, magazines, radio and television for a crucial seven-day period. In the language of journalistic ethics, it would flagrantly and without any question abridge the right of the public to know.

If a late change in public sentiment were under way, this rule would require that knowledge of the change be witheld from the general population. The Bill's sweeping demand, it should be noted, would withold all polls, those accurately reflecting the trend as well as those that might in one way or another be seriously misleading.

[Translation]

I should like to make a brief comment on that, Mr. Speaker. Being from Quebec where I was with the Department of Social Affairs, I know that very often a good many of our departmental policies stemmed from documents drafted after and based on a poll. In my opinion, it is a scientific tool and that is a fact with which well informed people agree today. As to whether all polls are reliable, that is for the client to decide and, in this instance, they are usually sponsored by newspapers during an electoral campaign. I would suggest that the reputation of polling firms has been established, and those which do have some credibility would not jeopardize their future by playing with figures or publishing misleading results. I think that the future of those firms weighs more heavily than the outcome of any election.

[English]

Look at the results of the last election. Does anyone think that the results were seriously affected by the polls? Certainly the polls were broadcast far and wide. The voters in western Canada were not very much influenced by them if they believed the polls which indicated that the Liberal Party would do well in eastern Canada. It did not cause a stampede toward the Liberals on the Prairies. Perhaps if anything, it did cause some weakening of our support.

Look at the polls. They did not all say the same thing. The CTV poll, the CBC poll, the Carleton University poll and the Toronto Star poll did not give the same figures, but they all indicated the same trend, and the trend was that the Liberals would win. In fact, the Liberals did win.

What would happen, for example, if we were to ban polls during only the last four weeks of an election campaign? The Ken Taylor Iran incident caused the Tories to think that this might be their salvation, that it might turn things around. Anyone working for the campaign in Toronto during that election who talked to a Conservative worker knows that this incident gave them a real shot in the arm, a real flow of adrenalin. They could hardly wait for the next poll to come out. They felt that somehow a twist or a change in their fortunes would be indicated as a result of the Iranian incident. I must say, however, that they were not responsible for the incident.

Are we to deny the Conservatives the hype or the adrenalin or the good morale that would result from an incident occuring toward the end of an election campaign? Are we to say that if something great happens during the first part of a campaign, the poll will reflect it and the effect may be felt by the electorate and they may go in that direction like lemmings, but that this must not happen in the last four weeks? If that were the case, the Conservatives probably would have asked Ken Taylor to get out of Iran two or three weeks earlier so that there would be time for the polls to reflect that upsurge in their fortunes. This is the ridiculous sort of thing this legislation could trigger.

A point raised by the Hon. Member for Athabasca was the way in which knowledge of the mood of the country would affect the decision of a voter. Somebody who may feel strongly about a majority Government might like to know if one of the two major Parties had a better chance to form a majority Government than the other. A voter may prefer one of the two major Parties, but actually feel strongly about minority Governments. If he thought the NDP had a chance of holding the balance of power, he would vote for that Party, but only if it would hold the balance of power. I do not see anything wrong with that. That is valid information that should not be denied the electorate.

If anything, in terms of knowledge of politics, elections and the issues, voters are becoming increasingly more sophisticated. I do not think we need to stuff up their ears so they cannot hear information they had a right to hear in the past in case somehow their minds would be tainted and they would go off and do something they would not otherwise do. Mr. Speaker, I believe that in a democratic country such as ours, that is not the kind of thing we must anticipate. As far as I am concerned, the polls can continue.

If a voter was very concerned about having a majority Government and wanted to know which Party had the best chance of forming a majority Government, he could do his own poll. However, the results would only be relevant in his own riding, and the trend in his riding might be going in the opposite direction from that in the rest of the country. In a country that is so spread out, almost 5,000 kilometers long, it is valid for a person in one part of the country to want to know how people in other parts of the country feel.

Our Party will take its chances on the impact that such information will have on the electorate. I do not think that there is a possibility that very many people will place their vote based on the mood of the rest of the country, causing everyone to react in the same way.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the people of Quebec often say that they will not behave like a bunch of sheep. I think that if the leader comes down from the mountain, there is no need for everybody to jump in the water.

[English]

The results of the last election, particularly from the area of the country west of Winnipeg, will indicate that. If there was a buffalo stampede in the West, it was not in the direction of the Liberals. It was in the opposite direction, notwithstanding the fact that the direction of the polls was well known.

Another interesting question that arises is the difference between the work of a political commentator, of a syndicated columnist, of a magazine writer and of a pollster. Let us assume a rough equivalence in terms of talent and sensitivity on the part of the three. Are we to say that a political commentator whose columns are carried in newspapers across the country cannot say that he has been talking to many people and finds it pretty clear that the mood of the country is that the Liberals will win this election or the Conservatives will win that election? People respect a columnist's judgment. People believe that if Lynch, Fisher or Fotheringham say something and they have gone up on the mountain and got it in tablets of stone, it must be true. However, one knows that what columnists say is not always true, but if that is the information the people are looking for, they will certainly believe Mr. Lynch or Mr. Fisher. The Conservatives usually believe Mr. Fisher. Are we to say to columnists that they cannot write columns like that in the last four weeks of an election campaign? The Bill does not purport to do that, but what is the difference? Both the columnists and the pollsters give an impression, albeit one is a personal reflection and the other is a scientific impression.

If people are so easily influenced by what authoritative people may say about the mood of the country, rather than read polls by Martin Goldfarb or Peter Regenstreif, they will simply read columns by Charles Lynch or Doug Fisher. We all know how authoritative they are. Their opinions may differ from time to time, but so do the opinions of the pollsters. Opinions are not always identical. That is another problem that can occur if you follow this route.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks by saying that in Quebec we believe in taking polls during the election campaign, and that the safeguard provided for the last day only is enough. We believe enough in the freedom of expression and in the judgment of the people of Quebec to allow them to hear the truth right up until the last minute.

[Translation]

The rules of the game and the way polls are taken lead us to believe quite simply that our fellow Canadians can make up their own minds on these issues. As a Member, Mr. Speaker, I very often consult reference books. Recently, in the course of my duties as a Member, I had an opportunity to read a document published by Jean-Pierre Hogue and entitled "L'héritage de Jacques Cartier". Mr. Hogue uses that book to know the values of—

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for York-Peel rises on a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the Hon. Member would accept a short question.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Would the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) entertain a question?

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member. She mentioned that it is good to have the people know the truth right up to election day. How can she tell that they are getting the truth when the poll that I referred to was obviously not the truth?

[Translation]

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member's question is of a philosophical nature because, in the context of scientific methodology—and that is what I wanted to tell my colleague when I mentioned the work of Mr. Hogue—truth in the end can always be subjective or objective. I am thinking of someone who takes an honest poll and makes the results public. There may be flaws in the way the people polled were selected, in the way the figures were collated, or the system may be distorted. I think that the value, the quality, the accuracy and the reliability of polls depend mainly on the reputation of the firms which take them, as well as on the qualities of the pollsters themselves. I consult the work of Mr. Hogue because I want to know how reliable the samples can be and which scientific methodology can be used. As a Member—generally speaking, for many years and even before my election to the House—I must say that not only polls are useful and important, but in my opinion they are essential to Canadians and people deserve to know the truth.

[English]

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to put a few words on the record with regard to this Bill which has been proposed by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). I believe, in view of the great number of people in the House, that Hon. Members opposite might be agreeable to allowing this debate to continue past its normal time until 6.10. Could I have the unanimous consent of the House to that so I will not be accused of talking out this Bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) is seeking unanimous consent to proceed beyond the ordinary time of adjournment, which is six o'clock, so as to complete the full hour or 60 minutes provided under the rules of debate. Is it agreed?

Mr. Collenette: If I understand, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member just wants to extend the period of time to the full hour, not beyond, is that right?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That is the general understanding, in which case the Chair should indicate the debate would end at ten minutes past six o'clock. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for its indulgence. I do want to put a few words on record and still allow at least a few minutes to anyone who might want to comment on this particular Bill.

I believe this Bill raises a crucial issue in terms of the whole election and/or referendum procedure because it seeks to divide public opinion on the matter of public property or private property. I listened very carefully to the arguments presented by the Hon. Member for York-Peel. I know there are two sides to the coin, and he has very adequately presented the one side. I would like to perhaps reiterate some of those aspects. In addition, I will illustrate some of the concerns which we in this Party have with regard to the other side of the coin.

One side of the coin follows the premise that a publication of a public opinion poll pertaining to a particular election would subsequently sway opinion. I believe the Hon. Member for York-Peel referred to it as the "bandwagon" effect. As a result, this would have some impact on the election outcome. The second premise which logically flows from this way of thinking is that such swaying of public opinion is manipulative and, of course, this manipulation is bad. Therefore, we have the conclusion drawn by the Hon. Member that there should be a ban on all public opinion polls of electors during an election, and he suggests for a period of 30 days.

On this particular side of the coin, I am prepared to concede that it can probably be ascertained from various studies that opinion polls do affect public opinion, political or otherwise.

I would like to look at the other side of the coin for a moment. What would happen if this Bill were implemented? This, of course, would not prohibit the use of private polling. That would mean that certain political Parties which have x number of dollars would still be able to commission private polls. They would be able to use the information during the 30-day period to their own advantage.

Much reference has been made to the Toronto area. Let me illustrate one scenario. Under this particular Bill, a poll might be conducted by the Conservative Party which might find out that perhaps the Liberal Party had made a few gains in the Toronto area. Therefore, based on its own private poll, it could innundate the Toronto area with good, solid, Conservative advertising. But would the public be any wiser?

If it were a public poll and all of a sudden we found that the Liberal Party had gained by a certain number of points in the Gallup poll and the Conservatives then innundated the Toronto area with their—I was going to say "propaganda", but let us say advertising, if it were public the discerning person in Toronto could say that is to be expected. This is what the Gallup poll says. And here we have an innundation of the Conservative advertising. So at least this public opinion, the opinion which had been solicited by the public, is at least at a present time still available for the public in general.

I believe that in this day and age more and more people are becoming aware of and alert to the parameters of public opinion polls and how they are conducted. They are, perhaps, a bit more aware of the shortcomings in the way in which these polls are conducted.

It has been mentioned that there is a ban in British Columbia and in certain other parts of the world. I suppose I should ask the question, what is the result of the ban which exists in British Columbia and in other parts of the world? The major political Parties still conduct their own private polls. In accordance with the law, the results are not published. The question I ask is, is the public any wiser in terms of their decisions and in terms of what might still be termed as manipulation on the part of the people who are involved?

In addition to that, I do have some questions about the charter of Rights and the whole question of freedom of the press and freedom of opinion, as mentioned by the previous speaker. Let me just mention some of these concerns. I would be a lot happier if the Liberals would agree, along with the Conservatives, to at least refer this subject matter to committee, because in this short time I cannot underline all of our concerns. If this subject matter were referred to committee we could perhaps bring in some evidence from British Columbia, take a look at the experience in Australia and consider other experience. We could take a look at both sides of the coin. In a short period of time such as we now have available that is certainly not possible.

The Hon. Member indicated the importance of having public information with regard to who does the polling, what are the parameters and what are the statistical methods being used. I noticed he referred to the whole question of random sampling. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that when we talk about random sampling, it is a statistical technique and method which has been scientifically derived. It is not as the English word would suggest, a "random picking". Those are some of the things which I certainly would like to have taken into consideration. If the Hon. Member had included that type of concern in his Bill, that there be public information available, then this, of course, would be something we could support.

I find it a bit humorous, that the Hon. Member, who speaks so frankly about private enterprise, should today be speaking against these private entrepreneurs who consider all this information private property. All he is really underlining for me is the fact that the whole discussion we have been having, even on the question of property rights, is a little bit broader than what we may have been led to believe.

As to the results of public polls and whether they actually influence an election, the previous speaker referred to the previous election, and that because the people knew there might be a Liberal majority, that did not affect the vote in the west. She underlined a very good point that we should take into consideration, that even the knowledge that the east had gone Liberal did not have an impact on the west. We are fairly independent thinkers out there.

I did want to underline some other concerns, Mr. Speaker. I wish there could have been unanimous consent to have this referred to committee because I would love to see this studied a bit further. I would like to see the Hon. Member come before the committee as a witness to expound a little bit more on this issue. I hope he will not let the issue die.

I know the Commissioner of Official Languages will be bringing forward some recommendations with regard to the Official Languages Act. I hope the Hon. Member, knowing as he does that this Bill will be talked out by the Government, will at least make it a point to send off a representative to the commissioner expressing his concerns. In that way it would be on the public record as something the Commissioner of Official Languages will have to consider, and something which could be brought in for discussion in committee, perhaps as a result of a report and recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer. I trust the Hon. Member for York-Peel will take my advice and write to the Commissioner so that this is on the public record. Perhaps in that way it might get the airing it deserves in the days ahead.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to share some of these concerns.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make two or three comments on this particular Bill. It is one of a series brought down by thoughtful Members. You will notice the date on it, May 2, 1980.

There were a number of measures which occurred to me and other thoughtful Members following the election, amendments we felt ought to be made to election procedures. I brought one forward last week in relation to mobile ballot boxes, and I have a number of others. Polling is the matter facing us today.

Permanent electoral polls might have been mentioned. These matters should be brought forward while we are all deeply conscious of the things which come to mind during an election. We cannot discount this subtle influence on voters' minds. The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) mentioned the ban on the publication of results from the east prior to the closing of polls in the west. That matter is being considered by the committee concerned. There is the very obvious reason for that, because of the influence of the results from the east in the west. Such results can influence favourably or negatively, or they can suggest to people that there is no damn use going out to the polls anyway, so they might as well stay home. That is not good. People should not be influenced in that way. They should be free to express themselves on the candidates and the issues. There is sometimes a desire to get on the bandwagon or defy the bandwagon or, as I say, stay home.

Those people who have spoken so far, particularly on the other side, forget certain things because they live in the centre of this country. They forget that there is a four and one half hour time difference from one side of the country to the other. The results in Newfoundland are known one and one half hours before they are known here. The results in the great metropolitan areas of Ontario and Quebec are known three hours before we close our ballots out on the West Coast.

For the same reason that there should be a ban on the publication of those results, and there is except that they come through via the United States, there should be a ban on influencing voters by means of polls during those last few days. I am not sure whether it should be for 28 days, but on the day an election is called there should be no polls. Individual parties can poll for their own purposes, and that is fine, but they should keep the results to themselves. They know where their soft spots are and what are their issues. They should use the results for their own purposes, not for public purposes.

I fully agree that the Bill should at least go to committee and be considered there.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I do welcome this opportunity to participate in the debate. I tell Hon. Members quite frankly that I would have been prepared to see the subject matter referred to a committee—

Mr. Stevens: Let's do it.

Mr. Cullen: —if we had been speaking of Gallup Polls, because I think there is a good deal of unsettled feeling on both sides of the House about the manner in which polls are conducted.

The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) specifically referred to the manner in which a poll is conducted and the people who are contacted. He mentioned that if there is a heavy vote turnout, that may throw the poll totally out of whack. The fact is that people who do the polling have a whole series of escape valves available to them. They print it, write about it and discuss it as though it were written or holy rote. In effect they have about eight, nine or ten opportunities to say that if there had been the expected turnout the votes would have gone such and such a way. They might say that no one could have anticipated that there would be such a heavy swell against the leader, or for a leader or whatever the situation might be.

The Hon. Member for York-Peel highlighted some of the great deficiencies in the conducting of polls. He mention professional as opposed to amateurs. I sometimes feel that the amateurs probably do as good a job, if not better, than the professionals because they have a sincere interest in finding answers. One sometimes wonder, when seeing the questions asked in some of these polls across the country from time to time, if the pollster had not already made up his or her mind as to what he or she wanted people to say. By phrasing the question in a particular way, giving it a certain nuance, it is very easy to—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Okay, let's go to committee, then.

Mr. Cullen: —receive an overwhelming result one way or the other. On the subject of poll-taking, perhaps there should be more professionalism or disclosure, as to how the results are interpreted.

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cullen: However, I do not see the banning—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for York-Peel is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Hon. Member has no doubt in his mind. I am perfectly prepared to have the present Bill withdrawn. Let us refer the subject matter to the appropriate committee.

Mr. Cullen: It is the typical position taken by the experienced Hon. Member of the House of Commons, to rise at the very last minute and throw something else in for consideration. I thought he sincerely, genuinely wanted to have a ban on the publication of the results of polls prior to an election. Now we have a complete reversal of his position—

Mr. Stevens: No.

Mr. Cullen: —a complete abandoning of his position, and he will try something else.

Mr. Stevens: All you're doing is talking it out.

Mr. Cullen: Is that what we have been debating here? I am opposed to the banning of polls.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Let us take it to committee and we will vote on it.

Mr. Cullen: It connotes a lack of respect for the intelligence of the Canadian citizen who votes at election time, so I could not support the Bill on that particular basis.

Mr. Stevens: Let's refer it to a committee.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in beginning my comments on Bill C-151, I would like to draw to the attention of Hon. Members the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on October 27, 1982 when as the Minister of Finance he presented his comments on an economic plan in Parliament. I quote from his comments:

I have also made it clear by the estimates I have presented that further borrowing authority will be required before the end of this fiscal year. In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-84 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

The Minister of Finance in his speech on supplementary borrowing authority of February 17, 1983 made reference as well to his intention to seek authority as is sought in Bill C-151 by these words:

I intend to introduce a Bill covering all of the borrowing authority needed for fiscal year 1983-84 after providing Parliament with the necessary information in my budget.

During debate on borrowing authority at the time the Minister made that speech, Members opposite insisted that they were not seeking to interfere with Government operations and they were not necessarily challenging the valuable social assistance programs that are supported by this borrowing authority. It was argued that they were willing to deal with borrowing authority if only they had adequate financial information. For example, on February 17, 1983 the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) stated that her Party:

—would be much more willing to debate and pass this Bill if we knew what the money was needed for—

The Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who is in the House today, also indicated, both in Committee and in the House of Commons, that he would be willing to pass the legislation quickly if the Minister would give him a reasonable explanation of the economic position of the country with respect to the current fiscal year. He said that in the House on March 22 of this year.

The budget has been presented, Mr. Speaker. It does contain current and fiscal year projections. The budget contains the Government's economic forecast and its assumptions about the country's likely economic performance. We have, in effect, laid our cards on the table and provided the information which is the basis for the borrowing authority sought in Bill C-151. As Members opposite have indicated, they may quarrel with any or all aspects of the budget or its background information, but certainly they cannot argue that we have not presented, as comprehensively as we are able to, the basis for the request for speedy consideration of the Bill before the House, Mr. Speaker.

The Financial Administration Act stipulates that, except when Section 39 is used, statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament in order for the Government to increase its debt and to have additional authority for borrowing. Under Part IV Section 36 of the Act is the legislative basis for the request before us today. It reads:

No money shall be borrowed or security issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty without the authority of Parliament.

This refers to new money only, as under Section 38 of the Act there is a continuing authority to borrow funds to repay maturing debts. Consequently, in order for the Government to borrow money to meet its financial requirements, statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament. Section 39 does provide for the Governor in Council to authorize the borrowing of money when it appears that funds will not be sufficient to meet disbursements from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This legislation is designed for short-term loans under limited terms to maturity not exceeding six months.

I have indicated the legislative basis of the legislation for which approval is sought today. I have indicated that the material which is the financial basis and foundation of that legislation is before us. We are now seeking speedy consideration of this legislation by the Opposition.

In so far as the budget is concerned, Hon. Members will know that it contains a large number of new initiatives to support and encourage economic recovery, to create jobs and to position the economy to take full advantage of the economic expansion phase that is developing in the world economies and reflected in the Canadian economy.

The $4.8 billion program of private investment incentives and public spending is the main centrepiece of the budget strategy. We believe it will lead to the creation of good, rewarding jobs for Canadians right across Canada and that it will improve the economic basis on which our growth potential depends so much. Plans for federal capital projects worth half of that amount, that is $2.4 billion, are being finalized. As Hon. Members know, they will be put on a fast track in order to ensure that their contribution to the economic recovery comes quickly, within weeks.

Additional tax incentives through the business sector comprise the balance of the $2.4 billion, and this provision has received almost unanimously favourable comment across the country in the days since the budget. We believe this centrepiece, the $2.4 billion of accelerated and new funding, will contribute greatly to economic recovery.

The Special Recovery Program will go some distance in stimulating job creation in Canada, not only immediately under the capital works projects that we have set for the months and years ahead, but as well by virtue of the building blocks that the tax incentives, which are permanent changes to the Income Tax Act, will achieve.

The Government is doing more toward this end of creating jobs. The housing sector will benefit, and benefit greatly, from the measures in the budget and construction-related employment will continue to expand rapidly. The specific measures which will provide stimulus in this sector include modifications to the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, extension of the Canada Home Ownership Stimulation Plan and the Canadian Home Renovation Plan, as well as additional allocations for the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Plan, for both Indian and social housing.

Furthermore, the Government is providing major additional support to employment through direct job creation measures. More funds have been allocated for the New Employment Expansion and Development Plan for local employment initiatives and for special youth job creation programs of several kinds, including the Summer Canada Program, Katimavik, the new defence Extended Youth Training and Employment Program and youth wage subsidy and internship programs. All of these allocations in the budget to which I have referred bring the total federal amount to be spent on direct job creation in 1983-84 to $1.5 billion, a figure which is impressive both on its own and in comparison to previous spending of the Government.

On the other hand, as indicated in the budget revenue growth is likely to remain relatively weak this year and the budgetary deficit is expected to be $31.3 billion. The net source of funds provided by non-budgetary transactions is projected to be somewhat larger for 1983-84 than it was in 1982-83, due in large part to the increase in Unemployment Insurance premiums that took effect on January 1, 1983. Thus estimated financial requirements, excluding foreign exchange transactions, are forecast to be $26.6 billion this fiscal year.

Passage of the present borrowing authority Bill, Bill C-151, of which we are speaking today, will ensure the Government is in a position to implement the important measures in the budget and to meet the projected requirements for funds as identified in that plan for economic recovery.

The request for borrowing authority in 1983-84 is based on the financial requirements that I have mentioned, plus a reserve for contingencies. As we already have $14 billion in borrowing authority for the current fiscal year, we are seeking an additional $12.7 billion, to provide us with a total of $26.7 billion borrowing authority for the current year, an amount equivalent to the financial requirements, plus an amount for contingencies.

For purposes of clarity, Mr. Speaker, I would for the benefit of Hon. Members like to set out the history of the borrowing authority numbers in more detail. Part II of Bill C-143 passed last March provided interim borrowing authority of $14 billion for 1983-84. In addition, Part I of Bill C-143 conferred $5 billion of borrowing authority on the Government for use in the years 1982-83, of which an unused amount in excess of $2 billion was to expire on March 31, 1983. As it turned out—and I will provide the House with details later on—there was $2 billion of unused authority available to be carried forward into 1983-84.

Clause 2(1) of the Bill currently before the House seeks additional borrowing authority for fiscal 1983-84 of $14.7 billion. Clause 2(2) of Bill C-151 provides that any unused portion of this amount, to the extent that it exceeds $2 billion, will be cancelled on March 31, 1984. Thus passage of the current Bill, along with the borrowing authority provided in Bill C-143, will provide a total of $26.7 billion in new borrowing authority for 1983-84, plus a non-lapsing contigency of $4 billion.

There are two fundamental reasons, Mr. Speaker, for the non-lapsing contingency. They were the reasons, Mr. Speaker, which had prompted Parliament to put such a contingency in borrowing authorities previously, and they were borrowing authorities not only of this Government, but under the régime of Hon. Members opposite when they formed the Government as well. First, there is a need to have an amount in place to accommodate exchange market pressures and the effect they have on the level of official exchange reserves. Second, it is to enable the Government to continue with its regular debt program when the House is not in session.

In the foreign exchange market, when the Canadian dollar is firm the exchange fund account accumulates American dollars, and in order to finance this increase in official reserves, Canadian dollars must either be taken from cash balances or borrowed and charged against the borrowing authority.

On the other hand, when the dollar is weak the U.S. dollar reserves fall and these balances must be supplemented by drawing on the two standby credit facilities which the Government has with both the Canadian and international banks, or by other types of foreign borrowings. Any of these borrowings must be charged against the borrowing authority. This has been the practice of the Government for many years. It was the practice, as I said, which was carried on by Hon. Members opposite when they formed the Government.

Events which took place in May and June, 1982 are probably the best example to illustrate the type of situation which I have called upon just now. In that period the dollar was under pressure and nearly $3.5 billion of borrowing authority was used for foreign borrowing. And for all of 1982-83 foreign exchange operations added $1.5 billion to the financial requirements.

It is in case of any such repeated circumstances, Mr. Speaker, that we have asked for the contingency. As I say, such contingency has been granted by Parliament on all previous requests made heretofore. The request for a non-lapsing contingency amount, therefore, is not new.

I would like to turn, Mr. Speaker, to an explanation of how the borrowing authority situation stood at the end of 1982-83. Including the $5 billion borrowing authority provided by Bill C-143, the total amount of authority granted for 1982-83 was about $26.1 billion. Approximately $23.1 billion of this amount was used; $9.7 billion through the issue of Treasury bills, $4.9 billion through the issue of bonds, and $7.6 billion net Canada Saving Bonds sales. Foreign borrowing added a further $.9 billion to the use of borrowing authority. The foreign borrowing represented U.S. $750 million borrowed in the Eurobond market last June, and a partial redemption of Deutschemark maturity early last year. Thus there was approximately $3 billion unused of which $2 billion, as I indicated, was carried forward, and about $1 billion was cancelled on March 31, 1983.

I mentioned at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act can be used in special circumstances. I would like to make reference to the actual amount of Treasury bills that were used by the Government under Section 39. Hon. Members will recall that in mid-February virtually all of the borrowing authority authorized for 1982-83 had been used. By early March it became apparent that Bill C-143 would not be passed for several weeks. In fact, we know that Royal Assent was not received until March 30.

Projected financial requirements over the March to June period were extremely large, and in order to continue with a regular debt program that would satisfy these requirements it was decided to make use of the temporary powers granted by Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act. Permission was sought from Cabinet to use Section 39 to authorize a total of $2.3 billion of net new Treasury bill issues over the March 11-31 period. However, due to Canada Savings Bond redemptions occurring during that period which had the effect of increasing the authority, and since new authority was conferred in time to authorize the March 31 issue of Treasury bills, total usage of Section 39 amounted to approximately $1.4 billion. This amount was in any event charged to the new authority under Bill C-143.

I would like to refer to the final clause in Bill C-151, Mr. Speaker, which has recently been a standard clause. Clause 2.3 refers to the ability of the Government to borrow and repay loans in foreign currency and has been included in the last six Borrowing Authority Acts. Over the years Canada has borrowed and repaid funds in a number of currencies. In recent years, however, this Clause has been added to confirm Canada's right to borrow in foreign currencies.

Bill C-96, which received first reading in the House in March, 1982, proposes a number of amendments to the Financial Administration Act, including a general amendment clarifying the Government's ability to borrow and repay in foreign currencies. Once this amendment has been passed, there will no longer be any need to have the specific request included in the borrowing legislation, such as Bill C-151 before the House today.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I began my comments by pointing out that the Minister of Finance had, in the fall of last year, in his first official statement to the House as Minister of Finance, indicated his intention to seek the authority we are today asking for. He again made reference to his intention to seek the authority once a fiscal and economic plan had been placed before Parliament and we have concluded debate on that budget. The vote recently concluded the initial debate on that exercise.

In the request of the Government for interim borrowing authority, we took the opportunity to remind Hon. Members that the last occasion prior to today when borrowing authority was requested was for borrowing authority pending the production of the budget and the financial material in the budget, although the Estimates had themselves been presented earlier. Therefore, today Bill C-151 is a follow-through of the Minister's intention signalled in October of last year to seek the support of Hon. Members to provide the wherewithal to carry out the economic program which is so important to this country at this time, especially those features of the Government's plan identified in the budget as the Special Recovery Program, at the same time maintaining the Government's support of its social net and safety provisions which have been and are so important to Canadians less fortunate than others who have, for example, needed the support of the Unemployment Insurance Fund. The request today is to continue the Government's new initiative in its economic plan and to continue its social commitment to Canadians who need that kind of support at this time.

The legislation, I understand, would go to committee for detailed examination. Hopefully, the consideration at second reading, the deliberation by committee, the return to the House and the proceeding with the legislation to ensure support for economic recovery, which has been well received by Canadians right across this country, would continue in a manner which illustrates the commitment of Parliament toward supporting the recovery which is very apparent.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question. In his remarks he referred to the fiscal requirement as being $26.6 billion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The ten-minute period for questions, answers and comments applies to speeches which themselves are 20 minutes. The first three Hon. Members speaking on the Bill have access to a total of 40 minutes if they so wish.

Mr. Cullen: Unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The rule providing the ten-minute period for questions does not apply. However, I did hear the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) note that if the House wished to give its unanimous consent to an exchange of questions and answers, that could be easily done. Is there uanimous consent to an exchange of questions and answers?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, my point was that in his remarks the Minister mentioned that his fiscal requirement amounted to $26.6 billion. The budget papers state $26.7 billion. I would like to ask the Minister to clarify which is the correct figure.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I cannot, except to say that I suspect that was possibly—

Mr. Blenkarn: That was part of the photo session.

Mr. Cosgrove: —a result of the amendments, the addendum which was filed by the Minister of Finance after his speech on the budget. However, I did agree and give unanimous consent to answer questions at this time. It is my hope that these questions in exchange may possibly speed the method by which we can solve some of these technical problems. I would certainly have that information available for the Hon. Member. I would conceivably shorten the time in which the legislation would be required in committee as well. Therefore I can undertake to give the specifics in so far as that discrepancy is concerned. I believe it relates to the additional $200 million added to the Special Recovery Fund for the Capital Works Projects.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, in opening debate on Bill C-151—

Mr. Blenkarn: May I ask a question? I rise on a point of order. I was about to ask a question, if the Minister would permit me. Your Honour is open to debate; is that correct?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair recognized the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre for a further question, and if the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) also wants to ask a question—

Mr. Blenkarn: I would like to ask a question, Mr. Speaker, if I could, yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): —there will be time to do so. I have already recognized the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre, unless the one Hon. Member wishes to give way to the other.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to give way to my colleague, and then I would like to make my speech.

Mr. Blenkarn: I simply want clarification from the Minister. He started off this year, or March 31, I gather, with $2 billion left in non-lapsing borrowing authority from Bill C-143 and $14 billion in borrowing authority for the current fiscal year available, for a total of $16 billion. He has now asked for $14.7 billion, totalling $30.7 billion. Is it the Minister's view that he really needs, as a contingency, $4 billion extra in non-lapsing borrowing authority just to be able to manage the Government?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have indicated that the practice of the Government in preceding requests for borrowing authority in Bills has always been to ask for non-lapsing contingencies. It is the Government's best estimate that a prudent amount to be held for contingencies would be the additional $4 billion.

We requested that for two reasons which I made evident. The first is the need to protect the Government's flexibility in foreign exchange markets. I gave an example as to how the Government had to intervene last year to the extent of $1.9 billion in a rapidly fluctuating foreign exchange period. The Government has no assurance, but that situation might occur or might not occur again. The point is that the Government needs that flexibility to protect the orderly movement of the Canadian dollar.

Second, the Government is requesting the contingency because it does not want to be in the position in which it found itself in having to rely on Section 39, an extraordinary measure to which the Government had to resort for the first time this year. In order not to be put into that position, the Government has requested the $4 billion. We are motivated in requesting the $4 billion because it is our feeling that when we had to rely on Section 39, it did conceivably have some impact on the markets and on interest rates in Canada. When interest rates rose, we felt that could have reflected the tardiness involving the last interim borrowing authority process in the House. Therefore, it is our best guess that the $4 billion is a prudent request for contingency.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Debate?

Mr. Blenkarn: I would like to ask one more question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Mississauga South may ask a further question.

Mr. Blenkarn: I was wondering if the Minister could advise why, in Bill C-143, the $2 billion carried over in the Bill never lapses; it carries on forever. In Bill C-151, the $2 billion carries on forever. Particularly when the evidence of the Minister of Finance before the Finance Committee was that $2 billion was more than enough for a contingency allowance, why is it all of a sudden necessary to have $4 billion in contingency carryover money?

Mr. Cosgrove: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I think that is really a repetition of the last question. In considering the first question asked, I realized that the forecasts were $26.7 billion. Mine was a reading mistake. The notes indicate $26.7 billion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Debate.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that clarification. In opening debate on Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, I want to stress that this Government is either callous or careless. It is callous because it is asking Parliament to approve a Bill for $4 billion more than it needs according to its own fiscal requirements as set out in the budget. It is callous because that padded borrowing must be added to the increasing debt which must be paid for, in the final analysis, by our children.

It is careless because padding the deficit by that amount of money, $4 billion, indicates that the Government is indeed acknowledging that its sloppy and slipshod financial projections are continually changing. It is also careless because it is all too clear that by padding the borrowing Bill and padding the deficit forecast, the Government is providing itself with an election slush fund to be borrowed and spent before Canadian voters turf the Liberals out.

This Government has come before Parliament seven times this session to ask it for more borrowing authority. In the fiscal year 1982-83 alone, the Government came hat in hand to Parliament for authority to borrow more money on four separate occasions. Just a few weeks ago we approved the largest borrowing Bill in our parliamentary history, Bill C-143.

The Government still has $16 billion of that borrowing authority left. Since its financial projections as stated in the budget and confirmed by the Minister are for $26.7 billion in the current fiscal year, it requires only $10.7 billion for the balance of the year. Further, the Minister himself has told us that the Government requires $2 billion in cash balances. Yet as of this week he has almost $6 billion-plus on hand. In fact, when one subtracts the surplus $3 billion cash in hand from his financial requirements, the Government requires only $7.7 billion in additional borrowing authority to meet the fiscal proposals set out in the April budget.

We have already seen how a careless Finance Minister can add $200 million worth of debt to cover up his inadvertent budget leak. We now see how the same Minister can pad billions of dollars to the borrowing authority and to the public debt.

Further, by returning to Parliament so soon after his last borrowing Bill, the Minister is showing his contempt for Parliament. He wants this Bill approved now so that he can avoid parliamentary scrutiny of his spending plans for the balance of the fiscal year which will end close to an election. He wants to spend his borrowed funds without the inconvenience of explaining to Parliament and the country how he means to use them. He will use these borrowed funds to establish his election goody bag. That is a shameless abuse of the institution of Parliament and it is one reason why we oppose this Bill.

The Government must be accountable to Parliament and Parliament must be accountable to the people. The Government cannot account for the billions of dollars requested in this Bill which is surplus to its cash reserves, its existing borrowing powers and its spending plans as set out in the budget.

We must remember that this is the same Government that took four runs at estimating last year's deficit, tripling it in the process, before giving up and saying that it would come in "somewhere" between its third and fourth estimates. Who suffers? Not just Parliament or Canadians who are required to foot this Bill and who will be paying an additional $5.7 billion in tax increases over the next four years. The real victims of this Government's dishonest approach will be our youth, who will be paying for years to come. That will be their legacy from the Liberal Party.

Who are the winners and who will benefit, at least in the short term, from this Liberal largesse? The Government has a long history of paying off its supporters and rewarding its friends. The Government will pour as much of our money as it can into Liberal ridings before the next election in order to stem the Tory tidal wave. If last year was the year of the dog according to my Chinese friends, this year will be the year of the pork barrel. Let me give the House a few examples.

The centrepiece of the Special Recovery Program announced in the budget is the $2.2. billion capital projects fund. Control of this pork barrel will be in the hands of a special Cabinet committee. The same people who brought us Canadair, Consolidated Computer, Coalgate and the National Energy Program now have a lot more mad money.

Even though they are the cornerstone of the Government's job creation effort, the projects announced so far have contained few job estimates. Numbers that have been provided have proved to be inflated and grossly misleading. For example, the Government announced that it will be spending $147 million to purchase 20 Canadair CL-215 water bombers in order to develop a national firefighting fleet. In the original announcement, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said that 650 jobs per year would be created through this measure. In fact, the Government is committed to purchasing only four of these water bombers and has bought two of them for the Yukon where the fire season starts before the ice is out of the lake. That is another example of forward planning and fast tracking. The other 16 will be bought only if the Provinces agree to buy a matching 16 planes. Since the Provinces have never been eager to foot the extremely high cost of this plane, the purchase of all 36 planes is far from assured. Some Provinces have indicated that they are not interested since their terrain is not suited to this particular aircraft.

Even if orders are placed for the full complement of planes, Canadair has told us that the Government's job estimates are grossly inflated. In fact, no jobs would be generated this year at all. Canadair is actually laying off people this summer. By January, 1984, if all the planes go ahead, 155 jobs may be created. By May, 1984, assuming all of the planes go ahead, 300 jobs may be created. By December, 1984 that number will rise to 525 jobs, and it will not be until the peak of production in June, 1985 that there will be the 650 jobs associated with this project as suggested by the Minister.

Similarly, the Government announced it would be spending an additional $185 million on the coastguard and generate 20,000 jobs in the process. This job figure has turned out to be grossly exaggerated. A much more realistic estimate is that approximately 2,000 jobs may result some time in the future.

While little effort has been made to provide accurate job forecasts for these projects, elaborate attention has been paid to staging the announcement to garner maximum attention. Despite the program's claim that it will provide immediate economic and employment opportunities throughout Canada, it is clear that its major goal is maximum political development for the Liberal Party rather than maximum economic development for Canadians.

Similarly, the Minister responsible for regional and economic expansion announced a restructuring of the programs in his Department last week. The intention of the new Industrial and Regional Development Program he said, is to distribute federal financing assistance more effectively than before. I would be most interested in the Minister's definition of "effective", but I can guess that he means he has devised a better way to channel money into Liberal ridings. The Minister calls it targeting.

In deciding what region will receive federal money, the country is divided into its 260 census districts. A formula called a development index will be applied in order to determine the level of assistance. The index will be based on three factors: the rate of unemployment in the census district; the level of income per person in the district; and the fiscal capacity of the Province in which the district is located. That means the ability of that Province to raise money.

At first glance it all looks very objective. It does not take much analysis, however, to uncover some real difficulties with this approach. For example, the same size for determining the unemployment rate in each district, if it is based on the labour force statistics, will be too small to be reliable. Even if this measurement were accurate, it would not take account of overall employment. In other words, it would not consider how many people have dropped out of the labour force. The data will therefore be skewed away from areas with high seasonal unemployment which are just the areas that can benefit the most from programs such as these.

A more accurate measure of unemployment might take account of the number of people registered at Manpower or collecting Unemployment Insurance Benefits. Furthermore, the index will draw on data dating back to 1976 in order to focus on areas with historical levels of high unemployment and low income. Unfortunately, this does not permit a quick response to changing circumstances. It will work against my own Province of British Columbia, for example, which has been very hard hit by the recent recession. By factoring in the fiscal capacity of Provinces, the program will discriminate against hard-hit areas of relatively well off Provinces, such as Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario. Theoretically, every riding would qualify for some federal money. In this way the Government may find it a lot easier to inject money into favoured ridings which would not have qualified under the earlier programs designed to alleviate regional disparity.

The Minister has not said precisely how the formula will work, but the Government's past track record, for example with ILAP and the Canadian Community Development Program, suggests it will be jigged to work in favour of Liberal ridings. We in the Opposition want to know if the formula will be legislated or whether it will be left to ministerial discretion. We can only hope that it will operate at least a little more objectively than the Special Employment Incentives Program which has just received an infusion of $150 million over two years in the recent budget. This money is to be spent on the following:

> Localized, employment intensive projects under existing Government construction and other programs.

So far we have had Liberal Senators, such as Senator Olson and Senator Argue, announcing funding for swimming pools and community arenas. But there is no formal application process for this money, so we cannot tell on what basis these successful projects were selected. It certainly is a "special" employment initiatives program. We do not know what criteria these projects must meet to qualify. We do not know how many jobs they will generate. We do not know how many go to which Provinces, and we do not know what the cost per person-year of employment is for each job created. But we know who announces them—Liberal Senators.

What is important are the economic consequences of the Government's actions. We have just been through the worst recession in 50 years, a recession that has inflicted hardship on millions of Canadians. The Government says that its policies are designed to ensure recovery takes place and that it lasts. Sadly, its policies are liable to have the opposite effect.

The result of this Government's actions may be to choke off recovery just as it gets started. As we pointed out in our official response to the budget, the Government is making no attempt to restrain spending even though its expenditures jumped by 17 per cent last year. It is true that the Government promises to keep its spending in line with increases in GNP, but this means that the Government's share of the economy, which increased during the recession, will not decrease with recovery.

The Minister of Finance claims that there was nothing of substance in the official response to the budget. I would like to review exactly what I said because my comments are now being echoed by many other analysts. I pointed out that the Minister is making no attempt to restrain spending. Indeed, he plans to increase expenditures to help pay for his recovery program. I outlined the impact on social programs which are threatened by the runaway spending. Unless we can balance the books, there will be no money to pay for the social programs upon which Canadians depend. I also pointed out the divergence between the Government's fiscal and monetary policies. Sustained recovery will depend upon lower interest rates, but the increasing deficit threatens to crowd out the private sector incentives the budget is supposed to encourage as recovery takes hold. We cannot prevent interest rates from rising again in light of the Minister's deficit projection; the result will be a choking off of the recovery just as it gathers steam.

I also reviewed the budget's effects on various sectors of the economy. For example, I pointed out that it is not as favourable to business as it may at first appear. Certainly small business does not stand to gain very much, and that is a pity since approximately 32 per cent of new jobs in the country are created by that sector. Unfortunately, many small businesses were so weakened by the recession that they will not be able to take advantage of the investment incentives announced in the budget. Those incentives are not particularly useful to small businesses anyway; large businesses are more apt to use them. Of more use to small businesses would have been the adoption of the small business corporation which would have allowed them to increase their equity and improve their cash flow. This would have relieved the cash flow problems by allowing small businesses to take in partners who could write off losses against their income.

All businesses will be hurt by the tremendous tax increases which will be levied on consumers over the next four years. In fact, taxes will be increased by $5.7 billion by 1986. Increased spending by consumers is the principal need of small business. Unfortunately, consumption is liable to be reduced by the budget measures.

I reviewed many of the tax increases, including the elimination of the $100 standard deduction, the restructuring of the federal tax credit, the freezing of the children's exemption, the maintenance of the Canadian ownership charge, and the increase in the manufacturers' sales tax. The impact of many of these taxes will be regressive. Low and middle income Canadians will be the hardest hit.

We made all these points on the day after the budget was presented in the House. Now others are beginning to realize what the real impact of the budget will be. Thomas Maxwell, the Chief Economist of the Conference Board, has warned that the recovery is likely to stall by the end of next year. In a recent interview he said:

> Essentially what we see is enough momentum generated to keep us growing into 1984. The question is what happens towards the end of 1984 and into 1985. That I think is where our forecast and Lalonde's forecast start to part company. Because in our forecast, the economy sort of comes to a screeching halt in 1985 and 1986 as the very high interest rates combined with the tax increases associated with the later years of the budget start to put a constraint on growth.

Roger Keane of Midland Doherty said:

> It is a mistake to view this as a pro-business budget; what it really has is all the attributes of a budget in which new public expenditures are brought down off the shelf.

I noticed today that Thomas D'Aquino who speaks for a group of businessmen is echoing our concern that business is being set up as the fall-guy in the budget, if they are unable to respond to the tax incentives it will provide the Government with a chance to intervene in the economy again.

I understand why people welcome the budget of the Minister of Finance compared with the three previous Liberal budgets. But this borrowing Bill only underlines the points I have been making about the economic mismanagement we have endured and will continue to endure under the Liberal Government.

Let us put this Bill into context. Over the past 15 years Government spending has ballooned by nearly 700 per cent. Just since the Liberal re-election in 1980, spending has increased 84 per cent on a national accounts basis. Government spending is now equal to 26 per cent of Canada's Gross National Product.

The Government argues that it must keep up its level of spending in order to combat the problem of unemployment in the country. But if one looks at historic levels of Government spending and their impact upon unemployment, it is clear that simply throwing more money at the problem solves nothing. For example, in 1970-71 the deficit stood at about $370 million and the unemployment rate ran at 5.7 per cent. In 1975-76 the deficit was $5.4 billion and the unemployment rate was close to 7 per cent. Today, with a projected deficit of over $31 billion, the unemployment rate tops 12 per cent. If we look at the projections of $25 billion per year budget deficits and unemployment rates of well over 10 per cent, we can see that running deficits does not help create employment and that there seems to be a distinct linkage between the size of the deficit and the increase in the unemployment rate. It is clear that this approach has not worked in the past and will not work in the future.

What do we need? We need to hold the Government accountable. The Government must explain its need for these additional funds. For it to be accountable, it must regain control of its expenditures. The Government cannot be permitted to inflate its borrowing authority in order to avoid returning to Parliament to explain how the money will be spent. We must oppose this Bill because it allows the Government to borrow far more money than it needs. The country cannot afford fiscal cushions for incompetent economic managers or election slush funds for desperate Liberals. We must keep in mind who will be paying the bill for this legislation.

At I said at the outset, it will be our children and grandchildren who will be saddled with the burden of excessive taxation unless we do something now. Unless we rein in Government expenditures, we will never as a nation achieve the level of prosperity we once enjoyed, nor will we have the capacity to adapt to the economic challenges of the 1980s. As I said, we may not even be able to afford the social programs to protect those who need it most. We will not be able to exploit our natural advantages in order to compete successfully in world markets. Our children will never enjoy the standard of living we have had. It is a grim outlook for the future—that is the real Liberal legacy.

It need not be this way. As our Party has stated, Canadians have the best chance right now to capitalize on our advantages, to be productive and competitive. The effects of the recession have been wrenching. However, those who survived are leaner, more efficient, more realistic. Excess capacity has been wrung out of the system. Faced with shrinking domestic markets, we have begun to look outward to promote our products in world markets to a greater extent. Many firms have reduced their oppressive debt loads and are ready to produce and be innovative again. Workers who have lost their jobs are beginning to think of retraining for new positions or starting their own businesses.

If we are to guarantee a recovery, we must be alert to new possibilities, aware of past mistakes and eager to adjust to changing circumstances. We must identify areas for improvement. For example, a survey conducted by the European Management Forum ranks 22 countries according to a range of factors, such as their productivity, industrial efficiency and human resources. It outlines Canada's advantages. We rank third in human resources, second with our natural resources and infrastructure, seventh in economic dynamism and sixth in competitiveness.

The survey also identifies an array of weaknesses. We are thirteenth in industrial efficiency; seventeenth in outward orientation or the will and ability to promote trade; sixteenth out of 22 in innovative forward orientation, which is the commitment to research and development and human resource development. We are in last place in employee productivity trends; and last again in export flexibility. Over-all we rank sixth. We should rank higher.

We must start working on these problems. We must improve our productivity and our competitiveness. We can no longer rely on our natural resource exports to ensure our prosperity and position in the world. We can no longer indulge in regional factionalism. We must use our regional diversity as a strength. We must develop an economic strategy that emphasizes the assets of each region, such as Canada's place on the Pacific Rim, and co-ordinate the actions of each level of Government to achieve this aim. We must address the problems of various economic sectors in the economy, such as energy and fisheries which have been ignored or abused by this Government. We must work to improve our management-labour relations.

These are just a few of the positive steps we should be taking. To ensure recovery, we must increase our markets. To increase our markets, we must increase consumer demand. We can achieve increased demand by putting people back to work. To put people back to work, we must increase our export markets. To do that, we must be more competitive. To become more competitive, we must become more productive. To become more productive, we must expand our technological research and more aggressively apply it to industrial production.

To take these actions, we must change our attitudes and patterns of behaviour. It is an exciting challenge for us. A Government that demonstrates it is tackling these problems with determination, tenacity, co-operation and leadership will inspire confidence. That is what Canadians are looking for. That is what Conservatives can provide. That is why we will be proposing two amendments to this Bill at the appropriate time.

We believe the Government must account for all the money that is borrowed in its name. That is why we will be seeking to amend this Bill to include the financial requirements of Crown corporations. We believe the Government should seek authority to borrow only as much money as it needs. That is why we will be proposing an amendment to reduce the borrowing authority granted to half the amount that is currently being requested. We want to hold this Government to account. It must begin to control its expenditures. This Bill is a good place to start.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today asks for an additional $14.7 billion in borrowing authority. The Minister kindly explained to the House that $4 billion will be for a contingency fund. As the House knows, this is in addition to the contingency fund and borrowing authority granted to the Government in February when Bill C-143 was introduced and eventually passed through this House. That Bill authorized the Government to borrow an additional $19 billion. A short two months later, we are being asked to grant authority to borrow an additional $14.7 billion.

There will be a great many questions the Government will have to answer. As I said, the Minister did explain the proposed use of $4 billion in contingency funds. He said in part it was to meet runs on the Canadian dollar. He referred to the occasion in the last couple of years when the Government found itself spending $9.1 billion in an effort to stabilize the Canadian dollar. He also pointed out the Government wanted to avoid having to trigger unusual methods of financing by using Section 39 because of the effects this sort of action has on the stock market and money markets, not only in this country but around the world.

Having just received a budget statement from this Government, we must now ask what the money will be used for. We can speculate. There will be some increases in costs. Unemployment is at a record high, and therefore funds being drawn out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund will continue to increase. Part of this borrowing authority will probably be used to cover the resulting deficit.

As people have more difficulty finding a job and as their Unemployment Insurance benefits run out, more and more of them are forced on to welfare in order that they and their families can subsist. The federal Government pays about half the welfare cost. Given the present economic conditions, some of this money will be used to offset these calls on the federal Treasury. As well, there will be continuing interest costs to cover the very high Government expenditures. While interest rates have dropped for the Government as well as for the rest of us, the volume of money being borrowed by Government continues to rise.

We note from the budget material that the usual revenues that offset the high cost of these federal programs will not be received to the same extent. Revenues from energy taxation will be down because of the reduced demand due to current economic conditions. The energy demand has dropped between 15 per cent and 18 per cent. Therefore, revenues from that source are down even though the Government attempted to maintain the oil compensation charge which it promised to drop at the beginning of this year.

Another area where normal Government revenues are expected to carry the show, so to speak, is in the area of personal income tax. As more and more people become unemployed, there will be less goods and services and less people paying income tax. The take from that source will be down as well. The take in corporate income taxes will likely drop because of economic conditions and because the budget further reduces the level at which corporations are taxed. In fact, I think one of the main thrusts of the budget is to create an impact upon the Government, causing it to come before us for additional borrowing authority.

There is now a continuation of the policy that both Liberal and Conservative Governments have embarked upon over the last 25 or 30 years. It is a continuation of the policy of increasing taxation for individuals and reducing taxation for corporate citizens. In the late 1950s, the revenue from income tax was approximately 50-50, half coming from corporations and half coming from private individuals. I should point out that in the early 1950s, close to 70 per cent of the revenue was from corporations and only 30 per cent was from individuals. By the end of the 1950s it had gone to a 50-50 basis. At the end of the 1970s approximately 30 per cent of income tax was paid by corporations and about 70 per cent by individuals.

Since we are talking about the difficulty the Government has keeping a large enough cash flow and since we are talking about raising funds, I would be remiss if I did not point out that there are a lot of deferred corporate taxes that have accumulated in this country. That deferred corporate tax is almost enough to cover the deficit that the Government has accumulated for the people of Canada.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is not so.

Mr. Althouse: I believe it would cover about half of it; between $60 billion and $70 billion in deferred taxes versus the $130 billion to $140 billion accumulated deficit of the federal Government.

Using my own personal favourite corporate taxpayer, Canadian Pacific Limited, as an example of what this means, Canadian Pacific has deferred taxes in the neighbourhood of $1.6 billion. There are no Canadian studies which will indicate, and we do not know from Canadian experience, how much of these deferred taxes will ever find their way into the revenues of the Government. We do know that studies in the United States indicate that less than 5 per cent of deferred corporate taxes are ever collected and find their way into the revenues of the federal Government. For practical purposes, we can say that those deferred taxes are tax gifts to that particular sector of the economy. Discontinuing that sort of practice would leave the federal coffers in much better shape because there would be approximately half as much money paid out in interest to maintain the level of debt that must now be maintained.

I would like to make a few remarks concerning the way the budget has addressed the problems of the advantaged and the disadvantaged in our society. It is relevant to discuss this now at a time when there are something in the neighbourhood of 1.6 million to two million individuals in Canada who are unemployed and looking for jobs. These people have no work but they still have the daily costs incurred to maintain themselves with warmth and shelter and food and clothing. They are still trying to educate their children and provide some means of enabling the next generation to survive in Canadian society.

It is my belief that the budget failed miserably in addressing the rift that is growing between the advantaged and the disadvantaged in our society. I say this because it seems to me that the only tax breaks offered in the budget were tax breaks to upper income earners. As the budget is being analyzed more and more, I think the consensus now among most of the tax analysts is that individuals with incomes in the $60,000 and up income bracket have received a fairly substantial tax break from the budget.

The Globe and Mail, in an article on May 3, said it as succinctly as it could be said. The headline stated:

"Low, middle income earners losers: analysis of a regressive budget." I do not think the budget can be called anything other than regressive when uppper income earners who have the ability to pay a higher proportion of income tax are given a break while the lower and middle income earners are having some of the tax relief that was previously available to them gradually eroded.

As a case in point, I bring to the attention of the House the $200 tax relief that was introduced last year which is being reduced by $100 this year. Apparently, the budget papers tell us that that will be eroded by another $50 next year and will be phased out completely by about 1986. That tax break was previously offered to low and middle income earners in an attempt to increase total demand in the economy.

It is our Party's analysis that the only way this economy can get back in gear and back on the road is to introduce a tax policy that will allow middle and low income earners to increase their expenditures and their demand so that there will be a market created for goods and services, thereby putting more people back to work. This would create more investment as well and would make the preparations necessary to return to full employment in the society.

Another small provision in the budget that we see as being regressive is the changes to the child cost allowance. This must be put into perspective. The change purports to create an increase for families or individuals who are maintaining children, but the big question that has not been properly answered by anyone from the Government side that I am aware of is what happens to the availability of that money if one or both parents are suddenly left unemployed? The interpretation we seem to have at this time is that if one or both of the people raising children in a normal family are left without a job, there is then no reason to have child care costs as part of the family budget because one person will be at home. It has been forgotten that that unemployed person should not be at home but should be spending time looking for a new job. It appears to us from our interpretation of the budget that that child care allowance will no longer be made available to them.

Again, the budget is regressive. The people who need the tax break, the people who have lost their jobs and could benefit from an additional $1,000 tax break, will have that withdrawn. As well as being left unemployed, these people will take a further loss by losing a tax advantage that they thought they had at the beginning of the year.

To accentuate further the rift in the Government's attitude toward the advantaged and the disadvantaged, there is the Indexed Securities Investment Plan, the ISIP. We have here, according to the budget papers, an attempt by the Government to encourage investment. Indeed, it may encourage some kinds of investments. As I said earlier, the kind of income earner who is best able to take advantage of an ISIP will be someone with a fairly large income, probably in excess of $40,000 or $50,000 a year, because an ISIP must be set up somewhat like the old Registered Home Ownership Plan. A plan must be established through a trust company or an insurance company or some such agency. The assets that are put into such a plan can only be stock purchased on the regular open stock market. It seems to me that this is drawing a very curious line between small individual investors, people who run their own small businesses or farms, or people who may even be incorporated running a family corporation not offered on the stock market. This is setting up two levels of investors, consistent with Government policy, I guess. The Government seems to be hell-bent on setting up two classes of people in this country, the very rich and the very poor.

As I read the program, the Government is setting up a two-tier attitude when it comes to taxing capital gains. Those people who set up an ISIP get some advantage. They get a good chunk of their capital gain written off. They can absorb the gain and transfer it into income at a later date, perhaps when they are ready to retire. But a small-businessman or a farmer is still tied to a V-day of 1971. A person setting up an ISIP gets a V-day of 1983. At the end of each year he can review his portfolio and pay only 25 per cent of his capital gain. The rest is rolled over and he gets the advantage of it. There is an inflation index written into the ISIP which the small-businessman, the farmer or the holder of a small private corporation does not have the benefit of.

We see with this budget a total ignoring of the small people who are actually the fuel and main motor of the economy. The investor in common stocks, with all due respect to the Government, does not provide that much of an incentive. He or she is not providing a whole lot of expertise for the building and the growth of the economy. All they are doing is plunking some money on the line and hoping the people managing the affairs of that common stock company will, in fact, invest in something which will grow.

When I look at the investment choices of some of these large entities that are financed through common stock, it seems to me, from recent history at least, that the trend has not been to create new investment, to shoot off into new fields, with perhaps the possible exception of the computer and high-tech industry, but to amalgamate. For example, there was the Hudson's Bay Company and the Simpson's and Zellers operation of a few years ago. Very large operations, instead of using surplus funds to create new jobs and new enterprises, amalgamate existing enterprises and do away with some of the competition they had. At the same time they do away with an awful lot of jobs.

I think the new investment policy which the Government outlined in the budget does not make it at all clear where the investment should take place. The Government talked about 100 different programs around the country on budget night. We still hear Government Members using the number of programs but we are not seeing any announcements of where the investments will be and where these great projects are going to take place. It is a particularly good question to be asking, Mr. Speaker, because we note with interest that plant capacity in this country is running around 60 per cent or slightly lower.

Faced with that reality, what reason is there for an investor to rush out, build a new plant or wreck an old plant and build a new one? There may be some industries where that might happen. When it does happen, as it does occasionally in the high-tech industry, the plant created as a result requires fewer not more people, and it does not lead to an increase in employment. Touting this particular budget as a budget that will bring about recovery and employment through increased employment and creating demand is a dream and an illusion which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) would have us believe. He has not presented any facts. There is no factual material accompanying those allegations to show us that what he says will happen will happen.

I would now like to speak about the use the federal Government is making of its moneys. It is pertinent because the Government is asking us for another $16.7 billion in borrowing authority. The last few moments of my time I will talk about the Government's program for railway redevelopment in this country. What the Government is proposing to do is throw $3 billion-something at the railways to do some double-tracking and to complete a tunnel needed in the mountains on the eastern slopes of the Rockies. The Government is alleging that this will solve a problem which it perceives concerning the movement of grain.

I will not spend a lot of time reminding the House that far less than 20 per cent of the total traffic on those rails is actually grain and that projections by the end of the 1990s would have that traffic as low as 10 per cent or 12 per cent. I simply want to talk about the manner in which the Government is proposing to spend the money. The Government is proposing to give that more than $3 billion to the railways with absolutely no strings attached. The Government is not proposing to take equity in the railways so the people of Canada can benefit if the railways are profitable and so Canadians can have some say in the decisions made at the board of directors level with respect to the Canadian Pacific side of the railway operation. The Government is not setting itself up for an eventual operation of that transportation system, which I think is legitimately a public utility kind of operation. It is the kind of operation that cries out, even under capitalistic economics and free enterprise thinking, to be an enterprise that is carried on for the public good and should be carried on for the benefit of the public.

The Government has instead decided to make the same mistakes that were made more than 100 years ago by providing funds to friends in the railway companies without taking back any equity. We think the funds would be better spent and better managed if the railways were required to increase their shareholding and capitalization, and Government funds go to pick up those increased shares. This would not result in an unexpected increase in the value of the shares currently held and it would have almost no effect on the profitability or non-profitability of the earnings of the shareholders that now exist. It would allow the people of Canada to increase their control of what has traditionally been a privately controlled transportation conglomerate in this country.

By becoming more involved, we could eventually move to a situation where co-operation would exist between the two railways and avoid a great expenditure down the road for some of the double-tracking which is foreseen. This can be accomplished simply by co-operating rather than continuing the charade of competition. The Fraser Canyon, which is a very narrow access to Vancouver and the Lower Mainland of British Columbia, now has one railway operating on either side. If the two railways could ever be enticed into co-operating, one of those rails could be an outgoing line and the other could be an incoming line and capacity could be increased phenomenally—simply by co-operation. We are suggesting that if capital could go into the railways to increase their capacity, their equity capital, with control maintained on behalf of the people of Canada, and if eventually the Board could be controlled in the interests of the people of Canada, then that sort of co-operation would be greatly enhanced.

We see the economic proposals, the budgeting and the fiscal propositions which have been proposed to us by Government in the last week and here today as being very lacking in forward planning. They do not seem to have a plan for getting us out of this recession. There does not seem to be a clear decision made to try to reduce unemployment and increase demand for low and middle income workers so that the economy can get itself out of this recession. We find that the further call on this House to increase the borrowing authority by another $14.7 billion, virtually on the heels of a borrowing authority of $19 billion, further accentuates what we see as the ineptitude of this Government.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, this is the seventh time in this session of Parliament that I have risen on behalf of our Party to speak to a borrowing authority Bill. The first Bill, you will recall, sir, was Bill C-30, a Bill to authorize the Government to borrow $12 billion. That was immediately followed up the following year by Bill C-59, a Bill requesting another $14 billion. Then, starting the fiscal year 1982-83, there was Bill C-111 for $6.6 billion; then Bill C-125, originally for $11 billion and then down to $7 billion. There was then Bill C-128 for $4 billion; Bill C-143 for $19 billion. Now we have Bill C-151 for $14.7 billion. It seems to me that we are spending a great deal of the time of this session of Parliament debating borrowing authority Bills to feed the insatiable appetite of this Government for money or debt.

May I remind you, sir, that on March 31, 1980, roughly when this session of Parliament was about to commence following the 1980 election, the total net debt of the people of Canada was $72.1 billion. That included not only our debt denominated in Canadian dollars, but our debt denominated in foreign currency borrowings. The total amount was $72.1 billion. As of the end of this fiscal year which has just passed, March 31, 1983, the net debt has been moved to $115.8 billion. If this Bill and the borrowing requirements which are contemplated in the budget go through, the net debt of the country will be $142.5 billion by March 31, 1984. I can say to you, sir, that we have doubled the national debt of Canada in the very short period of time since the last election.

There is no justification for that kind of spending, that kind of mismanagement. There is no justification whatsoever. It would be totally improper for any Member of Parliament who loved his country, who had some concern for his kids, who had some concern for his neighbour's children, and their children's children, not to insist that there be some accounting for a program of debt which seems to have no end. This debt will have to be paid. It will have to be paid by my children, by my children's children, and indeed by their children's children. It goes on and on and on! We cannot excuse ourselves by saying: "Well, we are just going into a little bit of debt this year because we have a lot of people out of work and we must do some things to stimulate the economy", because that has not been the case. For part of the session of this Parliament, times are said to have been relatively good, certainly very much more relatively good than they are today. Yet Bills were presented for $12 billion and for $14 billion, and so on and so on. Therefore it is not a question of just bad times. It is not a question of just tough times now and let's borrow a little and stimulate the economy and get things going again. It is a situation where we have been borrowing both in good times and in bad times.

In that sense I want to go now to the budget itself and take a look at the projections of this Government. If one wants to talk about building confidence in Canada, borrowing authority Bills of this nature do everything but build confidence, although the budget contemplates an increase in the Gross National Product this year of 2.3 per cent in real terms; next year over 5 per cent in real terms; the following year 4.4 per cent and continuing to 4.7 per cent in real terms. In other words, according to the budget Canada is about to enter into great boom times.

But then you must look at the borrowing and the deficit requirements. You find that forever, as far as you can see down the road, we are going to have deficits in excess of $25 billion and borrowings of between $25 billion and $30 billion. How can we possibly have confidence when in times which are supposed to be boom times, times when there is real growth in the economy, where the economy is growing faster, as projected by the budget, than at any time since the War, we have a situation where we will forever have deficits? The fact of the matter is that the budget and its projections are total garbage. They mean nothing. They will lead us to disaster, because as Government borrows it sucks up money from the system and prevents that money from being used by those who create wealth—because Government creates no wealth—and as it does that it drives interest rates up.

I point out to you, sir, that while interest rates may seem, in comparison to 1981 and 1982, to be down now, and likely to be down again when the Treasury bill auction takes place later today, real interest rates—and I am talking about the difference between what is the true inflation and what interest we are paying—are probably higher today than they have been at any time in the past three years.

If we look at the projected inflation rate, not the current inflation rate, and if we look at the projected increase in wholesale prices, we find that the real interest rate, the rate between what is deemed to be the inflation rate and the rate which the banking system charges at prime, today at 11 per cent, is between 8 per cent and 9 per cent. That is an enormous burden. We are only paying that rate of interest because Governments, particularly this one, are borrowing far more than they can legitimately take out of the economy. If the economy improves, as the Government suggests in this budget it will, then I can tell you, sir, that the improvement will not in fact take place because interest rates will go to the moon.

When we look at this Borrowing Authority Bill, we must look at what it does to business confidence and what it says about the financial affairs of the country and the creation of the enthusiasm and drive necessary to make the country work better. The Government in its budget says it needs $26.7 billion to finance its requirements for the year. The Government says that as of the first of the fiscal year, April 1, it had borrowing capacity of $16 billion, so it would seem to need an additional capacity to borrow of only $10.7 billion. However, the Minister says: "I need a contingency. I am not satisfied with the gross amount of $26.7 billion; that does not give me any contingency." That is bare bones, he says.

Well, sir, that cannot be. The Minister talks about foreign exchange problems but he knows when he borrows in foreign markets that money is converted into Canadian dollars, so it does not matter whether he borrows abroad or in Canada. The fact is that the budget says he can get along on $26.7 billion, including contingencies. He says: "I need another $4 billion on top". That is less than three weeks after he produced the budget. And the people of Canada are supposed to have confidence in this Government's financial management, after it says on April 19 it needs $26.7 billion and on May 5 it says it needs $30.7 billion!

Mr. Cosgrove: That is not true. That is inaccurate.

Mr. Blenkarn: We must call this Government to account, Mr. Speaker. We cannot accept this Bill the way it is.

I want to talk for a moment about the Government's six and five program because, frankly, we have had enough of that program. I would refer you, sir, to the Main Estimates filed in the November, 1981 budget. That budget was supposed to look after the fiscal year 1982-83. At that time the Government said it was going to spend $76.3 billion. Well, what did it do? It in fact spent some $81 billion or $82 billion and then produced a budget for 1983-84 and a spending estimate for this year of $88.9 billion. Before the ink was dry, even before the Main Estimates have been passed and we had barely heard the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) say he could not possibly come to the House for supplementary estimates beyond $88.9 billion, his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) says his new estimates for spending are $90.7 billion, an increase of 18.9 per cent from the estimates for the previous year. That is six and five? No, 18.9 per cent is what it is. So when this Minister says he needs $4 billion in contingency funds, we know that is not what it is. History indicates that it is already targeted for spending.

Mr. Cosgrove: That is not true.

Mr. Blenkarn: The April 19 budget has barely passed this House and he is targeting another $4 billion. It is nothing more than that. He comes here and says: "Gimme, gimme, gimme. I want no controls; I want to spend, I want to borrow".

Government is supposed to be the steward of the people's money, an honest steward, but this Government has failed in that stewardship. I say that seriously because there is no way we can allow a borrowing authority in excess of the alleged borrowing requirements.

Mr. Cosgrove: We want economic recovery right now.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Minister squeaks about economic recovery. Let me tell him a few facts. If he looks at the Bank of Canada's statement of last week he will find that this Government had on hand $5.6 billion in deposits with chartered banks. Let me tell you how that works, Mr. Speaker; it is rather interesting. The Government is supposed to keep $100 million with the chartered banks to cover cheque clearing charges and not accept interest on that money. On anything over that amount on deposit the Government gets interest from the chartered banks at a rate roughly 10 per cent less than the going Treasury bill rate. So on today's market the Government gets 8 per cent on that money, but remember that the Government pays a little in excess of 9 per cent for its Treasury bills.

This Government has declared time and time again that it needs no more than $2 billion to facilitate its general activity. That is enough money in the bank to pay its bills and to look after all of its problems. This Government has $3.6 billion more on deposit than it could conceivably need, and that money costs the people of Canada at least $36 million a year, $3 million a month. That is supposed to be good stewardship. The fact of the matter is that the Government is not operating well. It is not running the financial affairs of the country well. From that point of view we must sit back and say: We will give you borrowing authority a piece at a time because we cannot allow you to have carte blanche.

Mr. Cosgrove: That is economic stagnation.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is the kind of Government which has no management ability. I say that seriously because its expenses are running away. It budgeted in November, 1981 to spend $76.3 billion; by April of 1983 it says it has to have $90.7 billion to run the country. The Government is running away with itself with that type of attitude. We are being asked to finance borrowing authority Bills, one after another. A Conservative Government today would not be coming to the House for borrowing authority. We would have on hand $16 billion in borrowing authority and we would know that with careful management, we would make it possible to operate the Government until October or November of this year.

• (1250)

Mr. Cosgrove: Under whose leadership?

Mr. Blenkarn: We would know that we would not have to be pounding Parliament for another $14.7 billion.

Mr. Cosgrove: Who would be the quarterback?

Mr. Blenkarn: We would do it that way. I say to Your Honour that we would operate the Government on a financially sound basis and would not be borrowing money when we had no money in the till. We would not be wasting money.

At this point the Government does not need this Bill. It will presumably need some borrowing authority for the balance of the fiscal year; it could probably easily get along on $8 billion. In order to expedite the proceedings of the House and its activity, we might be prepared to discuss an amendment to the Bill to reduce the borrowing authority to no more than the budgetary requirement of the Government. However, under no circumstances could we as a Party, or should we as a House of Commons, be prepared to accept the Bill before us.

The simple fact is that the budget had contingencies built into it. The borrowing requirements in the budget had contingencies built into them. To say that contingencies require an additional $4 billion is drivel, unrealistic, nonsense.

Mr. Cosgrove: And you are against economic recovery.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Minister says something about economic recovery, as though the only thing he will attempt to do is to recover himself by borrowing. I do not know how anyone becomes richer by going farther into debt. That is the program of the Government: put the country farther debt. I say that the Government must come to the country and to Parliament clean, and with a proposal which makes sense. To come to Parliament and request total borrowing authority of $30.7 billion, when even the Government's own exaggerated figures indicate that it can get along on $26.7 billion, is a travesty.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, it looks as though we are in for a classic debate on this matter. We have just heard a marvellous presentation of the usual blinkered Tory thinking. I would like to pursue the view of the Hon. Member to the effect that no one creates wealth by borrowing, which is a dumb statement. The Hon. Member knows that individuals create wealth by borrowing in the form of mortgages, that companies borrow in the form of bonds, and that Governments borrow as a form of stimulus to the economy when it is flat. I do not know why he drags out these clichés, because he knows fully well that the clichés are a little bit disreputable and he is a much more sophisticated economic thinker than that.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member a very straightforward question. He said that the Conservatives would borrow and would use the $16 billion authority through to October, and then would come back to the House for additional sums needed to carry them through the rest of the year. In October, how would he propose to ensure that people like him would not filibuster in the House in the manner his Party did last March, forcing the Government into the dumbest kind of borrowing that is possible—short-term notes, emergency borrowing, highly expensive borrowing? How would he ensure that his colleagues in the House would give us the co-operation we need to pass an additional Bill at that time without a lot of filibustering?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, it is pretty self-evident that the Parliamentary Secretary is trying to cover up for ineptness. The fact is that Bill C-143 was presented in the House on February 17. At that time the Minister of Finance refused to answer any questions or give any projections whatsoever. The entire Opposition spoke vigorously on the Bill and eventually debate on the Bill had to be limited by time allocation. If the Minister of Finance had come forward with the figures as he was asked to do, the Bill would have gone through much faster. However, he deliberately refused to do so, and he also deliberately refused to allow one single financial speaker for the Government, which would have enable questions to be asked in the ten-minute question period, during the first eight hours of debate.

Second, the Minister refused to come, until he was dragged, kicking and screaming, to the Finance Committee. Every effort was made by the Parliamentary Secretary—

Mr. Cosgrove: After we used closure.

Mr. Blenkarn: —to stop the proceedings of the Committee. Eventually, kicking and screaming, the Minister produced some financial figures. At that point there would have been no problem. We were quite prepared to give the Minister the $5 billion he did not need last year. The fact is that he got along with $1 billion less than that. We were quite prepared, as we are prepared right now, despite the fact that we think this is an overspending Government, to talk about giving the Government the money which was approved in the budget.

However, that is not what he want. He wants more money than that which was approved in the budget. He wants $4 billion more. As if that were not bad enough, he wants it now, when he has no need to borrow more money until some time in October, or maybe November or December for that matter. If he handled the affairs of the country properly, he probably would not need any more than the $16 billion which has already been approved. However, assuming he does, why does he now demand $14.7 billion without any evidence of its being required in the budget?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I must be mistaken. It must be another colleague of mine from Mississauga South, not the particular one who rose in the House just now. I must be confused about my colleagues because I know that I sat in the Finance Committee with my colleague from Mississauga South and listened to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) on two separate occasions, and the Minister of Finance. We offered the participation of the Minister of Finance for as much time as he needed to answer questions. Some Hon. Member from Mississauga South, if it was not that one, was in the room when the Minister of Finance was there, from nine o'clock p.m. until two o'clock a.m. the next morning, and then for a second session lasting another hour and a half. I think, but I am not sure, that it was either him or his brother or some look-a-like who had plenty of opportunity last March to ask questions and did ask all kinds of questions. They were dumb questions but he asked them anyway.

I would now like to know the answer to my original question. How would the Hon. Member for Mississauga South or his spokesman, the other shadow member from Mississauga South, guarantee smooth passage of a borrowing Bill in October so that the Government would not have to go through the kind of dumb manoeuvring which he is forcing us into with this filibuster?

Some Hon. Members: He doesn't know.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is very simple. All he has to do is to reduce the amount in his Bill and say: "I am coming to the House to ask for approval of what the House has already passed". The House has already passed the Government's budget. The budget calls for $26.7 billion in borrowing authority to meet its requirements. The Minister says that he has $16 billion. He therefore needs no more than $10.7 billion. It would be a very simple matter for the Minister to say: "The budget has been passed; now we would like the money set out in the budget". However, that is not what the Government requests. It requests something far more than that.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I do recognize the time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the Minister for a very brief question. As he can see, the time is now one o'clock.

Mr. Cosgrove: I realize that the time is one o'clock. Will the Hon. Member who has just spoken be available for questioning upon resumption of this business?

Mr. Blenkarn: Yes, sir.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1.02 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

AGRICULTURE

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON TRANSPORTATION OF CEREAL GRAINS

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, yesterday, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) announced that he would soon be tabling new legislation to implement the Government's plan for improving the grain transportation system in Western Canada. In this connection, the Quebec caucus committee, which has ten members from various parts of Quebec and which I have the honour to chair, had made recommendations to the Minister of Transport not long ago to the effect that following the proposal made on February 1, the committee recommended to the Minister of Transport that the grain transportation subsidy be paid directly to small railway companies. We are of course very happy with the decision announced by the Minister of Transport yesterday, since we have been working since September 1982 on preparing recommendations and meetings with agricultural organizations such as the Quebec Farm Producers' Union, the Coopérative fédérée des meuniers, and so on, and we have each followed up these meetings in our respective ridings.

Today, I think we can say that the Quebec caucus agrees with the proposal announced by the Minister of Transport and that this proposal is a satisfactory response to the aspirations of Members from rural areas and of the entire Quebec caucus, and I think the agricultural sector will benefit, not only in Quebec but also in the rest of Canada.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—OPPOSITION TO PLAN FOR CHANGE

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, in 1897 the Crow rate, with an average cost of one-half cent per ton mile, to move grain by railway from the Prairies was established. Under the Crow rate, grain production prospered, billions of dollars in foreign exchange were earned, and the railways made money. Cow-calf producers, feed lot operators, meatpacking plants and secondary grain processors continued to flourish because the distortion did not affect the over-all natural advantage of western agriculture.

During the late 1960s and the 1970s, due to inflation brought on by the present Liberal Cabinet, the Crow rate became a major distortion between grain producers on one hand and the livestock industry and the secondary grain processing industry on the other. The over-all natural economic advantage was lost. In 1982 the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) created the Gilson consultative process to negotiate a reasonable solution. Nine major farm organizations, the two national railways, and one group of processing companies spent thousands of hours negotiating an over-all compromise.

The Minister of Transport has since made major changes to the compromise whereby the major economic distortions are still in existence. The over-all balance and fairness have been lost. All of this happened without Members of the House ever seeing any legislation or being able to contribute our knowledge and experience.

Surely this whole process shows once again how incredibly incompetent the present Liberal Government is, whereby the nation must once again endure the worst of all possible solutions.

INCOME TAX

AMOUNTS PAID IN QUEBEC COMPARED WITH OTHER PROVINCES

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, it is often said in the media, in this House and also in the National Assembly that Quebecers pay the highest taxes in Canada. I thought Canadians and Quebecers would be interested in some information on income tax levels in the various provinces. For instance, a taxpayer with a taxable income of $6,000 will pay $1,496 in income tax in Quebec, $1,119 in Ontario—$377 less—and $906 in Alberta—$590 less. With a taxable income of $25,000, our taxpayer will pay pay $9,229 in Quebec, but would pay $2,098 less in Ontario and $2,569 less in Alberta. I think that these figures speak for themselves, and that all the rhetoric of politicians who are "all talk and no action" is losing much of its impact on the people of Quebec.

Those are real reasons why investors are avoiding Quebec. These are factors over which the Government of Quebec has complete control, and therefore it cannot blame its neighbours or the Government in Ottawa. In fact, Mr. Parizeau will have a chance to remedy the situation next Tuesday when he brings down his budget.

PENITENTIARIES

MINISTER'S PROPOSAL TO RELEASE GREATER NUMBERS OF INMATES

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) proposes to release earlier, for the first-time, offenders convicted for non-violent offences. We all agree that the need is to get some prisoners out of jail, but only if they are genuinely rehabilitated and not likely to be a danger to the public. We need more qualitative release, not quantitative release. How do we accomplish that? We are obviously not accomplishing it presently.

Rehabilitation is essentially the responsibility of the individual, I believe. We cannot wave a magic wand and have automatic rehabilitation. Only an individual man or woman can rehabilitate himself or herself through their own voluntary change of mind and heart.

The Solicitor General and the Parole Board Chairman are reported as saying that there will be no change in the basic screening process for release. Surely, this is the real point, to determine where we can make a bold move to achieve both genuine rehabilitation and a reduction in the number of prisoners.

Why can we not change the existing process of screening to a meaningful process of qualifying, and put the onus and responsibility for qualifying on the individual prisoner?

We should not have to screen him or her. If prisoners want to get out, they should take the initiative and pass the test of satisfying the Parole Board that they have changed their lives enough to qualify for release. If there is a doubt about this, it should be resolved in favour of the community.

We shall only reduce crime effectively when we tackle the causes, not the symptoms of crime.

THREAT TO EMPLOYMENT—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) has me worried because he has told us all not to worry. The Minister calmly assures us that an additional two million workers thrown out of work by technology, in addition to the two million now without work or hope, will not be a tragedy. That has me worried.

The Minister says, "Do not worry, put your faith in the private enterprise system, the system will provide." That has me more worried.

When the mechanization of agriculture drove workers off the land, they adjusted by finding work in factories. When the automation of industry drove workers from the factories, they adjusted by finding work in offices and the service sector. Now, computers and micro electronics will drive workers off to nowhere. There is no place left to go.

It is true that we cannot and should not hold back the tidal wave of technology that is about to engulf us. We must join in on the micro electronic revolution, or be swept away. But we must join in on our own terms and in ways that will benefit ordinary people. The Minister's "technology at any costs" vision is blurred by panic.

There are other visions. Some of us, like the Catholic Bishops, see alternatives that would place the emphasis on socially useful forms of production, labour intensive industries, the use of appropriate forms of technologies.

Given such alternatives we would not only survive, we would even prosper as the new wave of technology washes over us. The Minister may think that he has all the answers. The worry is: has he even understood the question?

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S OPPOSITION TO CONSTITUTIONAL ENTRENCHMENT OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, citizens of Canada who value the right of private ownership should be forewarned that Members of the New Democratic Party are philosophically opposed to the constitutional entrenchment of the right to own and enjoy property. If this were not so, the NDP would not have obstructed the property rights amendment which was debated in the House last Friday. By denying unanimous consent on Friday, they purposely prevented Parliament from joining with the legislature of British Columbia in approving this important amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. Deans: What happened to your press release?

Mr. Siddon: The Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) and his Members have often said that it would be wrong to guarantee constitutionally the right to own property because this could prevent socialist governments from nationalizing industries or restricting the rights of private land owners.

Mr. de Jong: What about your press release?

Mr. Siddon: I am surprised they do not want to listen. NDP provincial Governments have a history of Crown intervention which has tended to liquidate or diminish the assets of property owners. For example, the present NDP policy on mining in B.C. advocates market intervention and social equity ownership.

The NDP in British Columbia and their federal cohorts have pretended to support property rights on one hand, while retaining a fierce philosophical opposition to such a clause in the Constitution. They offer to recognize the right of Canadians to own a farm or a home, but nothing else.

Madam Speaker: Order.

PROVINCIAL BOUNDARIES

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, under the new Canadian Constitution, new Provinces can only be formed and provincial boundaries can only be extended with the approval of seven Provinces having 50 per cent of the Canadian population. Any Province can accept or veto any changes to its boundaries, under Section 43.

There exists no criteria for creating new Provinces or for changing the boundaries of any Province. Therefore, Parliament should appoint a Royal Commission at the earliest opportunity to recommend criteria for such changes. Indeed, criteria should be established for the granting of provincial status to the Yukon, the granting of semi-provincial status to the Mackenzie region, the possible establishment of new Provinces within the central region of Canada, and the possible extension of provincial boundaries north of the sixtieth parallel into the northern Territories. The creation of additional Provinces would enhance national unity and provide greater equity to the entrenched constitutional amending formula.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

RENT INCREASES FOR HAMILTON APARTMENTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, on July 20, 1982, the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) said:

> All price increases are limited to no more than 6 per cent in the 12-month period commencing June 28, 1982, and 5 per cent in the following 12-month period.

Also the Minister confirmed that the policy will apply to all prices established under federal jurisdiction, including Departments, agencies, Crown corporations and their wholly-owned subsidiaries. This was confirmed and reaffirmed by the Minister responsible for housing as being applicable to CMHC on Friday, July 30; on Monday, July 26; and on Friday, July 23.

In December, 1982, the residents at First Place in Hamilton received a letter indicating that "Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation are requiring us to increase the apartments rents to closer to market value. On this occasion the increased rent will be 12 per cent". This preceded a letter of April 29, 1983, which put in place an increase that, combined with the increase announced in December, makes for a total increase of 21 per cent in less than 15 months.

I suggest that the Minister responsible for housing was either not telling the truth to the House, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is not following the instructions of the Government, or both those two things were happening. I ask the Government to take action to correct—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FINANCIAL, VIEWING, AND SERVICE STATISTICS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, in response to a statement that I made in the House on March 14 concerning the number of Canadians watching American television, specifically the Public Broadcasting Service, the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has drawn my attention to statistics which I want to convey to the House.

First, audience figures show that in Canadian metropolitan centres where PBS television can be received, it attracts only 2 per cent to 3 per cent of viewers. Also I am informed that the cost of operation of the United States public broadcasting system for the year 1981 was $767 million. That is broken down into a federal contribution of $200 million, state and local tax revenues of $272 million, and non tax-based revenues, such as foundations, auctions, and the general public, of $295 million, for a total $767 million.

I also referred to the percentage of Quebecers who watch English television. While it is true that approximately 51 per cent of Francophone Quebecers are reached by English television—that is, they watch English language TV at least once for a quarter of an hour in a given week—only 14 per cent of the total time spent watching television by Quebec Francophones was to English language stations and only 5.5 per cent of that time was to United States stations.

While the CBC expects to receive $820 million from Parliament in this fiscal year, the money will be used to provide programs and services for television networks in English and French, AM radio networks in English and French, and FM stereo services in English and French—

HOUSING

INQUIRY WHETHER $3,000 GRANTS WILL BE PAID UNTIL END OF MAY

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance and the Minister responsible for housing, I shall direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister knows perfectly well that in his budget, the Minister of Finance had referred to a $3,000 subsidy to stimulate the construction industry, and he said the subsidy might last until the end of May. Yesterday, the Minister responsible for housing informed the House that practically all available funds had been spent and that Canadians applying before May 31 might be disappointed. In the circumstances, and considering the implications of the just society desired by the Prime Minister, can he give the House the assurance that all requests made before May 31 will be met as promised by the Government in the budget?

[English]

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I could respond to the Hon. Member by pointing out that, when the original CHOSP program was announced in June of last year, housing starts were at a very low level in comparison with years past. Hon. Members said right off the bat that the result of the program would be ineffective and that it would do nothing for housing.

That program has been very successful. It has been so successful that we have the problem which the Hon. Member raised and brought to our attention, that is, that many Canadians are aware of it and would like to take advantage of the $3,000 grants. The statement of the Minister of Finance in his budget was that indeed the program would be extended beyond the cut-off date, either to the time when the additional $30 million was used up, or to the end of this month.

Yesterday the Minister responsible for housing indicated in the House that there was a large demand, that the program was indeed successful, but that it was the success of the program that was causing the problem. Housing is now being generated at a very good rate. Housing starts for single families are three times the rate they were when the program was announced.

We think that the industry is very strong. We think that there is no need to continue that subsidy. Hon. Members who are asking the Government, for example, to cut back on its expenditures and to reduce its deficits, should recognize that that industry is now very strong.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary which is, of course, directed to the Minister of Finance, who said in his budget that the $3,000 subsidy might last until the end of May. I am not challenging the program's usefulness. I am very happy to see that an effort is being made in this area, but the fact remains that probably thousands of Canadians will be disappointed because they will not be able to benefit from the subsidy as offered by the Minister of Finance in his budget. The Minister will realize that the officials who are responsible for implementing the program will have a tremendous problem with applications they will not be able to honour because this budget is inadequate. Could the Minister of Finance, since his program is an excellent one, at least give Canadians the assurance that all applications made before May 31 by Canadians who wish to benefit from this program will be considered and that the Minister will provide the necessary funds to meet his commitments to the Canadian people as was his intention, I imagine, when he brought down his budget?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the trouble for the Member for Joliette is that he cannot read. I said in the budget, and I quote:

—I am allocating $30 million more to the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan, which should be sufficient to extend this program until about the end of May.

That is what it says in the budget, and if my hon. colleague had bothered to listen instead of interrupting my budget speech on the evening of the budget, and if he had bothered to read it, he would have known what the Government's policy is. I have added another $30 million to this program, which has been very successful, as the Hon. Member is aware. The Minister responsible for housing is going to spend the entire $30 millon to meet requests for this subsidy. But in any case, this kind of program was supposed to end sometime, on April 30, and obviously, in April or on the 1st or 2nd or 3rd of May, some people may have been disappointed because they did not have access to these funds. Now, the situation is quite simple. Interest rates have now gone from 20 per cent to 10.75 per cent, for instance, for a first mortgage. Consumers are benefiting from a considerable drop in rates compared to what they were before, and it is now time to terminate a program that was introduced to help home buyers at a time when interest rates were up at around 20 per cent. Our monetary policy has succeeded in bringing interest rates down to levels that are much lower than they were before. I hope that we shall be able to reduce interest rates even further, and meanwhile, the amount I was referring to, the $30 million, is there for all Canadians who apply, and their applications will be examined in the order in which they are received by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

• (1420)

Mr. La Salle: I would like to point out to the Minister that I have read the budget carefully, but I also know that thousands of Canadians now have a right to believe that they are entitled to a grant. The Minister of Finance seems to forget that the Minister responsible for housing said yesterday that nearly $30 million had already been spent or appropriated. In these circumstances, I think the Minister is under the obligation to be as honest as possible with the Canadian people and to tell them clearly that the program is now over instead of giving them to understand that they will be entitled to a grant to be negotiated, discussed or evaluated—

Madam Speaker: Order, please! Speeches are being made on both sides. I would ask the Hon. Member to ask his question immediately and the Hon. Minister to reply as briefly as possible.

Mr. La Salle: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My question is this. The Minister is well aware of the problems that this will cause. In the circumstances, if the Minister is unable—this is my question, Madam Speaker—if he is unable to pay out monies as promised, will he at least have the guts to tell Canadians what he can give them or not, as the case may be? That is my question.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the last person in this House from whom I have no lessons to take in honesty and courage is the Hon. Member for Joliette. I therefore urge him to be a little more courteous and to hold back his insults. We are used to hearing them when he is seated, but it is unfortunate that we have to hear them even when he has the floor. I have nothing more to say to the Hon. Member, and again it is quite clear, than what I said in my budget. I have allocated an additional $30 million to help Canadians who want to purchase newly built homes. These $30 million will be spent for Canadians.

[English]

ASSURANCE SOUGHT THAT APPLICANTS WILL RECEIVE GRANTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The last time the Government put up $100 million was in October last. At that time it did not stipulate that, if the fund ran out, the Government would no longer honour applications. Those who built homes took that into account when working out their total financing. They expected the Government would honour the commitment it made. Areas such as the Atlantic region did not have enough money to carry the program through until the end of April. Will the Minister assure us that, despite the fact there is now a twist, there will be enought funds for those who expected to receive the $3,000 grant and who applied before the end of April, even though the Government is now twisting?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have no reason to believe that it will be imposible to honour the building applications which were received before the end of April. The Minister responsible for housing will be in the House very soon, and he was here yesterday. The Hon. Member could have asked him that question—

Mr. La Salle: I did!

Mr. Lalonde: He is the Minister responsible for that program, and I have no reason to believe that we will not be in a position to meet those objectives. What happened, according to the minister, is that many applications were sent in through contractors, applications for 50 or 100 houses at the same time. We are not convinced that in each case the foundations have already been completed. Inspectors will check whether those applications do meet the standards of the program, or whether on the contrary the circumstances are such that the contractors wanted to act fast and submit applications in advance because they expected that the program would end at the end of April, failing to take into account the additional $30 million. The Minister responsible for housing is keeping a close watch on the situation.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—AMOUNT TO BE PAID BY GRAIN FARMERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It concerns the changes that he announced yesterday, which were further to the earlier changes that he made in the Crow rate. Will the Minister confirm that, according to the proposals that he made yesterday, the average grain farmer in the Prairies by the end of this decade will spend about $6,000 more to ship his grain? It that is the case, will the Minister tell the House of Commons and the people of Canada why this additional burden should be placed upon our grain farmers?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, most people in the West agree that the Crow has become a liability. Only some reactionaries in the New Democratic Party have not accepted that. My hon. friend should read the statements made by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool two years ago in which it said that should the Government comply with the following seven points, it would negotiate the Crow. That has been repeated ad nauseam by many organizations in the West. That implies that the farmers in the West are willing to pay more for a good service.

Some months ago the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool was willing to agree to what is called the "Argue plan", under which the farmers would have paid double the Crow right from the beginning. They were willing to accept that. What other proof does my hon. friend need to understand that the western farmer is willing to pay more for a good service? My hon. friend is a cigar smoker. He should realize that the five-cent cigar no longer exists and, consequently, be willing to adjust.

Under yesterday's announcement and under the previous one, this will imply that the farmer will pay twice Crow in the next four years and, by end of the decade, mutatis mutandis, depending on volume shipped and on the interest rates, et cetera, they will pay five times Crow. The farmer accepts that as a general proposition because of the better system he will have in return.

Mr. Broadbent: If you will excuse the expression, Madam Speaker, the Minister already had to eat crow on this issue. If he goes to the Prairies in the next 48 hours, he will get what could be euphemistically described as an interesting response to his current proposal. He has admitted that the farmers will have to pay at least five times what they are now paying. Our calculation is that that is a Conservative estimate in terms of other increased charges.

AMOUNT TO BE PAID TO CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question concerns another aspect of the same proposal. In terms of using the taxpayers' money, the Government intends to give CPR, and I say give to CPR, approximately $500 million to be used for capital investment and improvement of the grain handling system. While acknowledging that capital infusion is necessary to modernize the grain handling system in the West, does the Minister not agree that the taxpayers of Canada, including unemployed workers who still pay taxes and are going to put up the $500 million a year, should in turn get shares in CPR for that investment?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has just reminded me that I should have added in my previous answer that the five times Crow that the farmer would pay at the end of the decade, will then be less than 60 per cent of the true cost of transportation. That is an indication that transportation of grain will still be highly subsidized by the federal Government, the contribution being $900 million a year for the next decade and beyond. These are facts that should be taken into consideration.

On the subject of why the Government should not take shares in CP, I think that the simplest answer I can give is that this is not a gift made to CP. CP will have to carry grain in return for the money that they will receive. That should be clear. Now, should the Government invest money in both subsidizing and contributing to the transportation of grain in the West and besides that buy shares in CP, of course it would increase tremendously the contribution the federal Government would have to make. I might quote the NDP leader in Saskatchewan—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Order, please. I must ask the Minister of Transport to try to shorten his answers.

[English]

RATIONALE FOR PAYMENT TO CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have one final question for the Minister. If the Minister is turning to the gentleman on his left, the Prime Minister, for advice on Prairie issues, he is really in trouble.

Returning to the question of equity, Madam Speaker, acknowledging that we need money to modernize the grain handling system, acknowledging that some money must go to pay the additional costs that are above the freight rate, I ask the Minister who is responsible for the spending of taxpayers' money why we should give any money at all as a handout to the CPR, a company that made more than $120 million in profit last year, for capital investment, unless the people of Canada get a share proportionate to that capital investment in the CPR.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I turn to the man on my left side with pleasure, because a few years ago the man on my left side indicated that the future of the West needed double tracking.

An Hon. Member: Double talking.

Mr. Pepin: At that time, like today, some people smiled, others laughed. Today that statement has become conventional wisdom. Today this is really what is happening in the West, and my hon. friend on my left should be proud of the prediction he made at that time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: About the general announcement I made yesterday, indeed I had to eat crow. I recognize that and I am humble about it. The fact is that perceptions existed in the West and in the East that could not be countered. I have been told by Madam Speaker to be concise, but I think that we now have a balanced set of propositions which will be widely accepted both in the East and the West, and that is the important fact in this matter. We are going to move.

FINANCE

FORECAST OF GOVERNMENT DEFICIT—PRESENTATION OF ESTIMATES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who is gracing the House with his presence today, one of the few days he has since he brought in his budget. The Minister should be aware of the fact that there is a growing realization that his 1983-84 budget deficit does not add up, that in fact it has been inflated by about $1.5 billion, possibly to provide a hidden slush fund or an election goody bag. Can the Minister tell the House whether he presented the estimates of expenditures and revenues as prepared by his departmental officials, or did he exercise his ministerial discretion to change them?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I was so shocked by the hon. lady's first disgraceful remark that I would ask her to repeat the question. I missed the latter part of it.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, I will repeat the question. I pointed out that there is a growing realization that in the Minister's budget deficit figure for the current fiscal year the numbers do not add up, and that there is speculation that it has been inflated by about $1.5 billion, possibly to provide a hidden slush fund or an election goody bag. Can the Minister tell the House whether he presented the estimates of revenues and expenditures as prepared by his departmental officials, or did he exercise his ministerial discretion to change them?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I would like first of all to remind the hon. lady that I was in the House yesterday and I do not know where she was. She was not here. Second, out of 58 days before the budget, I missed attending the House on five days. I put this as a challenge to her to match. I know that she has not been here that often.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: That being said, obviously the budget is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance. It would be rather strange if I were to start commenting on actions taking place inside my Department between officials or between officials and the Minister. But I have no compunction, no hesitation and no problem at all in telling the Hon. Member that she does not have to worry a bit. The figures are those that were provided by my Department. I questioned them, I analyzed them with my officials, but they are the figures provided by the Department of Finance and they stand on their own. She does not have to worry.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, we will be glad to table in the House the record of the Minister's participation in the House since he presented his budget.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE PLANS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, we know that the Minister of Finance can add $200 million to the public debt in order to cover up his budget leak, and that he is proposing to add $4 billion to his borrowing requirements in the Bill now before the House. Has the Minister of Finance revealed all of his spending plans for the current fiscal year in his budget, or is he going to spring some expensive new programs on unsuspecting Canadians in the future?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am glad to report, from extensive discussion I have had with Canadians since the budget, that they have received the budget extremely well and they are rather shocked by the kind of petty politics that the Conservatives are engaging in.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: What shocks Canadians even more is the emptiness of the comments made by the Opposition concerning the budget. I am happy to report that this has been the reaction across the country. I would invite my hon. colleague to take a few days off to check this out for herself. She might change her line of questioning on this particular subject.

I want to tell the Hon. Member that the figures provided in the budget are the estimates as developed by my Department and approved by myself. As far as the planned expenditures of the Government are concerned, they are contained in the Estimates tabled by the President of the Treasury Board and they will be contained in Supplementary Estimates that the President of the Treasury Board will introduce in Parliament, which occurs several times every year. The Hon. Member may not have been in the House for very long, but surely she knows that.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—ANNOUNCEMENTS MADE OUTSIDE PARLIAMENT

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I want to share with him my disappointment in both his change of principles in his press announcement yesterday and in the method by which he is now making announcements which relate to the Crow rate. After two years of playing cat and mouse on unclear postulations across the Prairies, causing a debate between interested groups, why is it that the Minister would choose to report four times to the media, to people who can report but who cannot represent, rather than to the House of Commons? Why is it that he is continuing to avoid the Parliament of Canada where people can represent and reflect on an issue of major importance, and instead takes his information to people who can only report? Because of what he said yesterday, he is now making amendments in the media rather than in Parliament.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the decision was made by the Cabinet yesterday and I announced it immediately because I wanted the rest of Canada to share in this information.

With respect to having changed my mind on this subject, as I said yesterday, there was opposition from East and West. The opposition in the West, simply capsuled, is an opposition from those who thought that this would bring about too rapid a change in western habits with respect to transportation. This is why we decided to make the payments to the railways. Now, other people in the West were saying that the farmers' exposure was too great. Yes, indeed, now the situation is a bearable one, but who knows about the future? That is why we brought about the principle of a safety net. My hon. friend may not agree with that.

With respect to those the Member supports, the livestock people, yes, indeed, they will have a better transportation system. They will benefit from it. The end result of the Bill will be a reduction in the cost of feed grain in the West and consequently the livestock people will benefit, not to the same extent that they would have from the previous program, but they will benefit from the program that I announced yesterday.

• (1440)

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, we should remind the Minister of Transport that the Parliament of Canada is also in Canada and it can be used. When the Minister talks about having a program where there is some conflict East and West, surely he realizes that in order to have good programs in the East you do not have to have bad programs in the West. That is not the nature of this country, and surely we can get good agricultural programs for Canada without having to do it for just one section of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REPRESENTATIONS HEARD BY MINISTER

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Transport. Bearing in mind that numerous groups of persons and organizations, such as Canadian commodity groups, livestock groups and processors, have been told by the Minister to remain silent on this issue because he would look after them, which allowed for representations from only one side of this perspective, why is it, after having done that, while forcing the other side to be quiet, he can bring in a view that represents an imbalance in this country and, therefore, defy the history, the conventions of our federation, and put in process favouritism at the price of the economy of western Canada?

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there is one thing nobody can accuse me of, and that is of not having consulted with different parties on that subject both in the West and the East. I have been at it for the last two and a half years. Some Members know how much time I have spent both in the East and in the West on this item.

With respect to Parliament, we will have the Bill here in the House next week. We will have first reading, and second reading very few days after. My hon. friend will speak on the subject. Everybody who wants to, will speak on the subject. Then we will go to a committee and for the best part of a month we will receive representations and debate all aspects of it. I think this will satisfy the demands of democracy.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: With what are you threatening us? The best of a month?

NEGOTIATION OF VARIABLE RATES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Yesterday when the Minister of Transport announced that he was making some slight modifications to his original plan to change the Crow rate, he changed his method of payment to the railroads. At the same time at his press conference the Minister stated that the Government would include a process whereby shippers could apply to the CTC to negotiate variable rates. Since the Minister has said that he wants to win the approval of farm groups in the West, particularly the Pools, with these changes, how does he justify the inclusion of variable rates as part of his proposal?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if one reads the debates that have been going on for a number of years, particularly the last three, and particularly on the subject of variable rates, one would realize that opposition to variable rates is not total. The WAC, for example, said that some form of variable rates is acceptable. In the legislation that Hon. Members will see on Monday this will be taken into account. There will be a procedure, a fairly long one, under which the CTC will receive cases for variable rates from shippers and railways. This will be thoroughly examined by the CTC and decisions will be made. That is not contrary to a mood that exists in the West. There are some variable rates that are highly desirable, for example, weekend rates and off-season rates, and the Bill will reflect that view.

JUSTIFICATION FOR MINISTER'S PROPOSALS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I am a little puzzled by the economics that are being used here by the minister and his Department. He talks about saving money by implementing weekend rates, yet he proposes to charge more money on that amount of grain that moves above the 31 million tonne cap. It seems to me the cost should be very much lower after that.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Althouse: Instead, the Minister has proposed the farmers pay the whole charge. How does the Minister justify it, or is it justified according to some of these studies and projections that he had done some time ago that produced results that said wheat at the farm would bring $7.40 in 1983? Are these the kinds of figures and background the Minister has to justify these kinds of proposals?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think we had better leave that for the debate which will come next week. The establishment of a relationship between the safety net and the 31.1 million tonne cap is all rather complicated, and Madam Speaker has already told me that I take too long with my answers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADA COUNCIL

ALLEGED SCANDAL AT SHERBROOKE, P.Q.

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): In the absence of the Hon. Minister of Communications, who is responsible for the Canada Council, Madam Speaker, I will direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. First, I wonder, as many other Hon. Members do, if an elected representative should comment on some of the most bizarre and grotesque initiatives which the Canada Council has taken and which represent an outright waste of money. As a matter of fact, Madam Speaker, I have previously blamed the Minister's staff—

Madam Speaker: Order, please! The Hon. Member should ask his question immediately. There is no need for such a long preamble.

Mr. Tessier: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Well, I come immediately to my question. In view of the dreadful incident which occurred last weekend when a number of artists set fire to a car with living rats inside it, could the Minister indicate to the House whether this was a mistake on the part of the Canada Council and whether mistakes such as this should warrant the dismissal of the official involved or at least the blacklisting of such artists who are laughing at the taxpayers, institutions and Government of Canada?

[English]

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, as this House knows, the Canada Council operates on an arm's length policy from the Department of Communications and the Minister. Certainly the Council does dispense a number of funds across the country to various professional groups, individual artists, writers, and to anyone in the arts and culture field. Because the Hon. Member has raised this matter I will certainly bring it to the attention of the Minister who, I know, will discuss it with Canada Council officials.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—COST TO LIVESTOCK PRODUCERS OF PROPOSED CHANGES

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It deals with the Minister's 180 degree turnaround with respect to paying the Crow benefit to the railways and not to the grain producers. The Minister must surely be aware of the consequences of this about face, especially in Alberta where it is already indicated that the total dollar damage to the livestock industry due to increased distortions will be in the order of $230 million a year, including an addition to the input cost of feed grain of about $25 a ton in the livestock feeding industry. In the light of the solid support of the Gilson Committee and to the Minister personally by the Western Commodity Coalition, what is the Minister going to do about this reversal of his own policy that is a total disaster to the total livestock industry in the West, and is not a balanced solution?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think you will understand me if I ask where all that support was in recent months.

Mr. Mayer: Table the Bill.

Mr. Pepin: Some Hon. Members feel very strongly now.

Mr. Nielsen: Show us the Bill.

Mr. Pepin: I do not remember any one of them making that kind of statement some months ago, at least here in the House.

My answer to my hon. friend is the same as the one I have already given. First, the livestock people will benefit, like everybody else in the West, from the tremendous improvement of the railway transport system that will result from the initiative we are taking now. Second, they will benefit also from the reduction of the cost of feed grain in the West and of which everybody is aware. It will not be as great as it would have been under the previous 50-50 method of distribution, but it will be quite substantial at the same time. This is the name of the game. I have to balance the interest of all parties in this matter. My hon. friend should know and must know, because it was visible that the West was divided on these matters. There is no way I could accommodate both sides 100 per cent, and the Hon. Member knows that too.

Mr. Hargrave: Madam Speaker, it is a little difficult to talk about balance when we never see the legislation.

APPLICATION OF STATUTORY RATES TO SPECIALTY CROPS AND PRODUCTS

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. In light of the Minister's own statement in his Transport Canada pamphlet that:

> The Crow rate discourages crop diversification, agricultural processing, and livestock production.

And the Minister's further statement that:

> The agricultural distortions caused by the Crow have grown greater and are now actually taking away the West's natural advantages in such areas as diversified crop production, secondary processing, and livestock production.

—that is a quote from the Minister's own pamphlet—does the Minister intend to include "livestock" in yesterday's announcement that:

> Some additional crops and their products will be included under the new statutory rates.

And this question, of course, the Minister will know is directly on behalf of the 20 separate associations that make up the Western Commodity Coalition.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that my old friend says that the policy was not known. I made a full statement on February 1 where it was completely spelled out. There was even a leak of the Bill, so if that was a secret, it was a secret to only a very few people.

Mr. Trudeau: And those are the people over there.

Mr. Pepin: However, on the subject of the addition of specialty crops, yes, indeed, this is part of yesterday's announcement—that the Government is going to introduce in the Bill, under the statutory tariff rates, some specialty crops and some products. I will come to the committee with an amendment to the Bill on that subject which will at least accommodate a percentage of the number of people who have been antagonized by the announcement I made yesterday.

REQUEST THAT JANUARY DOCUMENT BE TABLED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. Yesterday I challenged him to an open debate with regard to technological change and job loss. It would be an open debate where all facts would be on the table. The Minister replied by saying, "I am not aware of a study, per se." I have since learned that the paper from his Department with regard to technological change is dated January 26, 1983. I wonder, in light of this specific information, whether the Minister, in the interest of democratic debate, with all the facts on the table, would be willing to table that document in this House. Or is he going to pursue the approach of giving selective facts to the public in order to manipulate public opinion? Will he take as his model for political action, Thomas Jefferson, rather than Dr. Goebbels?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I think the statement made by the Hon.

Member is rather unfair. He knows that at the end of yesterday's Question Period I rose and explained the knowledge which I had of the document. I would not characterize it as a "study". It is a document which was designed to promote discussion.

The simple fact is, Madam Speaker, that the document of January, to which the Hon. Member makes reference, was converted by me into a Cabinet document and circulated to my Cabinet colleagues to promote discussion of the very kind, in fact, which is now happening, which I believe is a good thing, so that people would really appreciate the opportunities which lie ahead in terms of technological changes and, of course, also the difficulties we must confront as a society, along with our neighbours in the United States, West Europe and also Japan. That debate is an important debate. On the other hand, I have sent a Cabinet document to my colleagues.

Surely the Hon. Member is not expecting me to release a Cabinet document, which is currently, in fact, in front of my colleagues. However, I recognize the importance of the debate, and what I would like to do is contemplate what specific information I have which is not in the public domain already. The information contained in that report, frankly, Madam Speaker, is information garnered from the experts, from the press, from economists, and from reading scientific journals. There is nothing extraordinary about it what—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I do not wish to be unfair to the Minister, but I do feel that in all fairness he should make all of the facts available to the public.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INCREASE IN WAGE GAP BETWEEN MALE AND FEMALE EMPLOYEES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Public Service Commission, the Secretary of State, if I could have his attention. Yesterday the annual report of the Public Service Commission was released. It is clear that the impact of the six and five program has been to increase the wage gap between male and female Public Service employees by some 12 per cent. Yet the Chairman of the Public Service Commission said that public servants are happy with six and five. I would like to assure the Minister that, certainly, the women in the Public Service are not happy with this increase in the wage gap. Is the Minister prepared to recognize the inequity of this six and five legislation as it applies to women? Will he take some action in order to reduce the wage gap rather than increase it?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should understand that the purpose of the six and five program was to create conditions which would make it possible for our economy to recover, thereby eliminating the wage gap between male and female employees. If we had failed to implement this program to fight against inflation, we would only have postponed the realization of this objective. The rate of inflation is gradually decreasing now, so there is no doubt that the objectives we have set and debated on several occasions in the House remain those of the Government, and that we will make additional progress within the next few months and years consistent with the economic recovery which the Minister of Finance has forecast in his budget.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL TO DEVELOP PORT AT STOKES POINT

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Before I ask the question I just want to say that I wish my friend from the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James, would not refer to anyone in this House as a Nazi.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: My question to the Minister refers to the situation at Stokes Point where Gulf has applied to develop a port. The Minister will know that that particular area has been withdrawn from development. He will also know that his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, is very much opposed to this going ahead, at least until the environmental assessment process is completed with respect to the total development of lands along the Beaufort Sea. Can the Minister advise this House whether he has been able to make any decision before issuing a land-use permit? I must point out to the Minister that if he goes ahead, he will be—and I am sure not intentionally—sabotaging the process which is in place.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I am very glad the Hon. Member brought up this point. In the last few minutes I had an opportunity to talk about that very matter, plus another important matter, with the Minister of Finance from the Northwest Territories, Mr. Tom Butters. He is in the Speaker's Gallery now, Madam Speaker. I am very pleased to have him here as a guest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, incidentally, if I may, with the indulgence of the Hon. Member, and I am sure I have that indulgence, I should like to say that Mr. Butters was down asking me to convey a message to the Prime Minister that the famous town of Inuvik is having its 25th anniversary in mid-July and would wish us to recognize that.

To answer the question specifically, Madam Speaker, yes, it is a controversial area. Yes, the environmental people, including my colleague, are concerned with respect to the decision which will be taken at Stokes Point, as is the Northwest Territorial Government, the Dene, and the Yukon Government, although their disposition is to be in favour of it, that is, the Yukon Government, which Party in power is the same as that of the Hon. Member, incidentally. I want to point out, however, that it is a very controversial question.

I am not making a decision until I have had an ample opportunity to talk to COPE, and the other native interests, and I can only tell the Hon. Member, Madam Speaker, that it will probably be at least three or four weeks before a decision is made, if I am going to talk to all those native interests.

CONSEQUENCES OF DECISION

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): I would like to thank the Hon. Minister for his answer and I join with him in welcoming the distinguished visitor who is here today.

It may or may not be a good thing to have a so-called temporary port at a cost of $60 million at Stokes Point. I am not addressing the question of whether it is or is not a good thing. I am addressing a very serious question which involves the credibility of a Government which has reserved lands. The danger here, it seems to me—and I ask the Minister to comment on it—is that if one Department makes a decision as to land use there, then those who are charged with the responsibility of determining the total issue of land use within that environmental area, the Beaufort Sea, will have, to really a considerable degree, the rug pulled out from under them. I would ask the Minister if, in this regard, he has had further consultations with his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, and whether he and his colleague have had discussions on this issue which I agree is difficult, with the Prime Minister.

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, before a final decision is made I will undoubtedly have further discussions with the Prime Minister. At the moment, though, it is within the mandate of the Northern Development Department and my own responsibility as a Minister of the Government to examine this issue and ascertain the merits on both sides before discussing it with the Prime Minister and Cabinet. That is the process I am involved in now, and I realize it is a very important one.

Incidentally, Madam Speaker, by the tone of the Hon. Member's question, while he says he has not made a decision, it certainly sounds as if he has—a decision against the proposal. I do not see how you can read the preface to his question any other way. If I am right, I cannot help but wonder if that is the position of his entire Party, including the Hon. Member for the Northwest Territories.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—PRACTICE RESPECTING SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTIONS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, a few moments ago in Question Period a question was asked by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) of the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) concerning a document which we heard was turned into a Cabinet document and circulated as a discussion paper dealing with science and technology.

What purported to be a supplementary question from the same Member was then directed to the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) on another matter entirely, having to do with the Public Service Commission and the very important matter of the employment of women. By no stretch of the imagination could that second question be supplementary to the first question, Madam Speaker. Quite frankly, both questions are important but one is not supplementary to the other and I worry about this practice continuing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Well, if it is any consolation to the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), I can tell him this is not the first time it has happened in the House. Even when Members ask two questions on a specific matter, they shout at me "supplementary", so they can catch my eye, I guess. I have been fooled into recognizing them on something that was not at all supplementary. I guess we have grown into the practice that Members are entitled to two questions, and they call the second one a supplementary. If Members are agreeable, I will be strict and expect—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: —the questions to be really supplementary. But I must say that this is going to cause a lot of problems to many Members because there are a lot of questions which are not supplementary. Some Members do not even listen to the answer but go to the second question which they have written down. So I am willing to be stricter on this.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) I suppose will have rendered a great service to the House by his point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT—PROPERTY RIGHTS RESOLUTION

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader if he could give us some idea as to the business for tomorrow and the rest of next week.

At this point I would reiterate the offer of my Party on Tuesday to send the property rights resolution to committee after one day's debate tomorrow. We offer to the Government what is usually an Opposition Day for discussion of this matter, with no confidence vote. The resolution could go to committee for discussion and give people an opportunity to be heard, be reported back to the House by June 7 and the matter dealt with at report stage and third reading with one day's debate by June 30.

Through you, Madam Speaker, it was my understanding that the NDP caucus wished an opportunity to discuss this matter. They had a caucus meeting yesterday and hopefully we can proceed on that basis now.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as I indicated previously, tomorrow, will be an Opposition day, as will Monday, May 9. On Tuesday, we shall resume debate on Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the Government. I hope that by the end of the day on Tuesday, we shall be able to refer this Bill to committee. Wednesday is a day designated for Private Members' Business, and as I already indicated to the Parliamentary House Leaders at our meeting, next Thursday may be designated as an Opposition day, but that remains to be confirmed. At the beginning of next week, I will be able to confirm what the business of the House will be for next Thursday.

[English]

In relation to the point raised by the Hon. Member, the reference of property rights to committee, we had a discussion on the floor of the House on this matter not so long ago. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) was involved. It was obvious then, and it is still the situation, that we agreed to the proposal and I have here the proper House order. We are ready to accept it by unanimous consent if we have that consent from the Tory Party and the NDP.

Mr. Lewis: Agreed.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, we did indeed discuss this matter in some detail and at some great length. As we stated earlier, we are very much in favour of including the right of Canadians to own their own homes and farms, and those and other similar rights should be contained within the Constitution.

Mr. Nielsen: But!

Mr. Deans: However, there are some questions I would like to pose to both of my colleagues in order that we can clearly understand the implications. I wonder if one or both of them would care to inform the House how—

Madam Speaker: My impression was that the negotiations had been terminated. I want to remind Hon. Members that these matters are best negotiated outside the House. I thought the Hon. Member was rising to say whether or not he was giving consent to the proposal of the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). It is only in those terms that I can accept his intervention. I cannot really accept that negotiations take place on the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: Do the NDP consent or not?

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I will of course be prepared to indicate how we intend to deal with it in a moment. However, I want to answer the question being asked, which is whether we are prepared to accept the proposal as outlined some days ago by both the Government and the Official Opposition as it applies to the inclusion of certain words in the Constitution.

I want to put to the House quite clearly that in answering that question there are some serious problems. How do those words impinge upon such things as landlord-tenant relations?

Mr. Nielsen: Do you consent?

Mr. Deans: On rent control?

Madam Speaker: Order. I think those questions present such complicated answers that this is really not the place to discuss them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is an NDP red herring.

Madam Speaker: I do not want to intervene but I feel Members probably need another meeting in order to set this right.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, with respect, I think I have the answers in the text of the motion. I will put the motion on the record and if the Hon. Member agrees, he will say yes; if he disagrees, he will say no.

Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That, not withstanding the provisions of any Permanent or Provisional Standing Order, the following motion be placed on the Order Paper as a Government Order in the name of Minister of the Crown:

"That whereas the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and resolutions of the legislative assemblies as provided for in section 38 thereof:

Now therefore the House of Commons resolves that His Excellency the Governor General be authorized to issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada amending the Constitution of Canada as follows:

PROCLAMATION AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. Section 7 of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principle of fundamental justice.

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following section:

60.1 A reference to the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982 shall be deemed to include a reference to the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983 (property rights).

3. This Proclamation may be cited as the Constitution Amendment Proclamation, 1983 (property rights)."

B. That one day allotted according to Standing Order 62 for the period ending June 30, 1983 shall be allotted to consideration of the said motion, provided that the motion shall be that described in section A of this Order;

C. That at the conclusion of the sitting on the day that the said motion is called for consideration pursuant to this Order the motion shall be deemed to have been referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs;

D. That the Committee shall report thereon no later than June 7, 1983;

E. That the said report shall be disposed of in not more than one sitting day, no later than June 30, 1983;

F. Provided that all motions made in consequence of this Order including those in consequence of any Committee report pursuant to this Order shall be proposed only by a Minister of the Crown.

• (1510)

That is the motion which I wished to put on the record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Nothing could be simpler.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, as you have said yourself, it is much too complex to be dealt with in one day, and we cannot give unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Therefore if I understand the proposal of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), it is to the effect that the motion, in the terms outline by him, be presented by a Minister of the Crown. There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I think that in all fairness the record should show that there is no unanimous consent because it was refused by the NDP.

Madam Speaker: The record will show that there is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, grandstanding notwithstanding, it was refused because sufficient debate is not being allowed by the Tories and the Liberals.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Let's push on with it. Deny people their rights! Go ahead!

Mr. Nielsen: You did it for 18 months.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I suggest that the shoe fits kind of tightly down that way.

I would like to ask the Government House Leader if he perhaps inadvertently omitted to tell the House exactly when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) would table the legislation of the Crow rate.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I did not make such an error.

Mr. Nielsen: We are asking.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I raise this as a point of order because it relates to Private Members' Business. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader could deal with it. Would he consider giving more notice as to what Private Members' Business we are to deal with on Wednesdays so that more Members would be involved, because they would then have sufficient notice to prepare themselves? As it stands right now, not enough notice is given for Private Members' Business. As a consequence, there is not enough participation. I think if more notice was given, the Parliamentary Secretary would find that there would be much more meaningful participation.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that this point was raised on his behalf and that of other Members by his House Leader at the House Leaders' meeting yesterday. It is a legitimate point. It is one which we try to deal with in a fair manner.

The problem is that those Hon. Members whose names are written down frequently, for a variety of legitimate reasons, are not ready to proceed. I can assure the Hon. Member that while it is inconvenient to the Members in question, it is also inconvenient to the various Parliamentary Secretaries who must be prepared to debate those motions on equally short notice. However, the Hon. Member's point is well taken, and we are doing what we can to provide additional notice.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I would like to return to House business, if I may, and ask the Government House Leader if he can tell us whether he has been able to reach an agreement with the Conservative Party to debate Canagrex or Bill C-653.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: In one day, fellas!

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR ALBERTA

Madam Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. Members for Peterborough, Caribou-Chilcotin, Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, Prince George-

Peace River, Red Deer, Richmond-South Delta, North Vancouver-Burnaby, Calgary South, Lethbridge-Foothills and Assiniboia has been filed with me pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C. 1970, to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Alberta.

If the House agrees, I would suggest that we follow past practice and print the text of the objections as an appendix to today's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, in that presentation you mentioned the constituency of Assiniboia. Was that Winnipeg-Assiniboine or Assiniboia?

Madam Speaker: I said "Assiniboia". "Winnipeg" did not precede it.

Mr. Neil: On a point of order, with regard to the redistribution, there has not been a report from Saskatchewan as yet. At least, it has never been announced.

Mr. Nielsen: It's the wrong riding.

Madam Speaker: Hon. Members will recall that yesterday the report was filed, and these are the objections which have come in today.

Mr. Lewis: Nova Scotia signed yesterday.

Madam Speaker: Hon. Members are probably surprised because they did not sign it, but I have the signatures in my hand.

Mr. Lambert: They are not for the Province of Alberta.

Madam Speaker: Any ten Members may sign, not necessarily Members from Alberta. I guess that is why the Hon. Member is surprised to see these objections, but they are duly signed. I have in my hand ten signatures of Members of Parliament, not necessarily all from Alberta.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE AND CONTRACTS WITH VOEG COMPANY

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, on Tuesday, May 3 during Question Period, and again yesterday, I was asked by Members of the Opposition to table all correspondence and contract documents with respect to a $17,000 contract between my Department, on behalf of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the West German company Voeg. As I indicated at that time, some aspects of these documents are of a commercially confidential nature because they involve a marketable development in high technology.

In an effort to bring forward as much information as possible, I have had officials, including law officials of the Crown, examine all the pertinent information affecting the Department of Supply and Services. I am now advised that the documents can be made public.

In addition, I am advised by my officials that they have spoken with officials of the West German company who have indicated that they have no objection to the contract being tabled. Hon. Members will find a copy of the contract between the Department of Supply and Services and Voeg, as well as all the correspondence exchanged between officials of the Department of Supply and Services and Voeg. Your Honour will note that the material includes an exchange of correspondence between these two parties dated March 18 of 1983 involving a collateral agreement to the contract imposing upon the Department of Supply and Services and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources non-disclosure obligations relating to the contractors' processes.

This collateral agreement, called a "secrecy agreement", is also being tabled today.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Apologize!

MR. GREENAWAY—BROADCASTING OF PORNOGRAPHIC FILMS ON PAY-TV

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 234 concerned citizens of Cariboo-Chilcotin riding in British Columbia. The purpose of the petition is to protest the broadcasting of pornographic material on the First Choice Pay-Television station as well as the possibility of such material being carried by other Pay-TV outlets.

The nature of the petition is to urge the Government to review the licences of Pay-Television operators who broadcast pornographic material, with a view to revoking the licences of those carriers that would persist in presenting such unsuitable and exploitive material.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition you will find the petition in order and that you will exercise the discretionary powers vested in the office of Speaker of the House to allow discussion and referral to the appropriate committee at the earliest possible time.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,676 and 4,739.

[Text]

CANADA-CZECHOSLOVAKIA DUAL NATIONALS

Question No. 4,676—Mr. MacKay:

1. Since 1977, how many employees of (a) the Government (b) Crown corporations and agencies (i) applied to the authorities of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic for "regularization" of their legal relationship to that state in accordance with the decree of the Government of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic of March 16, 1977 (ii) were consequently released from Czechoslovak citizenship (iii) were issued Czechoslovak passports (iv) travelled to the C.S.S.R. on Czechoslovak passports?

2. What were the names of such employees and what positions did they occupy in the Public Service?

3. Is it the policy of the Government to employ former citizens of Czechoslovakia who, according to the decree of the Government of the C.S.S.R. of March 16, 1977, while in Canada, renewed their allegiance to that State by signing a statement binding them "to behave and conduct themselves as citizens of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic" or who were released from Czechoslovak citizenship by virtue of not having acted "in a way hostile to the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic or in a way damaging the interests of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic"?

4. Is it the policy of the Government to extend Canadian citizenship and/or Canadian residence to persons who claim to be refugees from the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic and who, subsequent to their landing in Canada, renewed their allegiance to the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of External Affairs, the Employment and Immigration Commission/Department and the Public Service Commission as follows:

1. This information is not available. Under the terms of Article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, to which both Canada and Czechoslovakia are party, Czechoslovak consular officials are free to communicate with and have consular access to individuals who are still deemed to be citizens of Czechoslovakia on matters which fall directly under their consular jurisdiction. This implies that in so doing, Czechoslovak consular officials are under no obligation to notify the Canadian Government of their legitimate contacts with Canadian-Czechoslovak dual nationals. At the same time, Canadian-Czechoslovak dual nationals are not obliged to notify the Canadian Government of their contacts with Czechoslovak consular officials. Therefore, unless the information is volunteered, which it usually is not, it is not possible for the Canadian Govenrment to compile data on those Canadian-Czechoslovak dual nationals who wish to comply with the Czechoslovak regulation.

Furthermore, all Canadian citizens and residents are free to leave Canada at will, and no person is required to inform the Government of his destination on leaving the country. No data on the movements of departing persons are maintained. It is therefore not possible to know accurately how many persons of Czechoslovak or other origin visited Czechoslovakia in any given period. This is equally true for all Canadians, regardless of employer.

2. For the reasons noted in Part 1 above, this information is not available.

3. The Public Service Commission which is charged with the administration of the Public Service Employment Act does not have a policy which deals with the employment of former citizens of Czechoslovakia nor those of any other country. Former citizens of other countries, once having obtained Canadian citizenship, are entitled to compete for Government jobs on an equal basis with other Canadians. Should they not have obtained Canadian citizenship but be resident in Canada as landed immigrants they would still be able to compete for employment in the federal Public Service. The success of gaining such employment would be dependent on the application of certain provisions of the Public Service Employment Act. Thus in open competitions the Public Service Commission may restrict the selection to Canadian citizens when it is aware that there is a sufficient number of qualified Canadian applicants. A further provision of the Public Service Employment Act requires the Commission, when establishing an eligible list in open competitions, to list veterans and Canadian citizens ahead of non-citizens. In view of these provisions it is more difficult for landed immigrants who are non-citizens than for citizens to obtain federal Public Service employment.

There is no requirement for dual nationals to notify the Commission of the fact before seeking employment in the Public Service of Canada.

4. In so far as the Immigration Act is concerned: Citizens and/or residents of Czechoslovakia may be accepted as refugees if they fall within the definition of "Convention Refugees" or those of the "Self-Exiled Persons Class".

Canada does not remove residence privileges status from Czechoslovak immigrants who come to Canada as refugees and who, once in Canada, renew their allegiance to the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic. As a signatory state to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, Canada ascribes to the Regulations laid down by the UN High Commissioner for Refugees on the acquisition or reacquisition of national protection by an individual. These Regulations state inter alia that:

> If the refugee does not act voluntarily, he will not cease to be a refugee. If he is instructed by an authority, eg. of his country of residence, to perform against his will an act that could be interpreted as re-availment of the protection of the country of his nationality, such as applying to his consulate for a national passport, he will not cease to be a refugee simply because he obeys such an instruction. He may also be constrained, by circumstances beyond his control, to have recourse to a measure of protection from his country of nationality.

In so far as the Citizenship Act is concerned: Under the provisions of the Citizenship Act which became effective on February 15, 1977, naturalization as a citizen is a matter of qualified right subject to the requirements of the Act. Among these requirements are that the applicant making application therefor is: (1) 18 years of age or more, (b) has been admitted to Canada for permanent residence (as a landed immigrant by the Immigration authorities) and has since such admission, resided in Canada for at least three out of the four years immediately prior to date of application, (c) must not be under order of deportation, and (d) must be free of the prohibitions to the grant of citizenship which pertain to criminal activity and security offences.

Persons of Czech nationality whether or not they have maintained and/or affirmed their allegiance to Czechoslovakia have been and will be granted Canadian citizenship in like manner to any other adult who makes application and satisfies all of the requirements to become a citizen.

In addition, under the terms of the 1977 Citizenship Act there are no statutory provisions for automatic loss of citizenship upon becoming a citizen of another country outside of Canada as had existed in the former Act (1947) and prior legislation. This change in law has increased the numbers and will continue to increase the numbers of dual national Canadians residing both inside and outside Canada. Those persons residing outside of Canada in their country of second nationality (example Czechoslovakia) or visiting there, especially those travelling on the passport of the second nationality, are considered to be subject to all of the laws of that country and may, for real or imagined infractions of the law, be prevented from leaving and in some cases may be imprisoned.

STUDY "REAL OR POTENTIAL CHALLENGES TO CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY IN THE ARCTIC"

Question No. 4,739—Mr. McKinnon:

Is the Department of National Defence engaging Dr. N. Tracy of Fredericton, New Brunswick at a cost of $17,200 to do a study on "Real or potential challenges to Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic" and, if so, for what reason when less than a year ago it received a study done under contract at a cost of $11,600 on "Canada's Northern Security" by Nils Orvik?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Yes. The Department of National Defence has engaged Dr. N. Tracy of Fredericton, N.B. to do a study on "Real or Potential Challenges to Canadian Sovereignty in the Arctic", at a cost of $17,200. This study as well as last year's study by Professor Nils Orvik are part of a larger DND project on Arctic strategic studies. Dr. Tracy's study is to examine the challenges to Canadian sovereignty and the role of the Canadian Armed Forces to meet these challenges. Professor Orvik's study was geographically more limited, namely the Eastern Arctic and he applied a broader concept of security forcusing on questions such as transportation, non-renewable resources, the native peoples and Canada's relation with Greenland.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at one o'clock the House was in the ten-minute period granted for questions and comments following the speech by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Accordingly, the Chair will look to those who may wish to complete those remarks.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, as you know, it is not very often that Ministers have an opportunity to ask questions in the House of Commons; the procedure is usually the opposite. Under the new rules and operations of the House, a Member is given an opportunity to answer questions following his speech, and therefore there is the opportunity for all Hon. Members to ask questions after a presentation. I had asked the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who had spoken this morning on the legislation requesting additional borrowing authority, if he would answer a question and he indicated that he would.

The thrust of the Hon. Member's comments was essentially a review of the budget, which he argued was the basis for the request for additional borrowing authority. It was the basis, for example, for the Government's plan for economic recovery.

While the Hon. Member referred to the budget and those programs for recovery, he also flagged the issue of the deficit and expressed a concern for the deficit. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) was equally concerned with the deficit and proposed two methods of addressing the increase in deficit to provide stimulus for economic recovery: by demonstrating a Government commitment to keep Government expenditures at trend growth for GNP; second, by introducing a plan to increase taxes at a time when the economy is projected to be stronger.

What further specific measures did the Hon. Member have in mind other than reducing Government expenditures or increasing revenues in certain ways so as to reflect his concern about the deficit?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I intended and hoped to have the time to get into that very issue in my remarks. The Minister will realize that for over a year and a half we have suggested the appointment of a special committee of the House to have over-all supervisory budgetary control. That committee would inquire into and priorize Government expenditures in order to make sure that they would fit within the framework of how the Government and the House would deem these expenditures be spent. There are a number of expenditures that are made, all deemed to be necessary, but there is a need to priorize those expenditures.

We can only have in our household that which we can afford. While there are many things we would like, as Members of Parliament we eventually have to come to grips with what we can afford. We need the social nets that exist in health and welfare and we need to look after those least able to help themselves.

But, do we really need the PIP Program at this point? Do we really need the CHIP Program at this point? Do we really need to spend as much as we do on entertaining ourselves? Do we need the advocacy advertising at this point? Are there not many expenditures which may be desirable and great but not really needed at all at a time when we have economic dislocation and revenues cannot even come close to meeting budgetary demands? Do we not need to priorize our efforts and consider if it is really worth the interest cost to borrow the money to do that which may or may not be necessary?

Mr. Cosgrove: My final question would be in two parts. In the Hon. Member's desire to cut down on expenditures, is he saying that he believes it is necessary to create another committee of Parliament with all the expenditures associated with committee structure in order to investigate these questions? Does not the existing committee structure, such as the committee of which he will be a member that is to question me on Monday next on the expenditures of the Department of Insurance, seem adequate for that kind of investigation?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, under no circumstances are they. They tend to be line department committees. For example, people who are interested in environmental matters want money spent on environmental matters and people who are interested in communications want money spent in that particular area. People who are interested in energy want money spent on energy-related matters. We tend to have spending committees as opposed to committees with control on the over-all spending of Government. This concept is not only ours. The Minister knows that it has been advocated before. It would not be additional overhead or expense for the committee system. It is a change in direction of the committee system to ensure that Parliament comes to grips with real budgeting. Parliament must come to grips with this matter. We cannot continue forever budgeting larger and larger amounts.

• (1530)

The Minister talked about keeping within the trend lines of the GNP. The Minister knows that last year the budgetary expenditure forecast was for $76.3 billion. It turned out to be $82 billion. Its program for this coming year will now be $90.7 billion. The fact is that that is an increase in one year over the next year's program of 18.9 per cent. To no way do we come close to that in terms of the GNP. Indeed, we had a declining GNP last year. The fact of the matter is that we have to tailor our wants to our pocketbooks, to our means.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun-Saint Paul): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with this opportunity to speak today to Bill C-151 and to the budget, which, I am convinced, will give Canadians the assurance that our economy is on the right track. I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who before he brought down his budget, held a series of thorough and intensive consultations with the private sector, governments and various organizations. The budget will provide the necessary means for helping those who want to work but cannot find jobs. I am referring to young people and to older workers. What I really admire in this budget is that the Government wants to provide help for Canadians who need it most. This $4.8 billion recovery budget will, of course, help create jobs, especially in the private sector. I may add that more than $250 million in additional funds will be spent on expanding existing programs relating to housing, more specifically, the purchase, renovation and improvement of homes.

Mr. Speaker, in Verdun-Saint Paul, this program, in which the Canadian Government has invested a little over $2 million, has helped build about 100 co-operative housing units, the result being that many of my constituents now own their own homes and tenants living in units that have been renovated. That is why I am particularly pleased that the Minister agreed to increase the number of units to be built this year to 25,000, that is, new social housing units for low- and middle-income Canadians. This program was also instrumental in carrying out another very important building project in my riding, and I am of course referring to the senior citizens' home, on which more than $4 million has been spent by the Canadian Government, so that senior citizens will be able to move in by next July. As a result, 100 senior citizens on low incomes will be able to enjoy a comfortable and happy life.

While I am on the subject of housing, Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, express my appreciation to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) for some programs that are very important to the people of Verdun-Saint Paul, and I am referring to the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan and the Canadian Home Renovation Plan. About 100 of my constituents took advantage of these programs during 1982. From comments I have heard, I expect we shall be receiving many more requests in the coming year.

And what about the important changes in the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan? In my view, this program will encourage many of my constituents to spend their savings on the purchase of a new home, furnishings and household appliances. It will also enable small contractors to start construction projects and, as a result, provide job opportunities for thousands of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, as far as job creation is concerned, especially for young people, I am proud of the fact that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has put at the disposal of Verdun-Saint Paul residents an information centre designed especially for young people. This centre will enable our youth to acquire vocational training and make it easier for them to make the transition to the labour market. Within three months, this centre has already enabled 150 graduates to find a regular job, which is very promising for the future of our young people. On the other hand, now that our economic woes are behind us as long as the Quebec Government does not make an effort to cooperate with its Canadian partners and as long as it insists on its independence priority, unfortunately very few businessmen will be willing to invest in Quebec.

The best proof of this was given by the Minister of Finance when he spoke before the Montreal Chamber of Commerce and was asked the following questions: Which Government is to blame for excessive taxes in Quebec? Who caused the headquarters of several companies to close down in Montreal? Which Government continues to promote uncertainty concerning the political future of Quebec? Members of this House will not learn anything new if I say that the Quebec Government alone is to blame. I believe that very few people remain blind to this fact and still say that the Quebec Government is not to blame. The only Government that does its best to create jobs and support industry in Quebec, to keep corporate headquarters in Montreal, to support major businesses and help to finance industrial modernization is the Canadian Government. If the Quebec Government persists in trying to separate the province from the rest of Canada, Quebecers will unfortunately be poorer in every respect, that is economically, socially and culturally. The only way for us to have a better future is for the Quebec Government to cooperate more seriously with the Federal Government.

I would like to call the attention of the House to the area of job creation. While the Canadian Government takes initiatives to create jobs, the provincial Government ignores young job seekers who, once again, are unable to benefit from federal assistance. For instance, last December, when the federal-provincial agreement was signed to implement the NEED program and create thousands of jobs in various municipalities, the Quebec Government again reversed its decision and refused to sign the agreement at the last moment.

How can Canada prosper, Mr. Speaker, when the leaders of the Quebec Government are constantly trying to obstruct Federal initiatives and make the people of Quebec believe that Ottawa is responsible for our present economic problems?

Mr. Speaker, if this budget is to have any impact on the jobless, the private sector will have to take advantage of the programs implemented by the Canadian Government. I realize that the private sector has been under extreme pressures these last few years. That is why the Minister of Finance has provided special assistance for Canadian businesses. To this end, the budget contains measures which will allow businesses, especially small- and medium-size businesses, with much more limited resources, to get back in the saddle and reduce the indebtedness incurred by many of them. These businesses will then be able to use the money now required to finance their debt for more productive activities which will be more likely to create jobs. The $300 million provided to help businesses will allow them to bring their investments forward. Needless to say that, as investments increase in the private sector, as they must to guarantee a lasting long-term economic recovery, Government borrowings will decrease. Moreover, if the Government and the private sector use their resources to make our products more competitive, we shall be able to retain and increase our share of the market. Businesses must be encouraged to buy more of their supplies in Canada by promoting innovation and an increased productivity as well as new, larger and more modern production facilities. These are very important measures for putting the economy back on its rails, in a long-lasting effort to give Canadians permanent, meaningful and well-paid jobs.

It should be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that businesses in the Province of Quebec are at a serious disadvantage as against their competitors in other provinces, because of the shamefully high cost of energy in the Province of Quebec. Last week indeed, Mr. Parizeau's tax on gasoline accounted for 52 per cent of the price of a litre of gasoline in the greater Montreal area.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to mention that I am interested in social issues as they relate to the constituency of Verdun-Saint-Paul, which has a rapidly ageing population. Without going into details, the Canadian Government has been successful in maintaining its social programs. I want to assure our senior citizens that, as far as I am concerned, I will go on making representations to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) requesting further extensions to the existing social programs, in order that these people may still enjoy the same degree of protection.

I also wish to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) for his sensitivity to our people's expectations. This budget proposes changes in the child benefit system that will maintain the principle of universality, and programs aimed at low and middle-income families. Consequently, the budget will help single-parent families, mostly headed by mothers who usually make only 58 per cent of the salaries of men.

The child care expense deduction will be increased to $2,000 per child and to $8,000 per family, thus doubling the present deduction. This will certainly help low and middle-income families. Of course, the Child Tax Credit, which increased by $50 this year to help families, will be maintained and, in addition, when mothers claim their child tax credit, they will be entitled to a non-taxable amount of $343 for each child. I am also pleased that the $26,330 ceiling will remain unchanged and this child tax credit will still be paid in part to people whose income does not exceed $40,000. Again, I am fully satisfied that most families in need will be protected.

It is my sincere belief, Mr. Speaker, that all the measures introduced in the budget will serve the interests of all Canadians and give them confidence in the future.

[English]

To conclude, this is a budget to invest in, to work for and to build on. Through our efforts we can ensure that Canada moves not just from recession to recovery, but to lasting prosperity. The choice is ours.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude on a humorous note. Since I first came here, I have been listening day after day to Opposition Members attacking the Government. Well, whatever they may say or do, people on this side are more efficient than the ones across the aisle.

Mr. Dawson: Mr. Speaker, we on this side already know all about the humour of our Deputy Whip, the Hon. Member for Verdun-Saint Paul (Mr. Savard). We are glad to see that he can share it with all his colleagues.

There are two things I would like to say. First, after the remarks of the Hon. Member who will be celebrating his sixth anniversary as Member for Verdun-Saint Paul in a few days, I can understand why the people of his riding have expressed their confidence in him three times.

I saw that the Hon. Member for Verdun-Saint Paul was concerned about the needs of his community as well as those of the residents of the riding of Verdun-Saint Paul and of the Montreal region. He spoke about senior citizens and about people in various categories. I would like to know whether the Hon. Member has anything to say about the budget and its ultimate effects on job creation for young people. The past performance of the Government with respect to job creation programs for young people is outstanding indeed, but if he can I would like him to give the House some figures on the way the Federal Government has been spending money to create jobs, particularly for young people in his riding of Verdun-Saint Paul.

Mr. Savard: In answer to my colleague from Louis-Hébert, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the feeling is mutual. I must congratulate him also and tell him that it is for those reasons that he is a Member of the House. He too will be celebrating his sixth anniversary on May 24.

As to the question he has just asked about the contribution of the Federal Government to youth programs which have already been implemented for 1983-84, I would say to him that the Federal Government has paid $3.899 billion to the provinces for post-secondary education. Funds of $170 million have been earmarked for student summer employment, and an additional $170 million under student loans program to cover interests and defaults. That is very important for young people who have completed their studies. Some $589 million will be spent for training programs, $390 million for job creation programs and $126 million for employment services. I hope my colleague will find my answer satisfactory.

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, in his remarks my colleague from Verdun-Saint Paul (Mr. Savard) referred to the beneficial effects of the budget. He also spoke about the elderly and the young, something which is clearly more interesting to the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Dawson) who is very young and yet very old at the same time since he has been a Member of the House for six years, just like the Hon. Member for Verdun-Saint Paul. I would like the Hon. Member for Verdun-Saint Paul to give us more information. In his speech, he mentioned special funds and special projects amounting to $2.4 billion. There are various considerations from an administrative stand point. The amount of $1.71 billion has been mentioned. Does the Hon. Member know exactly how those funds will be distributed, either throughout the province, or in Quebec City, or in Montreal, or in Verdun, and does he know of special cases in his own riding? He said something about the Province of Quebec where there is conflict in the implementation of certain programs which might help his riding and his electors.

Mr. Savard: Mr. Speaker, to reply once again to my colleague's remarks concerning my speech, I would like to point out to him that since the tabling of the budget, several of those projects have been announced. They represent approximately 45 p. 100 of all expenditures under the Special Recovery Projects for the next four years. I would like to mention to him that those moneys will be spread over the next four years. In effect, $147 million will be allocated during that period to the purchase of 20 CL-215 water bombers to be built by Canadair in Montreal. Furthermore, $630 million, of which $185 million represent new expenditures, will go during the next four years toward the modernization of the Canadian coast guard fleet. In addition, $67.5 million will serve to speed the procurement of highly sophisticated communication equipment by the Department of National Defence. Furthermore, $51.8 million will be allocated to the construction of a new federal building in Halifax. So far as Montreal is concerned, $40 million—I am all the more pleased with that project that I announced it last week—will be devoted to the Vieux Port in Montreal, of which $14.8 million will be spent for infrastructures and site development, $11.1 million will go toward the construction of new buildings and renovation projects and $14 million toward the development of parks and walkways. In addition, $23.8 million have been allocated to the Harbour Front project in Toronto; $36 million will be devoted to the new harbour in Sept-Iles, precisely in the constituency of my dear friend. Furthermore, $34 million will be used to build a deep water harbour in the Chicoutimi area; $15 million will be allocated to the construction of new harbours in Chatham and Newcastle, in New-Brunswick. In addition, $11.6 million will be spent in the Welland Canal region; $8 million will help to develop a portion of the improved lands of the port of Hamilton, $7 million will be spent toward the building of a new terminal and $2 million will be used to modernize the airport in St-John.

Therefore, as one can see, we have a very good budget which shows that the government is taking initiatives to help create jobs and achieve great things.

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his explanations. I have another question concerning the Canadian Home Renovation Plan. What is happening in the region of the Hon. Member himself with regard to home renovation and the $3,000 grants which were to be available until the end of April and for which the deadline has now been extended to the end of May? As far as he knows, has this program brought about any particular improvement in the housing situation in his area, the Montreal area? Can he tell the House whether his constituents were enthusiastic about the extension of this program?

Mr. Savard: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that, in my opinion, these $3,000 grants have greatly benefited my area and the city of Montreal. I can tell him that construction is already underway, and I believe that all contractors and builders who made applications under this program are very happy to see that it will be so useful, especially in the Montreal area and in my constituency. We now have some vacancies but not that many, and I believe that before the program comes to an end, over 100 units will have been built.

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for my colleague. I know that he is also an alderman for the city of Verdun. Does the RRAP or Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program apply in the city of Verdun? In addition, does he know whether many districts in Verdun have been designated for this program? He said earlier that there are a number of older people in his constituency. Of course, there are also many Verdun residents who work in Montreal. It is perhaps more of a dormitory city or a place for retired people. I am not saying that it is not a beautiful city, but I would like to know whether representations have been made to the Verdun—Saint-Paul city council or whether my colleague has made any representations to the Minister of finance (Mr. Lalonde) under the RRAP Program.

Mr. Savard: Mr. Speaker, I can honestly tell my colleague that the RRAP has been very helpful in Verdun. When it was implemented, we divided the city into four districts and I was very proud to announce this program because, when it came into effect, I was Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works. I must say that, since the RRAP come into effect in Verdun, it has helped many homeowners and has been very beneficial to all my constituents. I must tell my colleague that the RRAP is still going strong. I have made many representations in this regard and at the moment, two of the four phases have been completed and we shall start on the third one very soon. I believe that people throughout Canada will benefit from this program.

[English]

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that my colleague from Verdun finds himself in a position to be very proud of what the budget has been able to accomplish for his constituents. It occurred to me that about ten years from now I would like to ask the young children of Verdun, who are perhaps six and seven years old right now, how they feel about paying back the $240 billion debt that the country will have by the year 1987.

Many issues are addressed by the federal Government and the House but I think one of the most serious issues that all of us really fail to address is what I consider to be the politically immoral loading of the deficit on our children year after year. It is as if I were to say, "I am going to buy a car that I cannot afford and I am going to ask my children to pay for it."

The scale of the deficits that have been incurred over the last 15 years and that will be incurred in the next four years as projected in the budget are politically immoral. They are politically irresponsible. We are on a treadmill. The more we borrow, the more unemployment we create. That sounds funny, does it not? We have a big job creation program here that has been put forward by the Government and we borrow money to create jobs, but that is an improper use of capital. The more we do that year after year, the more unemployment we are creating. But this seems to be perfectly acceptable. The NDP Party likes that kind of economics. The Liberal Government has seemed to like that kind of economics for the last 15 years. It borrows, inflates and creates more joblessness.

A fierce debate is raging in the United States today over the magnitude of their deficit. The deficit for a country of 250 million people with a trillion dollar economy is projected to be $150 billion. Here we are in Canada, one tenth the size, with a $30 billion deficit. They are having a raging debate over $150 billion, and we just blithely go on. The Canadian Government does not seem to be very concerned about a $30 billion deficit which, in terms of United States figures, would be $300 billion, twice the size of that of the United States. The Minister in the front bench smiles and the Parliamentary Secretary smiles. What is $30 billion here or there? Gentlemen, the loading of this debt on our future generation is politically immoral. You are depriving future generations of their opportunity, and we are an accomplice to what is going on.

Surely to goodness everybody in the House can see that to increase the deficit continually is to deprive Canadians of jobs and inflate our economy continually. It cannot be done any other way. There is no magic formula. You know that as well as I know that. Yet we do it. We are politically immoral. This institution is deceiving the people of Canada.

Apart from the political immorality of the continuing succession of deficits, the other thing that upsets me is that the Government opposite does not seem to care very much. Members of the Government continually say, "We cannot do anything about Government spending because we will deprive people of the very essential needs of life. We cannot cut our social welfare programs, we cannot cut out income support programs."

Well, gentlemen, maybe there are many social programs and income support programs that should not be cut, but as a member of the Public Acounts Committee where I sit at least twice a week, I can tell you that there are horror stories after horror stories found in the report of the Auditor General. The Members opposite know that. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) has said that we have an adequate committee system to investigate Government expenditures and he surely would not suggest anything to improve that. Well, there is not a Member in the House who would not suggest something to improve the committee system, something to put some teeth into the committee system so that we could do something about these horror stories through the committees. All we do is to bring in witnesses day after day to ask them questions. This goes on year after year. Ninety four million dollars was spent on Consolidated Computer; $1 billion on Canadair and $560 million on Via Rail. There is no end to it. The waste and the extravagance are insufferable. We should be ashamed of ourselves as parliamentarians for the waste and extravagance that goes on at the hands of this Government. Every single Member of this House knows it. Yet we allow it to go on, nobody seems to care, least of all the Ministers on the front benches. We do not have the means or the political will to come to grips with the inefficiency and the waste.

In the last few days we have been reviewing one small part of the Government's operations in DREE. We have been reviewing just four clauses. You can compare this needless waste of money against the human tragedy of people losing their homes and their jobs, yet the Government—in fact nobody, gets very upset about it. Listen to this example: DREE makes a payment of $2.7 milion to a company and four days later the bank forecloses. That costs Canadian taxpayers $2.7 million. Nobody wastes money like that, but that is part of the scheme of things. Nobody gets particularly upset. There is another small matter here of $57 million. That amount was paid to Devco, the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It requested and was paid amounts totalling $57 million, more than the company expended for the acquisition of capital assets. Was that not a waste of money? It is not accurate to call it a misappropriation of money except that $57 million went to the Cape Breton Development Corporation that it should not have had that year and the money's still sitting there unspent. The accounting policies of the Government are an abomination. We are accountable for it, all of us as Members of Parliament. We should be ashamed of ourselves.

Let me come now to Petro-Canada. Many people think I have a thing about Petro-Canada. Yes, I have. Petro-Canada has cost Canadians innumerable jobs and the Government does not seem to understand that. Future generations of Canadians have invested the sum of $7.7 billion in Petro-Canada. Do you know what they have to show for that? Petro-Canada made $10 million last year. I do not know what the mathematics are, but it is surely a lot less than a 1 per cent return. Surely it does not take a genius to understand that is a gross misuse of capital. This is capital that we need in this country if we are to generate jobs to be competitive. If we keep spending $7 billion on Petro-Canada, $2.5 billion on Canadair, another $500 million on de Havilland and $1.5 billion to bail out Dome, where is all the capital to come from to generate the jobs that will be required? Our young people will be forced to pay this massive debt that we have loaded on their backs but they will not even have the jobs to earn the money to pay the debt. Surely it does not take an economics degree to know what to do. We have so many economists today and I do not know what they have done for the Government over there, certainly we desperately need capital formation in Canada if we are to be competitive in the new world.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) talk about the need for us to be more productive and competitive. How do you get to be more productive and more competitive if you do not employ capital? We need huge amounts of capital. But what do we do in this country? The Government designs programs to drive out capital. In 1981 alone the National Energy Program drove out $10 billion in capital.

Unless we are prepared to come to grips with the deficit issue and make a clear determination to bring down deficits, the financial markets in Canada will remain unconvinced that we mean business. Interest rates will stay high as long as the financial markets do not have confidence in this Government. You cannot expect economic recovery to occur because you pump $2.4 billion into temporary programs, Mr. Speaker. That is a sham and it is a deceit. You have to persuade the private sector to help.

The Minister of Finance talked in glowing terms about how he wanted to co-operate. Suddenly a new age dawned on the Liberal Party. The Liberals will spur economic activity by encouraging the private sector.

Mr. Fisher: Quite right.

Mr. Thomson: For 15 years the Liberals have strangled the private sector.

Mr. Fisher: That is wrong.

Mr. Thomson: That is why the private sector is in the position in which it finds itself today, because it does not have any confidence in this Government. It does not have the necessary confidence to go out and invest. It is not only because of high interest rates that people are not willing to invest, it is because if they do, they know the Government is very likely to change the rules in midstream. The Government is a master at retroactivity and fine tuning. The Government believes in a system of grants, subsidies and bail-outs.

In most places in the world today, in western Europe, Japan and the progressive free world economies, even in the United States, Governments are beginning to understand that they cannot spend more than they take in. Governments all over the world are trying to come to grips with their problems of inflation and unemployment by reducing deficits. But Canada cannot face up to that. Canada is going in exactly the opposite direction.

Let me come back to Crown corporations for a moment. There are more than 300 of these corporations, including subsidiaries. I do not know how much was invested in these 300 corporations last year. I suspect it is something in the order of $50 billion or perhaps $100 billion. Last year they took in revenues of $31.9 billion and their expenses were $33.6 billion. That is $100 billion which is losing money. It is losing money because this Government does not want to allow the private sector to function. It says it does, but really it does not, because it does not trust the private sector. This is the fundamental cause of why we are not developing as a country. There is no feeling of trust between Government and business in this country. Government has frustrated business, Mr. Speaker, over the last 15 years and we have been paying a very heavy price for it, and our children are going to pay a heck of a price for it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, answers, comments? Debate.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that after the very thoughtful and well put together speech made by the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), there should not be one Government Member or anyone on the opposite side rising to ask about some of what I consider to be ringing condemnations of the way the Government is spending money. That is what this Bill is all about.

Mr. Cosgrove: It was inaccurate.

Mr. Mayer: If it was inaccurate, it would have been interesting to see the Minister rise and point out the inaccuracies. He had his opportunity and I would have thought that, if he was responsible in his job, particularly as the Minister of State for Finance, he would have pointed out some of those inaccuracies. However, as I said, it is interesting that no one had the courage to rise and point out any inaccuracies, if there were any. This Bill is certainly about money and about the way the Government is spending money. As the Hon. Member for Calgary South pointed out, for a $7 billion investment in PetroCan, the Government earned $10 million. That would be the same as an individual citizen of the country investing $7,000 and getting $10 back, or investing $700 and getting $1 back. If those figures are accurate, that certainly is not a good way to be spending taxpayers' money.

This is a borrowing Bill and the Opposition is not suggesting by any means that the Government should not borrow money. Those of us in the Opposition realize, I believe, that the Government does have some legitimate reasons for needing to borrow money. It is certainly accepted that the Government should go to the market to borrow money. However, any concerned person, any concerned taxpayer of the country, must ask, when he is faced with the staggering amount of money which this Government is spending whether it is being spent properly. That is the concern, certainly, which I have, as well as all Members of the Opposition. One billion dollars represents $40 from each individual in the country. This year the Government is going to be running a deficit of $30 billion. That means that on behalf of each citizen in the country it will be borrowing $1,200. If you apply that to a family of four, it means that very close to $5,000 is being borrowed on behalf of that family. Therefore, if we in the Opposition are to be responsible in doing our job in representing those people who pay the taxes, and who are eventually going to have to bail out the Government, I believe we have to stand up and ask some legitimate questions as to how the Government is spending that money.

It goes back, Mr. Speaker, even further than budgets. In the Thirty-second Parliament, we are still in the first session. I fail to understand how any operation, whether it be a firm, a household, a farm or a business, can operate by running everything together. A farm, a business or a household operates on a period of time, a monthly basis, an annual basis or some such period of time. It seems to me that when this Government was elected in 1980, had it set out to have a Throne Speech each year, had it set out to have a budget each year, had it done some planning and presented Estimates on that basis, we would have had a much more sensible and sane way of spending and collecting money. What has happened though, is that in this one session of Parliament we have had seven separate borrowing Bills. In fact, it is almost like a rerun, a record which is stuck. This Government is continually asking the Parliament of Canada to approve more borrowings. As the Hon. Member for Calgary South pointed out, if some of this money is being used—which it is—for Government subsidies and Government bail-outs, then there is a legitimate question to be asked.

When the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) was speaking this morning, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) made the comment, "If the Government does not borrow money, we are going to have economic stagnation". Surely, he does not think that the only kind of economic activity in this country which is going to produce any wealth is one which is funded by the Government? There are other ways to run a deficit than collecting more money than you spend, which is exactly the kind of deficit this Government is running. There are other ways to run a deficit. One is to simply give incentives to private industry in the form of a forgoing of taxes over a period of time, whatever the Government thinks is appropriate. That would mean that you do not collect tax dollars, and in some ways that is a very real alternative to what the Government is doing. Rather than have tax dollars collected up front, and money borrowed up front and then given back to the private sector, maybe it should not collect the money in the first place but instead try to create some incentive. I feel that that would be a better way to run a deficit. That would increase the number of people working in this country and would in turn increase the amount of wealth which we create. That is another way we can look at in terms of how we can get ourselves out of the economic stagnation we are in, rather than simply having mass Government spending and mass Government borrowing and mass transfers of money from one sector to another. It does not take an economist, as the Hon. Member for Calgary South pointed out, to understand that. It is basic, simple common sense.

I heard an amusing description the other day, Mr. Speaker. I heard it said that Christopher Columbus was the first modern-day economist. It may be an old story but it is certainly new to me. When he started out to sail, he did not know where he was going. When he got to America, which turned out to be the new world, or was defined as the new world, he did not know where he was. When he got home, he did not know where he had been. And the reason he is a modern-day economist is that he did it all on Government money. That, in some ways, is the kind of fiscal policy which this Government has. There is no plan, it seems to me, other than to run up massive deficits.

If one looks at some of the accumulated deficits which we now have, I consider it almost scary. The national debt on a per capita basis in approaching $5,000. The amount of interest we are going to pay this year as an individual taxpayer to service that debt is $705. Relating that to an average family of four, it means that that family pays close to $3,000 in taxes which goes to service past Government debt. That does not finance any new schools. It does not allow for any additional transfer payments to Provinces. It does not fund any new programs. It simply goes to pay interest on past Government borrowings.

It seems to me that we all want to get ourselves out of this situation. We are not simply standing up to criticize the Government. If you listen closely to what most Hon. Members say when they rise to speak you will hear them offer suggestions. In order to get ourselves out of this problem, the percentage of involvement by Government in the economy must be less. By doing that Canadians can be encouraged and become more productive. Surely, we must start looking at some other programs. That is one of the concerns I have as I listen to what is almost like a broken record as the Government comes back and asks for more and more money.

When a Government gets as large as this Government is, it becomes more and more important that it be run properly. When the expenditures of the Government amounted to 10 per cent of the Gross National Product, as it took that much away from the average citizen in the form of taxes, and the Government made a mistake, you could live with that or you could get around it. However, now the Government alone accounts for approximately 25 per cent of the total generation of wealth in this country, because the Government takes that away from us in the form of taxes and either redistributes it or uses it itself to spend on Crown Corporations. When mistakes are made and the Government is involved in the economy to that extent, it becomes a major problem. When you add that to what is going on in the provincial Governments, the average taxpayer in this country probably pays close to half of his total earnings to one level of Government or another in the form of taxes. It then becomes very, very important that those tax dollars are spent properly. If they are not, you simply create very large problems. It goes back to plain and simple common sense.

Last summer, Mr. Speaker, many of us were prepared to have a special committee of the House sit and look at specific Departments to see where we could save money. There have been many suggestions made as to how money could be saved on advertising. The Government has spent something like $1 million on advertising some of the proposed Crow rate changes, and I do not think that is money well spent. We would have been a lot better served had the Government introduced legislation a long time ago. We would have had a chance to examine it, debate it and focus on the issues in the House, rather than have the Government running off outside the House making statements and spending taxpayers' dollars advertising how great these proposed changes would be for the agricultural community.

We have made suggestions and they may sound as if they were minor. When you are talking about a total budget of $80 billion, a million dollars does not sound like very much. But the point is that if you start looking for savings and come up with some useful suggestions and the Government could adopt them, then there is some incentive to save. Perhaps through saving $1 million here and $1 million there we can make a dent in the total spending. Those are some of the things which concern me as a Member of this House and also concern my constituents.

We also have very great concern over the amount of money the Government is collecting in the form of fuel taxes. I come from an agricultural riding where it is very important that we be as competitive as we possibly can with other producers around the world. When you look south of the border, you find that the American farmer is paying something like 40 cents or 50 cents a gallon less than the Canadian farmer. That makes it very tough for the Canadian farmer to compete because we both have to sell to the same customers around the world. If the Government chose to reduce taxes in that area, it would show some benefits. I have suggested repeatedly in the House, and I will say again because I see the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) here and I hope he listens to me, that in Manitoba's case the federal Government collects a 7 cent a gallon tax on fuels used for the production of food on farms and then refunds it under certain conditions. I have had correspondence with at least one Minister concerning the administrative saving to the Government if it did not collect that 7 cent a gallon tax in the first place. That seems to me to make sense, yet the Government chooses not to pay much attention.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate that I have some concern—not because we do not want to see the Government borrow, we all realize the Government has to borrow money—that the Government borrow and spend the money responsibly. When we get to the level of borrowing we now have, we had better make sure that not very many mistakes are made because at that level of expenditure mistakes cause severe problems throughout the economy. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) is here and I hear him talking about wanting to fuel the private sector for recovery. One of the things we had better be careful about is that the Government does not borrow so much money that it crowds out the private sector. We all know that Canada's wage earners, Canadians in general, are great savers, but when the Government puts too much pressure on capital markets so that interest rates end up going up, that hurts the private sector, and the people who generate the real wealth in this country, the individual producers, have a tough time competing. Again, it is counterproductive.

Having outlined those few concerns I have over this Bill, Mr. Speaker, I now conclude my remarks.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak the Hon. Member invited questions from Members of the Government, so I would like to ascertain the position of the Official Opposition on a couple of areas of spending. For example, the Hon. Member has indicated his concern over deficits and Government spending. Yet we have seen today in Question Period the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. LaSalle) and the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) complaining that the Government is terminating expenditures relating to the $3,000 grant to home buyers.

Mr. McKenzie: They said there would be enough money until the end of May.

Mr. Cosgrove: I am confused. Who is speaking for the Party? Are the two Members I mentioned expressing the wishes of the Party? Is the Hon. Member? Then there is the issue of the Special Recovery Capital Projects announced in the budget, which we urge as a way of generating private sector involvement in construction through the expenditure of $2.4 billion to buy services in the private sector and put projects in place. We have on the one hand the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) saying that program is a myth and on the other we have the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga), the President of the Conservative Party, asking whether there are funds for his constituency in that program.

Now, who is speaking for the Conservative Party, the Hon. Member who is the President of the Party, the Hon. Member who is the financial critic, the Hon. Member who just finished speaking, or the Hon. Member for Joliette and the Hon. Member for Mackenzie who have both asked for additional expenditures?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my remarks, I pointed out that the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) had made I thought, some very ringing condemnations of Government policy. I would have liked to have seen the Hon. Minister, if he had some concerns over that speech, ask the Hon. Member some questions.

In regard to the two questions he asked me, it was my understanding that there was going to be enough money in that home ownership grant fund so that people could apply until the end of May. Personally, I thought it was a good program. Now, if the Minister wants to be fair and reflect upon what I said, I did not say that the Government should not borrow money. I said the Government should borrow money to be used prudently. It seems to me that if you tell a Canadian that he can apply for funding under a certain program and there are enough funds until the end of May, and we then find that there are areas across the country where a person has applied and cannot get funding, that is an inconsistency in the Government's program. We should do everything we can to see that it is cleared up. There is no contradiction in that. What I said was that I want to see the Government spend money prudently and responsibly.

Referring to the $2.4 billion for the Special Recovery Projects, again I do not see anything indigenous to that Program that is bad. I am not familiar with some of the specifics, but I suspect that there are certain areas which will not be of much advantage to my riding. Surely Members of Parliament cannot be criticized for rising in the House of Commons to inquire of the Minister responsible what kind of programs are available to their constituents so that they can advise them on how to take advantage of some of the Government's programs.

Mr. Cosgrove: Then I would ask the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, whether he is taking the position that the Special Recovery Program, which is the centrepiece of the budget and is created to assist private sector job creation, may be a good program, because he says that he is not familiar with specifics in his own riding. However, if he offers the observation that it may be that it is doing some good, does he not detect a contradiction in that observation or agreement with what the last Hon. Member who spoke, his colleague, said in that those expenditures, although perhaps contributing toward the deficit, are at the same time an investment in Canada's future and a benefit to future Canadians, something that is of concern to the Hon. Member who last spoke? Is there not that trade-off, that moneys well spent on infrastructure and public works in Canada become of benefit to Canadians in the future and they should therefore share in that public expenditure?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the Minister, but the problem which I see, and the problem to which the Hon. Member for Calgary South referred, is that surely inducements should be offered to Canadians to become productive, other than grants and subsidies. I have heard grants and subsidies described as taking a quart of blood from one arm and transferring it to the other through a transfusion process and spilling half of it on the way over. If we are to consider generating some incentive in the private sector, why should taxes be so high in the first place? Some of the additional money should be left with the private citizen. He will not go into his basement and burn it at night. He will recirculate it by buying a television set or taking a holiday in Canada. He will spend it as well as the Government and, I would argue, in most cases better. The Government, wherever possible, should leave the money with the citizens who generate it and encourage people to invest and individuals to be productive rather than take it all away in the form of taxation which, to my mind, discourages production and makes the country less productive.

If we consider what has happened when these big deficits have been running in conjunction with a very high rate of taxation, we find that we have actually had negative growth in the last few years. If we are to have a bigger tax base, we must encourage production.

Those are some of my concerns over the Government's exclusive focus. I am not saying that I am totally or at least partially condemning the Government for using grants, but what I am saying is that it is time the Government started considering other ways of encouraging some incentives and production in the private sector.

Mr. Cosgrove: I would like to ask the Hon. Member one final question, Mr. Speaker. The Special Recovery Program, the $4.8 billion Program, is specifically created to provide a tax incentive to industry for research and development, export financing and resource development. One half, or $2.4 billion of the budget which will result from changes to the income tax provisions, is specifically designed to give investment incentives to Canadians, for example in share purchase options from small Canadian firms. I would like to know whether the Hon. Member is saying that at least that part of the budget is well directed toward helping Canadians, if it is not in the category of grants.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, some of the incentives are excellent, to the extent that they will be real incentives and Canadians will take advantage of them to purchase shares and stocks in Canadian companies. Canada's record of investing in the private sector is rather dismal when compared to that of the United States. In fact, on a per capita basis—and I think the figures are still accurate—Canadians are willing to invest more in the United States than they are in their own country. I suggest that it goes back to at least one of the problems to which the Hon. Member for Calgary South referred, involving the uncertain business climate which the Government has created through everything it has done on a retroactive basis.

The Minister made reference to the provision in the budget for R and D. I do not have the budget document in front of me, but I think I can almost quote it. At the end of the section on R and D, it essentially states that Canada's tax provisions for R and D compare very favourably with those in other countries around the world. Essentially, the Government will not do anything. Again, I do not have the text in front of me and I am sorry that I do not. I would be glad to obtain it, send it over to the minister when I conclude my remarks. However, if I remember correctly, in its budget document the Government did not do anything to stimulate research and development in this country.

Mr. Cosgrove: One-hundred and eighty million dollars.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on the borrowing Bill because of some of the events which have been occurring in recent months and years and as late as yesterday, and which will be occurring over the next number of weeks and months. I want to relate borrowings by the Government for transportation purposes to the developments which have been taking place and which will continue.

I am not an economist nor a chartered accountant, however, it has always been my understanding that when Governments borrowed, they borrowed for specific purposes. I notice that the borrowing authority Bill does not tell us where the money is going in terms of specific and individual items. However, there is no doubt that much of those borrowings will go toward covering what could be called subsidies or direct grants. Much of it will also be devoted to capital investment purposes.

It has always been my understanding that Government revenues and expenditures incurred through borrowing used for such purposes as subsidies and grants to pay for things which bring no return and from which it is not possible to recover the moneys, are called dead weight debts. Those borrowings must be repaid out of future tax revenues of the Government. However, borrowings which are used for capital investment, whether it be airports, railways, seaways or seaports, can and should be called self-liquidating debts, in the sense that if money is provided for those purposes as repayable loans, they become self-liquidating debts. Or, if they are provided as a capital investment by the taxpayer, who originally borrowed the money through the Government, then surely the Government has a responsibility on behalf of the taxpayer to ensure that there is a return on the capital investment.

Does Your Honour know of anyone who would put up funds for capital investment without taking equity ownership, debentures, or bonds from which there was a return of interest and dividends? I do not know of any self-respecting investor or so-called free enterpriser who would hand out his own money or anyone else's without receiving some opportunity for return on the investment, or at least being eligible for a return on the investment if it proved to be a successful one.

I am sure we could study many other areas of the economy, but we should consider the history in this country of borrowing funds for transportation purposes which were turned over to entrepreneurs for capital investments from which the people of Canada received little or no return. I suggest that it makes good, sound business sense that if one borrows money to invest in capital improvements, the money is used to get a return on that investment.

Since 1881, and probably before then for canals and small railways in central Canada, the people of Canada have provided capital investment for privately owned railroads as well as for land, forest, mineral rights and cash grants. They have provided funds for capital investment but did not own it.

We provided funds to take over bankrupt capital investments, such as in the formation of the Canadian National Railways. We took over five bankrupt railways, and while the banks and the bondholders got their money back, the taxpayers of Canada paid those debts and interest charges for the next 40 years approximately.

Incidentally, Canadian National was not formed because the Government of the day believed in a Crown corporation or publicly owned railway, but to bail out the bankrupt railways of Grand Trunk, Grand Trunk Northern, Grand Trunk Pacific, Canadian Northern and others. In the 1950s, 1960s and 1970s, those debts were transferred from Canadian National to the Government of Canada. In recent years there has been the odd year when Canadian National has paid a dividend to the single shareholder, the Government of Canada, because it was relieved of all these old debts and some recent ones and was able to show operating profits out of which it could pay a dividend and some income taxes. At least there was a beginning to some returns being made on that investment. I believe that is good beginning, but in recent years we have continued to hand money over for capital improvements or subsidies for which we have received no return.

In fact, some money was borrowed for these branch line subsidies. Not only did the railways expect the money for those branch line subsidies but they expected a return on those subsidies. In other words they expect a return for them on the taxpayers' money for the branch line subsidy.

The theory behind that subsidy, which included maintenance and depreciation, was that the railways would repair the branch lines. However, they did not do so, but kept the money. The Government introduced an additional program called branch line rehabilitation. A few hundred million dollars have gone into that program. The railways expect to get a 21 per cent return on that capital investment which the people of Canada gave them. That return is on the taxpayers' money, not the railroads'. They expect to get another 20 per cent for what is euphemistically called overhead.

A bureaucrat who appeared in front of the Transport Committee told me that overhead was the cost of money. I am aware that interest rates are high but I did not know that money cost 20 per cent these days. Overhead not only includes the cost of money, it includes the president's salary, the cost of the water that goes into his whiskey, the management costs and so on. The felony is now compounded by the request for money which is to be borrowed under this Bill. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has indicated that he wants to give $725 million a year to the two major railroads to cover their alleged losses on transporting grain and to cover the federal Government's contribution to capital improvements. The Minister does not say what the subsidy will be for their so-called losses from hauling grain and how much it will be for capital investment. In other words, the $725 million a year provided under this borrowing Bill and the money provided under future borrowing Bills will be sent to the railroads in the form of a cheque to be spent as they please. I know that the Minister talks about guarantees of railway performance, but he has already had for some years all the authority he needs under the National Transportation Act, the Railway Act and the Canadian Pacific Railway Act to require that performance under the law. Additional so-called guarantees are superfluous at best.

No private enterprise, bank, or lending institution would provide investment capital without getting some kind of assurance of return on that investment. How much longer will successive Liberal and Tory Governments put up funds for capital investment on behalf of the people of Canada and include in those public funds what amounts to almost a 40 per cent profit? While I am not against a reasonable profit, I challenge anyone to tell me that a 40 per cent profit is reasonable. No self-respecting free enterpriser would suggest that. He would probably say it was exorbitant.

We have an alternative use for the money that has been proposed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). We suggest that out of that $930 million per year, $380 million would go directly to the railroads to pay the real shortfall between the statutory grain rates and their actual out-of-pocket costs. We would not add 21 per cent return on investment on those subsidies for the benefit of the railways, or 20 per cent more for so-called overhead. They would be reimbursed for the actual out-of-pocket costs which include maintenance, depreciation, wages and salaries and fuel. The remaining $550 million is for capital investment. Assuming that it is divided equally between CN and CP, the Government's equity ownership on behalf of the people of Canada and Canadian National automatically increases by that amount, which I believe is a $1,000 per equity ownership share.

Of the money that is being turned over to Canadian Pacific for capital investment purposes, which is being borrowed on behalf of the people of Canada, not one nickel or return is available to the people of Canada on that investment. Surely that is some kind of economic stupidity. Surely it makes sound economic business sense to take equity ownership in return for whatever we give to each railway. Any interest or dividends that are paid year after year would come back as a return on that investment to the Government for the people of Canada. That type of practice should be expected of any operation, whether private or public. In approximately 50 years' time the return on that investment makes that debt not a Government expense or a total dead weight on the people of Canada but an investment which self liquidates. In fact, there may even be an odd occasion when a profit is made on the investment as well as an annual return. I do not understand how any so-called private enterprise Government—and they have been doing it in the country for 117 years—can fail to at least blush when it continues to borrow money for capital investment purposes for which there is not even an opportunity for a return on the investment.

I am just an innocent stubble-jumping prairie boy. I do not pretend to know the ins and outs of high finance, economics and so forth, but I still cannot get it through my head what kind of economic sense there is in what the Government is trying to promote. What kind of rationale is there in borrowing money to give to someone else for a capital expenditure and receiving no return on the investment? I do not understand it.

If these birds over here or the ones over there had done that with their own money, they would all be on welfare. They rise and complain about the big deficit, the poor taxpayer and the national debt, but who has been borrowing money since 1867? Who has been handing out billions of dollars in the last 117 years for capital projects, both publicly and privately-owned, with no provision for a return on those investments? Who has been doing that?

It was not any socialist. It was the Grits and Tories, the great free enterprisers or protectors of property! Whose property? The taxpayers of Canada borrow the money. It was given to someone else for capital improvements, which meant property. Do the taxpayers of Canada have any interest in or return on the property? No, the property belongs to somebody else. What about the property rights of taxpayers for the funds they borrowed and gave to Canadian Pacific for capital investment on which they will receive no return? They have no say in the expenditure of those moneys. They have no shares, no dividends or no interest. What kind of economic stupidity is that? What kind of a con game is that on the taxpayers of Canada, and also in this instance on the grain producers of western Canada?

For the same amount of money the Minister of Transport proposes to expend, we would increase equity ownership in Canadian National. We would also start taking common share equity voting stock ownership in Canadian Pacific Limited in order to have some dividends and interest in return for the investment. Surely that is the proper way to expend the borrowings any Government of any political stripe has to make frequently, in fact every fiscal year.

Concerning the matter of capital investment to improve our rail systems in western Canada, although everything in and east of Manitoba, had been left out, the Minister said that for anything over 31.5 million tonnes a year the farmers will pay all the freight costs. When he was asked yesterday whether he would lift the ceiling, he said that if farmers shipped 41.5 million tonnes, it would cost the federal Government $1 billion more. He said that he could not do that, that he could not lift the ceiling. But, he is prepared to allow it to cost grain producers by 1991 $1 billion a year more. He borrows this money, on which there is no return, to hand it out, and then passes the cost back to grain producers and taxpayers generally. I hope we will have some answers. We want to know why this insane economic spending has been going on and for what purpose the borrowings will be used.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I have only two questions for the Hon. Member. First, I would like to have an honest answer from him as to whether or not he read all the budget papers which were tabled on budget night.

Some Hon. Members: Have you?

Mr. Flis: I keep hearing from the Hon. Member that the budget does not tell us where the money is going, so I would like an honest answer to that question. Yes, I have read the budget papers, in answer to the gentlemen opposite who yelled out the question.

Second, if the Hon. Member went into a restaurant and purchased a meal for $6, would he want equity in that restaurant? I am sick and tired of hearing the same argument we have heard twenty times over in the last week. What the NDP is comparing with equity when the Government is subsidizing something is similar to going to a restaurant and purchasing a meal for $6 and wanting a $5 equity in the restaurant. That meal may cost $1, but the other $5 goes to paying the taxes, heating, lighting and wages of the waiters and waitresses. I am asking the Hon. Member whether he would want a $5 equity in the restaurant for a $6 meal? Those are the only two questions I have.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's first question, I have not read all the budget papers.

Mr. Flis: I appreciate your honesty.

Mr. Benjamin: I would be surprised if anyone, apart from the Hon. Member, has done so. All I was saying is that it would be nice if there were a breakdown in this little three-paragraph Bill as to where the $14.7 billion will go. That is all.

On the matter of going into a restaurant and buying a $6 meal, and whether I would want a $5 share in the ownership of the restaurant, let me indicate to the Hon. Member that he misses my point entirely. I think all other Hon. Members understood what I said, but perhaps he did not. I said that out of the money the Minister of Transport proposes to expend, $380 million is in direct subsidy for the so-called shortfall in hauling grain. That is for operating costs. It is like the cost of producing the meal in the restaurant to which the Hon. Member referred.

Mr. Althouse: That is for the meal.

Mr. Benjamin: Right, that is for the meal. If I were buying that $6 meal in a restaurant and the owner said that he wanted $10 for the meal, $4 of which was to help fix the building, I would want $4 worth of common shares in the restaurant for the capital investment portion of that price. Similarly, in this instance $380 million is a direct subsidy for operating costs or out-of-pocket expenses. There is no equity involved in that. The other $550 million in capital investment would be like the additional $4 on the restaurant meal. Surely it is only reasonable and makes good sense to say that we should have equity shares for capital expenditures. I thought the Hon. Member understood that. I thought it was a normal investment and spending procedure of any individual, financial institution or certainly of Governments. That is all I was saying.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. We will return to questions in a moment.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath)—Fisheries—Negotiations on restructuring East Coast industry. (b) Newfoundland proposal; the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway)—Income Tax—Auditing of farmers' income—Request for moratorium. (b) Request for limitation on assessment of back taxes; the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche)—Nuclear Armaments—U.S. and U.S.S.R. offers to reduce nuclear arsenals. (b) Proposal to hold summit meeting.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-151, An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment with regard to this whole question of equity. The Hon. Member opposite indicated that if you went to a restaurant to have a meal, a New Democrat would ask for $5 equity. The problem with that statement is that it shows that Liberal Member has no conception of the difference between day-to-day operating expenses and investment. The whole point of asking for equity in a company has to do with investment. If the Party opposite knew the difference between investment and day-to-day operating expenses, perhaps the economy of this country would be in better shape.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-151, An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, seeks to borrow an additional $14.7 billion. Of this amount, $2 billion may be carried over into future years. The Government is thus seeking a cushion of $2 billion for this year plus $2 billion to be used either this year or in future years. It is more than a cushion. It sounds as if they were looking for the whole chesterfield.

The Government has come to Parliament seven times in this session to seek more borrowing authority. We have had Bills C-30, C-59, C-111, C-125, C-128, C-143 and C-151. This clearly indicates that the Government has not paid any attention to the Auditor General's statement that the Government has no control over expenditures. The Auditor General went to great lengths on the problem of the borrowings by the 300 or 400 Crown corporations that we have. There is absolutely no accountability from Crown corporations. I will go into that in a little more detail in a moment.

The Government's projected financial requirements between 1983-1984 and 1986-87 total $93 billion. Parliament is in for a steady stream of large borrowing Bills over the next few years. It clearly indicates that the Liberal Party's solution to any problem is to spend more and borrow more.

Financial requirements are only part of the picture. Many Crown corporations are able to raise debt in the financial markets without seeking borrowing authority from Parliament. That is something we in the Conservative Party oppose. When we were in Government, we took steps to bring in some control. Unfortunately this was dropped when the Liberals were returned to office.

I now want to deal with the federal Government's financing in perspective. There will be Government project spending of $100.1 billion on a national accounts basis and a deficit of $31.3 billion on a public accounts basis. The gross national debt last March was about $160 billion. Interest on the debt will cost Canadian taxpayers $17.6 billion this year. On a per capita basis, Government spending this year will amount to $4,000 per man, woman and child in Canada. This compares to only $500 per capita in 1967-68.

The cost of interest on public debt this year will equal $700 per capita and $1,800 per taxpayer. That is a tremendous load on the Canadian public. One tax dollar in three is used to service the debt.

In the Fall of 1979, Treasury Board found that it was faced with cost over-runs on major capital projects totalling $1.1 billion. Placed in perspective, these over-runs could finance the construction of 18 CN towers or 66 new fighter aircraft. This has been going on for years. There are cost over-runs on practically every project in which the Government gets involved. No cost benefit analysis is conducted and there are no proper controls on these projects.

Including operating deficits and capital expenditures, Mirabel airport to date has cost the taxpayers more than $700 million. This was to build an airport that was way ahead of its time, was not required and was aptly named a white elephant. That sum of money is the equivalent of giving 800,000 people a free round-trip ticket from Saint John's Newfoundland to Vancouver, British Columbia.

The federal Government has an information and advertising budget of $245 million. It does not need any such budget. Most of this advertising is an absolute waste. In 1981, the federal Government spent $13.1 million on food, booze and entertainment. That is the equivalent of more than one million bottles of liquor. Since this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came into office in 1968 he has been repeating the same thing every couple of years. They are empty, meaningless statements. I will quote what he has said in the past.

The Liberal Government has a history of paying lip service to restraint. In August, 1969, in announcing the first Liberal restraint program, the Prime Minister told Canadians that, "We would be on the road to financial disaster if nothing was done to bring spending under control". Why does he not do something about it? This Government should do something about that. In June, 1975, in announcing the second Liberal restraint program, the then Finance Minister told Canadians, "The Government proposes to set an example of restraint . . . by imposing strict control over its activities and programs".

In spite of periodic references to restraint, Government spending has climbed by 554 per cent on a public accounts basis since 1968. Any commitment on the part of the Liberal Government to restraint, based on past evidence, is nothing more than insincere posturing.

We in Manitoba get the double whammy. We have the same problem with the NDP Government there. Because of the NDP budget deficit and uncontrolled spending, the Manitoba financial rating has dropped. Manitoba's financial position has deteriorated significantly over the last two years, a major New York ratings house suggested yesterday as it lowered the Province's credit rating. The Province has budgeted for an equally large deficit this year. Government spending will increase by almost 10 per cent this year after adjusting for inflation. The credit rating has been downgraded because of excessive spending and excessive borrowing. Manitoba, under an NDP Government, has one of the largest debts in Canada. In 1969 we had a balanced budget. The Conservative Government was defeated in 1969 and the NDP took over. Prior to 1969 there were proper financial controls. Once the NDP got in, uncontrolled spending began. That is why Manitoba is in this mess today.

Over the past 15 years, Government spending has risen in an unprecedented way. On a national accounts basis where data is comparable over time, spending has climbed from $12.6 billion in 1968-69 to an estimated $100.2 billion in 1983-84, an increase of 693 per cent. On the more commonly used public accounts basis, spending has increased from $12.3 billion in 1968-69 to $89.8 billion, an increase of 554 per cent. That is astronomical and insane. A significant portion of the increase has happened since re-election of the Liberals in Feburary, 1980. Relative to fiscal 1979-80, spending has risen by 78 per cent on a public accounts basis or 84 per cent on a national accounts basis. Spending this year will go up by 12 per cent. Why will spending go up by 12 per cent? It should not be going up at all. Spending on a national accounts basis is now equal to 26 per cent of Canada's Gross National Product. This compares to 21 per cent only four years ago. In 1982, borrowing by the federal Government accounted for 51 per cent of all net new security issues placed in Canada. Borrowing of that magnitude must clearly have an effect on the supply and demand for money and thus on the interest rates that must be borne by the private sector. The horror stories go on, Mr. Speaker.

The investment community does not trust a Government that continues to live so far beyond its means. It does not want to hold a currency that continues to be debased by excessive Government borrowing. As a consequence, the dollar has fallen, driving up the cost of living in Canada. Interest rates remain quite high as the Government attempts to support the dollar. Job-creating capital investment has gone elsewhere. A classic example of that was the National Energy Program which almost destroyed the Canadian oil industry, lost some 60,000 jobs in Canada and drove oil rigs out of the country. The Government still does not get the message. The mad spending goes on. The mad borrowing continues. It does not learn from its past errors and mistakes. It just carries on with the same ridiculous procedure.

I mentioned earlier that there is no proper accounting by Crown corporations. They are simply handed money and, as the Auditor General says, they take the money and run. I want to read the following passage from the Auditor General's Report of 1982:

> It may be helpful in visualizing the scale of the problem to think of the whole group as an enormous iceberg floating lazily in the foggy Atlantic; silent, majestic, awesome. The public tends to see only the upper portions . . . the giants like CNR, Petro-Can, CBC . . . The great bulk of the iceberg below the surface is less spectacular, less likely to attract public interest, less likely to receive the attention of Parliament, yet costly to taxpayers.

Of course, the Auditor General's Reports have read the same every year for many, many years. It is unfortunate that more attention is not paid to their recommendations.

Dealing with entrenchment of state control, the creation of the multi-billion dollar holding company, the Canada Development Investment Corporation—not to be confused with Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation—belies any serious commitment the Liberals may profess to have regarding greater accountability for Crown corporations. The CDIC was created in May, 1982, by Order in Council. Six months and 17 Orders in Council later, the CDIC has emerged as a huge holding company for Government corporate interests with no accountability to Parliament and a wide open mandate to intervene anywhere in the Canadian economy. One of the first things the present Prime Minister did when he took office in 1968 was to remove parliamentary control over Government expenditures. Any politician who plays games that do away with proper accountability or control over the public purse is a very irresponsible individual.

The new corporation has been granted a $500,000 interest-free loan from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and the Minister responsible, Senator Austin, claims that he can commandeer the profits from Teleglobe, which now go to the CRF, and use them as a source of operating funds for the CDIC. That is a great accounting procedure, Mr. Speaker.

Canadair has hit the headlines recently. It will be looking to Parliament for about $2.5 billion to bail it out. In December of 1976, I told the Liberal Government that it should—> —quit hiding behind the cloak of secrecy—

—and make a complete revelation of all details with regard to Canadair, the Government-owned aircraft manufacturing company, including the $50 million loan guaranteed by the Government. I was concerned than about the $50 million. That has gone up to the $2.5 billion that they are looking for now. Back in 1976, I pointed out that:

> —Canadair has to sell 500 aircraft just to recover the investment let alone cost of money over the intervening period . . . The Gulfstream Two which is the obvious competitor to this aircraft has established a strong position in the market but sales are well below the 200 level.

In light of those figures, I pointed out:

> Where is the Canadair Ltd. going to find the market for 500 aircraft?

That question is still relevant today. Are we to continue to prop up Canadair? When they come to us looking for this $2.5 billion, we will have to find out if they have a market or if they have sales for 500 aircraft. They will probably have to sell 1,000 aircraft to break even now. But at that time, the Minister, who is the present Energy Minister (Mr. Chrétien) and was the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce at that time, always gave us great assurances that there would be no problem with Canadair, and he ridiculed me and my colleagues for even bothering to raise the question. We warned them in 1976 that they were on a disaster course, but they laughed at us. Now the laugh is on the Canadian taxpayer.

Canadian people are quite concerned about a recent speech made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) in which he points out that he is going to turn Canada into a French state. In his speech he points out that the cost will be no object. No one is to question the cost of turning Canada into a French state. He goes into a fair amount of detail in his speech but we do not know how much it will cost, we do not know what effect it will have on English-speaking Canadians, and we should be entitled to have a White Paper or a Green Paper or some kind of an explanation from the Government on how much it intends to spend on turning Canada into a French state.

The Minister in his speech talks about the need for more French universities across the country. I do not know how many more are needed, what the cost will be, where the money will come from, where they will be located. Our universities at present are all suffering from the current economic conditions. They can hardly keep going. But this Minister says that he will build more universities across the country. It would be very interesting to know if any cost benefit analysis has been done in regard to turning Canada into a French state.

Another cause of considerable concern across the country is the fantastic cost of the language training programs to date. About $4 billion has been spent on language training. The majority of Canadians will go along with a reasonable amount of language training at a reasonable expenditure, but $4 billion just for language training is only a very small part of the total cost of making Canada a fully bilingual country.

The double standards used by the Liberal Government in its language training program is of concern to us. Certain people, friends of the Government, will be sent to the south of France for language training. Other individuals from the Government are sent to Toronto for language training and have apartments rented for them. One recent case was brought to light where an individual was sent to Toronto to learn the French language. The Government rented her an apartment for $845 a month, gave her an expense account of $600 a month, plus her salary while she was in Toronto for 11 months. I have other contacts here in Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, individuals who have had difficulties learning the French language. The Government will not give them language training in the Government schools and they will have to go to night school and pay for their own language training.

I could go on and on about the fantastic costs of the Metric Commission and their extravagant expenditures and how their budget has risen 100 per cent this year to a grand total of over $25 million. I would suggest that the Government should start reading the Auditor General's report, never mind coming back here every couple of months to borrow billions and billions of dollars more.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Are there any questions, comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain).

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I am compelled to make the remarks I am about to make. I have to say as a Member of Parliament of Canada that I have been betrayed. It cannot be described in any less forceful term than that.

When I first became a Member of the House of Commons in the Fall of 1972 I was concerned about the fact that we were embarked upon a bilingual program. I wanted to know what was to be the impact upon my constituency in particular and upon Canadians in general. I was asked to attend a meeting with the then Member for Moncton, the then Member for Saint John, the then Member for Fundy-Royal and the then Member and still Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie). We met with Mr. Spicer who was then the gentleman in charge of the bilingual program for this nation. We asked several questions. First, how was it determined that a particular position in the Public Service would be classified as bilingual? It was not exactly a fair question at that time and Mr. Spcier could not directly answer it. I then asked whether he could tell me that unilingual communities would be categorized as those requiring bilingual employees in the federal service. The answer was an unqualified no. My next question was, if there was a competition for a particular job within the Public Service of Canada, will language prohibit the employment of any person applying for public work? The answer was: no, because there would be language training provided. If the applicant were approved and if additional language training were required it would be available to the gentleman or the lady who applied for the job before employment. Another question asked was: would language have anything to do with advancement in the service of those already employed? The answer was, no. The policy of the Government was that if there is to be advancement and if bilingualism were a requirement for advancement, then language training shall be available.

It was not very long until the government welshed on the first statement that language training would, in fact, be available for an applicant who had the merits to take the job for which he had applied. The first step and the qualification of Mr. Spicer's statement was that the individual would have to take an aptitude test. If the person failed to pass that aptitude test there would be no language training. Regardless of merit, if the individual did not have the aptitude for bilingualism, he or she shall not get an appointment. That was a very serious move away from the formula outlined by Mr. Spicer.

The next step now in place is that you must be bilingual to apply for some jobs and you will not get one if you are not. The language resolution of 1973 followed that. Again, we were assured the guidelines that had been outlined to us by Mr. Spicer would, in fact, remain in place under that resolution. That, of course, had been practised up to that point in time to a degree that I was quite satisfied the resolution did not infringe upon any statements made to me as a new Member of Parliament by Mr. Spicer. I was the idiot who then betrayed myself and my constituents. I voted for that resolution, and for that I apologize to Canadians, whether they live in St. André or St. Stephen, Fredericton or Edmundston. I do not care what their principal language is, people are entitled to opportunity for public employment. They should in no circumstances be denied employment regardless of their native or mother tongue. That is an injustice to any person young or old who applies for a job in a professedly bilingual country.

When it comes to advancement, I do not have time in the 20 minutes allocated to me to enumerate the denials of language training for those who applied. I do not have time to list the extravagances of some of those who did get language training and the cost incurred, but I am concerned that in the Town of St. Stephen there are now three National Revenue postings which may or may not have been filled and which are declared bilingual. Only one is available to a unilingual individual. I am ashamed that I voted for that resolution. One of the applicants for those National Revenue jobs went to see the RCMP. He assumed he was talking to a personnel officer and he was told by that officer that if he was not bilingual he should not bother to apply. I challenge anyone here in his House or anyone who reads my statement to say that I am against a bilingual program in this nation of Canada. But I say that bilingualism has to be for all Canadians. Employment has to be open to all Canadians whether they come from St. André or St. Stephen. That makes no difference to me, but the language training has to be there and the merit system has to be in place. People in this nation have a right, which I thought was extended and explained in 1973, to apply and expect to be accepted for employment regardless of language qualifications.

When this is carried to the extreme, we see instances of people who are already in the employ of the Government of Canada, most of whom are over 50 years of age and some of whom are over 60 years of age, employed by the Department of Transport for security purposes in the City of Fredericton at the city airport who are advised they shall be released from their job four months down the road because they are not bilingual. That is why I feel I was betrayed and they are betrayed by this Government.

There is no example in the annals of this nation of more obvious betrayal. Why is it that there are now several research positions in the field of agriculture left vacant? Have they been declared bilingual? I could not care less what the mother tongue of an individual is so long as he can study the research projects and come up with the merits that qualify him for employment. I could not care less. But he has to be good, and it should not be language that should categorize him.

I appeal to this Government to come back to the promise it made, first through a very highly respected gentleman, Mr. Spicer, and second through a resolution that was passed by this House, one for which I voted, and for that I apologize to all Canadians, not just those in my constituency. That promise was with regard to the pattern of bilingualism intended, and that is the pattern which I can support. I cannot support the automatic disqualification for linguistic capability on its own. I cannot support the lack of opportunity for advancement for linguistic reasons alone. Train the people and advance the people if the merit is there. That is the system we must have.

It was rather interesting to listen to the last speaker from the New Democratic Party. If a fellow were going to finance this country on the basis that he proposed, you would have to get the Canada goose to lay golden eggs. It sounded to me as though he had about as much economic sense as a computerized, vocalized teddy bear.

There are a lot of items on which I would like to expand with respect to the borrowing Bill, with respect to the budget and with respect to Canadians as a whole. Amongst those things I am going to ask a question or give notice of a question to which I hope we will get an answer in this debate, the budget debate, or in some form. The proposed changes in the Crow rate structure which pertain primarily, superficially at least, to the West, also have economic impact on the East. We never did get an explanation of the impact on the East. We never did get an evaluation of the increment in cost which would accrue to the feeders in eastern Canada, and particularly to the feeders east of Montreal and including all of the Atlantic Provinces. There is an impact and I want to know if there is any intention on the part of this Government to recognize that increment in cost which will be passed on by the change in the Crow rate as it relates to eastern Canadian poultry, hog and beef operations. We are entitled to that answer in a definitive cost study basis, Mr. Speaker. Let us have it because we cannot assess it since we do not even have the legislation or the firm proposition. Maybe the press has, but this House does not.

We are prepared in this House for a request to vote for a borrowing Bill, the consequences of which are shameful in this nation, as far as I am concerned, but it does pose some questions. You and I, Mr. Speaker, happen to be representing constituencies which need some money. We need some money from this make-work salvage operation which is coming up in the potato industry, and we need it very badly. One could extend that further if one went farther down the river westward into Quebec from my home, eastward into Nova Scotia. We need some money in the apple industry. The apple industry is facing the results of what I consider to be an error, although I am not overly critical of this. It is the root stock evaluation for climatic purposes. The apple industry in eastern Canada planted a root they never should have planted, and grafted onto trees which were supposed to bring profit, and which have not turned out to be. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that that root should have been evaluated in the climatic conditions in which it was planted. It never was evaluated. It was released for production. It was sold and it was multiplied in this country. Unfortunately, we now have some apple growers who have lost up to 50 per cent of their total orchard as a result of replanting with a root stock which would not stand the climatic conditions of our country.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said, "Well, if anyone would declare it a disaster, we would do something about it. If the Provinces would put up a little money, we would do something about it". However, Mr. Speaker, that has been a historical federal responsibility, and anyone who suggests that it is not a disaster when crop damage as high as 50 per cent takes place in any aspect of agricultural operations is wrong. That, Sir, is disastrous.

However, the real disaster at the moment is in the potato industry. It has always been cyclical ever since that crop was first planted in a commercial way in Atlantic Canada or, for that matter, in any other part of Canada. Its returns have been so variable that some people have said that you might just as well shake dice as plant potatoes. And to some degree that is correct, with all the variables which exist. But this time we got hit with both barrels. We got hit by weather which caused the crop, first, not to store well and, second, even if it stored, to be graded so that it became virtually unmarketable. The return in your constituency, Mr. Speaker, and mine, dropped down to as low as 15 per cent or 20 per cent of the cost of production of the crop.

There are several steps which the federal Government should take. I propose that it should move now. I would ask the help of any sympathetic Hon. Members on the Government side of the House to encourage Government to act now. The cropping season is just around the corner. The steps which the federal Government should take are, first, to put some of this make-work money, some of this pump-priming money, into the Farm Credit Corporation to be lent at reasonable rates to those farmers who need assistance; second, to defer the payment of the money which has been lent for the storable crops program. That would enable some farmers to plant a new crop. Third, and this is the last step which I would recommend, the Government should sit down with the provincial Governments and in fact come up with a program which is supportive of both the apple industry and the potato industry. But it must do it now because now is the time to plant. This is the week of decision, and if that decision is not reached, if there is not co-operation between federal Government, provincial Government, farm organization and banks—and they are all ready to talk—if that decision is not reached by next week, Mr. Speaker, you and I know that there will be people who should have help who cannot plant another crop.

I appeal to the people of responsibility, Mr. Speaker: you have less than a week to make that decision! I am not talking entirely about young farmers who have over-financed or over-borrowed. I am talking about farmers of every age in the business, from farmers with less than ten years of experience to farmers with more than 40 years of being self-supporting in the agricultural field and producing that crop. They are all dependent upon the degree of damage from mother nature, in storage, excessive moisture and distortion of the tubers. Every category of farmer in this instance is in very, very serious trouble. I cannot over-emphasize the need and the urgency of an immediate decision.

There is another place for some pump-priming money. Some of that could be put into make-work projects in the coastal region of my constituency. I have submitted on an annual basis, except for this year—it seemed to be an exercise in futility; the list must still be on file and nothing has been done about it—a list of port improvements, small craft harbour improvements. I have submitted up to 30 names, some of which have never even been inspected by the Department of Public Works. It is not their fault. There was no use inspecting them because the Department of Fisheries did not give them any money, and this is the time when money could and should be spent either for a dual purpose or for a single purpose, whatever the case may be. It would be for a dual purpose in the Town of St. Andrews, where a proper harbour facility for fishing and tourism would add a great deal to the economy of that community. The same could be said for St. George. It could be spent in the Sand Point wharf where it was promised three years ago that if the tuna packing plant in that community would triple its capabilities, the Government of Canada would in fact extend the wharf to accommodate the necessary ships to bring products in and take other New Brunswick products out. That has not come through yet, Mr. Speaker, and that wharf is cluttered up. We are losing business. Canadian workers could be at work but now they are going to East Port, Winter Port and other ports along the main coast. We are losing business because the Government has not kept its word. And it is not just the tuna packing plant. There are products being shipped from the Atlantic coast of this continent which will not go through Saint John or Chatham or Rimouski, but would in fact go through Sand Point Port in Champlain Industrial Park in Charlotte County.

There is a place where some of that money could be put, and not only will it make work but it will make continuing work and bring on-going revenue to those communities. I could read the list of small craft harbours ad infinitum. Dipper Harbour, they are: Chocolate Cove, Whale Cove, Seal Cove, Ingalls Head. These harbours have been neglected. Let us put some of this money to work to make work where it will have lasting and productive value. These are the things, I believe, Mr. Speaker, which we have to consider. That would be a constructive allocation of make-work money.

There are other projects in the Province of New Brunswick which deserve attention as well, many others, but the ones referred to are the ones which would be revenue-producing and work-producing for the long term. Money could also be spent on tourist development throughout the whole Province of New Brunswick. The provincial parks could be improved, which would increase their attractiveness. That is a place where money could be put. Some of the highways could be improved, country highways, in order to attract tourists to this Province, to make it an all-season operation.

I must, Mr. Speaker, say to this House, to my constituents and to Canadians, that I have been betrayed in the bilingual program. I supported it. I have to ask that it revert to what it was. Canadians have been betrayed and their resources mismanaged. When I go home on Mother's Day and look at our family, my children and grandchildren, I tell you that I will not be going with the pride with which I would have gone 20 years ago. They had a future then in a country of which the then campaigning Prime Minister could say "this land is strong". Well, Mr. Speaker, this Government sure sapped its strength.

• (1740)

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be taking part in the debate today, especially after listening to the comments of the Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) which of course concerned the entire question of borrowing authority for the Canadian Government. I think the Member for Carleton-Charlotte had some very interesting things to say about the importance of carrying out certain projects in his riding, where funds could be put to good and practical use, because basically, I think he shares the concerns of Members on both sides of the House, who are anxious to ensure that the money the Canadian Government gets from private or corporate citizens or by borrowing will generate jobs and stimulate the economy. However, I disagree when the Hon. Member says that we do not have the same pride we had fifteen years ago, because there is less of a future for young people. I think it is true that the situation is a difficult one today, but I think it is wrong to conclude that there is less future in this country than there was fifteen years ago, because if we look at this country's potential and compare it with other industrialized countries, it is clear that Canada's position is still very strong, although a great deal more effort must be put into building and modernizing our infrastructures.

I think the Member for Carleton-Charlotte—whom I know very well since we travelled together when I was vice-chairman of the Transport Committee—and you yourself, Mr. Speaker, as an Eastern Canadian, are both aware of what it means to lack infrastructures of every kind in our ridings, especially in our part of the country.

I think the Bill we are considering today, Mr. Speaker, namely Bill C-151, an Act to provide borrowing authority so that the Government may, according to the wording of the Bill, invest such sums of money as may be required for public works and general purposes, mean a great deal to us. All this may not be as important to Members from urban areas, because they are used to living, I should perhaps not say in luxury but in relative comfort; many good roads, industry nearby and a highly diversified economy. If we look at the extra-peripheral regions, however, there is an incredible lack of infrastructures. I myself am from an area that is not necessarily remote but nevertheless suffers from the problems of regional disparity and has done so for quite some time. At first, I was opposed to a Government deficit. Like all Canadians, we would prefer a budget in which revenue and expenditures are balanced. That is not the case, unfortunately. Because of the present recession and the problems in industry, the Government's revenue has been much lower than was predicted by the experts and by the Government itself, so that while funds must be spent on social benefits for Canadians, Government revenue has dropped considerably. If the Government had ignored what had to be done in this country, perhaps we could have had a balanced budget, but this would have been at a high cost to the extra-peripheral regions and Canadian workers.

I am thinking of the Gaspé, which is just across from my riding. Mr. Speaker, it is high time the Canadian Government announced substantial measures to improve infrastructures in that region. A lot has been done in the Gaspé over the last fifteen years, but this region will never be able to operate on an equal footing with the rest of Canada if we do not give it the necessary capital facilities so that it will not only be able to compete with other parts of Canada but also with other countries. This is important, and I know what I am talking about, Mr. Speaker.

Similarly, I think a person has to know the Atlantic Region to realize that Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have far fewer infrastructures than they do out West, and I am referring to the Pacific Region. A person has to have seen both to understand the significance of the funds being sought by the Government today for investing in those regions. If it were just a matter of spending money on facilities that are already more than adequate, I would object.

Earlier, however, the Member for Carleton-Charlotte was very specific when he mentioned the particular needs of his riding. I think the same applies to most ridings in the Atlantic Region.

All Members from Eastern Canada have very specific needs as far as infrastructures are concerned. As long as we do not have proper infrastructures in that part of the country, we shall never be on an equal footing with the rest of Canada.

That is the important thing. To be able, with a budget like the one we have now and the supplementary funds that must be ratified, to invest in capital projects. And I have often heard some of my fellow Canadians criticizing the Government because according to them, it was putting the country into debt. But although it is true, I think people should realize that in doing so, we are rescheduling projects which would otherwise have been carried out five, ten or fifteen years later.

However, the projects that will be financed in 1983-84 will serve future generations. These infrastructures will last ten, fifteen, twenty, twenty-five or forty years. It stands to reason therefore that the cost be spread over one, two or three generations.

Last week the Minister of Transport of Canada (Mr. Pepin) came to my riding to announce that Ports Canada will finally build new infrastructures in the Bay of Sept-Îles. People have been waiting for those facilities for years, but the work was supposed to be spread over 15 years. Thanks to the combined efforts of various intermediary groups in the area, and thanks as well to the unrelenting work of people responsible for regional communities, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Transport gave their approval to this harbour project.

We have already asked the local people to get involved and make sure that private businesses will be able to open their doors in the Sept-Îles area so that the facilities in the port of Sept-Îles will be more productive. After the announcement was made last Thursday, Mr. Speaker, we could see that the outlook was changing already. Contrary to the comments the Hon. Member made earlier to the effect that the people—the young, the elderly, heads of families and retired people alike—were desperate, they now have regained confidence. They are glad that they will finally be able to find work and, as a result of the mining problems we have experienced, we must diversify our regional economy. It must be done. And very soon the Government will have to open up a transportation link between Quebec City and Port-Cartier, which has been closed since 1979.

If I wanted to be irresponsible, Mr. Speaker, I would say that it was closed down when the Progressive Conservative Party was in office. However, that Party did not have anything to do with it, such was the economic situation. Since 1979, Quebec and the Government of Canada have appointed very responsible people to look into the possibility of reopening the plant at Port-Cartier. That is when we will need funds to guarantee a sound recovery, not as owners of the plant—in that respect, I think I am voicing concerns similar to those of the Progressive Conservative Members—not to become owners, but to act as partners in the reopening of that plant.

Indeed, we had done our share in 1974 through the allocation of funds for the Port-Cartier plant to make sure that the area would have a truly diversified economy. The funds for which we are seeking the approval of the House will be used for that kind of operations. I still remember when I was Deputy Chairman of the Committee on Transport; we had toured the Atlantic region and I recall the dilapidated condition of wharves and fishing facilities. I remember that some wharves had been abandoned altogether although fishermen did need them to do their job. The funds will therefore be used to carry out various projects in those ridings and those areas.

Mr. Speaker, the budget was not introduced only to benefit the party in office; it is aimed at all Canadians and all ridings. I think that the role of the Opposition is to make sure that everybody gets his share and that the real needs are met. That is the important thing to say at this stage. I would suggest that all Members on both sides of the House are aware of the importance of this budget for young people.

To criticize the legislation introduced in the House is easy but what really matters is to know what are the needs this budget is going to meet, and these needs can only be met if the money necessary to carry out these projects is made available to us. What surprises me is the fact that over the past two years, Hon. Members both on the government and opposition sides have repeatedly urged the Government to take positive action in an effort to get the economy moving again.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, the Government is acting responsibly. Not only does it provide $2.5 billion for direct job creation, but it urges the private sector to get involved by providing it with some $4.5 billion in incentives and tax breaks of all sorts.

I think it is most important to let Hon. Members and all the other Canadians know that this is a concerted effort by both the private and public sectors to balance the forces, because the Government has no money. What the Government has is the taxpayers' money. That is all the Government has, and it can only rely on human and natural resources, and seek a perfect balance between these two resources to develop the country. That is all it can do. As a Government, we cannot create the economy, but we can and should create favourable conditions to a buoyant economy. That is what a Government must do. And that is exactly what the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance is trying to achieve. Because there are no miracles, Mr. Speaker, only concerted efforts in the right direction.

Already Hon. Members opposite are blaming the Government for the borrowing powers it is seeking. Had we not borrowed money or introduced legislation which was bound to increase the deficit, would we have had the tools to break the economic deadlock? I believe the answer is a very definite no, Mr. Speaker.

When you read the comments made by various economic experts, you very soon realize that the budget does meet current needs. Of course, there may be some reservations here and there. We could have allowed a little more here, a little less there, but all in all we struck a balance. And this is what the Government should be striving for, in the interest of all Canadians. On the lower North Shore of the St. Lawrence River, Mr. Speaker, there lies an area with some 400 miles of coastline where there are no roads, absolutely none, although 6,000 or 7,000 people do live there, in 15 isolated villages, French-speaking, English-speaking, and native people. Those people are looking forward to a reorganization of both Regionair and Quebecair. I think the Minister of Transport should be urged to act soon. For instance, Mr. Speaker, those people have to pay $700 for a round trip ticket from Blanc-Sablon to Montreal, and that is not first class. There are many stopovers, although this is the same country and the same Province. That is not normal. Special steps will have to be taken, at the Canadian taxpayer's expense, so those people can travel from Blanc-Sablon to Montreal at a more reasonable cost. Right now, it is cheaper for a Montrealer to go to Paris than for someone in Blanc-Sablon to go to Montreal. Those people have a right to live, and they have made tremendous efforts to provide Canadians with fish, and game.

But, when we speak in this House, we have a feeling we are speaking only to Torontonians, Montrealers, Vancouverites. This country is not just ten provincial capitals and one federal capital, Mr. Speaker. It consists of a vast land with a potential that is waiting to be tapped and in need of infrastructures. This has often been neglected in the past, for all sorts of reasons. But past neglect is no reason for staying on the same course. Quite the opposite! As a Member of Parliament, I wish we only had balanced budgets. But in the face of unbelievable shortcomings that exist in various parts of the country, whether it is the East, the Centre, the West or the North, I feel we really should invest with a view to the future, and get the money needed to have the required infrastructures.

Our young people are asking for two things, Mr. Speaker, two very specific things: a sound training, and infrastructures that will enable them to put their training to practical use, to develop this country. This is what our young people are asking for. And older people too. We know all about layoffs in the various mining operations across the land. This involves not only Shefferville, Gagnon, Fermont, Port-Cartier and Sept-Îles, but many other communities. When we see people put on early retirement at age 50, 55 or 58, it is a real tragedy. A person who receives a $10,000 severance pay is not necessarily happy. The only way to be happy is often to have a job that you like, a job that makes you proud to support your family, to be responsible for them, to be a responsible citizen. That is what people need.

I remember how frantically the officials from the Department of Finance wanted to check the outflow of money in order to try and lower the deficit. However, when one is elected to sit in this House, one realizes the real needs of people and one has to say no to public officials' demands in order to be really responsible and allocate funds in an attempt to put people back to work and help industrialize this country. That is what we really need. We sometime hear the question: How is it that the government does not plan ahead for such expenditures? I remind Hon. Members that when the IOC mining company shuts down its operations in Shefferville, the Canadian government—that is to say each of us—will pay $4,500 per household to relocate the people of Shefferville anywhere else in Canada, even though they cannot find a job, because people cannot stay up there, they cannot stay in a remote place 385 miles North of Sept-Îles, where there is no road, when a return plane ticket between Shefferville and Montreal costs in excess of $350. So it is up to the Canadian government, to the public administration, to take on the responsibility of enabling people to relocate elsewhere in order to look for a brighter future. The mining company will pay $1,500 and the Quebec government will also put up $1,500. Yet, this was not anticipated in the government budget. And these people from Shefferville, who were paying a lot of taxes, are quite justified to expect the government to help them find better prospects elsewhere.

So for all these reasons, I suggest the bill we introduced is necessary, and in conclusion, because my time is expired, I would ask Hon. Members on all sides of this House to show extreme care in distributing the funds in all parts of this country, to ensure that each and every constituency will have its share to invest in the future of our country, among young as well as older Canadians, so that every Canadian can regain hope not only in the future of this country, but in themselves, because the great crisis we are presently going through is in great part a crisis of self-confidence. So I will simply say in concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, that I hope we will gain the support of all parties so that this bill can be passed as soon as possible and that tomorrow, we will be confident that, the country is back on track and heading toward prosperity and a more diversified economy.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—NEGOTIATIONS ON RESTRUCTURING EAST COAST INDUSTRY. (B) NEWFOUNDLAND PROPOSAL

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, on May 2 I put a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) who is now in charge of the Cabinet committee which is charged with the responsibility of restructuring the Atlantic Provinces' fishing industry and the troubled companies in that industry. I wanted the Minister to tell the House when the negotiations leading up to a decision on restructuring would be completed and when a decision would be made and reported to the House.

Of course, I got no satisfaction from the Minister. That is why I am taking this opportunity to bring it to the attention of the House. This is a very serious matter.

On March 28, a conference was held in St. John's with all the principal players involved in the Newfoundland fishing industry. A resolution was unanimously adopted and forwarded to the Minister of State for Economic Development. I will read it into the record:

BE IT RESOLVED:

That all fish plants involved in the deepsea fishery be kept open, and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED:

That the federal and provincial Governments make a commitment to exercise their separate jurisdictions in the harvesting and processing sectors to ensure the continued operation of all deepsea ports, and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED:

That rather than a simple bail-out of the corporate interests both Governments commit themselves, jointly or separately, to the public ownership—in whole or in part—of those deepsea companies unable to operate without public assistance, and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED:

That the immediate acquisition of these companies, either jointly or separately, by both Governments is absolutely necessary to accomplish a meaningful restructuring of the fishing industry, and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED:

That the option of the separation of the fleet and community ownership of processing plants be examined as potential objectives in a new, restructured deepsea fishing industry.

That resolution was unanimously adopted at this conference and was signed by Members of Parliament, including the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), the Minister of Fisheries of Newfoundland, the Minister of Environment of Newfoundland, the President of the Newfoundland Fish Food and Allied Workers Union, the President of the Newfoundland Federation of Labour and the mayors of all the towns affected by down plants. To date there has been no response from the Government to that resolution.

We are dealing with a situation in which there are still seven plants in Newfoundland not operating. Thousands of inshore fishermen have no place to sell their fish and trawler fleets are tied up. This situation exists a full six months after the Kirby Task Force Report during which time negotiations on restructuring were supposed to be taking place.

The Canadian Salt Fish Corporation is still without a president, even though the Government accepted Kirby's recommendation for an expanded role for the corporation which would see it involved in processing and marketing fish in the northern communities of Newfoundland and Labrador.

The Fisheries Council of Canada has just completed its annual meeting in St. John's, yet there is still no word from the Government on restructuring, in spite of an ongoing negotiation, we are told at least, by the Government Cabinet Committee and Kirby.

What we are seeing here is the Newfoundland fishing industry being relegated to a secondary role to that of Nova Scotia which, if the Cabinet committee has its way on restructuring, will see a newly integrated giant Nova Scotia corporation as the principal player in harvesting, processing and marketing of fish in the Atlantic Provinces.

My question is, where is the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans for Canada (Mr. De Bané) while life and death decisions are being made affecting Newfoundland communities, fishermen, plant workers, trawler men and their families? I am talking about thousands of people. His role has been usurped by one of the super Ministers of the Cabinet, the Minister of State for Economic Development, a gentleman who obviously takes his advice from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) who is an active Member of that committee and happens to be the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-Highlands-Canso. Of course, there is not doubt as to where the interests of that hon. gentleman lie.

I say to the House that our patience is running out. There is unanimity in Newfoundland as to what should be taking place, yet the Government in the interests of protecting certain corporate interests insists upon dragging its feet. The innocent pawns in all this are Newfoundland fishermen—14,000 inshore fishermen, thousands of plant workers who are without jobs, trawlermen and their families. They are the innocent pawns in this super corporate power chess game which is taking place.

I say to the Government that our patience is not infinite. Time is running out. I call upon the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, who signed his name to the resolution which represented a reasonable compromised solution that would address the problems of the Newfoundland fishing industry, of the downed plants and of the communities that see their livelihood taken away, to rise in his place and tell us when we can expect a decision by the Government. At the very least he should tell us when we can expect a reply to the resolution which was forwarded to the Government on March 29. To this date there has not even been the courtesy of an acknowledgement.

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for economic and regional development, as chairman of the ad hoc Committee of Ministers on Atlantic Fisheries Restructuring, has the over-all responsibility for the ongoing negotiations on restructuring. We know that the Hon. Member is impatient; so are we. On March 31 the Government gave Michael Kirby broad instructions to begin negotiations leading to a reorganization and refinancing of the troubled deep sea fishing industry in Canada. Mr. Kirby is representing the Government in those negotiations. These ongoing negotiations with the banks, the companies and the Provinces concerned are presently at a very delicate stage. I know the Hon. Member would not want those negotiations to break off because of some indiscretion or an attempt to make political points.

All Hon. Members will understand that we are dealing with matters of utmost financial sensitivity and that any details relating to the Government's negotiating position cannot be laid before the House at this time. The Hon. Member will know exactly what we have done whenever the negotiations are concluded. However, I am confident that these negotiations are proceeding on an urgent basis—and the Hon. Member has shown the urgency of the case—and will lead to the revitalization of the Atlantic fishing industry, including the provision of more stable employment and incomes for thousands of fishermen and plant workers who depend upon the fishery.

INCOME TAX—AUDITING OF FARMERS' INCOME—REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM. (B) REQUEST FOR LIMITATION ON ASSESSMENT OF BACK TAXES

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, the subject I want to raise this evening concerns Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. I think Hon. Members on both sides of the House who have farmers in their constituencies realize the problems that are caused by the interpretation of Section 31. Most of us, especially myself, are having problems because the Department of National Revenue is very actively engaged in auditing farmers across the country under the provisions of that Section.

What has happened is that because of tough times, high interest rates and high costs, many farmers have been required to work off their farms to make supplementary income to keep up with their payments and literally to keep from losing their farms. To add insult to injury, the Department has picked this particular time to audit farmers and to reclassify them under Section 31.

Section 31 has roughly three classes of farmers having regard to writing off losses against income. There are bona fide farmers who farm full time. They are allowed to write off as much loss as they have. The second category of farmers includes those with supplementary income. They are allowed to write off $5,000 per year. Then there is the so-called hobby farmer classification. We are not interested in protecting hobby farmers.

What is happening is that because people have had to work off their farms in order to make supplementary income, they are being categorized as hobby farmers. This causes an awful lot of difficulty. People are finding that their losses are being disallowed and that they are now being hammered with as much as four years in back taxes, plus interest and penalties. In many cases they are literally being forced to either sell their farms, stock, equipment or whatever they can to try to pay their tax bills.

• (1810)

Literally hundreds of farmers in my riding, have been audited. Let me read a paragraph from a letter I received today from the Quesnel and District Chamber of Commerce. Quesnel is a community in my riding of about 10,000. The letter is addressed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). The first paragraph points out the problem. I quote the last paragraph:

> The farmers in our community are afraid to commit present financial resources to such things as fertilizer and seed badly needed at this time of the year while under the threat of possible income tax reassessments for prior years.

In my question on April 26, I asked whether, because of the ambiguity of Section 31 and the reclassification of many of these farmers, he would call a moratorium on tax audits until Section 31 could be amended to reflect these problems. This problem has been with us since 1951 when the section was brought in. I did not get an answer to the question. My second question was:

> Would the Minister agree to that, to assess back taxes only for the current year if people are going to be reassessed under Section 31.

There is a precedent for that. This problem arose in 1972. The then Minister of National Revenue, now President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), wrote to the former Member for Mission-Port Moody. I quote from that letter:

> If, following the review, it is concluded that the departmental policy has been correctly applied to a taxpayer, I have asked that this allowance of losses be limited to the most current of the years under review. This basis of assessment will be continued in all subsequent applications of the departmental policy relating to losses claimed by part-time farmers so that only the loss for the one year is disallowed.

Under the circumstances, that precedent should hold. The least we can do for farmers faced with this terrible problem is allow their losses for the current year.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised a number of questions on the subject of audits conducted by National Revenue concerning claims for farm losses. The Minister has answered all those questions. For the benefit of the Hon. Member let me explain the interpretation and application of the law with respect to this matter.

Section 31 of the Income Tax Act sets a limit, under certain conditions, to the amount of losses from a farming business that a taxpayer may deduct from other sources of income in completing a tax return. The word "business" here is of crucial importance. The taxpayer must be in the business of farming in order to claim business losses, a reasonable requirement.

The Hon. Member has asked for a moratorium on tax audits because he says the section is ambiguous. Although the section is somewhat complex, the Department has the benefit of many court decisions, including one by the Supreme Court of Canada to which it can refer for interpretation and application of the law.

The Hon. Member has also commented on the qualification of the auditors performing the audit. In this regard I would like to say that the Department's auditors have the know-how to determine the profit or loss of an enterprise. For example, if an enterprise incurs thousands of dollars of expenses in a year and in the same year makes only a few hundred dollars in sales and does this for three or four years in a row, and it can be seen to be making no progress toward a profitable position and the entrepreneur is really living on money earned in another full-time job, the question must arise as to whether the enterprise is a business at all. This would be true whether we are talking about agriculture or any other type of business.

The Member suggested that the reassessment of taxes should only be for one year. The Department recognizes that it can take more than one year to get a person established on a farm. I am sure the Hon. Member would understand that in many cases it takes a few years to assess the viability of an enterprise. Therefore, in these circumstances it is normal, depending on the facts of each case, that the Department may review and assess, where applicable, for more than one year.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS—U.S. AND U.S.S.R. OFFERS TO REDUCE NUCLEAR ARSENALS. (B) PROPOSAL TO HOLD SUMMIT MEETING

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, when I questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) yesterday on the nuclear arms negotiations issue I tried to make the point that Canada should play a stronger role for peace in the world by pressing both the Soviet Union and the United States to make progress in Geneva. By pressing, I mean that Canada should be formulating its own recommendations to both super powers for mutual, balanced and verifiable reduction in nuclear arms, and that these recommendations would be based on objective account of the precise amount of nuclear weaponry that the Warsaw Pact and NATO possess.

At one level the nuclear arms question is terribly complex, yet it is possible to ask clear questions to which clear answer should be given. Here are some of the questions a growing number of Canadians, including Parliamentarians in this House, are asking. Exactly how many warheads does each side have? Why are the two sets of nuclear negotiations, strategic and intermediate, not joined into one over-all negotiation so that the question of nuclear parity can be established? Why does the Security Council of the United Nations not play a major role in the negotiations?

I submit that there is an important role for Canada to play in pressing forward in this manner. Nuclear negotiations are not a matter in the exclusive domain of the two super powers. All humanity is today held hostage by the arms race.

It is the growing recognition that the nuclear arms race must be halted that led two important bodies in the United States to take action this week. The U.S. House of Representatives, by a margin of 278 to 149, passed a resolution calling for a mutual and verifiable nuclear weapons freeze. This vote has not only given the nuclear freeze movement credibility, but renewed momentum. The congressmen did not take this action lightly. They debated the resolution a total of 45 hours, with several amendments being made. Consider the debating time on that crucial issue compared with what the Canadian Parliament gives this issue in debating time—practically zero.

The Roman Catholic Bishops of the United States, by a vote of 238 to nine, ratified a broad-ranging pastoral letter that denounces nuclear war and calls for the end of nuclear weapons. The Bishops, in calling for this immediate halt, have taken a forceful and historic position in church thinking and put their collective finger on the nub of the issue by saying, and I quote from The New York Times of May 4, 1983:

"The nuclear age is an era of moral as well as physical danger," ... "We are the first generation since Genesis with the power to virtually destroy God's creation. We cannot remain silent in the face of such danger."

No one can accuse the American congressmen or Bishops of being soft on communism or of being dupes of the peace movement which is growing rapidly around the world. Both the House of Representatives and the church in the same week have urgently signalled that negotiations must be successful if mankind is to survive.

A clear, solid path to common security is found in the Palme Report signed by representatives of the Soviet Union, the United States and several other countries including the Third World. This report called for a zone in central Europe to be cleared of battlefield nuclear weapons. My colleague, the Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), pointed out in a lengthy analysis of the Palme Report that the report:

—came up with recommendations that are practical and feasible. There is a way out of this mess and I think that the Palme Commission has shown us that way.

Let the Prime Minister and the Canadian Government become more vigorous in pressing for the detailed recommendations of the Palme Report, in pressing the Security Council to play a role in unified negotiations and, finally in pressing for a summit meeting of the two leaders, Messrs. Reagan and Andropov, who hold the future of humanity in their hands.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): My hon. colleague has suggested one way of resolving the nuclear escalation and if we were to follow his arguments and manage to get together the partners who, for instance ... He says that some clear and specific questions should be asked in order to get clear and specific answers. I would therefore ask him to consider the discussions that were held on this issue during the past years and to realize that when we refer to equal and equivalent nuclear forces as between Americans and Russians, various interpretations are given. Moreover, this issue is so confused that it would be difficult for us as good Canadians or as citizens of the world to simply ask the Russians and Americans to draw up an inventory of their weapons and those of other countries. I think that one is rather naive and fails to realize what is going on when one asks that sort of questions.

On the other hand, for the past few years, the Canadian Government has been strongly promoting the resumption of negotiations, especially as regards the Geneva talks.

We have also noted the many contacts made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself when the Hon. Member refers to the possibility of a summit meeting, as the Prime Minister has confirmed yesterday that during his meetings with President Reagan and Vice-President Bush he urged the American authorities to agree to meet their Russian counterparts at a summit conference. Moreover, we should make sure that if such a summit meeting were held, it would be well prepared in order to give concrete results. An agenda for a summit meeting of that sort should not be forced upon us, and I think that Canadians generally agree that it is essential that such a meeting be convened. In addition, the Prime Minister and the Government are making serious efforts to get that kind of activities under way. However, we hope that there could be a summit meeting similar to the one which was held in 1972, that is when the Salt I Agreement was signed. We hope that perhaps in the future another similar exercise could be carried out with the complete agreement of the entire world which is anxiously waiting for a respite in the nuclear arms race.

HOUSING

BENEFITS RELATED TO APPLICATION OF REGISTERED HOME OWNERSHIP SAVINGS PLAN

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, in the latest budget, rules governing the use of Registered Home Ownership Savings Plans were changed. Not long ago, I pointed out that Canadian taxpayers will now be able to make tax-free withdrawals of any amount currently in their RHOSPs, for the purchase of furniture and household appliances. Another change is that Canadians who buy newly constructed homes after the date of the budget and before December 31, 1984, will be able to claim an additional deduction of up to $10,000. This means that if the taxpayer has contributed $3,000 to a RHOSP in previous years, he or she will be able to claim an additional deduction of $7,000 for the purchase of a newly constructed home, within the dates mentioned. The proceeds of the RHOSP must, of course, be used for the purchase of a newly constructed home and associated furnishings. Individuals must complete a written offer to purchase the home before December 31, 1984, with the date of closing of the purchase and occupancy no later than February 28, 1985. Homes for which a purchase agreement was entered into prior to April 20, 1983 will be eligible for the measure if the offer to purchase was signed prior to that date, provided the date of closing was not before that date.

I think that with the recent news about the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan, this measure provides a very satisfactory alternative to that program, as a substitute for the $3,000 offered to buyers of new homes.

FISHERIES

STATE OF EAST COAST INDUSTRY—COMPETITION FROM IMPORTS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, for the past two years or more the East Coast fishing industry has been in the economic doldrums. This is an industry that is vital to more than 1,300 communities, over half of which depend solely on fishing activities. It is the largest non-governmental employer in Atlantic Canada and Quebec, providing more jobs in absolute figures than does the automobile industry of Ontario.

In view of its importance to the nation, the Government established the Kirby Task Force to study the problems. Perhaps for the first time, fishermen, the unions, and processors realize that their adversaries are their competitors outside Canada. Americans are buying fresh cod delivered by air on a daily basis from Iceland, and Steinberg of Ottawa is selling frozen cod fish in one pound packages clearly marked as a product of the U.S.A. Obviously we are not only losing our foreign markets but our Canadian markets as well, and the key to our problem is quality.

New regulations call for all boats over 45 feet to carry ice, but this requirement has not been met. Bleeding and gutting as well as dockside grading are still local options. Fish holds should be upgraded to basic standards. Kirby also recommended additional ice-making facilities in coastal communities, but to date, this basic need has not been met.

Until we upgrade our quality, the improving fish markets of the world will be supplied by Iceland or Norway, or even by the United States. Therefore I urge the Minister and the Government to give a much higher priority to the basic needs of Canada's fishing industry.

CONSEQUENCES OF ECON BANKRUPTCY FOR PRAIRIE FARMERS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, it has been more than a year since Econ Consulting Limited of Winnipeg went bankrupt, leaving more than 300 prairie farmers out of pocket some $4 million. At the time of the bankruptcy in April 1982, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) refused to take the Canadian Grain Commission to task for the way in which it allowed Econ's directors to escape annual audits. He refused a similar request when it came to him from the National Farmers' Union.

As the Minister knows, 77 farmers have now launched a suit against the Canadian Grain Commission over the Econ bankruptcy. They are seeking the reimbursement of at least some of the money they lost when the company went bankrupt. Just a few weeks ago the Canadian Grain Commission's lawyers sought a stay of action in this suit. The judge hearing this case in Winnipeg has not yet ruled on the motion.

The universe is unfolding as it usually does when farmers in this country are being trampled upon. Thanks to the Canadian Grain Commission's lawyers, the lawsuit is stalled in the courts and western farmers affected by the collapse of Econ Consulting have still not been compensated for their losses.

When the NFU wrote to the Minister of Agriculture to ask for a public inquiry into the bankruptcy, the Minister wrote back to them saying that his Department had hired a consulting accounting firm to make recommendations about the Canadian Grain Commission's procedures. Has that consulting firm handed down its report yet, or was this pricey firm hired as a smokescreen?

We in the New Democratic Party have not forgotten about the Econ bankruptcy. We are watching and waiting to see what the Minister does to ensure that this will not happen again.

PAPAL VISIT TO CANADA

PLEA FOR WORLD PEACE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, the ten-day visit of Pope John Paul II to Canada in September, 1984, will be an historic occasion, the first time that a Pope has come to this country where the Christian faith was planted so deeply more than 350 years ago.

It will not just be Catholics who will welcome Pope John Paul II. All Canadians of good will who recognize the Pope as a tireless promoter of peace and social justice throughout the world will rejoice to have him here.

When he spoke to the United Nations on October 2, 1979, Pope John Paul II said:

> The Catholic Church in every place on earth proclaims a message of peace, prays for peace, educates for peace.

No issue before this Parliament, before any religious assembly, before the entire world, is more important today than securing peace through, first of all, ending the nuclear arms race. Canada must play a stronger role in the world community now searching for peace. Therefore I commend this vital theme of peace to the Pastoral Planning Committee organizing the Papal visit.

• (1110)

On behalf of the people of my own City of Edmonton, I also express the fervent wish that Pope John Paul include Edmonton in his cross-Canada itinerary.

FISHERIES

CALL FOR ABOLITION OF FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, in 1969 when the Government of Canada arrogated unto itself the exclusive monopoly on sales for freshwater fish in western and northern Canada, fishermen found that the Crown monopoly, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, was like a lobster trap. They were easily lured into it, but it was impossible to escape.

Despite subsidies from territorial and provincial Governments, the real return to fishermen has continued to decline since independent fish buyers were put out of business by the Government. What was once a thriving industry is now on the verge of collapse. The return to fishermen as a percentage of the final selling price is being reduced to a completely unacceptable level because of the inefficiency and ineffectiveness of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

Top quality Canadian whitefish, trout, and other species, should command premium prices on domestic and international markets, and fishermen should enjoy a high standard of living as a result of their labours. This will not happen until the fishery can be reorganized along free market principles and the stultifying bureaucratic monopoly of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation consigned to the garbage can of history.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

CONDEMNATION OF CAMPAIGN SUPPORTING CHANGES TO CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, on April 18 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) rather curtly replied to my question. He endorsed the wasteful attitude of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to Government advertising on Crow rate changes. The Government's waste of taxpayers' dollars is even more blatant in view of the fact that the Minister of Transport has made changes in that the material, which he told the people of Canada is out of date.

What do we have? We have a beautiful blue Tory and red Liberal flier, costing the taxpayers some $350,000. I question the morality of the Government advertising matters which have not become legislation, and the changes it is making in this area. I encourage Liberal backbenchers to rise up in moral indignation at the fact that we have moral pygmies in the front benches, like the Minister of Transport, making these kinds of blatant decisions concerning taxpayers' dollars. What will the Minister of Transport do now? Will he indulge in further advertising, further fliers across Canada to explain why he has made changes to his initial proposals? Will this cost Canadian taxpayers more money? As the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) mentioned on April 15, the Liberal Party should reimburse the federal coffers or the taxpayers by paying—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

START OF WOMAN'S CROSS-CANADA RUN

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the phrase "from sea to sea" will soon take on a new meaning for Kanchan Stott of Ottawa. Kanchan starts her cross-Canada run from Victoria, British Columbia, today. When she reaches Halifax in October she will have established the longest distance ever run by a women. It is a run of epic proportions, but as well it is a feat which demonstrates the ever-growing contribution of women to sport and fitness in Canada. By this time next week, Kanchan anticipates she will have run 300 miles. We might keep that figure in mind as we contemplate what physical endeavours we should undertake for National Physical Activity Week.

Few Canadians are blessed with the requisite attributes and abilities of Kanchan to be champion marathoners, swimmers, or whatever. That is a fact of life for us to live with and should not deter anyone in the least from trying to improve their physical well being. No one has to earn a gold medal to become healthier or fitter; we just have to make physical activity a part of our daily routine.

Physical Activity Week is designed to encourage and challenge Canadians to put physical activity on their agenda. I hope Canadians take up that challenge and win their own personal awards.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS—GOVERNMENT TRAINING PROGRAMS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The unemployment figures released today by Statistics Canada show there is no appreciable change in the unemployment rate. Indeed, they represent a net increase when you consider the fact that unemployment is supposed to be improving at this time of the year.

We note that the number of unemployed heads of families is up 31.7 per cent from a year ago, and has doubled in the past two years. The number of unemployed women is up 23.2 per cent from a year ago. The number of long-term unemployed youths is up 21.8 per cent from a year ago. We have fewer young people working in Canada today than ten years ago.

The unemployment rate today stands at 12.5 per cent. Is it the policy of the Government to gear its training programs, its employment programs and its job-incentive programs to double digit unemployment, or does the Govermment intend to bring in programs targeted to unemployed youth, and unemployed women, the first to be fired and the last to be re-hired in economic recovery?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is very unfortunate that the Hon. Member has tried to present the figures which came out this morning, in the darkest possible hue, when in fact these unemployment figures demonstrate that there is a substantial turnaround in the economy. If he would look at the figures in the proper perspective he would see that, since November, we have created over 135,000 new jobs. As far as the employment of women is concerned, in the last month alone 55,000 jobs were created for women in Canada, which is the highest level in the last five years.

What I believe Canadians are looking for now is a sign that things are beginning to turn around, and the signs to that effect are there now. What we must do as a Government, what we are trying to do, is build upon that recovery and not try to bring about the wailing and yelling which the Hon. Member is doing. Canadians do not want that doom and gloom. They want to see how we can take those signs of recovery, accelerate them as we did through the budget, and make the best of that new growth which is beginning to appear.

PROGRAMS TO MEET EVOLUTION OF MICRO-TECHNOLOGY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, Canadians are looking for leadership and they are not getting it from the Government. That is the tragedy. Today we have more unemployed people in Canada than we had last January. That speaks in reply to the Minister's concept of economic recovery.

We lost 7,000 jobs last month in the manufacturing sector. We have today 624,000 young people unemployed, soon to be added to by another 300,000 who are coming from our universities and post-secondary schools. That is a million young people unemployed, with no jobs prospects. Yet the Minister continues to address this problem with—if I may turn the words back on him—the same old rhetoric, the same old training programs, refusing to recognize the reality of the new technology, the micro-chip society which will deny jobs to these people unless we have special training programs, and unless we have them now. What is the Minister doing about that?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, again I think it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member has been in the critic's role on employment for so short a period of time. He has not spent that time very well learning what in fact is going on in our training programs. We brought in a new National Training Act a year ago, with the full endorsement of all Hon. Members of this House. Through that new Training Program we have applied over $1 billion in funds to training institutions across Canada, which is a 20 per cent increase over the year before. We have also designated a whole new series of national occupations designed to train Canadians in the new high-skill trades.

Up to this year we have spent over $70 million on modernizing training facilities, bringing in new centres for robotics and for computer training in every Province and region across Canada. Consequently we are now providing training for over 140,000 young people in those areas.

Those are the facts, Madam Speaker, which the Hon. Member constantly ignores and refuses to take into account. When he does that, he is simply again flying blindly, in the face of the facts and presents a picture of Canada that is not accurate or true.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR PROGRAMS TO TRAIN LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYED

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, it is the Minister who is playing fast and loose with the facts, because the facts are that between 1976-77 and today, real spending on employment manpower training dropped 13 per cent, from $553 million to $481 million. That was when we knew we were getting into the period of the new technology, when we knew that every job lost in the marketplace was a consequence of the new technology.

Today we have 931,000 Canadians classified as long-term unemployed. That means they have been unemployed for four months or more. We have 118,000 Canadians classified as discouraged workers; they have given up. Now we have a new group in Canadian society, the unemployables, because there are no job prospects for these one million long-term unemployable Canadians.

Does the Minister intend to recommend to the Prime Minister and his Cabinet colleagues that we bring in programs which will target incentives to these long-term unemployables, the unemployed youth and unemployed women of the country? Unless we do that, these people are doomed to be the outcasts, the unemployables of our society as we enter into the microchip society. The Government itself predicts a rate of unemployment of 15 per cent by the end of the decade. These are the facts which the Minister refuses to recognize.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I suggest the first group of people who probably need retraining are the Hon. Member's researchers.

Mr. McGrath: This is the Minister's research.

Mr. Axworthy: They simply do not know what is going on.

Mr. McGrath: It is all right in there.

Mr. Axworthy: I suggest he go back and find out what in fact is taking place. The Minister of Finance allocated funds in the budget for a special program of youth employment which will provide direct subsidies to private sector employers to provide work experience and on-the-job-training for young people who are graduating from school, to give them that first-time job experience. He also provided money to establish a network of job core programs right across Canada.

We have established a whole new network of special counselling units for young people and women so that they can get special assistance and support in getting back into the job market. Those are the kinds of initiatives that the Government is taking to deal with these problems and help people get back to work. We have a work-sharing program which is designed to ease the transition period for people laid off work. There are a number of programs my colleague, the Minister of Labour, has in order to assist in beginning to organize early retirement benefits.

The fact of the matter is that we recognize that change will take place. But rather than simply throwing our hands up in the air, as the Hon. Member is doing, and ranting at the heavens, we are trying to do something about managing that change.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, I believe the problem we are discussing is much deeper than the Minister of Employment realizes.

FAILURE RATE IN TECHNOLOGY INSTRUCTION PROGRAMS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development and Science and Technology. I would like to state first of all that his paper presented on Monday is an excellent beginning. It is five years late, it is too little, but it is a start. For example, Northern Telecom has announced a new program called the Open World Program. It is going to spend $1.2 billion over the next five years and it anticipates revenue of $13 billion. Mitel spends 25 per cent of its gross sales on research and development.

There is a severe economic and social impact on youth unemployment. One out of four young people are unemployed.

Madam Speaker: Order. When is the Hon. Member going to ask his question? Those preambles are not necessary for the question. The Hon. Member should go directly to the question.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, has the Minister allocated funds to expand computerized instruction systems which will overcome the failure rate the community colleges and universities are having with students and unemployed people entering into basic technology instruction programs?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking a question which really comes under the responsibility of my ministry under the National Training Act. The simple answer to his question is yes, we have. We are doing it right across Canada. We have established a new system in which we are working with business and labour to designate those occupations where there will be job demand, particularly in the high skill fields.

As I said to the Hon. Member for St. John's East, we are now working with private sector industry, labour unions, and the community colleges under the skills growth fund to invest in new machinery, equipment, and training programs right across Canada to provide that kind of training. I can say we are just in the midst of working with the high tech centres here in Ottawa. We have established a new CAD/CAM centre in the British Columbia Institute of Technology. We are working in the areas of new marine engineering in the offshore. We are working with the community college centres in Toronto. We have established new vocational centres on the prairies. Madam Speaker, the very things the Tories are now discovering need to be done, we are already doing.

ADAPTATION OF SOCIETY TO SHORTER WORK WEEKS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I would address my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I realize that the Government is doing some of these things, but there is a deeper social problem which will occur over the next 20 years. He knows about it. There will be shorter work periods. What is the Minister doing toward adapting society to the extra leisure time? Pay TV is not adequate. What programs is he putting into place and what emphasis is being directed toward adapting society to the future changes, including increasingly high rates of unemployment?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think that is a very good question. I would first like to say that, as part of the budget debate, I tabled a paper on employment perspectives in the 1980s which took into account both changes in population and growth of the labour market, as well as the change in the occupational structure, and the technological change being discussed, and analysed the consequences. I then put forward a four point strategy involving training, adjustment of workers to deal with job dislocation, direct employment programs to help people in high unemployment areas, and matters relating to the structural problems in the labour market.

We tabled that document with the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration which plans to hold special hearings, at which I will appear, and we are inviting other representation. In the meantime we have introduced programs like work sharing, which is designed to help people use their time when the job market is in decline or recession in different industries in order to be retrained during that period of time. We also established the ILAP Program which, again, is designed to deal with worker dislocation.

We recognize the fact that those changes are going on, but what we must also recognize is that the way to deal with them is through participation by business, labour and Government, because no one single level of Government or one sector of the economy can manage it by itself. It must be done in partnership, and that is what we are trying to do.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—PROPOSAL TO INTRODUCE VARIABLE FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question concerns the Crow change announcements of yesterday, and is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Transport refused to back off his controversial proposal to introduce variable freight rates on the Prairies, a policy which allows railways to dictate who receives service, through selective pricing.

Is the Prime Minister aware that the Government's chief adviser on railway costs, Carl Snavely, has said that this would depopulate the Prairies? Why does his Government insist on a policy of running people off the land?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I suppose that is an example of a very loaded question. The Minister did not back off anything yesterday. He enjoined Hon. Members opposite to wait until they saw the Bill which would be given first reading next week. He did not discount any possibility. He just said that the question should be considered with an open mind, which the Minister has done in Cabinet.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON VARIABLE RATES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I would remind the House that at the Minister's press conference, he did say that he would be introducing a system of variable rates. The Prime Minister may remember that he, himself, gave a commitment on the same subject of variable rates, at a Liberal Party meeting in Regina on March 18, 1982. His comment then was: "If grain producers indicate to Professor Gilson that they do not want variable rates, then there will be no variable rates. It is as simple as that".

If it is that simple, can the Prime Minister tell the House why his Government has allowed the Minister of Transport to announce that he is proceeding with variable rates?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the record will show that grain producers said all kinds of contradictory things to Mr. Gilson and, indeed, to the Minister and to the various people who were trying to cull their opinions out there. The Hon. Member knows as well as I do that the various groups in the West are still quite divided on that matter.

What the Minister has done has been to propose a plan which will be announced in detail on the first reading of the Bill, probably early in the week. The Hon. Member will see then whether there are variable rates or not. He will see then—

An Hon. Member: The Minister said there would be.

Mr. Trudeau: —what type of variable rates there are and how they apply if, indeed, that will be the case.

ABSENCE OF CONSENSUS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): I would like to ask a final supplementary question, Madam Speaker. The Prime Minister has just indicated that there is a wide diversity of opinion on some of the proposals to change the Crow rate. Does he not recall that a year and a half or two years ago he assured the House that there would be absolutely no change to Crow until there was consensus? Why is the Government continuing now, if there is no consensus?

• (1130)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member looks at the record he will see that I said that indeed there should be a consensus that there be a change in the Crow. I said that we would not touch the Crow unless there was a consensus that the Crow be touched and changed.

Except for a few Neanderthals, and they are all in the NDP, I think people in the West want a change to the Crow. That is recognized.

The debate is not whether it should be changed, it is what the change should be exactly. If the Party over there were honest, they would know very well that this is a very difficult and divisive subject. The people in the West are badly divided on it. They know that progress is needed. They know that the rail system must be improved if there are not to be bottlenecks within a few years. The way in which this will be done has been examined extensively by this Government.

We on this side have the courage to face our responsibility and say that we will make the change because a change is necessary, knowing full well that those people over there, the reactionaries in this land, would say, "Do not change anything; we are terrified."

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND—COMPOSITION OF PROPOSED ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister as well. Would he tell the House today whether he and his Cabinet have given final approval to the recommendations contained in a Cabinet document which I hold in my hand, dated April 29, 1983, dealing with the Native Economic Development Fund. If so, does he believe that the $345 million of taxpayers' money contained in an announcement by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in 1981 would be put to the most effective use if it were dispersed by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce instead of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

Does he also believe, in accordance with the recommendations of the Native Liberal Caucus, that the fund, "should under no circumstances be used for social development measures such as housing", and that "Members of the Liberal caucus feel that the board should consist of native people who are Liberals experienced in business and not representatives of the recognized native associations in the country"?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that he is asking me a question that I will not and never have answered for two reasons. First, he is asking about the subject matter of a leaked Cabinet document. It is not my practice, nor will it be my practice, to answer those questions. Second, he is asking about the Liberal caucus.

There are ways of knowing what the Liberal caucus does. It is being a member of the Liberal caucus. I hope that will never happen to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Oberle: This is one time when I share a certain hope with the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT DISCUSSIONS BE HELD WITH NATIVE GROUPS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, never in my experience have I seen a more callous and blatantly partisan document exploiting the plight of a certain group in our society in such blatant political terms as this document.

The funds will not be spent in accordance with need. Quoting from the Cabinet document again, "Given the magnitude of the problem and the limited time and funds, some of the nature beneficiaries"—I suppose those would be Liberals—"may be those who need help least. Nevertheless, they will demonstrate to others that the jump to an urban entrepreneurial class can be made."

Will the Prime Minister undertake to discuss the Government's intention with regard to this $345 million, which, incidentally, comes from the Western Development Fund, with recognized native associations in the country, instead of giving a blank cheque to a select and elite group of Indian Liberal friends so that they can pay back the overdraft they already have with the banks?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is quoting from a purported document which, for all I know, may be a complete fabrication by the Hon. Member—

Mr. Smith: It probably is.

Mr. Trudeau: —and probably is. He holds up a piece of paper.

I will read the oath of the Members of the Privy Council to him. It says, "You will keep close and secret all such matters as shall be treated, debated and resolved on in Privy Council."

I do not intend to break my oath just to suit the fanciful imagination of the Hon. Member.

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, on reading this 49-page document, it becomes obvious that the $345 million of taxpayers' money will be used to bend native people to the will of this immoral and unscrupulous Government.

Does the Prime Minister feel that he and his colleagues can get away with a plan that promises to abuse the native people of this country even further, and to put money in the hands of the rich at the expense of the poor; a plan that could buy off Indian leaders and be used to buy constitutional positions—in short, a plan that proposes to set up one more Liberal pork barrel?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that seems to be a repetition of the same question. Once again it is based on a document of which I know nothing. I know that when Cabinet makes decisions after very extensive discussions and looking at all sides of the question—and it is possible that there is input from various parts of the bureaucracy or ministry indicating different options—I am saying that when those decisions and policies are announced, I am then prepared to comment on them. I am not prepared to do so on the basis of some purportedly leaked document.

SELECTION OF CONSTITUENCIES FOR RECEIPT OF FUNDS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, appended to this document, which is an official document as far as I am concerned, is a list "of federal electoral districts in which the population of Indian ancestry 18 years and over is significant in determining the outcome of a federal election." Is it the intention of the Liberal Government to use $345 million of Canadian taxpayers' money in these targeted ridings in an attempt to buy Indian votes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am very close to accusing the Hon. Member of fabricating evidence. If he wants to table a document that could be visible to everyone, he can then ask questions about the source and the authorship. Let him not drag in his own fabrications.

PENALTY FOR BREAKING PRIVY COUNCIL OATH

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Having read the Privy Councillors' oath to the House, could he tell us what the penalties are for breaking the oath?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is a legal question that I am being asked. If the Hon. Member were interested in constitutional law he would probably discover that there is no statutory basis for the oath of the Privy Council. It is based on tradition.

Mr. Hawkes: I guess what the Prime Minister is telling us is that the sole jurisdiction and authority for determining whether the oath has been broken and what the penalties should be lie in his hands.

ISSUE OF BUDGET DOCUMENT BEING PHOTOGRAPHED

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, would the Prime Minister reconsider the photographs which played on the news in which the Minister of Finance was showing a Cabinet decision to the cameras and the Canadian people, and state whether or not he believes, given that he has read the oath of office, the deliberate showing of a Cabinet decision related to the budget is breaking the oath of office of the Privy Council?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to introduce a Private Members' Bill giving a statutory basis to this oath of office, that is his privilege, of course. We will have a foundation in law and not in tradition as to what the oath says and how it should be respected.

If he is considering such a Bill, I suggest that he should also include the case of a budget being found in a garbage can.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my question with regard to the over-all economic policies of the Government is directed to the Prime Minister. The unemployment statistics released today reveal that unemployment continues at 12.5 per cent. The Government's recent budget washed the Government's hands free of any direction for the over-all economy, and relied instead upon incentives to the private sector, at a time when we need a national strategy for economic development that will provide jobs for all. At the same time we know that one in every five young persons is unemployed although the same budget promised to meet the needs of young people. The dreams of young people have been shattered.

Does the Prime Minister really expect the people of this country to take seriously a budget which promised to meet the needs of young people, when one in every five young persons is unemployed?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I do not believe that Members of this Government give up on young people as quickly and easily as Members of the New Democratic Party have obviously done. We recognize that there are difficult economic circumstances for young people because, as the job market begins to pick up, they are further back in the line as employers begin to hire workers who have been laid off or are out of work. At the same time the budget did address their needs in a number of very significant ways, first, by the Special Recovery Projects which will provide a major stimulus right across Canada, and many beneficiaries of these initiatives will be young people themselves coming into the job market.

• (1140)

As well, special funds were set aside for new youth strategy programs which are designed to break that framework of structural problems which young people face, through hiring people in the Department of National Defence, through Katimavik, and through working with the private sector.

The point about the budget is that, rather than relying upon one single magic fix which the New Democratic Party always tries to latch upon, this is a balanced budget.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Say that again.

Mr. Axworthy: It puts investments and commitments in a variety of areas, so that we work with the private sector, we work through direct employment programs, and we work by investing in human resource and training programs. That shows we have a proper balance rather than simply getting caught on extremes of the right or the left.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, the budget was clearly a supply-side budget. The Minister makes reference to funds in the budget for youth. If you divide the 600,000 young people who are unemployed into the $280 million promised for youth, you get $405 per unemployed youth over two years. Can that be a serious commitment to youth unemployment?

SUMMER YOUTH EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. How can the Minister allocate in real dollar terms the same amount of money this summer as he did four years ago in 1979? Could he not take into account the fact that we are now in very different circumstances than we were four years ago, and will he not place a much higher priority on summer youth employment this year than he did four years ago?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the money being spent on summer youth employment this year is $170 million. That is up about 40 per cent over the expenditures we allocated in previous years. At the same time we have opened some 400 special youth employment offices across Canada to work with the private sector to encourage not just big businesses but also people who work around their homes and in their small businesses to put job placements in those offices.

We recognize that as part of our approach to the problem we cannot do everything through Government. We can provide some leadership. We can help organize other sectors of the economy to try to tackle that youth problem. That is what we are trying to do. We are not trying to provide a monolithic one Government approach, but to work with all the other sectors of the economy, because we recognize it to be a national priority. Therefore we think that all Canadians should be working to get young people back on the job.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

FINANCIAL AID SOUGHT FOR POTATO PRODUCERS

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. A combination of weather, poor storage quality, and exceptionally low market prices has made the potato industry in New Brunswick almost a disaster area. Other potato producing areas of Canada have suffered to some degree and should also receive consideration. Would the Minister agree that of the $100 million additional money allocated to the Farm Credit Corporation, he should in fact allocate specific funds in the areas concerned with the potato industry, and allocate personnel for immediate consideration of applications to make bridge financing available to the potato producers of New Brunswick and other areas of Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I had a meeting with the Chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation, and he told me he is doing that very thing which the Hon. Member has requested.

REQUEST THAT FARMERS BE PERMITTED TO DEFER LOAN REPAYMENTS

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, would the Minister also give consideration to the deferral of repayment of storable crop loans if that might make a difference to a farmer being able to plant a new crop?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, there are some payments in abeyance at the present time. I looked at this yesterday, I believe. We met growers two or three times. There are some who will not be in a position to repay. We know that, so it does not do us much good to try to put them into bankruptcy et cetera, to try to collect the money owed. We are asking them to do everything in their power to pay at least part of their loans. We do not know whether or not they will be able to do so. There are on-going discussions between ourselves and the group concerned at the present time which, Madam Speaker, is the New Brunswick Marketing Group.

PRICE STABILIZATION BOARD

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I have a short supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. If the Price Stabilization Board is to appear on the scene this year, would it please speed up its decision-making process, announce what would be the price stabilization payment even if they do not make it immediately, so that this in turn would give confidence to lenders? Might I add one sentence, Madam Speaker? There has been some collection effort made historically on the storable crop loans. I hope the Minister will not do that this year.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that I am probably the easiest person to get along with, especially when it comes to farmers who are producing high quality food or who are giving it away to society and are not getting compensated for it properly. The Hon. Member can rest assured that I will use every discretion within my power. I have a responsibility as a Minister to give these loans. We have to do everything possible to make sure that we can collect them, but we use every humanitarian judgment at the time we are doing it.

The Hon. Member talked about the Stabilization Board. I am sure he knows there are many people who are of the opinion that we should not be doing just what he is asking us to do. For instance, the producers in New Brunswick want a strong marketing board. The producers in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, New Brunswick, in fact in every province except Prince Edward Island, are the ones who are stopping it at the present time.

COMMUNICATIONS

CANADIAN CONTENT IN PAY-TV PROGRAMS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. It concerns a report prepared and released this week on scaffolding in pay-TV. The Minister will know that the report makes quite serious allegations that Canadian content rules and regulations may be being played a little bit away from the chest compared with what was intended. Would the Minister advise the House what he proposes to do as a result of that report?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the report, as I understand it, was released yesterday. It was the object of questioning between members of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture and the Chairman of the CRTC. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that our very real interest in this whole question is clearly indicated by the fact that the report was indeed prepared in part with the help of funding from the Department of Communications. I will be examining the report. At that point I will have a clear idea of exactly what the report is recommending, and what action will be appropriate for me to take and what actions would be more appropriate for the CRTC to take.

REFERRAL OF DOCUMENTS TO COMMITTEE

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Communications. It concerns broadcast strategy. The Minister probably does not know that his broadcast strategy tabled in the House is not one of the documents automatically referred to the Committee for study. Would the Minister consult with his House Leader to make sure that his Green and White Papers are referred to the Committee, given that the Committee is now discussing broadcast strategy?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his suggestion. I thought he would never ask.

SUPPORT FOR HIGH TECHNOLOGY INDUSTRIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my qustion is for the Minister of Economic Development. It is supplementary and it concerns unemployment, particularly as that affects young people. A couple of days ago the Science Council issued a report which stated that Canada is lagging far behind its competitors in the world in terms of funding for high technology industries. The Council mentions, for example, that the Minister has just announced the spending of $700 million over the next two years, while small European countries are spending billions of dollars on the development of high technology.

In view of the fact that some 21 per cent of our young people are unemployed, and in view of the fact they are very interested in advance technology, computers and micro-chips and so on, why are we so far behind our competitors in the world? Why do we not have more funding in terms of high technology development so there will be jobs for young people in the future in this country, as there will be in other countries around the world?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, later today we will be having a debate on this subject. I hope the quality of the debate will surpass some of the questions asked, particularly those asked by the Tories. But the question of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville is a thoughtful one.

I have had a brief look at the report of the Science Council. We have moved out on the issue of microelectronics in a very aggressive way with five major programs. We intend to continue in that direction. The $700 million that is referred to by the Hon. Member is, of course, incremental spending in this budget. There has never been such a thrust in the past. I suspect that very few countries have ever in their budgets come through with that kind of effort. It is exclusive, I might say, of tax incentives which are provided for and which will in fact be discussed by virtue of the White Paper which the Minister of Finance tabled with the budget.

• (1150)

I assure the Hon. Member that we are very conscious of the importance of training young people in microelectronics, not only through the programs which were detailed a few minutes ago by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, but also through our awareness program. We recognize that young Canadians in primary school and secondary school have to be aware of the opportunities that are being provided and will continue to be provided by these new technologies. That is part of the budget thrust. I would say that the effort is very substantial indeed. Perhaps we can take it up in more detail during the debate this afternoon.

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, the Government's Science Council says once again that, despite those programs, we are about four or five years behind some of the smaller European countries, let alone Japan. Last year in our country we had a net trade deficit of $8 billion in high technology, and by the year 1990 it will reach about $10 billion in computers alone. In light of that kind of information from the Government's own agency, can the Minister tell the House why he is not developing a policy to ensure that this viable industry will be Canadian owned? Otherwise, in the future the industry may indeed be very small, if it exists at all. We might instead be importing all of our high technology and equipment and, therefore, losing jobs for Canadians. What steps is the Government going to take to ensure that this industry will be Canadian owned and jobs will be created in this country for Canadian young people?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the Government has always encouraged Canadian ownership of many sectors, including high or advanced technology, and will continue to do so. It is interesting that the major players in this field in Canada are in fact Canadian owned and are world class. When the Hon. Member says we are behind, perhaps we are, but we are ahead in many other areas.

I remind the Hon. Member that, notwithstanding the abysmal rate of productivity increase in this country, the latest numbers out of the OECD show that Canada is still the second most productive, that is gross domestic product per worker, after the United States. Therefore we have a good base. Let us not lose it. That is what this technology program is all about. That is what this technology policy is designed to do, the policy which I tabled and spoke on earlier this week. From the comments we have heard from the Hon. Member, I judge that he will be very supportive of the thrust of the policy which we are putting forward.

REQUEST FOR DUAL MEASUREMENT LABELLING OF FARM CHEMICALS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I wish to pose a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I would like to test the Minister on his statement that he is very easy to get along with. The Minister may recall that a few weeks ago I posed a question regarding dual labelling in metric and imperial of farm chemicals. He understands the problem. He has had representations from farm organizations. Has the Minister talked to his colleague who is responsible for metric, and has a decision been made to permit dual labelling of these farm chemicals?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am fully aware of the debate on the subject of whether there should be dual labelling. A lot of chemicals used in Canada are imported. Therefore they have the American system of measurement. According to our discussions, this may create even more confusion. The Province of Ontario is sending out a guide for farmers to use so that they will not mix ingredients improperly for their spraying operations. I do not know of any decision having been taken on dual labelling. My officials in Agriculture Canada who have studied this have strongly advised against it.

REQUEST THAT DISCUSSIONS BE HELD WITH FARM ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, over the years this Minister has told us, time and again, that he is concerned about the farmers of Canada. Many representations have been made to him regarding this problem. He knows the feelings of the farmers and their problems. It is interesting to note that Gilles Cyr, a farmer in Prescott, Ontario, has published a book, on metric measurement of farm chemicals. He has received inquiries and orders for his book from all across Canada. If the Minister has the interest of the farmers at heart, surely he will discuss the matter with the farm organizations and with his colleague who is responsible for metric, and at least allow dual labelling so that farmers can carry on their farming operations without the danger of making a mistake when applying chemicals.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is overemphasizing the situation and condition. I have met with many farm organizations and we have discussed this. I asked a number of these farm organizations whether they were concerned about it. Some have made no representations. They say their members have no concern, that they understand metric and are perfectly willing to use the metric system. Our statistics show there are not more cases of misuse now than under the imperial system, when carrying out spraying operations.

The Hon. Member is trying to intimate that I do not care. I am as concerned as anyone. I am probably more concerned than he is. He is a great one at trying to make politics out of something and blowing it out of proportion, et cetera, for political gain. What he should be concerned about is the good of the agricultural industry and the fact that practically the whole world is using the metric system. There are only two small countries, Burundi and Nepal, I believe, that are not using the metric system. The Hon. Member would like to drag us back to the eighteenth century, or something like that.

PENITENTIARIES

MINISTER'S PROPOSAL TO RELEASE NON-VIOLENT FIRST-TIME OFFENDERS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. He said that he wants to release first-time, non-violent offenders on earlier parole. Will the Minister tell us whether he includes under non-violent offences such matters as break and enter, theft, trafficking in heroin, and some types of robberies? Will he tell us what he means by the use of the term non-violent?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, in the first place the responsibility for release is not mine but that of the National Parole Board. I discovered that in a lot of cases where the Parole Board was releasing individuals it was not looking at the case at the earliest opportunity that it could under the law to do so. I indicated that I would like to see material submitted earlier to the Board by the parole service, which is under the responsibility of the Correctional Service of Canada, so that in those individual cases where it was prepared to release the non-violent offender earlier, it should have the opportunity to have the hearing to do so.

Mr. Kilgour: In other words, the Minister does not wish to reply to the question.

APPLICATION TO HEROIN TRAFFICKERS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Solicitor General whether he has ever met a victim of break-and-enter, a heroin addict, a victim of theft, a person who has been defrauded of their life's savings. Does the Minister include these matters as being violent or non-violent offences? Does the Minister think that a heroin trafficker should be let out at a sixth of his sentence?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the offences the Hon. Member has described are non-violent offences. Those are cases which I have asked the Parole Board to look at at an earlier opportunity. Of course, in the individual circumstances, risk to society does not only include the risk of re-offending, which of course a break-and-enter artist has to be judged on as well as a drug addict or drug trafficker, but also the serious risk of the system of justice being brought into disrepute by people whose punishment requires that they be incarcerated longer, and their being allowed out before they should be. I think the Parole Board has statutory authority to look at the risk of society, not only of re-offending, which, of course, is within its mandate to do, but of bringing the system of justice into disrepute by allowing people out ealier than the sense of justice of the community requires.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. GREENAWAY—TABLING OF DOCUMENT

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to seek unanimous consent of the House to table this document that I myself and my colleague—

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that Hon. Members are not allowed to table documents. I am sorry, is the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, Madam Speaker, on a point of order. The House can do anything with unanimous consent. May I suggest that the Chair simply request the unanimous consent of the House to enable the Member do that which he wishes to do? All we ask is that the Speaker put the question as to whether or not there is unanimous consent.

Madam Speaker: I was simply warning the Hon. Member of the rule as it stands. I will quote to him the following passage from Beauchesne:

> If a Minister cites or quotes an official document in debate, he should be prepared to table it. A Private Member has neither the right nor the obligation to table an official, or any other document.

However, the Hon. Member is quite right, although I do want to try to bring the House to observing the rules as they are written, and I am reminding Hon. Members of those rules. I was reminded by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) yesterday of the severity with which Question Period should be directed, and he referred to the supplementary questions which should obviously be related to the first question, but we have developed the habit of doing something quite different.

Mr. Lambert: It is a bad habit.

Madam Speaker: It is a bad habit, I agree with the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). It is a very bad habit. We will try to correct that habit. I was trying to correct this habit but obviously we must go through the procedure of asking the House if it does give its unanimous consent to the request of the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway). Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—NECESSITY FOR FUNDING

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved:

That this House condemns the government for its failure to provide adequate and purposeful funding for Research and Development and specialized training, necessary to cope with technological change in the workplace which, according to a federal government study, will cause a serious displacement of jobs in manufacturing and business services, resulting in continuing high unemployment, forecast to reach fifteen (15) percent by 1991.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion we put down yesterday was in anticipation of the unemployment figures which were scheduled to be released today by Statistics Canada. If I can say this sarcastically, we were not disappointed because the figures released today indicated virtually no change in the unemployment rate month over month, and showed a substantial difference in the unemployment rate year over year. The unemployment rate today, according to Statistics Canada, is 12.5 per cent. That is up from 9.9 per cent seasonally adjusted for April of 1982. The fact is that there has been to change, seasonal adjustments notwithstanding. Given the fact that at this time of the year we would anticipate a sharp decline in unemployment, that means of course that there has been virtually a net increase in unemployment.

It is even more disturbing, Mr. Speaker, if you look behind the statistics. There is a danger of looking upon statistics merely as statistics and not in human terms. But if you look behind the figures, you will find some very alarming matters to which I will refer later in my speech. For example, there is a growth in the rate of long-term unemployment. There are a million people in Canada today who are classified as long-term unemployed. Next month there will be a million young people out of work. It is a very, very serious situation that we are faced with in this country today.

On Tuesday, May 3, 1983, the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) outlined four main objectives of the Government's new technological policy. These were: First, to strengthen the Canadian economy through the development of new technologies for producing goods and services and the widespread adoption of new and existing technologies. Second, to manage the process of technological development so as to ensure that Canadians are aware of both the opportunities and the problems that might arise. Third, to ensure that the benefits to technological development are shared equitably among all Canadians in every region. Fourth to create a social climate that places a premium on scientific and technological excellence, curiosity, and innovation.

In layman's terms, we are seeing that the Government is finally coming to grips with reality, the reality being that it has not provided the kind of leadership that would speak to the need for the new forms of training and new kinds of social adjustment needed to cope with the new technology as we enter into the micro-chip society. Let me quote the following:

> Canada faces the strong likelihood of sustained unemployment with the associated problems of alcoholism, crime, vandalism and family breakups. Young people will be particularly hard hit and the disparity between the rich and poor regions in Canada is likely to increase.

I did not say that. The Bishops said as much, but that is what one would expect the church to say. That is what one would expect the Canadian Council on Social Development to say. That statement came from a report commisioned by the Ministry of State for Economic Development, a report which was leaked to the Globe and Mail.

That statement, Mr. Speaker, is what this debate is all about, because if we fail to recognize the changes in our society as a result of the new high technology, very serious social problems will be created down the road. Indeed, because of the number of long-term unemployed in this country, I predict that we may be very close to such a situation. As we enter into the heat of the summer, the situation will heat up and we could very well have violence on the streets, although I pray to God that that will hot happen.

The Minister of State responsible for economic development tries to tell us that all is well, but in actual fact we see the Minister, who has a leadership role, and his colleagues closing their eyes to the reality of the situation by failing to face up to the facts contained not only in the study to which I just referred but in other studies by experts within and without the Government who have tried to warn the Government what to expect.

The sad fact is that Canada is not ready for this new age. Canada is not ready for this new industrial revolution, this new micro-chip society. As a sad consequence, we are told by the Government, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and by Government studies that we must condition ourselves to double-digit unemployment. Indeed double-digit unemployment is here to stay. The report to which I just referred, the one commissioned by the Ministry of State for Economic Development, talked about unemployment reaching 15 per cent by 1991.

What does this mean? It means that the Government is now gearing its policy to that fact because it has accepted it. It hopes that by the extension of double-digit unemployment month after month Canadians will become conditioned to it. The Government has doomed a large segment of the population to the stigma of being unemployable. We have heard about the untouchables in other societies. We now have the unemployables in our society. These are people who are unemployable because they are the long-term unemployed, the chronically unemployed, the discouraged unemployed and the untrained unemployed. I cannot accept and refuse to accept that as a fact of Canadian life. I for one, and indeed the people of the country, expect the Government to provide some form of leadership to deal with that situation, with this new phenomenon of Canadian life.

I am sorry to say that we had evidence of lack of leadership today in the House. We see day after day that leadership is not forthcoming. Consequently, a large segment of our population is doomed to being unemployable. That is what The Globe and Mail carried in its story of the leaked document commissioned by the Ministry of State for Economic Development which dramatically underlined the problem.

All we have to do is to look at the unemployment statistics. Anyone who tries to draw any consolation or satisfaction from the unemployment statistics released today is whistling in the dark and failing to face up to reality. As I have indicated, the minute decline in the seasonally-adjusted rate means that there has been no change in the rate of unemployment. In fact, there has been a net increase in the rate of unemployment when it should be going down.

Let us take a look at the unemployment situation. Let us go behind the statistics because behind them is the potential for human tragedy. Behind every one of these statistics is a human being, a Canadian who faces the prospect of having no job. Unemployment for women is up by 23.2 per cent over April, 1982. In 1982 we were supposed to be in the depths of the recession, yet we see an increase today over 1982 of 23.2 per cent in unemployment among women. There are 609,000 women in the country who are unemployed today. That is unacceptable. Youth unemployment is up by 21.8 per cent from April, 1982. Today there are 624,000 young people between the ages of 15 and 24 without job prospects. They are soon to be joined by an army of young people coming from our universities and post-secondary institutions looking for jobs and having no job prospects. The lack of prospects of a million young people in our country causes me to be ashamed.

Let us take a look at the long-term unemployed because they represent the core of the unemployables. This is what speaks to the recommendations contained in the various reports tabled in the House. It was referred to by the Ministry of State for Economic Development and in the report released by the Science Council of Canada. Long-term unemployed is up by 62.5 per cent over April, 1982. These are people who have been unemployed 3.5 months or more. Today, 931,000 Canadians have been unemployed for 3.5 months or more. Most of them have seen their Unemployment Insurance benefits expire. All these facts are coming from the catalogue released by Statistics Canada today. If we add to that the 118,000—and that is in there—discouraged workers, those who have given up looking for jobs because the prospects are not there, we have a million people who constitute the vast army of unemployables in Canada today. These are people who have given up because there are no job prospects. I know what I speak of because I come from an area where this is a well-known fact of life, where chronically high unemployment has been rampant for so long that large segments of the work force have given up looking for jobs because there are in fact no job prospects.

That is the situation in Canada today as we head into the era of the new industrial revolution, the micro-chip society. That is the situation which cries out for leadership. That is the situation the Government has failed to address, both in terms of its response in the House, as exemplified by the statements yesterday of Minister of State for Economic Development, and in terms of its response in the budget. That is the situation which we as a Party are trying to highlight in the House today in the debate on the motion before us. This is the product of years of shortsightedness and neglect by a Government which tends to hide its head in the sand when all danger signals are in front of it.

Let us take a look at the record. We heard from the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) today, but let me first indicate that the emphasis must be on employment training as we head into the era of high technology. In the five-year period from 1976-77 to 1981-82, the federal Government's investment in employment training in constant dollars dropped every year except for the one year when there was a change in Government. That year it rose by 5 per cent; when this Party was in power, money for manpower training programs rose by 5 per cent. Between 1976-77 and 1982-83 real spending on employment training actually dropped by 13 per cent, whereas total Government spending rose in real terms during the same period of time. The first year when real employment training expenditures rose under the Liberal Government since 1976 was the year 1982-83. Finally, there is a recognition that the Government has not put enough emphasis on the right kinds of training programs.

Let me now take a look at the Government's record in terms of research and development. We all know that it is an appalling record. We are paying for the lack of emphasis on research and development right now by the staggering rate of unemployment and by the prospects of double-digit unemployment well into the 1980s. That is the cost of the failure of the Government to give adequate or sufficient priority to research and development. Last year research and development expenditures in Canada accounted for 1.3 per cent of GNP, the same level as they were in 1976, the growth in the economy, the technological changes in the work force and the marketplace notwithstanding. The federal Government's share of the spending has dropped from 47 per cent in the period from 1963 to 1967 to 33 per cent this year. This means that the federal Government has transferred the burden of funding for research and development to the private sector and to educational institutions.

The leadership, which should be coming from the Government of Canada, has been abdicated in the hope that it will be taken up by the private sector and by educational institutions. As a consequence, surely our situation today should come as no surprise. We have failed to invest in those areas which we know from experience promote higher real growth, the rate of productivity and an enhanced competitive position in world markets. That is the consequence we are facing today. Without such investment, our recent job losses were and are inevitable. We lost 7,000 jobs in one month in the manufacturing sector. That is a situation which, I predict, will continue. By failing to invest adequately over the years in research and development we have failed to provide the seeds necessary to ensure a good harvest. The young people of this country, the women of this country, are the ones who are paying for that fact. Wayne Simpson, an economist at the University of Manitoba, stated in a study which was commissioned by the Economic Council of Canada that the challenge facing Canadian policymakers since the early 1970s has been defined as non-inflationary solutions to high unemployment and low productivity. He goes on to observe, and I quote:

> Effective training to eliminate observed deficiencies of skilled labour may simultaneously raise productivity, reduce inflation and lower unemployment. In short, it can help to solve three major problems facing the Canadian economy today.

Of course, the same observations apply equally to research and development. The Government, Mr. Speaker, thus stands condemned for its failure to recognize that investment in these two areas represents our best hope of promoting non-inflationary economic growth and high levels of employment.

Who are the first to be fired and the last to be hired in a recession? The first to go are the women, the young people, the disadvantaged, the ethnic groups, the native people. They are the first to be fired in a recession. They are the last to be rehired in times of economic recovery. Unless something is done for these people, they will constitute the unemployable of our society as we head into the micro-chip society. Who provides the majority of the work in our service sector, in the offices across the country? Women. These jobs will disappear as a consequence of the new technology. These are the women for whom we have been striving to provide equality of opportunity in the workplace by affirmative action and other programs and who will be doomed to having no job prospects. There will be no work for them. They will not be able to help feed their families. If they happen to be the heads of families, they will be doomed to welfare.

That is the consequence of the failure of this Government to provide leadership, to listen to its own experts, to read the signs which are there as we head out of the recession into the micro-chip society. We now have a Government which has, as a part of its economic recovery, a recognition that double-digit unemployment is going to be here for the rest of the decade. In fact, according to its own projections, unemployment will rise to 15 per cent by 1991. That is a disgraceful fact and one that is not acceptable to the people of Canada. It is one which represents, in my view, a total abdication of leadership on the part of this Government.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to engage in this debate and I thank my colleague from the Tory Party for bringing forward the matter of technological change to be debated today in this House. The choice of technological change, as a topic for debate in this House is right on target because today the unemployment statistics came out once again, and while, to be fair to the Government, the level of unemployment in terms of percentages is down marginally, the over-all picture with regard to unemployment in this country has remained the same. Unemployment is at the 12 per cent level, which is very high, and the budget recognized this and pointed it out. These are levels which are unacceptable to Canadians.

Technological change is going to continue to threaten the employment prospects of Canadians. Therefore, these two topics, unemployment and technological change, go hand in hand. Today's unemployment statistics show that among the youth in this country there are some 21.4 per cent unemployed. One in every five young people in this country is without a job. Not only are the heads of families, those who have to pay the mortgage, and pay for the groceries, suffering from the present state of our economy and the reluctance of Government to come to grips with the whole question of technological change, but the young people, who are the very future of this country, are suffering in a very deep way from the present economic crisis which exists in Canada.

A few days ago, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) presented to the House his plan with regard to technological change. He spoke about incentives to the private sector. He spoke about a rosy future for Canada. He spoke about the prospects of Canadians moving from boring, tedious, difficult jobs into exciting and well paid jobs. While this can be part of the picture with regard to technological change, it is not the whole picture. We all become very vividly aware of the fact that the Minister had only presented one side of the picture the next morning when The Globe and Mail published a secret document with regard to technological change which the Minister had in his possession. It was a document which pointed out some of the challenges which are involved in the transition from our present economy to the new economy.

One of the stark realities which is involved in this transition is the fact of the possible loss of some two million jobs for the Canadian economy, and the fact that unless something serious is done about the situation we could be facing unemployment rates in this country of some 15 per cent by the year 1990. Therefore, while the budget which the Government recently introduced in the House accepted unemployment at 12 per cent for this year, 11 per cent for next year and 10 per cent for subsequent years, and in fact suggested that full employment in this country was going to mean unemployment at some 7 per cent or 8 per cent in the long term, this secret document, which the Government has yet failed to release, shows that we may face unemployment rates of up to 15 per cent if the Government does not take seriously the whole question of technological change.

The problem with the approach which the Government is taking to technological change and to the over-all economy is that it has really decided to wash its hands of the responsibility of leadership in the economic area. It has decided to rely on the private sector. The budget document indicates over and over again that the jobs will have to come from the private sector. The problem with that is, Mr. Speaker, that if you leave the creation of jobs and growth of the economy to the private sector, and the private sector only, then you are leaving our future and the important decisions with regard to our future to the individual heads of individual business enterprises in this country.

This is a time when we need more than ever an over-all strategy for the direction of the economy of this country and a time when we need our public institutions to bring together business, investment communities, labour and the public sector in a common effort to devise a strategy for economic development, and a strategy for economic development which will have as its first priority the provisions of employment for all Canadians. Rather than putting in place an industrial strategy, a plan of economic development in this country, what the Government has done in its most recent budget, is to rely on incentives to the private sector. It took whatever financial elbow room it had and allocated those dollars to the private sector. At the same time it failed to set a direction for the Canadian economy. That is the first major failing of this Government in its efforts to deal with technological change.

Another thing I want to bring to the attention of this House, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that obviously when we move into a very different kind of economy, when technological change is going to have a comprehensive impact upon the kind of work taking place in the country, when even established industries are going to renew themselves and take a different form, it is crucial that we have an adequate training system. In other words, there is going to be so much change going on in the economy that in order for people to have work and adequate and secure incomes, they will need to have ready and easy access to adequate training. Yet what is the Government's record in this area? When it brought in the National Training Act, which has been touted and advertised across this country, it continued with the same old approach to training which had been in place for a number of years now. That consists of giving financial incentives to the private sector to train people. But that does not really put in place a training system such as exists in European countries, for example. What I am referring to is the fact that in this country our industry trains fewer of its workers than do comparable industries in European countries.

That is why when the debate was going on in the House with regard to training we suggested that the Government examine seriously the grant levy system of training. The notion behind this system is that we would take a particular part of the manufacturing industry, let us say, and we would levy a company in that industry a certain amount to be put in the pot for training. Then those companies which actually did the training could take something out of the pot. That system would encourage industry to train people. It is using both the carrot and the stick. If Canadians are to have access to jobs with higher skill levels, it is crucial that private industry be brought into the training business and that it be systematized, and not just rely upon cash grants and cash incentives.

Another area where the impact of technological change is very striking is that of the disadvantaged people, whether it be women, natives or the handicapped. I would like to focus on women for a moment because they make up a large part of service sector employees. That sector will be radically changed by new technology. The jobs women presently occupy, in which they are underpaid relative to men, are going to be de-skilled or lost. So that if women are not to bear the burden of this transition from the old technology to the new, programs have to be put in place to guarantee that adequate training is made available to women to allow them to take advantage of newly created jobs so they can continue to earn an adequate living. Not only will there need to be training put in place, but adequate social support will be needed so that women with children can take the available training.

In this country, Mr. Speaker, there is a very large percentage of people who are functionally illiterate. At a time when we are moving into an era of new technology, it is fairly obvious that those people will be left behind and will continue to be forgotten by the economy unless we do something serious in this area. The Government has yet to put into place a serious and comprehensive program to deal with the existence of functional illiteracy in this country. Clearly, if they are going to have a chance to earn a living in this society which demands very high skill levels, they need to have the basic skills to allow them to take the training necessary for new jobs.

Some people pin their hopes for jobs on support of the high technology strategy. But we know from the comments of people such as the Canada Council on Social Development, which has analysed this situation, that while high technology will provide some employment it will not provide sufficient employment for all Canadians. It is going to be necessary to have in place a permanent and comprehensive kind of direct job creation system. The present system is ad hoc and temporary, where the names of programs change from month-to-month or year-to-year, and where there are numerous announcements about job creation but there is no permanent and comprehensive plan to provide employment for all those who cannot find it in the private sector.

Fundamentally, technological change offers us a challenge. It challenges the basic values of our society as a whole and us as individual citizens. When the Minister spoke the other day he gave a very rosy picture of technological change and seemed to give us a kind of candy store approach to technological change. He had us going into the candy store as if we were children, picking a bonbon here, a licorice there, and generally enjoying ourselves. But that was not the full picture of the impact of technological change on our society.

The Conservatives have focused exclusively on research and development and investment in R and D. That reminds me a bit of the old economist who used to think that gold was the source of wealth and riches. Well, that sort of economic theory is passé these days because we know that the real source of wealth and riches in this society is its people. Our fundamental commitment to people and the notion that everyone has the right to a job is the source of real value in society. We have to decide now whether technological change will be a burden on the backs of people or whether it will serve people. If it is going to serve people, then we will have to find ways of redefining work, expanding our definition of work, and paying the newly developed jobs adequate salaries.

The change going on in society today is a radical change, Mr. Speaker. Traditionally, farming, for example, was done by hand with the help of a horse and plow. But when mechanization came to the farm, the whole nature of farming changed and the number of people needed was greatly reduced. It is this kind of drastic change which is taking place in our society and we need a plan to deal with it, to make the change serve Canadians rather than Canadians serve the change and suffer through very high levels of unemployment as the price of bringing new technology to Canada.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the comments of my two friends on the opposite benches representing views from Newfoundland, on the one hand, and from a Manitoba perspective on the other. I am pleased, at least, that we do not seem to have any neo-Luddite type of talk coming from the Opposition. There seems to be a recognition that Canada must embark upon and embrace, if you like, the new technologies, which is what our technology policy is intended to do and, I believe, will do.

I do think that there is a certain amount of wallowing in gloom and doom and much concern expressed about a matter which is of concern to all of us. That is the issue, of course, of unemployment. However, we must never lose sight of the fact that today's unemployment results from a combination of factors, one of which is clearly the recession through which the whole western industrialized society is currently moving—and moving out of, I might say. That is something about which one can be optimistic. However, we cannot neglect the fact, of course, that there is high unemployment in all countries. High unemployment and recession in countries where we send our goods will have a major impact on the Canadian economy for as long as the situation lasts. We know that. I believe that Canadians, through this recession, have come to realize the extent to which Canada is very much a part of the world trading community.

That being said, I frankly do not intend to engage in a lot of political rhetoric. I really feel that this debate deserves careful and thoughtful presentation by all who wish to engage in it. Some of the issues that we are considering are really issues for the future. They are issues of the Canada of tomorrow. I intend to deal with them in that light. It is a very important discussion and one which I frankly welcome. It should be thoughtful and not hysterical. People should not be spooked by these opportunities which the new technologies are bringing to us and to other societies. The challenges must be addressed in a rational way, and I suggest that that is what we have been doing and what we will continue to do.

Therefore, I implore Hon. Members: do not cloud the issues. Let us clarify the issues. Let us have a dialogue which may begin in the House and stretch the full breath of the land so that Canadians will be more aware of what lies ahead, the challenges and the opportunities. I think I can satisfy Hon. Members in the House today in the course of these remarks that the opportunities are there, that all the scenarios possible are optimistic scenarios, the only exception being the neo-Luddite school, in other words, the standstill philosophy which, of course, Canadians would not accept and which could only bring with it lower standards of living and certainly devalued currency, and would truly move us into the backwater of the progress sweeping the rest of the world. That Canadians will not accept.

First, Mr. Speaker, I realize that a document drafted in my Department has prompted this debate. It is an internal and confidential document which, apparently, was given to a Globe and Mail journalist. The document cannot really be described as a study and it cannot even be said to be a report. It was to be the basis of a debate with my colleagues and the starting point of discussions on the major issues with which the Canadian economy will have to come to grips over the next ten years. It is more properly a working paper which Ministers might consult when reviewing economic development priorities at the national and even the regional levels.

In the discharge of my duties as Minister of State for Economic Development, Mr. Speaker, I think it is my responsibility, and I should always bring to the attention of my colleagues and the Canadian public the challenges we must face thanks to that technological revolution. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity today to clarify the situation rather than paint it black.

[English]

That being said, let me review briefly the notice of motion proposed by the Opposition. It could really be divided into three parts. The first part deals with the issue of funding. It purports to condemn the Government or seeks the condemnation by the House of the Government for its failure to provide adequate and purposeful funding for research and development and specialized training necessary to cope with technological change in the workplace. This question has been debated and commented upon at some length since the budget was brought down. In fact, as we know, the budget provided over $700 million of incremental, direct, federal—and I underline "federal"—funding in this area. In addition, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) tabled with the budget a discussion paper on the issue of research and development. He wants to know, and we want to know, what are the best techniques?

As studies show, we have one of the richest fiscal incentive regimes in all of the industrialized world, that is, with regard to stimulation of research and development in the private sector. However, perhaps it needs some fine-tuning. Perhaps it needs some enrichment here or there. That is what this open public discussion on the basis of the document tabled yesterday should show.

I would point out that, in terms of the commitment to increased research and development in all sectors, we are doing very well. Let us not consider it from a point of view of gloom and doom or—

As I said a moment ago, by painting the situation in black, because frankly I can see that our policy will have a very promising outcome.

[English]

I see, for example, that we are on track with rising to 1.5 per cent of spending as a percentage of Gross National Product by 1985. That is something which is to be applauded. I think that the effort made by the private sector, by industry and by all communities in recent years has been very encouraging indeed. Of course, the motion speaks of specialized training.

I would like to refer to the speech which was delivered by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), when he tabled his budget. Here is an excerpt:

> To take full advantage of technological advances, Canada will increasingly need well-educated and well-trained workers. Moreover, workers will have to acquire new skills and knowledge throughout their working lives. With this in mind, I am allocating tonight an additional $155 million for human resource development programs. This will bring to $1.2 billion this year the funds allocated for skills development in occupations that are significant for economic growth. Over 250,000 Canadians, half of them young people, will benefit this year from federal support for human resource development.

[English]

What else needs to be said? We heard during Question Period today, as well, the response of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) when he outlined the vast array of programs and the amount which is being spent on human resource development. Therefore, I really do not think that the Hon. Member's notice of motion is in fact well founded when it comes to the commitment of the Government in terms of expenditures themselves.

Let me consider the second part of the motion which was put forward. We speak of a displacement of jobs in manufacturing and in business services. Reference is made to the so-called Government study. As I said in my opening comments, there really is no Government study. There was a discussion document which was there to promote discussion, and it obviously has had that effect, partly through the leak of which we are all aware.

As the Hon. Member knows, there is much debate in the western world at the present time about what the impact of these new technologies may be. I was looking at the comments of the well known economist, Michael McCracken, which he aparently made during a radio interview in the course of this week. He takes very serious issue with the idea of job loss. He said perhaps the contrary, that if we do not embark on these new technologies, the result will be a much greater job loss, and I think we would all agree with that. He does not necessarily accept the view that these new technologies will bring about job loss.

What do we mean by job loss? I must say that I become somewhat alarmed when I see headlines such as "Job Loss Study". There is a very big difference between unemployment and job loss. If we automate and introduce robotics, if we introduce new systems for flexible manufacturing and provide more automation, surely there will be a job loss in that sector. It has long been predicted in all the industrialized countries that there would be a job loss in the manufacturing sector. I will come to the question of whether that is a bad occurrence in a few moments when I review some authorities on the subject. I do not believe that it is bad, and I suggest that I am supported by most independent studies. There will be a job loss, but what about the job gains? How many jobs will be created? What new opportunities will arise from these new technologies? Those are the questions that we must address. Does anyone really know the answer?

In that regard I would suggest that economists are very divided on this issue. There is an old saying about economists that if all the economists in the world were laid end to end, they would still point in all directions. Nothing could be more true when it comes to this debate. That is not to criticize economists, because they too have stimulated debate and put forward ideas. The fact is that I do not believe anyone completely understands these issues because no one has a crystal ball that can tell us what new opportunities will arise, just as we did not know what the automobile would do in terms of shopping centres, tourism, trailer homes and all those things that have evolved from the new transportation system. How do we know what the new information society will bring?

There is much reason to believe that it will bring a lot of good jobs. In fairness, let me say that there are two schools of thought on the subject. I would like to refer to both of them. One school of thought says that there will be more better paying jobs. That is an optimistic scenario and one that is obviously founded upon the historical pattern of technology and technological change. This is a serious school of thought and one that already has a certain amount of evidence to support its thesis.

For example, I refer to an article by Richard Riche who is a senior supervisory economist employed by the U.S. Department of Labour. This article comes from "Economic Impact" No. 41, 1983. He says this:

> When computers were first introduced for office data applications, predictions were made that large numbers of clerical and kindred workers would be displaced; and job opportunities for millions of people, in what is one of the largest occupational employment categories, would be curtailed.
> What actually did happen in the United States was quite different. In 1960 clerical workers numbered about 10 million and accounted for about 15 per cent of total U. S. employment. By 1980 there were more than 18 million clerical workers and they accounted for about 19 per cent of the total. Thus, instead of clerical worker employment decreasing as had been predicted, employment increased about 85 percent between 1960 and 1980. And clerical employment is projected to continue to increase significantly to 1990.

That regards the clerical sector about which much concern has been expressed.

Of course, the other sector is the manufacturing sector and the impact of robots there. With respect to robots, there are also some interesting comments in this same report. I read from page 23 where it states:

> One survey of users and manufacturers of robots suggests that about 95 per cent of the jobs displaced by robots between now and 1990 will not involve unemployment because workers will be either retrained or, in some cases, retire because of age.

I can deal with the programs that are necessary for that, but we should not lose sight of it. There is much more, but I fear that time does not permit me to read all this into the record. I would be very happy to make some of this available to my hon. friends because I am sure they would find it interesting.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We feel that the Minister's statement is a very important one. He commenced his remarks at 20 minutes before the hour. We are prepared to go beyond the hour and give consent to allow the Minister to complete his statement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has been informed that if unanimous agreement is sought it may be given in order to permit the Minister to commence his ten-minute question period at one o'clock. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that because I enjoy the calibre of the debate, and I believe it is an important one as it may be the beginning of a debate that will take place across the country. We will be able to address some of these issues which are very important, particularly to the generation of young Canadians who are so concerned about their future. I think it is important for us to realize what the opportunities and challenges are.

Let me continue this interesting comment on robots. It says:

> Although it would seem logical that the initial impact of the installation of robots would be to reduce employment and, sometimes, to create some unemployment, this has not actually been the case to any great extent. The purpose of the introduction of robots is to improve productivity, thereby enhancing the competitiveness of the firm and the welfare of individuals associated with it. The existence and size of the initial employment effects are often overstated, since the reduction in work force resulting from the introduction of robots is partly offset by the hiring of maintenance personnel, workers to manufacture robots, and computer programmers to provide instructions.
> It should be noted that the structure of employment will change in what most persons would regard as a positive direction.

I emphasize this:

> Robots will usually replace workers engaged in monotonous tasks that are often physically overly demanding and mentally unrewarding. Sometimes, too, the jobs taken over by robots are dangerous for humans. In these cases, the displaced workers may ultimately welcome robots as a means of freeing them to do more rewarding tasks.

I think that is a significant point that must be made in the context of this discussion.

We have another school of thought which tells us that we may indeed have more wealth through the new technologies but less jobs. That school also has some very credible spokesmen. One of the most credible is Wassily Leontief who was a Nobel prize winner in 1973. Leontieff's article, which I read and found interesting, can be found in Scientific American of September, 1982. This Scientific American publication is entirely devoted to issues on the mechanization of work. Leontief postulates that there indeed may be permanent job loss through these new technologies, and he bases himself in part on the only model he could find, which was Austria.

Some years ago Austria did a study of the effects of new technologies on the Austrian economy. He says:

The projections that carry the present state-of-the-art laborsaving technology into full application everywhere in the Austrian economy by 1990 lead in all cases to the largest increase in gross domestic product—

That is to say the most wealth:

—but also to the highest levels of unemployment, to unemployment of 10 percent, a level not experienced in Austria since the dark days of the 1930s. With curtailment in the length of the work week at the maximum degree of mechanization, the direction of both the positive and the negative changes remains the same but their absolute magnitudes are reduced. Unemployment in this case comes closer to the civilized Austrian experience of 2 percent.

Of course, he makes the argument that if that scenario is correct, we will have to address some major changes that will have to take place in the nature of work.

I remind the House that the work week has dropped from 67 hours 100 years ago down to 40 hours today. I do not believe that we should say that this is a dismal scenario that we are seeing. I suggest to my hon. friends that no matter which of these two positions is correct, either more better paying jobs or indeed less jobs through mechanization, but more wealth in both cases, we have the means at our disposal to address the problems because society will be the richer for it.

The only scenario where that does not take place is if we back away from our commitment to technology and the technological revolution. If we back away from it then, of course, we will see a fall in our standard of living. We will see a devalued currency. We will see massive unemployment because we simply will not be competitive in the international marketplaces and, I suppose, we will become the traditional hewers of wood and drawers of water.

There is tremendous excitement ahead for us. There are great opportunities. I would say that one could take either of the scenarios. I prefer the optimistic scenario because we have been that way in the past. We have been down that road. We have seen it happen in agriculture. Between 1946 and 1961 we lost half a million jobs in agriculture. We have seen employment in agriculture between 1946 to 1981 drop from 25 per cent of the work force to 4 per cent of the work force. I do not think anybody would consider those jobs lost; those are jobs displaced. But again of those scenarios—and I will just close my comments with this one point—whether we have more better paying jobs or whether we have less jobs but more wealth in both cases, in either of them we have a transitional period that we have to address. We have to address that through retraining, through a commitment to a human resource development, to bringing new skills onstream, and above all by making young people in the schools of this country aware of the skills and disciplines they require to take advantage of the jobs that will be available through this technological revolution. That is why we have an awareness component. It is not a public relations component, as some of the journalists have said. It is an awareness component. It is to make young Canadians, particularly young girls in primary and secondary schools who are still not opting for the sciences, still not opting for mathematics and chemistry as they should, of the opportunities that lie ahead. For that purpose I was pleased to announce in the course of my comments earlier this week that we will be holding a Canada Tomorrow Conference which will bring together all the elements of our society. They are virtually all the elements of our society concerned with technology because technology impacts and has an effect on each and every sector and on each and every Canadian.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Minister's statement. I consider it an important statement. But the Minister tries to disregard what he calls a Cabinet study document as merely that. Yet that document, which somehow was leaked to the press, refers to the fact that because of the new technology and because of the micro-chip society in which we are moving, we will see unemployment in this country increase to 15 per cent by the end of the decade. We now have 600,000 women unemployed and we now have almost one million people who are long-term unemployed. The Minister has addressed himself to the Government's response and the way it is looking at changes in technology and its impact on the work place, but what do we do about the army of semi-skilled people, and the people employed in the service sector who will see their jobs disappear? Do we reconcile ourselves to double-digit unemployment into the next decade, or do we address the problem of what technology will do to the unemployables of our society? As the Minister knows, a job today means the same to a person as a plot of land meant to a person in the pre-industrial revolution era. If you cannot provide a person with job opportunities, then that is the same as denying a peasant 100 years ago with enough land to feed himself and his family.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I will take that question in the light of the kind of unemployment, let us say, that Mr. Wassily Leontief predicts could be the case, because of there not being enough jobs. In other words, society will be wealthier. We are looking at the next decade, what about the next 50 years? What kind of Canada will we have in 50 years? How many people will be employed in production? How much leisure time will society have? How will the jobs which do exist be distributed? That strikes me as being a very important issue and one that, as I say, might very well be addressed in time through such issues as part time work and a reduced work week or whatever. Those issues have to be addressed. I accept that. I do not think we are there yet. That basically is founded upon the principle that, in fact, there will be fewer jobs.

If one goes the other way with the other scenario and says "No, there will be more jobs," then I suppose the Hon. Member's question would have to be interpreted as being "How do you make sure that people are trained to take those jobs?" That I accept as also a challenge, and that is why the Minister of Employment and Immigration pointed out today that this $1.2 billion referred to in the budget speech is devoted to human resource development. Maybe the Hon. Member is saying it is not enough. I do not know whether it is enough or not enough. The programs are seen to be effective. They are training people in the so-called microchip society, but that is not something we are just moving into. It has been with us for some time. We have had it in the offices of the nation for some time. In fact, in that area we are among the most advanced in the world.

We do have a record to look at. I would say the opportunities are there. There is no reason to talk about 15 per cent unemployment in 1990 or 1991. I wish the Hon. Member would not keep referring to this paper as if it were the gospel on this subject. Not at all. It was written in order to create discussion. It is based upon certain ideas which are well known. Let me give you an example, Mr. Speaker. Every prediction shows that jobs in the manufacturing sector will decrease through the new technologies. That is true in the United States, it is true in western Europe, and Japan, and it is true here. It has been said in some countries that the percentage of people in that sector may go from 20 per cent of the work force to 5 per cent of the work force. When we know we have over two million people in manufacturing, if we lose half of them, let us say over the decade, that is a million lost jobs. But that does not mean that there will not be a million jobs created in some other sector. We also have approximately, let us say, two million people coming into the work force.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am duty bound to apply the rules of the House which require very short answers and very short questions. I would point out to the Minister that there are a number of Hon. Members who are rising and want to put questions.

Mr. Johnston: I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): These Members will not have an opportunity to put their questions if the answers remain that long.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a follow-up question to the one asked by the Hon. Member from Newfoundland. At the outset I want to say that we have to realize that this new society is here already. We cannot put our heads in the sand and pretend that it does not exist or that we can stop it. The important question, as the Minister now says, is how we do the transition and make sure that we are part of it so that we do have a better standard of living.

My question concerns retraining. Japan has about five times as many people as Canada, and 40 times as many people in the electrical engineering schools as we have. I think that is one reason why they are so far ahead of us in the area of advanced technology. If you look at the Science Council reports, they state that we lag behind almost every other industrial country in the world. Why has this Government allowed this to happen? Why does this Government not make advanced technology a more important priority in terms of spending? Why does this Government not make retraining of workers a more important priority in terms of spending? I know the pie has only that many pieces, Mr. Speaker, but other countries have chosen this area as their major priority. Why have we not done that?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, we are doing that. We have provided very substantial increased funding to the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, for example—

Mr. Nystrom: Compared to others?

Mr. Johnston: —which is the centrepiece, if you like, of our post-graduate studies in this country. The federal Government has been there. We would hope that more of the provinces would get onboard and support that sector as well. A recent study in Quebec showed how important the federal contribution has been.

I know I should not go on at great length and I will not, but I do feel that an effort is being made. The percentage increases in all these sectors in terms of Government spending have gone up very, very substantially over the last several years.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief question for the Minister. Considering an announcement he made some time ago that there would be a national conference on the subject, I would like to start by asking him about the problems of structural unemployment which Members see daily in their constituencies, when people are untrained and lack the skills for the jobs available. I would like to know whether the Minister has the assurance of the provinces and other partners in this federation. This country is so decentralized that education is a provincial and not a federal responsibility, but just the same, we do have something like $3 billion for education. I want to ask the Minister specifically whether he can count on the co-operation of the provinces and the private sector and the associations generally concerned with this area, so that the conference will produce results and really be a success?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to co-operation or consultation among all partners. I must say I have not had an opportunity to discuss our Canada Tomorrow conference with the provinces or the private sector, because the idea itself was in fact part of the budget. However, I can assure the House that in the course of my travels across Canada, and in discussions with the provinces and consultations with industry, I have seen an increased interest in technology. In fact, everyone is quite anxious to co-operate. There are very few people in this country who fail to realize the importance of technology for economic recovery. It is therefore my conviction that all the parties concerned, all the provinces, industry and the academic world will be enthusiastic participants.

[English]

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I find that the Minister is on the right track and is trying to address it, but in my opinion, he is taking a tunnel-vision approach to it. The Minister referred to hewers of wood and drawers of water. We have done this well. What incentive will the Government introduce so that we are better producers of our wood and better protectors of our water? You can justify it as you want. He did not refer to a book from the Science Council of Canada, which is an excellent document. He must go beyond the manufacturing and service sector. Where are these people going to go? How are we going to develop Canada beyond the 50-mile stretch along the border of the United States?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member touches on an important point. As I said, the time available for this kind of debate does not allow us really to cover the waterfront. There is no question that a major thrust of the technology policy has to be in our traditional sectors. That is often forgotten. We talk about hi-tech and silicone valley. What is more important—and I have made this point in speeches—is that we diffuse technology in the traditional sectors, that we apply the latest technology to the forestry sector and the extractor industry sector.

These will continue to be Canada's strengths in many ways. We are not going to change the face of our economy overnight. I see that as being fundamental, applying these new technologies to sources of traditional strengths. I would cite the forestry sector in particular where a major thrust must be made to ensure that it remains competitive. The latest technology must be used in reforestation, harvesting and processing, and in new areas such as engineered woods as well as the biotechnology areas which complement them in so many respects.

I accept the point made by the Hon. Member. It is not an area that is neglected. I simply did not have time in the course of my remarks to deal with it at any length.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1.14 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today is not only timely but it is crucial to the future development of Canada. We can either move with confidence into the twenty-first century or we can linger behind as suppliers of raw material to the other industrialized nations of the world. That choice is ours.

We are overwhelmed almost daily by new technological advances. As Alvin Toffler puts it, we are encountering the third wave and Canada cannot afford to ride that wave on imported technology, nor can we afford to use our limited cash resources to develop products that no one can sell.

Speaking for the riding of St. Catharines, I am naturally interested in research and development and the advantages that a vigorous R and D program might have for the shipbuilding and automotive industries. Both of those industries have been harder hit during this recession than most other segments of our society.

A moment ago, I heard the Minister speak rather disparagingly of the Opposition as purveyors of doom and gloom. Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that it is not our purpose and intent to make known the facts simply on the basis of preaching doom and gloom, but we want the country to know that things could be different if the process were different and if the programs were different. We are here simply to set out the facts and the records of the Government as they are.

We have heard some reference made to Japan in the course of the debate. I would like to make more such references. I will not dwell too long on the fact that the Japanese automobile and shipbuilding industries have competed vigorously and successfully here in Canada and throughout the world. Indeed, in terms of the automobile, the Japanese now control between 25 and 35 per cent of the Canadian market. This success has come about in large part because their Government, management and labour have been able to pool their resources and talents, their knowledge and experience toward the development and production of marketable goods.

Shipbuilding is perhaps the best example of the co-operative, pragmatic approach of the Japanese. As technology advanced and the capital equipment of the Japanese shipyards became obsolete and as the decision was made by the Japanese Government to exploit the world market, the Japanese essentially closed their shipyards for a period of some two years. They closed to regroup, retool and retrain. After that hiatus, the Japanese stormed the world and are now in control of over 50 per cent of the shipbuilding market.

There are several lessons that could be learned from this example, not the least of which is that Government and industry-sponsored research signals the need and the value of putting industry in Canada today on an entirely new footing. Research gave the Japanese an edge, the edge needed to give them a competitive advantage. On the automotive side, the Japanese were not only able to anticipate the rising demand for smaller cars and trucks, they were able to continue upgrading their production through style, design, construction and engineering methods to put those vehicles on world markets. It comes as no surprise that the Japanese are investing heavily in research and development. At present that investment amounts to 2.4 per cent of their GNP.

By comparison, the Canadian Government has left our shipbuilding and automotive industries to get along as best they can on the research and development side. Even worse, the Government has actively assisted exporting countries in both these two industries to gain stronger footholds in the Canadian market. Industries locked into price and marketing wars with imports find it more and more difficult to free up the research and development dollars needed by themselves. As those dollars diminish, the industries' ability to stay ahead of changing technology and consumer trends also diminishes.

I recognize that to accuse a Government of working against the interests of industries such as the automotive and shipbuilding industries is a serious charge. Yet there is no other conclusion one could reach when one considers the Government's action with respect to each of those industries. The shipbuilding industry was promised a shipbuilding policy as early as the spring of 1980. Three years went by before any action was taken. During that time even Petro-Canada was out buying offshore. To the credit of the Canadian shipbuilding industry, lay-offs were delayed and minimized to an extent that belied the extreme difficulties they were experiencing. While Petro-Canada was buying offshore, the Government was busy taxing away what business the industry could generate. All Hon. Members will recall the discriminatory tax imposed on marine bunker fuel. A number of Government Members spoke out strongly against that tax, and then went on to vote for it when it was before the House. The industry mounted a strong lobby to oppose the tax, but to little or no avail.

Running concurrently with that furore was the November budget proposal—and now the law—to halve the capital cost allowance for the first year of acquisition. This measure added hundreds of thousands of dollars to the tax liability of a prospective ship owner. Orders fell off, to no one's surprise.

One can be forgiven for thinking that these two measures were the only ones with which the industry had to cope. They are bad enough, but we cannot forget the hike in seaway tolls and lockage fees which contributed to the decline in shipping. Transportation is a highly competitive industry where a cent per tonne difference in price decides whether a customer will use the transportation mode of a railway, shipyard or truck, inside or outside Canada.

The Americans encountered similar economic difficulties. They took action to put their railways on a more competitive footing, an action opposite to the direction being taken by the Canadian Government with respect to shipping. Hence, while shipping costs were going up because of Government-imposed taxes and fees, United States rail costs were going down because Americans entered into a deregulation exercise. I point out these factors and considerations to demonstrate that the industries in question can only allocate money for research and development if they have money remaining after paying their operational expenses. For the Government to nail the private sector for not spending enough while taxing the sector beyond reason is simply hypocritical.

Despite the albatross of high taxation and discriminatory policies, the private sector has managed to undertake some impressive research and development programs. Some of the programs have led to growth and prosperity for some sectors, while others have been able to maintain their viability by new product innovations. However, far too many businesses and industries have not been able to stay ahead of research and development in their fields, while others have come to rely upon imported technology. If we believe it is important that Canadian research and development be homegrown to the greatest possible extent—and I do—the federal Government will have to assist industry and its promotion and development more than it is presently doing.

After 15 years of neglect the Government is now proposing that a goal of 1.5 per cent of GNP be reached as quickly as possible for the support of research and development. That is almost a full percentage point behind that of the United States, Japan and West Germany. By way of contrast, the 1979 Progressive Conservative Government established a goal of 2.5 per cent. Our view was and is that Canada has lost ground which it has to make up. It not only lost ground before 1979 but has lost even more since then.

It is simply inadequate to throw money at a problem. There is no end to the projects which might be funded by someone somewhere. This can always be used as a plausible case for the value of funding a particular area of research. Tough decisions have to be made. In times of economic difficulties perhaps those decisions are even tougher, but we must face them and go with areas of endeavour which show the greatest promise.

In keeping with this Government's approach, I note that $1.5 million of the $100 million in new high technology spending will be allocated to public relations. The best public relations in the world are more jobs and greater economic prosperity, not the further expenditure of public dollars on Government advertising to perpetrate a myth. After all, when we compare the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars on advertising for Petro-Canada with the decreasing support for Petro-Canada by Canadians, we might conclude that Government advertising has a negative effect upon Canadians.

High technology is a booming sector of the economy. It is creating thousands of jobs where few existed before. It is not the net sum of employment. High-tech businesses are usually very profitable and are responsible corporate citizens. They are having little or no difficulty convincing a country with high unemployment that high-tech is one of the bright stars on the horizon. We might then wonder whether the Government's $1.5 million public relations program is not ultimately designed to associate it with a success story instead of an unparalleled record of failures.

I mentioned unemployment a moment ago. That crisis is the second aspect of the motion before us today. St. Catharines-Niagara has been extremely hard hit by unemployment, primarily because of the Government's inept and incompetent handling of the economy. Wonderful promises were made in 1980 about an industrial strategy, lower interest rates and lower energy prices. These were to happen, but once the election of February 1980 was over the Government proceeded to lead Canada into the worst economic downturn since the Great Depression. The Niagara, as an industrialized region, felt this more than most. Over the last year the St. Catharines-Niagara reporting area has more often than not been among the worst three urban centres for unemployment in Canada. Last month, as Government Members were quick to point out, unemployment dropped by almost 2 per cent in the Niagara, putting us as fourth worst in Canada. What Government Members fail to mention, though, is the fact that better unemployment statistics are coming forward because people are removing themselves from the labour market. They are just giving up any hope of finding a job. In the Niagara some 10,000 to 20,000 people are in this category. If those persons become heartened by the Government's optimistic and self-congratulatory mouthings and rejoin the labour force, the unemployment rate in the Niagara would be at at least the minimum which we projected of 22 per cent.

There is little comfort to be gained from lower unemployment statistics when the reason behind them is the despair and despondency of many thousands of Canadians. Even now, with all the benefits of the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), there were 7,000 fewer jobs in industrial Canada than in the month previous, and the unemployment rate in Ontario rose in the last month from 11.4 per cent to 11.7 per cent. The Niagara area fared even worse than that.

A significant number of those who are now unemployed can expect a brighter future when and if economic recovery takes hold, but many will not have that brighter future, Mr. Speaker, because they will not have the skills to accommodate and to meet the needs of that future. The motion before us draws attention to this fact and cites a federal study's conclusion that unemployment could reach 15 per cent by 1991. That is a figure we might have to live with. We cannot expect, nor should we, to raid other countries for the skilled workers needed to fill some select Canadian jobs, as we so often have done in the past. Surely, we can train our own people for our own jobs and prospects.

Study after study, including the parliamentary task force report "Work for Tomorrow", has cried out for more retraining programs to put Canadians in a position to fill those jobs requiring new or upgraded skills. The Government's response has been totally inadequate. It seems that the Government would rather issue Unemployment Insurance cheques than to use that money and the innate willingness of the unskilled worker to receive training to sponsor a national drive to get Canadians ready for the challenges which lie ahead.

The high-tech revolution can be a positive and welcome one for Canada if we are prepared to stay ahead of it. Nevertheless, if we continue to drift as we are now, that revolution will neither be as great nor as positive as it should be. The time for action is fast running out, Mr. Speaker. Let us get on with the job now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are the Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken? If not, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some trepidation. This is a rather important debate. The tone was set this morning by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and reinforced by the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party and the Minister.

It is an interesting fact that most of us on both sides of the House do attach much importance to the subject of job creation and what I may call the "cybernetic revolution" we are facing. The fact is that we have a challenge to meet, but as Canadians, I am sure we have the energies and the potential will to do so with success. Rather than speak gloomily about the subject, I would like to address it on two aspects dealing with the revolution. First, I would like to speak to the research and development component of the motion. Second, I would like to address the question of training and development of our human resources which is our Canadian wealth in the future.

I would like to clarify for Hon. Members certain statements made about the level of research and development funding in Canada and about this Government's commitment to increasing R and D so that we do meet our investment target of 1.5 per cent of GNP by 1985. Canada has passed through a period of relatively low investments in research and development, but this trend has now been reversed. In 1982, Canada's gross expenditures and R and D reached 1.34 per cent of GNP, well on our way to meeting our target of 1.5 per cent of GNP by 1985. During the late sixties and for the first half of the seventies, there was a steady decline in the share of the GNP which was invested in R and D. As a percentage of GNP, Canada's gross domestic expenditures on R and D declined from what was then an all-time high of 1.29 per cent in 1969 to a low of 0.96 per cent in 1976. Spending by the Canadian business sector was particularly weak when compared to the expenditures of the industrial sectors of the major industrialized nations. Moreover, most of our international competitors were achieving larger productivity growths and our deficit in high technology trade was on the increase.

To provide Canadian industry with incentives to increase its R and D expenditures and by so doing increase its productivity and competitiveness in the domestic and international marketplaces, the federal Government introduced an R and D investment tax credit in 1977 and followed up in 1978 with an additional allowance for scientific research. Later, in December 1980, Cabinet endorsed an R and D Planning Framework which set a national target for R and D expenditures in the natural sciences and engineering to reach 1.5 per cent of GNP by 1985. Half of these investments were to be made by the industrial sector and one-third by the federal Government, with the remainder to be taken up by the other sectors. The framework also established growth targets for gross domestic expenditures on R and D and for the expenditures of the various funding sectors. Beginning in 1979, gross domestic expenditures on R and D were to increase annually at an average rate of 20 per cent, with industrial support increasing at 27 per cent and federal funding to be fixed at 17 per cent.

Considerable progress has been achieved since the introduction of the tax measures and the adoption of the R and D plan. Over the period 1979-82, gross domestic expenditures on R and D have increased at an average rate of 20 per cent, industry's investment has grown at 26 per cent per annum, and the federal contribution has advanced yearly at a rate of approximately 18 per cent. These growth rates are almost identical to those contained in the R and D Planning Framework. The downward trend in the gross domestic expenditures on R and D to the Gross National Product ratio has been arrested and reversed. From 1976 onwards gross domestic expenditures have consistently increased at a faster rate than the GNP and, since the approval of the R and D Planning Framework, gross domestic expenditures on R and D, as a share of GNP, has increased from its base value of 1.03 per cent in 1979 to 1.34 per cent in 1982. In 1982, R and D expenditures in the natural sciences amounted to $4.7 billion, $833 million, or almost 22 per cent more than in the previous year. This is the largest year-over-year percentage increase ever recorded. During the same period federal funding of GERD increased by $232 million from $1.4 billion in the previous year to $1.6 billion in 1982. In real term, national R and D expenditures have increased each year since 1976 at an average of 7 per cent annually and between 1980 and 1982 have grown at 10 per cent per annum.

In addition to the support provided by grants, contracts and contributions, the federal Government also encourages industrial R and D through a variety of indirect measures. In 1980, for example, 343 firms filed claims amounting to $181 million in additional allowances for scientific research and $83 million in R and D investment tax credits. Corporate taxes were probably reduced by between $90 to $120 million as a result of these claims.

Federal assistance is also provided for other stages of the innovation process. In 1982, the major industry support programs spent $429 million to improve the innovative capabilities of Canadian industry.

More than half the $2.6 billion in industrial R and D was performed in high technology sectors such as communications equipment, aerospace, petroleum products and chemicals. These four sectors carried out $1,228 million of R and D in 1982, $255 million more than in the previous year and roughly twice the amount performed in 1979.

Preliminary data for 1983 suggested a slowing down in the growth of funding in both the federal Government and industry sectors. However, in the case of the federal Government, these data were based on the 1983-84 Main Estimates and did not contain the expenditures from a number of Cabinet Committee decisions made since that time.

Nor did the data reflect the April 19 budget initiatives which include $100 million over the next two years for new technology policy initiatives, $180 million for high technology procurement and $290 million to be spent on new research facilities.

In the case of industry, the 1983 data are based on forecasts of expenditures derived from the 1982 industry survey. Once again, these forecasts do not anticipate the increased tax credit or flow through tax incentives proposed in the April 19 budget. These measures are expected to increase Government support of industry by some $185 million in the first full year in which they will apply and encourage substantial increases in industry funding. Even without these new incentives, other evidence suggests that the 1983 figures are conservative. For example, The Financial Post survey of industry R and D indicates 54 of 82 firms will increase their R and D expenditures in real terms over the next three years.

Of the $3,242 million allocated for science and technology expenditures in 1983-84, $2,611 million or 80 per cent will be for activities in the natural sciences and engineering. R and D in the natural sciences will amount to $1,956 million, 11 per cent more than last year, and in the related scientific activities expenditures will increase 12 per cent from $585 million to $655 million. Since 1979-80, expenditures on R and D and related scientific activities will have grown at annual rates of 15 per cent and 14 per cent respectively.

Approximately 52 per cent of the federal 1983-84 R and D program is allocated for projects relating to natural resources, including food and oceans, energy and the advancement of science. Another 11 per cent will be spent in response to initiatives from the industrial sector and 8 per cent on health R and D. In recent years, energy and space have been the fastest growing program areas with increases averaging 23 per cent per annum between 1981-82 and 1983-84.

Federal R and D expenditures in the industry sector will amount to $462 million, 27 per cent more than the 1982-83 level and more than twice the 1979-80 total of $213 million. Over the five-year period, federal funding of industrial R and D will have increased by 21 per cent per annum. Federal R and D expenditures on university R and D have grown by 17 per cent per annum during this period and by 15 per cent for federal intramural R and D.

During the 1983-84 fiscal year this Government will spend an estimated $631 on activities in the human sciences. This is 8 per cent more than the $583 million spent in 1982-83 and 59 per cent more than the 1979-80 expenditures of $397 million.

For all these reasons, this Government is confident that Canada will continue its progress toward the 1985 target of 1.5 per cent. I thank Hon. Members for letting me put these figures on the record because I do think they are important. As Members know, the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, which regularly goes through these exercises of rather dry figures, is always interested, and I thought it would be appropriate at this time to make these public.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to speak to a matter that is closer to my riding and to your own riding of Ottawa West as well, namely, training and development.

As we all know, a number of companies in the Ottawa area are specialized in high technology I am thinking, for instance, of Mitel, which has made a tremendous contribution to Canada's economy by taking advantage of the latest modern technologies. I am of course delighted to see these companies expand, and in fact, Mitel recently announced it had obtained a very important contract for exporting telephone communications equipment.

Mr. Speaker, before going into the details of my subject, which is training and development, I would also like to draw the attention of the House today to an article in the Financial Post published under the title "High-tech booster", which revealed that "Canada's high-tech sector is well pleased by Finance Minister Marc Lalonde's April budget, which contains several significant investment changes and more than $500 million-worth of incentives".

Mr. Speaker, that appeared today, in the Financial Post.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to read the whole article, although there are some very interesting explanations concerning the measures contained in the last budget which, as I said earlier, are likely to promote what is known as research and development, that is, things that are essential to the growth of our economy.

Organizations that reacted favourably to measures aimed at assisting progress in the technology sector also included the Canadian Advanced Technology Association, whose Executive Director, Mr. Robert Long, indicated that the result would be increased investment in this sector.

In an economy that is primarily based on private enterprise, I see these reactions as signs of a trend that will lead to practical projects and thus jobs, and that is worth a lot more than gratuitous statements to the effect the Government has failed to act in this area.

This is not to say that the situation is satisfactory or that we can look forward to a rosy future, because the unemployment rate remains high, despite our present economic recovery. It is clear that many workers who have been laid off in certain industries and certain sectors will never get back the jobs they had before. They will have to be redirected elsewhere, if possible to jobs where they can use the same skills, but in many cases, these workers will have to be retrained. In fact, the National Training Act, which was passed in the House last year, will enable the Government of Canada to spend nearly $1 billion on training and development. Mr. Speaker, I think these expenditures are essential, because they will help yound people to acquire the training they need to get jobs that require new skills.

We must look ahead and we cannot afford to listen to people who want to perpetuate industries that are labour-intensive but are technically obsolete in some areas and where foreign competition is practically eliminating us from the market. On the contrary, we must develop advanced technologies and not only maintain or improve our position on the domestic market but also make gains on market abroad. All this will also require the co-operation of provincial authorities—again, in connection with the National Training Act—because we all know that the provinces, which have jurisdiction in education matters, have a very substantial say in the development of occupational training programs.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read a comments from a talk by Dr. Larkin Kerwin, President of the National Research Council, who spoke to the Richelieu Club of Ottawa. This is in connection with what I just said about the problems of co-ordinating training programs to allow for both national priorities and the priorities of the provinces which are constitutionally responsible for education. I shall now quote Dr. Kerwin:

> Unfortunately, there is no mechanism or co-ordinating body between the Federal Government and the provinces as far as scientific research and development is concerned, and as a result, it is difficult to define priorities in this respect. The sensible thing to do would be for both levels of government to agree on a common strategy, with definite emphasis on establishing high-technology industries.

We must therefore provide a comprehensive solution to this problem. We must urge the provinces, the universities and the entire post-secondary sector to work together with the Federal Government and sit down and determine our objectives, once and for all. That is why this morning, in the House, I asked the Minister whether he could count on the co-operation of the provinces. He answered, as Hon. Members will recall, that he had not yet approached the provinces. I hope, and I say this very sincerely, that all the provinces will sit down with the Federal Government in order to establish these mechanisms which are essential if we are to meet our common objectives, namely, training our human potential, our young people, in both technological and industrial skills.

It is no use going on about what happened in the past when workers were often trained for occupations where not enough jobs were available. From now on, we shall have to be very careful in selecting the kind of training we want to provide, not only as a matter of economics but also in order to maximize effectiveness.

In fact, the new program set up by the Department of Employment and Immigration contains a number of elements that will be very helpful in this respect.

First of all, we have the Canadian Occupational Projections System which makes it possible to collect, compile and transmit information on future manpower supply and demand, by occupation. The program will help improve long-term human resources planning in Canada. There is also the Skills Growth Fund, which this year will make some $100 million available to Canadian institutions that are anxious to modernize or expand.

I am not unfamiliar with this fund, Mr. Speaker, because on March 17, here in the House, I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) for details about a grant provided by the fund to help create a training center for the high-technology industry here in Ottawa. The seven firms participating in this enterprise are: NABU, Epitek, Digital Equipment, Canadian Marconi, Mitel, Gandalf and Systemhouse, which are now developing plans for this special training program. The participation of this consortium is a perfect example of co-operation between the Federal Government and the private sector in the context of training Canadians so they will be able to meet the challenges of the eighties.

Mr. Speaker, as I said at the beginning of my speech, to achieve high levels of employment and an increase in real wages, we must be able to provide Canadian workers with skills that are sought after by growth-sector industries. The key element of a labour market strategy for the eighties is therefore to improve and fine tune occupational training. The National Occupational Training Program, established under the National Training Act, has provided the basis for such action.

I see that you are rising, Mr. Speaker. If my time has expired, I am sorry, but I would have liked to continue my speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for allowing the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) to finish his speech?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you for giving me more time, Mr. Speaker. I shall be brief. As I said earlier, our aim was to make sure that employers could find workers with the skills required to expand their businesses and to help individuals acquire the necessary skills to become more productive and more competitive on the labour market. The National Training Act determines where training funds will be allocated, that is mostly for training activities in occupations of national importance.

Mr. Speaker, the key elements of the training strategy to be implemented under the Act in order meet our needs are as follows, I shall be very brief because I would like to cover this most important issue as completely as possible. First, more information must be obtained about the needs for various skills. To this end, governments, business and labour must, of course, work together under the Canadian Occupational Forecasting Program.

Some changes must also be made to training and development facilities to help them provide the required training. The various establishments must adapt to the new conditions in order to provide the training courses deemed necessary. This adaptation is difficult, I am told, because the increase the number of trainees is now at a standstill. Because of this, special funds will have to be earmarked for the expansion of training facilities in areas where the need is greatest. Projects funded by the Skills Growth Fund established under the National Training Act are already giving results, as in the case of the seven Ottawa companies I mentioned earlier.

Elsewhere, the British Columbia Institute of Technology, for instance, is already providng a computer design and manufacturing program. The Winnipeg Computing Devices Corporation has developed computer training courses for underprivileged youths and the Holland College in Prince Edward Island has a marine techniques program.

The quantity and quality of industrial training must therefore be improved. Particularly, on the job training for jobs geared to the growth of Canada should be increased. The revised Industrial Training and Critical Trades Skills Training Programs are essential tools for making the necessary improvements.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I remember spending many years of my life in school, from 1960 to 1972, when the number of technical schools in Canada grew tremendously under a program introduced by Mr. Diefenbaker in 1957 to encourage the provinces to build technical schools in order to meet the challenge of the 70s. We took up a challenge in 1980; in 1990, we shall have to get together, develop new techniques and direct our programs toward youth training.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any Hon. Members rising to ask questions or make comments on the speech of the Hon. Member? If not, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean):

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the motion before the House today, that this House condemns the Government for its failure to provide adequate and purposeful funding for research and development and specialized training, necessary to cope with technological change in the workplace. According to a federal Government study this will cause serious displacement of jobs in manufacturing and business services, resulting in continuing high unemployment, forecast to reach 15 per cent by 1991. I do so because it is surely one of the most urgent issue before the nation. This issue is not just an international one but also one which confronts each of our constituencies.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), in introducing the motion today indicated that the Government is finally coming to a new realization, in part because of a study which was leaked to the public. The Government is being besieged by groups and sectors across the society to give some leadership, in terms of a national effort, to deal with the changing times.

Now we are told that the Government is beginning a process of conditioning Canadians to a situation which might well have been avoided had there been, during the last 15 years, any reading of the signs of the times which are before us. As my colleague said, we are placed in a situation today where there are some 609,000 women and some 624,000 youth between the ages of 15 and 24 who are unemployed. They are the ones who are the first to go and the last back in the work force.

• (1450)

In his response in the debate, the Minister has set several scenarios before us and has sought to take attention away from the failure of the Government to plan through these years. He has suggested instead that we now play catch-up football. He tells that we are in a transitional period, of which we are all aware; and that this must be addressed, as it must be and on an emergency basis. There will now be a propaganda program in the schools called an awareness program and there will be a Canada Tomorrow Conference. Had the Minister and his officials been taking the warnings of the Science Council of Canada and those of other Government agencies seriously through the years, we would not be in this situation.

Speaking to the 1983 general meeting of faculty and staff at the University of Waterloo, an institution with world class technological capacity, the President, Dr. Douglas Wright, said:

> The transformation of the economy now taking place, driven by new technologies and international competition, is leading to a more fundamental division in the labour force. In the next few years, unskilled workers will face rapidly declining prospects and the role of knowledge-based workers will become much more critical. Canada's future depends more on its human resources than on its natural resources. It seems no accident that the most successful economies in the world today are resource-poor and technology-rich. They all put a premium on rigour in education and training. They are all committed to maintaining long-term competitiveness through research and development.

By way of reflection on that comment I was interested to learn, for example, of the integration of universities and industry in Japan. At the University of Tokyo there are now some six professors of robotics in the engineering faculty. They feed their research and development directly into the Japanese car industry. Presently, 25 per cent of the cost of a car in Canada is in electronics and 90 per cent of that electronics comes from Japan into the North American automotive centres.

In an article in the Business Quarterly of 1982, Professor MacMillan suggests that before long even our base resources will not be needed. The Japanese are in the process of developing a ceramic base for engine blocks which will no longer require the traditional metals to be used.

Today we are at a point where there is need to help small businesses apply new technology. Small businesses persons in my area of southwestern Ontario in Kitchener-Waterloo say that they cannot often be accepted because they do not have a track record. The Government wants to continue on the safe route and they are left out.

I want to focus for a moment on 52 per cent of our society which has been rigorously studying the implications of new technology. That sector consists of women and the organizations that speak for them. I want to draw to the attention of the House and our nation the current participation by female workers in our economy, and then move on to some suggestions about the importance of retraining and training programs to ensure that women are not made to suffer the brunt of job displacement due to technological change in the work place.

Let us review for a moment labour participation. In 1982, there were some 4.844 million women in the paid labour force. That is over 50 per cent of all Canadian women. Of those women in the labour force, 65 per cent were under 45, and 45 per cent were women with children under the age of three. The overwhelming majority of these women were single, widowed, divorced or the sole support of dependants. In addition, almost half of the wives in two income earning families were married to spouses earning less than $15,000 a year.

In 1981, the average income of a women in the paid labour force was about $8,100, which is less than half the average male wage of $16,659. If only full time work is considered, the average woman today earns 58 per cent of her male counterpart's average wage. That is $12,069 compared to $20,719.

Let us consider the matter of retraining of women in high technology. From December, 1981, to December, 1982, the unemployment rate among women rose from 9 per cent to 12.1 per cent, an increase of 41 per cent. Seventy per cent of women in the paid labour force are concentrated in low paid job ghettos in the clerical, sales and service occupations. The situation there is not improving.

Between 1975 and 1980, the female share of good managerial, professional and technical jobs increased by 1.5 per cent while women's share of traditional female jobs increased by 3.5 per cent. The over-all number of women in the latter category is far more significant than the managerial category.

Women are also losing ground in teaching, traditionally one of the best occupations for them. Between 1975 and 1980, 66.7 per cent of new full time teaching jobs went to men.

To this dismal picture must be added the possible impact of high technology, the subject we are addressing today, on women in the paid labour force. The job ghettos in which the majority of women in the paid labour force are clustered are prime targets for the efficiency and productivity improvements made possible by the micro-chip revolution. Up to one million jobs presently performed by women may disappear by 1990.

While the total number of jobs may remain stable and even increase, depending on Canada's over-all success in developing this new industry, workers with existing skills, many of them women, may well find themselves displaced.

To further compound the problem, all indications are that the skills gap between the old jobs wiped out by the new technology and the new ones created may be too great to be bridged by on the job training alone. This is especially true of clerical work. In order to prevent massive unemployment among women and the attendant social consequences for them and their families, and in order to prevent widespread opposition to the new technology, these displaced workers must be retrained.

My Party is not prepared to abandon one million female workers. It is committed to the following measures to ensure that the necessary retraining takes place. First, financial incentives, especially tax measures, for employers to retrain existing employees prior to the introduction of new technology which renders their present skills obsolete. Second, financial incentives to industry, educational institutions and the Provinces to enable them to provide training which is targeted not only at the new high-technology jobs but also, wherever possible, at the displaced workers. I notice that there is nothing like that in Bill C-150 which covers educational transfers. If the Government is going to put strings on these transfers, why not put some strings on the training for women? Third, the supplementing of on the job training by skill development leave or some other form of paid or subsidized educational leave.

Fourth, amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act to permit recipients to take appropriate retraining programs without loss of benefits.

Fifth, amendments to the Canada Labour Code specify a minimum standard for employees under federal jurisdiction with respect to consultation prior to the introduction of technological changes into the workplace with respect to retraining and with respect to health and safety standards in relation to new technology. The Canada Labour Code amendments are particularly important to women since the vast majority are non-unionized and therefore cannot bargain for such protection.

We turn now to the matter of training for women. We note that at the same time as traditional women's jobs are disappearing women continue to enter the labour force in ever increasing numbers. Presently six out of ten new entrants are women, both recent graduates and older women, and this number is expected to increase to seven out of ten in the next decade. The majority of these women are still equipping themselves for traditional occupations. Second to teaching, clerical work is still the most common occupation for female Bachelor of Arts graduates. Most women with business diplomas become clerks, compared to the majority of their male counterparts with similar qualifications who go into sales or management.

Women coming out of educational institutions, or from the home, must be encouraged to move into non-traditional occupations, especially those areas expected to be "priority" occupations in the next decade, through such measures as specialized counselling and special training grants.

In particular, my Party is committed to the following measures in relation to training. First, the substantial expansion of the Outreach Programs which counsel women re-entering the labour force while at the same time ensuring that these programs continue to be operated as much as possible by the client groups.

Second, significant expansion of the CEIC Program for non-traditional training for women to ensure that women obtain their fair share of Government-sponsored training places for non-traditional jobs—currently only 6.5 per cent of such spaces are occupied by women—and to provide fiscal incentives to employees to hire and to train women in non-traditional occupations.

Third, reorientation of Canada Employment Centres generally so that they no longer act as a barrier to women seeking to enter non-traditional jobs. It is interesting to note that studies continue to indicate that Canada Employment counsellors are still channelling women into clerical training programs.

I want to pay a special tribute to the women's groups in the Waterloo region who are making an important contribution to the study of the effects of high technological changes in the workplace in the midst of that area in the country which is beset by unemployment problems due to the slump in the automotive industry and other industries. The group community resources for women through this spokesperson, Wendy Newberry, says that in our Kitchener-Waterloo area alone hundreds of working women, many employed currently in the insurance industry, are already experiencing the effects of the transition to word processing equipment, from typewriters to electronically-based information systems from manual data processing. She said that she would be happy to ensure the Government receives the report of this group's findings as they become available this spring and that they are particularly eager to see the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) act upon the recommendations of the Labour Canada report entitled "In the Chips: Opportunities, People, Partnerships," which was submitted to the Minister last Fall by his Department's task force on microelectronics and employment.

In the few moments that remain to me, I want to suggest that this sector, the sector of women, is but one of the sectors and this is but one illustration of the size of the problem in front of us. Already in this debate we have reversed some of the many possibilities that lie open to us. The Government had before it the detailed report of the Science Council of Canada. In that report, after looking at the effects and the economic imperatives of all of this technological change, the needs that we have been talking about for employment strategies, retraining programs, software skills, design systems, co-operative approaches between labour and management, the Council predicted a bleak future if Canada does not act quickly to maintain social and economic stability in the transition to an information society. That report states:

> Many sectors of our manufacturing industry would be rendered obsolete, virtually overnight. Our trade balance, already precarious, might never recover. Structural unemployment could lead to permanent joblessness for many Canadians, a decline in living standards and, for some, emigration.

This future can be avoided if action is taken immediately. The Government has had warning, not just for a year but for years and, indeed, through the last decade. This debate is important. Even at this late date there is a requirement for all sectors to come together to agree upon those strategies, and we in presenting this motion do so in order that we can expose to ourselves and to the Canadian public many of the opportunities and alternatives which we would lay before the Canadian public as we look forward to the opportunity of becoming the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any Hon. Members rising to ask questions? The Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell).

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, you must remember I have probably the easiest riding in Canada to recall and I realized when you were hesitating that you were not going to look up my riding. Most people ask where it is!

Nevertheless, this subject is of great interest to me. The Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) referred to a book that I treat as a bible. It was written in March, 1982 and was put out by the Science Council of Canada entitled "Planning now for an Information Society". I am just pointing out the dangers here because in that book the Science Council shows where it anticipates being between 1985 and 1990 and the year 2000. The Science Council also refers to where we will be in the years 1980 to 1985. Things are happening so quickly. What the Science Council predicted for the years 1980 to 1985 has now occurred, and part of what was anticipated for 1985-1990 has occurred.

This fine report was produced a little over a year ago. I am not criticizing the report; I am just getting my point across. What I am concerned about is not unemployment as such because that is an over-simplification of the problem. We have a social problem, a serious social problem, because technology will affect every facet of life. Today it is not necessarily taking jobs away from the workers.

I happen to have General Motors close by and part of its operation is in my own riding. I have been through the plant and I have studied what is happening. General Motors has not really reduced the number of employees. The reason General Motors put in robotics and got into high technology was not to reduce employment or cut employment costs but to improve the product and quality. The quality control is far greater when you have automatic welders as compared to humans, with their frailties and weaknesses. It is these frailties and weaknesses that concern me about high technology, not only the unemployed.

I do not believe that because of the baby boom we are going to have the serious unemployment we anticipated, but we are going to have a great deal of time. I do not say leisure time because that is a dangerous term. When you refer back to the days of Rome, it was leisure time that destroyed their society. In any event, we will have time.

One of the things we can do with our time is construct new projects. That would be an interesting use of our time. High technology will provide us with that. It will also provide us with access to information throughout the world, the upgrading of medical information and medical science to keep us healthy. It will give us easier access to stores in order to make purchases. This will be particularly helpful to the handicapped who are unable to leave their homes. We will have a great deal of extra time.

A number of times one of my colleagues from British Columbia has talked about farmers who, because of the economy, have had to get an extra job off the farm. They have had to do this in order to maintain their farm, which is their basic interest. The Department of National Revenue is now going through its books and beginning to tax these people on their basic income. That is negative input. We should be developing tax incentives for individuals. Our basic industry was that of being hewers of wood and drawers of water. Those people individually and collectively can develop new technology for growing trees and producing a higher volume of grains. Let us look at corn, for example. Formerly corn could only be grown in the southernmost part of Ontario. It can now be grown in Manitoba. Each farmer who has an enterpreneurial spririt wants to do something along that line. I maintain that what the Department of National Revenue has done to these people is wrong.

With the extra time that will be available, it is very important to develop new skills, products, hybrids, the cross-pollination of different cereal grains and grasses. Therefore, it is very important that we encourage the small farmer. More people will be going back to the land. Through high technology and because there simply will not be as much employment in the manufacturing centres, more people will move into mid-Canada and develop their own interest and industry within that area. We will get away from the megacities which we have created through our material needs. We have to look at what we can do for the farm people through individual efforts. Also, we must look at biotechnology. We are not addressing ourselves to that. It is a very important subject because it may improve the strain of anything that grows. With improved medical science, people will be able to do more with their extra time. It is important that that time be filled.

As I said in question period today, we cannot fill that time with pay television. That is a crutch. We must give people a tool. That is what high technology will do. It will give people access to information. They will have access to debates in this House of Commons going back 20 years. People will have access to information in magazines from around the world. There will be international communication of information. What is going to happen will be exciting, but we have to identify what people are going to do with their time. We cannot call it leisure time or it will have no purpose.

Someone said to me that he can imagine the time when he will work three days a week. He will be able to devote over 50 per cent of his time to what he is interested in and yet retain the same basic income to maintain his standard of living. If that can be spread across the country, imagine how much benefit this country will get from people developing new ideas, new concepts, new methods of harvesting and growing, new forms of energy that we have not yet touched in this country. We keep talking about drilling for oil. We go five miles underground. We go out into the oceans into iceberg alley to try and find oil. I was told today that in Nova Scotia they can produce almost enough alcohol to replace the oil they bring in from overseas.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They need that in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Fennell: That type of technology has been developed by individuals in the United States in such places as Kentucky, where they run their tractors on gasohol. We do not have that incentive in this country. This is what we must do.

Giving grants to large corporations is not the answer. We must assist these individuals. Let me give an explanation of grants. The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) stated that he is providing larger funding. It usually takes the bureaucrats about a year to decide whether something is a worthwhile subject to be studied. By the time the grant is made, it represents less than 10 per cent of the total cost because usually the project has been completed.

If you really want to help industry in research and development, and that is where you want to put your effort, you should allow these people to remove deferred income tax payable from their financial statement. This would put their statement in a much stronger position. The free enterprise market will then come up with the money. They can borrow debt capital without future income tax on their statement. The Government will not collect it anyway, so why not wipe it off their sheets and allow them to go to the free market to raise funds? That is what industry wants, not grants because they take too long.

I have talked to Walter Light of Northern Telecom many times. He is a Canadian for whom I have the highest respect. He has done one of the most amazing jobs in this country to represent us in the communications field. I do not say he did alone, but he was the leader. He does not need grants. We are talking $700 million over two years. On one project alone, Northern Telecom will be spending $1.2 billion over the next five years. I am bringing high technology up because that is how it should be financed.

Going full circle, it is the individuals we must talk about. It is the potential unemployment that many Members have referred to and, as the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) said, the unemployment of women that we must talk about. Well, Mr. Speaker, this week I spoke to a young lady who happens to work in the United States. Where she works, they have placed terminals in people's homes so that those people who used to come to the office to type now type within their own home. The typing is processed within their own home and printed in the office. We are going to come to that. There is a new book on this subject called "Megatrends" that tells us that in the future we will be taken away from the centre of the city and, perhaps going almost too far, we will all work in our own homes and not go to an office. The only thing that is missing there is the social interchange and the opportunity to discuss things one on one.

I do want to stress that we must deal with the social impact of technology. We must protect the people. Let me talk about structural unemployment, a subject which many people have referred to. Structural unemployment really refers to those people who cannot accept this new technology, people who were raised in an age when they used their hands. We must protect those people. We must assist them to relocate, to retrain, to do whatever is possible to assist them. If that fails, we must assist them to live with dignity. That is something that we are not dealing with.

A person from the age group of 20 to 45 can adapt very quickly to new technology. Some people in their middle years and older have a hard time grasping the new technology. Those are the people that will be seriously hurt. I feel that the youth will be picked up in time because they can go to community colleges and they can gain the knowledge that is needed, but it is the people who cannot do this that we must protect. At this point, the Government has not identified what is to be done about this problem.

About two months ago I talked to two young men who worked for General Motors. I said: "I hope you realize that your children will probably not have the same jobs you have". They replied: "Why is that?" I said: "Have you noticed the new robots in your plant?" They said: "Yes, we think they are wonderful". I said: "Has it not reduced the number of employees required per car manufactured?" They said: "Yes, it has". So I said: "You probably come from a family in Oshawa who came from a generation of people who have worked in the automotive industry". They finally admitted that.

Those older people who work for General Motors will always have a job because they can be taken care of by a large corporation. General Motors has spent a great deal of money re-educating their electrical maintenance people to become electronic maintenance people. At the present time General Motors maintains that there has been no reduction in staff, but they do acknowledge that, as more robots become available, there will be a reduction in staff. However, the management of General Motors still argues with me. The point to be made here is that the necessity of maintaining the new equipment will almost take up the slack by employing the people who used to put the wheels on the cars.

I would like to see the Government address the social problems of high technology. I would like to have the Government allay the fears the people have of losing their jobs. I would like to see the Government provide some incentive for these people to do other things. Perhaps these other things may be the cottage industry, it may be art, it may be a multitude of different things. We must stress the importance of the individual because the machine will take over by doing what individuals have done in the past.

We must encourage individuals to do more on their own. As long as people have a basic job and can make the same income in two and a half to three days a week that they made in five days in the past, then they can be productive Canadians with other interests. The Government will benefit, because if these other interests develop on a commercial basis they would then be taxed by the federal Government.

Basically, the economy is nothing more than a great big machine. Every time the wheel goes around in this machine, the Government takes a dollar from it. The faster the wheel turns, the more dollars the Government gets. This is important because it would assist in reducing the debt load that our children will be carrying. We have gone through trying times and our debt load is very heavy. When the Keynesian theory has been used in good times, there are no funds in reserve available to attack the social problems of high technology during trying times.

I really feel that women in the workplace will always have a place. I feel that women have grown and developed in the last ten years. I personally believe that women can do many of the functions that men do far better than men. There are some things that men can do far better, such as playing baseball and hockey.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fennell: No, I will say that. I maintain that football is a good example of this. I do not think women should participate in body contact sports. That is my own feeling. But there are many jobs in administration and in management that women can do far better than men. There are businesses—

An Hon. Member: Did you ever get a body check from a woman?

Mr. Fennell: No, I am not saying that. I am being very positive. I am one of the few Members in this House of Commons that has never had a male working on my staff, because I find that a women will work harder.

Mr. McGrath: Now you are really in trouble!

Mr. Fennell: I say that because women have done an excellent job. They are a part of our whole society and must be protected. I do not think we need to try to protect women as hard as some people say we do because I think they have the confidence that some men lack.

We must consider older and middle-aged women because they have a problem. I referred to that previously when I said that some General Motors' employees are moving into this structural unemployed group. The younger women in the country are now aggressive, forceful and are making their way. They are not being relegated to clerical jobs; they are being given administrative jobs. I have a daughter aged 22 who has no intention of being a clerk. She is going to run the show. That is good because now women know that they can run the show, and there is the opportunity for them to do so.

I would like to go back, Mr. Speaker, to a subject that I feel very strongly about, and that is the disabled. I believe that the technology we have developed will be of great benefit to the disabled. I am not talking about the machines, I am talking about the use of that technology. If we use the technology, we will accomplish something. If we only use the machines, we will be back in the dark ages again. Machine intelligence will remove labour, but it is an advantage that we must develop ourselves. By developing the technology ourselves and by training the citizens of this country, we will become self-sufficient and a better country, a more productive country, a more entrepreneurial country. We will create finer people that have interests other than sitting in front of a television set watching Pay-TV.

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) for his grasp of the major problem that technology will bring about in the human dimension. In light of what he has told us, I think it is important to go back and look at other periods of time in which the same kind of maximum shift occurred to see what is necessary to retain from the former style of life and what is no longer necessary to retain.

I think an example of this is the steamship industry. Although I am a prairie boy and have never been in close proximity to ships, I have always been fascinated by boats and ships on the oceans. As I have travelled around the world I have seen all of the different shapes and styles of sailing ships. I think it took about 8,000 years to develop a four-masted clipper that could go to any part of the world. I have often wondered what the people who sailed on the clippers thought when they first saw a steamship. It had taken 8,000 years to make this machine of wood, cloth, steel and whatever was necessary. Then someone came along with the steamboat, and the clipper might as well have been 3,000 years old. People who sailed clippers had something to offer those who sailed steamships. They had the experience of the seas. They knew the tides, they knew how to navigate and they knew how to dock. They had an abundance of experience which was beneficial to those who operated steamboats. Perhaps they could not make the transition into the steamboat era, but nevertheless they had something to leave with steamboat operators.

I would like to indicate one problem to the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) which could be brought about by the new technology. It could be difficult to retain the old values which I think are important in society, such as the human values. When we look at technological change and education, how to use a computer or how to work a new machine, perhaps many of the elements which hold society together will be forgotten. How will the human, ethical or moral dimension be carried on as we go through this new wave of development?

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I am interested in boating. For example, I was always a traditionalist who believed that a wooden boat sailed better. In fact it did. It took many years for fibreglas to catch up or sail with as even a keel as a wooden boat. That was new technology, that was new development; but I happen to prefer a wooden canoe because they still have not perfected the fibreglas canoe to ride fast waters as well as a wooden canoe.

I was referring to bringing back the nuclear family and holding it together. We must allow people to do things together. For instance, they could have small plots of land to produce their own vegetables. They could return to the use of cold cellars in which to keep their roots throughout the winter. We should encourage families to do things together, not with the machine but because of the machine. People will have more time to attend church. People should be encouraged through the church to get back together. We should try to encourage the voluntary organizations of society to get together. They will have the time. We do not need Government grants for that sector. We need accelerated tax credits for those organizations.

In my opinion the family has fallen apart, and recent statistics show this. If there is any way with the development of this new technology that we could improve family ties, then we will have accomplished something really worth while.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) relates to how he sees society compensating individuals. The recent report shows an additional two million unemployed and perhaps a total of four million. We will actually have a smaller work force when the new technology takes over. How can society compensate individuals? In the past it has been by people having jobs and putting in their hours. Then we had the unemployment safety network, disability pensions and so on. How can society compensate the ordinary individual who cannot work because there are no jobs?

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is trying to take me one step too quickly. We must have a broader base of interest because there may be two people doing the job of one person today. For example, a person who works three days a week will have the chance to develop other skills. He may move on to those skills and drop the skills that he used in the past. We must develop a broader spectrum of skills for all society.

We can never drop back on Unemployment Insurance or social security. We must encompass the entire spectrum but we must bring back personal initiative by creating new jobs and giving tax credits so that individuals have the freedom to do what they want. It will no longer be a society centred around the manufacturing base.

I cannot really answer the Hon. Member's question in a few words. We have to develop in such a way that people are given a feeling of fulfilment. This is really what I am shooting for. As the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) pointed out, it is important to bring back the nuclear family. That is one of the goals. Then families could do together the things they used to do, as they did on sailing vessels and on small farms.

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, the question of the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) was an extremely important one in the whole change or shift in the wave of technology. It is important for society to look at the way families and individuals were actually cared for as each wave went ahead. In the pre-industrial age the family group was looked at in one way. Prior to that tribal societies were looked at in another way. It was only in the industrial age that the income one would receive from a job became a way to look after a family.

As more and more people do not have jobs—and I do not have the exact answer—a distribution system will have to be found so that everyone will have enough on which to live even though they do not necessarily gain it from a job. Perhaps the definition of a job will have to be changed drastically from the one we now use, as a place to go and spend eight hours. I do not think we have arrived at the answers, but I thank the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills for pointing to a key question in this debate.

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in joining this debate let me indicate first that a year or two ago we would not have heard any discussion in the House concerning the technological revolution despite the fact that it had been taking place for approximately ten years. The Japanese have been very involved in studying the technological revolution and indicated their formal investigation and research into the matter in the Mitsubi Report of 1973. This is one of the reasons the Japanese in the 1970s became one of the dominant economies of the world.

As many Hon. Members have pointed out, we are in a very historical period. We are entering the third industrial revolution. As an NDP Member pointed out, the first industrial revolution occurred when we went from an agricultural society to a society of steam engines, an industrial society, at which point 90 per cent of Canadians working in the agricultural sector lost their jobs. Those people who lost their jobs on farms went on to gain new jobs in the cities. These were jobs in the manufacturing sector or in industry in general. If we could put ourselves back into that time when Canadian society and the world society were basically agricultural, we could again sit here and be frightened about the prospects of job displacement or the fact that 90 per cent of the jobs would be displaced; or we could look with imagination at and accept the challenges ahead of us, move on and take advantage of the tremendous productivity increase and wealth generation that takes place in an industrial revolution. We have experienced this in the two previous industrial revolutions with the steam engine and then with the combustion engine.

One of the first things we must overcome as Canadians is resistance to the technological revolution. This can be found in Governments, in business, in labour and consumers. The dramatic changes which have been occurring are indeed frightening.

I would like to go from the general to the more specific because, as we attain knowledge and take a closer look, the fear diminishes. One of the biggest problems associated with the industrial revolution, without question, is job displacement and unemployment. We are hearing these days a lot of rhetorical questions and answers, seeking political points in Question Period, about the unemployment situation. Yet I believe most Hon. Members of Parliament, when they are not in the House, recognize that the majority of this unemployment is structural and is due to the technological revolution, and the best way we can handle it is with a concerted, co-operative effort.

We have to deal with some pretty thorny issues and I am going to take the first one head-on; that is, the deficit. I do not know how we can choose a Prime Minister, a Member of Parliament or a provincial legislator and not consider what this person's views are on the deficit. It has become very much a political question. The deficit is increasing, Government spending is increasing, let us have a return to the right, a return to "small c" conservatism. But how will that impact on our response to the technological revolution?

Hon. Members opposite stand up and say we need further tax incentives for research and development; that we cannot destroy our social security system or our Unemployment Insurance system; that we must have more job training, as the Conservative speakers have all indicated; that we must have more retraining; that we must maintain our educational system; that we must maintain one of our most valuable resources, which is not oil but our human resources, by the best health care system in the world. The importance of a healthy population in an industrial revolution is unquestionable, but often times overlooked. However, just the areas which I have outlined now account for well over 70 per cent of the deficit.

So we must deal with the situation of the deficit. Is our deficit something for which we must sacrifice the many programs which all Hon. Members are saying we need to respond to the technical revolution? Or must we put some different perspective on it?

Let us look back at what the deficits were compared to the GNP in the United States and Canada when the first industrial revolution was going on and when the second industrial revolution was going on. Were there massive increases in investment? Were there higher Government deficits and higher business deficits in order to adapt and to modernize the industries in the first and the second industrial revolution? Did that occur? Yes, it did. And if Hon. Members look back at the records they will see that this is the case.

This is also linked with the question of productivity. We have all heard how badly Canada is doing in terms of productivity, if you listen to much of the media or many of the Opposition Members. Quite frankly, that is not the case. We are one of the top five nations in the world in productivity. It is true, however—and I see an Hon. Member shaking his head—that our rate of increase in productivity has been diminishing. This, Mr. Speaker, is something we must address and which this Government has been addressing, particularly in the last budget.

If we look over the medium and long term, we know that with a technological revolution there is a productivity multiplier effect. There is also a wealth generating effect. One of the first problems we must address is how to redistribute this wealth in such a way that those workers who have lost their jobs in the more traditional industries are able to obtain retraining in the new kinds of industries which will develop with the technological revolution.

That is not just a pious hope, Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what the Japanese have done. I do not think we can point out often enough that the Japanese have gone through a major portion of a technological revolution without a dramatic increase in unemployment. I believe their unemployment rate is at about 2.9 per cent now. This is not because they have some hidden magic or because they are of a different culture; it is because the Japanese were aware of what was going on when they automated their automobile factories with robotics. They took the workers who were displaced and retrained them for other areas, whether in service, management or marketing, so that they did not have a rapid increase in unemployment. Perhaps they had a better opportunity to do this in their society because it is not quite as pluralistic a society as ours, and it is not quite so free a society as ours. We must face the fact that in Canada we have a number of disadvantages in terms of two levels of Government, a federal and a provincial Government.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We cannot avoid that.

Mr. Lang: As the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said, we cannot avoid that. But what we can do is make sure, through the political will of all of us, that our politicians and our Governments are working in a co-operative manner. And there have been some signs of that, Mr. Speaker. I was very encouraged to note that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) presented his budget, the Treasurer of Ontario, Mr. Frank Millier, indicated that when he brought down his own budget it would be along the same lines, stressing tax incentives for the private sector to enable it to adapt to the technological revolution and to create jobs. I believe that was a very positive note because this was a co-operative effort by different political Parties involved in two different levels of Government.

Another reality which we must face in Canada is the fact that we have for at least 100 years operated on the confrontational or adversarial system, not only in our Governments but between the main economic players in our society. It is not new to say that labour, management, business, Government, all have operated on an adversarial-confrontational system, and it has worked pretty well. However, we can no longer go on in this fashion, Mr. Speaker, or we will be left behind, particularly since we are a competitive trading nation and one-third of our GNP depends upon trade.

What are some of the things which Governments, business, and labour can do? First, if the priority is still "We are going to get as much money as we can without regard to productivity increases, without regard to the viability of the company", then that adversarial position will not be of benefit to labour in negotiating contracts. However, if labour says: "What we really want now is job security, job retraining; these are the things we are going to bargain for and any increase in wages will be based on increased productivity", then labour will be striking a very positive note.

However, if this does not occur, we already know what will happen. We will have increased unemployment as businesses, particularly multinationals, are able to lay off workers in Canada and use the goods produced by workers who are willing to work for cheaper wages in other countries in the world, particularly in the Third World and in the developing countries.

What about business? Well, business can make a contribution as well. Many businessmen are saying in their interventions that the biggest thing they can take on is innovation of new products, adopting new marketing strategies, the developing of new markets as we come out of the recession. They can take the responsibility of helping to increase productivity through modernization and not blame lack of productivity on labour unions. In short, a co-operative effort.

I have seen this occur in my riding, Mr. Speaker, under the ILAP Program, where industry, labour and Government work together not only to modernize plants but to expand them. The Government's contribution was simply to offer interest-free loans for 50 per cent of capital expenditures for expansion and modernization in the manufacturing and processing field. With that incentive, the business and labour leaders in the Kitchener-Waterloo area formed a local ILAP committee and assessed various projects which came forward from both business and labour. We had dramatic increases in the number of jobs created and we had 16 plants modernize or expand in the space of one year. We are looking forward to more so as to increase the number of jobs.

There are other social consequences of the technological revolution apart from job displacement which have been alluded to by other Members. I am thinking of biotechnology where various strains of bacteria produce insulin, or other such genetic manipulation. What are some of the social consequences? Some people fear that these bacteria will get out of control. There might be an accident in the laboratory and a strain of bacteria is developed which is infectious to human beings. Government's responsibility here is to set down certain regulations and guidelines in co-operation with the scientific community so that people can be reasured that with this rapidly changing technology, as with others, we are not endangering the health and safety of our population.

Another example of the social consequences of the technological revolution is a very general one and it comes about so gradually that we may tend to miss it. There is a dramatic increase in stress which we all as individuals feel in a rapidly changing society. There is no question, as Dr. Hans Selye, world renowned expert on stress and a Canadian, has indicated, that the major stress inducing factor is change. We have a rapidly changing society and that will continue with the technological revolution. What is Government's responsibility here? I think we as representatives of the people must first of all recognize the problem.

Secondly, we should not be so hesitant and concerned when we see jobs in the service sector increasing. This is probably what should be occurring. Stress has a myriad of effects on people, anything from psychosomatic illness such as ulcers to social illnesses. I am thinking of alcoholism, drug addiction, and abuse of various chemicals which we take for granted in our society, such as coffee. Drinking one or two cups of coffee a day is fine, but when we begin drinking seven, eight, nine or ten cups of coffee a day as we adapt to increasing stress, it has a dramatic effect on some of us. People are becoming aware of the problems resulting from too much caffeine. The point I want to make is that there is an increasing amount of stress brought on by technological change.

I would like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by addressing the particulars of the Opposition motion which says the Government is not spending enough on R and D. I take exception to this. I point out to the Opposition that if we stress R and D expenditure as the major aspect of the technological revolution, we are missing the boat. For example, there is no evidence that increased R and D expenditures in the areas of the natural or applied sciences will be the be-all and end-all solution. If we look at the way the Japanese have adapted to the technological revolution, they have used a system of adaption and innovation of existing products. We have seen them do this with many industries where the United States was ahead 20 years ago and the Japanese have come in, taken a look at the products, adapted and moved ahead.

I see you are rising, Mr. Speaker; thank you.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would repeat that bit about the coffee. I do not quite understand that.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I was making the point that as stress increases in society due to rapid change, many people will use various means to deal with it. Some people will smoke, some will drink, some will use valium, some will increase their use of such normal things as coffee to the point where they are not healthy. For example, if someone is drinking one or two cups a day of coffee, well, there is a dramatic difference between that person's intake and someone drinking 16 cups per day. That has a dramatic impact on the central nervous system. It shows itself in tension, irritability, sometimes there are gastro-intestinal side effects. I could go but I do not think the Hon. Member wants me to give a lecture on the side effects of coffee.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I would be interested in having the Parliamentary Secretary give us his views as to how he thinks society should compensate people under the assumption that there are going to be four million or five million unemployed and there simply are not going to be jobs available for them. The traditional way of life is to work and be paid a salary. Is the Hon. Member thinking in terms of negative income tax, or what would his view be?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, maybe the Hon. Member was not present for the first part of my speech but this is one of the important points I was trying to bring home. In the first two industrial revolutions there was dramatic job displacement. We went from an agricultural society to a steam engine society to a combustion engine society. We lost 80 per cent of the jobs in the agricultural sector. However, those jobs were then replaced by new jobs in factories. The automobile industry was a new sector where jobs were created. Much of this could not have been imagined when the first and second industrial revolutions started.

Therefore, one of the points I was trying to stress was that jobs will be coming along with the new technologies which are being developed. Our job is not so much to be frightened, to panic and to look for spurious ways of dealing with it, but, rather, to go with the technological revolution and retrain in those new, emerging industries as they come forward.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to what the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lang) said. I am just wondering if he could tell me whether he is aware that with regard to high technology there is a very great regional disparity. There are the high-tech centres of the various parts of the country where the young people are very much aware of the potential, and they also have the opportunity to participate in the types of programs which are available. Is the Parliamentary Secretary aware of the great regional disparity and, if so, can he tell us what types of plans his Government has to ensure that people from rural and northern areas are able to participate in the information revolution that we are experiencing in this country?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am quite aware of the regional disparities existing in Canada. They have been existing here ever since this great country was put together in Confederation.

Mr. McGrath: That is not so.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McGrath: That shows an ignorance of Canadian history.

Mr. Lang: —the Government has been aware of this problem. For quite a number of years, the Government has had the Department of DREE, which has now been merged with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to deal with that specific problem, even before the technological revolution occurred.

However, I think the point made by the Hon. Member is a very good one. The factor involving regional disparities is certainly one which Governments at both the federal and provincial levels must recognize in their policies. Our Government is cognizant of the problem, as indicated by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) with his announcement in the House of a new program dealing with regional disparities. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce sufficiently outlined it in his speech. I will not try to encapsulate it in a response to the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Lewycky: I am not asking for a summary of the Minister's speech, but I would like to know if there are specific ways in which the Government will be including people from rural and northern areas. For example, the Canada Tomorrow Conference was discussed. Will there be people from northern Indian reserves and from rural western and northern Canada participating in this type of conference so that they might become aware of some of the present possibilities in the high-tech cocoon? People outside of the cocoon are not as exposed to such possibilities. I am just wondering if the Hon. Member could indicate some specific plans of the Government to ensure that these parts of Canada are included.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, to be quite straightforward concerning the specific conference mentioned by the Hon. Member, the Canada Tomorrow Conference, I do not know of the detailed plans or of the accessibility to be afforded to people from various rural and urban regions to attend the conference. I do know that the Government considers it to be a very high priority that all Canadians be aware of the technological revolution which is occurring and aware of the part that we must all play in it, as I have outlined in my speech.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Conservative Party brought forth the motion today concerning the lack of research and development in this country. I think that all one must do is consider the statistics and compare Canada with other countries around the world to see that we, as a nation, have really fallen down in terms of spending money on research and development and thus ensuring that we keep up with the rest of the world.

We have spoken at length today about the transition from the industrial society to the information society. I wish to begin my remarks by saying that I am glad there is a growing realization among Hon. Members in the House that we are in the new society, in the age of the computer, that things have really changed. Whether we like it or not, we are now here and we cannot turn back the clock. Unfortunately, one still hears Hon. Members of different political parties pretending that we will go back to the good old days, but that will not happen.

If one wishes to consider what is happening in Canada today or Canada tomorrow, all one must do is look at one's own children. For example, in our case, my wife and I have a nine year old boy. A few weeks ago our television went on the blink. My wife works in the television field and she and I tried to repair it. We tried to adjust it and spent a great deal of time, but we could not do it. Our nine year old boy, Jason, said: "Daddy, you are stupid; let me try".

Mr. Nickerson: He's got it right.

Mr. Nystrom: He has it right. I was about to take it into a television repair shop. After 15 minutes, at the age of nine, with no training whatsoever, my son fixed it and it still works perfectly well. I have also seen my nine year old son sit down with electronic games, take them apart and put them back together. I really felt old a few days ago, and I just turned 37 about a week or so ago—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: —when he said to me: "Daddy, what were things like in the olden days when you were in school?"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fennell: Your wife looks so young!

Mr. Nystrom: We did not have the Pac-Man, the Atari, the Intellevision, or any of the computer games which are so normal and natural today. I suppose I must conclude that the olden days when I went to school, in the 1960s, will seem much more ancient and old to my son when he reaches my age than it seems to me when I consider the time when my father went to school, in the 1920s and 1930s.

This is because we are going through a society of very rapid change. That is the real world out there, and I think this nation must realize it. The nation will have to change its economic and social priorities to try to accommodate and mould that reality so that the transition is a human one with human values to guide us and not just cold, harsh, technical values. What is happening to my nine year old is the real world of other nine years olds and ten year olds as well.

A few years ago we never heard of computer camps in the summer, did we? But now there are computer camps for schools. There are children lined up who want to learn more about computers. Instead of typing classes, we now have key-punching classes and others of that sort. That is the real world we are in.

The Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) spoke very well. I think we must consider the new society as being one which can give us some more hope as human beings, one concerning which we can take a very optomistic point of view, and one which can really be used to liberate human beings from some of the drudgery and work which we have had to do ever since civilization began. That must be the goal and the objective.

At the same time, I think that we must be aware of some of the realities of what is happening. Many of the jobs with which we have been familiar are not there any longer and will not be there in the future. We must ensure that we start retraining people in this country as they are being retrained in other countries around the world so that they are not the victims of technological change. Instead of being its victims, they should be the people who benefit from technological change.

I want to review a few things that are happening in the real world. In the United States, for example, only 3 per cent of the people now work in farming as farmers. Only 13 per cent of Americans now work as blue collars workers in manufacturing plants. Sixty per cent of North Americans work in the information society. Be they teachers, lawyers, accountants, people working in high-tech or with computers, software, hardware or microelectronics, those Americans working in the so-called information society amount to 60 per cent of the population, with only 13 per cent in manufacturing and 3 per cent in agriculture. The 13 per cent in manufacturing will not increase, no matter which political party is in power, but, rather, will decrease in all industrialized countries around the world. It will decrease the same as it did in agriculture a number of years ago.

My father and my grandfathers before him were farmers in the prairies. In those days, there was a farmer on every quarter section of land on the prairies. I remember the stories that I was told as a child when the farmers would have huge crews of 20 or 30 men at threshing time who would use threshing machines and hay racks. The stooking crews would thrash the grain. Today, that is done by one person with a combine. About 120 years ago approximately 60 per cent of North Americans were working on farms and in agriculture. Today that number is 3 per cent but those 3 per cent produce more than the 60 per cent did some 100 years ago.

The same thing is happening now in manufacturing, mining and many other resource and other industries which have employed so many people over the years. In fact, that change began long ago in 1956. That was the first year that the United States had more people employed in white collar jobs than blue collar jobs. That was almost 30 years ago. When the Russians launched the first Sputnik satellite that orbited the world in 1957, it was a sensational way of opening up the world to the information society.

I believe we are undergoing very rapid changes. I have three deep and genuine concerns about what we should be doing as policy-makers in light of this reality. First, the Science Council of Canada said as recently as two days ago that our country is not keeping up with other countries in the world in terms of advanced technology, equipment, machinery and devices. The Council has said that we are about five years behind smaller countries in western Europe. That is half of a decade, which is far more significant than 30 or 40 years ago. We were told that we are spending less on R and D than other less industrialized countries. While we will be spending $700 million on advanced technology over the next two years, other countries such as France, Germany, Britain and the Scandinavian countries are spending billions of dollars.

We should also be aware of the fact that Canada is already far behind in terms of our trade deficit in high technology. In 1982 our net trade deficit was $8 billion in high technology. Many of the computers and office equipment that we import from abroad could be produced here in Canada. We do not produce the silicon chip in Canada even though we use so many of them every day in our nation. In fact, when one speaks to those in the computer industry they will say that if we do not change our ways our trade deficit in computers alone by 1990 will be some $10 billion in Canada. Imagine the loss of jobs, wealth and economic activity that this means to Canadians, particularly young people who are fully capable of being trained in this country to build chips, computers and other microelectronic equipment that we are and will be using in Canada.

Today, our society is one in which soon every child will have a computer on his desk in every classroom in the country, but we will be importing those computers from abroad. That shows a lack of foresight and planning and is a disgrace to a country as talented as ours.

A second concern I have is that of the little high technology industry that does exist in this country, 40 per cent is already foreign owned and controlled. Many Canadian firms are now very vulnerable to foreign takeovers. Whatever industry we do have in Canada will end up like the oil industry today, being foreign owned, if we do not take appropriate action. The situation may even be worse since there will not be branch plants in the country. Instead we will be importing all of the high-tech equipment for our country's use. We must become aware of these realities as a nation and have some vision and confidence.

I am also concerned about the transition from our industrial society to our information society and how it affects so many people by unemployment. While I do not believe anyone has all the answers, one solution is obviously retraining. Perhaps we will move into a society in which we will continue to have shorter work weeks. We began some years ago with a 65-hour work week and we are now down to 40-hour work weeks. Perhaps there will be 15 or 20-hour work weeks in our society 50 years from now and we will have five or six weeks of holidays instead of three or four weeks. The Government of François Mitterrand is now experimenting with shortening the work week from 40 hours to 35 hours.

An Hon. Member: There is no work in France. That is what happens with socialism.

Mr. Nystrom: Suddenly my Conservative friends get very upset. They are afraid to look at any new and different ideas. I suggest that they will have to consider the possibility of continuing to shorten the work day or work week and increasing the holiday time in the years ahead. I say that because many of the jobs today will disappear and we will have to take care of those displaced people fairly and equally, whether my friends in the Liberal Party like it or not.

Let me use the automobile industry as an example. Last September, I had the opportunity to speak in Chicago to the United Auto Workers. The director of research of the American United Auto Workers told the convention that even if the United States retrieved its full share of auto production from the Japanese and others, only 17 years from now, in the year 2000, 80 per cent of the jobs that existed in the booming 1970s will have disappeared because of robotics and the fully automated factory.

There are now automobile factories in Japan in which 98 per cent of the operation is robotized. The average time for producing a car in Japan is some 11 hours, while it is some 31 hours in the United States. Robots in Japan are now producing cars in nine hours. The cost in terms of robots is about $5 an hour, whereas in terms of human labour the cost is $15 an hour for salary and benefits. This is the reality. As legislators we will have to consider ways to retrain workers who are displaced rather than letting them simply draw Unemployment Insurance or go on welfare. That is the challenge we face and we must ensure that the ordinary people are not the victims of the robots.

We are heading toward a robotized society in the world. The Japanese now have plants in which robots are building robots. In fact, in a machine plant just outside of Tokyo there are robots working the nightshift with only one human in the plant, the night watchman. That is the type of society that is evolving in our world.

I strongly suggest that we begin to retrain our people and put more money into upgrading their skills and preparing them for the world of today and tomorrow. The Japanese have 40 times as many young people in electrical engineering schools as we do in Canada and Japan has five times our population. Other countries such as Germany, France, Austria and Scandinavian countries put more emphasis on retraining than we do in Canada, and as a result the unemployment rate is lower and the standard of living is higher.

I believe that today's society also causes us to raise many questions about the direction in which our country is headed. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) raised the question of our human values and the concept of our moral issues in terms of the machine and human beings. I think they were very good questions. We are moving into a society where many of the things we took for granted years ago, such as the value of physical labour and the value of capital, are being challenged. We are now entering into a society in which perhaps information is more important and brain intensive industries will be more important, where the knowledge that one possesses will be key in determining whether an industry is efficient or productive. I think a lot of the theories we had in the past are now being challenged.

It is important in this new revolution that we maintain very human values of sharing, co-operating and building and that we use high technology and new innovations to liberate people to make sure that we are not the slaves of the robot, that we make the robot work for us. We should make sure that we use technology to eliminate jobs that are dangerous in terms of health and safety and eliminate jobs that are jobs of drudgery. We should use the new technology to increase our productivity so that we will have more wealth to go around, to give human beings more free time and time to do work in the human and social field than has been done in the past. If we do that, then we can create a society that is better and more decent in the years that lie ahead.

Because of the new technologies we have a chance to have a more decentralized or a more democratic society as well. It will be a more flexible society. We should try to use these new tools to make sure that does happen and we do not continue building bigger and bigger cities that are more and more polluted. Nor should we continue building more and more expressways. Instead we should have a more balanced growth in our society and promote more self-reliance, encourage more economic democracy, so that the ordinary people have more say over their lives and their environment than has been the case in the past.

I do think these are some of the things that can be accomplished. These are some of the things that we will have to think seriously about as legislators.

I have tried to raise a number of questions this afternoon. I do not know what the answers are to many of the issues we have been discussing today. I do think the values and objectives of a humane and decent society must remain. We must use the new technology, the robots and computers, to enhance that humaneness and decency and to try to increase the standard of living of the poor and the dispossessed. If we can do that, then surely the world of the twenty-first century can be a lot more just and exciting than the world we are experiencing right now.

Mr. Lachance: First of all, Madam Speaker, I should like to say that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has just described very adequately the problems resulting from the introduction of robotics in the '80s. He compared this problem with the dilemma Western societies were faced with after the war due to automation which replaced a labour force which was unable to adjust. He mentioned also the need to retrain and upgrade the skills of our labour force. Would he not agree with me, however—I think I gathered from his remarks that he favours the development of higher-technology and robotics—when I say that in the long run, according to the experts, robots will create new jobs, just as automation did. However, in the short run, we will be faced with a rather serious unemployment situation which will affect especially the non-skilled workers who, no matter what program we may implement, will be displaced by robots. This will create in our society a fairly high level of unemployment which will add to the unemployment with which we are already faced today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) like to reply to the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance)?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes Mr. Speaker.

I have been an optimist for a long time. I believe that in the long run, there will be more jobs available in Canada, provided we establish a high technology development policy. Last year, unfortunately, for lack of such a policy, we had an international trade deficit of approximately $8 billion in the field of high technology and several countries have now out distanced us. I for one believe that there will be an increasing reliance on computers in schools for example as well as in all sectors of society.

I just read an article by an American economist which stated that by 1985, 75 per cent of all jobs in North America will require the use of a computer.

In my opinion, it makes a lot of sense to have a high technology sector in Canada. It is crucial that we in Canada manufacture computers and all the goods that we need in this country. It is very important in order to avoid relying too often on imports.

The problem must be addressed immediately. We have to cope with the transition from today's world to the society in which we will line 15 or 20 years from now. That is the issue and I believe that the challenge for us, as members of Parliament, is to find a way, through retraining programs like those in Japan or in European countries to provide new jobs for Canadians.

Mr. Lachance: In his intervention, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) described some of the difficulties experienced by Governments which are literally assaulted by the great many calls for help from declining industries in a world of high technology. Given our limited budgetary resources, I would like to ask him to what extent he is suggesting that we, as a Government and as elected Members, help high technology industries—which will necessarily reduce our assistance to declining industries—and what will be the impact in terms of unemployment and jobs in those lagging industries which are generally rather labour intensive.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, that is a very thorny and very important issue.

I think that Canada can have a lot of economic changes. We have spent quite a bit of money to build the F-18, for instance, and a lot more as well for useless things. I would suggest that we must do as many other countries of the world have done, including Japan, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Scandinavian countries, and that is spend more money on high technology. Recently I called upon Dr. Stuart Smith, the Chairman of the Science Council of Canada, a Government of Canada agency. He often says that many other countries are now ahead of Canada. He also says that, according to the percentage of our GNP, we have spent much less in Canada than many other countries have and that we will have to change our priorities.

That is why the standard of living in Canada has been dropping since 1960 when we ranked second in the world, whereas we are now no higher than 18th or 19th. That is why we have to review our economic priorities. We need an economic strategy for the future.

[English]

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). He outlined how much more efficient Japan is compared to the U.S.A.; for example, building a car in 11 hours compared to 31. Would the Hon. Member agree with me that the decision of our Government and the U.S. Government in the early 1970s to hold down the price of world energy was a dramatic interference in the world marketplace and that it actually affected us adversely in the sense that we held down the oil price, which sent a signal to our automobile manufacturers to continue to build big cars for us to buy? Meanwhile in Germany and Japan where they had to go to the world price on energy, they immediately turned their top scientific engineers toward producing more efficient cars. Some eight or ten years later they are beating us in the marketplace. Does the Hon. Member agree that that decision by Government interfered with the marketplace to such an extent that it has made our automotive industry out of date today?

● (1630)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, that may have been one of the factors, but there are many factors why the North American auto industry is behind the auto industry in Japan and Europe. Management in general in North America, in private corporations, tends to be shortsighted. There is too much emphasis on quarterly and annual profits rather than long-term planning. Also, in Europe and Japan greater priority is given to quality products rather than quantity. That is the major difference in the business community between North America, the Japanese and Europeans. The Europeans and Japanese are more concerned with the long term. They might have some short-term losses, but in the long run they want to ensure that they are internationally more competitive.

Our management is very shortsighted. Productivity is basically a management problem. It is management that makes important decisions about technological change or whether to expand certain industries. In North America we tend to have become caught up in the consumer process. We build more and more shopping centres, have more and more kinds of dog food and do more and more things that are basically useless. They do not make that mistake as much in Europe and Japan.

When it comes to research and development the Americans spend a bit more than the Japanese, but not much more. The big difference is that Americans spend about half of their research and development funds on military research and development while the Japanese spend almost zero.

It is very difficult to answer the question directly. It is like comparing apples and oranges. There are many cultural differences. I am being honest; I am not trying to skate away from what the Hon. Member is asking. There are many cultural differences. There are many things we can learn from them about quality of life rather than quantity. Because of the world recession and the fact that some of our resources are running out, hopefully we will put more emphasis on human values.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I want to take the Hon. Member on to a further discussion on which I would like his views. Why does he think that in Canada we hold ourselves back from participating in the world game?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There really is not time for a prolonged question and answer.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is the quality of the interventions this afternoon to which I had the fortune of listening that prompts me to seek the floor. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity. I want to present a few thoughts dealing with the subject matter. Before doing that I want to focus attention on the motion before us today.

The motion is written in a political environment. Therefore, it would hardly be possible for the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath)—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not often dispute the Chair's calling of the Orders of the Day, but on this Official Opposition day, there are now more Liberal speakers who will have spoken before the end of the day—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, I wonder if he would care to count again. At one sequence earlier today, there were two Members of his Party consecutively.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, a motion written in a political environment could hardly praise the Government for what it does. Otherwise, the Opposition would be remiss in its duty. The motion tends to ignore certain developments and initiatives taken by the Government that ought to be put on the record.

The motion seems to indicate that the Government has not dealt with research and development and specialized training. The question of research and development was put forward as recently as three weeks ago by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in his budget. This was done quite forcefully with substantial measures aimed at promoting, facilitating and creating incentives for the private sector with regard to research and development. That was only three weeks ago. That element ought to have had at least a minimum of recognition in the Hon. Member's motion.

Moving on to specialized training, the motion seems to have been written in a vacuum. For the past ten months this country has been engaged in a massive program of adult training under the auspices of the National Training Act and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). That is an outstanding shortcoming of the motion of the Hon. Member for St. John's East. As I said before, he cannot put forward a motion praising the Government, but by going to the extent of condemning the Government for not having done that which it evidently has done is an approach that is not conducive to putting the facts on the record; perhaps it does elicit a reaction from the Government side of the kind I am providing.

Having said that, I congratulate the Hon. Member for St. John's East. In a highly political way he has put an important issue on the table. He deserves to be commended for that initiative. His initiative has led to some interesting and thoughtful interventions this afternoon. We had input from the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang), the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and others. Their comments will be of guidance to the policy-makers of this country as to how to approach the question of technological change.

With the inevitable fear that the issue of technological change is creating among Canadians, it would be worthwhile to put on record a quotation that dates back to 1931. The then Director of the International Labour Organization stated that one of the factors in the unemployment program at that time was "the disorganization of the labour market caused by the extra rapid development of labour-saving machinery and the process of rationalization".

We all have to realize the effect of the new processes on the labour market in the eighties which are vastly greater than they were in the thirties. In 1931, Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Director at the Internationl Labour Organization reported, in his evidence of the effects of mechanical improvements on employment, that the agricultural combine deprives five agricultural workers of employment, In Canada the number of such combines increased from two in 1922 to some 7,215 in 1929. In that way a displacement of some 36,000 workers took place over a period of seven years. I doubt, however, whether in the 1980s we will have as much breathing space available as was available in the twenties.

The technological revolution that we are debating here today seems to be embodied in the miniaturized computer which has introduced into the industrial process an element of automation. The problem facing us is not a question of whether the process is good or bad; it is how we handle the process, how we manage it.

It seems to me that the Hon. Member from Yorkton-Melville, in his intervention, put his finger on what seems to me to be the essence of the approach that should be developed. That is that we must consider the effect of technological change on employment, on income distribution, on health and safety, and on labour relations. We can learn how to manage these effects by putting a human face on technological change. If at the center of our concern are the men and women affected by the change, then I believe we will have learned from the agricultural and industrial revolution of past decades and we will have learned the important lessons that those changes taught us to the benefit of present and future generations. This seems to me to be the essence of what this debate is all about.

In 1982 we established a task force on microelectronics and employment. It was conducted by Dr. Margaret Fulton and was completed last November. It was produced in the form of a very concise report entitled "In the CHIPS: Opportunities for Employment". Since then it has been the object of intense consultations with labour and management, because, of course, the recommendations contained therein touch on these facets of technological change.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that this technological change will affect the pattern of demand for labour. It will probably produce a surplus of unskilled workers and a shortage of skilled workers. It will create a necessity for training of the specialized kind that there is presently under the National Training Act and to which the motion before us makes reference. It will probably have an effect on workers in the service industry, and particularly, I suppose, on office workers. Technological change will probably have an effect on hours of work, on part-time work, on work sharing, and perhaps it will have a considerable effect on the question of early retirement and ways of inducing it and facilitating it for those who wish to take advantage of such possibilities.

On the side of health and safety, Mr. Speaker, technological change could also bring about new hazards, possibly with a greater influence on psychological problems. Therefore, the dangers of technological change in relation to health and safety may not be as evident as they were in the past and it will require greater research to prevent their occurrence.

I would like to express my gratitude to the Member from St. John's East because he has put on the table perhaps the most important issue that faces not only this Government but any Government that has an industrial concern and a labour force that is affected by technological change. This issue is that there will probably have to be greater flexibility in the future on the part of management and labour and that there will have to be some form of partnership developed between labour, management and Governments in the future. It is quite possible that management will have to give up more of its residual rights, become more democratic and encourage forms of co-determination and co-management. We have heard echoes of this from other countries in the past decade and these echoes are now reaching our shores. Maybe labour will have to be reassured so that it can accept the inevitable change. The assurance that should be given to labour is the assurance of some form of job security and employment growth.

This leads me to refer to the budget again as I did a moment ago, because contained in the budget is an important element which some speakers on the opposite side have seemed to overlook, although not all of them have. I regret that I have not heard all of the interventions. This element in the budget is the reference to a centre of productivity and employment growth. That centre is an instrument of a highly technical nature where technological change will be the focus, a forum where business and Government can bring to the fore experience at the shop floor level, as they say, bring to the attention of all the experience of the front line of the workplace in order to find some short-term answers to questions that have been of concern to some of the speakers on the opposite side. Those, of course, are the concerns of the Government as well. Beyond that, evidently answers will have to be found of a medium-term nature and of a long-term nature, and the challenge is now before us.

Through its budget of April 19, 1983 the Government has made an offer to fund a centre if there is the will to create one, a place where labour can play a central role, together with business and with Government, in the shaping of our future, in the managing of this technological change and in the exchange and the bringing together of experiences as seen from different angles, in an attempt to search for solutions. Evidently the solutions are not easy to find and the finding of them cannot be the exclusive domain of one party or the other, of Parliament alone or the Government alone.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that better answers will come as a result of consultations and co-operation by all of the sectors in our society that are affected. Inevitably there will be things that labour knows more about, there will be things that business will understand better, and there will be another range of knowledge and experience that the Government will be able to contribute in the interest of the public at large.

The future lies in these kinds of measures. I suppose the creation of a subcommittee of Cabinet on technology must have been brought up earlier in the debate. Mr. Speaker, what more evidence is needed to demonstrate to you that there has been and there is now forward thinking on the part of this Government of the kind that this Opposition motion does not seem to be aware of or does not want to take into consideration? If these elements that I am submitting for your consideration seem valid to you, the motion before us that condemns the Government has no foundation.

What I do welcome, though, is the fact that this debate has put forward a number of interesting propositions. There have been interesting questions and points raised by the Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) who made inquiries about the Labour Code earlier this afternoon.

Some interesting questions were asked by Hon. Members concerning the management of change in general. This issue is so important and fundamental to the survival of society and to the benefit of all Canadians that it requires more than just a political, partisan approach, which is understandable within the confines of these four walls. It will require very active and intensive participation and co-operation so as to trigger the input of all interested parties. Therefore, I place a particular importance on the creation of the centre mentioned in the budget of April 19. I see it as a vehicle to approach these issues which could make a considerable difference.

There are skeptics who say that this country is not ready for an approach by labour, business and Government. I am somewhat saturated, to say the least, with references to Japan and Japanese models. Quite frankly, those models from abroad have their own merits within the confines of those particular cultures. It is important to study them and to learn about their existence but, having done so, we have to turn around, look at ourselves and seek our own identity so that we can implement our own ways of doing things. It cannot be the Japanese way or the European way; it has to be the Canadian way.

In this respect I remind Hon. Members that in Canada we have some interesting models which have already been developed. For example, we have an approach through the vehicle of task forces as announced by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) on several occasions in recent months. There is what could be called a bilateral model in the automotive industry which has a labour leader and a recognized industrial leader working together, co-chairing a task force and producing a report, in the case of the automotive industry, I suppose in the matter of a few weeks. They deliver to Government their findings and conclusions and then leave it to Government to make a decision in the interests of that particular industrial sector and of the public at large. That model is being repeated in the forestry industry. It could be said that somehow it is a continuation of the sectoral approaches of 1978 or thereabouts when some ten or 20 sectors were developed for study as an initiative of the Liberal Government.

Parallel to the bilateral approach we have a trilateral approach which exists in at least four places in Canada, all at the federal level. I will not venture into the provincial level where I am sure there are ongoing trilateral models, particularly in the fields of apprenticeship training and counselling across the board in most Provinces. But at the federal level in Hamilton, for instance, there is the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety run by a council consisting of labour, business and the Government. In Ottawa we have the Labour Adjustment Benefit Board, which is also run by a trilateral body. In addition we have the Export Development Board which advises the Minister in charge of exports and consists of three sectoral individuals representing labour, management and business. Finally we have the Textile Advisory Board—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister but his allotted time has expired.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for these few moments to speak on this matter. Also I thank the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) for his generosity in allowing me some time in which to speak and the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) for not asking any questions. If I may be so bold, I will include the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) in my thanks.

I have listened very carefully to the debate today. I even contemplated a desire to move a motion under Standing Order 84(2) which would allow the House to continue almost indefinitely with this interesting debate, but I now think it is best that it conclude.

I was interested in the remarks of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia). He talked about many things the Government is doing, and I think it is doing some things. The report which has been declared a Cabinet document so that it cannot be shown to us indicated the danger of 15 per cent unemployment. One of the reasons we find ourselves in our present position is perhaps because the Government of Canada has forgotten two things. In terms of the size of the deficit, which may be a drag on the economy and on our recovery, it has forgotten the biblical injunction to save in the good years against the bad. It spends, spends, spends in the good years; spends, spends, spends in the bad years; and we have that drag which may very well dampen our recovery.

Second, as Governments will take the benefit to which I think they are entitled when things go reasonably well, they have to take the responsibility when things go reasonably bad. There is no doubt we are suffering today from the fact that Governments have failed to foresee the abvent of the information society and the importance of this new technology. Only now are lights going on when we face some tremendous problems in the community. There is not a supporter of the Government opposite who could honestly rise and say that this is the appropriate time to begin these changes. As a matter of fact, the appropriate time has long since past. That is a tragedy which will be borne by many young people who are now unskilled and will be caught in the short-term period. I do not want anyone in the House to think that there are not some tremendous advantages to the technological change which is now coming about, if we are wise enough to plan for it and to take advantage of it.

Some Members have talked about the changes in the industrial revolution with the invention of the steam engine, such as the change in the agricultural community which resulted in displaced workers. Those workers went to the cities to find new jobs. The high technology industry is not only developing for itself; it is developing technology to be used in existing industries to upgrade them, to make them more competitive and more productive, to create new jobs and new product lines to improve our place in world markets. We have to be awake and wise enough to take advantage of this. It is the challenge which faces every one of us, but this motion condemns the Government because it is starting awfully late.

I urge Hon. Members of the Government to read a little book entitled "While There is Time", by Stephen Leacock. He had the following to say about Canada in a very short passage:

> —Canada is as empty as ever—almost; still abundant room, abundant opportunity, life and all that makes it sweet, waiting here for uncounted millions of people, serene sky and empty plain, and rivers murmuring in the forest—nature's temple, where we crowd and wrangle round the entrances.

That is still the picture of our country if we are prepared to take advantage of those things which are ours, and one of those things is the advent of the information and communication age.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for imposing punitive tax measures; high energy and interest costs; and general economic uncertainty upon the mining sector, all of which have led to the loss of jobs in Canada and a loss of foreign markets and foreign exchange, and urges that a special committee of this House be struck to investigate and recommend immediate solutions to the problems facing the mining industry in Canada and the economic hardship and despair imposed upon thousands of Canadians in mining communities from coast to coast.

He said: Mr. Speaker, if this motion before the House today is adopted, we would see the creation of a special parliamentary committee to examine the very serious structural problems facing the Canadian mining industry today.

Naturally, the current slump in Canada's mineral production can be linked to a large extent with the world-wide economic recession. But many of the problems confronting our mines and their employees started over a decade ago and are unrelated to the recession. It is only during the past 18 months that this decline and the importance of this industry to Canada has become to visibly apparent to all Canadians because of the consequent widespread unemployment in the mining industry.

The result has been the hardship, the suffering, the uncertainty felt in mining communities across Canada, and the closing down of many company towns. These troubles began with the closing of Uranium City operations in northern Saskatchewan in December of 1981. Over subsequent months we have witnessed the decline of the potash industry in Saskatchewan, the asbestos industry in Quebec, iron ore in Quebec and northern Ontario, the closing of the major nickel mining and smelting operations in Sudbury for an extended period of time, the decline of our copper and molybdenum industries and, most recently and regrettably, the decline of our coal markets in Pacific Rim nations. This all translates into considerable human suffering and loss of income.

I want to say at the beginning that stop-gap measures will not be enough to solve these problems. The use of Section 38 under the Unemployment Insurance Act, the concept of work sharing and even programs like ILAP will only be useful if they lead to a meaningful investment in future plant and opportunity to produce and to market more competitively those bountiful mineral resources which we have throughout Canada.

These kinds of stop-gap measures, which I am sure the Minister will be speaking of in her rebuttal, will not affect more than a small number of those thousands and thousands of Canadian mine workers who are presently unemployed. They will be of little value unless they are geared to certain long-range goals which are established by the Government of Canada in consultation with the mining industry.

A special parliamentary committee, as provided for under the new House rules, would be the best way to tackle this issue. It would deal with the issue openly and could act with the urgency needed as a consequence of years of neglect, not only by the federal Government but by provincial Governments, in coming to grips with these very serious problems.

In Canada we have a great untapped potential in bountiful mineral reserves. It is inexcusable for the Parliament of Canada to overlook this important sector of our economy and the contribution that that mineral wealth can make to the well-being of all Canadians. And it is obvious that policy papers prepared by the bureaucracy are not the way to go towards solving this problem.

It has now been a year and two months since the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) released her ill-fated policy paper, which at the time was called a discussion paper on mineral policy, yet nothing has come of that paper that we have been able to detect. In spite of a great and costly work effort by hundreds of officials in the Minister's Department, the policy paper missed the mark in terms of the real issues of priority that should have been addressed. It is not surprising that this paper drew harsh criticism from every quarter. However, the concern created by the proposed mineral policy resulted in a number of thoughtful and detailed responses. It would be tragic if these responses were ignored by the Minister as she puts her embarrassment under the rug, so to speak, with respect to this policy paper.

It is time that the Minister, the Government and her Department began listening to the real and long-range needs of the industry. There is a chronic need for a whole new approach to rejuvenating our mining industry. A parliamentary committee could map out the ground rules and objectives in this regard that should be followed by all Government departments, both at the federal and provincial levels. This would go a long way toward establishing the security and confidence that is essential to the growth of mining in Canada.

For example, some of the issues which such a committee would address might fall into the following categories. Such a committee should look at the elements of production costs such as wages, the impact of labour relations on those wages, the costs of energy, the costs of capital, in particular the interest rates available to Canadian investors and industry in comparison with those interest rates available in other parts of the world, the burden of taxation and the royalties. All of these elements of production costs should be compared with our other major world competitors to find out, for example, why it is that they can put nickel on the market at a dollar a pound cheaper than the Canadian producer can market it.

We must look at the question of efficiency of production. Canada's mining industry prides itself in being on the leading edge of modern technology. However, are we keeping abreast of the new and emerging developments that are being exploited in new mines being opened up around the world? On the question of economies of scale, can we justify a lot of small, marginal mines or should we be looking to larger scale activities? How does that question of scale relate to practices in other countries? What about marginal deposits and the important costs of infrastructure such as hydro-electric power and transportation?

These matters must be addressed and put into the context of what our chief competitors are doing in the Iron Curtain countries, such as the Soviet Union, in Australia and in Third World nations which are increasingly eroding our share of world markets. We must find out why it is that the Canadian mining industry of recent times has not been able to attract sufficient investment capital. We must think about world marketing strategies and the potential for growth in the Canadian mining industry. My colleagues and I this morning, and later today, will deal with many of these subjects in detail in order to provide the catalyst and framework in which a parliamentary committee could take a detailed and, I believe, very helpful look at this serious problem.

Surely, an industry which accounts for almost 10 per cent of our Gross National Product deserves better than it has been receiving at the hands of this Government. Eighty per cent of our mineral production is diverted to export which makes a very important contribution to our balance of payments and our Gross National Product. Therefore we must not merely pick away at the problem in a piecemeal fashion, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that will not be the practice of Liberal Members opposite. We must look at this problem in a very constructive and long-range way in order to restore that tremendous potential which had been developed over many years in the North and in the far-flung regions of Canada which created that important pool of wealth for the benefit of all Canadians.

The impact of mining, Mr. Speaker, is felt in every region of our country. It accounts for 4.1 per cent of all capital and repair expenditures and one-fifth of all our national exports. It normally employs 135,000 workers, and 10 per cent of our total labour force through indirect employment, with a multiplier of some five-fold over the actual number of people working in mines and smelters. The mining industry makes up 60 per cent of all railway freight which is handled in our country.

Total metal and mineral production in 1981-82 was over $31 billion, but in 1982 there was a substantial loss. There was a 20 per cent decline in the value of our mineral production largely going to export with consequent multimillion dollar losses, both for the major mining industries of Canada and the Treasury of Canada; because with major losses being declared, the flow of tax revenue to Government has been heavily depleted in the past fiscal year.

In the policy paper called "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s", which accompanied the 1981 budget, the Government actually identified the importance of the mining industry and said that one of its leading economic priorities, to quote from that document, "lies in the development of Canada's rich bounty of natural resources". The quote continues:

> To back this up, the Government is allocating over $60 billion to economic development expenditures in the period to 1981-86.

That was a year and a half ago, Mr. Speaker, and as yet, other than some make-work help-out programs, we have seen little action in getting on with the important job of developing a greater opportunity for Canada's mineral industries around the world. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in fact it has not merely been a matter of passiveness. Certain federal policies have amounted to a virtual attack on Canada's mining industry. This Government has indulged in destructive tax policies and interventionist adventures which have seriously eroded the investment climate for this resource sector in general. Thousands of jobs have been lost as these Government actions brought a curtailment of mineral development during the 1970s. It is a particularly upsetting situation for those who recognize the potential of the industry and the contributions it has made to Canada's past prosperity.

Mining established a foothold and flourished in Canada during the post-war period, Mr. Speaker, thanks to federal tax policies which encouraged resource exploration and development; but these policies were abandoned in the late 1960s and the industry came into a period of decline. The major step down the road to the present insanity was a decision to scrap the tax-free period, the three-year front end tax-free period, for new mines. This tax policy, or to call it by its more correct term, "tax deferral", allowed mining companies to be tax free for the first three years of developing a new mining project, with the understanding that that inducement would be repaid to Government, or there would be some recognition by way of profit sharing which would be extended to the Government after the mine had been developed. That program allowed the elimination of front-end loading on struggling marginal industries which were trying to raise capital and finance major new capital investment.

My hon. and eminent colleague, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), will talk in greater detail later about how this tax policy was introduced and how effective it was, and then how over a period of time, because of various attempts by various provincial Governments and the federal Government to grab more of the revenues from these resources, the benefit of this particular measure was lost. It has been replaced by heavy front-end taxation which provides a tremendous disincentitve to getting on with the development of new mining projects at a world competitive price structure.

Destructive taxation, Mr. Speaker, has had a dramatic effect beause it not only took money away from struggling mineral operations but also created an unstable and unfriendly investment climate for an industry which requires long-term planning. The harm done by federal policy was unfortunately often magnified by provincial Governments, such as the short-lived experiment with socialism in British Columbia. There are a lot of British Columbians who are, since Friday, thanking their lucky stars that that Party did not take hold of Government again in British Columbia. We were able to witness on Friday morning the resurgence in trading even on the Toronto Stock Exchange in mining stocks which have been on hold for six months because of the concern that an NDP Government might have been re-elected in that Province last week. The British Columbia mine workers and mine companies are, of course, still recovering from the royalty on mineral production which was in effect under the NDP Government from 1972 to 1975. That short period alone chased thousands of jobs and millions of investment dollars out of British Columbia.

Similarly, the private sector potash industry in Saskatchewan was brought to its knees by the absurd levels of taxation introduced by the NDP regime in that Province. While the federal Government cannot be blamed therefore for all of the misdeeds of its provincial counterparts, it must also be held partially accountable for the absence of any meaningful progress on federal-provincial agreements on mining taxation during the 1970s. Such an agreement could have spared miners and mining companies and Canadians generally the insanity of taxes being compounded on taxes and payments to the various levels of Government which approached 100 per cent of profits, and more in many cases. This was certainly the case for certain operations in Saskatchewan under the Blakeney Government.

Aside from trying to co-ordinate mineral policy with the Provinces, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government should get its own act together. Although the work of M and R scientists is often laudable, the Department of Finance and other Government agencies have been hostile to mining. This has never been so evident as it was in the case of the two MacEachen budgets in November, 1981 and June, 1982. To quote one unnamed spokesman for the mining industry, "after the two MacEachen disasters anything would be welcome, but it is interesting that now they screwed it up, they are giving the economy back to business saying: 'Fix it up' ".

That is a characteristic, Mr. Speaker, of the budget which was introduced on April 19, which did take certain positive measures, as I am sure the Minister will be proclaiming in a few moments, which are designed to assist the mining industry. But there is no comment on the damage that was done by previous budgets with the reduction in the capital cost allowance, the non-deductibility of soft costs, the question of taxation of interest costs, tax on work in progress, and the tax audits being conducted vigorously against insider traders in mining companies and the general anti-investment thrust of previous Government policies.

It is commendable, Mr. Speaker, that in the budget of April 19 a decision was made to make the 33 1/3 per cent mining depletion allowance deductible against non-resource income for investors in the junior mining exploration companies. This is a welcome move, long overdue, but the benefits of the decision will be seriously undermined by the continuing unfair tax treatment of employees, officers and directors of junior mining companies, as I have already pointed out, where Revenue Canada is trying to tax as income the return on investment which was earned by consultants and professionals in exchange for their participation in junior mining companies. This sort of measure, which will be outlined further by one of my colleagues later today, has had a tremendous negative impact on the availability of investment capital to the mining industry.

The other matter the Minister will probably refer to relates to some changes in the investment tax credit and other initiatives contained in the April 19 budget. These are designed to provide an incentive to finance major capital projects in the mining sector. The only problem is that the industry is presently in a state of over capacity. Until we find a way to market our products more competitively internationally, no amount of additional investment capital will be able to deal with the long-range problem.

The most contentious of the initiatives of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in recent years is the plan to tax the housing and travel benefits traditionally received tax-free by workers in the North and other remote areas. This tax will add significantly to the cost of mining in northern Canada for both companies and, ultimately, employees. The decision last December to phase in the new taxes did nothing but reaffirm the industry's view that the Government is determined to destroy and weaken Canadian mining, particularly in the areas of Canada where new exploration and development are essential.

The assumption of the Minister of Finance that mine unions can negotiate contracts to make up for these lost benefits borders on the ridiculous. These unions are negotiating with companies which have been recording massive losses and which have often shut down their operations for extended periods, which is hardly an atmosphere for taxing increased benefits.

There are roughly 35,000 miners still off the job in Canada today, almost 30 per cent of the mining work force, despite the resumption of work in Sudbury and the promise of developments in the Hemlo gold field. The threat of the northern benefits tax remains as a major obstacle to the return to work for many of these workers.

The Minister of Finance and his colleagues have asserted that this tax will put northerners on an equal footing with other Canadians, but this ignores the reality that these benefits are essential to making life in the North comparable to that elsewhere. The tax also ignores the many long-term decisions which have been made by individuals and companies in the belief that this provision would not be changed.

As I mentioned before, a stable investment climate must be a major priority in order that the mining industry may prosper. However, instability has been the policy of the Government, not only through destructive tax policies, but also with its stand on foreign investment and Government involvement in the economy. The Foreign Investment Review Agency, which has influenced the ownership of operations such as the Cyprus Anvil mine in Faro, Yukon, remains a major concern to investors despite the Government's decision to back off on FIRA during the recession.

FIRA's unsettling effects in the investment community are augmented by the newly formed Canada Development Investment Corporation which hangs like a sword of Damocles over the heads of everyone in the private sector. The mining industry is acutely aware of the threat posed by this super holding company because of CDIC's 1980 takeover of the Kidd Creek mine near Timmins, Ontario. This little adventure, tied to the National Energy Program, resulted in $400 million in new debt being created and imposed on the once profitable mine.

Petro-Canada's expansionary activities can only be viewed with alarm by the mining industry, especially since Petro-Canada's involvement in coal production in northeastern British Columbia demonstrates its ability to become involved in the mining sector. Now the new Chairman of the Board of Westcoast Transmission, who happens to be the President of Petro-Canada, indicates that he is prepared to move in, take control of British Columbia's natural gas industry and intrude into other sectors of the economy as well.

Last year's purchase of BP interests show us that the Government has no intention of repairing the damage it has done to investor confidence over the years. These and other Government policies have had a staggering impact. As I pointed out at the beginning of my speech, in the late '60s, the start of the Trudeau years, we saw a move toward the harmful tax policies of today.

We have before us a rather bleak situation and much opportunity to improve upon it. We in this Party are suggesting today that a special committee of the House be initiated immediately and be mandated to travel the country to consult with industry and Government Departments at both federal and provincial levels. We need to come up with some constructive proposals for dealing with this serious problem as to why Canada is declining so miserably in its pursuit of competitive opportunities around the world.

Mr. Cullen: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member made reference to the three-year tax holiday. We know why that was done; it was in the interests of increasing the development of mines. The information I have is to the effect that so much high-grading was being done that it was not really in the long-term interests of the employees or of the mines that all of the high grade ore be taken out in the first three years during the tax holiday. They would then find themselves in difficulty down the road. Is this not in fact what occurred?

Mr. Siddon: I think the situation is exactly opposite to what the Hon. member describes. The elimination of this tax holiday made it much less attractive to develop marginal or low-grade deposits. Therefore the emphasis in investment was directed even more strongly toward the development and exploitation of high-grade deposits. That ensured that we missed out on the opportunity to develop a lot of new low-grade deposits. As the record will show, it has been much more difficult to finance through investment those low-grade deposits until perhaps the initiatives of the budget of April 19.

I think the most important thing we must recognize is that if we do not make it attractive for investors to invest their cash when they know they will not make a return for at least three to five years on exploration and development of a new mine, then we will just not continue to expand the number of competitive sources which have a profound influence on Canada's ability to compete internationally in the sale of minerals.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member can have it both ways. In one breath he is telling us that it had a detrimental effect on the low-grade ore because miners were moving to the high-grade. I suggest, with respect, that the high-grade mines will operate whether there is a tax holiday there or not. The area we should be working on is the low-grade. These mines will not operate and will not be in place, but maybe encouragement of these low-grade deposits is not in the long-term interest of the employers. We might have been encouraging miners or people who were doing this kind of investing to get into the low-grade aspects for the three-year tax holiday time, have these miners working for that time frame, and then being unable to work after the tax-free holiday.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I think the point is that as we expand our capacity to produce minerals, whether from high-grade or low-grade deposits, those developments will become profitable. Even granted the three-year tax holiday, there would be an implied contractual commitment that the benefit of that tax holiday would be paid back once profits were earned. It is ludicrous to suggest taxing paper profits. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that we allow only the high-grade deposits to proceed by denying the three-year tax benefit, which would essentially encourage competitive sources of production, then I cannot agree with him, Mr. Speaker. The whole purpose of the unloading of the front end of the tremendous investment burden that mining investors face is to get more capital into mining and to stop this nonsensical situation of taxing income before it is ever really earned.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member draws certain conclusions from British Columbia. In one instance he spoke about Saskatchewan, and in another instance he spoke about NDP Governments being somehow or other to blame for the downturn in the mining industry. There are two questions I have for the Hon. Member. How does he explain the difficulties the mining industry has in the Province of Ontario, where the NDP has never been the Government?

Mr. McDermid: And never will be.

Mr. Deans: Well, who knows about that? That is not a big problem, frankly. Second, the Hon. Member speaks about the need to create a good climate in which investors can invest their money. What does he think of the climate in Chile, Argentina, Guatemala or Indonesia where these same investors are investing who invest in Canada? They have to go there and deal with people who stand with a gun at their head in order to make deals. They do not seem to be withdrawing with the possible exception of Guatemala. They do not seem to be finding any difficulty dealing there. Does the Hon. Member really think that anyone believes his unadulterated crap?

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. McDermid: Back to the fire department.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) belies a great unease when he has to finish his question with an arrogant adjective such as that. I would not mind if the Hon. Member would allow me to answer the questions he has put.

In the case of the Province of Ontario I think it is fair to say that many people in the mining community are not terribly pleased with the excessive bureaucracy that has to do with the trading in shares of mining stocks on the Toronto Stock Exchange compared to the situation, I might add, on the Vancouver Stock Exchange which has experienced record trading in these areas in recent months. That is not to say you can draw any valid parallels between the state of affairs in the Provinces of Saskatchewan or British Columbia under NDP Governments—and I might add Manitoba—and the situation in Ontario. I do not see the Ontario Government putting aside massive reserves of land, establishing Crown corporations to mine the minerals of Ontario in the name of the Crown and establishing a cartel and participating in a cartel in the marketing of those minerals, as was the case with the Province of Saskatchewan. I do not see the Province of Ontario driving out investment capital from the mining industry. In fact, if you look at the situation in Hemlo in the gold fields in the Timmins area, Mr. Speaker, you will see a tremendous amount of enthusiasm and excitement over the development of new mining ventures there.

I do not think it is fair to suggest that the Conservative Government of Ontario is practising in any way the types of socialist or interventionist measures that have become commonplace with NDP provincial Governments in western Canada.

If other Members would like to ask additional questions I will sit down, but I have one other question to answer which the Hon. Member asked me. It had to do with the situation in other parts of the world. I agree that it would be desirable for Canadian mining companies to keep their investment dollars in Canada, to enjoy a fair return on those investments and keep the jobs in Canada if our taxation and royalty structures and the predictability of Government regulations were such that they would. It is interesting that companies have been induced to take their investment elsewhere because of the negative policies of federal and provincial Governments with regard to the mining industry.

It is even more appalling to learn, as we did last week, that the Canadian Government is heavily engaged in financing mining ventures in many of these countries through the Canadian Export Development Corporation, CIDA, and other initiatives. I would like to know what my NDP friends think about the following example. The Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) announced on May 4, 1983 that the Canadian Government would be heavily assisting the development of a major new coal mine in Indonesia. He was present in Jakarta for the signing of the contract under which Canadian companies would get some spin-off work in relation to developing this coal mining project in South Sumatra.

The interesting facet of this story is that there is a policy which the Indonesian Government implements that says it cannot accept any investment in a venture of this sort unless there is an equal amount of money spent on contracts with the Indonesian Government in relation to any benefits that are taken out of the country. I think the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is well aware of that. Here we have the Canadian Government setting up a new coal mine in South Sumatra which will produce by 1985 nine million tonnes of coal a year, which is equivalent to the entire production of the northeast coal field in British Columbia. The Indonesian Government says: "We welcome your assistance and the involvement of your mining companies but the condition is that you have to allow us to win Government contracts to import Indonesian goods to Canada", equal to the value of the investment we are making there. That seems rather ludicrous, Mr. Speaker, because there is no net gain for Canada. In fact, there is a net loss for Canada. We are adding another nine million tonnes a year production capacity in another country and the Canadian Government is aiding and abetting the loss of Canadian jobs in the process.

Mr. Bloomfield: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has detailed the large tax increases that have been collected by the Provinces from the mining industry and he has called for federal intervention into mineral taxation. Would he describe the methods that he favours for imposing such intervention on the Provinces, which under the Canadian Constitution own the resources within their boundaries?

Mr. McDermid: Tell that to Newfoundland.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the constitutional provision under Section 92 of the old British North America Act, now the Canada Act, 1982. There was nothing in my speech which suggested any form of intervention. It belies the thought processes of Government Members that they tend to think always in terms of intervention. I did not use the word "intervention" except in regard to the practices of the Liberal Government over the past 14 years. I used the term "consultation" and suggested that we establish or strike a parliamentary committee.

• (1140)

It is high time the elected Members of this House got down to talking with their counterparts in provincial legislatures and got the bureaucrats out of a process which has led to such a hodge-podge and complex system of taxation and royalties that the industry has no room in which to breathe. I was not talking about intervention. I was talking about consultation and some really effective work for a change by—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted for questions and answers has expired.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and take part today in the debate on the motion that in part urges a special committee of this House be struck to investigate and recommend immediate solutions to the problems facing the mining industry and the workers in Canada. I think we should go beyond that to the communities involved in the Canadian mining industry because they are the ones most affected by the decisions being made.

I would like to refer to some of the happenings in my riding of Kootenay East-Revelstoke regarding decisions of the Government of Canada. The Minister is well aware of these matters as I have approached her in that regard. First I refer to a statement made by Senator Olson on August 6, 1980 respecting the development of northeast coal. In part he said:

> We recognized that federal financial assistance to facilitate the development of northeast coal was a sound investment for Canadians as long as our contribution reflected a responsible and reasonable level of potentially recoverable costs on the project. The current proposal from British Columbia, however, provides no indication that either Government could directly recover its investment.
> Development of the northeast British Columbia coal resource would of course be of great advantage to the buyers . . . since it would diversify their sources and provide security of supply. Quite plainly, the coal-buying interests must be prepared to pay a higher price per tonne if they are to benefit from accelerated development of this Canadian resource.

Also Senator Olson pointed out that there were already large quantities of marketable high-grade metallurgical coal available from British Columbian Albertan mines for shipment to Japan at prevailing world prices. Then in April, 1981 an agreement was struck between British Columbia and the federal Government. At that time Senator Bud Olson said:

> I am here on behalf of Prime Minister Trudeau and the Government of Canada to congratulate the Canadian and Japanese companies on their successful negotiation of the largest export agreements ever achieved between our two countries. I endorse Mr. Nemoto's remarks both now and during the negotiations of the importance of these agreements to the healthy and growing trade relationship between Canada and Japan.
> It has been an honour for me to lead the federal Government's involvement in this project. I had the constant encouragement and support of the Minister of Transport, . . . who, while he cannot be here today, has ensured the full co-operation of the National Harbours Board and the Canadian National Railways.

These are the kinds of changes the Government has made, without consulting the communities or the coal industries involved, that have created tremendous hardship. Since that time, 2,000 coal workers in my riding have been faced with a six-week lay-off. Also they were notified of another pending four-week lay-off. They are supplying the same markets which the northeast will supply. Not only is the Minister and the Government contributing almost $1 billion in infrastructure for northeast coal, but they will devastate the supply of southeast coal.

They have also appointed a marketing agency headed by a former Minister of the House, Ron Basford, at $800 per day and with a full-time office in Vancouver which will be in charge of the marketing of coal from the northeast. On the board of directors of that marketing board will be a Minister of the Province of British Columbia, the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), his Deputy Minister, the head of British Columbia Hydro, the head of CN Railways and representatives from the new community of Tumbler Ridge.

This structure is being put in place to ensure the marketing of northeast coal. How does the Minister expect southeast coal to compete in the same markets with that structure in Vancouver to carry out discussions with foreign buyers? This is a very serious matter. I think the Government and the task force for which the Conservative Party is calling can do some good for the communities concerned. As the mining critic for the New Democratic Party, I support the idea of a committee travelling across the country and the inclusion of input from the people and communities involved.

At this point I would like to speak about the Iron Ore Company of Canada in Schefferville which has created a very serious problem for thousands of its laid off workers. As we know, Brian Mulroney is the head of the company. It has offered its workers 50 per cent of their costs to leave the area.

An Hon. Member: A generous offer.

Mr. Parker: It may sound like a generous offer but, as the Conservatives know, the only way out of Schefferville is by travelling on the railway of the Iron Ore Company. It will receive back the very funding it gave the workers, and in fact is asking the federal Government to come in and make up any difference. We have a responsibility to these communities and workers, but the company officials have an even greater responsibility than just turning their backs and saying that they have investments in South America, South Africa and Guatemala and that they are supplying their markets from those areas.

The Hon. Member was quite correct when he mentioned that the federal Government was spending moneys in other countries. Our Party brought that very fact before the House and questioned the Government as to why these development moneys were being spent in other countries, particularly at a time when there were problems in our mining industries.

I want to discuss another matter with regard to coal. Approximately 13 million to 14 million tonnes of coal are shipped to Japan from the Kootenays each year. Four mining companies are involved in the shipment. It is a very important commodity for the coal fields in my riding. Because there have been such discussions, I know that the Government is aware that Ontario Hydro purchases in the neighbourhood of 14 million tonnes of coal a year from the Americans; 14 million tonnes of coal come from the United States to Canada for Ontario Hydro. I want to emphasize very clearly that the amount of toxins coming from American coal is seven times greater than that from Canadian coal. We in the House talk about acid rain, and I want to say to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) that it is time that we started to look at what is happening right here in Canada.

The Conservative Party has criticized the mining policies of the New Democratic Party in British Columbia. The Conservative Party may have had just cause to complain when the policies were first implemented in British Columbia. Those policies were drafted and laid out. Do you know from where the New Democratic Party got those policies? It looked at Cominco, part of the free entreprise market, to see how Cominco made deals with the mining industry. The New Democratic Party in British Columbia felt that if the mining industry was prepared to give Cominco that kind of revenue in order to use their mining facilities and their mining land, then it should be prepared to give that to the Province. That is the policy that was laid out. We found out very clearly that it was not working.

The New Democratic Party implemented a new policy and a mine was started up in Kamloops under the new policy. That mine is still operating and we are able—

Some Hon. Members: No, it is not.

Mr. Parker: They were shut down from a period of time but they are operating. So let us not have any more of the scare tactics that the Conservatives and the Social Credit Government are trying to bring about with regard to industry in Canada.

The Iron Ore Company, Mr. Speaker, gave generous separation allowances to about 300 workers in Schefferville but has completely refused to do anything for the 700 to 800 other employees who have lost their jobs in Sept-Îles where the ore was concentrated. The company has absolutely refused to consider these employees as permanently laid off. Railway workers are also losing their jobs. This is why I say that we cannot zero in on only the mining companies and the Government's activities. We must also look at the municipalities and the people involved.

Our caucus had occasion to meet with a delegation from Faro in the Yukon. The Government has taken action to alleviate some of their problems. They are doing some exploratory work in a small way, taking off some of the overburden, and that has put some people back to work. I want to say how sad I was as I sat on that committee to hear representatives from the Chamber of Commerce, the business sector and the working sector literally destroying their whole background as their community is dying around them. This is all because of the kinds of mining policies and regulations that are laid out and the programs that are followed. As we in this Party have said, it is time we implement an industrial policy for the country that not only looks at the potential in various parts of Canada but also at the mining industry to ensure a long lasting and stable work force in these areas.

I believe the Member from the Conservative Party who spoke earlier indicated that the taxation policies the Government has brought in with regard to taxation on northern benefits for workers in their bunkhouses has created tremendous hardships in the mining sector. I have asked the Minister to include northern benefits in my riding, an area where people live purposely to serve the mining industry.

As I have suggested, the problem is that the Government will not allow these people benefits under the northern benefits tax. I think that is ridiculous. When a young single person leaves his home to work in an outlying area and stays in a bunkhouse, he does not get the same benefits as does a married man. The married man who stays in that bunkhouse is able to show that as his second home, whereas the single fellow, while he may have residence in another area, will still be taxed as much as $23 a day for staying in that facility.

I want to say that these are the kinds of hardships the Government has created. The Minister may laugh, but I want to tell her that those workers are finding it very, very difficult to communicate and to go back and forth. For example, a single man who was charged under the Unemployment Insurance Act paid $1,000 to come out from the North and protect his rights at trial and then go back again. He was found not guilty, but it cost him $1,000 to go back to his home area to protect his legal rights. Those are the kinds of hardships that are experienced by workers in the northern areas. These hardships must be recognized. The planned new taxation on those benefits will create tremendous hardships for people in the mining industry.

We support the Opposition Party's proposal today, Mr. Speaker. I hope that the Government will look seriously at this proposal to set up a committee that will go across the country to meet with the communities, the workers, the mining industry and the Provinces to come up with a solution that will be of benefit to all.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member complained about certain Government investment in railway infrastructure and ports in northeast British Columbia, indicating that that was probably taking jobs away from Canadians. Does he not believe that the investment in that infrastructure will make it possible to find new mining resource potential in northeast British Columbia and make that new resource possible, or does he think that the investment in that infrastructure is a total waste of time?

Mr. Parker: No, Mr. Speaker, far from it. We in this Party believe that there is a time for development of the North, but the time is not now. At this time thousands of people are out of work. To build a new community at this time that will compete against one that is already in existence will create a hardship for the existing community. We would much prefer to see that $1 billion allocated to other areas at this time, such as upgrading the railways with firm agreements to ensure that we will be able to supply the market that we have. When the economy recovers and we start to produce, then would be the time to look at that infrastructure.

Mr. Blenkarn: Do I gather from what the Hon. Member is saying that when we have all sorts of unemployment, investment is bad, that we should not use Government funds to build a future for Canada, to open the roads to new resources? Is that his vision of the country? Is his vision that in bad times we should restrict our activity, not open up new opportunities or new resources but just hone in on present resources? Does he believe that is the way we should go in building this country?

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker I thought I made it very clear that I do not believe that is a time to develop coal fields in another area in competition with existing communities. Three existing communities can supply the market. To put up $1 billion for expansion in order to create a good atmosphere for our competitors to come into the market, where they can buy it cheaper, where it is northeast against southeast and southeast against northeast, is wrong. We do not believe in that kind of financing. It gives competitors in other countries an advantage.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I was rather shocked to hear the exposition of the New Democratic Party's northern development policy. I am pleased that the New Democratic Party did not exist at the time of Confederation or we would still be waiting for a railroad to be built between eastern Canada and British Columbia.

In all seriousness, I do have a question for the Hon. Member. He complained that mines were being closed. An ore body being a wasting asset, that is inevitable with any mine. When you take the first tonne of ore out, the days of that mine are numbered. Is the Hon. Member proposing that we should not open mines because at some point in time they are going to be closed? If that is not the case, how would he solve the problem of dislocations that come about as a result of a mine closure?

Mr. Parker: In all sincerity, I think the Hon. Member is losing sight of what we are talking about today. We must have diversity for these communities. We must have a plan for a community that is beginning to phase out its mining facilities. That is the kind of industrial plan that we in this Party are talking about.

We must be able to see the potential of that area. We must not just walk away from it as the Conservatives would. Their big financiers just walk away. They give 50 per cent to the people, tell them to leave and let the community die. We do not believe in that. We believe in an industrial plan that will lay the structures to carry on the community through another phase, contributing to our country in a strong economic way. However, this needs planning, not the greed of developers who take the iron ore out of the ground and walk away with the profits with no concern for the community.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any further questions or comments?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity today to speak at some length on the mineral sector and detail measures that this Government has taken and is taking to ensure the industry makes its maximum contribution to the Canadian economy and the Canadian people. I am particularly pleased to do so today. This debate is long overdue. It is the first on this subject in this Parliament and it gives me an opportunity to debate with Members of the House the state of the industry and the role of the federal Government.

I would like to reiterate that on Friday of last week I spent the entire day in discussion with the provincial mines Ministers. It may come as a surprise to Members of the Opposition, but five provincial Ministers present paid tribute to the role of the federal Government and how effective we have been, particularly in the last 18 months of the downturn.

The Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) made reference to ore bodies such as Uranium City. I found that an unfortunate reference in many ways because he was defeating his argument. He and the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), who is a very knowledgeable miner, and I say that in a very positive sense, know that an ore body is a finite thing. That ore body declines to a point where it is no longer mineable. This is something that Governments—federal, provincial and municipal—must come to grips with. We have dealt with this over the past year.

It would be healthier if I gave some background as to where we are and where we are going. The Hon. Member is quite right, the mineral industry is one of the basic underpinnings of our economy. Excluding fuels, the value of primary metal production in Canada for 1982 was almost $11 billion. A high proportion of this value is exported, nearly 80 per cent, and is a major earner of foreign exchange. Residents of some 175 single-industry communities depend primarily on minerals for their livelihood. Therefore I share with the Hon. Member his concern that the industry continue in a healthy state. I assure the House that the Government also shares its concern.

The industry has witnessed a three-year period of declining world-wide demand for its products, a decline that is unprecedented, at least since the Great Depression. In 1982 the value of Canadian mineral production was down by nearly 18 per cent from 1981, which in itself was marginally below the year prior, 1980.

The cutback in Canadian production was reflected in cutbacks in the mining industry of many other mineral-producing countries as well. The reduction led inevitably to temporary loss of employment for many workers in the industry. Depressed world prices in some cases hastened the closure of marginal mines, leading to what might be termed premature economic exhaustion of the ore body, although physical exhaustion of the mineral had not yet occurred. Therefore there were some permanent lay-offs as well.

This must be said. The facts of the mineral exploration are exceptionally vigorous. That may come as somewhat of a surprise. Investment in new mines and an expansion of existing mines is taking place, in particular for gold, potash and in some cases for base metals as well. Therefore the news is not all bad. Also a cyclic recovery is underway which will lead to the gradual hehiring of laid-off workers.

I mentioned in my preamble that I met with Ministers responsible for mines in the Provinces and the Territories as well and the mood was far from pessimistic. During the course of this debate today, I am sure the House will hear further details of some of the expansions and bright spots that are occurring in Canada.

The federal Government has recognized the recent difficulties of the industry and the impact on those who work in the industry. It has moved resolutely to ameliorate the short-term problems and to lay a firm foundation for future success in the face of continuing change in the world around us.

In the few minutes I have today I intend to demonstrate that the resolution before the House is ill-founded in every specific way. I therefore propose to proceed by addressing briefly each issue mentioned in the resolution and to leave it to other speakers to provide additional information on the Government's programs.

Let us look first at taxation. The Government has not imposed punitive taxation on the mineral sector. The mineral policy discussion paper prepared by my officials, to which the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta referred, showed that while the taxes paid by mining as a percentage of profits increased during the early '70s, the bulk of the taxes went to the Provinces. The federal share of mineral sector taxes actually fell from 46 per cent a share in 1969 to 38 per cent in 1978. I will be very happy to show those figures to the Hon. Member. What is of supreme importance is that in this period the provincial share of taxation grew from 54 per cent to 62 per cent.

I suggest that a parliamentary task force would not solve this problem. I believe the Hon. Member should know that we, through Energy, Mines and Resources and through my Department, have a federal-provincial task force in place looking at the tax structure in this country. There has been a very healthy exchange of views and it has resulted in some of the tax measures which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) announced just a couple of weeks ago. These are tax measures which were welcomed by the industry, and I might add by the Provinces.

Moreover, I believe it is important to note that the proportion of profits paid as tax by firms in the mining sector is strictly comparable to that paid by manufacturing and other sectors. Notwithstanding this equitable treatment of the industry as a whole within Canada, the Government has recognized the special contribution and problems of the junior exploration industry and has provided important tax incentives in its most recent budget to permit the easier accumulation of pools of capital and their application to mineral exploration and development. The Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta referred to them briefly; I will expand on them.

The deductibility of earned depletion associated with mine exploration expenditures from any income will encourage increased investment in grassroots mining exploration. And this was done, as I said, as a result of our internal task force, with a great deal of help from some of the professional organizations, the Mining Association of Canada and the Prospectors and Developers' Association, with whom we liaise regularly. This benefit, which will be available to all taxpayers including mining companies, individuals and non-mining firms, will be particularly helpful to junior mining companies in raising funds for exploration, especially through the flow-through shares. I am surprised that we did not receive more support than what was received from the Hon. Member when he mentioned it.

The Minister of Finance also acted to adjust the federal investment tax credit provisions of the Income Tax Act to increase its efficiency and make the credit more equitable. A number of other changes in the budget will not only help to achieve these goals but should also encourage junior mining companies to bring their discoveries into production.

Furthermore, the budget recognized the problems associated with the special characteristics of the mineral industry by providing that non-capital, that is, business losses, will now be allowed a three-year carryback and a seven-year carryforward. This will help juniors to bring their initial mine into production, particularly where start-up losses are incurred in the pre-production period due to interest charges on any debt employed. The extended loss carryovers, of course, will be of great value to the entire mining industry due to its cyclical nature.

Then, to ensure that our mineral industry is treated equitably, not only relative to other Canadian industries but also relative to the mineral sectors in other countries, the Government has announced the launching of a major international comparative study of the tax treatment of the resource industry in Canada and abroad.

I find it rather interesting to note, on a visit to another country just a week ago, that we were held up as a shining example of how a Government has made the best use of the taxation system to develop our resource industry. I might add, on the subject of tax audits, particularly in British Columbia, that yes, there have been problems which were brought to my attention several months ago; and these problems are now being addressed by my officials and by officials at Revenue Canada. I would like to congratulate prospectors and developers of that area, and also members of the Vancouver Stock Exchange, who were most efficient and courageous in arranging these meetings.

On the subject of northern benefits, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member from Kootenay that those benefits are not being taxed this year. The moratorium is in effect this year. In 1984 they will be phased in at a 25 per cent level and there is a cap. I am sure that this fact is not being conveyed to the general public, especially those affected, and I believe it would be very useful for Hon. Members of this House to know, particularly those who are not truly aware of how these measures are going to be applied and how unfair they were to other people in those parts of the country where isolation benefits existed and how unfair they were to those people who were receiving no benefits at all. It was a subject I discussed at some length with the mines and territorial Ministers, and I might point out to Hon. Members of this House that the territorial Ministers were not in favour of the existing system because of its inequity to the people who live within their boundaries. We are going to pursue the possibility of looking at other measures, not necessarily through the taxation system but other economic measures which will lead to the stable development of those areas. This is something I endorse heartily.

With respect to energy and interest costs, the Canadian mineral sector has indeed been affected in recent years by oil price shocks and by high interest rates, as has virtually industry in every industrialized country. Due to its remote locations, much of the mineral industry is subject to higher transportation charges on fuels laid down at those locations. In addition, the basic price of energy increased dramatically in the 1970s. Rather than being indifferent to these problems, however, the Government has acted over several years to cushion the impact of world energy price increases on the industry and is currently working with the producing Provinces to ensure that Canadian industry enjoys stable energy supplies at equitable prices. Again, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that we have been working very closely with the mineral industry on an energy task force and the work of the industry has been exceptional in reducing the energy costs, specifically of the mining industry.

All industrialized countries have been grappling with elevated interest rates as they struggle to contain inflation. The Government's program of economic management has now brought interest rates to their lowest levels in several years. This relief has already had the effect of reducing excessive debt servicing payments which only a few months ago threatened the very survival of our major mining companies. The industry on the whole, therefore, is looking forward to a slow but steady recovery.

What has happened in the last 18 months? What has this Government done? What is our record on job loss and job creation? It is very good. The Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta says that short-term projects such as Section 38 and NEED are ineffectual. I can tell him that I speak from direct experience. I come from an area where thousands of men and women were laid off. With the use of Section 38 and NEED we came through a very difficult winter very successfully. These people are back to work now. Without these programs, the severity and impact would have been far greater. In fact, if he were to visit my community, my riding, he would find an industry in good health and a community in very good health. That is a record of which I am extremely proud. This Government responded very sensitively and very flexibly by the use of Section 38. We created the NEED Program and, in our recent budget, the Special Recovery Program, which will create a large number of jobs.

Officials of Energy, Mines and Resources have closely monitored the situation and ensured that employees and community groups have been fully informed of the application of available job-creation programs to the mineral sector. As a result of this effort and of co-operation with certain Provinces—and I must say that the Provinces of British Coumbia and Ontario have been particularly flexible and co-operative—the record of use of these programs to relieve distress in mining communities has been outstanding. My officials have prepared an information package to assist the formulation and approval of mineral sector job-creation proposals. With the unanimous consent of the House I would like to table these proposals.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement for the Hon. Minister to table the documents to which she refers?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Erola: Thank you. An important feature of the job-creation programs in existence today is that they permit non-production work on mining properties, which will have the effect of improving the long-term productivity and cost performance of these operations. We found that to be extremely useful. As Hon. Members are aware, especially those in the critics' position, many, many single-industry towns are just that. It was important to put these people to work in areas where they would be indeed increasing the productivity of the operations. We have been able to do that. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that without these measures and the other vital provisions of Canada's Unemployment Insurance system there is little doubt that the current recession would have been a full-fledged depression.

• (1220)

I would like now to deal with foreign markets and foreign exchange. For many mineral commodities some of Canada's mines and plants are among the world's lowest cost producers. Canada's mining companies have demonstrated their marketing skills over many, many years. They are outstanding. Thus it is no accident that Canada became the world's largest non-fuel mineral exporter.

However, in recent years there has been evidence of a gradual erosion of that position. The explanation lies in structural changes which have taken place in world mineral markets over the past years. The following factors do stand out: procurement policies by resource deficient countries such as France, West Germany, Japan and to some extent the United States have led to offshore mineral investment and preferential trade ties. Optimistic growth scenarios and concessional financing by international institutions have led to excess mineral investment in less developed countries, often with involvement by the host Government. Once in place, such facilities often provide a high proportion of that country's employment and foreign earnings. That was painfully obvious during this last recession.

Now, the Government's response to this situation has been two-fold. First, to ensure that Canada maintains or increases its share of free mineral markets, the Government is determined that Canadian mineral production costs must be held to a minimum by discovery of superior deposits and by use of the best technology and other measures to increase productivity. I am announcing a specific mineral technology program today. I am most pleased to do so; the timing is most advantageous.

Second, the Government is committed to ensuring that international institutional rigidities which discriminate against Canadian mineral exports are reduced. For example, officials of Energy, Mines and Resources have conducted international fact finding missions relating to specific products. A co-operative study has been launched with the Mining Association of Canada to identify cases of non-tariff discriminatory trade policy and subsidized production. Finally, Canadian Government officials are participating in a special resource commodity working group of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade with the goal of eliminating barriers on mineral trade at all stages of processing.

I mentioned a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, that I wished to announce an initiative relating to mining, minerals and metals technology. In the past several months I have reviewed federal mineral R and D and examined proposals to meet the technological requirements and challenges of the 1980s. My review has focused on the Canada Centre of Mineral and Energy Technology known as CANMET. Its activities include policy R and D, which supports federal mineral policies, protection technologies to improve health and safety in the environment, and productivity technology to help improve industrial productivity and competitiveness.

My officials and I have consulted Provinces during this review and their input, complemented by the advice of industry across this country, has made a valuable contribution to this exercise. So today I announce an incremental two-year, $5 million program consisting of several elements to provide increased research and development assistance to the mineral industry in the short term. One of the more significant elements includes New R and D funds for contracts to industry in areas such as potash mining, hydrometallurgical and biotechnological processing of ores. We are going to look at foundry process control and computer simulation of process where short-term benefits can be identified.

Another element which is welcomed and done at the suggestion of the industry is making CANMET's special facilities and expertise available to industry at reduced cost where this does not compete with regular commercial services. As the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta is probably aware, most of the work that CANMET has done with industry up to this point has been on a cost recovery basis. Recognizing the cash flow situation of the industry, we are reducing the cost of these services.

I should also like to mention that tomorrow I will be announcing the awarding of a contract to Inco Metals of Sudbury to develop and construct a robot which will perform a variety of difficult and hazardous bar and hammer tasks now carried out manually. The total cost of this project is $778,000.

I note that my time is up, Mr. Speaker, but one thing is clear. I have demonstrated that the Hon. Member's resolution is without merit. Although the problems are real, they are being dealt with by this Government by working very closely with the industry and the Provinces. This Government is committed to the solution of the problems of the industry and has the necessary programs in hand and in development.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I want to commend and thank the Minister for going into some considerable detail, as one would expect she would in her role as Minister responsible for mines. I note she has made a number of announcements in her speech today, which is commendable, announcing a package for the use of Members on Government aid programs to assist in the hard hit and depressed areas of the country, a new mining, minerals and metals technology program, and certain initiatives by CANMET. One wonders, Mr. Speaker, if perhaps we should not have Opposition days like this more often because it does appear the Minister gets to work.

When the Minister speaks of new programs and initiatives which were largely conducted by the bureaucracy of her Department, Mr. Speaker, I have to think back to the time of the mineral policy discussion paper which took a year and a half to produce and many, many hundreds of hours of consultation, yet there has been no subsequent action. In fact, that policy paper missed the main mark and the Minister did not respond to my suggestion that it actually missed the main priority high in the minds of all spokesmen for the industry.

I would just quote the President of the Mining Association of Canada who said on April 19 that Canada can wave goodbye to its leading position as an exporter of minerals if it fails to remain competitive with an increasing number of other producing countries. Canada is facing a formidable challenge in world mineral markets from many competitors but particularly from Communist and less developed nations. In fact, Communist countries have grown at twice the rate as Western countries in terms of mineral production.

The question I want to ask the Minister is: Does she not feel that it is high time Members of this House had a chance between Opposition days, which may come every year or two, to sit down and really get their teeth into some of these issues as this motion proposes? She said the proposal for a special parliamentary committee was without substance or foundation, if I remember her words correctly. Does she really believe that? Does she not think that there is a place for Members of Parliament between Opposition days to deal with these very substantive questions bearing on the potential for future economic income and jobs relating to our mineral industry?

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, I think I answered the questions very clearly. The mineral policy document to which the Hon. Member referred was the very broad framework from which have flowed the kinds of things I announced today. Surely the Hon. Member must be aware of that.

As to his call again for a special parliamentary committee, I think I dealt with that very clearly. In fact we are dealing with the problems of the mineral industry and we have had a number of task forces in place dealing with the mining community, reports of which are being tabled today. Most of these recommendations from the federal-provincial task force, which included representations from labour and from industry, are in place. The short-term recommendations are in place. The work of this task force will continue over the long term and it will report back to the Minister. Surely it is this kind of co-operation in place now which will result in a healthy industry.

I regret very much that there has been very little discussion in this House about the state of the mineral industry in this country. Certainly that is not due to lack of interest on this side of the House. We have been minding the store. I suggest to my critics—

• (1230)

Mr. Siddon: Why did all of your announcements come today?

Mrs. Erola: —that they have not been particularly active, nor have they taken a particular interest in the industry.

Mr. Nickerson: I was very interested, Mr. Speaker, in the statement of the Minister that there was a special international committee working within the GATT framework on the question of trade in mineral resources. The idea behind this, we were told, was to reduce the barriers to trade in minerals at all stages of processing. This would seem to be a new direction in Government policy, because as far as I understand it the old Government policy was to encourage the upgrading of ores and concentrates within Canada; hence the changes to the Canada Mining Regulations some years ago which prohibited the export of ores and concentrates in unprocessed form without a special permit.

I wonder if we could be told what is the Government's policy. Is it to encourage trade in ores and concentrates in unprocessed form, as it appears to be today, or is to encourage the upgrading of Canadian mineral resources within Canada?

Mrs. Erola: To be perfectly honest, Mr. Speaker, I am rather shocked that the Hon. Member for Western Arctic would have confused the issue. Of course, the Government is committed to further processing and that is the thrust. The Hon. Member is surely aware that there are many tariff barriers in place which prevent the sale of our minerals further processed. The exact thrust is to see whether, somewhere along the way, over the long term we can reduce these barriers so that we in Canada can process these metals further and find markets for them without the barriers which are in place now. Surely he supports this move.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will allow one short supplementary question as there are several Members seeking to be recognized.

Mr. Nickerson: I would like to ask the Minister one further question. It deals with the taxation of northern benefits. Last fall a press release was issued from the Minister's office. Since then there has been nothing on paper. Could we now be told how the Minister plans to implement the taxation of northern benefits? Will it be by way of changes to the Act, to regulations, or a series of remission orders? It is necessary that tax lawyers and tax accountants be able to see the written rules which will apply. When will they become available? All we have to date is a press release.

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance will be issuing those regulations. I do not know how much time I have available to me, but I think it would be worth while to explain just how they will be put into effect.

Mr. Siddon: We've got the answers.

Mrs. Erola: I am not sure that Hon. Members opposite do know, because as of this year the moratorium is in effect. There will be no taxation of—

Mr. Siddon: For next year?

Mrs. Erola: —northern benefits for this year, 1983. It is only in 1984 that these benefits, which will be kept, will be phased in at a 25 per cent level, the first year.

Mr. Siddon: One hundred per cent the fourth?

Mrs. Erola: The Minister of Finance will be bringing forward that procedure.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on part of the speech that I made and question the Minister with regard to Ontario Hydro purchasing coal from the States. We have a $1 billion deficit involving trade with the States. First, concerning the environmental aspects, U.S. coal has 7 per cent sulphur and western coal has less than one half of 1 per cent. That has a tremendous impact on acid rain. I would like to stress the possibility of a subsidy for moving western coal east.

Mr. Siddon: It's called the Crow rate.

Mr. McDermid: Reverse Crow.

Mr. Blenkarn: Put coal on the Crow.

Mr. Parker: What is the Minister's program involving the need for immediate action with regard to Ontario Hydro purchasing Canadian coal? There are 14 million tonnes coming into this country from other countries. Byron Creek is shipping a small amount of western coal to Ontario Hydro. The point I am trying to make is that we have a tremendous opportunity right here in Canada. Is the Minister seriously considering it and, if so, when can we expect an answer?

Mrs. Erola: The Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke has put his finger right on the problem. It is transportation cost. He is well aware that the cost of moving western coal to the operations of Ontario Hydro is extremely high. That is one of the reasons the coal association of Canada has been a catalyst in changes to the Crow rate. I want to pay tribute to the mining industry and, more particularly, to the coal association of Canada for recognizing the fact that unless the Crow rate were changed, we would not see this situation change.

Mr. Siddon: Charge everybody more!

Mrs. Erola: This is why it is important for the Hon. Member and Members of his Party to support those changes—

Mr. Parker: Forget about the acid rain!

Mrs. Erola: —if he is to see the movement of western coal coming to eastern Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appear to be many Hon. Members seeking to ask questions. Is there unanimous consent that there be an extension of the period of questions and answers?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Minister said that she felt that people thought northern benefits were unfair. In view of the fact that in the Northwest Territories over 50 per cent of the people employed are employed directly or indirectly by the Government of Canada, and they all receive northern benefits including housing, fuel and transportation assistance, benefits of every nature and kind, why would the Government of Canada pay northern benefits if they were so unfair? There must clearly be a reason for them. What is the Government's policy with respect to northern benefits for its own employees, when this increase in tax will conceivably take place next year, eventually with 100 per cent taxation on these benefits in four years' time?

Mrs. Erola: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South has put his finger on the problem. It is unfair. Why should federal Government employees be receiving a benefit which is unavailable to some of the people, indeed many of the people, in those northern areas?

Mr. Siddon: So, what are you giving them?

Mrs. Erola: As one of the Ministers at the Ontario provincial-territorial conference pointed out to me, the fellow working in the garage down the street, who was born in Inuvik and is being paid by the garage operator, is not receiving a single benefit.

Mr. Siddon: What are you giving him?

Mrs. Erola: There must be a better way to produce and come forward with policies which will be fair to everyone in the North. I suggested to these Ministers that we work on it and come forward with some sort of economic development policy which would make it more attractive for people to live and settle in the North and stay there, but one which would be fair to everyone in the northern territories.

Mr. Siddon: Provide the solution.

Mrs. Erola: The Hon. Member says "Find the solution". I say yes, let us find a solution.

Mr. Nickerson: We'll tell you one.

Mrs. Erola: I suggest that he come forward with some of his ideas. He might occasionally come forward with a good idea.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Minister knows that our colleague from Peace River in British Columbia has produced a policy with respect to taxation which would significantly assist. For a long time our Party has been discussing significant tax changes involving taxation of people in the North, to make it equitable. Clearly people in northern Canada, where the cost of groceries is three times what they are in southern Canada, where the cost of heating a house is $300 or $400 a month compared to the cost here in Ottawa, should not be expected to pay the same income tax, dollar for dollar, as people here in this city. That has been the policy of the Government all along. When will the Government come up with something which makes sense? We have made suggestions; when can we have something from the Government?

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of sympathy for people who live in isolated parts of the country, particularly in the North. I have a considerable amount of experience in this area, coming from a northern mining community. As a matter of fact, a member of my family lived for two years in a very isolated area and paid just the costs to which the Hon. Member referred. Therefore I do have sympathy for these people. However, I do feel that we must develop a policy which will be fair to everyone who lives in the North, not just a select few who receive, in many cases, extremely generous benefits which are not afforded other people in this area. I think that people in other parts of the country would agree that a policy must be fair to all. That is why I am suggesting to the Hon. Member that the phasing in of the benefits which we have brought in is giving those people who live in the North an opportunity to cushion the blow.

Mr. Blenkarn: You are just increasing taxes on them!

• (1240)

Mrs. Erola: Give us, that is the federal Ministers and the provincial Ministers, an opportunity to come up with a program that will replace what is there now, one that is better.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would ask Hon. Members to bear in mind the extension that has taken place. The Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling).

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by congratulating my colleague for bringing this motion before the House, despite the fact that the Hon. Minister seems to think there was absolutely no need for it. I would also congratulate the Government for the measures it has taken in the budget which benefit the producing sector in general and the mining sector in particular. Such measures as allowing earned depletion to be deducted from any income source, the right to carryback non-capital losses three years and forward seven years, and the refundable investment tax credit are worthy moves and come none too soon.

As we are well aware, the Minister represents a constituency whose dependence on the mining industry is near complete. I know that she must have often been sick at heart as she viewed the effect that the earlier policies of her Government have had on that once prosperous industry and on her own riding in particular.

How tragic it is that before the Gallup polls and the inevitability of the coming election prompted the temporary shelving of some of the Government's more incredible economic theories, more than half of the manpower of this great industry had to take their place in the breadlines or go on Unemployment Insurance. The mining industry is not a sector that can be made to respond to Government incentive measures like a frog's leg jumps to a jolt of electricity. Like any other sector, it can be stomped into the ground by punitive or confiscatory tax measures, as this Government has clearly shown, but it cannot be resurrected as easily.

The mining industry depends for its health and welfare on the ability of producing sectors of the economy to buy its products. Without that, Government incentives such as increasing employment or addressing any other isolated factor in the productive equation will do no more than create more and greater stockpiles of unused products. So in order to find the reason for the crisis in the mining industry we must look to the general state of the economy.

Conversely, of course, the fact that over the past year or so half of the manpower in the mining sector has been out of work at one time or another is an utterly damning commentary on the effects of the Government's economic policy on the nation at large. However, this is not to deny the fact that the vast majority of Canadian mineral output is sold on the international markets. I believe the Minister stated that the figure was some 80 per cent. However, the Adams mine in Kirkland Lake and the Sherman mine in Temagami both have their output dedicated to the Dofasco mill at Hamilton, Ontario. The Adams mine recently closed down for a period of some three months, throwing some 400 breadwinners out of work. The Sherman mine is to follow suit some time in August. This example reflects directly on the point that I have been trying to make, which is that mining is dependent not on direct Government programs but on the general industrial climate. As we all realize, that climate has been very largely shaped by the Government's social and political experimentation over the past couple of decades.

The other factor that affects the viability of the industry is the price that it must charge for its product. Clearly if a property cannot produce a saleable product for less than the going price on the international market, then it becomes uneconomic.

The factors that contribute to the pricing of the product are such things as the grade of ore, the existence of marketable by-products, transportation costs, labour costs and so on. The Minister mentioned energy and interest rates, which are also significant. But there is one further major factor which is an important one in the case of the mining industry, and that is the crippling level of taxation imposed by all levels of Government.

The punishing level of taxation imposed on the industry by the provincial Government is no responsibility of the Treasury benches across the aisle, but their own tax laws are. I refer specifically to the non-deductibility of provincial taxes from taxable income for federal purposes. This single provision, enacted into law by the Turner budget of 1974, has done more to make Canadian mines uneconomic than anything else that I can think of. When this is coupled with the fact that the dividends of these mining companies, having been taxed by both provincial and federal Governments while still in the hands of the companies, are again subject to taxation in the hands of the investor, it is no wonder that the industry has been having a hard time finding seed money.

I will leave the discussion of the Government's policy of taxing northern allowances to my colleagues. We have already heard comments on that issue.

As I see it, the root causes of the industry's problems, like the root causes of the problems of the economy as a whole, are philosophical. Having concealed its socialist orientation from the voters in order to get elected, and perhaps sensing that this may well be their last chance to do so, the Government has embarked upon a collectivist, centralizing and demoralizing course that has laid waste to what was once the first or second most prosperous economy in the world and reduced it to the lowest level in the OECD.

In order to achieve this and to finance the effort to make as many Canadians as possible dependent, to some degree at least, on its own hand-outs, it has raised taxes to an unconscionable level. It has done so seemingly driven by the belief that the prime responsibility of a Canadian citizen, corporate or otherwise, is to generate income for the Government to spend, and in most cases to squander.

One of the perhaps unanticipated side effects of this policy has been that this double and triple taxation of the products of the mining industry has not only driven the private investor away, which I suspect would not cause the loss of too much sleep in Government circles, but has also in a great many cases priced those products out of the international market.

One of the most striking features in this Government's period of office has been the charts which show, commodity by commodity, our declining share of the world market over time. While each complaint raised from this side of the House for the past 15 years has been that our national economy was faring poorly, it has been met by the bland statement from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or his Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that the problem was a world-wide problem. I challenge them to explain how the fact that the rest of the world has outstripped us at what was once our own game can be anyone else's fault but their own Government's.

The declining share of the world mineral markets can very largely be traced to two factors, both of which are the direct products of this Government. First is the punitive levels of taxation which have contributed mightily to pricing our products out of world markets; and the second is the Government's encouragement of foreign competitors. I believe other Members have touched upon this subject.

Speaking of the decline of the Canadian mining industry, the President of the British Columbia and Yukon Chamber of Mines, in his report to the annual meeting of that organization approximately three months ago, said:

> It did not start recently and cannot be blamed on influences from outside Canada, and secondly, it is not caused by a shortage of resources; our problems are mainly 'Made in Canada'.
> A review of Canadian and world production figures illustrate clearly that the decline of the Canadian mining industry began between ten and fifteen years ago. Since Canada's share of the world market for individual metals also began to decline during this period, it is obvious that Canada was less successful than other producing nations in opening new mines at a sufficient rate to replace those that were depleted. Moreover, the decline cannot be blamed on world economic conditions since the trend started well before this recession.

• (1250)

Mr. Cathro then concludes the paragraph with the sentence:

> The decline coincides closely in time to the Trudeau years and the corresponding swing away from economic policies that encouraged mining.

I could not have put it any better myself or as well, Mr. Speaker.

Let me read one more observation or prediction. This was made in 1976 by Mr. Alf Powis, President of Noranda Mines, who said:

> We have accepted uncritically the notion that the state has the duty to redistribute wealth. In the process we have lost sight of the simple fact that wealth first has to be created before it can be redistributed. And once wealth is created, it cannot then be both consumed and preserved. In the words of the old truism, we cannot have our cake and eat it too.
> The problem is that never before in history have so many remarkably ambitious and far reaching new social programs been so tightly compressed into such a short time period. In the process Government spending doubled between 1965 and 1972, and has doubled again since 1972—

We must bear in mind that these words were spoken in 1976. Mr. Powis' observation continues:

> —to the point where it now absorbs some 40 per cent of our Gross National Product. And much of this has been financed by printing money. This is not to criticize either these programs or the motivation behind them. In themselves they are directed at problems we all want to see solved. But in aggregate, they are simply much more than we can afford. In the process we have stimulated far too much consumption and starved the investment process that creates new wealth and jobs, and is the only way to beat inflation.

That was said seven years ago. Since that time Government spending has well over doubled again. Inflation, in many ways the inevitable outgrowth of the budgets of the Turner years, has gone berserk and a new factor has been introduced to the scene, the multibillion dollar deficit.

In this environment; the mining executive's international competitiveness destroyed by Government policy, the domestic economy rendered unable to buy his products, also by Government policy, and by yet a third set of policies rendered unable to attract the capital to finance exploration and expansion, the mining executive looks at the budget of last week and says: "Good, that's better."

What directions, then, would I like to see taken? Where would a Progressive Conservative Government be likely to move toward? First and foremost, provincial taxation should be made deductible from federal tax payable. Then we must remove the deadhand of Government taxation.

Further, we must recognize the fact that a capital intensive operation like the development of a producing ore body cannot be cost effective in a closely competitive economy as long as it is carrying both a load of debt and a double load of taxation. I believe we should consult with the provincial Governments with a view to arranging a tax holiday for new producing properties until that debt load is paid off. The Minister did mention in her remarks that recent meetings have been held with her provincial counterparts. Let us hope that particular problem will be discussed and partially solved.

We should expand on the initiatives begun by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) when he held the portfolio of transport so as to facilitate the export of our mineral commodities. These initiatives should not be limited to the west and east coast, but should include also an exploration of the feasibility of extending the Ontario Northland Railway to the deep water areas on the east side of Hudson Bay and the construction there of port facilities. Should this prove feasible, what a shot in the arm it would be for the mining industries of northern Ontario and Quebec.

Most importantly, a Conservative Government would act decisively to restore public confidence, both at home and abroad, in the public policies of the nation. The importance of this cannot be overemphasized. Investors, those creatures who are such objects of suspicion to collectivist Governments such as this one, yet who nevertheless are the people who ultimately create the jobs the economy depends on, must be encouraged to invest. They must be shown that they and the jobs they create are welcome, be they individual investors or corporate investors. And they must be assured that so long as they behave as good corporate citizens or our country, they will remain welcome.

Again only a Progressive Conservative Government is in a position to do this. The aura of suspicion that probably for a generation will linger about the Liberal Party will lead their motives to be questioned as long as that suspicion remains, no matter what the Minister of Finance may try to tell us. I understand he is away now on a mission. Let us hope his mission will be successful.

In my particular area I do not have any producing mines although my riding borders the Minister's riding of Nickel Belt and, therefore, I have a great and abiding interest in the industry. I believe there are some 40,000 people employed in the mining industry of Ontario, if my memory serves me correctly. In northern Ontario people employed in the mining industry total 15 per cent of the work force. Overall in Ontario, the percentage of people employed in the mining industry is much smaller; I believe it is 1 per cent of the labour force. Yet the 1 per cent produces 4 per cent of the Gross Provincial Product. That is certainly a tribute to the work force.

Mining is a capital intensive industry and is a very important industry. I believe the Minister mentioned that the amount of money it generates is significant, some $11 billion. Therefore the industry is important to the economy.

Ontario is also a significant producer of gold. I believe in 1982 dollars this Province produced some $25 million in gold. I had the privilege of going through the Minister's riding on Thursday and Friday of this past week with members of the Subcommittee on Acid Rain. We met with officials of the International Nickel Company. I was delighted to learn that the mine is in full production. I was not so delighted to learn that according to the Executive Vice-President, Mr. Walter Curlook, the mine is probably losing a million dollars a day. However, International Nickel is still providing a lot of jobs. Officials also told me that they are going into exploration in a great way. More production is very important. It was not a case of the work force only; Mr. Curlook emphasized that there must be more productivity among the white collar staff and among executives in order for the company to compete, as we are well aware.

I remember years ago, in fact when I went to school, which is a few years ago, that International Nickel produced 95 per cent of the nickel in the world. That was really something. There was no competition. That is a nice deal if you can get it.

Mr. Cullen: That is when I lived there.

Mr. Darling: The Hon. Member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen) is pointing out that was when he was there. But now production has dropped to 24 per cent of world production and I guess it is hanging on by its fingernails. Our committee was in the area to find out what International Nickel was doing as far as pollution control is concerned. It is spending money, but it will have to spend tremendous amounts of money. The figure is astronomical, some $400 million a year by the time International Nickel gets down to allowable emissions of under 1,000 tonnes. International Nickel has dropped its emissions significantly from 7,000 tonnes a day to, I believe, some 1,900 tonnes a day now. We certainly give the company full credit for that. I told the Vice-President that we are all delighted to see the smoke belching out from the chimney of International Nickel again, and I say amen to that; but we want to do everything we can to get the company to reduce emissions as far as sulphur content is concerned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Will the Hon. Member be back after lunch because I have a question for him?

Mr. Jarvis: He is always here.

Mr. Darling: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I will not be here this afternoon because I am flying to Toronto.

At 1.01 p.m. the House took recess.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

HIGH TECHNOLOGY EMPLOYMENT TRAINING FOR LOW INCOME GROUPS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, recently the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) outlined four main objectives of the Government's new policy on technology. One of these objectives was the need to ensure that the benefits of technological development are shared equitably among all Canadians in every region. Some social agencies and community groups fear that the high technology revolution will result in a large number of poor and technologically illiterate, so-called "techno-peasants".

Given the growing importance of high technology, it is necessary that we develop policies at both the federal and provincial levels whereby those in lower income brackets across the country will have good access to high-tech training and job opportunities. The addition of financial and social barriers to training in high technology would be devastating to the chances of those in the lower income strata to gain future employment, and would be devasting to their ability to comprehend the usage, meaning and potential of computers and other high-technology advances.

I urge the federal Government to explore ways of advancing high technology training for lower income groups under the National Training Act, and I urge all provincial Governments to improve the number and quality of their continuing education and evening courses in high technology related subjects.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—PROPOSAL TO CHANGE—PAYMENT OF BENEFITS TO RAILWAY COMPANIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Government spent some $300,000 on the Gilson Commission which heard representations and had detailed comprehensive consultations with all concerned groups in the West. After studying the report, the Minister in a policy statement announced that the "major benefits of this initiative"—that is, sharing the Crow benefit between the railways and the farmers—included an "improved grain transportation system, increased resource development, and economic diversification". A year went by and the legislation still had not come before the House, and then suddenly out of the blue the Minister threw out the entire "Pepin-Gilson" proposals and announced to the press that the total Crow benefit would go to the railways.

The recommendations from the West did not change from what Gilson or the Minister had heard, but the Minister received one more recommendation that did not go to Gilson. It was not from the West, not from the House of Commons, but from the Quebec Liberal caucus. It demanded that the Government pay the total Crow benefit to the railways, and the Minister succumbed. The Minister used reason and the consultative process until the Quebec Liberal caucus spoke, and then out of the window went economic diversification and resource development in the West, out of the window went the tremendous potential of the cattle and hog industry in the West. The objective suddenly became to retain, at all cost, the Liberal power base in Quebec. The Government thinks that western Canadians will continue to be hewers of wood and drawers of water. The West wants only fair play with the rest of Canada.

INDUSTRY

CLOSING OF AUTOMOBILE PRODUCTS PLANT IN HAMILTON

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, we have another plant closing in Hamilton. Each one seems to be worse than the last. This case is Allen Industries, which makes molded insulation for automobiles. It has moved its plant from Hamilton to Richmond, Virginia. The company will sell its product back to Ford at Oakville. This must stop, this uncaring attitude which is displayed by many manufacturers located in Ontario particularly, toward the people who work for them and toward the municipalities that have put so much money into providing an environment which made the plants successful in the first place. We must draw to their attention that their responsibility to Canada must come before their opportunity to make $2 or $3 more from an already profitable operation.

I suggest that the Government should take a look at the auto pact to determine whether or not they are in violation, in one way or another, of that pact. If they are not, then it should renegotiate the auto pact and ensure that plants operating within the protection of Canadian law operate on behalf of Canadians.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

SUPPORT FOR TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE IN CANADA

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (London-Middlesex): Madam Speaker, the possible testing of Cruise missiles in Canada has received a great deal of attention lately. I think it is important for Canadians to realize that the federal Government supports NATO and the Alliance. We believe that a credible deterrent is needed to maintain peace with liberty.

A careful analysis of the facts will show that NATO's "two-track" strategy of talk and deploy is the safest route to follow at this time. Unilateral disarmament is a very unwise course to follow, considering present world conditions, and would create a dangerous shift in the international balance of power. If we refuse to allow the testing of the Cruise in Canada by the United States, it will display to the Soviets that the western world is divided, and will further erode the hopes for genuine negotiations on disarmament.

This does not mean that the federal Government is against disarmament. Indeed, I know of nobody in our country who would not favour disarmament. It is the ultimate goal that all mankind should strive to achieve. However, history proves that this cannot be done by offering unilateral concessions. This tends to create imbalances and, at the very least, leads to demands for more unilateral concessions. It is the path toward ultimate catastrophe.

We would do well to remember that compromise and weakness did not prevent the Second World War. It nearly cost the western world its freedom. Canadians as a whole should support the strengthening of the NATO Alliance, recognizing that the best deterrent to war is to be prepared. We should proceed with the United States on the testing of Cruise missiles.

INDUSTRY

TAXATION OF DOMESTIC WINE PRODUCERS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, with the soaring popularity of table wines on the North American continent, we should contrast the enthusiastic support given by American States to American grape growers and wineries with that given here at home. Most American States exempt wineries from state liquor and wine taxes, and those that do tax impose a token five-cents a gallon tax amounting to less than a penny per bottle. Consequently American acreage in grape production has doubled each year since 1976. American States and European Governments regard wine as an agricultural food product. In Canada wine continues to be taxed as a alcoholic beverage from which Ottawa and Toronto combined receive $140 million in taxes annually, while Ontario growers realize only a $24 million gross.

The number of growers in Ontario has been cut in half to about 1,000. They have managed to survive by increased plantings of European and hybrid grapes and by concentrating on the production of quality wines. Members of the House, the Parliamentary Restaurant, and consumers everywhere are advised to mark 1982 as a good vintage year. "You don't have to be bold or daring, you just have to have confidence in buying Canadian."

FUNDING NEEDS OF ONTARIO VETERINARY COLLEGE

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, for over 100 years the Ontario Veterinary College has been renowned the world over for its excellence. Thousands of veterinarians have graduated from this venerable institution and have practised their profession in all corners of the world. In addition, hundreds of students from other countries have been trained at the OVC.

Several years ago the Dean of the College warned that, due to inadequate financial support, the College was in danger of losing its status as a world class institution? The Dean had continually stated that unless the physical plant was upgraded and the operating capital increased, the college was placing its accreditation in jeopardy.

Recently the American Veterinary Medical Association accreditation team visited the OVC and downgraded the College to a limited accreditation category. This in effect means that the College has five years to meet certain criteria, for example, improving its physical facilities and increasing the number and quality of its faculty. During this period it is recommended that enrollment be curtailed.

The Government has recently promised to fund partially the construction of a fourth veterinary college in the Maritimes. This may well be a laudable endeavour, but surely the Government has an obligation to the three existing colleges to ensure that they are adequately funded in order to prevent the embarrassment of their failing to meet specific standards of excellence.

It makes little sense to spend money on a new veterinary college while at the same time allowing the three existing centres to lose their accreditation for the want of adequate funding. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to meet with the Dean of the Ontario Veterinary College, who will be in Ottawa tomorrow, in order to take immediate action aimed at resolving this unacceptable situation.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY PROPOSAL FOR CHANGE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, the New Democratic Party supports public investment to upgrade railway lines for transport of all commodities, not just grain. The Government's plan to cancel the statutory grain rates for western farmers is unacceptable. The New Democratic Party's alternative proposal would require an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of commodities by rail and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof that legislate the following: one, capital to upgrade the rail system provided by public investment in exchange for equity in CP Limited and increasing our equity in Canadian National; two, paying the railroads directly for proven out of pocket losses for transporting grain; three, maintain the statutory grain rates for grain farmers and extend the rates to other commodities and their products.

The NDP proposal for rail upgrading would not be confined to British Columbia and Alberta but would include the railway line to Churchill and other places in Canada where facilities are inadequate to handle the traffic offered. Our plan would cost no more than the Government proposal, but more upgrading would result because we would prevent public money from leaking out of the rail system.

INCOME TAX

REQUIREMENT THAT SENIOR CITIZENS PAY ON INSTALLMENT BASIS

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, the senior citizens of our country derive benefits upon attaining age 65 such as the Old Age Pension and Guaranteed Income Supplement, and are no longer required to pay Unemployment Insurance premiums. But one of the hardships that they are faced with upon attaining the age of 65 is that they must pay their income tax on an installment basis. Many senior citizens are not aware of this and many of them find it difficult to do so. I think this may be something the Government should consider. It should indicate to the people of Canada that when they attain the age of 65 they are no longer required to pay their income tax on an installment basis.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FORESTRY

FUNDING FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, the importance of forest industries to the Canadian economy is apparent. Almost 20 per cent of our exports is forest products, accounting for a $10.9 billion trade surplus. In many communities forest industries provide up to 60 per cent of employment.

When wood becomes scarce, our economy suffers. Yet recent studies show that wood losses due to forest diseases amount to an annual volume of 45 million cubic metres, some 20 per cent of the annual allowable cut in Canada.

Again, Madam Speaker, the Liberal Government's policies continue to disregard the importance of adequate research which could save hundreds of millions of dollars annually. Disease research programs of the Canadian Forestry Service have been declining and there has been a 50 per cent reduction in staffing.

For the fiscal year 1983-84 the Canadian Forestry Service has received $5.5 million for research and development. These funds, however, will only allow forest pathologists to catch up with basic scientific equipment requirements. The urgent need for additional person-years has not been met.

During the current recession forest losses may seem irrelevant. Let me assure you that they are very real when one takes into account the loss of trade dollars, of employment, and the detrimental effect on the environment.

I urge the Government to address this issue immediately in order to preserve our forest industry and the economy.

HOUSING

CANADIAN HOME OWNERSHIP PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Hon. Minister responsible for housing, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The housing industry, largely because of the Canadian Home Ownership Program, staggered back from the grave and had just started to mushroom when the Program was suddenly cancelled, leaving hundreds of Canadians in a precarious position. Since this part of the private sector is recovering, and since the Government has alloted $2.4 billion in the budget under Special Recovery Incentives for Private Investment, will the Government transfer $100 million to the Home Ownership Program and announce a date sometime in May when no more applications will be accepted, or will the Government at least deal with the applications already filed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, this question was answered by the Minister himself on Thursday or Friday and the Government has not changed its policy since then.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SHOW COMPASSION TO APPLICANTS FOR GRANTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Minister did not deal with transferring part of the funds that were already set aside for the recovery. The cancellation of this program will choke off the recovery and it is a betrayal of those who took the Government at its word. When the Minister of Finance said this would happen close to the end of May, it raised the hopes of hundreds of Canadians.

Does the Right Hon. Prime Minister not feel some compassion for those who took the Government at its word and invested their money in putting in footings, taking out mortgages, et cetera? The Right Hon. Prime Minister called for compassion for people in Third World countries. I call for compassion for the people of Canada who took the Government at its word.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member and his Party are also frequently calling for compassion for the taxpayer, but they seem to have no end of suggestions for spending endless amounts of money to deal with difficulties here or there.

The Hon. Member suggests a change of allocation of funds from one area to the other. If we take funds away from an area, he will then complain that we are not giving enough to the unemployed, or to the youth of the country. This is strange coming from a Party who has so often advocated the use of sunset legislation. They know that at some point, Madam Speaker, a program has to come to an end and that the supply of funds is not unlimited. A case cannot be made for continuing every program, no matter how good it is.

I sometimes wish that the Opposition would discover how good our programs are and support them when they are in existence, rather than bemoan their ending and only discovering, when they are ended, how well this Government has legislated.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, when the Government does come up with a good program, it suddenly cancels it. The money is already alloted for recovery in the private sector. This is part of the private sector. We ask that the Prime Minister and the Government not betray the people who took the Government at its word, invested in mortgages, put in the footings, and are now left high and dry. I would ask the Prime Minister, who will provide the announced $3,000 for those who are now liable to lose everything if the $3,000 is not provided? Does the Prime Minister not care about Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the budget provided an additional $355 million to stimulate the housing industry. It also brought in two major changes to the Registered Home Ownership Saving Plan to stimulate home purchases and purchases of designated furnishings and appliances.

Madam Speaker, there are measures in the budget now. There is money being spent to encourage the building of housing. The Hon. Member cannot argue that we do not care for home ownership. The very recovery in that area is an indication that our programs have been working. Once again the Hon. Member is making a plea for the ever continuing and replenishing of funds. That cannot be done without increasing taxes, Madam Speaker.

PLIGHT OF BUILDERS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I have a question on the same subject directed to the Minister of State for Finance, who indicated last Thursday that housing starts were off to a very good start this year, and to quote the Minister:

> We think that the industry is very strong.

I agree that there are encouraging signs of recovery. The great difficulty posed by the $3,000 program is that modest sized builders, those building half a dozen or ten homes, pouring the foundations, are now in a position where, based on the expectation of that eventual home-buyer assistance, they will have a very difficult time moving those houses.

• (1420)

I am sure the Minister will be the first to agree that housing completions are more important to employment than housing starts. Does the Minister have any hope to give to those builders, not those applying for 50 or 100 permits, but those of modest size who have made these starts, poured the foundations, and find themselves in a very vulnerable position insofar as eventually being able to sell those houses is concerned, now that the funds have run out?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, those builders are no doubt comforted by the reduction in interest rates which have been on a trend downward for the last three or four months. In the long run that will probably be more efficient support to the housing industry and all other sectors of the economy. There is a general reduction in interest rates. The other factor that is equally as important if not more important than the $3,000 grant is the security of Canadians who are considering the purchase of homes, knowing that this Government has put money into supporting job creation, supporting the continuation of employment for many people and many industries. Those two factors, with the commitment of billions of dollars, generally should provide the kind of confidence that consumers need to make that kind of purchase.

REQUEST FOR REDISTRIBUTION OF BUILDING PERMITS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I point out to the Minister that many builders have mothballed housing, including six homes in my riding in the last two weeks. Construction has stopped because of the fear of inability to sell eventually. Last Thursday the Minister of Finance indicated they would check on some of the larger builders who applied for 50 and 100 permits under the $3,000 grant program. Can the Minister give some assurance that if the inspectors find that those larger builders do not in fact qualify, there will be a reasonable redistribution of permits among the small builders?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I apologize for being late. I was delayed at the very last second. We are trying to ascertain the size of the problem. Any program which comes to an end has this type of bulge at the very end. It is obvious that we had a rather unexpected increase in housing starts in the last half of April. We are now assessing the problem. We have asked our people not to take more applications. We will come up with some answers to some of the Hon. Member's questions I would expect within the next week or ten days. Meanwhile I want to reassure those who have put in bona fide applications that they will be given every attention possible.

MEDICAL CARE

REQUEST FOR BAN ON USER FEES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will recall that just over a month ago I was urging the Minister of National Health and Welfare to bring in a Canada health act which would address the increasing incidences of user fees as a result of what had happened the night before, when Alberta brought in a new scheme of user fees. The Province of New Brunswick has just moved to introduce user fees for some hospital services, completing the prediction I made at that time, that we would see more of this if the federal Government did not act. When are we going to see some action on medicare?

When are we going to see a real proposal for a Canada health act that will address these problems, rather than simply letting medicare slide away while the federal Government waits for an opinion from the Department of Justice about what the constitutional possibilities are in this area? When are we going to have that opinion rendered by the Department of Justice, and when will we have a concrete suggestion from the Government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not believe the Hon. Member is reflecting the Minister's answer correctly when he talks about waiting for an opinion from the Department of Justice. The Minister has repeatedly in the past talked to the Provinces and intervened with them on this medicare scheme, which is a creation of the federal Government but which cannot be made operative without provincial participation, to persuade the provincial Government as far as possible to interpret the medicare legislation in a way which is desired by all Canadians. She has obviously failed in some cases. She indicated to the House she was considering whatever measures could be taken.

The reason for the delay is not because the constitutional problem is a difficult one generally. It would be to find ways to redress the situation which would not be challengeable in the courts. That is the difficulty. The Hon. Member knows that the federal Government, under its jurisdiction, cannot legislate in certain areas. The delivery of health systems is one. That is why we need the co-operation of the Provinces. The very law setting up medicare states that. We cannot change it unilaterally in any way which would suit our convenience or that of the New Democratic Party.

INQUIRY RESPECTING DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE OPINION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has confirmed rather than denied my interpretation of the events. He is saying that the Department of Justice is trying to figure out what can be done within the Government's legitimate constitutional jurisdiction.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare said to me on March 17 that the Department of Justice was drafting a document. That was over a month and a half ago. When is that document going to be drafted? Also, would the Prime Minister consider having that document placed before the House of Commons before the Minister meets with the provincial health Ministers? The Prime Minister says that the Minister is meeting with the provincial health Ministers. They have not met for 11 months. Last May or June was the last time they met with regard to medicare. That can hardly be called active or intense consultation.

Will the Prime Minister consider tabling a document in this House so that the people of Canada and Members of Parliament concerned about medicare will have a proposal around to which to rally and stimulate public opinion, if indeed the proposal is good enough to deserve that?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can predict that no proposal made by the Government will ever be good enough to rally the support of the New Democratic Party. That is a foregone conclusion. That is why I do not see any advantage in proceeding in the way the Hon. Member says. The legislation in Alberta is only to take effect next fall. The Minister is exercising her responsibility in ensuring that the ways in which we will try to make medicare operate will be the way the Canadian people want. She is exercising her responsibility to prepare that. It would not help at this stage to table legal opinions.

I repeat, the Constitution is quite clear on what the federal Government cannot do. It cannot legislate on the delivery of health systems. If the Hon. Member doubts that, he can consult his own lawyers. We do not have to table a document from the Department of Justice to say that. What we are trying to find is a way which will be accommodating to the Provinces and at the same time respect the Constitution and make medicare operable.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FINANCING ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, we do not want to know what the federal Government cannot do in terms of health delivery. We want to know what the federal Government proposes to do with regard to what it can do. It is not coming forward with that.

My final question has to do with the need the Prime Minister expresses for provincial agreement. I happen to be convinced that we are not going to get the kind of agreement among provincial Conservative Governments that will be an agreement which will preserve the five basic principles of medicare. Will the Prime Minister consider acting, providing it is within the constitutional jurisdiction of the Government, in a way that did not have the agreement of the Provinces? Will he facilitate the acceptability of that action by being willing to go back on the reductions in established programs financing that took place a year ago, and taking back Bill C-150 which imposed six and five on post-secondary payments? How can he expect the Provinces to agree to anything when he is doing this to them?

Madam Speaker: Order.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is confusing two subjects, post-secondary education and medicare. There was no reduction in the funds put forward for medicare. The Hon. Member knows that. I can give the answer as to why he is dragging a red herring around this discussion. He knows there is no solution without some form of respect for the Constitution. He is proposing that we buy off the Provinces by giving them more money. That is not the approach we intend to take.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT—DISTRIBUTION OF WORK

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. The Hon. Member for Longueuil has been widely quoted as saying that the selection of the winning consortium is a purely political decision in the case of the Canadian patrol frigates, and if Scan Marine is not picked, he says there may be a political putsch within the Liberal Party. There are many factors which should govern the decision making but I sincerely hope that such political blackmail will not prevail.

Will the Minister confirm that one of the options put forward by Saint John Shipbuilding in their bid is to build two frigates in the Maritimes, two in the St. Lawrence Shipyards, and two on the West Coast, and this would mean that, for the total contract, the total money spent would be 22 per cent to 24 per cent in the Atlantic region, 38 per cent to 41 per cent in Quebec, 22 per cent to 27 per cent in Ontario, and 15 per cent in the West? Can the Minister confirm that this very fair distribution of work was one of the options in the Saint John shipbuilding bid?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has previously made representations concerning the frigate contract. At the time, I told him that the contractor who would build the six frigates would be awarded the contract on the basis of efficiency, Canadian content and of course, price. Those are the considerations. This is a very strict competition and assessment of the various offers is continuing. We shall be in a position to announce the name of the company that will be awarded the contract by the end of June, as was indicated by the Minister of National Defence early in July of last year. The Hon. Member will have to wait until then to find out what our decision will be. However, I can inform the Hon. Member that this decision will be made on the basis of the criteria I mentioned earlier.

[English]

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I find it strange that the Minister left out one of the criteria which he expressed here last week, that is, that they would pick the best ship. I hope that criterion is still there because it seems to be foreign to the Hon. Member for Longueuil.

ENGINE PROPULSION SYSTEMS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Could the Minister confirm two things—first, that there is no shipyard in the country which has the equipment or personnel to build all six frigates in the time span available in the program? Second, would the Minister confirm or deny that the specifications for the ships called for gas turbine engines for high speed and diesel engines for cruising propulsion, and that Scan's submission did not include the diesel alternative engine because that would have put their costs over the effective limit?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, if the hon. gentleman had paid specific attention to my reply he would have noted that I did indicate that indeed the excellence of the ship was of primary consideration. Indeed, the hon. gentleman will have to wait until the decision is made and announced in order to ask his questions in terms of the various criteria and the weight attributed to them.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND—REPORTED PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH CROWN CORPORATION

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It follows questions asked on Friday concerning the proposal to establish a Crown corporation to administer the $345 million Native Economic Development Fund which was outlined in a Cabinet document which was signed by the Minister.

On February 19 of this year the Minister and two of his Cabinet colleagues met with representatives of the native caucus of the Liberal Party to discuss the formation of a Crown corporation and the appointment of its board of directors. Could the Minister tell the House whose idea it was that the board of directors of this Crown corporation should be made up of native members of the Liberal Party? Was it the idea of the Minister and his colleagues or was it the idea of the native people who were present at that meeting?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first of all, the Hon. Member knows that a lot of the discussed documents are presently before Cabinet. Secondly, I would like to correct something he said. I did not meet with the native Liberal caucus with respect to this document or any other document. Third, Madam Speaker, the Government consulted a substantial number of people because one of our desires in this regard is to help native people help themselves. We want to ensure that this fund announced by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, in his November 1981 budget will produce the desired results.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR NATIVE PEOPLE'S ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question on the same subject is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs. On December 1, 1981, the Minister announced the establishment of a $345 million fund to support economic development for native people which was to be administered by his Department. Now, one and a half years later, it appears that the Cabinet is considering that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce assume the responsibility for all economic development for native people through a Crown corporation whose board of directors are to be card-carrying Liberals. Is the Minister in agreement with this proposal?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, let me tell the Hon. Member, through you, that it was never intended that my Department would administer this fund, because my Department is the Department of Indian Affairs. This is a native economic development fund. It includes non-status Indians, Métis, and, of course, as the Hon. Member knows, any relationship we have with the Métis is through the Secretary of State, for obvious reasons, in terms of the Minister of Indian Affairs not being able to, or being expected to adjudicate equally between these groups, especially because of the status Indians being primarily a federal responsibility. As far as the Native Economic Development Fund is concerned, I believe it is an excellent initiative. I cannot think of a more appropriate place for it to be than with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

INDUSTRY AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

STATUS OF PROGRAM

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Minister recently announced a national industrial development program to provide direct assistance to industry in all areas of Canada. What is the status of ILAP? Will it be continued?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I believe the anniversary date for the ILAP program is sometime in 1984. All the areas designated for ILAP assistance will continue with applications until their anniversary date. Any other decisions with respect to specific sections of ILAP will be taken on or before that anniversary date.

APPLICATION FOR DESIGNATION FROM MIDLAND-PENETANGUISHENE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): I direct a supplementary through you to the Minister, Madam Speaker, just to be very clear with respect to ILAP applications which are presently before the board. I am thinking specifically in terms of Midland-Penetanguishene, which has been before the board, or whatever the application process is, for three months. People in that area have spent thousands of dollars and hundreds of hours of time. They want to know when will that application be reviewed. Will it be reviewed under the current ILAP program or under the new program?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I believe over 1,000 communities are requesting ILAP designations. The new Industrial and Regional Development program will ensure that there will be financial assistance, depending upon regional enrichment for the whole country. Therefore most of the regions, such as the one mentioned by the Hon. Member, Midland-Penetanguishene, once this legislation is passed will be designated for assistance in those categories which were indicated in last weeks press release. I would enlist the co-operation of the House Leader for the Conservative Party for quick passage when that legislation is presented here in the House.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

DESTRUCTION OF WEST TORONTO HERITAGE STATION—POSSIBILITY OF PROSECUTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and it relates to a decision of the Canadian Transport Commission dated April 28, which I quote as follows:

—we are requesting the Attorney General of Canada to institute and prosecute proceedings on behalf of Her Majesty against Canadian Pacific—

And its directors, officiers, agents and contractors, regarding the destruction of a railway station in Wests Toronto. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice who, I believe, is the Attorney General of Canada, if he intends to lay charges as recommended by the CTC and whether or not prosecution will be pursued by himself and/or his provincial counterpart.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I have seen that recommendation and it is under consideration. The Hon. Member will appreciate that it is not possible for us just to accept at face value, without further consideration, such matters as whether the Railway Act would sustain such a prosecution, and so on. The matter must be looked at very carefully, and in due course I will be able to announce a decision after receiving advice from the Department.

REQUEST THAT RAILWAY BE INSTRUCTED TO RECONSTRUCT STATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, the decision was made by the CTC under the Railway Act, and that is a court of proceedings. Since it is obvious the CPR is running the Government rather than the Government running the CPR, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport, who tells us he is going to get guarantees of railway performance with his Crow rate destruction, if he can tell us whether he will use the powers he has under the Railway Act to direct CPR to reconstruct the West Toronto station to its original state, and whether or not he will insist that the Minister of Justice lay charges and prosecute CP for the destruction of that station, if for no other reason than to restore the integrity of the CTC, the Railway Act, and the Minister?

• (1440)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as the Minister of Justice has just said, the CTC has asked the Department of Justice to take proceedings in this matter. I understand also that the CPR has appealed the decision.

MARITIME FREIGHT RATES ACT—REVIEW TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport. It may be most appropriate in that, according to some rumours, the Crow legislation is going to be introduced today. My question concerns the same type of symbolic legislation in Atlantic Canada, that is, the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the private study the Minister commissioned to review that Act. Has the Minister received the protest of four provincial Ministers of Transportation about the narrow terms of reference, very narrow timeframe, and lack of public input to this study, and what does he intend to do about this?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my information is quite different. I understand two Atlantic Provinces have agreed, one has remained neutral, and one has disagreed. Be that as it may, my hon. friend is so busy in other files these days that he may not be fully acquainted with the fact that we now have memoranda of understanding with all four Atlantic Provinces under which, among other things, we try to do joint planning. The studies and review of the nature indicated by my hon. friend are the type of thing we try to do together, namely, attempt to spend as well as we can the hundreds of millions of dollars in support the federal Government gives to the Atlantic Provinces in matters of transportation. This is so normal and so desirable that I am sure my hon. friend would not want to disagree with that, because it is in the best interests of the Atlantic Provinces.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I think the Minister has been pretty busy too these last few days and weeks on many matters from air to land and Crow to sea. I think if the Minister checks his files he will find my information is correct. I understand that the 1982 agreement for upgrading secondary roads in Atlantic Canada has a proviso for joint consultation and planning, but the Minister's decision was unilateral.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC CONSULTATION

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, to allay the fears in Atlantic Canada of businesses which are just on the margin and will not be able to succeed if that subsidy, internal and external, is taken away or reduced, will the Minister assure the House and Atlantic Canada that, regardless of the consulting firm's recommendations, there will be public input from those affected before any further action is taken?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will be exceptionally short on that. Yes, there will be consultation at least with the Governments of the Atlantic Provinces.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

STATUS OF RESERVES

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence if I can interrupt his briefing of the other Minister on the Frigate Program. Madam Speaker, the reserve forces in Canada are in very desperate shape for both equipment and manpower. What is the Minister doing to improve the situation?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member has the same information as I have. During the last couple of years we have in fact increased the budget for the reserves. We are giving them new equipment and we have integrated many reserve units with some of the operations of the regular force. I do not remember which western media were referring to this matter last week, but I think they were saying that they were very glad about what was being done with the reserves and that there was a great improvement over the last two or three years. I have that from some of our reserve officials, too, who are very happy with what we are doing. We could do more and more will be done, but at the moment I think there has been great improvement.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, hardly anything has been done for them, so they are most grateful for anything given to them. The spirit is high in the reserves but only because of the people involved, not because of their equipment or because of what the Government is doing for them.

MOBILIZATION PLAN

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, for two years the Minister has promised a mobilization plan for the reserves. Where is it? When are we going to see it?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I am very glad that the Hon. Member admits that the morale and spirit in the reserves are very great. I realized that when I visited some of the reserve units recently. As far as the mobilization plan is concerned, it is always developing. It is therefore more or less a fact at the moment that we have one. Obviously there are many issues in the mobilization program that we cannot make public, because you do not make all the information on these things public. But if the Hon. Member or some others are interested, I can ask my Department to give them a briefing on what we do in case of a general mobilization.

FINANCE

STUDY OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development who will recall that at some time he had something to say about capital gains tax, and we now have before the House a related proposal under the ISIP Program. I was wondering if he would be doing a study in his Department on this Program and will he be referring it to a Standing Committee or a Special Committee of this House so that we can look into the whole question of how inflation has affected capital gains and investment potential? It would seem to me that would be a matter of economic development.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, obviously this is a question which should be directed to the Minister of Finance. Perhaps the Minister of State for Finance would like to comment on it. All I can say is that I thought the Hon. Member would certainly welcome that initiative. Bear in mind that it grew out of a great deal of public discussion, and consideration by prominent members of the community most concerned with the issue of capital gains. I would hope he would applaud this approach to the development of policy.

POSITION OF INVESTORS IN SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I am not criticizing the policy at all. I was wondering if the Minister felt the same type of thing should be done for other people who invest in small business which are not listed on the stock exchange and cannot take advantage of the scheme. He is Minister of State for Economic Development. Why would he not recommend to his Cabinet colleagues that some kind of equity be available to those who would create new jobs and businesses rather than just for the people who are fortunate enough to have their stocks listed, or can have them listed?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the representations made between Ministers are of course confidential. But I can assure you that the Minister of Finance was very attentive, not only to representations from his colleagues but from members of the business community, the labour movement and various construction associations and other trade groups right across the country when he was in the course of preparing his budget. I think Hon. Members would have to recognize that probably at no time in the history of budget preparation has there been such extensive representations. I am sure the Hon. Member would have had his own opportunities to make representations to the Minister of Finance had he elected to do so. Now, I do not know whether he has or has not, but I have made my representations.

AIR TRANSPORT

PACIFIC WESTERN AIRLINES—SERVICE TO WESTERN MANITOBA

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Since the Pacific Western Airlines licence to service Brandon, Manitoba, and consequently western Manitoba, is being looked at at the present time by the CTC, and since that service has been excellent and most, if not all, the people in western Manitoba are very happy with it, I am wondering whether or not the Minister could instruct the CTC to give the PWA application very positive consideration and also clear up the uncertainties surrounding this vital service at the present time.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there are so many of these decisions that I can hardly keep track of all of them, but I stick my neck out. I think the CTC has already accepted the extension.

An Hon. Member: They have.

Mr. Pepin: They have? To say something new, I think the Department is also making arrangements to make some improvements to the airport at Brandon.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I was not exactly clear on the Minister's answer. If they have made their decision and it is positive, fine. If a decision has not been made, would the Minister ensure that a decision is made as soon as possible? Will it or can it be announced so that the public will know about it? Certainly the public does not know at this point in time. Could he also ensure, and this is a plea from myself, that the decision is in favour of PWA?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am having a problem, because my hon. friend on the other side, exceptionally, seems to be more aware of the decision than I am. I knew the decision had been made, but I was not sure that it had been announced, which is always the problem when one is a Minister. It is one of those things.

On the subject, it was extended because the service has been very good, and it has been well used. Changes or improvements to the airport had not yet been made, in waiting for the decision of the CTC to extend the licence. Now that this has been made, the expenditures, and I cannot remember how many dollars are involved, will be made. I will communicate the full information to my friend as soon as possible.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

INQUIRY RESPECTING CONTRIBUTIONS TO FOREIGN POLITICIANS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister feel that it is appropriate for Crown corporations or their agents to offer campaign contributions to politicians or aspiring politicians in other parts of the world, with whom they are attempting to do business?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot answer that question . I do not know what the Hon. Member is talking about. There may be some circumstances where it is appropriate and others where it is not appropriate.

An Hon. Member: Answer in principle.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes. I am not the Pope.

Mr. Nielsen: Really?

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot say, with absolute finality, what is right or wrong.

Mr. Nowlan: Even he is having some trouble.

Mr. Deans: That is the guideline answer, I suppose.

CANADAIR—REPORTED OFFER OF BRIBE TO ALASKAN SENATOR

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I wonder if the Prime Minister recalls my asking him to investigate the circumstances surrounding Canadair's involvement with the State Senator from Alaska, Senator Hohman, who was convicted of agreeing to accept a bribe. Why did the RCMP not investigate Canadair's involvement in that matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, my recollection is that Canadair issued a statement that the person involved was no longer an employee of Canadair, that he was acting as an agent, and that he did certain things as an agent. That is my recollection of Canadair's declaration, Madam Speaker.

INDUSTRY

DYNATEK PROJECT AT SIDNEY AIRPORT, B.C.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional, Economic Expansion. Could he give me an update on the negotiations with Dynatek at Sidney International Airport, elaborating on the $16 million part interest-free loan and part grant which was in the process at one particular stage? Where does the matter stand at the present time?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, at the request of the Province and the company, the Government of Canada made a substantial offer to Dynatek. Obviously we think it is in the best long-term interests, of the microelectronics industry, and, in particular, to help diversify the economic base of western Canada. There were some conditions, attached to the offer with respect to equity infusions, from the private sector. To my knowledge, these conditions have not yet been met.

MANAGEMENT COMPETENCY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I assume, and this is in the form of a question, that the Minister satisfied himself before making this "substantial offer", as he said, as to the competence of the managerial staff to do what they said they would set out to do, namely, set in place a robotized system for preparing the chips.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, it has been several months since I have reviewed the dossier, but if I recall correctly, approximately 700 people were to be hired. Included were some very competent managers who had expertise in the field.

However, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that it was the Province of British Columbia which stated that it would not decide on the application until Ottawa did. If I recall correctly, the Minister of Science and Technology for the Province of British Columbia said, "We want to see what Ottawa is prepared to do first". We did act, I think, in a very responsible way. I believe that the Province of British Columbia has since followed up on our initial offer.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES PROTEST OVER FLAG BURNING INCIDENT—CANADIAN RESPONSE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Prime Minister will recall that a very strong note of protest was received by the Canadian Government from the Government of the United States relating to anti-American demonstrations which occurred in the city of Winnipeg, in which two members and others of the caucus of the NDP Government of that Province were involved, and where a United States flag was burned at the Consulate. Part of the note was in these terms:

> The United States must protest strongly the participation of Ministers of the Government of Manitoba in this event which clearly gave it an official character and would appreciate assurances that such official support of hostile demonstrations will not be repeated.

I would like to ask three brief questions with respect to the note. Has the Canadian Government received an apology from the Government of Manitoba, which has been transmitted to the United States? If that has not been the case, has the Canadian Government apologized to the United States Government on behalf of the Government of Manitoba—

An Hon. Member: Better not!

Mr. Nielsen: I hear the voice of an NDP Member saying that the Canadian Government had better not do that. The last question of the series is: will the Government table a copy of any note which was sent by Canada to the United States in response to the original note?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Government received the note from the United States and we have replied. As far as apologizing for the Government of Manitoba or the suggestion that the Government of Manitoba apologized, I do not think there is any objection to tabling the contents of the note, the answer to the United States, in the House and the Hon. Leader of the Opposition will be able to see and judge for himself, and not try to exaggerate the impact of this occurrence and treat it as something that is best forgotten.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I am glad that there is a willingness to table Canada's response to the note of the United States.

REQUEST THAT PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT RESPONSE BE TABLED

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Government also table the apology of which the Parliamentary Secretary spoke, which came from the Government of Manitoba to the Government of Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I did not say the Government of Manitoba apologized. I think the contents of the note will be self-explanatory.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SALMON STOCK—INTERCEPTION BY DANISH FISHERMEN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I wish to direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, because I know that he does have an interest in catching salmon.

Mr. Nowlan: Or any kind of fish.

Mr. Crouse: In light of the statement which has been made by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans that the harvest of Atlantic salmon will be reduced this year in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland, but not in Quebec, I would like to know what steps the Government is taking to increase surveillance over poachers in the entire Atlantic salmon industry, including the catch taken by the Danes off Greenland, whose interception of Canadian salmon may well be the main cause of the decline in Atlantic salmon stocks. Will the Right Hon. Prime Minister take up this question, which is of very great importance to Atlantic Canada, with the Danish ambassador?

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member opposite. I want to assure him, on behalf of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, that the Minister and the Government are placing great emphasis on revitalizing, conserving and rebuilding the Atlantic salmon stocks. Indeed, we are concerned about the interception problem and it has been taken into consideration.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that any reduction in quota, which may be experienced anywhere in Atlantic Canada, of salmon or other stock, is a result of the best biological and objective evidence we can be given by our officials, and that the Minister is, as is the Hon. Member, very interested in preserving both the commercial and the sport side of the salmon fishery in Atlantic Canada.

REQUEST FOR STOCK ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his answer. Unfortunately, he did not answer the question. My question was directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and I was asking him if he would take up the matter of interception of our Canadian salmon by the Danes off the coast of Greenland. This is a matter that does come under External Affairs and concerns the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

In light of the obvious decline of salmon stocks in Atlantic Canada, when may we anticipate from the Prime Minister's Government a truly meaningful Atlantic salmon enhancement program being established?

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I want to assure the hon. gentleman opposite that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and indeed the Government, take very seriously our relationships with respect to other nations and fishing treaties, whether they concern salmon off the West Coast, salmon off the East Coast, scallop off the United States, or indeed cod-stocks as far as the EC is concerned.

The Hon. Member opposite, being a member of the Fisheries Committee, knows that the Government of Canada has recently instituted a policy, particularly in fisheries, which says that we will treat our brother and sister nations according to how they respect the treaties we have signed with regard to various stocks. He knows that we have taken very strong and serious stands, in particular with the EEC for example.

Again, I would say that it would be much too simplistic to say that the Danes are the cause and the sole reason for the depletion of the salmon stock in Atlantic Canada. We have to get our own house in order. We are beginning to do that. With the support of the Hon. Member opposite we will see positive results in the next few years.

Introduction of Bills

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR ALBERTA

Madam Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. Members for Edmonton-Strathcona, Red Deer, Calgary West, Peace River, Edmonton North, Lethbridge-Foothills, Bow River, Medicine Hat, Crowfoot and Simcoe North has been filed with me pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C., 1970, to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Alberta.

If the House agrees, I would suggest that we follow past practice and print the text of the objections as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

AN ACT TO FACILITATE THE TRANSPORTATION, SHIPPING AND HANDLING OF WESTERN GRAIN AND TO AMEND CERTAIN ACTS IN CONSEQUENCE THEREOF

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce a Bill to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of Western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favor of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the Members.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Madam Speaker: I have been advised that the Members are prepared to vote tomorrow morning. I now suspend the sitting until nine o'clock tomorrow morning, at which time the bells will start ringing again. They will be interrupted tonight.

Mr. Prud'homme: At what time?

Madam Speaker: At nine o'clock the bells will begin to ring.

At 10.40 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 9 a.m. Tuesday, May 10, Mr. Francis in the chair.

[And the division bells having stopped at 10.45 a.m.]

The House divided on the Motion (Mr. Pepin), which was agreed to on the following division:

Madam Speaker: The motion is carried.

It being past six o'clock on May 9, I now leave the Chair until tomorrow.

At 10.58 a.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 10, 1983

The House met at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed from Thursday, May 5, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have in my desk here a number of speeches; one on Bill C-151 is among them. There is also a very interesting speech on taxation as it relates to mining that I had hoped I would have been able to give yesterday, but because of the antics of the New Democratic Party, that was not to be. I look forward to delivering that dissertation in the very near future. We in this Party feel the plight of the many thousands of unemployed mine workers deserves debate in this House, and we were shocked to see the antics of the NDP yesterday.

In Bill C-151, the new borrowing authority Bill, an amount of $14.7 billion is requested by the Government. This is the item of debate today.

An Hon. Member: Let them eat crow.

Mr. Nickerson: I will read out the number of borrowing Bills which have gone through in the present session of Parliament: Bill C-30, Bill C-59, Bill C-111, Bill C-125, Bill C-128, Bill C-143, and now we have Bill C-151. If I ask what connected these Bills, what they all had in common, the answer would be pretty obvious. They are all attempts by the Government of Canada to seek the authority of Parliament to borrow yet more and more funds. In one fiscal year alone, in 1982 to 1983, it came back no less than four times to Parliament to borrow yet more money.

What is the financial policy of the Government? It seems to be that whatever it has in the kitty or in the public treasury is just thrown to the four winds. It has just thrown it away, dissipated it. The Government knows it can come back to Parliament for more borrowing authority to borrow more money, and away we go on the same treadmill. Is that the financial policy of the Government, that it just does not care or has no sense of fiscal or financial responsibility? It just comes back to Parliament time after time after time. Or is there a different reason? Is it just incompetence and poor management on its part? Is it unable to project the financial requirements of the Government of Canada? I would not have thought so. We have a great deal of expertise within the Department of Finance. We should have people there who can add, subtract and project what will be the amount of money the Government intends to spend over the next six months or over the next year. Surely they can project what will be the revenues of Government over a specific period. By simple arithmetic they can determine what amount of borrowing will be necessary.

This does not seem to take place. Perhaps one reason is the secret projections which are undoubtedly made that show the financial requirements of the Government to be so great and so vast that it dare not come to Parliament and ask for the full amount of money it knows it will need for a certain fiscal period because it would be too much for a public battered with such requests. So it comes back bit by bit. It asks for $5 billion, it comes back and asks for $10 billion, then it comes back and asks for another $15 billion, and on and on it goes.

Let us do a little simple arithmetic and find out what are the financial requirements of the Government of Canada at the present time. Its last borrowing Bill, Bill C-143, was divided into two parts—a $5 billion borrowing authority for 1982-83 and a $14 billion authority for 1983-84. This gave the Government a $2 billion carryover from one fiscal period to the next and $14 billion for the 1983-84 fiscal year. At present, without the passage of Bill C-151, the total borrowing authority on the books amounts to $16 billion.

If we look at the budget figures presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in conjunction with his budget on April 19, we find that the financial requirement there is some $26.7 billion. If you subtract from that the $16 billion of borrowing authority you end up with an actually needed requirement of some $10.7 billion, judging from the Government's own figures. That is the amount of money the Government will require to borrow during the current fiscal year. Why, then, when we look at Bill C-151, do we find the figure of $14.7 billion, a nice round $4 billion more than is actually required?

I have no hesitation in telling you, Sir, that had the Government come forward with the Bill to borrow the $10.7 billion, we on this side, knowing that there is no way we can turn the clock back, would have been prepared to grant that authority reasonably expeditiously. Why are we as Parliamentarians and representatives of the people of Canada being asked to vote the Government what amounts to a $4 billion slush fund, which is what it is going to be?

The strategy becomes clear. We heard in the presentation of the Minister of Finance his plan to come forward with some 100 or 200 capital projects, but he would give no details. What we have in the offing is one of the greatest pork barrel operations in the history of the Liberal Party. You know, Sir, as well as I do that they have had some in their time, but this is going to be the greatest. This is going to be a $4 billion pork barrel operation. We are going to be faced with the spectacle of Liberal Cabinet Ministers traversing the country from one end to the other, shovelling out dollars in an attempt to buy votes for the next election. It is an act of desperation.

We can already see this happening. As an illustration, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), who was here in his place a few minutes ago, a week or so ago took the Government JetStar, flew to Whitehorse and chartered a plane from there, at great expense to the taxpayer, to go to Faro to make an announcement. It was not necessary for him to go there; he has offices in Whitehorse. The announcement could have been made by officials in his Department. It was an exercise in publicity. That is what the Liberals are after; they are trying to get political credit for something of which they are not worthy.

Just yesterday the same Minister was in Port Dover, Ontario. Even if it can be said that he had a legitimate reason to go to the Yukon, being the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, he had no real business whatsoever going to Port Dover to announce a $2 million project, financed presumably out of the illicit proceeds of this Bill. He made the announcement in the riding of Haldimand-Norfolk for strictly political reasons. Unprecedented.

I understand the same Minister is today on a similar pork barrel trip to the riding of Western Arctic where he is going to make some announcements which just could as easily be made in Ottawa.

Let us look at the use of some of those funds that the Government allocated in order to buy votes for the Liberal Party. Look at the water bomber fiasco. We are going to buy a bunch of those things at $6 million each. Two will go to my riding. I know the forestry people there pretty well and they have never asked for a water bomber of that type. They have a pretty good system now. The fire season is only two or three months a year and they can hire on contract Canadian firms with expertise in water bombing. At other times of the year these bombers can find employment in other places in Canada or South America. They did not ask for Canadair water bombers; they were forced on them. This is just a mechanism to show that the Government is spending money but it has no real reason attached to it. There is a good deal of doubt about the efficiency of that type of aircraft operating in those areas. We do not know what they are going to be doing for the balance of the year; they will probably be sitting on a runway doing absolutely nothing for nine months of the year.

The $14.7 billion that the Government wants to borrow under the authority of Bill C-151 is by no means the total amount it will seek from the capital markets of Canada or abroad. There will also be considerable borrowing by Crown corporations and we do not know what that will be. We might be able to forecast the increased interest rates that businessmen and home owners will have to pay as a result of the Government borrowing this $14.7 billion, but we do not know the requirements of the 300 or 400 federal Crown corporations.

I want to emphasize the point made to Parliament by the Auditor General, who suggested it was high time that Parliament regained some control over the financial affairs of Crown corporations. At the present time they operate in the dark and are hidden from public scrutiny.

When we look at the projections made in the statement of the Minister of Finance on April 19, we find one reason why the Government may be asking for $14 billion more. A number of people, including myself, have suggested that the revenue figures included in the budget are suspect. They may be a little higher than the Minister can really expect. They are predicated on an increase in the Gross National Product that may or may not take place this year. Even if it does, there is always a lag between an increase in the general wealth of the country and the increase that comes as a result of that in the form of public revenue. Profits will not be recorded for some time and taxes payable with respect to those profits, especially because of the carry over provisions of the new budget, will not catch up for some time.

We also predict that there will be high unemployment in Canada for some time to come which will necessitate payment of Unemployment Insurance benefits in excess of those covered by the premiums collected. There will also be a decline in revenues from income tax from those people who are not employed.

I suspect the figures contained in the speech were put there to make the Government look good when it knows that it is being overoptimistic and will have to use some of that $4 billion excess borrowing authority to make up for the loss in revenue which will be lower than was predicted in the budget documents.

I want to take a quick look into the financial future of Canada, Mr. Speaker, our future over the four-year term as expressed by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech. Using his figures the projected cumulative deficit in the next four years will be $112 billion. The interest payable over that term will be not less than $77 billion. This, Sir, is what the Minister of Finance predicts or promises and, evidently, it is his most optimistic scenario. But what will happen if times are not quite as good as he imagines? This has happened several times in the past when Government has come in with projections which have later been found not to be reliable.

It is, Sir, a bleak financial future indeed for Canada which we are promised with this type of irresponsible fiscal financial policy. If one looks at the series of budget statements over the years, going back more or less over the lifetime of the present Government, one finds that in each statement we are told the Government is going to run a bigger deficit than the year before. It is going to be $5 billion or $10 billion more, or whatever, but after that it is going to start coming down. The deficit will decrease and we will have our affairs in order. That is what Government says at point one. One year later, at point two, it says exactly the same thing. The deficit has not started to come down; it has gone up even more. It is like the drug addict who says: "One more last hit and I will quit". But it never happens.

I believe the only solution to the problems of excessive borrowing and excessive deficits is to quit now. It can be done. We started in 1979 with the Crosbie budget which at that time showed the way. We installed at that time the envelope system which makes it easier than before to adopt policies of financial restraint. We have to cut our unnecessary expenditures now. That is always difficult to do for politicians. I know, but we have to take the bull by the horns and start cutting out some of the unnecessary expenditures. It is also important to undertake measures which will increase the wealth of this nation and thereby increase the public revenues. I believe that is the key to solving our financial problems. We must adopt policies which will allow people to have confidence in Canada, to invest in Canada, thereby creating jobs and increasing the public revenues.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the public of Canada has given up hope and lost confidence in the present Liberal Government and I look forward to the period following the next election when we on this side will be in a position to adopt those policies which are designed to increase confidence in this nation and to put its financial affairs in order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments? Debate.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I listened with interest to the previous speaker. I agree with many of the points which he raised today. I agree that we find ourselves today at the crossroads, at a turning point in Canadian history, Mr. Speaker.

• (1125)

The Government has once again brought before this House a Bill, namely C-151, for authority to borrow $14.7 billion to assist in the financing of the Government's affairs for this particular fiscal year. There is a mystery in this particular request because the Government asks for $4 billion more than it requires. This is not a claim by a Member of the Opposition; the Government, in its own fiscal requirements as laid out in the Estimates and as articulated in the House of Commons on a number of occasions, is now asking for a sum of $4 billion more than it requires. What kind of a signal, Mr. Speaker, does that send out to the people of Canada?

Let us describe for a moment or two the plight faced today by a typical Canadian citizen, whether working in a bank, developing a farm or a ranch, whether a fisherman, a logger or factory worker. The typical Canadian today, Mr. Speaker, is struggling to survive. He or she is worried about the future, particularly about the future for their children and grandchildren. Why? Because there is no clear picture of what lies ahead in this country even for the next year or two.

We read with interest that a number of agencies have attempted to predict the economic future of our country. They are only predicting a number of months in advance; that is all they are prepared to do considering the state of our economy and our financial world. Some of these houses, such as Midland Doherty, are suggesting that there is some reason for optimism over the next number of months, but they are unable to see what is going to happen in 1984 and 1985 with any clarity. Will this slow beginning of a recovery be maintained over the next number of years? That is the question they are asking and that is certainly the question many Canadians are asking themselves today. In other words, what does the future of this country hold for them and their children? There is in our country today an element of fear based on the uncertainty which exists in this country.

I believe that what frustrates people, Mr. Speaker, is not that there is a sense of insecurity, an element of fear; what frustrates people is that there is no need for this. We are not a developing country in the traditional definition of that term. We are not upset by political instability as are many of the military dictatorships around the world. We are not torn to pieces through various racial or religious differences. By almost any definition we are one of the wealthiest countries in the world in terms of natural and human resources and available capital. The fact is that we do not have most of the problems faced by other countries around the world today. We are not suffering from internal strife or violent political upheaval.

We have in this country, Mr. Speaker, more advantages than any other country in the world, yet we are falling on our face. That is what frustrates the people of this country. They do not understand why it is that with all of these advantages we cannot develop in any particular direction. We do not have a Government which is providing any particular leadership.

Mr. Stevens: They went too socialist; that is their problem.

Mr. Riis: My friend the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) suggests that the Government has gone too socialist. What we have is a Government which has no vision of the future of this country.

• (1130)

Mr. Stevens: That's all part of socialism.

Mr. Riis: It is not prepared to provide any leadership, which a federal Government ought to be providing. It is simply allowing the regions of this country to blunder on, telling them just to go ahead as best they can, without any particular direction, just building on the resources, strength and riches which we have all come to appreciate. In these times that is no longer good enough.

I want to comment on a couple of sectors of our economy which, by and large, have been overlooked in the last number of weeks. I listened with interest when the budget was brought down, when many business groups said they were very pleased with it. It was said that this was a probusiness budget which would assist the business community of Canada. I listened as Members of the Government rose in their seats here and in other forums and indicated that this budget would assist business across our country.

What has become clear, now that the smoke has cleared from the budget, is that the Government included very little to assist small-sized and medium-sized businesses in this country. I will admit that there are certainly some features in the past budget which successful corporations, those doing exceptionally well these days, those with positive profit and loss statements, find to be very attractive. However, for a typical medium-sized or small-sized business operating in Canada today, which is struggling to survive, simply to maintain the status quo, the budget contains virtually nothing which will be of assistance.

I believe that the business community of Canada today is just waking up to the fact that it has been used as a fall guy. Those in the business community were called upon to support a budget to create a positive response across the country, and they did that. They now realize that they were conned and used, and that in fact the small entrepreneurs, the small businesses and the medium-sized businesses in Canada are no better off today as a result of the budget than they were earlier.

That is a sad comment, because if there was one fact that the House of Commons recognized over the last number of months, it was that the answer to our problems in Canada will not be provided by the large corporations because if their massive bureaucracy and their inability to move quickly to take advantage of these changing economic times.

What has become clear over the last number of months is that our economy is in a state of transition. Our economy fell down over the last two and one half years, but as it begins to rebound in different places a new economy of Canada is emerging. The firms which will be able to take advantage of the new and changing world are not the large, traditional corporations but, rather, the small-sized and medium-sized businesses. They are the organizations which are able to move quickly. They are able to dodge and twist and take advantage of the new technologies and new marketing programs. They are able to take advantage of new sources of capital and are able to risk moving very quickly into new areas in response to the changing economy of our country.

This is the group of firms which will be providing the jobs for Canadians in the future. These are the firms which will be providing the real research and development that we need. These are the firms which will be developing the locally based economies which are sensitive not only to the regions of Canada but also to the neighbourhoods of Canada. It is the small business community which is now best able to reflect the aspirations of Canadians as they become localized into their own communities and their own subregions of Canada. The budget contains nothing for those particular firms. It contains nothing for the individual who wishes to launch a small business to take advantage of a local resource or to cater to a local market.

One must wonder what it is that Hon. Members of the Government are using for their policy making. What sources of information are they using for their policies, for their programs, for the positions which they take within the budget framework? There has been no suggestion in anything I have read nor from any group to which I have spoken that the route to go is to cater to the large corporations and, by and large, ignore the small business sector. It has been quite the contrary. The dynamic business community of Canada in the future will be the small-sized and medium-sized businesses. Yet those are the sectors which have been overlooked in the budget.

In considering Bill C-151, asking authority for $14.7 billion of further borrowing, the other question which comes to mind is: What will the extra $4 billion be used for? What becomes very clear is that we are moving into a pre-election time. It is to the Government's advantage to have a contingency fund, a slush fund which can be drawn upon for buying votes from the Canadian Public. I hate even to suggest that that is something which the Government may be contemplating; but again, until we hear the Government clearly explain why it has requested an extra $4 billion slush fund, I think we on this side of the House must assume the worst. We must assume that the Government will be using $4 billion of taxpayers' money to buy votes in selected constituencies across the country.

Certain constituencies may wish sports or riding arenas, swimming pools, youth centres, halfway houses, ports, docks, marinas and the like. There will be funds for the Government to use in an effort to buy favours in those particular constituencies, either to shore up existing Liberal Members or in the hope of pulling the Liberal vote from existing Conservative or New Democratic Party constituencies.

I would ask Members of the Liberal Party, as they rise to debate the borrowing authority, to explain why it is the Government must borrow an extra $4 billion beyond its fiscal requirements. Explain that request to the people of Canada who are having a difficult time simply meeting their basic needs today. The people of Canada are surely not going out and borrowing extra money for contingency funds. They will be quite satisfied simply to borrow what they possibly can, considering the way the banks have been responding in the last number of months.

I want to propose two elements in the borrowing authority debate which have come to my attention over the last number of months and which I think should be placed on the record. They involve a certain kind of behaviour on the part of Canadian chartered banks which I think we ought to examine carefully. I want to qualify my remarks by first saying that I do not believe these are banking policies. I suspect that if senior members of the banking establishment in Canada knew that those practice were going on, they would stop them immediately.

As I have travelled across the country and spoken to people about their banking problems, I would say that two very insidious types of behaviour have come to my attention. The first is that many small businesses end up paying an extra amount for the money that they are borrowing today. This does not relate to excessive interest rate charges, which are beyond their control since they are unable to obtain any assistance under the Small Business Development Bond. I am talking about the small business person who, in order to obtain a loan for $100,000, for example, will have to borrow $110,000 and pay back to the bank the equivalent of borrowing $110,000 for the $100,000. In other words, there is a bonus clause for the bank built into the loan which is, in a sense, a rake-off from the top of the amount the small business person is attempting to borrow.

An even more disturbing fact I have learned from the people I have talked to in the last two or three months is that in order to have a loans officer consider their application, they have had to provide that individual with a ticket to Las Vegas or a two-week holiday for the individual and his or her spouse to Hawaii or the Caribbean. In other words, some Canadians are beginning to behave in a way for which we have criticized people in other countries for taking a bribe or a rake-off. This has become a way of life for many small businesses in Canada and I think it must be exposed. We must expose incidents when small businesses are asked not only to provide a gift to the loans officers but to pay for a bonus clause on their loan above and beyond what they requested. As I said in my example, if many small businesses in this country today want to borrow $100,000 they have to borrow $110,000 while receiving only $100,000 for that $110,000 loan. This situation is becoming relatively frequent in the borrowing practices in our country.

There are many examples that could be cited today of the Government's lack of direction or policy, such as in agriculture, tourism, the small business sector, fishing, manufacturing and even in the high-tech industries. What is the Government's policy in terms of high technology? What industries is it particularly interested in encouraging in the high-tech areas? There are many unanswered questions and they are the result of a lack of direction on the part of the Government. They are the result of a Government providing no leadership to a country that is desperately in search of strong leadership to show where the country is headed.

When one travels across Canada today and asks people in rural villages, in cities and metropolitan areas where the Government is taking the country and what path it is following in terms of our economy, they cannot respond intelligently because no direction is being provided. The Government of Canada has set aside its responsibility of providing leadership and has decided instead simply to buy off Canadians. While I hesitate to use that particular term, one can see how money is being spent today where certain regions of Canada are being catered to and certain parts of our country are receiving support and encouragement simply in a shoring up effort for their economy while there is no direction or leadership for the country as a whole.

In closing, perhaps it is time to say that in the pre-election period, as the Government recognizes that it has to pull off a miracle if it is not to be replaced, perhaps it will start providing some leadership to the country. If it does not, the people of Canada will ask the Government to step aside and permit a Party that has a vision of this country and an idea of what this country could be to be given that opportunity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions and comments? Debate.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, for the seventh time this session we are debating a borrowing Bill. That fact, along with the budget mania that we have experienced over the last 18 months, speaks volumes for how inept and incompetent this Government really has become. There is no longer any purpose, as the previous Hon. Member just said, to be found on the Government benches; nor is there any direction or leadership. The Members across the floor simply show up and vote, as we just witnessed today, without ever wondering or questioning the intertia in their own Government's front benches.

Today the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is looking for an additional $14.7 billion. The Minister claims that this is a reasonable request. Let us look at the record. Eleven months ago the Minister wanted $6.6 billion; nine months ago he wanted $11 billion; six months ago he only wanted $4 billion and just two months ago he wanted $19 billion. In less than 12 months, including today's request, the Minister of Finance will have asked this Parliament to approve $55.3 billion in borrowing authority.

This is only one side of the story. The other side is made up of four budgets that have created the uncertainty and demonstrated the Government's lack of leadership, direction and clearly its incompetence.

The June, 1982 budget tore up the foundations of the November, 1981 budget; the October, 1982 budget did the same with respect to that June budget; and the budget in April, 1983 threw away the October, 1982 budget. The only consistent theme that ran through all of those budgets was the one item, "Borrow, borrow and continue to borrow".

We in the Opposition do not have the numbers to prevent the Government from borrowing that additional sum of money or to prevent it from taking us down the road to a debtor's prison. What we can do and what becomes obligatory for us to do as Members of Parliament is to point out to Canadians the impact that these borrowing bills will have on Canadians across the country and the reasons they have come about. Canadians will certainly have the numbers in the next election to put a halt to this fiscal irresponsibility and disaster.

Bill C-151, the legislation before us today, seeks borrowing authority of $14.7 billion. This is in addition to the $16 billion that the Government presently has in borrowing authority. The Government will be able to have a borrowing authority total of $30 billion during this fiscal year. But what has the Minister of Finance said as to his requirements? He has pointed out that all the Government will require is to borrow $26.7 billion during this fiscal year.

Let us re-examine those numbers because they do not add up. If according to the Minister of Finance the Government needs $26.7 billion, and it already has a borrowing authority of $16 billion, it might only need an additional $10.7 billion. But that is not what this borrowing Bill is requesting: the Government wants $14.7 billion. That is $4 billion more than is required, according to the Minister of Finance, and is a cushion. For what? For Liberal pork-barrelling. In other words, the Government is looking for a $4 billion slush fund to be used at its discretion as we approach an election year.

That amount, $4 billion, the excess over what the Minister of Finance states he requires, will allow the Government to spend $400 on every taxpayer in Canada. As most taxpayers are voters we might be looking at about ten million votes. It is the ultimate absurdity to spend the taxpayers' own money to buy their votes. Having already squandered the taxpayers' money, the Government now proposes to borrow more money to get their votes and will let future generations pay the bill.

I doubt that ploy or scam will work any longer. Most Members of Parliament send reports home giving our constituency offices a bird's eye view of what happens on the Hill. In the last report I pointed out that the gross national debt will likely exceed $200 billion by the end of 1984. It is already in the neighbourhood of $160 billion and is one of the highest per capita national debts in the western world. The response of my constituents was immediate and indignant. Constituent after constituent wrote to me asking how such a financial burden could get out of hand. They wanted further explanations. A number of constituents pointed out that it was time the party came to an end. They said surely by now the party must be over. I want to extend the use of the word "party" to include the Liberal Party.

The Government contends that a deficit is necessary because of the automatic stabilization that is required during these difficult economic times. No one will argue about that as a principle or a theory particularly, but what we do argue, Mr. Speaker, is that deficit financing has become a way of life for this Government, both in good times and in bad. The Liberal Party has not brought in a balanced budget since the 1969-1970 fiscal year. Government Members down play this deficit financing by saying that what is past is past; let it be forgotten; we are looking to the future. Fair enough, except the kind of spending habit this Government has developed is hard to break. This habit has become particularly expensive for Canadians, in fact too expensive to bear. Canadians can no longer afford a Liberal Government.

Social programs are necessary, we all recognize that. In certain instances they must be approved. But Government has the responsibility of keeping a fair balance and maintaining it. If spending is up in one area, every effort should be made to find ways and means to reduce spending elsewhere. That effort is not present now nor has it been for the past several years, and Bill C-151 is just further evidence of that fact.

I want to take a few moments to put before the House some comments with respect to Bill C-151 in the context of my home riding of St. Catharines and with respect to the Niagara region generally. All too often Canadians tend to throw up their hands in despair and frustration when you mention sums such as $1 billion. We cannot afford that, people say. They tell us they do not know what it means.

I will refer to St. Catharines and the Niagara region and try to put some meaning to the billions of dollars that we are talking about today. St. Catharines, the garden city, has a population of 125,000 ordinary people. In just 11 days our area will be hosting the Fifteenth Annual Folk Arts Festival, which is one of the finest examples of multiculturalism at work anywhere in Canada. Assuming I had $14.7 billion to spend, I could give to each one of the 34 cultural groups participating in the Folk Arts Festival a cheque for $432 million. Or if I wanted to put an ad in the St. Catharines Standard, an ad that would be bound to get recognition—I do not know what else but it would certainly generate a good deal of interest—I could promise $115,000 to every man, woman and child from St. Catharines who showed up at the Queen's Festival Ball. I would have enough money left over to buy each person in attendance a tuxedo or evening gown.

However, let us examine placing this sum of money in the Niagara region. People like to talk about the Niagara region generally rather than one of the five constituencies within it. We in Niagara were recently informed following the last budget that $12.6 million was to be spent over the next two years on repair work and land improvement along the Welland Canal. That is an expenditure about $21 per person per year.

The request before us today calls for $1,167 times that $12.6 million. On a per capita basis it is equal to $49,000, not the $12.6 million that is being expended in accordance with the last budget announcement. An amount of $49,000 is what this borrowing Bill means per person in the whole of the Niagara region. Let us make no mistake about this: the people living in Niagara would have to contribute $49,000 each to raise enough money to meet this borrowing Bill. Conversely, the Government would have to spend $49,000 on every man, woman and child living in Niagara to go through the amount of $14.7 billion requested in this borrowing Bill.

There are some people who still argue that Government borrowing is not all bad. Well, wait until they are pressed to repay it. There might even be a taxpayer in St. Catharines who would believe it is all right to defer that repayment to the next generation or to the generation after that. But very few money lenders rely on repayment without interest or carrying charges. The good people of St. Catharines pay about $166 million in taxes every year now, which is an average of $3,330 per taxpayer. Approximately $1,000 of that already goes toward paying carrying charges on our present public debt.

Assuming the Government will again use its majority to ram through this borrowing Bill, another $14.7 billion will be added to the national debt. At 10 per cent interest that will cost the taxpayers of the Niagara region an additional $1.5 billion a year to carry over the above what they are already being asked to bear.

The average taxpayer in St. Catharines can expect to see either his or her taxes go up by an additional $150 per person or see that $150 piled against the expense and the debt burden of future generations. Sooner or later this Government must realize that those bills and the carrying charges must be paid. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the constituents of St. Catharines look forward to either result.

I made reference earlier to the allocation of $12.6 million to the Niagara region under the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program announced in the budget of the Minister of Finance, but I want to speak for a moment about Government spending. Few if any Members raise objection to the expenditure of federal funds—and this is almost natural—in their ridings: "It is all right to spend money in my riding". But there is always a question as to whether or not it should be spent somewhere else. It is my argument that spending must be reduced and that the difficulties the Niagara region has experienced over the past several years must receive some attention. This might be consistent with the axiom that it is not all right anywhere else, but I want some more money back home. The difference lies in the system and the reasons behind the expenditure of dollars. The present Government has absolutely no system, no checks and no desire to curb unnecessary expenditures.

By way of contrast, the 1979 Progressive Conservative Government established spending guidelines and was able to maintain priority programs, provide new ones and still embark upon a systematic reduction of the deficit. If one Government can do it, surely other Governments could at least try. If the Government was truly serious about assisting the Niagara region, it would recognize that $12.6 million is barely a start. Steps would be taken immediately to put the shipbuilding and automotive industries on a solid footing, and the needed expansion of the capacity of the Welland Canal would be commenced. A program of industrial development to provide long-term jobs would be put in place. Small business, upon which the country was built, would be encouraged, not discouraged. The dollars required could come from a number of sources, including the advertising budget of the Government. Jobs are the best advertising a Government can buy.

To save in one area only to spend in another is the philosophy adopted by the Government. It is far easier to keep running to Parliament for more money than to do the tedious and tiresome chore of examining current spending or saying "no" once in a while.

One could talk about responsibility and the trust placed in Government to spend taxpayers' money wisely, but these have little meaning for a Government which is so desperately clinging to power. Every time the Gallup poll comes out, Canadians can expect another flurry of press releases announcing new Government projects costing millions or billions of dollars; new spending but no recovery program. It no longer works. Canadians are repulsed by blatant attempts to curry their favour with borrowed money. We all want to see clearly articulated programs, a clearly articulated approach to the recovery of our economy, not spending for spending's sake.

The Bill before us will provide the Government with an additional $14.7 billion to keep up its desperate spending program. It will give the Government a $4 billion slush fund upon which to launch the next general election, and it will cost the individual taxpayer an extra $150 per year in interest charges alone.

These are solid reasons why all Members should oppose this legislation and force the Government to budget responsibly. I most certainly intend to vote against Bill C-151 because I put the welfare and concerns of my constituents first.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments? Debate.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it is rather surprising today that there is not a Liberal Member in the House prepared to defend this Bill. I suppose it is not really surprising when one comes to think of it. I wonder whether you know, Mr. Speaker, how many borrowing Bills we have had in this session of Parliament. You might be able to recall some of them, but the total number is seven. This is the seventh borrowing Bill facing this session of Parliament, the seventh in just 37 months or only weeks over the three-year period. I wonder whether those who are present in the Chamber, those who are watching this debate on television or listening to it on the radio, know how much the Government has borrowed in the last three years. Would you like to guess, Mr. Speaker? No, you would not like to guess. Do the pages know? Do those in the galleries know? Do those out there in the country know?

Mr. Darling: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) knows.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I wonder whether he knows. He may not even know. To put you into your misery, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you that it is $77.3 billion in just weeks more than three years. It is difficult to believe, is it not? The Government has sought the authority to borrow $77.3 billion in this Chamber, including today's Bill. Even if it is difficult to comprehend what $77.3 billion represents, I am certain you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that it is a great deal of money. That is $77.3 billion of borrowing over and above what is collected in taxes. If you look at it another way, it is over $25 billion per year or $2 billion per month.

I suggest it would be worth while to put on record the amount of the earlier borrowing authorities and the dates upon which the Bills were given Royal Assent. I will do that because it is good for the record and salutary for those who read Hansard to know what happened. The first Bill, Bill C-30, was for $12 billion. It received Royal Assent on July 17, 1980, just three months after the election and this Government reassumed office.

The second one, Bill C-59, was for $14 billion. It received Royal Assent on April 8, 1981, which was nine months later.

The third, Bill C-111, was for $6.6 billion. On June 17, 1982 it received Royal Assent. That was 15 months later.

The fourth, Bill C-125, was for $7 billion. On August 14, 1982, only two months after the earlier Bill, it received Royal Assent.

The fifth, Bill C-128, was for $4 billion and received Royal Assent on November 8, three months later.

The sixth, Bill C-143, was for $19 billion and on March 30, or four months after the previous one, it received Royal Assent.

Now the seventh, Bill C-151, for $14.7 billion was introduced on May 3, only two months after the previous one was given Royal Assent.

A number of my colleagues and I, as well as others around the House, have tried to put an amount such as this within the range of human comprehension—so many thousands of dollars laid end to end, going around the earth so many times, or so many Rolls-Royces at such and such a cost per vehicle, bumper to bumper, going around the world so many times.

These comparisons are on the record in Hansard and need not be repeated here. The comparison I want to make is different. One of the comparisons relates to the Bill now before us, Bill C-151, seeking authority to borrow $14.7 billion. I want to compare it with this Government's budgetary expenditures.

First, the sum for which borrowing authority is being sought today, $14.7 billion, is larger by almost $5 billion than the budgetary expenditures presented by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his first Government in 1968. The Government is asking if it can borrow $5 billion more than it actually budgeted and spent in 1968. Budgetary expenditures then were $9.8 billion. This Government is asking for authority for one-third as much as it spent in 1968 with a budgetary deficit then of three-quarters of a billion dollars.

The second comparison I want to make is that budgetary expenditure by this Prime Minister's Government did not equal this borrowing authority until 1972. For the record, budgetary expenditures in 1972 were $14.8 billion, with a budgetary deficit of slightly over half a billion. That is just about the same as we are being asked to provide today.

The third comparison, and this is the corker, is that the total borrowing authority during this Parliament is about the same as the gross general expenditure in 1982. That is a staggering thought. This borrowing, of course, is in excess of general revenue from the taxes you pay, Mr. Speaker, I pay, and your company pays.

This Government has spent during its 13 years in office about $200 billion. During that time it has had the unmitigated gall to seek borrowing authority for one-third of that amount, $77.3 billion. The sum of $200 billion has been spent during this Prime Minister's successive Governments.

I know the Government will say this is an unusual amount of borrowing which has been made necessary by the high rate of unemployment and inflation. That is true, but only to a certain extent. The Government cannot avoid the substantiable charge that it has been involved in a number of extravagant activities that might have better waited for more propitious times; acquisition of service industries, for example, not to mention a number of very wasteful enterprises in the advocacy advertising line as well as a number of "investments" in operations of dubious viability.

A very large proportion of these borrowed funds are wanted—not so much needed, but wanted—for these operations, many of which, aside from being dubious financially, are blatantly political. I mention only the hundreds of millions of dollars during the past two or three days for a particular region of the country and also some announcements in this morning's paper to gather in the fishing vote. I would call that hog troughing. That is probably the best expression to describe it.

So much for the magnitude and the monstrosity of what we are being asked to approve in this Bill. I would now like to turn to another consideration flowing from it and, to get to that theme, let me take the House back to October of last year when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) was introducing his modest $4 billion borrowing Bill. On that occasion he made a comment which for me opened up an entirely new and frightening prospect in the matter of this Government's attitude toward financing its operations. As reported at page 20080 of Hansard for October 27, 1982 the Minister said:

> In 1975, the Government pledged to hold federal spending to the trend rate of growth of GNP.

He then proceeded to boast about how faithful his Government had honoured that pledge, particularly, he went on, if you were to exclude the interest charges. Don't we all of us wish we could exclude interest charges on our individual debts? Wouldn't our housekeeping accounts look at lot better if we just ignored those interest charges in drawing up our balance sheet of income and outgoings, deciding on whether we can take a holiday or whether we have to sell off a piece of property we had hoped to hold for our retirement years. Wouldn't it be wonderful if only we could, and here is a Government that claims it can ignore its interest charges!

I find statements knocked off like that by a Minister in the middle of a prepared speech tell me volumes about what goes on inside the minds of this Government and its little helpers. "If only we could disregard the interest charges, our record would be fine". Whose wouldn't? Our children and our children's children would undoubtedly like to disregard the debt load being built up for them today and during this Government's term of office.

I have a message for the Minister of Finance. He may not know what interest charges are. I would like to tell him. I will bet any money that his grandchildren will tell him as well. In my dictionary, interest charges are the cost of borrowing money this year to pay for last year's excess spending, perhaps even some of this year's excess spending.

Let us just bear that in mind and look at this Government's record again. It provided tables in the budget document entitled "The Fiscal Plan". At page 61, presumably "expenditures" are considered as total outlays including interest charges on the outstanding debt. I have selectively chosen a few expenditures. Here is what Table B.5 has to say. In 1968-69 total outlays represented 17.8 per cent of the GNP, in 1976-77 21.1 per cent of the GNP, and in 1982-83 they represented 23.1 per cent of the GNP. That is an increase of 5.3 per cent. The absolute figures for the same period are found in Table B.4 on the page opposite.

Table B.5, however, does carry through with the calculation which the Minister wanted to have, excluding debt charges. There the record is not nearly as favourable as the Minister would have us believe. The comparable figures in this case, that is excluding debt, are 15.4 per cent for 1968-69, 18.7 per cent for 1976-77 and 20.9 per cent for 1982-83, up 5.5 per cent. That is excluding the debt charges. What is he talking about? The Minister was not only talking through his hat but was misleading if he sought believers amongst his listeners. He should stop misleading the House. This comment may have sounded fine to some, but when the statistics are rolled out, they do not back up such misleading statements.

Another thought flows from the Minister's comments in November of last year about the pledge to keep down this Government's draw, that is its revenue take, to a more or less constant proportion of the GNP. I find such a statement is a sure-fire prescription for socialism. Why? Put in another way, it means that this Liberal Government believes it has an election-given right, and that is that it is entitled to sop up a cost-and-share of any increases in the nation's productive capacity. If that prescription is accepted, that entitlement apparently knows no limit. To what purposes that increased revenue will be put is a matter that will be determined, but only after the revenue has been secured. This logic is frightening: it suggests that the areas of governmental activity are boundless—provided an ever-increasing GNP can be assured.

This is where the logic of such socialistic rationale breaks down. Once the economy becomes aware that its increased production is to be drained off by a non-productive Government, enterprise and initiative wither. That is the danger I foresee of this Government, or any Government, adhering to the notion that it is entitled, by the voters' support, to a constant percentage of the nation's GNP. That commitment has to have limits placed upon it. It is a good measure for Government to use to find out how the economy is going and how its expeditures relate, but when those limits are reached, the Government's proportionate take of increased production must be reduced. Otherwise there will just be no increased production, no growth, no expanding GNP—except through inflation. That is the logic of that rationale.

When, furthermore, because of its unregulated appetite to embark on expensive governmentalizing ventures, a Government, as this one has done, embarks on projects for which it cannot pay, another phenomenon inevitably puts in an appearance—increasing public debt, the contest for funds available for borrowing, and the effect that that has on interest rates. This is the prospect before us as a result of this Bill and its predecessor.

Even the Government has asked the relevant questions at page 15 of its budget paper, "The Federal Deficit in Perspective", as follows:

> The large deficits and rising public debt levels ... raise serious questions related to debt financing. Can such large deficits be accommodated within Canada's financial markets without leading to strong competition for available funds, raising interest rates, and crowding out private sector investment?

The Government paper, without adducing any supportive evidence, answers these questions at page 16 in this way:

> Despite the high total government sector deficits foreseen this year and next ... there would seem to be relatively little danger that government deficits will begin to crowd out private sector activity ... The main reason for this is that private sector investment activity is likely to be very weak this year and to some extend next year.

Need we ask why? It is because the Government has sopped up more than its share of investment funds. Is that the way to recovery to which this so-called "budget of recovery" is pointing?

Here I would like to key in a few comments made on this matter in a paper by Mr. R. E. Harrison, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. He was not very complimentary about the growing deficits digging into the total savings available in Canada for investment to the extent of about 82 per cent to meet the $40 billion requirement in 1983. This is what he said, and it is worth putting it on the record here:

> There is a very real question of how such large Government requirements will affect the psychology of the financial markets. One important determinant of rates is confidence—or lack of it—the financial market-place has in the commitment of authorities to resist inflation, and thus protect the value of the currency. Having just suffered through a bout of unprecedented high inflation, that confidence has yet to be restored.

Later in his letter he said that two decisions are required by governments to keep interest rates down: first, they must resist pressure to increase deficits; second, they must show a serious commitment to reduce their borrowing. Do we see any of this in this Bill? For me, the answer is no. That will also be my answer when it comes to the vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments? Debate.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, here we are again, six weeks after the passage of the last supplementary borrowing Bill, back once more at the good old public trough. That is seven times this session; four times last year, twice in the last six weeks—fiscal conduct that no rural bank manager could or would tolerate. Yet we, Parliament, can do absolutely nothing about it except wave our arms and point, and hope the press will pick up what we are saying and tell the voting public. For certain, as long as the benches of sheep opposite bleat on demand as their political masters require of them, no matter how just our concerns for the public purse, no matter how true our fears for the public welfare, it does not seem as if it matters very much. We may feel ourselves to be passengers on an out of control roller-coaster, but as long as loyalty to the Party opposite outweighs loyalty to the electorate, all we can do is sit back and enjoy the ride.

All this may sound like nothing more than melodrama, but let me point out that never before in our history has a Government which, six weeks before, had borrowed $19 billion come back for more. Never before in our history have we had a deficit of $30 billion and a Government which, for all its trying to put the best face on things, cannot forecast much less for the foreseeable future. Never before have we had double-digit unemployment coupled with such runaway Government spending that the administration is helpless to do anything about it. Never before have we had a Government that has produced a slogan like six and five, which it waves around like the sorcerer's apprentice waves his magic wand, at the same time as it is unable to curtail its own spending increase below 12 per cent for the current year. Never before have we had a Government which has saddled its electorate with a gross debt of $160 billion to $165 billion, compared to $31 billion when it took office. Never before have we had Government spending that amounted to 26 per cent of the Gross National Product.

Never before, in short, have we had an economy so completely out of control of the Government whose responsibility it is. Never before have we had a Government whose supporters must be held more liable for their continued support than ever they would for exercising their freedom of thought on the electorate's behalf.

This is not just another in a series of Government Bills; this is an acknowledgement of financial and fiscal defeat. This is an attempt to acquire enough voting authority to render the Government independent of this House and of its control until after the next election. It is an attempt to render us out of sight and out of mind.

I remember that when the last war bonds were maturing—in 1960 or thereabouts, I think—the late Mr. Diefenbaker was Prime Minister. The commentators were tut-tutting that the Government would have to roll the bonds over into a new issues; it just could not afford to cover the cost of redeeming them. I suppose the amount involved was a few million dollars, a sum the present Government would think nothing of blowing, just to save its face. After all, "what's a billion?"

Its outstanding unmatured loans and securities, which by the way stood at $21 billion when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office, amounted to some $115 billion as of the end of March. The cost of interest alone in fiscal year 1983-84 is forecast to be $17.6 billion. What it will actually turn out to be is anyone's guess. We have not had a Minister of Finance from the Party opposite whose estimates could be relied upon since before the Hon. John Turner, and that was about ten years ago. No nation should be expected to suffer for a decade or more not being able to trust what the Government is saying about its own finances. This must be the ultimate condemnation.

There is no national fiscal index that I know of which has not gone up during the Government's custodianship by less than 250 per cent. Unmatured loans and securities are up 458 per cent. The net national debt is up 640 per cent. The interest on the debt is up 1,121 per cent. Financial requirements are up 1,273 per cent. Spending on a national accounts basis is up 693 per cent. And to top it all, the deficit is up 6,261 per cent.

Hon. Members opposite may try to persuade themselves that figures like these do not mean very much because of the difference in the levels of interest rates between now and the beginning of the Trudeau agony, always accepting, of course, that no blame for that situation could possibly be attached to the Government in question. They will agree, however, I am sure, that those rates in 1979-80 were in the same range as they are now, and as the Government would have us believe they will be in over the next few years. Yet the interest costs it projects for 1986-87 will be two and a half times what they were during what people are calling "The blessed blue blip", and 16 times what they were before the present Prime Minister took office. And here we are back at the pump asking for another $14.7 billion. That is truly obscene!

I have already gone over all this ground before during debate on one of the half dozen other recent borrowing Bills. Running a Government on credit does not come free. First and most obvious is the cost of the interest payments. This year that is going to cost Canadian taxpayers $1,700 each. That amounts to 4.6 per cent of our entire Gross National Product.

Then there is what it does to our fiscal flexibility. In bad times Governments love to be Keynesian because Lord Keynes provided a great justification for spending when times were tough. The trouble is, when you have been a counter-Keynesian during the good times, bought votes like crazy and borrowed to pay for them, you do not have much room to manoeuvre when it comes time to stimulate. It is a bit like the biblical story of the wise virgins and the foolish virgins. And over there in the persons of the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove), I see five very foolish virgins indeed. In 1968-69 4 per cent of Government spending went to service the debt. That figure now comes to 35 per cent, nine times as much.

To have got us into an incredible fix like this is to have been a very, very foolish virgin indeed. The horrifying thing is that the five I have named are among the most competent people in the Cabinet. Is it any wonder that the country is going to hell in a handbasket? I cannot bring myself to believe that there is not greater talent than that on the back benches across the way, but what use is that to the country? The fact is that our nation has been run into the ground by the monumental incompetence of the Cabinet now in power. And may God help us all!

The presence of the Government in the money market in such a massive way squeezes the private sector, the productive sector, out of the market. There is only so much money available, and so much demand on the part of the Government naturally forces up prices. In a word, interest rates rise. The aforementioned Ministers cannot delegate the direct responsibility for rate setting to Mr. Bouey and he cannot hide the fact that it is his policies which ultimately set the rates.

What is the effect of the sight of the Government's fiscal floundering on public and business confidence? Let us not underestimate the importance of this factor. We have reached the point in the economic cycle at which public and business confidence are perhaps the most crucial requirements. What does the public see? It sees this Government wallowing around in a slough of debt, hanging its hopes, and those of the country, on a budget which looks more and more questionable as one studies it, one that is based not—may the Lord help us all—on fiscal responsibility, but on the premise that it will continue to live on credit for another year or so and then start to bring in the tax revenues to pay the bills—after the next election.

The public sees a Government that presses its six and five program on the rest of the country but makes an exception in the case of itself. It sees a Government that six weeks ago passed the largest borrowing Bill in our history and is now back to borrow more. It sees a group of back benchers who, by their rejection of any responsibility to their country and their electors, have opted instead to make it all possible by continuing blindly to support those on the front bench.

The name of the game is not good Government. It is not faithfulness to one's electorate and its interests. The name of the game is power, power for its own sake and, of course, for the lovely perks which it provides. It is power to be retained at all costs, costs to be borne by the people, of course, and benefits to the Liberal Party. "All power to the Liberals." What a slogan!

I believe we are all agreed that the missing ingredient in the present economic situation, the factor which is desperately needed if the recovery is to develop the stamina it needs, is confidence. The economic activities of this Government during its tenure of office, the economic events of the last decade or two, are such that confidence cannot be generated by the Party presently in power. Simply put, they have squandered their credibility, and if ever any proof of this is wanted, this borrowing Bill now before us provides it in spades.

I have cited many statistics during these remarks. However, figures of the size and sheer magnitude of these lose their power to shock. It is like the statistics of the Hiroshima bomb or the Black Death: they are too great to be compared.

Let me introduce one final statistic which I feel is germane. We all know that since the last election in 1980 the Government has been operating under a widely heralded policy of restraint. At least, it has been talking restraint and urging the private sector to follow its example as it squeezed back on public sector wages. Perhaps the theory is that people who are kept busy listening to exhortation do not have time to check the figures.

Just for the record, then, these are the figures. Since the last election Government spending has risen by 66 per cent. It has gone up by two-thirds. Some restraint! Just to put that in some sort of perspective, during the same period of time the Consumer Price Index went up by only 37 per cent and the Gross National Product by 33 per cent, or just half the rate of Government spending. And here it is asking for another $14.7 billion. For what? It has not said but we know. We all know. It is so it does not have to do so again before the next election.

It is inconceivable that this Bill should be presented to Parliament. I believe it would be much more appropriate if the Government decided to present it to the Canadian people. We certainly know what their position would be on this.

As has been pointed out by previous speakers, the Government is trying to build up a slush fund of an extra $2 billion to have in its kitty for any unforeseen things which may come up; and this is one other reason why all Hon. Members of my Party will be voting against this Bill.

• (1240)

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman in his last remarks spoke about a slush fund and echoed some of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). He will recall that Hon. Member indicated that in effect the expenditure of the amount being borrowed was motivated by political considerations.

Does the Hon. Member agree with those comments in view of the announcement yesterday in Saskatchewan of a more than $4 million investment in the largest livestock show in Saskatchewan? Does he agree with those comments in light of the announcement made yesterday in Alberta relating to the increase in the amounts invested for road building in Banff National Park? Does he agree in light of the announcement in his own riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka that the $20 million the federal Government is putting into the Coast Guard establishment in the town of Parry Sound itself is motivated by political consideration in view of the fact that that riding is represented by a Conservative Member? Yesterday in Timiskaming, if memory serves me, the announcement was made of the paving of the airport for a full 6,000 feet. Is that again motivated by political considerations?

Does the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) want to reflect on what he said and perhaps correct the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich as well?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Before recognizing the Hon. Member to answer the question, the Chair must remind Hon. Members that the question is to be short and to the point. It has been suggested many times before that 90 seconds would be a reasonable time for a short and brief question.

Mr. Darling: I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) regarding the many projects he has outlined. Those projects are included, I believe, in the Minister of Finance's budget which had some figures of $2.2 billion and then as high as $4 billion.

Mr. Blais: It was $2.4 billion.

Mr. Darling: Certainly that money has to be spent around there and I appreciate especially the publicity given to the proposed expenditure at the Department of Transport base in Parry Sound amounting to $5 million. But that $5 million is certainly not all being spent this year, as I wish it was. I was with the Minister of Supply and Services, I guess it was a couple of years ago, when he made this announcement. Expenditures are being made on a gradual basis and a lot of these projects he has mentioned are being done on a gradual basis. I have heard of many of the projects the Government is proposing and has undertaken. Some of them will not be finished for five or six years down the road.

We have heard for a number of years about the frigate program. When I first came here the Government was going to build those six frigates at a cost considerably less than it is now. Where are those six frigates now? They are still on the drawing board. That program comes through the Minister's Department so it is about time he got them going and got the frigates, as I say, divided around the country, two to be built in Nova Scotia, two in Quebec and two on the west coast. That will generate jobs but it is money already pledged; and I could go on and on about other similar projects.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I would simply indicate that indeed I gave a wrong figure; it is not $4 million for the Agribition, it is $5.7 million. As to the hon. gentleman's comments, he knows full well that since the frigate program has been my responsibility, it has proceeded in accordance with the schedule set. In addition, the Hon. Member is also aware, is he not, of the two 800 class navy tenders that I had the pleasure to commission within his area. He fully recognizes that is public funding from federal coffers and he fully recognizes as well that 90 workers in Parry Sound depend on federal programs. Of course, he is very cognizant of that fact and I am very grateful for it.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, in preparing its budget, and of course in coming to the deficit figures before us today, the Government took a lot of advice. I have before me a statement entitled "Ethical Reflections on the Economic Crisis from the Episcopal Commission for Social Affairs, Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops". According to this statement, in recent years the Catholic Church has become increasingly concerned about the scourge of unemployment which plagues our society today and the corresponding struggles of workers in this country. The Bishops urge, Mr. Speaker, in developing strategies for economic recovery, that first priority must be given to the real victims of the current recession, namely the unemployed, the welfare poor, the working poor, the pensioners, native people, women and young people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I invite the Hon. Minister to relate his comments or remarks to those made earlier by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling). The Minister is now quoting at length from a document.

Mr. Cosgrove: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I was indicating that this was part of the advice we received, that priority of expenditures should be for the unemployed, specifically those people I have made reference to. Therefore my question to the Hon. Member, who has spent a lot of time admonishing the Government for spending money to assist these people, specifically the $4.8 billion which is the main part of the budget designed to assist these people, is this. How would he suggest that the Government pay for that program designed to assist these people? By way of a deficit or by way of raising taxes? First of all, does he agree with the Bishops that this is an area the Government should address? Secondly, does he believe the deficit should be increased to do it? If he does not, what other ways does he recommend? Does he recommend an increase in taxes?

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Minister, certainly I agree with the statement made by the Bishops. Certainly I agree that there are many disadvantaged people, unemployed people and people on welfare whom the Government must help. No question about that. We know the Government has to borrow because it does not have the money.

The Bill before us is for $14 billion. I am no financial genius but the Government is not bankrupt at the present time. As of April 30, a good many of us have been paying our taxes, not requesting additional tax refunds, so the Government should be in a most liquid financial position at this particular time. If the Bill had been brought in for $10 billion, I do not think the Government or the Minister of Finance would have gotten anywhere near the criticism they have. According to the records, the Government has that $2 billion at the present time. God knows how much has been pouring in since April 30.

Our Party is saying that the Government is too greedy and is asking for too much. If it spends the $10 billion and returns to Parliament with legitimate reasons to borrow more, Parliament will certainly grant the authority to borrow more money to carry on with worthy projects. But it is asking for too much and it will simply have the money sitting in the bank and be paying interest on it. I know high finance. When you have a large amount in the bank you get some interest on it but you do not get as much as you have to pay the bank. The banks have a sweet deal going for themselves. It loans the Government $14 billion while the Government has perhaps $5 million sitting in the bank. It is the Government's money and they will make money on the deal. That is the point that I disagree with and I am quite sure many of our Members on this side disagree with it also.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this latest in a series of borrowing authority Bills, I believe it is fair to point out once again that this is the seventh borrowing Bill that Parliament has seen in the last 37 months, amounting to a total borrowing authority request of $77.3 billion, including the Bill before us today. In an effort to put that amount into perspective, on the basis of 1,123 days, which is three years and a month, that total breaks down to $68,833,482 per day. That is almost one half a million dollars a day for every Liberal Member of Parliament on the other side of the House.

It was interesting to hear the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) refer to the Catholic Bishops' statement a few moments ago when he said there should be some emphasis placed, in terms of spending and priorities, for the care and support of 1.5 million unemployed and others in poverty or left out of our society. If it were the case that a significant proportion of these moneys were being spent for that purpose, those of us with some soul could at least understand the priorities of the Government for borrowing money to keep people alive and in good health. However, some of these moneys have been spent in heartless ways while other sums have been put to unproductive and counterproductive uses.

The main thrust of my speech will deal with one area of spending, both on the part of the federal Government and the provincial Government of British Columbia, for a project generally referred to as northeast coal. It is an example of how billions of dollars can be poured down the drain and not only wasted but spent in such a way as to destroy jobs that already existed as a result of public and private investment in the southeastern corner of British Columbia. The unreliable predictions of both the federal Government opposite and the Social Credit or social conservative Government of British Columbia have led to the waste of billions of dollars in competing not only with private sector money but with their own money that went into the infrastructure to develop southeastern coal resources a number of years ago, to improve the railway transport lines for that coal and build the transport and shipping facilities at Roberts Bank from whence the coal is shipped overseas.

As a result of the current wasted expenditures, despite all the warnings from both the Japanese and the industry in this country, those governments are destroying jobs, investments and the equity of shareholders who understandably thought they had a good investment in the coking coal of southeastern British Columbia.

There is a recent article in the April 21, 1983 edition of the Vancouver Sun, written by H. M. Halderson, a Vancouver mining consultant who in 1980 produced a report for the council of mayors of southeastern British Columbia on the effects of northeast coal development on their communities. That article concludes "Has the Government" ... both federal and provincial ... "shown good judgment in its investment in northeast coal? Subsidy to one segment of an industry at the expense of another and job creation in one part of the province that contributes to unemployment in another is hardly wise use of tax dollars."

The article ends with the question: "Does spending a huge sum to create production in the northeast when southeast mines can produce at a fraction of the Government's cost represent the restraint in Government spending of which we hear so much?"

The answer to the question is obvious to anyone who reads the article or is aware of any of the facts of that entire northeast project. The answer is that it does not make sense. It is not an example of restraint. It is, rather, an example of a Government—both the Liberal Government here and the Social Credit Government there—intent on churning out money and throwing it away to their friends in the private sector while refusing extended benefits to over 1.5 million unemployed in the country. Not only do they waste the money, they directly cause the lay-offs of hundreds more employees who are working in the southeastern coal fields of British Columbia. It is an absolutely insane policy which can be likened to someone standing in the back of a train and shoveling those billions of dollars out by the bucketful. The money is not only being wasted; it is causing the destruction of existing jobs.

I, along with the other people in southeastern British Columbia, are amazed by these policies. When politicians get into trouble they build pyramids. They have been doing so for 5,000 years. At least the edifices built by the Pharoahs are still standing. The pyramids and bubbles built by the federal Government and the provincial Government in Victoria crumble to dust before they have even been erected. Their collapse brings down everyone else with them.

These senseless policies are beyond description and can only be counterproductive. But they have become typical of Governments which would rather build new empires where there is little population and few communities so that they can let out contracts to their friends at public expense, rather than use the money intelligently to service communities which already exist and provide facilities for the people who already live there. They ignore the existing needs of people and dole out billions of dollars of public money in contracts to their friends. Those Governments then get together in some act of conspiracy, because they take the attitude that you offer more money to those who have when you want to give them incentives. But the Liberal and Conservative idea of providing an incentive to those who do not have is to cut their wages so that they will have to work harder, or to cut off their UIC to give them more incentive to work for lower wages.

That is what they have done with northeast coal. It has not been sufficient to destroy the communities and jobs for the people in southeastern British Columbia. By tampering with the Labour Relations Board and its rulings, they have broken provisions in union agreements that allowed workers to refuse to work alongside non-union labour. The result has been that we now see, as shown on the CTV network approximately a week ago on a program on northeast coal development, hobo jungles in which hundreds of people were standing in the cold around campfires. For every person being paid $7 an hour on the job, being charged astronomical rates for very poor housing conditions on those jobs, ten are in those hobo jungles waiting for their jobs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

CANADIAN HERITAGE

FUNDING OF ANGLOPHONE AND FRANCOPHONE COMMEMORATIVE EVENTS

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, it is very laudatory of the pro unilingual Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) to announce the federal Government's participation in the 1984 celebration of the four hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the French explorer, Jacques Cartier's voyage to America. I commend him for having the foresight to present a half million dollar cheque to Quebec organizers this year for celebrations next year. I understand the total federal contribution will be $1.6 million. I also applaud Canada Post' decision to issue, jointly with France, a commemorative stamp in 1984.

This year, not next year, marks the four hundredth anniversary of Sir Humphrey Gilbert's discovery of Newfoundland, a possession of the British Crown and the first British colony. What did Newfoundland receive from our unbiased Government? A total grant of $394,000, with the cheque not yet forthcoming for this year's event.

Two years ago my colleague from Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington requested a postage stamp commemorating in 1984 the heroic settlers known as the Empire Loyalists, but to no avail. The official terminology, as stated by the Minister's office, to be used in 200 years of development, because of opposition from Francophone groups. No joint U.S. Stamp and no announced funding—once again it is cut off all vestige of British heritage. If "Jack Carter" can get $1.6 million and a joint stamp with France, then we English-speaking, by population, deserve three times this amount for celebrations and our commemorative postal stamp.

Mr. Minister, fair is fair. What is good for the goose is good for the gander. Let us have equal treatment for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SHIPBUILDING

BENEFITS FOR QUEBEC FROM FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to a very important contract that is to be awarded within the next few months for the construction of frigates. The contract means a great deal to all Canadians and especially to the riding of Longueuil. If we assume that the offers that were submitted by the companies in Saint John and Longueuil are the same as far as the quality of the ships is concerned, it is my firm conviction that it is perfectly normal for Members of this House to make representations to the present Government to have this ship built in Quebec and in Longueuil. I feel it is perfectly fair and normal and reasonable that the very substantial number of Canadians living in the Province of Quebec should have a say in our navy and reflect its Canadian content, especially since some companies which made offers had to get their know-how from the United States.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

COMPETING WITH LOCAL NEWSPAPERS FOR ADVERTISING

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, postmasters in northern Alberta and Saskatchewan are soliciting advertising from local businesses to be placed in flyers printed by Canada Post, and distributed by Canada Post as it delivers the mail. Obviously, when you begin with a Government subsidized corporation and add to it a free delivery system, you can undercut the advertising rates of small weekly newspapers which depend for their very survival on the same advertising dollar.

Canada Post is not only subsidized by the taxpayer, it is also paid hundreds of thousands of dollars each year by these very same newspapers in delivery costs. This is a gross intrusion on the lifeblood of the weekly newspapers, given the fact that with their very own money Canada Post is undercutting them.

The Postmasters who sell this advertising are guaranteed a very handsome salary from the Government. On the other hand, salesmen who work for these papers are often paid on a commission basis. Postmasters are literally stealing from these salesmen.

Editors of weekly newspapers are a dedicated bunch. They are not in it for the money; they are in it to provide a much needed service to their communities.

This is a totally unfair and inexcusable use of taxpayers' money. This callous move by the Canada Post Corporation may push many small weeklies that are struggling to survive the recession out of business. The Minister responsible for Canada Post and the Minister responsible for the media—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

PORTS

EXPORT OF GRAIN THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak against the federal Government's action in offering to rebuild the capacity of the Port of Churchill at the same time it has cut off further dealings with Poland, the country which receives most of its grain through that port.

Last year we exported 1.6 million metric tonnes of wheat to Poland, our third largest export market. This year we will sell almost nothing because the Liberal cabinet has cut off further export credits.

Last year the Port of Churchill exported 572,000 metric tonnes of grain. This year it will export far less because the Liberal cabinet will not allow the leading purchaser of grain to move through Churchill. The Government offer to upgrade Churchill is meaningless as long as it restricts potential markets.

Thus I must ask whether this offer was made in good faith in the first place. Since any upgrading funds for Churchill were conspicuously left out of the Western Transportation Initiative, I believe we can call Senator Argue's offer for Churchill another public relations ploy "that is full of sound and fury and signifies nothing".

ABORTION

PROTECTION SOUGHT FOR LIVES OF UNBORN INFANTS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, it is a continuing concern to me as a pro-life physician that the most vulnerable and voiceless in our society, the unborn child, is not given the fullest constitutional protection. The only protection afforded is the Criminal Code, Section 251, which makes abortion an indictible offence if not carried out in an accredited hospital, by qualified physicians, with consultation by three doctors, and only where the health or the life of the mother is endangered by continuing the pregnancy.

Even this protection is compromised by the interpretation attached to the word "health" of the mother. Should the definition of health be a medical or a legal one? Parliament did not define the word "health". The definition commonly used is the very broad one given by the World Health Organization, namely, "a state of complete physical, mental and social well-being, and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity".

Therapeutic abortion committees were never legally empowered to use this extremely wide definition or similar concepts of health, in interpreting Section 251 of the Criminal Code. A narrower concept of "health" is more appropriate. The law should only accept abortion as a medically indicated treatment when a majority of the members of a therapeutic abortion committee are of the personal, informed, and independent medical opinion that the life or physical or mental health of the mother is, or is likely to be, seriously and directly endangered by the continuation of the pregnancy itself. Furthermore, the committees should be held legally accountable for their decisions.

FISHERIES

ANNOUNCEMENTS MADE OUTSIDE PARLIAMENT BY MINISTERS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, a little over a year ago when the Kirby Task Force was created to deal with the crisis in the Atlantic fisheries it was faced with at least three problems of major importance—what to do about the economic plight of inshore fishermen, how to restructure the offshore industry, and what to do about marketing. To date the Task Force has failed on all these major problems. Groundfish prices paid in most of Atlantic Canada have remained virtually unchanged since 1979 while the costs of fuel and gear have risen steeply.

According to Kirby, fishermen as a group are living below the poverty line. Are we to assume that the Government condones this condition? However, according to the press of May 10, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) announced, in St. John's Newfoundland, federal plans to spend $140.7 million on new installations across Canada. This is $60 million less than will be spent in the National Capital region this year for a new Museum of Man and a new art gallery. Nova Scotia, Ontario, Quebec, and Newfoundland will share almost equally some $106 million, with $12 million going to New Brunswick, $8 million to Prince Edward Island, and $8 million to British Columbia.

In a separate announcement in Matane, Gaspé, it was stated that $71 million out of a total of $224.5 million is to be spent on fisheries over the next five years for development of the Gaspé region. I urge the Ministers involved in these announcements to recognize the rights of parliamentarians, and make statements in the House so that Members can ask questions—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crouse: —about the priorities used by the Government—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crouse: —when allocating funds for restructuring the fishing industry.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members must stop immediately. No one is entitled to more than 90 seconds.

Mr. Shields: I stopped.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CALL FOR SUMMIT MEETING BETWEEN AMERICAN AND RUSSIAN LEADERS

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, on March 16 I said the following in the House:

> This fear and anxiety of nuclear annihilation comes not from delivery systems but from nuclear warheads which have multiplied unchecked in an almost crazy, insane, mad progression which must be checked and reversed. The task is to do away with nuclear warheads and their deployment. Summit level meetings are vital and mandatory.

The recent announcement by General Secretary Andropov to base negotiations on warheads rather than just missiles is an encouraging development.

On November 17 and again on November 24, 1982, I moved motions in the House calling for unanimous support for a summit meeting within 18 months between President Reagan and General Secretary Andropov to strengthen nuclear detente and initiate the process for nuclear arms stabilization and eventual reduction. Twice the House would not give its unanimous consent. I hope it has changed its mind.

Since then Canadians were pleased to know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) pleaded with President Reagan to hold a summit meeting. Everyone in the House should also plead and support unanimously the need for such a summit meeting. I hope the Government will put forth such a motion. I am prepared to circulate a petition for signature by all Hon. Members and Senators, supporting a summit meeting.

OPPOSITION TO CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), afraid to debate in the House of Commons the Cruise missile issue, has said in a planted letter to newspapers that Canadians who oppose Cruise missile tests are anti-American. Does the Prime Minister not know that the American people themselves are increasingly opposed to the continuation of the nuclear arms madness, that the House of Representatives has just passed, 278 to 149, a resolution calling for a mutual, verifiable nuclear freeze? Canadians who oppose the further escalation of the nuclear arms race and Canada's participation in it by testing the Cruise, do so in concert with the majority of Americans. Are the majority of Americans anti-American?

The Prime Minister says we must test nuclear weapons as payment for the American defence umbrella. Yet the Reagan strategy for a massive nuclear arms build-up, space based weapons, and winnable nuclear war, and the inevitable Soviet countering moves, is no umbrella. It is the shadowy Horsemen of the Apocalypse that Americans themselves are rejecting.

It is the Prime Minister, not Canadians, who is being hypocritical on this issue, saying that Cruise missile testing will not be agreed to until progress has been measured at the Geneva talks, when we all know that he has given assurances to the Reagan administration that testing will go ahead. Or is this planted letter an attempt to soften up Canadians for Canada's next leap in the nuclear arms race?

REQUEST FOR ISSUANCE OF GILLES VILLENEUVE COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, today it is exactly one year and two days since the tragic death of Gilles Villeneuve, the Formula I automobile racer. He was a great Canadian and French Canadian who put his area, the Province of Quebec and Canada on the map in this field. Gilles Villeneuve was practically the first Canadian to become world famous in this sport. Much has been said since then, and this weekend, articles in the press commemorated this tragic event. Many people and organizations talked about honouring the memory of this famous figure who made a name for Canada abroad. I wonder, Madam Speaker, whether the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation would be willing to issue a stamp commemorating Gilles Villeneuve as a great Canadian who became world famous and also helped to illustrate the values of French Canadians and gained recognition for automobile racing, a sport that did not have a large following here in Canada and that is now far better known, thanks to Gilles Villeneuve.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PLIGHT OF COMMUNITIES DENIED ILAP DESIGNATION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) admitted that the ILAP program was finished as far as new applications were concerned. The Midland-Penetanguishene ILAP Committee spent thousands of dollars and hundreds of hours in preparing its application for designation udner the Program. It has been waiting patiently for more than three months for a decision on its appliation, and the Minister has now decided that its application is worthless.

The people of the area need help because the unemployment rate is 33 per cent. They do not need more Liberal promises that another program is on the way which will solve all their problems. Stalling solves no problems; it creates problems. We on this side of the House urge the Liberal Government to show some concern for the communities of Canada such as Midland-Penetanguishene, and immediately move to bring in its industrial and regional expansion program.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADA LANDS (MIRABEL) LTD.—SALARIES OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. It follows on a question by the Hon. Member for Joliette on April 26 when he asked the Minister to explain why there was an exemption from the six and five program to selected employees of Canada Lands (Mirabel) Ltd. As reported at page 24864 of Hansard, the Minister responded that he would check, "but I would be very surprised if that were true". Two days later, on April 28, Order in Council No. 1983-1013 was cancelled and was replaced by No. 1983-1247. The second Order in Council retained exactly what the first one had in place.

Apart from dealing with the reasoning behind the exemption, will the Minister also explain what is behind all this mysterious activity? Why was he not aware of the original Order in Council regarding the employees of Canada Lands Mirabel Ltd. and the six and five program? Why was the original Order revoked just two days after we asked about it and replaced with one with the same result?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, when the Hon. Member asked me the question, I said that I would check into the facts because I did not remember whether this item had come before me. In fact, when I checked, it had never been submitted to me. This was a reorganization of the personnel of La Société immobilière du Canada (Mirabel) Ltée which took place many months ago. Outside experts were called in, with the permission of Treasury Board, to review classifications of that personnel equivalent to the classification levels in the rest of the Public Service. The report was given to la Société which submitted it to Treasury Board. Treasury Board examined the issue and my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, is in a position to answer.

My understanding is that the issue of classification and the issue of six and five are completely separate. It was felt that people who had positions similar to those in the Public Service should be given the normal salaries to which they were entitled.

Mr. Fennell: That is ridiculous. There are two sets of rules—one for public servants, and one for employees of Crown corporations and employees of private corporations like Maislin.

ROLE OF CHAIRMAN IN NEGOTIATING SALARIES

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, obviously Mr. Goyer, the chairman of Canada Lands (Mirabel) Ltd., negotiated this Order in Council directly with Treasury Board. Would the Minister answer yes or no?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have no knowledge of who approached Treasury Board. There is a normal procedure for Crown corporations when they deal with Treasury Board.

APPLICATION OF RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Obviously he knows about this Order in Council and the Minister of Public Works should have known about it. Could he enlighten the House why the employees of Canada Lands (Mirabel) Ltd. were exempted from the six and five program when all other public servants at Mirabel were left in the program?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, Section 16 of the Public Service Compensation Restraint Act indicates that the Governor in Council can exempt from coverage of the Act employees who enter into an agreement or who are covered by a compensation plan which is consistent with the six and five program. As the Minister of Public Works said, a compensation plan was put into effect which strictly followed the six and five program and, as a result, pursuant to a decision of Parliament, the Governor in Council applied Section 16.

My hon. friend is completely wrong when he says that the six and five program does not apply to the employees. The Act applies to them pursuant to Section 16. Their compensation plan is strictly within the six and five limits.

EXEMPTIONS UNDER STATUTE

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board. He just told us that because this Crown corporation, headed by Jean-Pierre Goyer, has negotiated an agreement with its employees which is in six and five, therefore the Public Service Restraint Act, in other words, the six and five program, would not apply to those Crown corporation employees. That is an absurdity on the surface of it. Will he tell this House how it is that this kind of exemption can be made from the fundamental promise by the Liberal Government that six and five applies to everyone in Government?

How is a Crown corporation allowed to be exempted without the Minister who is supposed to be responsible to this House knowing that? Can he also tell us how many other Crown corporations and how many other ways he has found to exempt these friends of the Government from the application of this law which the Government said was so fundamental and would be universally applied?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, if my hon. friend would engage his ear before engaging his mouth, he would have heard me say that the employees of this company are not exempted from the six and five program. The compensation plan applying to them is strictly within the limits of the six and five program. Further, Section 16 of the Public Service Compensation Restraint Act states that the Governor in Council can take this kind of step where employees accept a collective agreement or where a compensation plan is applied to them consistent with the six and five principle.

This is not the first time the Section has been used. It was used at least twice previously, to my recollection, when employees working within the Public Service negotiated an agreement with Treasury Board as employer whereby they accepted the six and five compensation framework and made adjustments within it. Therefore, these steps were taken before at the request of employees of the Public Service, and I am glad the Hon. Member is willing to say that they are friends of the Government.

REASON FOR EXEMPTIONS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister should ensure that his brain is in gear before engaging his jaw. How can he suggest that exempting Crown corporations from the six and five law is the way in which employees of Crown corporations comply with the law? That is an absurdity on the surface of it.

This is the same Minister who could not explain how it was that senior executives in the Public Service avoided six and five by simply upgrading. We now have twice as many managers as we had previous to six and five, which was another way of avoiding it. The Minister has not explained to the House how many Crown corporations and how many other groups have been exempted. He still has not explained why. We know it is Section 16, but why are they exempted?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am afraid my hon. friend is also unaware of my exchange with his colleague seated a few rows behind him on the subject, and the press release I issued explaining that we have not created more managers. There was the implementation of a new category of management, starting back in 1980, and in it are only those people who were managers previously. Therefore, it was not a device used in any way to create additional managers to whom the six and five program does not apply.

The second thing I want to say is that Section 16 of the Act passed by this Parliament said that the Act formally would not apply where there are agreements or compensation plans within the six and five framework. The employees of Canada Lands Corporation are not entitled to get more than six and five. That is the fact and exactly the case in so far as I am aware of it.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. An article which appeared in many newspapers today quotes the Prime Minister on the question of the Cruise missile. The Prime Minister indicated that in part the development of the Cruise can be justified as being necessitated for defence against the deployment of the Soviet SS-20. While the SS-20 ought never have to have been deployed, the relevant question being pursued by many people now is whether this action by the Soviet Union necessitates a further escalation in the West.

Considering that literally hundreds of thousands of North Americans, including many experts, have said that now is the time to break the vicious circle of nuclear armaments, why is the Prime Minister not supporting this disarmament movement but instead continues to support the testing of the Cruise?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I must first point out that there has been no request made of Canada to test the Cruise. There is, therefore, no support for the testing of the Cruise. It has not been asked of us and, therefore, we have not given an answer.

I just wish to correct the end of the question. The substance of the question is to ask why do we not support the peace movement now rather than say we should make sure that there is an answer within NATO against the SS-20. It seems to me there may be an honest disagreement there. To me it is not illogical to use the possibility of deploying the Cruise and the Pershing II to get the Soviets to withdraw all or some of their SS-20s. The argument, of course, rests on whether the SS-20s were necessary or whether they were just an escalation by the Soviets. If they are, as NATO holds, a needless escalation by the Soviets, the problem for the NATO force is how can we get the Soviets to de-escalate. There the proof of the pudding is in the results.

The two-track strategy adopted by NATO in 1979 has led Secretary Andropov twice to propose reductions of the SS-20, once in December and once just a week ago. Therefore it seems to me that we cannot condemn in advance any potential deployment by NATO of a European Euromissile if the result of it continues to be as it is now, a reduction in the number of these SS-20s.

VIEWS OF FORMER HEAD OF U.S. CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister, who has followed the literature on this with some care, I understand, knows perfectly well that whenever there is an escalation it is always justified by either side in terms of being a step required to get the opponent to come to terms with regard to negotiations or to de-escalate on the other side. I see the Prime Minister nodding to that. In short, it is the kind of argument in which there is no empirical evidence to support strongly one way or the other.

The Prime Minister is not an expert in this field, nor am I. The former head of the CIA wrote an article last week in opposition to the Cruise. He can hardly be called anti-American. He said:

> The Soviets are certainly not "superior" to the United States in any meaningful way today . . . The present American retaliation potential is absolute.

Considering that Mr. Colby says that in terms of the present weaponry, does this not cause the Prime Minister to question his own judgment? Does it not pose for him the necessity of Canada joining with the U.S. Congress in calling for a freeze at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, there are several questions contained in that. The actions of the U.S. Congress, or indeed of Americans who are arguing against President Reagan's over-all nuclear policy, are one thing. I am not supporting President Reagan's over-all nuclear policy. It is not my purpose to do so. I have not been asked to do so. What I am supporting is NATO's two-track policy. That can be accepted even if we agree with some of the statements quoted by my hon. friend.

I have not seen that statement by the former director of the CIA, but some of the quotes would be acceptable to me in the sense that there is certainly power of overkill in the United States now and power of overkill in the Soviet Union now. In other words, either side is in a position to destroy not only the enemy but probably a large part of humanity as well.

• (1430)

I do not know, Madam Speaker, what kibitzing is coming from the NDP. If they want a rational answer they should listen to me.

CANADIAN ROLE IN SEEKING DISARMAMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has just said that the United States is in a position to wipe out the Soviet Union. Of course the Soviet Union is now in a position to wipe out the United States, and both are potentially in a position to wipe out mankind. If that is the case, I should like to know the logic of the two-track position. Why is it necessary to go ahead with the Cruise? Does it not make much more sense for Canada to act as a peaceful power, to take serious steps to bring about nuclear disarmament in the world, instead of contributing to its escalation in the opposite direction?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, it makes eminent good sense. I hope we are acting as a peaceful power and a power that is seeking the eventual reduction of nuclear arms. That does not contradict my previous assertion that both super powers can destroy each other. That is the rationale of the deterrence that each side holds and which has deterred nuclear war since both sides have had the nuclear power.

The Cruise, the Pershing II, and the SS-20s are a completely different argument. What NATO is attempting to do is answer a theatre nuclear arm, the SS-20. We are saying that in so far as the survival of the United States the survival of the Soviet Union are concerned, both have cause to fear each other and therefore they are unlikely to start fighting against each other. But what is to prevent the Soviet Union if it wishes to start a limited war in Europe with SS-20s? I do not know how limited it would be, but we know they have 300 or 400 SS-20s, each with three nuclear warheads which are capable of destroying all of western Europe. We know that as a fact.

How does NATO, which includes countries in Europe, counter that? It can only counter it by saying to the United States, "Well, if the Soviet Union attacks western Europe, you send off your big ones and destroy all of humanity."

Does it not make sense, Madam Speaker, in Europe to try to have a counter threat to the Soviet Union so that it will not use its SS-20s on western Europe, any more than it would use its ICBMs on the United States of America?

AGREEMENTS WITH SASKATCHEWAN ON USE OF TESTING RANGE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a brief question for the Prime Minister whose letter I read with interest, particularly where he made reference to hypocrites, and with respect to the statement made by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam and the questions of the Leader of the New Democratic Party. I am sure that the answer to the question is yes.

Do there exist in the Government of Canada four agreements: one of August, 1953; one of October, 1965; one of May, 1975, and one of April, 1981, signed originally by the Government of Canada with the Douglas NDP Government of the Province of Saskatchewan and latterly, in 1981, between the Government of Canada and the Government of Mr. Blakeney, the NDP Government of Saskatchewan, giving the Government of Canada exclusive use of the Primrose testing range in that Province, and making specific reference to missiles' testing, and again, ratified and reconfirmed in 1981 by the NDP Government of Mr. Blakeney, of Saskatchewan?

I think if the Government could table those four agreements, which I do not think affect national security, that would be of some assistance in sorting out the hypocrites and establishing the political stances of the political Parties on this question.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would not want the Hon. Member to make too much of a phrase in which I said that the anti-Americanism of some Canadians verges on hypocrisy, but I think the question of the Leader of the Opposition stands. He has referred to some facts which are well known. I could not vouch for the exact dates that he mentioned, but I think the case that he intended to make by his question to me stands, perhaps, for the NDP to consider.

Oral Questions

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENTS BE TABLED

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of National Defence would undertake to consider the request I have made with respect to the tabling of those four agreements. In that way we could all be fully familiar with the stance of the New Democratic Party and its obvious support of the testing of missiles under the NDP Government of the Province of Saskatchewan.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I am ready to examine the proposition made by the Leader of the Opposition and will certainly look into it very carefully. If there is nothing confidential about them, they could be tabled. I am sure they would provide some light to the NDP.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CONTRACT TO PURCHASE DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT FOR ICEBERG RECONNAISSANCE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board who is supposed to be looking after the financial affairs of the country and the spending of money.

The Minister will know that yesterday the Minister of the Environment announced a sweetheart contract for de Havilland Canada for $37 million to fix up a Dash-7 which is really only worth $12 million. The program was announced on the basis of special recovery. This is a cost to Canada of $100,000 for every job created.

Is this part of the Government's Special Economic Recovery Program, or is it really a program to recover de Havilland the same as the Government is trying to recover Canadair with sweetheart contracts for aircraft that may or may not be required?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I will be pleased to take that question. The purchase of the Dash-7 is part of the Special Economic Recovery Program. I might indicate to the hon. gentleman, who comes from Toronto where de Havilland is located, that I would have expected him to be more favourably inclined toward an announcement like that.

The aircraft is being purchased for ice reconnaissance purposes. It is an application to which the plane has not been put before, but to which it can be very readily adapted.

I should like to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member for Scarborough East, who asked a question about this in committee last week, that we are going to be incorporating Canadian technology into the Dash-7, involving side-looking radar which, of course, is being developed in Canada, with 85 per cent Canadian content, as a result of the initiative of Canadians in this regard.

COMPARISON OF AIRCRAFT TYPES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister where he gets the idea that people will buy this aircraft as a surveillance aircraft when he knows that it is a short-range aircraft. Its ability to stay over an air target area is less than 60 per cent of the 1950 vintage Lougheed Electra that is presently being used. How does he expect people to spend money to buy an aircraft that cannot perform as well as one with 1950 technology?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that the purchase is being made after due and very serious consideration. I would hope that he would have sufficient pride in Canadian technology to give every consideration to initiatives being taken by the Government and by a Crown corporation of Canada to develop Canadian technology not only for domestic purposes but for international purposes.

I might indicate to the hon. gentleman that it happens that in Canada we have ice conditions in the Great Lakes region for close to three months of the year.

FISHERIES

GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS ON FINANCING OF INDUSTRY IN QUEBEC

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): My question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

The fisheries industry in Quebec is in very bad shape, if we consider the fact that today, processing plants owned by the Pêcheurs Unis du Québec have not yet started their operations. I know the Hon. Minister has submitted a recovery program, that is, a financing program to the fishermen and plant employees, and also to the financial institutions, so that 2,500 fishermen and factory workers can go to work.

Can the Minister inform the House today whether he feels that the proposed plan will be accepted by all parties, so that factory workers and fishermen can be given the assurance that they will be able to go back to work within the next few weeks?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the problem the Government has decided to examine is far more extensive than the case to which the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) is referring. In fact, we now have five companies in the Maritimes, including the Pêcheurs Unis du Québec, with a total of sixty factories, which are on the brink of bankruptcy.

In the event of a bankruptcy, there will be the usual sales of several million dollars worth of fish at fire sale prices, which would depress prices for the 500 fish-processing plants on the Atlantic coast.

That is why the Canadian Government has suggested that if all creditors were prepared to join in a co-operative effort with the Federal Government, together we would be able to prevent a veritable bankruptcy epidemic.

At this very moment, every single creditor of these sixty processing plants, with 45,000 jobs that are on the line, have agreed to the plan, except for the Government of Quebec, which has seized certain assets. We must not forget that if one creditor starts seizing assets, all others will follow suit in order to recover their losses, and in that case, all the efforts of the Canadian Government would be—

Madam Speaker: Order, order!

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—VARIABLE RATES PROPOSAL—CONSEQUENCES FOR BRANCH LINES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who made it plain at his press conference last week that variable rates would be in his legislation. I am sure the Minister is aware that Mr. Snavely, who did a lot of his consulting work, said that this will depopulate the Prairies, even though he agrees with the efforts of the Minister. Would the Minister tell us if he is going to continue to insist on installing the principle of variable rates, which will allow the railways to continue to abandon another 44 branch lines, or nearly 2,000 kilometres of railway in western Canada, which was their initial objective? Some of those lines are in the basic network.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, obviously my hon. friend wants the best of both worlds. He does not want to see the Bill, yet he wants to see what is in the Bill. I believe we are going to decide on that in a few minutes, and in the following days I will have ample opportunity to answer any questions on that particular subject.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, we could not care less if we never saw the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: If the Minister would agree to withdraw it, go back to the drawing board and accept our alternative proposal, he would have no problems in western Canada.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE EQUITY SHARES IN RAILWAYS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, since statutory grain rates and rehabilitation of main railway lines in western Canada are two entirely separate issues, and since only about 15 per cent of track capacity will be used to haul grain, it is obvious, contrary to the mythology perpetuated by the Minister and others, that the railways will be rehabilitated to haul all commodities and people, not just grain. Does the Minister agree that he and the Government have a responsibility to protect the investment of the taxpayers of Canada for capital improvements on the railways, and obtain a return on that investment by way of dividends, by taking equity shares in the railways in return for the capital investment?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat the answers I have already given. My hon. friend says he could not care less if he never saw the Bill. I was in the West on Friday. My hon. friend, the Minister of Agriculture, was there yesterday. Everyone we met said, before committing himself or herself one way or the other, "We want to see the Bill." This afternoon at a press conference I will have a chance to quote from different farm and other organizations in the West, way back to 1981, asking the Government to come up with a Bill on the Crowsnest rate. That has been said in the West for three years now, and I will demonstrate it by quoting from these people this afternoon. That is what we are doing.

FISHERIES RELATED INDUSTRIES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The Minister of Fisheries has announced plans to spend $140.7 million—$12.2 million of it in New Brunswick—"to give tools to fishermen to improve their profession." He has indicated some very interesting programs to achieve that purpose. In view of the serious structural problems which have been identified in the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada and in Quebec, will the Minister tell the House if his Department has accepted, as a special target, the development of fishing related industries in Atlantic Canada and Quebec, such as the manufacture of deck hardware, navigational aids, fishing equipment, and medicines and chemicals from ocean resources, these industries where the big bucks are really being made?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first of all I would like to join with the honourable member in congratulating the Minister of Fisheries on the tremendous initiative which he has taken for the whole fisheries industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: Second, Madam Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member has enunciated very clearly the opportunities which could arise as a result of the development of that indigenous resource. My colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, in his previous capacity as Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, has already indicated to me several opportunities he sees in the manufacturing and processing side of the industry and we will be working together in this regard.

SUPPORT SOUGHT FOR ENTREPRENEURS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to hear the Minister mention the manufacturing and processing aspect of the industry. The Minister of Fisheries has just indicated that this aspect of the industry is in real trouble, on the verge of bankruptcy, and the Minister has indicated measures to make the fishing industry more efficient. I would like to know if the Minister of Industry will demonstrate some action in his Department in targeting for supplementary industries relating to the fishing industry, such as deck hardware and navigational aids, and industries which do not exist now in the Atlantic Provinces and in Quebec, and where there are really good paying jobs and a tremendous potential? Will the Minister activate his Department to move from being passive to being active in bringing together the entrepreneurs and the programs to help lift the fishing industry out of its doldrums and make the largest fishing potential in the world the most productive?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member raises some excellent ideas and I would be more than happy to work with him in maximizing our potential in this regard.

SHIPBUILDING

FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT—MERIT OF SAINT JOHN PROPOSAL

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Several months ago, the Canadian Government asked two companies for an analysis of the construction of several frigates. One of the companies is Scan Marine, located in Longueuil, and the other company is located in Eastern Canada and supported by U.S. know-how through the Sperry Corporation. Can the Minister inform the House whether he can confirm what the Conservative critic, supported by the Member for Joliette, said, namely, that the best ship is the one proposed by the company in Saint John, and that the analysis is now complete and has been submitted to Cabinet? Can the Minister confirm to the House today that the best ship is the one proposed by Saint John, as maintained by the Progressive Conservative Party?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I feel that as Minister of National Defence, my main responsibility is to ensure that our Canadian forces get the best possible equipment. I think that our main consideration must be to provide the most effective equipment available to our armed forces who must be able to use it for our country's defence. As far as the frigate program is concerned, two proposals were made to the Department, one by Scan Marine and the other by Saint John Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. Both proposals have been assessed as objectively as possible and without a hint of partisanship on the part of the Department. We have tried to weigh the pros and cons of each proposal and were very careful to remain as objective as possible. This assessment is now nearing completion and will be submitted to the Cabinet Committee on Defence and subsequently to various agencies which will have to check the assessment. An appropriate decision will be made, as objectively as possible, considering the interest of all Canadians.

CANADIAN HERITAGE

BICENTENNIAL OF UNITED EMPIRE LOYALISTS

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In light of the program of support for national celebrations marking landmark events in Canadian history, a program which has allocated $1.6 million to celebrate the four hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Jacque Cartier's landing in Canada, and $1.5 million to the Toronto International Festival as part of Toronto's sesquicentennial, would the Minister indicate, other than negotiations, what actual contributions, financial and otherwise, his Ministry has made to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec or Ontario, to mark the bicentennial of the United Empire Loyalists' migration to Canada, in 1983 and 1984?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that several months ago, the Premier of Ontario wrote to the Prime Minister of Canada, informing him that Ontario intended to celebrate this occasion but did not intend to spend considerable sums of money, in view of the economic situation. We expressed our interest to the Government of Ontario and indicated our intention to make a contribution to the festivities. A few weeks ago, I had a meeting with the Minister of Agriculture of Ontario who has promised to send me a list, by the end of May, of projects the Government of Ontario would like to submit to the Canadian Government for joint financing.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR ISSUANCE OF UNITED EMPIRE LOYALISTS COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post who recently announced the issuing of a postage stamp, jointly by Canada and France, for 1984, to commemorate the four hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Jacques Cartier's voyage to America. Has the Minister or his officials considered the issuing of a joint Canada-United States stamp commemorating the bicentennial of the migration of loyal Americans to Canada, for the 1984 stamp program?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, as you know, there is already one joint stamp issue being planned with the U.S. authorities. I am not ruling out the possibility that there could be another joint issue, and I think the Hon. Member's suggestion could be referred to the committee which advises the Minister on the selection of subjects for Canadian stamps.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CANADIAN CONTENT REQUIREMENT—MOVEMENT OF PLANT FROM HAMILTON

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry. Allen Industries were located in Hamilton. They have decided to move their plant to Richmond, Virginia. They make moulded insulation and they intend to sell by far the bulk of the moulded insulation they will make at that plant, to Ford, at Oakville. Will the Minister meet with Ford and Allen Industries and point out to them that, under the auto pact, there is indeed a requirement for some Canadian content, and that we are not going to tolerate this continuous moving away of plants from Ontario and other parts of Canada to the United States?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for giving me advance notice of the question. I would like to advise him that my officials, as well as my colleague, the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs, are already on top of the situation, and a meeting with the company is planned within a week.

FIRESTONE TIRE AND RUBBER COMPANY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I am disappointed to hear about the Minister of Indian Affairs because nothing he has ever touched has ever worked. In the process of meeting with Allen Industries might the Minister be able to report to me on the outcome of meetings with Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, another company which seems to be running into serious difficulties in Hamilton, to determine whether or not Firestone is ready to go ahead with its expansion and whether it is likely to get the money promised it by the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I know the Hon. Member is interested in this issue as are all Members from Hamilton, but again my colleague, the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs, who has dedicated a substantial portion of his life to the economic betterment of the people of the Hamilton area, is on top of this matter. We are meeting with the Firestone people this afternoon. But I do know of the Hon. Member's interest in this regard, and I hope we will have a positive response for him this afternoon.

MEDICAL CARE

MOOSE FACTORY HOSPITAL—RATIO OF NURSES TO PATIENTS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. On April 22 the Minister wrote a letter to the James Bay Tribal Council regarding the Moose Factory Hospital ward closure, stating that the hospital would be able to operate with the ward closed. Since the closure of the ward the nurse-patient ratio has gone from one to four, to one to eight or nine. Can the Minister tell me if her Ministry is looking into adding additional staff to the hospital to bring it back to the ratio of one to four?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Not to my knowledge, Madam Speaker. The objective I have in the Department is, of course, the health and well-being of people. The ratio might have changed the way the Hon. Member suggests. However, the beds have never been fully occupied in the past and we have adapted to that in deciding on the allocation of staff to the Moose Factory General Hospital. I am satisfied for the time being that the health of the people there is well looked after.

QUALITY OF SERVICE

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, in checking this morning with the Tribal Council I have been assured that the service since the closure of that ward has decreased. Can the Minister tell me if her officials are prepared to meet with the Council as soon as possible to make sure health care needs are met?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I can reiterate to the Hon. Member, as I did to the local community, that there has been no reduction in services provided by the Moose Factory Hospital to the people of the James Bay area. Basically that is what counts. That is our objective, and it is well met.

PENSIONS

SPLITTING OF CREDITS FOLLOWING MARRIAGE BREAKDOWN—LEGISLATIVE ACTION QUERY

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board who will know that in the Green Paper on pension reform, strongly endorsed by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, there was a call for the splitting of pension credits on marriage breakdown. Does the Minister intend to change the Superannuation Act and the Diplomatic Service Act regarding that particular item?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, this kind of question and a number of others involving the Superannuation Act will be considered by the Government in the context of the debate on the Green Paper. As yet the Government has not taken any decision with respect to proposals in the Green Paper concerning the private pension system, and we feel our decisions with respect to any changes in the Public Service system should be in the context of our consideration of the larger issues.

Mr. Dantzer: Madam Speaker, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and the National Council of Women are today appearing before the Pension Committee. I am sure those groups will be very sorry to hear that the Government is dragging its feet on this issue when it should be the leader.

PROTECTION SOUGHT FOR EX-SPOUSES OF ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It is my understanding that the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act does not include any provision for splitting of pension credits on marriage breakdown. The Minister will admit this is particularly important because members of the Armed Forces travel all over the world and it is very difficult for their spouses, who usually travel with them, to get employment during their careers. I would like to know what the Minister is doing to protect those spouses in the event of marriage breakdown.

• (1500)

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, all of these questions on superannuation are under study in our Department. I admit to the hon. gentleman that in the Armed Forces there are some exigencies that are not the same as with other public servants. I assume him that I will look into the matter and give the Hon. Member an adequate answer in written fashion.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LOST TIME DURING ALLOTTED DAY

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday was an allotted day but as a result of the Government not having its Members in place, we were unable to vote. Consequently, on our allotted day we lost two and three-quarters hours of debating time which was being devoted to the very important mining industry in Canada.

I would ask the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard), in arranging the House business for next week, if he would consider taking that loss of time into account and perhaps replacing it as soon as possible?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I shall try to count the Government days lost as a result of a similar attitude on the part of the Opposition, and as soon as I have been able to make some comparisons, I will be in a position to give the Hon. Member a more knowledgeable answer.

I believe he inadvertently misled the House in the preamble to his question. I would suggest that in relation to the question he asked about the Primrose air weapons range there are a couple of factors that bear on his statement.

Question No. 4,745—Mr. Lewis:

1. How many individual income tax returns were filed for the (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 taxation year by taxfilers in the net income category of (i) under $20,000 (ii) $20,000 to $29,999 (iii) $30,000 to $39,999 (iv) $40,000 to $49,999 (v) $50,000 and over?

2. For the same years and in the same net income categories, how many returns were (a) assessed as submitted by the taxfiler (b) revised by the Income Tax Department and assessed (c) prepared by someone other than the taxfiler?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): 1. No statistics are produced by "net" income category. The following are comparable statistics by "total" category, which is defined as net income from self-employment plus the total of all income from all other sources, as indicated on page one of the tax return.

Total Income Category	1979 Tax Year	1980 Tax Year	1981* Tax Year
under $20,000	12,059,247	11,346,417	10,796,727
20,000–29,999	1,842,067	2,269,389	2,584,292
30,000–39,999	474,724	674,784	1,008,650
40,000–49,999	143,694	227,638	340,396
50,000 and over	162,423	246,650	336,170
Total	14,682,155	14,764,878	15,066,235

* These are preliminary figures, representing approximately 97.5 per cent of the total number of returns expected for the 1981 taxation year.

2. We do not produce figures by income range on changes or unchanged returns. The totals are as follows:

	1979 Tax Year	1980 Tax Year	1981* Tax Year
(a) Assessed as submitted	8,367,822	8,067,040	8,112,023
(b) Revised by the Income Tax Department	6,314,333	6,697,838	6,954,212

* These are preliminary figures, representing approximately 97.5 per cent of the total number of returns expected for the 1981 taxation year.

(c) Since the introduction of the T1 special return it has not been possible to produce statistics on the types of tax return preparers as the T1 Special does not provide a space for completion by the preparer.

Mr. Smith: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The question mentioned by the parliamentary secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, prior to the recess I was pointing out that the Government has been borrowing money during this session of Parliament at the rate of some $68,833,482 per day, an amount, over this Parliament, of $77.3 billion in extra borrowing. I should like to continue my remarks and point out how the Government has absolutely wasted at least $1.3 billion of that in concert with the Conservative-Social Credit Government of British Columbia on a boondoggle called northeast coal. That misinvestment, that misallocation of financial priorities has already made its devastating effect clear by the loss at this point of 460 permanent coal mining jobs in south-eastern British Columbia.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The noise level in the House is too high. Would Hon. Members please hold their conversations outside.

Mr. Kristiansen: About a week and a half ago BCTV carried a program showing the effect of the Government's policies in terms of putting working people at each other's throats even today in northern British Columbia. It showed a disgusting scene of workers coming in from the Provinces of Alberta, Ontario and Quebec to northern British Columbia, taking jobs away from British Columbians with Alberta contracts because the Conservatives and Liberals in the Social Credit Government of British Columbia had manipulated the Labour Code to open those jobs to non-union people. Workers from outside the Province with outside contracts were stealing B.C. jobs at the cheap rate of $7 per hour. They had to rent tarpaper shacks for their families, not good construction camps, but tarpaper shacks, at $450 per month for families sometimes with four children.

One worker who was interviewed on the program said that with $7 per hour wages, at the rate he was being charged for rent he would be better off to go back to Alberta and draw Unemployment Insurance benefits. The TV reporter asked him why he did not quit, and he said that if he quit he would not get Unemployment Insurance, and besides, in the hobo jungle just down the road there were ten guys willing to battle and replace everyone who had a job. The cameras went down to the hobo jungle. Some of us never dreamed that in this part of the twentieth century we would see such pictures again. It was right out of "Grapes of Wrath".

That is the kind of stupid, insane policy that the Government is fostering by churning out $1.3 billion in public moneys along with its Conservative cohorts in the Socred Government of British Columbia. It is just shovelling it out by the carload in order to give contracts to their friends, even though, because of declining demand which was forecast and declining prices which were forecast, the federal Government and the provincial Government of B.C. had some airy-fairy figures drawn out of a never-never land on which they based the $1.3 billion subsidy to that development.

Already 460 people in southeastern British Columbia coalfields have been laid off because neither the price nor the demand are sufficient for the coal that we already produce with existing rail facilities and existing port facilities. This is a suicidal policy. It is an example of how that bunch over there has thrown away billions and billions of public money. When it comes to a choice between investing in and assisting established communities and groups of people versus building new pyramids somewhere in areas that do not have an existing population, those people over there and their allies in the provincial Government of British Columbia will always choose to build new empires and leave people in existing communities to rot. No one knows why.

The Sun in Vancouver of April 21 carried an article by a Mr. Halvorson, a Vancouver mining consultant, in which he said:

> The B.C. government, through that subsidy, created competition to an existing business, may cost people their jobs, and perhaps destroy the owners' investment.

So, by building with public money an alternative to the production and transport facilities we already have in the southeast, they are not only throwing away workers' jobs there but destroying the return on the private investment that already existed in southeastern British Columbia. They are doing that at the expense of the public purse. The article continues:

> In the northeast coal project the provincial government is subsidizing two new coal mines into production through massive investment in railways and other infrastructure. Those mines will sell coal into an oversupplied Japanese market in direct competition to mines that already exist in southeastern B.C. There is little doubt that serious job loss, and even mine closures, could occur in the southeast over the next two year period.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker. It has already started to happen even without the northeast project coming on stream. Meanwhile, the people in northeastern B.C. are not even getting the temporary advantages of decent jobs at decent pay.

The contractors of northeastern B.C. are not getting the temporary advantages either. Because of the meddling of the Labour Relations Board, jobs are going to contractors from outside the Province. What kind of insanity leads to that kind of policy?

This is not the only area in which the federal Government continues to wastefully churn out public money. British Columbia is not the only place. Every time the federal Government decides to give some minimal cost-of-living increases to pensioners across the country, what happens? We see provincial Governments not only pocketing those increases but dipping further into the pockets of ordinary pensioners, ripping them off to fatten their own coffers at federal Government expense. When are those people over there going to smarten up and tell some of those Tory and Socred Provinces that they cannot just steal public money, and they cannot steal out of the pockets of pensioners in order to make themselves look better on the books.

About a week and a half ago a Mr. and Mrs. Rhodes from my constituency, dropped into my office and showed me their last cheques. The federal Government in its Old Age Security payment had given them each an extra $2.34. That is a good policy. People should have payments to keep pace. However, at the very same time, their supplemental cheque from the provincial Government of British Columbia was cut by $3.00 a month each. The federal Government gave them four dollars and the Province took away six dollars. In some cases the amount which the Province stole from those people was up to $50 a month per couple. The federal Goverment is allowing that to happen. What kind of agreement does it have with the Provinces? What kind of misplaced trust does it have in Tories and Socreds that it keeps on handing money over to them to stick in their own pockets?

About the only Government that I know of which has a worse financial record of getting deeper and deeper into debt at public expense than this Government in Ottawa, is the provincial Government in Victoria. Eight years ago it had an accumulated debt of some $4 billion which was spread over 100 years of Governments of all political stripes. That has more than trebled in just the last eight years. It is a record which almost makes the miserable record of the federal Government look good. That is the kind of wastage we are seeing at public expense continually.

Surely it is time, Mr. Speaker, for some new system of priorities. If the Government is going to go into debt, let it go into debt to create work and not simply to put people on welfare for years and years, not simply to pass on contracts to its friends, which is the only motivation we can think of for the northeast coal subsidy because it is going to devastate existing communities. We just cannot picture any other motivation. If Government wants to borrow, if it wants to use its existing financial capacity to build new industries, it must work out arrangements with some of our trading partners and, if we are going to sell resources and commit resources on a long-term basis, we must get something in return. We must have assurance that some of the facilities which will service these industries will be built in this country, with this country's labour and with this country's trained people. That would be a valid expenditure. It is time, Mr. Speaker, to put an end to the Government's just shovelling money out of the public bucket into its friends' pockets. Unfortunately, that is all that we have seen happening over the last number of years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments? Debate.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on Bill C-151. This Bill seeks authority to borrow an additional $14.7 billion. To date, the Government has come to Parliament seven times in this session to seek more borrowing authority. In fact, the projected financial requirements of the Government between 1983-84 and 1986-87 total some $93 billion. This would indicate that Parliament is in for a steady stream of large borrowing Bills over the next few years. There are at least four distinct economic costs to continuing deficit financing of this magnitude. First, there is the ever-growing interest burden. This year interest on the national debt cost an estimated $17.6 billion, or the equivalent of $1,700 per taxpayer.

The second cost is the loss of fiscal flexibility. In the past the Government had the option of undertaking costly and significant fiscal measures to spur recovery. Today, Mr. Speaker, there is virtually no room remaining in which to manoeuvre.

The third cost is that the productive private sector when endeavouring to borrow is crowded out, and this is causing interest rates to rise. In the 1982 calendar year, federal Government borrowing accounted for 51 per cent of the net new security issues placed in Canada. If there was less federal Government borrowing, there would certainly be less demand for money and interest rates would be lower.

The fourth cost, Mr. Speaker, is one of confidence. The investment community does not trust a Government which continues to live so far beyond its means. They do not want to hold a currency which continues to be debased by excessive Government borrowing. As a consequence, our dollar is at a low ebb, thus driving up the cost of living in Canada. As the Government attempts to support the dollar, our job-creating capital has gone elsewhere.

By way of comparison between today's expenditures and those of 1968-69, when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office, I wish to place on the record the total spending for that year as taken from the book entitled, "How Your Tax Dollar is Spent" as it was reported by the then President of the Treasury Board, the Hon. C. M. Drury. It is an amazing little document. I have kept copies of it in my files, Mr. Speaker. In this report, the total listed for all functions of Government in 1968-69 amounted to $10,767 million. That is truly amazing. We were then a nation of some 20 million people. We have grown slowly in population to 25 million, but spending on a public accounts basis has grown for this year to a total of $90 billion, an increase of some 555 per cent. The reasons behind this fiasco are well documented. For example, the Auditor General of Canada, Mr. Dye, comments as follows in his Report:

> The commitment for $1.7 billion to Petro-Canada by the department, without commensurate responsibility, raises serious concerns.

In an appendix to his report, Mr. Dye also noted other deficiencies: inadequate management controls in overpayments totalling $285.3 million under four major energy programs by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; the Department of Public Works failed to recover expenditures from Canada Post Corporation of $61 million; during fiscal 1981, the Unemployment Insurance Commission is estimated to have made overpayments of $178 million, and the list goes on, page after page.

We are speaking today about a vast expenditure of money. Some of it undoubtedly will be well spent. Unfortunately, however, I fear that a large percentage of the amount listed in the Bill before the House will be wasted or spent frivolously on so-called make-work projects. These projects do not necessarily improve the infrastructure of Canada, nor do they give meaningful or long-term employment to our people.

I believe it is way past the time when we should be giving recognition to some salient facts, and plan accordingly for some meaningful Canadian development. For example, Canada is one of the major trading nations of the world. Everyone seems to know that, Mr. Speaker, but the Government. Canada is also a major deep sea shipping nation, but not everyone is aware of that particular fact. Here we are, a major deep sea trading nation, and yet we do not have a Canadian merchant marine. We have relied for years on being able to buy the shipping services we need in the marketplace. We are paying out more than $3 billion annually to foreign shipping lines for their services, while our unemployment rolls exceed 1.5 million people at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars. This simply does not make any sense, Mr. Speaker, at least not to me. That is a lot of service, and the practice of buying it abroad derives directly from the current Canadian marine policy of depending on the world market to provide bottoms for carrying Canadian goods overseas. It is a policy which has satisfied our needs up to this point, but whether or not it will prove adequate for our future needs is open to question.

I say this, Sir, because our present policy is cast in doubt by a number of developments in the world of international shipping. Neither does it seem at all prudent at this moment to depend on the international shipping world to provide for Canadian concerns in our northern areas. Nor should we assume that the marine policies we depend on today will enable us tomorrow adequately to cope with problems arising from development of our varied and invaluable offshore resources. We have been able to rely on the free market for deep sea shipping because of a world-wide surplus of vessels has made it possible until now to buy shipping services at very good rates. However, economic, technological and political developments may soon reduce the size of the free market fleet on which we depend. Growth in the world economy, slow though it may be at the moment, will gradually reduce the available surplus of shipping capacity. Furthermore, much of the surplus capacity swinging at anchor today, as we say in Atlantic Canada, while shipowners wait for the market to sort itself out, may never sail again. They may never sail again! They may be so outmoded in terms of fuel efficiency and pollution control by the time world markets strengthen again that they will have become obsolete. This is the danger we face. The world surplus in shipping capacity is, in this respect, more apparent than it is real.

In addition, political developments may reduce the size of the free-market fleet on which current Canadian marine policy depends for its effectiveness. We could find before the end of this decade that Canada cannot as readily obtain, as it does today, ships to carry at competitive rates Nova Scotia's apples to Britain, or New Brunswick timber or lumber to Scotland, or Prince Edward Island's potatoes to Venezuela. The issue, Sir, is a bottom-line issue, it is a pocketbook issue.

I say to you, Sir, and through you to the Government, that anything which impairs the ability of a trading nation to sell its goods has potentially grave implications for the health of its national economy. In such a context the limitations of current national marine policy are readily perceived. These limitations also become obvious the moment the problem of exerting effective and necessary control over Arctic and offshore development is addressed.

We will likely see large-scale commercial shipping invade the Arctic before the end of this decade, Mr. Speaker, since Canada has proven hydrocarbon reserves in the high North. I was in Frobisher Bay, for example, only last year and I was informed that drilling operations at that time were being carried out in Davis Strait. However, Canada's position in its Arctic waters is that it has sovereign control. Now, Sir, in theory this means ships moving in the region, in particular the Northwest Passage, will be subject to Canadian regulation and control. United States interests, however, reject the notion of Canadian sovereignty over the Passage and they claim it as an international waterway in which all shipping should have access. But the reality of the situation is that we simply do not have adequate means to assert our authority over the North.

Unfortunately, our current national marine policy is not directed toward encouraging development in Canada of the marine technologies which would allow us to exploit fully our opportunities in the North or cope with the problems of sovereignty there, any more than it is geared to deal with the opportunities and problems associated with our offshore resource development. Our offshore resources afford us opportunities which extend well beyond catching fish, well beyond pumping oil. We have a chance to develop here and now in Canada world class technical and ocean engineering skills. We have a moment in time in which to begin building technologies and services which ultimately we can export as readily as we export anything else that we make in this country. But the time to sieze that moment, Sir, is now. We cannot fritter away this time while offshore resource development is in its infancy. The time to seize that moment is now not later when other patterns of satisfying those needs have established themselves.

Beyond all that, we need to develop such skills and technologies at home in order to safeguard our interests in actually harvesting offshore resources. The issue is too vital, I submit, to be left to others. No one else will care as much as we do about whether or not Canadian fish and Canadian oil are safely exploited, Sir, in the same waters and at the same time. We need to develop the means to control our own offshore expansion. No one should for a moment imagine that either offshore development or the controls and technologies associated with it can mature in a context other than one established in larger measure by a national marine policy.

It is not hard today, when you start talking about this matter of a national marine policy, to find yourself dealing with an amazing array of issues. The shipbuilders, the ship repairers, ship suppliers, marine unions, all legitimately have something to say on this particular subject. Up to this point we have had a marine policy in this country which has served the nation if not the industry very well. But circumstances, Sir, are changing. There are forces loose in the world of international shipping which may affect the way in which we shall conduct international trade. There are problems associated with Arctic and offshore resource development which require, at least in part, a marine oriented technological response from this nation. In short, we need desperately a national marine policy which takes into consideration these new realities. It must not,

I say, Sir, be a regional or a parochial policy. International trade and resource development are national issues—national pocketbook issues, I might say.

Now, the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association reports that in December of last year employment reached a ten-year low of 8,500 people, a drop of some 5,700 people or 40 per cent of their work force. In one area alone, namely the Atlantic trawler fleet, there is a need for ship replacement over the next ten years which will mean over $3 billion worth of shipbuilding work. Much of this will be lost to Canadian industry unless there is a change in the present policy which encourages domestic fishing operators to buy offshore. Not a single fishing vessel was ordered from Canadian yards in 1982. However, five were imported for a total of 27 trawlers brought in since 1979.

Our ability, Sir, to compete in world markets, our ability to control and protect our resources, impinges directly on the economic well-being of the nation as a whole. National marine policies which touch on such issues are as important to the people of Alberta or the people of Saskatchewan as they are to the people of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, or Liverpool, or Bridgewater or Lunenburg or Halifax. I say, Sir, that the national interest must come first. We must not confuse, for example, the laudable desire to build ships in Canada or create a fleet carrying the Canadian flag with the need first to get our goods to market in the most cost effective and efficient manner possible.

The objective in shipping, and I speak here with some experience, is to move cargo and not just to sail ships. The creation of a Canadian technology that would help support and control northern and offshore resource development presumes by definition the manufacture of made at home solutions to our problems. Perhaps what we should do in this area, in the short term at least, is to make it financially attractive for Canadians who now own vessels flying foreign flags to register those ships at home.

A national marine policy must be pragmatic, flexible and designed to encourage a range of responses to what I perceive is a wide range of challenges. There is no doubt in my mind that we are equal to the task of creating a policy which constitutes an optimum response to the marine problems which, I submit, now confront us.

I realize that the creation of such a policy will require that the task become something more of a national interest than I perceive it to be at present. But the fact that the time we have in which to act on these problems is rapidly growing short may provide the necessary sense of urgency.

Meanwhile, I am personally comforted by the fact that twice before in its history, this country that we all love so well, this Canada of ours, has been a major seafaring power and, in my opinion, there is absolutely no reason why we cannot become one for the third time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions and comments? Debate.

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise and speak on Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority. However, I find it irresponsible that the Government finds it necessary, after the introduction of a budget, to ask for a $4 billion padding to an already out of control deficit.

This particular Bill is one in a long line of borrowing Bills. In this session of Parliament we have witnessed Bills C-30, C-59, C-111, C-125, C-128, C-143, and now we have Bill C-151.

In its April budget, the Government had the opportunity to indicate its fiscal requirements. Now it has chosen to seek more money after the fact, for some purpose it will not reveal to Parliament, a cushion of $2 billion for this year and a $2 billion pork barrel for the future.

One thing is certain with this Government, for every $3 that it spends it must borrow $1. Government Members state that one must borrow to stimulate. There is no stimulation in this borrowing, only regression.

In an atmosphere of mistrust, one must examine where some of the funds now being requested will go. It is clear from the Government's action that the employment situation and the future employment prospects will remain dismal for at least two million unemployed in this country for at least the next foreseeable few years. At precisely a time when recovery should be encouraged, a series of regressive tax measures are scheduled to pay for the enormous deficit that this Goverment has inflicted on Canadians. We will spend the first 18 months of economic recovery going back to square one.

One of the principal aspects of the Goverment's special recovery program is the so-called Special Recovery Projects of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) which are to be funded at $2.2 billion over the next four years. Only $1.5 billion of this represents new spending, of which $460 million is expected to be spent in the 1983-84 fiscal year. No project in this program can be under way until at least October of 1983. The impact upon the unemployed in Canada will therefore be delayed at least that long.

Unlike most Canadians, the Liberals do not understand that they have to pay as they go. Heavy borrowing and Government projections place a majority of tax increases in place for sometime after the next federal election. It is a deliberate attempt to stifle an incoming Government and to reduce the range of options it will be able to undertake to put this country back on the road to recovery. Instead of real job creation and deficit control, the Government is increasing net future tax increases totalling $5.7 billion over the next four years and deficits totalling more than $102 billion between now and 1986.

In their analysis of the Government's economic position, economists say that it will "have a negative impact on consumer spending by next year, reducing chances for the strong consumer-led recovery the Government is counting on".

On a fiscal year basis, the new tax measures give consumers a $75 million gain this year but take back $365 million and $1.3 billion respectively in the following three years. Canadians needed an across the board decrease in federal sales tax or a shifting forward of next year's anticipated income tax refunds to aid consumers and help the recovery through consumer spending.

The Government has repeatedly demonstrated that it is incompetent, untrustworthy and bankrupt of ideas to effectively govern this nation. It has undermined confidence in the future of Canada and broken down the spirit of co-operation and entrepreneurship that has built this country. The Government has betrayed historic liberalism in favour of a Government-dominated and socialistic controlled society, giving themselves the right to intervene in every facet of society.

The Government has misled Canadians on oil prices, interest rates, job creation, megaprojects, property rights and tax reform, only to mention a few. This so-called Liberal Party has been in power so long that it has lost touch with democracy while muzzling Parliament, changing the law through regulations and Orders in Council and hiding behind Crown corporations and partisan faceless bureaucrats.

The Government's record speaks for itself. There are over two million unemployed and investment has been driven out of the country. Over $10 billion left the country in 1981 because Canadians moved their money to a more receptive investment climate. This money could have created at least 400,000 new jobs in the private sector.

Economic performance in Canada has been dismal. Canada's over-all economic performance now ranks fortieth behind such countries as Equador, Taiwan, Burma, Cyprus, Panama and Algeria. The OECD ranks Canada twenty-fourth and last among all the major industrialized nations in the world. What is the Liberal answer to this? It appoints Donald Macdonald at $800 to $900 per day plus expenses to produce a report at least two years after his appointment.

In November, 1981, the then Minister of Finance predicted an $11 billion deficit. It is now over $30 billion and climbing. The Auditor General says that major Government Departments are sloppy money managers, that there is no direction in personnel management, that 70 per cent of Government contracts are issued without tender, and that there is little or no accountability for millions of dollars poured into Crown corporations.

It would be fair to assume that what is expected of the taxpayer of Canada in the realm of accountability should also be expected of those who govern, particularly at the federal Cabinet level. But of course this is not the case as this Bill C-151 and the previous borrowing Bill C-143 indicate.

.Bill C-143 was the largest borrowing Bill, for $19 billion, in the history of Canada. Only a month later we are asked for an additional $14.7 billion in borrowing authority. Of that, $4 billion will be used, without doubt, to buy votes and pork barrel just before the next election.

Accountability is the cornerstone of the fiscal system of this country. The standard of accountability expected of those who deal with the disposition of taxes raised is far less onerous and in fact downright sloppy. The annual Report of the Auditor General of Canada is replete with page after page of instances in which the Auditor General is not permitted to delve into the affairs of federal Government Crown corporations.

According to the Auditor General, accountability has been limited, particularly as far as Parliament is concerned. Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of Government activities. The growing practice of using Crown corporations to conduct a widening range of Government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibilities for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds. The existing legislative framework for creating, monitoring and, where necessary, changing this abuse should be addressed by the House.

Nothing is being done to address waste such as has been reported by the Auditor General. Inadequate management controls in overpayments totalling $285.3 million have occurred under four major energy programs by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Department of Public Works failed to recover expenditures from Canada Post Corporation of $61 million. During fiscal 1981 the Unemployment Insurance Commission is estimated to have paid out overpayments of $178 million, and the list goes on page after page.

The accountability for public funds borrowed or otherwise has tended to decrease, and the degree of parliamentary scrutiny to which Crown Corporations are subjected varies from sporadic to virtually none. The information Parliament gets from the political appointments to these Crown Corporations with respect to activities of Crown Corporations is in most cases totally unsatisfactory. A clear authority and mandate for spending borrowed money, especially if it goes to Crown Corporations, should be spelled out and accountability to Parliament made mandatory.

The recent federal budget has a critical flaw in that it has been made to appear as offering something to everyone, but in point of fact it mortgages our future without any real current gain in consumer spending. Consumer demand is a key element in any recovery. The latest budget of the federal Government raises personal income taxes by a further $3.6 billion while at the same time increasing our national debt.

Unlike Prime Minister Thatcher or President Reagan, our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) intends to cut the deficit by increasing spending as well as taxes. The share of Gross National Product now taken by Governments in Canada has already hit 40 per cent and is still rising.

We cannot afford to throw money around at a time when every third dollar spent is not covered by revenue but has to be borrowed. You cannot increase investment unless consumption accelerates. If this does not happen, consumer demand will likely stagnate, which will be coupled with increased taxes along with high profile public works programs.

The only light at the end of the tunnel in this country is the fact that the international economy shows signs of improvement. If we had a Government which could complement this recovery with positive private sector confidence in this country we would indeed see a significant turnaround in the near future. Every time the Government borrows large amounts of money, the private sector must meet Government sector financing head on. The result is increased pressure on inflation and higher interest rates.

Bill C-151 and all the other borrowing Bills for which this Government has come to Parliament this session is an exercise in fiscal insolvency. Based on the financial requirements of $26.7 billion and existing borrowing authority of $16 billion, Bill C-151 should be requesting from Parliament $10.7 billion, not $14.7 billion.

The $2 billion cushion for this year is horrendous. However, the second $2 billion that is being requested from the people of Canada as a debt for their children and their children's children can exist indefinitely. I believe it is a conscious effort on the part of the Government to deal with figures of such magnitude as to dwarf the ability of the average Canadian to understand the financial ruin of his or her country.

Is this Bill, one in a steady stream, one that Canadians are to expect as this Government buys time as well as tries to buy votes as it grasps for power?

The extra funds that are being requested in Bill C-151 do not respect any attempt to live within one's means. This should be particularly true for a Government if any example is to be made. The slush funds that this Government keeps to pay off the Donald Macdonalds and the Alistair Gillespies of this country must stop.

The change that is coming will benefit all Canadians. I hope it comes before this current gang makes a bigger mess out of our economy and our country than it has already created.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Are there any questions, or comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart).

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, I stand once again to register my deep disgust with this Government over its fiscal ineptitude, its horrendous mismanagement of funds and especially its flagrant disdain of the serious and growing debt it is imposing on the nation. Trusting this Government financially is like sending Jesse James to the bank with your bank deposit. For the seventh time in this session of Parliament, the longest session in history and still to be concluded, this Government is coming to seek permission to borrow more money. It approaches this House only three weeks after bringing in a budget which added $31 billion to our existing gross national debt of a staggering $134 billion.

With this Bill it wants to increase that burden by an additional $14.7 billion. Of this amount, $2 billion does not have to be used this year; it may be carried forward into the future. The Government thus has a cushion of $2 billion for this year plus another cushion of $2 billion to be used in any year. Maybe it will be used for advertising. The federal Government is now the largest advertiser in the land, and perhaps the money will be used for the next election campaign to tell Canadians how good the Liberal Government has been.

I do not think any Canadian really wants to trust this Government with any more money than is necessary. Approval of this Bill would bring our gross national debt into the $180 billion range and this figure will likely soon reach the $200 billion mark. It is a legacy of debt to our children. It is disgraceful and it is disastrous for the country.

The projected financial requirements of this Government for the next four fiscal years total $93 billion. There is every reason to assume that the Government will be repeatedly back before the House over the next few years asking for permission to borrow even more money. Canadians' only hope in all this is that a general federal election will be called soon so that this Government can be turfed out and an end put to this greedy and irresponsible grab of taxpayers' dollars.

The debt created by this Government and being added to by this Government is becoming, if it has not already become, a permanent fixture in our lives. Not a very pleasant reality, I am sure.

A noted economist was reported as saying that even an economy with full employment could not wipe out Canada's debt load. Imagine that even with full employment! It is unreasonable to assume that the deficit we now bear is cyclical and will vanish when things get better. This is just not the case. Yet when introducing his budget last month, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) had the gall to claim that adding to our over-all debt would eventually reduce it. I do not know how he does his mathematics. Does he really think Canadians are that stupid or that gullible? The only thing I feel sad about is that not more of a clamour is being put up by the Canadian public.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is the great man who gave us the just society. Now we have just a society. He gave us "the land is strong". We know the land is strong otherwise we would not have been able to stagger under the burden that we have had. It is the Government that is weak. The same Prime Minister who years ago boasted he had wrestled inflation to the ground now has a Finance Minister who claims he can beat the deficit into submission. That is tough talk, but that is all it is, talk. Talking will not eliminate the deficit, and that must be done before this country can prosper. Increasing the tax burden on Canadians will not eliminate the deficit. Further spending will not eliminate it. Only a cut in spending and proper fiscal management will do so, coupled with immediate action to halt unnecessary spending. That will put the brakes on the runaway deficit and it will allow the Government to gain control of the situation, if it is willing to bring in the measures to do it. A prime measure, indeed an absolute must, would be the strict adherence to the historic and traditional necessity of accountability.

This Government is not spending its own money and it is not borrowing money in its own name. It is spending the money of the Canadian taxpayer and it is borrowing money which will be paid back by the Canadian taxpayer. Surely the Canadian taxpayer has the right to demand accountability from those who take these actions on their behalf.

Accountability means responsibility. We hear so much of human rights, but how many times do we hear about human responsibility and the responsibility to the Canadian people of that Cabinet across the way? When you use something that belongs to someone else, you are responsible for how it is used. When you do something in someone else's name, you have the responsibility to do it right. If you fail on one or both counts you must consider yourself responsible. You must consider yourself accountable. It is very simple, it is traditional, it is honourable and it is a concept that should be followed in this House, but which heretofore has not been. It is a concept of which the Government is either unaware or absolutely dismisses. This lack of accountability on the part of Government takes many forms. We have Ministers avoiding responsibility for their own actions and those of their Departments—such as the unresigned, the unrepentent leaker across the way. We have Ministers who avoid the responsibility of Parliament by announcing Government policy in public forums, such as the letter of the Prime Minister in the press today and his three stilted television appearances. We have Ministers who either participate in or condone the questionable dealings of former colleagues vis-à-vis Gillespie. We have a Government which avoids its responsibility to Parliament and to Canadians by an abusive use of Orders in Council to create everything from Crown corporations to positions of patronage, to odious and objectionable legislation, and even to internment camps. This deliberate avoidance of accountability is costly to Canadian taxpayers as well as being an affront to Parliament, to ourselves who represent the people and to the people themselves.

Many strong and reasoned objections have been raised regarding the Government's seemingly endless creation of Crown corporations. In his recent Report the Auditor General raised the alarm regarding the dangers inherent and evident in the existence of these agencies of Government. He said—and rightly so—that Crown corporations are "sub-Government" and that they should and must be accountable to Parliament and to the shareholders, which of course is the Canadian public.

It is common knowledge that the nation's actual deficit is far higher than the figures I have just stated. The debts being incurred by Crown corporations are not included in the Government total and they are not audited. In many instances tax dollars are being poured into these corporations with scant regard for the manner in which the funds are being spent. The actions of management are not subject to public or parliamentary scrutiny, and only inadvertently do we learn of the magnitude of the waste involved or of the gross ineptness of operations. I refer, for example, to CIDA and its top-heavy management, the debt load of Haiti of $22 million of taxpayers' money and the project being scrapped. There is no accountability and there have been fraudulent payments specifically pinpointed as being fraudulent, such as one for over $100,000. No one is accountable, and there have been no firings.

The Government's handling of the Crown-owned aircraft company, Canadair, is the most recent example of the inefficiency and waste of Government intervention and why it needs to borrow more money. The Government, without consulting Parliament, has given the company more than $1.5 billion, and the Prime Minister has said that Canadair will likely be asking for more money later this year. The final bill to the taxpayer for the development of the Challenger executive jet may reach the staggering sum of $2.3 billion, for an aircraft fitted with Lycoming helicopter engines.

Adding to the problem, the Government recently put Canadair under the management and control of yet another Crown corporation—the Canada Development Investment Corporation. It sounds wonderful! CDIC is not accountable to Parliament, so there can be little public confidence in entrusting this Corporation to handle the problems of another. The very creation of CDIC and the manner in which it is being run gives clear indication to any Canadian willing to think about it of the fundamental and costly error Government makes when it enters the private marketplace. Formed initially to get the Government out of the Canada Development Corporation, over which it tried to but could not gain control, CDIC was handed responsibility for Ottawa's interest in half a dozen firms. Naturally the corporation exists by virtue of 17 Orders in Council, not by the authority of Parliament. Sell it and reduce the deficit; that is what really counts, not borrowing money.

There has been debate over whether the Corporation was created to permit Government to gain control and power over the private sector or to provide more positions of patronage. It is my feeling that both motives apply. The chairman of CDIC is none other than Maurice Strong, a long-time Liberal and friend of the Prime Minister. The company president is Joel Bell, the architect of the Government's short-lived competitions policy, of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, that millstone around our necks, and the national energy policy. Lots of luck at the gas pumps! Joel Bell was also the man who devised the formula for a tax on consumers to pay for Petro-Canada's purchase of Petrofina. That tax is continuing even though it has been paid. This year Canadians will probably pay $800 million at the pumps, which they should not be paying, to bail out Dome Petroleum. The two men running the Corporation report to Senator Jacob Austin, formally the Prime Minister's principal secretary and directly connected with Canada's involvement in the uranium cartel—another sweetheart! All three of them are dedicated interventionists. Given what we have seen from their past accomplishments, we can be sure their attitudes have not changed.

In addition to Canadair, another Crown corporation now under the umbrella of CDIC is the de Havilland Aircraft company. It too is financially strapped and has been offered a pledge of financial support using Canadian tax dollars. Just this week the Government announced that it will be purchasing a number of Dash-7 aircraft produced by de Havilland for use as water bombers. Of course there is the budget scam known as a job-creation program for the purchase of water bombers, but it all depends upon whether the Province matches the federal Government. It seems that the only reliable customer for this Crown corporation is the Crown itself.

Earlier the Canadian military purchased a few of the Dash-7s for use as executive transport in Europe. The planes were purchased by the Department of National Defence as a replacement for the Cosmopolitan aircraft. The age of the plane to be replaced necessitated a new model, but the underlying reason for the purchase of the Dash-7s was that Canada wanted to sell them to overseas nations and we had to be seen as supporting our own product. Now we know that the $12 million Dash-7 is to be converted, to the tune of $37 million, supposedly to monitor ice. Ice could be monitored a lot cheaper than by spending $37 million on a $12 million aircraft. Canadair and de Havilland are two sinkholes now owned by Canadians who are expected to pump even more money into the gaping maws of each. As I have mentioned, the three men who now control the direction of CDIC played a large role in the creation of Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada is another perfect example of the serious problems which result when the Government intervenes in the private sector, problems which ultimately translate into debt.

Last year the Government imposed a tax upon the consumption of oil and natural gas to finance the purchase of Petrofina by Petro-Canada. As I stated, it should be over at the pumps, but Canadians are still paying that tax. Now it has decided to extend that tax to give the Crown corporation revenue to finance projects in the energy field. Grandly advertising itself as a genuine Canadian feat the corporation tells Canadians, "It's ours". According to a recent Gallup poll, Canadians do not share or accept the proud claim of possession. Some 60 per cent of those polled said they made absolutely no effort to buy their gasoline from Petro-Canada stations, and 45 per cent thought the corporation should be sold, so do I. Canadians fully realize the only thing that is ours is the debt being incurred by Petro-Canada.

Tax dollars are being used by an arm of this Crown corporation—it is a new one, another goody called Petro-Canada International—to assist developing nations to find their own sources of oil and gas. Last year the budget for Petro-Canada International was $21 million. That amount is to more than double this year to $55 million, and the person in control of it answers only to the Minister, not to the House.

Canada will spend almost $80 million in two years to help nations like Tanzania, Senegal, Thailand and Sri Lanka supposedly to become energy self-sufficient, with no assurance of achieving that. Because Petro-Canada is a Crown corporation, not accountable to Parliament or to the taxpayer, the Government does not have to bother justifying anything. How can the Government justify taking tax money from Canadians to aid others when Canada itself is nowhere near self-sufficient in energy? The megaprojects are all cancelled, and the Beaufort Sea project is gone. It cannot even justify the millions and billions it spends on other foreign aid in the form of what it terms soft loans. The Auditor General also raised this issue at the time he presented his very interesting Report. He said that the $4 billion in interest free loans given to developing nations should really be classified as gifts and should be recognized as such for purposes of accounting. Is it any wonder we have to borrow even more billions of dollars? They have been frittered away. By keeping these gifts or grants on the books as loans, the Government is concealing funds which should properly be listed as debts.

I think it is significant that whatever area of Government we examine—and it does not matter where one looks, be it the Report of the Auditor General or the financial situation of the country—the common denominator is not deficit, it is debt. It is deep, dark, dirty, dreaded debt. We have official debts. We have Crown corporation debts. We have debts disguised as loans and letters of comfort. I would suggest that the Government write a letter of comfort to the Canadians who are underwriting these debts. The greatest comfort Canadians could have would be to receive a letter from the Government in the form of a writ announcing the calling of a federal general election. That would truly be a letter of comfort to Canadians.

The Government is before us asking for permission to plunge the nation even deeper into debt. The deficit being incurred by the Government in the name of all Canadians clearly reveals its incompetence to handle its affairs. A major part of the problem is that the Government, through Crown corporations, either establishes companies in competition with those in the private marketplace or tries desperately to salvage companies which cannot compete successfully in the marketplace.

I would now like to touch on the bilingual program in Canada. All of us support the Official Languages Act, but it is being twisted, warped and no longer has merit in the marketplace or in Government offices. Linguistics now take preference over merit. The total cost of the bilingual program, which is absolutely non-productive spending, in 1981-82 was $433,597,000. The projected cost for 1982-83 is $453,222,000.

Maybe we could take a minute to see if this is being done equitably and fairly and whether the money is being well spent. Maybe we should examine a speech by the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) to the Federation Acadienne de la Nouvelle-Écosse on November 13, 1982. At page 2 he said:

—because everything we undertake and everything we are doing to make Canada a French state is part of a venture I have shared for many years—

On the same page he states:

—making Canada a French country both inside and outside Quebec—

If we look at the spending he is talking about, this half a billion dollars. We find that he said this at page 3:

—financial support will be required to fund the cases, to fund the actions that will force the courts to rule on what "where numbers warrant" means and what an educational institution is, because, you know you and I have a long memory now.

A little later on he states this with regard to financing:

Francophone rights cannot be bought, sold, subtracted, divided or multiplied in terms of dollars and cents in the budgets of a troubled economy, and that will apply, I promise you, for as long as I am Secretary of State for Canada. If I have to cut back some programs—and I've already done so—there is one area in which I have no intention of using the scissors: the advancement of Francophone rights in Canada.

On page 8 we read this:

Accordingly, the first thing I did when I joined the Secretary of State Department was to tell the bureaucrats to prepare a development program for French universities, or rather French universities across Canada, in light of the resources and economic characteristics of each region.

Obviously we are going to spend more money. I now refer to Hansard for March 2, 1981 page 7773 where the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) asked Question No. 1,934 as follows:

What is the budget for the current fiscal year of the Official Language Minority Groups Directorate of the Department of the Secretary of State and what is the (a) percentage (b) per capita allocation of this sum to each official language group?

The answer was:

The budget of the Official Language Minority Groups Directorate for fiscal year 1980-81 is $15 million.

The answer stated that the allocation of the budget was as follows: Francophones outside Quebec, $14,073,800 or 94 per cent, Anglophones in Quebec, $926,200 or 6 per cent. I do not call that fair. We all want and have rights in this country. That does not smack of rights to me.

The Financial Post is now carrying stories about what is happening in this country. You must be bilingual to have a job at the Fredericton airport. This applies even to those who have worked there for 15 years. I quote from the article:

None of the eight women who staff car-rental booths at the airport speaks French. To satisfy the new policy, all must either learn, or be replaced.

"I think it's stupid" says an angry Judy Martinson.

She claims that in 12 years staffing the airport's Avis booth, she has never had problems with a customer because of language.

This is to be implemented at Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, Wabush, Newfoundland, Timmins, Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury and North Bay in Ontario. There will be a tremendous backlash if we do not start treating Canadians all equally.

I pointed out in the House today that $454,000, almost half a million dollars, is being allocated to the celebration of Jacques Cartier's discovery of North America. We all laud that. We applaud it. We want to do that. The total cost is $1.6 million. But when we are talking about Gilbert, the first colonizer of Newfoundland, this year we can only come up with some $394,000. Does that smack of equal rights and is the money being spent properly? There is a litany of horror here that does not support the merit system, only by merit of linguistics.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) in a recent speech decried the fact that he voted for this legislation. He too, as are all of us, is not opposed to the Official Languages Act, but terribly opposed to the way it is being negated. At the conclusion of his speech he said:

I must, Mr. Speaker, say to this House, to my constituents and to Canadians, that I have been betrayed in the bilingual program. I supported it. I have to ask that it revert to what it was. Canadians have been betrayed and their resources mismanaged.

That is one aspect of this. We know economically that everything smacks of mismanagement. I conclude by saying that as English-speaking Canadians, we demand fair treatment—not special treatment, just fair. We demand that the merit system remain in place. We demand that the deficit be cut and that linguistics not be given preference in the job market.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker)—Energy—Government coal pricing policy. (b) Request that coal acreage be returned to British Columbia; the Hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek)—Trade—Request that trade offices be established in Taiwan. (b) Possible sale of Candu nuclear reactor to Taiwan; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—Medical care—Scheduled imposition of user fees in Alberta. (b) Inquiry respecting introduction of legislation.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-151, An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, on April 21 I, as the Member of Parliament for Vancouver East, sponsored a community meeting on unemployment which may be of considerable interest to the Members of the House and certainly, I hope, to the Government. About 150 people turned out. There was quite a mixture of unemployed people, people from different ethnic groups in my riding, representatives of Canada Employment and a number of resource persons. We were pleased that Bishop De Roo of Victoria, who is involved in the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops and their statement on "Ethical Reflections on the Economic Crisis", opened this session.

There was very profound discussion. Also, we had six workshops, I would like to state some of the findings of these workshops which were made up of ordinary people. People who are unemployed and very depressed came up with some very positive suggestions from which we may all learn. Also, in the householder, which was mailed to every constituent, we included a questionnaire. Replies are beginning to flood back. I will be glad to make this available if anyone is interested. The replies to some of these questionnaires show feelings that we never see in Parliament. We have statistics, generalizations and reports. We think we know our own riding, but it really hits you when you hear from individual people. For example, an unemployed copywriter feels isolated, depressed, rejected and worthless even though he has considerable skill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair has a little problem with relevance at this point. I know a borrowing authority Bill gives a fairly wide scope. Perhaps the Hon. Member could relate her remarks to the subject of the Bill.

Mrs. Mitchell: I certainly will relate it. I assumed it was implied in the topic. Much of the money to be borrowed under Bill C-151, $14 billion, will be used for job-creation programs. I wish a lot more of it was being so used. The unemployment situation in Canada is truly disastrous.

• (1650)

I want to go back to those very interesting recommendations which I hope will be of interest to the Government because they deal with that very thing and show how the money could be used much more effectively. Some of the human resources that do not cost much are being wasted. They could be mobilized for more self-help and positive programs.

I will mention some examples of people caught in this situation, just to bring matters down to earth. Most of us cannot even comprehend $14 billion, but my examples show real life.

There was an apartment manager and former landscaper who is now on welfare. They only help he feels he is getting from the employment office is that he has been put on a waiting list there. An unemployed secretary is losing confidence but has all kinds of good suggestions for things that could be done. A young man of Chinese extraction, aged 22 is an accountant. He has a part-time job now, after looking for a job for eight months and wasting 200 resumés in the process. A child-care worker with a university education cannot get work. There is a yardsman where crews have been reduced and he feels that the unions have not cared enough. An unemployed timekeeper with lots of experience is on welfare. A trucker aged 53 has lost his recall rights through the union but he has ideas on employment of younger people. A single mechanic aged 25 lives in a dump and says he has lost his goals, and that to survive he begs, borrows or steals. An immigrant whose son is not working feels that we need more manufacturing and better co-operation between labour and management.

I could go on and on giving examples but there is not enough time, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to bring to the attention of the House something that is related to a Bill and the kinds of things that the money should be spent on.

In Vancouver East, unemployment has increased 125 per cent over the past year. Workers who had expectations of a good life for themselves and their families actually suffer culture shock. I find that it is almost worse for people who have been comfortable with savings and a home and who are not the chronic unemployed on welfare. They experience culture shock as they lose cars and homes and in many cases families as a direct result of unemployment. Young people told me that they cannot get into the system. They are told in grandiose terms that they are the hope of the future, the pride of tomorrow, yet they feel hopeless, disenfranchised and discouraged. They cannot get training or jobs and so cannot gain experience. Older people face extreme pressures as children in their twenties and thirties return home to become dependent on their parents.

We held this meeting in the Native Indian centre. Native people, with 75 per cent unemployment, suffer the greatest hardship. Immigrants find that their skills are not being used they cannot get welfare because they are immigrants. Often their sponsors are unemployed as well. Families are under considerable stress and are breaking up. Poverty is worse than ever and crime is increasing. This is what we were told by people working with the unemployed and by the victims of unemployment. As I said, the group came up with a number of recommendations in six workshops. They had some survival tips.

First of all, they want more information regarding Canada employment job-creation programs. The respondents to the questionnaire said over and over again that they do not know what Government programs are available.

Job-creation programs should not be restricted to those on Unemployment Insurance. This is discriminatory. Many young people and women who have not been able to get into the work force and on Unemployment Insurance feel that the jobs are going to the lucky ones, those who at least have Unemployment Insurance benefits. Welfare rates should be increased considerably. There were a number of recommendations that will be passed on to the provincial Governments. There should be free bus passes so that unemployed persons can go to look for work or training.

It was felt that much could be done in community job creation. The money that is available at present for many short-term, stop-gap job-creation programs might be better used in co-operation with the community to create community enterprises that would offer more permanent jobs. That would be a better investment for some of this $14 billion in the Bill. Government grants and programs should respond more to the people. Again, the bureaucrats and the Government lay this on from Ottawa and take a long time to set it up, so much money is spent on the bureaucracy when there could be a more creative way of working with the communities and using their ideas. Action is needed to minimize bureaucratic red tape and to improve Government services. It was felt that we should re-examine the whole question of obsolescence and expand training programs.

There were a lot of complaints about training programs, Mr. Speaker. The Minister says that the new Training Act will be beneficial and more programs will be available. But people in the community find that there is a five-year wait for many training programs.

The Government should introduce long-term employment programs instead of band-aid programs. There should be more offices for part-time and casual employers. In Vancouver there is one office that is quite separate and is inaccessible to a lot of people. It was suggested that there offices should be part of every employment office so that more part-time and casual jobs would be readily available.

There should be job creation for native people who face the greatest unemployment, and this should be given higher priority bu all levels of Government. There should also be affirmative action. There should be more funds available for reforestation jobs and there should be an increase in the amount of Government land available for public housing programs. More environmental cleanup and pollution control in the rivers and lakes as well as the other areas is required. Native counsellors are needed to replace non-natives to work with native people in employment offices.

The workshop on technological change and training had some very good suggestions. It felt there must be more education of the public about technological change. There is great fear and misconception abroad. This requires long-term planning toward human beings. I should like to stress that, Mr. Speaker. We are talking about incentives for high-tech training, and a lot of the money provided by the Bill will likely go toward tech-change incentives. Yet we are not planning for human beings. We cannot stop technological change; we need it but we can also invest in human beings and retraining for alternate kinds of jobs, for shorter work hours. More attention should be paid to a guaranteed income.

People should begin to prepare for several career changes throughout their lives. Education programs must be changed. It was pointed out repeatedly that our institutions are out of date and are not really training people for the future. A fundamental restructuring of education is needed. High school students are being misinformed. They are being offered training programs in traditional careers which are no longer relevant.

Employed and unemployed people must work co-operatively. Unions must be just as concerned with the unemployed as they are with union members and people who have never been in a union.

The Unemployment Insurance Act should be changed. It is based on the assumption that people are cheaters. There is a negative, punitive quality in our Unemployment Insurance Act. Applications for Unemployment Insurance should be simplified.

Wages for Government programs are too low. There should be a minimum wage standard and better co-operation between federal and provincial Governments to make sure that we do not exploit people who are victims of unemployment.

We had assumed that the youth would go into other workshop groups, but they said we have forgotten them and left them out just as everyone else does. Of course, a group was formed especially for them. They felt that unemployed youth and students should not be treated differently in the Summer Canada Program, for example, which excludes youth who are not students, that this was a kind of elitist approach. Young people who have been out of school and out on the streets all winter still cannot get summer jobs. Therefore, they felt there should be general job-creation programs to open up opportunities for all youth. Youth should have a voice. There should be an advisory committee of youth, and youth must organize and lobby and be heard. Out of this meeting, I am glad to see that they agreed to form such a group.

• (1700)

Private industry should do more to help young people to get jobs and experience, even those who are training in colleges. The co-operative kind of training which is being done in some colleges, where there is training on the job, is extremely important. Even if it does not pay, many young people would be willing to do this in order to gain the experience which will qualify them when a job does becomes available. These young people have said that the educational system must be more relevant and honest so that young people will not be so disillusioned. Career courses are trite. Higher education should respond more rapidly and realistically to the needs of youth.

We had a workshop on workers' co-operatives, which I spoke to in the past at some length and which I will not mention today.

We feel that job-creation funds should be made available to small business, and perhaps people on Unemployment Insurance, during a developmental stage, should be allowed to work both in small businesses and in community co-operatives, if it is training people and creating permanent jobs.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we, in our community—and I would suggest other Hon. Members might be interested—have a continuing group which will be concerned about unemployment. We have also a workers' co-operative group which formed out of this experience. I will personally be meeting with the Minister of Employment (Mr. Axworthy) and his officials, to try to work co-operatively in a non-partisan way to deal with these recommendations on behalf of unemployed people in my riding, who are very typical of Canadians generally.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I am going to spend the 20 minutes at my disposal by taking advantage of this opportunity to tell the House some of the horrendous nightmare stories which have occurred because we have an uncaring Government which refuses to take into consideration the wishes of the majority of its constituents on priority matters pertaining to the spending of our dollars. I am going to deal particularly with the subject of the Metric Commission. The Metric Commission to some Hon. Members in the House might be perceived to be the kind of commission which is doing a service for the Canadian people. In reality what it is doing is creating one of the greatest cost drains to the consumers in Canada. At the same time it is causing the Government of Canada to require huge sums of money—and I am not talking about thousands or millions but about billions of dollars—which are being consumed by the Government of Canada, through the suggestions of the Metric Commission, to bring about this forced "march to metric".

It would not be so bad, Mr. Speaker, if we had a Government which would instruct, request or demand of our Metric Commission that it show some cost justification for a forced "march to metric". What we have is a situation where we have to go south of the border to the United States in order to obtain a study which was taken there so we would have some idea of just what it is costing to ge metric in Canada. I can report to this House that in the United States, the General Accounting Office of the United States Government commissioned a study to find out what it would cost if the American people went metric against their will. The final conclusions of the GAO are that the major reasons why the American industry and businesses backed away from going metric is that it would cost between $60 billion and $100 billion. This is what it would cost in the United States if it were to bring about a mandatory "march to metric".

In Canada there was also a report, and an update, on the move to metric during the short time of the Conservative Government in 1979. The big stumbling block concerning metrication in the U.S. was the inability to determine costs and benefits which were cost justified. A report prepared by the Conservative Government in 1979 stated that, based on the limited cost data available to the Comptroller General of Canada, the cost would be somewhere around $100 billion in the United States. So we not only have it confirmed by the General Accounting Office in the United States, but it is reported in our own records in the House of Commons.

Having said that, I wonder what is the reason that we have such an interested group of metric commissioners spending at will hundreds of millions of dollars to bring about this "march to metric". After four years I finally obtained a list of the metric commissioners; where they came from, what they did, how much they get and why they are there. We have a litany of Liberal involvement in Party politics sitting as 20 paid commissioners on the Metric Commission. What do these 20 commissioners receive in remuneration for their work on the Metric Commission, which is paid for by borrowed tax dollars by this Canadian Government? They receive $250 a day plus all their expenses. We have Liberal campaign managers. We have Liberal fund raisers. We have Liberal candidates to feed it in provincial elections. Not all of these people, but most of them, constitute active Liberal involvement in Liberal activities across this nation.

We are to believe, as Members of Parliament, that we are going metric because industry wants it, because the construction industry wants it, the industrial sector wants it and the grocers want it. That is simply not true, Mr. Speaker, and I say this with all due respect to those who are in the House of Commons. The grocers did not want it. They passed a resolution at their meeting before the Order in Council was passed that they did not wish to spend the money on going metric in the retail food sector of Canada. The Government could have saved $32 million a year if it had listened to the retail sector, particularly the grocery sector, who specifically held press conferences and attended meetings of Government officials and said it did not wish to go metric.

What about the people? What do the people think about a $32 million Metric Commission budget? That is $3 million in salaries, $2 million in propaganda, advertising. What do the people of Canada think? We could refer to surveys carried out by independent groups. We could go to Dominion Store which surveyed not less than 68 per cent of its store retail purchasers who did not wish to go metric. We could go to the Canadian Federation of Retail Grocers, 85 per cent of whom were surveyed. We could go to CKO, National News, Radio which commissioned an independent consultant in Toronto to carry out a survey. What was the result of that? Even the school children, even the young people in the age group of 18 to 25 do not wish to go metric. And we have a Metric Commission laced with dollars by this Government, this uncaring Government. We have a Metric Commission laced with taxpayers' dollars which is spending hundreds of millions of dollars a year.

We thought in 1974, when we set up this Metric Commission at an annual budget of $44,000, that that would be ample in order to assist the various sectors in this country to go metric. That $44,000 annual budget in 1973-74 has grown to a $32 million annual budget with a $3,200,000 annual payroll for the Metric Commission in its ivory tower here in Ottawa. We saw an Order in Council passed by the Liberal Government in 1971 which said there shall be up to 15 commissioners, people with their snouts in the trough, the pork barrel group of Liberal workers, at a daily rate of $250 plus expenses. Orders in Council have since been passed requiring more metric commissioners; there are over 20 of them now. Why, they have the editor emeritus of the Lethbridge Herald, a Liberal, whose job it is to shadow me across the country writing letters to the editor. This same Cleo Mowers, metric commissioner, editor emeritus of the Lethbridge Herald, while a commissioner, was paid by the Toronto Globe and Mail to write an article on the editorial page of the Globe and Mail on the reasons why we should go metric.

• (1710)

Mr. Lapierre: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: I hear a "hear, hear". Who said that? A Liberal! Let me tell you, you are paying a metric commissioner with taxpayer dollars to advance the policies of the Liberal Government.

Mr. Lapierre: Sure.

Mr. Domm: He has no business as a commissioner being paid to write articles by the publisher of the Globe and Mail. That is a conflict of interest. And when I, as a lowly Member of Parliament write a letter to the Globe and Mail asking for equal space to give the Opposition view, they turned the letter down because it did not meet their criteria. That is selective journalism, it is dangerous and you support it, and you have no business as a Member of Parliament condoning such an inexcusable action.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is addressing another Member directly, and I believe he should be speaking through the Chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) will take note of the comment.

Mr. Domm: I said: "The Hon. Member opposite had no business", and that is perfectly parliamentary, to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. LeBlanc: Your knowledge is limited.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his point. I think Hansard will disclose what took place.

Mr. Taylor: Your conscience is hurting, that is your trouble.

Mr. Domm: Let me show this House of Commons how inexcusable the Metric Commission budget is. Can you imagine a Metric Commission in Canada today letting a contract for $89,000 to a consultant in Unionville to rewrite the football rule book in order that we can change Canadian football to metric? That is $89,000. If that is not enough, can you imagine the letting of contracts to fitness organizations under the guise that the organizations are bringing about body measurement in metric? They spent $50,000 to spread that propaganda across the nation. Can you imagine Metric Commissioners spending $2,000 to have their pictures taken, framed and hung in the Metric Commission offices? They would do well to hang those pictures in some other area after they have deceased. What kind of restraint program is it where you allow that kind of money to be spent without any concern for the Canadian consumer?

Let us listen to what the President of a major grocery store chain, Loblaws, has to say. Let us listen to what Dave Nichol said as he paid for a radio commercial. He said:

> I'd like to give you all the details—

He is referring to one of the products:

> —but one of the problems of doing a radio commercial for a supermarket is that the Government in some areas of Ontario insists that with a number of products you have to give the details of your specials in grams or kilograms, but in my opinion, people also want to hear about ounces and pounds, so it takes you 60 seconds to cover just a few specials.

Is that consideration for the retail sector, to double its advertising cost in order that the Government can control the media in the move to metric? Why is it that in a Government which says all the retailers, carpet dealers, service stations and grocery stores must go metric, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) has let a contract for housing to be built in the Yukon Territories and there is not a metric measurement in the blueprints? How does the Government justify pumping gasoline by the gallon at the Canadian Armed Forces base in Trenton? How does the Government justify weighing parcels at small retail store post office operations, and saying it is all right to weigh parcels in pounds, you do not need a metric weigh scale, but when you go to the front of this same store which is selling groceries, it is illegal to have an Imperial weigh scale? How does the Government justify that? How does the Government justify letting a contract for the CF 18A, the largest contract ever let by any Government in Canada, and it is built totally in Imperial measurement? How does this Government justify letting a contract to Madam Benoit and Bruno Gerussi for $110,000 so they can travel across Canada cooking up metric soufflés? There is the release and they are proud of it. The Metric Commission thinks that is just topnotch. Here we have a Metric Commission which lets out a contract for $150,000 for consultant fees to work on different modules of the metric study. Imagine, consultants, all listed here, paid $150,000 to help them ram it down the throats of Canadians!

How does this Government justify a policy which allows the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to insert a pamphlet entitled "The Metric Way" to be inserted in the Family Allowance and Old Age Pension cheques when it is laced with untruths? Why is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) not protecting the Canadian people against false advertising when in this brochure it says that the world is going metric and Canada cannot afford to hold back, and that includes the United States? Well, I will remind the Minister that the U.S. threw out the Metric Board, changed all the gasoline pumps at Shell, Amoco and Chevron back to gallons, and there is hardly a retail outlet anywhere in the U.S.A. where you can buy meat in grams.

Between the United States and Great Britain we do 86 per cent of our exporting in Imperial measurement. Members across the way look as though they doubted this. You are going to use wheat and say we take bushels, and since we are going to convert to metric tonnes we will sell to Russia in metric. Good Lord, Mr. Speaker, we have sold to Russia in metric any time they wanted our metric tonne, and we could sell them in metric if they wished and in Imperial by choice, not metric by force.

What about the Chairman of the Metric Commission, this gentleman who makes $275 a day plus expenses? That is Mr. D. R. B. McArthur who has an office on the third floor of 255 Argyle Avenue. He has rented space from a private firm and has large sofas, a VTR TV machine for transcribing television shows. However, it is almost never used by McArthur who spends most of his time in Edmonton and is barely known by Commission staff—this in spite of the fact the Commission order calls for a full time chairman. That is the kind of costs that we object to in the move to metric.

• (1720)

Former Executive Director, P. C. Boire, once spent $7,000 of the taxpayers' money on the printing, distribution and mailing of a speech. Where did he make the speech? He made it to the American National Metric Council in Washington. That was $7,000 to print the speech which he made in Washington. I have all the correspondence and memos to substantiate this.

What about the $12,000 plus, not including staff salaries and overtime, for the production of a promotional calendar? I have here a calendar to commemorate 100 years of Canadian football. Mr. William Robinson, the Executive Director of the Canadian Amateur Football Assocation, said, "It is a good promotional vehicle for us. It did not cost us anything. But as a taxpayer, I could see the money being better spent." He not only said it, he said it on CP and over the air. The Metric Commissioners had the gall, in this football calendar that cost $12,000, to say that they had the suport of the Canadian Amateur Football Association. That is nonsense. We are being misled every time we turn around. If there is any doubt about that, ask the head of the Canadian Amateur Football Association.

What about the $300,000 that has been awarded to Warwick-Bradshaw, Liberal supporters, for contracts ostensibly for advice on the retail scale program? The costs of the retail scale program is a nightmare. We have scale companies voting us into metric. They are sitting on the Commission. They have voted us into metric and have had more votes at some of their meetings than have the people in the retail food sector. Imagine Toledo weigh scale companies from Japan and Germany having their company representatives sitting on the Metric Commission. They say "Yes, we want to go metric." They voted us into metric.

Finally, we cannot leave the subject without saying that the present Government has already announced the abolition of the Metric Commission. It will phase out over the remaining year and a half. That is just in time for the next federal election. At least in the five-year fight to get rid of this Metric Commission, which drains the Canadian taxpayers of $32 million a year and has spent $2 billion indirectly through the industrial and construction sectors for which only the consumer and sometimes the taxpayers who are not consumers can pay, we can save the country probably $6 billion to $10 billion, if we took the time to eliminate the Metric Commission.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member aware that the person who produced a paper to bring us into voluntary metric, and we now have compulsory metric, is the same Minister who is now introducing the Crow rate changes in the House of Commons?

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to the question. I would point out to the Hon. Member that it was the Conservative Government which abolished the Order in Council forcing metric on the retail food sector. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), who is in the House now, was the Minister responsible at the time.

I might add that we have been accused of bringing in metric to the carpet industry. But I would remind Members on the Government side that while March 17, 1979, was the date on which the Order in Council affecting the floor covering industry was Gazetted, which was after the federal election, the Cabinet of the Conservative Government was not sworn in until June. It was the Cabinet of the Liberal Government that Gazetted the Order in Council on floor-coverings on March 17, 1979.

As far as metric and the cost to Canadian taxpayers is concerned, it was the Conservative Government which took action to reduce the consumer demands for dollars in order to pay for the insatiable appetite of this giant cookie monster, the Government and the Metric Commission, that have had their hands in the jar ever since the Commission was appointed at a cost of $44,000 annually and now costs $32 million annually.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member who just spoke explain to the House how he justifies the fact that the Conservative Government of Ontario sent a dictum to all the schools in Ontario as far back as 1971 ordering all schools in the Province of Ontario from that day forward to teach the metric system? We now have students who have been raised on the metric system from Grade 1 to Grade 13. I would like to hear his views on what he would suggest to the provincial Government. Will he demetricate all these students who have spent 13 years learning the metric system? This is a policy of the Conservative Ontario Government.

I cannot understand why the Hon. Member is so quick to abolish metric when he knows that world trade is going metric and that whatever country goes metric will get the future markets in developing countries, such as those in the Middle East and the Pacific Rim.

I am fascinated by the fact that every time the Hon. Member rises to speak, it does not seem to matter what subject is before the House, he turns it around and speaks about one thing, namely metric. He is almost paranoid about it. Surely his constituents elected him to represent them on other topics than only metric. I fail to understand it and I would like to hear how he justifies the difference between the provincial Conservative position on the metric system and the federal Conservative Party's position on metric?

Mr. Domm: I welcome the opportunity to answer the three questions as briefly as I can. The Hon. Member's first question concerned education in the schools. We have been educating students in schools on metric since 1871. I find nothing wrong with that at all. I believe it is a great attribute to be able to speak French and English, and I do not see anything wrong with being able to use both metric and Imperial. I am only saddened that our schools are not teaching both. I think schools would be remiss in the responsibility to students in this nation if they dropped Imperial from their curriculum. I, as well as the Minister of Education for Ontario, have urged that a study be undertaken, which is now being done to justify the dropping of the Imperial measurement.

As far as the whole world going metric is concerned, it has been doing so since 1871. We are not against metric, but we are against bringing it in mandatorily at a time when it cannot be cost jusfified in sectors that do not want it.

With respect to the third question about my constituents, I do not know whether the Hon. Member polls his constituents but I polled mine. I challenge the Hon. Member to poll his constituents and ask if they support mandatory metric or if they would like a voluntary process of its implementation.

I polled my constituents last month and the results which came in this week show that 76.5 per cent, on a return of 5,300 ballots, are opposed to mandatory metric. I also asked if they would support a court case if 37 Members of Parliament were to go to court to fight the mandatory aspect or whether Members of Parliament should lie low and let the Orders in Council take effect. Of that number 73.4 per cent support the 37 MPs going to court. I only wish André Ouellet would do what he said—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is referring to the Minister by name.

Mr. Domm: I am sorry. I only wish the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs would do what he said he would do in December of 1982 when he went on national television and called a press conference to say that if the 37 MPs opened a service station he would prosecute. Why will he not take the 37 MPs to court so that we can defend the right to choose versus the Government's right not to choose? Why will he not take us to court? He knows that we will not cut the seals. He cannot deport us as landed immigrants. He cannot do any of those things that he can do to Jack Halpert. Why will he not prosecute the 37 MPs? I wish he would.

• (1730)

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I always enjoy the vigour and the spirit of my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) on this subject. I admire very much the crusade he is carrying in Canada against the mandatory imposition of the metric measurement system. He is to be commended, and he certainly has the support of his colleagues, at least on this side of the House.

We are dealing with yet another borrowing Bill, Bill C-151. The Government is back once more to the House asking for another $14.7 billion, at least $4 billion of which is not really needed. It is not in the Government spending plans or its budget, and the Government cannot justify it in this further request for taxpayers' money.

Of the $4 billion that is surplus in this seventh request to this session of Parliament, $2 billion is a little cushion, a little pad, $2 billion which the Government wants to tuck under the mattress to carry over into the next fiscal year beginning April 1, 1984.

What we have seen in the budget is a program of immediate spending with the idea of assisting some consumer spending, the idea of giving a lift to the spending and the cash flow of the country whereby the Government can say its policies and its six and five program and all of these things are working. We hear time and time again from one Minister after the other and even from some bank presidents in Canada that things are good, that we are through the recession, that we will come out of it and there are bright days ahead. With the spending programs of the recent budget, the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) assures there is a bubble. Yes, there is a bubble coming as a result of the policies in the United States. Our great market to the south has its inflation under control, its interest rates are down and normally there is in Canada a nine-month lag following corrective measures or erroneous measures that take place in the U.S.A.

As I said, we are into the seventh borrowing Bill. I might remind Hon. Members that these borrowing Bills are in addition to Section 38 of the Financial Administration Act which gives the Government automatic power to borrow to retire maturing instruments or debt already in the system. Unless you get a memorandum from the Department of Finance and understand fully what this total borrowing is in order to handle maturing debt plus the interventionist programs of this interventionist Government, we really have difficulty in keeping a handle on just what is going on.

Bill C-151 is one more example of the cry of some of us that the whole process of supply and expenditure in the Canadian Government is out of control. The whole federal system is out of control. Both the federal and provincial systems in this country are out of control as a result of this idea that all answers to all problems of the population can be solved by the Government.

It seems that we have been conditioned to expect that Government will take care of all our problems and we no longer have a sense of self reliance among ourselves as a people. We are used to so much rhetoric on recovery and on the subject matter of Government programs, what they will do here and what they will do there that year after year we get program after program. If you go back and take a good, hard look, you find they are the same old programs on which the Government has not spent money that are being recycled with new words and being brought forward with new headlines to keep the people under some kind of opiate and under the illusion that this place is doing something constructive.

We now hear from the Minister of Finance and other Ministers in this Government that the recession is over, that we have this bubble of recovery. We heard that things are going to be good. We have had notice that even things like tax-free savings for equity in a home can be used to purchase furniture and consumer goods if spent within the next immediate period of time. All of these things are stimulants, but do we see the consumer really buying these measures and this rhetoric that all is well and that all will start moving again? Yes, I see out on the West Coast some recovery in housing sales. Prices have dropped about one third. Interest rates are down, and there is some stimulus and some movement there. If recovery is really on the way, Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that we will not have a sustainable recovery in this country until we start to see capital goods move and until we start to see business and organizations within our economy that add to the value of goods starting to buy new plants, new equipment and replacing equipment which can no longer add to or improve productivity. Until we start to see a solid movement in capital goods, it is my opinion that we will not see a sustainable recovery.

Most people from the business community in Canada are quite pleased with the budget. It appears that the apparent continuing intervention and the apparent continuing attack on the disposable income of Canadian business and Canadian people has been arrested with the most recent budget of this Government. The Minister of Finance has certainly arrested the great concern we had as a result of the series of three previous budgets.

If the Government really means what it says in this budget, if the Government is withdrawing its interventionist attack on the business community, and if it really wants a sustained forward adjustment in the Canadian community, we will have to stop placing the blame for our dilemma on the cold winds of economic recession that blow from the north, that blow from Europe and that blow from the United States. For many years now we in Canada have been sowing the seeds of our own cyclical economic troubles.

I can remember a couple of years ago having the privilege of being invited as a Canadian delegate to a conference in Ditchley, England on the impact of lower rates of economic growth on western nations. I was shocked to find myself taking the minority position of one at a world conference table saying that the western world had to get used to lower rates of growth if we were to adjust to the future ahead because the Third World was rising and demanding its fair share of limited world resources and limited world energy. To stimulate consumerism is okay for the short-term effect. That is what the budget is doing. But you will notice, Mr. Speaker, that the budget and the spending required in Bill C-151 is short-term spending and short-term stimulation, with the cost of this immediate policy of this Government being postponed to 1985-1986.

What we are dealing with in this Parliament today is very short-term. The Government is not addressing long-term correction which will involve fundamental and basic attitudinal and anticipated change right across Canada. We hear the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) speak in these terms. He fascinates me when he speaks in these terms. But in my opinion he keeps blowing it by coming up with half truths or contradictory actions following a fundamental truth that he is addressing. As a result, he has thrown the country into confusion. He has thrown people like myself into confusion and his credibility is wanting in terms of long-term correction. His Government is involved in short-term, immediate political correction in preparation for an election down the road. Whoever wins that election will have the job of paying for these immediate short-term policies.

Consumers are not buying. As I mentioned, there is some movement in housing on the West Coast, but basically consumers are sitting on their savings and reducing their debt. Until there is stability in the system, until we get away from the short-term cyclical interest rate, until we do some planning into the future as individuals, as corporations and as a nation, I suggest the measures in place today are very short-term indeed. Now we find banks pushing money. They are advertising and saying, "Come borrow, come buy", just after going through a couple of years of seizing, bankrupting and forcing people into soft and hard receiverships.

Every Canadian is involved in the recession. All expectations across the land, the expectations with which we have grown to live over the last two decades, have to be questioned, until we get those expectations back down to practical, realistic levels, until we start adjusting our attitudes to include a little compassion for the person who does not have a job. We have to get such persons back into the work force. We, the organized and the privileged, have to give a little and share a little in order to spread the economic adjustment we have to face over the next years. Until we get into this mode of thinking and accept the fact that our expectation levels have to come down and to be adjusted, what will we accomplish? We must get back to work and stop spending Government money. We must stop Government interventionist programs for losers and protectionism. The sooner we reduce our expectation levels and accept the fact that we have to move into a world of free trade the better. We must stop backing losers and start encouraging winners. Until we do that, the nation will not move ahead. It will not happen. All this spending effort—the budgets and the borrowing—will always be wasted until our basic anticipation levels and attitudes as a people and a nation change. That is the challenge ahead of us, and recovery will only come when this change takes place. I would personally like us to stop playing games with political rhetoric. All Parties in the House should start to address the fundamental need for change in our great country.

We can talk all we want about the magic of high technology ahead, that everything will be resolved with high-tech. If we drive our cars through Silicon Valley in California, we see that every parking lot in front of every high-tech factory is absolutely jammed with cars. If we continue to drive through the automobile assembly and manufacturing area of Oakland, we see grass growing through the blacktop parking lots and there are no cars. That is the magnitude of change which is taking place in the world.

We politicians in the House are not addressing this matter because we are too interested in short-term political gain and in short-term support of losers. It will come with change in attitude and it will come when we stop talking and dreaming about an industrial strategy which no one in the House can define. It is just great for the socialists to yack about an industrial strategy, but the country needs an industrial environment. When we have an industrial environment which once again gets Government out of the boardrooms, off the backs of entrepreneurs, inventors and risk takers, and allows these people to activate that exciting thought and work process, we will start to move ahead.

My appeal in this debate on Bill C-151 is that the Government should keep moving back from its 15 years of growing intervention in the marketplace. Once again it should stabilize and spread the decision-making base across the country. Once again it should create an environment which attracts the brains of the world to Canada as it once did. If Canada did not have a good research and development environment in the private sector at one time, the Cowplands and the Mitchells would not be in Canada doing what they are doing for the country and for the world today in the area of high-tech. The spin-off in high-tech is unbelievable, even with what we have in the country. But it will take a change in attitude on the part of all of us, particularly on the part of politicians, if it is to come about.

I do not want to compete with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who is engaged in conversation. I can hardly hear myself as a result. Mr. Speaker, would you call for a little order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Huntington: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, the supply and expenditure process of Government is out of control. If I may, I would like to return to that and say that if we are to give credibility to the House and to the Government, as Members of Parliament we will have to address this issue. As politicians we have gone through decades of politics of competition, being big spenders and promising programs. As a result, we have created a modern monolithic Government which is really in the control of bureaucrats. It is not in the control of Government Members, although they are responsible for the continuation of it and the deliberation of policy. If we are to address this, we in the House of Commons must learn a technique with which to build a system of calling both the Government and the bureaucrats to account. We must ensure that the criteria against which programs are delivered and against which spending is made are in fact enforced and adhered to as the functions go on.

The reason I raise this is that I could not believe what was developing the other day out of an examination of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts under paragraph 15.9. This was the paragraph in which the Auditor General drew to our attention that $2.7 million of taxpayers' money had been delivered to an organization in the Province of Quebec. The money had been deposited in the Mercantile Bank and, as soon as the bank had the money three days later, it bankrupted the company.

When the tax resource has been delivered under the criterion of being of significant benefit to Canada and for the creation of permanent payrolls, when the administrators of programs such as that are careless enough to deliver that magnitude of assistance—and it lasts three days—when the beneficiaries are the shareholders of a company which went bankrupt because its bank indebtedness had been reduced, and when the beneficiary is a bank, I suggest it is just the tip of the iceberg in a behavioural and an accountability problem that Hon. Members on all sides of the House are not addressing. Credibility and respect for this institution will not return until we as Members of Parliament organize ourselves in a proper committee structure and until we demand the research resource we require to use the information available to us to create a method of disclosure which will eventually bring the behavioural problems in the system to account. The challenge is ours. Admittedly we are big spenders; we do not want to bring about a condition of accountability and control over the Government.

I am saying to you, Sir, and to my colleagues in this House that until we start to change our attitudes and demand of the system some credibility and accountability, this out of control spending process will continue. The system is going to collapse under it. That is why I appreciate the opportunity I have been given to offer a few comments on this seventh borrowing Bill in this session of the thirty-second Parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are Hon. Members rising to ask questions?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, you and I are beginning to be old debating partners because for the seventh time I am standing here as part of my duty to my constituents, a duty which I gladly accept and which they reinforce every time I speak to them, to oppose this outrageous borrowing Bill of the Liberal Government of Canada. This Government was elected on promises to reduce Government in people's lives, but since 1980 it has increased the role of Government dramatically. It has increased the debt being foisted on to our young people and which will affect them for the rest of their days. Indeed, it will affect our grandchildren.

There have been 15 PC Members and five NDP Members who have spoken to this Bill. From the Government side, there has been only one Minister and two Members. Are they responding to their constituents? I go into their ridings and talk to the people. They no more want to have their children and grandchildren being run into debt than the people in my riding. Obviously Liberal backbenchers are getting the same message, that this has to stop. Are they rising in this House to object? They are not. Indeed, they will once again stand and vote more deficit and debt for this nation.

Let us look at the statistics. The Government said it needed $26.7 billion in financial requirements this year. It already has $16 billion. On principle, one might say they need $10.7 billion. That should be the maximum amount of this Bill. When you look beyond that, you find it has $5 billion in the bank. That is the cash it now has. In fact, what it really needs in this borrowing Bill is $5.7 billion.

Why is the Government coming to this House for $14.7 billion? Why are Liberal backbenchers not objecting to a Cabinet taking $14.7 billion in competition with our own people who need that money to put into plants, equipment and job creation? Creating jobs increases revenues to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It reduces the welfare rolls and Unemployment Insurance. The Government should not be competing in the marketplace for $14.7 billion, but it is.

There are several possibilities. One is that the accounts that have been put before the House are incorrect. Possibly the revenue flow into the Consolidated Revenue Fund is down dramatically. We have heard from accountants that tax forms being filled out this year do not show the same type of income tax due and payable as in years before.

I have talked to some of my constituents. Because interest rates and costs have gone up so dramatically, there is no profit left in the system. Of course, there are fewer people working now than even a few months ago Therefore, revenues are down. If the Government needs $14.7 billion because revenues will be down, why does it not share that with this House? Each of us, whether on the Government side or Opposition side, has the long-time ancient historic responsibility, which is the number one reason why we are here, to control the financial purse strings of the Crown, and now the Cabinet of some 36 kings and queens.

The other possibility is that it is simply an election slush fund. That may well be it. Another possibility is that there is a deliberate strategy to maximize the deficits. In some of the programs that have been announced recently several hundreds of millions of dollars will be spread out over several years. The Government is fixing this into law. That may well be a Liberal Party strategy to bind any future Government that may not be Liberal—it certainly will not be Liberal—to any meaningful programs.

If that is so, that is the most abominable, dastardly thing they can do. It is trying to control the people of this country beyond the grave. Within this last year it should not have put policies in place that will go four or five years into the future, binding the then Government.

Some people have suggested it may be part of the continuing strategy to impoverish segments of our society so that they are controlled by Government. At one time our senior citizens had a lot of freedom. They worked, put a little money aside and had a nest-egg for their retirement. They were free. They did not need the old age pension. The Old Age Security was nice, but they were free to do other things.

When a Government has these deficits, rates of inflation and high interest rates, it leads to a collapse. Inflation destroys the nest-egg of these retired people. Members are getting more and more people coming into their offices who feel that they are just a ward of the Government, that without their Old Age Security cheque, they could not buy groceries. Are these people free? Is that the kind of country we want for our senior citizens?

There is a plan to switch university students to a voucher system. At present, students can decide whether to study philosophy, history, religion or whatever. They make the decision. They can go to the Canada Student Loan Board and they are entitled to their money. The minute you switch to a voucher system, which is something this Government is actively considering, then the Government can decide to give a grant to someone studying economics but maybe not to someone studying history. That will be Government control over a historic freedom in our society.

We saw this in the oil industry. Prior to the National Energy Program, someone could set up an oil company. He could hire five geologists and drill where he thought there might be oil. He could deduct the cost of that against any revenue from that well. The National Energy Program changed that totally. Now he has to go to Ottawa and establish whether he is "Canadian" or not. If so, he will get a better grant than an entrepreneur from another country. Second, if he wants to drill in Alberta, he may get a 40 per cent grant. The bureaucrats may say that if you go farther and drill on the other side of an imaginary line, your grant will be up to 80 per cent.

That has fundamentally changed the nature of the oil industry from one where people were drilling and competing for oil exports. They now drill federal dry wells on federal lands. That is a waste of money. As a result, the conventional crude in Alberta, which started at 16 billion barrels, went down to 4 billion barrels, is dropping dramatically and will soon be gone. It is not being replaced. I wonder if I might call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

ENERGY—GOVERNMENT COAL PRICING POLICY. (B) REQUEST THAT COAL ACREAGE BE RETURNED TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, on March 15, 1983, I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) to explain what the Government was going to do with the 50,000 acres in coal blocks in southeastern British Columbia now that the Crowsnest rate legislation was being brought in. The price of coal blocks was frozen at $2 per ton for domestic use under the terms of the Crowsnest Agreement. While I agree that it should be free, the Canadian Constitution grants control and ownership of resources to the Provinces.

I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to guarantee that the 50,000 acres of land would be returned to the Province of British Columbia. If the Agreement is broken the Province of British Columbia should have the lands turned back to it for development, according to its time schedule. Approaches have been made to the federal Government by various coal companies to develop the property.

What concerns me is that under the terms of the Crowsnest Agreement B.C. Rail will receive up to $635 million per year for the next three years for upgrading of the railway system while its subsidy coal company is applying to the federal Government for the development of these coalfields. I think that is wrong. The Province of British Columbia should have the opportunity of deciding how and when these fields should be developed, not the federal Government.

One of the reasons people in the west feel left out is that agreements such as the Crowsnest Agreement are likely to be broken or changed without their consent. Land should be turned back to whoever owned it when agreements were made between the Provinces and the railways.

I ask the Minister to make a commitment here and now that, if there are to be changes to the Crowsnest agreement, this 50,000 acres with a coal reserve estimated in the neighbourhood of $450 billion will be turned back to the Province. The Minister has stated clearly that the federal Government is the rightful owner of the property and that it would look into the situation if the problem arises. I think that is the attitude that has created the resentment which exists in the West.

I would urge the Minister to consider my comment and look at the very serious problems that will be created for the development of energy in the Province of British Columbia as a result. If Newfoundland has the right to offshore drilling, if Alberta has the right to energy and to set gas prices, surely the Province of British Columbia should have that property turned back to the rightful owner.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be worthwhile to take a moment to review the history of the Dominion coal blocks. The Government of Canada holds the mineral and surface rights on two tracts of land totalling 50,000 acres, in the Crowsnest Pass coalfield of the Kootenay district in B.C. The Government holds these rights under the Crowsnest Pass Act of 1897. Under this legislation the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was required to carry certain products—including coal and grain—at fixed rates and to grant certain running rights on its railway lines subject to control of the Governor in Council. The Act also conveyed to the federal Government a portion up to the extent of 50,000 acres of any coal-bearing lands granted to the CPR as a subsidy for the construction of the railway by the B.C. Government.

While the Crowsnest Pass Act deals primarily with matters related to railway transportation, particularly those related to the movement of grain, the coal lands are dealt with in subclause 1(i) which stipulates that coal be sold at $2.00 or less per ton.

• (1805)

As the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) stated in response to a question raised in the House on March 15, the reason the Government is introducing companion legislation to its Western Grains Transportation Initiatives is to remove the constraints on the exploitation of the Dominion coal blocks, mainly, repealing the Clause limiting the selling price of coal to $2 per tonne.

Historically, Mr. Speaker, there has been some debate between the Government of Canada and the Province of British Columbia as to who controls the coal rights in the Dominion coal blocks. This has hampered development of these resources. From the late 1960s to 1971, licences to explore this coal were granted by the federal Government to four mining companies. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources did not renew these non-exclusive exploration licences in 1971 because of the aforementioned restrictive subclause 1 in the Crowsnest Pass Agreement, and the uncertainty about when such a restriction would be removed. The federal Government's energy policy is aimed at utilizing a rational mix of all the available domestic sources of energy.

In this context, the Government will be increasing its reliance on Canadian coal. Coal reserves in the Dominion coal blocks are considerable. They have been tested for quality and have been determined to be of good metallurgical grade. No serious development of these resources can commence until legal problems are resolved.

This brings us back to the amendments to the original 1897 legislation. The Government is hopeful that Transport Canada's Western Grain Transportation Initiatives legislation is passed through Parliament without any complications or delay, thereby facilitating the Government's expedient resolution of problems impeding, Mr. Speaker, the development of coal in the Dominion coal blocks.

TRADE—REQUEST THAT TRADE OFFICES BE ESTABLISHED IN TAIWAN. (B) POSSIBLE SALE OF CANDU NUCLEAR REACTOR TO TAIWAN

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, the issue I am raising today is based on my questions to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last week, on May 4, regarding two associated matters; namely, the potential sale of at least one Candu Reactor to Taiwan now, thereby creating some 25,000 jobs in Canada, and second, the need for us to join the rest of the modern world of international trade and commerce and establish a permanent, but non-diplomatic trade office in Taiwan in order to promote Canadian trade with that country.

Let me say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that I was pleased that the Prime Minister did not reject these proposals outright, and in fact said, "If the Hon. Member wants to suggest that I take a trip to Taiwan, I will entertain the suggestion." I do suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister visit Taiwan to see for himself one of the fastest growing economies in the world today. He would also see the tremendous trade potential which Canada and Canadians are missing simply because we do not have any presence whatsoever in that country to promote trade. Yet, and I want to emphasize this, every other non-communist industrialized nation in the world has some form of a trade office in Taiwan, and they are taking advantage of that tremendous growth and potential in international trade in that country. Yet they do it without jeopardizing their diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China. There is no question about it. Sweden was the last western country to open an office in Taiwan just this January. It has not lost one cent of trade with China. It has not jeopardized its diplomatic relations with Red China and it has increased its sales with Taiwan considerably, as have all of the other nations which are based there. Canada and Italy are the only two countries outside the non-communist industrialized world which are not represented there.

Why do I and others advocate such a move? The answer is very simple, Mr. Speaker. It is because international trade creates jobs in Canada. Canadians are today faced with the highest unemployment level in the history of this country and we are missing the boat in international trade, in Taiwan and elsewhere.

Mr. Lapierre: No.

Mr. Jelinek: The parliamentary secretary says, "no". He is going to read some prepared text, but he does not know what he is talking about. After my seven minutes I will give him a chance.

The United States Department of Commerce, for example, states that for every $1 billion American dollars in exported goods 24,000 indirect and direct jobs are created. Statistics Canada says that for every $1 billion of exported goods and services, 26,123 man-years of direct and indirect employment are created. Because Taiwan is one of the fastest growing economies in the world we must join the rest of the world in promoting Canadian trade abroad.

• (1810)

I was pleased to see that the Prime Minister appeared to be positive in his response, particularly from the quote that I just gave. Following my questions in the House and private meetings with Liberal Members, many of whom are on the Canada-Taiwan Parliamentary Friendship Committee, as well as in a conversation I had with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), I was assured the Government would be looking toward improving trade relations with Taiwan for the benefit of Canada and Canadians.

It is urgent for Canadian businessmen and Canadians to have two things in Taiwan: a permanent trade office like other countries; and better and more viable travel arrangements, in other words, visa offices where visas are processed. Right now a Canadian businessman has to go to the U.S. in order to obtain a visa to go to Taiwan to do business and sell Canada. The situation is the same for Taiwanese businessmen who want to come to Canada and buy Canadian, and they do. I am assured they want to buy Candu reactors. We already have one there. The Parliamentary Secretary may not know that, but it is an experimental one being run by the U.S.

Taiwan also needs our high technology because it has one of the fastest growing economies in the world. It is turning from labour intensive industry to high-tech industry. It needs our communications, our transportation equipment and our agricultural know-how, not to mention our raw materials such as coal, sulphur, pulp and paper, potash and so on.

I am delighted that the Prime Minister seemed to be positive. I am delighted that the Minister of Energy was positive in suggesting that such an idea of selling Candus and expanding our trade relations with Taiwan should be pursued. I know the Parliamentary Secretary is now going to read some prepared text about which he knows absolutely nothing, so I will give him the opportunity to do that, and pursue the matter with the Prime Minister and Minister of Energy at a later date.

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), was just telling me to be nice to the Hon. Member opposite. His last remarks did not motivate me to be nice to him.

Mr. Blaikie: Turn the other cheek.

Mr. Lapierre: I think the suggestions he has made are interesting. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is interested in any suggestions made by any Member of this House. But the Hon. Member has to realize that the issue is not as simple as getting a free lunch. He should know that if the market was so great and the possibilities were so high, the private sector would have already established a trade office in Taiwan. Other organizations have done this. I refer to the Australian Chamber of Commerce, the Anglo-Taiwan Trade Committee, the German Federation of Trade and Industry and similar organizations from other European countries.

Mr. Jelinek: All supported by their Governments.

Mr. Lapierre: If the Canadian private sector is contemplating doing that, be sure the Government will give it serious consideration. We do not see any obstacle to the establishment in Taiwan of branch of a Canadian organization comparable to these others.

When the Hon. Member talks about selling the Candu, he makes it very simplistic, but it is not like selling a pair of shoes. It has a political dimension which cannot be ignored. The Canadian Government has a policy rooted in serious concerns about nuclear non-proliferation. There is no obvious mechanism for Taiwan's formal compliance with our non-proliferation requirements, namely, the signature of the NPT or an equivalent binding commitment to non-proliferation, or NPT-type full scope safeguards under an agreement with the IAEA, or bilateral agreement with Canada providing for fallbacks, prior consent rights, physical protection and other provisions. Taiwan is not a member of the International Atomic Energy Agency and we cannot, having no diplomatic relations, sign a bilateral safeguards agreement with it. Naturally, it would be desirable if we could resolve such difficulties and sell a superior Canadian product like the Candu, but we must do so with full attention to the political situation and our non-proliferation concerns.

• (1815)

The Hon. Member was giving figures about jobs that are created in Canada by trade. I would like to remind him that if we use his calculations, 31,347 jobs are created by our exports to China. The Hon. Member should know that and take it into consideration. We have many links with that country. We are open to his suggestions, but he must realize that there is no simple answer.

MEDICAL CARE—SCHEDULED IMPOSITION OF USER FEES IN ALBERTA. (B) INQUIRY RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity to follow up on a number of questions I have been asking the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) during the last while concerning her announced intentions last year to bring in a new health act which would consolidate all the existing health care legislation in Canada and at the same time clarify national health care standards in Canada and the five basic principles of medicare.

I am concerned that we have not yet seen the Canada health Act. It apparently is still in the drafting process which has continued now for some time. As a result of this inaction or delay on the part of the federal Government things are proceeding at a pace which constitutes an ever increasing threat to the existence of medicare. I have said before on a number of occasions that it is not any one action by any one Province which can be said to lead to the end of medicare, but the combination of all things that have happened over recent years and months, in particular, which have contributed to a scenario in which we can see ourselves finding medicare, as we have known it and as Canadians have wanted it, being lost.

I urge upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare the concern that what she does or does not do in the near future will be extremely crucial to the future of medicare in this country. She cannot continue only with what has often been acceptable rhetoric and the arguments with which she has come to be identified. I recall as far back as before the 1979 election when she was Minister of National Health and Welfare and came to the rhetorical defence of medicare. I also recall when she was in the Opposition attending a conference on the crisis in medicare at that time.

Since then we have had the health services report which recommended that action be taken with regard to extra billing by physicians. We have also had the special Parliamentary Task Force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements which took place a year after the Hall Report and which made recommendations concerning extra billing, and in a number of other areas regarding medicare and the maintenance of national standards. It will be two years this September since that special Parliamentary Task Force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements made its report.

Alberta introduced a new regime of user fees, this spring. New Brunswick recently announced that it would be bringing in certain user fees for certain hospital services. Last fall we saw the Progressive Conservative Ontario Government initiate a system whereby hospitals are allowed to be run by American multinationals for a share of the profits they can generate by running those hospitals. We believe that to be in violation of the spirit of non-profit administration, one of the five basic principles of medicare.

I could continue with other instances in which the spirit and, indeed, even the letter of medicare are being violated by Provinces. We still have no concrete action on the part of the federal Government regarding a Canada Health Act. I understand how difficult it will be for the federal Government to bring in a Canada Health Act that will address all of these issue in a comprehensive and competent way, but I want the Government to do that, and I want the Government to do something soon in that direction. That is why I have urged the Minister to put a proposal before this House.

The Minister does not seem to have any luck with the Provinces. She has not met with provincial representatives for almost a year now. I do not think we can wait until we finally get around to having another meeting between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the provincial Ministers of Health. I think what the Minister should do is put her proposal for a Canada Health Act before this House, table it as a white paper, or in whatever form she desires, and let Members of Parliament and the Canadian public respond to it. It will be a good document if it is the kind of proposal around which people can rally, and through which they can put pressure on their respective provincial Governments to come to the bargaining table here in Ottawa and bargain in the interests of medicare, and not just in the narrow fiscal or ideological interests of Progressive Conservative provincial Governments.

In closing, I might add that the federal Government also has a responsibility to act in the interests of medicare, not just in its own fiscal self-interest. It must put some money back on the table. The federal Government has to remedy some of the fiscal injustices it has done to the Provinces in the last year so that it can come to the table and bargain hard and bargain well for the future of medicare.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we are all aware that Canada's health care system and its health care insurance plans are facing extremely difficult economic times. It is precisely at such times that important programs come under the most stress and risk. We are also all aware of the sources of stress to the health care system. The demands for new health programs, new technology, growth in existing programs, upgrading of existing facilities and equipment, increasing wages and fees are some of these pressures. Perhaps all of them could be solved with a huge increase in revenues to the program, but we all know that this is not an available solution. Where would this money come from? From governments? From the consumers? From both?

It is clear that all sources of revenue are stretched to the limit. However, a wide range of revenue sources is being seriously considered in these times, as we see in the recent budget plans of Alberta and New Brunswick, in spite of long standing federal legislation on medicare.

Unfortunately, program legislation drafted 25 years ago under different fiscal arrangements is simply not well suited to meet the expectations of the public in the 1980s, particularly in light of our economic conditions. Nor does our legislation provide sufficient clarity for the provinces to know just what conditions are still necessary, as a minimum, to qualify for the very substantial contributions to medicare provided by the federal taxpayers.

It was with these stresses and risks in mind, as described by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall in his 1980 report "Canada's National-Provincial Health Program for the 1980's, and by the all party federal Parliamentary Task Force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements in its August, 1981 report, that the Minister met with the provincial health Ministers in May, 1982 to propose the new Canada Health Act.

The Ministers of Health agreed at the meeting that open and co-operative discussions should proceed quickly at both the ministerial and official levels, to complete discussions as soon as possible on a new Canada Health Act to replace the existing Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and the Medical Care Act. The Minister was very pleased that a basic commitment to high quality care and to the principles of universality, portability, comprehensiveness and accessibility of medicare was stressed by all.

The development of new legislation through federal-provincial consultation is a process which should itself facilitate the maintenance of conditions in the 1980s and beyond, because it seeks to arrive at a clear understanding of what Parliament intends to require of a Province in order that transfer funds will be provided for the health insurance program and of what the Provinces are committed to with regard to the medicare program.

I strongly assure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) that work is progressing systematically and thoroughly on the new Canada Health Act and that as soon as it is appropriate the Minister will be meeting with the provincial health Ministers to complete the consultation process before introducing the new act to Parliament. This is a very important program to Canadians and it is essential that the time be taken to develop the act properly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock in the afternoon.

At 6.26 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTING OF PRIME MINISTER'S VIEWS ON CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, earlier this week the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) issued an open letter to all Canadians concerning the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada. While many of the comments I have seen have perverted the Prime Minister's letter, at least some of the print media published, along with their rather fallacious stories, the text of the Prime Minister's letter. That is not the case, however, with the comments made on the CBC "National News" last evening. Those comments were a total perversion of what the Prime Minister had to say. I think the Canadian public and Members of this House have a right to expect better than that from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I would hope, Madam Speaker, that the newscaster in future would read such documents before he makes fallacious, vicious and perverted comments about them. I hope we will see the estimates for the CBC separated from the general Government estimates in this House so we can vote on them separately and some of us can express to the CBC with our votes what we think of its perversion of truth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGES ON LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, some 86 years ago the historic Crow rate was struck at one half cent per ton per mile to export grain from the Prairies. For some 70 years grain producers, the livestock industry, railway companies, and secondary processors all made money. However, during the last 16 years, primarily as a result of inflation, the Crow rate has caused an enormous distortion between the grain industry on one hand, and the livestock industry and secondary processors on the other. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) appointed Mr. Clay Gilson who, with 12 commodity groups and approximately 60 or 70 people, came up with a phased solution which was balanced between the legitimate interests of the competing groups.

Then, Madam Speaker, politics became involved, which resulted in the Pepin compromise of last February. Then raw, ugly politics entered into it, which resulted in Bill C-155. That Bill is totally unacceptable to the livestock industry and is not in the long-term best interests of the nation. I call upon my colleagues opposite and in the NDP to make sure we do not write off that livestock industry because, if we do that to western Canada, we are going to cut off a lot of tax revenue for this part of the country.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

THE PARABLE OF THE FARMER AND THE PLUM TREE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to spend a little bit of time recounting a story, to make my point.

Some years ago a constituent of mine took over a farm after learning to become an experienced farm manager at university. He applied the most efficient methods known to man at that time, and ran the farm with a great deal of success. His first crop was a very good one at the lowest cost per unit produced for years.

At the end of the harvest he went walking around the farm to check out other things he could do to make the operation more efficient. He came across a little plum orchard that his father, and his sister who was a plant geneticist, had set up.

He noted that of the dozen trees in that orchard only nine had fruit on them. So, being very efficiency minded, he immediately went in with a tractor and pulled out the three that were not producing fruit. Since then there has been no fruit growing in that orchard. He killed the orchard because he pulled out the male trees.

I think this is what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is doing when he introduces a new Crow rate. He is looking at the hole, not the doughnut. He has missed the point entirely, and I urge him to change his mind.

S.O. 21

CATHOLIC CHURCHMEN'S VIEWS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, one issue which has been receiving the attention of Conferences of Catholic Bishops globally is the moral implications of the controversial use of nuclear deterrence as a means of defence and as a means of promoting eventual arms reduction and peace. But the average practising Catholic is confused by the number of statements issued by Catholic leaders on the subject of nuclear arms.

A quick survey of decisions reached indicates that in Italy no directive or guidelines were issued by the Italian Conference of Bishops. In West Germany, Catholic Bishops published a pastoral letter condemning the arms race but upholding the right to use the threat of nuclear retaliation as a deterrent to war. They also condemned the expansionist aims of totalitarian states. The Roman Catholic Bishops of the United States, who have the support of the Canadian Bishops, condemned first strike use of nuclear weapons and condemned the targeting of nuclear weapons against civilian targets. They accept as moral the deployment of nuclear weapons as a deterrent, but not as a purpose in itself—only as a step toward progressive disarmament.

Pope John Paul II, in his message to the Second United Nations Special Session on Disarmament on June 11, 1982, said, "In current conditions, deterrence based on balance, certainly not as an end in itself but as a step towards progressive disarmament, may still be judged morally acceptable". He went on, "I reaffirm my confidence in the power of true negotiations to arrive at just and equitable solutions. Such negotiations demand patience and diligence and must—

NATIONAL REVENUE

TAXABLE BENEFITS—TREATMENT OF ROAD WORKERS AND COMPANY EXECUTIVES

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House another paradox involving taxable benefits under the Income Tax Act.

For some time in Nova Scotia, National Revenue has been questioning road foremen and other classes of employees of the provincial Department of Transportation in a dispute over the use of vehicles and rates of pay affecting taxable benefits, involving these employees.

On the other hand I have reason to believe that Massey-Ferguson, the beneficiary of many millions of dollars of taxpayers' money for loan guarantees, which the Government had to pay, rewarded certain of its executives for their success in negotiating benefits for their company from the Government. The rewards apparently consisted, in some instances, of trips abroad for these people and their families, in lieu of bonuses. Has Massey-Ferguson been audited in this respect? Have any of these executives been audited, or indeed, have any of the executives included these benefits as part of their taxable incomes?

If not, we have two standards—a very strict one affecting many workers in Nova Scotia who are relatively low income people, while this company, which may be closer to an Edsel than a Chrysler success story, although I hope not, may be playing fast and loose with the tax system. I would appreciate it if the Minister would check into this situation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TESTING OF CHEMICAL

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, as most Canadians are now aware, the Liberal-Conservative coalition of the right is in support of testing the Cruise missile and other nuclear technologies on Canadian soil.

Just as insidious is the recent decision by the Liberals to test H-16 at McGill University in Montreal, this year. This chemical is undergoing tests on dogs, rats, and pigs and, according to National Defence officials, it "would be used by our troops in the event that they are subjected to chemical attack".

The Geneva Convention, of which Canada is a signatory, is an international agreement prohibiting the practice of chemical warfare. Canadians would be naive to assume that the H-16 tests which are now under way at McGill University are being conducted solely for defence. Clearly, this synthetic replacement for atropine is being designed to respond to certain nerve gases and chemicals for use in warfare; most likely against civilian populations.

Perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would explain to Canadians just what Canada's role is in the field of chemical and biological warfare, and explain to the House what situations he foresees where Canadian troops will be in contact with chemicals requiring H-16 as an antidote. Perhaps the Prime Minister would also explain the $204,000 order for chemical air burst dispensers in February, or the $109,000 in March for chemical simulators, while he is at it.

SHIPBUILDING

GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS—DISAPPEARANCE OF JOBS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, with the skill of Houdini, the Government has dazzled Canadian shipbuilders with promises of wonderful and amazing things to come. The shipbuilding policy announced last January was heralded by the Government as a program to save the Canadian shipbuilding industry. The Government has failed to produce even the slightest evidence it seriously intends to implement new policies that will be meaningful.

Two weeks ago the Government announced the Canadian Coast Guard Fleet Acquisition Program to modernize the aging Coast Guard fleet at a cost of $630 million over the next four years. It will be late June before any contracts are awarded, and Christmas before any work begins. In the meantime more jobs will have vanished from the Saint John shipyards and other shipyards across the nation.

The Canadian Patrol Frigate Program has been a mystical illusion. Shipbuilders have repeatedly urged the Government to move up the starting date of the Program. Delays in implementing the frigate program mean a needless loss of jobs.

Programs are being pulled from hats like rabbits, while jobs are disappearing quicker than you can say abracadabra. In 1981 some 1,627 people were employed at the Saint John shipyard; by Christmas the shipyard is expected to be a graveyard if the Government's programs fail to materalize.

Canadian shipbuilders are saying, "Quit the hocus-pocus and the shell games. Implement a new shipbuilding policy, spread the Coast guard work fairly throughout the country, and accelerate the frigate program." Shipbuilders want jobs—not another performance of the Government's magic show.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF TAX CREDIT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) betrayed the national voluntary organizations.

The Minister of Finance consulted with the voluntary organizations before his budget, and then betrayed them in his budget. The national volunteers requested that a 50 per cent cent tax credit replace the standard $100 deduction for charitable donations, but the Minister did not comply. He removed the $100 standard deduction only, thus hurting the thousands of people who donate to Poppy Day and Daffodil Day, where no receipts are given; hurting the thousands of hard-working volunteers who do work that the Government would otherwise have to do.

The removal of the standard deduction increases the administrative costs and mailing costs. In fact, Canada Post is about the only winner. It perpetrates the inequities in the tax treatment of charitable donations and fails to provide a stimulus needed by voluntary organizations. It is a slap in the face to the national voluntary organizations.

• (1415)

I urge the Minister to introduce the tax credit now or, at the very least, keep the $100 standard deduction until the entire proposal made by the voluntary organizations can be accepted.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

HOUSING

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT UNDER $3,000 GRANT PROGRAM

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Housing. The Minister will recall that on October 27 of last year, the Minister of Finance announced that the $3,000 grant provided under the Home Ownership Stimulation Plan would be extended with respect to new homes until the end of April, 1983. In the circumstances, and considering the increasing concern of many Canadians who want to take advantage of this very attractive program, could the Minister give the House the assurance today that he will take steps to have his Government meet its commitment and ensure that all applications that meet program criteria and were sent in before or on April 30th will be considered and that applicants will receive a positive answer?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, last October the Minister of Finance did in fact announce that $100 million had been earmarked for a program that would be administered according to the budget it was given, which was the $100 million. It was expected that this amount would be sufficient in normal circumstances, even if the housing sector should become very active, and that the $100 million would last until the end of April. This year, following representations by Members on all sides of the House, I asked the Minister of Finance to allocate a supplementary amount of $30 million, especially to help Canadians in remote areas where, because of heavy frost, it would be impossible to do any excavation during the month of April. It is a fact that the confidence shown by Canadians in the housing sector at the present time has resulted in an avalanche of applications since April 15, which were sent to the office of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. We accepted applications until last Friday. They have been filed by order of priority, and site inspections which are required by law are now being carried out. I do not know exactly what the situation is at the present time. I have the impression that we are over the $130 million mark, but as soon as I have a clear picture of the situation, I shall be advising and consulting my colleague, the Minister of Finance. What I would like to say to the Hon. Member is—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Joliette may ask a supplementary question.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I am sure this will give the Minister a chance to finish his answer. The Minister knows perfectly well that his Government had committed itself until the end of April. I could even mention the next stage, when the Minister of Finance went so far as to tantalize Canadians with a grant that might be extended until the end of May. However, I would rather get back to the first commitment. I think the Minister is aware of the commitment made by his Government and of the fact that he must treat applicants with respect, and I would like to put my question to the Minister again. Could the Minister confirm today that his Government will approve applications made in answer to this first commitment up to April 30, and I fail to see how the Government could renege on this first commitment to extend the program until April 30?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, we have to find out, and that is what we are doing now, how many applications came in before the end of April and how many of these are legitimate applications which represent an obligation on our part. As soon as I have a clear picture of the situation, I shall be able to answer the Hon. Member's question. All I want to say now is that I will do everything in my power so that Canadians who sent in bona fide applications before the end of April, will not be disappointed.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, perhaps I could ask the Minister of Finance, if he were in the House, how he could commit himself again until the end of May without a proper assessment? The Minister has proved this today, but I think the Minister will understand the point I am trying to make today. Thousands of Canadians are waiting and are concerned because they have acted lawfully, and I would like to know whether the Minister could at least promise that he will make an announcement this week to reassure Canadians who sent in applications before April 30th and whether he intends to consult the Minister of Finance later on.

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, I must repeat, and I hope the Hon. Member listened to my answer, that the Minister has allocated $100 million. We thought this amount would be sufficient until the month of April. That may still be the case. In fact, that is what we are trying to find out. But I cannot and I would not want to raise false hopes among Canadians who are listening to us today, nor do I want them to panic. I want to say this to all Canadians, further to the Hon. Member's question: We shall consider all applications. Some are perfectly legitimate, and we shall try to be as flexible as possible, expecially where remote rural areas and northern regions are concerned.

[English]

TREATMENT OF APPLICATIONS—POSSIBLE LOSS OF PURCHASE DEPOSITS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary and it is for the Minister of Public Works also. In his answer to the question from my colleague he said CMHC cut off all applications on May 6. Will the Minister make a commitment today that all the applications that came in before May 6 will, in fact, be honoured? Some of these people have given notice to quit their apartments and have purchased homes. They are now in a spot where they are caught between the devil and the deep blue sea. If they do not get that $3,000 grant they will lose the deposit they put down on the purchase of a home. Will the Minister make that commitment today to those people?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have explained at some length. Three questions were asked on this issue. Those applications made before April 30 were being examined, the number of applications and the possible overrun were being examined. If I am not able to give an honest answer to the Hon. Member for Joliette—and I do not want to cause panic—obviously I am not going to be in a position to answer the Hon. Member's question about May 6. I might say to him that he is using some scare words. The fact is that anyone who gives notice in an apartment before an application is processed and accepted, is really not looking at his or her business very carefully.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL COMMITMENT

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance in his statement of April 19 said he was going to put $30 million into a program to carry on until probably the end of May. In fact, the Minister of Finance was throwing in $30 million to make up a deficit in a program that he knew full well at that time would not go beyond April 30.

The Minister of Public Works has caused considerable concern among a number of people. The Minister shakes his head but he should start to answer his telephone calls from his constituents, as I have calls from people in my area who signed on April 21. Thirty-nine homes have not been approved and likely will not be approved, according to the information being sent out by CMHC. Will the Minister make some kind of commitment? The Minister of Finance can find $200 million to bail himself out of trouble. Surely the Minister of Public Works can find a few million dollars to finish off this program and keep the commitment made to the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have said, and I repeat, that I will make every effort to accommodate and to meet the needs of those who made legitimate bona fide applications before the end of the month of April. I might say the advice given to the Minister of Finance for the $30 million extension was the best information that we had a CMHC. In fact we took the highest figure for the months of April and May, and we even improved on that number. Those were our predictions.

Mr. Jarvis: And they were wrong.

Mr. LeBlanc: They are the best that the corporation, which has a lot of expertise, could come up with.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. LeBlanc: The fact is that the housing industry, following the initiatives taken by my predecessor, is in a booming condition. Canadians are buying houses and are now building houses as we have not seen for some time and that is causing the problem. But surely it is also a reason for rejoicing in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MEDICAL CARE

ALBERTA PROPOSAL TO INTRODUCE USER FEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, earlier this week I was asking the Prime Minister about the progress of the Canada Health Act, to no avail. Since then we have learned that the Minister of National Health and Welfare intends to meet with the Minister of Health in Alberta to discuss the user fees which that Province intends to implement as of October 1. The Minister is reported to have said that she would not consider any punitive action against Alberta until October 1. Will the Minister tell us whether we can expect to see any positive action between now and then, in the form of a concrete Canada Health Act proposal that would address the problem of user fees? Hopefully the Act would be good enough for Canadians to rally around in the defence of medicare; this would help the Alberta Government change its mind, and also counter the hysterical, paranoid, and blatantly false advertising of the Ontario Medical Association and other opponents of medicare.

• (1425)

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I have often said that there is no point in bringing in a new Canada Health Act which would not effectively be stronger in detail than the one we now have. The Hon. Member keeps putting the two issues together. Under the present Act a very serious and unfortunate situation has developed in one of our wealthiest Provinces, the Province of Alberta, with user fees apparently being introduced. They have not been introduced. They have only been promised, if I can call it a promise, by the provincial Government, as of October 1.

My interest, the interest of Canadians, and I think the interest of the Hon. Member and all of us in the House—and I hope the interest of the Conservative Party, but nobody knows—is to ensure that these user fees never see the light of day. Is that good English?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: That is what we want. We are trying not to have any disruption of services but to talk with the Province. Of course we are talking with the people of Alberta who are the first ones to be hit by that most unfortunate situation which seems to be creating a chain reaction in other Provinces like New Brunswick, with the announcement of its budget last Friday. Therefore I have requested the New Brunswick Minister to send me information to ensure that they are not going overboard either.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, that is precisely the point. That is the reason we need to bring in a Canada Health Act to address those problems. If we do not, the Minister will be left in a situation where she can only act within the confines of the existing legislation, which leaves her only an all or nothing proposition. Either she withdraws all the money from Alberta or she is unable to do anything about what is happening in that Province. This is precisely why I am suggesting she bring in a Canada Health Act which addresses these problems; that people can discuss and support, if it deserves it, and which will help the Alberta Government to see that the federal Government does not intend to leave itself in an all or nothing situation, that it intends to have more flexibility and be able to do something about it.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, a concrete situation, not a potentially dangerous one, has developed in one of our Provinces, possibly the second one. I forgot to mention the very unfortunate rise of OHIP premiums last week.

Why do we speak of all these problems which are introducing financial surcharges in the system today, when nobody ever established that there was money missing in the system? We will deal with the situation which has developed, not with the potential situation of the future Canada Health Act, to ensure we know how to strengthen the existing legislation in the best practical way.

POSSIBILITY OF UNILATERAL FEDERAL ACTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, that is precisely the point. While the Minister makes up her mind what she will do about medicare, which she has been doing ever since the SOS Conference on Medicare in the fall of 1979, things get worse and worse. Alberta is the stalking-horse for other provinces that want to do the same thing.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Will the Hon. Member ask a question, not make a speech?

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, my question to the Minister is this. Given the lack of likelihood that she will obtain agreement from eight of the ten Provinces on an Act which would really clarify and strengthen the principles of medicare, has the Minister considered acting unilaterally in bringing in a Canada Health Act? If she has, what options has she considered in that regard?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, we want to avoid as much as possible—and I think every Canadian understands that—any disruption of services. I do not know what the provincial Minister will do to the services. He does not have to cause any disruption but he may; anybody can other than us, the federal players. I have that responsibility in the name of Canadians. That is the answer to one part of the Hon. Member's question.

As to the preceding part of his question, I imagine this Government did something right since Canada, with New Zealand, is the only country in the western world that has a complete, free, working medicare system, and I will say the best in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: I say that without any hesitation.

• (1430)

I have often told the Hon. Member that I regret it is not a black-and-white case. It is more complex. It is one of the most complex institutions in this country. We will strengthen it. We did not fall into Reagonomics. We still have full medicare almost everywhere in the country. We did not cap it. It is one of the few programs this Government decided to keep fully indexed. It received 12 per cent last year and 10 per cent this year. Where is that money?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF CANADA PENSION PLAN

Mrs. Suzanne Beauchamp-Niquet (Roberval): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). The Minister has received notice of my question.

Yesterday, the Government of Ontario announced that it intended to withdraw its veto against allowing women who are raising their children at home to be eligible for the Canada Pension Plan, and I would now like to know whether the Minister could inform the House when this provision will become effective and whether benefits will be retroactive.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I am very happy, and I am sure all Canadian women are, about the fact that the Government of Ontario, which had prevented the Government from acting on this point, withdrew its veto yesterday in its budget and thus opened the way for women who take, I think it is up to seven years off to raise a child and in doing so temporarily leave the labour market, to take advantage of a measure that will prevent any loss of benefits under the Canada Pension Plan.

[English]

The measure will require a special Order in Council from the Province of Ontario. I hope to have that in the month of May. In turn, the federal Government will sign an Order in Council. The measure should be retroactive to 1966 for all mothers who, in effect, stayed home to raise their children. I realize that many will be penalized because they did not know they would be able to benefit from the clause and had to make different working arrangements.

SHIPBUILDING

GOVERNMENT POLICY—REVITALIZATION OF MERCHANT MARINE FLEET

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The shipworkers of the nation welcomed the frigate program which was announced sometime ago. However, there is now grave concern that it will end up being nothing more than a scrap on the bottom of the political pork barrel. With the regard to the long-awaited shipbuilding policy that was recently announced, the most exciting thing that has happened has been the $1.7 million announcement of the conversion of an old ship to a cement carrier in Ontario. We have some of the finest shipbuilding facilities in the world in eastern and western Canada. Our shipyard workers are second to none in the world. They are first-class. What we need in this country is a policy with substance.

Madam Speaker: What we need in this House at this time is a question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to direct this question to the Prime Minister. I hope that he will favour us with an answer. Does the Prime Minister agree that what we need in this country is a shipbuilding policy of substance, one that will prove to be beneficial over a long period to the shipyard workers and aspiring shipyard workers in this country? Does the Prime Minister agree that we should revitalize the merchant marine in this country? If not, is he prepared to instigate a feasibility study to investigate the potential?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not think we need a feasibility study. The Government's objectives in the shipbuilding area are the same as those of the Hon. Member. We have long recognized, well before the Hon. Member was elected, that the Saint John shipyards are some of the best in the land. We have that in mind.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

PACIFIC OCEAN MINERAL RIGHTS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of State for Mines, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. In a notice printed in the U.S. Federal Register last December 8, the United States Government appears to lay claim to valuable polymetallic sulphide deposits along the Juan de Fuca ridge which lies off the west coast of Vancouver Island and partially within Canada's 200-mile economic zone. Subsequent diplomatic exchanges have occurred between Canada and the United States on this matter. Will the Prime Minister assure Canadians that the U.S. has no intention to claim or mine valuable strategic minerals lying within our 200-mile economic zone or in any areas lying north of the Juan de Fuca Trench?

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would reassure the Hon. Member that we are monitoring the situation very closely. There is no danger that mining will occur within the 200-mile limit. The activities that have been announced would be within international boundaries.

INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE CANADA-UNITED STATES CO-OPERATION

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I would hope the Prime Minister might answer my supplementary question, because it leads to a very important policy question. As the U.S. Government does not recognize the Law of the Sea Treaty, American mining companies could conceivably lay claim to seabed minerals lying along the Juan de Fuca ridge off the coast of British Columbia, yet outside the 200-mile economic zone. Should U.S. interests decide to develop such resources off the coast of British Columbia, would Canada encourage and co-operate in such activity, which could bring immense economic benefits to Canada, or would we see this as a violation of the Law of the Sea convention which should, therefore, be vigorously opposed? Would we side with our American neighbours or with the international seabed authority?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is so hypothetical it does not really require an answer.

[English]

AGRICULTURE

NECESSITY TO UPGRADE VETERINARY COLLEGES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. As the Minister is aware, the American Veterinary Association has placed the Ontario Veterinary College in Guelph under limited accreditation for the first time in its 121-year history and has given the college five years to modernize the premises and update its instruction or else lose the right to license veterinarians. Along with this, the Ste. Hyacinthe College for French-speaking veterinarians is now under a two-year probation regarding accreditation. What action are the Minister and his Government going to take, financially or otherwise, to assist these two colleges, bearing in mind that the federal Government relies heavily on their graduates to maintain and fill the several hundred veterinary positions in his Department?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that education is under provincial jurisdiction. We have previously entered into contracts with veterinary colleges to fund as high as 50 per cent of the cost of construction projects. I am sure he is also aware that the Government of Canada, through the Secretary of State, funds the operating costs of these schools. In Ontario, I believe the funding is approximately 59 per cent of the total cost.

For the last addition at Guelph, we funded $3 million of the construction cost. They made an agreement at that time that they would look after all of the costs involved for the next ten years, and would up the number of students to be educated from 80 to 120. They now say the school cannot do this. I have visited quite a few veterinary schools in different parts of the world. I would say that Guelph is up to the standard of any school in the world, and we will continue to do everything in our power to ensure that it continues to be so.

Mr. Mitges: I am well aware that veterinary colleges are under the jurisdiction of the respective Provinces and that the Provinces must as well pursue a more active role to turn this around.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Minister whether he would take it upon himself to get the ball rolling and perhaps arrange meetings with his provincial counterparts along with the deans of the two colleges, taking whatever steps are necessary to rectify this whole matter which should never have been allowed to occur in the first place.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the president of the university has been at our office. We have also had meetings at Guelph about this. I had a discussion as recently as ten days ago with the provincial Minister of Agriculture. But if you will recall, it was because of the wisdom of someone in the Ontario Government that the veterinary college and agricultural school was taken away from the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture and put under the jurisdiction of the Minister of education in the Province of Ontario. The downgrading of the agricultural school began at that time.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

COVERAGE OF PART-TIME WORKERS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour and concerns women and part-time work. Seventy-two per cent of part-time workers are women. Most have low wages, no benefits, no pensions, and no job security. This kind of exploitation must stop.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: I want to ask the Minister what changes he intends to make to the Labour Code to extend protection for all part-time workers who are under federal jurisdiction, and will he also remove the restrictions that deny part-time workers in the Government the right to unionize?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, we on this side of the House do not need to be lectured by the Hon. Member on the increased importance of part-time work and the effect it has on women. This is the reason why the Government has commissioned a study on this particular very important issue. The study ought to be ready for publication by Labour Canada in a matter of weeks, and when we have the recommendations contained in that study, which will become public very soon, as I mentioned, then we will be able to answer the Hon. Member's question specifically.

Mrs. Mitchell: Certainly the Minister could make changes in his jurisdiction immediately. He does not need a study to do that.

COVERAGE OF PART-TIME WORKERS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment. Many part-time workers and casual workers are not eligible for Unemployment Insurance benefits. Will the Minister amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to cover part-time workers and, in particular, will he change the minimum requirement for Unemployment Insurance to 100 hours of work over a ten-week period, which would help casual employees?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am afraid the Hon. Member is quite mistaken in saying that the Unemployment Insurance Program does not cover part-time workers. In fact the Government amended the regulations almost two years ago to ensure that part-time workers would be covered under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

MATERNITY BENEFIT PROVISIONS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who undertook in committee the other night to make certain changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act regarding the discriminatory aspects that presently exists with regard to maternity leave. Could the Minister tell us when he would be prepared to introduce those changes which are so desperately needed?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the whole issue of making changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act to eliminate some of the inequities relating to maternity benefits is one that, again, has been strongly supported by the Government. I think the Hon. Member would recognize that what I said in committee was that if the Opposition, meaning her Party and those in the New Democratic Party, were prepared to give quick and immediate passage to those amendments along with others that are absolutely essential and are required to bring about the changes, the Government would look very favourably upon doing so, but we would need that assurance from the Hon. Member and her colleagues first.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. When will the Government introduce legislation relating to the Canada Development Investment Corporation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe the first reading is scheduled for one or two weeks from now.

ROLE OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, will the Prime Minister tell the House why he felt it appropriate that the Parliament of Canada should not have been involved before now in the creation of a Crown corporation which will be the largest holding company of its kind in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I give the usual answer, the one that has just been given by the Minister of Employment and Immigration and by every other Minister who would like to get legislation through the House. It is the obdurateness of the Tory and the NDP Parties that prevents this House from dealing with Canada's business.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

BUSINESS PEOPLE'S ACCESS TO FUNDS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Business. In the recent budget and in statements outside the House the Minister and others have commented on the changes that will occur to the Federal Business Development Bank. I ask the Minister if he could tell us how these changes will affect the access Canadian business people will have to the funds in the Federal Business Development Bank, what people will qualify for the equity position that the bank may now take, and whether people will be able to refinance under those provisions.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, there was a similar discussion in the House a little while ago. Actually each case must obviously be judged on its own merits. With regard to taking an equity position, that would not be the preferred option. Obviously the preferred option is to let the private sector do its job, but if a case occurred where the only option seemed to be to take an equity position, then the Bank would do that with the understanding that it would get out as quickly as possible.

I might say that the new role of the Bank will be in venture capital, and I think that that is important for small business. We want to make this the small business bank, and we particularly want to make it the bank for the rural areas of Canada.

INTEREST RATES CHARGED TO SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. If the Government is prepared to try to make it the bank for small business, is the Government also prepared to look at the interest rates that are being charged to some of those Canadian small businesses that are now financed by the Federal Business Development Bank, and is there any provision or undertaking by the Government to help relieve those businesses which are facing interest rates of up to 22 per cent over a long period of time, so that we can thus protect Canadian business and the jobs that that implies?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, obviously we would want to give the most favourable interest rates possible. The Hon. Member will note that last week we announced a certain reduction in the interest rates of the Federal Business Development Bank. I might say, though, that the reason for the higher rates is because, in most cases, the banks have been getting into very high risk situations. We do want to give every possible break to the small-businessman. I repeat that we want to make this a bank for small-businessmen, particularly for those in the rural areas of Canada where, in my opinion, the private sector has not always met the need.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORTHUMBERLAND FERRIES LIMITED DISPUTE—APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. I believe the Minister has been checking with his seatmate and the Minister knows that there is much concern in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia about the interruption of service with respect to Northumberland Ferries Limited, the first interruption of such services ever. I realize that the Minister appointed a mediator yesterday under Part V of the Canada Labour Code. I commend him for that. I wonder if he can tell the House if there have been any further developments since that time, and can he assure the House that he will monitor them closely? It would appear that attitudes have not yet hardened, and if he would monitor the situation closely before it degenerates into a long-term interruption of services, as did EPA, he will do the region a great service.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I have been given very good advice and guidance on this matter by the Hon. Member sitting next to me. I would like to confirm what the Hon. Member has just said. A mediator has been appointed and will be meeting with the parties on Thursday, May 12, 1983. It is certainly our wish and our hope that this matter be resolved in order to avoid the interruptions that the Hon. Member has mentioned. Of course, in order to arrive at an equitable settlement, co-operation and good will on the part of all concerned will be required.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE SOVIET INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Defence. A month ago tomorrow, I asked the Minister if he had any evidence of Soviet involvement in Nicaragua. In view of the fact that perhaps over 100 tons of arms were intercepted in Brazil proceeding from Libya to Nicaragua, could the Minister of Defence indicate if he now has any knowledge of Soviet involvement in that country?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government is looking very closely at the situation in Central America. I think there have been some statements made about our interest there. The Prime Minister has expressed his views and concerns about the situation in Central America to President Reagan in Washington. We are receiving the usual information about what is going on in that part of the world. As far as the implication that other countries are delivering arms to that part of the world is concerned, I believe that it is public knowledge that there is much interference in these countries from one side or the other. As was stated before, I believe the policy of the Government is that Nicaragua should be run by Nicaraguans, and no other country should be involved in the internal affairs of this or any other country.

• (1450)

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REVIEW AID PROGRAMS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of External Affairs perhaps I could put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that it has been stated that violence has become Nicaragua's most important export to the rest of the world; in view of the fact that that country now has a new army numbering 25,000 men, supported by a militia of 50,000; in view of the fact that there are 2,000 Cuban military and security advisers in that country, backed up with Soviet tanks and other equipment, would the Prime Minister indicate if the Government is reviewing the various aid programs which we have extended to Nicaragua, with a view to seeing if, indeed, they should be continued when there is such evidence of a build-up of a military nature in that country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, our aid programs everywhere are always under review.

CANCELLATION OF U.N. SECURITY COUNCIL MEETING

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for External Affairs perhaps I could address my question to his parliamentary secretary. Yesterday the Security Council cancelled its scheduled meeting on Nicaragua's complaint that the United States is trying to topple its Government. Can the parliamentary secretary inform the House whether a date has been established for the meeting of the Security Council to take place on this charge? And can he also tell us whether the Canadian Government is going to take any initiatives to urge the Secretary General, Perez de Cuellar, to participate in the peacemaking process?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am afraid it is too soon for us to have this information right now. As soon as the Secretary of State for External Affairs returns, there will be a discussion of Canada's initiatives in this respect.

[English]

BILATERAL NEGOTIATIONS PROPOSAL

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, perhaps I could ask the Prime Minister if he knows of any Canadian initiatives which will be taken to persuade Secretary General Perez de Cuellar to participate in the peacemaking process in Central America? Also, in reference to a question that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East, asked the other day about the Contadora group's proposal—this is the proposal of the Contadora group which would encourage bilateral negotiations between Nicaragua and the United States, and bilateral negotiations between Nicaragua and Honduras—could the Prime Minister indicate whether the Canadian Government is going to give its support, as part of the requested international support, to the Contadora group's proposal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe the Minister has already indicated sympathy and support for the Contadora proposal. Certainly it is one which we see as constructive and one which we encourage. We believe that the states of the region are fully justified to be worried lest that whole area become again a cockpit of international rivalry. Therefore, we support the proposal. Whether it will have the results which the Hon. Member suggests, I do not know, but I believe that is the purpose of the proposal. I certainly hope it will have that effect. There should be more dialogue between the countries, and there should even be more dialogue between some of those countries and the United States of America.

HOUSING

ENDING OF $3,000 GRANT PROGRAM—CONSEQUENCES FOR RENTER APPLICANTS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works who, earlier in the Question Period, indicated that a young couple were grossly ill advised to give notice of vacating their apartment and entering into a purchase order for a new home, on the basis of what I thought was a reasonable expectation on their behalf of what was contained in the budget with respect to the $3,000 subsidy.

The other gross mistake which was brought to the attention of the House by the Minister was that the Government and Central Mortgage, despite the best advice available to it, grossly under-estimated the market. Given these two mistakes, one by a young couple hoping to purchase their first house, and the other by a Department which, according to the Minister possesses the best experts in the field, who, in the interest of fairness and equity, in the Minister's view, should pay the price of that mistake?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I understood the previous Hon. Member to say that some people had given up their apartment as if they were just waiting to enter a house for which a foundation had not yet been laid. I thought that that sort of rhetoric did not help the debate.

I believe the question of the Hon. Member for Perth is a very serious one. Obviously, there are criteria which have to be met when you are applying for a $3,000 home ownership grant. Surely those, at least, should be met before major decisions, such as giving up an apartment, are made. On the other hand, I said that we had estimated, to the best of our knowledge, what would be the normal housing starts in the best years which we have seen in the housing history of the country. It is obvious that confidence has returned and a lot of Canadians want to build houses. There are a lot of savings which are not used and that is what we were trying to encourage.

I did not say so in my previous answers, but Canadians should also look at the other announcements made by the Minister of Finance, such as on the Registered Home Ownership Plan, which really offers considerable advantages in many cases. In fact some of them are superior to the $3,000 grant. That being said, I am assessing the size of the problem. As soon as I have information I will answer the serious question raised by the Hon. Member.

PETRO-CANADA

EXPLORATION FOR OIL OFF CHINA COAST

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As the Minister will know, Petro-Canada has just announced that it is going to spend Canadian taxpayer dollars on off-shore exploration for oil off mainland China. The Minister will also know that Petro-Canada announced the closing of a project in northeastern Alberta related to the heavy oil sands. Can the Minister explain why, in this time of economic stagnation, when jobs are needed in Canada, we are spending, through Petro-Canada, Canadian dollars for jobs off mainland China, but withdrawing funds which are creating jobs in Canada?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, Petro-Canada, like many other corporations which have some experts available, have to find opportunity not only in Canada but elsewhere. I believe this agreement with China is creating an opportunity in the field of oil and gas for drilling in an area where there is a great opportunity. In so far as the problems within Canada are concerned, we are working all the time on some projects. I am in constant touch with the Government of Alberta. We are trying to develop new projects. I think that to link the two projects the way the Hon. Member just did, is absoltely unfair and uncalled for.

DEVELOPMENT OF DOMESTIC RESOURCES

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I would disagree with the Minister that linking the two projects is not fair. I would like to remind the Minister that in northeastern Alberta the total known reserves in the tar sands and in the oil sands surpass all of the reserves in the Middle East. Is it not time that the Government looked to our own security of energy supply, of oil supply, and developed those resources, rather than move off to China and develop mainland China resources for their security of supply?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member must realize, coming from western Canada, that Canadian trade with China is very important because we have a very large surplus of trade with China, and most of the goods we sell to China are agricultural products coming from the Prairies. I believe he should be aware that it is quite important to maintain good relations. In terms of his comment on the energy situation in Canada, I invite him to read the comments of Total Petroleum, as reported in the press this morning, where they said that the only place they can do good business in oil at this time is in Canada.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

AGREEMENTS WITH SASKATCHEWAN ON USE OF TESTING RANGE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a very brief question I would like to direct to the Minister of Defence. Yesterday I asked if he would table four contracts between the Government of Canada and the Government of Saskatchewan. Is he now prepared to table those contracts? If it is a question of the consent of the Government of Saskatchewan, I believe he will find there will be full co-operation in obtaining that consent from that Government.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, in answering the Leader of the Opposition yesterday I said I was looking into the matter as far as the confidentiality of the documents was concerned, and also I thought it was only reasonable to have the concurrence of the Saskatchewan Government before tabling them. There is no confidentiality in the documents, and I have the consent of the Government of Saskatchewan. With your permission, Madam Speaker, after Question Period I will be happy to table the documents.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CORBETT—QUESTION ASKED DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention a matter I consider to be a question of privilege not only for myself but also for the people across this nation who work in shipyards, particularly those shipyard workers who are unemployed. In asking a question today of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) which was terribly important to those people—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member did not get a supplementary but I think everyone else in the House understood the reason. Members have been pleading with me to be a little more strict about questions. The Hon. Member's question was a very, very long one and he got an answer. I suppose the best way to help the people he wants to help is to conform with the rules of the House, which require that questions be short and seek information. I will be glad to recognize the Hon. Member on any other occasion so he can satisfy his constituents, but he must be brief in his questions.

Mr. Corbett: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Well, no, the Hon. Member is not going to comment on the ruling I have just made. That is final. The Hon. Member did not get a supplementary, and I am sure I have the support of the House in enforcing the brevity of questions.

Mr. Corbett: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is now rising on a point of order?

Mr. Corbett: Yes.

Madam Speaker: Tell me immediately what the point of order is.

Mr. Corbett: Quite simply, the point of order is that if new rules have been introduced in this House I have not received them. Is there some sort of a—

Madam Speaker: Order. They are not new rules, they are very old rules. I would refer the Hon. Member to our Standing Orders. Questions must be brief and seek information.

Mr. Nielsen: And the answers must be brief.

PETITION

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS AND STANDING ORDERS

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the House I would like to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 106, the Petition of Michael Rusnak, praying for the passage of an Act to incorporate the Eparch of the Eparchy of Saints Cyril and Methodius of Slovaks of the Byzantine Rite in Canada, filed after the time limit specified under Standing Order 97, be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, together with the Four Hundred and Thirty-Eighth Report of the Clerk of Petitions thereon, presented to the House on Tuesday, April 26, 1983, for any recommendations the Committee deems advisable.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—PROCEDURE RESPECTING NOTIFICATION OF ITEMS FOR DEBATE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the proposer of the first motion but I feel my point of order is a matter which concerns all Members on Wednesdays, the timing of the notification of Bills or Motions or whatever is to be brought before us today.

The projected daily order of business reached my office at 11.10 today, Mr. Speaker. The notification which is published and photostated is not in our lobby. The one in the lobby now is the one placed there by our Deputy Whip for last week's proceedings. This is not good enough. There are matters brought before the House by Private Members which are important, not just to individual Members but to the country. We are here to bring forward for the consideration of this House matters which the Governments not prepared to consider. Members should have, and do have, the right to bring them forward. They should have the opportunity to prepare properly for their consideration.

The selection of subjects is also a very great mystery to everyone, Mr. Speaker. I understand there is a fair amount of telephoning to Members asking whether we are prepared to raise a particular matter, say, tomorrow. Perhaps they even call us on the same day the matter is to be brought forward. That selection process is not clear in anyone's mind.

I am sorry to eat into the time of the Hon. Member by ten minutes, not of the first speaker, but of the third matter to be considered today. His time will be reduced by ten minutes or by however long this point of order takes, unless there is unanimous consent of the House to do otherwise.

My contention, Mr. Speaker, is that the rules governing Private Members' Business are not clear. They are not sufficiently clarified in the Order Paper for everyone to receive sufficient notice—the proposer, for example—or for those who wish to speak to the matter to receive notice to prepare themselves. There is not sufficient time for each matter to be considered for an hour for the full three hours.

• (1510)

Those three matters deserve the most careful consideration by the Chair. All backbenchers are concerned and I think I am speaking for them in raising this point of order this afternoon.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if it would help the Hon. Member, I could prepare an outline of the manner in which the system works so as to establish what the business is for any given day, and I could circulate it to all Members.

If, however, there are any suggestions that there is favouritism or preference given, that is simply not true. If you look at today's list, Mr. Speaker, you will see the names of three Opposition Members. A week or two ago a point was raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and just a couple of days ago we contacted him to see if he would be prepared to go on today, but he was not.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Who is "we"?

Mr. Smith: "We" is the office that co-ordinates this procedure and reports to me. We then contacted the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) and he was interested in substituting one Bill for another. We thought that was reasonable and we accommodated him.

In order to accommodate Members it is not always possible to get the list out as soon as the Hon. Member would like. That is the only reason. I want to assure him that it is equally inconvenient for the various Parliamentary Secretaries who have an obligation to organize the debate in response to Private Members Bills. They do not get any more notice than the Members who are raising the issue.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the late hour at which Members are notified of their participation has always been a bone of contention. I think it is fair to say that once we start the new session under the new Standing Orders, there will be a draw and Hon. Members will know reasonably far in advance when their Bill will come up. If they are nineteenth on the list, say, they will have a reasonable assurance of when they might have a chance to debate.

I think the problem now is that we are operating with two sets of rules. We are not operating under the draw system that was recommended. I understand it has been quite difficult of late to get Hon. Members to take part.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, when the Parliamentary Secretary is looking into that point, I wonder if he would look into another matter which affects the privileges of Members of Parliament. As one of those who had five minutes to debate the very important and directly related matter of the establishment of a Canadian merchant marine, I felt at the time that the importance of the subject was downgraded and that my capacity under that ancient right of this Chamber that a Member shall be heard was impinged.

The essence of the argument is that we have erred in our rules and we must find some way to correct that; to get the full hour allotted without having to wait for the start of a new session. That may never come, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, it should be pointed out that under the new provisional rules we now have three hours, or we attempt to have three hours, each Wednesday afternoon, whereas under the old rules there were only two after you reached the 40-hour point in any given session. Strictly speaking, a little more time is given to Private Members' Business now than was given before.

I wish to assure my hon. friend that if I had been here I would gladly have given unanimous consent for the time of the House being extended to accommodate him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) raises a legitimate grievance. However, the Chair must be guided by custom and practice covering these matters. As Hon. Members know, the Standing Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure is reviewing the Standing Orders and rules of the House of Commons, so this would perhaps be an ideal matter to refer to that Committee. The Chair also takes into account the proposals put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith).

I would also draw to the attention of Hon. Members the ruling made on December 5, 1977 by Mr. Deputy Speaker Laniel and reported at page 1557 of Hansard for that date as follows:

> Second, a Member who feels that the practice has resulted in an injustice on a particular occasion and that he should have been consulted or given more advance notice may, of course, express his dissatisfaction simply by withholding the required unanimous consent. This would oblige the Chair to call seriatim, one by one, all items preceding the scheduled item.

The various concerns expressed at that time were no different from those expressed today and on a number of previous occasions. In the case of the Bill presently before us, unanimous consent has been given.

The Chair has heard the grievance expressed by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich. The best one can do in the circumstances is to ask that the Committee clarify or tighten up the procedure under which the selection is made. Until that is done the Chair would want to be guided by the current practice established by the House.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that today's contribution to this particular debate be referred specifically to the Committee so that it will be seized of the problem, will understand what the problem of the backbencher is and deal with it in an appropriate fashion. That may be by extending the hours automatically after six o'clock, by providing that notification be posted in all lobbies on Monday or that notification be given at the time of the normal Thursday question. I think that would perhaps be the most appropriate time.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. colleague is talking about the rules and regulations and not about the personnel involved. I find that the officer who looks after this is most obliging and does his best to accommodate us in every way he can.

I think it is the rules and regulations on procedures that worry us, rather than the personnel.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The point made by the Hon. Member is well received by the Chair. Short of proceeding with a formal motion to refer this important topic to the Committee looking at procedures, the Chair will take it up itself to write the Chairman of that Committee and submit the points made by all Parties.

MARITIME INDUSTRIAL OPPORTUNITIES

ADVISABILITY OF APPOINTING ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of creating a Royal Commission on Maritime Industrial Opportunities for Canada with terms of reference to include studies and recommendations (a) on the feasibility and benefits of creating a Canadian merchant fleet (b) on co-ordinating the efforts of Government, industry and organized labour in creating a Canadian merchant fleet (c) on a course of action which would allow Canadians to identify and capture future economic benefits in the marine industrial sector, such as offshore mineral development and seabed mining.

● (1520)

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion originally found itself on the Order Paper on November 26, 1981. It is rather interesting that we should be debating the motion today since some action has been taken to generate shipbuilding interest across the country. However, I still believe that this motion is relevant because what activity has been provided by the Government in this field is quite hopelessly inadequate when measured against the opportunities that are available for Canadians.

I think most Members of the House would recognize that the date of this motion comes after considerable and hard-fought debate on the Canada Oil and Gas Act, Bill C-48. In that Act the Government provided a number of measures which it claimed would provide industrial benefits to Canada from oil and gas development, particularly from offshore oil and gas development. The Government spoke of the benefits that would accrue from the sourcing of materials in Canada and enhancing Canadian producers not only to supply our needs in this field but to develop expertise and eventually sell it offshore. It also included provisions to ensure the procurement of Canadian employment.

The unfortunate fact which became clear when we were discussing this legislation was that it was totally discretionary. The clauses that were written into the legislation were virtually ineffective in providing any teeth, public scrutiny or any input from outside the Minister's office. Although he would have advice from his supporting Departments, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was solely responsible for determining what would happen in this very important industrial sector. I would suggest from the facts that were laid before the committee and the House of Commons when considering the Oil and Gas Act that the Minister's priorities were definitely for developing energy without considering industrial benefits in Canada. Those discretionary powers were far in excess of what was required and certainly excluded many other sectors in the country, including the marine industrial sector, members of organized labour and the public in general who would benefit.

The purpose of this motion is to try to shed some light on these facts. We had envisioned a group of knowledgeable people being convened as an inquiry group which would travel throughout the country to meet with representatives of municipalities, organized labour and the various shipyards and shipbuilders in Canada. They would meet with the oceans industries group who provide materials to the shipbuilding industry so that this inquiry could produce a general and well informed, publicly informed document that could supply some recommendations for improving the marine industrial sector in Canada.

We eventually saw some initiatives on the part of the Government and the acknowledgement that the shipbuilding industry which it had ignored for years was in fact worth the time and investment. I would point out that the federal Government appeared to be interested in developing a shipbuilding policy from what we delivered at the beginning of the year, which advocated a very passive effort with no activity at all.

That passive action came in the form of three basic proposals. It would see the customs boundary extended out 200 miles in the hope of capturing marine activities within Canada, such as marine platforms which would be constructed in Canada in order to escape the duty provisions. This proposal or policy statement, which is all that it is, would eliminate some of the preferential duties that would allow certain nations such as Commonwealth countries and developing nations to dump ships in Canada at much lower prices and without penalties than Canadian shipyards could provide. While obvious loopholes such as that were blocked, that was not the case with the boundary. The boundary was not extended.

Now that the policy is in place I wonder if we will ever see the supporting legislation. It is my understanding that the responsibility now passes from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) to the Secretary of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove). We have no indication that this will occur.

A second token recognition was revealed in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). The Minister of Finance is the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the one who took the position that he would be the end-all and be-all in determining what would happen in Canadian shipbuilding. As Minister of Finance he used his discretion by giving another indication that the Canadian Government had some minor interest in shipbuilding in this country. He indicated that approximately $700 million would be provided for a Coast Guard fleet renovation program.

I would point out, however, that this old plum of the Coast Guard fleet renovation has been trotted out by Cabinet Ministers over the last three Parliaments. Every time that an individual in the Treasury benches requires a plum to trot out during his travelling through the Great Lakes, or on the East or West Coast of the country, he would trot out the old Coast Guard fleet renovation program. When the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) was Minister of Defence in the previous Conservative Government, he proposed a $300 million fleet renovation program. We are still waiting for those vessels.

We also heard about the same fleet renovation program in the previous Parliament. I know that Members of the Party to my right have been asking that the program be put on the drawing board quickly and be accelerated for three purposes. The first is to provide the infrastructure and equipment that the Canadian Coast Guard needs to perform efficiently. The second is to create employment, especially in those areas of the country where that employment is desperately needed. Finally, the acceleration of that program and the faster construction of ships would give Canadian shipyards a shot in the arm and an opportunity to upgrade and purchase those new technologies required to remain competitive. However, I suspect that that $780 million will be spend over the lifetime of the present generation.

The point I have been making is that the Government has made two very soft proposals. One is a policy statement that has not yet been made law. Given the length of time it takes Parliament to act and the Liberal Government's past history of absolutely ignoring this field, I doubt whether we will see this legislation to support that policy.

The second soft proposal is the old carrot of the Coast Guard fleet renovation program. It would have been much more constructive for those people who have to do the planning, make the investments in their shipyards, determine the flow and size of their work force and training of their employees in order to remain current and competitive to know whether or not the Minister of Finance really had any intention to spend that $780 million on Coast Guard fleet renovations. Those are the two recognitions.

The other very serious problem with marine industrial strategy in this country is that the Government is not really committed to addressing that strategy. It is difficult to determine where the differences lie on that side. Certainly there are representatives over there from the eastern part of the country who could achieve substantial benefits for that area.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) travelled to Prince Rupert and was asked who was building the bulk carriers that would haul our coal to Japan, he stood up to the crowd and said: "We will ship our coal away in the boats of anyone who wants to haul it away". He was definitely not in favour of having it hauled away in Canadian ships. He was definitely not stressing that point. The Prime Minister of Canada, the ultimate spokesperson for the Party opposite, shot down the suggestion that a Canadian fleet should be developed.

• (1530)

The previous Secretary of State for External Affairs, the present Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), when questioned in the United States about Canadian economic nationalism, put forward the point that Canadians would not become involved in cargo reservations, that Canadians would not ensure a Canadian merchant fleet would have a chance by adopting a provision such as the UNCTAD provision which would see up to 40 per cent of our trading cargo carried in Canadian ships, 40 per cent carried by our trading partner, and 20 per cent by ships of opportunity to take advantage of back hauls, etc. One prominent Cabinet Minister and the Prime Minister shot down a real opportunity for Canadians to develop a Canadian merchant fleet.

We are getting mixed signals from that Government. The signals on the positive side are very weak. Indications are that Canadian shipbuilding and a Canadian merchant fleet are not strong priorities with the Government.

The timing of this motion is interesting. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) pointed out some interesting anomalies that occur with Private Members' Hour. Because of certain other demands, I was trying to replace this resolution on the list. Fortunately we are debating the motion right after release of the 1982 annual report of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association, so I think it is very timely and lucky that we managed to get the resolution before the House now.

The shipbuilding and ship repair report mentions another area of marine industrial activity that we are ignoring and on which the Government refused to move. When the policy statement was brought out about extending the customs boundary, closing the loopholes for offshore vessels and dealing with a 9 per cent subsidy, the importing of fishing vessels of over 100 feet was left out. For example, the Atlantic trawler fleet requires replacement over the next ten years. This will mean $3 billion worth of shipbuilding work. A little further on the report points out that not a single fishing vessel was ordered from our yards in 1982. However, five were imported in 1982, for a total of 27 trawlers imported since 1979. That Government is giving work for Canadians away. It is absolutely ridiculous to allow that work to go offshore.

There are certain elements the report acknowledges; for instance, the development of a couple of CN ferries. We have a list of offshore work completed in 1982. The report goes on to point out that in a depressed world economy, in the cut-throat, competitive international market, what the shipbuilding industry in this country needs is a policy developed by Government. The Government is really the agent, the catalyst, that will bring industry together, the industry of those who require maritime or marine bottoms and the builders. It could be done in a way that tries to meet the needs of each other. It does not happen automatically. Unfortunately, the Government is not doing this.

The Government can act as catalyst in a second way by timing the building of fleets which the Government requires. For instance, it could meet the requirements of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the Department of National Defence and the Department of Transport. The Government should provide proper timing for construction. The frigate program has been dragging out for years. The Coast Guard renovation program has been dragging out for years. If the Government were to time those expenditures properly to allow shipyards to use that material for planning, their work forces could be kept together and trained people could be kept right at their peak. Purchases of automatic equipment and computer guided technology could be timed properly. Yards could then maintain themselves on the leading edge of shipbuilding so they would not only be competitive in Canada but on a world-wide basis. The Government does not do that. It is most unfortunate because there are many lost opportunities.

I will briefly summarize a few things in the report. At the end of December, 1982 Canadian shipyards had only 20 vessels and floating equipment under construction or on order, with a gross tonnage of 186,000 tonnes. This reflects a reduction of 59 per cent in the number of units under construction and a 35 per cent reduction in tonnage. New orders were down drastically from 38 in 1981 to 11 in 1982. The report goes on to indicate that there are no new orders for 1983 in the order book. This is a desperate situation. With the exception of the soft commitment, the statement of policy on which the Government has not delivered, and the Canadian frigate program, there is very little in the works for the Canadian shipbuilding industry.

In the discussion of the Canada Oil and Gas Act, discussion was had of some of the models other countries such as Norway or Britain develop. I am speaking of the offshore supply office concept. Certain specialists could take a look at Canadian industry where there is potential for development and encourage the taking on of new lines of products that would meet maritime industrial needs, co-ordinating those activities with the shipbuilders, the oil companies and the offshore resource exploration companies who require it.

In Britain they had hundreds and hundreds of people working in the offshore supply office. They were involved in marketing, engineering and in on the ground, hands-on assistance to business in a variety of areas. It was effective assistance. But what did we put forward, Mr. Speaker? We put forward 24 people in the Department of Industry's office of industrial benefits. It is a joke. By the time they get just the simple paper work done and manage to organize it, it is a wonder they can do anything in the area of practical assistance.

Over the next two decades we are looking at the expenditure of billions of dollars. We are talking in the order of $33 billion. There are 400 different projects over the next two decades at which Canadian yards could have a crack. It would employ tens of thousands of Canadians. But the Government in its very soft commitment wants 24 people to do all that work. It is ridiculous. That is a failure to deliver on the commitment.

I say to the Government double or triple the resources. This is not Goverment intervention; it is a desperate and real need to co-ordinate and disseminate information to encourage the private sector to take on more activities. Some assurance should be given in the beginning that the investment will find a return. That can be guaranteed by proper timing of programs and by proper resources allocated to assist business to get rolling in this important field.

It is interesting that over the years on the merchant fleet side we probably have had a very large Canadian-owned merchant fleet, with companies such as Federal Commerce and Navigation, Canadian Pacific and Papachristidis Maratime Inc. A large number of Canadian firms benefit by registering those ships offshore. They have tax concessions and reduced requirements for employee benefits and benefits like that. This Government could very quickly see those ships returned to Canada. We would have ready made employment for shipyards, ready made business for Canadian crews and the entire secondary area of employment and economic opportunities that accrue out of it. This Government could very quickly put those Canadian ships onshore by one simple method. It could adopt the UNCTAD procedure of cargo reservations and say that the selling of Canadian goods offshore would be applied under the UNCTAD proposal. Then those shipping companies would come onshore to carry our goods. They are carrying them already, but the benefits are going elsewhere.

• (1540)

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) for moving his motion today. He almost apologized for doing so and questioned whether or not it was relevant since he placed it on the Order Paper back in November, 1981. I want to assure him that it is very relevant today.

I am pleased that he acknowleged the federal Government is interested in the deep sea fleet subject. Also I was very pleased he gave the federal Government some recognition because we have done something modestly, as he put it. He also gave recognition to the present budget which earmarked over $700 million for the Canadian Coast Guard Fleet Renovation and Acquisition Program.

More important, his motion allows us to present to Canadians what has and what has not been done in this entire area. As the Hon. Member probably knows very well, Canada made a conscious decision in the late 1940s to rely on market forces for international shipping requirements, which led to the demise of the post-war inefficient Canadian flag fleet. This does not mean, however, that the Government has ignored the issue of Canada's participation in ocean shipping over the past 30 years. Several very extensive studies have been commissioned over past years to ascertain whether or not it would be in the Canadian interest to encourage the development of a Canadian presence in deep sea shipping. Before recommending further studies or Royal Commissions, as the Hon. Member suggested, I think it behooves us to examine some of the history and results of earlier studies.

In order to understand better the present situation, it is important to go back to the situation which prevailed after the Second World War. In 1945 the Park Steamship Company was administering a fleet of 176 vessels. By 1948 the Canadian fleet comprised 215 dry-cargo vessels totalling two million deadweight tons. The post-war shortage of shipping services and high ocean freight rates allowed Canadian vessels to operate in the deep sea trades despite the fact that Canadian flag operating costs were the second highest in the world. By the end of the decade, however, growing competition from foreign fleets, a drop in world freight rates, labour problems and changing technology began to tell upon Canada's merchant marine.

After a substantive review of the international shipping situation in 1948-49, the Canadian Marine Commission concluded that:

> Having regard to the cost of construction and operation and taking trade balances into consideration, it is inadvisable as well as uneconomic for Canada to consider the construction and operation of a Canadian flag, ocean-going merchant marine of sufficient dimensions to accommodate all her export trade or any fixed percentage thereof.

The Commission recommended that Canada maintain the shipping and shipbuilding industries as a nucleus capable of rapid expansion in an emergency. The Government, however, conscious of the difficulties faced by the Park fleet, decided to rely fully on market forces and approved a liquidation of the inefficient Park fleet. Owners were given seven years in which to use the proceeds of the sale of war-built ships for the acquisition of new or reconditioned ships, preferably ones built in Canadian shipyards. Because owners were reluctant to build deep sea tonnage, a large portion of the sale proceeds were ultimately diverted into lake and coastal shipping. It is worth noting that these fiscal privileges were a key element in the development of the Canadian Great Lakes fleet, which not only serves as a low-cost, efficient carrier of Canadian domestic cargoes, but has managed as well to capture a large proportion of the marine cargoes moving between the United States and Canada. I am told that this now amounts to about 90 per cent.

Ever since the decision to liquidate the Park Steamship Company, the debate has been going on as to whether or not it is economically sound to revive the Canadian deep sea fleet. Although there has been in the past, and continues to be, selective participation by Canadian flag shipping in specialized deep sea trades, it is generally recognized that Canada may not possess a world-wide comparative advantage in the deep sea shipping sector which would allow the country to become a major maritime power. The conclusions of the various studies have been similar. Although Canadians face some cost disadvantages, the studies all pointed out the potential for Canadian participation in certain trades, particularly those where capital intensive vessels were required.

In 1970, after the passing of the National Transportation Act, a report prepared by Hedlin Menzies and Associates for the Canadian Transport Commission assessed the potential feasibility of a Canadian deep sea merchant marine. The Hedlin Menzies study was an exhaustive evaluation of the economics of deep sea shipping. Construction and operating costs were obtained for both Canadian and foreign flag operators. A computerized economic evaluation model was used to identify prototype ships that would result in minimum carrying costs for each major Canadian deep sea bulk trade.

In total, 26 separate East and West Coast Canadian trade patterns were examined, which embraced various Canadian trade cargoes, possible cross-trades and possible ship types. On the basis of these most efficient ships, the study then calculated the freight rates and revenues operators would require. They concluded that Canadian flag operators would require annual revenues between 14 per cent to 20 per cent higher than those required by low-cost foreign flag owners in order to achieve the same after tax return on equity. They attributed the higher required revenues to the impact of Canadian taxes and the higher operating costs caused by Canadian crew and subsistence costs. Despite this general cost situation, the study identified as potentially economic for Canadian owners those trades using bulk-type vessels with capital costs in excess of $10 million, using 1975 dollars.

An exhaustive study of the commercial viability of shipping into and out of Canada was carried out in the late 1970s by Alcan Shipping Services Limited. The basic message from the Alcan report with respect to the commercial viability of the various options studied was that a number of routes were potentially profitable for Canadian entrepreneurs. The Alcan study examined the relative competitiveness and profitability of foreign flag shipping versus Canadian flag options and tested them against 23 selected commodity routes accounting for 54 per cent of Canadian 1974 deep sea exports and 30 per cent of deep sea imports in tonnage terms. These included 12 bulk routes, five neo-bulk routes, four container routes and two break-bulk routes. For purposes of analysis, costs and revenues were projected for each route on the assumption that vessels appropriate to the nature and amount of the cargoes involved would be employed.

The 12 bulk commodity routes accounted for 55 per cent of Canadian deep sea bulk exports and 35 per cent of deep sea bulk imports in 1974. The five neo-bulk routes accounted for 48 per cent of all neo-bulk Canadian deep sea trade during the same year, and the four container routes represented 78 per cent of Canada's container trade.

The study did not attempt to select routes for potential Canadian investment. It simply examined the commercial attractiveness of these four options. Results were based on anticipated average conditions over a 20-year period. A typical vessel was identified for each route and traffic flow volumes estimated. Future freight rates were calculated, as well as future vessel costs. Other variables included were vessel purchase and charter costs, payment schedules and loan terms, write-off periods, maintenance and crewing costs, port and fuel costs, market freight rates and appropriate discount rates.

The analysis indicated that Canadian-built and Canadian registered ships could prove profitable on seven routes. Canadian registered ships obtained from the cheapest source of supply were considered potentially profitable on six routes.

In light of these types of findings, it is difficult to find justification for any further studies of the commercial competitiveness of prospective Canadian operators in deepsea shipping. In fact, there are many reasons why it is very difficult to compare Canadian flag operations with foreign operations, a large proportion of which are influenced by various Government assistance programs. First, there is very little economic regulation of the international shipping industry. Hence reliable and timely cost data is very difficult to come by.

Second, the international deepsea industry is a very large industry which is not homogeneous. Conditions which prevail in one part of the industry may not be similar in another. There are a variety of types of operations with often a clear separation in the behaviour of various market segments. For example, there are the three principal shipping markets, liquid bulk, dry bulk and general cargo, as well as the specialty markets such as heavylift, short-sea, roll-on-roll-off-ferries, cruise ships and more. Each one of these is completely different in the type of size of vessels employed, often in the ports they serve and the economic conditions which affect them. Thus, simultaneously it is possible to have a boom in the bulk carrier market due to extraordinary wheat purchases by an East European nation, a bust in the large tanker market due to a crisis in the Persian Gulf, a simultaneous boom in the offshore supply vessel market in the hunt for alternate resources, and a slump in the cruise market due to a recession in the United States. Thus it is not possible to draw conclusions about the industry that are applicable to all situations.

Third, the ocean shipping industry is very volatile with rapid changes in rates and in second-hand ship costs, as these reflect the capitalized value of earnings potential. In very few sectors, is it more evident than in international shipping that forces combine to make it a volatile sector. Transportation being a derived demand, all cycles affecting one particular commodity or specific trade route are immediately passed on to shipping in terms of reduced volumes, rates or irregular patterns. On the other hand, as demonstrated by the world petroleum pricing situation, the increases in commodity prices are not necessarily reflected by higher freight rates, although often there may be a relation between the value of commodities and the level of rates.

Rates are also affected by political factors such as the closing of the Suez Canal or military activities, creating a demand for commercial shipping, as demonstrated by the Korean and Vietnamese wars. Any analysis of freight rates in the international marine sector will quickly show that rates fluctuate violently, not uncommonly rising by some 250 to 350 per cent within weeks, if not days, then dropping just as rapidly to original levels or even well below.

An illustration of rate fluctuations is transportation charges for wheat between Canadian St. Lawrence River ports and Antwerp, Amsterdam and Rotterdam. Ocean charter freight rates from these St. Lawrence ports on a yearly weighted average basis were $10.84 U.S. per tonne in 1973, rising to $18.18 U.S. in 1980 and falling back to $6.31 per tonne by 1982, a level only 60 per cent of the rates prevailing nine years earlier.

It is very important to note the fact that Canada does not have a major deep sea fleet does not mean that there has been no participation by Canadians in the industry. As of the beginning of 1982, total registered tonnage of the Canadian merchant fleet of 1,000 deadweight tonnes and over under the Canadian flag amounted to $3,600,000 deadweight tonnes and included 271 ships. Of these ships, 85 were identified as being able to navigate on the oceans but only a few were actually engaged in deep sea services, the majority of vessels being used almost exclusively in domestic coasting or transporter trades.

An important fleet, which is indicative of Canadian interest in shipping and illustrates the potential for more direct participation, is the one controlled by Canadians but registered abroad. Although no official Canadian records show the real extent of Canadian control, estimates prepared by the Canadian Transport Commission show that at the end of 1982 Canadians controlled at least 108 ships which totalled over 6.5 million deadweight tonnes. Controlled by companies such as Canadian Pacific Limited, Cast North American Limited and Fednav, Limited, this fleet is registered in countries such as the United Kingdom, Liberia, Belgium and Hong Kong.

The largest and one of the most successful components of the Canadian flag fleet is the fleet operating in the inland waters of the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River. Canadian Government support for the Canadian laker fleet was extensive following the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway in 1959. The result of these policies was a Canadian flag fleet that expanded rapidly to take advantage of the larger ship sizes made possible by the new Seaway locks.

As well as moving domestic Canadian trade on the Great Lakes, the Canadian lake fleet moves over 90 per cent of the transborder cargoes between Canada and the United States. The solid establishment of a Canadian fleet on the Great Lakes and similar successes on both coasts in the domestic and transborder trades show that given the proper environment, Canadians can operate successfully and innovate to remain competitive. For example, Canadian ship owners have pioneered the use of self-unloader ships in the Great Lakes, and on the West Coast many tugs or barges have been designed to serve specific needs of the forest industry. As well, those successful operators have demonstrated the feasibility and viability of using Canadian crews and dealing with unions in a constructive and stable manner.

As well as successes in domestic and transborder trades, certain Canadian operators have discovered commercially viable selective opportunities in deep sea trades based on some market or technological advantage. The most recent venture in this direction has been the decisions of some of our Canadian Great Lakes ship owners to build ships that are capable of operating both in the deep sea trades and in the Great Lakes.

Two of these ships were delivered last year, a further five are being delivered this year and a final two are scheduled to be delivered in 1984. At an average cost of $40 million each, these nine ships constitute a very large financial commitment by Canadian ship owners and reflect the belief of Canadian ship owners that they can compete in certain deep sea trades based on the advantage of the self-unloading technology which they have developed in the Great Lakes and based on the strength of their present domestic operations.

However, a study recently completed by Professor Shaw of York University for the Canadian Transport Commission argues that the technological advantage which these ships presently enjoy may be lost in a few years as operators of foreign flag shipping gain access to the same technology. He argues that the tax rules applicable to these Canadian operations will have to be changed if these new ocean-going lakers are to continue to operate in deep sea shipping on a commercial basis.

The Government is continuing to determine the specific tax and shipping policies which will create an environment that will be more attractive for deep sea operators to invest in Canada. I have more to say but I see, Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that my time is up.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, first may I compliment the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) on bringing forward this motion to create a royal commission on maritime industrial opportunities within Canada. There is no need for him to apologize about the timing of his motion, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Flis) said.

In my opening comments I want to say how sorry some of us on this side are for the Parliamentary Secretary when he has to stand up in this House and read a memorandum prepared by some bureaucrat deep in the bowels of the marine section of the Department of Transport, feeding out information that they assembled. I believe that memorandum may have been circulated in the form of a magazine or an article directed to the nation at large. It would be nice to hear the Parliamentary Secretary speaking from his gut and from his heart about how he feels as a person representing the people rather than as a bureaucrat deep within the system.

This very, very critical issue is uppermost in the minds of most of us who reside in the Maritime areas and regions of Canada. The mover of the motion, myself and another colleague here in the House come from the West Coast. In my riding alone there are eight shipyards including one major shipyard. These eight shipyards have pioneered the technology that created ships to service the emerging oil industry in the North Sea and the offshore rigs. They have designed and built marvellous vessels that work in the Arctic Ocean and serve the drilling rigs and islands in the Arctic.

We now have an unbelievable technology that has emerged from the marine colleges of the world. I would say that the marine architects from the West Coast stand second to none. Our products can be delivered all over South America, into Asia, Europe and the North Sea. What we on the West Coast seem to want is equal and fair treatment by the Export Development Corporation that will enable us to put together compatible packages that are small enough to allow us to deliver the great fishing technology and service technology and auxiliary vessel technology that has been developed on the West Coast.

I have struggled with the bureaucracy here in Ottawa many times to try to get the Export Development Corporation to recognize the needs of the West Coast consortiums that deal in only a few million dollars, but these few million dollars are very important to this type of highly specialized shipyard. If the package is not in the hundreds of millions of dollars, the Export Development Corporation does not seem to be interested in it. It is too much bother in terms of the red tape and paper work that must be done. That really is a tragedy. We are losing much of our ability to build and service our domestic Maritime needs because of the total financial packages coming from shipbuilding countries that have similar design and architectural capacities but have perhaps a far higher level of productivity with lower cost.

The essential difficulty that the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) is trying to overcome is something that I have pondered and struggled with quite a bit. We in the House keep telling ourselves that it is our national need to improve national productivity at all levels, and that to challenge costs and really bring inflation down to levels where mankind is served properly by the system, productivity must be improved. As we improve our productivity, the capital quotient of production will have to be improved. We will have to improve the person-hours in production as a quotient and we will have to bring capital and labour into optimum balance.

Just recently the Government saw fit to announce that it will finance a productivity centre in order to bring us out of the productivity dilemma that we are faced with in this country. Well, is it not interesting that the Right Hon. Mr. Diefenbaker structured a productivity centre back in the 1960s that the Liberal Government then closed? We have now returned to more rhetoric on the need for productivity.

I believe that the essence of truth in terms of our need for productivity is something that we as politicians in the House who stand for election are failing to grapple with. It is far more important to grab money from the federal pot and sprinkle it around our ridings than face up to some hard facts. I would love to take to my riding some of the Coast Guard fleet renovation programs.

Mr. Speaker, what is being done in the Coast Guard fleet renovation program? As I understand it, the major dollars involved in that program will replace three of the larger Coast Guard vessels that are used as buoy tenders, channel tenders and so on. Just last Monday I was told by a very responsible official in the Department that there were ten to 15 years of life left in each of three vessels that this Coast Guard fleet renovation program will replace. The new vessels will have an efficiency in fuel consumption that is lacking in the old vessels, but the old vessels were very efficient and well constructed with ten to 15 years of good service left in them for the duty that they perform; but here we are phasing them out at a time when they have no market value. They will go to the scrapyard. We will deliver these three new vessels in order to create some temporary work in our shipyards and probably in order to upgrade accommodation on those vessels for the employees of the Coast Guard. It seems to me to be very wasteful and tragic to resort to that kind of program in order to make work.

On the other hand, what if we were to direct our energies back to ALRT, the automatic rail transport system that is being installed in Vancouver for Transpo 86? Why does this Government not take a type of export development credit and put together a financial package on the ALRT, and give this country a domestic working model from the Lower Mainland all the way up through the Fraser Valley on both sides of the river to open up a whole new vista of land and lower the cost of housing and living within the Lower Mainland of British Columbia?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: We will not sell the Canadian ALRT program until there is a complete working model at home in our own land. ALRT was originally justified because there is something like a $4 billion world market for this type of technology. We in Canada will not be able to sell on the world market. We do not have a really efficient working model on a domestic urban scale because the financial package has not been available to that demonstration project.

What I am getting at is that if we are to resolve the problems we are facing today, we must address the national productivity. In order to address productivity we will have to be honest with ourselves and stop being so political and dishonest with our national interests.

We are now in the age of GATT. A struggle with protectionism is going on in the country. We are trying to break down barriers and open up free trade. Mr. Speaker, we have a very hard five to eight years ahead of us adjusting to international free trade. How are our shipyards and steel industries to compete when Canadian labour is at $20 an hour, Japanese labour is at $9 an hour and Korean labour is at $4 an hour? Right there in the labour quotient of capital goods is a productivity challenge.

These are problems that must be addressed. Maybe the royal commission that our colleague from the NDP is calling for will address those problems. But a royal commission consisting only of shipping interests and Maritime union interests, totally self-interested, would be a total waste of money and a national tragedy. If we are to structure a royal commission, we must open it up to all input from the nation and the world in order to find a solution that is meaningful. It is a basic change in attitude, it is a basic change in work ethic, it is a basic emphasis on the word "productivity" which is needed if we are ever going to move ourselves into the world of a competing Maritime nation.

The essence of having a Maritime fleet is to be able to compete with those countries which attract a Maritime fleet. That means creating a tax system which is compatible with the international world of reality in shipping. You cannot create a Maritime fleet under the tax system and tax law we have in Canada. It is just impossible. The Parliamentary Secretary told us there were 108 Canadian ships on the high seas all sailing under other flags, except for our domestic inland fleet. Therefore we must be realistic with some fundamental truths and stop trying to pump out this dishonest rhetoric and programs like the Coast Guard fleet renovation program, the recycling of $4 billion for reconstruction in the West and the recycling of double-track every six months, in every budget speech or in every Prime Minister's speech. The rhetoric has to stop and some basic honesty has to go into the hard issue of the challenge which is ahead of us in this House in the years ahead.

In addressing this problem, another essential consideration is where are the world's markets for products from Canadian resources and Canadian manufacture? There are none. There are no buyers in the world for what has filled the bottoms of ships.

We do, however, make some moves in the direction of Canadian interests. I can remember back in the Thirty-first Parliament being part of the Government when we insisted that Cominco take 50 per cent of ore from its mines in the North to Europe in a Canadian bottom. They thought we were being very hard on them because we were penalizing them with the higher cost of shipping that tonnage in a Canadian bottom when they could get a lower price from other vessels available to them on the world market. Therefore we were penalizing them for being Canadian, harvesting Canadian minerals and shipping them to foreign markets. There was quite a debate on that issue, but the Minister of Transport of that day hung on. The fact that there are now reduced markets for our products is an indication of the trouble which Canadian National, that great Crown Corporation is in with Cast. Much wiser private sector people want out when they see what is ahead, but the Crown Corporation goes in and invests all kinds of money in Cast and now has some real economic headaches.

When we start to talk about a Maritime industry for Canada, we should go back to some of our recent experiences in the last decade and a half. I refer to the building of these beautiful tugs and supply vessels to North Sea oil drilling rigs and that whole vast capital explosion which took place, which kept the eight shipyards in my riding completely busy putting out these beautiful little ships. These tug companies which built and contracted these ships had them under a Canadian flag could not get Canadians to man them. These ships, between the steel walls, had a rubber lining so there was no vibration and noise inside the ships. I had never been on ships of such comfort and of such a high standard for crews. The wages some ten years ago were $20,000 to man these tugs and you could not find Canadian seamen to man them. The seamen came from Portugal and Spain. Even today when Canadians do go aboard these ships in the North Sea and the Arctic, where do they live? They are flown back and forth to Spain and Portugal. That is part of their contract; three weeks on, three weeks off. When we have that level of anticipation among maritime union members who want us to develop a Maritime fleet, we have to look at the emerging Third World and what other people in the world will work for. If we are not going to be productive and competitive, using our brains to be productive and competitive, then why do we keep talking about a Maritime nation? It does not make economic sense?

I mentioned the example of ALRT where we have a chance of moving out into world markets along with our technology, if we complete the financial package. It has been proven that we must look at these areas instead of pouring all our dollars into losers. I was Minister of State for Industry and Small Business for a short period of time. In our budget of 1979-80 we were pouring something like $78 million into subsidies for shipbuilding. There was no Government program which was more costly in terms of work creation than that program which was subsidizing ships built in Canadian shipyards. I believe the total benefit was for about 3,300 workers and we were pumping some $78 million into it. That is why both Governments have had to reconsider this program. It is just not equitable to pump that kind of tax dollars into that industry for the benefit of 3,300 or 3,400 workers. I remember making the very hard decision to send the subsidy down to build the last three Canadian fish trawlers built in Canada in Halifax. The rest since then as the Parliamentary Secretary said, have come in from offshore.

I have always believed that we have the technology and the efficiency to build vessels for the harvesting of our national resources in Canada. But we get all tangled up again in dishonest politics. It was the Liberal Government which denied Northland Navigation on the West Coast the right to spend some $22 million of their own money to put in a ro-ro fleet, to put in docks, so that the whole North Coast of British Columbia could be served with modern transport. The Liberal Government denied it, wiped them out, bankrupted the company and gave $4.2 million a year to the Province of British Columbia, who have had a disastrous situation ever since. There was total disregard for the outback, for the people who still use outhouses, out on the frontiers of Canada.

The Parliamentary Secretary mentioned freight rates. In markets of the world, where there is a balance between supply and demand, freight rates are one of the most critical issues which people involved in marketing and commodities deal with. I have been in the world of freight rates all my life. I lose the City of Winnipeg as a market when freight rates change. I lose the City of Regina when freight rates change. I lose the City of Saskatoon when freight rates change. I cannot move products beyond the eastern boundary of Alberta when freight rates change. Back in the Thirty-first Parliament I remember screaming in this House for weeks at a time over the anti-dumping decision brought about by Algoma Steel whereby it denied our West Coast steel industry steel from offshore because they had surplus capacity here in Ontario. As soon as it won that case, it changed the freight rates so that finished steel going to the West Coast had the same freight rate as raw steel. Consequently, if it had not been for the dropping of the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the United States dollar, all of our steel workers on the West Coast would have been out of work.

That is the kind of lack of equity which we have to address if we are going to bring strength back to this nation and some kind of long-term, meaningful work. It is only in the area of productivity and sensible application of national resources that we are going to have anything which lasts beyond just a little buffer over the next 6 to 18 months.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be taking part in the debate on this matter this afternoon. It is a very important subject, and I do not have much time, so I will give the House my conclusions on the debate right away. First of all, it seems to me that although the third speaker seemed to want to support the proposal made by the Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), he in fact spent most of his time providing eloquent proof that what the Member for Comox-Powell River was suggesting did not make much sense. I think that although the proposal has some validity and the question of having a Canadian merchant fleet has some merits, the message is far too simplistic if we are to determine the problems involved in having a share of world shipping. There are many other responses Canada can give—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

HOLIDAYS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CANADA DAY AND DOMINION DAY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved that Bill C-680, an Act to amend the Holidays Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-680, an Act to amend the Holidays Act, is an important Bill and I have great pleasure in moving second reading. The purpose of the Bill is to emphasize the fact that the constitutional independence of Canada was achieved on April 17, 1982 by the proclamation of the Canada Act, 1982. Consequently, April 17, under this Act, would be celebrated in the future as Canada Day. The naming of July 1, marking the beginning of the Dominion of Canada, as it was known in 1867, would be restored to its historically more appropriate name of Dominion Day.

I want to emphasize today, Mr. Speaker, that we are a young nation and we should be putting great stress and emphasis on our historical beginnings. In many countries in Europe, and in Great Britain, we see how they preserve their history and traditions by marking them; yet in this country we have not realized the importance of commemorating those things which were so important to the beginning of our nation. I want to see July 1 restored as Dominion Day for many historic reasons and I want to outline a few of them, just as I want April 17 to be remembered for historical reasons as Canada Day.

Back in 1867, when Dominion Day came into its own, it was a tremendous challenge to the Fathers of Confederation. When the name Dominion of Canada was chosen it represented a great deal to every Canadian, whatever his origin might be. Dominion Day commemorates a great feat in history as far as Canada is concerned. It signifies the making of a nation, indeed the making of a new nation. It signifies that two peoples of different background, different creeds, different history, language and religion came together and formed a nation.

Even though there were many, many obstacles, discouragements and frustrations, the Fathers of Confederation still went to Charlottetown and together the four Provinces, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario and Quebec, or Upper and Lower Canada as they were then called, formed a new nation.

It was a huge country, Mr. Speaker, running for hundreds of thousands of square miles with relatively few people. There was practically no industry. Manufactured goods came mostly from Britain and through United States ports. Central Canada knew little about the Maritimes and the Maritimes knew little about Ontario and Quebec. There was no railways as such. The only railway was one which came from and went back to the United States, known as the Grand Trunk. There were poor communications. Yet the Fathers of Confederation had the vision of a great country to be.

So my first reason for wanting July 1 restored as Dominion Day is the fact that it commemorates and honours the Fathers of Confederation for the stand they took and the imagination and vision they showed at that time.

Confederation was also an act of faith; faith that a country could be successful; faith that people could live in the cold climate of Canada, particularly that of the far North; faith that there was a heritage worth preserving; faith that it was a country worth developing; faith that a great nation could be built. Looking back, I think we have again to honour the vision and determination of the Fathers of Confederation in their promise and faith of what this country could do and could be.

My third reason for wanting Dominion Day restored is that it maintains the heritage not of one race but two. The union of the four states at that time, and later all the rest of the Provinces of Canada, was an act between people of two different origins, two different languages, two different creeds, the English and the French. The determination was that each of those people would keep their roots and those roots would be embodied in this great new land, so the Fathers of Confederation sought a name that would show that Anglo-Saxons would keep their roots and the French would keep their roots.

They thought of many names. There were many names suggested and discarded. There was the suggestion that it be called the Kingdom of Canada, but there were objections to that. Then Sir Leonard Tilley produced from the Seventy-second Psalm something that thrilled the people of that day and which has thrilled Canadians of all origins ever since. It reads:

He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, from the river unto the ends of the earth.

Shall have dominion, Mr. Speaker, from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth. The Fathers of Confederation, of both origins, accepted that name and the Queen consented. That is when the Dominion of Canada was born.

This new nation was a small nation, but it had the vision of those Fathers of Confederation that we would some day build a greater and greater nation. Yes, it embodied the desire to bring all of the Provinces into the union. And it did. They were not content to have just New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario and Quebec as part of the union; they looked across the nation. They looked north and west and east and saw the tremendous possibilities. That vision has become a reality. We now have Provinces all the way to the Pacific Ocean; we have Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland to the east and we have two great potential Provinces, the Northwest Territories and Yukon, to the north.

• (1630)

The Fathers of Confederation embodied that vision again in the name "Dominion of Canada". That tells us something of our history.

This country is founded on a belief in God, on Christianity. We recognize the religions of all peoples and do not say ours is the only religion, but the country was founded on the precepts of the Bible and on the precepts of God. We became a Christian nation. Whoever had the power in the Government of this new nation decreed that that power, provincially or federally, would be exercised under God. Too often today we start to cut the roots that bound us at the beginning; what bound the Provinces together was a firm belief in the omnipotent God. We have to go back to that if we are to reach the potential that the Fathers of Confederation envisioned.

That vision implied that more than two cultures would join to form this new nation. It implied that people from all over the world could come to this vast land and build a new nation. That is all embodied in the words "Dominion of Canadian"—"from sea to sea, from the river unto the ends of the earth".

That is a reality now. People from every country in the world now live in these domains. We live together peacefully for the most part, bound by the objectives and visions of the Fathers of Confederation which were to build a great nation where freedom would be the byword and belief in God would be basic to everything.

Dominion of Canada implies that this nation would not be four separate states but a nation with a federal Government and provincial Governments. There is a division of powers as set out in the British North America Act and it would be federally united into one dominion, with the constitution similar to that of the United Kingdom.

That is part of the history of the early days that we would lose if we threw aside the day that was established as the birthday of this great country. It implied also parliamentary responsibility and a Government that would be answerable and accountable to the people. It was never intended that it would simply be done by majority Government without consultation and without full and free discussion. The Fathers of Confederation saw this vast country developing through discussion and consensus. It implied the rule of law—that this country would be ruled by law and that the Government would obey the law in the same way as the humblest citizen would be required to do. That is the vision that is tied up in the name of Dominion Day.

It implied also our membership in the great British Commonwealth of nations, and that too is a reality today. Two or three weeks ago I had the pleasure of attending a ceremony in Westminster Abbey where representatives of 18 Commonwealth countries, men and women of all colours, creeds, religions and language, met united as part of the British Commonwealth. Each had his flag, his language, his differences, his own form of democratic government, but all were there as members of the Commonwealth of Nations. When the Fathers of Confederation made Canada a nation instead of four separate states, they brought us into that great commonwealth of nations.

I was thrilled when I saw Her Majesty the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh walk through that throng of people in Westminster Abbey. Representatives of 18 countries, including Canada, carried their flags proudly and put them on stands on the platform during that service.

We need to honour tradition in this country by remembering how the Dominion of Canada was formed and why it was formed. Our friends in Quebec say, "Je me souviens". It appears on their license plates and it means "I remember". Let us remember the history of this country and give every citizen, irrespective of language and country of origin, the chance to remember the beginning of this nation called Canada, this nation of which we are proud to be a part.

We have to show vision as the Fathers of Confederation did when they started out with the four states. Now we have this vast part of the continent as the Canadian nation.

On April 17 last year the Canada Act was proclaimed and Canada severed its dependence on Britain but not its membership in the Commonwealth of Nations. Canada became independent. Now we do not have to approach the British Parliament for approval or the British High Court to finalize our court cases.

The Bill was signed on April 17, 1982. It shows a tremendous interest in the future. It shows vision. We are to continue to be members of the Commonwealth, and our links with the monarchy of which we are all so proud will continue. Our Queen is the Queen of Canada. April 17 has a great significance as it marks an important moment in the history of Canada.

I ask all Members of the House and the people of Canada to remember our past, to build for the future. Let us remember it by restoring Dominion Day to our laws and by ensuring that we expect April 17, Canada Day, to have meaning for the future.

We can serve the people of this country well by restoring to this nation Dominion Day as the birth of the Dominion of Canada and Canada Day when the Canada Act was passed.

Mr. Maurice Bossy (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to say a few words concerning Bill C-680. As Hon. Members know, last year on July 1, Dominion Day was changed to Canada Day. The change in the title reflected several needs in Canadian society; the need for a modern application to reflect modern Canada and a name which reflected the identity of the country rather than denoting a status.

The name of this country is Canada; Canada is a name that is known throughout the world. The word "Dominion", while a perfectly good English word, presents difficulties for some people.

Like so much in society, language evolves. The word "Dominion" appears, in some ways, to be old-fashioned or even archaic. It also translates very poorly into French. "Puissance" appears to be the nearest one can come to it in French. Canada is the same in English or French.

• (1640)

What better name for our national holiday than the name of the country itself, a name of which all Canadians can be proud.

It is suggested in Bill C-680 that April 17 should be Canada Day to emphasize that the constitutional independence of Canada was achieved on April 17, 1982. I wonder if the Hon. Member has considered how confusing this change would be to most Canadians, many of whom have been informally referring to July 1 as Canada Day for years, even before its official designation.

I believe that Canadians do not want to become confused by juggling names, titles and dates. There already is a Canada Day. It is July 1, and it honours the Canadian Constitution. The celebrations take note of what happened on July 1, 1867. They also take note of what happened on April 17, 1982. Canada Day is a day on which to celebrate Canada's nationhood. We do not need to have separate days to celebrate separate significant dates in our nationhood. It can all be celebrated together on one day, Canada Day on July 1.

Many polls have been taken to assess how Canadians see the terms Canada Day and Dominion Day. In fact, data tabled before the Senate committee last year said conclusively that Canadians of all cultural persuasions preferred the title Canada Day. Public opinion was measured last year by the National Committee for Canada's Birthday. It suggested that, on the average, the title Canada Day is three times more popular than Dominion Day. Why should we go against public opinion by taking up the name Dominion Day once more?

I wonder if Bill C-680 is primarily concerned with ensuring that the events of April 17, 1982 are well commemorated, or whether the Bill is simply a backdoor attempt to get back to the term Dominion Day. Many Hon. Members took the change in the title as an insult and as a way of denigrating Canada's past. That attitude does not reflect the truth of the situation.

The Montreal Gazette dealt with the word Dominion in an editorial on March 10, 1981. I will quote that editorial which reflects well the difference between Canada Day and Dominion Day. It states:

> The word 'Dominion' does have a secure and honored place in Canada's history. But not all historical labels remain accurate; this one certainly has not.
>
> At the time of Confederation the word 'Dominion' was hit upon as a new coinage to describe a country which was not, in fact, a sovereign state (as Canada was not in 1867).
> But for the past 50 years Canada has been, in all but a narrow constitutional technicality (which should also be rectified this year), a truly independent nation. It should not retain a label which was coined to describe a colonial link.
> Furthermore, 'Dominion' is not nearly as felicitous a word in French as in English. For French-speaking Canadians it is a verbal oddity which serves mainly to inflame old colonial wounds.
> It is time to retire 'Dominion Day' gracefully in favor of a name of July 1 which surely no one can find objectionable, 'Canada Day'.

The editorial still rings true today. Surely what we should be doing is trying to build among Canadians a good understanding of the Canadian Constitution and a good understanding of the events both in 1867 and 1982. We do not need two days to do that. One day will suffice, a day known as Canada Day.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by saying that the views I will express are my own. They may be shared by others but they certainly are not necessarily the views of the New Democratic Party on this particular issue. I would suggest that each political Party will find that there are different opinions about what ought to have happened with regard to the change of the name of Canada's national holiday.

I am sure you will recall the circumstances and the indecent haste with which the matter was sneaked through the House by the Liberal Party, with the aid of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), unfortunately. It was unfortunate and ought not to have happened.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I must draw to the attention of the Hon. Member Standing Order 39 which reads:

> No Member shall speak disrespectfully—

And the last sentence of that paragraph reads:

> No Member may reflect upon any vote of the House, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

Therefore I would ask that the Hon. Member choose his words very carefully with respect to a procedure which occurred in this House at an earlier time.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to give a lecture on rules but we are in fact on this day reflecting on that vote. That is what the Bill does: it reflects on the vote that took place and talks about the need to go back to what was there prior to that vote having occurred. Therefore in my opinion, and I think likely in the opinion of the Chair now, for me to make reference to how the change was made is entirely appropriate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I would invite the Hon. Member to exercise great caution in interpreting the ruling of the Chair. The Chair has simply put one of our Standing Orders before the Hon. Member. I have seen nothing in the Bill nor have I heard anything in the comments made by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) with respect to the way that that earlier vote was disposed of by the House. I think that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) should exercise great parliamentary caution in what he says.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I always exercise great parliamentary caution and I will do so today, as is my normal practice.

I would like to study the issue itself. I believe that the reason for the change in the first place was mainly that people did not understand the history of the word "Dominion". I do not agree with all of what the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) said with regard to the implications to be drawn from the term Dominion of Canada. However, I still think there are many people in this country who misinterpreted what Dominion was intended to mean. Many saw that as a reflection or an attempt to continue to tie us back to colonial times. Of course, that was an interpretation that was quite incorrect and an interpretation which did a disservice to the phrase "Dominion of Canada".

• (1650)

As the Hon. Member for Bow River said, the name Dominion came from an entirely different source. It had nothing at all to do with Britain, with the United Kingdom, or the Commonwealth. It had to do with the choice made in Canada by Canadians of an appropriate way to describe Canada. That is what it was. It was an appropriate way to describe Canada. As I recall, the name was chosen in the same way as Australia chose its name when it called itself the Commonwealth of Australia. Consideration was given as to whether to call it the kingdom, the commonwealth or something else. Those names were discarded for the very reasons that people in Canada recognized the duality of our country and, recognizing the facts of the time, they did not want to have a name which reflected a tie simply with Great Britain. They chose Dominion simply because it had a more neutral interpretation, if you will, but also, in a biblical sense, it did reflect the reality of Canada. It was a most appropriate name. Looking back I cannot help feeling that because the teaching of history in the country perhaps was insufficient and inadequate—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is right.

Mr. Deans: —there was allowed to develop a sense that to call a national holiday—the national holiday, I might say, which reflects our allegiance to the country, our pride and commitment to Canada's future—to call it Dominion Day somehow was interpreted to mean that we were discarding the partnership between French and English Canada, that we were thrusting upon French Canada a name that reflected association with Great Britain. I do not think that was true at all.

Mr. Blaikie: Cartier agreed to it.

Mr. Deans: As my colleague says, Cartier agreed to the name, recognizing that it was the name chosen from among many names truly representing what the great land mass of Canada was all about.

Therefore, I was disappointed when the name was cast aside and when, all of a sudden, we decided that to call our national holiday Dominion Day was no longer appropriate. My good colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary, says that the word Dominion is old fashioned. Let me tell him something, there is nothing wrong with a little bit of old fashioned.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: If it is true that Dominion is old fashioned, is it any more old fashioned than the word "liberal"? I put that to you. Because the word was old and it stemmed from that period in history when the country came together, it seemed to me to be an appropriate word to use to describe a national holiday. I might have gone as far as to change the name of the holiday to the Dominion of Canada Day so there would be no doubt in anyone's mind what we were talking about. Then I think we would have covered all the bases. I think that might have responded more adequately to the sense that a lot of people in the country had. I might just simply have left it alone for the time being because I do not think the change was necessary.

There was a great push on in my causus, particularly from Members representing British Columbia from where my good colleague, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) comes, that because his birthday happens to be on July 1, we should call it Skelly Day. We decided not to do that. We decided not to promote that in recognition that maybe it did not have sufficient historical value.

The one argument that worries me, if you will forgive me the argument, is the one made about the close ties with the Commonwealth and how Dominion represents that. There is no one more interested in close ties with the Commonwealth than I am, with the possible exception maybe of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). The very reason why the name Dominion came into disfavour was that interpretation. The very reason why it lost the support of one part of the country was that the interpretation did reflect something to do with the Commonwealth, something to do with our very close association with Great Britain, the Queen, and all of the things that go with that.

I am a royalist, a monarchist. I truly believe that we should have a closer association with the Commonwealth. I think it would be in our best interests economically and socially to do that as a country. I think those things are true, but I do not think they should be done at the expense of other things. I do not think they should be done in a way that is overt or in a way that is destructive of the values of our own country, or in any way that would divide our country. I am concerned for the very reasons put forward by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). He did so in all good faith, I am sure, as he presented his argument, and his argument rested in part on those close associations, which were good and valuable and remain good and valuable but the very reasons used by the Opposition, if you will, to maintain the name of Dominion Day could be used as justification for changing it.

I argued during that period that there was no justification for a change in name, that people misinterpreted Dominion as a word, misinterpreted what it meant, misinterpreted and misunderstood the origins of it. These were not sufficient reasons for the change that was being proposed. What we should have been doing, instead of allowing the change to take place as a result of that misinterpretation, was to make the effort to try to bring to the public's attention what the word Dominion within the phrase Dominion of Canada actually meant. I think we probably failed in that regard. We got caught up in the politics of it. We got caught up in an ongoing argument. I remember it well and I do not want to reflect on it, however, I do remember it well.

There were attempts being made on a daily basis to find time to pass the Government's Bill. As those attempts were being made and, as the House Leader for this Party, I was in the position of having to sit and look for a period of time when the Government would bring forward its own proposal. That time was simply not forthcoming; there did not seem to be enough time. But I remember the arguments that were made during that period. I do think we failed by not persuading the House of Commons to draw away from the issue and take a much broader look at what the word Dominion in the term Dominion of Canada truly means. I do not think, quite truthfully, it makes much difference to Canadians in the over-all what you call the day, as long as it is a holiday. I think that is probably true. An interesting thing happened. Because the Bill was passed in an imperfect form, it got to the Senate, if you remember, and the appropriate wording was not contained within that piece of legislation which changed the Holidays Act. Therefore, we ended up with Dominion Day having been replaced with Canada Day but Canada Day not appearing as a holiday anywhere. That showed the haste with which the matter was dealt and the inappropriate consideration given to it.

Mr. Blaikie: Has that been changed?

Mr. Deans: To the best of my knowledge, those statutes have not yet been changed. To the best of my knowledge and recollection it is entirely possible come that fine day in July we may well find ourselves with Canada Day not being a statutory public holiday. That reflects badly on those of us who pushed it through, if not on those who were not here to oppose it and demand that changes be made.

• (1700)

There is a need to look at the value of history. A couple of weeks ago we had a debate in the House concerning the tourism industry, at which time I pointed out that if one travelled through parts of the United States, one would find plaques and directions to historical monuments. A great sense of American history is clearly evident on the surface of their lives. One could find it everywhere one looks. They hold with some great passion to names that were established many years ago which may no longer reflect the reality of today but in fact reflect the reality of that day. We must be cautious that we are not inadvertently drawn into doing a disservice to our history. On the day the Constitution of Canada was proclaimed by Her Majesty the Queen in front of the Parliament buildings, I am sure Mr. Speaker will recall the downpour of rain. I wore a brand new suit and I was soaking wet as I sat there. But that was not the birth of Canada, that was not a new day or a new dawning. Canada was born long before that day. We cannot suddenly begin the process of changing everything that was established some 100-odd years ago simply because we finally achieved the degree of self-Government we felt we ought to have.

It reminds me of a great urban renewal program which was under-way years ago. In those days urban renewal was seen as tearing down everything in the core of cities and building up brand new buildings. Over time it was recognized that in doing that we lost a lot of our heritage and what had been valuable. We lost a lot of history, and people began to look at the situation and say, "Perhaps we should not have done it that way". I draw this to the attention of the House because this may well be what we are doing now. People have come to realize that urban renewal is a process of improvement and also a process of re-establishing what was of significant value to us throughout the years. It is also a process of ensuring that it is kept in a form which makes it useful and makes us proud of it. This could equally be said of the name of our country. No one goes around saying that this is the Dominion of Canada, but that is what it is. To have taken the step we took for the reasons it was taken, which I think are more important than the fact that the step itself was taken—

Mr. Blaikie: And in the way it was taken.

Mr. Deans: —and in the way it was taken, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill just indicated, was really doing a disservice to the history of the country.

I suggest that we do not need two holidays. I am not averse to having another holiday, I must confess, and I am sure many of my colleagues and most of my constituents would love another day off with pay, which is not likely I might add. However, we could achieve the goals we have set for ourselves, recognizing the value of what took place many years ago, and recognizing perhaps the reality of the difficulties that were allowed to develop between French and English-speaking Canada and the misinterpretation that was allowed to pervade the minds of people from coast to coast over the name, if we were to say simply that Canada's national holiday should be the Dominion of Canada Day. Then we would have achieved everything that would satisfy me and probably most other people. It would enshrine for all times the purpose and meaning of "Dominion". It would make clear that the choice of the word was made here. It was made originally by Canadians on behalf of Canadians, reflecting Canadian reality, and it would be reaffirmed by Canadians on behalf of Canadians, again reaffirming and reflecting Canadian reality. I hope the House might consider this some day. We would stop the misinterpretation of the word itself and begin to apply it in a positive manner. We would ensure that in a historical sense it was clearly understood that when the Fathers of Confederation decided on that particular wording they did so because they thought it was truly Canadian and nothing else. In that way it reflected the realities and duality of Canada at the time. Now it could perhaps reflect the multinational characteristic of Canada and therefore would be a holiday we could all celebrate together within the sense of "Dominion". If we do that, we might in fact take a step forward rather than subscribe to what I really believe was a step backward taken some time ago.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was hesitant for obvious reasons to interrupt the speech of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), but I would like to contend with your opinion that it is inappropriate to reflect upon the way in which Dominion Day came to be changed to Canada Day. It is precisely the way in which it was done that made something unacceptable even more unacceptable and brought disrepute upon the House. That day when 12 Members could change a national holiday on a Friday afternoon was one of the times when I was most embarrassed to be a Member of the House of Commons, and I have had difficulty explaining to my constituents what went on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I cannot allow the Hon. Member to carry on in that vein. As I indicated earlier, I made the ruling based on the Standing Orders of the House, which I did not invent. The Standing Orders belong to all Hon. Members, and I am asked by the House to apply them.

Again I invite Hon. Members not to indulge in that kind of critique. I refer once again to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 319(3)—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): We will want an extension of time for this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I hear the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) asking for an extension of time, but the comments I am making are pertinent to the debate so I do not see why there should be an extension of time. Citation 319(3) in part reads:

> In the House of Commons a Member will not be permitted by the Speaker to indulge in any reflections on the House itself—

Going to the last part of the paragraph, it reads:

> —or to reflect upon, argue against or in any manner call in question the past acts in proceedings of the House, or to speak in abusive and disrespectful terms of an Act of Parliament.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): No, I cannot recognize an Hon. Member on that point of order. I have made my ruling. There is only one way to disagree with a ruling of the Chair—

Mr. Blaikie: Is that what you want?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I would not want any Member to proceed in that direction. My responsibility is to apply the procedures, customs and traditions of the House and to ask that they be respected.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, on a different point of order, are you telling us that it would be inappropriate at any time for a Member to recall, in the course of debate, circumstances of a vote or the fact that the Government used closure for instance? That is not the case in this case, but would it be inappropriate to recall that a Government used closure to bring in a particular Bill? Are you telling us that it would be inappropriate because we would be reflecting upon the circumstances of a vote?

Mr. Deans: Surely not.

Mr. Blaikie: Surely not.

• (1710)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) is correct in what he is now saying. However, Standing Order 39 refers to a reflection upon a vote of the House. That is different. Surely one should not attempt to do indirectly what is not allowed directly under the rules. It may be a difficult matter of interpretation for the Chair, but I appeal to the sense of fairness of all Hon. Members. They may agree or disagree with the Chair, but I invite Hon. Members not to comment further. If they strongly disagree with the Clair, there are other options open.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I hope the options you are thinking of are not some of those that have been brought down from British history. There were occasional occupants of the chair who lost their heads.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I stand to be beheaded, if that is the wish of the House, but I would invite the Hon. Member to speak to the Bill.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Shall we take a vote on that, Mr. Speaker?

We owe a debt of gratitude to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) for the Bill he has brought forward today. It is a Bill of reconciliation. We had 12 Orwellians here who tried to rewrite history, and did rewrite history in a way. They could not rewrite the provisions of the Bill to which the present Bill now called the Canada Act referred.

I would refer to the opening of the preamble of that Bill, which was originally known as the BNA Act, enacted by the British Parliament on March 29, 1867. It expressed the desire of the Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to be federally united into one Dominion under the Crown of Canada. That is in the preamble. A couple of paragraphs further down it states, "Not only that the Constitution of the legislative authority in the Dominion be provided for". In Article 3 we find that same word. It states that in the Provinces of Canada it shall be lawful for the Queen, et cetera, "Nova Scotia and New Brunswick shall form and be one Dominion under the name of Canada" and that on and after that day those three Provinces shall form and be one Dominion under that name accordingly.

I do not quite see how the 12 Orwellian apostles managed on that particular day to change what is there. However, they did try a thing called "you speak or can speak" to produce another name for a day which stands, and I am delighted—oh, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is gone. He made a worthy contribution to this debate. I am delighted that he did so. I was a little bit concerned by the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mr. Bossy) who wondered whether this was a back door attempt to undo what this Parliament did so much against the rules one day in July, 1982.

I feel we owe a debt of gratitude to the Hon. Member for Bow River for having brought forward this motion. We have not yet decided what we are going to do with April 17. That was a day of importance for Canada. There is no question about that. No matter how you feel about the manner in which the Constitution was produced in Canada and so on, April 17, 1982 was an important day.

On April 17 this year there were a few people who remembered, but it was not a remarkable day in the true sense of the word. It was not marked as a day of importance in our history. It should be. The solution has been provided in this Bill. It should be called Canada Day, and the original day, called Dominion Day to honour the terminology that exists in the Act which created this Dominion, should remain attached to July 1.

It is a wonderful compromise. We can have the best of both worlds, if you like. We do have something to call April the seventeenth day. I know that in Latin America they have a day called Mayo Primero. They have dates attached to celebrations. I think the actual function of that day should be market by a special name. Canada Day is a most suitable name for the designation of April 17. As I say, we went past the first anniversary without really noting it at all.

When that date occurs during a parliamentary session, we might devote it to a discussion of matters relating to Canada. We could have it as an open day. It would be Canada Day and we could celebrate it as such. It need not necessarily be a holiday. It is a day when we could remember the things for which we should be grateful. There are a number of things for which we should be grateful. There are a number of things for which I demonstrate not too much gratitude, but there are a number of things for which I am grateful, and that is one of them.

The Hon. Member for Bow River is not only to be congratulated and commended, but to be thanked for having brought forward this Bill on this occasion to provide a means of recognizing what happened on July 1, 1967 and on every July 1 there after and also what happened on April 17, 1982. It is a day that should have some sort of recognition.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to this Private Members' Bill. I quite agree a day should be designated to commemorate the day when we brought our Constitution home. It is a day that will go down in history. However, I believe it should perhaps be known as Constitution Day rather than Canada Day. I much prefer to leave Canada Day as July 1 as agreed to by the Parliament of Canada last July.

Something missing in this debate is the fact that nowhere have we signified any day to commenorate the coming into being of the Canadian flag. In a country as steeped in tradition as Canada, this should be given consideration. Let us look at the debate that went into these projects in the history of Parliament, first the agreement to have a distinctive Canadian flag and then in 1982 a Constitution of our own which can be amended here in Canada, guaranteeing the rights and freedoms of individuals.

Whether these should be official holidays or simply days that are recognized across Canada could be more fully debated later when there are more Members in the House rather than in Private Member's Hour when we are limited to very short speeches. We do not have a proper chance to report on our feelings and thoughts.

My ancestors chose this as their country of choice. In my constituency of Lambton-Middlesex, I recognize that well over half the people there made Canada their country of choice. That is one bond that we all have in common. Whether we made this our country of choice or whether it was our ancestors who made it their country of choice, we are all equally proud of Canada. I believe Canada Day is quite—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, order. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

Shall all items listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceding No. 476 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROHIBIT DISCRIMINATION ON GROUND OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved that Bill C-676, to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before I commence my remarks, I would, after discussions with the Deputy House Leader of the Official Opposition as well as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacBain), seek the unanimous consent of the House to sit past six o'clock if necessary in order to provide for a full hours' debate on Bill C-676. As I have indicated, I have consulted with both the Official Opposition and the Government and I believe I have their agreement in this respect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The House has heard the proposal put forward by the Hon. Member for Burnaby. Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to thank the Members of the House for their indulgence.

I am pleased to rise today to speak in support of Bill C-676, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act. In order to explain briefly the purpose of the Bill, I will run through the major sections of it. The over-all purpose of the Bill is to implement the recommendations of the Canadian Human Rights Commission to add sexual orientation as a prohibited ground of discrimination at the federal Government level. As I have noted in the explanatory notes, at the present time homosexuals and lesbians receive no legislative protection whatsoever from discrimination under federal jurisdiction.

The Bill would accomplish two or three objectives. First, it would include in the Canadian Human Rights Act sexual orientation as a prohibited ground of discrimination. Second, there is a provision in the Bill which would require the Canadian Human Rights Commission to conduct a comprehensive study of all federal legislation and regulations to determine which, if any, discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation and report the results of this study to the Minister of Justice within one year of the coming into force of the Bill. Following that report, the Minister of Justice would be required to reply to the Commission's report within 60 days outlining proposed action to remove discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation from existing legislation.

I would note one other provision, Mr. Speaker, because there has been some confusion about this provision. Clause 4 of the Bill states explicitly that it is not a discriminatory practice for a person or organization to adopt programs which may be designed to remedy historical discrimination. I would emphasize that in no way does this mandate any form of affirmative action. What it does state, however, is that if an organization or individual had provisions within their hiring practices or otherwise to overcome past inequities, these would not be struck down as being discriminatory.

I would note, and I would particularly draw to the attention of the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), that this provision is identical to the provisions of the Private Members' Bill which was introduced by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), Bill C-242, and which was debated in the House on June 19, 1981. At that time I commended the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre for her introduction of this Bill, and I was certainly pleased to be able to speak in support of the Bill at that time. As I say, the provision in Clause 4 of my Bill today is in fact identical to the provision in Clause 4 of the Private Members' Bill introduced in June by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre.

I have indicated that the primary objective of the Bill is to ensure that the prohibited ground of discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation is included in the federal Canadian Human Rights Act. This would ensure that there would be no further discrimination at the federal level—and I emphasize at the federal level—in the provision of goods and services or facilities, in access to accommodation or housing, and in employment.

As I emphasized earlier, the purpose of the Bill and the reason I bring the Bill forward today is to ensure that indeed this subject is adequately canvassed by the Justice Committee. I was very pleased that in January of this year, the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) gave a commitment to allow the subject matter of this Bill to be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in order that that Committee might hold public hearings and invite public input from a wide variety of groups and individuals to assess the ramifications of this particular amendment. That commitment has been confirmed today by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and I am confident and pleased that that side of the House will indeed live up to the promise made by the Minister of Justice earlier this year. I have also received the assurance of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre that she will support the Bill. I am confident that she will be speaking on the Bill.

I do want to indicate, Mr. Speaker, that it is very important to note that in Private Members' Hour, the subject matter of a Bill can only go forward as long as it is not talked out by any Member of the House. I have the commitment of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and of the Minister of Justice that that side of the House will not talk out the Bill as indeed was done to the Bill of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre. Certainly no one in the New Democratic Party will talk out the Bill, and therefore we will be watching the Official Opposition with great interest. I trust that no Member of the Official Opposition will in fact deny the public the right to have input, because all that is being sought at this time is a referral of the subject matter to a committee of the House of Commons where representations may be made. We will be watching with great interest to determine whether or not in fact the Conservative Party is prepared to allow the subject matter of the Bill to go to committee or whether it will block the Bill and deny this important question the kind of discussions that should take place in the Justice Committee.

I would note that there is a wide variety of groups supporting this Bill from a cross-section of Canadian society, including the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, the Canadian Association of University Teachers, the Student Christian Movement, of course the New Democratic Party itself at federal and provincial levels, the Anglican Church of Canada, the Mennonite Church of Canada, the United Church of Canada, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Labour Congress, a number of provincial human righs commissions and, as well, the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

In 1979, the Canadian Human Rights Commission recommended for the first time the inclusion of sexual orientation as a prohibited ground of discrimination in the Canadian Human Rights Act. Every year since that time they have repeated that recommendation. For example, Mr. Speaker, in their most recent report tabled in the House of Commons just a few weeks ago, the Canadian Human Rights Commission states:

> The Commission recommends that sexual orientation and political belief be added to the proscribed grounds of discrimination under the Canadian Human Rights Act.
> The rationale behind this recommendation was discussed originally in the Commission's 1979 report. The Commission continues to believe that protection is warranted against unfair treatment on these grounds. The Commission's intention is not to see special treatment on these grounds but it does advocate recourse if people are arbitrarily denied opportunities because of prejudice or bias.

I emphasize the point made by the Commission, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill does not in any way seek any kind of special status for homosexuals and lesbians. What it does seek to ensure is that discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation must not continue at the federal level.

The recommendations of the Canadian Human Rights Commission followed an extensive study by that Commission. That study in fact was undertaken in response to a letter written by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1978 at the time of the passage of the initial Canadian Human Rights Act. At that time, it was urged by a number of bodies, including those that I have mentioned, that sexual orientation should be included in the Canadian Human Rights Act. However, the Prime Minister stated in a letter of February 4, 1978:

> Since the implications of the proposal in Canada have not been fully explored, Canada should not take steps to include it in federal legislation without further comprehensive examination of the problems that might be involved. It is for these reasons that the Minister of Justice has proposed that the question be examined by the Canadian Human Rights Commission which could then make recommendations for further government action.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what happened. And each year for the last five years following that study, the Canadian Human Rights Commission has indeed made recommendations that sexual orientation should be included as a prohibited ground of discrimination.

● (1730)

For five years, the Government, which indicated it wished to hear the views of the Commission, has ignored that important recommendation, a recommendation which may affect some two million Canadians. That is the figure which the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre referred to in her comments in the House in June, 1981. I would note for the record that as a member of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada, I proposed that the prohibited grund of discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation should have been included in the equality rights section of the Constitution itself, to apply at all levels of Government, be it federal, provincial or municipal. That amendment, however, was defeated on a vote of 22 to 2 with both the Government and Official Opposition unanimous in their opposition to it.

It is possible that the provisions of the Charter of Rights may in fact be interpreted in such a way that indeed sexual orientation will be a prohibited ground of discrimination. Certainly, that would be my hope. As was indicated by a very distinguished jurist in this country, Mr. Justice Berger, in his book "Fragile Freedoms", "Judges may not always be wiser than politicians but they should be able to stand more firmly against angry winds blowing in the streets." It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that we sought the inclusion of this particular provision in the Charter of Rights itself, to protect this very large minority. As I have indicated, the over-all objective is to ensure an end to discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. It is to ensure that no one can be fired from a job or not hired in a particular area of employment on the basis of sexual orientation. It is to ensure that no one can be thrown out of his or her home on the basis of sexual orientation. It is to ensure access to goods and services which are available to other Canadians.

I emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that the Bill does not in any way seek any special or preferential treatment whatsoever. It seeks equality. In the Province of Quebec, in December, 1976, such an amendment was passed unanimously by that Legislative Assembly. Fortunately, in the Province of Quebec such protection does now exist for that particular minority.

The Bill also, as I indicated, calls for a full review and response by the Minister of Justice of all legislation and regulations at the federal level. For example, there are a number of provisions of the Criminal Code which certainly are in need of review. Recently, despite the fact that a number of proposals were made by the federal Government in the area of the Criminal Code, the Government caved in, I suppose, to the Canadian equivalent of the moral majority, and refused to make any changes whatsoever to some of the most archaic and repressive provisions of the Criminal Code, whether it was repeal of the offence of gross indecency and the establishment of a uniform age of consent, or the repeal of the bawdy house legislation. We in this House know that in February, 1981 this legislation resulted in the largest mass arrests in the history of this country since the War Measures Act, tactics described by The Globe and Mail as "bully-boy" tactics. I would suggest that police resources are far better deployed in other areas than enforcement of these archaic and discriminatory laws. For example, in the area of violence within the family, wife battering, the police seem most reluctant to get involved, which results in real violence and real harm. Yet they are prepared to spend very significant amounts of time in other areas.

One other provision of the Criminal Code which I believe should be examined is with respect to hate propaganda. I would suggest that the provisions of the Code respecting hate propaganda should be expanded to include sexual orientation. One need not look far back in our history to see instances of very severe discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. In the Second World War, for example, there was the infamous provision by which thousands and thousands of homosexuals and lesbians were branded with a pink triangle and killed in Nazi concentration camps. This was, of course, very eloquently and graphically documented in a play which I hope all Members of the House would have seen.

Hate literature, whether the object of that hate be homosexuals or other minorities, is the thin edge of the wedge. We have seen recently, for example, in the Province of Alberta, the ugly face of anti-Semitism spreading against the Jewish community. I believe we must make it very clear that hate propaganda, whether on the basis of religion or sexual orientation, is fundamentally unacceptable in a free and democratic society.

There still exist a number of examples, some of them fairly glaring, of discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. At the federal level, some of the worst institutional homophobia in Canada exists within the Canadian Armed Forces. For example, the Armed Forces' standing orders require that any suspected homosexual or lesbian be fired from his or her job, no matter how qualified or how capable they may be. And the orders go beyond that and require that all members of the forces must report any suspicious activity. One cannot imagine in Canada in this day and age the prospect of a young man or woman waking up to find two military policemen in their room who would interrogate them for hours, possibly taking them to a cell and threatening them, all on the basis of their suspected sexual orientation. Too many young people have lost their jobs, young people who wanted to serve their country in the Armed Forces and who had outstanding records, and there are hundreds of others who, while they may not have lost their jobs, live in daily fear of being revealed and fired from their jobs without any recourse. I emphasize as well that we are talking about all levels of the Armed Forces.

Hon. Members will know that I raised a number of examples in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. One example was of a young, courageous woman whose name was Zoe Matheson. She told the story of how she was interrogated and threatened on the basis of suspicion and allegations which she was not even given an opportunity to confront. Since I raised that matter publicly, I have received letters from quite a number of other people. I received a phone call from a young man, for example, who had broken down in tears because he was interrogated by the police who went line by line through the letters which he had in his room. It was suggested that he was no longer fit to serve his country.

One cannot imagine that kind of conduct in this day and age. I know that many military people disagree with this policy and in fact, Mr. Speaker, if the amendment which I proposed is adopted, then army officers will be able to come before the Canadian Human Rights Commission and if they can argue successfully that there is a bona fide occupational requirement, let them make that argument. However, these kinds of scare tactics and this kind of blatant institutional homophobia is utterly unacceptable in Canada in this day and age. We must not destroy the careers and perpetrate the kind of fear which is created by this policy at the present time.

The Armed Forces are not alone in this. I need not remind Hon. Members of the fact that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police opened up some 1.3 million files on 800,000 Canadians, many of which have not yet been destroyed. The policies of External Affairs leave much to be desired, and there are many others as well. These are the areas which must be examined, Mr. Speaker, and this is the kind of subject which I would hope would be discussed by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

I stated my views very clearly on the occasion of the speech of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre, that what we are talking about here is a fundamental question of human rights, of the right to live and the right to love without fear of persecution, without fear of discrimination and without fear of the loss of one's livelihood, or one's home, or without fear of being denied goods or services. We are talking about the right of young people in Canada not to be afraid, not to have to keep silent and not to have to conceal their own identity. In fact, we are talking about a fundamental question of the civil liberties of hundreds of thousands of Canadian men and women.

I welcome the agreement of the Minister of Justice to have this subject discussed and considered in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, to give the opportunity to Canadian organizations and individuals to come forward and be heard, whatever their views may be. I would certainly hope, Mr. Speaker, that all Hon. Members of the Official Opposition in the House today would not attempt to subvert this and would not prevent a full hearing being given to this Bill so that all views may be aired. I look forward to their support, Mr. Speaker, and certainly hope that this important question might be studied in the near future by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to say how pleased I am to have the opportunity to speak on this Bill and to support the motion of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), that the subject matter of this Bill go to committee. The reason I do so is that the Bill is very similar to my own Private Member's Bill on this subject, which I put forward two years ago on behalf of my constituents, in particular, and on behalf of the homosexual community in this country.

• (1740)

My own record on this subject is well known. Shortly after my election in 1980 I sponsored Bill C-242 which sought to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act to prohibit discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation. The Bill grew out of the efforts of the Human Rights Advisory Council in Vancouver, which I had formed at the request of the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) when he was Prime Minister. The Council was composed of representatives of the homosexual community who agreed to help me formulate a policy position on the issue of homosexual rights. Our aim then was to draft a Bill which would be referred to committee for study. We wanted to give the homosexual community an opportunity to describe the frustrations, the experiences and hurts unique to their community.

At that time I received a great deal of support from Members of my own caucus, such as the Hon. Joe Clark, the Hon. Flora MacDonald, the Hon. David Crombie and the Hon. Jim McGrath.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I should remind her again that she must refer to Hon. Members by the name of their ridings.

Miss Carney: I received support from Members of my caucus, such as the Hon. Member for Yellowhead, the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald), the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie). However, when the Bill was called for second reading in June, 1981 it was talked out by the Liberals, who were determined to block its study by the Committee. I want to point out that it was not Members of the Conservative Party who talked out that Bill; it was Members of the Liberal Party who talked out a Bill almost identical to the one being presented here today.

I am afraid that the Government is playing that sort of game with this Bill. If the Liberals had really wanted to support the subject matter of this Bill, they had ample opportunity since they killed my own initiative to demonstrate their commitment to the issue. They could have referred my Bill to committee. If they had done so, we would not have to repeat this debate today. Or they could have brought forward legislation of their own. They have had a lot of opportunity to do so in terms of amendments to the human rights legislation. Instead, they are playing a charade today.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) publicly said he will agree to let the subject matter go to committee, but he knows full well that his own caucus does not support it, and he has privately told me that if it does go to committee, his own Party will not support it. So he is taking this public stance in the hope and expectation that Members of my own Party will talk the Bill out. He is hoping that years of Government inaction can be forgotten in the light of one hour's debate this afternoon.

I must say that I also find the NDP hypocritical to be cooperating with the Government in this charade. I think it is hypocritical of the Hon. Member for Burnaby to advance this Bill—and I share his concern—when he knows the Liberals oppose it. He has put us in a situation where the Liberals are making agreements with what the Hon. Member for St. John's East calls the little red rump, the NDP, on an issue when they refuse to allow the Conservative Party to proceed with it. Of course, the NDP can ignore reality because it knows it will never be in Government and will never have to account for its actions. Well, I am more interested in the people than the politics of this issue. I stand on my own record and will continue to work to see that discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation is indeed prohibited.

I will keep my remarks short today but I would like briefly to review my position which I stated nearly two years ago in the House. At that time I pointed out—and this point has been made by the Hon. Member for Burnaby—that I was not asking for a special favour for homosexual Canadians. That is why I do not like the term "gay rights". I have never used that term. What we are talking about is human rights, or what the Canadian Human Rights Commission, headed by a former Conservative MP, Gordon Fairweather, calls unfair treatment. We are not dealing here with additional rights for people. I have never advocated and would never advocate special rights for any group in our society, whether men, women or whatever. We are dealing with the issue of equal treatment for human beings on any grounds, whether race, religion, sex or sexual orientation. We are not talking about bestowing privileged status on part of the population. We are talking about extending the same rights to them as other Canadians enjoy and take for granted today.

I think that homosexuals should be able to seek a job, housing, and public services without living in the fundamental fear that they are going to be in some way exposed or made public and deprived of basic human rights. Fundamentally, what homosexuals are asking for is protection, tolerance and the human rights that other Canadians enjoy. My constituents are certainly not asking for extra rights in any way.

Canada is an extremely diverse nation, and for its citizens to live with dignity that diversity must be respected and protected. I believe that most Canadians are, as I was before I became a candidate for election in Vancouver Centre, unaware of the extent of discrimination directed at homosexuals in our society. Most Canadians probably shared my rather benign attitude which combined a lack of interest in the subject with a mild sympathy for people who are not heterosexual. Before I had the opportunity to meet and talk with the homosexual community in my riding I had no idea of the kind of discrimination they face, some of which is overt and obvious and some of which is subtle and hard to prove.

Two years ago, Mr. Speaker, I cited examples of these various kinds of discrimination. We have heard examples today. I told the House about a young man of my acquaintance who was forced to quit a very good job because he lived in fear of discovery as a homosexual. Every day he went to work fearing that his sexual orientation might cost him his job. The fear and tension built up until he decided that he could not live that way any more and he quit. No Canadian should have to endure that kind of suspense and insecurity. I also described cases of harassment by the Armed Forces and by immigration officials simply because people were suspected of being homosexual. We have had examples of that again today. Without being given an opportunity to examine the evidence or to find out where the complaint came from, they were taken to hotels and interrogated in a state close to terror. Nothing was ever proved and nothing needed to be proved. In the interest of time I will simply state my objective, which is to work to ensure freedom from discrimination for all Canadians.

It is instructive to review developments in the two years since my Bill was talked out by the Liberals. Quebec remains the only Province to have passed human rights protection for homosexuals. Of Canadian cities, Toronto, Ottawa, Windsor and Kitchener have passed human rights measures within their jurisdiction that provide a modicum of protection for homosexuals. Notably, in 1982 Vancouver City Council adopted unanimously in principle what has been termed the most powerful human rights legislation in Canada, and that included among its proscribed grounds of discrimination that of sexual orientation. This legislation remains in limbo at the present time while the city seeks appropriate amendments to the city charter that will allow it to enforce this bylaw.

Human rights protection for homosexuals continues to be supported by Canadian federal and provincial Human Rights Commission. As well as the federal Commission, and Quebec which has enacted legislation, Commissions in B.C., Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario recommend inclusion of sexual orientation in their respective provincial codes. Recently the B.C. Commission under Dr. Charles Paris reiterated its recommendation of 1981, and in the last few months the Manitoba Commission has added its support. This means that Human Rights Commission from Quebec to B.C., as well as the Canadian body, now support the concept of Human Rights protection for homosexuals. Unfortunately, human rights infractions continue.

Because sexual orientation is not a ground against discrimination in most Provinces, few accurate tallies of human rights violations against homosexual people have been collected in Canada. However, since 1977 and the passage of the Quebec law, 83 cases have been filed regarding discrimination against this group in our community. Now, this figure is likely low because people are often scared off by the process, and, further, discrimination is often subtle and difficult to prove as being related to sexual orientation.

• (1750)

Some developments have also occurred in the United States. In 1982, Wisconsin became the first state to include sexual orientation in its human rights legislation. Despite some public outcry, the Governor and the majority of legislators who passed the legislation, were re-elected. People are not as scared of the issue as some would believe. American cities that have included sexual orientation in their legislation on human rights number in the hundreds. Several of the major contenders for the 1984 Presidency, including Mr. Mondale, have endorsed human rights protection for homosexuals. The U.S. Democratic Party has voted unanimously to accept the formation of an official homosexual caucus within the Party and has adopted several major pro-homosexual planks in its policy.

Perhaps the most intriguing situation is that we are starting to see some reversals in the position of individuals opposed to homosexuals and their human rights. Governor Askew of Florida who supported Anita Bryant and is reputedly seeking the Presidential nomination, has shifted his position considerably on the issue. Anita Bryant now admits that she was wrong to campaign against homosexuals.

So we are long past the time for talking. Let us follow some of these examples. Let us send the subject matter of this Bill to committee where it can be discussed in an air of reason and where we can identify the real concerns of members of this community.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) wants Parliament to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act in order to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. To this effect he has introduced Bill C-676, an Act to Amend the Canadian Human Rights Act.

Before commenting on this Bill I must mention that the human rights record of this Government is a proud one. It is responsible for the enshrinement in our Constitution of a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As a result of its endeavours, fundamental freedoms as well as democratic, mobility, legal and linguistic rights are now protected. In addition, from April 17, 1985 onwards individuals will also enjoy the protection of Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This Section provides that:

> Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

In addition, the Government is also responsible for the Canadian Human Rights Act which Parliament enacted in 1977. The Act applies in respect of all matters falling under federal jurisdiction. It is also binding on the Crown. This means that it applies to all federal Departments, agencies and Crown corporations as well as to private businesses that are federally regulated, such as banks, airlines and railway companies.

On March 30, 1983, Parliament adopted Bill C-141, an Act to Amend the Canadian Human Rights Act and to amend certain other acts in consequence thereof. When proclaimed, the Bill will result in a significant increase of the anti-discrimination protection available at the federal level.

In addition to the Charter and the Canadian Human Rights Act, numerous federal statutes protect the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of Canadians. In this respect, and among others, reference can be made to Canada's reports under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

Let us now consider sexual orientation in the context of the Canadian Human Rights Act. When the House considered this Act in 1977, the question of adding sexual orientation to the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination was raised before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. The Committee rejected the amendment at that time.

I would consider it obvious that it was not the intention of Parliament at that time to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. By the same token, it cannot be inferred that the Government considers sexual orientation to be a justifiable basis for denying equality.

Without condoning discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, one can wonder if the social advantages of forbidding discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation outweighs the disadvantages of such a prohibition. In 1979, the Commission conducted a survey on the public's knowledge, attitudes and practices regarding discrimination. It asked the respondents to identify possible grounds of discrimination. Of the nine main grounds identified, sexual orientation was the last. Only 1.4 per cent of persons surveyed identified it as a ground of discrimination. Further, the same survey revealed that only 0.6 per cent of the respondents ever suffered discrimintion on this basis. As the survey reveals, while a lot is said about discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, it would appear that this practice is not as widespread as it may seem.

Whether or not to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation is a question with which legislative bodies in Canada and the United States have wrestled for years. For the most part, it was decided that the negative implications of such a prohibition outweighed its advantages. Whatever may be our views on sexual orientation, it cannot be denied that a substantial number of individuals are concerned about the possible social impact of such a measure. Whether or not these concerns are well founded is not an issue here. Suffice it to say that they exist.

While I am not prepared to support the amendment of the Canadian Human Rights Act proposed by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, I do not believe that there ought to be unjustified distinction on the basis of sexual orientation. Business and Government ought to afford to everyone equal opportunity. In this respect, I would note that this is the position of the Government as regards matters which fall within its jurisdiction. For example, access to the Public Service is on the basis of merit, a concept which is foreign to distinction of any kind. This of course includes discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

The Government is not prepared to support Bill C-676, but I would be prepared to move that the subject matter of the Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
>
> "Bill C-676, an Act to Amend the Canadian Human Rights Act be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address the Bill. Before I do, I want to make very clear the manner in which I address it. My understanding of private Members' legislation is just that. It is private in the sense that any Member can raise an issue in the form of legislation in this House of Commons. There is no Party endorsation attached to Private Members' legislation.

• (1800)

Additionally, it has to be said that when private Members rise to speak on that legislation, they are also expressing their views rather than the endorsation by their Party. One might argue that the Parliamentary Secretary who just rose had the endorsation of his Minister to make a specific recommendation and I accept that approach. But I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all Members of the House who are here today that when I rise, I do so from a private Member's perspective. I hope we will always preserve private Members' legislation in the House in that form.

Too often we complain in the House that private Members do not have the opportunity to exercise their good judgment on legislation but are controlled or motivated in their actions on the basis of Party position or by Party whips. All of us have complained about that from time to time.

I would hope that private Members' legislation will not fall under those types of arrangements among Parties which to some degree remove what little independence is left to the private Member in the House.

Having said that, I oppose Bill C-676. It is very difficult to oppose legislation which appears on the surface to remove discrimination. I am sure there is no one in the House who wants to be seen as wanting to discriminate, for whatever reason.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) says that it is a human rights proposition. On the surface, one can make that argument because one is obviously dealing with the rights of human beings by definition. But I think that it goes much beyond that narrow definition. If that is all it was, then I would suggest that much of the legislation which we debate in the House of Commons would not get the debate it is now receiving.

Let me be more specific. Society constantly discriminates; society constantly judges and continually discriminates between that which is right and that which is wrong. Some might argue that that is not discrimination, but rather that it is judgment. Before you can have judgment you must have the discrimination of what is right and what is wrong. While we can argue what is right and what is wrong, I would suggest that in our context, both in the British parliamentary tradition and from a Judeo-Christian background, what we are dealing with today, both historically and on the issues that I have raised, has been declared wrong by society.

Another phrase which has crept into our society to which I have had some objection is, "the moral majority". It is an American statement which seems to be the blanket condemnation of anyone who is not seen to be "with it" in terms of these modern issues. What is wrong with being moral and what is wrong with being in the majority? I ask the House what is wrong with either one? I am not discussing methodology, I am discussing the terms. I am just a little tired of people using that appellation so readily on issues which they see in the very narrow context, that if one is against it one must be either living back in the middle ages, have no concept of the modern society or, at best, has just not yet seen the light.

Historically, people who have argued these cases use another statement, that "in this day and age it is unimaginable to think anyone would still hold these views." Yes, Mr. Speaker, not only is it imaginable but I believe it is right to hold some of these views.

My argument is that that statement is too often used when a person has no actual knowledge, when they do not want to deal with the facts any longer but will deal with a person who holds the view. The attack is on the person rather than on the view itself.

Additionally, I am concerned that so much of our legislation today—and I am not trying to be condemnatory of anyone in this House—is based on secular humanism. That is the orientation of so much of our legislation, and it is very difficult to argue the question, why are you against "people"? I am not. But if you go through the annals of history and through the basis of legislation, you will find that legislation so often in these areas of moral context was based on the traditions I have already cited.

A person who has had a great influence on my thinking about private and public affairs is Wilberforce of the Clapham Society in England. Wilberforce was elected as a very young person to the British House of Commons in an age when youth was celebrated. We sometimes think that only young people today, in this day and age get elected to the House of Commons. Wilberforce was a very close and dear friend of William Pitt the younger, Prime Minister of Great Britain, I believe, at the age of 25.

Wilberforce, with a small group of people, said there were two things he wanted to change in British society. One was the slave trade. That was a discriminatory practice, but it went well beyond just simple racial discrimination. He was challenging the very bedrock of British economic life when he took on the matter of the slave trade. The opponents he had were legion and powerful.

The second thing Wilberforce said he wanted to dedicate his life to in the House was "to change British manners". If you read the journal of Wilberforce, what he meant by manners was morals. He believed sincerely that Britain was in decay because British society was losing sight of the fundamental moral bedrock of that society. In his mind, as you read Wilberforce, there was without question a very close tie between the singular issue of abolition of slavery and the refinement of British manners or morals. I will not go through all the history. Suffice it to say Hon. Members are familiar with the story. The very criticisms which I heard again today in the House indicating that in this day and age it is passé if one still thinks there is a moral code on which society is based and that one is naïve in the extreme, are the very arguments used against Wilberforce. Despite those arguments, he prevailed. Yes, he prevailed with the support of the Prime Minister who had great courage to stand against some of the very strongest forces in society. Surely today we say that they were right.

• (1810)

Having said that, the question must be asked, does society generally support the Bill which the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has brought before the House? We can raise all types of statistics on both sides of the issue, but to my way of thinking this is not a statistical argument. To my way of thinking it is not valid to raise the fact that the Hyslops of Toronto were defeated. That is not the argument. But I believe sincerely in my being that the general public, the vast majority of Canadians, does not support the legislation before us.

The Parliamentary Secretary raised the suggestion that there is a certain fear concerning the social impact of legislation of this type. I think I am quoting him correctly. I have no doubt that the social impact is there. The Bill restricts itself to federal jurisdiction only, but that is fairly widespread. Where do we go from there?

There was a recent case in Saskatchewan involving a teacher with a sexual orientation other than the norm which the majority of Canadians finds unacceptable. The following proposition has developed, "You cannot remove me from my teaching position because you are discriminating on the basis of sexual orientation".

The one question which we did not answer during the entire constitutional debate—and the Parliamentary Secretary raised the matter of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms—was the question of group rights. That is a great lack in the Charter of Rights. It was raised during the proceedings of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution. I, for one, am a strong advocate of group rights. People will say that that is not an acceptable concept because what we are dealing with is a Charter of Rights for individuals, therefore by extension, how can we have group rights. Society has always had fundamental groupings on which it is based, be that a community, a service organization or a church, just to name a few.

Is it discrimination if a church decides in its adherence that the public school system is teaching a humanist philosophy to which it does not want children exposed solely and wants as well an orientation in teaching based on Judeo-Christian traditions?

Having established and paid for that school, they discover laterally that a teacher has a sexual orientation other than that which is supported by that church. They ask that teacher to leave his or her place of service. The matter is then brought before the Canadian Human Rights Commission or the Provincial Human Rights Commission. Do the adherents of that church and the supporters of that school not have the right to discriminate? Do they not have the right to have the type of teaching and teachers who adhere to the articles of faith of that church and on which that school is based? Frankly, my answer is yes, they do. I say there is a very valid reason why there are concerned people when this type of legislation comes before us, because of the social impact.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) raised the matter that Section 4 was not affirmative section. I found it rather interesting that almost at the beginning of his remarks, before I even rose to speak, he mentioned my name. I guess he knew I was going to speak. The section he referred to is defined as a section "of special programs". How do you define the words "special programs"? I am not questioning the Hon. Member's word. He might be accurate in saying that is not affirmative action, but the way I read that section, there is no doubt in my mind that affirmative action could in fact be extrapolated from those words. The problem is not his word or his intent.

What happens when this matter leaves this Parliament and is put in the hands of the Human Rights Commission? How do they interpret those words? What corrective action do they impose on the basis of those words? With all respect to the Hon. Member for Burnaby, he cannot give me an answer as to what the decision of the Human Rights Commission would be at that stage, because we do not know the basis of the case before them which will be testing this clause or, for that matter, the people sitting on that commission at that time.

Lastly, I have before me the Minutes of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of April 26, 1983. I want to make it clear that while the Hon. Member for Burnaby indicated that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and he had an arrangement as to how this matter would be dealt with, at page 130:19 the Minister of Justice said in terms of the substance of the Bill, and I quote him exactly:

> You may recall, of course, that I opposed the substance of his proposal; but I agreed to allow it to be discussed in order to facilitate the passage of the other legislation.

He referred to the amendments to the Human Rights legislation.

So the substance, as I understand it from the Government spokesman, is opposed as well by the Government. Mr. Speaker, you or others might argue that having said these things, especially in relation to social impact, the subject matter should be brought to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my feeling in introducing this Bill, the Western Grain Transportation Act, in the House today, is one of immense pride, mixed with some trepidation.

I am proud, today, because of the historical impact of this legislation which is aimed at replacing the equally historical Crow rate. In the Government's view, Bill C-155 will be an important factor in accelerating economic recovery in Western Canada and across the country, because it will stimulate the growth of transportation, agriculture and industry. An injection of $16.5 billion by the railway companies and $9 billion by the Government over a period of less than ten years cannot but have a very beneficial impact on the economy. I would say that the psychological effects will be equally important. The West will finally have a railway network that is worthy of its needs and aspirations.

I also feel some trepidation, Mr. Speaker, because the subject is a very complex one. It is not easy to assimilate its multiple aspects, which are economic, social, psychological and political. It is easy, however, to criticize while defending the interests of certain groups or regions. As far as I am concerned, it was the wish of Providence and the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that I should be exposed to this problem on several occasions. To name a few: First of all, in 1968-69, I was the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I became aware of the shortcomings of the railway network in Western Canada and the effect this had on Western farmers, who could not count on timely and adequate transportation of their products. I became very sympathetic to their cause and I still am. Faced with the uncertainties of weather and market conditions, they need guarantees. However, I am also sympathetic to the concerns of Canada's railway companies. We cannot expect them to provide good service while at the same time making them lose $400 million annually, a figure that will increase to $2 billion per year in 1990, if nothing is done.

Mr. Speaker, in 1978-79, I was co-chairman of a commission on Canadian unity. I can still hear the sounds of protest from some of our Western intervenors. They said they were sick and tired of being hewers of wood and drawers of water and of not being able to process their resources themselves. And if anyone remarked that the Crow rate was helping to maintain the status quo, they said, with some embarrassment, that the Crow was one of the few advantages they had gotten out of the East and would be hard for them to give up. Now, however, Bill C-155 will give them an opportunity to get out of this ambiguous situation.

Since 1980 as Minister of Transport I have been involved in the debate on the Crow rate in the West, in Ottawa and also in Quebec. I know the production capacity of our Western farmers. I have seen the progress made by our ports in the West, and I am thinking of Vancouver and Prince Rupert, and also by our eastern ports in Thunder Bay, Montreal and Quebec City. They are ready to handle far greater quantities of grain and meat, coal, sulphur, potassium, lumber and manufactured products. Now we have to modernize our railways.

The recent recession has tended to stifle the concern that existed in this respect two years ago in Western Canada, when there was some talk of rationing the use of the railways some day. However, Mr. Speaker, the recession is receding and it is not some day but today that decisions must be made. We must start construction today on what has already been called the equivalent of a third railway network in Western Canada. Next year will be too late.

Perhaps I may add that I have also been a Member of Parliament for a semi-rural riding in Quebec. Although I do not share the reluctance of Quebec livestock producers to accept a previous version of this Bill, I understand and I bear with them, and that is why I have made do with better instead of seeking the best. Perhaps some day, Mr. Speaker, and I say this tongue in cheek, we should include the right to fear as one of our basic human rights.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not be able to cover the entire subject matter of this Bill, and I will therefore give a general outline. My Liberal colleagues will deal with specific aspects of the Bill. Today, my Parliamentary Secretary, the Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) will explain the Bill itself. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will highlight its importance for his sector. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) will elaborate on what the Bill does for Western Canada. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) will explain why Quebec livestock producers prefer that payments be made to the railways instead of to producers. I have asked the Member for London East (Mr. Turner) to speak about the impact of the Bill on the railways, a favorite subject of his, and other Member will be able to complete the information we shall be providing on this Bill.

• (1115)

[English]

What is the problem addressed by this complex Bill? It is simply this: what should be done with a fixed freight rate for the transportation of grain in western Canada, a rate established way back in 1897 and which served well for a long time, say until the early 1960s, but which has now become a handicap to the growth of the western transportation system and to the growth of the western agricultural economy by way of preventing diversification, processing and even greater exports?

Why is that? Everyone knows that the crow by itself advantages the export of grain—and certain grains only—and discourages diversification and processing. Also it has lost its worth, representing now only 18 per cent of the real cost of transportation. Consequently, the railways have no great incentive, nor do they have the financial capacity to provide the West a first-class system, and that is what has to change. By what? By replacing the Crow with a grain transportation statutory régime of principles, institutions guarantees and procedures which will favour the addition of capacity and efficiency to the railway system in the West, which will contribute to a great extent to crop diversification and to processing, and will be as fair as possible to different groups of interest, including farmers, processors, the railways, the shippers of other commodities and the taxpayers of this country.

It is a tall order, Mr. Speaker, you will say, and how right you are! But beyond the technicalities, the beyond the "how to do it", the basic difficulty we are confronted with at this time is one of acceptance of change, of adjusting to change. We all like to say that we are wise, flexible, realistic, but as the moment of finality gets closer and closer, as the Hon. John Robarts used to say, in resolving major issues, most hesitate, lose their cool, back away to the protective womb. The Crow is one of those situations. How comfortable it is; half a cent per tonne mile irrespective of circumstances. The only thing which has not changed in the last 87 years, the proof of the existence of stability somewhere in this turbulent world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lewycky: I am just wondering whether the Hon. Minister is not using wrong figures when he should probably be talking about kilometres and metres?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Order, please.

Mr. Pepin: That problem has not been resolved yet. The Railway Act refers to miles. The fact that it has outlived its usefulness—I am talking about the Crow, not the Hon. Member—is in the eyes of some almost immaterial. Let us keep it for another three years, said the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool recently, until we get full consensus on all principles and means. Rip Van Winkle is still a hero!

Bill C-155 acknowledges the problem of fear of change for the Crow producers, the beneficiaries of this special rate, and the Bill addresses that preoccupation, that fear of change. The farmers, the producers of grain, will be protected in three ways. First, the Government will pay a Crow benefit of $651 million a year in perpetuity. Second, a limitation will be placed on the increases in the cost of grain transportation due mainly to inflation. The grain growers will never pay more than 6 percentage points of inflation. The taxpayers of Canada will pay the difference, a unique situation in our economy. No one else benefits from that. Third, there will be a link between the cost of transportation and the price of grain. A safety net will be set up. The grain growers will never pay more for transportation of their products than a percentage, still to be determined, of their selling price.

Again, this is a unique situation in our economy; nobody else has it. It is urgent to conquer that fear and it is urgent to change the Crow. Railway losses have assumed proportions such that the future of the western railway system is threatened. To say that things can be left the way they are is foolishness, recklessness and madness.

At the time of the National Transportation Act in 1967, Mr. Jack Pickersgill tried to get the Crow examined. That provision of the Bill was defeated. The public needed time to think about it. During 1970 Otto Lang launched a round of debate. For him the time was not yet right. The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)—

Mr. Mazankowski: Careful!

Mr. Pepin: The Hon. Member for Vegreville, my predecessor, I have been informed—and he can deny it—had conversations with western farm organizations. For him, let us say the time was not sufficient.

Today we are dealing with an idea—the replacement of a fixed statutory rate by a much better statutory regime. The time has come. If it is not done in this Parliament, in my view it will be too late in the next one. Who says so? Everybody but a few reactionaries. I wish I had the time to put on record 50 statements to that effect made by Canadian farm leaders, business leaders, editorialists and elected politicians. They have been saying it for two years; some for a much longer period of time. They have all agreed that the Crow much be changed, that it must be done now, that taking the comprehensive approach is the only way to go, that adequate compensation for the railways is essential, that the Government must be paying a high proportion of the bill, that asking producers to pay more is quite normal in the circumstances, and that creating a central transportation agency would be very useful.

If you want to hear from farm leaders, Mr. Speaker, I have a collection of them. Howard Falkenberg, president of Uniform in 1981, said:

We're here (Ottawa) to explain that we want them. (Cabinet) to address the rate issue rather than spending a bit of money here and there.

That is the comprehensive approach. He went on to say:

There are going to have to be some compromises from all sides . . . We hope that there's a tight time-frame put on the process (by the Cabinet).

That was December, 1981. Do you want to hear from the Manitoba Pool? Here is Murray Cormack saying:

It is imperative now, and for the future, that changes in transportation policy be made which will cause the railways to want to haul grain again.

Do you want to hear from MacRunciman, former president of UGG? In January, 1982 he said:

I feel there is a strong support for changing the rate.

I have them all here, Mr. Speaker. I wish I could put them all on the record. Do you want to hear from the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, Mr. Turner? On February 3, 1983 he said:

—as an organization . . . we were one of the initiators of change because we recognized . . . back in the early 1970s that . . . given the productive capacity we have in this Province, that there's no way that the railway structure at that time . . . could possibly handle and service the needs of our producers.

Would you like to hear from businessmen? The Edmonton Chamber of Commerce indicated:

The establishment of commercially justifiable compensation to the railways for the shipment of farm commodities currently moving at statutory rate levels must begin this year.

That was in 1981. Would you like to hear from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association?

Mr. Benjamin: Sure.

Mr. Pepin: I am quoting all these people and organizations because the conclusion will be that the NDP is left alone in the wilderness. The Association said:

Failure to develop sound, long-term resolution of this issue will result in a serious constraint on Canadian economic development including the manufacturing sector.

They go on and on. I have one from the Alberta Chamber of Commerce. Everybody is repeating the same thing, that now is the time to move; the Crow must be changed.

Would you like to hear from politicians? What about the Premier of Alberta? He said:

There has been a solution resolved by all participants to the whole question of what is known as the Crow rate issue, in terms of assuring that the railroads improve their capacity to get our grain to market.

Also he said:

In our judgment the whole Crow rate issue should now be right at the forefront of decision making in Canada and no longer left at the back-burner.

He said that on October 14, 1981.

• (1125)

Mr. Taylor: Tell us the rest of what he said. You stopped too soon.

Mr. Pepin: Anything you want to hear. Would you like to hear about Mr. Blakeney? On January 10, 1982 he said:

Perhaps a revision of the deal makes sense—

There are other quotes that are quite familiar. He said:

Now I don't want to be quoted as saying that I'm happy to see Crow increase, that's not so, but I'm realistic enough to know that time goes on and costs go on and I think farmers are realistic enough to say that at some time they would look at increasing Crow.

This has all been said. Would you like to hear from the Hon. Member for Vegreville? He said on September 20:

It has to be changed.

He was not talking about love, he was talking about the Crow.

It has to be changed. The railways cannot continue with that rate.

Would you like to hear from the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil)?

There must be a realization to the Crow rate problem in the near future. There is a feeling in the West that railways are entitled to receive compensation, rates which would be several times greater than the statutory rate.

Would you like to hear from the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta)?

Farm groups in Manitoba and Saskatchewan and virtually all farmers in western Canada are in favour of a change of some sort.

Would you like to hear from the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) who is present today?

All I can say is that the Crow issue must be resolved.

He said that in his wisdom.

I urge the Transport Minister to once again renew his interest—

As if it was needed.

—in this fundamentally important issue and encourage a final compromise by the farmers of western Canada themselves.

Would you like to hear from the Premier of British Columbia or from the Minister of Economic Development in Saskatchewan? Would you like to hear from the Deputy Prime Minister of Saskatchewan? He said:

So I think it's fair to say that with those protections in place, we would be prepared to pay some more—

That was quoted in The Globe and Mail of March 12, 1983. I could go on. Would you like to hear from the editorialists? Which paper would you like to hear from? Do you believe in the Edmonton Journal? I quote from the November 3, 1983 edition:

It is time to kill the Crow so the real golden goose can live. It is time prairie farmers started bearing a fair share of the transportation burden. It is time to strengthen western Canada's railways.

Do you believe in the Vancouver Province? I quote from the February 2, 1983 edition:

> The Crow rate long ago became a dangerous anachronism because it discouraged the railways from maintaining and upgrading the system. Naturally this led to declining railway efficiency that affected not only the farmers but also other industries using the system.

Which paper would you like to hear from? Would you like to hear from the Winnipeg Free Press?

> Manitoba agriculture would benefit from a change in the Crow rate. Even those farmers who in Mr. Uruski's eyes would lose by any change, could well benefit from a rationalized transportation system that is based on the world as it is in 1982, not as it was in the last century.

Which paper? Name it, I have them all. I have the bouquet of all of them to entertain you. The Crowsnest Pass Municipal Council passed a resolution in April, 1982 to this effect, and I quote from the Lethbridge Herald:

> The matter was discussed after the municipality received a letter from the federal NDP caucus requesting support for retention of the subsidized Crow rate. Council disagreed with the NDP stand and passed a motion to send a letter to Jean-Luc Pepin, federal Minister of Transport, urging him to get on with the revamping or abandoning the rate structure.

That is from the Crowsnest Pass Municipal Council. They should know something about the Crowsnest. After all this—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is rising on a point of order.

• (1130)

Mr. Taylor: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear from the Minister why he changed his mind about what he said six months ago.

Mr. Smith: Because he is conciliatory and reasonable.

Mr. Pepin: After all of this, Mr. Speaker, how can the Opposition dare vote twice as they did in recent days against the very introduction of this Bill, a Bill that, as they have said, they have not even seen?

I must say that I expected this from the NDP. They are now in an alliance with the right-wing of the National Farmers Union. I hope that in the coming days they will get the message from their fellow provincial NDP Members and from farmers and railway workers, from the employees of transportation equipment companies and from the Bishops, to put an end to their opposition to this Bill.

I must say that I did not expect this from the Members of the Progressive Conservative Party. Some of them are angry with me for not introducing a previous version of the Bill which was stronger on the reduction of distortion. That group, based in Alberta, and in Manitoba to some extent, knows that there is another group in their caucus based in Saskatchewan that is more friendly to the view of the polls and will be more at ease with this version of the Bill. They know that, Mr. Speaker. May I ask them to compromise among themselves?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: I am sure that their future leader would be pleased to see that happen, whoever he may be, whether he be sent from heaven or from somewhere else.

The way we proceeded to the conclusions we have reached is a way that the farm organizations themselves have been requesting. In other words, we followed their instructions regarding the process to be used. Some years ago at the end of 1981, many of the farm organizations indicated their willingness to negotiate if the Government was to agree to a number of propositions. My friends who were involved in this remember reading these resolutions passed at different meetings. Of course, these propositions were optimal demands, occasionally contradictory to the very principle of change. But be that as it may the Government accepted this invitation and for a year and a half now the process of consultation has been ongoing.

On February 8, 1982, the date of my very important statement, I indicated what the principles that should command our action in this matter were. I said that we should look for statutory framework, for the reduction of distortions, for adequate railway compensation, for an increase in efficiency, for railway obligations and guarantees, for adequate federal contributions, for the obligation of producers to pay more. These were the seven principles I indicated at the time.

An Hon. Member: Did you mention who you were going to pay it to at that time?

Mr. Pepin: At the time the Minister of Finance, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), put $3.2 billion on the table to show what his intentions were.

An Hon. Member: Who were you going to pay?

Mr. Pepin: I am coming to that. I asked Dr. Clay Gilson of the University of Manitoba to bring together all of the interested parties. He did that and they tackled a number of issues dealing with the proper level of railway compensation. There was agreement on that. They dealt with the methods of payment, the performance and service guarantees. There was some agreement on that. The variable freight rates were more difficult to agree to. They dealt with how to get diversification, how to increase efficiency, and what to put in the statute. Dr. Gilson reported in June and told me to create four more task forces to look into the details of his recommendations. Again, this was done. We had a task force on rate setting, we had two on the methods of payment, one for each method of payment; we had one on the central co-ordination agency, we had one on the legislation itself. By this method, we got a lot of free technical and legal advice. Bill C-155 owes much to all those knowledgeable people who participated in the exercise.

Some will say that it is fortunate and some will say that it is unfortunate that it has not been possible to accommodate all of the recommendations of Dr. Gilson, particularly the one pertaining to the method of the federal Government contribution. He recommended a proportion of 81 per cent to the producers, the rest to the railways. We compromised with a rate of fifty-fifty and now, because of very strong popular feelings from the West and the East, we have changed that and gone to 100 per cent payment to the railways.

But the Bill remains a comprehensive, gradualistic and fair deal. In my view, it does satisfy to a great extent the seven principles contained in my statement of February 8, 1982. It creates a grain transportation administrator and a senior grain transportation committee whose mandate will be to make the grain transportation system work better at a lower real cost. It sets up railway obligations, not only to move grain expeditiously but to make investments year after year that would ensure the long-term health of the grain transportation system. There is in the Bill fair compensation to the railways on a statutory basis so that they can make those plans and investments for expansion. It sets up the control rate system on the basis of statutory formula. It sets up annual payments by the Government of Canada, it sets the Crow benefit at $651 million a year without restrictions in time and it sets up the sharing by the Government of future cost increases. Special rate arrangements are anticipated to benefit the Port of Prince Rupert and the Port of Churchill. It removes the statutory impediment to the exploitation of the dominion coal block and, finally, it repeals Section 271 of the Railway Act, the Crow rate.

It also includes an increase in the contribution from the producers to the transportation of their grain. What does that mean? There will be an increase, no doubt about that. The producer of grain will have to pay two cents a bushel more on May 1, 1983; 25 cents as opposed to the average of 13 cents now by 1985-86, twice the Crow. It is still less than a stamp on a letter even without the increase in postal rates by the Minister of Consumer Affairs until then.

The rate will be five and one half times Crow by the end of the decade unless sales increases are not as high as anticipated, when it would be less than five and one half times the Crow rate. If inflation is less than anticipated, it would be less than five and one-half times the Crow rate again.

But this rate is two and one-half times and five and one-half times what? It is two and one-half times and five and one-half times what is now only 18 per cent of the real cost as opposed to what was 60 per cent in the 1960s, about 2.5 per cent of the price of grain as opposed to what was ten, 15 and more in past years. So in fact we are talking about a return to the situation that was present in the 1960s before inflation changed the meaning of the Crow.

What will farmers get in return of this? Almost one billion dollars worth of federal assistance a year, potential savings on future costs because of the capacity and the efficiency added to the transportation system, savings on storage and demurrage charges, savings by not having to buy the hopper cars as they did in the past when the Canadian Wheat Board on behalf of its members, the farmers, had to buy some of these cars. The Government will take care of that now as it did most of the time in the past. There will be no loss of sales as happened in the 1977-79 period. There will be the possibility of shipping more grain and new specialized crops. There will be the railway guarantees of performance and investments. This is what the grain producer gets, and on top of that he gets protection against inflation and protection against the rising cost of transportation as opposed to the price that he gets for his grain.

It is easy, frankly, to say that the regime that will be created by this Bill is immensely better in terms of security for the farmer than the Crowsnest rates, because for one thing the railways are not obliged to haul the grain under the Crow rate.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, they are.

• (1140)

Mr. Pepin: They are not. There are legal grounds behind my statement.

I am speaking now in particular to the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat. There are some things the Bill does not do as fully as I would have liked. The problem of distortion remains a concern. However, crushers will get the statutory rate for their products and specialty crop people will be brought under the statutory rate.

With respect to the livestock industry, to date no one has found a way of dealing adequately with the problem although the problem is recognized.

Mr. Taylor: Gilson found a way.

Mr. Pepin: We tried but we could not accommodate it fully. There were too many 100 percenters around. Although the livestock industry is not pleased—

Mr. Hargrave: All of them in Quebec.

Mr. Pepin: Oh, that should not be said. My hon. friend should be a bit embarrassed about that. There was as strong opposition to many of the features of the previous version of the Bill from the West as there was from Quebec, but the division was from both regions of our beautiful country.

Mr. Thacker: Quebec was the last straw.

Mr. Pepin: The cattlemen and the livestock industry are not pleased. It is recognized that there is a "hurt" and that the cost of feed grain in the west is higher than it would be without the statutory rate; there is no doubt about that. I was trying to resolve the problem of the livestock industry in the West and in the East by transportation means, but the problem is essentially an agricultural one.

One thing is sure, Mr. Speaker; the Bill will clear the air for concentration on this particular problem of the livestock industry with preoccupations both East and West, and I hope that improvement will be brought about. The ball now goes to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). It was his problem in the first place and it is his problem again. I did my very best to help him and I am still on his team.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, all kinds of other people will accept this Bill and will be pleased to see it passed. Future Ministers of Transport will be eternally grateful for the passage of the Bill, that is for sure. The railways and the railway employees will be grateful for the passage of this Bill.

An Hon. Member: They will be very happy.

Mr. Pepin: Manufacturers of railway equipment across the land and their employees will be grateful for the passage of this Bill. Construction workers in the West will be eternally grateful, and so on.

May I underline also the relationship between this Bill and the budget infrastructure recovery program which brings in $2.4 billion to be spent in the next four years; $1.7 billion of that is new money. The western initiative program part of this $3.7 billion in the next four years includes things like $290 million worth of hopper cars, about $300 million for branch line rehabilitation and $75 million for industrial incentives in the next four years. The railway construction program itself is at the level of $6.8 billion in the next five years. When all that is put together it means a lot of recovery. Hence the importance of passing this Bill now.

In my view and in the view of the Government, Bill C-155 is a major initiative to deal with the biggest transportation problem in the country today. The Bill deserves to pass as it opens up, with some strength, the essential process of change. Let us not stay in uncertainty; let us move.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-155 which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has just introduced is not only controversial but is unbearably complex and bureaucratic. One could say that this piece of legislation bears the Liberal trademark of complexity and bureaucracy. One would need not one Philadelphia lawyer to interpret it; one would need a battery of Philadelphia lawyers to interpret it. I am told it took something like nine lawyers plus industry representatives plus bureaucrats plus policitians took some six months to draft this unwieldly abortion. It is disgustingly complex and it is incomplete.

When the Bill was finally introduced on Tuesday, only 25 copies were available. We received them about four o'clock in the afternoon yet the Minister has brought it on for debate today. This has given Members little more than a day to examine it. That is rather unfair but it is somewhat consistent with the contempt shown by the Government in the evolution of this piece of legislation.

Heretofore Members of the House of Commons have been left out of the debate on this very, very important agricultural issue. On five different occasions the Minister chose to make his announcements outside the House, starting with one on February 8, 1982 and culminating with his announcement of last Thursday. What disturbed many of us was that the Minister had the gall to walk across the street and make his announcement in the National Press Club. I think that is contemptuous and this conduct not becoming of the Minister.

Not only did the Government avoid the institution of Parliament and Members of the House, but in order to promote its transportation initiatives it chose to embark on a huge advertising campaign. That campaign has probably backfired, however. I hope that the Minister of Transport does not consider Members of the Opposition and indeed Members on all sides of the House as the "nobodies" they were once designated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The Minister has spent a good deal of his life and effort in strengthening our federation and adding credibility to our institutions, but I think his conduct in this matter does not become him.

We are dealing with what is probably one of the most important pieces of legislation brought before the House in this session relating to western agriculture and, I would say, to the Canadian economy. In his remarks the Minister spoke at great length about the way in which the Bill will fulfil the aspirations of western Canadian agriculture and he used selective, out-dated quotations which do not apply to conditions today. His remarks were a major retreat from the initiative he started out with over a year and half ago.

This Bill will have a very dramatic impact on the economy and social lifestyle of western Canada. It is very, very difficult to gauge the degree of that impact. That is why this House and Canadians in general will have to move very slowly and deliberately on this legislation.

To begin dismantling the historic and statutory rates enjoyed by producers in western Canada is in some respects to approach the land of the unknown. The social and economic base of western Canada has largely been founded upon the production, distribution, marketing and transportation of grain. Certain patterns evolved as a result of that. The Crowsnest Pass statutory freight rate was a major component of the development of those patterns. In essence, the Crowsnest Pass statutory freigh rate served as a constitutional pillar of the western agricultural industry.

First of all, for the producer the statute provided stability and certainty. It was simple and it was easy to understand. Every producer of grain, ever farmer, everyone engaged in the economy of western Canada, knew what the Crowsnest Pass freight rate was.

• (1150)

It also allowed the producer to plan. He knew what his freight costs were from year to year. It was one of the few known input costs where the vagaries of markets, climate and international competition are unknown and have a tremendous impact on the producers' bottom line. The Crowsnest Pass statutory freight rate counterbalanced to some extent the protection and support for the industrial development base of central Canada. I think that is important. It was a trade-off. So when you have a measure which served for the development of western Canada and you do not do the same thing in parallel in another part of the country, you are naturally going to create distortions and some measure of inequity.

Furthermore, the statutory freight rate recognized that competing grain exporting countries have several natural and artificial advantages. Canada cannot survive as a major producer of grain without export markets. In order to capture those export markets, it must become competitive. It is competing against countries which provide certain incentives and subsidies along with some countries who have certain geographic advantages.

Finally, the Crowsnest Pass statutory freight rate was a recognition that grain and oil seeds constitute an important national asset by contributing to our balance of payments and providing economic spin-offs. So, Mr. Speaker, what was a simple, stable freight rate of half a cent per tonne mile is now being transformed into a bureaucratic hodge-podge which will provide for a new freight rate each year and escalate on the basis of the railways' so-called operating costs.

I think I have clearly outlined what the Crowsnest Pass freight rate was. I now want to tell you what you are going to get in return as a result of Bill C-155. I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to page 16, Clause 35, Clause 36 and Clause 37. Bear in mind we have at the present time a statutory freight rate of half a cent per tonne mile. Now this is what this Bill is going to give the producers of Canada. First of all, the new rate will be set on April 30 of each calendar year by the Commission. That is Clause 35. Then clause 36:

36. (1) The annual rate scale in respect of a crop year shall be determined by multiplying the amount per tonne for the movement of grain over each range of distance set out in the base rate scale by the quotient obtained by dividing the estimated eligible costs of the railway companies in respect of that crop year less the CN adjustment in respect of that crop year by the base year revenues within the meaning of subsection (2), as those revenues are adjusted in accordance with the grain tonnage forecast for that crop year provided by the Administrator.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), "base year revenues" means the amount obtained by multiplying the rates applicable to the movement of grain under the tariffs of rates of the railway companies as derived from the base rate scale, taking into account sections 44 and 46, by the number of tonnes of grain actually moved by the railway companies from each point of origin on a line of railway in the Western Division in the most recent base year.

Mr. Pepin: It is all very easy.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is not complete, Mr. Speaker. In order to get the full statutory freight rate you must read Clause 37. I should really read it because it is—

An Hon. Member: Read it.

Mr. Mazankowski: All right. Clause 37, which is an integral part of the new statutory freight rate, provides as follows:

37. (1) There shall be included in each annual rate scale prescribed by the Commission pursuant to section 35 the percentages of the rates that are to be borne by the Government of Canada and the shippers of grain.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), the percentage to be borne by the Government of Canada for a crop year is equal to the quotient, expressed as a percentage, obtained by dividing

(a) the estimated government commitment as defined by subsection (4), less an amount equal to the CN adjustment in respect of that crop year, plus or minus the total of the interim adjustment for the current crop year and the final adjustment for the preceding crop year, by

(b) the estimated eligible costs less an amount equal to the CN adjustment in respect of that crop year.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (1), the percentage to be borne by the shippers of grain for a crop year is equal to the difference between one hundred per cent and the percentage to be borne by the Government of Canada for the crop year, as calculated under subsection (2).

(4) For the purposes of subsection (2), the "estimated government commitment" means an amount equal to the aggregate of

(a) the Crow Benefit for that crop year divided by 31.1 million tonnes of grain and multiplied by the number of tonnes of grain that, in the estimation of the Administrator, will be moved in that crop year or 31.1 million tonnes, whichever is the lesser; and

(b) the estimated cumulative government share of the cost change for that crop year.

Mr. Pepin: It is all very clear.

Mr. Mazankowski: I could go on and define what the Government commitment is going to be. That is found on page 27 and is the same kind of regurgitated jargon that I referred to in the freight rate structure which is supposed to be statutory. What a linguistic labyrinth, Mr. Speaker! It is nonsense. It had to be drafted by the same people who drafted our Income Tax Act. I do not know if any farmer can understand that bureaucratic, regurgitated rhetoric. If he does, he must be a genius.

How can farmers plan in that environment of bureaucratic fog? If they could, they would probably qualify for the Order of Canada.

Mr. Pepin: That is how I got it!

Mr. Mazankowski: I find it just absolutely, totally ridiculous. That is how the Minister got it.

What is most disturbing, Mr. Speaker, is that the complexity enshrined in this legislation is not for the benefit of the farmers; it is for the benefit of the Government and the railways to satisfy their motives and appetities. For example, the Government puts a lid of $651 million on the Crow benefit. The Government must assume there is not going to be any inflation as far as it is concerned. There is no provision for inflationary escalation.

Mr. Pepin: Yes, there is.

Mr. Mazankowski: But the producers are going to have to pay for inflation as a result of the so-called railway cost increases. They are going to pay the first 3 per cent until 1985-86, and 6 per cent beyond that. But there is no provision for an escalation of the $651 million. That is permanent, even 100 years from now, in spite of what the inflationary pressures might be. The Government cannot have it both ways.

The same thing applies to the 31.1 million tonnes limit. The Minister says we are going to be able to produce more, transport more and sell more. But it works in reverse. One would think that given the economies of scale, one should get a better rate with greater volume. But this works in reverse. We are going to have a blended freight rate which is going to be composed of the commercial rate applied to any grain movement beyond 31.1 million tonnes, blended with the new statutory freight rate. This means, Mr. Speaker, that we are going to have a freight rate structure with open-ended escalation based upon railway costs.

The Minister says there is going to be a safety net but he did not elaborate on that. He did not define what that safety net was going to be. He said it was going to be based upon a percentage of what farmers receive for their grain, but he certainly has not elaborated and has not dispelled any fears.

We still maintain that the producer will be paying double the existing Crow rate by 1985-86 and five and a half times by 1991-92. In dollar terms, in 1985-86 that will mean at least $155 million to $160 million out of the Prairie economy. In 1991-92 it will be an additional $1 billion. Conservatively speaking, an extra $1 billion will be taken out of the Prairie grain economy. I want to say right here and now that this is simply not acceptable to our Party and we will be moving an amendment in that regard when we get to committee stage.

• (1200)

The statutory freight rate, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, is tantamount to a constitutional right for the producers of Canada. If it is to be traded or bargained away, the end result should be something as good as, or something better in place than, we have had before. Looking at this Bill, and notwithstanding the so-called "good intentions" of the Minister, we are not ending up with anything as good as, and certainly not anything better than, what was the case before.

We in our Party have taken the position that improvements to the existing statutory structure could and should be made. I reiterate that improvements could be made. I agree with the Minister; the transportation chaos which occurred in 1978-79, resulting in lost grain sales and a total breakdown of the transportation system, cannot be tolerated. We know that we lost in the order of a billion dollars in sales. That cannot be tolerated from the standpoint of Canada as a reliable supplier of grain, nor can it be tolerated as far as the producers are concerned. Therefore, we recognize that maintaining the status quo is not satisfactory. We recognized it, we acknowledged it and we acted.

When this Party was in office for that short period of time in 1979 we took a number of major steps to improve the grain handling and distribution system in this country. Many of those improvements are still in place today, and the improved market penetration is the result of the efforts which we undertook when we were in Government. We were not the only ones who recognized the need for change and improvement. The Hon. Justice Emmett Hall, in his report on grain handling and transportation in 1977, recognized that change had to be made and advanced some recommendations.

I would bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and to the attention of all Hon. Members of the House, the presence in our Gallery of this very distinguished Canadian, Mr. Justice Hall.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: He is not only an outstanding westerner, but he is truly an outstanding Canadian. I know that Hon. Members on all sides of the House are indeed proud of him and are indeed proud to have him in our midst today. Mr. Justice Hall did make very sensible recommendations at that time, and I am sure that if he were to look at the situation again today, he would again come up with sensible recommendations. They may be modified, given the fact that there have been some changes which have occurred, advances in technology, a trend to larger and bigger production units, a centralization and rationalization of the elevator system. All of those things would have to be taken into account. However, the fact of the matter is that change was recognized and recommendations were advanced.

The only people who are not advocating any change are the New Democratic Party, who want to retain the status quo, and the NFU; but they really cannot have it both ways. Their solution to the problem is basically to nationalize the CPR and re-nationalize the CNR. That is really all we get from them. Our Party's position on the Crow is simply: we believe that the Crowsnest Pass freight rate should remain in statute form for the grain producers of Canada, but that adequate compensation commensurate with the cost of moving grain should be provided to the railways. This is basically the recommendation of the Hall Commission. In addition, it is assumed that the subsidy would be distributed on a basis agreed to after widespread consultation and consensus with the producers. Furthermore, adequate guarantees with respect to service and capacity must be provided.

We have noted throughout the past year or so, Mr. Speaker, that there has been a general consensus emerging that producers would accept the responsibility of paying more than the statutory freight rate. The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Manitoba Wheat Pool, the United Grain Growers, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, Unifarm, and the various commodity groups, have all recognized that they would be prepared to pay more than the statutory freight rate, but it must be tied to their ability to pay, either related to the price of grain or based on margins. I believe that is a very important element because you can have an increase in the price of grain, maybe a doubling of the price of grain, but a tripling in the cost of input. So perhaps we should have some mechanism which would tie it to the producers' margin of profit.

I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that I believe a very strong argument can be made for no increase at this particular time. I say that for a number of reasons. If we look at prices, in 1973-74 farmers were receiving $4.57 a bushel for No. 1 wheat. In 1980-81 that increased to $6.04. In 1981-82 it went down to $5.43. In 1982-83 it was something in the vicinity of $5.17; and today the initial price which is set for the 1983-84 crop year is $4.63. Barley is at $2.07. Therefore, we are looking at a price for the farmer's commodity of something just slightly better than it was nine years ago.

In the meantime, there has been a staggering inflation rate of 135 per cent. If one were to apply that inflation rate to the price of grain, then rather than $5 a bushel or $4.63, the farmer should be getting something in the order of $10.75 or $11 a bushel. I think a strong case can be made, therefore, for no increase until such time as the price of the farmer's commodity increases or at least reaches a level which will bear some semblance to the price of input costs and, indeed, bear some relationship to the international marketplace.

Energy costs alone, Mr. Speaker, have gone up 81 per cent since 1979. We know what interest rates and other input costs have done. The fact of the matter is that the western grain farmer saw his net income fall in the year 1982 by 35 per cent.

This is certainly not the time to be imposing an additional burden upon the backs of the farmers of western Canada. What really bothers many of us in this Party, Mr. Speaker, is that the projections and the basis upon which this Bill was formulated, and the formulae for the freight rate upon which the Minister and his bureaucrats based their figures, were based on a study by Agriculture Canada which suggested that wheat prices by 1990 would reach a level of $12 a bushel. They were even out on their first projection for 1982-83 where they said wheat was going to be worth $6 a bushel. It is only worth now about $4.50.

An Hon. Member: They projected $70 a barrel for oil.

Mr. Mazankowski: They projected $70 a barrel for oil as well, as my colleague said. It is nonsense to base a freight rate structure on the contention that wheat is going to rise to $12 a bushel by 1990. That is absolutely ludicrous and insane. The same thing applies to barley. They are suggesting that barley would be $8 a bushel by 1990-91. They start out from the inaccurate premise that it is now $4 a bushel, when it is just over $2 a bushel. They project the same thing with hogs. It is a very glowing and optimistic document. They are saying that the prices of hogs will go up two and a half times and the price of beef will double by 1990. The facts simply do not bear that out, Mr. Speaker.

So I repeat, this is not the time to be imposing a further burden upon the backs of the farmers of Canada. We in our Party maintain that the producers of Canada must have a fair régime which will recognize the fact that the Government of Canada and the railways of Canada have a continuing obligation to provide a special low rate for the movement of grain to export and domestic positions. That is one of the basic tenets within which we examine the present piece of legislation with which we are dealing.

We say that the railways and the Government of Canada have a continuing obligation to provide a special low rate for a number of reasons. First, Canada is a price taker. The prices for grain are established in the international marketplace. In order for Canada to capture those markets it must be competitive.

We know that all competing countries subsidize their producers in one form or another. For example, under the Victoria state railway system in Australia farmers pay less than 50 per cent of the average cost of freighting grain. In 1982 Australia also reduced the diesel fuel tax and gasoline tax for all agricultural production by six cents a litre.

In Argentina, since October 7, 1981 the national grain board provided free rail freight for grain from the nearest station available to the shipping port.

We know what the European Economic Community does. Their common agricultural policy subsidizes the producers of agricultural products to the tune of approximately $15 billion to $16 billion. That is a lot of money which is paid for by the taxpayers.

With respect to wheat, the wheat farmers in the European Economic Community receive a direct subsidy of $2.53 a bushel, according to the January, 1983 edition of The Wall Street Journal.

One can see what is happening in the United States when one reads the study by the grain market economist of the University of Manitoba, Mr. Colin A. Carter. He indicated that while Canada provides an average subsidy to its wheat producers of $16.05 per tonne, the U.S. Government pays an average subsidy of $13.81 per tonne. That is for wheat. With respect to barley, he say that the Canadian Government's support for barley averaged $7.56 per tonne compared to the United States $6.84 per tonne. That is in Canadian dollars.

In addition to that we now have the PIK Program which will provide approximately $11.4 billion in further support from the United States treasury to the farmers of the United States.

It is clear that we have that reality and fact of life which must be recognized in the total context. We must also recognize that the grain producing region of Canada is a landlocked part of the country. That region is an average of 2,000 kilometres from export positions. The distance in the United States is 1,100 kilometres; in Argentina it is 200 kilometres; in Australia it is 300 kilometres; and in France it is 300 kilometres.

These are realities which must be taken into consideration while bearing in mind that agriculture, particularly grain, is a very important component of the Canadian economy. It accounts for some $6 billion worth of exports and we know that for every dollar of activity generated in agriculture, it multiplies and generates $7 worth of additional economic activity throughout the country. It is in that context that we maintain that the railways and the Government of Canada have a continuing obligation to provide a special low rate for the movement of grain.

We acknowledge that the railways should receive fair—I repeat, fair—compensation for the movement of grain so that it can be done effectively and provide the necessary capital and means for maintaining plant and equipment. We must also say that it is our belief that the $651 million is overly generous. Even Mr. Snavely has conceded the fact that it is overly generous. We believe that for the railroads to receive 100 per cent of their long run variable costs, 20 per cent contributions to overhead and 20.5 per cent contributions to capital plus a freight rate that will be equal to ten times the current Crow rate by 1990-1991, they are in fact being relieved of any continuing historical and statutory obligation. We do not believe that should be the case.

While the Minister of Transport may say that $651 million is a lot of money, which it is, I would tell him, in case he does not know, that some $300 million-plus is generated through the agricultural community from the federal taxes that are imposed upon fuel and fertilizer that farmers use. That is another reason why the farmers are in trouble today; the heavy input costs they face largely as a result of the National Energy Program and the confiscatory taxes that are imposed upon fuels that the farmers use. There is no question about that.

Our third principle is that we believe the producers should be guaranteed an efficient, cost-effective and reliable transportation system. There is no disputing that fact. The provisions in the Bill are viewed with some degree of suspicion. Other Members of my Party will be dealing with that issue but I think it is fair to say that we do not find the provisions and safeguards in the Bill satisfactory.

When we consider efficiency and reliability, we must ask ourselves for whom. Naturally it must be for the producer since he is really the one we are trying to satisfy, make more competitive and to maximize his returns. I believe there are many improvements which should be made in the system besides changing the Crow rate.

Many people are not aware that in this country we weigh our grain six times before it is loaded on the boat for final disposition. We also grade our grain three times. I think that is unnecessary and clearly shows that there are areas for improvement in that regard.

The railways operate seven days a week; the elevator companies and terminals operate five days a week. Many of the bottlenecks and problems related to the slowing up of grain movement are not always associated with the transportation system, but indeed with the terminal. The bottlenecks occur there. A reduction in turnaround time of one day would be the equivalent of an additional 1,000 hoppers. That would reduce our investment in the system by some $73 million.

We believe there could be more interchange agreements so that the two railways could work more closely together without nationalizing them. We think that the use of producer cars should be encouraged. Currently there is a saving of about $600 to the producer if he chooses to load his own car. However, as has been the case over the years, producers are frustrated in their ability to use the producer car.

For example, in an article in the Alberta Report of May 2, it is pointed out that since August 2,300 orders have been placed for producer cars and only a thousand have been received, and the balance will probably not be all received before the end of July. That is a clear area where the producers' revenue could be maximized.

I am pleased to note as well that in 1977 the Hall Commission recommended the greater utilization of producer cars because the commissioners on that particular Commission saw this as a means to maximize revenue to the producers. The former Chief Justice indicated to me personally that if that was the case in 1977, the need for that is more apparent today. At that time he recommended that we could go as high as 20,000 cars annually.

Those are some steps which could be taken. As well, elevator charges are up to $13 per tonne and perhaps could be reduced somehow. The use of trucking could be increased, thereby increasing competition in that particular area and relieving the pressures on the system. Another example is labour relations where strikes and lockouts have severely impaired our reputation as a reliable supplier of grain. Our strike record leaves much to be desired. There is much that could be done in terms of streamlining and making the system more efficient.

I come now to the fourth principle under which we examine this piece of legislation. The distortion of the low freight rates in grain and oil seeds vis-à-vis processed products should be removed and an actual advantage retained. I think that is very central to this piece of legislation, particularly now since the Minister has made some recent changes. It is important that the natural advantages be retained. It is important for us in western Canada to see our agricultural base broadened and diversified so that there can be more processing of agricultural products in western Canada. I say to you, Sir, that the payment directly to the railways will further distort the freight rate anomaly that exists and will militate against the further processing of products in western Canada and militate against further diversification.

I wonder how the Minister can now answer the contention that he made in his first proposal when he said that his original proposal would result in an additional $1 billion in livestock production and an additional $350 million worth of economic activity with respect to the processing, the packing plants and the feed mill industry. I wonder how he can respond to that today.

The short answer is that his latest proposal will hurt the livestock industry in western Canada and will militate against further diversification. I would suggest, as others have suggested, that under this particular mechanism the West could once again become a colony of Canada. Some have already called it the Crow colonization bill. With it has been engendered a great deal of bitterness and anger, and I say to you, Sir, that I hope the Minister will still be flexible and accommodating because there have to be some changes. That issue has to be addressed. We have heard a lot about accommodation and compromise. I sincerely hope the Minister is prepared to take another look at this matter. We believe a solution must be arrived at.

In that connection, I have put something to put forward to the Minister for consideration. Since there is no consensus on this issue and there are some differences of opinion, I ask the Minister to consider making the payment of the Crow benefit optional to the producer or to the railroad. Let the producer decide whether the money should go to the railroad, or let him decide whether it should go to him. With the complexity of this Bill, surely there will be enough computers, machinery and bureaucrats involved that this will not bureaucratize things too much more.

This proposal will do several things. I know the immediate answer will be that the proposal is administratively impossible. But I ask the Minister to consider it because it will do a number of things. It will provide the producer with freedom of choice. It will achieve the objective of further processing. It will serve to inject some competition into the system and, therefore, ameliorate the inefficiencies in the system. It could increase producer incomes. Most important, since this whole issue will be reviewed in 1985-1986, it will give the Minister and those who are monitoring it some practical experience concerning how either method would work. I think there are some merits to this. I have not defined the principle in detail and I am sure there will be arguments, both pro and con. I am really throwing out a principle here that I believe will serve to ameliorate the objections of the commodity groups and the livestock producers and at the same time reduce regional tensions.

I know the Pools have strongly advocated payment directly to the railroads. If that is so, then the producer will have that right. We will see what the producers say. If the Pools are right in their contention, then most producers will naturally choose to have the payment directed to the railroad. We believe that is a solution. We would like the Minister to look at it and give us his comments. If it has some merit, we will certainly consider proposing it as an amendment.

I repeat that I think the principle has validity. It gives the producer some freedom of choice and we would be very pleased to work this matter out.

I have a fifth and final point. We believe that grain producers must have a statutory freight rate which preserves the benefits of the Crow and must be protected from open-ended escalation. This is not apparent in this legislation, Mr. Speaker.

The concerns we have with this Bill are numerous. We believe, notwithstanding the Minister's efforts, that this legislation is untimely. Just let me summarize. We will be opposing this Bill for the following reasons. First, we do not believe the principles of the statutory freight rate are being retained in this legislation.

Second, we believe the freight rate structure will provide for open-ended escalation without any consideration for farmers' profit positions or the value of grain. The Minister has stated his good intentions to bring in a safety net, but heretofore that has not been evident.

Mr. Pepin: I committed myself to the safety net.

Mr. Mazankowski: Third, we are opposed to the Bill on the basis that there is an upper limit of 31.1 million tonnes.

Fourth, we are opposed to this Bill because it excludes new crops and speciality crops. Again the Minister suggested changes, but we have not had that matter enunciated, and until we see that, it still remains one of our objections.

Fifth, we are opposed to this Bill because it is a costly bureaucratic mechanism.

Sixth, we are opposed to this Bill because it is inappropriate to impose further costs on the agricultural community at a time when farm commodity prices are declining and farm input costs are increasing.

Seventh, we have serious doubts about the monetary mechanism under service guarantees. Perhaps the experts could explain what is meant by some of these provisions in the Bill because we have not been able to read through the myriad of words, clichés and rhetoric. Maybe it is sufficient, but we have some doubts about that.

Eighth, we are opposed to this Bill because it will further militate against diversification and the further processing of agricultural production in western Canada.

Ninth, we are opposed to this Bill because there is no clear consensus in western Canada about how we should proceed.

As the Prime Minister has said on a number of occasions, he would not proceed unless there was a clear consensus. On February 13, 1981 the Prime Minister said:

> At the present time our policy is not to touch the Crow rate, but if there is a general feeling in the west, that the question must be reopened, then we would be happy to do so.

I say to the Minister there is not a consensus. Further, there was nothing mentioned in the last election campaign about dismantling the Crow. There was nothing mentioned in the Speech from the Throne about dismantling the Crow. Unitl there is that sort of clear consensus to move, I would suggest the Minister consider a postponement.

Tenth, we oppose this Bill because we believe this package is far too generous to the railroads.

Eleventh, we oppose this Bill because there is no provision that we can see in the Bill to reduce rates if costs should fall. That is what happened in energy. Look at the embarrassment in which we find ourselves now. A $70 per barrel price for oil was projected and everything was geared toward the increase, but there was never anything geared toward a reduction in the price. Perhaps the Minister might want to consider that scenario.

Twelfth, we are opposed to this Bill because of blended freight rates and the prospect of variable rates.

Thirteenth, we are concerned about the concentration of power in the hands of the Minister, this Minister or any subsequent Minister. We do not think the Minister should become a transportation czar.

Fourteenth, we are concerned about the potential erosion of power with respect to the Canadian Wheat Board.

In summary, those are the issues about which we are deeply concerned; other speakers will be elaborating on these and other points. But I must say that producers in western Canada view this process with suspicion, mistrust and anxiety. For them to give up something which they have had enshrined in statute for the regurgitated rhetoric that we see in this legislation is certainly not palatable, Mr. Speaker. I repeat, there is no consensus out there. This Government is not having to fulfil a promise it made during the election campaign or in the Speech from the Throne. I say that the Minister should seriously consider not moving ahead with this Bill until there are substantive changes to it which will meet the objectives that I have outlined and which others will be outlining in due course.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I want to commence my speech on what I consider to be a black day for Canada and a black day for western producers by saying that our criticisms of the Bill and our long-standing criticisms of attempts to demolish the statutory grain rate, the Crow rate, have never in any way been meant in a personal way to the Minister. Anything my colleagues and I have to say is not meant personally. We look upon the Minister as being nothing more than the inheritor and victim of the Otto Lang and Jack Pickersgill user-pay policy which has continually helped to divide the country.

• (1230)

Statutory grain rates are one of a number of provisions in all regions of Canada designed to take into account our geography and our climate. They are designed to take into account where our people live, where they produce agricultural or manufactured products, and also our competitors in international markets, so that we obtain a reasonable share of exports. If we remove a benefit from one region, we cannot help but increase disunity in the nation and harm Confederation.

The legislation proposed by the Minister strikes at what is to Canadians west of Thunder Bay a charter, a part of Confederation and a birthright. Today's generation of farmers in western Canada were born after the Crowsnest Pass Agreement of 1897. That is the fundamental reason for this legislation being wrong.

At the outset I want to say on behalf of my Party that we have never opposed changes, improvements and rehabilitation of the rail transportation system. In fact, we were among the first to call for them. However, our second main reason for opposing the legislation is that grain farmers will have to pay more freight charges.

I think the Minister made a remark during his speech, if I heard him correctly, about providing $1 billion per year in aid to western agriculture. The Minister's legislation will mean that by 1991 grain producers will be paying well in excess of $1 billion in extra freight charges. When grain prices are continuing to fall and remain below the cost of production, I find it unconscionable for any Government to try to foist additional increased costs on our grain producers or, for that matter, on any other agricultural producer.

The benefits in the statutory grain rate for western Canada have kept us competitive in world markets, have gained billions of dollars every year in foreign exchange for the nation as a whole and have meant that consumers from coast to coast have had the benefit of the price of milling wheat, flour and bread being held down. This benefited all Canadians. Since the statutory rate is of benefit to the nation as a whole, surely the nation as a whole should pay the major portion of the cost of delivering grain to export positions and to Canadian consumers. Surely that is part of co-operative federalism.

The same thing applies to the Maritime Freight Rates Act, the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act, the At and East freight rates and the bridge rates. The same thing applied to tariff protection for industry, most of which was located in central Canada. This meant higher costs for all Canadian consumers, but all Canadians willingly shared in the cost of helping one another in different regions of Canada. This legislation attacks that principle which was established in the 1880s and 1890s and was continued by successive Governments. Now, in the name of providing guaranteed profits for railways and guaranteed losses for farmers, the Government attacks an essential instrument for national unity in the nation.

Of course, there are some people happy with the legislation. I am sure that Canadian Pacific shareholders and its board of directors are just delighted. Since the Minister's announcement on February 1, the value of Canadian Pacific Ltd. shares has risen by $745 million. That is a 30 per cent increase in the value of Canadian Pacific Ltd. stock. Naturally Canadian Pacific Ltd. is happy with the legislation. Naturally the coal industry in Canada is happy with the legislation. Naturally the Canadian manufacturers Association and the Chambers of Commerce are happy with it. None of them grows grain. Of the hundred and some organizations about which the Minister dragged in his futile effort to get consensus, over 60 of them do not grow grain or have anything to do with the production, delivery and sale of grain.

Grain producers of western Canada have been picked as the villains who caused the inadequacies in our transportation system. Grain has never occupied more than 19 per cent of the track capacity in western Canada to the Pacific Coast. Right now it is around 15 per cent, and in a year or two it will be down to 14 per cent. The mythology perpetuated by the Minister, his predecessors and other non-grain and non-agricultural corporations and organizations was that it was all the fault of grain producers that the railway system was in a deplorable condition and not meeting the needs of the nation.

The Minister talked about weighting legislative authority to get guarantees out of the railways. He has all the legislative authority he needs in the Canadian Pacific Railway Act, the National Transportation Act and the Railway Act. I am sure he knows as well as I that Section 262 provides that the railways "shall", not "may", provide suitable accommodation for all traffic offered. "Suitable accommodation" means tracks, railway cars, locomotives, tunnels and whatever else is needed. The Minister can enforce the legal authority he alrady has by placing telephone calls to the Presidents of each railway.

I want to acknowledge too the presence in the gallery today of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall. I want to quote him for the benefit of the Minister and my colleagues to my right. This is another reason we oppose the Bill. He said:

> If once tampering with the statutory rate is accepted or condoned or as an item on the bargaining table, all will be lost. For once the subject is on the bargaining table, it will only be a matter of time until it is lost step by step. There is no position to take except to adhere through thick and thin that the Crow rate is not bargainable.

We support that unequivocally. The one disagreement I have with my good friends in the Wheat Pools and in other farm organizations is their willingness to accept an increase in freight rate costs for grain producers at a time, under present economic conditions, when they cannot afford it.

While there are those who say there should be change and that they are prepared to see grain producers pay more in freight charges, I have yet had a single grain producer tell me that he is willing to pay more freight charges. Most farm organizations which accepted this did so because they thought it was inevitable. They became resigned to it because they believed that the Government intended to do it anyway and they wanted to see what kind of a good deal they could get. This Bill shows them the kind of deal they are getting. Not only are they getting $1 billion or more in increased freight charges by 1991, but they are getting variable rates.

The Minister can dress up all he likes the language in the Bill, but a variable rate is a variable rate. Variable rates mean that there are another 1,800 to 2,000 kilometres of branch lines in the three Prairie Provinces slated for abandonment in the rest of this decade. I invite the Minister to go to places like Cardston and explain to the people there that they may lose their branch lines, delivery points and the millions of dollars invested in country elevators and in their community. Are these people supposed to get up and just walk away from that? Anyone who agrees to demolishing the statutory grain rates is not worthy of his or her position in this House, not worthy to represent the people in their constituencies and, in particular, not worthy of what Confederation, unity and co-operative federalism mean in Canada.

I now want to deal with the alternatives that we have been proposing for many weeks. I will surprise the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) by not saying a word about nationalizing Canadian Pacific Limited. Our proposal calls for three essential points. First, that the statutory grain rates remain in place for grain producers. Second, that any shortfall in proven out-of-pocket costs of the railroads in the transport of grain be paid directly to the railroads as a grain transportation subsidy.

I was glad to hear the Hon. Member for Vegreville elucidate the massive subsidies received by grain producers in Australia, Argentina, the United States and the European Economic Community. The Government is asking our grain producers to pay a billion dollars a year more by the end of the decade and to compete with the national treasuries of those countries. Surely that is not fair. It mistreats a region and a segment of our economy. That flies in the face of national unity and co-operative federalism.

We object to paying the railroad a shortfall which includes the ability for them to make a profit on the subsidy. If they made a profit on the commodity, one could argue in a different way or possibly accept it, but not allow the railroads to make a profit on the subsidy from the public purse, a 21 per cent return on investment. Does anyone know of people who get a 21 per cent return on their investment? This Bill provides another 20 per cent for what can euphemistically be called overhead. In my opinion, that is a straight add-on profit.

In committee the other day, one of the Minister's officials said to me that overhead is the cost of money. I thought interest rates were around 9 per cent or 10 per cent. I do not know what the rest is for; maybe water for the railroad President's whisky, his salary and a few things like that. That is the second part of our proposal, that the shortfall should be only the proven out-of-pocket costs of the railroad.

Third, we fully support public investment in the rehabilitation and upgrading of our railway lines. This should not be confined to British Columbia and Alberta because there are many other places in Canada where it is badly needed. We say that for the first time since 1881 we as a nation should cease to hand out capital to the railways or anyone else without getting something in return for that capital investment. Which other investor would provide money for capital without taking devidends or interest, bonds, debentures or equity shares? Surely my colleagues in the Liberal and Conservative Parties agree that would be a sound business practice. Implementing our alternative proposal would require no more money than the Government is prepared to spend under this legislation. It would be a lot more fair and sensible.

In view of what I have said, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

> That all the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "Bill C-155 be not now read a second time but be read this day six months hence".

I will conclude my remarks by telling my colleagues that this is not just sentiment but an essential part of this country. If the statutory grain rates can be cavalierly done away with at the expense of the western grain producers, I warn my colleagues from other parts of Canada that the Maritime Freight Rates Assistance Act, the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act as well as the At and East freight rates will be jeopardy.

The user-pay principle will not stop at statutory grain rates. What will happen to the tariff protection of the manufacturing sector in Canada, particularly central Canada? If the Minister were to have his way, he would go for cost recovery of our airports, the Seaway, ports and highways.

There is not a single mode of transportation that has ever paid its own way. Ever since the wheel was invented, each mode of transportation has had to be subsidized. It is a public utility, something that everyone uses directly or indirectly. In many sectors of transportation there are natural monopolies which require public investment and control. To single out the grain producers of western Canada while all other sectors continue to get their subsidies and benefits is unfair. It should cause all thinking Canadians to say that we cannot and must not legislate in a manner which discriminates against one region while similar benefits are being received in other regions.

We believe that our railway system must be upgraded and modernized. The public must have greater equity in the railroads, both increased equity in Canadian National and begin to take equity ownership shares in Canadian Pacific, so that the people of Canada are eligible for a return on their capital investment and can have some say in it.

The Minister wants more guarantees and more authority. He has a board of directors for Canadian National which he appointed. If he sends a directive for them to follow as a matter of Government policy, they have no choice but to do it. Similarly, with equity shares there would be Government representation on the board of Canadian Pacific Limited. The investment of the taxpayers of Canada would be guarded and protected and the maximum benefits obtained from that investment. Surely that makes eminently good, sound business sense.

We have no choice but to continue to expend billions of dollars on our transportation system. Spending on railway upgrading is not just for grain but potash, coal, sulphur and a host of other commodities, also for people, if this Minister will leave us a passenger train or two. It is a must for any Government to maintain what is both historically correct, proper and fair today. I am not suggesting that all of the measures that are on the books of Canada since Confederation are perfect. There are improvements that may be made. But to dismantle a part of the Charter that brought western Canada into Confederation is surely no way to gather Canadians together.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that Hon. Members will look upon this as more than just a question as to whether or not the railways will be satisfied or whether or not one farm group or another farm group will be satisfied. I hope that the Government and the House will look upon it as a question of whether or not it satisfies the needs of Confederation. We believe, and I think history bears out, that the statutory grain rates, like many other measures in place on the books of Canada, are of benefit, are fair, are equal and are worthy of support and strengthening for the well-being not only of grain farmers and railway systems but of the entire nation.

I plead with the Minister to accept our motion so that everyone involved can come up with something better than this legislation. This will not be accomplished in only a few weeks in standing committee. Most fundamentally of all, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister and the Government will finally agree that maintaining the statutory grain rates for grain producers is essential, not only for the grain producers but for all the people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will read to the House the Hon. Member's amendment. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), seconded by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), moves:

That all the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"Bill C-155 be not now read a second time but be read this day six months hence".

The amendment is in order.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to speak on this very important piece of legislation, I do so from many vantage points. First, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport I am in a rather good position to appreciate the effort that has gone into formulating the Government's western transportation initiatives in the last two and one half years, culminating in the introduction of Bill C-155. I have personally witnessed the co-operation, consultation and compromise reflected in this Bill.

From my second vantage point as a member from Canada's industrial heartland, I am excited about the economic opportunities that Crow rate reform will bring to all parts of Canada, and particularly to Ontario. The railways, with adequate compensation for the movement of grain, will now be able to make major capital expenditures. Over the decade these investments will ensure sufficient railway capacity to transport Canadian raw and processed products to our customers around the world. Growth in the railway transportation sector means jobs in Ontario, something that this side of the House has been emphasizing all along. This Bill means that there will be more hopper cars, more locomotives, more rail and more electronic equipment.

From my third vantage point as a native of rural Saskatchewan, I know how important the railway is to Canada's grain farmers. Without a first-class transportation system, the farmer, she or he—and I emphasize "she" because I believe many Members in the House are ignoring the fact that we have today many female producers—will never be able to capitalize on the tremendous opportunities of an expanding export market.

Speaking of exports, I speak from a fourth vantage point. I had the privilege, Mr. Speaker, of chairing a special parliamentary committee on a National Trading Corporation which culminated in a report tabled in the house called "Canada's Trade Challenge". It was in that committee that I learned how important export trade is to Canada. I learned what it means to be competitive.

The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) spoke about the Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta producers' need to be competitive. Well, Mr. Speaker, I ask you, if you are only price competitive but cannot deliver your products to market, what good is that competitiveness? This is why we are emphasizing the improvement of the grain transportation system in the West. When we say that we want our producers to be competitive, we mean not only price competitive but delivery competitive. We mean getting that product to the export markets in good shape.

Just a few weeks ago, I was home in Saskatchewan, as I visit the West regularly. I talked to many local farmers there. They were confused by the different stories that were being told about the Government's policy. They were quite naturally apprehensive and were fearing the worst. I discovered that there was also a lot of misrepresentation of the Government's intention. So in the time available to me, I intent to talk in a factual and straightforward manner about the Bill itself.

I believe that even the two Opposition Members who spoke today tried to instil fear and confusion in the western producer. I hope that with my factual presentation of what this Bill includes, I will dispel some of this confusion and fear.

I would like to break the Bill down into five areas. These areas are, first, what it does for farmers, and that is really what is important about this Bill; second, what it does for the railways; third, how the freight rates are established; fourth, the new grain transportation agency; and fifth, and I think probably what is most important, the review process. The review process will take place after the year 1985-86, so that many of the issues and concerns that are raised can be reviewed after a certain period of time. At that time, Parliament of the day can make further changes to bring about greater protection to the western producer.

These areas do not correspond exactly to the text of the Bill, but I believe that dividing it into these five categories makes it easier to understand and analyse the Bill.

First, what does the Bill do for the farmers? There is no doubt the Bill will bring about changes in the western grain transportation and handling system. There is no doubt that the farmer is being asked to pay a bit more for transportation; we are not denying that. But in return, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of provisions which work to his or her benefit.

First, again contrary to what the Hon. Member for Vegreville said this morning, there is a statutory basis for the new structure. Once the legislation is in place, only this Parliament can change it. There is very little scope for decisions by Order in Council, so farmers have the assurance of a stable and predictable system.

Second, farmers are guaranteed a permanent annual payment of over $650 million, the famous Crow benefit. It is payable to the railways and it is payable as long as the legislation is in existence. I believe it is safe to say that as a result farmers will never have to pay the full cost of transporting their grain.

Third, farmers will receive protection from expected inflationary cost increases in the future, again contrary to what the critics in the Progressive Conservative Party attempted to tell the producers this morning. For the next three years the farmer will only be asked to pay the first three percentage points of railway cost increases. Perhaps this calls for a simple illustration, but I see, Mr. Speaker, that you have given me the nod to indicate that my time has expired. May I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ENERGY

DISADVANTAGES TO QUEBEC OF PROGRESSIVE GASOLINE TAX

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): On Tuesday night, Madam Speaker, Quebec Finance Minister Parizeau refused to remove the 40 per cent automatic tax on gasoline in Quebec, even though spokesmen for businessmen and consumers had urged him to do just that. The Minister himself had acknowledged and promised that the tax was temporary and would end on March 31, 1983.

Mr. Parizeau seems to agree that the tax is unfair to people who live near our neighbouring provinces of New Brunswick and Ontario, since he has lowered the tax in the vicinity of those interprovincial boundaries. I am glad that Hull residents, for instance, will benefit from a partial tax reduction, but it is the best proof that we owe that tax aberration to a Minister who has run out of ideas.

Not satisfied with creating an unbelievable distorsion of some $200 million in Quebec's agri-food sector, as compared with Western Canada, the Minister is urging tourists to travel elsewhere in Canada. Madam Speaker, that is the way the Social Democrats conceive the economic recovery and how the separatists can be sure that none of our neighbours will come to steal our jobs.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CIVILIAN EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES AT CANADIAN FORCES BASE BORDEN

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, in my riding we have yet another example of the stupidity and duplicity involved in the implementation of the Government's new job-creation programs.

Civilians working on contract at CFB Borden, many of them with seniority, have been let go and their jobs have been offered to those on welfare, or those whose unemployment insurance benefits have expired. Yet, many in the latter group are refusing the jobs. Eight of those refusing have been cut off from welfare payments and two others, who initially refused, accepted the jobs when told their welfare payments would cease.

The social services administrator said those refusing the jobs cited transportation problems, an excuse that was not legitimate. He also said others simply avoided going to the jobs when they were referred. He stated that 30 of the 200 jobs offered have been filled, and that one man is making $8.43 an hour washing dishes at the Base.

A Base spokesman has said the military are powerless to prevent the layoffs of existing workers because the Government has cut the funding for their employment.

We have the ridiculous situation of workers being laid off and having to apply for welfare and unemployment insurance, and those on these same social programs being offered their jobs.

The "stupidity" part of the program has become self-evident. The duplicity is that the program is called job creation when in fact it is nothing more than a job replacement scheme.

The Government should realize it is fooling no one with its terminology, and immediately put a stop to this shameful program.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EL SALVADOR—IMPRISONMENT OF LUTHERAN PASTOR AND DOCTOR

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, once again I feel I must protest against recent human rights violations in El Salvador. The Lutheran Church is a small denomination in El Salvador but it has done a great deal with refugees. This past week two Lutherans, a pastor and a doctor, took a Scandinavian visitor to the airport. On their return from the airport they were captured by police. One of them had been in prison for eight days and has now been released after being tortured. The other, Dr. Angel Ibarra, is still in prison.

I want to say to the House, and to all human rights groups in the world, that some kind of protest has to be made to the Government of El Salvador which seems to be institutionalizing once more the effort to stamp out all opposition—and not only all political opposition but also those involved exclusively in the care of refugees.

In light of this new incident and the rise of violence once again, I call on this House and all other groups in the world that have the same feeling toward human rights and the possibilities for that small country, to protest in the most vehement way we know against what is taking place there.

NATURAL RESOURCES

IMPORTANCE OF EXPLOITING MINERAL WEALTH—NECESSITY FOR NON-TAXATION OF NORTHERN BENEFITS

Mr. René Gingras (Abitibi): As everyone knows, Madam Speaker, Canada's mineral resources are plentiful. Still, we have to compete with other producing countries. A lot of those mineral resources might be a source of wealth for our country if they were developed. More often than not, they are located in remote areas that are difficult of access and where the climate is unforgiving. The workers needed to do that job ought to be offered generous incentives to help them put up with life in exile.

Madam Speaker, I urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to weigh all the consequences of his decision to tax the benefits available only to people who work in isolated northern regions.

Before they make their recommendations, I would also urge the officials of the Department of Finance—even though it is now tulip time in Ottawa—to visit the northern reaches of my riding where they will still be able to walk on the Hudson Strait ice bridges. That should give them a pretty good idea of what life is like in the north and of the fringe benefits needed to entice anybody to stay there.

BANKS AND BANKING

DEMAND BY ONTARIO SECURITIES COMMISSION FOR INFORMATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Ontario Securities Commission is demanding that the chartered banks make available information that, until now, the Inspector General of Banks has refused to make available to the public and to Members of Parliament. The Ontario Securities Commission demands that the banks advise what loans are non-productive, what loan losses are in detail, what foreign loans are outstanding, and in what countries, and a detailed disclosure of what foreign lending exceeds 1 per cent of bank assets when new issues are placed on the market.

This is information that Members of Parliament and the public generally should have, and the Ontario Securities Commission is to be complimented on doing things that the Inspector General of Banks should have done long ago. Madam Speaker, it appears the banks are prepared to co-operate and supply the information, and indeed some have already supplied the information without the requirement.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) must now demand that the Inspector General of Banks take the same action that the Ontario Securities Commission has taken. For too long Parliament has been prevented from finding out how the system is really operating, on the excuse that the information is a matter of client confidentiality. If the Ontario Securities Commission can blast away the cobwebs, surely the Minister of State for Finance should be able to do the same.

HEALTH CARE

AVAILABILITY OF DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES FOR COMPANY EXECUTIVES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the recent report of an exodus of executives for medical checkups in a clinic outside Canada is an example of a practice which is not at all unusual among Canadian executives, and among those who can afford it.

They are attracted to foreign medical centres for a variety of reasons, the principal one being convenience as far as the efficient use of time and the availability of sufficient sophisticated equipment to carry out a variety of tests in one location are concerned. The disadvantages of such investigative and diagnostic management in a foreign country is the lack of available data of the previous state of health, and the absence of physicians who are familiar with the health status of the patient.

In most of the Canadian settings all of these tests and examinations are available and are carried out with great expertise, but they have one principal drawback, that is, the inconvenience that so many experience under our health care system such that it is impossible for the most part to plan these tests in a rapid sequence without periods of waiting and returning to one or more institutes, thereby disturbing the routine of the individual involved.

Nevertheless, it is a concern to me that there is considerable revenue lost from this category of people to the health care services of this country because it is difficult to organize such a fast paced high cost diagnostic service. In Canada these services are presently integrated into the operations of very busy and overloaded hospitals, and each patient must wait his or her turn in different departments, in one or more buildings, and frequently has to wait for long periods of time.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DENIAL OF SICKNESS BENEFITS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, last evening I talked with one more constituent who is a victim of the unfair unemployment insurance regulations the Liberal Government refuses to change.

For some strange reason sickness benefits are only paid during the first 25 weeks of a benefit period. My constituent was laid off in November, 1982. On April 12, 1983, he had an operation on his knee. Because his leg is in a cast he cannot work. The Manpower Office could not find him a job before the operation, and it still cannot. But there is one thing it can do. It has taken him off benefits because he is not available for work.

When will the Liberal Government come to its senses and make the unemployment regulations fair for all Canadians? Surely a person who cannot find a job because of the Liberal recession is entitled to full sickness benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act so long as that sickness occurs during the benefit period. We urge the Government to revise the unemployment insurance regulations so that they are more fair and realistic for all Canadians.

S.O. 21

BANKS AND BANKING

BANK OF MONTREAL EMPLOYEE COMPENSATION OFFER

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, the Bank of Montreal has offered a 1983 compensation program that is nothing less than an insult to its employees.

These are the same employees, who, over the past five years, have helped the Bank amass profits of nearly $1.3 billion. Last year alone the Bank made $257 million, or nearly $8,600 per employee. That is over half of the average income of employees represented by the Commercial Workers Union and the Canadian Labour Congress Union of Bank Employees.

Under the new compensation program there will be no general wage increase whatsoever for all bank employees. The distribution of any increases is to be based solely on managerial discretion. The Bank's intention to pick and choose winners and losers amongst its employees unilaterally is not only repugnant and divisive in terms of staff morale, it also ignores completely the fact that everyone continues to face increases in the cost of living. Furthermore, the fact that a high proportion of those affected are women earning an average of $15,000 annually means that the compensation program would reinforce pay discrimination in the work force.

• (1410)

All the employees are asking for is a fair deal, which takes into account the financial health of the Bank and the general economic environment. The Bank's proposal overlooks both factors totally. Bank workers are not unreasonable people. They simply want some indication of fair play and honest negotiations on the part of their employer. This is another example of the Bank's lack of conscience and its insensitivity toward its employees.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

COMPANY'S GROWTH—ASSISTANCE PROVIDED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, in 1881 the people of Canada, through the Canadian Government, entered into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company under which the CPR agreed to "perpetual and efficient operation of a railway" in this country, and the Canadian Government gave the CPR operating rights, plus $25 million, and 25 million acres of land, including mineral rights. From this start CPR has expanded into a giant corporation with assets in 1982 amounting to more than $17 billion.

In our lifetime the CPR reneged on passenger service, has reneged on branch line and mainline maintenance, and has reneged on even buying its own hopper cars for hauling grain, all without any penalty by the federal Government. The mineral rights alone in the 25 million acres of land have brought millions to the CPR, but the Railway adamantly refuses to spend any of this on transportation.

Now this Liberal Government is again giving the people's money—almost a billion dollars a year—to the railways. The Crow is being replaced by a complicated bureaucratic price formula primarily for the benefit of the railways and the Government. The interests of the producers are secondary, and the potential of the livestock and hog industry in western Canada is completely negatived.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

COST TO FARMERS OF DEMURRAGE PAYMENTS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, in 1981-82 prairie farmers grew a record crop. Grain exports reached 27 million tonnes, 15 per cent over the previous record set in 1979-80. Yet there is an item in the financial statements of the Canadian Wheat Board that continues to receive hardly any consideration, that is, the cost of demurrage. That item has often been downplayed as of minor importance in comparison to the total balance of the Board's operational expenses. But charges paid to vessel owners for delays in loading beyond a normal period continued to be high and totalled over $4 million for handling wheat alone in 1981-82, a substantial increase from $1.5 million in the previous year.

The Wheat Board does not consider last year's demurrage cost excessive as there were previous years when some $20 million was paid as a penalty for delays. Yet the fact is that the demurrage payments of thousands of dollars a day are incurred year in and year out, a cost that ultimately is passed on to the farmers.

It is of the utmost importance that the Canadian farmer, already under the tremendous pressure of high interest rates combined with Liberal Government Fuel costs, be no longer penalized by the inefficiency of the system designed to operate and facilitate the flow of grain, a fundamental source of our national wealth.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

STATUS OF SENATOR CONVICTED OF INDICTABLE OFFENCE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and concerns the status of Senator Irvine Barrow. A Supreme Court jury in Nova Scotia convicted Senator Barrow of a violation of the Criminal Code of Canada. The violation is an indictable offence, which must be considered a felony and a crime for the purposes of the British North America Act. Will the Prime Minister confirm whether Senator Barrow's conviction means that his place must become vacant by virtue of the British North America Act, or does the other place decide his status? I also ask the Prime Minister what role his Government will play in determining Senator Barrow's status, and what responsibility he has in this matter.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member sent me notice of the question but it was just at the beginning of Question Period and I have not had time to look into the matter; particularly, I have not read the judgment. The Hon. Member says that the Senator was convicted of a felony. The Hon. Member may be more wise in law than I am, but I do not know of any definition of "felony" in the Criminal Code.

Mr. Blenkarn: "Indictable offence" is what he said.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, I heard him say the word "felony". Now I have more people getting into the act; I hope you will recognize a supplementary question, Madam Speaker.

I do know that the Senate and House of Commons Act speaks for itself. The qualifications of a Senator are clearly defined. As to the latter part of the question—will the Government be taking any initiatives—I believe it is for the Senate to determine any question relating to the status of its own Members. That is my preliminary answer. I know of no way in which the Government can take or should take any initiatives as regards that body.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING CONVICTION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I can appreciate that the Prime Minister has not had an opportunity to consider the conviction rendered against Senator Barrow. I point out to him that there are published reports in Halifax which indicate that the Senator has said there is "no problem" with respect to his conviction and he can take his seat in the Senate. I suggest to the Prime Minister that the public may be outraged if there is no action taken. Therefore, will he conduct an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the conviction of Senator Barrow and report to this House as quickly as he can, so the public will know what the standards are for parliamentarians in these matters and we will not be left to speculate on what Senator Barrow's fate will be while he pursues other legal remedies, such as an appeal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Madam Speaker, I find the suggestion of the Hon. Member rather amazing, that the Government should take the initiative to inquire into the status of Members of Parliament. If he is suggesting that we have that duty for the Senate, he probably would suggest we have that duty for the House of Commons. Yet I would think Members opposite particularly, as well as Members on our side, would be incensed if they thought it was the duty of the Government to decide whether an Hon. Member is sitting legally or not.

In so far as the case at hand is concerned, Madam Speaker, I think the judgment has just been rendered. I do not even know if there has been or will be an appeal lodged. I think it would be a matter of elementary decency to wait and see if the man has been convicted without recourse to appeal.

Mr. Crosby: With all due respect, Madam Speaker, I think the Prime Minister is avoiding the issue. Under the British North America Act, which is the law of the land, a Senator convicted of certain crimes must vacate his seat in the Senate. This will now be a matter of public speculation, and I want the Prime Minister to look into it.

Madam Speaker: Order. I am myself consulting whether I should even allow the question because it does concern a Senator in the other place, and in light of the answer which has just been given my impression is that a question concerning that should not be asked in this House but in the other one.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, my question does not concern the ultimate fate of Senator Barrow, but just the process by which his fate is determined.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, to avoid public speculation on Senator Barrow's fate, will the Prime Minister at least inquire into the matter, decide what the position of the House of Commons is with respect to this matter, and at the same time tell us what course of action will be taken by him and his Government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have received since the first question a copy of the relevant Section of the British North America Act, Section 31. I read Subsection (4) and it says:

> The Place of a Senator shall become vacant . . . If he is attainted of Treason or convicted of Felony or of any infamous Crime;

I repeat, Madam Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member opposite is learned in the law but I do not know that the judgment condemned the Senator of treason or of felony.

Mr. Nielsen: Or of any infamous crime?

Mr. Trudeau: Whether there is an infamous crime or not, I suppose would be for the Senators to look at. I am really surprised that the Hon. Member would want this House to begin to judge the suitability of Members sitting in the other place. That is what he is suggesting, Madam Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Why don't we just judge the whole works?

Mr. Trudeau: And the consequence of that would be that Members of the other place would exercise the same right over Members of this House.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, no; we are elected.

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps they would want to start with the Hon. Member who has asked the question.

AIR CANADA

DISCHARGE OF CHAIRMAN'S DUTIES

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the on-going revelations about Air Canada, and since the Minister has made no statement whatsoever about the criminal investigation, can the Minister assure this House that the financial difficulties of the Chairman of Air Canada in the summer of 1982, involving the bankruptcy of a company and several hundreds of thousands of dollars, did not interfere with the discharge of the Chairman's duties as Chairman of Air Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat what I have said a dozen times at least in the last two months, that my instructions from the Minister of Justice are not to comment on this inquiry. I can only assure my hon. friend that the company is operating well, the record of safety is maintained, that it shows a better financial situation in the first months of this year than in last year, and that the traffic is not impaired, nor are the activities of the company, by the events which he has mentioned, namely, the inquiry by the RCMP.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, no Minister has made any statement whatsoever in this House about the status of the criminal investigation. The reason I am asking these questions is to find out how long the Government is going to let this matter fester.

SELECTION OF HEADQUARTER'S SITE—CHAIRMAN'S ROLE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): I would like to ask the Minister specifically if he can assure the House—and we do not know what the investigation is—that the Chairman of Air Canada, Rene Amyot, had no business or personal interest whatsoever in any of the sites being considered by Air Canada for its new headquarters?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I find this line of questioning to be extremely out of place. The Hon. Member surely knows that the reason that no Minister has made a statement on this is because it is entirely against parliamentary tradition for us to make statements on matters which are before the courts or under investigation. This is a matter under investigation, Madam Speaker, and that is all we can say about it. And that is all my hon. friend should say about it.

Oral Questions

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

TAX IMPOSED ON CANADIAN MANUFACTURED AUTOMOBILES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on the subject of industrial strategy, which the Prime Minister has been promising for some time. Currently, Madam Speaker, Canadians in three different Provinces, Nova Scotia, Quebec, and Ontario, are involved in the production of automobiles. Currently, also, some 15,000 automobile workers who would be normally working are on lay-off. Would the Prime Minister tell us what kind of strategy, in these circumstances, could cause the Government to produce a policy which imposes a tax veering from $100 to $200 more on automobiles produced in these Canadian communities than it does in terms of the taxes it imposes on cars imported from Japan?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party ought to know that as far as taxing goods that are imported or produced in Canada is concerned, there are international rules that must be observed. These rules are included in general agreements on trade and are negotiated from time to time, and to go against the rules would be a form of discrimination which might result in retaliatory measures being taken by the countries that are party to these agreements, against our country, so that taking such action would be more likely to harm the development of our trade than be of any benefit to us.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I say to the Minister that the current tax situation is discriminatory, all right, and it is discriminatory against Canadian workers who do not want preferential treatment but want Canadian companies to be treated precisely in the same way by our tax laws as are producers and workers in other countries. We are not asking for preferential treatment for Canadian workers. We are asking for justice for Canadian workers.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, considering that the Minister of Finance in a letter sent last November 9 indicated that the Government was going to change its tax policy in moving toward a form of fairness, why has the Government backed down on this? Why has it changed its mind?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, unfortunately, I did not see this letter from the Minister of Finance, and I would therefore ask the Hon. Member to be patient. The Minister of Finance will be back next week, and the Hon. Member will then be able to put his question directly to the Minister. If the Minister of Finance has made formal commitments, he could indicate to the Leader of the New Democratic Party why, as alleged by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, he has not acted on those commitments.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I intend to follow that up with the Minister of Finance.

RATIONALE FOR IMPOSING TAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Given what the Minister has just said in reply to the first question, would he be a little more precise and explain to the House what kind of rationale lies behind the Government's tax policy? What is the international rule to which he is alluding that would cause the Government—and I repeat the point—to have a tax policy which imposes $100 to $200 less of a tax burden on imported vehicles compared with vehicles produced by Canadian workers?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I wish the Leader of the New Democratic Party would give me a specific example and tell me whether he is perhaps referring to the sales tax.

Mr. Broadbent: The federal sales tax.

Mr. Bussières: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that a proposal for reform in this respect was tabled a few months ago by the previous Minister of Finance, the proposal being to apply federal sales tax to the wholesale instead of the manufacturer's price. One of the points made by the Minister of Finance in support of this reform was that it would be possible to deal with goods produced in Canada on the same level as imported goods, and if the House of Commons were to give its support quickly to this sales tax reform, we would then be able to resolve the problem referred to by the Hon. Member. The Government has acted by tabling a proposal for federal sales tax reform in Parliament, but Opposition Members have asked for broader consultation so that industry can obtain some adjustments. We have agreed with the Opposition proposal for broader consultation, and now the same Opposition Member is saying that we have not acted quickly enough to pass legislation, although the fact of the matter is that we acted as we did at the request of the Opposition.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

PURCHASE OF CANADAIR WATER BOMBERS FOR USE IN YUKON

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services.

The Minister of the Environment is credited with giving us the Canadair water bomber program as the first of the special recovery projects. I would like to ask the Minister, who has been involved in the purchase of four Canadair water bombers at a cost of $6 million each for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, for an explanation. The fire season in the Yukon starts April 1 and there is ice on the lakes through April, most of May, and sometimes into June. How does the Minister expect fires to be fought in Yukon before the ice melts and the water bombers can be used? Or is he just going to let the Yukon burn?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, again I am amazed at the particular attitude of the hon. lady relating to the water bombers. She seems to be developing a vendetta against a piece of Canadian technology which has been received very well in the international arena. As well, Madam Speaker, it is a piece of technology which has been very successful in making the Province of Quebec the leader in protecting its forest resources. Of course we all recognize in Canada that a large portion of both our direct and indirect employment is owing to the forest industry, and we should seek every possible method of protecting that industry. I can assure the hon. lady, Madam Speaker, that, whoever provides her with the information, either she is misinterpreting it or she is inadvertently misleading this House.

REBUILDING OF ENGINES IN MIAMI

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. We are not talking about Quebec. We are talking about Yukon, an area of the country where the Leader of the Opposition comes from, and where I have spent a lot of time.

We have ten-year averages for forest fires in Yukon. The ten-year average for Yukon has been two in April, 15 in May, and 31 in June. In the Northwest Territories, on a ten-year average, there have been two in April, 15 in May, and 80 in June. As of yesterday, there were three forest fires this year in Yukon.

The Minister has not addressed the question of how he is going to use his water bombers.

I have another question for the Minister. Canadair uses old Pratt & Whitney engines which have not been produced for 15 years. They have been contracting with a Miami company to rebuild these engines to Canadair's specifications.

Madam Speaker: Order. The question of the Hon. Member is becoming a bit long. Would she go directly to her question?

Miss Carney: My question, Madam Speaker, is the following. Of what benefit to Canada is the rebuilding of aircraft engines in Miami?

• (1430)

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, with reference to the Yukon, the hon. lady herself admitted that the bulk of the fires took place during the month of June, at a time when indeed the lakes are clear of ice.

Mr. Nielsen: No.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: As well, if the hon. lady has read the reports on the water bombers she will know that in periods when there may be ice on the lakes there is a capacity of that aircraft to use chemical retardants.

Not only that, the airstrip that is required for the water bombers is about 3,500 feet, which is about 1,500 feet less than the length required for the DC-8 which is also employed in British Columbia for the same purpose.

Mr. Nielsen: A DC-8?

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, the aircraft that is used in British Columbia is much inferior. It requires another 1,500 feet of airstrip in order to be able to serve the purposes for which it is required.

USE OF CHEMICAL FIRE RETARDANTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. He has spoken about the need to use chemical retardants in the Yukon. May I point out that the reason given by the Department of the Environment for using the water bombers is a $93 million savings in chemical retardants. If he is going to save $93 million in chemical retardants by using free water, can he explain why he is now going to use chemical retardants in the Yukon?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Because, Madam Speaker, the aircraft has the ability to use water in periods when there are high fire incidents, and indeed is able to use the lakes within the Yukon or any place else in Canada. In the periods of time when in areas where they indeed cannot make use of water—

Mr. Kempling: Try ice cubes.

Mr. Blais: —it also has the capacity to use chemical retardants. It can do that much more competently than any other aircraft that is developed for the use of fire retardants. That is the reason why.

Oral Questions

FISHERIES

ATTACK ON FISHERY PATROL VESSELS IN NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF LOBSTER FISHING REGULATIONS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The burning and sinking of a fisheries patrol vessel yesterday in Nova Scotia was the fourth in a series of protests by fishermen over the stringent enforcement of lobster trap regulations by federal fisheries inspectors. In view of this violent revolt against bureaucratic controls, will the Minister undertake a complete review of the laws concerning this fishery as established by order in council, in the hope of giving some relief to the fishermen from what they consider oppressive and insensitive rules?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I would ask for the solid and unanimous support of all interested Members in condemning in the most absolute terms the criminal actions that have been perpetrated yesterday against the officers of the Department.

It is my duty to be most sensitive to the representations of the fishermen. As the Hon. Member may know, we have made several changes that have been suggested by the law abiding fishermen, and those regulations have been suggested by the fishermen themselves. It is my information that over 95 per cent of them support them. That is why, when those vessels were damaged—one was damaged and the other burned and sunk yesterday—several fishermen spontaneously offered the Department their vessels so they could enforce the regulations because, if there is an over-exploitation of lobsters, it would take many years to rehabilitate the stocks. I am sure I have the support of all Members when I say to those people who committed those criminal acts that, to the contrary, instead of attracting the sympathy of the people, I will become as tough as possible in enforcing those regulations which are meant for the protection of the income of our law abiding fishermen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: I am sure the Minister will understand that no one condones illegal acts. But sometimes, in frustration, the fishermen, when they do not receive any consideration from the federal Department, do not always act wisely.

SEIZURE OF LOBSTER TRAPS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I am sure the Minister is aware that the inspectors have been seizing, also illegally, the traps of fishermen that they have found in the ocean where the licences on those traps have been washed away by the storms.

In light of the obvious fact that present regulations covering these fishermen are not acceptable, will the Minister undertake to consult with his counterpart in Nova Scotia, as well as with representatives of the fishermen and the industry, in the hope of establishing what I would call sensible regulations covering Nova Scotia lobster fishermen?

Will he also tell the House the approximate number of lobster traps that have been seized illegally by his own inspectors and stored in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, since the opening of the season?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that it is my duty, as the servant of the fishermen, to listen to their complaints and make proper adjustments whenever the regulations include unnecessary irritants. If the Hon. Member has any suggestion to make to me which could achieve the exact same objectives as those we have set since 1968 at the request of the fishermen, I would give it the highest consideration. But what should be understood is that, contrary to attracting my sympathy, those who have taken those violent actions will not inspire anything but total and absolute denunciation.

With respect to the number of traps that have been seized, I will not comment on the details of the RCMP investigation. It is their work, and they will take whatever proper action they see fit. It is not the responsibility of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to comment on that.

HEALTH

PROPOSAL TO BAN CIGARETTE AND LIQUOR ADVERTISING ASSOCIATED WITH SPORTS EVENTS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She will have received an expression of concern from the Council of Sports Executive Directors. For years they and the Government have been encouraging a wider degree of support for sport through the private sector.

Is the Minister serious about banning liquor and tobacco commercials altogether, or does she propose to ban only those related to sports or activities of a recreational nature? I would like to have a response that I might be able to give to that executive council.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I did not receive notice of that question and I am not in a position to answer. I do not have the information to answer the Hon. Member properly. I prefer to get back to him as soon as possible.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): I did not say that I gave her notice of the question. I indicated that the executive council had directed a communication to the Minister several weeks ago with respect to the proposed ban on tobacco and alcohol advertisements in commercials related to sports.

POSSIBLE FINANCIAL LOSS TO SPORTS ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, since we have encouraged this kind of private sector support, and there are millions of dollars involved if this proposed and published ban proceeds, will the Minister, with National Revenue support, pick up the difference or the loss that would be suffered as a result of the proposed ban?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I have to repeat to the Hon. Member that I have not received notice of this question. I apologize to him. I am not in a position to answer it. I do not even understand exactly what he means. If he will be kind enough to advise me at the door and give me more information on the case, I shall be pleased to get the information from him.

HOUSING

MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING $3,000 GRANT PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. If a senior member of his Cabinet announced in the House an extension of a major program to stimulate the housing industry, assist the forest industry, and enable people to afford a new home, and then, only 13 days later, had to announce in the House that this program was no longer in effect, would he not have to admit that the people of Canada were misled, deceived, or perhaps even duped?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Minister already answered the question yesterday, and I think he indicated that, although the program was terminated, he would assess the degree to which people were led to have false expectations. I know insofar as the text of the budget itself is concerned, the Minister added another $30 million, and that is it. When the $30 million is expired there is no more money.

• (1440)

Mr. Nielsen: That is not what was said yesterday.

Mr. Trudeau: People may have assumed that the program would go on for a long time; but that is not what the Minister of Finance promised. What the Minister responsible for CMHC said to the House yesterday was that the program was finished, that he would try to assess the extent of the problem and see how he could solve it. Perhaps he can solve it with the money already available, which makes the question hypothetical. If not, we will hear from the Minister as to what other resources he might have access to, but that is a hypothetical situation. The Minister is still in the process of examining the size of the problem and the extent to which it exists.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, perhaps the reason many Canadians assumed that the program would be available is that the Minister of Finance, in his budget statement, said that he was "allocating $30 million more to the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan, which should be sufficient to extend this program until about the end of May". There is no way the people of Canada could be convinced that May 6 is the end of May.

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. Considering there are tens of thousands of Canadians who listened to the Minister of Finance very carefully on budget night and had assumed that if they were to put in foundations toward the end of May they would receive compensation, would the Minister make a statement in the House today as to when the people of Canada would have a definitive word from the Minister regarding funds available for an extension of the program?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, following questions and representations from the Hon. Member's own Party—all Parties, in fact—I indicated that we would try to find ways to accommodate those who live in isolated or northern areas. It was very much in their name that I requested the program be prolonged beyond the end of April. But in all cases, in October when the Minister of Finance announced the $100 million, and on the night of the budget when he announced the $30 million, the Minister of Finance made the situation very clear. I informed the building industry in late March or early April that this was a program that was being administered by what is called "to budget" and not to a fixed date. That is wording everyone in the industry understands. In fact I suspect that this may explain a good part of the rush that we saw in April.

I said yesterday that we were having an assessment made of the size of the problem, not because we cannot count numbers of paper applications, but because an application is certified as valid and to be honoured when the inspection takes place and the footings are examined by inspectors. This is a long process, but I expect that by the middle of next week I will be in a position to advise what route to take. Again, I hope very much that we will not have major disappointments. We were trying to encourage the housing industry. This we have done. We were trying to help Canadians obtain homes. This has been successful to the tune of over three quarters of a billion dollars.

REASONS WHY CORPORATIONS AVOID LOCATING IN QUEBEC

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Madam Speaker, I could put my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Transport, but as it concerns mostly the Quebec Government, I shall address it to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. PQ MNAs are now writing us to ask that we ensure the development of the aeronautics industry in Quebec, and they refer specifically to the radar updating and helicopter production projects of the Federal Government. Can the Prime Minister tell us why companies in this field are not interested in developing in Quebec and even less in locating in that province and why they resist any federal attempt to safeguard the economic interests of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Madam Speaker, it is probably because a number of companies have come to realize, like some P.Q. Members themselves, according to what the Hon. Member said in his question, a fact that the voters have recognized for quite some time, namely that the P.Q. Government is hindering the economic future of Quebec. We should be thankful that some P.Q. Members realize that the Federal Government promotes technological development in Quebec and that asking Federal Members of Parliament for help is a better solution than asking their own Government!

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

TREATMENT OF APPLICATION MADE BY ENGINEER

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I have a constituent who is a professional engineer. There is a job available with the Halton region for his services that will be partially paid for under the NEED Program. Upon visiting the Manpower offices to submit his name for the job, he was advised that he did not qualify because he has two more months of U.I. benefits available to him, after which he must then apply for welfare. In other words, providing he is unemployed, and has exhausted all his benefits and has applied for welfare, only then will he be qualified to apply for the job under the NEED Program.

Does the Minister not agree that these are degrading criteria when an unemployed engineer cannot qualify for a job requiring his professional services until he has exhausted all his benefits and been accepted for welfare? Surely this is wrong and must be changed.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I refer the Hon. Member back to the various documents we put forward under the NEED Program which indicated that its first priority was to provide alternative jobs for those who had exhausted UI benefits. The logic of that, I think, is quite clear. For many of those who had exhausted their benefits and had no other forms of income, working with the Government of Ontario and other provincial Governments would assure they had income and a job at the same time.

For those who would still be able to benefit from unemployment insurance, they still have income coming into the home and, therefore, have less of a priority. But I want to make clear, Madam Speaker, that does not prevent them from working on these projects. Each project put forward under the NEED Program can bring in skilled people, whether they are engineers or tradesmen who are necessary to help make the project operate. Therefore, they are eligible under those particular conditions.

Mr. Kempling: Madam Speaker, I am aware of all of that.

Madam Speaker, I read the Minister's release of May 10. The difficulty is that no one in Toronto, Hamilton or Burlington knows anything about it. I talked to people on the phone this morning. Is the program set forth in the Minister's memo of May 10 that would allow this engineer to qualify for that project in force today, right now? If it is, I will call those offices and inform them, if the Minister of Employment and Immigration cannot.

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, those regulations were in force at the time and telexes were sent to all regional centres to inform them of that fact.

Mr. Kempling: They do not know about it.

Mr. Axworthy: If there is a problem in this particular office in Burlington, I will certainly check into it. But I want to assure the Hon. Member that the new set of criteria is available. They have been sent to all the regions and they should know about it. If not, we will find out why.

AVIATION INDUSTRY

POSSIBLE CANADIAN ROLE IN AIRBUS PROJECT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question related to the one asked by the Hon. Member for Megantic-Compton Stanstead, for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether the Canadian Government is engaged in or considering any negotiations with respect to Canadian participation in the launching of the A-320, a 150-passenger airbus aircraft? If the Government is so engaged and considering such negotiations, what industrial benefits are expected to accrue to Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I know that several months ago the Government was approached to look at the possibility of being part of a consortium, I believe of the British, French, and German Governments regarding a new airbus. I do not know whether it is the A-320 or what, but I do know there were exploratory talks. I can assure the Hon. Member that there has been no decision taken, and for the details of where those talks are at I will take notice of the question or ask the Hon. Member to address his question either to the Minister responsible for industry or perhaps to the Minister of Transport. I am not quite sure which of the two Ministers is responsible for this.

INQUIRY RESPECTING CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC CONTRACT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a further question for the Prime Minister. Has the Government approved a five-year EDP contract involving Canadian General Electric in Peterborough in the amount of $12.5 million, which is expected to generate 2,000 new jobs? Are the 2,000 jobs spread over the five-year period, or are 2,000 jobs generated each year of the approved contract?

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the important thing is to check with the Department to what extent the project has been approved, because new facts have come to its attention within the last few weeks, and in order to provide an official answer, I shall have to check with the Department to determine exactly whether or not it has now given its approval.

MEDICAL CARE

P.C. LEADERSHIP CANDIDATE'S VIEWS

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does the Minister's Department have any studies which support the contention that 85 per cent of Canadians can afford private medicare, as proposed by Mr. Peter Pocklington?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I heard on the news this morning, like everybody else I suppose, that Mr. Pocklington thinks 85 per cent of Canadians can afford medicare. I thought that gentleman, whom of course I do not know, was a good businessman. He will be a terrible Leader of the Opposition if he does not understand the complexity of twentieth century society.

Since when would the Government, with taxpayers' money, assume all the high risk which, by the way, generally amounts to one-third of a given population, not to 15 per cent? Since when would the Government, with taxpayers' money, assume all the high risk, leaving just the non-high risk group for the private sector to protect against supposed health problems? I think this is an unacceptable attitude. Maybe it is the one of all the other candidates for the Tory leadership. We do not know yet.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Dauphin.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

RULINGS ON RAILWAY BRANCH LINE ABANDONMENTS IN MANITOBA

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Madam Speaker, I thank the House that my constituency is Dauphin-Swan River as of yesterday, because of its unanimous consent.

My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Could he indicate what is the value of hearings before the western division of the Canadian Transport Commission which have taken up a considerable amount of time on behalf of all intervenors—farmer-producers, businessmen, workers, and Members of Parliament—when these hearings always end up with a line being lost? How does the Minister explain that since 1975 some 17 hearings in Manitoba have all ended up, each and every single time, in favour of the railways, CP or CN, abandoning a line? Can the Minister explain this tarnished record of the western division of the CTC?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am rather surprised by the question. At the moment we have kept in Canada 88 per cent, if I remember well, of the branchline system we had in the 1930s. I would have thought that this was a very high record of approval on the part of the CTC for the maintenance of these branchlines.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River.

Mr. Lewycky: I just point out to the Minister that 100 per cent of all submissions has been in favour of the railways.

REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF SUBDIVISIONS

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Could he assure us that constituents and others appearing before the hearings of the CTC, who have complained that the CTC is like a three-ring circus coming into town, that it sets up a hoop and everyone has to run through it, will not have to go through this experience? Could he give me some assurance that subdivisions such as Erwood, Oakland, Rossburn, Ste. Rose, and Winnipegosis, Manitoba, which are in the process of being abandoned, will be protected? Could the Minister give us some assurance on that matter?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): No, Madam Speaker, because if I were to do that I would pre-judge the decision of the CTC, and obviously that is not the right thing to do.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STUDENT EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM—DEPARTMENTAL CRITERIA

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and pertains to the unemployed youth in my constituency. In past years it has been customary to hire local students for any summer positions available through the Department of Immigration, but this year the local students have been denied that opportunity because of the new selective hiring criteria imposed on summer jobs through the new career oriented Student Employment Program. These jobs formerly went to residents of the area who were qualified, but now they are being awarded to students from as far away as Toronto because local students do not meet the requirement that they be enrolled in a law or security program course.

Will the Minister explain what are all the reasons why these criteria were changed? What is the justification for the change which resulted in local students being denied the opportunity of summer employment by the Department of a Minister who tells us that he is concerned about our unemployed youth?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I do not know the specific case. I would be pleased to receive it from the Hon. Member. However, I would point out that under the Student Employment Program this year about one-third of the positions are intern programs where we have made arrangements with various organizations to take students on a career training program so that, not only will they work during the summer but they will work in jobs related to their educational background. That may provide a partial explanation, but I would ask the Hon. Member to give me a specific case so that I can look into it and get back to her with an answer.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I appreciate that response, but local employment offices were not made aware that changes were being made in this respect. What was happening was that local referees were sent to the Department of Immigration and were told that their applications would not be accepted, that they had to come through COSEP from Toronto. Will the Minister take some sort of corrective action in this regard?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat that whatever action is taken must be based upon the facts of the case. As soon as I receive those facts fully, I will look into them and report back.

RAILWAYS

BRANCHLINE REHABILITATION—AWARDING OF CONTRACTS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns the awarding of contracts for the rehabilitation of prairie branchlines. In view of the fact that the money being spent on the rehabilitation is taxpayers' money, could the Minister tell the House whether or not the Government, or his Department, has any input to or control over the awarding of the contracts?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I could not say that. I know only that the decisions on branchline rehabilitation—which one will be rehabilitated this year as opposed to the one that will be rehabilitated next year or later on—are jointly made by the railways, my Department, and others. I would have thought that the contracts would be given by the railways. I am not sure, but I will find out.

I know something else, that there are limitations to the freedom of the railways because they have agreements with employees that they have first choice for employment in certain types of work. That is a limitation to the contracting out approach to these works.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER EXAMINE CONTRACT SYSTEM IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I was not concerned about the rights of employees. I was concerned about the awarding of contracts to outside contractors. It seems to me that if taxpayers' money is being spent the Department should have some control. It has been brought to my attention, particularly in Saskatchewan, that in most instances the contract is awarded to the highest tender. If this is what happens, there is something wrong with the system. I would ask the Minister to look into it.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I will look into it, Madam Speaker, and report back.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REVIEW OF WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In January, 1983, the Royal Canadian Legion reported the disappointing response it received from the Minister with regard to changes it felt necessary should be made to the War Veterans Allowance Act. As it is apparent that this Act will not be open for review for approximately two years, what plan of immediate action does the Minister have in mind to deal with the many inadequacies in the legislation?

• (1500)

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, the War Veterans Allowance Act is presently under review. I am not sure of the origin of the indication that it will be two years before the Act will be opened. In fact we anticipate that the first report will be received by mid-summer. I anticipate legislative proposals will be ready for consideration either in the Fall or, at the latest, early next Spring.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, this being Thursday, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader to give us some idea of the business for next week, right through until next Friday if possible.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, tomorrow we will be resuming debate on Bill C-155. On Monday we will again resume debate on Bill C-155. On Tuesday we will go to Bill C-151, the borrowing authority. Wednesday will be Private Members' day. Thursday will be confirmed early next week.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, can the Parliamentary Secretary confirm that the Government has given up on the sports pool legislation and on Canagrex?

Mr. Smith: No, Madam Speaker, we have not given up either of those Bills. I am sure they will be passed before too long.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, can the Parliamentary Secretary inform the House approximately when the Government House Leader would be prepared to call either or both of those pieces of legislation? At the same time, will he be kind enough to investigate on behalf of the house the reasons Bill C-653 has been so delayed in committee?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will be happy to look into the latter matter. As to the progress of legislation, it depends largely on the amount of co-operation we get from the other side of the House. With a little more co-operation these Bills will all be moving along.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us which matters of Private Members' Business will be considered on Wednesday next?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I cannot advise the Hon. Member of that, but as soon as that information is available it will be conveyed to him.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, will he ensure that as soon as it is known what Private Members' Business will be considered next Wednesday, Members will be notified in their offices, notification will be placed in the lobbies and also in the elevators?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, it is not up to us to post that information in the Opposition lobby. It is conveyed to the Opposition Whips and it is up to them to post it in the Opposition lobby.

Mr. Nielsen: It is up to the Table.

Mr. Smith: We always notify Members opposite as soon as that information is available.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I wish to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question pertaining to the responsibilities of the Parliamentary Secretary concerning the Chief Electoral Officer. Is it the intention of the House Leader to place before the House some legislation that would allow fishermen and other transients on the coast of British Columbia who happen to be away from their home poll at the time of an election to have the opportunity to absentee vote? This question has been raised numerous times. It is my understanding that that material will not be laid before the House in the next session. Will the Parliamentary Secretary inquire into this matter and let us know whether this anomaly in the Elections Act that disenfranchises thousands of people on the coast of British Columbia will be removed in time for the next election?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, amendments to the Elections Act are normally dealt with in the second session of each Parliament.

Mr. Nielsen: Are we going to have one?

Mr. Smith: I can assure the Hon. Member that his representations will be taken into consideration.

PETITIONS

MR. TAYLOR—REQUEST FOR PASSAGE OF BILL C-671

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting petitions from another 500 Canadians, now totalling over 3,900, asking that the Government move rapidly to bring Bill C-671, an Act respecting the execution of Clifford Robert Olson, to Parliament and that Parliament pass this Bill. Some of these petitioners do not believe in the reinstatement of capital punishment, but all believe that the terrible murders of 11 young people by Clifford Robert Olson and the fact—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is not now describing a petition. He should do that very briefly. We need not know about the background of all petitioners.

Mr. Taylor: The petitioners pray that this man be executed. In no way would women and children be safe if this man were ever released on parole. In duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray that this ancient and undoubted right of the people to present a petition be granted.

MR. STEVENS—EXTENDED AREA TELEPHONE SERVICE FOR AURORA, ONT.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition signed by some 4,000 Aurora area residents, many of whose names I recognize. The petition is addressed to the House. It asks the House to note that extended area service for telephones in our area is needed. It asks the House to take the matter up with Bell Canada, the CRTC and, in particular, that the CRTC be asked to require Bell Canada to implement extended area service in the Aurora area.

Expressed simply, today it costs more if you call Toronto for nine minutes than if you take a bus to Toronto. This has got to be rectified.

ABSENTEE BALLOTING FOR DISENFRANCHISED VOTERS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a large number of individuals who live on the coast of British Columbia and who in past elections have been disenfranchised by the cumbersome proxy procedure in the federal Elections Act. They and other individuals, through this mechanism of a petition, request that the Government, in time for the next federal election and in concert with the new Constitution that allows all Canadians the right to vote, seek that the Government bring forward amendments to the Elections Act that would allow these individuals the right to absentee votes.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I have a petition to file before the House for very similar reasons to those of the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), relating specifically to those people whose occupation, such as fishing, mining and the lumber industry, and who by reason either of seasonal lay-off or depending on when the election was called, are disenfranchised under the present set-up of the federal Elections Act. The petitioners in this petition pray that the House of Commons will take the necessary steps to allow direct absentee balloting at the next federal election.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,475, 4,777, 4,778 and 4,779.

MORTGAGES HELD BY PETRO-CANADA

Question No. 4,475—Mr. Andre:

Did the 1981 Annual Report of Petro-Canada indicate a figure of $16,479,000 in mortgages and other investments included in Petro-Canada's assets and, if so (a) how much of this amount is mortgages (b) what are the names of the beneficial owners of the properties against which the mortgages are registered and what is the amount of each mortgage and the interest rate on each mortgage?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada reports as follows: Yes. (a) Of the $16,479,000, $6,900,000 is mortgages including mortgages proper and mortgage assistance. (b) The requested information is considered to be of a managerial and administrative nature between Petro-Canada and the Corporation's employees and, therefore, cannot be released to the public.

MARRIED QUARTERS AT CFB GAGETOWN

Question No. 4,777—Mr. Howie:

1. How many permanent married quarters are in the establishment at CFB Gagetown?

2. How many married personnel are stationed at the base?

3. Are there any restrictions on what ranks may rent PMQ's at this base and, if so, what are the restrictions?

4. What was the average monthly rent paid in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 for a three-bedroom rowhouse style PMQ, or the equivalent, at the base?

5. What was the average monthly rent paid in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 for a three-bedroom detached house at the base?

6. Will PMQ rents at Gagetown be raised in 1983 and, if so (a) for what reason (b) by what amount, on average?

7. Have any rental credits been established at the base to help offset the increased financial burden imposed by having PMQ tenants pay for their own heating fuel?

8. What is the usual fuel used for heating PMQ's at the base?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. There are 2,203 permanent married quarters at CFB Gagetown.

2. There are 1,909 married personnel.

3. None.

4. (a) $168, (b) $178.

5. (a) $245, (b) $260.

6. Shelter values may increase depending upon the outcome of the 1983 CMHC appraisal of DND MQs. Any increases in shelter charges paid in 1983 by occupants will, however, be limited to a maximum of 5 per cent above current charges.

7. Yes, for all houses with insulation below CMHC standards where the occupants are paying directly to commercial suppliers.

8. Oil.

MARRIED QUARTERS AT CFB PETAWAWA

Question No. 4,778—Mr. Howie:

1. How many permanent married quarters are in the establishment at CFB Petawawa?

2. How many married personnel are stationed at the base?

3. Are there any restrictions on what ranks may rent PMQ's at this base and, if so, what are the restrictions?

4. What was the average monthly rent paid in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 for a three-bedroom rowhouse style PMQ, or the equivalent, at the base?

5. What was the average monthly rent paid in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 for a three-bedroom detached house at the base?

6. Will PMQ rents at Petawawa be raised in 1983 and, if so (a) for what reason (b) by what amount, on average?

7. Have any rental credits been established at the base to help offset the increased financial burden imposed by having PMQ tenants pay for their own heating fuel?

8. What is the usual fuel used for heating PMQ's at the base?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. There are 1,705 permanent married quarters at CFB Petawawa.

2. There are 1,696 married personnel.

3. None.

4. (a) $170, (b) $180.

5. (a) $222, (b) $235.

6. Shelter values may increase depending upon the outcome of the 1983 CHMC appraisal of DND MQs. Any increases in shelter charges paid in 1983 by occupants will, however, be limited to a maximum of 5 per cent above current charges.

7. Yes, for all houses with insulation below CMHC standards where the occupants are paying directly to commercial suppliers.

8. Natural gas.

MARRIED QUARTERS AT CFB VALCARTIER

Question No. 4,779—Mr. Howie:

1. How many permanent married quarters are in the establishment at CFB Valcartier?

2. How many married personnel are stationed at the base?

3. Are there any restrictions on what ranks may rent PMQ's at this base and, if so, what are the restrictions?

4. What was the average monthly rent paid in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 for a three-bedroom rowhouse style PMQ, or the equivalent, at the base?

5. What was the average monthly rent paid in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 for a three-bedroom detached house at the base?

6. Will PMQ rents at Valcartier be raised in 1983 and, if so (a) for what reason (b) by what amount, on average?

7. Have any rental credits been established at the base to help offset the increased financial burden imposed by having PMQ tenants pay for their own heating fuel?

8. What is the usual fuel used for heating PMQ's at the base?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. There are 946 permanent married quarters.

2. There are 2,115 married personnel.

3. None.

4. (a) $165, (b) $175.

5. (a) $219, (b) $232.

6. Shelter values may increase depending upon the outcome of the 1983 CMHC appraisal of DND MQs. Any increases in shelter charges paid in 1983 by occupants will, however, be limited to a maximum of 5 per cent above current charges.

7. Not at the present time. However when CFB Valcartier converts to direct metering of heating fuels during the next year, a rebate will be available for all houses with insulation below CMHC standards where the occupants are paying directly to commercial suppliers.

8. Oil, but with conversion to natural gas planned in the next year.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion for Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin (p. 25389).

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, when I called it one o'clock, I was about to explain how under Bill C-155 farmers will receive protection from excessive inflationary cost increases in the future. The best way to do this is probably to give a concrete example.

• (1510)

Let us say that the freight rate is now 15 cents per bushel, the approximate amount of the present Crow rate, and the real cost of transporting a bushel of grain today is 75 cents. Because of inflation, let us say that the real cost goes up to 85 cents per bushel. The question to be asked is, does the farmer pick up the additional 10 cents increase for next crop year? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is definitely not. His or her increase is only 3 per cent as protected by the Bill, which works out to about an additional 2 cents per bushel for the farmer. So instead of paying 15 cents per bushel, the farmer would end up paying 17 cents per bushel.

That is pretty good protection against inflationary costs for the farmer, and yet the critic from the Conservative Party this morning said that they will vote against this Bill because that kind of inflationary protection is not built into the Bill. I believe I have just demonstrated that that protection is built into the Bill.

There is an additional measure of protection in the form of a safety net. This is not at present in the Bill but will be proposed in committee, as the Minister indicated in his speech. This mechanism will simply ensure that freight rates never go above a fixed percentage of the price of grain, so if grain prices take a sudden drop, the farmer is again protected. This is one of the big concerns that I have heard from farm groups who visited Ottawa, from individual farmers when I visited out West, and through the letters I have been receiving, and I have been receiving two to three hundred letters per week, Mr. Speaker.

Fifth, additional crops will be added to the list of those eligible for the statutory rate. Some products may also be added. Already the legislation provides for the addition of canola and linseed oil and meal, and more will be proposed in committee. This will encourage farmers to diversify into new crops and help remove the disparity between the raw seed and the product in a number of cases.

Sixth, the Canadian Transport Commission, not the railways, will set the specific freight rate every year by April 30, based on allowable costs. The railways will not be able to pass on costs that are not specifically allowed, another concern that has been expressed to the Government by many western farmers.

Seventh, there are strict railway performance and investment guarantees which I will describe in a moment. As a result, farmers can be assured of efficient service and adequate capacity to move their grain.

Finally, there has been a lot of concern about the 31.1 million tonne ceiling. That is the record amount of grain moved in 1981-82. Mr. Gilson had to find a base somewhere and he struck that crop year as the base year. Over that amount, farmers are expected to pick up the full cost of moving grain; but in order to avoid a disincentive to additional production, there will be a single blended freight rate which applies to every bushel of grain moved in a given year.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the Members of the NDP have not explained this Bill to the farmers in an adequate fashion. I believe that we as elected representatives, whether we agree with a piece of Government legislation or not, have the duty and responsibility at least to interpret it accurately and pass on that interpretation to the people it affects.

I have outlined the many benefits that the Bill will bring to the producers. Let me go on and explain what the Bill will do for the railways. Mr. Speaker, some would say the railways have gained a financial windfall without any reciprocal obligations. Nothing could be further from the truth. The railways no longer have to subsidize the transportation costs of the western grain farmer, as they have for more than a decade. In return, however, this Bill imposes very strict controls and obligations on the railways.

First, the Bill provides that the railways will not be fully compensated for moving grain until crop year 1986-87. This means a $340 million loss over the next four years.

Second, the Canadian Transport Commission, not the railways, will determine what the annual freight rate should be. Every four years the CTC will be required to do a comprehensive review of railway grain transportation costs and revise them if necessary.

Third, the railways are paid only for the tonnage they move, nothing more.

Fourth, the Bill provides for a system of penalties against the railways. If tonnage targets are not met and the railways are to blame, they could face a penalty which, if in place today, could cost both railways up to $45 million. To demonstrate that that is actually so, Mr. Speaker, I would quote from page 10, Section 21(2) of the Bill which reads:

> The sanctions ... shall, in respect of any railway company, consist of a reduction in the government payment to the railway company ... as prescribed by regulations made by the Governor in Council, not exceeding an amount that, in the opinion of the commission, is equal to 40 per cent of the contribution toward the constant costs of the railway company—

And it goes on. The railways will be obliged to report annually on their past, present and future capital investment plans related to grain movements. This is spelled out very clearly in Section 29 of the Bill, which reads:

> Each of the railway companies shall annually submit to the Minister, the Administrator and the Committee a statement showing
> (a) the investments in railway equipment and plant for the movement of grain made by the company during the calendar year preceding the calendar year in which the statement is submitted;
> (b) the general investment plans of the company in respect of railway equipment and plant for the movement of grain during the calendar year in which the statement is submitted and the next calendar year; and
> (c) the expenditures by the company related to the maintenance of grain dependent branch lines during the calendar year preceding the calendar year in which the statement is submitted.

Under this Bill, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) can withhold funds from the railways if their capital investment programs for grain transportation are inadequate.

Faced with this environment, the railways will have both a financial and legal incentive to move grain efficiently. I might point out, however, that their recent performance has not been bad. Over the last few years the railways have moved record tonnages each year, even with the heavy losses being incurred. But they cannot be expected to continue, especially as other more lucrative traffic picks up and starts filling the available capacity.

I would like to spend a few minutes explaining to the Chamber how the freight rates will be established according to this Bill. Freight rates have been a major concern. Farm organizations such as the Wheat Pools have said that they want them to remain distance related. As a general rule, they will be distance related under the provisions of the Bill.

What about the variable rates, Mr. Speaker? This may be the most misunderstood aspect of the legislation. Rates which are higher than the basic distance related rate scale are not permitted, so the only possible variable rates are lower rates. Under what conditions are lower rates permitted? Clause 45 of the Bill is quite explicit on this point. I do not have time to quote from the Bill, but Hon. Members can look it up.

It is clear that if farmers do not want variable or lower rates, then they have the power to block them. Furthermore, in the first three years lower rates can only be applied during weekends or off-peak seasons. They cannot be applied to specific branch lines or specific areas except for contiguous points where the two railways operate side by side. This is spelled out in the Bill in Clause 46.

When I was out in Saskatchewan recently, Mr. Speaker, it was pointed out to me that there really are variable rates now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, order. I have been listening attentively as usual to the Hon. Member and I would like to quote for his edification Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, page 276, Citation 381:

> The second reading of a Bill is that stage when it is proper to enter into a discussion and propose a motion relative to the principle of the measure. On the motion for the second reading, it is out of order to discuss the clauses of the Bill.

Now, the Hon. Member has been shifting from a general discussion of the Bill to a discussion of particular clauses. I would invite him to adhere to our procedures.

• (1520)

Mr. Flis: I respect your reprimand, Mr. Speaker. That is why I have been referring to these as sections, not clauses.

Let me go on to explain the new Grain Transportation Agency. A Grain Transportation Agency Administrator will be established with specific responsibilities for promoting system efficiencies, monitoring performance and, in co-operation with the Canadian Wheat Board, rail car allocation. Let me emphasize that we are not creating a large new bureaucracy. The Grain Transportation Agency will take over the function and staff of the existing Grain Transportation Co-ordinator.

Producers and members of the grain industry want to be involved in efforts to improve the system as they wanted to be involved in formulating this legislation. They will have that opportunity through a senior Grain Transportation Committee. The Committee's role will be to advise the GTA Administrator and the Minister on any and all matters related to grain transportation and handling. Producers will be represented on the Committee not only through their grain companies but through directly elected representatives as well. I do not have time to list them.

The block shipping system of the Canadian Wheat Board will remain. In fact there will be no changes to the roles or functions of either the Wheat Board or the Canadian Grain Commission.

Rather than enumerating the duties and functions of the Committee and the Administrator of the Grain Transportation Agency, I will refer Members to the appropriate clauses of the Bill.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that the Government has made specific provision in the legislation for a review in 1985-86.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think this Bill deserves the support of the House. Very few people will be 100 per cent satisfied with what it provides. We have seen that there are deep differences of view on certain aspects of this question, so it is physically impossible to satisfy everybody 100 per cent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments, debate.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I never dreamed that I would be in the House on a day when we would be discussing what many western farmers have regarded for years as the Magna Carta of the grain industry. For years farmers have felt that no Government dare tamper with the Crow rate. There are many uncertainties and many areas where prices have been shooting up in the grain industry. In the past the farmer felt that with the Crow rate he had at least some security.

I listened to the NDP spokesman on transportation. I know that the NDP has been trying to cuddle up to labour to get its support over the years. They complain about the high cost of transportation but I do not think I have ever heard them refer to the wages a train engineer receives. I have a few neighbours who are engineers on trains and I am told they make $300 per day. The NDP associates itself with the unions that represent the people who demand and get that money. In the end the wages come out of the farmers' pockets, from what he receives for the grain he sells. I am told that the average engineer earns something like $52,000 per year but we never hear about that aspect of the cost.

I am very sad to see what is happening today. Someone has said that it takes a lot of courage to introduce a Bill of this nature. It also takes a lot of courage to defy the pressures that come with it. It does not take so much courage to assure the railways that they will have a profit of 20 per cent plus, but that will taken out of the pocket of the farmer. On April 21, 1983 the Western Producer carried the headline: "Crow changes will de-people the farms".

Every time railway employees strike for higher wages, the railways just reduce the number of employees. They turn to mechanization and are still able to operate. The same thing will happen on the farms. When costs are increased in any area some people will fall by the wayside and there will be a depopulation of many of the small villages. Some of them will disappear. A better railway system may result but at a very heavy price.

We have had surpluses before, Mr. Speaker, but we have always managed to move the grain in spite of the fact that some people claimed we had an inadequate railway system. There is nothing in the Bill to guarantee that there will not be strikes. There might be a terrific railway system but there will be strikes, or there is no guarantee that the producer can deliver the grain.

An Hon. Member: If there is grain to move.

Mr. Korchinski: My colleague suggests that the farmer might not be in a position to have grain to move, and that is true. I have been getting calls from people in my constituency and they tell me that in many areas grain is not moving because it is frozen. There is no demand for it. So it does not matter how efficient the railway system is, if there are no customers grain will not be moved.

While I am on the subject of frozen grain, I hear a lot of comment to the effect that farmers will diversify. Commodity groups tell us that they will diversify. I represent an area that has diversified, Mr. Speaker. When I was campaigning for election in 1957 there were mountains of grain in my constituency and farmers did not know what to do with it. The Liberal Government could not cope with the problem. It was not that there were not enough boxcars or railway lines in those pre-abandonment days; we simply did not have the customers.

When the Conservative Government took over, one of the things it said it was going to do was diversify and cut into the mountains of grain. We set up community pastures in many areas, using sub-marginal lands. We used up a lot of that grain. We also entered into contracts later with Mainland China. We were chastised for taking that action, but we did move the grain. We knew it was necessary. We also ended up with a lot of cattle and we fed them a lot of that grain. The cattle population increased by leaps and bounds. Saskatchewan had a cattle population of 1.3 million. Because cattle prices went down, it later dropped to something like 600,000 or 700,000.

Why did these people not stay in the cattle business? They had frozen grain and it was cheap. The simple reason was that there was no money in that business. To suggest that somehow there is going to be a transformation and a lot of wonderful things are going to happen to western Canada is somewhat deceiving, as we know because we have travelled that route before. Had we not, then I would say: yes, perhaps there is some measure of truth to the comments made. But I have to tell my people that I do not believe that what the Government is saying will happen. I see too many closed feed lots. I get calls from people who have frozen grain. I know it can be sold, and these farmers would like to dispose of it at lower prices. When interest rates were as high as 23 per cent, they were willing to dispose of it even at a reduced price so they could save money on interest rates. But there were no takers for the simple reason that there was no profit in the cattle business.

Now, I am told also that there will be a lot of diversification. Well, I happen to come from and represent a very good farming district. That district has diversified. We grow wheat, oats, barley, rye, flax seed, rape, canola, bird seed, you name it. We have diversified. We have done everything. Alfalfa, sweet clover—

Mr. Gustafson: Sunflowers.

Mr. Korchinski: Sunflowers are not in my area, thank you. But in the southern part I know they grow sunflowers. So we have done everything possible to diversify, but we do not have the extra markets. We have tried it. The south Saskatchewan River dam was built with the idea that there were going to be market gardens in that area. There are forage crops, irrigation, but not very much else. The water is there. We had high hopes for the area, but it did not quite materialize the way we had hoped. So for anyone to suggest that somehow there is going to be a magic transformation in western Canada is, to say the least, deceptive. What we will have is a bigger bill to pay for transportation.

I can understand the commodity groups, for example, the potash producers, or sulphur or chemical producers, or for that matter the cattle producers, wanting cheaper grain. After all, they know they cannot make money at the present time. Of course, there was all kinds of pressure. It was interesting that the Minister introduced his Bill in French. Obviously this was intended for another part of the country, to reassure them that nothing would happen. Although we are told in western Canada that we will have diversification and our cattle population is going to grow, obviously there was an assurance going out there that things were going to be just fine. Although this Bill will affect western Canada particularly, it was not until the pressure from the Quebec caucus was applied to the Minister that changes were brought about. Why is it necessary to have pressure from another part of Canada so that wheat farmers can be heard? Why? The Minister might say, well, perhaps the Conservative caucus is not exactly united on this issue. Well, it just so happens that the Conservative caucus is full of Members from rural Canada. We represent different interests. I would expect every Member to stand up and defend his own particular constituency and represent it adequately.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: If a Member comes from a cattle producing area, I would expect him to say, yes, I do represent that area. I well know the situation in Alberta and Manitoba is different from Saskatchewan, and I expect every one of those Members to do a good job of representing his constituents. It so happens that the Liberal caucus has western representatives from the cities. I do not know, maybe they represent the dog and cat population out there, or whatever. But they have no idea what it is like, and neither does the NDP.

Mr. Tessier: Say your message in French.

Mr. Korchinski: I see in the Bill reference to variable rates. Well, they will be the most damaging to the area which I represent, that is, the northern part of Saskatchewan. We have the greatest distance from our area to the West Coast or the East Coast. The Minister came out with an assurance that he would put the Port of Churchill to maximum use.

Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Mr. Korchinski: They say that because we are closer to that port. But over the years what is the history of this Government? It has placed a lot of stock in representations from the Wheat Pool. Well, I belonged to that pool organization. I used to be chairman of the local pool in my little community so I know all about that organization. But they have terminals on the West Coast and the East Coast and their interests are not in Churchill. I say this openly, not in defiance, but it is a fact. It does not really matter to the National Harbours Board as long as it can satisfy a few pressure groups.

I look at the Bill and I see that the Government will be responsible for transportation over the stretch between Thompson Junction and Churchill. What has Thompson Junction got to do with it? If the Government had come to the edge of the farming community then it would make sense. But where is Thompson Junction? It is a mining community. If the Government had come to Hudson Bay, or, to say the least, Le Pas, then I could see the wisdom. But Thompson Junction? The farmers have to take their product to a mining community and from there on the Government will take it over.

There is an article in one of my local papers which says that the U.S. has 25,000 miles of inland waterways, which is a cheap way to move products. The Mississippi-Missouri system contains 9,000 miles of inland waterways with a nine foot draft. This river system is maintained by the U.S. Government. Fourteen states are within 300 miles of the waterways. In 1977-78, grain rates were between 12 and 18 cents per bushel. How in the world are we going to compete against that type of situation, Mr. Speaker? I look at other countries, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) dealt with that subject very well. He referred to Argentina and Australia. They are within 200, 300 or 400 miles of any waterway. Water transport is very cheap, not so with railway.

A question was raised just this afternoon with reference to rail line abandonment. We have no assurance, despite the fact that there will be additional cost, that these lines will not be abandoned. As a matter of fact, the variable rates ensure that there will be greater abandonment. That is ensured because those rail lines which cover a greater distance will simply have to disappear because the cost factor itself will cause people to move away or to transport goods in other ways. Therefore, there will be a loss of traffic. There will be a railway system but not enough traffic. Consequently, there will not be another application.

It seems passing strange that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) a few days ago introduced a so-called recovery budget, and here we have the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) going all out to take away money from those people who happen to be great spenders. They are locked into the system. They have to spend money on fuel, fertilizer, chemicals. If they do not, they do not get a crop. They have to update their machinery. Let me tell you, you do not have to beg a farmer to spend money; he will. He will go all out to be as efficient as possible, and he will try every method.

I wonder where we are heading. Some people suggest that there is a revolution going on, and this will revolutionize our industry. I am afraid that that word "revolutionize" might mean that there will be a revolution, because all I can see is that if any farmers survive these times, they will probably have very, very large farms. The net result is that the smaller farmers will fall by the wayside, and the big operators will still survive. There will then be only large landowners left, and there will be great distances between farms.

There are some pretty big tractors nowadays pulling some pretty wide cultivators. It does not take very long to cultivate a field. These new farmers are going to be efficient, but simultaneously with the emergence of these huge land possessors, huge unemployment lineups will start forming. I wonder how patient the Canadian people will be when they hear or read reports about these landowners. I sometimes wonder whether we will not reach the day when the Canadian people will say, "enough is enough", and we will have to split up some of those land possessions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. If the Hon. Member were to seek unanimous consent, perhaps he will be allowed to continue his speech. Is there unanimous consent?

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) a question. He blamed railway workers, particularly railway engineers. He implied that they were an important factor in the high cost of transporting grain. Does the Hon. Member not realize that, as a result of dieselization and other programs, the number of railway workers in Canada has been reduced in the last 25 years from 200,000 to less than 100,000, and that most of the workers who work for the railway make less than half the amount he talked about, make less than $20,000 a year, and that there are only a couple of thousand engineers, at the most, who may make the over $50,000 which the Hon. Member ascribes to them, although I doubt that they do? Because of the increased power of the engines, the number of hopper cars and freight cars which a train can haul has more then doubled. We have trains of 150 or more cars, so there are fewer engineers needed. If he knows all these things, why does the Hon. Member draw the red herring of supposed high wages over this trail? Does he not realize that if the farmers are going to get the support which they need to stop the implementation of this bad proposal of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), they will need all the friends they can get, and many of their friends are railway workers who elect Members of Parliament, who should be with them rather than against them? The Hon. Member's kind of argument does not help very much.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member knows this or not, but my father once worked on the railway, so I feel quite safe in commenting on the railroad workers. I also remember strikes, Mr. Speaker, and after the strike was settled, after Members of Parliament had to come back and introduce legislation to put these people back to work because of the tie-up in transportation, the first thing that happened was that the railway companies immediately went to work and started cutting down on the number of people they employed. They did so because if they had to pay these people the amount of money they had agreed on they would have to find it somewhere. The end result was that very soon unemployment increased, attrition increased and soon the day came when the railways started buying bigger units. They were forced into that. After a while these workers would talk about a strike, but they would suddenly pull back.

I am sure we all can recall that that is precisely what happened a few years ago. Although they threatened to strike, they soon realized that after they had struck the first time, they were sent back to work, but the railways in the end became more and more efficient and the workers eventually lost their jobs. So while they threatened and used every mechanism possible, they then turned around and agreed to terms which were acceptable to them and to the employer.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about the increased efficiency of the railways which led to less employment. Of course that happened. In the same way, with the increased efficiency on the farms we have seen the disappearance of the quarter-section farm, then there was the half-section, the one-section and now we have farms which are two, three, four sections and bigger.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member one specific question so we will get the record straight. Does the Hon. Member not realize that the substantial majority of the railway workers make less than $20,000, probably closer to $15,000 a year which, the cost of living being what it is today, does not give them a very high standard of living? Should he not modify that figure of $52,000 which he ascribes to the engineers and, by implication, leaving the impression that nearly all railway workers receive over $50,000 a year?

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I am not commenting on any other wage or salary. I make reference to one particular group. I believe that the Hon. Member should be fair about it. I realize that there are people who are making less, but I am suggesting to the Hon. Member that that is a factor. I believe he should be fair about it because nobody dares to talk about things like that. All they will talk about is Macdonald's salary, and so on, and I even hear comments about the salary of Members of Parliament. I am suggesting here that these people are making more than a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I believe it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) has chosen this opportunity of a debate on the change in the Crow rate to vent his spleen about grievances he has against railway workers over the years. I would remind the Hon. Member that we have not had a strike for ten years. The last strike occurred in 1973, the one previous to that was in 1966, and I believe the strike before that was in 1951. There have been three strikes during my lifetime, which is not very many.

• (1550)

Indeed, many of the railway workers were born and raised on farms in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. They know the world of agriculture.

Mr. Thacker: Question.

Mr. Blaikie: The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) was a member of the committee for parliamentary reform so he should know that this is a time not just for questions but also for comments.

Mr. Thacker: Short and succinct.

Mr. Blaikie: Perhaps he would be quiet and let me make my comments. I think it is very unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Mackenzie is trying to drive a wedge between railway workers and grain producers in this country. We know of the difficulties and tensions that have arisen during times when the railways have gone on strike. No one has experienced that more painfully than my own Party which was originally a coalition of farmers and workers. I think the Hon. Member for Mackenzie is completely wrong in using this debate as an opportunity to try to aggravate those tensions when I sincerely believe that railway workers want to see justice done to the Canadian farmer and will support the retention of the Crow rate as long as the railways receive the money necessary, as would happen under our plan for upgrading rail lines.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Mackenzie. Is he really so naive—I am using the term politely—to believe that a corporation like the CPR, knowing that it can use technology to reduce its labour content and become more competitive, would restrain itself from taking those cost-cutting and efficient measures simply because it does not want to reduce the number of employees it has out of the goodness of its heart? That was the obvious suggestion in his remarks when he said that the railway only modernizes and reduces its labour content after a strike or a set of negotiations which raises labour costs.

Does he really believe that Canadian Pacific or any other major private employer is so financially stupid or irresponsible to its shareholders that it will not utilize whatever modern means are available at any time in order to reduce its costs and become more competitive in its business?

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I am neither naive nor stupid because I realize that the railways will be efficient since they have done that very thing over the years. CN would not come before Parliament asking for $600 million, or whatever its shortfall is, without expecting Members of Parliament to ask it whether it has attempted to become more efficient.

There is nothing within the penalty clause that suggests that the railways have to deliver grain. As a matter of fact, if CN decides not to deliver it, it will not. If it has a shortfall, it will come before Parliament. Where is the penalty there?

I expect the railways, like every other segment of our economy, will try to become more efficient. The NDP is a motherhood type Party which has always wanted to associate itself with the good aspects of all issues. Members of that Party want to be on the side of the unions and on the side of the farmers at the same time. Whose side are you on? Are you on the side of the farmers who have to pay the rates or are you not?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, perhaps I may remind the House that some time ago, Members of the Quebec caucus formed a sub-committee to consider this situation. After the Gilson Report was published and after the Government's statement on August 4, 1982 regarding the Report, Members of the Quebec caucus met with various agricultural organizations—the local organizations in their respective ridings and also provincial and national organizations—in order to discuss the situation.

It is true that to people in Eastern Canada, the Crow rate seems to be a typically western problem. However, after publication of the Gilson Report and its assessment in collaboration with the Yvan Jacques Committee at Agriculture Canada, many Quebec farmers realized that the Crow rate issue did affect them, and that grain supplies from Western Canada were very important to the agricultural industry in Quebec, I should say Eastern Canada, but if I may be allowed to speak specifically about Quebec, since I represent a Quebec riding, I think that many farmers have realized that the Crow issue had considerable repercussions on agriculture in Quebec.

Not that they were necessarily ignorant before, but just because the system had been in place since 1897 and Canadians, especially in Eastern Canada, had been getting wheat from Western Canada as well as other related products for animal feed. As soon as the Gilson Report was published, however, many people started asking a lot of questions, and that is why my colleagues in the Quebec caucus and myself started meeting last fall, in September, with the main agricultural organizations in Quebec. At a special caucus meeting in Jonquière, we listened to representations from farmers to find out what could happen as a result of this situation.

Bill C-155 is before the House today. From the outset, Members of the Quebec caucus met with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) who received their representations, and today, now that Bill C-155 has been printed, I must say that the Minister did listen to us and that he did see what he could do in terms of this Bill and this new policy.

Mr. Speaker, I am very much tempted to make my speech even more political, by the fact that in May 1980, certain Quebec Government authorities, in referring to the referendum, said that we could be independent and that we would no longer have any problems, that our standard of living would be adequate and that our problems would no longer exist. I think the grain transportation issue is a good example of the fact that Canada must be seen as a whole, and that the various regions depend on one another, and that if western grain is sent to Quebec, it is because Quebec is extremely dependent on western grain production for the survival of its livestock operations. That is one example I am fond of giving the farmers in my area and in Quebec. I tell them that that it is very important to be a part of Canada, this great country of ours, and that we have every reason to be proud and that we must find within this country the sources of supply we need. Today, as a result, we are only 40 per cent self-sufficient as far as grain production is concerned. That is why some people say we should strive for self-sufficiency in Quebec. However, although it seems very sensible, it would be impossible because of our soil and weather conditions.

• (1600)

That is why, Mr. Speaker, considering the situation as reported in Bill C-155, I am giving this Bill on western grain transportation my wholehearted support. I would also like to mention that as a result of certain representations that were made to us, the method of payment has been one of the important points we have been discussing with many agricultural organizations since last September. In November, we invited representatives of the FPU, the Coopérative fédérée and the feedmill operators to meet us at a Quebec caucus meeting, which was held on November 24, and where we discussed the Crow rate issue with the agricultural organizations. Of course we had to do some research, we had to continue our discussions and meetings, and personnally, Mr. Speaker, I and my colleagues had regular meetings with farmers and farm associations. On January 19, 1983, I made a statement under Standing Order 21, in which I announced to our farmers that we had set up a sub-committee. I gave the names of Members who were present and who were working on a Bill that would be tabled in the House, the Bill we are considering today. In fact, my colleagues from Rimouski-Témiscouata (Mrs. Côté), Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne), Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ostiguy), Portneuf (Mr. Dion), Lévis (Mr. Gourde), Beauce (Mr. Lapointe), Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel), Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Tessier), Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), and myself as chairman, have been working on this issue since last fall.

In Quebec, many people were concerned about the fact, and said so, that federal Members did not seem to be interested in this issue. I would like to say that here in the House and in committee we have been working for quite some time with the Ministers concerned to produce this Bill. We had meetings without number. We had discussions with the Minister of Transport about the Bill, and I would like to mention the points we considered before Cabinet made its decision last fall, and its final one some time ago.

If we look at certain claims and certain aspects that relate very specifically to the Bill before the House today, we see that the issue of payment to the railways is the most important one. Mr. Speaker, since the debate started in earnest, and especially since last fall, everyone, or at least the vast majority of Canadians concerned by this issue, has told us that something had to be done about the grain transportation system and what is commonly referred to as the Crow rate. Quebec farm organizations agreed that since under this system, which goes back to 1897, western farmers and grain growers had been paying only 20 per cent of transportation costs, perhaps something should be done about the situation. It also struck us that even on television, we were seeing people who said, and I am referring to the time before the policy statement on February 1 we saw a farmer on CBC television who said that he was expecting changes, and that as far as the railways in Western Canada were concerned, these would have to be upgraded for more effective transportation of goods from Western Canada to Eastern markets or elsewhere. That is the point I want to make concerning the payments to the railway companies. There are, of course, agricultural implications, but the whole problem is related to transport, in my opinion, and transport facilities should therefore be improved and upgraded by the railway companies, which means that the policy of making payments to the railways is sound. This aspect of the Bill is extremely important.

Of course, farm groups in Quebec that were afraid of disastrous consequences must now be reassured. I refer to Quebec farmers, but it must be kept in mind that, as stated in the document issued by the Department of Transport on May 4, 1983 concerning this method of payment, the Government took into account the strongly held and, in some cases, contradictory positions of various farmers' organizations in favour of some system of payment to the railways, namely the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Manitoba Pool Elevators, the Saskatchewan Federation of Agriculture, Unifarm, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec, the Coopérative Fédérée du Québec, the Association professionnelle des meuniers du Québec, as well as the New Brunswick and Nova Scotia Federations of Agriculture. I recall that, some time after I met them in early November 1982 at a luncheon when they came to Ottawa to meet members of the various parties, in February more exactly, the members of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture passed a resolution asking that all Government payments be made to the railways. In view of the Gilson report recommendations, of the policy statement and of the recommendations made to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) by all these farmers' organizations and also by the subcommittee of the Quebec caucus which considered the matter of the payments to the railways, we have uncontrovertible evidence of the responsiveness of the Minister of Transport who, after weighing the pros and cons of the matter, concluded that the payments should be made to the railways because the problem is one of transportation.

Of course, the Government was asked to take this initiative, and that is all to the good. As for compensating future increases in transportation costs, the Government has decided that, in 1986, Western producers will pay 6 per cent of transportation cost increases due to inflation. Generally speaking, Western producers should pay the full amount of future cost increases when the inflation rate of grain transportation costs is no more than 6 per cent.

As for maintaining the formula, which is important for corn pricing, even if the Act does not cover this matter, we are quite sure that the Department of Agriculture will solve the problem. In addition, it is important to note that people in Quebec were asking for other elements in this policy statement. We were told, for instance, that grain producers in Quebec should also be allowed to have facilities. Members from Quebec made representations in this regard after meeting with the farmers, urging that elevator No. 1 in the port of Montreal be repaired.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I will repeat what the Minister of Transport has been saying all along: that elevator was so outmoded that it had become a serious hazard for the workers. We would have had to spend several million dollars to upgrade it, and that would have been a sheer waste of public funds.

On the other hand, the Government will take the necessary steps to provide the port of Montreal with grain transport trucking facilities, as advocated by farmers' organizations, and that representation was made to the Minister of Transport by Quebec MPs. So the instances and requests made by the agricultural organizations I have just mentioned have been heard by the Canadian Government and the Minister of Transport. On behalf of my colleagues, I urge Quebec's agricultural community and Members of the Opposition to see the western grain transport policy for what it really is, because its impact and its necessity cannot be minimized at the national level.

The policy announced by the Government on February 1, 1983 was aimed at modernizing Western Canada's rail transportation system, and removing obstacles in the way of agricultural expansion in the Prairies. However, we must not lose sight of the essential aspect of the needed reform—changes to the Crow's rate. That rate applied to grain for export markets, but not only has the negative impact of that rate system which has remained unchanged since 1897 been a serious handicap in grain exportation alone, it did jeopardize as well our export potential in many other resource sectors, a fact which has been acknowledged by most agricultural spokesmen and various industries.

In terms of future development, it would have been counter-productive indeed not to intervene and to abandon such potential resources whose development will be a boon to Canada as a whole. We should not disregard either the fact that, in the next few years, the investments made by railway companies—freed as a result of the new rate—to upgrade their lines in Western Canada will have an economic fallout throughout the country. You know as well as I do that our country needs a strong economic recovery and, in that respect, the policy will ensure a diversified and inter-regional stimulus which can only be beneficial.

Concerning the payments to the railway companies and the products which are included, I just saw on the CBC television network a farmer who was saying that right now, under the existing system, he is spending between $3,000 and $4,000 to ship his grain, but he is quite prepared to pay more if he can be sure that his production will be taken off his farm and shipped to the market place. Keeping in mind that the railway companies will get paid, the investments they are making now and will make in future, combined with cost controls on transportation for the farmers, will create a situation such that western farmers and the agricultural community in Canada as a whole can only stand to benefit. That is why I support this Bill, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member opposite tell me whether or not the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was wrong when he published a paper through his Department in which pointed out that the original Crow changes, before the Bill C-155 compromise, would not affect the livestock industry in Quebec? Was the Minister of Agriculture lying in that document?

[Translation]

Mr. Dubois: When the Hon. Member referred to a paper published by the Department of Agriculture, he meant I suppose either a letter which was released sometime in February, or perhaps the Jacques report. Yes, that is probably it. In fact there are two different documents, namely, the Jacques report and the letter written by the Minister of Agriculture. Everything hinges on the situation described in the report or this letter. I do not think that the Minister of Agriculture was lying about this situation, but the fact remains that different people had different opinions about the supply and the costs of production. People are aware that the production costs for feed grains in Western Canada are already different from what they are in Eastern Canada, for the grain is already there, and the cost of transportation to Quebec is added to the production costs, and when I say Quebec, I mean of course my own riding where things are different, and I think farm organizations were seeking equity. As the Minister of Transport has indicated, the Minister of Agriculture was suggesting a system for our feed grains. While certain things could simply not happen, some farm organizations thought otherwise.

[English]

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has not answered by question. Either Quebec producers were wrong when they said the Gilson changes would affect them adversely or the Minister was wrong when he said that the changes would not affect Quebec producers. Somebody was wrong. I would like the Hon. Member to tell me which one was wrong.

[Translation]

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, when it comes to putting the blame on someone, I think we should remember two things. Agriculture Canada and Canadian producers were operating under different assumptions. Both Agriculture Canada and farm producers from Quebec and elsewhere were thinking in terms of a certain number of years, on the assumption that if the payments were made according to the policy statement, the grain growers of Western Canada would sell their feed grains to their neighbours who would raise cattle, hogs or poultry, or on the North American market, or on the Japanese market, and therefore they would not compete with Quebec producers. If, on the other hand, they chose to send their grains to Eastern Canada, would these two assumptions remain valid? Because of these diverging views, problems were anticipated.

In view of this situation, the minister said: "For safety, let us make the payments to the railways". Under these circumstances, either the grain growers of Western Canada would keep their production, and a number of problems could arise, or they would market it and in that case they would operate under competitive conditions.

[English]

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois). In his remarks he made a very clear reference to the fact that the Gilson group recommended that the Crow benefit be paid to the railways. Surely the Hon. Member knows that the Gilson group did a tremendous job, for which I give it credit. It represented every sector in western Canada involved in the entire issue, including all three Wheat Pools from the prairie Provinces, United Grain Growers, 20 different commodity groups and the railways. Collectively that is the group and that is why I refer to them as the Gilson group. It represented every one involved in the debate. It is well known that the Gilson group did a superb job. It did the impossible. First it arrived at a consensus that something had to be done, although it could not identify what should be done. Eventually it arrived at a compromise. One of the major elements in that compromise was that the Crow benefit be paid to the farmers, not to the railways. This is the original recommendation. Is the Hon. Member aware of that? I am not talking about the February 1 statement. This is the original Gilson recommendation.

• (1620)

[Translation]

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, there were some assumptions made concerning a possible benefit to railways in the first year with increases in the following years. They tried to reach a consensus in the West, which is very important. However, I am surprised that certain groups would favour some of the suggestions made in the Gilson report while others—and this is also quite imporant—such as the three Western wheat pools, the Saskatchewan and Alberta Wheat Pools and the Manitoba Pool Elevators, the Saskatchewan Federation of Agriculture and the Alberta Unifarm were asking that the benefit be paid to the railways. I have never said in my comments that the Gilson report only had the railways in mind. There were possibilities of benefits being paid to the railways and Gilson also voiced certain assumptions. But on February 1, reference was made to the paying of benefits to the railways during the first year and in the following years to ratios up to 50-50. This was definitely the policy statement. I know there was a consensus in western Canada on those issues. Some of the organizations were favouring the Gilson position. Some were in favour of the policy statement made on February 1, and others were not.

[English]

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, Gilson heard all the recommendations, all of them. He heard from those with divergent views, and so on. Then he made the recommendation that the money be paid half to the producers and half to the railways over the period.

Mr. Pepin: No, 81, 19.

Mr. Taylor: It was not all to go to the railways. He heard all the recommendations, the same as the Minister. The Minister heard them all again. It was only when the Quebec Liberal caucus came into it that the decision was made. I have a telegram here which indicates that a hog producing company in my riding will have an additional cost of $217,000 a year. How does the Member expect it to stay in operation? How long does he expect the hog and cattle producers in western Canada to lie low in order to protect the hog and cattle producers of Quebec? Why does the Quebec operation not compete with the rest of us and not get special advantage from the Government to do so?

[Translation]

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, concerning the pork industry, I am surprised at the comments made by my colleague as to how people in Quebec can understand the situation. I would remind my colleague from Alberta that 10 years ago, that Province was producing 41 percent of our pork. It is now down to 17 percent, although the Crow rate was never changed until today. And if Quebec's share of the production has gone up to 41 percent, it is because farmers in Quebec have been specializing and promoting their products, especially in the American Midwest, or maybe not the American Midwest but in the East and also in Japan. And if we look at western Canada's pork production, I would remind my colleague that although percentage-wise it has gone down, in absolute numbers it has not changed.

As far as the Gilson report is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the latter indeed recommended that the Canadian government should contribute $3.5 billion to the Crow benefit between the years 1982-83 and 1985-86, and its estimate of the railway deficit stemming from grain transportation, at the existing level of subsidies, would come up to $644 million. The recommendation was that the Canadian government should cover that deficit through legislation passed by Parliament. That was one of the recommendations in the Gilson report.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please! The period for questions and comments is over.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields)—Canada Post Corporation—Competing with weekly newspapers for advertising revenue; the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil)—Agriculture—Request for dual measurement labelling of farm chemicals. (b) Request that discussions be held with farm organizations; the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky)—Railways—Crowsnest Pass rate—Resolutions of legislatures opposing proposed changes. (b) Justification for Minister's position. (c) Rail line abandonment policy.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin (p. 25389).

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: I appreciate the recognition from my left. I am not sure they will want to applaud when I am finished with them, but I thank them anyway.

Bill C-155 is a very important Bill. The title of the Bill is "An Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certains Acts in consequence thereof".

I am glad to see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) here. I believe, as do most Members of the House, that he is a very honourable gentleman, well respected on both sides of the House. I want to point out to him some of the concerns that we in western Canada have over this Bill and caution him, as did the former Minister, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) that he should proceed quite slowly and deliberately on this issue. When I say that, I mean that he should do so in the House because the Bill really has not been dealt with properly until it has been in the House. It is unfortunate that the Government has chosen to allow, facilitate or encourage as much discussion as we have had on this issue outside the House.

The reason I read the title of the Bill is that this Bill deals with much more than transportation. To western Canada transportation is not simply the moving of goods from one point to another. It is not simply two pieces of steel spanning the Prairies. It is tied up with the reason why western Canada exists. Without the railway, western Canada would probably not have developed as quickly or in the way that it did.

Anyone familiar with western Canada knows how important the railroads have been to western Canada. They are the reason for many small towns settling where they did. The reason for the configuration of some of the cities is the effect on them of the railways. I have said this before, and I am sure the Minister can appreciate it, that in some ways transportation means to Western Canada what language means to Quebec. That bears some explanation.

I grew up in the middle of Saskatchewan. I remember how important railways were to the little community in which I lived. It was something for my father to point out to me in the middle of the night that hearing a train whistle meant that you were somehow hooked up and connected with the outside world. It meant that you were not totally isolated and ignored. It also meant something in terms of the weather. When you listened to a train whistle, you could tell if there was a different kind of front moving in. It was all tied up in the reason we were there, which was to produce something off the land. When you start talking about transportation, those are some of the things that come to the minds of the people of western Canada.

I remember my father showing me how he could read numbers on a boxcar which was sitting 15 or 16 miles away from where we lived. That may sound melodramatic or corny, but when you think about it you can see how important transportation was and still is to those of us in western Canada. When you deal with the transportation issue, that is what you are dealing with when railways are involved. It is more than something you approach from a rational basis, cerebral basis or a purely economic basis. It is something that is inside us. It is tied up with our emotions.

That is the reason why the former Minister, the Hon. Member for Vegreville, suggested we should proceed slowly with this Bill. Again I point out that by slowly I mean we should proceed slowly in terms of the process in the House.

Another reason why I think we need to use some caution is that this is not a good time of the year for anybody connected with the land to look at something that is as fundamental as transportation. Right now we are going through a very critical time in farming. It is the spring season and it is the time for putting crops in the ground. To take time off from planting and sowing is something that farmers just cannot do if there is to be any kind of prospect for a crop. So again, we need some time in order to understand what the Government is proposing.

It seems to me that another reason we have to approach this with a lot of caution is that, right or wrong, there is a lot of mistrust of the railways. I would suggest that the railways have brought on much of it themselves. I refer particularly to the CPR. The country has been very kind and good to the CPR. It has made it the largest company in the country, and in many ways the most profitable company in the country. Yet, if you ever try to look for any evidence of what the railways have done, particularly what CPR has done for the country, you will not find it. I do not see that they have funded one university, I do not see that they have contributed in any major way to any research that has been done in universities.

Take the little town that I come from, Carberry, as an example. They took away the passenger depot. Everybody from western Canada knows what is meant by a depot. The depot became harder to heat and it became uneconomical, so they decided to simply tear it down. I find that very sad. When driving in town now, you can look right down Main Street and you can see right past the place where the station used to be. That is unfortunate because, as I have said, the railways benefited tremendously from the country, and yet when it comes time for them to put something back in as a memento or to contribute to the town in the form of a museum, that does not happen. If we mistrust the railways, it is brought on in some ways by their own actions. I would suggest that in many areas, the railways have been very inconsiderate and insensitive to the community.

There was an instance in Toronto, that was recently made public through the media of the CP smashing down a station with a ball and chain. From what I have read and from what I can recollect from the news reports, that station could have been kept, and I am sure in my own area they would have liked to have kept the station. It could have been maintained as a museum and it would have served us as a link with our past. We are proud of our history and proud of our past with which we identify ourselves in Western Canada. So I point out these instances. They may seem small and they may seem insignificant, but it all goes toward creating some goodwill.

We all have shipped commodities on the railways and we all know that we have had bad service in the past. I am sure the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) can cite many instances of cattle being ready to be loaded at the little stockyards alongside the railway and for some reason the train being late or the train having gone by without sending off cars and no explanation being given. It is very frustrating for an individual out in the middle of the Prairies to be treated without what might appear to be only common courtesy. Now, there may be an explanation for it and it may be a proper explanation, but those are the kinds of things many people remember as far as the railways are concerned.

The Minister spoke about some of the guarantees in this Bill that will require the railways to maintain a certain standard of performance. I point out to the Minister that in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, there already is a provision that would require the railroads to maintain service. The provision is on page 6438, Section 262, and I will read part of it to point out what is already in statute form and why we are suspicious when there are to be some guarantees of performance and some penalties for non-performance in the present Bill. Section 262 reads:

> The company shall, according to its powers,
> (a) furnish, at the place of starting, and at the junction of the railway with other railways, and at all stopping places established for such purpose, adequate and suitable accommodation for the receiving and loading of all traffic offered for carriage upon the railways;
>
> (b) furnish adequate and suitable accommodation—
>
> (c) without delay, and with due care and diligence, receive, carry and deliver all such traffic;
>
> (d) furnish and use all proper appliances—
> (e) furnish such other service incidental to transportation as is customary—

I left out a great deal of it, but I point out that there are already statutes in place that require the railways to maintain service, and yet we all know of cases where that has not happened. So we view with a certain amount of suspicion any new provisions, however well intentioned the Minister and his Department may be, that will require the railways to maintain and provide adequate performance because we know from the past that that has not necessarily been the case.

We also know that there are cases, and I can give you an example right now, of the railways, because of their monopoly position, not being competitive. We talk about the trucking industry and what is going on with trucks. In my area, fertilizer dealers are moving fertilizer by trucks this Spring because they are saving $20 a tonne over what the cost would be on the railways. So we know that we must somehow force the railways to be competitive, otherwise their costs become prohibitive. When we see that the way that is to be accomplished in the present Bill is through regulation and more bureaucracy, we become very suspicious of it because, to my mind, the real way to regulate and control them is to force the railways to compete. I am not so sure that this Bill will do that.

One of the things that I find exciting is the Hon. Member for Vegreville's suggestion that producers be given the option of either receiving the benefit themselves or having that benefit go to the railways. To my mind, that would go a long way toward making the railways competitive. I would urge the Minister to take a very serious look at that suggestion, and I would hope that he would be amenable to amendments that would bring that kind of thing about when the Bill gets to committee.

There are many other concerns that I have about the Bill. One of the things that concerns me is the bureaucracy involved, and really the possibility exists in this legislation of having the Department of Transport take over the grain transportation industry in western Canada. The Minister shakes his head, but I would point out to him that Section 33 Subsection (3) of the Bill reads:

> Notwithstanding anything in this or any other Act of Parliament, the Governor in Council may, by regulation, transfer the administration and control of any railway cars held by the Canadian Wheat Board on behalf of the Government of Canada from that Board to the Minister.

Now, I am not so sure that that is a good idea. Those of us from western Canada are concerned about Ottawa and about what we call eastern Canada running us. I would like to suggest to the Minister that if he is to do that kind of thing, he should make the CTC in Saskatoon more powerful. Let him put some of the bureaucrats who are in charge of western grain transportation in Russell, in Yorkton, in Davidson, in Red Deer or in some of those smaller towns in western Canada where they will be very close to the people who are affected by the rulings that they make. We might then get some bureaucrats who are more responsive.

To set up a situation where there is to be more and more power given to the Minister and his Department and have that Department located a long way away from where their decisions will have effect leaves them open to more than just the possibility that producers will suspect that they are not getting good representation and good decisions. I would not like to see that kind of thing happen.

To go back and indicate to the Minister that I have been consistent in some of the concerns that I have had, I feel that even the Gilson task force should have been more open and it should have been more reflective of producers' concerns. I would not have seen anything wrong, for instance, in having the Gilson process take place in Saskatoon or in a town like Davidson where the task force would have been very close to the land and to the producers who will be affected by the decisions that are made.

Let me outline and amplify on some of the other broad areas of concern that I have about this Bill that I have touched on. First, we would like to know about the safety net. We would like to know how it will be enforced, how the figures will be determined, and what the percentage is to be, is the percentage to be on the price of grain at export position or is it to be on the net price that the producer receives at the elevator? To pick the figure that I have heard, if it is to be 10 per cent of the value of grain at export positions, relating that back to the producers' net return from a bushel of grain and deducting the handling charges and the transportation charges, the arithmetic that I have done would show that that figure could be as high as 12 per cent. Now, there is a big difference there. Those are some of the things that we would like to have clarified. I would also like to know if there is any bottom price on that. It is fine to pay 10 per cent of the value of grain if it is $10 per bushel; you are making money then, but if the selling price is lower than the cost of production then I would like to know if there is any provision for a genuine safety net. The percentage that the Minister has in mind as a safety net should be variable.

There has been talk about the percentage of inflation for which the producer will be responsible. I have talked to a lot of producers and I agree with them that the Government should be responsible for the first two or three percentage points of the inflation factor and the producers should pick up anything above the 3 per cent. What will happen is that producers will pick up the first 3 per cent now and after 1985-86 pick up 6 per cent, but the sophisticated accounting procedures of the railways will almost guarantee 6 per cent inflation in the cost of moving grain regardless of the situation in the economy at large.

The Hon. Member for Vegreville pointed out that there is no mechanism in place to cope with decreasing costs in a period of deflation, which the Americans are talking about now. What happens if we genuinely have a period of deflation and costs go down one or two percentage points in a year? Is there any mechanism in the Bill to allow the cost to the producer to be reduced? That is a legitimate concern.

We would like to know more specifically what the statutory framework would be. The bureaucratic language in the Bill is very difficult to understand. One of my predecessors pointed out to me that if a policy takes more than 30 seconds to explain, that means it is a bad policy. Some of the explanations the Minister gave of the statutory framework in the Bill are difficult to understand.

The Minister said that we cannot expect the railways to have an incentive to move grain when they are losing $400 million per year. That is a fair comment. On the other side of the question, producers have been losing money too. Many producers are going out of business, and some are having a difficult time finding enough credit to put the crop in the ground this Spring. Their position is no different from that of the railways because they are losing money as well. This is a very, very difficult time to ask producers to pay out more.

I have already outlined my concern about the Government's ability to guarantee any performance by the railways. Another major concern is comparative advantage in the country. Alberta can probably produce barley cheaper than any other area of the country. Barley means carbohydrates which, in turn, means energy for livestock. We should do everything to see that Alberta maintains its comparative advantage in the production of livestock, and to my mind the Bill does not address that matter.

All this brings up the question of why we have a country. Surely if we are to have a country and realize its best potential, we should produce things that we produce most efficiently in the various areas of the country. Manitoba should not get into the production of pineapples. We cannot produce pineapples very efficiently. We do not produce cameras as efficiently as the Japanese. We grow grain, ship it to Japan, and they ship cameras to us. That is a fair deal because of each country's respective efficiency.

To my mind the Bill does not address the question of comparative advantage. Anything we do to distort the comparative advantage that exist in the country distorts the reason for Confederation in the first place. Perhaps the farmers in Quebec will have to make some sacrifices, and people on the Prairies will have to make some sacrifices as well. Let us make sure, however, that anything that we put into legislative form or in statute form addresses that comparative advantage so that everyone is treated equally. I know the Minister, who has a considerable background in economics, understands our concern.

If producers and taxpayers are to be asked to pay more for the movement of grain, we should examine ways to bring more efficiency into the system. We know that the railways work seven days a week. I have had a chance to be on the locomotives and make trips over the lines that have been rehabilitated, and some that have not. I have tried to get the railway officials talking to the farmers so that they could understand each other's problems and see the other point of view.

If we could lower the average turnaround time on the car cycle, that would be a help. For every day that we bring down the car cycle we could save about $60 million. If the turnaround time could be lowered from 21 or 22 days to 15 days we could save close to half a billion dollars of investment.

If the producer is to be asked to put up money to maintain a system that I do not think makes the best or most efficient use of the equipment that we have, then I think he has the right to ask some legitimate questions about what is being done to address that problem.

There are many other areas of inefficiency that could be addressed to get better performance out of the existing system without investing any more money.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to thank those Hon. Members who made it possible for me to speak at this time.

The day which all Members of this Party and many Canadians hoped would never come, has arrived. I think we ought to be conscious of how historic, in a negative way, today is for the future of western Canada and the way of life we have come to know and cherish in western Canada. That is finally the point which must be addressed in the Crow rate.

All too often economic questions are dealt with according to a certain model. All models, of course, have their limits. This is true, I believe, of the model on which those who wish to change the Crow rate works.

According to the computers, if only we were rid of this anachronism called the Crow rate, we would have an efficient transportation system. Neglected in this corporate and computer model of society are the people who actually produce food because they prefer a rural way of life and because they have a sense of vocation. The banks and the railways do not feed people; farmers do.

Those who are not aware of the economic, political, social and cultural significance of the Crow rate might think that a fixed rate for grain transportation, especially one fixed in 1897, is as ludicrous as regulating the price of chocolate bars, would be. But Canada itself is an economic absurdity created by political interference in the continental marketplace where natural trade flows were north and south. It is this will to be a country separate and distinct from the United States of America that is at stake in this debate, in the battle against those who would change the Crow rate.

The decentralized political economy of prairie Canada has never fitted the market economic model. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the settlements which followed its construction were made possible by a national policy to subsidize transportation. Not anxious to see mineral traffic in southern B.C. siphoned off by American railways, the CPR agreed to the Crow rate as a condition of public subsidies to build the Crowsnest Pass line.

If the CPR wishes to renegotiate the deal, then we in the New Democratic Party say that surely as a matter of corporate morality the whole deal should be put back on the table and not just the part that the CPR does not like anymore. Let us put everything back on the table.

• (1650)

The Crow rate opened up the grain economy and prevented non-agrarian capital from exploiting the prairie region. By preventing variable freight rates, the Crow rate made inland grain terminals uneconomic. But the international grain companies are anxious to move in once the barrier has been removed, and no doubt it is their advice—and in at least on of those companies we find a former Liberal Cabinet Minister—that the federal Government is heeding. Variable freight rates will change more than the elevator system.

Ending the Crow will centralize and stratify prairie society, making farmers and workers less aware of each other's contribution to the community. Today the elevator agent knows farmers and their problems and is a respected member of the community. Division of labour in inland grain companies will isolate workers from farmers and relegate many of them to repetitive, mundane tasks, alienating them from this new industrial process. For the farmer, delivering grain will mean long truck hauls and waiting in line-ups. As farm incomes are reduced, ownership of land will be concentrated into fewer and corporate hands. Those farmers who cannot afford to expand will have to quit farming or work off the farm, which will reduce the number of farm families to support the community businesses and services. Therefore, the quality of life in small towns will decline and the social infrastructure, made redundant, will have to be replaced at high costs in cities to which the landless will have to move.

The Government says it must risk this social disaster in order to provide the railways with a higher return on investment. The argument is that the railways will increase the production of transportation service if they are paid more per ton of grain they haul. The same people appear to believe, Mr. Speaker, that the way to motivate the farmers to produce more is to pay them less. Farmers, to their credit, are expected to have some sense of vocational responsibility. They are expected to keep on farming even if they are making less and less money all the time. On the other hand, no one expects that of the railways because they have long since abandoned any sense of responsibility or vocation. Even the CNR has changed its advertising. It is now just "In business for Canada", and is no longer a responsibility as well as a business.

The Crow debate is fundamentally a conflict between two economic cycles. The Crow rate protects farm income from high transport costs, funnelling farm spending through local businesses linked to the wider economy via the incomes of workers making trucks, tractors and other farm supplies. Ending the Crow rate short-circuits this decentralized economic path and siphons farmers' money into railway corporations, much of which will flow out as dividends and investment in real estate, coal-related expansion, and other things not having to do with transportation of grain.

Anyone who believes that it is strictly for the sake of better grain hauling that the Crow rate is to be changed is kidding himself, his fellow Canadians, railway workers and farmers. If the Crow is ended, the drop in farm income will be much more than the extra billions of dollars farmers will pay to the railways over the years. Without the Crow rate, the price pooling and quota systems of the Wheat Board will collapse as multinational operations eventually take everything over. As a result, the value of grain sold will not go to the person who produces it, but to private grain companies which will buy grain at low prices and resell it at high prices.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when railway rates and seaway tolls are increased in Canada, as the Government plans, foreign grain companies will find it much less expensive to divert grain to Minneapolis where it can be located on barges for low cost transport to New Orleans. The multinationals will own the inland terminals on the Prairies, own or control the rail hopper cars, and the export elevator in New Orleans. Probably the same company will own the fertilizer company, and if the Government gets its way it will own the seeds, the patent on the seeds, and gone will be the Canadian control of the grain economy and gone will be thousands of railway and grain handling jobs in Canada.

By now we must all be asking ourselves, those of us who think anyway, why the federal Government is trying to change the Crow. Of course, money is an issue, and the Government hopes its formula will transfer to farmers the cost of hauling grain. We cannot ignore the power of large corporations, especially the CPR, when they threaten to withhold service or investment. Ordinarily, we think of a regulator as regulating the utility. In this case, however, we have a history of the CPR using its monopoly privileges as a utility to regulate its regulator. We see the CPR using its monopoly privileges given to it by the taxpayer to regulate Government policy and abuse the monopoly. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) tells farmers they cannot have a modern transport system unless the CPR gets its way. Blackmail is another word for what is going on, Mr. Speaker. What we are witnessing here today is the capitulation of the Liberal Government to the economic blackmail which has been practised on this country by the CPR for so many years.

We also have the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) telling railway workers they cannot have jobs unless the CPR gets its way. The railway workers are the decoy of the Government's transport plans because there are going to be fewer jobs with the Government's plan than there are today with the Crow rate. After all the concessions made by the Government, the railways are actually going to invest 22 per cent less in 1983 than they did in 1981 when supposedly they lost hundreds of millions of dollars on the Crow. Less investment means fewer jobs, and the refusal, for instance, of the CNR to cancel its system-wide lay-offs on May 1, after this proposal had already been made, when they had earlier allowed wishful thinking people to believe that changes in the Crow would make a difference, is another good example of how the railways have misled the country.

The NDP alternative to the plan which we have before us will create hundreds of thousands of jobs, upgrading railways, while keeping the Crow rate for farmers. It will not cost the taxpayers any more than what we have before us but will create more jobs because, unlike the Government's proposal, our plan would prevent public money from leaking out of the rail system to dividends or real estate or whatever else the railways decide they want to invest in other than the transportation of grain and other than meeting their commitments to the Canadian people and the Canadian economy.

Mr. Gustafson: Just leave the country, period.

Mr. Blaikie: We want a new deal with the railway companies. Instead of continuing with straight handouts, as the Liberals propose, we want to pay the railways only for their actual losses hauling grain. Public money invested in the rail system for expansion and upgrading will give us equity shares in CP Limited, and increase our involvement in Canadian National. Not ony would we own what we pay for, but we would also control the companies so we can direct them to operate in the social and economic interests of Canada.

If we were to take equity in CP—what this plan proposes to give that corporation for nothing—we would become the biggest single shareholder by 1985 and our share would grove by $275 million each year. This would bring CP Limited under social ownership and control and would not cost any more than what the Government proposes to spend already. Instead, we are to pay for the CPR one more time without getting anything in return.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to be the first to admit that public ownership does not necessarily mean a company will have a social conscience or act necessarily in the interests of the Canadian economy. We own 100 per cent of CN, and yet often it operates no differently from the CP Railway. So in socializing the CPR we will need a way to make the public system different so it does not adopt the commercial values incompatible with serving the interests of the Canadian economy and the Canadian people. Crown corporations have a responsibility to be alternative and superior forms of economic development, which take into account the social, environmental and other dimensions which need to be considered if economic development is to be fully human development.

We hope people will support our alternative, Mr. Speaker. We will show people that this is not the only option and that what the Government has put before us is inevitable. We will suggest that there are other ways of improving our transportation system which does not involve all the risks and social and economic destruction associated with changing the Crow rate. We are the only Party offering a plan to keep the Crow and create jobs in upgrading the railways. The Conservatives oppose so far, it appears to me, at least, the plan which has been put before us by the Government, but we do not really know what that Party would rather have. The Conservatives say they would keep the benefit of the Crow rate, but they do not want to keep the Crow rate. There is no unanimity there about keeping the present statutory Crowsnest Pass rate as it is. I defy anyone to demonstrate to me that there is that kind of unanimity, because there is not. The reason that is so, Mr. Speaker, is because the two Parties had similar things in mind. If the Conservative Party had survived December 13, 1979, it would have been bringing in a plan somewhat like we see before us. It was the Conservatives who, on November 7, 1979, said their Government was going to open up the Crow. It was the Conservatives who appointed the present Deputy Minister of Transport, who is the chief engineer of what we have before us.

• (1700)

Here we see, Mr. Speaker, the same hypocrisy we witnessed on the Via Rail cutbacks. We see the Tories opposing and making a big stink out of what we all know they would have done themselves had they been allowed to remain in power in 1979. One of these days, Mr. Speaker, the Tories are going to have to pick sides. I was interested in what the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) said earlier. He said, "You are going to have to pick sides. Which side are you on, the side of the unions or on the side of the farmers?" He totally misunderstood the real conflict in this debate. The Tories are going to have to decide whether they support the farmers or the CPR; the farmers or Cargill; the Crow rate or the Liberals. That is the decision which the Conservative Party faces now. Time is running out. This is the time now for decision on the part of the Progressive Conservative Party, and soon they will have to face up to the inherent conflict between the economic values which they espouse incessantly, and the social values which they say they espouse, community values and the traditional ways of life. It is those very economic and commercial values that out of the one side of their mouths they espouse while systematically tearing away at the other set of values which they say they so cherish in western Canada.

The Government, the railways and the coal companies have the media blitz to change the Crow and, indeed, the Government acted, I believe, in a way that was horribly contemptuous of farmers by advertising the way it did, spending public money to persuade the Canadian public of something which is not passed by this Parliament and is not Government policy. Then it went ahead and changed it. But I believe, Mr. Speaker, when the details of this get out, if we in Parliament can be successful in delaying this line-up so that people will have a chance to see just what is going on here and to think about it, that this Government will lack the essential support of the people on the land. It should be no more difficult for us, and I hope it will not be, to save the Crow in these circumstances than it was for previous generations to set up the Wheat Pools and many of the other economic institutions which Canadians have rightly set up in order to be an example of what is possible when people work together to control their own economic destiny, and make that economy accountable to the common good and not to global profit strategies of the multinational corporations. In this, the New Democratic Party and the CCF before it, had an important role to play, and in our defence of the Crow rate against the Liberal Government and against Conservative indecision we are proud to continue in that tradition.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) gave his usual labour-socialist diatribe against the big corporations. I can give him some examples of the CPR also, and I will in my speech. However, he argues that we should return to the original agreement, the enforcement of the original agreement, and I ask him, does he really mean that? That would mean only 289 points were covered, and it would only cover grain from those 289 points and flour going to Thunder Bay.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, my point was that if we want to renegotiate the agreement, we should put the whole agreement back on the table. That was very simply said. Let us not just renegotiate that part of the deal which the CPR has come to dislike. And when we put everything back on the table, we put everything back on the table, the land, mineral rights, the whole works, not just parts of it.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member blamed the federal Government for spending a lot of money on advertising. My comment here is that if the New Democratic Party would be honest with its constituents and give them accurate information, we would not have to waste taxpayers' money on advertising.

The Hon. Member spent a great deal of time on variable rates. If the shipper and the railway agreed to provide the farmer with lower rates, would he agree to that, or would he suggest that providing lower rates would not be advantageous to the farmer?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Flis) has asked me two questions. First, with regard to the advertising, I accept the credit which he has heaped upon the NDP, that we are so powerful in influencing the country that the Government felt it had to take out a massive advertising campaign to counter what we were saying. The fact that it had to resort to advertising I suppose is a testimony to the decay, the atrophy and the impotence of the Liberal Party, and the fact that it has no one in the West to make its case. It has 146 Members of Parliament and it cannot make a case in the country? That is what your MPs are for. If you have to resort to newspapers to make your case, and spending Government money to promote Liberal policies, then you ought to pack it in right now, baby, because it is all over for you. You are acting not just in contempt of Parliament, but in contempt of the whole political process.

As far as variable rates are concerned and the question of whether we would support lower rates, what we want for the grain producers in this country and what the grain producers want is predictability. We need predictability in a world where the fuel prices are unpredictable and generally rising, where fertilizer prices are unpredictable and generally rising. That is what is predictable, that they rise. They go up and down. We live in a world where interest rates are unpredictable. The one predictable thing which grain producers in this country have always been able to rely on is the Crow rate. Because some railway might offer lower rates on one occasion is hardly a reason to abandon something which has been as economically reliable and sound as the Crow rate.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). He suggests nationalizing the railroad. I believe he used the word "socialize" but I am not sure what that means. Did the Hon. Member and the NDP not learn a lesson from the national energy policy, where that type of direction drove $20 billion worth of capital out of this country and ended up costing the farmers an additional 66 cents a gallon for gasoline? He talks about leakage of capital. What could we expect in terms of leakage of capital from Canada if this type of a move was inflicted upon the railroads and upon the farmers of Canada?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have always felt that the consequences which my colleagues on the right, the Progressive Conservative Party, attribute to the National Energy Program were greatly exaggerated, and I still do. Precisely what happened in terms of the National Energy Program, to a certain degree, is precisely what has happened here, that is, that the will of the people is controverted by the will of the corporations. They played the same game when it came to the National Energy Program that they played with regard to grain producers. If they do not get their way they will go somewhere else. They will go with their tails behind them across the 49th parallel. That is one of the short-term consequences of trying to have an economy that is controlled by Canadians for Canadians. Unfortunately, it was one of the consequences that the Liberal Government was not prepared to face and act against since its National Energy Program was only a type of milquetoast program anyway.

• (1710)

If the Government were really serious it would have been able to counteract that. Instead, it gave in, thanks to those Members, and now it does not have a National Energy Program to speak of.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) pointed out that we have been inconsistent in our Crow policies. I would like to quote to him some statements made by former Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan in January and ask him to explain those inconsistencies. On January 10, 1982, he said, "I think that the issues involved—" referring to the Crow, " ... should be better known. I think that there are clearly, as I indicated, a number of issues involved. Perhaps a revision of the deal makes sense." He is referring to the Crow. In the January 1982 issue of Business Life he said, "But the perception of our Government really is that the farmers ought to keep the benefit of the Crow." Anybody following that would clearly know that he is leaving himself open to the possibility of some of the benefits being paid to the farmer. He went on to say, "If we want to address the issue of who is to pay the additional compensation to the railways, we are prepared to address that issue." Clearly he means that in his opinion he is willing to address the issue of having farmers pay more. That is not the Hon. Member's position now, as I understand it. Finally, Premier Blakeney said, "We make our one other narrow point in this discussion. It is very important to distinguish between the current level of the Crow and the principle of having a statutory rate," clearly indicating that he is willing to look at another statutory rate.

I would ask the Hon. Member if he can explain to me the difference between Premier Blakeney's position of a little over a year ago and what the Hon. Member just now enunciated as the NDP policy?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to accept the interpretation of the words of the former Premier of Saskatchewan given by the Hon. Member. He was talking about the benefits of the Crow, yes, the benefits that accrue to the grain producers of western Canada as a result of the Crow rate, the present statutory Crownest Pass rate. That is what we stand for and that is what former Premier Blakeney has made clear many times since those quotes, that he also stands for.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have a final question for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill. He made a vicious attack on the CPR, and that may be fair game. He talked about the money going to the CPR, leaking to shareholders and how it is ripping off people. In the face of those facts, why does his Party want $651 million to go to the railways as compared to individual farmers, who could then choose to ignore CPR and perhaps market their grain through trucking or other means?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member labours under his belief of the marketplace, as if farmers who were given this money could spend it according to their individual will and somehow choose to send their grain along a CNR branch line when the only branch line along which they live is a CPR line. Could he explain how they could do that without getting into the business of trucking grain, which is exactly what we are against? We want grain to continue to be shipped on the railway. We do not think that the option of inland grain terminals and trucking is a long-term suitable option.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I have no further questions but I would like to make a comment in response to the answer to my last question in which the Hon. Member said that the Conservatives were to blame for the high cost of fuel to farmers. I would like to put on the record that it was the NDP, crawling into bed with the Liberals, which has cost the farmers 66 cents a gallon for fuel.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Anguish: Are we beyond the question period?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): We are still in the period of questions, answers and comments.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, in relation to the intervention by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) concerning the speech of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), let me point out who was in bed with whom. As of February 15, 1983, there were 276 recorded divisions in this Parliament. The Tories and the Liberals voted together 71 times until that point. The NDP and the Liberals voted together only 38 times.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I do not make this comment this very often, but let me point out that the Standing Orders require comments of Hon. Members who wish to make interventions during the question period to be relevant to the speech made by the original Member. I would ask the Hon. Member to try to remain relevant to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I thought my remarks were at least as relevant as those of the Hon. Member for Assiniboia. I think I got my point across that the Conservatives and Liberals have been the same Party for many years and represent the same interests, and that we are the only Party who have stood steadfast for the Crow rate.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this first day of debate on Bill C-155 because it is perhaps the most important Bill to affect western Canada for many decades. It will do so for many decades into the future.

It is certainly an issue about which people can differ in their views. It shows once again the enormous differences we have in this country, particularly when it concerns matters of economic development. It shows the traditional conflict between the East and the West, and even within the West it shows the conflict of interest between the grain industry, based primarily in Saskatchewan, and other industries including specialty crops and irrigation production, primarily in Alberta. It shows the differences and distinction between the grain industry and the lifestock industry, between the grain industry and secondary processing.

It relates to the monopoly that the CNR and CPR have had over this country in terms of grain transportation as compared to other modes of transportation such as trucking and indeed even air dirigibles.

It shows the difference between the mainline interests and the branch line and its rehabilitation. It is important that we deal with this legislation in quite some detail and be sensitive to all of these different but legitimate interests across our country. It is important that we be frank with one another, and that is what I intend to be today.

My comments are not intended to be personal in regard to anyone but rather to give a perspective, which I hope starts with our international, national and finally our natural advantages which we enjoy in this country.

In my opinion, Bill C-155 as it is presently drafted is almost the worst possible combination that could ever be arrived at. Perhaps that is the result of the compromises that the Liberal Government has made.

Let us first put the question into the context of history. When the railways went west in 1885, there were grants of some 25 million acres of land to the CPR and several millions of dollars. There is no doubt that the CPR has used those grants of land, including minerals and mines, to set up some very profitable corporations. However, the fact is that the original grants to the CPR to build the main line west that went through Medicine Hat, up through Calgary, missing Lethbridge altogether, was not part of the Crowsnest Pass Agreement. It is not, in fact, relevant to the debate we are involved in today.

The federal Government entered into another agreement with the CPR in 1897 because we wanted to get a line into the Kootenay's from Lethbridge, Alberta, to Nelson, British Columbia. Furthermore, since the Americans were coming up from the south, we wanted to tap the minerals in the Kootenays. Therefore the Crowsnest Pass agreement was struck.

There were changes to those rates during the First World War simply because the federal Government intervened to block those price increases whenever they started to rise. However, when the prices began to drop after the war, the controls somehow came off. Western farmers have been schooled in that. It happened to us in the First World War and it happened again in the Second World War. That is part of the myth and a reason why we must be sensitive to these issues.

In 1925 those rates became statutory. But they were expanded beyond the original 289 points. Now they are expanded to approximately 1,300 points. Quite arbitrarily, Parliament included the CNR and it included additional products going west as well as east. That is really the context in which we need to see it. Parliament itself, I suppose, has welched on the original deal, if you want to look at it from that perspective. Within that context, grain production on the western Prairies expanded enormously. The livestock industry was able to develop. The railways expanded, and we all made money. The West was genuinely developing. We were a powerful influence. But during the 1960s, and more recently during the 1970s, as a result of inflation a massive distortion developed between the grain producing sector of our western econony, the livestock industry and secondary processing.

I have spoken before about the reasons that I believe caused the inflation to take place. It is the result of federal deficits. We simply spent more money than we were taking in from taxing people. Deficits always lead to inflation, which leads to high interest rates, which lead to this huge dislocation and the collapse that our society is having to endure today. As a result of that, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) instructed Professor Clay Gilson to set up a process to deal with these distortions. Professor Gilson brought together twelve major groups, including the two railways, that are affected by grain transportation in Canada. Some 60 or 70 men have spent thousands of hours and dealt with all of the many issues over weeks. They came up with the Gilson report, the Gilson compromise. Those proposals provided that the grain producers would pay more, 3 per cent for the next three years each year and then 4.5 per cent thereafter. He said the Crow benefit, which is identified at $644.1 million, would be paid on a split, ultimately 81 per cent to the farmers and 19 per cent to the railways. All of this process was staged in, and it had a review process. In my opinion the Gilson proposal was wise and I had intended to support it.

In February, 1983, the Minister of Transport came up with the western transportation initiative. The Minister made compromises on the Gilson report. Farmers would pay 3 per cent in each of the next three years, which would then be increased to 6 per cent. The split between the railways and the farmers was reduced to 50-50 rather than 81-19. But there was a continued review. Then we got into very difficult politics, with the result that a few days ago we had Bill C-155 introduced in the House. Under this Bill grain producers would, in each of the next three years, pay only an additional 3 per cent, but after that they would pay 6 per cent. I agree with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) that that will automatically mean an inflation of 6 per cent. I would rather see the Government's picking up the inflation, because when you get right down to it, Mr. Speaker, it is overexpenditure by Parliament that leads to most of the inflation in this country.

When we look at that in conjunction with the fuel taxes which take over $300 million a year from the western farmers, I say to the Minister that if those fuel taxes had not been imposed upon them, the farmers could easily pay this extra Gilson compromise. But you cannot tax both ways.

Why, Sir, does Bill C-155 give 100 per cent to the railways? It seems clear that it is the result of the Quebec caucus becoming involved, becoming alarmed that somehow their interests would become affected. They became alarmed even in the face of a document from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) which showed that there would be no effect upon the farmers of Quebec. Even in the face of advertising in the amount of several hundreds of thousands of dollars across the country to show that it would not affect the Quebec people, this was done. It was going to be enormously helpful to the livestock industry in the West because it could finally start to compete and move into the northwest United States and California. If we could get our livestock south across the border, the benefits would be tremendous. It would bring money into this country by the billions of dollars. The few extra cents which the grain producers would have to pay would be a drop in the bucket. It is a genuine tragedy that the Minister of Transport was unable to convince the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I understand it was the Prime Minister who finally caved in to the Quebec caucus, and that the Minister of Transport hung in for as long as he possibly could.

It is ironic that 100 per cent of this money will go to the awful railways which the NDP attack. Yet the NDP position is to give the railways $651.6 million every year in contradistinction to giving it to the farmers so they could have freedom of choice. And for the first time in many decades farmers would have the right to shake their fists at the CPR and say "Stick it, CPR, we will ship our grain on trucks." What a great thing that would have been, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: One thousand miles?

Mr. Pepin: Where were you?

Mr. Thacker: On an international scale, Canada is a trading nation. We must be efficient and we must compete. We should always remember the bottom line that over the last decade the United States of America has increased its exports of grain by 500 per cent. Canada, during that same period, has increased its exports by only 50 per cent. Canada is being whipped in the international marketplace. The reason for that is the configuration in the West of railways, branch lines and an elevator system which is designed for the days of the horse and buggy when a horse would have to go only 4.5 miles to the elevator and back and we had to have a point every nine miles. But, Mr. Speaker, we have come beyond that. There are roads out in the West. It may be a surprise to Liberal Members from the East that we actually have roads in the West. In fact, there is a road every mile going west and every two miles when you go from the American border north. That is an amazing thing, but the Liberals probably would not understand that.

We have to change our system, the elevator system, the collection system, the transportation, the terminals, and the cleaning of grain on the Prairies rather than shipping out a whole bunch of dockage. We could have bulk cars. They could come up to inland terminals and never stop, be loaded continuously and go off to ports where they would be unloaded on ships continuously, as is done with coal. If we could get a turnaround time of seven days we would not need half the box cars we have and there would be more profit in the farmers' pockets. The demurrage about which I spoke today would be gone.

Gilson's report was a start. I believe his report was fair, balanced and staged. Then when we swing in nationally we must use the natural advantage of this country. We are few people sitting on vast resources. We have been able to get away with all sorts of absurdities, Government inefficiencies, federally and provincially. But now we are in an international market in which we have to compete. Within our country we should be doing what we do best. Out West we have millions and millions of acres of tremendous land on the Prairies which can be cultivated easily. We have water flowing from the mountains, which would allow us to irrigate and expand our production enormously, and we have grass lands. All of those grass lands along the east slopes of the Rockies and along our river belts are essentially useless, except for the aesthetic joy of looking at them. But we could run cattle over these grass lands. With their unique stomach system, cattle can turn that dry, dusty grass into protein, red meat. It is far more efficient to ship meat because one pound of meat uses up six or seven pounds of grain. It is far easier to send a pound of beef to eastern Canada or California than it is to ship the grain.

The West has a natural advantage. Ontario has other natural advantages, and so does Quebec. If we would as a nation just do what we do best and then ship things back and forth, there is no nation in the world that could touch us because Canada is made up of one-half of 1 per cent of world population but we have the resources of a whole half of a continent. Can you imagine what 24 million Japanese would do with this country, Mr. Speaker?

Our major complaint is Quebec interference. I want to speak to the Minister and to my colleagues from Quebec because I know the positions of these parties. We go back to our western ridings and we support, and stand up and take heat for the bilingual policy so our Quebec friends can feel comfortable in this nation. My son is in a French immersion program. We are doing our very best. We supported Hon. Members from Quebec in the referendum process, but we have constituencies as well. The Minister must realize that the Gilson process was acceptable to a large area of the West, particularly to the livestock industry. Even his proposal of fifty-fifty could be lived with, but when the Quebec caucus came out and publicly said, "You are not going to do it, Mr. Minister, or we will vote against you and you will fall", it had an effect upon us in the West. It made it difficult for us to be federalists. The Minister needs to be sensitive to that issue.

We must ensure competition because railways have been in a monopoly position in the West. We can all tell great stories of injustices at the hands of CPR. If we paid the money to the producer, he would then have the possibility of competing. In Alberta there has been an enormous amount of research on helium-filled dirigibles and taking the equipment into the North over the muskeg. It could be part of a collection system. It would not be unreasonable to anticipate a pipeline system within the next ten years. This could easily be done. For example, people need water. We could have pipelines to ship grain and water down to California. We could process grain so that we were sending protein rather that what we send. But this Bill enhances the railway monopoly. It is not comprehensive. It is a conspiracy between the NDP and the NFU to support the CPR, by the looks of it.

Mr. Nystrom: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: Well, the NDP wants to pay them. I want to pay the farmer. This Bill increases the cost to pure grain producers. I have sat down with some grain producers in my riding and they have told me honestly and openly that their net profit today is exactly equivalent to the Crow benefit. The price of grain dropped from over $6 per bushel in 1980-81 to $4.63. The costs of production have risen in many cases 150 per cent to 200 per cent. They say, particularly as a result of fuel taxes, that their only net income is the so-called Crow benefit. They tell me that they cannot afford to pay one cent more, and I believe them.

Also this Bill protects the Wheat Pools as an institution. The leaders of the pools, in the best interests of that institution in their judgment, protected the institution. That is fair game. They are entitled to do that, but it was unwise when the pool leaders asked for the support of the Quebec UPA, particularly in the face of the Government document which indicated that there would be no adverse effects in Quebec as a result of changing the Crow. When they did that, they were really unwise because they caused enormous problems in the West with those people who want to fight for the country and want the country to stay together. Although it was done honestly, I think it was unwise. I would never question their integrity or honesty, but it seems the institution of the Wheat Pool has become more important than individual farmers. The Bill will block the rationalization process which is necessary on the western plains so that we as a whole nation can be competitive with the United States, Australia and other countries.

Other Hon. Members have referred to the cap of 31 million tonnes. Clearly that is a disincentive to production on the Prairies. It flies in the face of the agri-food strategy of the Minister of Agriculture. I am anxious to ask him some questions.

Finally, Bill C-155 does not reflect the original process of compromise in the Gilson recommendations. We brought these 60 or 70 groups together. They spent thousands of hours working on and coming up with a compromise. It was just thrown out the window because of politics. That is really a kick. If I were a member of any of those groups, first I would be hurt and then I would be angry. They are the agricultural leaders in the West. Why do we not listen to them? It is the worst of all worlds—we now have an enhanced railway monopoly, no livestock diversification, nothing to help secondary processing and no enhanced competitiveness within or outside the country.

It was indicated as fairly as it could be in the letter from the Alberta Minister of Agriculture and Minister of Economic Development of the Hon. Minister of Transport, in which they set forth in decent language the disincentives vis-à-vis the livestock industry. Therefore I say that we must make changes because this plan, without changes to help the livestock or secondary processing industries, will not help the nation as a whole. We should enable people to compete and get their livestock into the United States market. If that were done, we would have more money and more wealth to redistribute in the nation than we have ever seen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) a question. In his speech he indicated that we are being whipped on the international scene. Is the Hon. Member aware, for example, that USDA blames Canada for taking up the slack as a result of the payments to farmers who are reducing their acreage? Is he aware that the United States is complaining about the fact that we are increasing our share in the international market? If he is aware of this and of the payments being made to farmers, how does he propose that Canadian farmers will be able to compete on the international scene? If they have additional payments to make beyond the Crow for the cost of transporting grain, how can they possibly compete?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, because in actual fact when the system becomes inefficient the cost of delivering grain to tidewater becomes far greater than the costs of other nations with which we are competing. We have to do everything to make the system efficient. For example, we have to do everything on the farm—and that has been done—and at the elevator system. We know that elevator charges are about $13 per tonne. There could be many efficiencies made there. When it gets on the railway, that is inefficient; when it goes to the terminals, that is inefficient. We need to approach the matter on a broad, comprehensive scale, whereas Bill C-155 attacks it only from a very narrow perspective. We simply have to compete and put our product at tidewater cheaper than any other nation in the world, and Bill C-155 does not do that.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has given a plausible interpretation of the social, economic and political reasons the agricultural groups of Quebec acted in the way they did, but he has not given us the reason why there was also division in the West. He probably had that part of his speech written on a piece of paper but did not have the time to give it.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the NFU-NDP alliance has one view. They want to have everything socialized, which we know means nationalized. They honestly believe in state capitalism. They honestly believe that a Cabinet in a small bureaucracy can make decisions which are wise for the whole country. Theirs is a matter of ideology. The Wheat Pool leaders, honestly and with high integrity, felt that payments to producers would result in their using other services, perhaps private companies like Cargill. In Alberta there are over 40 trucking companies that are licensed to go to the United States. They are just sitting there, ready to go, and they are Canadian companies.

An Hon. Member: Why the United States?

Mr. Thacker: Because, if we could get into the United States, we could take some grain down to Shelby, Montana and send it out to Seattle on the Burlington Northern. That would be true competition for the CPR, and nothing will bring down the CPR rates faster than competition.

I honestly believe that the Wheat Pool leaders felt they were protecting the institution. When we met with them they said that the Gilson proposals would mean that things would happen too quickly and that they needed extra years. In my mind the Gilson task force consideration involved a sufficient number of years. It did not go to 81 per cent of the farmers until 1989. We disagreed on that. Obviously the Minister felt those leaders were wiser than those of us who wanted him to stick to his original position.

• (1740)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to what the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) had to say. I did not like the undertone of some of his remarks. However, I will leave that up to others. He said he thought Gilson did a good job, which included finally paying 81 per cent of the money to the farmers rather than to the railways. Part of that NDP-NFU alliance, which also opposed paying the money to the farmers in favour of paying it to the railways, includes the Saskatchewan and Manitoba Legislatures unanimously and also, I believe, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). When are the Hon. Member and his colleagues going to get their act together? Do they or do they not favour making the payments to the railroads rather than the farmers, or do they want to pay it to the farmers rather than the railroads? Which way is it?

By the way, it is not just Quebec. For once farmers right across Canada were united on this issue. The farmers from Quebec joined with the farmers on the Prairies in opposing that particular element of the Gilson report. How does the Hon. Member square that with what his colleague for Vegreville has to say?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the United Grain Growers was not part of the group that he has talked to.

Mr. Benjamin: I did not say that.

Mr. Thacker: You said farmers. You said that finally all the farmers in Quebec were united with all the farmers in the West. Of course, that is absolutely untrue.

Mr. Benjamin: I didn't say that.

Mr. Thacker: Sure you did. I heard you say it.

Mr. Benjamin: I did not use the word "all".

Mr. Thacker: I do not remember his words exactly. He said that for a change, finally the farmers of Quebec were in agreement with all the farmers in the West. I want him to know that the UGG was not part of that, 57,000 farmers in the UGG. The Prairie Farm Commodity Coalition was not part of it. They represent a lot. All of the livestock producers were not part of it, and they are farmers. The ranchers were not. Then we go to cow-calf producers, and then to the commercial feedlot operators, the hog producers, the meat processors. Does the Hon. Member know that over the last eight to ten years we have lost six major meat processing plants?

This is what goes on in the West. They see the PQ Government in Quebec taking $2.8 billion of equalization money and setting up artificial subsidies in Quebec so that they can buy our calves and bring them to Quebec. They send grain to Thunder Bay under the Crow rate. They get assistance right to their gate. They feed out the livestock and can beat us. If we stuck to our natural advantages, we would insist that livestock should be produced in the West. That is what they see, public money being used to interfere with natural advantages. It makes our farmers angry, and quite properly so.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for his very clear position on the method of payment. If I heard him correctly, he said he welcomes payments to the producers. I respect and appreciate that, but this morning we heard from the official critic of his Party, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). He recommends that the method of payment be optional. I would like to hear from the Hon. Member whether he supports the position of his colleague on making the method of payment optional or would he still support paying the producers, as he said earlier?

Mr. Thacker: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker, I said that my comments were personal and meant to be frank so that we could have a frank discussion. Personally, I would prefer that 100 per cent go to the producer. The compromise set forth by our official critic is a compromise that I can live with quite happily and go back and sell to my constituents. Contrary to the position of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and the NDP, we do have differences of views in this Party because we represent different legitimate interests. We are not subsumed by the labour-socialist ideology which makes the NDP Members take that position against the best interests of their people. We have arived at a compromise, and I am happy to live with it.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, one other point the Hon. Member was making was about competitiveness in moving grain by truck to Montana and shipping it to Seattle, which I find kind of strange for a Canadian who feels strongly about Canada to say. Is he aware that with full commercial grain rates, the rail system in the prairie northern United States is in worse condition than ours? They do not have sufficient rolling stock. Those who have to truck grain do so as a last resort to Seattle, a distance of 900 miles from eastern Montana. Is he aware of all that, even though the American railways and the truckers get the full commercial rates?

Is the Hon. Member saying that Canadian farmers should pay full commercial rates to haul grain, not in Canada but in the United States? Is that what he is saying? He had another alternative, namely dirigibles. I guess every farmer should have his own balloon. As long as we have enough Tories around to provide the hot air to fill them, they will be able to haul grain in hot-air balloons. Surely the Hon. Member cannot be serious in this day and age about that kind of alternative.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member shows a paucity of confusion. I am saying that if we adopt a truly competitive system, people will be free to choose and have the economic strength to do it because it will bring money in their pockets. They will come up with all sorts of ideas. It will be exactly what happened in the 1700s. We finally got away from state capitalism in the forms of kings and monarchs and put the capital into millions of individuals pieces and let individuals make decisions. We created more wealth in this country and in the western world than had been created in the history of mankind. Now we are getting back to state capitalism, except that it is in the form of elected Cabinets. The Hon. Member does not have the vision to imagine what could happen in terms of pipelines, dirigibles or whatever it might be. I used that as an example.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of participating in this debate because, for the people of western Canada, it is the most important debate in the lifetime of Canada and specifically in their lifetime. This Bill proposes to change radically a historic agreement, the Crowsnest Pass Agreement of 1897, which was enshrined in statute in 1925.

That statutory rate guarantees to the producers of western Canada a freight rate of one-half cent per mile for the movement of certain grains. What the Minister is proposing in this Bill is a very radical change. It is changing a historical agreement, one that the western grain producers have depended upon all their lives.

The Minister said that we should pass this Bill in all its stages by June 30. We are involved in the second reading. There will be committee hearings and then third reading. Why does he want it passed by June 30? He says he wants the new rates to be effective for the next crop year which starts August 1. I wonder how vital it is that this legislation be passed so hurriedly. The rates have been in effect for some 86 years. The railways have not fared too badly until the last few years. At the expense of the Government of Canada or of the grain producers, the railroads were given 15,280 hopper cars. The Government of Canada has indicated that it would supply to them, without cost, an additional 3,840 cars in the years 1982 to 1985. Over the years they have been paid substantial branch line subsidies, all taxpayers' money. The Prairie branch line rehabilitation program has supplied the railways with some $402 million to date. In his announcement, the Minister indicated that another $670 million will be provided for branch line rehabilitation to the end of the decade.

No one argues, Mr. Speaker, that these programs are not necessary, but why the rush? Why does the legislation have to be passed by June 30? Of course, the Minister will argue that all of the interested agricultural organizations have had the opportunity of input into Dr. Gilson's study, and that there is really no need to go into an extensive study about how the Parties feel about the change. I would point out to the Minister that Parliament and parliamentarians were not privy to the Gilson hearings.

The feelings of the participants in the Gilson hearings were far from unanimous. What Dr. Gilson brought down in his report was a compromise, or what he felt was in the best interests of the agricultural community. There was a situation where some favoured the Gilson report and some did not. So what happened? There were rumblings from eastern Canada, particularly from Quebec, so the Minister flew a trial balloon. In February of this year, he went to western Canada and made a big announcement. He called it the western transportation initiative. I point out that he made this announcement in Winnipeg, not in Parliament where it should have been made and where Members of Parliament would have had the opportunity of commenting on it and asking him questions, about it.

In his announcement of his western transportation initiatives, he changed Gilson's recommendation that the railway should receive 19 per cent and the producers should receive 18 per cent. He compromised and said, "Okay, we will make it fifty-fifty because there is some concern." At the same time, he and other Ministers made pronouncements of other massive amounts of money that would be spent throughout Canada. That is bribery. He talked about a $3.7 billion program, and really, if you read the report of the Transport Committee of April 26, 1983, where the Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), questioned Mr. N. Mulder, the Administrator of Canadian Surface Transportation, Transport Canada, Mr. Mulder admitted that the $3.7 billion that the Minister was talking about would come from the Western Development Fund, money that belonged to western Canadians, money taken from western Canada. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) stood up and tried to pretend that they were giving western Canada something when what in fact they were doing was giving westerners back their own money, taking it from one pocket and putting it into the other.

Even with this bribery and this promise of all that money, the Minister was still in trouble, so then he tried an $850,000 advertising campaign. He advertised in the newspapers in the East and in the West. He even persuaded the Minister of Agriculture to contribute some $200,000 from the agricultural budget to help him in his advertising campaign. He was supported by "Big Daddy", the Minister of Agriculture, the man with the green hat who is the friend of the farmer. The Minister of Agriculture was out there selling the program as well. He is the man who took two and a half years to release $9 million of farmers' money to research and who will not consent to dual labelling in metric and Imperial on farm chemicals, despite the fact that the farmers want it. That is the friend of the farmers. He was supporting the Minister of Transport.

So we had an $850,000 advertising program. As I said, it was dishonest advertising because the advertising in Quebec said one thing and it said the reverse in western Canada. The Minister is shaking his head because there was some suggestion that the people who translated the advertisement were in error. Well, I had the French advertisement translated by the official Translation Bureau of the House of Commons and it was there reverse of what was said in western Canada.

Mr. Pepin: It was a lousy translation, that is the truth.

Mr. Neil: I will let the Minister have the translation.

Mr. Pepin: Yes, please.

Mr. Neil: I have a smattering of French, and when he argued about it, I was able to compare the translation with the actual French, and I was satisfied that the translation from the Translation Bureau was correct.

The advertising campaign did not work, so then the Minister was being countered by the Saskatchewan Government and by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, and then Quebec M.P.s put on the pressure. He was being pressured, so then he changed his provision and brought in this Bill. He brought in this Bill, and the result is that he is now caught in the squeeze. There is no one that is really happy with him. He has some qualified support, but he has no unanimous support. He has placed himself in an impossible position and he says, "Either pass the Bill by June 30 or we will undoubtedly have to bring in closure".

We must be realistic, Mr. Speaker. When looking at this Bill, we must forget about all the money that has been promised to the East and we must forget about the small amount of money that has been promised to the West, and we must look at the bare bones of the Bill. We must ask ourselves what the issue is. It boils down to this: this Bill is simply a measure that will increase the cost of moving grain that the western producer will pay from one half cent a tonne mile to give times that by 1985-86, and possibly ten times that by 1990.

I suppose the question to be asked now is, should the historic rate be changed to make the producers pay more? There is no question and no argument by the National Farmers Union and the NDP but that the railroads are losing money for transporting grain. There is a question, of course, as to the amount of their loss. The figures of Snavely and the figures of the railways are in question, but there is consensus that the railways are losing money, and I think there is consensus that the railways' loss should be covered.

Now, the question is how should the loss of the railways be covered. I see, Mr. Speaker, that it is six o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

CANADA POST CORPORATION—COMPETING WITH WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS FOR ADVERTISING REVENUE

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, this evening I should like to elaborate on a very serious matter that I have brought up in the House on two occasions.

The editor of a weekly community newspaper in my riding brought to my attention the fact that postmasters in northern Alberta and in northern Saskatchewan are now soliciting advertising from local businesses. This advertising is then printed in a flyer and given free distribution through the postal system.

Most of the small weekly newspapers, as I am sure all Hon. Members know, depend on local advertisers for their livelihood. These advertisers recognize the very real contribution that the weekly newspaper makes to the community. They also recognize that the newspaper, usually with the same editor, the same publisher and the same reporter, provides an information service to the community.

These community newspapers are now finding themselves under attack from a Crown corporation that has access to the Canadian taxpayer's dollar, as well as the revenues coming to it from the weekly newspapers themselves. These newspapers must use the post office for their wide distribution but the post office is their direct competition.

I cannot think of anything the Government has done through a Crown corporation that is more sinister or unfair than this. Weekly newspapers are run, on the whole, by very dedicated individuals who are committed to the community. In many cases these individuals put everything they have into the newspapers. It is said that these people have ink in their blood and that is why they become involved. They do not get involved to make millions of dollars. I submit they become involved because of real sense of commitment to the community, a real sense of commitment to getting the news to the people in the community. They are often subsidized by local businessmen who appreciate that they are doing a service to the community and who therefore advertise in the weekly newspaper.

The post office, a Crown corporation, has now directed every postmaster in the country to go after the same advertisers. It will create an advertising flyer. In effect it is saying "Advertise with us, it is cheaper. Advertise with us and get free distribution through the mail. Advertise with us and you will get more results." It is taking away the livelihood of the weekly newspaper.

I emphasize again, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I can think of that is more sinister or unfair than that mighty Crown corporation, Canada Post, using revenue it receives when the community newspaper deposits its papers for delivery to go into competition with that newspaper, on the basis that the post office will distribute the flyer more cheaply. It is telling the small-businessman that this is the way to save money; "Don't advertise with the local weekly, advertise with us." This is criminal, Mr. Speaker. The House should immediately ask the Minister responsible for Canada Post to inform the President of Canada Post that he should cease and desist this practice immediately, and get out of the business of distributing these flyers.

• (1805)

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) asked the Minister last week why Canada Post was competing directly with small weekly newspapers by selling advertising in flyers to be printed and distributed by the Post Office to all those who receive mail.

The Hon. Member will no doubt recall that two years ago, a bill was passed to create the Canada Post Corporation. The Corporation is now a commercial enterprise, and the Act specifies that "the Corporation, in carrying out its objects, shall have regard to the need to conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis."

It should therefore not come as a surprise that Canada Post and its employees should be attempting to increase revenue by making available to Canadians the various services they are able to offer.

I would therefore like to take a few moments to explain to the Hon. Member how Admail operates and to tell him about the broad range of services Canada Post is offering Canadians, with the co-operation of Canadian commercial enterprises.

Mr. Speaker, commercial enterprises have been advertising their products and services through the mail for many years. Well before the existence of numerous small and larger newspapers, enterprising businessmen had started to use the mail to advertise their products.

Through the mail order system, considered the best way to sell a product, it is possible to eliminate the complex distribution process that is necessary for retail sales of mass-produced goods. For instance, the nicest layout is no longer needed in order to compete. At all stages—production, inventory planning and control, distribution, marketing, and so forth—the process relies entirely on direct communications with the customer.

Similarly, in the marketing of services, such as insurance, for instance, the firm benefits from Admail's profitability because it does not have to pay the high cost of personal visits. Admail does increase profitability, since unprofitable customers may be eliminated and efforts concentrated on personalized sales to people who reply to invitations to write for further information and therefore appear to be willing to buy.

When considered as a major marketing tool, there is no limit to the use that may be made of Admail. Its applications are limited only by its users' imagination and innovative spirit. The same basic business requirements apply to Admail: a marketable product and a market. Admail is simply an advertising tool through which the product can be sold and marketed.

As an advertising media, and I shall be brief on this, Admail plays the vital role of a channel through which advertisers may communicate or circulate their advertising. The mail reaches people directly and allows advertisers to choose among Admail's various applications.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, the postmaster who sells Admail and his employer's other goods and services, deserves commendation rather than blame. He is a modern, aggressive, entrepreneurial businessman. In so doing, he contributes to the success of the corporation that performs an essential services for the benefit of all Canadians.

AGRICULTURE—REQUEST FOR DUAL MEASUREMENT LABELLING OF FARM CHEMICALS. (B) REQUEST THAT DISCUSSIONS BE HELD WITH FARM ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, several years ago the Government forced manufacturers of farm chemicals to discontinue labelling their chemicals in imperial measure and to label them in metric only. The result of this, Mr. Speaker, has been confusion, because spraying equipment, as most farmers know, is built to imperial standards. A farmer who has a can of chemical which is coded in metric has to go through a complicated series of calculations to determine the correct measure of chemicals which he applies to his crop. Errors do arise, Mr. Speaker, many errors, and the damage to crops is very costly.

In a Globe and Mail article on December 22 the Ontario Federation of Agriculture is reported as having asked the Province of Ontario to give both imperial measures and metric measures in its chemical use guides. I understand that subsequent to that the Ontario Federation of Agriculture made representations to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who apparently has turned a deaf ear.

It is interesting to note that a chap by the name of Donald Crowe of Walleceburg reported in the December 22 issue of The Globe and Mail that he almost lost his oat crop because he and a provincial researcher had not accurately converted the amount of pesticides from litres per hectare to gallons per acre. They were about to put two and a half times the proper mixture on the crop. Had it not been for someone from the research station phoning out, they would have destroyed the crop.

Last Friday, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Agriculture a followup question to one I had asked him several months ago. The original question was whether or not, based on representations from the Ontario Federation of Agriculture,

Members of the Opposition, and others, would he discuss with the Minister in charge of metric the feasibility of changing the regulations to allow labelling in both metric and imperial. I received a very convoluted answer to the first question. I received a similar convoluted answer to the question I asked last Friday. This is not uncommon of the Minister of Agriculture who maintains he is a friend of the farmers, but certainly does not display his friendliness to the farmers when he ignores such a simple matter as a change in regulations to allow dual labelling. The Minister ended up by saying that the Hon. Member would like to drag us back to the 18th century, or something like that. That is quite an answer from the Minister to such a very serious question.

I would like the Minister to tell me what is wrong with dual labelling, metric and imperial? What harm would it do? It is a simple matter, and it is what the farmers want. It is causing damage because of errors in calculations. The chemical companies are very happy to label in both metric and imperial, but the Minister says no. He is the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister who is charged with looking after the farmers' interests. There is nothing wrong with bilingual labelling but apparently there is something wrong with dual labelling in metric and Imperial.

• (1815)

I would be interested to hear the Parliamentary Secretary explain to me and not only the farmers of Ontario, but of Canada, what is wrong or what damage could be caused by dual labelling. With dual labelling those young people who understand metric could use metric, and those older people who do not understand metric and have used Imperial for many years could continue to use Imperial without having to use a calculator to go through the complicated procedure of converting metric measurement to Imperial. It is as simple as that. I would like to hear an answer to that question from the Member who is responding.

Mr. Maurice Bossy (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to respond to the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). I must say that I am sure the Hon. Member recognizes that the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is likely the most sensitive man to the needs of the farmer of anyone in Canada.

The conversion of pesticides to metric was undertaken only after broad consultation and discussion. All industries and representatives of the various agricultural and food system organizations involved in the National Metric Conversion Program stressed that once the metric system was adopted only metric terms should be used.

The Government cannot support any initiative that will undermine metric conversion. Favourable experience in other parts of the world supported the decision to pursue a hard conversion, an approach that has received broad support in many conversion programs.

In order to bring about uniform conversion with minimum disruption, the Department of Agriculture has produced a standard set of metric conversion tables for pesticides and a series of pamphlets dealing with the particular metric terminology used in various crop production programs.

Mr. Neil: They were wrong last year.

Mr. Bossy: The Minister and his Department believe that this effort has been successful and feel that any disruption is now largely behind us.

Provincial agricultural departments and agricultural pesticide companies also have extensive programs to assist the farmer in dealing with the use of metric labelled pesticides.

Since 1979, federal and provincial Governments have been involved in an ongoing educational and public awareness program. These efforts seem to be producing results. A case in point is that a series of tests were run at evening classes in Manitoba in February of 1981 to determine whether farmers could undertake the calculations required for spraying, using both Imperial and metric systems. Interestingly enough, the rate of error was much higher when calculations were done in Imperial units.

The Government appreciates that any change-over period and learning process is trying, perhaps particularly for farmers who use a varied range of measurements in their daily lives. Farmers in Britain, Australia and New Zealand have found that the advantages of metric far outweigh any temporary irritation. I think the same is true of our Canadian producers.

I hope I have been able to explain why continued use of only metric terminology is a must. Indeed, if we were to revert to a system of dual labelling, I would have to view it as a backward step.

RAILWAYS—CROWSNEST PASS RATE—RESOLUTIONS OF LEGISLATURES OPPOSING PROPOSED CHANGES. (B) JUSTIFICATION FOR MINISTER'S POSITION. (C) RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT POLICY

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, on April 27 I asked the Minister some questions concerning the consensus in the West with regard to changing the Crow rate which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had said would be essential before he would touch the Crow rate. I received a rather cryptic response from the Minister, indicating that he was aware of it. But his awareness did not seem to translate into any kind of action. There seems to be a dichotomy between his head knowledge and his ability to respond to it.

I wish to draw the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Flis) to the fact that there were two resolutions passed in provincial legislatures. One was passed on March 15, 1983, by the Manitoba legislature, which consists of Conservative and New Democratic Party Members. A similar resolution was passed on February 22, 1983 by the Saskatchewan legislature, which consists of Conservative Party and New Democratic Party Members.

There have also been hearings in the Province of Manitoba; the agricultural committee, which consists of Members of all political Parties in Manitoba, has been travelling around that Province. Of course there are no Liberal Members on that particular committee. That is understandable because there are no Liberal Members in the Manitoba legislature. That is also understandable because they are not really in tune with the needs of farmers in the West. It was interesting that people from the Liberal Party made presentations and voiced their opposition to the Government action at these hearings. We heard also from people who were supporters of the Conservative Party, and supporters of the New Democratic Party as well.

I have seen solidarity in the West on the position. I know the Parliamentary Secretary is very concerned about solidarity in Poland, as he often discusses it with me. I hasten to add that he is very concerned about solidarity and consensus and wants to pull the sliver out of the eye of the Communist Party in Poland, but he cannot seem to see the beam in solidarity at home. This is the solidarity which I want to impress upon the Government. I just wonder why it is not responding to the feeling of consensus in the West. The response of the Minister was very inadequate. I hope I will receive a more adequate response from the Parliamentary Secretary today.

At least nine objections were included in the Manitoba resolution concerning the policy of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). I want to mention these for the edification of the Parliamentary Secretary. First, it was indicated that this particular proposal did not recognize the principle of statutory rates for grain. It did not provide cost protection for farmers. It did not recognize that grain must be sold in a competitive international market. It did not remove the distortion in rates by including all prairie crops and their products under the new structure. It did not deal with unacceptably high taxation levels and farm input costs such as fuel. It did not provide sufficient performance guarantees for future growth and development of all facets of prairie agriculture. It prescribed an unacceptable limit of 31.1 million tonnes for subsidized shipment. It provided central Canada with further artificial processing and livestock incentives. It is not supported by a consensus of western Canadians. At least nine concerns were indicated in that resolution.

Farmers in my area will be hit very badly because they will have to pay higher freight rates to move their grain. This will definitely have an impact upon their ability to stay in business. Bankruptcies have already increased greatly in the farming community.

In the second part of my question to the Minister I dealt with rail line abandonment. I tried to point out to the Minister as recently as during today's Question Period that the western arm of the CTC has made some 17 decisions for Manitoba. I am very distraught as not one of them has been in favour of the producer. What is the problem? Looking at some 63 decisions that have been made in the West, only nine were in favour of the producers. In other words, nine of those decisions were against applications by the CNR or CPR for abandonment. Nine out of 63 is one out of seven, which is 14 per cent. I know the Parliamentary Secretary used to be a school principal. He is a very honest man, a man of integrity. I could not see him passing one of his students at 14 per cent and saying the student was doing a great job. This is exactly the type of policy we get from the Government of Canada.

I have these concerns because there are many situations unique to constituencies like mine.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are indicating I should wind down. In closing, I want to say that the alternatives are well nigh impossible in my area. To close an elevator and a line at Amaranth means that people will have to cross the Grass River bog. There is no way they can take their trucks there. This week a bridge has been out of operation on that particular line on the Oakland subdivision at Mile 12.3. This has completely paralyzed the entire grain movement in that area. CN has not been able to do anything about it, and we keep getting phone calls in our area. Just imagine what would happen if they had to normally go across that bog.

I trust that the Parliamentary Secretary will have some satisfactory answers other than the cryptic responses I have received from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) which I characterized as hammer and sickle responses. I trust that the Parliamentary Secretary will recognize this solidarity in the West.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and I have debated this topic on many occasions, when he gives me a lift to the airport and while we are waiting for planes. I welcome the opportunity to debate this subject with him further in this chamber. Unfortunately, I am at a bit of a disadvantage because he gets seven minutes and I get three.

The Minister's cryptic answer was probably motivated by the Hon. Member's preoccupation with the double whammy he was trying to put on him, trying to combine abolishing the Crow and the abandonment of branch lines. From today's debate on Bill C-155, the Hon. Member must realize that the opinion is far from unanimous on what to do about the Crow rate. Clearly there was no solidarity today in this Chamber with regard to this Bill.

The Minister to Transport (Mr. Pepin) quoted at length from prominent westerners who called for change to the Crow. The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), a very distinguished Member of this House, said something to the effect that major western farm organizations favoured an increase in the Crow rate. In fact, it seems only the NDP is against a change in the rate, so the Hon. Member's first whammy is at best only half a whammy.

What about the second whammy, the abandonment of branch lines? As the Minister pointed out, we still have the vast majority of branch lines we had at the peak of the rail system back in the 1930s. Over 80 per cent not only still exist, but are guaranteed in the basic network to the year 2000.

The process of abandonment has to be one of the fairest in existence. The Canadian Transport Commission holds hearings whenever objections are raised. The Hon. Member complained during Question Period today that this process is a three-ring circus. Would he prefer that the CTC abandon all hearings, that we not have any hearings through the CTC? Furthermore, decisions of the CTC are always appealable, first to the CTC's own review committee and ultimately through the Governor in Council. Abandonments are often delayed for years after the railways have requested them, giving the local community time to adjust to the loss of the branch line. Therefore, the Hon. Member's double whammy is not much of a whammy at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

IMPLICATIONS OF FUTURE WORK HABITS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, as new technologies advance, Canadians will be working fewer hours and shorter work weeks. The most significant result of this development is the time not spent at a regular job when people individually and collectively can create new technologies that will develop our basic industries and natural resources.

Canadians can exploit their traditional image as hewers of wood and drawers of water. We can, for example, advance new technologies for growing trees, producing higher volumes of grain, and cleaning up our great resources of water.

Someone once said to me that he can imagine a time when he will work three days a week. He will be able to devote over 50 per cent of his time to his own interests, and yet retain the same basic income and maintain his standard of living.

Imagine the benefit to this country from people with new ideas and new concepts. It will be very exciting, but we have to identify what people are going to do with their time.

There is potential for an exciting future, but unless it is properly planned it could be disastrous. Canadians will have to change their way of life so that the time not spent at a regular job is less passive and more structured and productive to provide self fulfillment. Canadians can become a creative society.

And so I ask the Government today to ensure this creative future for us and recognize and study ways to deal with the social implications that will arise from the new technologies.

METRIC CONVERSION

DENIAL OF VOLUNTARY CHOICE—SIZE OF COMMISSION'S BUDGET

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, on the page opposite the editorial page of today's Globe and Mail is an article by one of this nation's most illustrious barristers, Mr. Morris Shumiatcher of Saskatchewan. His article is entitled, "Going Down the Drain with Metric", and its thrust is that the decimal system is far less practical for everyday use than is the duo-decimal system that was the free and voluntary choice of the people of Canada before this Government, with its mania for controlling people and things, stepped in.

The lead editorial in today's Toronto Sun is on the same theme. Amongst others, it makes the point that, while the U.K. and the U.S. have abandoned their metric commissions, ours has gone from having a budget of $44,000 a year to spending some $32 million annually. Mind you, it does serve to provide employment for 20 commissioners, 19 of whom are "Liberal hacks".

That this issue is so alive after these many years of Liberal pressure and propaganda speaks volumes about how deeply Canadians still feel, not only about the practicality of the metric system but about the Government's tactics in forcing its adoption. When will the Government admit that on this issue above all others it has misread both the requirement and the public will? Metric must be voluntary.

TRADE UNIONS

CALL FOR FREEDOM IN POLAND

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, the Government of Canada is surely aware that in Poland Mr. Lech Walesa and nine other unionists representing a majority of Polish workers sent a letter this week to their Government calling for the release of those convicted for union activity and political beliefs, and reinstatement of persons fired for union work or membership.

The union leaders pointed out that "disregarding the will of society can profit neither the Government nor society". The letter further noted that "re-establishment of union freedom is one of the indispensable elements of a much desired and genuine national agreement".

The New Democratic Party urges the Government of Canada to voice its support for the re-establishment of free trade unions in Poland, in the strongest terms possible, and actively to seek unanimous support at the International Labour Organization to be held in Geneva at the beginning of June.

S.O. 21

PARLIAMENTARY REFORM

PROCEDURES APPLICABLE TO CONFIDENCE AND NON-CONFIDENCE MOTIONS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, a curious anomaly exists in Parliamentary procedure. Not infrequently a Member of Parliament must vote along with other Members of his or her Party on a resolution which he or she favours but which he or she must oppose on the grounds that the vote is a confidence vote. Voting against it would defeat the Party.

The rational question is: why must there be a separation of voting in Parliament into two broad categories, confidence votes and non-confidence votes? The parliamentary rules indicate that all expenditures of money are considered confidence votes, as are resolutions arising out of the Throne Speech. As for non-confidence votes, these include motions in Private Members Bills and Bills proposed by the Opposition on so-called Opposition days. However, each year the Opposition may declare not more than two of these motions as confidence motions. Accordingly the Government in power must vote against these motions whether it agrees or disagrees with them.

It is little wonder that the general public labels politicians as primarily interested in maintaining themselves elected or ensuring future election, rather than supporting enlightened and constructive legislation.

• (1110)

I feel that the rationale for having these two broad categories of motions should be discussed in some detail before the Committee on Parliamentary Reform for clarification and possible revision.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

APPLICATION TO UNBORN INFANTS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, Dr. Jerome Lejeune, professor of fundamental genetics at the University of Paris, and a world reknowned authority in this field, has stated unequivocally that life begins at conception, that there is no diversity among his fellow scientists as to the truth of this statement, and that they are at a loss to understand the continual controversy regarding this matter.

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms as it is now constituted does not recognize and does not apply to the fetus or the unborn as a living person. This is one of the reasons, Madam Speaker, that I and 23 other Members of Parliament voted against the amended Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Section 7 of the Charter gives everyone the right to life, liberty, security of the person, and the right not to be deprived of the same except by due process of the law. This right must also apply to the living unborn fetus because such persons are obviously not in a position to speak for themselves. It is up to us to speak on their behalf to save and protect their lives.

Therefore, I call upon the Government to correct this monstrous inequity in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms by making the necessary changes and thus eliminate the wilful slaughter and murder of some 60,000 to 80,000 Canadians every year across Canada.

DISADVANTAGES TO WESTERN HOG INDUSTRY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, this is the relevant part of a telegram from a constituent:

—our business is pig breeding. We are proud of our western Canadian base and of our accomplishments as a world exporter of breeding stock and a major supplier to the industry in western Canada. We now face legislation which threatens our future. We see the impact so great so as to have us consider moving our base to a location favoured with a better future freer of political interference.

—concerning the Crow question we totally oppose the capitulation to Quebec as aided and abetted by the wheat pool bureaucrats. We fully support the 67,000 farmer commodity coalition position that Gilson compromise be adopted completely.

We feel the Pepin proposal of 50 per cent to producers, 50 per cent to the railroads with a review is absolutely the furthest we can afford to go.

The current legislation before Parliament will cost our own operations $217,000 in direct feed cost disadvantage each year. This type of distortion over time will reduce and then eliminate our customers and industry and us with them.

—secure a future for diversified agriculture in western Canada. Failure to get amendments will mean the sentencing of western agriculture to primary grain production, marketing its grain through an inefficient handling system reliant on subsidies to compete in world markets.

Bill C-155 unless amended, will impair and perhaps destroy the hog industry—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis).

INCOME TAX

COMPLICATED NATURE OF TAX RETURN FORMS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, it is becoming more and more obvious that the Income Tax Act and the forms are far too complicated for the average Canadian to understand. In 1979, 43 per cent of the returns submitted were revised by the Income Tax Department. In 1980 that figure grew to 45 per cent, and in 1981 it was 46 per cent. When almost half of the returns submitted have to be revised by the Income Tax Department, it is an indication that the form is too complicated.

In addition, I would point out to the House that the federal Government sends refunds to 11 million Canadians each year. That is 75 per cent of Canadians who submitted returns. Clearly, the income tax tables are adjusted and weighted in favour of the federal Government. I suggest to the House that the Government should look into this. First, why the form not be simplified and, second, why is the federal Government charging 75 per cent of Canadians too much income tax as a result of the income tax tables?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ABSENCE OF MINISTERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise to express concern about the absence of some crucial Ministers. In fact there are now 36 Ministers in the cabinet. I had some questions for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on an international matter.

Mr. Nielsen: There are only five Ministers here now.

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister is not here. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) is not here. Then I had a question for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). He is not here. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) is not here. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is not here. The Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) is not here, nor is the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne). I have named over a half a dozen Ministers with whom we intended to raise questions.

The point is not, of course, that every day Ministers should be here. We understand they have obligations. But there are 36 Members of Cabinet and there are only seven present in the House this morning. That is not acceptable in terms of a Ministry which has a sense of responsibility to the people of Canada.

• (1115)

I conclude with the observation that it is Friday the thirteenth. That is normally a day when bad things happen. Normally we are not pleased with the answers we receive, but we do not think this is an appropriate response even for a Liberal Cabinet on Friday the thirteenth.

AIR CANADA

SELECTION OF MONTREAL HEADQUARTERS—ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the Minister's non-answers yesterday about the criminal investigation into the activities of the Chairman of Air Canada, and in view of the amazing nonchalance of the Prime Minister in allowing his friend to continue in office pending the outcome of the investigation, could the Minister tell the House that the investigation involves allegations that the Chairman of Air Canada fraudulently conspired with Montreal developers Isaac Gelber, Bernard St. Jacques and Pierre Jolicœur to receive secret kickbacks of $3.6 million in the relocation of Air Canada's headquarters in Montreal, contrary to Section 423(1(d) and 338(1) of the Criminal Code?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the answer has been given now at least 15 times. My hon. friend would probably like the Minister of Justice or me to say something and then he could interpret it as a guilt accusation on our part of the Chairman of Air Canada. He is a lawyer. I think he respects that no one is guilty without having been charged with anything. There is no presumption of guilt in our system of law. I suggest that anything I could have said in the past or could say now could be interpreted as that. Consequently, the position of the Government all through this—and I dislike it as much as my hon. friend in terms of not yet having the report of the RCMP—has been not to talk about it. I have referred to it so many times that I am even bored with it myself.

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate part of the Minister's answer. He is quite right; this is a delicate matter which can be distasteful.

MINISTER'S TELEPHONE CALL TO CHAIRMAN

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, this is not an ordinary situation of a Canadian citizen being investigated. This is a public official of a Crown corporation who is still continuing in office, even though a policeman on the beat who is under investigation in any type of affair is suspended until the investigation is completed.

I find it intolerable that the Minister or the Minister of Justice, inside or outside the House, has not made a statement about the investigation, as to when it started, its status, and when it will be concluded, notwithstanding the fact that this Minister in early December, according to his answer in Hansard on December 20, 1982, telephoned the Chairman of Air Canada to warn him about the criminal investigation long before the RCMP raided the Chairman's offices and home. In view of that fact, could the Minister tell the House what he told the Chairman when he telephoned him to warn him about the investigation? Is it not really a double standard of justice, to warn someone under criminal investigation? Is that what happens to other citizens?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, it is precisely because there is not a double standard of justice that we are not able to answer my hon. friend's question. The rule of law, as he ought to know, applies equally to everyone. What he is trying to do is to establish selective standards for the rule of law so that in those cases where he wants more information he would have it. That is not the tradition of this country and I hope it never will be. I am sorry my hon. friend cannot live up to our traditions.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not have to take any lectures on political or legal morality from the Minister of Justice at all, especially when the Government seems to be more concerned about protecting the reputation of its political friend than the reputation of Air Canada, which will have a stain and a cloud over it as long as this matter remains undefined.

REASON FOR CALL

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, since the Minister of Justice gave a little longer answer than he usually does, does he consider it part of the normal procedures of justice that a Minister of Transport telephones the Chairman in early December to warn him that he is under criminal investigation, long before the police have had a chance to raid the office and find the documents which are part of the subject of investigation? What kind of double standard is that?

• (1120)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I understand, with respect to the small matter that my hon. friend raised about the telephone call, that the call of the Minister of Transport was authorized by the investigating body, the RCMP. He obviously does need a lecture. He obviously does not undersand our traditions or he would not get up here, day after day, in a manner in which he knows would be contrary to all our traditions in this country to answer. He should understand that. He should give some consideration to his role as a Member of Parliament.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ontario.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, further to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Oshawa, I was going to address a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who, I understand, will be in the House some time later today. Therefore I would like to defer my question until then.

Madam Speaker: How many times do I have to say that if Hon. Members do not want to ask their question at a particular time, the only thing they need to is not rise and I will not recognize them? If they rise, I assume they want to ask a question. It takes a lot of time to say, "I cannot ask a question because the Minister is not here."

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADA LANDS MIRABEL LIMITED—ORDER IN COUNCIL DEALING WITH OFFICIALS' SALARIES

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Public Works. Earlier in the week he attempted to answer questions with regard to Canada Lands Mirabel Limited wherein it is suspected that, by virtue of Order in Council and application to Treasury Board, through job reclassification certain people were able to avoid the six and five restraint on salary raises. On Tuesday last the Minister was asked why an original Order in Council was revoked just two days after the issue was raised in the House of Commons, and replaced by a subsequent Order in Council dealing with the same matter. He failed to answer that on Tuesday. I wonder whether he would take this opportunity to do so.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, perhaps I can assist the Hon. Member. The Order in Council first issued did not make clear that the Order in Council was being issued pursuant to Section 16 of the Public Service Compensation Restraint Act and was being published because the compensation plan in question conformed to the requirements of the six and five program, and that the directors of the Canada Lands Corporation had stipulated in writing that that compensation plan, conforming as it did to the six and five program, would not be changed during the life of the program. We simply wanted to make that clear to avoid the kind of misunderstanding which my hon. friend is trying to clear up, and I appreciate his question in that regard.

REQUEST THAT SALARY SCALE BE FILED

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, it will be a great day for clearing up misunderstandings, because it is a natural suspicion that reclassification is done deliberately to avoid six and five and to favour those in the higher income brackets and not those in the lower-income brackets. In order to avoid that and to clear up any misunderstanding or suspicion, and I direct this to either Minister who is capable of answering, would they file the salaries of those involved in the Crown corporation, Canada Lands Mirabel Limited, before the initiation of the six and five program, and file the salaries that presently exist today? That would clear up any misunderstanding whatsoever.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I will be very happy to consult with my hon. friend, the Minister responsible on this. I should point out that the compensation plan in question and the reclassification system were under discussion at the time the six and five law was passed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: In order to go into effect, the increase that would have ordinarily been permitted under the Public Service Compensation Restraint Act, as I recall it, was actually somewhat less than 6 per cent, but I would be very happy to consult the responsible Minister so that we can provide further details and provide the reassurance which, quite properly, my hon. friend is seeking.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

LAUNCHING OF INFORMATION PROGRAM ON CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence and the Prime Minister, I will direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence.

• (1125)

Yesterday we learned that the Department of National Defence has decided to mount an information program headed by an official from NATO headquarters in Brussels, which will include a 40 minute slide show and a resource kit for speakers, that is designed to convince Canadians of the Government's wisdom in testing the air launched Cruise missile in Canada, a program that the Minister admitted yesterday in committee would be biased. Can the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence tell the House on what basis the Government decided that such a program would be necessary, and can he give us an idea of what this program would cost?

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I might answer the Hon. Member in this way. The subject of nuclear warfare is a very complex one, and using nuclear weapons as a deterrent requires a very profound knowledge of situations leading to the present conditions. I believe that this kind of information has not been adequately presented to the Canadian public. If anything, it has been biased on the side of those who feel that this deterrent mounted by NATO is proliferating the arms race and is, in a way, contributing to the insecurity of the country. It is therefore, very important in order to achieve a balance that the Department of National Defence place the complexities of the issue on the table and allow the public to make a decision. I feel that what we have been seeing in the press has been biased toward downplaying the goal of the Department of National Defence, which is to create peace on the basis of using deterrence. As far as the—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

USE OF TAXPAYERS' MONEY FOR PROGRAM

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the same Parliamentary Secretary. I find it surprising that the Government can commit money to a program that it has admitted it has not agreed to as yet. I would also like to point out that the umbrella agreement clearly states that the United States shall bear all costs and expenditures incurred in the Test and Evaluation program. Will the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence tell us whether that commitment applies to the information program? Specifically, will he assure us that no Canadian taxpayers' money will be spent on this program that is designed to sell an American weapons system?

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think that there are two components to that question. One is that undoubtedly the costs that will be incurred in maintaining and carrying out the test will certainly be the responsibility of the American Government. The cost of informing the public as to the complexities and problems associated with nuclear warfare will be borne by the budget of the Department of National Defence. I might inform the Hon. Member that no advertising company has been hired and no extra facilities are being used. The cost of spreading this information that will create a balance in the country will be borne completely within the budget of the Department of National Defence.

PETRO-CANADA

EXPLORATION FOR CHINESE OFFSHORE OIL RESOURCES

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The other day, Bill Hopper, the President of Petro-Canada, our state-owned oil company, stated that one of the reasons Petro-Canada was involved in spending Canadian taxpayer dollars developing offshore oil resources off mainland China was that Petro-Canada hoped to access oil that it may find off mainland China to Canada because Canada is still importing oil. Is it the mandate of Petro-Canada to reach oil self-sufficiency in Canada by developing China's offshore oil reserves?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as I explained the other day, Petro-Canada has been invited, along with 45 other companies from around the world, to bid on the prospect lands off the coast of China. It would be a good commercial proposition for Petro-Canada. One of the possible benefits would be that it would be possible, if they find oil and if we in Canada need oil, to import that oil into Canada.

Happily, we are at this time self-sufficient in Canada because we produce as much oil as we consume, but we must be prudent about the future. Because we were invited by China to participate, and because of the commercial relations that specifically western Canada has with China, it was important for us to accept the offer of the Government of China. If a Canadian corporation is in a position to export Canadian technology and improve the commercial relations that Canada has with China, every Member of this House, expecially those from western Canada, should be happy about that.

• (1130)

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, it is good to see that Petro-Canada is going to make China oil self-sufficient with Canadian taxpayers' dollars.

WITHDRAWAL FROM ALBERTA OIL SANDS PROJECT

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources why Petro-Canada is removing itself from the oil sands project in Fort McMurray and northeastern Alberta? Why is it in the doldrums in the Beaufort Sea? Why is it not moving into the offshore of Newfoundland and developing our own oil, for God's sake? I cannot understand the Minister.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as usual the Hon. Member thinks that when he speaks very loudly we will listen more attentively. I have to tell him that Petro-Canada is involved in projects in Canada; it is involved in projects in the North; it is involved off the coast of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, and it is involved in some other projects in Alberta. I hope to be in a position to make some announcements about it.

I am glad the Hon. Member knows there is a role for Petro-Canada in Canada. It is playing a big role. Often some of his friends tell me that there should be no Petro-Canada, but today I am happy to see that the Hon. Member wants even more involvement by Petro-Canada in Canada.

PUBLIC WORKS

COST OF FEDERAL OFFICE BUILDING IN HALIFAX

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works that is almost as farcical as that last answer. Early last week the Minister of State for International Trade announced the construction of a $52 million federal Government office building in Halifax. The regional director of Public Works has said that the $52 million will in fact be $5 million. Can the Minister tell us which of those figures is correct?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member qualified his question as being farcical. That is for him to decide.

I know that the program to put a major building in Halifax is well beyond $5 million. It is a very important construction. It will enhance Halifax and strengthen it as a place where a lot of decentralization of this Government has taken place. I hope the Hon. Member is not complaining that his area, metropolitan Halifax, will benefit from a major asset which is a good, new federal building.

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, I am objecting to the construction of a $52 million office building on the waterfront of Halifax.

NEED FOR HOSPITAL PROJECT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Minister could be more explicit. He says the building will cost much more than $5 billion. His colleague has said it will cost $52 million. This is proposed at a time when we need fast tracking, as he has described it, to get such massive construction programs off the ground quickly in order to put people to work. Would the Minister not feel that it would be more speedy and more appropriate, for example, to consider putting that money into the Camphill hospital project and get that off the ground, so that it could go ahead immediately and provide much needed medical services for Nova Scotians, and very particularly for Canadian veterans?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I do not think it is for me to determine the priorities between two Departments in terms of their needs.

I suspect that the confusion between the figures in the Hon. Member's question, of $5 million and $52 million, may come from the fact that this is intended to be a lease-purchase which is to trigger the use of private sector money. The federal Government would rent from the private sector. That is the approach, and may account for the difference between the $5 million and $52 million. This is a major project, and the figure of $52 million does not appear to me to be very far from the facts.

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

ALLOCATION OF MILK QUOTAS IN ALBERTA

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In late January I drew the Minister's attention to the serious problems affecting the dairy producers of Alberta who had lost their market quota and were facing very serious consequences. At the present time in Alberta some 400 to 500 producers out of a total of 1,800 are without quota. In January the Minister said that if we could demonstrate that there were cases of severe hardship he would take some action. Since the position has deteriorated further, is the Minister now prepared to take action to alleviate this problem?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that I deal with the Canadian Dairy Commission. I report to the House on what the Canadian Dairy Commission does. He knows that the operation of the Canadian Dairy Commission is conducted by the dairy farmers of Canada themselves. They decide how the natural quota will be divided and how cutbacks will take place in an equitable fashion all across the country.

Dairy farmers in Alberta are not being treated differently from dairy farmers in any other part of Canada. Quotas are being administered by farmers themselves, not by me. If there are 500 dairy farmers in Alberta without quota I have not been informed of that. It is news to me that there are 500 without quota. I find it very hard to believe that there would be 500 dairy farmers who have been producing milk either on a straight industrial quota or on quotas through their provincial milk marketing board, who would be without quota. I cannot believe that number of producers could be without quota.

When the Hon. Member brought this matter to my attention, 30 or 40 farmers were affected by a reduction in the quota. It is news to me that there are now 500. It is unbelievable that there would be 500 farmers without any quota.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, for the information of the Minister, the statement has been made by the Chairman of the Alberta Dairy Control Board, Mr. Jim Gylander, that 400 to 500 of Alberta's dairy producers will be out of quota by the end of this month.

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, the Minister also undertook to look into those areas where there was undue hardship. He cannot weasel out of this; he has responsibility for the producers of Canada.

Does the Minister expect these producers to go bankrupt or is he going to undertake his responsibility and act on behalf of these producers? That is his responsibility.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I fully accept my responsibility to the dairy farmers of Canada. We have the best run policy in the world. Does the Hon. Member want something like what is going on in the United States where they are piling up mountains and mountains of produce and spending millions and millions of dollars on subsidies, but still do not know what to do with the produce? They are destroying the markets of other nations, markets that normally belong to Canada.

I met with the dairy farmers of Canada and they are still 100 per cent in accord with the dairy program we are running. They say it is fair under world conditions. The Hon. Member knows that world conditions have shown there is a tremendous surplus of dairy products in the world. Canada still has surplus conditions for industrial powder and butter under a manageable type of operation.

When the Hon. Member asks me to accept my responsibility, I would point out that I do not interfere in the operation of the dairy farmers' organization in Canada. They are running it, and they are doing a good job. It is too bad that they do not meet with the Hon. Member and inform him of what is going on.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

TREATMENT OF INDIAN APPLICANTS FOR LOANS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister who is responsible for the Federal Business Development Bank, or his Parliamentary Secretary. The federal Government has long stated its concern for assisting Indian bands across the country with economic development. It has indicated its interest and support for the development of industrial parks on the reserve lands where appropriate.

We find, however, that when businesses go to the lending institutions to support their applications to build a business on reserve lands, or to start a business in an industrial park on reserve lands, the chartered banks of Canada are willing to support them, other financial institutions are willing to support them, but the one bank that will not lend money, at least in British Columbia, on federal property or Indian lands is the Federal Business Development Bank. Could the Parliamentary Secretary explain why this discrimination is taking place?

• (1140)

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to say that the Government has definitely no policy against lending money to the Indians whether on the reserves or not.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I must say that I am aghast at that response. However, I want to—

Madam Speaker: It was a short answer. I would encourage the Hon. Member to ask a short question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REFUSAL OF LOANS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, this particular problem justifies more of a response than it has received. What I am saying is that at least in the Province of British Columbia—I have not had the opportunity to check in other Provinces—the Federal Business Development Bank is refusing to loan money to leaseholders on Indian lands. There are many, many businesses which are going to the FBDB requesting funds to start businesses on reserve lands and they are told there is no money available for any leaseholder on Indian reserve land. The chartered banks do not have that policy. Other lending institutions do not have that policy. If the parliamentary secretary is unaware of this policy, may I ask him to get in touch with the Federal Business Development Bank officials, and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and resolve this issue immediately?

[Translation]

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member would like some explanations. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that when an Indian on a reserve applies for a loan, the first problem he encounters is the fact that he does not own the land. I realize people would say that he could mortgage his house, and I agree that would be a possibility. The second problem, which is in fact the main one, is that a decision made by one band council is not necessarily binding on a subsequent council. This is a major obstacle to obtaining the best possible guarantees on mortgage loans, and is a very real problem when a loan must be called.

CRIMINAL CODE

ABORTIONS CONDUCTED IN WINNIPEG CLINIC

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. It relates to the Morgentaler clinic in Winnipeg. Up to this point of time the Attorney General in Manitoba has argued that there is nothing wrong with the establishment of a clinic. However, the clinic did not receive hospital status and did not establish a therapeutic abortion committee. Therefore, now that Morgentaler has said that abortions are being performed, it is obviously in contravention of the Criminal Code of Canada.

While I know, and the Minister of Justice recognizes, that the administration of justice is a provincial matter, has he discussed this matter with the Attorney General of Manitoba? Obviously it is now a very public flaunting of the Criminal Code of Canada, a law which is passed through this House, through the Parliament of Canada. Obviously this has some very serious implications for the administration of law and the perception of law in the country. Would the Minister tell the House what discussions he has had, or what methods of remedy he is recommending in this case?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I have not had discussions with the Attorney General of Manitoba in this case. I find it hard to imagine circumstances in which I would feel that to be approriate. The law, as my hon. friend knows, is made by this House, but its administration is in the hands of the provincial Governments.

It is certainly my impression that the Attorney General of Manitoba has indicated that, when the proper information is provided to him by law enforcement authorities in that Province, he will take the appropriate action according to the law. However, Madam Speaker, even if, in a hypothetical case, a provincial Attorney General were to take a different view of the law, I do not believe, as Minister of Justice in the federal Government, I would have any authortiy to overrule or in any way countermand the role which the provincial Attorney General is taking in carrying out his duties. That is a matter for the people and the Government of that Province. I have no reason as yet, Madam Speaker, to think that that, in any event, is the situation here.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN MANITOBA

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. I appreciate the sensitivity in which he relates to the division of powers between the federal and provincial Governments. I appreciate that. However, up to the present time the provincial Attorney General has always argued that there was no breaking or breaching of the law until in fact an abortion took place. The fact is that they have now taken place, and are taking place. That is public knowledge, if we are to believe Morgentaler's word.

The law is being broken. That is public knowledge. Therefore I ask the Minister, in fulfilling the law and carrying out justice, does it not seem passing strange, in terms of that administration, that the defence of the Attorney General of Manitoba now is, "Well, it is a police matter"? He is again washing his hands of it. If the administration of justice is in fact the responsibility of the Province, how can the law be upheld when the Attorney General of Manitoba now says that it is not his responsibility, it is a police matter? He is washing his hands of a matter for which he directly has to take responsibility.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is in effect asking me, as federal Minister of Justice, to pass judgment on the manner in which the Attorney General of the Province carries out his office. I do not feel, Madam Speaker, that I have the constitutional jurisdiction to make such a judgment. I think it would be improper for me to do so. I have my own opinions on the question, but I believe I am not entitled, by virtue of my office, to give vent to those ideas in public. That is a question which my hon. friend must address publicly, if he wishes, to the Attorney General of Manitoba.

FISHERIES

ISSUANCE OF FIREARMS TO EAST COAST FISHERY INSPECTORS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I also would like to ask a question of one of the few Ministers here today, the Minister of Justice. Yesterday, according to press reports, at the direct request of the federal Department of Fisheries, certain Fisheries inspectors on the East Coast, in relation to the lobster dispute, were issued firearms, including shotguns. My question is in relation to this rather extreme step. Are Fisheries inspectors "peace officers" under the required provincial and federal statutes? What is the legislative authority for issuing firearms to Fisheries inspectors?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, on behalf of my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, for whom I am taking questions, I will answer what I know of the past precedents. I am not familiar with the legal interpretation of the words used by the Hon. Member. In the past we have authorized the Fisheries officers who have been trained—more recently they have been trained by the RCMP in Regina—and who are in dangerous situations, particularly on the Pacific coast where they go into deep canyons on the Fraser River and other places, to carry weapons for self-defence.

LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY FOR ISSUANCE OF WEAPONS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, the point I am trying to make here, and I do not care which particular Minister answers it, is that it is not a question of ministerial discretion as to whether or not a person in the employ of any Government in this country can be "issued weapons". There are very strict legislative requirements at both the provincial and federal levels. My question simply, and that is why I directed it to the Minister of Justice, is: what is the legislative authority for granting weapons to a Fisheries inspector?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I will have to take this question as notice. I encouraged my hon. friend, who is answering for the Minister of Fisheries, to answer out of his knowledge because I had no knowledge of this matter which is raised by the hon. gentleman until he mentioned it. I will certainly get an answer for him.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

IMPACT ON WORKERS—ASSESSMENT OF JOB LOSSES AND LAY-OFFS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Yesterday the Minister of Employment and Immigration said in a speech that rosy expectations for high technology had given way to widespread fear and outright panic about job losses. Last week there was a report leaked that two million jobs in the manufacturing sector are likely to disappear as a result of technological change. Would the Minister tell us whether his Department, and the Department of Employment, are giving consideration to convening meetings with representatives of the provincial Governments, the federal Government and with management and labour, to assess the whole question of job losses which are resulting from technological changes? And can he also tell us what steps can be taken to cushion the shock of lay-offs for workers, with more equitable severance pay, and to retrain workers who are likely to be adversely affected and lose their jobs in the plants?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I have just completed a round of consultations which began in late February, with both labour and management, on the whole question of technological change. The Hon. Member may recall that we initiated a study which was produced by Margaret Fulton last November, entitled "In the Chips", with recommendations flowing from it. The consultations to which I am referring were based on the recommendations in the report.

• (1150)

Finally, may I also draw the attention of the Hon. Member, whose concern I welcome, to the fact that in the budget there is a proposal for the institution of a centre which would deal with productivity and employment growth, with a clear attempt at coming to grips with the whole question of the management of technological change. We will certainly welcome the support of the NDP in this particular matter.

APPLICABLE PROVISIONS OF CANADA LABOUR CODE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Minister knows by now that workers and their unions do not consider discussions about a general question to be consultations when, later on, the Government works out a policy and brings in legislation to which they have really had no input. However, I would like to ask the Minister a specific question flowing out of this problem. Would the Minister introduce amendments to the Canada Labour Code to provide adequate notice for workers who are displaced by technological change, and to provide workers with a clear right to bargain over the introduction of such technological changes?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member does not know that that clause already exists in the Canada Labour Code and has also been the subject of discussion on a number of occasions. As to meaningful consultations, may I draw to the attention of the Hon. Member the fact that the top officer of the Steelworkers Union agreed several months ago to serve on the McDonald Commission. That would reflect the importance and understanding that labour gives to consultation and consensus reaching processes.

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

PROMISE OF JOBS FOR REFUGEES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. As the Government knows, in October of 1982 it cut off financial aid to over 400 refugee claimants in Montreal, men, women, and children. Since then these refugees have had to survive with about $180,000 from the Quebec Government and non-governmental organizations, and $50,000 from the federal Government in March.

Given the fact that the Minister of Employment and Immigration promised in February that there would be 200 jobs created under the NEED Program for the assistance of those destitute people, and given the fact that he reiterated that promise last week and said to the labour committee that those jobs would be starting last week, will the Acting Prime Minister tell us why the jobs have not yet started and when they will start, or when the Government will give some aid to those destitute people?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member's question, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I want to reassure the Hon. Member that his question will be referred to the Minister for a reply.

MUSEUMS AND ART GALLERIES

HALIFAX ART GALLERY PROJECT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Minister of Communications, is with regard to the Public Works project announced in Halifax, a matter which was raised earlier by the Hon. Member for Dartmouth. Could the Minister please tell the House, and those members of the arts community in Halifax who are terribly upset about the decision, why the long-standing commitment to an art gallery or an art complex in Halifax has been abandoned in favour of an office building?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, there were a number of discussions initiated by my Department with the authorities in Halifax, particularly with the present Conservative Government in Halifax. There was no indication on their part of any interest in participating with us in trying to develop that land, those buildings, for those purposes. We had a general program, as the Hon. Member knows—

Mr. Forrestall: That's absolute nonsense.

Mr. Fox: —under the special program of cultural initiatives which made funds available for those purposes. Any overtures on our part were met with a decision on the part of the provincial authorities of the Province of Nova Scotia, which the Hon. Member does not like me to say, to the effect that they, for their own reasons, were not ready to give necessary, priority to that building and therefore were not ready to participate financially.

Mr. Forrestall: That's nonsense. You know it's nonsense.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, I think the Minister knows that that is not quite right.

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, since the Minister has now abandoned his long-standing commitment to a gallery, what plans does he have to provide to the residents of Halifax and Nova Scotia, for the first time, a proper art gallery, with federal assistance? I ask this, particularly in view of the fact that part of the justification given for the announcement of the new National Gallery last year was that all the regional galleries, including Halifax, were in place.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, with due respect, the Hon. Member knows not what he speaks. What we have done over the past few years during the course of federal-provincial meetings with Ministers responsible for culture and historical resources on the provincial side has clearly not been to impose any new buildings on the Provinces, since in many cases the Provinces had to meet the operating requirements for these buildings. Any new buildings in the Provinces respecting the areas of arts and culture, unless they were indeed purely federal buildings, would only be built with the full co-operation of the Provinces.

The Province, for its own good reasons, and I am not disputing that it may have good reasons, has not wished to give priority to that sector at the present time.

AGRICULTURE

NEW BRUNSWICK POTATO INDUSTRY

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, through you I would like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Recently I raised a problem of the potato industry in the Province of New Brunswick. Has the Minister taken any steps to speed up application processing with positive answers from the Farm Credit Corporation? Has he taken any action with respect to the deferral of repayment of storable crop loans? Has he taken any action with respect to any possibility of price stabilization?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, to the first three parts of the question, yes; to the last part, no.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Very briefly, I would like to ask the Minister when can the potato farmers anticipate an answer. I would like to point out to him that a late answer is a non-answer and will be of no assistance. We have another week, Madam Speaker, to put them in business.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the provincial Minister of Agriculture and I were trying to set a meeting to decide what further action should be taken.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ABANDONED RIGHTS OF WAY IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Transport and ask him what progress has been made in the complete transfer of abandoned rail rights of way in the Province of Saskatchewan owned by Canadian National, rights of way which were to be turned over to the federal Government.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I am not sure that I understand the question. Would my hon. friend care to explain it?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKnight: I know I should not do this, Madam Speaker, but to explain, I am referring to the abandoned rights of way owned by Canadian National, with the agreement between CN and the federal Government in 1977 that those abandoned rights of way would be turned over to the federal Government.

What progress has been made with the negotiations on the transfer from Canadian National to the federal Government of Canada of the rights of way owned by CN in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Pepin: That took place some time ago. That is why it was not currently in my mind. My memory is to the effect that those rights of way have indeed been offered back to the Provinces. They have been offered. I should not say that they have been offered "back", because they never had them in the first place.

My memory is that Alberta has accepted. My memory is that Manitoba has accepted. My memory is that Saskatchewan has not accepted, but my memory does not tell me if it has changed its mind with the coming of the new provincial Government. I will check on that.

Mr. Epp: Everything is new.

TAX ON FARM FUELS—REQUEST FOR RELIEF

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It involves a matter I have raised in the House with the Minister of Agriculture, the very heavy-handed federal tax placed upon farmers for farm fuel, which amounts to about 66 cents a gallon. The Minister of Agriculture said that he would make representation to the Cabinet. There was nothing in the budget. The farmers are preparing to seed their crops this spring. The heavy tax is there and it is very counterproductive to the production of grain by farmers and to all of agriculture. Would the Minister give consideration to removing some of this heavy tax?

• (1200)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am always willing to give some consideration to all types of problems—

Mr. Mazankowski: Do something.

Mr. Chrétien: I see the Hon. Member for Vegreville—

Mr. Mazankowski: Looking after your constituents.

Mr. Chrétien: Most of the talk coming from his Province is to the effect that the price that we have in Canada is too low and that we should let the price go to international levels. If you compare the level of taxation from the federal Government in Canada, it is very comparable to the situation which exists in the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Of course, if the taxes are higher in some parts of Canada, mainly Ontario and Quebec, it is because of the infamous essence surtax as in Quebec which costs 40 per cent on top of everything to the farmers of Quebec.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,780, 4,781 and 4,782.

Order Paper Questions

[Text]

MARRIED QUARTERS AT CFB CHILLIWACK

Question No. 4,780—Mr. Howie:

1. How many permanent married quarters are in the establishment at CFB Chilliwack?

2. How many married personnel are stationed at the base?

3. Are there any restrictions on what ranks may rent PMQ's at this base and, if so, what are the restrictions?

4. What was the average monthly rent paid in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 for a three-bedroom rowhouse style PMQ, or the equivalent, at the base?

5. What was the average monthly rent paid in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 for a three-bedroom detached house at the base?

6. Will PMQ rents at Chilliwack be raised in 1983 and, if so (a) for what reason (b) by what amount, on average?

7. Have any rental credits been established at the base to help offset the increased financial burden imposed by having PMQ tenants pay for their own heating fuel?

8. What is the usual fuel used for heating PMQ's at the base?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence):
1. Four hundred and eighty.

2. Seven hundred and eighty-eight.

3. None.

4. (a) 209, (b) 221.

5. (a) 280, (b) 297.

6. Shelter values may increase depending upon the outcome of the 1983 CMHC appraisal of DND MQs. Any increases in shelter charges paid in 1983 by occupants will, however, be limited to a maximum of 5 per cent above current charges.

7. Yes, for all houses with insulation below CMHC standards where the occupants are paying directly to commercial suppliers.

8. Natural gas.

MARRIED QUARTERS AT CFB LAHR

Question No. 4,781—Mr. Howie:

1. How many permanent married quarters are in the establishment at CFB Lahr, West Germany?

2. How many married personnel are stationed at the base?

3. Are there any restrictions on what ranks may rent PMQ's at this base and, if so, what are the restrictions?

4. What was the average monthly rent paid in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 for a three-bedroom rowhouse style PMQ, or the equivalent, at the base?

5. What was the average monthly rent paid in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 for a three-bedroom detached house at the base?

6. Will PMQ rents at Lahr be raised in 1983 and, if so (a) for what reason (b) by what amount, on average?

7. Have any rental credits been established at the base to help offset the increased financial burden imposed by having PMQ tenants pay for their own heating fuel?

8. What is the usual fuel used for heating PMQ's at the base?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence):
1. One thousand one hundred and ninety-one.

2. Two thousand four hundred and sixty-nine.

3. None.

4 and 5. There are no three bedroom row houses or three bedroom detached houses at CFB Lahr.

6. Shelter values may increase depending upon the outcome of the 1983 CMHC appraisal of DND MQs. Any increases in shelter charges paid in 1983 by occupants will, however, be limited to a maximum of 5 per cent above current charges.

7. No, direct metering of heating fuels has not been implemented in Europe.

8. Oil.

MARRIED QUARTERS AT CFB CORNWALLIS

Question No. 4,782—Mr. Howie:

1. How many Permanent Married Quarters are in the establishment at CFB Cornwallis?

2. How many married personnel are stationed at the base?

3. Are there any restrictions on what ranks may rent PMQ's at this base and, if so, what are the restrictions?

4. What was the average monthly rent paid in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 for a three-bedroom rowhouse style PMQ, or the equivalent, at the base?

5. What was the average monthly rent paid in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 for a three-bedroom detached house at the base?

6. Will PMQ rents at Cornwallis be raised in 1983 and, if so (a) for what reason (b) by what amount, on average?

7. Have any rental credits been established at the base to help offset the increased financial burden imposed by having PMQ tenants pay for their own heating fuel?

8. What is the usual fuel used for heating PMQ's at the base?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence):
1. Two hundred and eleven.

2. Three hundred and thirty-six.

3. None.

4. There are no three-bedroom row house style PMQ at CFB Cornwallis.

5. (a) $132, (b) $137.

6. Shelter values may increase depending upon the outcome of the 1983 CHMC appraisal of DND MQs. Any increases in shelter charges paid in 1983 by occupants will, however, be limited to a maximum of 5 per cent above current charges.

7. Yes, for all houses with insulation below CMHC standards where the occupants are paying directly to commercial suppliers.

8. Oil.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Thursday, May 12, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin (p. 25389).

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, when I called it six o'clock last night I had made the comment that there was a consensus in western Canada that the railways were entitled to reasonable compensation for the carriage of grain. I also indicated that there was some doubt in the minds of many individuals and organizations about what the amount of that compensation should be and how it should be covered.

Of course, the Government says that the statutory rate should be set aside and the grain producers in western Canada should pay approximately double the present statutory rate by 1985-86 and five times that by 1990. However, the question is: can the western farmer afford to pay any more to move his grain? Prices of grain are down, the input costs are up and the farmers are facing a very real problem.

The Minister must be aware of the fact that there is a subcommittee on agriculture which is presently studying a private Members' Bill which would reintroduce the provisions of the old Farmers' Creditors Arrangements Act. The indications are that the farming community is running into more difficulty month by month and year by year.

I would suggest to the Minister, if he is not prepared to leave the statutory rate in place, that the very least he can do is perhaps to declare a moratorium on any increase and review the matter again in 1985-86 when a review is called for. The producers of western Canada are asking what they would gain if they had to pay an increase in the freight rate to carry their grain. The Minister says that they will gain a more efficient and better railway system, but is the cost of an improved system the responsibility of the producers? Is it not a national responsibility? Is not western Canada paying their fair share at the present time since it appears that the $3.7 billion that has been talked about is money from the Western Development Fund; money which came from western Canada that is now being funneled back into the West?

There are many questions to be answered. I have just touched on one which is of prime concern in the West. Can the producer pay more? As well, there is the question of the livestock producers, because they are upset. There is also the question of the validity of the argument put forward in the February announcement that these changes proposed by the Minister will develop secondary industry and industrial development in the West.

Let us suppose that they do achieve this. What will that do for the Prairie grain producer? It will not increase his income as a grain producer. He will not gain anything. When one studies the bare bones of the Bill, it can be seen that the Prairie farmer is being asked to pay more and really getting nothing in return.

Parliament must have time to consider all these issues. I know that the Minister is a fair man, but these issues cannot be considered in the short time remaining until June 30, which is the date he mentioned. While representations were made to Gilson and were considered, Parliament itself did not have the opportunity to consider these representations. There is no question that the people who appeared before Dr. Gilson had vested interests. There is nothing wrong with that. The commodities coalition group has certain vested interests with which it is concerned. The livestock producers are concerned about their vested interests. The elevators have vested interests which they are concerned about. I do not believe that these people, who made their representations at the Gilson hearings, were prepared to set aside their vested interests to ask what they could do in the best interests of western Canada and in the best interests of the western grain producers.

They all have legitimate concerns for which there must be compromise and consideration. I am suggesting to the Minister that this can only be done by allowing the committee to make an in depth study of these various representations and issues.

I see that my time is running out, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that we have reached a milestone in the history and economic development of western Canada. The Minister has an opportunity to make a name for himself if he is prepared to listen and give parliamentarians and Parliament the opportunity to do the right thing with respect to the West. I would ask him to abandon his plans to have this Bill passed by June 30. Let the committee study it, make recommendations and report. On that basis I know that the Minister, who is fair, would consider the recommendations of the committee and bring in legislation which is fair, equitable and will serve us for many years to come.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have a question which stems more from curiosity on my part but which I think is an important one. My old friend said he thought there was no agreement on the extent of compensation for hauling grain. My impression was there was quite a lot of consensus on that issue. Would the Hon. Member care to educate me as to where the opposition was to that? Other Members might know that this is basically 100 per cent of long-term variable costs of railways plus 20 per cent of constant costs phased in over a period of four years; 5 per cent in the first year, 10 per cent in the second, 15 per cent in the third and 20 per cent in the last. I had the feeling this was agreeable to most people. Is it not?

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, my reading of the $651 million is that the accounting system of the railway is suspect. While the figure may have been accepted by the farm organizations, they are not in a position, because of the complexity of the accounting system of the railways, to question it. They really had no alternative but to say that this was a ballpark figure. I can tell the Minister that if he talks to farm organizations and to individuals, he will find there is always the suspicion in their minds that the figure of compensation which the railways are asking for is far in excess of what they are entitled to. But how you get down to determining the figure is beyond me.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend looks at it from the point of view of the Crow rate benefit, and there was indeed at the Gilson hearings a discussion of this matter. The railways came in, if I remember, with a figure of $770 million, or something of that kind. I understand, and this is rather important, that the pools had a study made on their own. I understand the study projected a figure of about $600 million. Gilson came in at $640 million at the time, a figure which was then raised to $651 million.

I think it would be wrong to give the impresssion that there was not a high degree of consensus of the estimation of the value of the Crow benefit. Those are very important things. There was a great amount of discussion of this subject at the Gilson exercise. I tend, contrary to what was implied, to believe that people taking part in the Gilson exercise were motivated by more than their immediate interests. A good amount of consensus was developed there. There was consensus on the value of the Crow rate benefit. I think this was one of the acquired advantages of the Gilson exercise.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has talked about the railway's figure of $700 million and the pools figure of $600 million. There is a $100 million difference. I would suspect that the pools did not have the expertise that the railways or anyone had to understand the accounting system.

Mr. Pepin: The consultants they used had that experience.

Mr. Neil: There is a feeling in the West that the railway figures are much higher than they should be. Mr. Snavely has talked about that.

In so far as the Gilson hearings are concerned, I was not privy to those hearings. Members of Parliament were not privy to those hearings. It may be that there was a great deal of compromise, but if there was this compromise and Mr. Gilson's report was based on the compromise, that compromise has more or les fallen apart. I think the Minister would agree with me in that regard.

Mr. Pepin: To some extent, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I found a couple of the points which the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) made to be very interesting. One was the railway costs and the suspicion in the West that the railway accounting is certainly not open—not above board. There is really a lack of trust. Perhaps the place where I found this lack of trust coming out most was in railway line abandonment hearings. Constituents have raised with me the depreciation costs that are being charged to various lines, for example off-line costs being charged to on-line costs. Can the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw explain a little further about some of the concerns that have been expressed by farmers or producers with regard to these railways costs and if that is the type of thing he is referring to, or is he referring just to the additional things he was mentioning?

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, if you talk to farmers who live alongside lines that are in receipt of branch line subsidies, you will find that this has caused them some concern. I recall a community that was quite concerned because there was a branch line where a train had not travelled across the line for some nine or ten years. Trees were growing between the ties and the rails. Yet the railways were being paid for that line. That caused some concern.

There are other matters with respect to costing. I think the problem is that costing of railway roads is such a complex issue that really no one, except for a few specialists perhaps from the United States, is able to understand it. It is because of that complexity that the suspicion is there. When you find a difference of $100 million between the railways' figures and the figures the pools were able to come up with, that creates even more suspicion.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was involved in a study. I liked the suggestion—I do not know whether he put it in these exact words—but it was about removing the Bill, as it were, and having it studied by the agricultural committee. Would his suggestion include the idea of having the books opened up, of CN and CP as well, so that we have re-examination of the formulas being used? Would this not be a much more profitable exercise of looking at those formulas again and re-examining them and all the unfounded assumptions? Would the Hon. Member be prepared to make use of all his background notes in his study and have them made available to the committee so that we could make additional comparisons of material to examine the basic problem that underlies the whole costing that CN and other companies are bringing to the Government of Canada?

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I can see nothing wrong with that. I would welcome representations from the railways before the committee. However, I think perhaps it might be an exercise in futility. I do not think there would be anyone on that committee who understands accounting to the extent that it is necessary to ask probing questions. Maybe the committee should set up a special research group to investigate the matter. However, I doubt very much whether the Minister or the Government would agree to that. They will say that there has been the Snavely report, and that we have the railways' figures and the pools figures. I would be agreeable to making any information available that arose as a result of my study. But I was not so much concerned about the costing as I was about the viability of the lines at which I was looking.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) answer a question which the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan Lake (Mr. Lewycky) asked me yesterday? He was wondering why so few branch lines being reviewed by the CTC now are being maintained. I answered him to the effect that all of this had been reviewed by three groups essentialy—the Hall group, the Pratt group and the Neil group. I was telling him that the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw had selected those lives which on the basis of preliminary research offered the best economic chances of continuation. He was not in agreement with me. Would Commissioner Neil answer this question?

• (1220)

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, the lines I examined were the ones studied by the Hall Commission and by the Prairie Rail Action Committee and determined not to be viable lines. I examined them based upon the cost of rehabbing and on the basis of what the elevator companies would plan on doing if the lines remained, if they were prepared to upgrade their house or build new facilities. If they indicated that they were prepared to do this and if the cost was within reason, I recommended that the line stay.

I could only say indirectly to the Hon. Minister that those were the bases upon which I conducted my study. As I say, I was the third man down the line, so I was looking at the hard lines. I appreciate that the CTC now has to look at similar types of information, as I did—the costs and what the elevator companies planned on doing with respect to these lines.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take the floor and participate in the debate today on Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certains Acts in consequence thereof.

From the outset, I would like to consider this Bill as one of the landmarks in the history of Canada.

In tabling this Bill, the Government of Canada is proposing another of those major reforms which have been undertaken by the Liberal Party of Canada through the years. I think it is particularly interesting to note that once again, it is our party, the Liberal Party of Canada, which has had the courage of its convictions in taking action that is controversial, not always easy to understand and upsetting to those who are opposed to change but which is essential to the prosperity and progress of our country. The Opposition parties—the Progressive Conservatives and the New Democratic Party—have never had the same vision and courage as the men and women of the Liberal Party of Canada in carrying out these major reforms.

In fact, this is the third major piece of legislation that has come before this Parliament, after the patriation of the Canadian Constitution and our national energy policy which was announced over the last few years and months.

As far as the economy is concerned, there is absolutely no doubt whatsoever that maximizing development of railway transportation in Western Canada is extremely important to the development of our resources and to the economic welfare of the entire country.

As far as the political development of our country is concerned, I may remind the House that it was the Liberal Party of Canada that gave our country a flag, a national anthem and a made-in-Canada Constitution.

In the field of social benefits, once again, the Liberal Party of Canada introduced social security services that benefit all Canadians, including family allowances, old age security, free health and medical care and our pension and retirement plans.

Economically, it was the Liberal Party of Canada which, after the war, created our economic prosperity by supporting the private sector and provided a solid foundatiaon for our trade structure by developing the St. Lawrence Seaway, by entering into agreements with the United States under the Auto Pact and by announcing an energy policy that has finally given Canadians a say in the development of their own resources. Finally, the Government has been able to table in the House its long-awaited plan for providing Western Canada with a transportation system that will meet both present and future needs.

Today, I think we should pay tribute to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) who had the courage to table this Bill and to defend it over the objections and reluctance of some Canadians from all parts of the country who, for purely personal and often petty reasons, are opposed to change and to introducing much-needed reform in Canada. I believe the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party who are opposed to this reform are once again missing an opportunity to make history. Once again, these two political groups have failed to recognize the major benefits that will accrue to us in Canada through this new railway policy and this legislation.

It must be understood that in order to bring not only primary but also, eventually, manufactured products from Western Canada to ports on the Pacific Coast or the Great Lakes, we must provide for a better railway transportation network in Western Canada. It is absolutely vital that this part of Canada should be given the tools it needs to achieve full economic development. I think it is absolutely incredible that the Progressive Conservative and NDP Members from Western Canada should lack this vision and prefer to oppose the Bill for the sake of the short-term interests of a few voters who represent a small minority in Western Canada, and who may be affectd by this policy in the short term but will later understand the vision and the sense of history of the Minister of Transport who is at last giving this part of Canada a chance to achieve full development.

I think the present debate shows once again how many conflicting interests there are whenever the Government introduces a policy of any major scope. I am convinced that when the Government of Canada asked Professor Gilson to examine this question, in an attempt to find a compromise that would be acceptable to the parties concerned, we in the Government were right to do so, because we realized that in order to achieve the three objectives that we had in mind, namely, to change this legislation which has come down to us from the last century and under which the cost of shipping grain was set at a minimal figure that now makes no sense at all, we knew that getting rid of what is commonly known as the Crow rate would not be a cinch and that, consequently, we would be unable to reach that objective without offering compensating benefits to those who would be directly involved in the first place—the grain shippers. The second objective of that reform obviously went far beyond repealing the statutory rate which we have had to live with for so many years, but probably the most important objective was to upgrade the western railway transport system—indeed it was the ultimate and essential objective of that major reform. At the same time, the Government wanted to be impartial and asked Mr. Gilson to make recommendations on ways to help diversify western agriculture.

With those three objectives in mind, Mr. Gilson got down to work and I think he did a good job. If I have one criticism to level at him, and it would be the only one, I would say that at the time he or his advisers should perhaps have foreseen that the reform of the western grain transportation system could not be the exclusive precinct of Westerners since it would also have an impact on producers in Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces. Unfortunately, the preliminary consultations did not involve those producers and perhaps that was what led to misunderstandings and prompted the dissenting opinions which have been voiced almost everywhere in Canada after the Gilson report was tabled.

Allow me to say immediately that a great many of the objections to the Gilson report were grossly exaggerated, particularly in the Province of Quebec on the part of a Government that is bent on taking Quebec out of Canada. It jumped on that opportunity to try to use that report—drafted in good faith and with the best intentions in the world—to launch a political battle, a separatist battle. The statements which were made at that time, particularly by the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, were bordering on demagogy if not outright deceit. That is why a number of Quebec Members and Ministers attempted to set things straight and in their proper perspective. That is why the Sub-Committee on Agriculture, with Members of the Liberal Party in Ottawa, was striken under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois). That Committee has done a tremendous job in its discussions with Quebec farmers and the main agricultural organizations in the Province in an attempt to set the record straight.

A series of gratuitous statements had been made and I would like to mention a few. At that time we had to dismiss once and for all the gratuitous statements which led to believe that the supply and the price of grain feed in Quebec would be affected by this new Government policy by way of the implementation of the Gilson report. There is surely nothing of the sort, the reason being quite simple: the price of grain is set by world demand in Thunder Bay and any amendment to the statutory rate does not change anything whatsoever in this respect.

As far as supply is concerned, we said it again and again to the Eastern farmers that they are protected under the stated feed grain policy which has endured throughout the years since 1974. However, when it was suggested to Quebec farmers that there would be supply problems, that the price of feed grain in Quebec would be affected by this new Canadian policy, this was a shameless lie.

Another rather weird statement was made by the Quebec Minister of Agriculture when he said that the price of beer and spaghetti would go up. Of course he is known for his usual antics and most certainly that statement came out of his best bag of jokes, which may not be the funniest nor the truest, but it still was one of his jokes. So, clearly, that proposal is basically false.

It has also been suggested that hog breeders in Quebec would be greatly affected by the policy, and sooner or later they would go bankrupt. And there has been a systematic campaign in the Province of Quebec to suggest that the Gilson report's recommendations would force breeders into bankruptcy—dairy, egg, poultry and pork producers. However, we know very well that the quota systems are managed by the Canadian marketing boards, which adequately protect people in the dairy, egg and poultry industries.

As far as hog breeders are concerned, there have been studies which indicated the opposite. They showed that certainly there would be an increase in pork production in Western Canada, but that the world market was open to Canadians and that there was room under the sun both for eastern and western pork producers, that there were markets waiting to be tapped by producers from either part of Canada. And by studying the data somewhat more closely, especially those gathered by Econometrics which compare Professor Gilson's overall recommendations to the assumption that the Government would assume responsibility for the whole of the railway revenue losses deriving from Western grain shipments. According to those forecasts, there should be almost identical growth in the various Western agro-food sectors over the next ten years, given either of these two scenarios. With regard to hog production, for instance, Chase Econometrics forecast that by 1992, the difference in growth between the two options in Eastern Canada would only be 1 per cent.

• (1240)

As for hog production revenues, they should double by 1992, and the difference between the two options would then only be 2 per cent.

Among other things, Mr. Speaker, there should be a difference of only about $20 million in the revenues of all Eastern Canada meat producers by 1992, that is a difference of $20 million for an amount of over $9 billion. Therefore, that is a difference of only about one half of 1 per cent.

I must say that, in spite of all these projections and all the discussions that have taken place, the fear and suspicion spread by the Quebec Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Garon), first among the major Quebec farmers' organizations, and then among a large number of Quebec farm producers, has considerably inflamed a debate which should have been pragmatic, sensible and objective.

It is obvious that if Quebec producers had seen the Federal Government implement all of the recommendations contained in the Gilson report, they would have felt wronged and the survival of their farming operations would have been affected sooner or later. However, many farming interests in Canada has serious reservations concerning the method of payment.

Anxious to carry out his great project and fundamental reform, the Minister of Transport chose to tone it down and to bring about a reform which might not be as marvelous and as perfect as he would have wished, but which is still most significant and essential and will still achieve the main purpose of changing the Crow rate, improving railway transportation in Western Canada and promoting some agricultural diversification and extensive trade development in Western Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I suggest it is wrong to claim, as some Progressive Conservative Members have done—and I am thinking about the reactions of the Hon. Members for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) and Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) who objected to the comments made by the Minister of Transport yesterday, saying that these changes were made only as a result of the representations of Quebec members and that the reform is not as satisfactory as it would have been under the original Gilson formula. This proposal was indeed changed because of the representations made by Quebec Members, but also because of all the representations made by many Western farmers' organizations which objected to the payments being made to the producers and also suggested that the entire amount be paid to the railways.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Minister, but his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker I appreciate the remarks made by the Hon. Minister. He suggested that the original payment proposal outlined by his colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), would not meet with the satisfaction of producers in his Province. I do not think I have to remind—

Mr. Chrétien: And in the West.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will ask the question, not the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien).

I do not think I have to remind the Hon. Minister that some strong views are held on the proposal that the Minister has advanced in this particular Bill. Having regard to that and knowing the Minister to be a reasonable person who recognizes the difficulties and the differences of view across the country, how would he react to the proposal that I advanced yesterday which would give the producers the freedom to choose whether the Crow benefit should be paid to the railroads or to the producers?

The Minister has acknowledged that the whole question of method of payment would be reviewed by 1985-86. This review would provide an opportunity to test both systems and to receive some practical knowledge as to how both proposals might work. I recognize that the principle I am outlining has not been worked out in detail, but could the Minister give us some indication about what his reaction might be to a proposal such as that?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I was present yesterday when the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) gave his speech. One thing that attracted my attention was that he said that the Bill is very complicated and that it is a bureaucratic nightmare, if I remember his expression correctly. I must say that the administration of his suggestion could turn out to be a terrible bureaucratic nightmare as well. I believe the Hon. Member will agree that his proposal must be looked at much more carefully and in depth before it can be considered. I do appreciate that the Hon. Member will be provided with a good opportunity to outline and explain how he would like his proposal to be administered when the Bill goes to committee.

My first reaction to the Hon. Member's proposal is that it seems to me it would be almost impossible to apply such a formula. I would indicate to him that obviously the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Manitoba pool elevator, the Saskatchewan Federation of Agriculture, and Unifarm of Alberta, have all expressed the view that payment should be made to the railway. I believe that these are important associations in the West and, along with other important associations in the East, they have felt that the simplest method at this time would be to make the payment to the railway.

I believe that we must progress step by step. I think the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) would like to take a giant step. I suspect his Bill is a big step, and I believe that it is a big step in the right direction. I would not like to see this step shortened by an administrative formula or procedure such as the one suggested by the Hon. Member, one that could not be applied and that would make the big step taken by the Minister seem almost irrelevant.

• (1250)

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it is correct that I referred to the Bill as a bureaucratic nightmare. Implicit in that statement is the fact that there will be a huge bureaucracy, a huge network to administer it. So a whole lot is being added. The original proposal provided for a payment which would be split, 50 per cent to the producers and 50 per cent to the railways, under some form of acreage payments yet to be defined. If the Minister is suggesting that that is not bureaucratic, I should like to know what is.

With respect to the pools, if they are correct in their assumptions, then the majority of the producers they represent will choose the option of paying the railroads. I repeat, it will give those others who feel strongly about this the opportunity to take advantage of the benefit. It will remove the distortion of the freight rate and thereby assist in the further diversification of western Canadian agriculture and will facilitate the further processing of products.

If the Minister is suggesting that we should have simplicity, and if he wants to adopt the "pay the railway" method, and he would have to do is to pay the railways the $650 million or whatever and keep things as they are. That would be the simplest way. The Minister has not opted for the simple route, however; he has opted for the bureaucratic route. The bureaucracy he is putting in place is going to serve to benefit the Government and the railroads, not the producers.

What I am saying is, give the producers some freedom of choice and some latitude. If it requires just a little extra bureaucracy, let us do something for the producers. That is what we are supposed to be achieving, the maximization of benefits to the producer and the agricultural industry in the country.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I am very much surprised by the line of argument developed by the former Minister of Transport. Surely when he was in office for a few months he had a chance to see how impossible the operation of the railways in the West is and the tremendous improvement that could benefit western Canada if the capacity of the railway were enhanced.

When the Hon. Member insists that we make the payment a sort of freedom of choice decision by farmers, surely he visualizes the impracticality of it. One farmer might say, "This year I want the money; next year send it to the railway". Or he might say, "Send me 10 per cent of it and send 90 per cent to the railway, or 40 per cent to the railway and 60 per cent to me."

Mr. Mazankowski: Don't try to complicate it.

Mr. Ouellet: I should like to remind the Hon. Member that at its annual meeting in February of 1983 the Canadian Federation of Agriculture unanimously passed a resolution asking that the Government payment be made in total to the railways. The farmers, through their national organization at the national convention, made that suggestion. That has been one of the main factors in bringing the Minister of Transport to accept a change in the payment.

Mr. Mazankowski: They also passed a resolution supporting metric.

Mr. Ouellet: The Minister took into account the views of the farmers.

In his questions at one point the Hon. Member said that the simplest thing would be to pay the railways and keep the thing as it is, not charge an extra cent to the farmer. He knows very well that in order to improve the service and in order to bring some efficiency into the system—surely if he learned anything from his stay in the Department of Transport he must have learned that some efficiency must be put into the system. In order to do that it is important, and I think it is well accepted, that the producer will have to pay his share, which will be higher than it is at the present time. This is generally accepted, except, perhaps, by some Members of Parliament who have other interests.

Every human being with a decent knowledge of the situatiaon realizes that the way the payments are made offers no incentive. Obviously farmers who want to have a better service are ready to pay a little more for it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wonder if there would be unanimous consent to extending the question and answer period to one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, the Minister must be aware that a backbencher, the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson), has a private Member's Bill in committee to revive the old Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. It would appear from the evidence that has been presented to the committee by the Farm Credit Corporation and a number of banks and loan agencies that about 10 per cent of the farming population is in serious financial difficulty.

If that is the situation, how can the Minister justify any increase in the freight rate to farmers for moving grain? It will mean a substantial amount of money. How can the Minister justify that under the circumstances? Would he not agree that perhaps there should be a moratorium or that the question of increasing the rate to the farmers should be forgotten until 1985-86 and then considered again?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is presenting a very narrow aspect of the problem. When he says that there are farmers in difficulties, I am sure they are not all in one part of the country. There is a malaise and a difficult economic situation for farmers throughout Canada. The change of the Crow is surely not the prime factor in creating additional difficulties for all farmers who are in financial difficulty.

I want to indicate to the Hon. Member that the improved efficiency of the service, the savings on handling, the savings on storage, would help the producers. We must have a system that allows maximum sales abroad, and not the situation that we had some years ago when sales were denied because we were unable to move the grain to meet our international commitment. That is something we have to change.

The Bill would improve efficiency, and the appropriate person to take advantage of it is the producer. Perhaps the ones who are in trouble now would be ready to pay a little more to have a higher return.

The Minister of Transport has put himself on record as saying he will bring in an amendment in committee that will guarantee an appropriate link between increased payments for transportation and the world price for grain.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask a question along the same lines.

The Minister in his speech has ignored almost entirely the effect of this on the grain producer, as has the Bill. I should like him to comment specifically on that. He suggests that the increases in efficiency are going to affect the farmer, who is spending $3,000 now and suddenly will have to spend $8,000, $10,000 or $20,000 on freight. He has never even seen a year when that extra $8,000 or $10,000 was available. His average income over the last few years has been $8,000.

Would the Minister comment on the effect of the increase on about 50 per cent of farmers in Saskatchewan?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member fails to realize that the implementation of this reform will be phased in. Moreover, it is anticipated that, in the first phase, grain producers will have to pay no more than 3 per cent of the increase in shipping costs, the government paying the rest. It is also anticipated that, in the second phase—I mean, three years from now—grain producers will have to pay up to 6 per cent of the increase in shipping costs, the government paying all costs over 6 per cent. Therefore, there are safeguards which will make it possible for producers to sell more and obtain better returns, without their having to pay for unduly increased transportation costs. I suggest that the Hon. Member should have more faith in the ingenuity of producers and their ability to feed the world.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

TABLING OF REPORT OF THE ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSION FOR THE PROVINCE OF SASKATCHEWAN, 1983

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at one o'clock, no Hon. Member had the floor. It is the intention of the Chair to recognize the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). Before I do so, however, it is my duty pursuant to Section 19 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, to lay upon the Table a certified copy of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Saskatchewan, 1983.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin (p. 25389).

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, at the time we stopped debate preceding the adjournment for lunch we were on Bill C-155, an Act to dismantle the Crow rate. We had just finished hearing a lecture on efficiency from the Minister responsible for Canada Post, a lecture which most of us found quite humorous. The Minister was pointing out the difficulties which one would have in adjusting the different freight rates and saying how it would be very difficult to impose two different freight rates within the realm of grain movement in western Canada. I take from that, Mr. Speaker, that he is very familiar with the Canadian Wheat Board permit books and the elevator managers in western Canada and knows how capable they are. I am sure the Minister responsible for Canada Post, the Hon. Member for Papineau, (Mr. Ouellet) is an expert in these matters.

We have heard, Mr. Speaker, from various Hon. Members on the Government side. We heard from the Minister responsible for Canada Post, the Hon. Member for Papineau. We heard from the Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin). We heard from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis). We heard from all these expert pavement farmers, these asphalt assemblers of grain, producers of goods and feeders of the world.

When the election was fought in 1980 there was never any mention by the Liberal Party that it intended to dismantle the Crow rate, that it intended to do anything which would change the statutory rate which farmers had come to expect as the only positive thing, the only constant in the whole production cycle of food in western Canada. As a matter of fact, the Leader of the Liberal Party in Saskatchewan made a commitment that they would never touch it, that the Crow rate would remain. It was not mentioned in the Throne Speech which started this overly long session.

Now we have this Bill before us, Mr. Speaker, but we do not have the whole Bill. We have a Bill which has been tabled after many, many days and weeks of discussion outside of Parliament, after many changes which have been made outside of the Parliament of Canada. We have it tabled, but along with the tabling there is a brief footnote informing us that two amendments will be introduced at committee stage because Cabinet has not given final approval to linking the cost of moving grain to the international price for grain. We still have not seen the amendment naming what specialty crops will be included under this Bill.

There are several provisions set out in this Bill, but we do not see anything which protects the benefits and rights of the grain producers in western Canada. There will be a body established called the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. It will be composed, Mr. Speaker, of the Grain Transportation Agency Administrator, the Chief Commissioner for the Canadian Wheat Board, the Chief Commissioner for the Canadian Grain Commission, and 18 other members. Let us consider the 18 members of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee who will be there to advise the Minister and supposedly to protect the rights of the grain producers in western Canada. Of those 18 members, representatives of the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Manitoba Wheat Pool, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and the UGG will make up four. We can assume that those representatives of the cooperatives, will speak for their members and will have the best interests of the farming community at heart. However, then we come along to Pioneer Grain, whose motivation is profit for its shareholders, which I do not condemn, and Cargill Grain, whose motivation is also profit for shareholders, and Continental Grain, or maybe the Weyburn terminal. If I had my druthers, I think I would sooner have the terminal at Weyburn represented, because it consists of shareholders who live within the Province of Saskatchewan. Then we have representatives of the consuming Provinces, one from British Columbia, one from Ontario and one from Quebec. Then we have the processors represented by a crusher. Then we have the representation for the Great Lakes Shipping and the Dominion Marine Association which, I am sure, does not have the best interest of the grain producers at heart. Finally we have three Members, duly elected, representing the interests of the grain producers. We do not know whether those Members will be elected in the same way as the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee. We do not know whether those numbers will have to be made up of bona fide farmers or of duly elected representatives, in the view of the Minister. Therefore, out of the 18 people placed on the Senior Grain Transportation Advisory Committee, ten do not have the best interests of the producers of grain in western Canada as their sole objective. As a matter of fact, I missed the railroads. CN and CP are represented by the 18 members of the Senior Grain Transportation Advisory Committee. I am sure that their best interests are those of their shareholders and not the producers of grain. However, the Committee is there to advise the Minister. All these players are there to advise the Minister, but they are also there to establish whether awards and penalties with regard to themselves should be implemented in the next two years. I, or anyone else in the House, would have a very difficult time understanding how the railroads, the elevator companies, the marine shipping association, the crushers, the private elevator companies, would want or wish to impose penalties upon themselves.

There is nothing that makes me believe there is no conflict of interest in the senior grain transportation authority as it is established in the Bill. I know that perhaps these are just guidelines, but we in the House have had some debates on guidelines that the Government has put forth. We find that they do not really represent anything of substance.

Another point in the debate will be whether there is protection for farmers from an open-ended escalation of freight rate costs. In 1985-86, the producers will pay double Crow, and in 1990-91, they will pay five times Crow. By 1990, the railroads will have received an increase of about 1000 per cent for moving these goods. I am using these figures without, I admit, offsetting them with benefits which could accrue.

Mr. Pepin: Rather important.

Mr. McKnight: The Minister of Transport says that they are important, but they are not there. Those benefits are not obvious when one studies the Bill. They are not obvious when one considers the projections in agriculture over the next two to three years. They may be obvious to the Minister, but they are definitely not obvious to the producers whithin my constituency of Kindersley-Lloydminster or, indeed, in western Canada. We have heard figures tossed around, such as that in 1983-84 $564.5 million will be paid by the Government. Originally it was to be paid, fifty-fifty, to the producers and the railroads. However, $651.6 million will be paid out in 1985-86. We thought that was the whole figure, but now we find that there is something called the CN adjustment payment for $14 million, which comes off the $651.6 million. This was certainly new. It was never mentioned in discussions between the Minister and the livestock producers, the commodity groups. The figure of $651.6 million kept coming up. However, that is minus $14 million.

We do not have information as to the safety net which the Minister says he will be proposing, the tying of the movement of grain to the return from export grain. We all know that the cost of grain could double, but the expenses to the producers could triple. I suggest to the Minister that with the Western Grain Stabilization Program, which makes figures on the cost of production available, it would be very easy to figure out a weighted average within the export price and the cost of production rather than just seeing a certain percentage as a traditional cost of moving grain. When we come to the traditional cost of moving grain, there are several figures available. The 30 years average is about 8 per cent of the return for the product. The 40 year average is about 7.5 per cent. However, the Deputy Minister to the Minister of Transport said that the average cannot be at 7.5 per cent or 8 per cent and that it should be 10 per cent or 12 per cent. When asked why it should be 10 per cent or 12 per cent, he said that if it were 7 per cent or 8 per cent, it would be stabilizing. What a terrible thing to have, some stabilization of costs in the industry, a stable cost of which the producers would know in advance and which would never go above the traditional cost! We would like to see such stabilization. The Minister could consider stabilizing the freight increase as it applies to the movement of grain.

There has been statutory protection to the producers of grain. There is no longer any statutory protection in this Bill. There is a statutory framework, which is entirely different. If we consider the $651.6 million which the Government will contribute in constant dollars, and if we consider the last ten years of inflation at around 10 per cent per year, what will be left of $651.6 million? It will disappear. At the same time, the Government is requesting that the producers start to pay up to 3 per cent of the inflation and, in 1985-86, 6 per cent of the inflation. I am sure that the Minister of Transport, being a fair man, would recognize that if it is incumbent upon the producers of grain to share in the cost of inflation, the Government should also share in the cost of inflation.

Mr. Pepin: It does.

Mr. McKnight: But only if it is over 6 per cent, only if it is over 3 per cent.

Mr. Pepin: So much the better if it is not.

Mr. McKnight: I would like the Minister of Transport to explain to the producers of grain in western Canada how they contribute to inflation. How does a grain producer add to the cost of inflation? How does he establish and inflate the price of his product when he sells it on the world market? When his costs go up ten per cent, he has no control over the price of his product, the return for his product. He cannot say, "My cost has risen 10 per cent, so I will ask 10 per cent more on a bushel of wheat this year". As a matter of fact, this year, the return to the producer has fallen from $5.17 down to about $4.63. The producers of grain in western Canada cannot contribute to inflation because they do not set the price of the product they sell.

• (1420)

When this Bill was to be introduced we heard that there would be guarantees on the movement of grain, guarantees to which the railways would have to be committed and guarantees with penalties for lack of performance. There are only guarantees for the railways and the Government, and none for the farmers.

The guarantees have been changed to "objectives". We now see objectives rather than guarantees of service. The Bill states that the penalties may be implemented after 1985-86, but the very people who would suffer from the penalties sit on the senior Grain Transportation Committee that will establish whether there should be penalties. I find that rather strange.

Those penalties will be tallied up until 1985-86, but they will not be levied. In that period the farmers will have lost the protection which they had in the past. But the Bill says that they may be implemented after 1985-86.

As I have already indicated, performance objectives could be cancelled. Clause 18 of the Bill states that the Grain Transportation Administrator, if he deems it advisable to recommend the Minister to cease any activities related to so-called performance objectives, may do so.

I have described the conflict of interest, as I have seen it, between the railroads, the elevator companies, the crushers, and the Dominion Marine Association. The most severe sanctions that could be implemented against the railroads would be up to 40 per cent. That is not a severe sanction when more than half of what the railroads could achieve under the changes will be left with them.

There is an air of uncertainty since the annual rate scale used to set the freight rate which the Canadian Transport Commission is empowered to announce under the provisions of this Bill has already been prepared. We are told that that rate scale has been established now, so why will they not tell us now what it is so that it can be included in this debate?

Mr. Pepin: I will tell you in committee.

Mr. McKnight: The Minister says that he will tell us in committee. We are here to debate a Bill but we are only debating part of it. The rest of it must be debated in committee.

Mr. Pepin: I will have it then.

Mr. McKnight: When the information is available, which it is, why is it not available to those of us in the House so that we can carry on a debate knowing more of the facts than we do?

How will farmers pay in the future? How will they know what they will have to pay? My colleague, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) read a clause of the Bill regarding payment. When the CNR appeared before the Transport Committee yesterday, I read the same clause to Mr. Ron Lawless, President of CN Roads. It states:

> The annual rate scale in respect of a crop year shall be determined by multiplying the amount per ton for the movement of grain over each range of distance set out in the base rates scale by the quotient obtained by dividing the estimated eligible costs of the railway companies in respect of that crop year less the CN adjustment in respect of that crop year by the base year revenues within the meaning of subsection 2—

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When I was quoting from the Bill yesterday, the Speaker drew to my attention that I was not allowed to do so. Now, I ask for fairness.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I hope this remark is not taken from my time, but in order to help the Chair may I point out that the Speaker said that the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) was quoting from a clause of the Bill. For his information, I am quoting from a transcript of the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Transportation, which met yesterday. Therefore, I do not fall into that category.

I will continue reading from where I left off:

—as those revenues are adjusted in accordance with the grain tonnage forecast for that crop year provided by the Administrator.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), 'base year revenues' means the amount obtained by multiplying the rates applicable to the movement of grain under the tariffs of rates of the railway companies as derived from the base rate scale, taking into account sections 44 and 46, by the number of tonnes of grain actually moved by the railway companies from each point of origin on a line of railway in the Western Division in the most recent base year.

I ended by asking Mr. Lawless how much that is a bushel. He answered, "If I could tell you, Mr. McKnight, I would." That was from the President of the CNR. It is a simple rate and something which anybody should be able to understand.

There are other problems with the rate. My time is coming to a close, and I would like to put this on the record for the Minister to consider. When we consider the movement of grain with respect to East-West, there is a considerable difference. The Bill states in Clause 2:

'movement", in respect of grain, means the carriage of grain by any railway company over any line of railway now or hereafter constructed

(a) from any point on any line of railway west of Thunder Bay or Armstrong to Thunder Bay or Armstrong,

That is all it says. The second paragraph states:

From any point on any line of railway west of Thunder Bay or Armstrong to a port in British Columbia—

But it does not stop there. It goes on to say: "for export". And paragraph (c) states:

From any point on any line of railway west of Thunder Bay or Armstrong to Churchill—

It goes on to state, "for export".

That means that feed grains that are destined to be consumed in British Columbia do not travel at the statutory rate, whatever that may be. It means that only feed grains traveling east out of western Canada travel to Thunder Bay at a statutory rate, with contributions from the federal Government in the form of subsidies. But the feed grain consumers of British Columbia pay the compensatory rate from wherever it travels in western Canada.

If the Minister were concerned about designing a Bill that would be fair to all Canadians, surely he would ensure that the people of British Columbia have the same protection as the people east of Thunder Bay and Armstrong.

When we became involved with this Bill, the Progressive Conservative Party had five principles on the Crow rate that were well established and well known throughout Canada. I would like to cite those principles. First, grain producers must have a statutory freight rate which preserves the benefits of the Crow and must be protected from open-ended escalation. This Bill certainly does not do that.

Second, the Government of Canada and the railway have a continuing obligation to provide a special low rate to assist producers competing with subsidized grain export nations. This Bill does not do that.

Third, producers should be guaranteed an efficient, cost-effective and reliable grain transportation system. There are no guarantees to the producers in this Bill.

Fourth, railways should receive adequate and fair compensation for the movement of grain to provide the necessary capital and maintenance of plant and equipment. We believe that this Bill is only too generous to the railway companies, with their 100 per cent, 20 per cent and 20.5 per cent return.

Fifth, the distortion of the low freight rates in grain and oil seeds vis-à-vis processed products should be removed and the natural advantage retained. As I said with respect to British Columbia, the natural advantage in western Canada of shipping to feeders in B.C. is certainly not contained in this Bill.

Directly south of Saskatchewan is the State of Montana. The producers in Montana have continually paid a full compensatory rate for the movement of their goods. If one were to drive through Montana one would see thousands of white-faced cows, thousands of acres with cattle on it, but not one processing plant. That processing in Montana is done in Omaha. Therefore, how can the Minister of Transport tell the people of western Canada that by charging a compensatory rate for the movement of grain, processing will build up in western Canada? We have more processing in western Canada now than any of the states south of us. I look forward to taking part in this debate at a later date.

• (1430)

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made what I thought was a serious accusation with regard to the shortcomings of the Bill when he said that the Bill was imperfect. My recollection of Standing Order 73 is that it says that a Bill shall not be introduced if it is blank or imperfect. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is obligated to withdraw the Bill if it is imperfect? Could the Hon. Member elaborate on this point?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, without wishing to take the place of the Chair, I would like to say that I would have no objections if the Minister of Transport felt that he could withdraw this Bill and bring it back in a more perfect form.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, partly because this is Friday afternoon and the time is conducive to this sort of thing, would the Hon. Member like to reason with me on the concept of a safety net? I am sure he has been to a circus. We have all been.

Mr. Bosley: That is what we have here.

Mr. Pepin: What is the distance between the wire and the floor at which the safety net is located?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I find it strange that the Hon. Minister of Transport would equate a circus with the serious production of food in western Canada and the feeding of hungry people around the world. But when the Minister speaks of the distance of the safety net, let me say to him that the distance should be adequate to protect those who are going to use the net. My objection to 10 per cent and 12 per cent of the cost of goods to be used on paying for the transportation of those goods is that it does not protect the people who need the safety net. When the Minister talks about the distance, he talks about the distance of a net. When you look at the base rate in Schedule 11, there is an increment every 25 miles starting at 375 miles, I believe. Every 25 miles the rate changes by 8 cents a bushel up to 1,200 miles. The minute you get to 1,200 miles, which is in Saskatchewan, from where 60 per cent of the grain is exported, the increment for 25 miles becomes 13 cents recurring. That, along with the safety net, is not acceptable to the people of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have a short, quick, to the point question for the Hon. Member. Does he support the position of the Government that the grain producers should pay increased freight charges for shipping grain, or does he believe those freight charges should remain at the statutory grain rate level?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, if I had to choose between the Bill as presented and the statutory grain rate as it exists now, I would be forced to choose the statutory rate.

But what I would like to say is that I am supportive of those farm organizations in western Canada, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Manitoba Wheat Pool, the Commodity Coalition, the United Grain Growers, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and, I believe, the Saskatchewan Federation of Agriculture, that have said there should be an increase, that producers are willing to pay an increase. The argument in debate here is whether that increase is fair or will benefit the producers of grain in Canada.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, we seem to be getting double messages here. The Hon. Member read the five principles, one of which is that his Party seems to be in full agreement that the Crow benefit must be protected. Is the Hon. Member telling us that the producer should not pay any more in transporting grain, or is he in agreement that the producer, because the costs of transportation are rising, should pay a little more? This is the same double message we have been getting from the official critic, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and from speaker after speaker. We on this side are really not too clear on his Party's position.

Mr. Fennell: Listen then.

Mr. Flis: What does the Hon. Member mean by saying the Crow benefit must be protected?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) I know has several farms in that community in Toronto—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Arrogance.

Mr. McKnight: It is not arrogance, it is the truth. I am sure the farmers sitting on the other side are fully cognizant of what can happen, if this Bill goes through as it is, to the farmers in western Canada, and if they will listen I will explain. I feel, and my Party feels, that the $651.6 million is certainly generous enough, at least until 1985-1986. It is certainly the benefit of the Crow. If it were protected in inflated dollars rather than in constant dollars, I think that would be sufficient for the railroads to continue moving grain.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, over the years westerners have gained much from the subsidy on the shipping of manufactured products out to the West. Does he not think it fair that they should subsidize the grain coming back into Ontario?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, let me say, in answer to the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), that, as his riding indicates, he is from a rural part of Ontario. As subsidies have flowed both ways in this country, I think it would be only fair that the subsidies continue to flow both ways in this country rather than being stopped as grain starts moving from west to east. The subsidies on oil continue to flow out. As the Minister of Energy has stated, the Alberta and Saskatchewan Governments have done all they could to protect the consumers of eastern Canada from large oil price increases, but those eastern Provinces have taxed that benefit to the detriment of their own consumers. I think the subsidy should continue to flow both ways, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am still not clear. The Hon. Member says that he supports the position of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Manitoba Wheat Pool, and others who are prepared to go along with an increase in freight charges. But, on the other hand, he said that if he had to make his choice between the two, he would opt for keeping the Crow rate. Is the Hon. Member going to vote for the Bill because it includes an increase in freight charges for grain producers, along the lines of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, or is he going to vote against it because he would rather have the Crow rate?

Mr. McKnight: I would have thought the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) would have learned. After all, he is a more senior Member than I am in this House—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He is a slow learner.

Mr. McKnight: I thought he would have known that you never make up your mind how you vote when you have not seen the whole Bill. We as democrats on this side of the House, knowing the Government and knowing that the Minister of Transport is very much a democrat, will probably be accepting amendments, very sensible amendments, to be proposed by our Party when we come to committee stage, and that may enable us to support the Bill.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should set the record straight about any transportation grain subsidies coming into Ontario and point out that Ontario is a net exporter of grain, not a net importer. Naturally, we are not the benefactors of such subsidies. However, I welcome the opportunity to speak on the matter of changes to the Crow rate because I believe it is necessary to address this matter from the viewpoint of the farmer and his family farm.

• (1440)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Are you talking about Ontario or about western farmers?

Mr. Ferguson: I am talking about Canadian farmers, true Canadian farmers.

Many people believe that the Crow rate agreement signed back in 1897 was good for Canada, for western Canada in particular. I agree with them because it helped to settle western Canada and led to the development of that part of this great nation. In fact, many of my relatives went to western Canada at the time of the building of the railroads and settled in all three prairie Provinces; some even went on to British Columbia. It is good for Canada because it enables us to compete in world markets. While it is true that establishing a fixed rate on grain and flour for export to Thunder Bay in 1897 assisted in the development of the West, the Royal Commission on Dominion-Provincial Relations in 1913 indicated that a development of probably more far-reaching significance was the phenomenal decline in ocean freight rates.

In 1896 ocean rates were only one-half of what they had been during the 1870 to 1875 period. They continued to fall until 1908, while wholesale prices were rising. The prices of iron and steel, which largely determined the costs of the railways and the implements of production, were falling steadily in relation to the value of the products of farms, and interest rates were the lowest in recorded history. The British investor was willing to lend overseas in unprecedented volumes. At last Canada's hour had struck. Between 1896 and the advent of the First World War, the prairie Provinces attracted a million new settlers and the production of wheat expanded from 20 million bushels to about 200 million bushels.

By 1930 the rail system of the Prairies reached its peak in size with about 19,250 miles, and there were about 300,000 farms in operation. In Canada today we have approximately 318,000 census farms in all of Canada. Of course these farms were labour-intensive. They required harvest crews of perhaps 15 men to 20 men to operate thrashing equipment and steam engines. Many horses were involved, approximately a million horses, to haul grain to the elevators in wagons.

The Port of Churchill opened in 1931 and the statutory rate on export grain was applied to that port, which meant that the Crow rate of 1897 then applied to CN, CP and all four western ports. It was in the 1930s that significant changes began to appear on the family farm with the introduction of the tractor and the truck. Farmers became more efficient and productive, and many of the changing services required for effective agricultural production were best provided in various urban centres. This was a migration from the farm sector to the town and cities. As a result, the rural component in Saskatchewan in particular declined from 84 per cent to the total population in 1901, to 54 per cent in 1966 and to about 20 per cent today.

In fact, a review of the social and economic trends and developments in Saskatchewan since 1897 show that the Crow rate has not been a significant factor in maintaining the rural-oriented lifestyle advocated by some. The existence of the fixed rail rate on grain for 86 years has not prevented a signifcant shift of the population from rural to urban, where only about 20 per cent reside on farms today compared with 84 per cent in 1901. The same trend became evident in other Canadian Provinces, not only in the western Provinces. It did not prevent the consolidation of farms either in size or absolute numbers. The rate on grain did not prevent the consolidation of elevators and delivery points by about 50 per cent since 1930 or the demise of small communities. This has happened in other parts of the country as well. County elevators in Ontario, for example, had elevator legs which would elevate approximately 1,000 bushels per hour. Now there are many, many elevators which handle up to 5,000 or even 10,000 bushels per hour. This led to the demise of smaller elevators and smaller companies. Factors such as the growth of the road system and electrification have also had a more significant impact on small communities than has the Crow rate. The consolidation of school units, medical centres, newspapers, post offices, bulk oil and machinery dealerships has been on the same scale in all other parts of Canada as it has in the West.

It would be wrong to conclude that as a result of these trends the growth and development of the Prairies have been stunted. This is not the case at all. In fact, the development of the Prairies, particularly their move toward diversification into such areas as minerals and oil resource development, has put them in an enviable position vis-à-vis most other Canadian Provinces. In the words of the Prairie Rail Action Committee, "Whatever else these trends show, they demonstrate that the Prairies are dynamic, served by pleasant, sophisticated moderately large and growing urban areas."

Let us take a closer look at what is happening on prairie farms. There has been a steady increase in the number of acres in each farming operation. For example, the average Saskatchewan farm increased from 686 acres in 1961 to 939 acres in 1976. Today the average farm size is about 1,000 acres. The same thing has happened in Ontario and in eastern Canada in general.

In 1941 there were 138,713 farms in Saskatchewan. By 1951, the total had increased to 112,018. In 1981 the total was 67,318, or a reduction of 40 per cent in 30 years. The number of farms larger than 1,600 acres increased to 9,055 in 1981 compared with 2,931 in 1951, or an increase of about 300 per cent. There are approximately 145,000 Canadian Wheat Board permit holders in the Prairies. In 1930 there were approximately 300,000. Only one-fifth of the 145,000 currently produce about 50 per cent of total grain receipts.

The prairie farm of 1983 has changed dramatically since 1930. This is not only the case with prairie farmers. It also applies to farms in the rest of Canada. The farm today is capital intensive rather than labour intensive. It is almost possible for a husband working on the combine and his wife driving the truck to bring in the harvest themselves compared with the fact that it took 15 men to 20 men almost 50 years ago. Most farms have their own machine and repair shops. They carry a limited supply of spare parts such as bearings, belts, bolts and other common items. Farmers no longer need to go to adjacent small towns to purchase half a dozen bolts. Today they purchase them in lots of 1,000 or more, often directly from suppliers. They have their own welders, cutting torches, hydraulic presses to assist with bearing replacements, gear pullers, and the list goes on and on.

In the context of today's farm, let us look at the impact of increased rates. The increased rates will hardly be a sledgehammer, as suggested by the Tory Government of Saskatchewan, since the rate will not even double in 1985. Although it will increase to 5.5 times Crow by 1991, this assumes a total grain movement of 41 million tonnes. Even at that, the rate will cover about 60 per cent of the real rail cost and will represent about 8 per cent of the price of grain forecast for 1991.

Although no farmer, whether he is in the West or in Ontario, likes an increase in costs, the proposed increase in freight rates by 1985-86 will be nominal when compared to a farmer's over-all costs, assuming a typical Saskatchewan farm of 1,200 acres with 700 acres sown to wheat. The total revenue would be about $81,200, using a 29 bushel per acre yield and a $4 per bushel farmgate price. The total production cost would be about $60,000.

Under the present Crow rate, the transportation bill would be $2,842. If one adds the transportation cost of $2,842 to the production cost, the farmers over-all cost would be $62,842. As a percentage of the over-all cost, the transportation cost represents about 4.5 per cent. Using the same logic, this 4.5 per cent would increase to 9 per cent of over-all costs by 1985-86, assuming we still have 1983 grain prices. One could hardly call such an increase a knock-out blow, as have some opponents. While an increase of some $2,800 may sound like a lot of money, it is not so significant when we consider that tractors today sell for as much as $80,000—and that is not the price of a big tractor but a large one by the standards of a few years ago—and combines today sell for $100,000 and up.

Prior to 1949 about 1 per cent of Saskatchewan resident farmers were supplied with electricity. By the end of 1956, approximately 47 per cent or 40,000 farms were served with the power grid. Today virtually every farmer on the Prairies has access to electricity. The Hall Commission reported in 1977 that:

> Rural electrification has no doubt had the most significant positive social impact on rural life . . . due to the ability to keep bread, fresh vegetables and fruits for a longer period, these commodities were purchased in greater quantity, farther from home leading to the closing of local bakeries and stores—

The advent of supermarkets and chains led to more dramatic shopping habits of farmers, not only in western Canada but across Canada. We have the same impact in the rural ridings of Ontario. Contrary to statements that changes to the Crow rate will destroy the social fabric of prairie farms and communities, allow me to put the following excerpts from the Hall report on the record:

> Increased cost of labour forced farmers to improve production technology through capital. This resulted in social repercussions in rural western Canada, i.e. the decline in farm population and in the number of community centres of service.
> —tendency to equate the significance of the railway of 35 to 50 years ago with its significance today.

I could not help but notice that the shipping rate for a tractor-trailor truck-train in Ontario is less from Chatham, Ontario to Toronto than the equivalent rail rate. That truck can load at the granary on the farm without having to go to the local elevator and reload. It eliminates one whole handling process. It is the railways which have had to adapt to these changes in order to stay efficient. Again I quote:

> Even bulk farm imports such as fertilizer, fuel, chemicals and equipment are increasingly hauled from regional distribution points by truck.
> It is the people and the spirit of the people which gives the community viability, not the railways nor the elevators.
> The commission was unable to locate any study which indicated that the viability of a community which was already declining would be served by the retention of the railway.

Again I refer to my constituency. We have had branch lines close down because they could not compete with truck transportation which picked up a product either at the farm or at the gate of the manufacturing plant, in turn taking it to its unloading point or point of destination.

> Vastly improved roads since the early 1950s . . . have enabled people to travel further for goods and services.
> Towns being bypassed by modern highways, the development of regional health centres and hosts of other items have contributed to the phasing-out of many smaller centres with their own identities and social patterns. These changes have occurred and will continue to occur with or without the railway.

I must add that we are losing something of that way of life in rural Canada, but we cannot stand still. Improved facilities are being demanded by our population. Improved services go with it.

> The evolvement of few centres rendering a large number of services has taken place only because smaller centres have decreased in size or disappeared altogether. This took place, not as part of a planned development, but as a result of many people making individual decisions on where they wished to shop, do business and socialize.

In a good many cases, this is because of the variety of the options opened to them in the larger centres. In many of the towns and villages throughout my riding, their downtown core has become empty because of supermarket chains establishing malls and shopping centres on the outskirts of those towns or villages. This has happened all over Canada.

All elements of prairie life have changed significantly since the 1930s, not only prairie life but in the rest of Canada, particularly elevator rationalization and road construction. An effort has been made to hold some items constant such as branch line retention and Crow rates. Such a position defies reality and the results are obvious. In 1977-78, following three successive record harvests, the system broke down and prairie grain producers had to lose or forgo major grain sales due to transportation problems.

The change outlined by the federal Government to modernize the Crown rate will be consistent with all the other social and economic changes that have already taken place within the Prairies. Passage of the western grain transportation Bill will ensure that prairie producers, who are among the most efficient and productive in the world, will have a transportation system to match their performance.

We talk about subsidization. I wish to point out that in 1982 the Government of Alberta announced that four canola crushers in that Province would receive a $20.4 million subsidy representing $40 per tonne. This will grant the crusher a 91-cent margin upfront. Coming from outside Alberta, such action may be interpreted as Government interference in the free enterprise system and economy, creating an imbalance across the country. The subsidy, if attached to crushing levels, could create a product-pricing war in competition with the crushers in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, as well as Ontario.

I am an oilseed producer. I have to compete not only with the subsidies being paid to the crushers but with my sales, transportation costs against the subsidized rates for western Canada. In the essence of equity to all Canadians, we have to look at and revise the Crow rate to a standard that is fair and equitable to all Canadians, and yet utilize the potential of our report capability.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he recalls that last week it was announced by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, or whatever passes for that Department now, that three grants had been made to western Canada establishments in each of the three Provinces, one being in Hamilton, Ontario, for the building of new canola crushing plants. This is action by the Government of Canada. The Hon. Member went to pains to point out that the Government of the Province of Alberta had been interfering with the market structure of canola. Now we have the Department of Regional Economic Expansion doing the same thing. I wonder what he would say about its actions?

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of those grants. I am also aware that the Government of Ontario made a grant of $4.5 million to establish a canola-crushing plant in Hamilton, Ontario. Perhaps there is a large area in the clay belt in Ontario which could utilize these plants, whether they are in the West or in the East. It is much easier to transport the raw products to these plants and then transport the oil or the meal by rail or by ship to the port of export than it is to transport the raw product.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I must confess I am a little bit disappointed in the speech of the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson), just as I was earlier with the speech of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). In many ways both of these fellows have indicated an understanding of the West, as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has shown with regard to the Post Office when. I have raised questions with him. I was really amazed at his position here.

Similarly, I find it very difficult to understand how the Member who just spoke could introduce a Bill and in fact solicit our support for introducing a Bill that deals with farm closure and the problem that farmers are facing and now try to paint such a rosy picture. I find it very difficult to comprehend this type of walking paradox.

The Member talked about equity and things that are equitable, and I wonder if he could indicate to me how far he has to transport his grain and whether he would consider it equitable that on the Prairies and in constituencies such as mine where there is still abandonment taking place farmers will have to transport their grain 100 miles to 125 miles. I wonder if he could expound on his principle of equity when he takes that kind of position. To me, it is a paradox that I do not understand; maybe he could enlighten me.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that I was painting an exceptionally rosy picture as far as the farm income sector was concerned but perhaps I could enlighten the Member by telling him what some of the costs are. I did indicate that the cost of transporting soybeans was lower by truck from Chatham, Ontario, from my yard as a matter of fact, to Toronto. But for exports, we must pay the cost of handling and export preparation to the Port of Halifax and the Port of Saint John, New Brunswick. Perhaps I should give some examples—

Mr. Lewycky: How far does the Hon. Member have to truck his grain and does he consider 100 to 125 miles equitable?

Mr. Ferguson: Yes, that is the approximate distance from my own farm to the City of Toronto or the City of Hamilton. It is approximately the same distance to a crushing plant or an elevator. We could perhaps ship to a local elevator that is much closer with a tractor and several wagons tied behind it, probably 1,000 bushels at a time, or if we used a smaller truck, 600 bushels at a time. But if we want to sell directly to the terminal elevator, we must travel that far.

I should perhaps make some comparisons between the East and West, and I believe I could use Ontario winter wheat versus western wheat as an example. The handling costs per bushel of western wheat after it arrived at the country elevator was 29.6 cents, according to the statistics of the 1981 Annual Report of the Canadian Wheat Board. We in Ontario do not have the same rates available to us or the same facilities provided by the Government of Canada. We quite often have to load on board ship in Georgian Bay, but the average comparable cost to us last year was approximately 80 cents a bushel. We are not asking for the costs in the West to be raised to that level, but I believe that Ontario farmers have to face these kinds of transportation costs and there should be some system worked out that will at least meet half way and will put us out of competition for the export market but be more fair to all Canadians.

A comment was made a few minutes ago about subsidization of eastern products going west, and I would like to point out that I have compared prices on a good many occasions, whether it be prices in a hardware store or a plumbing shop, and the prices in the West are almost equal to what I have to pay in my community because the manufacturing plants add in a transportation equalization factor when they determine the price of their product. They must do this to remain competitive, so we are in turn assisting to pay some of those transportation costs from the manufacturing areas to western Canada.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) brought in a Bill to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act a few months ago alleging that the farming community was in terrible financial difficulty. He has been present at the same hearings and committees as I have and he has listened to the banks and to the Farm Credit Corporation where the indications given by the witnesses are to the effect that about 10 per cent of the farming population is in financial difficulty. The Member says that an additional expense of $2,800 on average will not hurt the farmer. Is he really sincere when he says that?

If the farming community is in bad shape and 10 per cent of farmers are in real financial difficulty, the average increase of $2,800 will in some cases be $6,000 or $7,000 extra in the West. This is enough to push the farmer over the edge. How does the Member justify doubling the Crow rate in two or three years and five times the Crow rate in ten years.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I think the point that has been missed here was that I used a 1,200 acre farm with 700 acres of wheat as an example. I would hope that that other 500 acres would not be in summer fallow. I would hope that that farmer would have a poultry operation there that would have 15,000 laying hens. If the farmer makes the average profit of 2.7 cents per dozen eggs, the profit from that would be $8,500, plus it would take 450 acres of barley to produce the feed for those birds. I would hope the farmer would have a margin of profit on that. Consequently, I believe that that farming operation could well afford to pay more of the cost of transporting goods to market just as farmers in eastern Canada do.

This example assumes that there would be no summer fallow on that 450 acres. I understand that there is a great deal of summer fallowing going on in the West but not as much as there used to be because farmers are now finding out that that is one of the causes of saline salts rising to the surface of the ground and making the ground less productive.

There are many other areas where you could have an additional income from a farming operation and feed the grain right on the farm. I used a poultry operation as just one example. That is something we must bear in mind.

Mr. Hobdebo: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment and ask the Hon. Member a question. The Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) suggested that because the increase would not come into effect all in one year, it would not be a knockout blow as has been described, and he said that the Saskatchewan Government was exaggerating because they suggested that. I wonder if there is very much difference between being hit five times and having the blow increased each time or being hit all at once, because that is what will happen.

Again, I follow the Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). My question, Mr. Speaker, is what about the farmer who just cannot bear the increase in cost of $3,000 and becomes part of the 10 per cent of farmers who are bankrupt or pushes the number of bankrupticies up from 10 per cent to 20 per cent, as suggested by the Member from Moose Jaw?

In the last five years, many of the farmers in my constituency have not been able to show more than a $4,000 or $5,000 profit. Paying twice the freight rate would put them in a loss situation right away. The number of farmers going bankrupt will be increased by 10 per cent almost immediately.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised that my colleague would make a suggestion like that because, of course, the final payments for the 1983 crop year will not take place until 1984 and who knows what the prices of those farm commodities will be. I would certainly hope that the price of barley, which is $94 per tonne in Alberta for June delivery this year or $95 per tonne in Winnipeg, would increase in the coming crop year.

I would like to suggest as well that the wet, cool weather we have experienced and the delay in planting in the United States in combination with the PICK program of the United States Department of Agriculture has been a shot in the arm for the grain industry. Perhaps those changes have not taken effect yet but I suggest that as they do the farmers will benefit. The minimal effect of raises in transportation costs over the years will be absorbed with the higher prices.

• (1510)

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on Bill C-155, not because I am terribly excited about it but because, as the Minister said, this could be a very historic debate. I am glad the Minister is in the House to listen to my remarks.

When we consider handling grain in western Canada, transportation is not the only thing we must take account of. As was so ably pointed out by the Hon. Member for Vegreville, (Mr. Mazankowski), we must consider the distances faced by the Canadian farmer who has to transport his grain 1,500 to 2,000 miles to the open sea. We compete with farmers in countries who have access to open water within 200 miles or less.

In light of that and the many other problems that agriculture faces in this country we must consider the benefits agriculture has brought to Canada, particularly to the industrial sector. In that whole context we have to consider transportation. I feel that to some extent the Minister has failed to consider the movement of grain in the whole context of agriculture and farming today. I would be the first to recognize that the Minister is sincere in his approach to transportation but I think he has a very narrow perspective.

If you were to choose any time between the 1930s and today to come up with a new method of moving grain and making radical changes to the system, you would not be able to choose a more critical time than the present. The farmer faces some very serious problems. First of all, he faces competition in the international marketplace which puts additional stress on agriculture today.

According to figures given to me by Dr. Andy Schmidt of the Unviersity of Saskatoon, the United States pays its farmers a subsidy of 33 per cent. European countries subsidize wheat production by $5 per bushel. The total subsidies in Canada, including the grain stabilization subsidy and the Crow rate, come to less than 17 per cent. I want to make the point to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) that it is most important that our farmers be kept in a competitive position in the international marketplace. If they are not, we are in very serious trouble.

Bill C-155 makes a great deal of trouble for farmers and this has been vented in various ways across the country despite the fact that the Minister has said there is a consensus about what he is doing. Many agricultural communities, the towns, villages and municipalities and organizations in the Prairies aare concerned about the Bill. The eyes of the West are focused on this House today as people wonder about the decisions being made on Bill C-155.

I have before me a letter addressed to the Minister from the council of the Town of Gravelbourg. I should like to read it into the record because I think the research is very good. It begins as follows:

Dear Sir:

We as a Council have listened and studied your proposals to change the Crow's Nest Pass statutory freight rates and we feel obligated and compelled to write you.

Your proposals raise much concern and worry in our town and community. The general feeling is that instead of improving the economic and social position of our community your proposals will do just the opposite. This view is widely supported across the nation including Central and Eastern Canada.

Instead of improving the purchasing power of farmers which in turn generates economic activity in the industrial sector your proposals will transfer billion of dollars from the grain producers pockets directly to the railway coffers (this is called force transfer), bypassing our rural communities and cities. Furthermore, grain production will subsidize mineral transportation costs such as coal ore, potash, lumber, oil etc. Farmers are already paying freight both ways for the shipping of his products to market and for the farm inputs.

In our area served by the Town of Gravelbourg we have approximately 220 permit holders, whose average farm is about 960 acres each delivering approximately 12 bushels of grain per acre per year—

This takes into consideration the fact that about half of the farm land in that area is in fallow ground.

—which equals 11,520 bushels (or 315 tonnes) at pesent with the Crow's Nest Pass Rates in place of 4.89 per tonne. The average transportation cost by rail per farmer is approximately $1,533.00 per year.

That is as of today.

Collectively for 220 farmers the total cost equals $337,285.00. If the Crow rates are abolished and the cost of freight triples—

We are talking about increasing the rates five times by the 1990s.

—this amount will be $4,599.00 per farmer

By the year 1990 it will be about $8,500 per permit holder in the Province of Saskatchewan.

Collectively $4,599.00 × 220 farmers equals $1,011,780.00.

I wonder if the Minister can imagine what this outflow of capital will do to every town and village in western Canada, to the communities where branch lines service the farmers.

The Hon. Member who spoke earlier referred to farms becoming larger, and small farmers and young farmers having a hard time competing. I want to suggest to you, Mr. Minister, that this will just complicate further a very difficult situation. I appeal to the Minister that he take a new look at the whole perspective of what this Bill is going to do to the economic situation of the farmers in western Canada, particularly in the grain growing areas. Certainly, there is need for upbuilding the railways; no one would argue that. Certainly, there is a need to continue in a positive direction to provide a better rail line, and so on.

● (1520)

But let us look at the position of the railroad in this. I want to make the statement in this House that this Bill is very rich for the railroads. When you consider, Mr. Speaker, that hopper cars have been bought by the Provinces and have been bought by the Wheat Board or by the farmers, and the rolling stock for the most part belongs right now to the Provinces, the Government and the farmers, and when you consider the upgrading of rail lines and lines which are scheduled for abondonment and the amount of dollars being spent there, you must realize that the railroads have been treated very well.

We had hearings in my riding this fall at Big Beaver and the Colony Line, and it was really quite amusing because of an amount of money which was supposed to have been spent on the railway. I believe it was about $70,000. The question came up before the inquiry as to what happened to the money. The railroad said: "Oh well, that was put on deferred maintenance".

I want to suggest there has been a lot of money paid to the railroad which has gone into "deferred maintenance". As the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) so ably pointed out earlier today, there is a great deal of question about accounting and what the figures mean. The Minister has put before us in the House a very complicated Bill and, if I may say in all sincerity, a Bill not too well explained as to exactly what it means in terms of dollars and cents and guarantees laid out for the farmers in moving grain. I have a great deal of concern about that.

With respect to capital cost allowance, the railways are allowed 20.5 per cent for their capital cost allowance. Let me make a small comparison. For example, if we allowed a farmer who had an investment of $500,000—and that does not take a very big farm today with the cost of land and machinery, and so on—a capital cost allowance every year on that farm, that would mean that he could start at $100,000 income. From that he could start deducting his expenses and so on, and he would then have a pretty profitable farm. He is now probably lucky if he nets $10,000 on that farm.

There seem to be two sets of rules, one for the producers and the other for the railroads. Therefore, I have a great deal of concern when the Minister says he has—I believe these are words he used yesterday—"a great deal of sympathy for the railroads and the great losses which were afforded them". The shortfall has been paid to the railroads year after year by the taxpayer and, quite frankly, I do not see a great deal wrong with that. My position, and I believe the position made clear by the Hon. Member for Vegreville, is that the statutory rate remain and that the Government pick up the shortfall and hold the railroads responsible for rebuilding and putting in place a transportation system which will better serve Canada. And I say Canada and the farmers, because if you break the farmers, you will not be doing Canada a great service. I believe it was Sir Leonard Tilley who said: "Destroy the farmer and grass will grow in the streets of every city in the nation".

I believe it is important in this debate that we clarify in our minds, not only as farmers, not only as responsible people in this House, but as Canadians, exactly what type of Bill has been presented for the benefit of all Canada.

I would like to speak further on some of the more positive aspects of what I think this Bill should do and what it could do, not only for Canada and for the farmers, but also for the world. I would like to make a comparison with the national energy policy. I would like to ask the Minister what was accomplished by bringing in a policy under the National Energy Program which broke the oil fields, which put workers out of work, the Government then purchased oil from Mexico and other points around the world? Not only did the Canadian people in the oil fields of Alberta and Saskatchewan suffer, but all Canadians suffered because of that legislation.

I see a very close parallel in Bill C-155. What advantage is it going to be to Canada if the farmers are rendered bankrupt, as was raised in the questioning just a little ealier? What benefit will that be to Toronto, to Montreal or to central Canada? It will mean that the farmers will not have money to by combines, tractors, rubber and steel, and all those things which are bought from the manufacturing areas of Canada. That is why I appeal to the Minister to look carefully at this Bill, at the whole structure of agriculture, of transportation, and the results which will flow from it.

We are faced in agriculture today with some of the highest costs which we have ever known. I mentioned earlier the national energy policy. One of the highest costs which we face, and the Minister must take this into consideration, is the cost of fuel. It has gone up 90 per cent in the last two years, mostly directly related to the national energy policy. We have farmers today who are paying 66 cents a gallon for their diesel and farm fuel. It does not take a large tractor today to hold 150 gallons of diesel fuel, which means $300 every time the tractor is filled. What do the farmers do? They are wondering just how often they will work their fields. I can tell you that they are cutting back. The farmers in my riding are cutting back in the cultivation of their summer fallow, in their farming operations, simply because of the high cost. What is this going to do? It is going to have a counterproductive reaction to producing wheat.

I would like to bring out this point as well, Mr. Speaker. The country of Canada produces for export for the benefit of all Canadians some $6 billion to $8 billion of surplus trade. This is not important only to the farmer but to the whole economy of Canada. In closing my remarks on this very important subject today, I suggest to the Minister of Transport that if the direction he takes through Bill C-155 proves to be counterproductive to the production of wheat and other agricultural products in Canada, it will have a long-lasting effect not only on agriculture, farmers, towns and villages, but on all of Canada. I ask him to reconsider this Bill seriously.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned the heavy burden of fuel costs which are largely a result of the federal taxes imposed under the National Energy Program. In order to give us an idea of what the aggregate costs are on an average farm, could the Hon. Member roughly outline what an average fuel bill would be for a two-section farm and, in doing so, would he state what the fuel tax component would be?

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to answer that question but I cannot be too specific. However, I did some calculations in terms of an average farm, an acre of land and production, and found that the tax alone on farm fuel today at 66 cents a gallon, which is a very exorbitant federal tax, would equal an amount to enable a farmer, in most cases, to ship the grain that that fuel produces. This is an important factor raised by the Hon. Member for Vegreville. Just how much tax can the farmer stand?

We have talked about subsidies. I do not like the word subsidy and I think we should get away from it. The farmer does receive some subsidy, I believe 17 per cent, but he is also paying a very heavy tax in other areas. I think it is important that the Minister take this all into consideration to determine what it will do for agriculture in Canada.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems not to be at least theoretically opposed to the thesis that the farmer should pay a greater share of the cost of transportation of his grain. While he does not seem to disagree with that principle, he seems to disagree with that proposition in practice. He has said that now is not the right time. Could he tell me if there has been in the past ten years, for example, since the value of the Crow has been substantially inferior to the real cost of transportation, a time when that change could have been made? Can he anticipate a time in the future when it could be changed?

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, of course that is a very hypothetical question but one must take into consideration the ability to pay. I said that the farmer does not now have the ability to pay.

To answer the question, let me draw a comparison with Crosby, North Dakota, where it costs $1.51 Canadian to ship a bushel of wheat. The Minister himself said that the charge will be 70 per cent to 80 per cent of the real cost of the movement of grain in the 1990s. Since it is difficult to equate the cost because of accounting, as the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw said, if we simply take the figures that we have for the Unites States, where it costs $1.51 a bushel to ship wheat to Seattle from Crosby, North Dakota, one can see that the farmer would have to pay approximately $1.11 a bushel in addition to what he is paying now. I can state to the Hon. Minister that every farmer in western Canada would be bankrupt with costs like that.

Certainly there might be some consideration for an increase in cost if the ability to pay was there. But the ability is not there.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member which is not hypothetical, because I think we should be dealing with facts in regard to the Crow. The Hon. Member mentioned the heavy tax burden placed upon the farmers by the Liberal Government. He gave some figures as to the amount of tax. Could he inform the House how much of that is federal tax? I know that the Conservative Government in Saskatchewan lowered taxes in order to help the farmer and the economy in that Province. It was a great boost.

What seems to be hampering farmers and economies in the West is these heavy Liberal energy taxes that have been brought on by the disastrous National Energy Program, which lost some 60,000 jobs in the industries in Ontario and Quebec, drove oil rigs out of the country, and indeed untold millions of dollars were driven out as a result of that program.

If the Liberal Government were to consider some of the policies that have been implemented by the Saskatchewan Government, does he think it would be of assistance to the farmer?

Mr. Gustafson: Just to clarify this difficult situation, there is no provincial sales tax in the Province of Saskatchewan on farm fuel. There is, however, a federal tax of 66 cents per gallon and the removal of that tax would certainly be productive. That is the point I was making.

Many of the Government's actions in the past have been counterproductive. Take metrication, for example. One can ask how that is counterproductive. The farmer can no longer clearly read instructions on how to mix chemicals. There is the fuel tax under the national energy policy. We now have another blow, Bill C-155.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. There has been a tendency in some parts of the country to view this Bill as probably only affecting western Canada. I do not represent a constituency in western Canada as the Hon. Member does. Could the Hon. Member enlighten me and other Members from other parts of the country on the effect this can have beyond what is considered western Canada and the area which is considered to be affected alone? Is this a Bill that affects the country as a whole and, if so, how?

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that there could be a Bill implemented in the House that would have more effect on all of Canada than this one. Consider the impact that agriculture has on the entire country. If the industry becomes non-productive to the point where it cannot buy the necessities needed on farms, such as rubber and steel which go into farm machinery as well as other things that go into agricultural production, it would have an impact upon the factories in Ontario and upon every taxpayer in Canada.

I was considering that point recently. One needs only to consider a country in the world that is held in high regard. When one sees the agricultural community in that country and the policies that have built and strengthened the agricultural community, one can see a strong country.

At one time in North America, both in the United States and Canada, 97 per cent of the population was engaged in agriculture. Today, 4.5 per cent produce enough food in North America to feed North America and a great portion of the world. I want to say that this is a credit to North America and also a credit to Canada.

• (1540)

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have one final question for the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), who explained the serious problems farmers are having in western Canada, and we know of the burden placed upon them by the National Energy Program. The Hon. Member also mentioned the metrication program. If that program were repealed, would this assist the western farmers?

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, that would assist all Canada. First, it would probably save the country a lot of money. Second, we have farmers who do not know what they are doing in terms of measurement when it comes to spraying this spring. This point was brought forward very capably by the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw last evening. He pointed out the importance of it. In addition, there are so many areas where metrication has had devastating effects. I am sure farmers would be much encouraged if that program were reversed.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin (p. 25389).

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, it is with—

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not one who abuses the Chair or the Table on points of order regarding the rules, but I would like to ask you if you would take under advisement the question of debate at second reading, the time taken up thereon and the time limits placed upon speakers. I understand that the eight-hour limit of 20-minute speeches includes the ten minutes taken up with questions and comments of an Hon. Member following the end of his 20-minute speech.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to take into consideration Standing Order 35(1) which reads as follows:

35. (1) Unless otherwise provided in these Standing Orders, when the Speaker is in the Chair, no Member, except the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, or a Minister moving a government order and the Member speaking in reply immediately after such Minister, or a Member making a motion of "no-confidence" in the government and a Minister replying thereto, shall speak for more than twenty minutes at a time in any debate.

The next words are crucial:

Following the speech of each Member a period not exceeding ten minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses thereto.

You will note it says "Following the speech of each Member", which according to the previous wording is to last not more than 20 minutes.

In Standing Order 35(2), at the bottom of page 27, we find a repetition which reads:

(2) When second reading of a government bill is being considered, no Member except the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition shall speak for more than:

(a) forty minutes if that Member is the first, second or third speaker;

(b) twenty minutes following the first three speakers, if that Member begins to speak within the next eight hours of consideration; and following the speech of each Member a period not exceeding ten minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses thereto;—

It seems to me that means that only the 20-minute speeches of Members at second reading following the first three speakers should be counted in the eight-hour limit, and that the ten minutes for questions and responses is not part of an Hon. Member's 20-minute speech, because the rule says "Following the speech of each Member". That is stated in both Standing Order 35(1) and Standing Order 35(2)(b). The 20-minute speech is the speech and the ten minutes are for questions and answers following, which is not part of the speech. The words are quite clear.

I make this point on the basis that if the ten minutes of questions, responses and comments are not counted as part of a Member's 20 minutes—and I do not think they should be because I believe it has already occurred that another Member has taken up most of the ten minutes with comment and it was not part of the Hon. Member's speech—I do not think that the ten-minute question and response portion can be properly construed as part of the eight-hour time limit. Only 20 minute speeches of Hon. Members shall make up the eight-hour period, not the additional ten minutes of questions and responses.

I would ask you to take this point under advisement, Mr. Speaker, because I know you and the Table are meticulously keeping track of the hours and the minutes taken up by all Hon. Members.

In fairness to all Hon. Members there are those who would be entitled to make a 20-minute speech and they should not be penalized by time taken up at an earlier stage in the debate that had nothing to do with the 20-minute speech time of a previous speaker.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have listened very carefully to what my friend was saying and I have looked at the words of the revised Standing Orders. I am inclined to think that the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) makes a reasonable submission of which the Chair ought to take cognizance. It is not one of those things that the Chair has to decide today but this matter will have to be decided fairly quickly. Perhaps it could be considered over the weekend.

I will not add to the argument of my hon. friend, but I will suggest for the guidance of the Chair that the Chair consider page 14 of the third report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. Item 3, "Length of Speeches", reads this way:

Your Committee is of the opinion that the time limits on speeches should be shortened wherever the standing orders provide for 40-minute (except as provided in the recommendation hereunder relating to second reading of Government Bills) and 30-minute time limits and that an effort should be made to introduce greater spontaneity and more cut and thrust into debate. Your Committee proposes that these speeches be limited to 20 minutes.

It goes on—and these are the important words:

But that an additional ten minutes following each speech should be made available, if required, for questions or comments to the member who has just spoken.

Not a speech, not a speech by the Member, not even an answer to the question or a speech by the questioner, but a comment. You use the words yourself when you ask whether there are any comments by Hon. Members. The paragraph goes on as follows:

Western Grain Transportation Act

Your committee proposes that the amendments to the appropriate standing orders be as simple as possible, but that the new debating process be controlled by the Chair in accordance with the following guidelines.

It then deals with the ten-minute period and says:

Ten minutes set aside following a Member's speech should be used to question a Member or comment briefly on the speech in a manner strictly relevant to the content of that speech.

That all feeds back to what my friend said at the outset of his argument. A speech is a speech, a question in the context of the rules is a question and a comment is a comment. Considering the limitation thereafter on speaking time, one must bear that in mind.

• (1550)

I say with respect that the general principles which should be borne in mind by the Chair are the limitation on debates in terms of time in the broad sense and the right of an Hon. Member to speak. Members rarely have an opportunity to rise and speak forever; therefore there is a limitation, when the House has decided to limit the time of speeches even more, there should be no constriction put on the rules that would limit in any way the speaking time of Members, except to the extent of complying with the rules.

To put it another way, if the Chair should decide that four Members ahead of the ones who would be otherwise cut back should be cut back in their speeches from 20 minutes to ten minutes because of including the ten-minute period, the Chair would by that order and that decision be precluding those four Members from exercising their full rights. In other words, the rules should be construed to permit Hon. Members to utilize to the fullest the scope permitted in the rules.

My respectful submissions to the Chair are that the scope is 20 minutes and that the comments and questions or the new innovation is not to be considered a speech. In fact, the rules indicate that it is not a speech; it is a comment or a question and ought only to be so construed. The rules provide now for eight hours of 20-minute speeches or speaking time. I do not know where it cuts, where it falls or who it cuts out, but it seems to me that it is a reasonable interpretation to place on the rules, especially when we are moving into this experiment which seems to be working quite well.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the points raised by Hon. Members who preceded me, and perhaps they may wish to recall that the purpose of these changes in our parliamentary procedure was not to cut down on each Member's speaking time in the House but to give this parliamentary institution a more efficient set of procedures.

This Parliament is literally dying a slow death, because we parliamentarians have been unable to streamline our operations. The Bills that are languishing on the Order Paper are a monument to our collective shame. The lack of efficiency of this Parliament in passing legislation is incredible. Certainly, nobody can beat our record for endless talking, but when it comes to passing legislation we are incredibly ineffective.

I would therefore draw your attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the new Standing Orders prescribe ... They refer to consideration of a Bill for eight hours, and not for periods of twenty minutes. The Standing Orders clearly prescribe that the House of Commons is to consider a Bill for eight hours.

And now we have this new interpretation, this new brainwave that would have exactly the opposite effect to what we wanted to achieve, which is to make debate more interesting and more lively. Enough of those long, repetitive forty minute speeches. Everyone agreed this formula had to be changed.

We therefore decided to have 20 minute speeches and allow another ten minutes, not only for speeches and comments by the Member recognized by the Speaker, but for dialogues and exchanges which allow the Member to complete his speech while replying to the comments of other Members.

It is appropriate to note, Mr. Speaker, that if we accepted the interpretation given by the NDP Member, we would unduly extend the debate and no longer spend eight hours considering a bill, but add many additional ten minute periods, which means that we would no longer be discussing a bill for eight hours, but perhaps for nine or ten hours. I believe that this interpretation is wrong. In any case, I know that you will take the matter under advisement, look fully into it and probably comment on it next week.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Lewycky: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am afraid I have to disagree with the feelings of the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) on the matter. It seems to me that the rules indicate that time for questions, if required, shall be made available. They allow this additional opportunity for questioning, but I view it as being a supplementary matter to the eight hours of speeches that can be given.

It is similar to interruptions in the proceedings under Statements pursuant to Standing Order 21 or in Question Period. They are not included because they are something different. I think this provision is different in that regard. It is set out as a separate clause from the one dealing with the first three speakers and also from those who speak for ten minutes.

I would just like to say that I concur with my colleague and with the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that it should not be included in the eight hours of consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words to the comments of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). As a member of the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform, I must say there was no doubt in the Committee members' minds on this point, and I fail to understand how there can still remain any doubt in the minds of some Members, that this 10-minute period is part of the debate. Standing Order 35(2)(b) which applies in this case reads as follows:

(b) twenty minutes following the first three speakers, if that Member begins to speak within the next eight hours of consideration—

If anyone suggests that the 10 minute question period following speeches is not a debate, I must wonder what we are doing in this House. It is a debate. It is simply a different type of debate. During the first 20 minutes, the Member makes his comments and in the next 10 minutes, there is an exchange, in other words a debate among members of this House on the speech just made.

I do not understand how the NDP Members who raised this issue can interpret the Standing Orders as they do, and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that you could even make your ruling immediately since there is no doubt as to the interpretation of this Standing Order.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), but unfortunately it is on the same point of order which, of course, is out of order. As the Hon. Member knows, it is not possible under the Standing Orders to rise a second time on the same point of order. However, it being Friday the thirteenth, we will conclude with the Hon. Member's remarks on something that he can consider a fresh point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, it is an additional point to the original point of order in response to the comments of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). The wording in the Standing Orders is very clear. It indicates that no Member shall speak for more than 20 minutes at any time in any debate. Then it says, and it says it twice in the rule:

• (1600)

Following the speech of each Member a period not exceeding ten minutes—

That is following the speech. It says in two places "following the speech". His speech was 20 minutes. Otherwise, 30-minute periods are counted against all Members in the House for the purpose of arriving at the eight hours of debate instead of 20-minute speeches. That is all we are suggesting. This would provide four additional Members, if they chose to use it, an opportunity to make a 20-minute speech instead of a 10-minute speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Obviously, as Hon. Members have indicated and have requested, the matter will be taken under consideration over the weekend and a decision will be rendered on Monday. It is appropriate that on Monday it be rendered as early as possible because, as indicated by the Hon. Member for Regina West and the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) in that order, we may be approaching, based upon how one does the calculation, a so-called eight-hour limit.

I do not have the figures in front of me indicating at which point a decision would have to be made, but I am sure that Hon. Members in the House will understand that the decision from the Chair will be made before it puts any Hon. Member at a disadvantage with respect to the interpretation of the eight hours.

Now comes the part which may not be so satisfactory to some Hon. Members, but I want to indicate, so that Members have an opportunity to consider in advance, how the Chair will rule on Monday. Perhaps Hon. Members can be advantaged in that sense so that they may raise the matter further, if they wish, on Monday. I must say that the present occupant of the Chair is inclined toward the same interpretation of Standing Order 35(2)(b)— —in both versions as the one given by the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance). This means that I do not find much difference between the words "débat" in French and "consideration" in English.

[Translation]

[English]

My impression from a reading of both languages would indicate that the eight-hour limit would include the usage of ten-minute periods. However, that is not a final ruling. It is simply to advise the House that that is the present temperament of the Chair in reviewing the matter. There will be an opportunity for Hon. Members to raise the matter further on Monday. We will now continue with debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, after listening to those comments from Hon. Members well acquainted with procedural matters, I understand why this debate on the Crow rate policy has raised so much controversy. From what I have heard in the last few minutes, I can appreciate how something abudantly clear sometimes may become confusing for those who will not grasp simple matters.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) for his courage in addressing a policy which will have an impact all across the land, a policy that nobody else since 1897 had the courage to tackle. That policy has been vilified and abused even before it was made public. I am far from being an expert in transportation matters, although there are several farmers in my constituency. However, in my area of Quebec, on the south shore, I spend more time dealing with other matters besides agriculture. But this time I thought I had a golden opportunity to get to know the issue, or at least familiarize myself with that policy.

I was surprised at the language used by the opponents of the proposal. And I am referring especially to the so-called coalition in Quebec that is headed by Minister Garon. I am surprised and shocked that although the Minister of Transport has now bowed to the will of the caucus sub-committee headed by the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois), although he accepted the bulk of their recommendations for paying all of the benefit to the railways.

I am surprised that no one made the point that throughout the debate on this issue, Mr. Garon does not really seem to have been protecting the interests of Canadian farmers, and I am also surprised to see that some Ministers of Agriculture in other provinces have totally ignored the national interest as far as agriculture is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, if in this country we are not capable of showing more concern for the national interest than has been shown during this debate, I think our country badly needs people with a more responsible outlook to defend it, at both the federal and the provincial level.

I was also somewhat astonished to hear the previous speaker mixing the Government's policy on the metric system and its energy policy in with his speech on the transportation policy, and making a kind of verbal hash as a result. I realize that he may be concerned and worried about these issues, but I do not think it is very sensible to air these concerns when the House is discussing a policy that is vital to this country. I explained to the farmers in my riding that I agreed with and understood the reasons behind the Minister of Transport's first policy statement. If we can doubletrack in the West, and we must, then we must do so in the interests of the entire country and not only of Western Canada. There were certain mechanisms the Minister was proposing and I agreed with them. In turn, I wanted some changes. I thought that if they did not pay according to acreage ... that did not go down very well with our people, and they had more or less convinced me on this point, that payment should be shared between the farmers and the railways. I went along with this point of view, and the point I made when I met farmers in my riding who were members of the Coalition was the following. I told them that I had trouble understanding why they were using the word equity, because for all practical purposes, what the Minister of Transport was proposing was to reduce subsidies on grain transport and to spend substantial amounts on developing the railway network in the West, in order to improve the country's economy, because if we can doubletrack, in the 90s Canadians will be able to ship and sell $2.5 million worth of grain.

Obviously, since farmers will have to spend a little more to get better transportation, they will probably make a bit less per ton of shipped grain, but they will be able to ship more wheat and more grain and more of everything, and in the final instance, their net income will be increased. And I told the Coalition farmers that they were objecting to the fact that because Western farmers would be making fewer profits, they would no longer be able to compete with the West, because Western farmers would be able to export pork, beef, and whatever they would be able to produce in Western Canada, and then I said that I found it somewhat paradoxical when on the one hand they were talking about equity, and at the same time they were saying that their competitive position was being threatened because Western farmers would be subsidized a bit less per ton of wheat.

I said that perhaps we should look at a system where neither Eastern nor Western producers would be subsidized. Nothing. That is fair. There is nothing. No intervention, therefore total reliance on the forces of nature on what our land can produce with the help of the sun and its geographical location. And, may I ask at this point, what would Canadian agriculture be like if there were no subsidies? I would say that the gap which you are so concerned about would be still wider. Therefore, you might say that you would be less competitive, and on the other hand, with no subsidies whatsoever, without Government intervention, my friends, Western producers probably would be poorer because they would have lower incomes and would be unable all by themselves to totally fund the infrastructures they need.

And, when faced with that demonstration, people will say: Yes, maybe you are right. Then I say: What is to be done? What sort of intervention is needed from the federal Government to get the results that will benefit everyone? Because the test is national interest, and we should have this in mind while we make sure that nobody is to be penalized. And I hope that Mr. Caron, who led the battle, will never again contact me on the subject of transmission line corridors. I hope that Mr. Caron, our Minister of Agriculture, will be in a position to support the Minister of Energy if ever the Newfoundlanders, aware of their own interests, require a corridor for transmitting their hydro power across Quebec. Because it would be in the national interest for Newfoundlanders to get richer, and have access to a profitable market.

Throughout this debate during which the Minister has accepted to proceed at a slower pace, and has bowed to the request of a number of groups, including our caucus subcommittee, he has finally agreed in what probably is his wisdom and his greater understanding of Canadian society, and has told himself: Maybe we should go slower, by stages. He did not want to have people up in arms. And I thank him for this, not on behalf of the agricultural industry but because of the spirit of our common development. I hope that this magnificient proof of the Minister's generosity will serve as an example to all other Members. I hope it will be a source of inspiration to all Canadians. If we can show understanding rather than constant confrontation, it might take a bit longer but we should reach our goals.

Mr. Speaker, I thanked the Minister, not for what he has done for agriculture but rather for showing us that harmony has to be built up from scratch in Canada. I am convinced that if all of us on both sides of the House had supported the Minister, not for the policy he has introduced, but for everything he has done since the Gilson report, if Quebecers, western NDP Members and Progressive Conservatives alike had had the openmindedness of the Minister, we could have defined the national interest and decided what is in the best interest of all Canadians and then tried to help and support the Minister in his quest for means to be taken to reach that objective. Then we could have explained our position to the people who had already made up their minds without quite knowing what the whole thing was all about. I am convinced that, at the meetings of the Quebec coalition where 400 or 500 people were gathered, seldom more than one or two of them had even read the Gilson report. I am convinced that if we could have met with each farmer—impossible, of course—they would have supported the Minister.

As a friend of Jack Horner's, I have met Alberta producers and I know as well a number of Saskatchewan farmers whom I have seen recently and whose needs I am aware of. I have been a Member for nine years now, and every spring and every summer I hear western Members talk about side tracks, what we in Quebec know as country lines. When Mr. Duplessis was Premier he won the elections by promising that those lines would be paved, whereas in Western Canada it seems that the way to win elections is to say that the side tracks will be maintained. I am not so sure. I discussed this issue with some farmers and I am not sure that it would be the most economical way to transport our foodstuffs. If we do not use the cheapest means, the result is that the farmer's net profit is lower. Our Minister of Transport has been trying to find ways so that everybody will be better off in the end. Finally, as it so often happens in Canada, the people took a tougher stand, thereby reducing the scope of the outstanding work which the Minister and the Department had undertaken.

In my opinion, we have a good policy and Bill C-155 is a tremendous step forward, but unfortunately the end result could have been even better, if their enthusiam had not been curtailed for fear of reaching the acceptable limit of change. I know the concern of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who certainly looks after the interests of his constituents, and his reputation and potential extend beyond the limits of his riding. That is a friend of whom all Albertans can certainly be very proud.

I am convinced that deep down—it was not easy to deal with organizations with negative attitudes—the Hon. Member for Vegreville has great admiration for the current Minister of Transport, having been himself for nine months responsible for that portfolio, having looked closely into the problems associated with the transportation of Western grain but without enough time available to carry out the courageous reform implemented by this minister. I am sure he is full of admiration for him, and I wish my friend "Maz" as we call him on this side, had met the various organizations and said: Gentlemen, the plan can be improved in order to better serve your interest. Unfortunately, I know Hon. Members from the Official Opposition are very busy entering races and they did not have time to enter this particular improvement race. However, I hope that during the months and the years to come, the bill will offer us a golden opportunity to review this policy as a whole, around 1986, given the popularity of my Hon. friend from Alberta and I am convinced he will still be here in 1986 if he so wishes—

An Hon. Member: On the other side.

Mr. Loiselle: Yes, on the other side! And it is my hope that at that time we will be able to go all the way and achieve all the benefits we have in mind for the Canadian agriculture.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to remind Hon. Members of the remarkable personality of our Minister of Transport. It must be said again and again that he took into account the views of all the individuals he met, which is a rarity in politics, and especially he took into account our capacity to accept change. I can only hope that we will be able to go as far as he had hoped, in the best interest of all farmers in Quebec and in the West so that our agricultural industry will finally achieve its full potential.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments? debate? The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

• (1620)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be in Parliament at this time and to take part in the debate on the transportation Bill as it relates to western farmers. I am pleased to be here because I am a product of the western farm. I grew up with the development and growth of western Canada.

I know that the Minister and others are amazed at the tenacity and energy with which farmers have opposed this Bill, this undermining of their trust in the country and a Government which they always thought did things for the benefit of the people. Those people trusted the Government because of the way they think. They have been betrayed before but they thought that most of the time the Government came up with something that was fair.

I know the Minister and others wonder why this issue has generated so much heat and emotion among farmers of the West. The Minister need only look at the history of the people to understand what they are fighting for. It goes far beyond cheap freight rates; they are fighting for a way of life which they built themselves.

Next Tuesday, May 17, in my community of Birch Hills the people will gather for a celebration. May 17 is Norwegian Independence Day. Some say it was the day that the Swedes got tired of the pesky Norwegians and kicked them out, but really it was a mutual decision between the Norwegians and the Swedes, reached through negotiation and understanding. That celebration is repeated in hundreds of communities in the West. Groups take time to celebrate and to remember. They might be Métis Swedes, Hungarians, Rumanians, Irish, English, Polish, Scottish, German or French, because in Saskatchewan about 60 per cent of the population comes from ethnic backgrounds other than French and English.

What are these people celebrating? To a great extent they are remembering their past or celebrating success. They are saying: "We are here in Canada and we made it; we worked; we believed; we hung on and look at us now. We are important Canadians, free and independent." Our children are the luckiest people in the world because we helped build a nation that is strong and fair and that believes in people.

Part of what they built is being attacked by this Bill—a way of life. It is not necessarily a way of making a living but of a way of life. To illustrate that building process I can only relate to my own experience, to what I saw, was told and felt in the process of growing up in the developing farming country. In the farms around Saskatchewan the Crow rate is part of that development.

The story of the West is the classic story of the development of land, homesteads, wheat pools, wheat boards, branch lines, pasture, cattle, pigs and even gardens. The people have a love for their land and for their country. They are people who trust and believe that if you work hard for the country you would be paid back with a bountiful harvest and fair treatment. Are we in this House going to betray that trust?

My father came to North America when he was ten years old. He came to a place called Weldon, one of a family of seven boys. He filed for a homestead before he was 16 and proved it before he was 18. Proving land in that part of Saskatchewan meant cutting and grubbing out trees, breaking 20 acres and building a house. My dad had the name of being a good man for the country because he and his oxen and horses broke a lot of land in that area in those first few years of development. He and his neighbours were builders who believed in the country. They grew grain when it sold for 20 cents a bushel and cost 19 cents per bushel to thresh. For a while they watched as their grain was purchased by line elevators for 50 cents and sold on the world market and even to the eastern market for $2 per bushel.

They built a wheat pool system to get around that kind of problem. They bypassed some of the speculators through the wheat pool and increased the amount of money that came to them. In the 1920s handling charges for grain went from 22 cents per bushel to two cents per bushel with the advent of the wheat pools. This is a telling commentary on the corporate enterprise rip-off.

The need for western grain was recognized but there seemed to be no reason to grow it because the cost of transportation by train was so exorbitant. Then the Government made a deal with the railways to establish lower rates in exchange for land, property and money, which went to the railways to help them build the lines and also went to contribute to the development of farming communities in the West.

Transportation is one of the things that makes the Canadian West possible. The roads which were the first trails had romantic names, such as Carleton Trail, Kelsey Trail and Edmonton Trail, the three trails which go near my home. Then came the railways and finally the airplanes. These all make the West possible.

If you lop off any one of these modes you effectively change the base of the West. That is what this Bill does, Mr. Speaker. Over a period of time it will lop off the railways as the means of moving grain, at least for the first few steps for a farmer. The first few steps in the movement of grain for export are done by truck. If you remove the rail line you force the farmer to use another mode.

The Minister says: "So what? use another mode." It is possible but it would kill the way of life which is ours. The branch line system was built by the railway companies and they saw the benefits of putting lines within reach of the farmers and within reach of productive lands. The communities grew up along those trails and then along the railways. Communities thrived because they were easily reached by the farmers. Not many people lived more than ten or so miles from town in those days. Post offices, schools, churches, hospitals, curling rinks, hardware stores, machinery dealers, restaurants, skating rinks—in a word, all of the necessities of life grew up in those communities. From these small towns came people like the President of the Board of the CNR, the President of the Bank of Canada, the President of the CBC, people like Gordie Howe and John Diefenbaker. I could go on ad infinitium naming people who have grown up on the Prairies. These communities are still producing high-calibre leaders for Canada because their roots are deep and their support has been firm.

This way of life has been eroding quite quickly in the last few years, aided by trends which some abhor but others espouse, trends such as centralization of schools, hospital care, machinery agencies and so on. These trends have been aided and abetted by Government policies, in some cases the policy of a CCF Government in Saskatchewan. Some of these centralizations were not defensible.

However, I grew up during the Second World War which changed the demographics of the Prairies so that services either had to be centralized or become non-existent. But the death blows to many communities were dealt by rail line abandonment, Mr. Speaker. In many cases, when the railway left the elevator left, and the farmer did not go to that town. Schools closed, stores closed and eventually hospitals and the post office moved out, and another Prairie town was dead. Many westerners see this new direction as being symbolized by the withdrawal of Crow, by variable rates, and by further branch line abandonments. No one should kid themselves about the effects of this Bill and the effects of the elimination of Crow. It means more rail line abandonment and more decimation of small communities. That will be the effect of this legislation, Mr. Speaker.

Many westerners see this as one more devastating blow to their cherished way of life, to the way that they and their parents built their lives. Some will say it is inevitable anyway.

Market stresses will force this kind of centralization eventually. That is a fallacy which comes from a lack of understanding of the people and their way of life. It even lacks an understanding of the history of many countries throughout the world.

Centralization of the control of land in the hands of a few, an inevitable result of the present policy, has happened in many countries in the world. In fact, it was the place where many countries started. In Britain it was called feudalism and it took many years for that country to get rid of the situation where the lord owned the land and the people as well. They finally went from being tenant farmers to private owners of land. Many countries in the Third World, in Asia, South America, Central America and Africa, suffer from this problem of centralized ownership of land.

I am not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that that is going to happen here, but there is a parallel which should not be ignored. Even now in the State of Kansas a large portion of land is centrally owned and farmed by tenant farmers. That is not our way of life. Centralization is not inevitable or even necessary. Right now in Saskatchewan, viable farm size varies from a quarter section to ten and 20 sections. In many cases small farmers pay as much income tax as the large ones, which implies that ten families could make as good a living on those ten sections as one family does now.

The effect of this Bill will be to force centralization by elimination of the farmer who is small, regardless of how efficient he is. The day may come when there is a move back to small farms. Economic pressures and hig-tech may dictate the direction in which we move in the future where we will need those railways and those branch lines. The time may come when, because of the population of Canada and the need for food in the world, we will be forced to use more efficient methods of farming, of food production. There is no doubt in my mind, and I am sure no doubt in the mind of anyone who has lived on the Prairies, that the small farm is a more efficient producer than is the large farm. We are not planning for that in passing this Bill.
