Many people are protesting this particular Bill. They protested it when it started as the Gilson-Pepin report, and they are protesting it now. How are they voicing those protests? We have received around 30,000 letters and signatures, and taking into account what the Minister must have received directly, probably many more than those 30,000 citizens have voiced their protests. We have had letters of endorsement of Crow retention from rural municipalities, from town councils, from cities like Saskatoon, Prince Albert, Yorkton and Melfort, from villages, from chambers of commerce, from church groups. In fact, just the other day the Minister received a letter from the Anglican Diocese of Qu'Appelle, a very conservative group.

The original proposal did not have consensus, Mr. Speaker. The Minister has admitted that. This Bill which he has put forward has even less, he is finding. The Minister should seek consensus for such important legislation. The essence of democracy is that the Government have the consent of the governed. The essence of democracy is that the Government have the essence of the governed. This Government has forgotten that essence. The Minister has never had the consent of the people who are most affected by this Bill.

I have attempted this day, Mr. Speaker, to say why this legislation is tenaciously being fought by the grassroots western farmers, who feel betrayed by their own organizations and by the Government. These two groups are attempting to negotiate away part of the farmers' way of life, the part which they built and in which they took pride.

The committee will be considering the main parts of the Bill which we have been debating. I would advise the Minister to put the Bill away for some time and to reconsider it later. Let him return with a plan that allows the West to be what it has been and can be, as suggested in the amendment.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spent a lot of time on centralization. I believe this is a very important issue. Much centralization has already occurred. Delivery points have already been centralized and the sizes of farms and towns have already been centralized. There are small towns where I live such as Hendon, Saskatchewan and Wadena, Saskatchewan which still have branch lines but the towns are dying out. This trend has occurred even with the present Crow rate in place.

On what studies is the Hon. Members basing his allegation that the abandonment of branch lines will cause this centralization that he is talking about? Because it has already occurred with the present Crow rate.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the point I was trying to make. There is a certain amount of centralization and it is affecting the way of life of the western farmer who has been there for a long time and wants to remain there. Centralization is resulting in larger farms which will produce less grain.

The Crow rate is simply one more factor. If we had had variable rates before, as we will have in the future, centralization would have occurred much sooner. We would not be concerned about that issue today because it would have already happened.

The responsibility of Governments is to do what is best for the people of the country, not for the big manufacturers. Right now the people in western Canada do not want to move off off the farms but they are being forced to do so. Where can they go but to the cities in order to get jobs which do not exist?

Our farm population could be doubled. The provincial Government in Saskatchewan has said recently that there are now 12,000 more people on the farms than there were a couple of years ago. There are 12,000 more because they had somewhere to go. In Kansas, however, where there are tenant farmers, there is nowhere to go.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my first words are to say to the Minister that I think the House owes a great debt to him for patiently listening to us today. We feel extremely sorry for him, being left out to swing in the breeze and hang out to dry without the support of some of his major colleagues.

As the previous speaker, the Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), just said, the subject we are debating today not only requires a rational solution to a mathematical problem but is an issue which affects the whole fabric of our nation.

Ever since the nation began we have accepted the fact that it was a large geographic country and that we would help each other with transportation. I will return to that point later.

My remarks are going (a) to set the perspective and (b) to put forward some positive suggestions which might help the Minister follow some of the suggestions that have already been made.

First, I am sure everyone realizes that the question of railway servicing in Canada in the last 20 years has been first and foremost in this Parliament. The first royal commission report came to Parliament in 1962. We spent five years discussing it in Parliament. The Government changed its Ministers and the new Minister worked co-operatively with the then CCF and with us. We were able to draft a new Bill. When it came in, I believe the Opposition made over 70 amendments and all but two were accepted. The House worked well then. We put our thoughts down in a Bill called the National Transportation Act, and with the support of all Parties it laid down very simple objectives for all modes of transport that we knew could not be economically viable in the ordinary commercial sense until we had a much larger population. The principles enunciated by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) essentially carry out those objectives that were in the National Transportation Act.

The next major event in this discussion was the Hall Commission on boats, railways, transportation and grain handling facilities. I am sorry that I was not in the House yesterday when the Hon. Member spoke. To many of us in western Canada this was our Magna Carta. It reinforced what we had distinctly taken as a pledge from the CPR when it brought people from Quebec, Ontario, the Atlantic Provinces and eventually Europe to fill up these empty spaces. Some people still carry the advertisements that were put in the European papers by the CPR saying that there was free land and a right to transport grain to markets. While there is not any written law, it is part of the common law of the whole country, not just the West.

The Hall Commission report recommended keeping the Crow rate as it is. If there are any losses that could be proven, we, the taxpayers from all parts of Canada, would pay them. That is the law as it stands today.

It also recommended that we should abandon 2,000 miles of line that probably has no chance for viability. The farmers would accept that. Another 2,000 miles of line would be provided for under the Prairie Rail Authority and run by westerners in order to haul grain and whatever other commodity people wished to transport. When they made money, as they would, the lines would be turned back to the railways with no charge. That was the second proposal.

The third was to build up traffic so that the railways could make more money. The Hall Commission report was not aimed at the railways or the grain companies. It was simply trying to make them more efficient so that they could make more money. The farmers would not have complained if the CPR, the banks and the grain companies could make more money. That is a brief history on the subject.

We now come to the Gilson consensus. It brings me to what I have said in the House, that there has been a great debate occurring in western Europe, the United States, Canada and elsewhere for the past 25 years about what to do with agriculture. One suggestion from Europe was that there were too many farmers and they had to be controlled and elected because the experts knew better what to do than the farmers. This became known as the philosophy of supply and demand. This philosophy was accepted by the Kennedy administration but not by the Diefenbaker administration.

We took the opposing point of view that since the world was hungry we would sell the grain. The price would go up somewhat and no subsidies were required for the farmer. He would feel good because he was feeding the world while making some more money.

The records show that from 1961 to 1968, we entered into the longest period of economic growth in all parts of Canada in our history. The credit for that rise was given to the then Minister of Finance, Walter Gordon, and the then Bank of Canada Governor, Mr. Rasminsky, because we had sold that grain in the export markets and had gone into the manufacturing areas of Ontario and Quebec and sold their products. That rise resulted not only from the export of goods but putting the dollar into a position where it could take advantage of the fact that we could increase our exports because it was down to its real value.

That is all history. But on the other side of the coin those who believe we should control the number of farmers and reduce production were still working away in Washington and Ottawa. They set up a task force for agriculture after the defeat of the Diefenbaker Government. The report is here for everyone to read. It is dated 1970 and recommended that we get rid of two out of every three farmers in Canada and that in the West we cut the acreage down to half so there would be enough living for the few that were left.

That is the philosophy of the elite, our experts, in all countries. The Americans are still looking for the domination of that group, but in Canada I thought there would at least be some sort of fight here against that philosophy.

The Government appointed Professor Gilson to take charge of this consensus based on an unofficial report from a nonexistent person as far as Canada is concerned, Mr. Snavely. The only group authorized to do studies on costs under the law is the Canadian Transport Commission. That was ignored by the Department of Transport and the Minister is now paying the price for that.

The Snavely report is so visibly and obviously fallacious that he even included as costs on grain the assets created by Government. The farmers gave the railways all this rolling stock, which was then depreciated and put in as a cost. That is as bad as what they have always done. For 20 years they have put in deferred maintenance costs, which they never spent, as a cost against grain. I believe the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) mentioned that.

I am simply pointing out to the Minister that he is suffering from the philosophy of these experts that really there is no place for the farmers in any part of Canada, and that you have to reduce their numbers just to supply the local population.

One of the Minister's predecessors, the Hon. Otto Lang, discussed this with me and decided to go along with this philosophy. He introduced four different proposals. One was called Lower Inventory For Tomorrow, LIFT. He forced the Canadian Wheat Board to ignore the law and said to the farmers: "If you do not follow this proposal to reduce production to nothing for grain, for wheat, you lose your right to sell". When the head of the Wheat Board could not accept my advice—he had no power in the Act—the Government got rid of him and put him in the Senate.

This is a sad story. Otto Lang, as able a man as ever sat in this House, paid a heavy price for going the way of the experts. I will not say anything more about that. When I look at how the railways accepted this advice and did not spend any money on maintenance, on buying new rolling stock for all the great opportunities that existed and when I look at how the grain companies held up their modernization, we were all to blame. But what is the use of going back and rehashing all of this history? We are here to decide, and only Parliament can decide, a change in the Crow rates.

The reasons this Bill is unacceptable have been stated well by the Hon. Member for Vegreville. He had 14 different reasons. Most of those reasons had a constructive tinge to them. Basically the trouble with this Gilson consensus is that the Minister is trapped into two separate problems. There is one problem he should be dealing with and that is the problem of transportation. That is difficult enough, but try to work into that consensus meeting the needs of the livestock people of Quebec and of the West and try to make them meld. There has been discrimination against livestock people. But to try and mix up the needs of additional value-added industries in western Canada is the basic reason for the failure of this consensus to work.

My suggestion, very briefly, is that we need some time in this House. You cannot handle this type of problem in three or four days of debate. There is a motion for a six months' hoist. That is hardly enough time but at least it would give time for the Government to bring in policies absolutely removed from the Minister's responsibility and provide justice to the livestock industry. We have the machinery now. With a little patience and a little work we could adapt it to give the benefit of the Crow rate, as they call it in the West, to the livestock industry without interfering with transportation whatsoever, It is there. Let us keep that problem separate because there is discrimination in fairness and equity. Let us deal with it. The same with the commodity groups. There are any number of ways to give them roughly equitable positions in the export market for value-added industries.

The grain farmer is living in a new age today. The Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) was correct. Twenty-five years ago the average income of a farmer in my area was $2,000 a year. It is a lot higher today, we know that. The farmer has seen his costs rising and his income coming down and he is worried. But he is not panicking. This decision, known as the Gilson suggestion originally, then the Pepin suggestiona nd now the consensus, or whatever it is, has scared the living daylights out of him. Farmers think they are now fighting for survival. I would think that the way to bring back a little hope is to keep in mind some simple economics that have never been talked about too much in this debate.

The railway is still a fixed cost industry. That means the fixed costs do not change. Variables do change. Let me put it in simple terms. Supposing you get $100 revenue for hauling a certain unit of production and your costs are, say, fifty-fifty, variable and mixed. You just break even; you do not make any profit. Supposing you double the amount of goods moving. There would be $200 worth of revenue coming in. The fixed costs would still be $50 on a fifty-fifty breakdown and the variables would be $100, double. There is a profit of $50 just by doubling the traffic.

That simple explanation is the answer to the problem of the railways, and they know it. They have seen it happen before. They tried to prove they were losing money on the Crow rate, the last time in 1962-1963, and then the Hall Commission report came down. During the period the railways were talking to Parliament the export of grain doubled, from $300 million to $600 million worth of wheat. The railways admitted to us they were making money on the Crow rate. Even though the figures sound small, half a cent a tonne mile, if you can make half a cent a tonne mile on a heck of a big tonnage, you are making money.

Let us apply that same principle to other products such as coal, potash, gravel and lumber. Why is lumber hauled by the Great Northern Railway to Ontario from B.C.? All of the people who live in southern Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta get their lumber via the Great Northern Railway. They haul at a charge that gives them a profit, not this high rate which the railways have set in Canada.

I see that my time is coming to a close and I shall come to my conclusions very quickly. I have a list of suggestions here. The Hon. Member for Vegreville had 14; I have only seven. There is a time factor. Take the principles enunciated by the Hon. Member for Vegreville and set a statutory committee instead of an advisory committee for Parliament, with competent help so we will have an over-all viewpoint.

Second, start the CTC working on the Snavely report right away. It will take the CTC about two years to figure it out, but at least we will know with what we are dealing. We will guarantee to the railways that we will pay their costs, maybe even a fraction more, if we find there is injustice to them.

Finally, what is killing all parts of Canada but particularly the productive boys in Canada is interest rates. Give to the farmers and the small-businessman the principle of the Small Business Development Bond or any of the other things our fellows have been suggesting where you can get interest at half rate and no one loses. You can do a lot to restore the hope and confidence that there has to be in a producer's area at a time like this when the future is so great for us all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Hon. Members will realize that it is five o'clock. The Chair has been privately advised that there might be a disposition to allow some additional time. I am in the hands of the House. If that is the desire of the House, we can do so.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has not completed his remarks I suggest that we seek unanimous consent for him to do so. I am not sure whether he has been able to round out his speech, but I believe we all found it to be a very interesting, very positive and forthright speech. He is a distinguished Hon. Member and has a great reputation in agriculture and transportation matters. If the Hon. Member wanted to conclude his speech in three or four minutes, I would certainly seek the unanimous consent of the House for that purpose.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, we would agree that the Hon. Member should have his full 20 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The agreement of the House is a great courtesy to the Hon. Member, but he has just informed me that he will decline the offer.

It being after five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2.

At 5.03 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Friday, May 13, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin (p. 25389).

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose at this point in the debate to draw the attention of the Members of this House to the importance of this initiative to Canada's economic development as a whole and to regional development.

Canada, as we know, has always been a country of regional particularities and it is the stronger for that. Economically strong regions in association and in co-operation mutually benefit each other, and also, of course, benefit the whole country.

[Translation]

Together with the budget measures announced recently by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), the transportation plan will be one of the main driving forces of our economic recovery today. In addition, and this will be more important in the long run, it will help provide a stimulus for economic development in the years to come. Among all the measures taken by the Government to promote economic recovery and development, the western transportation measure certainly is one of its most important initiatives. Although basically aimed at strengthening the agricultural and transportation sectors of our economy, it also constitutes a multifacetted and long-term measure that will have a positive and durable impact on many other sectors of our economy. It is therefore a vital part of the Government's general strategy for getting Canada out of the worldwide economic recession.

[English]

Agriculture and transportation are two of the principal pillars of the Canadian economy. Agricultural production, traditionally an economic mainstay, now generates 16 per cent of the Gross National Product. It accounts for 10 per cent of Canada's total exports. The efficiency and hard work of Canada's farmers has contributed greatly to our export earnings and contributed also to a situation in which Canadians spend a smaller proportion of their incomes on food than is the case in most other countries. Canadians spend on average less than 17 per cent of their incomes on food, second only to the United States in the entire world.

The transportation sector is equally important. Without a sound, efficient and reliable method of moving Canada's products to markets within the nation and from there to world markets, our country's position as one of the world's great trading nations would be severely undermined.

It is a historical fact and a fact of some interest that many of the early European explorers came here not so much to find Canada as to find a way around Canada, that is, in search of the Northwest Passage to China and the Orient, in pursuit of trade and of commerce. They failed in that endeavour, or so they thought. But when the first transcontinental passenger train reached Vancouver in 1887, it seemed to many at the time to be at long last the realization of the dreams of those early explorers. The fabled passage had been found, with the added benefit of the riches of a new land to be worked and husbanded. That it was achieved through a combination of water and rail transport rather than through water alone was a matter of minor moment. The important fact was that the great nation-building link had been established at last.

What we are seeking today, some 95 years later, with the western transportation initiative is to achieve a modernization of those passageways of commerce. The goals are the same as they were for the railway builders of the nineteenth century—the furtherance of nation building and the expansion of commerce, both goals in the interest of all Canadians wherever they live and whatever the livelihood they pursue.

The construction of the western railway system was, as I said, both in the interests of commerce and of nation building. Indeed, it was part of the Confederation bargain, necessary for the settlement of the West and for moving its products to markets. Likewise the establishment of the Crow rate in 1897 in return for the building of a new line allowed settlers' goods into the West and grain out at low freight rates. It served its purpose well in its time. But as other speakers have indicated, another major new adjustment is now necessary, in large measure to free the new Canadian West from the constraints and distortions caused by the old rate structure. The western transportation initiative is, therefore, nothing less than a major new phase of Canada's development, which, like many other phases before it, will benefit not only the new West but the nation as a whole.

The general economic benefits of the initiative can be discussed under at least two headings. One consists of those benefits which will flow from the construction activity itself which will be felt over the short and medium term. The other set of benefits, eventually more important for our children and grandchildren, will be the modernization of the transportation system which will contribute to making the Canadian economy much more fit to meet the economic challenges of the twenty-first century.

Let me deal first with the short and medium-term effects. In the short term the initiative means that thousands of construction jobs can be started up almost immediately—laying the rails, building the bridges and tunneling the mountains. This is indeed already under way as a result of interim financial assistance to the railways. There will be an immediate need for steel rail and wooden ties, providing useful work for the steelworkers and forest product workers, too many of whom have been idled by the world recession or forced into other occupations where their acquired skills are not now put to best use. From the wages paid out to them there will be an important multiplier effect which will be felt significantly by those who service these industries, especially in the steel and forest products communities that have been so devastated by the international recession.

But that is just a start. Over the coming decade, as the system is put in place and begins to show results, many sectors of the economy will be called upon to respond. Stronger agricultural production will require more farm machinery, fertilizer and other farm inputs and services. Manufacturers will be called upon to produce the rolling stock to move not only the increased agricultural products but other western resources and products, such as potash, petrochemicals and coal which can be moved confidently to world markets by a reliable transportation system. The railways will be equipping themselves with the most advanced communications, traffic control and safety systems, providing important new opportunities for our high technology industries.

The Government estimates that the $16.5 billion to be spent by the railways between 1983 and 1992 will lead directly and indirectly to $34.8 billion in industrial sales. We estimate that nearly 375,000 person-years of employment will be created during that period with a resulting labour income of $12.2 billion.

I may also add that during this decade, Canadian industry and Canadian workers and production teams in various industrial sectors will upgrade their skills and develop new ones. Skills, that is, expertise and know-how in the field of new means of transportation and communications, will themselves be a marketable commodity to be exported to many other countries that are obliged to modernize their transportation network.

In this new era, knowledge and information are as valuable as material products, and skills will be a new and important asset to the future of our economy as a whole. However, as I said before, Canada is a country made of economic regions that complement and rely on each other, and as a result, we must also consider the many ways in which the economic spinoffs associated with the construction phase of the western transportation measure can be shared among Canada's various regions.

As the Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology, I am particularly interested in this aspect. Although we are speaking of a western transportation measure, the scope of this project is such that all regions can expect to feel the impact on their respective economies.

The proposed distribution of spinoffs is equitable and has the additional advantage of being economically sound, in that it builds on the strength of each region so that all regions are able to contribute to a project that in the final instance, will benefit each and every one.

[English]

It is also because this is a western transportation initiative that it is appropriate that the new Canadian West should be the main focus of the economic activity generated by the project. The four Provinces of the West will, when taken together, absorb about 57 per cent of the economic stimulus provided by the anticipated $16.5 billion of expenditures over the next ten years. Over the same period more than 157,000 person-years of employment could be created in the four western Provinces with all the spin-off and ripple effects which, as I have already indicated, augmented payrolls bring in their wake.

British Columbia, with a projected share of one-third of the $16.5 billion to be invested by the railways, will be the main site of construction activity. The major challenge of double-tracking through the mountains will create thousands of contruction jobs. These will be supplemented by jobs created to upgrade terminals, expand existing and build new repair shops. The mining, metal fabrication and forest industries will be significantly affected. It is expected that the new economic activity associated with the western transportation initiative will generate 87,000 person-years in British Columbia alone.

The timely expansion of port facilities on the Pacific coast will ensure that British Columbia is properly poised to move the increased product that will be delivered on a modernized and improved railway system. The federal Government has contributed millions of dollars to the expansion of the bulk coal handling terminal at Roberts Bank in the Lower Mainland and the Ridley Island grain and coal terminals near Prince Rupert. Work on the development of these superports is well under way.

Almost as many person-years, more than 70,000, will be brought into being in the three other Provinces of the Canadian West which will, of course, be the principal ultimate beneficiaries of the initiative as a whole. About one-quarter of the funds to be spent by the railways over the years 1983 to 1992 will be spent, we estimate, in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Alberta's share alone should amount to $2.7 billion. And the largest shares of these expenditures, by the way, should be in metal and wood fabrication, which can be expected to contribute to that diversification of the Alberta economy which is desired by Albertans in general. Manitoba and Saskatchewan will also receive equitable shares of the work to be done. Some 25,000 jobs will be created in these two Provinces in such projects as new repair facilities in Moose Jaw and Winnipeg. Again, as in British Columbia and throughout the nation, there will be related multiplier effects felt by other economic sectors.

• (1120)

The provinces in Central Canada—Ontario and Quebec—will also share in the economic activity resulting from the western transportation measure. We expect that 37 per cent of the $16.5 billion which the railway companies will be spending will go to Ontario and Quebec. In the short and medium term, the main impact on Ontario and Quebec will be the purchase of rails, rolling stock and locomotives. All this will be the result of an increase in railway capacity in Western Canada. Expenditures on transportation equipment in Ontario and in Quebec should account for 60 per cent of a total of over $6 billion that will be spent in these two provinces. During the decade, these expenditures, with those in other sectors, are expected to create 135,000 person-years in Ontario and about 60,000 in Quebec. At this point I would like to say that the entire western transportation measure will have no harmful effects on the distribution and routing of grain to Eastern Canada. Up to now, all major studies have shown that the grain transportation and handling industry will experience healthy growth and will continue to do so within the foreseeable future.

[English]

The cumulative economic impact on all four Atlantic Provinces could be 23,500 person-years, half a billion dollars in labour income and total industrial sales of $1.6 billion.

Those are some of the dry statistics of what I regard as the short and medium-term effects of the economic activity to be generated throughout the country by this most important new Government initiative. It is a plan, I believe, which allows all parts of the country to make significant contributions to this vital national project. It will strengthen all of the regions by building on their own strengths and existing natural advantages.

But I would be remiss if I did not also share with you some of my hopes and expectations about the way the western transportation initiative will strengthen the Canadian economy as a whole. This program is much, much more than a job-creation program although it is surely also that. The 375,000 person-years of work it will bring into being, which will be, as I have said, equitably distributed throughout the country, are an important element in the Government's program for Canadian economic recovery from the world-wide recession.

But the western transportation initiative is also an investment in Canada's future. In the first instance, to be sure, it is an investment in the long-term development of the new Canadian West. You have heard this before, of course, Mr. Speaker, but I assure you that it deserves repetition. The existing rate structure for western rail transport distorts the western Canadian economy and locks it unreasonably into patterns of the past, restricting its flexibility in responding to the challenges of the future. The deadhand of the past restrains the West from making the best use of its natural economic advantages. This is a loss not just to the West; it is a loss to us all.

Without an improved western transportation system, these distortions will continue to exist. As long as the existing rate structure remains, the West will be restricted in its ability to diversify its economy. There will be a disincentive to western Canadian farmers to diversify their production.

Western Canada has many other products that will be in growing demand on world markets as the recovery strengthens, presenting an opportunity for the rapid growth and development of the western economy. As always, the geography of Canada means western producers of all products, grain and non-grain, face a major challenge—getting their products to those world markets. Maintaining the Crow rate compounds the problem by leaving our competitive western producers at the end of an inadequate transportation system. The changes to the Crow provide the impetus and financial leverage required to put in place a transportation system that gives western Canada access to world markets and will enhance our image as a reliable, cost-competitive exporter.

The economic development of the entire west is at stake. And the development of the West on its own terms, utilizing its own economic opportunities, making its own economic decisions is something which can only benefit all Canadians.

• (1125)

[Translation]

Too often, economic issues are discussed as if participants were either winners or losers. That has never been, and should never be, the basic principle of our Canadian economic union. This union should be seen as an agreement under which all Canadians are winners within the context of a wise and properly administrated policy. The western transportation measures are one of those wise policies by which all Canadians stand to gain, both now and in the future. That is why these measures deserve the support of all Members of this House.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister which is more in the nature of a political question. Basically, the Government does not have any Members in western Canada; there are two in Manitoba but none in Saskatchewan or Alberta and these Provinces are going to be fundamentally affected by changes in the Crow rate. Does the Minister not think it is inappropriate for a Government that does not have any representation there to make fundamental changes in the nature of western Canada which will result from the change in the Crow rate?

I am not disputing with the Minister the fact that the Government does have the legal right to do that; of course it has. It is the Government of all of us and is elected as such.

Perhaps I can give an analogy. Suppose this Party or the Conservative Party were the Government with strong representation in western Canada but no Members in Quebec and we were to make some fundamental changes in the economy of Quebec against the wishes of Quebecers. Would that be politically proper? I do not think it would but I would like to ask the Minister to comment on it. Perhaps this is a question which has not been asked about the Crow.

Does the Minister think it is politically right that a Government with virtually no representation in western Canada should make fundamental changes to the economy of western Canada when those changes are opposed by the people there? If we were to do that in Quebec there would be a revolution.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is suggesting that a Government which might not be represented in a particular sector of the country should effectively abdicate its mandate to govern the country. That would be to say, I suppose, that if a Party were not to have representation, say, in northern Ontario, which is a very substantial part of Ontario, it could not take steps to improve the economy of that particular region.

This initiative has been the subject of consultation by my colleague the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), who is in the House today, of a kind and to an extent that has perhaps never been seen before. In addition, when the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway says that this is politically a move which he questions, I would point out to him that the Liberal Party, which is the Government, had a very substantial representation from its membership throughout the country which represents the voice of many people in western Canada.

The issue was the subject of a very substantial resolution during the national policy convention which the Liberal Party holds on a regular basis, unlike some other Parties in the House, and that convention was fully supportive of the measures the Government is taking.

I reject out of hand any suggestion that the national Government of this country should abdicate its responsibilities because it is not represented in a particular region. I would suggest that the only way that a Party would never be represented in a region of the country is if it were to leave the impression with Canadians that the problems of the people in western Canada are not our problems. But they very much are.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I note that the hon. gentleman neglected to mention that the Liberal Party in Saskatchewan Alberta and Manitoba—what is left of it—opposed this plan. It made that plain and it made it public. It wanted to keep the statutory freight rate for grain producers.

I would like to ask the Minister, believing in free enterprise as he does, if he considers it proper for a Government to take taxpayers' money and use it as capital for investment in any project, without there being eligible for some kind of return on that investment? In other words, money which has been put into Canadair and a few other projects is money over which Canadians have some ownership, control or some say, whereas in the case of the railways it is a straight gift. Would the Minister not agree that it would make sense for Canada—Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) would stop trying to prime the Minister with an answer, which will not be correct in any event. It shows a lack of courtesy on his part and it certainly indicates that his Cabinet colleague does not know a damned thing about this subject when it has to be whispered into his ear what to say.

Would the Minister not consider it more proper, in return for funds put up for capital, for Canada to take increased equity ownership in Canadian National for the value of that capital which they receive, and equity shares in Canadian Pacific Limited, in order to be eligible for any interest or dividends, or any return on that investment? Why just hand it out so that only Canadian Pacific Limited shareholders will receive the return on the investment made by the taxpayer?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised at that question coming from the Hon. Member. Apart from his social and economic philosophy, I believe I have a great deal in common with some of the views which he expresses on occasion, but not in this area.

First of all, he suggests that we increase our equity in CN. We own 100 per cent of CN; I do not know how we could increase our equity in CN. If there are dividends paid out by CN, I know of no other recipient of those dividends than the Canadian Government. It may be in part a misunderstanding of the nature of a corporation and the activities it carries on which leads the Hon. Member to express the kind of philosophy which he is putting forward for review by us here today. There are many activities where the federal Government on behalf of the Canadian taxpayer elects to subsidize a particular private sector activity, and in such case we do have a very major return on that investment, Mr. Speaker, in increased jobs and in increased services to the Canadian public. But more importantly, what Hon. Members seem to forget is that the Canadian Government is a 50 per cent partner in every private sector corporation in this country through the fiscal system. That is how our fiscal system works. That is what its purpose is, to allow the Canadian people to participate equitably in the profits which may be realized from any activity in the private sector. I often feel that Hon. Members in the New Democratic Party tend to forget that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the Minister spoke about winners and losers. I wonder if he would agree with me that the livestock industry and secondary processing industry will surely have to feel that they are losers, because the original Gilson compromise had 81 per cent of the money going to farmers and 19 per cent to the railways, which was designed to do away with the distortion which the Crow rate had come to cause over the years. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) then knocked that down to fifty-fifty and as a result of the representations of the Quebec caucus it went down to 100 per cent to the railways and zero to the producers. Does the Minister not agree that the livestock industry is the loser in that context?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, in the long term everyone is a winner out of this proposed initiative. As I understand the formula, if you take the Lakehead feed grain price and deduct the cost of transportation, certainly it will reduce at a slower pace than might have been the case under the other proposal. However, everyone is a winner under this proposal and the winning is just a little slower than it would have been under the first proposal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Last Friday afternoon the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) raised a point of order which maintained that the ten minutes allowed for questions and comments following Members' speeches in the eight-hour period, at second reading of Bills, should not be counted as being a part of that eight-hour period. The Chair heard arguments on Friday afternoon, has considered the arguments raised during the weekend, and is now ready to rule on the matter.

In addition to those arguments, in coming to a conclusion the Chair considered the third report to the House of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, the present Provisional Standing Orders, as well as our practice established since the coming into force of the Provisional Standing Orders.

The third report of the Special Committee sets out specifically a new procedure for second reading of Bills which it splits into three distinct periods, and I quote from that report:

> Your Committee recommends that the first three speakers be limited to forty minutes each, allowing for a contribution from the three Parties, but not to be followed by ten-minute exchanges. This would then be followed by speeches of a maximum length of twenty minutes for the first eight hours followed by ten-minute exchanges in each case, if required. Thereafter speeches would be limited to ten minutes without the provisions for exchanges.

The Chair understands that the Special Committee intended the ten-minute period to be included in the eight hours.

Secondly, it seems evident from reading the specific Standing Order 35(2), which sets out expressly these three distinct periods, that the second of those periods in subparagraph (b) provides for a total period of eight hours during which speeches will be limited to 20 minutes in length and may be followed by ten minutes of questions and comments.

Thirdly, our practice, as developed since the beginning of this year, confirms the intent of the report and the Provisional Standing Orders in that sense. The ten-minute questions, answers and comment period has always been included within the eight hours.

I thank Hon. Members for bringing this matter to the Chair's attention as it has permitted a study of the matter. It is my conclusion that the time taken for the ten-minute question and answer period must be added to the actual time of speeches in determining the total eight-hour period during the second segment of consideration of second reading of a Bill.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a new point of order for your consideration, having ruled on what I thought was a valid point of order raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), with respect to the interpretation of the new rules. We all understand that this is on a temporary basis and we must look at the rules as they are in fact in the Standing Orders now during this trial period.

My point of order relates to another aspect on which I would ask for a ruling from the Chair. The wording of the new Standing Orders with respect to time limits on speeches relates to different stages in the proccedings, whether it be second reading or indeed with respect to any state of the proceedings. What it is silent on, though, is with respect to the rules which will apply in the event, as we now have it in this particular debate, of an amendment being brought forward by a Member which is accepted by the Chair on second reading. Therefore, the Hon. Member for Regina West rose and moved a motion, which is accepted by the Chair, to put a completely new and novel dimension on this debate in terms of the subject matter for consideration by the House.

His motion, as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, was simply that this matter not be now debated but be suspended for consideration for a period of six months. That puts a new item before the House for consideration, Mr. Speaker. When we look at the rules and at the Standing Orders, it refers to eight hours with respect to the matter under consideration. It does not talk about second reading. It talks about a stage or item under consideration. My submission to you, Mr. Speaker, is that when a motion, particularly in the case of second reading motions, is brought forward, as we know, we are very much limited in the type of amendment which is acceptable and will be accepted by the Chair under our rules on second reading. There are very few amendments which are acceptable on the part of the Chair. Therefore, when we do have a motion of amendment which, in effect, is accepted by the Chair and by the House, it seems to me only reasonable that we should have full opportunity of examining that matter which is then under consideration.

This is a matter of some considerable substance. This is an excellent Bill on which to raise this point because what the Government is purporting to do under this legislation is not a trifling or incidental matter; it is attempting to change what has been referred to as Magna Carta of western Canada in terms of transportation policy.

• (1140)

Therefore it becomes extremely important for Members of Parliament, in fulfilling their responsibility, to be able to have an adequate or reasonable period of time for debate. The rules should be so interpreted because we are, after all, Parliamentarians representing our constituents. We should not be thwarted on a narrow or limited reading of the Standing Orders if there is a question or ambiguity.

With respect to the wording of the matter under consideration, we are now considering technically and for all purposes the amendment of the Hon. Member for Regina West which asks the House to vote on the proposition that this Bill be stood over for six months and brought back for consideration at that time.

When we have consideration of important legislation which is so highly emotional, and such importance is attached to it by people, particularly those in one important region of Canada, it seems to me that a reasonable interpretation of the Standing Orders should be that when we have an amendment at second reading the time clock should start again. We have a situation where we are entitled to full and legitimate debate on a proper amendment, properly accepted, properly before the House. We in the House of Commons who want to speak for a period of time on a matter which affects the very livelihood of the people we represent should not be thwarted by some unreasonable reading of this particular rule.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for your consideration of this particular point of order because I think it is more than legitimate and one which is of very serious consequence to this particular Bill.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on the same point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) seeking to speak on the same point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I thank the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for raising this sort of ancillary or similar point of order to the one, which was just dealt with and on which I will not comment. I just wish the rule read the way Your Honour has ruled.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is raising a point of order. He cannot go back on a decision of the Chair.

Mr. Benjamin: That is right, Mr. Speaker. I want to say to the Chair that I agree with the point raised by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West, that the time period presently being counted also counts on a debate on the amendment. Once the amendment has been dealt with, however long it may take, we return to debate the main motion and a new time period commences with reference to the eight hours and 20-minute speeches.

Mr. Thacker: I rise on the same point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) was rising on the same point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleague from Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in making reference to this point of order. The amendments at second reading, as the Speaker will know, are very limited as to their application and what type of amendment can be made. The debate which has proceeded since the introduction of the amendment on the six-month hoist is basically as to whether or not the Bill is appropriate for the time and whether the six-month hoist should apply.

I would draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that the Bill has a great deal of importance in Western Canada. Unfortunately, the Government—

Mr. Benjamin: All of Canada.

Mr. Lewis: —is in a very vulnerable position because it has no speakers of any import or knowledge from western Canada. It is very vital to the understanding of the Bill by the Parliament of Canada, by Hon. Members such as the Minister who is leaving the House, that we be able to hear the western Members and the viewpoint which they bring to the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asked us to.

Mr. Lewis: I think for that reason alone we should have a broad interpretation of when that eight hours is to take place. Is it to be on the consideration of the entire Bill at second reading or, as we would suggest to Your Honour, is it to be on the six-month hoist amendment? Surely if we are to allow every Hon. Member to be heard, if we are to bring to the floor of the House the experience our Party on this important Bill, if Hon. Members from all over the country are properly to represent their constituents, surely we should have ample time.

I would suggest that that reason alone would bring Your Honour to rule that the eight-hour debate and eight-hour time limit should only relate to the six-month hoist amendment, that once the debate has collapsed on that matter and we have had a vote, we can then return to the second reading debate. Every Hon. Member in this House, for the benefit of the Government which lacks any Hon. Members from western Canada, can then be heard.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say that I am disappointed that my friend, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), has suggested that any Hon. Members from the House of Commons are not important when he said that we did not have any important Members from the West. We have two Hon. Members from Manitoba.

Mr. Lewis: That is what I meant. I said that.

Mr. Smith: All Hon. Members of the House are important.

Mr. Lewis: That is what I said.

Mr. Hargrave: You are a little sensitive this morning.

Mr. Smith: Second, I think it is important to—

Mr. Lewis: A point of order! A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Cousineau: You cannot rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), the Parliamentary Secretary is rising to speak to the same point of order. The Hon. Member, I think, may take exception to the remarks, but he will be recognized later.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, very much a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At the end of the Parliamentary Secretary's remarks I will hear the Hon Member on a question of privilege.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the phrase that the Hon. Member used, and he may not recall it, was that we on this side of the House did not have any Hon. Members from the West of any import.

Mr. McCain: He was right, dead right.

Mr. Smith: If he would like to withdraw that remark, I think it would be appropriate. He can check the blues and satisfy himself, but that is what I heard. We do not tailor the rules to satisfy the political achievements of whatever it is we are wanting to do. The rules are the rules.

Mr. Lewis: That is not what Perrault said.

Mr. Smith: They apply equally under all circumstances.

Mr. Lewis: Senator Perrault didn't say that.

Mr. Smith: I am disappointed that this interpretation of this particular new rule has been argued by Hon. Members who spent a bit of time on the committee which recommended this change. I have served on the committee. I know the background of it. The background as to why this was brought in was to prevent filibustering from going on at second reading.

If one considers the time spent on Government legislation in recent years, one finds that over 60 per cent of the time in the House has been spent on second reading debates which are supposed to be debates of general principle. It is pretty clear that what has in fact happened has been that the Opposition Parties—and this could have been true when the sides were reversed—have frequently staged filibusters at second reading stage so as to present the House from dealing with a measure. As a result, this change was recommended.

There cannot be an end run through a six-month hoist amendment. The rules quite clearly state, "When second reading of a Government Bill is being considered", etc. Then it gives the time limits. It does not make any exceptions and it does not state that it does not apply when we are discussing an amendment such as a six-month hoist. Second reading is second reading, and all things which fall within second reading are included in the calculation of times as set out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there other Hon. Members speaking to the point of order? The Chair recognizes, on a point of privilege, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Lewis: I would like to raise a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I want to reassure the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) that I did say there were no Hon. Members of import from western Canada. In fact, neither of them, according to my records, has even spoken on the Bill to this point.

Mr. Pepin: They will.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not really raising a question of privilege or point of order.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Parliamentary Secretary that Your Honour should interpret the rules. If one considers Section 35(1), it states that the general rule is that on a debate, Members speak for 20 minutes unless otherwise provided in the Standing Orders. Then when one considers Section 35(2), there is an "otherwise", providing that during second reading one is restricted to eight hours, 20 minute speeches, each with a ten-minute question period. However, the point is that we are not second reading; we are debating a special amendment. It is true that the Chair should probably restrict that debate to the six-month hoist. Nothing is relevant except the six-month hoist.

Mr. Smith: That's the most outrageous thing I have ever heard in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I say to the Hon. Member, when Orders of the Day were called, second reading was called. The Chair finds it difficult to accept the argument that the presentation of an amendment, which is part of the process of debate, would terminate second reading. This is still second reading of the Bill.

Mr. Taylor: I just want to make one comment. On Friday there was a point of order which lasted for 22 minutes. We have now been on a point of order which has taken approximately 20 minutes. Surely this point of order should not come off the eight hours.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's point is well taken. If there are no further interventions concerning the point of order that has been raised, the Chair will reserve a decision on the matter. The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I join with the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) and urge the Chair to make sure that the eight-hour period for debate, whether on second reading or on the amendment, does not include interruptions, for good purposes, to deal with matters—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The matter has been settled. The Chair is not counting the 20-minute intervention against the eight hours. The Hon. Member is recognized for debate.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, basically I have two and possibly three matters that I wish to address in my comments this morning. The first question relates to a rather unusual telegram which was received in my office last week on the day that the Bill on the Crow rate was introduced in the House of Commons and we agreed to give it first reading in the House. The telegram urges me to support the Government's proposals. I believe that is worth underlining.

The telegram came to me from the President and Chief Executive Officer of a prominent lumber firm in British Columbia. It is not the telegram which concerns me but the manner in which it reached me. I do not know how many private sector companies in British Columbia or elsewhere have been extended the privilege of calling on the Prime Minister's office to act as their messenger. This particular firm seems to enjoy that privilege and I wonder how many other Canadians have that privilege. Would the Canadian Cattlemen's Association enjoy a privilege of having a telegram sent to the Prime Minister's office for distribution to all Members in the House of Commons? I doubt it, but this is what happened.

I am holding a telegram which bears the names of all the Members from British Columbia. It arrived on my desk via what is very clearly marked up in the corner "The Com Centre of the PCO—PMO", which is the Prime Minister's office and the Privy Council office. It was obviously sent there to be distributed to Members from British Columbia.

The text of the telegram makes it quite clear that those of us from British Columbia are being urged to follow the Government's plan to abolish the statutory Crow rate. I find it rather unusual that the Prime Minister's office should receive a telegram of this sort and distribute it not only on paper, which presumably is part of the stationery supply of the Prime Minister's office, but also in an envelope which states at the bottom "PCO", presumably the Privy Council office, "Room 616, Postal Station B", and delivered by a messenger from the Prime Minister's office.

I wonder if all private sector corporations in Canada enjoy this particular privilege. I would find it strange if they did. How can any private sector corporation expect the Prime Minister's office to receive, print and distribute their messages for them? Apparently they do not trust the private sector any more than they trust the post office or CN-CP Telecommunications. While I frequently receive telegrams from CN-CP Telecommunications, this is the first time to my knowledge that I have received a telegram of this sort through the courtesy of the Prime Minister's office.

I also wonder whether this particular private sector corporation enjoys the use of the facilities of the office of the Hon. Senator from Vancouver in order to get their messages quickly and cheaply to Ottawa and distributed once here. How many British Columbia companies enjoy this special privilege? Do other private sector companies in other Provinces enjoy this privilege? Do Crown corporations enjoy it in order to cut down on overhead?

If this is a general service that is being offered by the Prime Minister's Office, I think I will suggest to my constituents in my next householder that all they have to do if they have an urgent message they wish to send me is to get in touch with the office of Senator Perrault from Vancouver, leave their message there and it will be communicated presumably by telex to the Prime Minister's office or the PCO and will reach me with very little cost to them. It seems to me to be somewhat of a lobby scam and I find it odd that any reputable organization should use this particular method to get its communications to a Member of Parliament.

My second comment relates specifically and exclusively to Section 62 of the Bill now before us. This particular sector authorizes "the Government of Canada" to do certain things with the lands it "selected" in British Columbia in 1897 with what are known as the Dominion coal lands.

I think it is worth drawing a number of aspects of this particular Bill to the attention of the House. I would like to read the text of that article into the record. It states:

> 62. Notwithstanding the Crow's Nest Pass Act and any agreement made pursuant thereto, the Government of Canada may hold, dispose of or otherwise deal with the lands it selected under paragraph 1(i.) of that Act in any manner and on any conditions it thinks fit.

These are rich coal lands in southeastern British Columbia is the Crowsnest Pass area which got into the hands of the Crown in the right of the Dominion in a rather unusual way. These are the lands that are being spoken of which involve 50,000 acres, or about 80 square miles. It is an area of eight miles in one direction and 10 miles in another and contains easily accessible high-grade metallurgical grade coal said to amount to anywhere from one billion to 8.5 billion tonnes. The lands are a source of considerable wealth both to the firm granted the mining permit and the Government taxing the product. The lands border on properties already producing plentiful supplies of coal, Sparwood and Fernie, for shipment to Japan.

Those 80 square miles of British Columbia territory were retained by the Crown in right of Canada in 1930 when all other natural resources were returned, through the constitutional amendment covering natural resource transfers and other matters, to British Columbia and to Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba as well. That 80 square miles of British Columbia land was specifically excluded from the 1930 amendment and was also retained by the Crown in right of the Dominion despite the terms of Section 92A of the BNA Act, now the Constitution Act of 1867, appearing as Part VI of the Constitution Act of 1981.

Section 92A deals specifically with non-renewable resources and in whose jurisdiction their governance and regulation lies.

It is perhaps worth recalling the terms of Section 92A which was an amendment to the Constitution Act of 1867. It reads:

• (1200)

In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the Province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources—in the Province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom—

That is Subsection (1). Subsection (4) of Section 92A reads this way:

In each province the legislature may make law in relation to the raising of money by any more or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources—in the Province and the primary production therefrom—

It is quite clear that the intent of Section 92A(1) is that the non-renewable resources are within the jurisdiction of the Province. Yet, Mr. Speaker, we find those 50,000 acres, 80 square miles, is still retained by the Crown in right of the Dominion. This exclusive jurisdiction enjoyed by the Province over its natural resources and its power to levy taxes on the production of those resources does not restore to B.C. the 80 square miles of the so-called Dominion coal lands which the Crown in right of the Dominion now controls.

I cannot help but ask myself why that should be. British Columbia—and this is the conclusion one must draw—is the only Province that has had to pay in land losses to the Crown in right of the Dominion for having a railway pass over its territory.

How did this land get into the hands of the Crown in right of the Dominion in the first place? The story is long and devious, the details of which may not be yet fully revealed. In any event, the lands passed from the Province by grant to the B.C. Southern Railway as an inducement to the B.C. Southern Railway to build a line into southeastern British Columbia to open it up and to make the products of that area, coal and minerals, transportable through Canada rather than through the United States to its markets.

The lands in question are in the area through which the railway was to pass. It was eventually called the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. Once the B.C. Southern Railway had been acquired by the CPR and the CPR was prepared to build a Crowsnest Pass line from Lethbridge to Nelson, the Dominion Government stepped in to compel the CPR to cede 50,000 acres of coal-bearing land conveyed to it by British Columbia to the Crown in right of the Dominion. The Crown went further. It "selected" the land which was to be conveyed. That land and its riches are still in the hands of the Crown in right of the Dominion. They were not returned to British Columbia in 1930 when all non-renewable resources were returned to British Columbia as well as to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta so as to put the western Provinces on the same footing as the eastern Provinces, which entered Confederation with control over their natural resources.

Nor were those 50,000 acres returned to B.C. during the negotiations over the Constitution, although as we have seen, Section 92A specifically grants jurisdiction to the Provinces over all non-renewable resources in a Province.

This brings us back to Clause 62 of the present Bill. What does the federal Government plan to do with the lands under the provisions of this Bill? It is not quite certain. I have already read the text of that particular clause into the record. I note the Government of Canada may "hold, dispose of or otherwise deal with" the lands it selected under paragraph 1(i) of that Act.

From that I think there are a number of considerations that flow. First, I wonder whether we should examine the wording of this, what the Government of Canada may do this, that and the other. The French version of that particular article reads as follows:

Sa Majesté du chef du Canada peut posséder ou vendre les terres qu'elle a choisies conformément, . . .

I do not see that "the Government of Canada" and "Sa Majesté du chef du Canada" are exactly the same thing. I suspect that the French version was the version of the original Clause 62 and the English version followed. I do not think it was a very good translation. I understand there are examples of this.

If we look at the explanatory notes opposite on page 33a of Bill C-155, we find in the English version three different versions of the authorities that may do this, that or the other. In one case it is the "Crown in the interest of Canada". Second, it is "the Government" which selected the lands. Finally, we find it is the "Governor in Council" which may do this, that or the other.

In the French version of the same Bill, which is, of course, the Crow's Nest Pass Act, we find it is "la Couronne, pour l'avantage du Canada". I do not know whether "la Couronne, pour l'avantage du Canada" is being considered as an entity is or simply "la Couronne". We also find that it is "Sa Majesté—en sera autrement disposé par Sa Majesté".

Then we find it is "le Gouverneur en conseil dans le but d'assurer un approvisionnement de houille suffisant et convenable". I think there is some cleaning up necessary in this particular Bill so that we can determine exactly what it is that will be authorized under this Bill to do what the Bill provides it may do.

The Crow's Nest Pass Act of 1897 did two things. One was to require the CPR to carry certain products, including coal and grain, at fixed rates in return for which the CPR was granted running rights. Second, the Bill of 1897 conveyed 50,000 acres, 80 squares miles, to the Crown in right of Canada.

Today we have legislation before us that undoes one of those things. It withdraws the rate structure defined at the time to remain in effect in perpetuity, but it does not undo the other thing. It does not return to British Columbia the 50,000 acres of coal-rich lands which were ceded, if you like, by the railway—not by British Columbia, but by the railway—to the Crown. Why the one, I ask myself, and not the other?

Finally, I would like to comment on another matter which came to my attention this week. Before doing so, however, I think we ought to recognize that the matters connected with the ceding of the 50,000 acres was first raised on March 15, if I remember correctly, by the Hon. Member for Kootenay-East Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) and also on May 10 during Private Members' Hour. These 50,000 acres are in his riding and he is duly concerned. I am as concerned as a British Columbian as he is concerned as a British Columbian that the Government is planning to do one thing and not planning to do right by British Columbia by upsetting all the provisions of the Bill.

Another matter on which I would like to speak concerns the representations I have received from the Council of Forest Industries, (COFI) in British Columbia. This time, however, it did not reach me through the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) but thanks to Canada Post. It may well be that the author of the letter, because he sits on the board of directors of Canada Post, decided that he would use that particular method of communicating his message to Members of Parliament. I assume that all other Members from British Columbia received the same.

This particular organization COFI is short of the lobby group for the Canadian forest industries. One of its recommendations, its fourth recommendation which it urges us to support, was that "Government funding should preferably be paid to the producers if a subsidy is required". I just put that on the record.

I see that the Speaker is somewhat worried that I might speak beyond my time, but I find it odd that we should be encouraged to support a recommendation that Government funding should preferably be paid to producers if a subsidy is required when it is quite contrary to the purposes of this particular Bill.

No one is quarreling with the need to upgrade the facilities of the railways, double-tracking, more hopper cars and other types of rolling stock. That work has to be done and done soon. I suggest that CN is wasting a great deal of its funds by advertising on television. I have puzzled for a long time why CN should advertise on television. CN is not appealing to individual Canadians for business. It is not selling anything to the individual Canadian any more. It used to when it ran a passenger service. I could understand VIA Rail advertising, but I feel that CN ought to expend its funds a little more judiciously, perhaps by upgrading some of its rolling stock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. However, as he may be aware, there is a ten-minute question and answer period and possibly he will be entitled to make further comments during that ten minutes.

The House, of course, is well aware that several points of order have been raised, in the main with respect to the matter of the definition of eight hours of debating time. I will try to deal with each of the points in order.

To begin with, I refer Hon. Members to the fact that it is commonly known that on Friday this issue was raised. I happened to be in the chair at the time and I indicated that the ruling would be made today. A few moments ago the Deputy Speaker did in fact rule on that matter, and I understand that the issue of eight hours and the ten-minute question and answer period has now been resolved.

That takes us to a second point which was raised by Hon. Members, again on the definition of what constitutes eight hours of debate, and in this connection particularly the argument of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) as to whether or not the eight hours as defined within the Standing Orders referred to debate on the main motion or on an amendment—in this case the six-month hoist—or whether they are to be taken together.

One can refer to Standing Order 35(2) and the words "Bill is being considered", to the word "considered", or in the French language, as I mentioned on Friday, to the word "débat". Also I refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, page 111, Citation 120 as follows:

> The interval between the proposing and the putting of the question, which is usually used for discussion, gives an opportunity for further proceedings such as the moving of an amendment; and this may give rise to a subsidiary debate, with its own question and decision, within the principal debate.

May I repeat those last words "within the principal debate". On the face of it, then, an amendment would be considered within the principal debate and consequently would be subject to the provision of a total of eight hours of time.

For further clarification, I refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, page 225, Citation 740 as follows:

> There are three types of amendments that may be proposed at the second reading stage of a Bill. These are:
> 1. the six months' hoist;—

It is the conclusion of the Chair that an amendment which is in order—and the six-month hoist is one of those which is in order—falls within the scope of Standing Order 35(2) and consequently the application of eight hours of debate applies not only to the main motion but to any one of the three types of acceptable motions at that stage in the proceedings of the House.

With that matter out of the way, we have a third point of order which I understand relates to whether or not points of order themselves and the amount of time they take shall be included in the eight hours of debate. As I was arriving in the Chamber, I noticed the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) was commenting on that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That has been ruled on by the Deputy Speaker already.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I want to inform Hon. Members that I am aware of the wording of the Deputy Speaker who was in the chair at that time. It may be that Hon. Members will want to check Hansard very carefully in that regard. The quote that my memory tells me is accurate is that the Chair informed the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich, I believe it was, that "the point is well taken". In any event, my understanding is that no final ruling has been made and I will proceed on that basis.

In the tradition of the House, where the debate or speech of an Hon. Member has been interrupted by points of order, the Chair at its own discretion has allowed the Hon. Member additional time; sometimes the exact amount that was accorded the point of order, or at other times the Chair makes a judgment as to what seems to be fair in the circumstances. However, it is completely the tradition of the House that points of order, while they may not be taken from the debate time of an individual Member, are very definitely taken from the total allotted debate time on a motion. There is no question about that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Oh, come on!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I hear an Hon. Member saying "come on!"

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I say "come on!" with justification.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): My ruling is always open to question. I encourage Hon. Members who may wish to do their homework in that regard to re-open the question if they see fit.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What is this place for?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I indicate again to Hon. Members that a check of today's "blues" or Hansard will give them some of the answers for which they may be looking and a further check of the procedures of the House will, I am quite certain, assure Hon. Members of the accuracy of the ruling I have just given.

According to those rulings taken together, the eight-hour debate period will end at 12.24 p.m. However, I want to point out that first there is a ten-minute question and answer period relevant to the speech of the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I suppose your time is not taken off.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Second, if the next Hon. Member seen by the Chair begins his debate before 12.24 p.m., I will then recognize that Hon. Member to continue his debate to a maximum time of 20 minutes and to enjoy the benefit of a ten-minute question and answer period as well.

Questions, answers, comments? Does the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) rise on questions and answers?

Mr. Lewycky: On debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions and answers?

Mr. Hargrave: On debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments, answers? Debate, the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River.

Mr. Lewycky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have only had two speakers since the last NDP speaker, and we are entitled to three, with all respect to the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am relying on my predecessor in the chair whose advice was that, having worked out a reasonable order of speakers in his view, the next Hon. Member who ought to be recognized is the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River. However, if the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) insists that I check that to my own satisfaction, I will do so, but I will need a couple of minutes to do so.

• (1220)

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I can give you the exact figures.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I appreciate the Hon. Member's offer. If the House will allow me a moment, I will do the homework necessary. I say again that this may raise problems related to the 20-minute period and 12.24 and so forth.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, it is possible the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is not aware that on the last day of debate there was an agreement reached between the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and a couple of us to allow one of the Conservative Members to speak sooner in the debate than he would otherwise have been entitled to in order that he could catch an airplane. We agreed to that. That is why it appears as though the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) is getting up after only two Conservative speakers. That was a little arrangement we arrived at in order to convenience one another the other day.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I knew nothing about that arrangement. If that is the arrangement made with the Hon. Member for Vegreville, that is fine with me.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, before I start on my point of order, in view of what I consider to be a very, very important statement made by yourself, I want to make sure I am not interfering. If you have recognized the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River, he is entitled to 20 minutes. I do not want the point of order I am now about to raise to be in any way an abrogation of the opportunity of any Member of this House to be able to speak for the fullest possible length of time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The point being raised by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is a great courtesy. Unless I have some serious point of order objecting to that, I will be prepared to see the time of 12.24 go past and yet continue to recognize the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River, and to continue in his case and his alone the 20-minute debate and 10-minute period for questions and answers. I hope that will be agreeable to the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with this point of order. I say that the ruling which has been brought down is one which will seriously abrogate the rights and abilities of Members of Parliament to deal with—

Mr. Pinard: Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Let me just finish. The House Leader is so anxious to ram through this matter—

Mr. Pinard: You cannot question the ruling.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am not questioning the ruling; I am questioning the cold premise upon which the ruling was made. I do not recall anybody standing in this House and asking for a ruling on the particular matter on which you apparently have made the ruling, that is to say whether points of order are to be taken off the time available for debate. This is a very important consideration, because if we were ready to debate that matter and raise it as a point of order, all the arguments should be made to the Speaker a ruling is made with respect to the proposition.

Let me put this to you, Mr. Speaker, regarding order and points of order, the kind of example and argument that should be placed before you before making a ruling of this significance. A point of order deals with a matter of order in the House. It may extend from disorder on the part of some Members interrupting the free flow of democratic debate in our House to a matter relating to procedural matters so that there can be a clarification. Indeed, a legitimate point of order is one in which the Speaker will hear out the representations, as was the case in this instance, as to what procedure should be followed. It does not have anything to do with the substance of the matter under consideration or the subject matter of the Bill. It is a matter of order in the House, and how without argument we can come to the conclusion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am going to hear the Hon. Member, although I would encourage him to come to his point of order fairly soon. I know he is aware that once a ruling is made on a point of order, the same point of order ought not to be brought up again for discussion.

I am going to hear the Hon. Member, but I wonder if he is aware that a point of order was raised by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) as to whether or not points of order are to be counted within the eight-hour time limit. Is he also aware, as I referred to in my ruling, that the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) referred to the same point of order? To the best of my understanding, no further representations were made on that point of order. Accordingly, I gave a ruling. I will hear the Hon. Member, but I would appreciate if he could come to his point.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the point I am raising now. When the Deputy Speaker left the chair—I do not care what interpretation of the English language one uses—there was no question in my mind that he had simply said there was no point of order, that the matter speaks for itself and the time would not be deducted from the time for debate. That is what he said. I am prepared to look at the blues to back that up. I would have stood up, as would have other Members in this House, to argue about that point of order if there had been any equivocation or any doubt in our minds that the Deputy Speaker, when he left this place, had any other conclusion but that the time was not—the members of the Table may have blanched. I did not blanch because I believe the Deputy Speaker was telling us there was absolutely no time on points of order to be taken off the time allocated for debate. I want the right to look at the blues and come back on this issue because I do not believe in thwarting the ability of Members of Parliament in this House unduly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I indicated when I made the ruling that I thought the words used by the Deputy Speaker, which were, as I recall, "the point is well taken", could be interpreted in both fashions; that is, he had accepted the point and given in some sense a ruling; or, alternatively, he could have meant that the point was well taken and that he would in due course consider it.

I thought it was my duty on coming here to avoid the issue whether or not the 40-odd minutes referred to taken up on points of order would have to be considered as part of the debate or not. I wanted the House to understand in what time frame it was acting.

I have no objection at all to what the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West proposes, and I made that clear in my comments. I make it clear again that for the moment the ruling is and was that debate began after the eight-hour period at 12.24. If the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West and other wish to raise that matter, I provide them with two opportunities. One is to do it immediately. The other is, as was suggested, to allow time for Members to examine Hansard and raise the matter again. I have indicated that in the circumstances that is the fairest way to proceed.

For the moment, the ruling is made. I think I have invented a new procedure and that is that Hon. Members may wish to take the occasion to appeal this subject if they so see fit tomorrow.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my point of order has to do with two points. The first is with respect to the comments of my colleague in the NDP and the suggestion that an arrangement may have been made on Friday. The Deputy Whip and myself obviously were not part of that discussion or we would have confirmed or denied it immediately. Therefore, we cannot comment on that.

The one thing I would like to draw to Your Honour's attention is this. According to my records, if you recognize the NDP at this time you will then have recognized nine Members of the Official Opposition, the Conservative Party, during the eight-hour debate and four Members of the NDP during the same eight-hour debate. That will give a time weight of 70 per cent to the Official Opposition and 30 per cent to the NDP.

With all due respect to the Chair's right to choose Members who rise to speak, I know Your Honour will want to give a proper mathematical division to the way the Members are recognized in order that the number of seats held by each Party in the House will be properly respected when the eight-hour debate is over. I suggest that if you recognize the NDP at this time, you will be giving them 30 per cent of the debating time. Based on the number of seats held in the House, 132, broken down 31 and 101, to sort it out properly and fairly between the two Opposition Parties, 75-25 is a more accurate split of debating time.

I would therefore suggest that the Chair might reflect upon its desire to do justice to the number of seats in the House, and on that basis reconsider who the Chair recognizes at this point in the debate.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I believe that if you are to reflect on the number of seats as proposed by the House Leader for the Official Opposition, you should put the statistics into a framework that is more fair than what he suggests. I believe the House Orders read that there shall be one speaker from each of the three Parties on the first round. I think those first round speakers must be taken out of the figures that were presented to us here today in order to use proportional representation as is normally followed in the House for the speaking rounds after the first three speeches have taken place. That will change the proportion somewhat.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, with reference to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), I am sure he would want to be fair and point out that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) get unlimited time in debate. There is no reference to that privilege being granted to the NDP Party as a minor Opposition Party. If we are to put all of those items on the plate, let us deal with everything pertaining to time allocation.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I believe the point that must be underlined is that the eight-hour debate period does not embrace those three speakers with unlimited time. The eight hours begin after the three Party spokesmen have made their contributions, so the calculation must be based upon those eight hours of debate and not upon the time used in the preceding by three speakers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Let us see if we can dispose of this matter. The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) was quite courteous to the Chair and indicated that he would want the Chair to be fair. I caught the implication that in his view the Chair would also want to be reasonable with the Parties. He is, incidentally, quite correct. The Chair does work with a mathematical ratio. If it has been in error, I believe that between myself and the other occupants of the chair we will come to a conclusion whereby we could see that any necessary redress is made.

I hope that the Hon. Member is not now arguing that we should reverse the decision made by the Chair with respect to recognizing the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky); but if he is, he can raise a motion in that regard, as he well knows. I simply indicate that I and the other members of the Chair will examine the situation very closely to see whether or not the proper ratios have been followed; if not, we will seek to make any redress appropriate.

The Hon. Member for Regina West on a fresh point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: No, Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to add to the point raised by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) following the point the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) made about the length of time taken on points of order not being included in the eight hours. It was certainly my intention to rise on that point of order, but the Deputy Speaker said that the point was well taken, and I believe he made another remark a few minutes later when another Hon. Member rose to speak. It was my impression that the Speaker then said something to the effect that time taken on points of order would not be included in the eight hours of debate. If he had not said that, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West and myself and probably others would have been on our feet right then and there. However, it was our impression and assumption that the matter was then closed and that time taken up on points of order would not be included in the eight hours of debate time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I say to the House that I believe this is a repetition of the point already made. I wish to put a simple proposal to the House which I am now putting to the House for the third time. I recognize that the words used by my predecessor in the Chair, the Deputy Speaker, lent themselves to several interpretations or understandings. Time is available for Hon. Members to review Hansard, seek precedents and review procedures. I did not want to make any suggestions in that regard earlier but I would now suggest that Hon. Members might see the opening of the House tomorrow at 11 o'clock as an appropriate time to review this matter. I do not want to suggest to the House the manner in which it ought to proceed, but I do want to say that I have made a ruling and the ruling is that at 12.24 we began the next classification of debate; but the Chair is open to renewing that point of order and to reviewing it completely.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have only two points to raise. When the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) begin to raise the point again, your predecessor in the Chair, the Deputy Speaker, said that that point had been settled and the time taken would not be included in the debate. I believe that Hansard will bear that out.

The second point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that it would be very unreasonable to include time spent on point of order in the time spent on debate. For instance, with respect, you yourself took seven minutes to give a ruling. If it is to take seven or ten minutes for the Speaker to give a ruling, it would not be fair to take that time away from the Members' allowed time in debate. I say that with respect.

In considering this question, it should be remembered that there is much talking going on and the Deputy Speaker himself takes considerable time in giving a ruling. This should certainly not be used as a denial of Members' opportunities to deal with and debate the Bill before the House.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, my next point of order is, what will happen in the meantime? You have already ruled on the time of 12.24. There is to be one more 20-minute speech before going to ten-minute speeches. Let us say that later this day or some other day the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and I raise a point of order and it is decided and agreed that time taken up by points of order is not counted in the eight-hour debate time. What would you do then, Mr. Speaker? Would you revert to 20-minute speeches when some Members have already been limited to ten minutes? It seems to me that the situation will only get worse.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if this ruling is to stand, then any Party could decide to raise all the points of order it wishes about what some Member happens to be wearing, or whether the clocks are correct, or a host of other subjects in order to prevent the full eight hours of debate.

Mr. Smith: We would not do that.

Mr. Benjamin: Oh no? Surely, Mr. Speaker, with all the prerogatives the Chair has, if very many deliberately minor, inconsequential and time-consuming points of order are raised, the Chair may always cut them off very quickly. But it seems to me that all points of order raised so far having to do with these rules and the context of this debate have been legitimate points and there have been contributions made from all sides. Surely those contributions are not part of a debate about western transportation and the statutory grain rates.

It seems to me that nobody can claim that the points of order raised to this time have been malicious or frivolous or anything like that. But if it is concluded or decided that this time will be counted in the eight hours, I predict that decision will cause great difficulties in the future because particularly the Government Party could completely hamstring much of the Opposition's time by dealing with points of order on any darned thing it pleased that would have nothing to do with the Bill before the House.

Mr. Smith: We have never done that.

Mr. Benjamin: But the opportunity is there for any Party to do that. The opportunity is there for individual Members to do that. Surely that cannot be allowed to stand, Mr. Speaker. The time cannot be included in the eight hours of debate.

• (1240)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I must say I am surprised that the Hon. Member for Regina West even considers the possibility that I might have made an erroneous ruling! I hope that he and other Members regard all my rulings as little gems, but obviously I am not going to have that support today.

I have said, and this will be for the fourth time, that in view of the words used by my predecessor in the Chair, if Hon. Members would like to take the time to check those words, the opportunity for consideration can arise again tomorrow.

The Hon. Member raised a hypothetical problem about whether we might have to reverse my ruling. I can assure him, sitting where I do in the boar's nest, that I am confident of my ruling and that he will be satisfied by tomorrow. We will see whether it is appropriate to have that ruling again at 11 a.m. or 3 p.m., depending upon whether Hon. Members want to pursue the point. If Hon. Members do pursue the point, they will find that the Chair is correct.

Now may I recognize the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky).

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, as a final point of order, I suggest that the next three speakers get 20 minutes so that there will be no difficulty later.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I can give the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) the absolute assurance that only one Member will be recognized for 20 minutes and then there will be a ten-minute question and answer period. I made that ruling prior to 12.24 and I intend to honour it.

Mr. Taylor: That is completely unfair.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to participate in this debate and on the specific amendment made by my colleague. I want to express my heartfelt gratitude also to the Conservative Party for honouring the agreement they made with us on Friday to allow one of their Members to catch a plane and to adjust the order somewhat today.

Much has been said about the history and the philosophy behind the Crow rate. I should like to address the subject from the perspective of some of the producers and the impact that this Pepin proposal will have upon primary producers in areas such as Dauphin-Swan River.

I know that the Crow issue might be a little bit difficult for some Hon. Members opposite to comprehend as they do not have a direct relationship to the people of the land or to some of the individuals who will be affected by the legislation.

If I could use an illustration from the farming area, I know that some of the seed thoughts that I will sow today will be lost because some will fall on rocky soil. As a result, the seed thoughts I am trying to plant regarding the negative implications of the Pepin proposal will be lost because there is no good soil opposite in which they can take root and grow.

On different occasions the Minister who introduced the Bill said that those who opposed his position—in other words, those who favour the retention of the Crow—are reactionaries. This is the word he has used maybe to ridicule some of his own backbenchers who may want to turn an attentive ear to the rational and realistic position that I want to put before the Minister.

Because the writ of habeas corpus dates back to 1679, that does not mean that anyone wanting to support the position should be considered reactionary. We have medicare in this country. Because we in the New Democratic Party support it, that does not mean that we should be viewed as being reactionary but, rather, as taking a positive and realistic approach.

I want to point out some of the negative implications that this proposal will have on farmers in the West, especially those in certain regions of the country where the impact might be disproportionate to others. In some ways it is curious that the Ministers who have spoken have seemed to propose a new vision for the West. This is in contrast to the vision of people at the beginning of the twentieth century for populating and developing the West. The Pepin proposal will work in reverse to the vision at the beginning of the twentieth century in that rather than having prosperity and population growth in the West we will have depopulation and decay.

I say that because I want to address this from the perspective of some of the farmers who will be affected by this Bill. I want to take the perspective of residents of my constituency. As I have mentioned several times in the House, farmers in the West are being dealt a double whammy. There are rail line abandonment policies proceeding at full tilt and there is the Pepin proposal which will take money out of the pockets of the farmers.

I want to give some concrete examples of this. There has been a series of rail line abandonment hearings in my area and certain decisions have been made by the CTC with regard to the closing of the Winnipegosis subdivision and consequently the closing of the elevator at Fork River.

What will this mean to the farmers in the area? With the loss of the elevator at Fork River many producers of the region will face the prospect of transporting their grain 160 kilometres to 200 kilometres. This means that if a farmer has to truck his grain that extra distance he may only be able to make one trip per day, and it is likely he will have to contend with line-ups at the elevator. He will be in competition with the farmer who has a local elevator and only has to transport his grain 15 kilometres or 20 kilometres.

Someone like the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) might argue that such producers should work farms in other areas. I would point out to him that the rail line went through this particular region some 85 years ago and at that time everyone had every reason to assume that there would be, in perpetuity, some way for the farmer to transport his grain.

Let me turn now to the cost element. In my area some farmers tell me that it costs them $2.50 per bushel to produce barley. When they add 25 cents per bushel to the cost of hauling the grain beyond Fork River, for example, there will be no profit for them.

In addition, when they lose the local elevators they are losing regional experts. These people live in the area and can inform the farmer about the local weed control situation, about pesticides suitable for the local soil and so on. All this expertise will be lost. In addition, the local grain elevators serve as depots for fertilizers, sprays and seed grain. This is part one of the double whammy that the Minister of Transport is allowing to occur on the Prairies.

Let us consider now the increased base cost of the Pepin proposal. If, for example, a farmer in the Waterhen or Rorketon area has to transport his grain beyond Fork River, that means that such things as a telephone call will be more costly because he will have to use a different exchange. There is also more wear and tear on the farmer's truck. We have the huge increase in fuel prices which farmers have to contend with. And there is the spiralling interest costs which have posed a great problem for the farmers in my area. In addition, they have had huge increases in the cost of fertilizer and other costs.

Let me give an example of what this will mean with respect to income. We have heard grandiose representations this morning by one of the Ministers about the fantastic growth potential, savings and all the added income which would be garnered on the Prairies as a result of this Pepin initiative. I point out that in many regions of Canada the average income, especially in constituencies such as mine, is considerably lower than other parts of Canada. Revenue Canada statistics for 1978—I am sorry but these are the latest I have—indicate that the average income for the Fork River region was $5,706 for the year. If we were to compare this with the rest of Canada, the national average of net income for that particular year was $10,313. Their income is about half what it is in the national arena.

Even if you project the proportionate increase for 1983, you would find that the $2,800 which the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) spoke of as being peanuts would have a fantastic impact on farmers in my area. And it is not just this area; I could give illustrations of other parts of Manitoba and draw comparisons there.

The reason I am pointing this out to the Hon. Minister, Mr. Speaker, is that the Minister, on many occasions in this House, has said he cannot understand why Hon. Members from different parts of the West are saying different things. I would just like to indicate to him why it is that some Hon. Members might be saying different things. I would like the Hon. Minister to have, perhaps, an iota more of discernment so he would be able to recognize the perspective which Members are bringing to this debate. Up to this point he has not indicated, to me at least, that he has had the ability to listen and learn in terms of the different perspectives of various Hon. Members.

I will give an illustration of the average income in Manitoba so the Minister will understand why, for example, the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) might bring forward a different point of view in his perspective. In 1978 in the Brandon Manitoba area, the average income was $9,060. In Portage la Prairie Manitoba the average income for that year was $9,044. In Stonewall Manitoba, which is very near Winnipeg, the average income was $9,209.

Let us take a look at some of these regions where the Minister of Transport is administering his double whammy and see what type of disproportionate impact this is having. In an area like Ethelbert, Manitoba in 1978, the average income was $4,603. In an area such as Grandview, Manitoba the income was $5,800. In the area of Winnipegosis, Manitoba the average income was $5,706, half of what it is in the rest of Manitoba and even less than what it is for all of Canada.

I wish the Hon. Minister would take these matters into consideration and try to examine them in the over-all context, because up to this point he obviously has not realized the disproportionate impact which his proposal would bring on people in the West. My constituency is not totally unique. There are many farming and rural constituencies such as mine which have identical problems. I think it is important that this matter be taken into consideration.

Much has been said about the benefit that this Pepin proposal will bring to the West. It seems as if there is a real carrot there which the Government is offering, that there will be some very precise benefits. However, I would like to ask what would happen with the Pepin proposal by, say, 1990 at 5.1 times Crow, if that was the amount which was being levied on the farmers? I will just take representative examples for the Hon. Minister to look at in terms of how much of a loss this would be to communities in my area. Inglis, Manitoba, for example, is paying 18 cents a hundred-weight for their Crow rate. Let us say the handle at Inglis is some 20.6 thousand metric tonnes. What would be the loss to a place like Inglis? The loss would be some $335,000.

Mr. Pepin: What about the gains?

Mr. Lewycky: There will be no gains at Inglis. This is the loss which we will have in that particular community, which is in the southwest section of my constituency. Let us take a look at the southeast section of my constituency, at a place called Amaranth. The current Crow rate there is 16 cents a hundred-weight. The reason I mention these different areas is because, obviously, Government backbenchers do not even realize there are differences in terms of the Crow rate for those various areas. However, in Amaranth the handle there is some 11.3 thousand metric tonnes, and the loss to a small community like this is going to be some $163,600.

So that urban Members might be able to understand this, I will draw an analogy. Let us say an urban area is one square mile. Try to transport this into a block or two of your constituency and realize what the economic implications are there. I am not even covering all the communities, all the elevators in my riding; I am just trying to give some representative examples from a huge riding, some 500 kilometres from the north to the south and 350 kilometres across, just to give an appreciation of what that size means. If we move to the northern part of my constituency, to a place such as Swan River, right now they are paying some 19 cents a hundred-weight for their base. They have a production of 69,000 metric tonnes. The loss to this community at 5.1 times Crow would amount to $1,187,000.

That is a substantial loss, Mr. Speaker, when you consider that this is a community of some 4,500 people. I would ask the Hon. Minister to select 4,500 people from his area and try to suck $1 million out of that small group of people. It is the farming community which is assisting our balance of payments in Canada and which is putting bread on the table of urban Canadians and I feel that this is a very important consideration.

At the same time, what do we have? In constituencies such as mine there has recently been a large number of railway abandonment hearings. I have already raised in this House the fact that in Manitoba we have had some 18 hearings and not one of the decisions has been in favour of the citizens. They have all been in favour of the railways. Farmers find it difficult to understand these formulas which are being used by the railways which continue depreciation on into eternity, railways which can have a revenue from one part of the line but will not attribute that revenue to the entire line. But at the same time, when there are costs to the railway they can attribute a certain segment to the railway as having no return.

I see that it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, so I will sit down at this time and resume later.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I thank the Hon. Member. May I point out to him that at three o'clock, or as soon as Orders of the Day are called, the Hon. Member will have one minute remaining in his time for debate and will then have accessible to him the ten-minute question and answer period which we agreed on earlier today.

In the interim, the Chair indicated to the House, particularly to Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, that a verification would be made to determine whether or not complete fairness has been ascribed by the Chair in recognizing certain speakers. There has been a fractional unfairness to the Official Opposition. That, I think, could be easily corrected.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), I understand, wishes to rise on a point of order and seek the consent of the House for a slight modification of time allocation with respect to one of the Hon. Members of his Party. I want to indicate that that discussion has taken place with the Chair, and providing it is acceptable to all Hon. Members of the House, by unanimous consent we would proceed that way this afternoon.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your remarks. We did feel that there may have been a slight imbalance in recognition of Hon. Members during the 20-minute time for debate. I appreciate that, considering the point of order and other interjections in the normal flow of debate, it may be difficult always to keep that ratio in order.

With that in mind, I would suggest to the Chair that you might want to suggest to the House that the next Hon. Member to speak from our side be recognized for a 20-minute period and that that should be the last Hon. Member recognized for the purpose of 20-minute speeches. I would request that perhaps Your Honour might make this suggestion to the House in the interest of allowing everyone to be heard fully, in view of the importance of this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think I should clarify the statement of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North. The proposal is made on the understanding that rulings have been made that the eight-hour period of debate is over, that the House will now seek only to adjust certain time frames which were allotted to each of the two Opposition Parties. The proposal put forward by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North is that the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) be accorded a full 20 minutes, but not be subject to the ten-minute question and answer period and not, in any way, continue the eight-hour debate. I wanted the House to know that from the point of view of an examination of the records, that does appear to be a fair proposal. However, it is a request that requires unanimous consent.

Is there unanimous consent to the proposal of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is unanimous consent. Accordingly, it is so ordered.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 1.04 p.m. the House took recess.

HOUSING

POSSIBILITY OF HIGH HOURLY WAGE OFFSETTING $2,000 QUEBEC SUBSIDY

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): I would like to draw the attention of the House to a rather unusual situation. A few days ago, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) confirmed that the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Program had been terminated. Funds had run out and buyers of new homes could no longer receive the $3,000 grant.

The Quebec Minister of Finance, Mr. Parizeau, thought he was being very clever when he announced that the Government of Quebec would pay $2,000 as a substitute for the Canadian program. However, he neglected to point out that as of May 1 of this year, the Government of Quebec has allowed a ten-percent increase in wages in the construction industry. For instance, a carpenter will now be getting $16.22 per hour instead of $14.74. In fact, the effect of the $2,000 grant announced by Mr. Parizeau is offset by an equivalent rise in labour costs.

Construction workers I spoke to this weekend were all agains the wage increase, which was stage-managed by René Lévesque and Louis Laberge and has now created a situation that actually harms the interests of construction workers, who are sick and tired of posting certificates in the living room stating that they earn $16.22 an hour, while they are not working at all. As a result of these high hourly rates, there is a good market for illegal construction workers. In my opinion, this is a state of affairs that must be remedied.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REFUSAL OF DOCUMENTS SOUGHT BY RCMP DEFENDANTS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and, indeed, the entire Government must be aware of the lack of natural justice concerning the prosecutions against certain members of the RCMP Security Service.

They will recall that the Government gave both the Keable and McDonald Commissions documentation upon which the Crown is now apparently basing much of its prosecution against these men. In his recent decision Chief Justice Thurlow indicated that he was not prepared to allow the defence to have certain RCMP files and documents, and it is reported that he did not even feel disposed to review the documents to see whether or not they were objectionable on grounds of national security or international relations.

Defence counsel Richard Mongeau appealed on May 5, 1983, and I urge the Government to instruct its counsel to take a different approach so that members of the Security Service, who were encouraged by their superiors and undoubtedly by certain Ministers of the Crown and the PMO to use every possible means of obtaining information relating to political activities in Quebec, will not now be abandoned.

It is a travesty that Counsel, taking instructions from the Government, are using every legal means to deny RCMP members a comprehensive legal defence. It is a pity that some of the individuals who urged the original initiatives and who operate in a political framework are not facing the same situation as the police officers. We would then see quite a change in the availability of evidence for their defence.

RACISM

RE-EMERGENCE OF ANTI-SEMITISM IN ALBERTA

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I am ashamed to say that anti-semitism has again raised its ugly head in my home Province. When I returned home from overseas as a Social Credit MLA, I found antisemitism in the Social Credit movement. Premier Manning was also concerned and asked me to take over the Social Credit paper to root out all anti-semitism. I accepted this chore and fired all of the staff who indicated any anti-semitism, and after editing the paper for several months it appeared that anti-semitism had been cleaned out of the movement.

Now it has raised its ugly head again and Premier Lougheed has declared that anti-semitism has no place in the PC Party. Our own Leader, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), in an address before the Canadian Jewish Congress in Montreal yesterday, stated, "I find it shameful and intolerable that individuals are ignorant of one of the world's ghastly catastrophies", and in dealing with Nazi participants in the Holocaust, "We are dealing with mass murderers".

Thousands of Canadians of all racial origins, including Canadians of Jewish origin, fought and many died in the last war in order that never again would millions of people of any race be exterminated. The Holocaust is real; more than six million Jews died, and those who lived through it can never forget. Yet Abraham Heschel, a Jew from Poland, was able to say "The earth is the Lord's." From the burning embers of the Holocaust was born the new State of Israel where the hopes and aspirations of the Jewish people are being realized.

But there can be no statute of limitations on the war criminals responsible for the living horror perpetuated on the Jews in the Holocaust.

TRADE

SUGGESTED TOPICS FOR TALKS WITH VISITING SOVIET OFFICIALS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, it has been brought to our attention that there are a number of Soviet officials in Canada who will be visiting throughout the country, and meeting with the Government of Canada. The purpose of the meeting is to improve trade relations.

I hope that the Government bears in mind, when meeting with the Soviet officials, the wish of the majority of Canadians that there be a concerted effort toward the de-escalation of the arms race and that we want to see from the Soviets as well as the United States an effort made to eliminate the threat of nuclear war from Europe.

Equally important, I hope that the Government raises with those officials the plight of Soviet Jews, which has long been of concern to Canadians, and that it ask the officials representing Canada at the talks to make clear to the Soviet officials visiting Canada that these issues must be part of the over-all discussion since they are of primary concern to Canadians.

SPORTS

PROPOSED TRANSFER OF NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE FRANCHISE TO SASKATOON

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, this week Mr. Bill Hunter and his colleagues, as well as Mayor Cliff Wright of Saskatoon, and Culture and Youth Minister Paul Schoenhals of Saskatchewan, will meet with the NHL Board of Governors. The object of this visit is, of course, to secure the transfer of the St. Louis Blues to Saskatoon, Saskatchewan.

This transfer is considered by Saskatchewan residents to be of the utmost importance. To possess within our borders a National Hockey League franchise is, for us, a coming of age. It provides the city and the Province with a certain prestige. More important, it confirms Saskatoon and Saskatchewan for what they are—major league in every way, including sports.

Residents of Saskatoon and Saskatchewan have always been avid sports participants and supporters. The exploits of football's Saskatchewan Roughriders, with one of the highest levels of fan support in Canada, are well known. Every little town has its own skating rink and its own curling rink. It is no small wonder that hockey greats like Gordie Howe, the Bentleys, Brian Trottier and Bob Bourne, to name only a few, have come from our towns and villages.

It is good for Canada and national unity to have a major international sports franchise within our Province. It brings attention to Canada and it sparks pride within our nation. It is the creation of an institution that truly means something to the average man, woman, and child.

Saskatchewan residents are prepared and able to support this endeavour. When the possibility of a team became known in Saskatchewan, Mr. Hunter received 18,000 requests for season tickets.

I call upon the Government to lend its support for this transfer to the City of Saskatoon. It is important that the federal Government state and communicate its support for a very worthy and popular project to the National Hockey League Board of Governors.

EMPLOYMENT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND STUDENT CENTRE—ATTENDANCE AT OPENING CEREMONY

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a situation which was brought to my attention through a memorandum sent to the managers of the Canadian Employment Centres located in Charlottetown and Summerside, Prince Edward Island, by the regional manager of public affairs. It is with regard to the official opening of the Canadian Employment Centre for students in Charlottetown and Summerside. At that time the Minister's office contacted the Hon. Members from Cardigan and Egmont to address the opening ceremonies. If the designated Member was unable to attend, the most senior local official would perform the function on behalf of the Minister.

It is interesting to note that it was specifically stated in the memo that Members of the provincial Parliament were not to be invited, and that the Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament were also not to be invited even if the Canada Employment Centre was in their riding. I feel that this is another example of the pettiness and underhandedness which is so evident in the Liberal Government's practices.

• (1410)

The Canada Employment Centre for Students serves many students of all political, cultural, and denominational beliefs. By discriminating against the people's representative who should have attended the opening ceremonies one cannot help but wonder just how fairly the Employment Centres are to be run. This is a blatant attempt by the Minister to have a higher profile for the Liberal Members and to downgrade the Conservative MPs and provincial MLAs. This is proof positive that the Minister does not have an ounce of common courtesy or decency in his whole being, and he bloody well should be ashamed of himself for being involved in such sleazy tactics.

SHIPBUILDING

VANCOUVER BID FOR SHARE OF FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a letter before me that I have just received from the Vancouver Metal Trades Council which I would like to bring to the attention of the House and the Government. The Council represents 5,000 workers normally employed in the shipbuilding and repair industry in British Columbia, my own Province. I am told the affiliates of the Council report that approximately 60 per cent of them are unemployed.

Yesterday a Dome Petroleum boat, I believe called Placentia Bay was launched. Two boats have been built in Canada and four are to be built in Korea. To me this seems ridiculous. We should be building all of this kind of shipping in Canada. In any case, I am told that there are to be bids very shortly on the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program. The Burrard Yarrows Corporation of Vancouver has put in applications for that program. I realize the Government, has to consider all different regions and all different shipbuilders across the country, but I hope that British Columbia will receive its proportionate share. It is very important for my constituents in Vancouver, many of whom are in the metal trades business, and they would like to work building Canadian ships for use by Canadian companies.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

HOUSING

STATUS OF $3,000 GRANT PROGRAM

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for housing. I am sure he has been unavoidably detained because I understood he was to be here. I will direct my question, then, to the Acting Prime Minister.

To identify my question for the Acting Prime Minister, it has to do with the $3,000 grant program concerning which thousands of people are awaiting resolution. Last week the Minister responsible for housing said outside the House that he was going to look into the situation to see what could be done, particularly for those who had applied for the program, and as well with respect to the necessity for extra funding.

We are into another week. Those thousands of people are still waiting to find out what is going to happen to their applications and to their hopes for owning a home of their own. What does the Government intend to do about this situation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I was here last week and I heard the Prime Minister saying exactly what the question is today, that the Minister responsible for housing was going to look at the program and take into account the people who had already made their applications, and he was going to see if there were enough funds for them in the present existing budget. If not, the Minister of Public Works was going to see if he could find some more. The answer really is in the question. I presume the Minister will report on that quite soon.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I think the people have been waiting long enough. The Government has had a weekend to consider this matter. People are still waiting for those homes and that housing. There are not two ways about it, people were led to expect that there would be sufficient money for this program to last until May 31.

FUNDING AND NUMBER OF APPLICATIONS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, what is the situation with regard to this program? Surely the Prime Minister, or the Minister responsible for housing, who is just coming into the House, can tell us what the situation is; how much money has been committed under the program and how many people have been left out of the program. Can the Minister tell us what the current situation is with respect to this program, and can the Minister responsible for housing bring us beyond last week, which is as far as the Acting Prime Minister has been able to bring us?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I indicated that we would not be in a position before at least the middle of this week, or possibly toward the end of this week, to say how many people will qualify whose applications are valid, who have had footings poured and are ready to accept the $3,000 grant. Again, this is not because we are counting paper slowly; it is because an application and a final awarding of the grant are dependent upon the inspection of the site. That is what our people are doing. They are working overtime, and we have added inspectors to the list.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I want to tell the Minister of Public Works that there are thousands of people in the country who believe the Government is, in fact, counting paper very slowly.

SOURCE OF FUNDING

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I think the Government is obviously counting paper hoping to find more funds. The Minister should be in a position to tell the House where he is going to look for these funds. Is he going to look for these funds out of other programs under his jurisdiction, or from programs within the envelope from which his funds are drawn, or is he going to ask the Minister of Finance for more money? Has there been an approach made to the Minister of Finance for more money? Do we have his word that the decision will be made later this week and announced here in the House of Commons?

Mr. Nielsen: He could take it out of the $200 million.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am afraid most of the Hon. Member's questions are theoretical, and will be theoretical until I know exactly what is the size of the problem with which we are dealing. I can certainly not go to the Minister of Finance in a convincing way unless I can give him at least an indication of the amount of money I am talking about.

Mr. Nielsen: Two hundred million dollars did not bother him.

Mr. LeBlanc: If it were a modest amount, it is quite possible that we could rearrange within the total housing budget—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What is modest?

Mr. LeBlanc: The Hon. Member asks what is modest—

Mr. Nielsen: Anything within $200 million.

Mr. LeBlanc: —I am afraid I will not risk answering that question.

TIME SPENT INSPECTING SITES

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Public Works. I understand the Minister's undertaking vis-à-vis northern and isolated communities. There has been a very definite commitment there and I agree with that. But is the Minister now saying that he will not make representations to cabinet and to the Minister of Finance with respect to all these people out there who are left dangling and waiting until his entire inspection process is done? In other words, is the Minister in a position where he will not assess what he calls the size of the problem until that very, very lengthy inspection process is completed? If so, does the Minister not appreciate what he is doing to those thousands of potential home owners because of that delay?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I really think the Hon. Member is over dramatizing the inspection aspect. As I have said, the inspection operation consists of verification of whether footings have been poured. This is a very quick and summary operation. My officials tell me that by the middle or toward the end of this week we will know the size of the problem with which we are dealing in the overrun, and if the applications are beyond the $30 million allocated, I think I would be unfair to those who are waiting for an answer if I led them to expect too much or if I led them to be pessimistic.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You led them by the nose.

Mr. LeBlanc: I said in the House lask week that I would be as reasonable and as flexible as possible. The idea of the program was to encourage home building. That has been achieved. Surely we do not want to discourage those last applicants if we can find a way to help them.

Mr. Lewis: They are still dangling.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER UNDERTAKE TO MAKE STATEMENT

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, one thing that would not lead to undue optimism or undue pessimism would be some degree of certainty. If, as the Minister has just said, the inspection process will be done by mid-week or the end of this week, will he not undertake to advise this House a week from today—and through us those people who are sitting with offers to purchase that cannot be accepted or acted upon—of what will become of those people?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, if I am in a position to do this before next Monday, obviously I will. I certainly want to answer as quickly as possible the concerns of those who are worried.

AIR CANADA

PROPOSAL THAT QUEBECAIR LEASE AIRCRAFT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport concerning a $200 million proposal which would have Quebecair operate a mothballed Air Canada DC-8 jet aircraft to be leased by, I believe, a travel company named Solvac. Could the Minister tell us why Air Canada is not agreeable to leasing this aircraft or to letting the proposal proceed which would create jobs?

• (1420)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, let me say first that discussions between Air Canada and Quebecair are going on now, so the door has not been closed on either side.

The first point to observe is that the board of Quebecair has not yet approved the project. The second point to observe is that Air Canada has expressed some views on the subject at the request of Quebecair, pointing out, for example, that it is all right to commit a plane for ten years but that it would have to be refitted after a while—someone has to pay for the refitting—and also pointing out that Air Canada, on behalf of the Canadian Government, is to be involved in the restructuring of Quebecair. This project will be either a success or a failure; the Government of Canada has an interest in ensuring that it is not a failure. For all these reasons the negotiations and conversations are continuing now.

Mr. Benjamin: I do not follow the Minister's line of reasoning. Even if Air Canada were to become involved with Quebecair, especially a direct involvement, it would automatically include the leasing of aircraft.

REASONS FOR NOT LEASING AIRCRAFT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, Air Canada currently leases L-1011 aircraft to Eastern Airlines of the United States and to Air Lanka of Sri Lanka, which have been approved by the Transport Ministry. Could the Minister tell us why Air Canada finds it so difficult to lease a jet to a Canadian operator if it can lease jets to foreign operators? By leasing this DC-8 to this travel agency, Air Canada will be reimbursed for maintenance, because it will be doing the maintenance and it will create about 60 jobs. What is the problem? No matter what the subsequent events may be, the leasing of aircraft sitting in the Arizona desert should be an objective of Air Canada since it told us in the Standing Committee on Transport a few days ago that it would be attempting to lease aircraft sitting out there in the desert doing nothing?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, obviously there is nothing wrong with the leasing of airplanes. Both Air Canada and Quebecair do it. Quebecair just leased three Boeing 737s to Pan American. There is nothing wrong in the device itself. The problem I have indicated is that should Air Canada on behalf of Canada, and Quebecair on behalf of the Quebec Government, be associated, obviously the two parties will have to share in both the profits and the losses. Consequently, since the losses of Quebecair have already been announced at $16 million this year, the Government of Canada and Air Canada have an interest in not contributing to an increase in these losses, hence the attention that is given to it now.

AIR SAFETY

DUBIN REPORT RECOMMENDATION TO ESTABLISH AIR SAFETY BOARD

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Volume I of the Report of the Commission of Inquiry on Aviation Safety recommended the establishment of an independant Air Safety Board. Mr. Justice Dubin submitted the report to the Minister in March, 1981, and it was presented to the House in May, 1981. Two years later the Minister of Transport has still not tabled the legislation. Can he indicate to the House when the legislation, which I know is ready, will be tabled and at least given first reading?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it will be tabled as soon as there is a real possibility that the Committee will study the Bill. As my hon. friend just said, the Bill is ready to go. I regret that it is not already in Committee, but the Committee has been busy with other things. More than that, the rest of the Dubin report will also be ready in the Fall. Should we not be able to study it now because of the western initiatives Bill, we may be able to consider both the air safety Bill and the amendments to the Aeronautics Act in the Fall, together.

CONSEQUENCES OF DELAY IN INTRODUCING LEGISLATION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question concerns the amendments to the Aeronautics Act. I gather from what the Minister said that, although both of these pieces of legislation are ready and that we could have dealt with them over the past six weeks to eight weeks, we will now have to wait until the Crow legislation is completed and will not get a look at them until the late Fall. Could the Minister tell the House whether he has some concern for air safety in the interim? By then he will be dragging this on for almost three years.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, just to be clear on one subject, the amendments to the Aeronautics Act will not be ready before the Fall. I did not say anything opposite to that.

This matter could have been resolved if the house had been ready to form a special committee to take care of the western rail initiative. That has not taken place yet and I am still open to suggestion on that subject, but I have not been able to convince people that we should have a special committee. Should that be possible, indeed we could attend to the establishment of the Air Safety Board now instead of waiting for the Fall.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, without having a lengthy discussion with my House leader, I think it would be fair to say that we would be delighted to have a special committee. In fact, we have been asking for a special committee.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there are three Parties in the House and obviously all three must agree—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, that was not a question; it was simply a comment.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It was an implied question.

REPORT OF CHAIRMAN'S MEETING WITH FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Surely the Minister must be aware of the story that appeared in The Gazette of Montreal on Saturday, reporting that Rene Amyot, Chairman of Air Canada, met Joseph Zappia in Rome in March, 1982. This is the same Mr. Zappia who is a fugitive from Canadian justice and wanted in Quebec to face charges of fraud, extortion and kickbacks in connection with the construction of the Olympic Village.

Could the Minister please tell the House in what capacity the Chairman of Air Canada met with Mr. Zappia and, if in his personal capacity for whatever reason, can he assure the House that no Air Canada tickets, property or stationary were used in connection with the meeting?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is really very persevering on that subject. I think he is wrong. We have said often enough that there is an inquiry on that subject. It is impossible for me to comment for the reasons I have indicated many times. I will not even be naughty on the subject. I read that Mr. Zappia was running at one time for the leadership of the Conservative Party, but I will not say that, just because the idea is not to impute motive or to have guilt by association or anything of this kind in Canada. I would suggest very respectfully to my hon. friend that he lay off for a little while and await the results of the inquiry, when all his problems will be resolved.

Mr. Nowlan: I understand part of the Minister's dilemma, but the dilemma for a member of the Opposition is to find out what is under investigation.

REPORT OF MEETING ON FINANCING OF NEW HEADQUARTERS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I think the first question on this matter occurred on December 9, 1982. That was over six months ago. We do not know whether the investigation involves Air Canada or the personal activities, affairs, and business dealings of Rene Amyot and his friends. That is why I am forced to ask some questions. Since there has been no statement in the House from the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General or the Minister of Transport as to the parameters of the investigation, the time it began and when it is to conclude, I think these questions are properly in the public domain.

The other part of the story in The Gazette reported that Mr. Amyot—and this may touch on the ivnestigation; perhaps the Minister can tell us and I will shut up on this type of question—Montreal businessmen Isaac Gelber and Sheldon Mintzberg met with a French financier to discuss financing for Place Mont Royal, a possible site for Air Canada's new headquarters. Again, can the Minister tell the House whether Mr. Amyot attended this meeting on behalf of Air Canada? If not, why was Mr. Amyot holding discussions about the financing of a project that was a contender for the Air Canada headquarters?

• (1430)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): No, Madam Speaker, I cannot, for reasons often given.

INCOME TAX

REQUIREMENT THAT SENIOR CITIZENS PAY ON QUARTERLY BASIS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Finance. In his absence I will direct it to the Minister of National Revenue. On November 17, 1982, I asked the Minister to review the tax policy requiring senior citizens to pay income tax on a quarterly basis. His response was that he would seriously consider doing so in consultation with the Minister of National Revenue. I ask the Minister whether he has done so to date.

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think I indicated to the House on previous occasions that under the provisions of the Income Tax Act, we must, when conditions so require, ask taxpayers to make quarterly payments. Unfortunately, until the Act is amended, it will be impossible to exempt taxpayers to whom such conditions apply. However, I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that we have no intention of unduly burdening a specific group of taxpayers such as senior citizens and that we are giving serious thought to ways of helping this group avoid potential problems.

[English]

AMOUNT COLLECTED IN PENALTIES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of National Revenue. On March 17 of this year I asked him to review the provisions which require that senior citizens pay income tax quarterly. His answer was, "I will be giving special attention to this point". In response to my March 11 question on the Order Paper, the Minister stated that over $31 million in penalties was collected from senior citizens who did not properly make installment payments in 1981. I ask the Minister, is this not proof enough that most seniors do not understand the present filing procedures? What has he done and what will he do to speed up the process of informing our senior citizens that either they should pay quarterly or they are exempt from this procedure which is now in existence?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member will recall that quite recently, an insert was sent with the Old Age Security cheques to explain the procedure to be followed when a person has additional income and is therefore obliged under the Act to make quarterly payments. I believe that the number of senior citizens who are obliged to make such payments is very limited, and that it would probably be very confusing for the vast majority of senior citizens if we were to send them information which does not, in fact, apply to them. People who are obliged to make quarterly payments are so advised by the offices of the Department of National Revenue, and as I have indicated before, the number of senior citizens to whom this procedures applies is very limited.

CRIMINAL CODE

PORNOGRAPHY—INQUIRY RESPECTING MINISTERIAL ACTION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Communications I will direct my question to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, on the issue of pornography. The Minister no doubt will be aware that her colleague has passed the buck on this back to the CRTC. She is presumably also aware recently the President of the CRTC and the past President of the CRTC, now President of the CBC, said that it was not up to the CRTC to act on pornography, but it was up to the courts and to the Parliament of Canada. Will the Minister comment on this and tell us what she sees as her responsibility, given that while child abuse in pornography is increasing, the large number of victims are women? Is she prepared only to try to buck up the Minister and get him to do his job in communications, or is she prepared to take any initiatives herself?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that I have under consideration amendments to the law on obscenity which, of course, will affect that law wherever it is applied, broadcasting or anywhere else. I hope that, when introduced, these amendments will have the support of the Hon. Member and her Party. I think that at the moment this is a better way to proceed than attempting to segment particular areas and to have a special law which relates to them.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, the Minister said that he would be bringing in some obscenity legislation. In April last, when appearing before the Justice Committee, the Minister said it would be within a month or so. Can he give us some kind of date on when we may expect this? Will the Minister undertake to communicate with women's groups as to the content of this legislation?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, there is always a lot of consultation that goes into the presentation of any such amendments. When my friend and I had the dialogue in committee, it was in April, several weeks ago. I hope to be in a position before very long, if I have the agreement of the House Leader, to bring in such legislation.

DEFINITION OF OBSCENITY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I would like the Minister of Justice to comment on the relationship between obscenity in the Criminal Code and in the broadcasting regulations. It is forbidden to broadcast indecent, profane and obscene comments and pictorial representation. There are no penalties stated and there are no definitions. In effect this regulation is a dead letter. Will the Minister tell us what effect amending the Criminal Code might have and if there is some way to make the regulations more effective?

Mr. Nielsen: That is a legal opinion.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, as I pointed out, if we put something in the Criminal Code it would apply to the presentation of material, whether that occurs in broadcasting or anywhere else. The Code does so now. If we make it even more effective, that would make the law as it applies to broadcasting more effective as well.

Oral Questions

DEPARTMENT'S REFUSAL TO PAY COURT ORDERED COSTS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It involves a case called Her Majesty the Queen versus George Garnet Jackson, which arose out of expropriation proceedings some years ago at the Vancouver airport. That case proceeded to the Supreme Court of Canada where it was dismissed. The Supreme Court of Canada has ordered $4,000 in costs which has instructed law officials in Vancouver not to pay costs because the law officers in Vancouver now want to take a second action in another court. I would ask the Minister of Justice whether this is an appropriate way to proceed against a couple who have been in this lawsuit since 1974, who now have a judgment for costs from the Supreme Court of Canada in their favour, and who are no longer young? They are in their mid-seventies.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I have no personal knowledge about the case. Therefore, I will take my hon. friend's question as notice.

PENITENTIARIES

EDMONTON INSTITUTION—WORK TO RULE SECURITY STAFF DECISION

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. As the Minister is no doubt aware, the security officers at the Edmonton maximum security institution have decided to work to rule because the many grievances that they have expressed to Commissioner Yeomens have not been dealt with. They have a deep concern as it relates not only to their own safety but to public safety. Can the Minister indicate what action he or his Department is going to take?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have reviewed the shift change procedure and the other changes that have been introduced recently at the Edmonton maximum security institution. As I am satisfied that they are not against the public interest and that they do not reduce the security of the institution, I do not propose to make any changes. In addition, from the reports I have on the work to rule program, I can assure the House that there is no danger to the community surrounding that institution or, indeed, to the people in it resulting from the work to rule campaign to the present point.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO GUARDS' GRIEVANCES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, as the Minister is also no doubt aware, the security officers throughout all of Canada have expressed a vote of no confidence in the Commissioner. Will the Solicitor General conduct an independent inquiry into the information that he is receiving from the Commissioner so that we will have an independent inquiry as to the grievances which the security guards have been expressing for over a year relating to some of the security precautions? We can then be assured that the Commissioner is telling the Solicitor General the truth. If that inquiry indicates that the Commissioner is not, would the Solicitor General ask for the Commissioner's resignation?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that I have confidence in the Commissioner and in his reports about the correctional service, but I think the Hon. Member should be aware also of how a Government department works.

I can assure the Member that I do not depend only up on the reports that I get from the Commissioner of the Correctional Service of Canada. I also meet with the union, with their leadership and with local branches, so that I am aware of their concerns. I meet with inmate committees, I meet with citizens' advisory committees. I receive hundreds of letters, indeed thousands of letters, referring to way the Correctional Service of Canada is operating, so the Hon. Member should be under no illusion that information to the Solicitor General is all channelled through one person, however reliable that person is. There are many sources of information upon which I base my judgment and the conclusions that I have expressed about the situation at Edmonton Institution, including his own view, to which I gave very serious consideration.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

SUPPORT SOUGHT FOR HAWKER SIDDELEY EXPORTS TO NIGERIA

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development in the absence of two of his brother Ministers who have jurisdiction. The Minister knows that the situation at Hawker Siddeley in Trenton, Nova Scotia, continues to be very serious, but there have been reports of progress in achieving orders for exports to Nigeria and Indonesia. Will the Minister indicate whether, since the company has achieved a favourable bidding position in Nigeria, the Government will in fact step forward through the Export Development Corporation and finance the order? Will the Government also give its assurances that the success the company has achieved in getting orders for exports to Nigeria, and Indonesia if this happens, will not be a factor in having its allocation of domestic orders reduced since it has achieved this success through its own initiatives and hard work?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I am sure that the company deserves congratulations for the activities the Hon. Member has described. I will bring the question to the attention of my colleagues, but I cannot imagine why the company would not continue to benefit from the programs which are available to it.

Mr. MacKay: I appreciate the Minister's answer.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MANUFACTURE OF NEW COAL CARS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether or not it is true that his Department has more or less turned a cold shoulder to the request of Dr. LeClair of CN for assistance in repairing railway rolling stock but is quite prepared to allocate taxpayers' money so that new coal cars can be manufactured at the Transcona works, new coal cars which could and should be manufactured more efficiently by private sector companies in areas where there is greater need for employment?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Yes, Madam Speaker, no money will be allocated to rolling stock repairs as a consequence of the budget. With respect to hopper cars and coal cars, however, I will be making an announcement in a few days' time.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

ISSUANCE OF PRESS RELEASES—APPLICATION OF RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board who is in charge of the six and five program and the Government restraint program. I would ask the Minister if he has approved or if he has even seen the two press releases sent out by the Minister of Agriculture, one on Agriculture Canada press release letterhead announcing the Atlantic Veterinary College funding, and an identical communique on special recovery projects, which is word for word the same, both sent to all Members' offices and obviously to the Press Gallery, and both having a very beautiful six and five program logo emblazoned on the bottom. Can he explain how those add up to restraint in Government spending?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I personally have not seen these press releases as yet. I am sure that the Minister of Agriculture has noted the Hon. Member's representation, but I would also like to thank the Hon. Member for drawing the attention of the House to this very important federal Government initiative which will mean a new veterinary college for the Atlantic Provinces. I thank the Hon. Member for recognizing that.

SECRETARY OF STATE PRESS RELEASES

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the President of the Treasury Board answered my question in such a frivolous manner. May I point out that the Secretary of State has sent out 14 identical press releases, changing only the names on them, and they were all mailed to every Member and to every person in the Press Gallery, and across the country, a gross waste of taxpayers' money. The Secretary of State could have made the same announcement on two pages. Has the Minister sent a directive to the Cabinet telling it to tighten up on its Government expenditures, or is his restraint program just a great big farce?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, last August we began a series of measures designed to bring about restraint in areas like advertising and Government publications. I will be happy to review the press releases to see whether there are any inconsistencies between that program and those press releases but, once again, I believe that we do have an obligation to ensure that the public at large is made aware of positive Government initiatives.

THE ADMINISTRATION

PRESENTATION OF GOVERNMENT CHEQUES BY MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister has said that he had not seen the press releases referred to by my hon. friend. Perhaps he might be familiar with something close to his own Department, namely, a Treasury Board circular No. 786993, dated March 31, 1983, which changes the Government's policy so as to permit Receiver General's cheques to be received by Members of Parliament for the purpose of formal presentation, no doubt in instances such as that referred to by my friend. Can the President of the Treasury Board confirm that the Government has indeed altered its policy to the extent that Receiver General's cheques are now being forwarded to Members of Parliament for formal presentation for projects of this nature?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, previously the administrative policy was that certain types of cheques could be returned to Departments for formal presentation by the Minister or Deputy Minister of the Department. We have agreed to allow this policy to be broadened so that, if a Minister agrees, cheques may be presented formally by MPs on behalf of the Minister. I believe that this is a very positive way to help ensure that the public is made aware of the role and presence of the federal Government.

APPLICATION OF POLICY

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, this new policy is a radical departure from past policies of the Government, and in the Treasury Board's circular itself it says that cheques shall not be forwarded to Members of Parliament for presentation without the prior approval of the Minister responsible for the program but that the approval may be given on an individual payment for each presentation, the cheques going to the Member of Parliament. May I ask the Minister if he will pay particular attention to a question that I supplied the Table with today, for printing on tomorrow's Notice Paper, indicating a list of some 100 projects, some 60 per cent of which are in the Province of Quebec, and tell me whether this policy in the Treasury Board circular is applicable to each of those projects and, if so, will that policy be applied to all Members of Parliament, or will it only be applied for the convenience of Liberal Members of Parliament?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, in addition to the portion of the circular referred to by my hon. friend, I should point out that it covers classes of payments as well as individual presentations. The circular makes it clear that whether this provision is to be used is a matter for decision by the individual Ministers, so I am afraid that my hon. friend will have to address his questions with respect to any particular project to the Minister responsible.

QUESTION PLACED ON ORDER PAPER—ASSURANCE OF RESPONSE REQUESTED

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister has not answered my question. My question is essentially this. Will the policy be applicable to all Members of Parliament or is it confined to the presentation of such cheques by Liberal Members of Parliament only? Again I draw the Minister's attention to the question that I placed on today's Order Paper indicating almost 200 projects, and I would ask him now, since each of them is listed specifically, both by name and by amount, whether he will answer that question that I put on the Order Paper with respect to the cheques being allotted to Members of Parliament for the ridings in which those projects are located.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, if my hon. friend has put a question on the Order Paper, then obviously the rules with regard to response will be respected. But to return to his specific question, I repeat that the matter of whether a cheque is to be formally presented on behalf of the Government by a Member, and if so, which one, is a matter for discretionary decision by the responsible Minister.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

POLICY GOVERNING FUNDING OF PROJECTS ON INDIAN RESERVES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Federal Business Development Bank, but in his absence I will address it to the Parliamentary Secretary.

After raising this issue last Friday I have had the opportunity to confirm once again that the Federal Business Development Bank in British Columbia discriminates against certain businesses wishing to locate in industrial parks on Indian reserves. For a non-Indian business person wishing to obtain a loan from the Federal Business Development Bank for a business in an industrial park on an Indian reservation, the policy of the bank is not to fund such a business. That policy does not exist in any other Province of Canada. Can the Parliamentary Secretary explain why there is this discrimination?

[Translation]

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I must repeat what I said before, since the Government has certainly not adopted a special policy where Indians are concerned, whether or not they live on the reserve. I pointed out to the Hon. Member last week that the problem concerns collateral guarantees.

[English]

It was a matter of collateral, of a guarantee. At that time the unfortunate part was that the Indian was not the owner of the land.

Second, the decision of the band council did not oblige successive band councils. That is the reason why the loans were sometimes refused.

If the Hon. Member has a specific case I would gladly pass it on to the Minister.

REQUEST THAT INSTRUCTIONS BE ISSUED TO BANK

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I want to confirm to the Parliamentary Secretary that I am referring specifically to non-Indian businesses located on Indian reservations. I would remind him that the Royal Bank of Canada, the Commerce, the TD, the Nova Scotia, and the Bank of British Columbia, as well as other financial institutions, are all prepared to lend money to enterprises locating on Indian reservations.

Would the Parliamentary Secretary confirm today that he is prepared to go to the officials of the Federal Business Development Bank and ask them to stop this discriminatory practice? Applying this strictly to one Province of Canada and one kind of business opportunity is something that we, as parliamentarians, should not condone. I am sure the Government would not want to condone it either. This is federal land and this is a federal bank.

[Translation]

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that asking Government officials to stop this discrimination would be asking them to stop something that does not exist. However, if the Hon. Member would care to provide concrete examples, these will be looked into and the Minister will be duly informed.

FISHERIES

RESTRUCTURING OF INDUSTRY IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister met with his Newfoundland counterpart last week and the subject of discussion, of course, was the question of restructuring. The Minister knows that there are at least six important deep-sea plants in Newfoundland that are still down, awaiting this critical decision. Has the Minister reached an agreement with the Government of Newfoundland on restructuring and, if so, will he tell the House or will we have to wait and learn from the press?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I have to tell the Hon. Member that I will have the pleasure of meeting with the Minister of Fisheries for Newfoundland and Labrador in Ottawa tomorrow morning on precisely that topic.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, the Minister knows that justice delayed is justice denied. Newfoundland has approximately one in four people unemployed. These deep-sea plants are critical in terms of the number of jobs involved. The trawler fleet that services these plants, and the inshore fishermen are awaiting this critical decision.

REQUEST THAT ANNOUNCEMENT BE MADE IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Minister if he will announce tomorrow a decision has been made on restructuring, so that the plants may know their future? I know the Minister is a House of Commons man. Will he extend to us the courtesy of coming to the House and making that announcement?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, obviously either way, particularly if there is an agreement, I will be most pleased to advise the House. I can already assure the Hon. Member, however, that the federal Government is committed to establishing in Newfoundland not only a very healthy structure but also that the number of people, in total, who make their living from the fishery in Newfoundland will not suffer any substantial decrease.

ROLE OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT IN PRESENTATION OF GOVERNMENT CHEQUES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to that posed by the Leader of the Opposition to the President of the Treasury Board with respect to this interesting circular on the presentation of Government cheques.

In the past, on occasion the Government has given cheques from a Ministry to a Member of Parliament to deliver. This circular seems to indicate that, once a Minister has approved it, the cheque will go direct to the Member of Parliament. Can the President of the Treasury Board assure the House that these cheques will be delivered to all Members of Parliament, irrespective of political Party? Is this going to be conducted on a straightforward basis, or does the Government intend to pick and choose between its supporters and other Members of Parliament?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, first of all I should like to thank my hon. friend for confirming that in the past there have been occasions when cheques have been presented to groups by MPs on behalf of Ministers in a formal sense. The situation described in the circular is not entirely a new departure.

Second, I would have to say to my hon. friend that whether any cheques are delivered by MPs and which MPs would be involved are strictly a matter for the responsible Minister. The Ministers may well decide to continue with the previous practice or to follow the new circular. It is up to the Ministers to decide which MP they wish to ask.

INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE USE FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Is it Treasury Board policy to allow these cheques to be used by Liberal partisans for partisan political purposes?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the circular makes no reference to partisans of any particular Party, or to any Party at all. It simply says that, if the responsible Minister agrees, individual cheques or cheques of a particular class can be sent by the chief financial officer of the Department to the MP or MPs the responsible Minister has designated as being able to present the cheques on his or her behalf.

ROLE OF PRESIDENT OF LIBERAL PARTY IN PRESENTATION OF CHEQUES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is the Minister aware that the President of the Liberal Party of Canada has been giving cheques from the Government to interested parties, on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am sorry, I was not aware of that. Certainly the circular in question talked only about the presentation of cheques on behalf of the Government by MPs if they are designated by the responsible Minister.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, if I am able to provide proof of this action to the Minister, will he take corrective action so that the Liberal Party does not profit from the Government's activities?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Again without accepting the premises of my hon. friend's question, I would be very happy to get any details he has and look into his question so that appropriate action can be taken.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

APPLICATION TO UNBORN CHILD

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Department of Justice counsel in the Regina abortion case has taken the position on national television that the new Charter of Rights gives no rights whatsoever to the unborn child. Will the Minister tell the House if he agrees and if that was his instruction? Does he agree that an unborn child, until the time it comes out of the mother, has no more rights than, for example, a blade of grass?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the counsel in the case in Regina to which my hon. friend refers is taking the position that the law becomes relevant at the time of birth, and the evidence as to the state of life before that time is not relevant to the particular issue which is on trial in that case. This is based on a great deal of precedent and it is, of course, for the court to weigh that case. My hon. friend may wish to weight it, but right now it is being argued before a court. I would not want to pronounce on it and I do not believe my hon. friend should be pronouncing on it while it is under consideration.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin (p. 25389).

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, just before the luncheon adjournment I was closing my comments on this particular Bill. In conclusion, I would just like to say that I support the motion of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) that we have this particular Bill hoisted for six months because, as I tried to point out, it will have a disproportionate impact on the communities in the West which the Hon. Minister has certainly failed to take into consideration. There will be a disproportionate impact on individuals. I tried to indicate for the elucidation and edification of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), who obviously needs a lot of that in the days ahead, that the income in these areas in certainly disproportionately low, and to have this Bill come forward with this double whammy certainly would have a negative impact on the people there.

I tried also to point out, Mr. Speaker, by way of a specific case study, what would happen in a certain area where we have the removal of an elevator or a rail line which is going to be abandoned. I gave the illustration of the Winnipegosis subdivision.

In addition to that I pointed out what the negative impact would be on the farmer who has to truck his grain 150 kilometres to 200 kilometres; and on top of that, if you add the increase in the Crow rate, I referred to the negative impact this would have on the incomes of individual farmers who are putting bread and butter on our tables.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky). The Hon. Member has pointed out the costs involved and has stated that we are not opposed to that. Part II, Clause 34, of the Bill states that in the crop year 1983-84 the federal Government will be supplying $564.5 million in aid to the railways, and the railways state they intend to go to tender for the main tunnelling work at Rogers Pass towards the end of 1983, assuming the Crow legislation is in place and economic conditions improve.

Here we have the federal Government guaranteeing $564.5 million in aid to the railways and no guarantee that the railways are going to improve this portion, at least, of the tunnelling to help accommodate this grain. Does the Hon. Member think this is a fair and reasonable situation?

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not accept that kind of guarantee on the part of the CPR to enhance our western transportation. Certainly, depending on economic conditions to improve does not give me any kind of assurance that the railways will be doing anything. It sort of reminds me of the type of guarantees we receive from the Minister of Transport. I know on my own desk I have numerous letters and representations which I have made to the Minister of Transport, to which I certainly have not received any response. I have drawn this to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary and others and I would say, outside of perhaps Revenue Canada, the Minister of Transport has to be one of the worst in terms of receiving any kind of response from him. We certainly would not be prepared, therefore, to accept any kind of loose guarantees about economic conditions improving. We cannot expect anything like that.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague, the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky), to elucidate his reference to the increased costs for grain producers in higher freight rates. He also mentioned various communities affected. I would like to ask him if he has had representations from municipalities, towns and villages in his area or anywhere else about increased costs to them in terms of maintenance, upkeep and construction of roads in order to handle larger truckloads of grain over longer distances while branch lines are being abandoned.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed I have had representations. By way of illustration I could speak about resolutions and requests from municipalities such as Mossy River, that if there is any rail line abandonment the municipalities certainly will not be able to upkeep or upgrade the particular roadways. In some of the areas of Manitoba there is a high degree of swamp or bog land and the cost of rebuilding a road or maintaining a highway is incredibly high. It certainly would be much more practical and profitable if the railways were maintained and the appropriate subsidies were given to the entire railway. We know that the railways have to be improved and we believe there are ways of doing that, but this should not be done at the expense of the farmers.

Mr. Althouse: The Hon. Member referred to the kind of grain transportation program that he thought was useful. He pointed out that upgrading railways is much cheaper to society than the constant maintenance of roads to haul long distance traffic such as grain. I wonder if he would be prepared to tell the House what sort of upgrading program he is proposing as an alternative or adjunct to the proposal which is before the House in the form of Bill C-155.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I think that the New Democratic Party has made a very substantial proposal in terms of what could be done to upgrade the railway.

Mr. Smith: You don't know about it.

Mr. Lewycky: For the benefit of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith), I will send him a complete copy of it so he can read it. In that way he can become educated and he will not open up his mouth every single time he sits down when he has nothing to say.

Mr. Smith: Send it to Vic, too. He wants to know the answer.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I was just wondering, since an NDP Member spoke and three or four others asked questions, if the NDP caucus might consider having caucuses on Wednesday to handle those internal difficulties.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), by agreement, will be allotted 20 minutes.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Speaker and Members of the House for this indulgence in allowing me to speak for a full 20 minutes, which I greatly appreciate. I would just like to take a moment to say that I think it is simply incredible that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) just stood up in the House and introduced closure on what I consider to be the most important piece of legislation on agriculture in the last ten years. It is an incredible insult to every farmer in western Canada that, after less than three days of debate, we should now have closure have thrust upon us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hargrave: However, I want to get on with my remarks. I would very simply say that I have been waiting ten and a half years for an opportunity to get into this debate, that is, ever since I was first elected in 1972. I will quickly add that this should have been the most important debate in that ten-year period, certainly for western Canada and even for all of Canada. I say that because other major debates, such as the debate on the Constitution, could have been set aside for a few years. Our nation would have survived some way or another without, shall we say, the Charter of Rights for maybe another five years or ten years. However, western Canada's total agricultural industry and all the other resource-related developments cannot survive without the adequate resolution of this Crow freight rate issue.

The dramatic turnaround by the Government two weeks ago to pay all of the benefit to the railways and none to the grain producers has changed everything, including my own position on this vital issue. Let me briefly review a few of the important background developments on this Crow issue.

The statutory Crow freight rate on grain from the Prairies does indeed still exist in perpetuity at one half a cent per ton mile. Early last year it became apparent that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has encouraged the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to get on with the resolution of this Crow issue. I was glad to see that.

The first very important evidence which emerged was the Gilson Committee or, as I call it, the Gilson group. Gilson's group tackled what many would have described as the impossible. Those in the Gilson group are to be commended for their efforts. After all, and this is a personal opinion, they were the best brains in western Canada to put to work on this issue. They were able to reach a consensus that something must be done, even though they did not immediately identify what had to be done.

Eventually, the Gilson group was able to reach a compromise within the group which led to the Gilson recommendation of last June. Essentially it proposed that western grain producers give up their legal rights in perpetuity for the Crow rate in return for an annual federal subsidy or benefit of $651.6 million, also in perpetuity. The Gilson group recommended that this benefit should be phased in over a seven-year or eight-year period, with 100 per cent going to the railways in the first year, and ending after the phase-in with 81 per cent going to the western grain producers and 19 per cent remaining with the railways. There were many other details in the Gilson recommendation, but that was the essence of its deliberations.

Western Canadian farm opinion on this matter settled into two main groups. First, there was the Western Agricultural Conference, essentially the three prairie Wheat Pools which favoured paying the benefit to the railways. Then there was the Prairie Farm Commodity Coalition consisting of the broad grouping of the value added sector, which included livestock feeding, agricultural processors and domestic feed grain producers, in all about 20 different commodity groups. This commodity coalition strongly supported paying the benefit to the farmer, that is, the grain producer, and the user in the western Prairies.

Last February 1 the Minister of Transport changed the Gilson main recommendations significantly by stopping the phase-in at the mid-point and paying half to each of the farmers and the railways. This was done by a ministerial statement; there was not yet legislation.

This is my personal position at which I arrived after the February 1 statement: I strongly supported the Gilson recommendation and the manner in which it was reached. With somewhat less enthusiasm, I also supported the February 1 fifty-fifty compromise of the Minister. I would now say to the Minister—and I appreciate the fact that he is now sitting in his seat—that he is aware of how I felt in both of those situations. However, the political intervention of Quebec's UPA and its own internal coalition group and, more specifically, the political intervention of the federal Quebec Liberal caucus, has changed my position dramatically.

Mr. Pepin: Say something about the West.

Mr. Hargrave: I cannot and will not support this legislation as it is now before us. I would say to the Minister especially that the entire western Canadian beef cattle industry, in fact the total livestock industry and all of the value added industries, the feeding sector especially, are now very annoyed, very upset, and are presently organizing some protest meetings, even in the midst of Spring work. That is how they feel about that switch by the Minister. The legislation must be changed significantly or indefinitely held up, one of the two, for the sake of the long-term resource development which is so necessary in western Canada.

I would like to say a word about what I am calling the "Mazankowski option". It was included in our former Minister's opening speech. That option should be very seriously considered, especially at the committee stage. I will make a very serious and genuine suggestion to the Minister. I say to him that the Minister of Transport should ask the Gilson group, that is, that inner group of about 12 or 13 committee members, less the railway representatives, to reconvene privately, to study and assess Bill C-155, including the Mazankowski option, and then have Dr. Gilson appear on his own before our committee as a witness. I ask that most sincerely of the Minister of Transport.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hargrave: The Mazankowski option, of course, is to allow the grain producer to designate who should receive his individual share of the Crow benefit, himself or the railways. The Quebec UPA and the Quebec Liberal caucus in this House are obviously concerned that the Gilson recommendations will somehow destroy what they have been referring to as the balance in Canada's livestock industry.

Let us look at the facts and see if there is a balance. Over the last ten years the Quebec hog industry has grown by 140 per cent while the western hog industry has declined by about 23 per cent.

Quebec's beef cattle feeding industry has also expanded significantly. In both hogs and cattle, Quebec expansion has been largely due to what I would call a very rich provincial subsidy program. Our hog industry decline in the West has been continuing for some time and was due to a combination of three factors. First, there was the aftermath of the surplus grain era when barley prices changed from three bushels for $1 to one bushel for $3. Second, a more efficient total hog industry in the United States corn belt is where we lost our hog industry, not to Quebec. The third and most important factor was the detrimental impact of cheaper transportation costs on grain shipments to Quebec in its raw form due to the Crow rate.

In the crop year 1981-82, 45 million bushels of western feed grains went to Quebec. By 1990-91 it is expected to decline to 12 million bushels. In percentages, the Prairies now supply about 30 per cent of Quebec's feed grain, nearly all barley. By 1990-91 it will drop to 9 per cent. As well, Quebec is now about 45 per cent self-sufficient in feed grains and will be 80 per cent self sufficient by 1990-91. Of course, this is as it should be. As transportation costs increase due to higher new rates and higher inflationary costs, this is inevitable. However, if railways improve their export quantities through improved export facilities for grain, the relevant feed grain prices between the Prairie and other parts of Canada will remain the same.

Both Alberta and Quebec are very fortunate since each Province is relatively close to a huge market potential for both pork and beef in the United States. Alberta is directly north of the huge state of California and Quebec is immediately adjacent to the huge population centre of the northeastern United States. These respective markets will have to be won in open competition but it can be done. We are presently enjoying some access to these two markets. It will be a very slow process to win that market.

Quebec Members should remember that it is 2,230 miles from Calgary to Montreal and our value added beef products now cost the equivalent of $51 per animal carcass to ship from Calgary to the Montreal market. That amounts to $8.50 per hundred weight. That cost comes right off the top of our cattle and beef market prices.

Presently, about 60 per cent of Alberta's fed cattle production, that is finished steers and heifers, are shipped to the Montreal market. All of it is shipped on orders from Montreal brokers or wholesalers and is not shipped by Alberta producers on speculation. Our Canadian packing industry is currently experiencing very difficult times. This is partly because our plants are not competitive with the American packing industry due to significantly higher labour costs in Canada. We have seen six plants close down in Alberta since 1977 and there is still some surplus plant capacity.

If we are serious about making significant changes to our 86-year old Crow freight rate, I say to the Minister that we should do it properly so that it will stand the test of time. The next federal election should not dictate the terms of a new policy. I say that knowing full well the political situation in two Provinces especially, Quebec and Saskatchewan.

It is not the next ten years of adjustment that will be necessary for this new market development. That readjustment for our new markets may take another 20 years. However, we should be considering the next 100 years and determining the necessary and proper development of our western resources of which grain is only one. We should not be so obsessed with the need for guarantees from the railways respecting grain movement. Surely the best guarantee will be the opportunity for both railways to make a profit for the first time in about 25 years on their grain operations. The more grain they move, the more money they will make, instead of the reserve where the more they moved the more money they lost.

If there is still any opportunity left in Canada for the concept of private enterprise, especially in the West, then the Crow benefit must surely be paid to the farmer as a grain producer. I suggest that the Minister let the farmer decide what grain he can grow best on his own farm. Let the farmer decide if he can haul his own grain more efficiently by trucking it himself to a delivery point that may be very close or further away. Above all, let the farmer decide if he wants to go the value added way by feeding grain.

This can only be done by paying the benefit to the farmer. The railways will be receiving their compensatory costs. That has been agreed to. They do not need to have a direct payment at the expense of denying western Canada the opportunity to develop their natural resources, with their natural advantages.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I assume that we are presently in the period of ten-minute speeches. I find it somewhat frustrating to have waited so long for the legislation and be allowed only ten minutes to comment on it. I find it even more frustrating to have to comment on the legislation under the threat of closure.

What is most concerning is that this vitally important issue to the Prairies, and in fact all of Canada, has literally been debated for months and years in the Prairies and other parts of Canada, most recently with Quebec, but it closure is imposed upon us tomorrow night, Parliament will have had four days of debate on this legislation. Even if one was in favour of the legislation from an Opposition point of view, closure would force anyone defending western Canadian rights and interests, regardless of the position, to vote against this particular measure. It is neither right nor excusable to give four days to debate a measure as important as this.

When I was first elected in the early winter of 1970, grain transportaiton was probably the most important issue in Canada at that particular time since there was a tremendous oversupply created by large world markets and a literal inability to get our grain to market. Demurrage was high, farmers had to pay that demurrage, the system was not working, people were frustrated and most were angry at the railways, the elevator companies and the Governments.

Since then, a major preoccupation of mine has been with the entire issue of grain transportation. I felt I would have to give the Minister full marks in terms of his method and of the courage that he has displayed. This is a very difficult task. As the Hon. Member who just spoke indicated, the Gilson Committee carried out one of the better inquiries into grain transportation that we have had on the Prairies for a long, long time. The thrust and the direction that Professor Gilson and the people working with him took were generally acceptable, as was the Minister's own version based on political reality at the time. There had to be some modifications. This was the fifty-fifty split, in which 50 per cent of the so-called payment crucial to the operation of the whole transportation plan would go to the railways and 50 per cent to the producers. Professor Gilson, on the other hand, recommended that more money go to the producers. From the point of view of Manitoba, that was generally acceptable, and I believe it was also acceptable to the Province of Alberta.

In going through this process, the bottom line is to make sure the system we design as politicians has built-in efficiency. Unfortunately, we have only four days in which to discuss this matter at the present time. The system we design must encourage excellence or striving toward excellence by the elevator companies, by the producers and we hope, by the railways, with incentives and penalties being included in the legislation.

Although the whole process was not perfect, we were moving toward that particular goal. But all that has fallen apart now, it has happened because of political reasons.

The winner, and this is what we are talking about in the second reading debate, will be the Quebec livestock industry. To a lesser extent, I suppose, although not much of a lesser extent, another winner is the Quebec farmers. They have spoken with a united voice against the West's divided voice. The Government's politicians have listened to that united voice instead of the divided voice. We cannot be critical of that, I suppose. The Government acquiesced to that united voice from the Province of Quebec.

The losers in this whole process will be western Canadian agriculture and western Canada as a whole. More specifically, the western livestock industry will lose. The Minister has admitted, and indeed many others have admitted, that the livestock industry will be losers to the tune of $3.5 billion to $4 billion between now and the early 1990s. Another loser is the western processing industry because it will not see the diversified type of processing we had hoped to see. Another loser is the rail system in western Canada. What we are dealing with now is a system in which incentives will be hard to build in because basically we are maintaining the status quo. The losers will be the western farmers and the railway system. I believe that in the long run the elevator companies also will be losers if you take away their vested interests. No one can criticize them when they have literally hundreds of millions of dollars invested in a particular segment of the economy.

The big losers, though, will be the young farmers, especially those on the Prairies, and also the young people wanting jobs in the secondary agricultural industry in western Canada. Those jobs will not be there. The livestock industry is doomed to being continually shifted to eastern Canada, primarily to the Province of Quebec. As I said before, the reason that western Canada is that loses it has once again spoken with a divided voice for a whole series of reasons. I cannot go into them because of time restriction. The beneficiary is the Province of Quebec because it spoke with a united voice and was able to capture the attention of the present Government. Because of that, Bill C-155, without substantial amendments, is unacceptable.

I have a great deal of sympathy for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), not only for his position but for him personally. He is a good friend. He has tried hard and has probably tried harder than most people in the House realize to bring the sides together. I shall come to a conclusion now because I hope we will get into this subject in greater detail in committee.

Mr. Benjamin: Do you want to bet on that? The Government will bring in closure in committee too.

Mr. Murta: I think we were close to achieving a relatively satisfactory Bill. With a Bill as complicated as this one you cannot please everybody. On the other hand, however, at the present time this Bill falls short in many areas. To impose closure now after what will be only four day's debate adds insult to injury. It is like rubbing salt in a wound. For Members who have waited literally for ten years to speak on legislation such as this, as the previous Member indicated, only to find they are unable to express themselves fully is disheartening, to say the least.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, when my grandparents on both my mother's side and my father's side came to this country from the Ukraine in the early years of this century, they came with the dream that they could establish, together with their families, farming enterprises to last for decades. They did establish farms at Wroxton and at Canora in Saskatchewan. The Wroxtons and the Canoras of Saskatchewan have served this country very well.

Indeed, our rural towns and villages have retained a quality of life and a sense of community that our cities can only hope to match. In many ways, our traditional values are best protected by our support of the rural way of life. Many people say now that the issue of the Crowsnest freight rates should be examined in cold economic terms. The Minister himself has criticized opponents of his plans to destroy the Crow as reactionaries. It has been suggested that in the arguments of those who oppose these plans passion has displaced reason.

That this is a passionate cause there can be no doubt. That it is controversial, there can be no question. But it is, Mr. Speaker, passion based on reason. It is a cry from rural Canada, from our farming communities, to wake up to the reality of what we do when we tamper with the Crow.

There is no question that improvements must be made to the grain transportation system. Bottlenecks occur at the terminals and they occur on the rail lines themselves. To some degree the system is antiquated and needs an injection of new money. But where should those funds come from? I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is the wrong time to ask the farmers of western Canada to make a major contribution to the transportation of grain.

Net income of western farmers in 1983 is expected to decline by 15 per cent to $1.661 billion from $1.955 billion in 1982. Operating costs, while virtually staying the same this year as last, have just come through a period of incredible inflation. The costs of sprays, fertilizer, seed, equipment, land, interest expense and buildings have risen by 73 per cent in the last five years. The price of wheat is less than 9 per cent over what it was five years ago.

The farmers of western Canada have not been immune from the world-wide recession. Yet the Minister insists upon imposing a measure which will remove by 1990 nearly $1 billion annually from the pockets of western farmers. As I pointed out earlier, farmers can expect a net income for 1983 of only $1.66 billion. If the price of wheat increases at the rate it has over the last five years, by 1990 the new freight rate will gobble up over 50 per cent of what would have been net income for western farmers. Simply put, 50 per cent of the funds that would normally go to families and local communities will not be there. Sure, we will have rationalization. Only the large operators will survive, but at what cost? At the cost of depopulating the West. I say that that is absolutely unacceptable. As one farmer said to me the other day, "If they force us off the farm, where will they put us all?" Where indeed.

The Minister says he will now give us a safety net of 10 per cent—or did he say 12 per cent—of the export price. The new freight rate will be tied to the price of grain. I say to the Minister that that still means five times Crow by 1990. Simply put, the Minister's economists and lawyers may have had a field day putting this proposal together, but they took little note of the social and economic toll it would take in western Canada.

Another aspect of the plan which causes me concern is the imposition of variable rates into the freight rate equation. Economically it probably makes sense. The costs on the main lines are lower, the quantities of grain to be moved are potentially greater, therefore a discount should be offered to reflect the economies of scale.

What it means to people living on the branch-lines, however, is that in order to obtain this discount they will have to haul a considerable distance to the main line. Not every farmer will be able to do so, simply because of the costs involved. The larger operator will be the one who can afford the whole process. But now that he and three or four other large operators in a given area are no longer hauling to the local elevator, that elevator becomes less and less viable. If that elevator closes, many of the smaller farms will go as well, simply because the increased costs of hauling to the next point are unbearable.

Who buys out the smaller farmers? The large operators. What happens to the local community? It loses family after family. It loses its local store, its high school and its hospital. With fewer people in rural areas, the cities and the service centres will undoubtedly suffer. This is why we see the cities of Regina, Saskatoon, Prince Albert and Moose Jaw voicing such strong concerns. This plan has an impact on the entire Province of Saskatchewan, not only the rural areas.

It is not as though the farmers of western Canada are receiving something in the Crow rate that other countries are withholding from their farmers. It has already been pointed out in this debate that Argentina, Australia, the EEC and the United States all give substantial subsidies both in transportation and in other ways in a competitive international market. This will work to the detriment of Canadian farmers and the Canadian economy generally. Our economy receives massive benefits from grain production, yet the country wants to hand over to the farmer completely the obligation to haul grain. Ironically, the nation with the greatest natural obstacles to the delivery of grain appears to be the least willing to assist its farmers in that delivery.

Many other criticisms could be levelled at this legislation. It is far from obvious why the legislation contains the 31.3 million metric ton limit. Why are we building in this disincentive for our farmers to produce? This blended rate seems like a rather strange provision for a Government so bent on rationalizing the system.

The same can be said for the basic contribution of the federal Government. The $651 million contributed will not be increased unless the annual inflation rate runs in excess of 6 per cent. While the farmer knows he will be subject to an ever increasing rate, a completely open-ended rate, the federal Government has designed for itself a fairly secure cost increase protection.

This legislation is unnecessarily complex. When the proposal was brought down, I said at the first opportunity on the floor of the House of Commons that it was a bureaucratic nightmare. This has been confirmed in the legislation now before us. For the average farmer or the farmer's lawyer to sit down and calculate a specific rate or even understand the formula used in this proposal is virtually impossible. Some have wondered why it has taken 90 years to change the Crow. It took 90 years just to devise this formula. The Minister's accountants and lawyers may think they are rationalizing the grain transportation system, but they would have to go a long way to improve upon the term of one-half cent per tonne mile in its sheer ability to be understood by those who work within the system.

I have concerns about the legitimacy of removing the protection of a statutory rate for our farmers, considering the degree of subsidization that occurs in major grain producing nations of the western world. If this rate were to be just a very minor cost increase for most farmers and were fixed at a statutory rate, many groups might consider it. But it is completely open-ended and will mean the difference between having and not having a margin of profit.

The Minister makes a lot of the fact that the Crow rate makes it less expensive to send a bushel of grain than to mail a letter. I say to the Minister that not many of us mail between 10,000 and 40,000 letters a year, particularly not many farmers. If a farmer has 1,000 acres in crop and obtains an average of 30 bushels to the acre, and if the farmer ships that grain from central Saskatchewan, his yearly freight bill will amount to $4,800. However, if that farmer sends the same amount in the 1990-91 crop year, his freight bill will be in the region of $24,800. One could buy a lot of stamps for $24,800. When we take one expense and inflate it by over 500 per cent in less than ten years, we play havoc with the margin of profit, particularly when we have no control over the price of the product we are selling.

The legislation in its present form does not include all western grains, oil seeds and their processed products. We will all be anxious to see what type of amendments the Minister has in mind once we get to committee. The legislation does not deal with the concerns of livestock producers that they be included in the effort to provide a more equitable system of transportation of agricultural products. These concerns should be addressed, although I do not subscribe to the view that we should take from Peter to pay Paul.

Members on this side of the House have serious concerns about service guarantees, the methods of cost disclosure and the monitoring mechanism. Considering how difficult it has been to get an accurate idea of how the railways are losing on the transportation of grain, largely because of their reluctance to open their books, it would seem that the Government has been more than generous in setting the Crow benefit at $651 million. I have no doubt, when it comes to establishing whether the railways have met their objectives, that the bureaucracy created to administer these monetary incentives will be every bit as generous.

Finally, I will now conclude my brief comments by assuring the Minister of my heartfelt and absolute opposition to this lunatic Bill. He is doing to Saskatchewan what was done to Alberta under the National Energy Program.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof. The title of this Bill appears misleading and dishonest to western Canada. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has done an injustice to western Canada, and he knows it full well. He proposed a Bill prior to this one with much fanfare across the country and with newspaper releases that cost the federal Government a lot of money. Then he changed the Bill at the will of the Quebec Members, because of their opposition. Now he is trying to force Bill C-155 through the House in a matter of four days and into committee. Goodness knows how long it will be considered in committee before closure takes place there and it returns to the House.

The Bill provides for the expenditure by Canadian taxpayers over the next four years of well over $2 billion for the railway systems in Canada. While we are not opposed to improving the railway system, certainly we are opposed to the method by which the Minister of Transport is proposing to do this.

One of our most important export industries, namely our grain industry, earns $6 billion a year in foreign exchange. It is the only industry that has been able to survive the slump during these tough economic times. Now the Minister of Transport steps in with regressive legislation that will force the grain growers into one of the most serious economic problems anyone should ever have to face. The grain industry accounts for only 15 per cent of the transportation capacity, yet it is being called upon to pay the largest percentage of the cost. There is no guarantee that the railway system will be improved.

In the past, CP Rail has separated its land from the railway operation and put it into a subsidiary, Marathon Realty. The profits of that company should be going into the transportation system. However, under the present system, railways are able to diversify and use those profits in other areas. That is wrong and should not be condoned.

I want to speak about CP Rail for a moment. Because of a $1 billion investment by the federal and provincial Governments in northeast coal, CP Rail also has tremendous investment in southeast coal. We have not heard one word of objection to this $1 billion injection into the northeast infrastructure to help develop it. In the South, where CP Rail has literally hundreds and hundreds thousands of dollars of infrastructure in place, it has not voiced one objection to the injection of moneys in northeast coal.

I wonder why CP Rail has been so silent when literally billions of dollars worth of contracts are at stake. I can only come to one conclusion. CP Rail is prepared to let southeast coal suffer the lack of the kind of infrastructure that can take place in those communities and areas in order to get the Crowsnest agreement to change. It is wrong to allow that to happen.

CP Rail announced it was only prepared to go ahead if good economic conditions prevail. We hear of a $40 million car repair shop for the Golden yard. Naturally we want to see that take place in our transportation industry. However, that $40 million project is for a yard expansion project at Golden to handle anticipated growth in coal traffic in the West. If that is what it is for, then why is CP Rail not fighting to protect that coal transportation in the West, especially from southeastern British Columbia?

How are we going to maintain the kind of infrastructure to accomodate that when we see a billion dollars in federal and provincial money going into the northeast coal which serves the same markets as southeastern British Columbia? We are asking the grain growers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta to bear the brunt of that.

The British Columbia Government has appointed the members of what it calls the northeast coal development organization structure. The head of the Cabinet committee is the Hon. Don Phillips. There is also a Deputy Minister and a Director, a former Cabinet Minister, Ron Basford. He is paid $600 a day and is supplied with full-time office staff in Vancouver to promote northeast coal against the best interests of southeast coal. These are some of the concerns we have with regard to the transportation policy.

Mr. Pepin: This is all provincial.

Mr. Parker: If this Government is sincere with regard to the transportation policy and if it is going to give over $2 billion in the next two years and thereafter $651 million a year to the railway systems—

Mr. Pepin: More than that.

Mr. Parker: More?

Mr. Pepin: Sure.

Mr. Parker: There is no guarantee that the transportation system will reinvest the tremendous profit there will be if those projects are to be carried out. If the Rogers Pass tunnel is to proceed, and I hope it will, with a proper method of financing, there will be savings to the railways. We will no longer require ten diesel units valued at $10 million sitting at Rogers Pass to push the grain, coal and other commodities up the hill. This will result in tremendous savings. It will do away with some employment. They will be able to go over the roads that much faster. While we agree with that, the communities involved, the same as the communities and rural areas where the grain comes from, will lose their identity. We are also concerned about the communities served by the railways once the traffic is speeded up. This Bill should identify that problem. There should be protection for these communities.

I congratulate the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) on his detailed speech with regard to the Dominion Coal blocs situated in my riding. This is a very big concern for my constituents. It is a consequential and related provision in this Bill under No. 62, Part VI. I believe it should be more consequential. It is of the utmost importance to Kootenay-East Revelstoke. It is of the utmost importance to the Province of British Columbia that energy such as coal be developed in the manner in which we in our own Province and ridings propose it be developed. For this Bill to leave that 50,000 acres of coal blocs, some of the richest in the country, under the federal domain is a slap in the face to the Province of British Columbia as well as the rest of western Canada. The coal bloc belongs to the Province of British Columbia. It should be returned to that Province if the Crowsnest agreement is changed.

For the federal Government not to identify any plans or proposals for this coal or the land is wrong. Therefore, it has no alternative but to turn this rich coal land back to the Province of British Columbia so that when the time comes for the planning and processing and developing energy in our Province, we will be able to do that in an orderly manner.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin (p. 25389).

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to debate this most important issue to western Canada with some degree of trepidation. Every time we are faced with an issue that is important to the West, this Government brings in closure. The National Energy Program was devastating to our area. What did we get? Closure. This Government attempted to push through the Constitution before the West was heard. We had closure. We now have Canagrex, and the same big stick is hanging over our heads. We cannot debate the issue to the fullest extent, as it ought to be debated. Now, after a few hours of debate on an issue of the utmost importance to producers in western Canada, the Minister rises to close off debate. The Crow rate has been a very valuable tool which has allowed western Canadians to get their grain to the world export markets. Of course, anomalies have arisen. The livestock sector has constantly mentioned that, but we are talking about something called freedom. Why would the Minister change his approach after we in the West have spent years wondering whether we ought to trust the railroads, and this has been said many, many times? He changed due to pressure. It was becoming accepted that the payments should go to the producers, but because of political pressure, he has now said that they will all be paid to the railroads.

I could not believe it when yesterday in Jasper, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told the people who met with him on this most important issue, "We are paying this payment to the railroads because you cattle producers and other commodity producers do not have enough political clout out here, but those in Quebec and parts of Ontario deliver the Liberal votes, and that is why we are moving to pay the subsidy to the railroads."

If the subsidy is paid directly to the railroad and if the price of moving grain to western farmers is allowed to increase in a way that is anticipated at this time in the Bill, the ability of the farmers in the northern parts of those Provinces to produce barley, oats and maybe wheat will be virtually wiped out. The reason for that is that at present costs of production, it is no longer viable to produce those grains. If the cost of transportation is increased as anticipated in the Bill, even at this rate it will be impossible to produce that kind of grain. That will hurt the livestock industry in the province as well.

Let me put a few figures onto the record that will indicate some of the problems livestock producers are having with the Bill. If this Bill passes, the cost of a hog producer's feed grain next year will be $6.78. That is a cost of about $2.31 per hog produced. That will mean a loss in Alberta alone of $3.5 million. If the subsidy is paid to the railroad and not to the farmer, the cost to a hog farmer in my constituency to produce that hog will increase by $6.37. That will mean a loss to Alberta hog farmers of $9.5 million. Carrying those projections through to 1991 when farmers will be paying most of that inflationary Crow benefit, the increased cost of feed will be $19.58, which is about $6.50 a hog, or a $9.9 million loss. Because of the difference between paying that subsidy to the railroads and paying it to the farmer, the increased cost will be $11 per hog, or a loss of $16.5 million. If the changes in cost are added up only on the difference between paying the railroads versus the farmers, it will be a loss to Alberta hog farmers of $142 million over ten years, something that no hog farmer in the Province can handle.

We must at this time come to grips with the inevitability of a decrease in the livestock industry in western Canada. The slaughter plants in western Canada are old and outdated. New slaughter plants are being built here in eastern Canada. There is at this time a self-sufficiency and a movement to export feed grain in Ontario. A competitive farmer in Ontario who grows corn is capable of producing 100 to 110 bushels per acre. In the barley producing area of Alberta, the average yield per acre is between 35 and 55 bushels of grain. It is already half as expensive for the farmer in eastern Canada to feed an animal on corn, because the protein equivalent is almost the same, as it is for the farmer in my Province where we are unable to grow corn to feed an animal on barley. If on top of that is added the extra cost of moving the grain, a cost which will not get back to the livestock producer, and if this will produce the losses that I have put on the record—and I can put the same losses on the record for the cattle industry—the amount of hog livestock produced in western Canada will be decreased by half a million hogs by 1990 instead of being increased due to an increase in population.

Eastern Canadian hog farmers are already capable of moving into a natural market in Japan and in the Far East because it is cheaper for them to put those hogs on ships in the Great Lakes and send them through the Panama Canal than it is for western farmers to put those same hogs on a train and ship them to Vancouver where they will be put on a ship that will go to that Japanese market. Some of the feedlot operators in my constituency are now buying feedlots in Ontario to prepare themselves for this inevitable difference in cost, because if this problem is not dealt with—and of course, the one way to deal with it would have been in Crow legislation—many of the aspirations of livestock farmers in western Canada will come to naught.

I believe that this Party has put forward an excellent suggestion, Mr. Speaker. It is a suggestion that I call freedom of choice. Let us have some freedom. If the Government is so sure that it is better to pay the railroads, the Government should allow those farmers in western Canada who want to pay the railroad to do so. Let those farmers who want to take that payment to their own farm have the choice to do so. I think that the Government would find that most of the farmers would choose to have that payment made directly to them so that they could keep an eye on the railroads, and if the railroads did not provide adequate cars and an efficient way to move grain to the coast, then, perhaps the trucking industry or the livestock industry could provide that service. That is the kind of freedom that I think should be provided.

The kinds of comments made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) about the political clout of eastern Canada versus western Canada cannot continued to be made. That would create diversity and disharmony, and a number of years ago when the separatist element in western Canada rose so quickly, we saw what diversity and disharmony can do. The Crow rate is as important or even more important than the issues that brought western Canadians to their feet at that time.

I believe that the Minister ought to allow the committee of this House the opportunity to put forward these proposals to the farmers of the nation so that the farmers can have their say. Leaders of farm groups have come to some consensus, and often when they give information to the Minister, he will hear only one story. But Members of Parliament who are in their constituencies and who talk to farmers day by day get to know the real facts of how it is hurting their operations. If Members of Parliament are not allowed the freedom of speech, we will not hear the whole story. That is why closure of this Bill is so devastating. My ten minutes have passed very quickly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise probably in more anger than I have ever risen in the House before. In fact, I would like to take this Parliament apart board by board and use them on every Liberal. To use what is like the Magna Carta to western Canada for the crass political advantage of another region is to defy the nature of this country, the history upon which it is built and the very reason for the existence of the crow rate in western Canada.

There was no question in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that the Crow rate needed to be changed. Through the 1950s, but particularly the 1960s, the western transportation system began to deteriorate at a rate that, moving through the decade of the 1970s and into the 1980s now, meant that something had to be done to improve railway transportation. That is a given fact. That is not debatable.

It is also a given fact that the inflationary rate on the Crow advantage was such that the advantage today is greater than it was when the Crow was initiated. That is not debatable. But what is debatable is to take, for Liberal political reasons, an advantage from the West and give it to another part of the country.

Let me talk for a moment about why there was a need for the Crow rate on the Prairies to begin with. First, transportation in the country is based on the competitive theory. That is good theory and it works well. We who believe in conservatism believe in competition, but competition in transportation does not exist on the Prairies. It works well where there are ocean ports, Great Lakes water systems or the St. Lawrence Seaway, but in land-locked regions of the continent there is no competition. That is why iron and steel products can be moved from Toronto to Vancouver and back to Calgary cheaper than they can be moved from Toronto to Calgary. That is why we need to have some mechanisms like the Crow rate in place for the movement of our products.

What is the crass Liberal response to such a system? It is for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to say in Jasper that because western people did not vote Liberal, the advantage of the Crow rate, which has been a historic fact for 85 years, will go to the backbench Liberal caucus. And today we have had notice of closure.

All this defies our history, Mr. Speaker. It rips apart our past in a way that hurts me deeply, coming from this Minister who was co-author of the Pepin-Robarts report. That report deals with national unity and contains such comments as the following:

> The effective and harmonious operation of any federal system depends very much upon the degree to which the central institutions are considered in their operation to be fully representative of the major groups within the federation.

I could quote paragraph after paragraph of that Pepin-Robatrs report to illustrate the importance of national unity and the importance of understanding the variation in the fabric of this country. Yet the Minister who co-authored the report is engaged in disunifying our nation and has raised the anger of western Canada against central Canadian institutions. What an unfortunate fact that is, Mr. Speaker. We need change but that change must be fair, predictable and compatible with our history.

For political reasons the Minister has now decided to pay 100 per cent to the railway. During the Easter break I called seven meetings in my constituency to advocate the acceptance by people of some change and to point out that some change could be for the better, not necessarily for the worst. Now I take the position that no change is better than any change at all if this is the position the Minister intends to take.

If all the moneys are to go to the railways and if there is a target of performance for the railways to move grain to portside, then the instinct of railway companies will be to move that grain which is closest and on through rail lines where unit trains can be developed. This could be the death knell for every branch line in western Canada. Hundreds of communites could go down the pipe. Paying the money to the railways will means there is no incentive for the railway companies to chase a profit. They will take the easiest grain, move it to portside and the farmer be damned. Yet the Minister believes that program will be to the advantage of western Canada.

What we have is not an economic response, but rather a crass political reflex. The Liberal instinct is for survival and not for national development. This is a disappointment. Because of the Minister's role with the Pepin-Robarts Commission I would have thought he would have understood the impact on the country.

It was a mistake to believe that the Prairies are homogeneous. That is another symbol of central Canadian thinking. They talk about the Prairies as they talk about a lump. Why is it that people in Manitoba who are growing lentils are compared with the wheat grower of Saskatchewan or the barley grower of Alberta? What we need to understand is the diversity and the mix of our economy and that we can develop measures to enrich the economy of all parts of the country.

I came to Parliament wanting very much for the country to get to the point where we would never again talk about English and French or about East and West. Every time those notions are put forward it hurts. This is Canada and we should be able to believe in Canada; we should be able to have policies that are good for all parts of Canada, without this divisiveness which is forced upon us by Liberals.

I think the Minister should take the following policies under consideration, Mr. Speaker. He should put forward three options. First, an option of 100 per cent payment to the railways; second, an option of paying 50 per cent to the railways and 50 per cent to farmers; and a third option based on the Gilson proposition of 19 per cent to the railways and 81 per cent to farmers. Then he should let the producers make the selection. It might be that Saskatchewan would chose to pay 100 per cent to the railways or Manitoba might choose the fifty-fifty proposition and Alberta the Gilson proposal. Would that not reflect the differences in our country? Would it not show that Alberta has almost as much economic impact from secondary processing as it does from grain, whereas the Saskatchewan impact comes almost totally from grain?

Surely the Minister could build enough flexibility into his program to put it forward perhaps on a five-year basis, with the choice of the producers to be frozen later. It is wrong to take a historic Magna Carta to western Canada and twist it to the advantage of central Canada.

The Gilson Report was a compromise. The Minister's announcement in Winnipeg on February 1 was a compromise to a compromise. His final legislation is a sell-out of western Canada that has angered many, has deeply hurt people and has ruined the economies of the Provinces, particularly Alberta. For the Government to believe that in the interests of survival of the Liberal Party it is justified in this measure, defies the reasons for the federation of this country in the first place. The final legislation is absolutely unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

This summer when central Canadians visit the Calgary Stampede they will probably be in a building called "Big Four". It gets its name because at one time four ranches extended from the Waterton Lakes at the British Columbia border to the Saskatchewan border. Those four huge ranches ran thousands of head of cattle. When the Minister recognizes the history of that Province and recognizes that he has damaged the cattle industry in the far West in a significant way, he will see that he has not just destroyed that economy but has destroyed a breed of people. He has destroyed the whole western Canadian ranching industry.

The Crow rate was a birthright of the western Provinces coming into Canada. It had been changed but not for the advantage of western Canada, and it is now being twisted to become an advantage for central Canada. That simply cannot be tolerated by any group of people in the country.

Limiting the Crow advantage to specific new crops is dangerous for the future. We may not be growing wheat in 1990. The genetics of crop production and the engineering of new kinds of crop varieties and species has great potential. There will be crops such as fava beans with 42 per cent protein. There is a potential for the development of new sources of human foodstuffs. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) should never designate what crop we should accept. We should be talking about crop production, period. All new crops come under some benefit of transport because it would be for the enrichment not just of the West but of Canada, and it is important that the Minister have that kind of flexibility.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to him has expired. The Hon. Member may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. There does not appear to be unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to continue? There is not.

Mr. Malone: No one said, no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All right. If there is unanimous consent, the Hon. Member may continue.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, because of the generosity of the House, I will make only one more point. I do want to make one extra point while the Minister is here. In the present legislation the restriction of Crow advantage going to any new lands is a regressive proposal because the great potential for the development of new lands is in northern Canada, northern Manitoba, northern Saskatchewan, northern Alberta and northern British Columbia. Those areas are the places where we have the greatest capacity for the development of new farm lands in this country. Forty thousand children a day in the world under the age of five die of starvation. The greatest of all needs in the world is for food production. For the Minister to take the position that the Crow advantage will exist only on the present cultivated acres and not expand itself to more newly developed acres is simply wrong in terms of world conditions. The fact is that those northern areas which have the potential for opening up are the very areas, for reasons of high cost in the development of those lands, which need the Crow benefit in order to be viable. To deny that sets us back for decades, requiring an enormous increase in the price of cereal production in order for those food-producing lands to be opened.

I want to thank the House for its indulgence in allowing me to put that extra point on the record. I would like to say also that this legislation really requires a one-hour speech from every Hon. Member from prairie Canada. We should not be limited to only ten minutes and, most important, we should not be under closure. Our debate should certainly not be shut off without the benefit of an analysis which comes from representatives duly elected. There should not be this chasing around for a four-year period by the Minister of Transport trying to get across policies in some vague, unknown forum when the House of Commons is being denied the opportunity to come to grips with the legislation itself, because he is always at press conferences and out in Winnipeg making his announcements. If this legislation is in trouble, it is not in trouble because of the House of Commons. It is in trouble because of the process which the Department of Transport followed, which would put any major piece of legislation in trouble. If one chases all over the country for four years, making one's announcements everywhere but where one could see the facts, I guarantee there would be trouble on this, the Constitution, health changes or anything else. Naturally there is trouble. Trouble follows the very troublesome way of bringing it forth. That is what Parliament is here for, and no wonder the Minister is in the situation where he now thinks he has to do what he has to do simply because he did it wrong in the first place. In the final analysis, this legislation should be voted against by every Hon. Member from all parts of Canada, because the damage is not done just to the West but everywhere.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I could not agree more with the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), my colleague, when he says that it is absolutely unnecessary and shameful that closure was introduced on the second reading of Bill C-155 this afternoon. If I recall correctly, Sir, the debate on this matter only started on Thursday last, and it went on during the short day on Friday. It is pretty obvious that the Government already had its plans laid down when it introduced closure on second reading this afternoon when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) rose in his seat and said that despite the fact that we only have some ten minutes in which to state our point of view, even that privilege is to be denied to the many Members from western Canada to whom this matter is of the gravest importance.

Had closure been brought in just three years ago, Mr. Speaker, there would have been public outrage at its use after only two days of debate on second reading on as important a matter as the Crow rate. What has happened is that the Liberal Government has used closure and time allocation so many times that the public has become inured to it. It has become a matter of routine procedure, and that is something which I certainly do not like to see. I believe that an issue of this importance deserves much more than two days' debate in this House.

You might ask, Mr. Speaker, why the Hon. Member for Western Arctic would want to speak on the Crow rate. I would like to believe that I may be able to offer something. I can look at this from above, so to speak, from a superior point of view, geographically if not intellectually. There would seem to me, after listening to this rather limited debate so far, to be two points of view. The first one is that we should not do anything with the Crow rate, but leave it the same way it has been since 1897. There are, obviously, good reasons for this. It is to the advantage of the prairie grain growers, or appears to be to their advantage, and it is of advantage to livestock feeders in the East. Some of the people to whom it is not of particular advantage are the shippers of other goods on the railways.

The other side of the argument is that the market should seek its own level, that we should go to a system of market rates. This is held to be in the long-term interest of everyone involved, including the grain farmers, in that if that were to happen, there would be incentives on the part of the railways to upgrade the system—this is said to be the case—and that the whole transportation system might be upgraded and brought into line with modern requirements. I do not really want to get into that debate because it is not for me to say. I would have liked to have heard the other evidence which was to have been presented by my colleagues from the prairie areas, but which they have been prevented from putting forward by the announcement made today by the Minister of Agriculture. However, what I do want to say is that when I look at these 39 pages of gobbledygook, Bill C-155, it does not seem to me to come down on the side of either of those arguments, and it does not even seem to be a compromise. It just does not seem to do anything, Mr. Speaker. We end up with the worst of both worlds in this Bill. It is neither fish nor fowl.

Mr. Malone: It's foul.

Mr. Nickerson: My friend, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) says it is fowl. Perhaps he is right in that. I suspect he might be if he spelled that word in a different way. We still end up with the statutory rate, expect that the only difference is that no knows what the rate is now. Even I understood what half a cent a tonne mile meant. But there is no way I can figure out the statutory rate in this Bill. The section which deals with it has been read into the record on more than one occasion and I defy anyone to tell me what that rate is in cents per tonne miles. It is impossible to tell. It is all left up to arbitrary discretion of some Government appointee at some future point in time.

When you know the Liberal Government, as we know it on this side of the House, it is not difficult to understand why it came up with something like Bill C-155. What I would like to do in the few minutes I have is to isolate those principles, those obscure Liberal principles, which make this Bill as bad as it is, a "lunatic Bill" as was stated by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). The first principle that I see in this Bill, Mr. Speaker, is, "When in doubt, set up a committee". We see this with the so-called Senior Grain Transportation Committee which is to be established under this Bill if it ever becomes law. If the committee is set up, it will have two functions. First, it would allow the Government of the day, in this case a Liberal Government, to appoint its political friends to high office, to remunerative office, to positions of emolument. Second, by establishing yet another committee, and I do not know how many we have under all the Acts of Parliament, the Minister and the Government could be isolated from any criticism. If criticism is made at some point in time, it can be said, "Oh, take that problem to the committee and argue it out there. It is no concern of ours". We have seen this principle at work with the establishment of Crown corporations such as the Post Office. If one asks the Minister responsible for Canada Post any kind of a question, he says, "Oh, I will refer that to the Crown corporation". The Government is trying to avoid responsibility in Bill C-155.

The second principle embodied in the Bill, as far as I can determine, is the principle of making something so complicated that no one can understand it. I rather suspect that the Bill was drafted by the same people who drafted the Income Tax Act. I have read it through three times as fully as I possibly could and I do not know what it says. When something is made as difficult to understand as this, it is another way of avoiding criticm. When one says, "I do not agree with such and such a point in the Bill", the Minister can turn around and ask someone in his Department to say, "That is not really the point at all. I will just try to elucidate it a little for you". If one reviews a different section or subsection, one finds that that is not quite right. This is the type of response the Government has to valid cricitisms of its proposals with respect to the Crow rate. It comes up with something which is so complicated that I am sure not one farmer in western Canada can really understand.

The third principle involved in the Bill is to create yet another slush fund. The Liberals just love this idea of shovelling taxpayers' money from one group to another, having the discretion as to how the taxpayers' money should be used. In this Bill we see it with a kitty of $600 million of taxpayers' money in the Crow benefit.

Mr. Pepin: You are against it?

Mr. Nickerson: The Government can give this to whom it likes. In the first instance, it would prefer to give it to the railway company. However, they like having control of the taxpayers' money. This is the way it likes to operate. It likes to have lots of money around which it can hand out at its political pleasure for its political reasons.

The next principle embodied is the arbitrary and discretionary power which is to be given to Ministers, in this case the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), and to appointees of Ministers. Instead of having a law which is simple and straightforward and which everyone could understand, in which the terms and conditions are laid out, if a subvention is to be given, for instance, what the Government likes to do is to leave it to someone's discretion, the Minister's discretion. He can decide who will receive this benefit or not. He can decide what appointments are to be made, what regulations are to come through, what rules are to be made, or he can delegate that to one of his political friends, one of his appointees.

The third principle is to involve many bureaucrats in the administration. The last principle I want to address is probably the worst of all, that is, the sell-out. In the final analysis, after one thinks a compromise has been reached, a fifty-fifty agreement, at the last minute it is thrown out the window and it is the Quebec Liberal caucus which really controls the shots. That is what we see here today.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to say that as a prairie Member who was raised on a small central Saskatchewan grain farm, I know that the Bill before the House today will be one of the most serious blows to the small grain farmer in my Province that he has seen since the 1930s and the Great Depression. I also know from letters that I am receiving as the Member of Parliament for Yorkton-Melville, that my constituents, from the National Farmers Union on one side, which is a more progressive organization, to the Chamber of Commerce on the other side, which is a very conservative organization, are all standing united in opposition to the Bill before the House today. It is on their behalf that I want to say a few words and plead with fellow Hon. Members to listen to my words with respect to the dire consequences to the Prairies and, indeed, to all of Canada if the Bill is passed.

Mr. Thacker: They won't listen. They won't even speak.

Mr. Nystrom: They will not even listen, as one of the Hon. Members from Alberta said. I think that is the important part of this whole debate. The Liberal Party has two Hon. Members from western Canada, the city of Winnipeg. There are approximately 74 Members of the Opposition from western Canada, yet the Government is not listening to the representatives of the people. It is imposing on the people of western Canada something which the people out West do not want and which is surely a denial of fundamental democracy, a denial of what this parliamentary system is all about.

I want to challenge the Minister across the way to do one thing, if nothing else, that is, to organize a national referendum amongst permanent bookholders to see whether they agree that they should keep the Crow rate or whether they should get rid of the Crow, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is suggesting in this legislation. Surely to goodness, that is democracy. If they were to agree with the Minister, that would be fine and well and we would have the changes which he introduced. However, I am sure that they would not, just because the Bill is one which would impose an increase on the price of moving grain for the farmer of some 500 per cent between now and the year 1991. With the rise in the price of grain by some 500 per cent between now and 1991, many small and marginal farmers will be forced off the land. They will not be able to produce grain and feed the people of Canada and the world.

Another thing to note, which it seems to me a number of Hon. Members who are not from the Prairies do not realize, is that the price of grain has fallen. At a time when world grain prices have fallen, the Minister is bringing in a Bill which increases the cost to every farmer in prairie Canada. I think it shows, once again, why the Liberal Party is extinct in western Canada. It does not have any fundamental understanding of the important issues affecting western Canadians.

It is also important to realize that the issue is not important just to the prairie farmers but also to Canada as a whole. My seatmate comes from Brantford. I am sure that he could tell the House that when the farmers' income drops in western Canada, then people stop buying tractors, combines and other kinds of machinery produced in a city like Brantford. The end result is that 25 per cent or 30 per cent of the people in that kind of city are unemployed. For such a reason, this Bill is very important. It is very important that we somehow persuade the Minister and the Government across the way to change their minds and to keep the Crow rate which is such an important part, for us on the Prairies, of the bargain of Canada, the bargain of Confederation.

Mr. Pepin: Good Lord! Eighteen ninety-seven, Confederation!

Mr. Nystrom: All of the countries with which we are competitive, the United States, Argentina, Australia and countries in Europe, provide massive subsidies for their grain farmers. If the Government takes away the Crow and makes shipment of our grains some 500 per cent more expensive in the next eight or nine years, then our farmers here will be at a tremendous disadvantage in a competitive sense with fellow farmers around the world. That will be goodbye to many grain markets for Canadians and to a lot of foreign currency that would benefit the nation as a whole, not just the Prairies and the prairie farmer.

The Americans have set up massive subsidy programs for their wheat. They recently introduced a blended credit program of $1.5 billion over the next three years to subsidize the interest rates of grain when it is shipped to the Third World. The Europeans give perhaps even more massive subsidies while the Argentinians and the Australians give subsidies as well.

Another consideration is the fact that Canadian farmers are an average of 600 to 800 miles farther away from port than other competitors in countries around the world, including the United States. American farmers have the advantage of the Mississippi and the Missouri River systems. This puts them much closer to a port for the transportation of their grain. Since we do not have that advantage in western Canada, there is an additional cost for our grain which makes it necessary to keep the Crow rate.

For those reasons I think the Government opposite must be made to reconsider the importance of the Bill before us. There are a number of other issues concerning the Crow rate which one can mention. For example, there is the issue of variable rates. This present legislation will allow for variable rates and will provide the possibility, and perhaps the likelihood, of the railway companies being able to charge what they wish for shipping grain along various lines across the Prairies.

Mr. Pepin: Have you read the Bill?

Mr. Nystrom: If they so choose, they will be able to charge higher rates along some of the branch lines, on some lines which do not ship as much grain or in those smaller towns which have smaller farms. This will mean that the railway will dictate social policy and could decide which towns or elevators will be closed. They could decide which farmers will be forced off the land as a result of charging a higher rate per bushel or tonne on line A or line B.

This could ultimately promote the greater centralization of agriculture on the Prairies. As Hon. Members are aware, there is presently a very decentralized economic system on the Prairies in which there is an elevator in every town and village along with Wheat Pools and other co-operative organizations. That could all end with the passage of legislation such as this.

I know that some Members across the way like to visualize huge inland terminals and the trucking of grain within a much more centralized economy in the Prairies. That is very alien and goes against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of people in prairie Canada.

The other point I wish to make is that this Bill will continue over time to give billions of dollars to the railways in this country. Historically, the CPR has been the greatest recipient of public welfare of any institution in Canada. It is the biggest welfare bum this country has ever seen.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Do not tell me there is still a Conservative from the West who defends the CPR.

When one looks at the statistics, one finds that when the figures are adjusted in terms of 1982 dollars, the value of public aid to the CPR totals some $13.5 billion. In return for that tremendous give-away to the CPR Canadian taxpayers have not received a single stock in equity or percentage. They have simply been given this tremendous gift. They were handed money to buy their hopper cars, to buy rail lines or improve their services. In the late 1880s much rail equipment was given to the CPR along with mineral rights and vast amounts of land. This was given to them free of charge in return for providing a service to the farmers. The farmers will now be asked to pay the full service for the shipment of their grain, but nowhere in the Bill—

Mr. Pepin: That is not true.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister can reply after my speech, if he wishes. There was a bargain struck many years ago and the CPR received its land, mineral rights and equipment in return for hauling the grain for the farmers. This Bill will end the Crow rate for the farmers but it will not recover for the people of Canada all the equipment, land and mineral rights that were given to the CPR. In 1917, at the time of the royal commission, that was worth some $279 million. When it is adjusted to 1982 dollars, it is worth $8.3 billion. Under this Bill, the people of Canada will not recoup that $8.3 billion from the CPR.

I see that you are rising, Mr. Speaker. I wish I had much more time because ten minutes is insufficient to put forward the case for the people of the Prairies. I think it is an utter disgrace because this debate is on the most important issue facing the Prairies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but he has had 11 minutes.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-155, the Western Grain Transportation Act. It is an Act which, if passed, will detrimentally change the whole face of grain transportation in Canada. Although this Bill will perhaps not have a marked effect in my riding of Grey-Simcoe in Ontario, it does represent an inequity that cannot be ignored or swept under the carpet and out of sight and mind. Further, to bring closure on this Bill is another monstrous inequity that will not go unnoticed by Canadians.

Since the announcement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) regarding this Bill, the country has moved further away from a consensus on changing the Crow rate. Whatever general feelings or consensus may have existed before in the West has now virtually disappeared.

When the Minister of Transport first announced the one-man Gilson task force, which was empowered to consult with farm groups and the railways regarding the Crow rate, his primary incentive to encourage farmers to participate in this venture was the promise that there would be rail performance guarantees to producers in exchange for increasing the freight rate to move grain. However, Bill C-155 proves to be a sham. There is no railway performance guarantees for the first three years. Furthermore, any sanctions on the railways will only be tallied, not levied. In other words, as far as I can see, the agreement will not have the necessary force to make such action mandatory.

In addition, there is no provision in the Act that Parliament will approve the regulations related to railway performance guarantees. In other words, the railways will get a free ride for three years. The bias of the Government is obviously in favour of the railways. Again, as a result of this bias, whatever general feelings or consensus existed in the West has disappeared.

The modification to the Bill to make all payments to the railways instead of providing for a fifty-fifty split in payments to the railways and producers has left nothing for the western processing industry. In fact, the disparity that exists between raw and finished products has greatly increased. This has left the livestock producers all across the West bitter, upset and very angry. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), has already outlined with great clarity the devastating negative effects which this Bill will have on western hog and cattle producers. The truth is that the disparity that exists between raw and finished products will increase instead of decrease.

As a result of ignoring the western Canadian processing industry, the Minister has reduced the annual western livestock industry almost to the point of no return. Is it any wonder that the fortunes of this Government are at an all time low in western Canada? Antagonizing western Canadians, antagonizing and working at cross purposes with their economy and hindering instead of assisting them are sure ways to alienation, a process in which the Government has proved to be master over the years.

The payment that the Government proposes to the railway companies under this Bill will not benefit those people who were initially supposed to be the beneficiaries. Clause 55(2) of the Bill states that the Transport Minister can withhold any amount of money to the railways if, in the opinion of the Minister, the railways are not adequately investing in rail plant and equipment for moving grain and if the railways are not adequately maintaining the grain dependent branch lines. However, Mr. Speaker, if the railways claim that the money they receive from the Government and producers is still inadequate to justify such expenditures, they can simply let the rail system deteriorate and wait for the Government to come back again with ad hoc measures. This is in no way an adequate guarantee to producers that they are getting their money's worth for paying the increased freight rates. In other words, the railways can revert to their old ways at the expense of producers. It is, therefore, mandatory that a stronger commitment and guarantee by the Government and the railways is absolutely essential and necessary. Monitoring the performance of the railways is not enough.

If the past is any criterion, that is, the Government's plan to monitor railway performance on behalf of grain producers, the success of such a plan is in deep trouble.

In the Auditor General's annual Report of 1982, he criticized the Department of Transport in its financial and engineering rehabilitation program for the railways. The rehabilitation program, begun in 1977, called for the rehabilitation of 5,675 miles of rail by 1992 at a cost of $1.6 billion. As well, Mr. Speaker, between 1971 and 1981 the Government entered into four agreements worth $318 million to the railways, and the Auditor General found deficiencies including: deficiencies in construction costs charged by the railways; deficiencies in the assessment and disclosure of financial costs; and deficiencies in the development of construction standards and specifications.

There is no guarantee in this Bill that such gross neglect and such deficiencies will not occur again. Further, there is no guarantee against more hidden costs for the farmers in later years. There are many, many inequities in this Bill. Further, under this Bill grain farmers will be paying the full freight rate whenever grain volume exceeds $31.1 million tonnes. This will present a disincentive for farmers to grow more grain and increase production.

Every major farm group and organization has protested and voiced strong objection to this, but as usual with this Government, these objections and protests have fallen on deaf ears.

On February 1, 1982, the Transport Minister said:

> The progressive reduction of distortions in the western agricultural economy should yield significant benefits in terms of increasing processing, livestock production and crop diversification.

As far as this Bill is concerned, nothing could be further from the truth, and I wish the Minister would re-examine the statement and correct it. Of course, these words could have been written by somebody else for the Minister to use, the Minister being a layman in this matter with little or no agriculture experience. This, I might add, must apply to many of his staff who may be only theoretically versed in agriculture but do not have this knowledge backed up with practice and experience, a condition that applies to many other Government Departments as well, which is tragic, to say the least. This means that there is not enough common sense—it used to be called horse sense—in Governments today. Instead, we are overwhelmed with theorists, to the detriment and mismanagement of our country by all Governments across it. This Bill, Mr. Speaker, is a classic example of this problem and an examle of a Bill in which an infusion of common sense is urgently needed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that I caught you off guard. I did speak on the original motion, and I now rise to speak in support of the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. Benjamin). I can only amplify that support because of the fact that a Minister of the Crown stood in his place today and moved what is tantamount to closure, closure on an issue that is fundamental and very important. I think in some instances the case has perhaps been overstated in terms of its importance as far as western Canada is concerned, but this is a very important and major issue to all of Canada from an economic and an agricultural point of view.

What is troubling in the parliamentary sense and in looking at the only democratic institution that we have left is that this is probably the twenty-fifth time—somewhere between 20 and 25 times—that closure has been moved in this session of Parliament. One has to ask the question, where are we going? Are we not meant in this place to debate important and fundamental issues such as the statutory freight rate? If we cannot debate an issue as fundamental and as important as the statutory Crowsnest Pass freight rate in this House for more than two or three days, then this institution is really being diluted and watered down into non-existence. One can only express one's dismay at the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). He is a Minister who generated many accolades and generated some goodwill for his frankness and forthright approach in western Canada. But whatever goodwill the Minister generated over the past year or so with his actions here today has been flushed down the drain. There is no question about that. As a result, one can only voice one's anger and outrage by what is taking place here today.

I thought we had a good debate. We debated this issue on Thursday and Friday. There were excellent speeches made. It was not a debate that was tarnished with innuendo and bitterness. It was a frank, forthright and intelligent debate. I thought the debate was going very well. I thought we were expanding and exploring some alternatives to the piece of legislation that was brought forth. However, that has all gone down the drain, and with it some of the goodwill the Minister of Transport may have generated throughout the country in his attempt to deal with the Crow rate issue.

As I said in my speech on Thursday, we are dealing here with a piece of legislation that is a linguistic labyrinth. It is very complicated. I think other Members have referred to the rhetoric which will now define what the future statutory freight rate will be. Nobody really understands it. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), asked the President of CN Rail in committee the other day whether he could describe what the current statutory freight rate would be under Clause 36 or Clause 37 of this Bill. The President said he could not. He does not understand it. If someone such as the President of the CNR does not understand it, how is a farmer to understand it?

This Bill is divisive. There is no question about that. There is division within the West and there is division within the country. The Bill is incomplete. The Minister said he was going to bring forth a safety net and tie the new statutory freight rate to the farmer's ability to pay. We have had no elaboration on that whatever. The Minister has failed to elaborate on that in second reading. Because he has failed, the Minister has said simply, "We will take it to committee." We know the Minister's bottom line is to get the Bill through before the end of June. We cannot debate a pig in a poke, Mr. Speaker. He says he will add other specialty crops. Where are they and what are they? There are other things which the Minister is supposed to incorporate in this Bill. The fact is we do not really know what the Minister's bottom line is, and that adds further to the anxiety, the apprehension, the suspicion and to the mistrust.

There has been, as Members have indicated, some recognition on the part of farmers that perhaps they should pay more toward the movement of their grain. This kind of action will further fan the flames of mistrust and suspicion. We have a Government that has no Members elected to the House of Commons west of Winnipeg, that is tearing down a historical and statutory right and ramming it through the House of Commons. The Government will ram it through committee and through report stage. We know that because that appears to be its bottom line. It will ram through a measure which will hurt individual producers, agriculture and the Canadian economy. Most of all, it is an affront to this institution, to Members of Parliament and to parliamentary democracy. It should not be tolerated on any issue, but most of all it should not be tolerated on an issue as fundamentally important as this one.

I am not sure whether the Minister realizes that with his move to invoke closure he is fanning the flames of division and bitterness in the country. I am sorry to say that because he is a man who has spent, as I said last Thursday, a good deal of his time working for the federation of Canada. He has been a Member of Parliament, he served on the Task Force on National Unity and is generally perceived to be a person who wants to see the country work and function together in harmony. I say in all sincerity that his action today is generating bitterness, division and disunity. Furthermore, the actions of his colleague today in moving the time allocation motion constitute blatant contempt for the parliamentary process.

One has to look at it in this context. This issue has been around for quite some time, but it has not been debated in the House for any length of time. It all started back on February 8, 1982, when the Minister of Transport made a statement in Winnipeg about his approach to dealing with the Crowsnest Pass freight rates. That was when he set up the Gilson process, and on June 28, 1982, the Gilson Report was released. Once again the Minister made a statement. Where? On both occasions he made them in the City of Winnipeg, not in the House of Commons. Not one of his colleagues in the House of Commons made a statement here so that Hon. Members could have responded, asked questions or sought clarification. No, the statements were made outside the House. He circumvented the parliamentary process. Then again on August 4 he made another statement outside the House of Commons, another very important statement in the entire process. On February 1, 1983, the Minister made an announcement of his legislative intentions. Where was this announcement made? It was not in Ottawa, not in the House of Commons, but again in Winnipeg, again circumventing the parliamentary process. Finally, on May 5, 1982, he announced his so-called revisions to his originally intended piece of legislation. He made that announcement at the national parliamentary press theatre. He had the audacity to walk across the street and to refuse to make that statement in the House of Commons.

Today, after two full days of debate, closure is introduced. The Bill was introduced for debate last Thursday. It was debated on Friday and again today. These are ten-minute speeches. Hon. Members of Parliament from western Canada just get warmed up in ten minutes. As one Member pointed out, there is a good hour's speech in every western Member because it is a very fundamental, emotional and political issue. There is no question about that. We are fearful that the mould is cast. It is quite clear what the Government wants to do. It will ram it through the House of Commons and through committee because it wants it passed by June 30 before Parliament recesses. This Bill will be in for a rough time, I can guarantee that.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, this is but another example of the expression of Government policy which has not considered Canada as a nation. The Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), more recently the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), and other prairie Members have explained very clearly their perception of the impact of this legislation upon both western grain producers and the livestock feeding industry, but nowhere in any policy statement related to this legislation or in any other announcement of intended policy has there been any measurement of the possible impact upon any part of Canada east of the Great Lakes.

As a Canadian, I demand a measurement of the impact. As a maritimer, I would ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to respond to the questions contained in my remarks of May 5 as reported in Hansard at page 25210. They read:

—I want to know if there is any intention on the part of this Government to recognize that increment in cost which will be passed on by the change in the Crow rate as it relates to eastern Canadian poultry, hog and beef operations. We are entitled to that answer in a definitive cost study basis—

Has the Minister responded in any way to my request for a cost study analysis? As a Canadian, I demand a measurement of that. The Government, from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) through all Ministers of the Cabinet, has totally failed to recognize that a policy of Government was enunciated during World War II which was intended to make meat production competitive throughout Canada. The policy recognized that the Atlantic Provinces were not and probably never would be self-sustaining in the field of meat and poultry. The very nature of the climate and the farming enterprise in that area did not lend itself to that level of production.

The policy was to create competitive opportunity in the meat industry of Canada for all farmers then engaged in the business. A beef producer in New Brunswick could anticipate both comparable cost and return with a farmer in the same business but living in the prairie region. In order for this to become fact, it was necessary that a feed grain subsidy program be put in place.

The Government in its lack of wisdom has chosen to reduce the effective rate of this subsidy over the years. As a consequence, it has been documented that there is now a very distinct competitive advantage extended to prairie meat producers when shipping to the Atlantic market.

The Minister may consider that the maritime area is insignificant relative to other areas of Canada. No matter how small their number, they deserve to be considered as part of any national policy, and this has not happened. It has been estimated that the maritime pork producer may be at a $4.40 per hundredweight disadvantage in pork when marketed in Atlantic Canada, versus that produced in the prairies and marketed in Atlantic Canada. The disadvantage is even larger in respect to beef produced in western Canada but marketed in the Maritimes.

The original statement of policy of the Minister of Transport was analysed by the Maritime Farmers Council. In their opinion they would find themselves in an even greater position of disadvantage than at present. It was for that reason that I asked for a cost analysis of the impact upon Atlantic livestock producers, as I mentioned earlier.

The Maritime Farmers Council made an in-depth study of the progressive loss of competitive opportunity from 1967 until 1982. The figures are startling. I hope the Government and the Minister of Transport will listen carefully. In 1967, in order to maintain a competitive position on a national basis for the production of meat and poultry, the maritime farmer paid 11 per cent of the total cost of grain transportation when shipped to Nova Scotia. This may seem like an inordinate amount of subsidy to be extended to any industry, but that is Government policy and that industry was in place because of historic Government policy. In 1982, the maritime farmer was paying 75 per cent of the total cost of transportation, but we must bear in mind that this is a much higher cost than that of 1967. The disadvantage was further aggravated by the fact that the western farmer was paying 59 per cent of his cost of transportation in 1976 and only 18.7 per cent in 1981.

These figures were not just pulled out of a hat. They were based upon information obtained from the Gilson Report, Economic Council of Canada figures, the Snavely Report and gross national expenditures implicit price index. It must be recognized by the Government of Canada that this is a nation of five regions, that any policy which may be adopted for any reason may impact favourably or unfavourably upon another region of Canada. We must know whither we go when we bring in policies such as the one that is presently before us.

The continuing changes in Government policy have already virtually brought the feeding industry in the maritime Provinces to its knees. This is not the only example of failure to recognize all of Canada as policy evolves at the federal level.

I complained, and I will continue to complain, that while Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson, Bombardier and Maislin, all in Ontario and Quebec, are worthy of assistance in times of financial distress, there is still no analysis of the impact upon the eastern farm of this change in policy.

It has also been clearly pointed out by the behaviour of Treasury Board, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Government at large, that agriculture is no longer an important subject matter as far as the apple grower or the potato producer of eastern Canada is concerned. The price stabilization policy has never been adjusted by effective indexing of production costs, and the payment is not announced until after the time for planting.

These are very retrograde and very thoughtless moves in Government policy. Perhaps one could be somewhat less parochial if one were to mention the shipbuilding industry. There has never been a policy which would activate the real capability of the shipyards of Canada under this Government. The lack of this policy has produced unemployment from coast to coast in Canada to the point that the shipyards are no longer paying income tax on profit. The employment has dropped as much as 90 per cent in some shipyards so the workers there are no longer paying income tax, they are drawing Unemployment Insurance or welfare at the expense of the Province.

It is a total lack of comprehension of Canada as a whole that is in evidence as one policy succeeds another, regardless of the economic sphere affected by the policy.

This lack of comprehension of Canada as a nation has also been emulated by the failure of the Government to bring forward an effective plant breeders rights Act or, in place of that, to stimulate a grain research policy which would relieve the federal Government of the requirement for subsidy to produce a profitable cash crop for eastern farmers.

Recently some Members of the Agriculture Committee of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom visited Canada. It was my pleasure to be a guest of the Minister of Agriculture as he entertained Canada's guests. It was my pleasure to sit beside a Member of the U.K. House of Commons who advised me that in their research program they have been developing varieties of wheat which now produce four or five tons per acre. Also, the research structure has been asked to produce a variety which will yield six tons per acre. The research people have responded that this may be available for farmers sometime within the next five years.

Again, we have no national policy on agricultural research when the total needs of agriculture are examined. There are reports of very high yields in other varieties of grains which are presently being produced in Europe. The climate in many areas of Europe is somewhat comparable to that of Atlantic Canada. Perhaps the Minister and the Government as a whole would be relieved of hearing such remarks as I have made today if our farmers had access to higher yields of grain in the Maritimes, but these we do not nor cannot have under existing conditions.

It is therefore imperative on behalf of maritime speakers that I demand of this Minister that he should be a strong proponent of agricultural policy in respect of grain production and that while waiting for such a change to take place, it is imperative that the feed-freight assistance program be given more money to restore eastern Canada to a competitive position with other producers of this nation. I sincerely believe that I am making only a reasonable request.

Lastly, I wish to say once more, let us have a cost analysis of the impact of the Crow rate legislation upon the eastern Canadian feeder. Let us accompany this legislation with an appropriate Government policy, first, to reduce the discrepancy which presently exists in the competitive structure of meat production in Canada, and second, to make very sure that this legislation will not further aggravate a very unfavourable situation.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter into this debate, although the topic under discussion, doing away with the Crow rate, is anathema to most principled-thinking Canadians, even in central Canada Let alone western Canada. Quite frankly, I do not know why we are wasting the time of the House on such an iniquitous Bill. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) for his amendment to hoist the Bill for six months. It is too bad we cannot hoist Bills like this for six years or 60 years.

Most Members who spoke this afternoon represent western constituencies. I represent a constituency in southern Ontario. I am as vitally concerned about the long-term adverse effects of doing away with the statutory Crow rate as any Member from western Canada. It will impact adversely on a constituency such as mine.

Before I get into the specifics as to how it will impact adversely on a constituency like Brant, I would like to ask a rhetorical question. Where have all the Liberals gone? If this is such a great Bill, why can the Minister responsible for bringing in the Bill not muster moral support around him? Where are all the Liberal speakers to stand up and support the Government? They have disappeared. I see one putting up his hand and leaving the Chamber. So much for his dedication. I would have thought that Liberal after Liberal would have been getting up on a Bill like this to defend the Government. I have to agree with many of them that it is probably indefensible but, at least in a political sense they could put forward some arguments that would help to create the impression that the Liberals are not entirely bent on self-destruction west of Ontario.

This Bill will not aid or assist the Liberal Party west of Ontario. Once again the Liberal Government is not paying any attention to the ordinary people in western Canada, particularly the grain growers and farmers. I am not talking about the agri-corporations, but the ordinary family farms. While the Liberals are bent on self-destruction in the West in a political sense, they are determined, through this legislation, to wipe out the family farm. That is what will eventually happen. The family farmer on the Canadian Prairies will not be able to compete in years to come with the added freight costs which he will have to bear.

Our chief competitors, the United States, most European nations, Australia, Brazil, Argentina and so on, are heavily subsidized by their Governments. They subsidize the grain producers directly. If this Bill goes through, and the Liberals are determined to force it through with closure, I can see a very bad situation developing on the Prairies in the future. The family farm will disappear. Indeed, for all practical purposes, we may eventually go out of grain producing in the West as far as individual farms are concerned. Large agricorporations may continue to develop and broaden and become more powerful in the West. Once again the ordinary family farmer is being kicked in the pants by an autocratic and arrogant Government that is determined to have its way over even basic common sense.

Second, what about the CPR, the great bastion of free enterprise that opened up the West and united this country from sea to sea? There is a lot of mythology about the CPR. I have great respect for the old Van Hornes and the gang that helped to build the CPR. I also have much respect for the Irish navies and the Chinese workers to whom no monuments are built anywhere in the country but who actually did the hard, sweaty labour that built the railroad across the country. Hundreds of these labourers died on the job because of exhaustion, because of lack of proper food and because of accidents. But we seem to praise the CPR as a great example of how free enterprise can build a united country. Well, I believe that very few Canadians fully appreciate the fact that 60 per cent of all funding that went into building that great example and symbol of free enterprise came from the public, from tax dollars, from the taxpayers of Canada in one form or another with subsidies, land grants, tax concessions, you name it.

• (1720)

An Hon. Member: Mineral rights.

Mr. Blackburn: We could add mineral rights to the list. As a matter of fact, talking in terms of today's dollar, owing to the inflation rate the original $300 million that the CPR got out of the public purse would amount to about $8.3 billion in federal Government handouts.

Several years ago, our Party listed certain corporate welfare bums in the country, and believe me, the CPR has been sucking at the public trough ever since it was established in the 1870s and 1880s. Now the Government is again knuckling under to a more sophisticated kind of blackmail; unless the taxpayers of Canada and particularly western Canadian farmers are prepared to pay money out of their pockets and into the coffers of the CPR, there will be no upgrading of railways in western Canada, there will not be the efficient and quick movement of grain that would enable farmers to compete and sell on world markets.

Once again, the Government has knuckled under to corporate pressure from the railway companies. First of all it has knuckled under to the company which it controls and owns outright, the CN, and then it has knuckled under to that great bastion of free enterprise, the CPR. That these great corporate giants can preach free enterprise on the one hand and on the other hand go obsequiously to Government and say, "Look, we need more taxpayers' money, bail us out, we do not want to use our own money, we do not want to float a bond issue, we do not want to float more common stock or common shares to trade on the open market," never ceases to amaze me. It is much easier to go begging, hat in hand, to the boys behind the scenes at the federal level and get the money directly from the taxpayers.

I alluded to the third point I wished to make at the beginning of my brief address. I make no apologies for the brevity of my speech. We are hammered and punched into making only ten minute speeches today thanks to one more closure from the other side. The point I referred to deals with my own constituency. In my constituency, Massey-Ferguson and White Farm Equipment are barely holding on by the skin of their teeth. White Farm Equipment is in terrible financial shape, and Massey-Ferguson is also in terrible financial shape but is managing to hold on. About 30 per cent of all combines and large tractors produced in Brantford at Massey-Ferguson and White Farm Equipment are exported to western Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please! The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau), on a point of order.

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned that he had only ten minutes to make his speech, because closure was being applied. I would like to point out that it is because of our Standing Orders and not because of closure on second reading.

[English]

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for correcting me. It was my fault and he is correct. But no doubt we will be coming to closure very shortly anyway.

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that in my constituency, which has Massey-Ferguson and White Farm Equipment, we see how closely related the farm implement industry and farming community are. Farm incomes are down. They have been down drastically for the past three or four years. Net farm income is projected to be down again in 1983 by yet another 14 per cent. About 30 per cent of all large combines and big tractors manufactured by both of those companies in Brantford are shipped to the Canadian West. The other 70 per cent are shipped to the American West.

Now how much more of a burden must these companies and the workers they have laid off suffer directly as a result of federal Government policy? As an example, statistics from western producers say that the cost to the western grain grower will be five times the cost that it presently is under the Crow rate by 1990. By 1995, it will be eight and one half times the cost it is now, and by the year 2000, the cost to the Canadian grain producer in western Canada will increase by 12.5 times.

In Brantford there are 1,200 workers on long-term lay-off at White Farm Equipment, which, as I said earlier, is undergoing extreme financial difficulty at this time. There were another 1,500 employees laid off at Massey-Ferguson. All of the other companies in central Canada, western Canada, Winnipeg and so on that produce farm equipment are in very bad shape. Now the federal Government, by doing away with the Crow rate, will only add to the cost of producing grain to the western farmer. The farmer will have even more difficulty buying equipment in Canada and putting men back to work.

This legislation will not only drastically and adversely affect western grain producers, it will also have a very, very adverse financial and economic effect on the manufacturing sector in the farm implement industry.

I see that my time is now up, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for allowing me a few extra seconds.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I stand in the House as a Member from the West but also as a Member from one of the cities in the West, the City of Calgary. Perhaps no city in Canada has been as abruptly and as badly hurt as a direct consequence of Government policy as has Calgary in the last year and a half. I come from a city that, a year and a half ago, had a vacancy rate of two-tenths of 1 per cent.

Today the vacancy rate is the highest in the country, well over 12 per cent, directly as a consequence of federal Government activity, activity in that case related to the National Energy Program.

I stand here today, Mr. Speaker, and deal with the subject of the Crow rate with a sort of sinking feeling in my stomach a feeling that the Liberal Government opposite, because of its lack of understanding of the industries in the West, is about to intensify the economic hardship which it has already created in western Canada through the National Energy Program.

Moving from energy to agriculture, when a Government seeks to change things too abruptly and too quickly without sufficient thought, the Government runs the risk of unintended side-effects which can be devastating to people in western Canada and, at the second level, devastating to people in eastern Canada.

The previous speaker brought to the attention of the House the potential for job loss in the Province of Ontario, the Province of Quebec and other Provinces in Canada, which will result if the Government is making a mistake. That job loss can be seen clearly and explicitly in the farm implement business, the manufacturing of tractors, motors and things of that nature.

It is particularly difficult, Mr. Speaker, to stand in the House and speak to this Bill knowing that it has been proposed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), a Minister who at one time in his life was one of the chief commissioners of the Royal Commission on National Unity. Since the 1980 election, this particular Minister, who had taken one or two years out of his life to travel the country and work on a commission on national unity, has stood in the Chamber and supported a constitutional Bill which created a tremendous discord in the country, a Bill which gave birth to the separatist movement in western Canada, a Bill which intensified the feeling of separatism in the Province of Quebec. The two years that the Minister spent on that commission should have taught him a better lesson. We saw the same Minister stand in the House and support the National Energy Program. That was a tremendously divisive Bill which in my part of the world has created and sustained the birth and development of a separatist Party in western Canada. It is probably strongest in my region of Alberta. That movement is a direct consequence of two historic pieces of legislation brought to the House and supported by the Minister in the last three years, the Constitution and the National Energy Program.

I stand in the House today with the certain knowledge, as someone born, raised and educated in that part of the country, that the Government is proceeding to ram through another piece of legislation that will further intensify those feelings of alienation. There is much that is wrong with the Bill in a substantive sense, but the feelings evoked by it in my part of the country will be intensified by the substance of it.

Members on this side of the House were given 25 copies of the Bill on a Wednesday night, and at 11 o'clock the next morning the debate began. That is reminiscent of the way the Constitution was handled. The Leader of this Party had 45 minutes to read the Government's proposal on the Constitution of Canada before responding to it. And this Party only had overnight to consider this extremely complex piece of legislation before debating it in the House the next day. The government has now signalled its intention to move closure on this Bill after only two days of debate.

The statutory Crow rate has been important to the development of western Canada for decades. The West views it as something gained upon entry into Confederation. It is a principle which has existed for decades. The Government does not have any elected Members to speak of in western Canada, yet it brings forward a piece of legislation that will irrevocably take that principle away from the people, and it does not even have the courtesy to allow a week for study before the debate. It lays it on the Table of this Chamber on a Wednesday, provides a few copies, forces us to debate it on Thursday, and after only two days of House time, invokes closure.

It is an insult to every Member of this Chamber and to every Canadian that anything so fundamental to our history and development should be treated in such a fashion by the Government. When people are insulted, they react negatively. The are angry at those who insult them and their memories last a long, long time. The solution to the problem of unity in this country is to change the Government as rapidly as possible, get a Prime Minister who understands and is sensitive to all regions of the country and a Cabinet that is likewise sensitive, as well as a Party running things with some sensitivity to the entire nation.

If I had words of wisdom for the Government they would be these: You are starting on the same path you started on with the Constitution of Canada and you are getting off that path. When you moved closure so quickly you insulted western Canadians. If you now move the Bill into committee and in any way, shape or form impose closure on the activities of the committee through an artificial deadline or using your majority to prevent witnesses from appearing then you are proceeding on a path which will be more and more insulting to the people of western Canada and you will be resisted with increasing strength.

This is a piece of legislation fundamental to the economic health of that region and indeed to the economic health of the whole nation. It is not a piece of legislation on which the Government should impose closure or use its majority in Committee to stifle freedom of debate and testimony. The only way we are going to arrive at an acceptable solution is to value freedom of speech and freedom of testimony. We must move slowly and carefully and in a manner which will help rather than hurt this nation.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I participate in this debate with the same aggrieved feeling that other Members have expressed since, a little after three o'clock, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) moved closure on a Bill on which the debate began last Thursday. I have gone through the Hansard and I can see that the Bill has been debated for 10 hours and 50 minutes. Regardless of where a Member comes from in Canada or what his or her position is on the Crow, that is completely unacceptable and must be thoroughly rejected.

I may have a different view from that of some of my colleagues on the Crow because I come from eastern Canada where there is also concern about the changes. As the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) said, the changes do not only affect the West.

Eastern Canada benefits from grains and feed grains grown in the West. The country is tied to together. It is not wise to move against the economic plank of a country arbitrarily and unilaterally the way the Government has done.

My views may be different from those of some Members but I agree with the Minister's thoughtful remarks on Thursday morning when he started this debate. He admitted then that there were differences of opinion, as I do. I also admit that a consensus has been forming since press releases were issued on the subject. There has been change, and it is recognized that there has to be some change to the fundamental rate.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want an inadvertent misleading of the House. Closure has not been moved; time allocation was introduced on second reading of the Bill. It will go to committee and then we will have third reading.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I respect the Hon. Member but, with respect, his point of order was spurious. I have been around this House a little longer than he has. When there is an allocation of time for one more day on a Bill as fundamental as this one, he may not call it closure but the people do. The Government has a problem with its perception of what is happening in this House. The cold, sad fact is that the Government is so concentrated on the centre of Canada, basically on Quebec and Ontario, that it cannot understand the perceptions of the rest of the country. In the West and in the East and in every other part of the country that considers the Bill objectively, people are going to say that this is the club of closure and that it will cut off any more consensus and any more change.

I would like to ask the Minister what he would have felt like if, on one of his proposals, his Liberal caucus had invoked closure, long before Members of the Quebec caucus kicked up their heels and got him into what I consider to be rather a dubious, unholy alliance with some of the wheat Pools in Canada, to force the Minister, I believe against his better judgment, to change. It was not the Pools of the West, it was the Quebec Liberal caucus.

I ask you a rhetorical question, Mr. Speaker. Let us assume the Crow was in Quebec, with the Liberal majority coming from Quebec, do you think the Crow would be shot down in Quebec if things were reversed? This is the type of understanding I am trying to get from the Hon. Members opposite in the brief ten minutes, and now five minutes which I have left, because I have been informed, Mr. Speaker—and I bet Hon. Members opposite do not appreciate it, because I did not appreciate the full extent—that there are 125,000 permit holders, producers of grain, in the West. On the basis of the 10 hours and 50 minutes, which adds up to 650 minutes, with a little calculation, you get the grand total of one-third of a second which they have had in representations before the House before closure or allocation of time was moved.

As Shakespeare said many years ago, "A rose by any other name is a rose", and if there is a thorn on it, it is going to prick your skin and hurt you just as much as any other rose, regardless of the bloom. And this is going to hurt people in all parts of the country, Mr. Speaker. You know that. There is a fantastic arithmetical factor here. Other than the two Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, there are 21 Liberal Members from the other eight Provinces. Yet we have in the Province of Alberta 21 Members, regardless of political complexion, balanced against the 21 from the Government benches other than those from the two central Provinces. Is it any wonder that the Members are concerned about the imbalance of a unilateral move here on something that, if it were reversed, the Government would not dream of doing?

What would this Government feel like, Mr. Speaker, if after the election there were to be mammoth support for the Conservative Party—as there will be? And if the Liberal Party wants to write its epitath in perpetuity, it is doing it today in invoking closure on the Crow and not letting the debate continue. What it has done today, Mr. Speaker, is to cement division and opposition to this unilateral act which is going to come back to haunt it.

As my friend, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) said, we had the same division on the Constitution. That came back to haunt the Government. And we are going to have it here. What would this Government think, Mr. Speaker, after an election, of having a strong representation from the West, having the balance about the way it is, but with a Conservative majority, and some Minister, because of pressure from some provincial caucus, deciding to put a special surcharge on the St. Lawrence Seaway so that the ports of Vancouver, Prince Rupert and Churchill could benefited? Would that be in the national interest?

This is an economic manifesto for the West which has been there since 1897. It is now being done away with at a chop with closure by the ham-handed hand of the Minister of Agriculture. Let us look at one of our cultural manifestos which the majority of Members voted in this House, the Official Languages Act. Let us say that after an election, there is an imbalance of representation and Hon. Members, responding to a provincial or regional caucus, say, "Let's get rid of the Official Languages Act because it costs too much money". The Late Right Hon. Mr. Pearson said, and I believe it, that it is proper to pay for things to keep this country together. If you have that standard for the cultural manifestos in the land, why is there not some sensitivy to the economic manifestos of the land? That is what Government is running in the face of, Mr. Speaker.

With the 76 Members who come from western Canada, between Manitoba and British Columbia, and with the 650 minutes which have been allocated so far, it is a total of 8.5 minutes in which they have the opportunity to speak. For the 48 Members who come from Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, they have the grand total, if they try to exercise it collectively, of 13.5 minutes. And if you had 281 Members, with the Speaker in the chair, and the 650 minutes which we have so far been allocated, with one more day in the offing, we would have the grand total of 2.3 minutes per Member.

I echo what has been expressed on this side of the House that this is a black day. It should have been done on Friday the thirteenth because the Government would have been more exposed to odium. It is going to come back to haunt it. I do not honestly believe the Minister of Transport, (Mr. Pepin), as the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), said in his opening speech and repeated today, has had the capacity to heal wounds and redress the problems and to recognize that there are legitimate regional grievances. There are legitimate grievances and legitimate differences of opinion in this country. One does not redress that imbalance and one does not show equity or fairness, Mr. Speaker, by acting unilaterally.

My closing words are specifically directed to the Chair, who I know is an honoured Member from Atlantic Canada. If there is any warning I can give to anyone about the Crow and the future with Bill C-155, and my friend, the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) expressed the fears and concerns of eastern agriculture in Atlantic Canada—I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to others across this country, that we in the East have had the sad example of the maritime freight rates, which was our Magna Carta back in the 1920s, to guarantee access to markets and to help our industry within the region. You know, Mr. Speaker, as well as I do, what has happened to that. Therefore, beware, Mr. Speaker, and I tell the Minister to beware. Let us have some sense on the Government side and let the balance be restored. Put the shoe on the other foot and see how you would like such a unilateral and negative act to take place against you such as has taken place here today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments? Debate.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, it is a little rough to have to follow my friend, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), but I will try to make a contribution here. It is unfortunate that the cameras are not also on the Minister this afternoon so the Canadian people can see how he is sinking in his chair with his head down, carrying the load, being made a scapegoat for the Liberal Party, and being taken in once again by the Quebec Liberal caucus.

I have had experience before, being from Winnipeg, of how the Quebec Liberal caucus operates. There was a recommendation made that an aerospace training centre be built in Winnipeg, but Members of the Quebec Liberal caucus got involved in that. They stated that it would be built in Montreal or it would not be built at all. We see them in action again today. The Crow rate change will be done their way or it will not be done at all.

I have very little respect for most Members of the Cabinet. I had some respect for this Minister, but I certainly have lost it with his action here today in going along with what the Minister of Agriculture has proposed. It is unbelievable, from the figures which the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants gave today, that we have only had 650 minutes of debate. I do not understand it in terms of the quality of debate of the Hon. Members from Saskatchewan and Alberta, who made excellent suggestions, alternatives and recommendations. And all of this has gone down the drain. There was not a lot of negative criticism of the Crow. It was constructive criticism, and I do not understand why the Minister would not take the time to listen to it. He could learn something. The Conservative Party has unveiled a ten-point agricultural program which my hon. friend from Vegreville put out early in April. It called upon the Liberal Government to implement immediately a ten-point agricultural program to aid in economic recovery for Canadian producers. The program developed by the PC agricultural caucus would provide up to $100 million to assist producers in negotiating their existing high interest loans to levels more in line with current rates. On and on we went with our ten points.

I have a small rural area in my riding. It is called Headingley, Mr. Speaker. I received a letter from a number of farmers in that area. I would just like to read into the record their concerns about the intention of the Liberals to change the grain freight rate. The letter states:

> Farmers cannot afford a change because grain prices are going down, not up as they should be. The only prices that are increasing are that of gas, diesel fuel and oil.

These are all Liberal taxes which have been placed on the farmer and other Canadians through the disastrous National Energy Program. As if that were not bad enough, the Crow is being rammed through under closure. The letter continues:

> Also, taxes are increasing and the cost of insurance, machinery and hired help is up.

Of course, that is partly due to the NDP Government in Manitoba. Additional taxes, employees' taxes and others, are being imposed upon the business community in Manitoba by the NDP Government. The farmer from Headingly goes on to write:

> Why do farmers in France and Germany get $11 per bushel of wheat and pay no freight, only the cost to haul to the elevator?

Why can we not have the same arrangement here? The letter continues:

> Canadians should not have to pay freight charges because farmers own half the hopper cars. Railway companies get the land free, diesels are rented and tracks are completely depreciated. What does the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport think they are pulling off? Our freight rates should go down, not up. If they cannot operate with the money they now receive, then give the tracks to the farmers. I am sure they can do a much better job.

I am sure they could. The letter points out:

The Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin is always talking about 17 per cent of farm income going toward freight. Does he remember that we received $.07 for oats, $.08 to $.09 for barley, and $.14 for wheat back in the Thirties? Now tractors cost an average $120,000 and combines $125,000 . . . Grain prices have not increased enough to cover the current expenses without having an additional freight rate added on.

Neither the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) nor the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has explained how a farmer is to cope with this situation, nor have any Hon. Members on the Government side. There have been no examples of how they are to get around all these different increases. This is something which the Minister ought to have explained to the House and the farmers first before bringing in closure.

The farmer goes on to write:

We already have a lot of unnecessary expenses. Take for example gas prices. Our American neighbours are paying $.86 for a gallon. We are paying $2 for four litres. We are spending billions of dollars on metric conversion and bilingualism.

Of course, one of the promises the Liberals made to the Canadian people in the last federal election was that there would be cheap gas. There is no cheap gas. There is now very expensive gas under the National Energy Program.

I also received a letter from another farmer in the Headingly area. He points out:

As a grain producer in western Canada, I feel compelled to write you regarding the proposed changes your Government seems intent on forcing upon us regarding grain transportation.

Some of these proposals, if instituted, would lead to disastrous results for grain producers for generations to come, not to mention the negative impact on the consumers and economy in general.

Might I sum up just a few of the reasons for my concern.

(1) Farmers cannot afford the increases in freight rates your proposals would result in. Why should the farmers be offered 'subsidies' when in fact, any shortfalls in payment to the railways could be paid directly to the railways?

(2) Secondly, if we have to have subsidy payments, why on earth would they be calculated on the basis of acreage instead of volume shipped? This would not at all be a fair method of payment.

(3) As a producer of special crops as well as statutory crops, I resent the proposed unfair methods which would lead to discrimination against the different producers.

(4) Finally, I agree that improvements to our transportation system are long overdue and just maybe, if your 'honourable' transportation minister had practiced a little more 'consultation' and a little less 'confrontation', we wouldn't be in the mess we're in.

In closing I implore you to abandon your present course and heed the advice of organizations such as Manitoba Pool who I am certain have a much better understanding of the problems than do your bureaucrats.

The letter was addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and to the Minister of Transport.

I mentioned some of the alternatives that we in the Conservative Agricultural caucus made. We pointed out:

To assist young farmers, and those facing financial difficulties, as well as providing for a necessary communication link between farmers, governments and the financial community, farm finance review boards should be established to act as a financial referee and negotiator for deferrals and time extensions in meeting their repayment demands.

Another proposal was as follows:

The current excise tax rebate on farm fuels is bureaucratic and inadequate. Fuel costs are a major component in the production of food, including greenhouse operations and the manufacturing of fertilizer. The price of gasoline and diesel fuel used for agricultural purposes should be reduced by about 20 cents per gallon.

That would certainly help immensely. We went on to state:

This could be done by the complete removal of the 9 per cent federal sales tax. As well, the price of natural gas used in greenhouse operations and in the manufacture of fertilizer should be reduced.

I would like to remind the House that the Conservative Government in Saskatchewan reduced many of the taxes in that Province, which greatly assisted the farming and business communities. That is something which the Government should be considering after its promise in the last federal election that it would give Canadians cheap fuel.

Another of our proposals was as follows:

The 1983-84 Initial Grain Prices should remain at the 1982-83 crop-year level.

Another suggestion was as follows:

Legislation should be immediately introduced to double the maximum cash advance level for individual farmers from $15,000 to $30,000.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining I want to make a few comments with regard to the Bill which is to change the Crow rate. Ever since my grandfather immigrated to Canada and settled in the Scotsguard area of Saskatchewan at the turn of the century, one of the things which made it possible for his family to succeed as a farm unit was the fact that the Crow rate enabled them to compete with farmers throughout the world. Now we are seeing a change. My relatives from southern Saskatchewan tell me that their costs over the last five years have increased in excess of 100 per cent, yet since 1980 the price per bushel of wheat has fallen from $6 to $4.65 a bushel. Therein lies the critical component of this particular Bill. What it means is that it will be one more step toward the removal of the family farming unit in western Canada.

I have been receiving letters from people in the Peace River country of British Columbia who are concerned about the loss of their farms as the result of the increased transportation costs which they will have to bear in the year ahead as well as the demise of some of the smaller communities which have become a way of life in rural Canada. They are concerned over the lack of opportunities for young farmers to enter the farming business and also for all of those young people who look forward to employment in the processing industry and in those industries providing the necessary equipment and supplies to the farming community. Those are jobs which will be lost as the result of the legislation before us today.

I also want to mention, coming from central British Columbia where individuals are interested in processing beef via the feeder lot operation, that in a sense this will now be removed as a viable option for those people. To feed British Columbia beef on prairie grains or grains from the Peace River country will now be an impossibility as a result of the increased costs associated with the transportation of grain. A number of the lumber producers from central British Columbia have indicated an interest in seeing this legislation introduced because they are assuming that it will perhaps result in decreased freight rates for themselves, or at least a slowing of the increase of transportation rates for forest products.

There is nothing in this legislation that provides those guarantees that the moneys provided by the taxpayers of Canada to the railways of Canada will result in reduced freight rates for other commodities such as forest products. Again, a number of issues are of concern to residents of British Columbia as well as of the prairie Provinces.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

RAILWAYS—CROWSNEST PASS RATE—OPPOSITION TO ANNOUNCED CHANGES. (B) DEVELOPMENT OF GRAIN TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, we have before us one of the most important pieces of agricultural legislation dealt with by this House during this century. The future of Western Canada and the directions we will choose for our farmers are contained in this legislation.

Throughout the 18 months process of consultation leading up to the introduction of this legislation, the Opposition has been systematically excluded. We now find that on a piece of legislation of this importance the Government has seen fit to introduce closure after two days of second reading debate. I truly wonder about the state of our democracy and question whether the Government will be able to continue to call itself democratic in any way, shape or form. This is particularly odious, considering the lack of any support for this Government in the region of Canada most affected by this legislation. Since my right to speak as a Member of Parliament on behalf of my constituents has been so severely curtailed, I am taking this opportunity to continue the thrust of my remarks I had entered into earlier today during the debate.

I think it is important to discuss the impact that this new bureaucracy may have on the functioning of the Canadian Wheat Board. It appears that the grain transportation agency administrator and the Senior Grain Transportation Committee will assume a considerable amount of the Wheat Board's power to allocate cars. In the world of the international grain market, the ability of the selling agent to spot cars and move grain, to respond to any situation promptly and effectively, is crucial. If we undermine the Wheat Board we undermine the system, and I really question the need or desirability of such action.

I suppose the Minister will consider what I have had to say, and perhaps my words will be tossed into his garbage can like the words of the so-called reactionaries. But I say to the Minister and to other Members that we are dealing with an industry that is often operating on a marginal base. If the Government pushes this proposal through and it is implemented, is the Minister sure of the impact it will have on Western Canada and throughout Canada?

The Minister has made much of certain selected statements from various farm leaders and western politicians. He did an excellent job of taking general statements out of context and implying that the speaker supported the specific plan being proposed. Let me refer the Minister to comments made in the Saskatchewan legislature by the Deputy Premier of Saskatchewan on May 13 who described the present package as completely and absolutely unacceptable. I want to tell the Minister that I, too, have had some correspondence with westerners, including farmers and producers. Not one letter has supported a change. Let me give the House an idea of what is being said in the correspondence I have received.

A farmer writes from Saskatoon:

> I am a small farmer farming near Saskatoon, and we lost money on our operation in 1982. I am saying this so you will realize why I want the Crow rate left alone. Farmers just can't afford a change that will cost more money.

From Langham:

> The Crow is our right. Let's hang on to it. We cannot afford more expenses. What good is all the labour and toil if we have no crop, or as it seems now, can't keep up our payments?

From Saskatoon:

> I would like to urge you, as a Member of Parliament, to oppose very strongly Mr. Pepin's plan to change the Crow rate.
> It is a very complicated system. A way of coming in the backdoor and putting far too great a burden on the farmers.

From Laird:

> As a farmer and Permit Book Holder in Western Canada, I am against the removal of the Crow's nest Freight Agreement.

From Perdue, Saskatchewan:

> I attended the farm rally in Saskatoon to greet Pepin last week. If he fails to acknowledge that farmers in this area are opposed to increased rates, then he is attempting to ignore the true situation. The gathering organized by the NFU attracted non-union farmers also, and quite a few farmers, like myself, nearing retirement age and some retired. It is a critical issue.

From Delisle:

> The railways still need incentive to move our grain efficiently. So it looks like they have to be paid.
> Taking all of that money out of the producers' pockets is just not fair though. If we pay the total cost of transporting grain our profits will be cut in half . . . and that's too much to pay, for anyone.

I have letters from Kinley, Hepburn, Harris, Hague and dozens of other communities. One letter states:

Western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade.

I believe this is the farmer's fair contribution to the Canadian economy.

Many of these letters have come from young farmers who have been fighting tooth and nail to establish themselves in the agricultural industry. They have faced a dramatic increase in the price of land in the last ten years, coupled with overwhelming increases in the cost of machinery. The extra increase in freight charges could make it impossible for new people, even as part of a family transfer, to enter the business.

What this Bill is about is consolidation of the means of production, about fewer elevator points, fewer branchlines, high costs for farmers, and yes, maybe efficiency. But what is there in it for most Saskatchewan farmers? There is absolutely nothing. Any increase in efficiency, if that occurs, will be at their expense. And that is what is so unsatisfactory. This proposal ignores the contribution of rural society to our social fabric.

Mr. Justice Emmett Hall has been a fierce advocate of the western farmer. The Hall Commission on grain handling and transportation came to the conclusion that the principle of statutory rates should stay. It reads, in part:

Regardless of what rate may be set for the transport of grain to export position, that rate must be statutory, not variable. Anything else would be a violation of promises made to the producers of western Canada.

The promises to western Canadians are about to be broken. I speak very much against the use of closure on such an important issue at this time by this Government and it will rue the day it tries to use a heavy-handed, oppressive and non-democratic approach with respect to an issue so important to all of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I have just a few words, Mr. Speaker. For somebody whose freedom has been muzzled, the Hon. Member has had a good day. Three times today he has taken part in the debate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have only just begun.

Mr. Pepin: I wish him greater freedom elsewhere if he thinks he can find it.

On the urgency of the debate I put on record a number of quotations the other day and I will not repeat them. My hon. friend says I took them out of context. I wish he had demonstrated that instead of just saying it. And this afternoon again from a great number of Members on the opposite side of the House, from Medicine Hat, from Lisgar and what not the thought was repeatedly expressed that something had to be done. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) invented a new approach. There is a hurry if the Government is going to do what he wants the Government to do, and there is no hurry if the Government is not going to do what he wants it to do.

Mr. Hargrave: That is if you do the right thing.

Mr. Pepin: That is an interesting concept and thought. From that point of view no Government could act in the country at all because usually there is a nice distribution of opinion on all sides.

When speaking in the west during the last two years I have repeatedly said that I would hate to see the face of the Minister of Transport four or five years from now—whoever he or she may be, hopefully it will be a she—when confronted with the problems that will be before us then if we do not move now. We will have lost sales. We will not have increased our production, our exports, our fabrication, our transformation and what not, and losses in the billions of dollars—$2.5 billion, $3 billion—in the early years of the next decade will occur. It is really with that thought in my mind for the last three years that I have worked. Unfortunately, I have not been able to accommodate everyone. Even the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) and the Hon. Member for Crowfoot will agree that their side is divided very, very greatly on this matter.

Mr. Hargrave: You just brought us all together.

Mr. Pepin: I hope at the end of this exercise people will agree to compromise. Nobody will get 100 per cent of what he thinks should be done. Maybe everybody will get 60 per cent.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—MANUFACTURE OF ROLLING STOCK. (B) NOVA SCOTIA STEEL PLANTS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, on March 10 in the absence of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) I raised a question with the then Minister of State for Economic Development concerning the situation at the Hawker Siddeley plant in Trenton, Nova Scotia. I raised the question with that Minister because he has an important jurisdiction over the creation of jobs.

This particular industry, while it is reliant to a great extent on railway rolling stock, also produces other components of benefit to heavy industry, including transport and shipping. However, what concerned me at the time was that at a point in the economic cycle of our country where jobs are badly needed, we appear to have a precedent being created by Canadian National Railways getting into the manufacture of new rolling stock. I think this is a very undesirable situation, particularly when there are very capable industries in the private sector that can do this more cheaply and efficiently. It sets a continuing precedent as well for other Crown corporations, for example, Air Canada being more active in refurbishing jet engines, or CN Marine getting further involved in ship design. Inevitably this will lead to higher cost and less efficiency.

I am not one of those who believe in selling key Crown corporations on an indiscriminate basis just to get rid of them, but I believe they should be pruned and their activities restricted to their original purpose. They should not be allowed to become conglomerates to compete with the private sector, a sector which has to compete under many different rules and under a much more realistic set of circumstances.

It is pretty clear that the Minister of Transport has made up his mind at this point not to honour any requests by Dr. LeClair, the chief executive officer for CN, for funds to repair railway rolling stock. But he has no compunction in approving the construction of new coal cars at the Transcona works, regardless of their cost. The Minister may choose to elaborate on this. I hope he does, but he certainly did nothing to disprove those conditions when he replied to my question today.

I suggest to the Minister with due deference that this is absolutely irresponsible of the Government. It is irresponsible because it makes a lot of sense, on whatever basis one considers it, to repair existing railway rolling stock. There is a perfectly good facility for doing that, and it would create employment in the process at Transcona and also in Moncton. However, it does not make sense, for the reasons I have just indicated, for the railway to become involved in the construction of new railway rolling stock, because it will be done at an excessive cost by a Crown corporation, when there are other industries, and not just in my constituency, that badly need the work.

Returning to the Hawker Siddeley works, which is a key industry in the entire Province, many people are asking me why we are spending hundreds of millions of dollars on make-work projects of little value—some of them at least—when with some imagination the moneys paid out in UIC benefits to the workforce at Trenton, if applied to the cost of production, would contribute substantially to providing the company with a competitive edge in the manufacture of railway rolling stock for export at which they are very assiduous. There was some evidence of that in the House today.

For the Minister's information, we have approximately 2,000 people who require nearly $200 per week in social benefits of one kind or another to keep themselves and their families. This results from the lack of work in this key industry. A quick calculation shows that that is about $400,000 per week. For that kind of money, these people and the company would have a substantial head start in producing railway axles, rolling stock, modern marine fittings or something useful, rather than having the plant sitting idle with the work force sitting at home demoralized. Everybody would benefit, including the Government.

I do not understand why more concern and more aid is not being shown or given. I know the Government is faced with hard, unpleasant economic decisions, but at the same time there has to be a certain amount of equity between regions and between constituencies. A $120 million yearly loss is apparently acceptable in the manufacture of heavy water in the eastern part of our Province, but there does not seem to be any plans to manufacture railway rolling stock in anticipation of what the Government assures us will be an increased need for such equipment.

I can relate this to the issue before the House today. We have been told at various times that there would be benefits for Sysco and Hawker Siddeley because of the changed Crow rate, at this would create an increased need for rails and railway cars in the West. So far we have seen no tangible results. That is typical. I have not heard any optimistic forecast about the need for much heavy water lately, but the work force is being maintained in that regard. I have no complaint about that, as long as there is an equal concern shown for my constituency.

The Central Nova area has not been the beneficiary of the investment activity which has characterized the Halifax-Dartmouth metro area. Nor has it received the magnitude of economic assistance that has been allocated to Cape Breton. It is important to our country, as well as to individual Provinces, that all regions be allowed to develop and receive fairness in the allotment of Government resources and the establishment of priorities for development. Now is a good and proper time for the Government to demonstrate that sort of concern, and to expedite, in co-operation with management, appropriate orders for this vital industry. This industry needs to have more diversification, and needs some encouragement to prepare for any role it can play vis-à-vis offshore development.

What do we hear? Not long ago the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) suggested a possible steel fabrication plant in his adjacent constituency to provide 1,000 jobs. That is absolutely and patently ridiculous when there is a plant here sitting practically deserted that is quite capable of doing any kind of steel fabrication of heavy industry components. What we need, and I suggest this to Minister very emphatically, is less political fabrication in the was of some of these grandiose programs—make-work projects as their announced goal with very little lasting benefit—a little bit less manoeuvring and a little more concern for investing Government funds in existing industries that can produce useful equipment.

If the Minister has the kind of imagination and concern I think he has, he will look into this. He will make sure that any of the work that Hawker Siddeley gets because of its very expert and hard-working marketing development team in other parts of the world will not in any way be used against it keeping it from getting its fair share of domestic orders.

At the same time, I urge the Minister to make very sure that the Export Development Corporation steps forward to finance a possible order the company is in a very good position to receive from Nigeria. I remind him that this Government did exactly that to finance a grandiose statue for the socialist revolution in Algeria. In this case, this is a much more realistic priority.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I confirmed this afternoon there would be no special money from the budget for repair of rolling stock. One of the reasons is a philosophy which says you should not repair too much in anticipation, not knowing what you are going to use later on. That is something that happens very often. Another reason might be that already there is a need for the purchase of hopper cars and coal cars. The Hon. Member knows as well as I what the situation is. On the one hand we have the conventional manufacturers, Hawker Siddeley at Trenton, Marine Industries at Sorel, and National Steel Car at Hamilton. The philosophy is that normally rail cars are built by these conventional manufacturers.

I wish to give the Hon. Member a bit of information. For a number of reasons, it is believed that CN Transcona in Winnipeg should have a number of cars to build. The Hon. Member knows CN has been bidding for 970 cars, partly for the B.C. arm system.

Contrary to the impression given, the Transcona plant is not new in this field. It has already built all types of cars; gondola, flatcars, woodchip cars and so on. Contrary to what is often said, it does not require new facilities. Just as important, they will have 400 workers this summer whom they would like to see busy. CN has a moral obligation to try and provide work for its own people and to save the country $1.25 million in unemployment insurance at the same time. Therefore, that is some justification.

As I said at noon, within a few days I will be announcing the decision of Cabinet. As usual, nobody will be pleased because all Parties—Liberal, Conservative, NDP—have Members either in Hamilton, Winnipeg or Trenton. It will have to be Solomon's judgment as usual, or the announcer will be shot.

On the subject of Nigeria, I was not informed of the details. I will get information and advise the Hon. Member.

AGRICULTURE—COMPULSORY GRADING OF BEEF CARCASSES FOR EXPORT. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW SITUATION

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my participation in the Adjournment Debate relates to a question I raised on March 7, as reported at page 23505 of Hansard, about beef carcass grading and the evident compulsory requirement to use Agriculture Canada's red ribbon brand.

Lakeside Packers, a packing plant in Brooks in southern Alberta, had been advised that they would be required to use Agriculture Canada's red ribbon brand on the best quality grade of carcass they were exporting to the United States. The problem was that the customer was objecting because of the fact that the American colour brand for their best grade of carcass is blue. The Americans objected and Lakeside Packers approached me because it was their understanding that while this difference in colour could have been a problem, it had not traditionally been compulsory to brand their carcasses in red, and they were worried that it would be made compulsory. They objected to that and contacted me. I raised the matter in a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I am glad to see the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary ready to respond today.

It is my understanding, and I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will confirm this, that Agriculture Canada has now backed off on the requirement for red ribbon branding on carcasses that will be exported, provided the ultimate customer in the United States requests that no ribbon branding be used. It is also my understanding that the Government has backed off on the requirement for carcasses crossing interprovincial boundaries in Canada to be ribbon branded. If that is so, I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will confirm it. If that is the case, and I assume it is, I very much appreciate the fact that this situation has been corrected. I am sure the people from Lakeside Packers in Brooks, Alberta, who raised the issue also appreciate it.

I would like to comment briefly on another matter relating to beef carcass grading, the ribbing of carcasses in packing plants. Traditionally, carcasses were always ribbed at one location between two specific ribs. Recently there has been a move afoot to change the location of the ribbing by one rib. The industry as a whole was in reasonable agreement that this should be done. It is my understanding that this change has been agreed to by the industry, that it has been Gazetted and the time necessary to allow for complaints has now passed. Yet the change has still not been ordered by Agriculture Canada. I wonder what the hold-up is there. The Canadian Cattlemen's Association is still receiving queries from some of the people involved, especially in the Canadian Cattlemen's Association grading committee which deals with the subject. I believe the change would be worth-while and would make the carcass ribbing site correspond to the carcass ribbing site in the United States and in most other countries that we export to. It is a matter of convenience. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary can comment on that.

Two other items on grading deal with what I would call an unofficial beef grade, one known as A-1X. There is no such official grade, but A-1X traditionally means a very lean carcass from a Holstein steer or heifer. It is not an official grade and there is no move afoot in the form of a recommendation that such a grade be made official. I raise it only for the information of the Parliamentary Secretary. I am not advocating the introduction of an A-1X grade.

More recently there has been another unofficial grade, one that has been called an A-0 grade. This would be given to a very lean carcass from the beef breeds, not from the Holstein breeds. Again I would say that there has been no official representation from the beef grading committee of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association that would call for it to be made official. There is a slight difference with respect to the A-1X unofficial grade in that that committee did agree to study it. If the committee is studying it, it has not finished. I mention both these grades only to give the Parliamentary Secretary an opportunity to respond.

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, under the Canada Agriculture Products Standards Act interprovincial and export shipments of ungraded commodities are prohibited unless the regulations under the Act state otherwise. The beef grading regulations under this Act have been designed to give some flexibility to the marketing of carcasses to ensure that markets, both domestic and export, can be readily served. The proposal to amend these regulations has been published in the Canada

Gazette Part I with March 9 as the deadline for comments. The point raised by the Hon. Member is one in respect of which comments have been received and consultation has taken place with interested segments of the beef industry.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member mentioned one major exporter of beef carcasses, but there are many others. Exports must be both facilitated and controlled, to ensure that our trading partners always receive the quality product they expect. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has always been concerned about developing exports, and he will do everything in his power to ensure that this particular export sector is protected and monitored by means of the relevant regulations.

Mr. Speaker, the question concerns the amount of control and regulatory action to be applied. The colour of the ink used to identify quality carcasses is another factor.

In accordance with the proposed regulation, the five main sections of carcasses for export will be marked with a brown, one-inch square stamp. Furthermore, the entire side of Grade A carcasses will be marked with a roller, in red. These are the usual procedures applying to all Grade A carcasses. The proposed regulation provides for exceptions to this type of grading in very specific cases, namely, for the export market.

I believe the regulation be flexible enough to allow both for effective quality control of the product and for some leeway when shipping carcasses to domestic and foreign markets. As for the situation with the United States to which the Hon. Member was referring, what we have here is a difference in colour coding: they identify their superior quality products with blue ink, while we do with red. Of course, U.S. dealers who pay high prices for imported products do not want to see a red stamp, since to them, it is an indication of a lesser quality product. Consequently, the exemptions provided under the regulation would apply to red roller marking, while there would still be the five stamps to indicate quality control.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that once it is adopted, this regulation will provide the beef sector with one of the best grading systems in the world and allow us to continue the kind of trade relations in the North American beef sector that we have had for many years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 10, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that on the last day this motion was before the House, I was in the midst of my speech opposing the Government's coming back to the House with a borrowing Bill for $14.7 billion. I indicated that we were standing in the House of Commons a mere six weeks after the last time with a $16 billion borrowing Bill, whereas in actual fact all the Government required was $5 billion. The Government said that it would spend $26 billion. It already has $16 billion, so it only needs $10 billion. Since we know that the Government has $5 billion cash in the till, we should therefore be debating a borrowing Bill of $5 billion. Instead the Government has come to the House for $14.7 billion. That is intolerable and unacceptable and we will certainly not put up with it.

I rise today on another matter which is hanging over our heads. Later today we will discuss a closure motion on the Crow debate, Bill C-155. The West is in flames because once again it has been attacked by a Liberal Party with no Members or representation from the West. The Government has dared to bring in a Bill and after a mere two days of second reading—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I know this is a matter of difficult interpretation for the Chair because of the wide scope of the motion now before the House. Nevertheless, I invite the Hon. Member to relate his remarks to that motion.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I certainly will. In fact it is all tied together with the $14.7 billion borrowing Bill.

After the 1980 election the Liberals had lost all their 27 Members from western Canada. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first came into office, he had 27 western Members, including four from my Province of Alberta. They have lost them all, not because there is anything wrong with the people in the West, not because there is anything wrong with the Constitution, but because of deliberate Liberal Government policies which have split the country down the middle.

The borrowing Bill is one way to do this, but it goes beyond that. The National Energy Program was an attack on the West in particular but also an attack on all Canadians. It was put through the House by closure. Then we had the Constitution which was clearly a specific attack on the Provinces because it turned most of them into secondary and tertiary Provinces with no power to protect themselves. That Bill was put through by closure. Then we had Canagrex or a Bill which created a state trading corporation in violation of all our private industry corporations. All of this relates back to the borrowing Bill.

The Government can only get away with such things by the use of closure on the actual Bills and by borrowing billions of dollars from people. This must stop and on this Crow business we are determined that it will stop, because it is an attack on the livestock industry, on secondary processors and in fact on grain producers themselves. They will have to pay a lot more money at a time when the price of grain has gone from $6 per bushel down to $4.63. Their costs have risen almost 200 per cent, yet the price of grain has dropped by 50 per cent. It is an attack. The Government will not put it through by a two-day closure debate; the Progressive Conservative Party simply will not stand for it. It is intolerable. It is unacceptable. We will not accept taxation without representation.

Therefore, pursuant to Standing Order 29, I move:

That this House do now adjourn.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

[And the division bells having been rung.]

• (1800)

Madam Speaker: It is now almost 6 p.m. and before leaving the chair, I wish to assert its prerogative and make a brief statement. This morning, early in the day's proceedings, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) moved a motion for the adjournment of the House. A division was called, but the Whips have not indicated in the usual manner that the House is ready to vote. It is therefore my view that, in the circumstances which presently face us, the provisions of Standing Order 8(1) must supersede the adjournment motion moved earlier. I am sustained in this view by the citation on page 295 of the nineteenth edition. of Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice which states:

> Dilatory motions, i.e. motions for the adjournment of the House or of the debate or that the chairman do report progress, or do leave the Chair, pending at the moment of interruption, lapse without question put.

Our Standing Orders make no reference to this particular situation and the House has provided no solutions to this particular procedural problem. In the present circumstances, I believe it is in the interest of the House that I should take an initiative.

As far as the Chair is concerned, the dilatory motion moved this morning sought a decision of the House as to whether or not it should adjourn. The issue was as simple as that. As the House had not seen fit to vote on this motion by 6 p.m., I have decided that Standing Order 8(1) must come into force. The normal procedures of the House, including the right to move dilatory motions, are not thereby affected and will continue to be available to Hon. Members. The convention whereby the Whips indicate when the House is ready to vote is also not affected.

The motion has therefore lapsed and in terms of Standing Order 8(1) the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.02 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SYRIA—DENIAL OF EMIGRATION RIGHTS TO JEWISH CITIZENS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, approximately 4,500 Jews live in Syria. Syria is the only Arab country which, since 1948, has never officially permitted its Jewish citizens to leave. Alone among Arab countries, the Syrian Government continues to hold its Jewish community hostage.

The dashing of all hopes for legal emigration, combined with the deteriorating situation in Syria, has prompted Syrian Jews to turn in desperation to illegal avenues of escape. These illegal attempts to escape have led to arrests, harsh interrogation and long imprisonment of those caught by the authorities or suspected of aiding others to leave. Syria certainly would be especially opposed to the emigration of its Jews to Israel.

Even if they could get out, we must ask the awful question, as in the days before the Holocaust, "Where then could such refugees go?" I suggest that this is a subject of humanitarian and urgent concern to which Canada should direct its attention. There are various things we can look to our Government to do in addition to its present efforts. We should intensify our monitoring and surveillance of the situation. We should try to remind Syria of its obligations under the United Nations Charter of Human Rights to allow freedom of emigration. We should let Syria know that we are ready to open our doors in a special way to receive Syrian Jews in Canada, and we should encourage the many Canadian sponsors who are ready and willing to receive and support them to come forth.

PENITENTIARIES

EDMONTON INSTITUTION—SECURITY STAFF GRIEVANCES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, it has been well in excess of one year that I have been continuously bringing to the attention of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) concerns relating to the Edmonton maximum security institution and the security aspects of that institution. Those concerns were started initially with the escape of Harvey Andre from the Edmonton maximum institution.

My specific concerns relate not only to the prison guards but also to the individuals who live around the institution. The prison guards have consistently asked for an audience with the Solicitor General so that they might relate directly to him their concerns in order that both the security of the prison guards and of the residents will be secured, concerns such as the inadequacy of the electric fence package in place in the maximum institution at Edmonton which cost in excess of $1 million, the lack of arms being granted to those posted at hazardous posts within the institution, and the overcrowding of a number of the bunking facilities whereby two inmates are now housed where there should only be one.

The new duty schedules have not only caused a loss of family time, but have broken up traditional squads that have worked together. Unfortunately these pleas have fallen on deaf ears when they are communicated to the Solicitor General's Department in Ottawa. Local management has been very—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CHILE—PLIGHT OF POLITICAL DETAINEES

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, last week in Santiago, Chile, and in many other Chilean cities there were mass arrests of people who have been held without trial. Although some of them have been released, Amnesty International still says there are hundreds who are being held under a special provision of the Pinochet Constitution of 1981 which says that for 20 days they may be detained without charge. During this period of time Amnesty is afraid that there will be torture, as has taken place in that country before.

At this time I call upon the Government of Canada to use every possible method that it can to bring pressure on the Chilean Government to give out a complete list of the detainees to make sure that those who are being held will come before competent courts or be released immediately, and that they all be treated humanely while they are in prison. I also ask the Cabinet to reconsider a decision made by the National Energy Board to send 440,000 barrels of oil to Chile. I ask that that sale be seriously looked at again and stopped until the human rights situation in Chile improves.

HEALTH

USE OF HEROIN MEDICINALLY

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, during my three years as Chairman of the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, I have received a number of representations, and I would like to draw the attention of my hon. colleagues to a situation in our hospitals, where thousands of chronically ill patients and especially cancer patients, could be helped by alleviating their pain through the controlled administration of heroin. I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to consider the medical use of heroin for a trial period and as part of a specific policy within specialized hospitals, as it is now being used in about thirty countries, including Great Britain. It is a pain killer that has been proved to be effective, the standards for its use could be determined by the authorities of the Department of National Health and Welfare and its use could be recommended within a relatively short time, particularly since this practice already exists in some thirty countries.

FISHERIES

ALLOCATION OF SPECIAL RECOVERY PROJECT FUNDS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I want for a moment to protest the cynical manner in which the Government is playing political games with capital funds allocated under the budget and the recovery program. The budget provided for a special fund of $2.4 billion, and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans received $140 million of it. However, it now appears that the Cabinet has instructed that almost all of that money be spent in constituencies represented by Liberals and Liberals alone. In the case of Nova Scotia this means that fishermen who live in ridings such as the one I have the honour to represent are being discriminated against by public taxpayers' dollars even though their needs are the most acute.

On the behalf of those people, I ask the Government why it refuses to allocate a single dollar of that special fund for desperately needed wharves, breakwaters, and other harbour facilities, in Dartmouth-Halifax East, when a $52 million office building in the Minister's riding of Halifax has been announced? Why did the Government allocate to a region which has only 6 per cent of all fishermen in Canada and also provides only 6 per cent of the fish catch, $96.4 million of that $140 million? I think that the answer is obvious to the people of Canada. The way the Government is playing with people's lives and trying to buy support with public money in a feeble attempt to save its own political life makes a mockery of democracy.

THE FRANCHISE

ABSENTEE BALLOTING

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, through you I wish to call to the attention of the House a rather unfair provision in the Canada Elections Act that disenfranchises tens of thousands of Canadians. It is my hope that the Government, through the Minister responsible, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), will call this matter to the attention of the Chief Electoral Officer who would be requested to put in his forthcoming report to Parliament a proposal to provide an absentee balloting process in place of the proxy system that is currently contained in the Elections Act.

The proxy procedure disenfranchises patients in acute care hospitals, loggers, people living outside Canada, miners and fishermen, and in fact it can be demonstrated quite successfully, I think, that the disenfranchisement of many Canadians at election time has in fact altered the outcome a number of elections.

It is noted that the Constitution provides every Canadian the opportunity to vote, and the present provisions of the Elections Act do in fact take that opportunity away from a number of Canadians on a discriminatory basis. It is my hope that the Government, through the responsible Minister, will make this point known to the Chief Electoral Officer so that he will in fact report to us on a proposal for an absentee balloting system in the forthcoming amendments to the Elections Act.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE LEADERSHIP CANDIDATE'S STATEMENT ON MEDICARE

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, we all smile at the degree of political license taken from time to time by our Conservative colleagues who are in pursuit of the Tory leadership. However, on occasion their utterings exceed well-intentioned enthusiasm and are more properly characterized as distorted attempts to rewrite history. When this happens we must set the record straight.

Such was the case last weekend when, according to Monday's Toronto Star, my good friend and former colleague from Toronto city politics, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), described the Progressive Conservatives as a Party of social justice that brought social programs like medicare to Canadians, and he referred to medicare as the finest program this country has ever seen.

While we on this side of the House welcome the compliment paid to medicare, Madam Speaker, we cannot let the suggestion that the Tories brought Canadians medicare go unchallenged. The facts are that the Medical Care Act was passed in 1966 under the leadership of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, and the Bill was actually moved by the current Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen). The only opposition in the House to that Bill came from Tory and Social Credit Members. The medicare program has been strengthened during the tenure of the current Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the Tories did not do anything during their sojourn in office. These are the facts, Madam Speaker, and Tory leadership candidates should be advised that their high flights of fantasy will not go unnoticed and unchallenged.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

RESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister perhaps I could put my question to the Minister of National Revenue who, I understand, reports to the House with respect to Canadair. In view of the rather sad saga that continues with respect to Canadair, would the Minister indicate what he can tell the House about the resignation of Mr. Kearns, what severance arrangements have been made concerning Mr. Kearns, and who his replacement will be as chief executive officer of Canadair?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, as far as Mr. Kearns' resignation is concerned, I have no comments. I feel that any comments would be up to Mr. Kearns himself. As far as the conditions regarding his early retirement are concerned, I have no details. I shall, in fact, be informed of these conditions at an information session tomorrow. Regarding his replacement, as soon as that information is available, I shall be pleased to give it to the House and to the Hon. Member.

[English]

INDEBTEDNESS OF CORPORATION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I see the Prime Minister has come into the House so I shall put my supplementary question to him. The Minister of National Revenue has attempted to answer three questions, but the Prime Minister has an over view with respect to Canadair.

In view of the October, 1982, Cabinet document that set out in detail some of the problems that Canadair was living with, including the fact that its indebtedness might reach $2.3 billion, would the Prime Minister indicate to the House why the then president of Canadair, Mr. Kearns, was allowed to come before a Committee of the House in November and not make full disclosure of the plight of Canadair? In particular, why was he allowed to make estimates that have turned out to be quite wrong concerning the break-even point for Canadair, the number of sales for Canadair, and the true magnitude of the calamity regarding that company?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I did not, of course, attend that Committee meeting. I am convinced that Members had complete and total freedom to ask Mr. Kearns' views on a number of things. It appears that some of his views leaned to the optimistic side. I think he would have to answer for his answers. The Government certainly did not give him any instructions to answer the questions of Committee Members with anything but the truth as he saw it.

REASON FOR LOSSES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Since he has been alerted to the problems of Canadair, he undoubtedly knows that the public and the House have not been furnished with an annual report of Canadair for 16 months. Would the Prime Minister indicate to the House what is the problem? Is it true that the auditors were hesitant about signing an unqualified certificate with regard to the statements?

Second, can he explain to the House why, when an American company, Gulfstream, was able to make $86 million selling a product competitive with that of Canadair, Canadair had to run up millions of dollars in losses in 1982?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member can speculate upon the latter part of his question as well as I can. Most of the aircraft companies in the industrialized world have been losing money at this time. It is possible that the one noted by the Hon. Member has made money. So much the better. If we had been able to make money we would have preferred that, but I do not think the Hon. Member can express astonishment that there has been a serious curtailment of purchases by the market of the type of aircraft that Canadair was producing.

CERTIFICATION OF CORPORATION'S PROFIT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister as well. The Prime Minister perhaps knows that P. J. Aird, Senior Vice-President of Finance for Canadair, certified to the Finance Committee on November 16 that Canadair had a profit after taxes of $1,435,000. Can he advise this House why it is going to be necessary, probably later today, to receive Supplementary Estimates "A" indicating an advance to Canadair in excess of a $1 billion, if that certification by Mr. Aird was an honest certification? If it was not an honest certification, why is Mr. Aird still employed by Canadair?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I must repeat my answer to the earlier question, that I was not in attendance at that Committee and I do not know the details of the submissions by the various witnesses. As to the question of the officers who are chosen by the directors to administer Canadair, we have an example of the directors changing one officer. I am sure they would be made acquainted with the suggestion of the Hon. Member regarding other officers.

FINANCIAL FIGURES PRESENTED BY OFFICIALS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): The Prime Minister will know what Thorne Riddell, the accountants for Canadair, certified in the year ending December 31, 1981, that the company made a profit of over $3 million after taxes. This statement, which misled the Government, misled the House of Commons and its committees, was used as the basis to borrow or certify loans for $1,350,000,000, and an advance last year of $200 million to the company. Why was the House of Commons misled by these officers of the company and by the firm of Thorne Riddell, and what action does the Government propose to take against the auditors for misrepresentation, or against the directors for misrepresentation? After all, we are going to be asked to bail out this company to the extent of well over $1 billion because of these misrepresentations.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would not concede that there was an attempt to misrepresent the facts or to mislead the Members, to use the Hon. Member's words. I am sure that the presentation made then by the Vice-President of Finance, and the certification of the state of their balance sheet, was made by honourable and respectable people. As I answered the Hon. Member's colleagues, it may have been there was a bit more optimism about the prospects of future sales than proved to be justified. That is one of the reasons why we have made the very important decision to transfer over-all review for the operations of Canadair, de Havilland, and other Crown corporations, into the control of the CDIC where there will be much greater attention paid to the business aspects of these corporations.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

DEPLOYMENT OF SOVIET MISSILES IN EUROPE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my questions are directed to the Prime Minister and concern his meeting with Mr. Gorbachev of the Soviet Union. Yesterday, before a joint House-Senate Committee, Mr. Gorbachev failed to answer questions put to him concerning the destabilizing action taken by the Soviet Union in deploying SS-20 missiles in Europe. Would the Prime Minister tell the House if he raised this important matter in his meeting with Mr. Gorbachev and, if so, what answer did he get?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not believe you would permit me, within the rules, to comment on the proceedings before a parliamentary commitee. That is not provided for by the rules. However, I can state that I discussed armament questions very sensibly with Mr. Gorbachev, and I am prepared to answer questions to the best of my knowledge if they are asked by the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I assume the Prime Minister simply did not hear the first part of the question. I was not asking him to comment on proceedings which went on before the joint committee. I was asking him explicitly about his conversation with Mr. Gorbachev. I will repeat that question by adding it to my second question.

PRIME MINISTER'S TALKS WITH SOVIET OFFICIAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Did the Prime Minister raise with Mr. Gorbachev the destabilizing action taken by the Soviet Union in deploying SS-20 missiles sometime ago in Europe? If so, what answer did he get?

• (1425)

Did he also raise with Mr. Gorbachev the possibility of fusing discussions about tactical and strategic weapons at the Geneva talks, considering that our former Ambassador, Mr. Ignatieff, among others, has said that for serious steps to be taken toward nuclear disarmament the talks have to cover both strategic and tactical weapons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the first question the answer is an emphatic yes, I did raise with Mr. Gorbachev the question of the reason why they introduced the SS-20s. I assume he gave me the same answer as he gave the Committee.

An Hon. Member: There was no answer.

Mr. Trudeau: I understand there was no answer. Well, Madam Speaker, I would not want to interpret Mr. Gorbachev's thinking on this, but in essence the answer he gave me was that they did not consider that the SS-20s were an escalation compared to the SS-4s and SS-5s. That has been an answer that the Soviets have been giving for some time. I must add it is not an answer that most European leaders I have talked to find satisfying.

What I also raised with Mr. Gorbachev is the fact that even in the Kvitsinsky-Nitze walk-in-the-woods suggestion for a compromise, the Cruise missile, which is of such concern to the Hon. Member and his Party, was not considered as dangerous or as destabilizing a weapon as the Pershing IIs. As a matter of fact, Madam Speaker, I asked Mr. Gorbachev if it was not true that the Cruise missiles were something that they were not as concerned about as the Pershing IIs, and the fact that in the draft agreement which came out of the walk-in-the-woods there was a recognition, at least tentative and in draft form, by the Soviet negotiator that the Cruise could be deployed but not the Pershing II, and was that not an indication they were not as concerned with the Cruise missile as perhaps the Hon. Member and his Party are.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I just want to say to the Prime Minister that we in this Party, and I think most Canadians, are concerned about the deployment of all kinds of nuclear weapons. We do not make that kind of distinction.

HARASSMENT OF PEACE GROUP IN SOVIET UNION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, in taking time to answer that question the Prime Minister did not reply to my second question. I hope he will come back to that.

My third question concerns the right of groups anywhere in the world to act freely in mobilizing public opinion even if it means going against their Government on the important issue of nuclear disarmament. There is, as the Prime Minsiter knows, an important group of this kind in the Soviet Union, a Moscow based group, which has been attempting to establish mutual relationships between the people of the Soviet Union and the United States. My question concerns the harassment this group has been sujbected to by the Government of the Soviet Union.

Did the Prime Minister raise that important question with Mr. Gorbachev when he spoke with him, and specifically did he make an appeal concerning Mr. Batovrin and Professor Medvekov who have been incarcerated in the Soviet Union, to see if they could be freed in order to pursue, independently of their Government, the issue of nuclear disarmament?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, I regret I did not.

THREAT TO JOBS FROM NEW TECHNOLOGY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last week the Minister, in a speech to the Canadian Advanced Technology Association, expressed his fears over the possibility or prospect of violence as a result of workers being displaced by high technology, or as a result of jobs being made redundant by the new high technology. He went on to state that there would be violence unless Governments and employers took steps now.

• (1430)

Now that the Minister has identified the problem, a problem which we all foresee and which has been highlighted by others, what leadership is he providing on behalf of the Government of Canada to bring employers and other levels of Government together to try to avert what could in fact be our summer of discontent?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in terms of the Hon. Member's initial statement, I was not projecting any mass sense of disturbance. I am saying that there can be a potential of some real job disruption unless there is real co-operation and partnership between major parts of the economy. If the Hon. Member is asking for a demonstration of that, I would point out to him that just yesterday I signed a contract with a high technology consortium in Ontario to establish a new training institute to help retrain workers in high technology development under the Skills Growth Fund of the National Training Act. The National Training Act has given us the basis for starting those kinds of acts of partnership and co-operation that we are discussing. What we need now is more acts of co-operation on the part of the Opposition.

Mr. McGrath: I will tell the Minister that the Opposition is ready to co-operate if the Government will show us some leadership or some indication of leadership in an area in which, according to consensus, there is cause for real concern.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Can the Minister of Employment and Immigration tell the House what the Government proposes to do about the prospects of long-term youth unemployment? I can refer the Minister to studies which were released last week. I can refer him to studies commissioned by the Government in which fear was expressed that young people without the prospects of jobs will turn to drugs and alcohol, and, subsequently, violence, unless something is done. One sociologist said, "Essentially, we are talking about a new lost generation. Collectively, we may see political riots and disturbances from a group which feels left out." The rate of unemploment amongst our young people is 21.5 per cent, with no prospects. They are the left out group.

May I ask the Minister what is the Government doing? Are there any studies by his Department or by his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to provide some answers to what we see as being very dangerous signals of a potential social problem of great proportions?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, unlike the Hon. Member, we are not just concerned about undertaking studies. We are concerned about undertaking action. As he is well aware, in the last budget we introduced a number of new initiatives to deal specifically with the problem of young people coming on to the job market.

Under the new Access Program we will work, again in close co-operation with the private sector, to develop a job experience training program so that young people may obtain first-time jobs. I am now meeting with different business groups across the country, labour groups, to discuss how that program, which is scheduled for implementation in September, can be brought forward with the maximum amount of participation by the private sector so that we can bring tens of thousands of young people into that first time job experience. That is only one example of a number of initiatives we have undertaken to provide for both training and on the job experience for young people, to meet what we all agree will be a very serious issue.

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I am very happy to see that the Soviet delegation is here in Ottawa. Maybe they will learn something. They are watching democracy in action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Ring the bells.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member has been recognized to ask a question.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That's just his preamble.

Mr. Jelinek: My question, Madam Speaker, is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the Minister knows, the task force report on the auto industry will be presented to him tomorrow morning. The recommendations in the report are basically the same ones which I have been making in the House for some two years now, namely, providing incentives for offshore importers to invest in Canada and, second, to establish, perhaps by way of legislation, Canadian content regulations for any auto maker importing over 3,000 units per year into our country.

In short, the report generally recommends that the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact be expanded—

Madam Speaker: Order. How many times must I tell the Hon. Member that he has been recognized only to ask a question? If he does not proceed to ask his question right now, without the slightest preamble, without one word which is not a question, I will recognize another Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: Some democracy!

Mr. Blais: Give him a chance. He hasn't been in the House for three weeks.

Mr. Jelinek: I should say, "Democracy in action". But I will say that my question to the Minister is simply this: because the Government has systematically rejected our recommendations, I am now wondering whether we can take it for granted that the Minister will reject the recommendations by the task force, or whether he will change his mind and take action which will be beneficial to keeping and creating jobs in Canada in this very important sector of our industry.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first with respect to the Hon. Member's preamble, if he wanted to see democracy in action, he and his colleagues should have been here yesterday when we were prepared for a full day's debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Come to Saskatoon, to my riding, and say that.

Mr. Lumley: The leaders are alive over there, Madam Speaker.

Second, I have not yet seen the recommendations from the automotive task force. I look forward to seeing those recommendations in the task force report on which they worked many dedicated hours. I look forward to their report tomorrow.

EXPIRATION OF CANADA-JAPAN AGREEMENT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, since the Minister has—Madam Speaker, you are standing up before I have even said anything.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: Yesterday was closure, like in the Soviet Union.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: In view of the Minister's answer which, of course, comes as no surprise, and because the agreement with Japan on voluntary restraints of auto exports expires very shortly, in fact, at the end of June of this year, I want to ask the Minister what action he and his Government will take now—that means immediately—to support the auto industry in Canada and try to keep the jobs in that industry or possibly to create new jobs in that very important sector of our economy. What action will the Government take now?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, who is responsible for the negotiations with the Japanese Government regarding quotas, will undoubtedly be very successful in his usual manner. However, I want to remind the Hon. Member and his colleagues that if it was not for my predecessor, the former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the action that he convinced the Government to take with respect to the Chrysler Corporation, Chrysler Canada, would not be as successful as it is today, protecting 11,000 jobs right across the country.

HEALTH

USE OF HEROIN MEDICINALLY

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister for National Health and Welfare and concerns the controlled medical use of heroin as a pain killer, in order to relieve the pain of thousands of chronically ill patients, particularly in cancer cases, and I see that the former Chairman of the Committee of Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, the Hon. Member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle), seems to agree. When I was responsible for chairing the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, I received many representations—

Madam Speaker: Order! These details are certainly most interesting, but they are not appropriate in a question.

Mr. Roy: Yes, Madam Speaker. I received representations and that is the purpose of my question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I would like to ask the Minister whether she intends to consider, within a reasonable length of time, the controlled medical use of heroin, and if so, what are the standards and the general criteria that exist now or would have to be established in order to approve the use of this drug in Canada in specific cases, as is recommended in thirty countries, including Great Britain.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, Canadian doctors have not had a long experience in the use of heroin as a pain killer. The approach I announced, and which I can confirm, consists in clinical trials, in palliative care units for terminal patients across the country, lasting between twelve and eighteen months and to be carried out according to the same scientific protocol which we are now drafting. I have also asked a committee of experts to prepare a monograph setting out the advantages and drawbacks of all painkillers, which will be printed for the benefit of physicians. As for use on a more general scale, I am not in a position to discuss this at the present time.

ROLE OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I want to join with many Canadians in congratulating the Minister of National Health and Welfare for taking the initiatives she has with respect to this experiment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): If there is approval by the Chairman of the Committee on Health and Welfare I would join him in that approval. As a matter of fact I have a Private Members' Bill asking that that initiative be taken.

What was intended by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in her statement on this subject on May 16 when she said, "Committee members are currently reviewing data on the various aspects of the issue and have invited all interested parties to submit briefs"? I presume that is to the Committee. Is it the intention of the Government thereafter to allow the standing Committee of this House to look at this situation from the point of view of the briefs that have been submitted and the reports that will have been made at that time so that the House, and this Committee in particular, can be used as a forum for many other Canadians such as medical practitioners and others who may not be parties but are interested?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member can correct me if I am wrong, but I recall that he requested a similar reference to the standing Committee a long time ago. I must say that I did not consider it at this point and I think that the question has a definite very emotional dimension which will not help clarify the debate and we must all form a consensus on that.

If it is acceptable to everyone, I prefer to set up a committee of experts which will receive expert briefs on the various painkillers and find out what is known mainly to Canadians through the scientific literature of other countries on heroin, in order to prepare a monograph for practical use by physicians.

In other words, we took the pragmatic approach. For the time being I think that approach, complemented by the clinical trial results, will help all of us. At a later stage we may reconsider that suggestion which the Hon. Member just made.

RAILWAYS

OFFERS TO BUY UNITED STATES RAILROADS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, my questions are directed to the Minister of Transport. The Department of Justice in the United States has recommended that the highest bid of $120 million from Canadian Pacific to buy 770 miles of the Rock Island and Pacific Railway between Minneapolis and Kansas City be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

As well, Canadian National is offering $250 million to buy up 3,100 miles of the bankrupt Milwaukee Road railway lines in the United States.

Could the Minister explain to the House how CN and CP can afford the capital to buy up U.S. railways at a time when they say that grain producers and taxpayers should pay to fix up tracks in Canada because the railways here cannot afford to do it?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, Canada is a neighbour of the United States and the United States is a neighbour of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: That is a real revelation.

Mr. Pepin: I thought I would have to start at the beginning. There is a tremendous amount of trade between the two. That is the second point. Consequently, it is occasionally judged to be to the advantage of Canada to buy and operate railways in the United States, and CN's interest in the Milwaukee railway follows that premise. It has not been bought yet and, when it is, my hon. friend will hear about it.

Mr. Benjamin: This is a great way to bail out the Reagan administration which has guaranteed the debts of those bankrupt railroads.

SHIPMENT OF CANADIAN GRAIN TO UNITED STATES PORTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, would the Minister tell us why he would allow the two railways to go into this kind of expansion in the United States when they say they cannot afford to upgrade in Canada? This expansion will allow Canadian railroads to ship grain and other commodities to U.S. ports and other destinations more cheaply than they can to Canadian ports over Canadian railway lines, and will jeopardize 35,000 jobs in this country. Will he allow the railroads to give priority to investment in the United States over investment in our country?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if my hon. friend looks at the record of profits that CN has made from the Grand Trunk, for example, he will be quite impressed. Those have been added to the revenues of CN and have contributed to the generally good financial position of CN.

This situation has existed in the past, and Canada has been very active in the field of railway transportation. The United States has been slower in deregulating. Canada has used its know-how in order to operate a number of lines profitably in the United States. This has been beneficial for trade between Canada and the United States. I do not know why my hon. friend would resent Canadian Crown corporations doing well in the United States.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—NEWSPAPER REPORT OF PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. At present Canada and the United States are trying to resolve diplomatically some very vexing problems such as the Garrison Dam, the Clean Air Act, East Coast fishing rights, and mineral rights within our 200-mile commercial zone, just to name a few.

Does the Prime Minister think it is helpful for him to take a cheap shot at the President of the United States by saying, when speaking of peace demonstrators:

> They are demonstrating against what they see as the policy of an American President who has, rightly or wrongly, been perceived as warlike or so hostile against the Soviet Union that he can't be trusted. Unfortunately, President Reagan and some around him have given some justification for those fears.

Could the Prime Minister tell us what he hopes to accomplish by these remarks?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I really cannot agree with the Hon. Member's suggestion that this was a cheap shot. Surely the posture of the United States in the negotiating process is a very important one to Canadians. The reason we are supporting that general approach of NATO is that we are bound by a two-track agreement. One of those two tracks is that our side negotiate very seriously toward disarmament by the United States, in the same way that we expect the Soviet Union to negotiate very seriously.

If the Hon. Member does not accept my explanation for the fact that there has been an increase in protests by the peace movements in Canada in the past couple of years because they are concerned about some of the statements made by the United States administration, I think he will have to find some other explanation.

I do know that there are some 5,000 nuclear missiles which have been deployed in Germany for quite some time. This did not lead to the kind of peace demonstrations that we have been seeing in Germany, Canada, and the United States in the past couple of years. I think it is not unreasonable to suggest, as I suggested to the Americans when I visited them a couple of weeks ago, that their statements about the Soviets being an evil power, and so on, are not conducive to fair and unpassionate negotiations.

I must add that I made the same remark to Secretary Gorbachev when I met him today, that some of the statements by Pravda or some of the Soviet leaders about the Americans are very excessive and not conducive to peaceful negotiations between both sides.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: A cheap shot is one that the recipient is unable, unwilling or unlikely to respond to.

PRIME MINISTER'S VIEWS OF U.S. PRESIDENT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister's recent behaviour concerning nuclear disarmament has veered all over the place. His answers to questions in the House and elsewhere, as in his letter to editors, have been very supportive of the two-track policy and testing the Cruise.

• (1450)

Three weeks ago at the White House he said:

I've been encouraged by the steps that you've taken Mr. President, in the past months when you proposed an interim solution different from the zero option, and when you proposed a series of confidence-building measures.

How can he equate that remark with his interview remarks in The Toronto Star that people are justified in believing the President is so warlike and hostile that he cannot be trusted?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as to the Hon. Member's definition of a cheap shot being one that the other party is not able to respond to, I repeat what I just said to the Hon. Member and to the House, that I made these remarks in the United States and that if they cared to answer them they could. As a matter of fact, they have answered them. As a matter of fact, in the last months and more we have not seen that type of statement from the United States. That is why, when I was talking in the United Stated in the past couple of weeks, I indicated that I thought their current approach, notably their departure from the zero option to some intermediate stage, was a step in the right direction. But that does not explain why, over the past two years, there has been an increase in the peace movements in the various countries which I mentioned.

I repeat, I gave an explanation which I think the Hon. Member would hear from most peace movement leaders if he cared to talk to them. That is much of their motivation. They do not think that the United States people are warlike, but they are concerned that the leaders down there have made some statements which are not conducive to fruitful negotiations. I repeat, I made the same remark in discussions today to the Soviet leader who is visiting Canada.

PRIME MINISTER'S VIEWS OF SOVIET LEADERS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, cutting through the words of those answers, the fact remains that the Prime Minister has elaborated for the benefit of The Toronto Star on his distrust of President Reagan's policies and his doubt about the President's competency to deal with the Soviets. Would he give us now his candid opinions about Mr. Andropov and the trustworthiness of the Soviets in international relations? When he is doing that, and assuming that he uses similar language, would he explain how this trustworthiness has been demonstrated in Afghanistan and Poland, in the events leading up to the invasion of one country and the enormous Soviet pressure placed upon the other?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not think the question of the Hon. Member is one which I can be expected to justify. I am not an advocate. I do not carry a brief either for the United States or for the Soviet Union. If either side makes mistakes, I think it is the right and perhaps even the duty of the Canadian Government to point out those mistakes as seen from our point of view.

If the Hon. Member has to make a case against the Soviet Union, or if other Members have a case to make against the United States, they should make it on their own feet without asking me to defend or to attack it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I was asking the Prime Minister to give us, as Prime Minister, the benefit of his candid opinions. Since he has been so free in expressing those opinions about President Reagan, we expected him to express them similarly about the Soviets.

RUSSIAN SPHERES OF INFLUENCE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, in one more area, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he feels that the Soviets are more to be trusted in international negotiations than is the United States? With respect to his remarks about spheres of influence, which I believe was the phrase he used in The Toronto Star interview, that the Soviets wish to defend, and apparently the Prime Minister feels Americans ought to recognize, does he include recognition, as far as Canada's support of those policies are concerned, of those spheres of influence including Afghanistan, Poland, the Middle East and Central America, as among the spheres of influence that should be left to the Soviets?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as regards the first part of the question, I would merely say that the interview which the Hon. Member may have read in The Toronto Star gives a series of statements that appear completely disjoined. I think the reader may have been misled by the fact that none of the questions is asked. The Star chose to reproduce my answers without even indicating that many of those answers were interspaced with convoluted and complicated questions. That may explain part of the impressions the Hon. Member has gained.

In so far as the second part of his question regarding spheres of influence is concerned, I think it is the duty of a country like Canada, which is not a great power and which has certain values it intends to see upheld in the world, to try to approach the actions of either great power in an even-handed way.

I was in the United States when President Reagan made his speech about Central America, which he described as his front yard. I guess that puts the Yukon in the back yard, but that is another matter. He described Central America as the front yard of the United States. I publicly supported that approach. I think the United States does have strategic interests, notably in that part of the hemisphere, that the Soviet Union should recognize and respect. But I say "even-handed" because I think the converse is true. If one can say that about the United States, which is a great power and has areas of strategic interest, I think one has to recognize the same thing about the Soviet Union, that it also has spheres of strategic interest.

Mr. Epp: In Afghanistan?

Mr. Trudeau: In Central America?

Mr. Epp: In Afghanistan?

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member asks about Afghanistan. I am as distressed about what happened in Afghanistan as I am distressed about some things that have happened in Central America.

An Hon. Member: What about Poland?

Mr. Trudeau: We are not a great power. We have this luxury. If Hon. Members want to support the United States in defining Central America as a sphere of influence for them, or at least an area of strategic interest, they have to do the same thing about the Soviet Union which is also a great power.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—NEWSPAPER REPORT OF PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, it may well be that The Toronto Star article was put together in a disjoined fashion, and it may well be that the Prime Minister may be correct on the misrepresentation of his answers as a result, but does he not believe that the assertion or suggestion that President Reagan's more warlike stance justifies those dealing with his administration in coming to the conclusion that it is deserving of a lack of trust and not in keeping with the kind of even-handed approach he encourages us to believe the Canadian Government should be taking with respect to both these powers? If he uses the expressions, on the one hand, with respect to the Reagan administration, I am wondering whether he would be so rash as to use the same kind of statements with respect to the Soviets.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can only say that if the Hon. Member and his Party are of the view that there have not been some excessive statements coming from the United States administration—

Mr. Nielsen: Warlike.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Madam Speaker, including the demonstration explosion of a Soviet machine, perhaps over the North Sea—

An Hon. Member: A Soviet machine?

● (1500)

Mr. Trudeau: A Soviet nuclear engine. If they do not think that there have been some excessive statements by some people in authority in the United States that the United States could win a nuclear war, I would say their Party is, as usual, vastly out of sync, not only with every European leader I happen to know, but also with most of the Canadian people.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

ILLEGAL GATING PROCEDURE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Yesterday the Supreme Court ruled 9-0 from the bench that the National Parole Board's practice of arbitrarily gating certain prisoners released on mandatory supervision is totally illegal. In light of this expected decision, what action does the Minister intend to take in this House to provide a firm, carefully drafted legislative foundation for gating which, while recognizing the very great difficulty in predicting violence, would set out very clearly defined criteria, and provide for full judicial review on the merits?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member characterizes the decision as one which must have been very easy for the Supreme Court of Canada to reach. I simply remind him that there were conflicting decisions of courts of appeal and of the Federal Court of this country. It was on that basis that the Supreme Court of Canada agreed to hear the case.

As to taking legislative steps to establish gating as a valid power of the National Parole Board, the Hon. Member should look to see what is happening in the other place where, some time ago, I took Bill S-32 which now contains provisions which validate and provide a legislative framework for gating, including along with it procedural safeguards that, in the opinions I have, fully comply with requirements of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, it took the Supreme Court about ten minutes to arrive at that decision.

Instead of trying to amend the legislation before the Senate, which has been unanimously condemned by witnesses and may even be rejected by the Senate Committee, will the Minister bring forward a Bill in this House containing the essential elements of precise criteria and full judicial review on the merits, and will the Minister at the same time assure the House that those few potentially violent prisoners denied mandatory supervision will receive extensive rehabilitation so that there will not be an even greater risk to the community after they are simply warehoused for a longer period of time?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I do not know how they can receive extensive rehabilitation if they have been freed. They are in the community under mandatory supervision. That is the point. So far as introducing additional legislation in the House is concerned legislation has been introduced in Parliament which I consider satisfactory. It has the support of this Government. I hope that the Senate will deal quickly with it and send it to this Chamber where, in the Committee, the Hon. Member can make his points about it. If he has some improvements to suggest that provide greater safeguards of the right of the individual, and also adequate protection for the public, I am sure that the members of the Committee will be pleased to hear them.

Order Paper Questions

MR. TAYLOR—REQUEST FOR PASSAGE OF BILL C-671

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I am herewith presenting a petition signed by another 461 Canadian citizens asking for the consideration of Bill C-671 and the passing of same in order that Clifford Robert Olson may secure his just due and be executed. When we did have capital punishment in this country, there was provision made for exceptions by a court order not to execute a person. Now that we do not have capital punishment in Canada, there should also be provision made for the execution of persons who have deliberately planned and murdered a number of people, as in the case of Clifford Robert Olson.

MR. KENNETH GARNER

Question No. 4,715—Mrs. Cossitt:

1. Did Mr. Kenneth Garner of Vancouver, British Columbia try to question the Prime Minister at the University of British Columbia on December 2, 1982 and was he prevented from doing so by plainclothesmen who evicted him from the building?

2. (a) Did the RCMP visit Mr. Garner at his home on January 21, 1983 (b) did they advise him at that time that, if he tried to question the Prime Minister again, he would be arrested for creating a disturbance and, if so, what were all the reasons for the RCMP taking such action?

3. Did the Solicitor General advise the RCMP officers to take such action and, if not, what were the names and job designations of all those persons who did advise them?

4. Is it the policy of the Solicitor General to prevent Canadians from exercising their right to freedom of speech and, if so, what are all the reasons for this policy?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): In so far as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is concerned:

Mr. Garner was advised that his actions on December 2, 1982 may have constituted an offence under the Criminal Code, specifically causing a disturbance by swearing in a public place. Hon. J.-J. X-RAY MACHINE FOR FREDERICTON AIRPORT

Question No. 4,784—Mr. Howie:

1. Was an order placed for an X-Ray machine to examine carry-on baggage of passengers for the Fredericton, New Brunswick airport and, if so, on what date was the order first placed?

ALLOTTED DAYS

PROCEDURE RESPECTING DESIGNATION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the observance of the proprieties of the House, the maintenance of its authority and the management of its business, require that once an allotted day has been designated by the Government House Leader, and the House has entered upon the notice period preceding the allotted day, the designated allotted day must be proceeded with.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) and also with the House Leader for the New Democratic Party (Mr. Deans). In view of the fact that there were certain other items which occupied us over the last few hours, I believe that it would be in order for me to move:

That the House do now proceed to order No. 62 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to support that motion. We want to make it clear that we were ready to debate this motion today, but we are always happy to accommodate the Opposition Leader and are prepared to go along with his request.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly not want to break up this love affair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair asks the Hon. Member for Simcoe North to repeat his motion.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do have it in writing. I move:

That the House do now proceed to Order No. 62 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The House has heard the motion put by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North, seconded by the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis). Is the motion adopted? The Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) on a point of order.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, it would help if we knew what we were voting on. I understood it to be Notice of Motion No. 62, which I read as being a motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau).

Mr. Smith: I believe it was No. 262.

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry, No. 262.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That would be Public Bill No. 62 relating to Bill C-262. The House has heard the motion put by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Lewis) agreed to.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT PUBLICATION OF OPINION POLLS

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester) moved that Bill C-262, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (publication of the result of opinion polls), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I have examined this Bill very carefully. It is a very important issue, and I know that the Hon. Member who has had experience in the administration of his Party has had occasion to be concerned by the effects that the publication of public opinion polls can have on elections. I am very well aware of his interest in that regard.

I am not so sure that the way to proceed with this nature is by way of legislation at this time. The form by which the Hon. Member wants to proceed concerns me a bit, so I wanted to put my concerns on the record. I believe that it has an impact on our notion of freedom of information and the right to know in today's society. I am not so sure that I would want to support that kind of a motion. I will listen to the debate very carefully.

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to join in the debate on Bill C-262. The purpose of this legislation is identical to that of two other bills that were considered previously, namely, Bill C-208, introduced by the Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) and considered on June 20, 1980, and Bill-555, introduced by the Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) and considered on May 4 of this year. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Bill now before the House was considered before on November 26, 1981. Even allowing for the fact that some Hon. Members in the Opposition may have a poor memory, I still fail to understand why we should have to discuss the subject again. In any case, for the information of the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates) I would like to repeat some comments made on other occasions with respect to similar measures. The amendment he is proposing to the Canada Elections Act is aimed at prohibiting the publication in any manner of the results or alleged results of a poll of the public opinions of the electors. I feel that is entirely unacceptable. It is an insult to the intelligence of Canadian voters and it infringes their right to be informed of the things that concern them.

Mr. Speaker, I find it very distasteful that a member of the Progressive Conservative Party, a Party that has always been a tireless champion of freedom of information, is now proposing to gag the press and deny information to the public. Curiously, this proposal is being made at a time when the Hon. Member's Party is not in power but has a popularity rating of 52 per cent, according to the Gallup Poll. Apparently, it is now in the interests of the country. It is true that the Members of this Party are not known to be particularly consistent.

The Member for Cumberland-Colchester, one of the pillars of his Party, is trying to help his leadership candidate, Mr. Clark, as much as he can, and he is sponsoring Bill C-262, which prohibits the publication of results of public opinion polls throughout the election period. This is perhaps a little drastic, but the real problem is that this Bill does not treat Canadians with much respect. It infers that we are so many sheep that will immediately go off in the direction to which the public opinion polls seem to be pointing.

These fears about the ignorance and the credulousness of Canadian voters during a period of four weeks do not seem to have much of a basis in fact. I am reminded of the famous words of Franklin D. Roosevelt: The only thing we have to fear is fear itself, and he knew what he was talking about. In 1936, a now famous opinion poll was taken during the campaign for the presidency, which showed that Alf Landon would beat Franklin D. Roosevelt by a tremendous margin. Well, Mr. Speaker, what really happened is that Roosevelt beat Landon, by a landslide, but the Literary Digest had only consulted its subscribers. In the midst of the Depression, the only people who could afford to subscribe to the Literary Digest were Republicans. Not long afterwards, the Literary Digest went bankrupt. In any case, we must look at this problem realistically. Even if the House could agree in principle on the purpose of this Bill, it would have to acknowledge that it would be impossible to prevent the broadcasting or publication of public opinion polls. Adopting this legislation would be like tilting at windmills.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote what was said in April 1976 before the Committee on Privileges and Elections by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-West (Mr. Francis). The Hon. Member had this to say on the subject of opinion polls: If we tried to do so on a national scale, I am sure that it would be a Detroit newspaper that would carry out the poll in Canada and publish it in Detroit.

In the United Kingdom, they tried to enforce this kind of legislation, but there, people could get the results of the polls by listening to Radio Luxembourg. I do not think it is enforceable.

Mr. Speaker, personally, I am not very keen on opinion polls. I realize that we cannot adopt this legislation, but nevertheless, I think we should try to find the right way to achieve the same objective, and I do not think this is the right way.

The point raised in the proceedings of the Committee is a valid one. What would happen if a Detroit radio station decided to broadcast the results of a poll made in Canada? Considering the use of cable and other technology such as dish antennas with which we can receive satellite signals, a television station in Atlanta could broadcast poll results. Are we going to try to prevent it from doing so? That could lead to some very nasty incidents.

Mr. Speaker, I have this picture in my mind of people in Eastern Europe, listening to the radio in almost total darkness. They listen to the Voice of America, in fear of a police raid any minute. I remember many movies about the Second World War in which the Gestapo caught some member of the underground communicating by radio. Shall we do the same? This does not seem very realistic. If we are to gag the press and deny it the right to publish information, where do we draw the line, or rather, where do we begin?

I can understand why the Hon. Member introduced this Bill, but he is on very dangerous ground. In my opinion, such action is the first step towards the infringement of fundamental and valuable rights.

Mr. Speaker, the press in Canada has always been free to make criticisms and comments. We have survived in spite of this throughout the years. What would happen if someone conducted an opinion poll and wanted to do in Canada the same as in Hyde Park? Will the scope of this Bill be extended to prevent anyone from taking an opinion poll and climbing on an improvised platform to announce the results? Where do we stop if we prevent publication of poll results in the last week before an election? This is clearly encroaching on the freedom of speech. These provisions would prevent individuals, journalists, magazines, radio and television to express their views during a crucial seven-days period. For reporters, this would clearly impinge on the public's right to be informed.

If part of the population changed its mind at the last minute, this ban would make it impossible for other people to be informed. It should be noted that this extensive ban would cover all poll results, including those which show a real trend, and not only those which could mislead the population.

Let us look at the results of the last election. Does anyone seriously believe that they were really influenced by the polls? Poll results were indeed widely publicized. Western voters were certainly not much swayed by the poll results showing that the Liberal Party would do extremely well in Eastern Canada. Voters in the Prairies did not rush out to support the Liberal Party. In fact, the effect of those polls was quite the opposite.

The results of all polls were identical, although the figures did vary. Polls conducted by the CTV network, the CBC and Carleton University all pointed to a majority Liberal Government, and that was the outcome indeed.

In a previous debate, the Hon. Member for Athabasca reminded us that a voter can be influenced by the opinions of his fellow citizens. For instance, anyone who is a strong advocate of a majority Government would probably like to know which of the two major parties stands a better chance of coming out on top.

Some voters might lean toward one Party or the other, and yet prefer a minority Government. If they think that the New Democratic Party might possibly end up with the balance of power, they would support that Party only because they would expect it to hold the balance of power. I see nothing wrong with that. Those are useful data which voters are entitled to have, Mr. Speaker. One thing for sure is that the electorate is increasingly conversant with politics, elections and major issues. To my mind, we should not prevent voters from gaining access to information which so far has been available to them, lest they be influenced and likely to change their minds.

Mr. Speaker, that is not the kind of behaviour we should expect to see in a democratic country such as ours. I for one think that we ought to continue to take opinion polls. Any voter in favour of a majority Government and anxious to know which Party will likely hold a majority can conduct his own poll. However, the results of that poll would reflect the trend in his own riding alone, which might be the exact opposite of trends in the rest of the country.

Mr. Speaker, in a land as vast as ours, extending as it does over 5,000 kilometres, people understandably want to know that views are prevailing in other areas. This Party does not want the publication of such information to be prohibited, even though it may influence voters. It is not my view that people generally are a flock of sheep that will simply follow the leader. The results of the last elections, especially west of Winnipeg, do show that if there was a wave in the west, it was not in favour of the Liberal Party but the other way around, even though people were very well aware of the opinion poll results.

They should also make distinctions between the works of political commentators, syndicate columnists, magazine writers or expert pollsters. Assuming they have identical talent and perception, who would suggest that a political commentator, writing in a number of newspapers, is not in a position to say after speaking to a lot of people that the Liberals or the Progressive Conservatives will win at this or that election? Mr. Speaker, people have consideration for newspapermen. If the Lynches, the Fishers, the Fotheringhams, the Vennats, the Vastels or the Deromes say they took the time to go and check in the field, their word may be taken at face value. On the other hand, admittedly commentators are not always right. But if that is the kind of information people are after, they certainly will believe Mr. Lynch or Mr. Fisher. Generally, the Progressive Conservatives trust Mr. Fisher. Should we prevent newspapermen from writing such news items for weeks on end during election campaigns? Such is not the thrust of the Bill, Mr. Speaker, but anyway! Newspapermen and pollsters create an impression, either personal or scientific. If voters are so easily impressed by observer analyses, instead of looking up the results of GALLUP or CROP polls, they will simply read the columns in the papers. We all know just how authoritative their analyses are. Sometimes, their opinions may differ, just as those of the pollsters do. Opinions do vary, Mr. Speaker, and that is another problem which might occur if such an approach were adopted.

I should like to conclude my remarks by saying that in Quebec, we feel the need to carry out opinion polls during election campaigns, and we think that the current ban on the publication of opinion polls results on the very last day is adequate. We believe enough in freedom of speech, and we rely enough on the judgment of Quebecers to make information available to them up to the very last minute.

[English]

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, in the time available to me I would like to make a few comments concerning the Bill before us and some of the reasons our Party is not overly enthusiastic about providing support for it. It is our feeling that there are some very high priority items which should be considered by way of amendments to the Canada Elections Act rather than the matter before us today, although it is certainly worthy of consideration and some interesting points have been outlined.

The first point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that this House devoted a considerable amount of time to the Constitution of Canada. In that Constitution we looked at the democratic rights in the electoral process in a very determined way. Just to refresh the memory of Hon. Members since we are considering the Canada Elections Act, I would like to read a very short quote from the Constitution, which says that the Canadian Charter of Rights guarantees:

> Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

There is a qualification to that which says:

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, in considering amendments to the Canada Elections Act, that the Canada Elections Act does not allow every citizen the right to vote and, therefore, contravenes the Constitution. I would like to give an example or two in order to illustrate my concerns in this area. The Canada Elections Act does not permit Canadians who happen to be out of their home poll to vote. An absentee voter, a person who has left his poll on legitimate reasons and must be away from the area in which he would normally vote, cannot vote in Canada except under very tight and constrained conditions.

I would point out that the Canada Elections Act does not make provision for people to vote who are in acute care hospitals. As a matter of fact, it is very disconcerting that during the last federal election, all over this country people were trying to get ambulances to take them home in order to vote; some of these people were in very dire circumstances. One of the most disturbing aspects of that polling procedure was that people in the extended care parts of the hospital could vote because that was their residence, their home, yet people in the acute care side had their vote taken away. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that right was removed in defiance of the Constitution.

The second problem is the occupational groups—fishermen, loggers, miners, prospectors, construction workers and any individual who has to travel on a short-term basis. These people are all discriminated against in terms of the current Canada Elections Act. Their right to vote has been removed. The Government of Canada in its wisdom made a provision in order to attempt to redress this problem and provided what is termed in Section 46 of the Canada Elections Act as the proxy system. But that system is not the right to vote. Through very restrictive and discriminatory provisions, it gives someone else the right to vote for you. It is not in any way controlled by the individual; it simply gives someone the right to vote for you. I say that is denying you the right to vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I have been listening intently to his comments from the beginning and it seems to me he has departed somewhat from the object of the Bill now before the House, which relates to the publication of opinion polls. Perhaps the Hon. Member would attempt to explain to the Chair in what way his remarks are related to the motion now before the House.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, on certain occasions there is a need to lay the groundwork for remarks concerning the matter before us. I think that within that general context my remarks would be better understood, so with the indulgence of the Chair I will continue. If the Chair loses the train, then maybe you can call it to my attention again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Well, it is not a matter of the Chair losing the train. The Chair has not got on the train yet because I have not heard any references specifically to the object of the Bill. So I invite the Hon. Member to come to that point rather quickly.

Mr. Crouse: It is not getting on the train; it is getting on the track.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important that we outline some reasons why we cannot support this Bill, one of which is the matter of omissions. I have raised this on numerous occasions with the Minister responsible. The point I would like to stress concerning any amendment to the Canada Elections Act, particularly the one before us, is that there is a very serious need to redress the problems with the Act which deprive people of the right to vote. If we talk about the problems with the Elections Act, such as the taking and publishing of polls which influence a person's vote, we should be considering those who have been excluded from the opportunity to vote.

Under this proxy system, Mr. Speaker, certain individuals have been given the right to appoint someone to vote for them. The point is that a proxy vote is not the right to vote, it is a denied vote. I think the case has to be made that before the next federal election this House of Commons must invite the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada to include in his report a procedure which allows for absentee voting in Canada in order to guarantee that an individual away from his home riding on election day, whether because of his occupation or otherwise, in fact has the right to vote.

It is interesting to note that the Chief Electoral Officer has not received any expressions of concern on this problem. The people I have talked to in this House who support that kind of amendment and who will be speaking directly to the Chief Electoral Officer about it are the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky), the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett), the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller), the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker), the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant), the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle), the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish), the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) and myself. That is just a short list of those who will be writing directly to the Chief Electoral Officer and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) asking that this very severe anomaly by which tens of thousands of Canadians are deprived of their right to vote is remedied very quickly, so that before the next federal election those Canadians who have been disenfranchised will be allowed to vote and select the Government.

It would be my hope other Members in this House, Members of the Conservative Party, would come forward and advocate that this anomaly be corrected, and that Members of the Liberal Party would come forward and insist that the Chief Electoral Officer remove this problem. If that is not done in a fair, open and direct way, then it would appear the matter would have to be taken before the courts. The existing situation runs absolutely contrary to the democratic rights of Canadians. If the Government and Parliament of Canada cannot redress this very serious grievance, then I guess the last resort is the courts.

Many other nations, Mr. Speaker, provide that their citizens can vote no matter where they find themselves. If they can make their way to an embassy, they can vote. If they can make their way to a polling station within their country, they can vote. A strong commitment to democracy implies that we enforce to the extent possible the right of every citizen to vote.

Perhaps I should refrain from further remarks on this matter. The point has been made and I know the tolerance of the Chair has been magnificent, as well as that of my colleagues. But I would hope that at some point, maybe this afternoon, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) might find an opportunity to make a few remarks in response to the omissions in this Bill and in the Act, and indicate whether we might see the Government go forward to the Chief Electoral Officer and express some concern over the fact we have not addressed the problem of absentee voting properly, and that in fact tens of thousands of Canadians who could easily vote are not given the opportunity to do so. We need that amendment and possibly the Parliamentary Secretary might find an opportunity this afternoon to comment.

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think before resuming debate on this particular motion by the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates), and in light of the remarks we have just heard from the Hon. Member of the NDP, perhaps I should, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, read into the record just what Bill C-262 states so that there is no confusion on the part not only of Members in the House but those who will read Hansard and are perhaps watching this afternoon.

The Bill before us is an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act, Bill C-262, and it concerns public opinion polls during an election campaign. It says:

> No person, company or corporation shall, after the issue of the writ for an election, and until the polls are closed, publish the result or purported result of a poll of the political opinions of electors in any electoral district in which an election is being held, whether such publication is by radio or television broadcast, or by newspaper, news-sheet, poster, bill-board, handbill, or in any other manner.

● (1550)

The amendment goes on to state:

> Any person, company or corporation that contravenes the provisions of this section and, in the case of a company or a corporation, any person responsible for the contravention thereof, is guilty of an illegal practice and of an offence against this Act.

Bill C-262 is an Act which, if adopted, would amend the Canada Elections Act in order to ban the publication of opinion poll results during a period which would start after the issuing of a writ for an election and last until the polls were closed. If adopted, the Bill would ban the publication of opinion poll results during the entire electoral campaign.

Your Honour knows that this is not the first time this particular subject has been debated before the House. Many other Bills along the same line have been brought before the House. As a matter of fact, a Bill to the same purpose, introduced by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), was debated only two weeks ago. Prior to that time, other Hon. Members in the House, especially on the opposite side, had felt the same way as the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester and had presented Bills in order to ban the publication of polls during election campaigns. During the present session alone, Private Members' time has already been used three times for this kind of Bill.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That shows how important it is.

Mr. Burghardt: The first time was on June 20, 1980, when the House debated Bill C-208, a Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). The second time was on November 26, 1981, when the House debated the Bill now before us for a second time, Bill C-262. The third time, as I mentioned earlier, was only two weeks ago when the House gave consideration to Bill C-555, sponsored by the Hon. Member for York-Peel.

Therefore, the House is asked by the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester to debate such a Bill for the fourth time during the present session. Moreover, it is the seventh time since his election that the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester has asked the House to debate this very topic. One may seriously wonder if all that could be said about this topic has not been exhausted. I suppose it shows that Hon. Members on the opposite side of the House are either unable to see the stupidity of such a proposal or they are simply obsessed by this particular question.

Mr. Lewycky: They wanted to hear your opinion, Jack.

Mr. Burghardt: Maybe that is it: a kind of fixation resulting from too many electoral defeats. Perhaps that is the reason. They were rejected at the polls by the electors so they are concerned about what the public opinion polls have to say during election time. They want to muzzle the news media and deny information to the people. Why do they want to do that now? We on this side do not seem to be very high in the opinion polls these days, but nevertheless we do not try to stop the publication of opinion poll results.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Call an election.

Mr. Burghardt: Why do they still persist? I think that this Bill and the two other Bills sponsored by Tory Members really show that the Progressive Conservative Party is not ready to treat the Canadian people with much respect. It shows that the Tories think that Canadian electors are like lemmings, like sheep or like buffalo on the Prairies, all running in one direction. That direction is whatever way the polls seem to be following. Maybe the Hon. Member believes that this is the reason his Party has 52 per cent of the latest Gallup poll.

Those who support the Bill pretend that the use of polls during an election campaign becomes an impediment in the exercise of free choice of the citizens to vote and exercise his or her franchise. How can this occur? How can it come about that a citizen is impeded in the exercise of his or her free choice in an election campaign?

Some Hon. Members will answer that the use of polls in the election campaign in the current environment becomes an undue influence, unduly influencing voters. It is quite possible that individuals in Canada would take a poll result as being a definite indication of the parties' standings on the day the poll was carried. However, let me refer to the words of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, words which he said on many occasions and which I am sure the Conservative Members will very clearly remember. He said that the only poll that counts is the poll taken on election day.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It tells us something about the polls.

Mr. Burghardt: If those words are true, why do we then not take the appropriate step to ensure that the only poll which really counts is carried out in such a way that it does not become a source of undue influence on voters? The matter to which I refer is Bill C-113, a Bill which was introduced by the Government in order to have simultaneous voting all across the country. The Bill has been opposed by Members of the New Democratic Party. If its Members are so preoccupied by the alleged undue influence caused by opinion polls on voters, then why do they not support Bill C-113 and readily pass it through the House?

Mr. Skelly: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Burghardt: Steps should be taken to ban the publication—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River rises on a point of order.

Mr. Skelly: We opposed the Bill in order to place on the record that we were discussing the Bill and to indicate that it was the omissions which caused us concern.

Mr. Burghardt: Mr. Speaker, nevertheless they still opposed Bill C-113, and that is the bottom line. Regardless of any omission of amendments to the Bill, the New Democratic Party still opposed the Bill which would give us simultaneous election results right across the country. Therefore, if Hon. Members are really concerned about the undue influence of public opinion polls on voters, that is the Bill they should be considering so that all Canadians would receive election results at the same time.

I hope this legislation will not be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections today. The Standing Committee, to my mind at least, does not have to discuss a matter which most of us in the House should oppose in principle. I believe that the Canadian people have the right to know and are mature enough to make decisions based on leadership and programs rather than on percentages. Nevertheless, it does not seem to be the case for the Tories who have no leadership and no program to offer Canadians. Rather than attempting to infringe on the freedom of the news media, I think the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester and his colleagues should put forward some ideas to deal with the real problems of the country. Unfortunately, Hon. Members opposite seem to prefer moving dilatory motions, such as yesterday's motion which destroyed the business of the House for one entire day, or ill-conceived Bills such as this one, rather than getting down to the real issues.

Mr. Taylor: Where were you a week last Monday?

Mr. Burghardt: A week last Monday I was here. I was on duty and I was here at 11 o'clock—

Mr. Taylor: Your men weren't. They wasted the day, not us.

Mr. Burghardt: —to answer the Hon. Member of the Conservative Party.

However, returning to Bill C-262, as I said earlier, Canadians will certainly make up their own minds as to which political Party or member in the federal, provincial or municipal realm they will support at election time, regardless of what public opinion polls say. If we are to start banning public opinion polls during election time, then we will have to start banning editorials of newspapers and the writings of well known Canadian columnists in newspapers and preventing broadcasters in radio and television from expressing opinions during an election campaign. Many times editorials have been written with regard to a particular candidate or party. That does not mean to say that the Canadian people will follow that line of thinking. The same holds true for public opinion polls, whether they are published during an election campaign or at any other time of the year. It does not necessarily mean that Canadians will follow those percentage figures.

As I said earlier, Canadians will make up their own minds. They are mature and honest enough to make a selection during any political election campaign. To muzzle the news media as suggested by this Bill and similar Bills which have been brought forward by the Tory Party would certainly be a denial of the freedom of the press. I understood that Opposition Members would adhere to that but they do not.

• (1600)

In closing, I suggest that this Bill not be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. As a former member of the news media, it is a Bill that I certainly could not support.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates) rising to contribute to the debate?

Mr. Coates: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I must inform the Hon. Member that he has already spoken at this stage of the Bill.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that we on this side of the House, not being afraid of information, would be prepared to give consent to allow the mover of the Bill to speak again briefly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Of course, that could only be done with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to make a few comments. It has been some time since the Bill has been debated and I thought it would be appropriate in concluding the debate today to point out a number of facts.

Several Members from the Liberal Party have apparently presumed that all their Members are opposed to the banning of opinion polls at election time. I suggest they make a closer examination of their own leader's views on this particular matter since he has indicated on a number of occasions recently a real concern about the influence that opinion polls have during an election campaign. He has indicated a belief that it might be in the public interest to pursue this matter further in Parliament in order to determine whether it might be appropriate to take this action.

I was disappointed by the fact that the New Democratic Party Member from B.C. did not speak at least to some degree about how much freedom has been lost in that Province where opinion polls are banned. A pleasing fact about the British Columbia election campaign was that most people did not know what the results would be, including Members of this House. The voters in British Columbia were not being fed a lot of numbers by the press daily with respect to people's opinions. I did not hear any complaints from people in British Columbia that their freedom was infringed upon in any way as a result of no opinion polls being published during the election campaign.

Indeed, one of the best illustrations I can give showing the unfairness associated with the numbers game, which is all that public opinion polls are as far as I am concerned, come from the Ottawa Citizen of last Saturday and Tuesday of this week. In Saturday's Ottawa Citizen there was a section devoted to the seven major candidates in the Progressive Conservative leaderhsip campaign in which they stated their opinions on various issues of concern to Canadians. This was to allow readers to make a judgment on where those candidates stood and how much emphasis should be given to their particular aspirations to become leader of the Progressive Conservative Party.

On Tuesday, The Citizen released a Southam Global public opinion poll produced by Carleton University. If there has ever been a discredited organization associated with determining public opinion, I would think it would be this Carleton University group, who failed so miserably in predicting the results of our annual general meeting in Winnipeg. What I find interesting about public opinion poll experts is that when the results do not correspond with their polls, they can find as many excuses as the number of points by which they missed.

Another example of inaccurate polls occurred in the United States during the presidential election campaign. All of these brilliant public opinion experts told the world, and particularly the voters in the United States, how closely Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan were running during the final days of the election campaign. Suddenly, what was supposed to be a one or one and a half point spread between Carter and Reagan resulted in almost a totally clean sweep of the United States by Ronald Reagan.

I am concerned that public opinion polls do not portray the facts. Currently, these so-called experts who determine public opinion are discovering that the people upon whom they base their results lie and have fun with those experts. They may be white lies, but they are putting them on. The result is that the public is led to believe anything but the reality of the situation. For that reason I believe these polls are an unfair intrusion into the election process. That includes polls concerning our Party, the Liberal Party, the New Democratic Party or even an internal party matter.

Polling experts today feed off of political parties. I am not opposed to polls being conducted by a soap manufacturer, car manufacturer or others in order to determine public opinion about a certain product. I am not even opposed to political parties conducting their own polls during election campaigns if they wish to spend their money to do that privately. However, I strenuously object to so-called public opinion experts interfering in the electoral process and preventing people from examining the issues of the day as put forward by political parties while the newspapers, television and radio programs feed the public numbers that really mean nothing.

The Hon. Member who just spoke suggested that I have attempted to eliminate the publication of opinion polls during election campaigns on seven occasions. He is correct, I have attempted to do that. The only time that this issue was sent before a parliamentary committee, which was some years ago now, there was a majority decision by that parliamentary committee that such action be taken and that the Canada Elections Act be amended to include the banning of the publication of public opinion polls during election campaigns.

I am aware that polls are used to play politics in the House and that right now the public opinion polls favour the Progressive Conservative Party. But that does not make any difference to me. As the last speaker said, I believe that the only poll that is important is the poll on election day. I always liked what the late Right Hon. Member for Prince Albert used to say about public opinion polls. He said, "Poles are for dogs." That is my feeling as well. I do not believe that the banning of public opinion polls during an election campaign will interfere in any way with freedom of information being made available to the general public.

As a matter of fact, what concerns me so much about public opinion polls being conducted presently without any controls or regulations over their production or reliability is that the general public is being fed misinformation. Carleton University polls have proven over and over again that they are experts at misinformation rather than at information about what the general public is thinking, what the delegates to the upcoming Progressive Conservative leaderhsip convention are thinking or what is the reality. It would be healthy for the press of the country—and I mean the entire media—to have to go out and obtain the facts, not live off polls which really do not contain much hard information about the realities of the moment.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the debate this afternoon. We have debated this issue in the House of Commons before. I think the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates) has a basic flaw in his argument, in that he seems to approach the subject with the premise that if Canadians are aware of what other Canadians are thinking, somehow they will be influenced by it. Then he cited a number of examples in which polls have been way off.

I agree with one point he made, the one concerning the Carleton University poll on the Winnipeg convention. It was out by about 8 per cent because of the fact that some Tories were lying to them. There is no doubt about that.

He suggested the reason people in British Columbia did not know who would win the election was that no public opinion polls were published. I suggest the reason they did not know was because it was close. Certainly the Parties were polling. They may not have been releasing the poll results, but certainly Hon. Members of the House are fairly well connected with groups in British Columbia that were in fact polling. For example, I am sure NDP Members knew what the polls were showing. If they were unable to predict the election, I suspect that it concerned the fact that the election was a close one.

The basic problem with this Bill is that it interferes with free speech. Once we start doing that, how do we enforce it or where do we draw the line? What happens if the Detroit Free Press or a Detroit television station, because of its great interest in Canada and the following it has here, decides to conduct a poll? Obviously we could not enforce anything against that newspaper or station. Should we put ourselves in the position of some East European communist countries, where people huddle by their radios listening to the news on the "Voice of America" to find out what is going on in the rest of the world? Will we try to put a blanket of secrecy over polling throughout the country so that people in Windsor cannot listen to Detroit radio stations or buy the Free Press to find out the results of a poll?

There is a large body of evidence to suggest that the fact the public may be aware of opinion polls does not make opinion polls fulfil their own prophecies. I suppose the most famous one was in 1936, the famous Literary Digest poll which predicted that Landon would defeat Roosevelt. Of course, we all know that that poll was so far out that the Literary Digest did not last much longer.

What about the Truman-Dewey election in 1948? All the polls showed that Dewey would win, but did they influence the American people into electing DeweY? No, they did not. They elected Harry S. Truman, as we all know.

It seems to me that there is some sort of fear that Canadians will act like lemmings or sheep. I have greater confidence in the maturity, the wisdom and judgment of Canadians that in fact they will not act like sheep. Let us look at western Canadians, for example. Prior to the 1980 election, the opinion polls showed throughout the campaign that the Liberals would probably win. They did win the campaign. Does that mean that people in Alberta and in other parts of western Canada, such as Edmonton from where my good friend comes, all suddenly jumped on the Liberal bandwagon? Of course not. Why did they not jump on the bandwagon? The reason is that they were not influenced by the polls.

Another matter which must be pointed out is that a law has to be practical. This Bill provides that no person shall publish the results of a poll by any manner. In Toronto we have Allen Garden where people stand up on soapboxes. It is a smaller version of Hyde Park in London. What if someone walked down the streets of Toronto, asked people how they would vote, got up on a soapbox in Allen Gardens and said that he had just conducted a poll?

In British Columbia they have hamburger polls. I think they are at the PNE or something. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) may be familiar with them. One buys a hamburger at some place in Vancouver and indicates whether it will be a Bennett burger or a Barrett burger. If this Bill were in place, it would mean that they could not sell Bennett burgers or Barrett burgers. The point I am trying to make is that it is impractical. Once we start interfering with freedom of speech, where do we draw the line?

We on this side of the House are not afraid of the principle of freedom of information. We are not afraid.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

[Translation]

Shall all items listed under Private Members' Public Bills be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSIONERS

The House resumed from Friday, November 6, 1981, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lambert that Bill C-273, an Act to amend the House of Commons Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak for a few minutes on Bill C-273. I am grateful to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for bringing the matter to the attention of the House. I understand that this is the second time around on second reading debate of this Bill in this session. I should advise the Hon. Member for Edmonton West that, as a member of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, I have been active with my other colleagues on that Committee in debating this very question. We have certainly benefited from the speeches of the Hon. Member earlier in second reading and from those of other Hon. Members who contributed to the debate.

In saying that I welcome the matter coming before the House, I believe the solution proposed by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West is not the desired one. I hope he will listen in this debate to suggestions whereby we can improve upon his original concept.

Essentially the Hon. Member argues in Bill C-273 that:

> The Governor in Council shall appoint five Members of the House of Commons, who, with the Speaker of the House of Commons, shall be commissioners for the purposes of this Section and Section 17 and 18.

The simple purpose of this Bill is, of course, to increase the number of Internal Economy Commissioners from the present five to six. The explanatory notes in part read:

> It allows for the commissioners to be chosen from the House at large rather than solely from the ranks of Privy Councillors.

There is one particular point on which I think the Hon. Member is correct. The administration of the affairs of the House or the final responsibility for the running of the House should not be dominated by the executive branch of Government. It should be remembered that our present practice originates from the earlier British practice. I believe it was an Act some time in 1812 or thereabouts which called for the same kind of administrative body in the United Kingdom House of Commons, whereby members of the executive would be responsible for the day to day administration of the affairs of the House. I draw the Hon. Member's attention to the fact that in 1978 the British House of Commons passed what I think was called the House of Commons Commission Act which updated that procedure.

Rather than being content with solely adding one additional member to the present Internal Economy Commissioners, we should perhaps take a look at the British practice and see how it has worked. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), who is deep in discussion at the moment, has some personal knowledge of this, having travelled to London. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) was there with us in January. Perhaps they would like to contribute to the debate to let those Members of the House who were not in Great Britain know how the present situation is in Westminster and how the administration of the House there has been improved by the House of Commons Commission Act.

The setup there, as I understand it, is that the Speaker presides over the commission. The Leader of the House, whom we call the Government House Leader, is on that committee representing the Crown. A representative of the Leader of the Opposition—not necessarily the Leader of the Opposition but his nominee—is on that commission and a nominee of the third party. In subsequent years, with the continual growth of Parties in the House there, they may have problems.

At the moment we have three Parties in this House and certainly they should all be represented. The way the 1978 Act in Great Britain is phrased, it could be applicable here so that a Member of the New Democratic Party would be nominated. It would not have to be a Privy Councillor.

There are three other nominees from the House at large. These Members are not related to their Party standings. They are Members who are not of Cabinet rank. There could be Privy Councillors or backbenchers on this commission. That seems to be a bit more workable than the present situation, and certainly the situation proposed by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton West in his speech earlier, and I read it this afternoon, took great exception to the fact that the Speaker was involved in the direct administration of the House. I may be misquoting him; if so, I certainly stand to be corrected and will allow him to interrupt and give the right impression. However, he seemed to object to the Speaker being an administrator.

I must draw to his attention that the Speaker's role in administration is well founded in parliamentary practice. I need only refer to Erskine May, Nineteenth Edition, Chapter 13, where it talks about the machinery of Parliament, pages 228 to 230. It is specific in talking not only about the Speaker's right as a presiding officer in the House of Commons, but at page 231 refers to the Speaker's powers over the administration of the House.

We should not shy away from the right of the Speaker as the first among equals in this House to be ultimately responsible for the administration of the House. In the first paragraph under the section "The Officers of the Commons", Erskine May talks in terms of the Speaker as "the representative of the House itself in its powers, proceedings and dignity". All of the Members of the House are represented in the Speaker. Certainly the Speaker should be the final arbiter of all matters affecting the House, not only privilege and procedure, as the Hon. Member for Edmonton West believes, but also administration. As we have seen recently, matters of administration of the House of Commons also bear on the privileges of Members.

There was a case a week or two ago wherein the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) objected to certain carvings being removed from the boardroom in the office of the Leader of the Opposition. He rightfully objected. He made the argument that his privileges as a Member were affected in that those carvings were an integral part of the history and the lore of the House of Commons and that there was no authority by the House to have these carvings changed. I believe the Speaker upheld the Leader of the Opposition in his argument. Even in a small administrative matter of that nature, it did have a bearing on the privileges of the Member.

In Britain the commission meets quite frequently. I understand it meets more frequently than the Commission of Internal Economy here who, as I understand it, have a hard time getting together not only over weeks but months. Ministers of the Crown have other important duties. If I were a Minister of the Crown, being a Member of that particular commission would not be my priority. As a Member of that commission, I would not be responsible in the House on a day to day basis for the administration of the House. There is not a "Minister of the Commission of Internal Economy" who is asked questions; it is the Speaker, or questions are raised in another manner.

I understand that there are four Ministers on the Commission of Internal Economy. Every day in the House of Commons they have to answer for the their departments. The administration of the House is not their authority, nor should it be.

Representations were made to the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure that the executive branch of Government is, in a sense, taking over the House itself. It is not only the fact that the Prime Minister's office is in the building, as indeed it should be, but that the Cabinet room is here and other rooms have progressively been taken away from Private Members for Members of the Cabinet when Members of the committee have their own departmental offices.

I am not giving my own view on this because I have not made up my mind, but the argument that came forward in this committee is that this represents encroachment upon the rights of individual backbenchers in that the executive branch is, in a sense, taking over the precincts of the House of Commons. There may be some validity to that, but we could never hope to get that changed unless the administration of the House of Commons did revert to—perhaps that is not the word because it has never been the responsibility of ordinary Members, but perhaps be given to a commission such as in Britain.

The Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) spoke earlier in the debate. I want to quote him because he raised an important matter. He spoke rather eloquently. I quote:

> One of the subclauses of this Bill suggests that the Speaker have the power to delegate any or all of his or her administrative powers to the commissioners. I have some difficulty with that. I believe we must always retain the Speaker of this House as the guardian, the protector and the ensurer of the rights and privileges of the Members. The Speaker of this House is not above the other Members of this House; the Speaker of this House is the first among us, and in fact in this House no Member should be any other. However, the Speaker must be responsible, in the final analysis, for the administration of the Parliament of Canada and for the protection of the rights and privileges of its Members.

I certainly agree with the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi. I fail to see how this basic principle of parliamentary democracy in the Westminster context that we enjoy in Canada can be observed by the changes proposed by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West.

There is in our House of Commons other problems in terms of administration. We have a Committee on Management and Members' Services. Although I have been around here for a few years, I fail to recognize the true role and powers of this committee and have yet to understand the work of it. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West, who is a member of that Committee, might want to enlighten the House as to what it does.

Perhaps if we adopted the U.K. model and put in our own commission with the Leader of the House, a representative of the Leader of the Opposition, a representative of the third Party and three non-Cabinet members, we may be able to abolish the Management and Members' Services Committee or amalgamate the two functions and have a truly representative body.

One problem exists now, Mr. Speaker, and that is, that in the last two years since Madam Speaker took the Chair, we have seen the emergence of an Administrator of the House of Commons. I believe that that Administrator has performed the administrative duties assigned to him exceedingly well. I know that there have been disagreements here or there, but the problem as I understand it is that the Administrator's responsibilities are not mentioned in Standing Orders. There is no real authority for this person who has, in a sense, developed into a person of the same rank as the Clerk of the House and the Sergeant at Arms. I believe that that should be remedied. Perhaps it could be remedied in an all-encompassing Act that could deal with the point raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), and perhaps that with that Act we would see the emergence of a truly representative kind of administration for the House of Commons.

I think that that is about all one can say on the matter. Again I believe that the idea is worthy of discussion, but I believe that the Hon. Member for Edmonton West focused too narrowly on the issue. The administration should be discussed in a wider context. What should be done in this Bill and what is not done is to truly wrestle the administration of the House of Commons away from the executive branch. I am not so sure that the executive branch really wants the responsibility of administration anyway. I have not heard any stout arguments in defence of the executive branch having so much control over the administration of the House of Commons.

Perhaps the Hon. Member would be gracious enough to withdraw the Bill and bring back a Bill later in the session that is more all-pervasive, a Bill that is a bit more thoughtful and that takes note of the true desire, which I am sure that we all share, to give the administration of the House of Commons in its totality back to the Members of all Parties.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A question by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind that this Bill was tabled in April of 1980, might I ask the Hon. Member whether he thinks that my thinking today, which is comparable to his thinking today, would necessarily be encompassed in this Bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Just to set the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) straight, it is my understanding that if an Hon. Member wishes to accept a question and still has time remaining, it is permissible. This is the situation we find ourselves in now.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to answer the Hon. Member's question, but I really did not follow the logic of it. Perhaps the Hon. Member could rephrase his question so that I, with my limited mind, could understand it.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to try in any way to cast any aspersion regarding the Hon. Member. I was wondering whether he was aware of the fact that this Bill had been tabled in April of 1980, and as such, whether it would necessarily reflect his thinking at the time and my thinking at the time. If I had the right to speak at this time, I would certainly set the Hon. Member straight.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I am not really sure what the Hon. Member is getting at. When I was Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader, I was aware of this Bill and I saw its limitations then when it was first introduced and first put on the Order Paper. My original reservations about the intent of his Bill have been substantiated by the knowledge that I have gained from the representations made before our committee.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak to Bill C-273 at this time. Bill C-273 is a Bill which is designed to amend the House of Commons Act and which deals specifically with changes that could be made to the Commissioners of the House who deal with many of the administrative concerns of the House of Commons. In view of the favourable attitude that the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette) seemed to take on some aspects of the subject matter, I had hoped that perhaps at the very least we could have had the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter referred to committee, enabling us to deal in a more substantial way with some of the suggestions made by the Hon. Member for York East. I believe that some of his comments are similar to the observations I have made over the last three years or so that I have participated in the Committee on Management and Members' Services and have been concerned about the workings of the Commission on Internal Economy and of those who have been making decisions with regard to many of the administrative matters that affect us in the House.

I would point out that Section 16 of Bill C-273 remains as it is currently in the Act in that the Governor in Council is empowered to appoint Members to serve on this Commission, and I think some of the comments that the Member for York East made coincide with some of my observations. These observations are that I think we would be much more impressed with the situation if Members were either elected or in some way proportionately nominated by the various Parties to serve, as it were, as the judges on matters that came before the Internal Economy Commissioners. As was mentioned by the previous speaker, it would certainly seem to me that if Members who were not loaded down with the executive responsibilities of Government served on the Commission, then the various issues and concerns that Members have raised would be dealt with perhaps much more expeditiously and even more equitably.

In the time that I have, I would like to underline the kinds of concerns that we in the New Democratic Party have, and I know from my experience on the Management and Members' Services Committee that other Members from both the Liberal and Conservative Parties have raised the same concerns. As was mentioned, substantial administrative changes have been made by the introduction of an Administrator. As has been rightly pointed out, these changes have not been reflected in Standing Orders, and this is certainly a matter that should be addressed and perhaps examined more carefully.

There exists a Management and Members' Services Committee which meets fairly regularly, but its powers have been rather limited in the sense that it serves basically as an advisory group. As a result, there have been quite a few communication and consultation gaps in the recommendations made by the Management and Members's Services Committee. On many occasions, recommendations have been made to the Speaker and to members of the internal economy group, and at the same time, answers have been given to questions that have not been asked or recommendations that have not been made. Many problems have been experienced with the feedback being either slow or incomplete. This would indicate to me that there should be a re-examination of the function of the advisory Committee on Management and Members' Services and, as was suggested, perhaps there could be an amalgamation of the functions of the commissioners on Internal Economy or else the Commission could be restructured so that the Members who make decisions are representative of the various groups and political Parties.

In terms of my experience in the Committee on Management and Members' Services, I find that that committee is one of the most non-partisan groups in the House of Commons. On almost every problem that we have tackled, the attitude of all Members has been constructive. The Members have co-operated and worked together. It is a group that has not been wracked with division or strife nor have its members tried to score political points. Basically we have been trying to deal with the problems that face Members of the House, and I should like to outline some of them.

There has been notification of salary freezes for the staff of Members, for example. A lot of decisions that have been passed down to us have been made without prior notification or consultation with Members at large or with the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services. This is complicated by the fact that the commissioners of Internal Economy meet so infrequently. That is almost a secret group in the Cabinet which makes decisions on the way the House of Commons ought to be administered.

Members have other conerns, and if there were a group that was representative of all Parties, it could probably find more constructive ways to deal with our problems. I am aware of some matters that have been raised by certain Members who have participated in the deliberations of Parliamentarians for World Order. The decision on whether this is a parliamentary group has seemingly been made in a vacuum without consultation or adequate explanation to the Members who have worked hard and devoted their time to the discussion of issues they feel to be important.

Many technological and other changes have occurred in the operation of the House of Commons and I think it is important that Members of Parliament have an input into these decisions. There is the Oasis project which is an attempt to bring the House of Commons into the twentieth century. Members will have an opportunity to examine new office procedures, technological and information systems. If Members were freed from their executive responsibilities in order to make the decisions, then I am sure that after complete hearings better decisions could be made on the implementation of such projects and Members would feel better about the way the House of Commons is administered.

Another concern that has been brought to my attention frequently is the matter of a Member's budget. A common complaint in my caucus is that funds can be used either for salaries or for machines. This irritates many Members who feel there should be a separation of these two items in the budget.

These things have been mentioned time and again in the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, but because of the dichotomy and the differences between the commissioners, who operate without direct communication with the Committee, and members of the Committee, a lot of things are not dealt with adequately. Often, after matters have been dealt with by the committee, communication becomes bottlenecked, either through the Speaker or through whatever procedure is being used, and information is not given to all members of the Commission.

It is because of such bottlenecks that I support the substance of the Bill presented by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I wish the subject matter could be referred to the Standing Committee on Management and Members Services by an order of the House. The Committee could then report back to the House, which could act upon it. I know that many Members have been working hard and diligently on issues that have been brought before them.

A recent concern is that Rogers Cablevision has discontinued the service it had been providing for Members of Parliament. In constituencies such as mine the cable networks are locally operated. I was able to have tapes of the House sent to the local cablevision company so that people in my constituency who cannot receive the proceedings of the House directly, could see at least some of the debates and hear my comments or those of other Members. That service should be reinstated. Concessions were made to Rogers Cablevision by the House in order that it could present such programming, yet if the service is withdrawn we find that there is no way the problem can be dealt with adequately. Such problems do not funnel through to the commissioners for discussion at their rather infrequent meetings.

Members have other concerns. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) has been troubled by the lights in the House which are far too strong for her. This matter has been raised, but it is not something that can be dealt with expeditiously at the present time. If there was a group of Members which could deal with such matters, the lighting could be changed, as it has been in the Saskatchewan legislature, so that Members would not have to suffer physical discomfort.

Then there is the question of the right of the staff of the House of Commons to have an opportunity to bargain as staff in other Government departments can. Such issues could be dealt with if the ideas in the Bill could be referred to a committee where they could be considered and perhaps changed.

We should examine how matters stand in other jurisdictions. Reference has been made to the United Kingdom model. I like some of the things I have heard about the way the House of Commons is administered there. Perhaps we could incorporate some of its methods. Other jurisdictions have been examined and we could incorporate some of their methods as well.

I should like to close by indicating that we support the general thrust of Bill C-273 although we believe it would require some polishing. We would support the Bill being withdrawn and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services. Perhaps someone from the Conservative Party, in consultation with the author of the Bill, might negotiate such a move with the Government.

Those are the concerns that I wanted to raise because Members who have served on the Committee are interested in finding a more effective way to serve Members of the House. One way in which we can serve Hon. Members is to ensure that the way in which final decisions are made can perhaps be streamlined and that there is more representation by Hon. Members who do not have Cabinet responsibility and who can devote their time to the type of decisions which would have to be made. These Hon. Members would also, perhaps, have a better understanding of the problems which regular backbenchers face who do not have a flock of assistants to deal with the various problems but who must deal with constituency and other matters.

• (1650)

I believe that if such changes were made it would be to the benefit of all Canadians and of the constituents whom we serve, regardless of political Party, because, as I mentioned, the Management and Members' Services Committee has been most non-partisan. In fact, even the Chairman has been from the Opposition. This Committee and the Public Accounts Committee are two parliamentary Committees the Chairmen of which are not Government Members. That has certainly improved that Committee's method of operation and the way it has sought to address the issues.

I hope that the Government will take cognizance of some of these matters and introduce speedy changes in that regard.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today to make some specific comments on this Bill. The Hon. Member who is sponsoring this Bill wishes to increase the number of commissioners of Internal Economy from five to six, and to have the membership of the Commission made up of Members of the House of Commons. The Bill further provides for delegation by the Speaker of any or all of his administrative powers under Sections 16 to 18 so that his presence would not necessarily be required for the purpose of carrying out those Sections.

My views on the specifics in the Bill, Mr. Speaker, are simply that I believe that the commissioners of Internal Economy should be made up of a mix of Privy Councillors, members of the Cabinet—because, after all, they are still responsible for the purse strings—and representatives from the House of Commons. I believe that there is a lot of evidence to prove that when an all-Party committee sits down like this to discuss matters, some useful ideas come from it. There is communication at first hand; the Opposition caucus is not coming over and lobbying Privy Councillors; the New Democratic Party is not coming over and lobbying Ministers; and Members within our own Government caucus are not lobbying committees. It is a united lobby. That demonstrates clearly what the Hon. Members of the House of Commons really need.

I do not agree with having the Speaker delegate a lot of authority which she now holds. I believe that if the system, as we have described it up to this point, were working effectively, that would not be necessary. Speakers have said in this House that they are here to serve the Members of the House of Commons. What better way can they serve, and what better way would they have of knowing how to serve, than if Hon. Members from the House of Commons were to sit down with Privy Councillors in managing the affairs and services of this House of Commons?

I do not believe that the Administrator of the House of Commons, who is a servant of this House of Commons, should be the secretary to the commissioners of Internal Economy. I believe that is a mistake. The only people who can really represent the Hon. Members of this House of Commons on both sides of the House are the Hon. Members themselves. If representations are made from each Party caucus in the House, then it will be the responsibility of each Party caucus to advise its representative on the Internal Economy Commission precisely what his Party's position is.

I believe that whoever is Speaker in future years, as well as the present Speaker, would welcome this arrangement. It would remove a big problem from their shoulders because a consensus has already been reached when they are presented with a request from the House of Commons or with the work of the commissioners of Internal Economy.

I would like to deviate a little from the subject of the remarks I just made and go back to the time when individual Members lobbied Members of the Privy Council in order to get things done, which was a very loose and unsatisfactory arrangement. I remember one day when the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois),—who is in the House today—the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), myself and one other Member met together. We had just returned from a very busy weekend in our constituencies. I personally had something like 40 phone calls and visits from people to my home on Saturday and about 30 on Sunday, and I had to come back to Ottawa on Monday morning to manage all this. Therefore, our first aim was to bring to the attention of the commissioners of Internal Economy the real need for Hon. Members to have constituency offices. Eventually, that came about. We look upon this as one of our first achievements. Out of this group, in a continued liaison with the other two Parties in the House, came the founding of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, which is chaired by the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates). I would like to pay him a compliment today. He does a very good job as Chairman of that Committee and he operates in such a way that I sincerely feel he has the confidence of all the members of that Committee. That is very important for a chairman to have.

The founding group has continued. Some of us have been part of the Management and Members' Services Committee from time to time, others on a continuing basis. However, I believe that this Committee serves this House very well, and it will continue to serve this House very well if it is given serious attention. I feel that the time is definitely ripe for a new tone to be set with the commissioners of Internal Economy, that Commission should be reformed that Hon. Members of the House from all Parties should sit on that Commission. I cannot think of anyone who would be more qualified to do so, Mr. Speaker, than a Party representative who comes directly from the membership of the Management and Members' Services Committee. In that Standing Committee the Hon. Members are well aware of everything that is discussed. They are well aware of all the issues which are brought to their attention and they can certainly explain things on a first hand basis to the commissioners of Internal Economy who are sitting around that table.

We do not need a bureaucratic set-up in order to get our views across the Cabinet Ministers. That is a direct process. I resent having any individual as a go-between me and any Cabinet Minister to whom I want to make a proposal, and I am sure that all Members of this House feel the same way. We are here to do a job. We face this issue of personal representation and group representation all the time. I believe it should be laid clearly on the line, Mr. Speaker, that when we say "Management and Members Services"—although it sounds like a very self-serving phrase and people might get the idea that in this Committee Members of the House are serving themselves, which, of course, is totally inaccurate—we mean that Members are there to try to upgrade the services of Members of the Parliament of Canada, to give them better working conditions and to give them some staff to work with so that they can do their jobs better.

I believe the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) was talking about the British parliamentary system and he mentioned some of its superior philosophies and ways of operation. However, I would like to point out that that is certainly not the case when it comes to the British Member of Parliament. I have been in the office of a British Member of Parliament and it is not even as big as the one I occupy here on the Hill, which certainly is not big by ordinary standards. In that office there were four MPs and two secretaries. If there was ever a set-up for a family feud, Mr. Speaker, I imagine that was it. Each Member had to come in the office to see if the chair in the corner was vacant so that he could sit down to do some work with one of the secretaries.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the British Parliament has its time well programmed. When they have a debate, they say how many speakers there will be and how many minutes each will be allowed. In order to conserve space on the floor of the office they have this little television set up in the corner fastened to the ceiling so there would be no square inches lost. From time to time that set would indicate the number of minutes left in the total debate and the number of minutes left to each speaker. In that way they know when the debate is coming to a close. They have many interesting things like this. The Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) told me that the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette) also had referred to the British Parliamentary system.

Certainly there have been improvements around here since I first came to the House. I mentioned constituency offices. Then there is the matter of equipment in our own offices, and office space. When some of us first came here, if we wanted to have a confidential conversation with a constitutent or a group of constituents, or some Members came in and we had to have a private conversation, the secretary either went down to the cafeteria for a coffee or took a walk down the hall to the washroom or something because we only had one small office in which to operate.

Another difference which I would point out between our system and the British system is that in North America generally, here and in the U.S., we are loaded down with mail and telephone calls to a far greater degree than British Members of Parliament. If we really want to compare the three systems, we have to compare the actual work load. It is important that we as Members of Parliament have good staff and are able to keep them to do the work in our offices. That means half decent working conditions, half decent pay. If we cannot get people of good calibre to handle the issues in our offices and routine things which come up during the day, then we ourselves are going to be tied up in the administrative details of our own offices to such an extent that we will not be able to be legislators. When that happens, there is only one group left to do the legislating, and that is, the executive committee of Government, namely the Cabinet.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think in all democracies we have to be able to free the representatives of the people so as to enable them to dig into what is being done by way of legislation, to make proposals for legislation and improvements in legislation, and really to be able to discuss it intelligently with their constituents. Surely that is our role. But at the same time we must look after our constituents because that is what we are here for. We can do that if we are good individual administrators as MPs, but we cannot be good administrators if we do not have the staff, equipment and techniques with which to work.

People who come to the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, are there because in one way or another—indeed in many ways—they have already become leaders in their own communities. They have a lot of respect in their own communities. Therefore, why should we not have executive representation on the internal Economy Commission? We should have good representation from the House of Commons to represent the Members of this House of all Parties who are informed about what is required by all Members of this House and who go there with the same didication with which they go to the Committee on Management and Members' Services.

I am going to leave it at that, Mr. Speaker. This has been a long process, starting with representations on an individual basis, that first little group which met and tried to get constituency offices funded. Along the way a fairly good rapport has developed between members of the Management and Members' Services Committee and the representatives of the Commission on Internal Economy. There was a necessity for direct input on a continuing basis from Members of this House to the commissioners and a reform of the commissioners' operation itself because we have travel arrangements today that we would never have had if we did not have the opportunity to put them forward. I am going to sit down, Mr. Speaker, because I know that another Hon. Member wishes to speak.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I only have a few moments, and I just wanted, first of all to congratulate the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for proposing this Bill. I have had the privilege of being the Chairman of the Committee on Management and Members' Services for probably eight years now and I think, unlike the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette) who does not seem to know what the Committee does, that it has done a great deal to make working conditions for ordinary Members of Parliament a great deal better, both here on Parliament Hill and in serving their constituents wherever they happen to be located. I think as well that the Committee itself has, on a number of occasions, moved motions and sent them to the Commissioners on Internal Economy to have a member of my Committee serve on that Internal Economy Commission, because all too often the proposals of Members, who work very hard and are very diligent—and probably that Committee has the best attendance record of any Committee on Parliament Hill—are in a raw form without any explanation attached to them, and we have no one really to carry the message and to explain whatever nuances the motion might have. As a result, actions are taken which neither put the full proposal into effect nor reject it out of hand. That, almost without exception, is a mistake and it deters the work of individual Members of Parliament to a certain degree.

We must also recognize the fact that there are two different groups of Hon. Members who sit in this institution. Some are backbenchers and others are members of Cabinet. I do not think that, from a day to day point of view, we must worry about members of the Cabinet. They look after themselves pretty well. They have their own staffs, their own offices and their own people to do their thing. Individual Members of Parliament do not have anything similar.

There should be an infusion of information to the commissioners of the Internal Economy Commission as to just what the role of an individual MP might be on any particular issue that is before them and the problems which are associated, for instance, with rejecting a motion which has been discussed for many hours in the Management and Members' Services Committee before a resolution, which is usually a unanimous resolution in the Committee, goes forward to the Speaker.

We are an advisory committee to the Speaker and, as such, when it reaches the top echelon of decision-making, we do not have any part to play in it. I believe that even in an advisory way, a number of the members of the Management and Members' Services Committee should be in attendance at these particular meetings to point out what individual motions are all about and the reasons the Committee has put them forward.

Many things have been achieved, but many things have not. One of our concerns right at this moment in time involves the morale of either our office employees or of our personal employees on the Hill who are totally frustrated with individual Members of Parliament because we have been put in the position where we cannot even give our staff the 5 per cent increase which other civil servants have available to them. We cannot give them 1 per cent. We cannot give them anything. It is only because we have loyal staff that they are staying, if they are staying. I know of examples where they are not staying and are even going to the administration operated here on Parliament Hill because the pay is better than in individual Members' offices. We must get that straightened out. We must also do something about ensuring that the Speaker, the Chairman and the members of the Internal Economy Commission pay more attention to what is really happening in the Management and Member's Services Committee.

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-273 introduced by my colleague opposite, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), to amend the House of Commons Act with a view to changing the number of Commissioners of Internal Economy and looking into the possibility of delegation of powers by the Speaker.

I quite agree with the over-all objective advocated by the Hon. Member, but then I must say that his Bill, which was introduced in the House a little over two years ago and came up for debate on November 6, 1981, does not solve the whole problem. The Hon. Member himself admitted earlier today in a private discussion that his opinion has been changing all along and that he was prepared to go even further than in the measure under study.

As it happens, Mr. Speaker, I too am drafting a Bill which I thought and still think is more comprehensive than the Hon. Member's. In light of the statements I have heard here this afternoon, I realize that I am still not sure whether he is going far enough.

Still, my opinion is closer to that of the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) than to those of other Members, for I believe that some members of the Privy Council ought to be Commissioners of Internal Economy because they do have some financial responsibility toward the House. My bill should satisfy the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates) since it provides for two additional Commissioners, two backbenchers—one from the Government, one from the Opposition—who have no special duties and no allowance. I intend to introduce my bill in the near future.

Earlier, when I was listening to my colleague from Cumberland-Colchester—I must commend him and the others who sit on the Committee on Management and Members' Services for the heavy workload they carry—I wanted to ask him before he left whether at one time or another someone from that Committee had been invited to appear before the Internal Economy Commission. That is where—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings. There being no other item on the order of business for today, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5.16 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Monday, May 16, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin (p. 25389).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I realize that it is the Speaker's prerogative to recognize any Member, but the understanding that I had was that it was this Party's turn to speak. I had understood that in fact the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) was to be on his feet, but as he is unable to be here at the moment, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) had risen to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair accepts the Hon. Member's intervention. Naturally the Chair wants to be fair to the various Parties present in the House. Unfortunately, I do not yet have at my disposal the list of former speakers; the Chair apologizes for that. Nevertheless, on the basis of Members who have already spoken for each Party, if the Chair has not followed the usual allotment of Members from each Party, perhaps the Hon. Member for Provencher would cede the floor to the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I would like to co-operate. If there were previous arrangements, I am willing to step down and be recognized as the first speaker from our side of the House when our turn in the rotation does take place.

Mr. Taylor: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, on Monday, May 16, at 5.56, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) did take the floor and spoke for the four minutes that were left. I do not know of any particular arrangement that had been made, but he did take the proper place for the NDP at that time. I think that in fairness the NDP should now have a chance to speak because the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap did not have a chance to speak for very long; he simply filled in the remaining four minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I thank the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) for having refreshed the memory of the Chair. In any case, there seems to be agreement now to allow the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East to contribute to the debate.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleagues from the Progressive Conservative Party and particularly the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) for allowing me the opportunity to speak this morning. Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment that is now before the House because the amendment basically tells the people of Canada that our Party is not supporting the Bill to change the Crow rate.

Last weekend while I was in Saskatoon, I attended a very interesting and pleasant event. I was able to take part in the one hundredth birthday party of a Saskatoon citizen. Mr. Percy McKague was born on May 15, 1883 and last Sunday he celebrated 100 years of life. Mr. McKague is still a very clear-minded and lively person. He has a little difficulty with his hearing and he has a little difficulty with his sight, but his mind is as fresh as it ever was. He was happy to celebrate with members of his family and with friends who had recently celebrated their seventieth wedding anniversary, and I was happy to be with them.

As soon as Mr. McKague was able to recognize who I was when I sat close enough to him and spoke loudly enough so that he could see and hear me, he said: "You are from Ottawa, are you?" I said: "Yes, I am from Ottawa." Then he said: "Well, make sure they keep the Crow. The Crow belongs to the West." He said that in a clear, bell-like tone. We must remember that Mr. McKague, whose family started one of the local funeral parlours at the turn of the century, was speaking from the historic perspective of a person from Saskatchewan. People from Saskatchewan know that the Crow rate gave them some control over their own lives. As Mr. McKague said, the Crow belongs to the West. The East has plenty of things that look after it but the Crow belongs to the West.

There are many Members of the House and many people from the West, particularly Saskatchewan, who know that the Crow legislation made it possible for communities in western Canada to become established, to remain as communities with the possibility of a viable life and to build up what we call today the fibre of our Province. I know I am biased because I come from Saskatchewan. I have travelled the Province and I believe it has developed into a rather unique place on the planet. All across the Province there are viable communities established by people who have come from all over the world.

In pioneer days when the railroads were being built—and Mr. McKague was born two years before the first steel was laid in Saskatchewan—immigrants came to the communities being built all across the prairies. These people turned that land into fertile, food-producing farms.

In Saskatchewan today you can go to one town in which the predominant population is Ukrainian. You can go down the road about seven miles to another town and the people will be French-Canadian. Another 15 miles along there will be a German community, and so it goes, down the tracks. Each of these places was established by prairie settlers who came from different parts of the world and built towns, communities and viable centres where people could live and have a good life along the railroad lines. The railroads were the warp and woof of the fibre of our whole being.

Today it is extremely important to guard the human values established by our pioneer forefathers. These people put their lives, hearts, souls and futures into the West and made it a good place to live, a place in which the value of people, the value of the community and the ability to live together formed a Province built on unity and a common belief in itself.

The legislation proposed by the Minister is seen by some as a kind of saving dollars and cents legislation which will go to the very fibre of life on the Prairies. But this Party opposes the changes that make it necessary for people in those communities, those farming areas, those places in which the food of the world is produced, to shoulder an unfair burden.

I should like to repeat what Mr. McKague said in his clear, one hundred year old voice. He said that the Crow belongs to the West and an attack on the Crow in the West is an attack on life in the West.

Farmers, retired people, not just people on the land but storekeepers and business people, all know and understand that the reason these towns and centres continue to progress is that the Crow rate stabilizes the economy and the possibility for income on the Prairies. Everyone in western Canada knows that if the farmers are prosperous everyone ultimately benefits. It keeps the local stores open, it provides schools, it makes it possible for communities to have their own rinks, their own ball team and their own band. It makes it possible to live as viable human beings and to continue to do so. But they must keep the rail lines. The rail line is like an artery in a human body. If you cut an artery, the next thing that happens is that a part of your body dies. Abandon the rail lines and that is just what will happen to those communities.

I speak with deep feeling for those people who want to keep their way of life. Their way of life is uniquely associated with their ability to have railroads, to have rail service which links them with the rest of the country and with the rest of the world. They must ship their produce to the markets of the world. This Bill to change the Crow rate is basically an attack against the fibre of life in Saskatchewan. As my old friend in Saskatoon, Mr. Percy McKague, who is 100 years old, says, "The Crow is part of the West. It belongs to the West." I hope that is where it stays.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of points I would like to make and only ten minutes to make them, but perhaps I will be able to outline the areas I wish to highlight and, hopefully, there will be other occasions when I will be able to expand on these points. I look at the debate on the Crow rate proposals in a way similar to the way I looked at two other issues raised in this Parliament. First of all, it is not only a debate which relates to western Canada. Although the greatest impact will be in western Canada, it is a debate which has national implications and should concern every Member of the House.

The first major piece of legislation which affected us, I believe, as Canadians, and specifically as western Canadians, was the Constitution. Hon. Members might question why I raise the Constitution in this debate and I do so to make this point: it was a painful process for Canadians and for Hon. Members of this House. But to argue that the process did not result in a greater consensus would be violating the historical fact. What was argued in that exercise was that all Canadians are equal, that all regions are equal and that every Canadian and region should have the right and the ability to make their largest contribution to the national good; that they should have the right to develop their natural advantages. Canada as a whole benefits from the development of those natural advantages, not just simply the areas where that development takes place.

The second major piece of legislation which I believe affected Canadians in the perspective of how they see themselves was the National Energy Program. All of us, I would think, can agree that a national goal which has validity is that Canada become energy self-sufficient, and that is a national goal. The natural resources which give us that potential are based on the constitutional arrangement that those resources belong to the citizens of a given Province. But it does not stop there. Those Provinces and citizens have the right and the responsibility to develop those resources and to make the advantages which flow from that development available, again, to all Canadians.

That is essential, I believe, to understanding what Canada is. If we do not accept that principle, then those areas of the country, be it Atlantic Canada or western Canada, which do not have that advantage cannot develop their own economic base and become contributors to the larger national goal.

When I speak to provincial leaders and citizens who live in Provinces which receive a substantial part of their income through equalization payments, I do not hear that they want greater equalization payments. What I hear from them is that they want the right to develop their natural advantages in order to develop an economic base and become contributors to the national economic scene, rather than relying on ever-increasing equalization payments.

That, Mr. Speaker, takes me directly to this Bill. I appreciate that the Minister is in the House and he might find this a little odd, but I hope my remarks are not seen to be highly partisan because I approach this question on the basis of what is best for Canada as I see it, and what is best for us in western Canada.

Obviously this Bill, if it were passed, would radically change the infrastructure of western Canada. Any time change takes place there is the natural tendency to be fearful; that is human. Having said that, I think there is a consensus generally that there must be some change to the transportation system in western Canada. Why? Because there is the very distinct desire to diversify. Now, there has been diversification in agriculture and related industries in the West, but I think the Minister would agree with me that that has not resulted primarily because of Government leadership. Generally it has been economic reality where farmers and agri-business people have diversified for economic reasons. The question then is: Does this Bill enhance this diversification or will it hinder it? My view of the Bill before us today is that it will hinder it and I want to give the reasons why.

We agree there must be some change, there must be some diversification beyond that which is taking place, so we need a national transportation policy. This might seem a little odd to some Members, including some from the West, but I believe it sincerely. I do not think that our transportation system can be based solely on the concept of an export economy.

Mr. Pepin: Agreed.

Mr. Epp: I know for us in western Canada there is the argument of the net benefit of $6 billion in exports and therefore that is the transportation system. But surely if we want more diversification, it must also be based very strongly on what is best in the way of internal diversification for Canada as a whole. While I believe there will always be a bias toward transportation in western Canada to the export market, I do not think we are well served by virtually looking at our total transportation policy from that perspective alone.

What concerns me with the present Bill, Mr. Speaker, is what happens to the ability to diversify in the livestock sector. I see nothing in the Bill which says to me that there will be greater opportunity for our livestock producers to develop that industry.

I would like to mention hog production. In speaking to producers of hogs in Manitoba, they tell me they now see a loss between $3.75 and $4 a hundred weight on hog production. There is concern that we are in fact increasing the distortion between grain production and non-grain production on the Prairies. The ability, for instance, of Provinces to top load programs plays into that distortion. Therefore I think it is very clear where the solution must lie.

If I can speak provincially for a moment, I do not see anything in the Bill which would enhance the ability of Churchill to become a major port. I know of no country that has ever given up voluntarily, by attrition, any salt water port. I have never seen any country that has been willing to allow its ports to deteriorate to the point at which one questions their viability. I have always seen the opposite, that those ports are developed, and I want to see Churchill developed. I want to see the railway developed. I want to see a diversification in Churchill, not only in grain but also in Saskatchewan potash. I want to see products being handled through Churchill for a longer period of time.

The former Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who is now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), and I had as an objective: Why must we buy arctic technology? Why, as an arctic country, do we not develop the best arctic technology for ourselves, as Canadians? That matter is not addressed in the Bill.

In addition, what concerns me about the Bill is husbandry of the soil. I say that farmers must diversify for reasons of the soil, for reasons of economics, but the summer fallow wheat cycle simply does not address the problem any more. We are mining the soil. We must surely have legislation which will allow the farmer to farm the very best way the soil of which, for the moment, he is the steward. That must also be in the legislation.

Mr. Pepin: In the legislation?

Mr. Epp: I am saying in the legislation in terms of the philosophy which will allow farmers to make those decisions.

Mr. Pepin: But you can't put everything in the Bill.

Mr. Epp: The last point I want to make, and I said I would be short of time today, is this. The Minister is opposed to the hoist. He asks, "Why should there be further delay?" That brings me back to the first point I made. I believe that in the federal state called Canada it takes time to develop consensus. The Minister will say; "We have had Hall, we have had Snavely, etc.; have we not had enough time?" I am convinced that a consensus is developing which would allow producers to consider these various options, including the one advanced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). Therefore I suggest to the Minister, let us now use the new awakening in the farm community, in the western community, in fact in Canada, to develop that consensus and have the best legislation to meet the objectives on which I think most of us agree, rather than push through legislation which, for a political reason today, might seem acceptable but tomorrow could seriously harm both the West and Canada itself.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to enter this debate on Bill C-155 because it is certainly a very important piece of legislation to the Peace River country. I guess the reason for that is very simple. Farming is one of the most essential elements of the Peace River economy. The communities and businesses existing in that area have largely been built because of the agricultural sector and the economy which has contributed to the well-being of the area. Therefore, the prosperity and well-being of the region are dependent, to a very large extent, upon farming.

Another thing that makes our country and our area unique is the fact that we are in the far northern part of Alberta where we have a unique climate and unique soil conditions. We have a unique growing season due to the fact that our days are long and we have an abundance of sunshine. Despite the fact that we are so far north, we can produce very good, high quality crops.

Another factor which makes us unique in that part of the country is that we have a large amount of undeveloped land which is still to come onstream. It is one of the last large agricultural frontiers in Canada which is essentially still populated by pioneers today. They are pioneers who originally came here in the early 1900s and are still taming and developing new agricultural lands in our area.

The people of that region have faced hardships, which has been particularly evident lately. That is one reason why I am so concerned about Bill C-155. As a result of the fact that we have experienced drought conditions in the last four crop years, our farmers are facing difficulties.

Another problem our area faces is the long distance which must be travelled to major centres. Consequently, our local farmers have had difficulty being productive and ensuring that their land is productive. They have had to pay the price to do those difficult tasks.

The Crow rate was originally established to aid the pioneers of an earlier age. I do not believe that the goal of that original philosophy has been reached in my area. In terms of Bill C-155, I do not foresee a great deal of improvement for the people of the Peace River country.

Let me elaborate on the problems there. I believe the most serious effect of this Bill is that it will take away a consistent freight rate which is the one thing that farmers could plan on to predict their economic situation. All other agricultural factors, such as fuel costs, fertilizer costs and machinery costs, have fluctuated. The freight rate has been the only consistent cost that farmers could relate to.

This legislation does not in any way enshrine that freight rate. The Western Grain Transportation Act will create a new bureaucracy, which always causes me concern. Another concern is the fact that there will be open-ended price increases. I suggest that the settlement for the railway companies is too generous and not essential.

I am also concerned that there will once again be too much ministerial power. We have seen that demonstrated in many Bills that have been brought before the House.

Mr. Pepin: That is not true at all.

Mr. Cooper: The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) should read Bill C-48 for a good example of ministerial powers being placed one upon the other. We are seeing the same thing in this Bill.

I want to re-emphasize the problem of distance from markets in the Peace River country; I believe that will have a real impact on this Bill. I have discussed this issue with the Minister of Transport in the past. In the Peace River area there are places like La Crete, Fort Vermillion and Worsley which do not have rail service. Today there are farmers in our area who must load their grain in trucks and travel from 50 miles to 120 miles, in some cases, to the nearest railway. That is money they have already been paying but the average Canadian farmer has not since they only travel an average of 20 miles to the nearest elevator. That is an additional expense that the people in our area have faced. As a result of this legislation this problem becomes intensified and more serious. There is no possibility of a resolution of the problem for those people.

Another problem is the 31.1 million tonne limit. Again, that is a disincentive to people in my area. It is a disincentive to increase production and a serious disincentive to land development and improvement. That development is very essential to the Peace country since there is so much new land that we would like to see brought onstream in order to benefit the economy of the Peace country.

I believe the people of the Peace country will suffer doubly as a result of the proposed changes in Bill C-155. They will be at the mercy of the bureaucratic structure. They will have to pay high initial handing rates and high rail rates. All of that will be a disincentive to increased production in the Peace country. Of course, they are still adding the high cost of initial freight rates in taking grain from the farms that 50, 100 or 120 miles to the nearest elevator.

I believe it is important to note that this legislation reflects a change in attitude away from the support of grain production. It is a deviation from that policy which has been so important in the past. This legislation ignores the Hall Commission Report while it accepts the Snavely Report and the Gilson Report. But then, it is even changing the Gilson Report to the advantage of the railways. The Gilson Report initially recommended that producers would pay 4.5 per cent of the cost as opposed to the 6 per cent inflation which is now proposed. The increase in the open-ended freight rate makes it difficult for producers in our outlying areas to carry on grain production. That is a major concern in an area that is developing new land. I cannot emphasize enough the fact that the farmer will be paying more because of his initial costs in taking that grain to the railhead.

My concern for all of those cost factors becomes very dramatic when I consider a new era with new land and the high costs already facing farmers. They now have an added expense which is brought forward in Bill C-155. I believe it will make all the hard work and investment by the people in the Peace country less worth while and make that pioneering spirit that we have needed in many of our new areas less attractive and less worth pursuing. The consequences will not only be an effect on the agricultural economy of the Peace country but in fact a very dramatic and serious effect on our whole economy, since everything is so closely related.

The Government has told us that diversification is a primary goal of changes to the Crow rate. That is important. While that is very important to the people in the Peace country, all of the diversification in the world will not induce our farmers to produce goods that they cannot afford to ship. There is no flexibility provided for in the present situation. The Crow benefit should be applied in such a way as to encourage our farmers to make on new products, use their land in different ways and provide a better farming base for them. I do not see that in this particular legislation because there is no flexibility.

I believe that Canada as a whole benefits from the production and shipment of grain. I suggest that we are all aware of the fact when we look at the country. We all realize that since Canada benefits from the agricultural community, which is certainly true of the Peace country, we have supported that industry in order to allow it to compete, become strong and develop new lands. That is now suddenly coming to an end. We do not have a river system such as the Mississippi to ship our grain. We have to cross mountains and prairies in order to reach both export and domestic markets.

The Government has indicated time and again that it wants to support Canadian industry. I believe very strongly that if we are to support Canadian industry we have to support the farm community.

In closing, I want to say that I do not support this particular Bill because I do not think it helps the farmers of the Peace country, and I do not see it benefiting them in the difficulties they face today, or in the future.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, as an Ontario Member and not as a westerner, I rise to speak against this Bill, unfortunately only for a short ten minutes. This Bill, which would change the traditional Crow rate after being in place some 86 years, will fundamentally change the whole transportation system of Canada. If the change remotely parallels the Post Office, CNR, the CBC, the National Energy Program or Canadair, I would ask Members to consider the devastating results for all Canadians. No one trusts this Government with its sticky fingers on anything, let alone the national transportation system of this great nation.

Every Province and every industry in Canada, not just the West by any means—and I reiterate I am an Ontario Member—will be damaged by this change, particularly the total agricultural community; and unfortunately, the extent of this damage and its total effect is an unknown quantity.

Mr. Pepin: Jim Snow will be angry at you.

Mr. Stewart: Why? Because this Bill is so obtuse, so convoluted, so ill-conceived, so disastrous a bureaucratic nightmare, Mr. Minister, that even the President of CNR whom you represent and two top lawyers admit they do not understand it.

Mr. Pepin: I am destroyed by the power of the argument.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I invite the Hon. Member to address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Stewart: The Minister was heckling, with all due respect, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has suddenly become—and he is leaving the Chamber—after such a lacklustre performance with rail curtailment and the VIA debacle, an expert in the field of transportation. This, of course, came after his advice from whom else but his Quebec caucus. Yes, that Minister is an instant expert, Mr. Speaker. We all know the definition of an "expert" in this House: "X" is an unknown quantity and "spurt" is a big drip under pressure.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: Mr. X was under enough pressure from his Quebec caucus and colleagues not to come before this House to express his proposed changes to the National Transportation Act. Of course not. Major changes to the fundamental infrastructure of this country, particularly anything to do with western Canada, English-speaking Tory Canada, are done outside the House by this Government using Order in Council and/or closure. At every opportunity this Government bypasses the rights and freedoms of this institution which have been nurtured over tens of years and make us, the elected representatives or voice of the people, absolutely redundant. This is the procedure of this Government. We have seen it for months and years. Do not call witnesses to the committees; do not let Members speak; just bypass, bypass.

The Minister first made his intention to make this change known in Winnipeg on June 28, 1982. This was the birth of the Gilson Report, accepted I might add, which was announced in Winnipeg. Twice more the Minister made statements outside the House and the fifth announcement was made in, of all places, the theatre of the National Press Club. So much for Parliament! This was all done outside these hallowed halls, and I say that advisedly. Five times it was done, twice more than even St. Peter. This was all done out of reach of debate on something of such coast to coast interest and tantamount importance as the complete transportation system, which is the glue upon which this nation was built. This Government has a total disregard for the parliamentary process. In short, what it has done is cowardly and absolutely reprehensible and I hope Canadians will remember.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is more. When the Bill was introduced after a battery of lawyers and bureaucratic whiz-kids got finished hatching it—and here we have shades of Eddie Clark and the disastrous National Energy Program—only 25 copies were made available to this side of the House and those were not received until late afternoon. Is this parliamentary process? Is this democracy? We thus had but one day to examine the legislation, and upon examination the legislation is a garbled diatribe of the impossible. It reminds me of something an old fellow used to say in the streets of Barrie. It is something "oversicoscious, upstantiatious, plarell, plichadale, platinum plated before sundown".

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: If that sounds unintelligible, Mr. Speaker, think on this. The Crow statutory freight rate was seen as necessary for our economic well-being and was simply defined at a rate of one-half a cent per tonne mile. It has now been changed into the following gobbledegook—I will read a little bit of it. This was pointed out by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who has forgotten more about transportation than the present Minister will ever know.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart: Just listen to a short excerpt, Mr. Speaker. In the new piece of legislation, a simple thing like half a cent a tonne mile is now eight paragraphs. I will not take up the time of the House with the whole diatribe because my hon. friend from Vegreville has already read it into the record, but the clauses are eight and they take up better than half a page of Hansard. These Clauses read like this:

> The annual rate scale in respect of a crop year shall be determined by multiplying the amount per tonne for the movement of grain over each range of distance set out in the base rate scale by the quotient obtained by dividing the estimated eligible costs of the railway companies in respect of that crop year less the CN adjustment in respect of that crop year by the base year revenues within the meaning of subsection (2), as those revenues are adjusted in accordance with the grain tonnage forecast for that crop year—

That is one paragraph.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart: Then we have Subclause (4) of Clause 37, which reads:

> For the purposes of subsection (2), the "estimated government commitment" means an amount equal to the aggregate of
> (a) the Crown Benefit for that crop year divided by 31.1 million tonnes of grain and multiplied by the number of tonnes of grain that, in the estimation of the Administrator—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) is rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Breau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order! The Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), on a point of order.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I realize the Hon. Member has a right to speak as fast as he wants to, but perhaps I may remind him that there is an interpretation service for Members who do not understand English, and if the Hon. Member speaks this fast, the interpreters will not be able to do their work.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I am not sure what the Chair is expected to do in such circumstances. I did notice the Hansard reporter was having considerable difficulty following the Hon. Member. I invite him to resume his speech.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Hansard reporter, but I am reading from Hansard at page 25383 for May 12, 1983. I was quoting from the speech of the Hon. Member for Vegreville. I apologize to Brenda, if I may be so bold as to use her name.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I do not know exactly how to qualify it, but I do not think the Hon. Member should refer to employees or staff of the House of Commons in the way he did.

Mr. Stewart: I am very sorry, Mr. Speaker, but it is about time some of the good employees of the House of Commons were recognized.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart: At any rate, Mr. Speaker, that is how ludicrous this piece of legislation is, and I hope I have proved a point.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart: To add insult to injury, after only two days of debate, once again we have closure. This makes 18 times in this session that, with closure invoked, free speech and the ability as Members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, which I say with pride, to represent our constituents by speaking on their behalf—which is why we are here—have been thwarted or completely garroted. And so the bells rang again. Pourquoi? Why am I speaking now? Because the new rules limit debate to 10 minutes after 8 hours and the Government capitulated to us on closure only because of the time element; otherwise I would be speaking on a closure debate. I hope this does not happen this afternoon, Mr. Government House Leader.

Closure was not necessary, only in a dire circumstance, before this Government came along. That is the only time it is necessary. But we have experienced closure 18 times this session. It has become the rule, not the exception. The government treats this Bill as if it were a routine piece of legislation. It brings this Bill forth knowing full well that it needs revision.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), while in the West, admitted its imperfections but said that because there were no representatives from the West in his Government it would have to do. Well, it will not do. It is not routine legislation. It is almost as important as the Constitution, a Constitution without property rights or language protection for the majority, I might add.

Now we have a national transportation policy change, a change that can only be passed by this House, thank heaven. This is a Bill so incomplete that it does not address the impact on western grain producers, meat packers and the livestock feeding industry, let alone the impact on my Province and the Maritimes.

Where is the cost analysis of this impact that will be felt coast to coast? Because that is what Canada is all about. It is a small market of less than 25 million souls spread some 4,000 miles and held together by a band of steel known as the railroad. It was built by a population at the time of less than 3.5 million dedicated people, people deeply in debt, and against all odds. Now we want to destroy that system as it refers to all Canadians.

Today, as then, they must have fair freight rates in the West, subsidized freight rates. What is wrong with that? We subsidize our roads, our canals, our highways, our sidewalks and our airports. Let us take a good hard look at Mirabel which loses $1 million a week, Mr. Speaker. Are we going to turn that money around and give it to the railroads? Why not our hard working and tax-paying farmers? Fairness can only come about with total hearings in committee by committee witnesses, such as was done with the Gilson hearings. We need real experts, not a bevy of ministerial bureaucrats. We need real debate in this House.

To show just how ludicrous is the handling of this Bill by the Minister, before he even tabled it announced unseen modifications. They were an agreement regarding linkage of grain-moving costs to international costs and the inclusion of specialty crops under the Crow rate. Lo and behold, these specific details were not made to Parliament but to the Press Club across the road. They are nowhere to be found in the legislation.

Nowhere in the Throne Speech or in the last election was change to the Crow rate even mentioned. One must wonder if this legislation in its present emasculated form, or anything vaguely resembling it, would be before us if the Government had even one Member west of Winnipeg.

This Bill, by estimation, will cost grain producers 10 per cent of their gross at a time when many are fighting for survival. It will cost livestock producers $20 a tonne to offset grain producers. The out-of-whack rates in oilseeds and grain as opposed to processed products should be removed. All farmers must be sure they have an efficient, inexpensive grain transportation system.

This Government and the railways are a fact of life, and in view of the actions of the United States, Argentina and other countries which subsidize grain exports, we must provide a low, competitive freight rate. Of course, the railways should receive proper compensation to be able to provide proper equipment and maintenance to move all Canadian commodities to market. This Bill is too generous to the railways which, by 1990, will receive a 1,000 per cent increase; and it does not address properly the other problems just stated.

Mr. Minister, Canadians need more input before their national transportation system is vandalized as the national energy system of this country was vandalized. Mr. Minister, why don't you go back to the drawing board.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member is an experienced Parliamentarian. I have admonished him previously to address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Stewart: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, and I conclude—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I should inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in this debate as the Member of Parliament for my riding of Vancouver South, as a western Member of Parliament and Member of Parliament from the Province of British Columbia. What I want to say today through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister comes not just as a consequence of my own views on this Bill, which will become clear as I continue, but I want to speak on behalf of fair-minded British Columbians who are concerned with all of our country.

I want to say on behalf of British Columbians who have a great stake in an improved rail system that when they start to realize the deficiencies and defects of this Bill, they will be as opposed to the provisions that have been presented to this Parliament as are the people in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. I go even further and say that as British Columbians begin to realize what is wrong with this Bill and as citizens in other parts of the country than the prairie Provinces begin to realize what is wrong with it, they are going to say to the Minister on the floor of this House, through their elected representatives, "back up a bit and take some time to think it through".

We have been told that there can be no improvement to the rail system unless this Bill is passed by the end of June. That is the position of the Government and the Government propagandists. That position is being repeated in various places in this country to try to gain support for this Government to justify the closure that it nearly brought in and may still bring in, despite the fact that this Bill goes to the heart of what this country is all about. This is one of the most important provisions to come before this House of Commons since I came here in 1972. It affects dramatically and effectively three Provinces of this country. However, it affects indirectly, and in some ways just as dramatically, the entire country.

If we are going to have a Canada, no piece of legislation that is going to cut right to the heart of what makes this country go can be pushed and bullied through this Parliament just because one Party has a majority.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: It is absolutely incredible that this Government can come here, whine, twist, wring its hands and say that the people of British Columbia will be put to the blocks in terms of transportation if this Bill does not go through immediately. That is not true, and the Minister knows it.

On February 1 the Minister issued a press release. He was talking about his then proposal which has now been changed. He said:

> In the interim, to ensure that this transportation initiative brings jobs and investment as soon as possible, the federal Government will make payments of $313 million to the railways so that additional railway construction and investment can be undertaken this Spring.

The suggestion that is being made and will be made when the Government propaganda machine gets going is that if this Bill does not go through in its present form right away, the Government is justified in bringing in closure because the West will not have a better transportation system. In view of all the talk about western Canadian development and other things, that is just a lot of hogwash. It is a cruel deception that will be put upon people who will be asked a simplistic question: "Do you want better railways? Then let this Bill go through and back us in closure."

That, with great respect, is slippery tactics. It is dishonest tactics. What is more, it cuts right to the heart of what Members on the Government side of the House have always, at least platitudionously, put out, that we have to concern ourselves with every part of this country.

I cannot state the outrage that it gives me to know the tactics that are being used. I am from British Columbia. I have been intimately associated with the forest industry for many years. As Minister, I was responsible for forestry matters in this House. As Hon. Members know, nobody fought harder to do something about the needs of western forestry. In fact, during the short period that I was Minister, we managed to turn a program around.

Every British Columbian knows that we need better rail traffic, better rail facilities, more cars and more capacity. What is necessary in this House is to have sufficient time to debate the deficiencies of this Bill so that some sympathy can be gained in places like British Columbia in order that they may realize that this Bill will not do anything for western agriculture. It will not do much for British Columbia. It does absolutely nothing for the grain producers of British Columbia, or for the livestock or agricultural producers of British Columbia.

In what other ways does it affect British Columbia? Will the 50,000 acres of the so-called Dominion coal lands in the Province of British Columbia go back to the Province of British Columbia as a result of this Bill? No. They go back to the federal Government and British Columbians should know that. British Columbians are also aware that we need better rail facilities for the transportation of our coal and minerals. British Columbians need time to realize that there is no reason in the world why upgrading of the railways cannot go ahead now, despite the fact that it may take a little longer to get this Bill through the House than the Minister would like.

I deeply resent being told that if I do not pass this Bill, with all its warts and defects, the fact that three Provinces are opposed to it and hundreds of thousands of people's lives and future are dependent upon this Bill, there will not be proper rail transportation in my Province. That is a cheap argument, and I know it. I do no intend to be silent about it. This Government has no right to come into this House and deal with matters in this way.

• (1200)

In terms of the importance of this Bill to the country, the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) stated on Friday, May 13, 1983, about his own Bill:

> In fact, this is the third major piece of legislation that has come before this Parliament, after the patriation of the Canadian Constitution and our national energy policy which was announced over the last few years and months.

Has anyone in the country forgotten that there was a protracted and extended debate on the Constitution issue and that it was brought about with some decency and accord? Has anyone in the country forgotten that the national energy policy, which has now proved to be a disaster, was debated for weeks and weeks in the House despite efforts by the Government to close debate off? By the Government's own admission, Mr. Speaker, this legislation is the third most important piece of legislation brought in since its election in 1980, yet it wants to put it through in a couple of days.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, that is just not good enough. This legislation goes right to the heart of what our country is all about.

There is no need for the Government to say that this must be done in so many hours or so many days. There are major defects in the Bill which can be corrected if the Government will use a little commonsense, back up and give Parliamentarians a chance to look at it. I say that to my hon. friends on the Government side because I am sure they can come up with better suggestions than those contained in these provisions.

The Government has done what it always does in these matters. For days, weeks and months it failed to get consensus, but because some of its so-called experts who were referred to by my hon. friend a moment ago decided that this is what is best for the country, that this is what we must do and we have the numbers to do it, the Government comes to the House of Commons saying that there now is a deal. No matter how many pieces of the garment are falling rent, the Government says: "We now have a deal and it is now up to you Members of Parliament to darn well pass the Bill as fast as we expect to". That is the trouble with what is going on in the House of Commons and with what has gone on for many years, and that is the trouble with this Bill.

I say in closing, Mr. Speaker, that British Columbians will not be taken in. They want better rail transportation. They know that the money can be spent now and that the rail transportation system could be improved. But they also know that there is no excuse in the world to stop improving the railways just because this Bill will take a little bit more time than was expected by the Hon. House Leader of the Liberal Government.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I listened with a great interest to the speech made by my political neighbour, the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). I found it interesting that in his speech, which albeit was only ten minutes, he never once mentioned the word "Crow" or the words "statutory rate". He made no defence of the Crowsnest Pass rate, and I think that that is rather typical of the Tory duplicity on this particular Bill. Rather than trying to defend the Crow rate and trying to defend prairie farmers, many of the Tories, although not all of them, are limiting their attack to the process, which process I must say is somewhat less than good.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know about both the Crow and the statutory rate. I support both.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sargeant: At least I have made a conversion here, Mr. Speaker. I was also interested in his defence of the Port of Churchill and I am glad that he has been converted on that issue as well. I would remind him that it was only about three and a half years ago during the time of the Conservative Government that another Manitoba Member, the Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), for whom I have a great deal of respect on many issues, headed up a task force whose recommendations would have led to the demise of the Port of Churchill. I am glad to see that the Conservatives are now supporting the Port of Churchill, and that is very admirable.

I now speak to Bill C-155, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: That is a good idea.

Mr. Sargeant: Is that a good idea? Thank you. Mr. Speaker, a belief which I tend to agree with which has reached almost mythological status in western Canada is that the present Government and the Liberal Party in general are ignorant of what is going on in western Canada. During the last few weeks ever since the Pepin-Gilson proposals were introduced in the House, during Question Period Members from both Opposition Parties have questioned the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or whoever about the wisdom and the specifics of the Pepin-Gilson proposal, and I have been surprised and astonished by the smugness of some of the backbench Liberals, people who would not know No. 1 Northern from stinkweed. I have been surprised at how smug they are and how much they seem to believe that they know what is best for western Canada.

Mr. Breau: The Hon. Member does not hesitate to speak about other parts of the country.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is a good thing that somebody speaks for eastern Canada because the Hon. Member surely does not.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sargeant: I would put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Government is really not very concerned about the welfare of prairie farmers. The Liberal Government has only two seats west of the Ontario border, it has few votes and it is going down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. There appears to be two debates going on at the same time. The Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake has the floor.

Mr. Sargeant: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Government is going in exactly the wrong direction if it hopes to win friends in western Canada with this Bill. If it is really interested in the national unity of the country, it will treat prairie farmers or indeed all farmers with the same kind of respect that it treats Bay Street bankers and railway executives. I must admit that I am glad that the Government has found a little bit of sense and withdrawn, at least for the time being, its closure motion.

To date, the whole procedure followed by the Government has shown a colossal disregard and disrespect for the parliamentary process. This Bill will have a greater impact on prairie farmers than has almost any other Bill that has been passed in the history of the House. The impact on the rest of the country will be profound. To attempt to ram the Bill through Parliament in a few weeks is an insult to the House and to Canadians in general. To have brought in closure on the third day of debate, Mr. Speaker, is inexcusable. Thank God the Government was able to dig deep enough to find at least a little bit of deceny and a little bit of respect for Canadian farmers and has temporarily withdrawn its closure motion.

The whole process has stunk for a number of years. The railway companies have been crying poor for years. These largest of corporate welfare bums have been trying to get their stricky fingers into the Government's cookie jar once again. Yesterday we heard my friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), tell the House that now, at a time when the railways claim they do not have enough money to develop the rail system in western Canada, they can find $370 million to buy up American railways. That is scandalous, Mr. Speaker.

In recent years we have seen a former Minister of Transport, the former Member for Saskatoon East, sell out his western birthright by advocating the removal of the Crow. What happened to him when he next went to the polls after he had shown his true colours on the Crow rate? One would have thought that the Government might have learned a lesson from that, but no, I do not believe the Government is capable of learning anything.

For many years, long before I ever came to the House, I have been puzzled and have wondered why the Government was forever setting up royal commissions, non-royal commissions, task forces, etc, to study things. These commissions would travel the country and spend zillions of dollars and they would sometimes present very good reports. The Government would ignore those reports, or if the Government did not like the recommendations, it would set up another study. I understand that in European circles this is known as the Canadian solution. If you do not want to face something, study it. I do not think we should tar all Canadians with that dirty brush; we should call it the Liberal Canadian solution.

That has been the Government's approach to the whole question of grain handling and the Crow issue. Not the first but easily the most comprehensive and the most balanced study was the one done by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall. He was a prominent Conservative hired by a Liberal Government who reached New Democratic conclusions. One would have thought that this would be enough to accord his study the overwhelming support of all political Parties.

But, no! He started from the premise of maintaining the Crowsnest Pass rate for farmers and working from there to solve the other problems. The Liberals and Tories had already decided to start by scrapping those rates for farmers. So the one study that solicited farmers' opinions, listened to farmers' opinions and reflected them in its report and its recommendations was thrown in the waste pile by past Liberal Governments and by the Conservative Government during its short sojourn in power in 1979.

After Hall there was the Snavely study which looked at things from a strictly economic or Harvard business school point of view, virtually ignoring any social, cultural or historic criteria. That was an approach totally unacceptable to western farmers.

Last summer, fed up with studies that provided recommendations that it did not like, the Department of Transport puts its own package together. It hired a commissioner in Professor Gilson who, it felt, would bring in a report that reflected the Department's package. Surprise, surprise—Gilson did that. The Gilson study was a sham. The Department had already decided what it wanted. I wonder if Professor Gilson realized that he was being used, that he had been conned by the Department of Transport.

Even the Prime Minister was conned. In the House he said that no changes would be made to the Crow unless there was widespread consensus in western Canada on whether and how to do so. Later when he stood in the House and defended the Pepin-Gilson proposals I think he actually believed that there was consensus. Even he had been conned. It must have been quite a surprise to him when he found that the prairie opposition to the Pepin-Gilson proposals was matched by the opposition of farmers in his own Province, the strongest of Liberal bastions. He had better keep looking over his shoulder; there may well be a number of Quebec Members of Parliament who may go the way of the late, great Otto Lang.

Perhaps we have come to the real reason for the closure motion being withdrawn—opposition from the Liberal caucus. If anyone wants to know how much consensus there is on these proposals, how popular the Pepin-Gilson proposals are on the Prairies, I suggest they ask the Minister of Transport about the warm welcome given him by Saskatchewan farmers when he visited the Legislature of that Province a month or two ago.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity, however short, to participate in the debate. I should like to comment that Members of the NDP are up to their old tricks again, trying to get back into the debate on the Crow by attacking the Conservatives. They spend half their time worrying about the Conservatives. They are the great defenders of everything and indeed nothing.

I should like the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and his colleagues to remember what things were like a year ago when interest rates on mortgages that people held on their homes accelerated to such a degree that there was a march on the House of Commons by people demanding action by Members. That was because interest rates had increased mortgage payments on their homes by 100 per cent. Do Members of the Government realize that by 1990 transportation costs to western producers of grain will be increased by 400 per cent? What are we doing to this country of ours that is supposed to believe in equality of opportunity for all?

The agricultural industry produces wealth from the ground which is converted into money. It contributes $6 billion per year to our balance of payments position. This is basically what we ship across the country.

The farmers' input costs have increased dramatically. The Government fails to recognize that all the various charges under the National Energy Program that feed $1 billion per year to companies like PetroCan find their way into input costs. As well, recognizing that commodity prices are going down, that all across the country farmers are going bankrupt and nothing is being done about it, the Government brings in a Bill to change the statutory freight rate to the point where the farmer will not be able to survive. This is clearly the most important thing that has hit the country for years.

I should like to invite the Minister of Transport to northern Alberta, an area where farmers do not even have a small country elevator. From the beginning farmers have trucked their grain from 60 to 100 miles to the nearest branch line terminal. He should read some of the letters that farmers write to me.

I would point out to the Minister that I do not ask a farmer whether he can deliver a Conservative vote if I am to stand here and defend his rights; I do not ask him if he can deliver a Liberal vote if I am to stand up and protect his rights. In Alberta, however, the Prime Minister faced the producers by saying; "I know this Bill on the statutory Crow rate is not a proper Bill, I know it is not economically sound, but you people cannot deliver Liberal votes like they do in Quebec and other parts of Canada that this Bill is drafted to protect". That is the sickness of this Government.

The Minister of Transport makes fun of this very fundamental concept. Certainly there is competition to gain a seat in this House. We all go out and campaign. But when we get here, we represent every man, woman and child in the riding. The highest honour that can be bestowed on a man in this country is when he is made Prime Minister. Certainly he is there because he campaigned and because he got the support of a certain party; but he represents every Canadian from coast to coast. He should not have the unmitigated gall to say to people: "You can't deliver the votes; therefore we are putting through a Bill that we recognize is not economically sound, that we recognize is not right, but you cannot deliver Liberal votes in western Canada".

A sickness pervades this Government, Mr. Speaker. We have here a Bill that we cannot even comprehend.

Mr. Chénier: Go to school. Learn to read.

• (1220)

Mr. Shields: The Hon. Member opposite says "Learn to read". I would like to suggest to him that he just read through the Bill once.

Basically, Mr. Speaker, I believe the tenet is true that all Members of Parliament come here with the idea that they are going to do the best they possibly can for their constituency and for their country. I believe there is a real sense of purpose in a person who runs for office and comes to the House of Commons. I give that to the Hon. Members for the Liberal Party which forms the Government, and I give that to the Hon. Members for the New Democratic Party. I may not always agree with them, but there should be a system prevailing which allows us to sit down and discuss a Bill.

When Bills are introduced in this House and put on the Order Paper, they are printed and every Hon. Member gets a copy of the Bill. They are left there for two months so that pressure groups, lobby groups and interested groups from across the country can have input. But what has happened here? I cannot understand the Minister of Transport doing this because he is an honourable man. I have always admired his honesty and the straighforward way he speaks about issues. Did the House Leader say to the Minister of Transport, "We will ram it through with closure"? I cannot understand this because it is not in character with the Minister of Transport. It is truly not, Mr. Speaker.

I suggest to the Minister that he give the necessary time to allow interest groups from across the country to study the Bill. Surely he has read the Bill. Surely he cannot honestly stand up in this House and say that he understands all the provisions, that he can work out what it is going to cost a producer in northern Alberta to ship his grain, how much a bushel? The legal experts cannot get through the legal jargon; how can he pretend that he can? How can he pretend that we can? It is badly worded legislation. It is bad legislation at a time when costs of producers are going up increasingly every day. How can we expect a producer to survive if we increase his freight rate, the cost to him, by 400 per cent?

We recognized that situation in this House when it hit the home owner. We recognized immediately that the home owner, who was locked into a mortgage and then had to renew his mortgage when interest rates were so high, would have his payments doubled in some cases. We recognized that in this House, every one of us, and we were prepared to sit down and try to do something about it. I suggest to the Minister, Mr. Speaker, that we are prepared to do something; we are prepared to sit down, we are prepared to say to the farmer "We will give you a choice". We are prepared to work on it, but we cannot do it in two or three days. This Bill is totally and absolutely wrong. The way this Bill is drafted is an outlandish attack on the producers of western Canada.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say, through you, Sir, to my colleague the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), and to my colleague the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), that the voices which you are hearing today are the voices of Hon. Members from across Canada. They are expressing the views of the people across Canada on this Crow rate Bill wich is before this House.

As a Member of Parliament for a riding in northeastern Ontario, I must say that my constituents will be directly affected by this legislation. Many of them are concerned about this legislation and its implications. There is a large agricultural community within my riding of Timiskaming and the farmers of northern Ontario share many of the concerns of their colleagues in western Canada. I must say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier), being from northern Ontario, should have concern for transportation in northern Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDougall: Like western Canada, northeastern Ontario was developed as a result of the construction of a railway. The railway was the lifeline of many small communities. The character and nature of those communities developed in stride with the railway. The rail line was the transportation link to distant markets and a key factor in the economic well being of the farming community.

The effect that freight rates can have on individual farmers and the agricultural industry is a well-known fact in northern Ontario. This Bill could have a devastating effect on the economy and lifestyle of western Canada. The Crowsnest Pass statutory freight rate has been the basis for the system of production, distribution, marketing and transportation of grain for decades. Every farmer knew what his transportation costs would be each year. It was simple and it was stable. It was one of the few constant factors in an industry that is subject to the whims of nature. Because of the impact this legislation will have, one would think that the Government would proceed with caution and attempt to reach a consensus with all who are involved as to what steps should be taken before attemping to change the Crow. That, however, would be far too logical a method to expect from this Government. Instead, it has decided to proceed with this legislation no matter what consequences to the West.

There are numerous concerns created by this Bill which force me to oppose it. To start with, it is a complex and bureaucratic nightmare. It is doubtful that a Philadelphia lawyer could decipher it, let alone the average farmer or layman. As I said earlier, the farmer knew what the Crow rate was and could plan accordingly. It was simple, half a cent per tonne mile. What we have presented in this legislation is a formula for setting freight rates which would make anyyone's head swim. It is nothing but bureaucratic gobbledygook.

I do not believe that this Bill retains the principles of a statutory freight rate which is essential to the grain producers of western Canada. The freight rate structure set out in the Bill will allow for open-ended escalation without taking into account what the wheat farmers' profit position is or the value of the grain. By 1985-86, producers will be paying double the existing Crow rate. An additonal $160 million will be taken out of the prairie economy. We on this side of the House are aware of the delicate financial position many of our farmers are now in. Production costs have skyrocketed and farmers' net incomes have nose-dived. Wheat prices today are only a shade higher than they were nine years ago. In that period of time the rate of inflation increased by 135 per cent. If that rate applied to the price of wheat our farmers would be getting $11 a bushel instead of $4.63.

There is no protection for the farmers from escalation of the freight rate. By 1991-92, farmers will be paying five and one halft times the Crow rate, which means that more than an additional $1 billion will be drawn from western Canada. The Minister has stated his intention to bring in a safety net. The record of this Government indicates we need more than good intentions to depend on.

There are many more concerns that we have with this piece of legislation. The Bill excludes new crops and specialty crops. The Minister has suggeted there will be changes, but I do not see them yet.

There is no provision in this Bill to reduce rates if costs should happen to fall. The Government should not have to be reminded what happened in the field of energy. Everything was based on a projected oil price of $70 a barrel and no thought was given to the possibility that prices would drop.

The Bill is a costly bureaucratic mechanism, introduced at a time when agricultural prices are declining and production costs are on the increase. It will force further costs on farmers who are having a tough time shouldering the burden today. The Bill will hamper diversification and further processing of agricultural production in western Canada. It is far too generous to the railroads. It concentrates too much power in the hands of the Minister. It may erode the power of the Canadian Wheat Board. The concerns raised by this Bill go on and on.

We in the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Speaker, believe the Crowsnest Pass freight rate should remain in statute for the producers of Canada, but adequate compensation proportionate to the cost of moving grain should be provided to the railways. This Bill certainly does not reflect our position. We believe the distortion of the low freight rates in grain and oil seeds vis-à-vis processed products—

Mr. Blais: Author!

An Hon. Member: We all are the authors.

Mr. MacDougall: Pardon me, Mr. Speaker, I can see we have another Member from northern Ontario who is objecting to the freight rates. I will continue, Mr. Speaker.

We believe grain producers must have a statutory freight rate which preserves the benefits of the Crow and must be protected from open-ended escalation. There is no statutory protection for the farmer in this Bill. Producers should be guaranteed an efficient, cost-effective and reliable grain transportation system. There will be no railway performance guarantees for the first three years under this legislation. The railways will be given a free ride for three years.

There are many ways of improving efficiency and cost effectiveness without changing the Crow rate. As one of my colleagues pointed out, does our grain really have to be weighed six times and graded three times before it is finally exported? Many bottlenecks occur at the grain terminals rather than with the transportation system. Reduction of turnaround time at the terminals would greatly improve the system. Other steps could be taken to increase efficiency and cost effectiveness without tampering with the Crow rate.

We in the Progressive Conservative Party believe the Government of Canada and the railways have a continuing obligation to provide a speical low rate to assist our grain producers in competing with subsidized grain exporting nations. As a trading nation we must be competitive. Our farmers must be protected from the artificial and natural advantages of other grain exporting countries. Australia, Argentina and the United States all subsidize their grain producers. Grain export is a key component of our economy. If we are to remain in a competitive position a special low rate for the transportation of grain must be provided.

We recognize that the railways should receive fair and adequate compensation for the movement of grain in order to allow it to be done efficiently. This Bill, however, goes way beyond being fair and adequate in its compensation to the railways; it is overly generous. Under this Bill the railways will receive 100 per cent of their long-run variable costs, 20 per cent contribution to overhead and 20.5 per cent contribution to capital. On top of that, they will have a freight rate by 1990-91 that will be ten times what the Crow rate is today.

The concerns raised by this piece of legislation are many, Mr. Speaker. One of the greatest concerns to farmers is the timing involved in the introduction of this inadequate piece of legislation. I spoke earlier about the economic difficulties farmers are now facing in western Canada and other parts of the country. I speak with farmers in my riding almost every day who are experiencing difficulties they never thought possible only a few short years ago.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, in participating in this debate it is interesting to note how often our friends opposite have introduced closure into this House of Commons. In this session alone closure has been brought in a total of 18 times. This Bill is the nineteenth victim of closure and I am delighted to see that Members opposite have reconsidered their position as it relates to this legislation.

It is also interesting to note the participation by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on a Bill which is going very seriously to affect the agricultural industry in this country. Do you know what his participation in this debate has been, Mr. Speaker? It has been to bring in closure. He did not say one word about how this legislation was going to affect an industry he is responsible for. Not one word. Neither would he have said one word had the Government gone ahead with its closure motion.

We have had insufficient time to analyse all the implications of this legislation, Mr. Speaker, and we require that time. It is also interesting to note that the majority of participation by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has been outside this chamber. He has gone to the Press Club to make major announcements relating to this legislation rather than doing it here in this Chamber. Another Minister who has direct responsibility for western Canada is the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). Perhaps the Minister of Transport could indicate to us whether that Minister is going to express his views on the implications of this legislation for the region of the country he comes from.

I repeat what my colleague the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) indicated in this House earlier as it relates to the importance of this legislation to all of Canada, and specifically western Canada. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) indicated in the House on Friday, May 13, the importance of this legislation when he stated that this was the third major piece of legislation which has come before this Parliament after the patriation of the Canadian Constitution and our national energy policy.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, requires time so that those within the agricultural community can have input. There are many provisions of this legislation which I will never understand because I am not as closely associated with western transportation concerns as my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). But let me just highlight a few of the items we are dissatisfied with.

The distortion of the low freight rates in grain and oil seeds vis-à-vis processed products should be removed and the natural advantage retained. Payment directly to the railways, which is in this Bill, will further distort the existing freight rate anomaly and mitigate against further diversification. The Act will now cost livestock producers $20 a tonne in extra costs to offset the subsidy to grain producers. It is fundamental that western Canada's agricultural base must be broadened and diversified to permit more processing in western Canada. According to the Minister's own figures, the distortion will result in the loss of an additional $1 billion in livestock production, and an additional $350 million worth of economic activity with respect to processing, packing plants and the feed mill industry in western Canada.

Mr. Pepin: All false.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, grain producers must have a statutory freight rate which preserves the benefits of the Crow and must be protected from open-ended escalation. What this Bill does is to ensure that producers will be paying double the existing Crow rate by 1985-86, which means that an additional $160 million will be taken out of the prairie economy. They will pay five and a half times by 1991-92, which means that more than an additional $1 billion will disappear from western Canada. In 1982, Mr. Speaker, farmers' net income plummeted by 35 per cent while energy costs throughout Canada have risen by 81 per cent since 1979.

There is no statutory protection for the farmer in this legislation. It has been transferred to the federal Government which will pay a frozen amount, $651 million annually, in perpetuity. The 31.1 million tonne cap will provide a further disincentive to increased grain transportation. Producers should be guaranteed an efficient, cost-effective and reliable grain transportation system, and under this legislation there will be no railway performance guarantees for the first three years. The Bill totally ignores other methods of providing efficiency and cost effectiveness to the rail and transport system.

The Government of Canada and the railways have a continuing obligation to provide a special low rate to assist producers competing with subsidized grain export nations. Let us review what other countries do for their grain producers. In Australia, under the Victoria State railway system, farmers pay less than 50 per cent of the average cost of moving grain. In 1982 in Australia, the diesel fuel tax and gasoline tax for all agricultural products was reduced by some 6 cents a litre. In Argentina, effective October 7, 1981 the National Grain Board provided free rail freight for grain from the nearest station available to the shipping port. In the European Economic Community wheat farmers receive a direct subsidy of some $2.53 a bushel. The United States pays an average subsidy of $13.81 U.S. a tonne for wheat and $6.84 a tonne for barley.

The fifth principle that we in this Chamber are advocating is that the railways should receive adequate and fair compensation for the movement of grain to provide the necessary capital for maintenance of plant and equipment. I indicated earlier that the 31.1 million tonne cap will provide a disincentive to increased grain production in Canada. The blended freight rate and the prospect of variable rates will create a further disincentive.

A blended freight rate, a rate combining the new freight rate below the 31.1 million tonne limit with another freight rate above the 31.1 million tonne limit, is another example of the complexity of the rate itself which has been developed by the bureaucrats in the Government. As there is no clear consensus in western Canada concerning to whom or how the method of payment should be made, we in the Progressive Conservative Party are indicating that we will introduce an amendment to the legislation making the Crow benefit payable on an optional basis, either to the producer or to the railway. This would once again allow the greater opportunity of flexibility and freedom of choice.

Our spokesman on the legislation, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), was allotted more than the ten minutes which we are allotted to participate in the debate. He elaborated on a number of the topics which I have touched upon. However, the Bill is essentially far too overgenerous to the railways of Canada because, by 1990, the railways will receive a 1,000 per cent increase in the freight rate as compared to today. There is no provision in the legislation that they are to reduce their rates in the event that their input costs should fall.

Let me close by saying that it is only fair to all individuals in Canada that the legislation have a fair hearing, not only from us as Parliamentarians, but also from the entire agricultural sector across Canada.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased in some ways to have a chance to say a few words in the Crow debate. In other ways, I am not so happy because the potential impact of the Crow does not bode well for the unity of this country. It also does not bode well for a great number of Canadians, not only farmers but also many others.

Mr. Pepin: You must mean the opposite, Jim.

Mr. Fulton: Before discussing the actual impact of the Crow, I would like to discuss the politics of it. I know the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) quite well, and I think I can honestly say today that of all the Cabinet Ministers sitting on the front benches, I respect him the most. That is not difficult to say, with only three Liberals present in the Chamber for one of the most important debates that we have had in some 80 or more years in relation to the transportation of grain.

Let me deal first with the politics of it because the Minister of Transport knows full well how this has come to be over the last ten years. His predecessor, Mr. Lang, was defeated quite soundly by a colleague of mine for his philosophy of user-pay and so on. However, I know that the Minister of Transport has been under increasing pressure from certain commodity producers and movers, particularly in the raw resource sector, whether coal, pretroleum products or forestry products. Through a variety of ways and means of contacts which the Liberal Party has in western Canada, it has contacted a lot of flacks and hacks with various large corporations to try to drum up some support in British Columbia and in western Canada for the proposals which the Minister of Transport now has before the House.

We should be totally honest about it: the change which is being proposed here is because CN and CP have been saying to those raw resource and commodity movers, whether petroleum or coal, "Look, we cannot lower the rates to you. We cannot be more competitive because we have this Crow rate around our necks. We must be moving all this grain, be involved with all these hopper cars and all these other things." However, they have never bothered to be completely honest, saying that the real out of pocket expenses are about $380 million a year. They have always used an excuse, getting the producers off their backs and putting them on the back of the Minister of Transport. So he sits in his office and I am glad to see him here today.

However, I think the Minister, as my colleague from Regina has pointed out, has forgotten about the impact on the farmers who comprise a very important sector of Canada. In terms of the balance of trade, it has always been a very important group within Canadian society. The average age of farmers is now 59 years of age. Anyone who has taken the time to read the Global 2000 report knows that North America and the world in general will run into a major crunch in terms of the cost of moving grain and getting it to the starving hundreds of millions around the world in the coming years.

This is a crazy time to be bringing in a policy which would end the many branch lines across Canada, forcing many grain producers to rubber haul, passing many costs on to the regional districts, towns, villages and Provinces which would have to upgrade their road systems because of the massive increase in many areas in rubber hauling. I do not think the Minister of Transport or his Government is dealing fairly with farmers or with the House generally in not having done what Emmett Hall did a few years ago and what is obviously the kind of scientific approach which should be taken on an issue such as this one.

What will be the impact on branch lines? What will be the impact on small towns? What will be the future impact in terms of the cost? As we know, by 1991 $1 billion more will be taken out of the farmers' pockets. That means that they will not be buying tractors every three or four years but, rather, every five, six or seven years. They will not be buying as much fertilizer. The sum of $1 billion will be taken out of the western economy and put to other purposes.

The other matter which neither the Minister of Transport nor any Liberal Member wants to rise to speak about is that this is a great big handout, another big bailout of CP. Any why? Yesterday I was speaking with a few Liberals hacks who were saying, "Oh, CP's stock is widely held by Canadians; it has a pension plan and all these other things". It is as though helping CP somehow has something tangible to do with the Liberal Party or something. Good grief, we have already given it over $13 billion in recent years in direct subsidies and handouts, never receiving any equity.

I listened with interest to my friends to the right. The Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga), the President of the Conservative Party, told Canadians where they stand. Many observers are now saying that there is some kind of a struggle here for the hearts and minds of western Canadians between the NDP and the Tories on the Crow issue.

Mr. Lewis: You can't. It's all over.

Mr. Fulton: The Tories are conceding it. They know the NDP position is well known in western Canada. There is not a farmer around who does not know that we have a very philosophical approach to the Crow rate, as to why we stand for preservation of the Crow rate, why we said publicly that the out of pocket expenses which accrue to CN or to CP should be forthcoming in some way from the federal Government, but that they should not be making profits on sudsidies as the Bill guarantees. It guarantees profits to CP. The Minister of Transport is shaking his head.

Mr. Pepin: No.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps he has not read some of the tantalizing details which CP wrote into his legislation while it was in his office.

The other thing which we must carefully consider is the approach which the Liberals have been taking that the NDP is trying to prevent people from getting jobs. We know that the railroads are showing their publicity films and trying to convince the workers and others that certain things will not happen if the Crow legislation does not go through.

Let me deal with my area for a moment, from Redpass through to Prince Rupert. There is $100 million being spent there this year on a ballast lift, new ties, heavier steels, 57 bridges and so on. That is certainly in direct relation to northeast coal and the movement of other commodities than grain.

I believe the Minister should talk to some of the Pools. Right now there is a 24-hour a day cement pour occurring in Prince Rupert on the grain elevator there. The 31.1 million tonne cap provided for in the Bill will have an impact there. It is difficult to analyse what that impact will be at this time but the reason for that cap, as my hon. friend the Hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) pointed out yesterday, is that CN and CP are buying major railway lines in the United States where they will be moving grain, particularly from Saskatchewan, down into the U.S. for offshore movement. The Minister of Transport shrugs his shoulders. I would like to see him table any studies that he has about where the future movement of grain is likely to occur in terms of changes that will occur in the world. It has not been done.

This represents an injection of funds into CP without having looked at what the possible additional costs or impact will be to farmers or what the impact will be on Prince Rupert, Vancouver, Churchill, the Lakehead and other areas.

When Bills such as this are brought before the House I think it is important that there not be the kind of posturing such as we have seen from the Liberals. They do not put up any speakers. The minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) introduced a notice of motion of closure after we had only a couple of minutes of debate. British Columbians and all Canadians should know exactly what the Minister of Transport and the Liberals are proposing and why the legislation is so bad for Manitobans and people from Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia.

In 1983-84 there will be $564.5 million going to CP. In 1984-85 it will receive $593 million, in 1985-86 it will receive $622 million and from 1986 on it will receive $651 million. The Minister of Transport, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and their hacks, whether they work for the private sector or directly for the Liberals, as they tour western Canada trying to drum up support, do not talk about the fact that a billion dollars is being taken away from the farmers. They do not mention that the rates the farmers will be paying by the year 2000 will be 12 times what they are paying right now.

It is also very important for Canadians to know what the distinct difference is between what the Liberals and the Tories are saying. The Liberals are saying: follow the line of the Quebec caucus, give the money to CP and make sure that the livestock producers in the East are happy; send the Prime Minister West, as my colleague for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) pointed out, to tell western livestock producers to stick it because they do not vote Liberal.

At the same time we see this kind of foxy process attack from the Tories in the House. They are not willing to say that they stand for the Crow or for giving a certain amount of out of pocket expenses to the rail lines but no profit above that, or at least equity for Canadians. They blur the issue. I have listened to their speeches and have talked to reporters who have covered their speeches. They are well aware of the fact that the Tories are split down the middle. They also know that the Liberals really do not know what the impact will be for Canada, our farmers or our ports in western Canada.

Of all the Ministers on that side of the House, I think the Minister of Transport has the responsibility to make some major changes in this legislation and not to take the attitude that since his Government has a majority it will jam it through. He should not take the attitude that the NDP and the Tories are causing his Party a lot of editorial grief out West which causes the mail to come in again. I think the Minister is one of the few on that side who can take the initiative to make those changes.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, in the seven minutes that I have to speak on this Bill, I will base my remarks primarily on the standpoint of urban western Canada. Simply stated, my argument is that this Bill is the wrong solution at the wrong time and for the wrong reasons. Why do I say that? Because it may well do for western diversification what the national energy policy did for our oil and gas industry.

According to the respected and honest Chris Mills of the Alberta cattle industry, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is opposed to this measure. The Prime Minister indicated to the farmers in Jasper the other night that it was a bad measure, but since votes could not be guaranteed to the Liberal Party, it was going ahead. Indeed, to my knowledge no organization or person anywhere in Canada supports this Bill except for the Prime Minister and therefore, of course, his caucus.

It is the wrong time for this legislation because prairie farmers are now facing increased costs and dropping incomes. As others have pointed out, this Liberal measure is taking approximately $160 million out of prairie prairie pockets by 1985-86 and a billion dollars by 1991-92. Our towns and cities in western Canada will suffer. Not only will our people suffer but those in central Canada who make cars, furniture and other commodities will suffer because of this measure.

In the time remaining I would like to give some reasons why I think this measure is profoundly bad for Canada and particularly for the West. The Bill will accelerate the decline of the meat packing industry in western Canada. I am told that not too many years ago the meat packing industry was the largest employer of people in the City of Edmonton. The Gainers plant in my riding was closed a few years ago. The Burns plant in Edmonton closed in 1979, taking 700 jobs with it.

Elsewhere in western Canada closings included the Burns plant in Prince Albert in 1976 with 500 jobs lost; Canadian Dressed Meats in Medicine Hat in 1978 with 120 jobs lost; Swifts in Winnipeg in 1979 with 550 jobs lost; Burns in Regina in 1974 with 200 jobs lost. As well, Gainers in Lethbridge is now closed for an undetermined time with any number of jobs lost.

Furthermore, the Bill reduces the opportunities in western Canada for further diversification. Incidentally, unemployment in Edmonton is now above 12 per cent. Yet the forecast yesterday by the Conference Board of Canada said that lower gas prices and rising consumer confidence had boosted the general economic prospects of all Provinces except Alberta. The report also indicated that Alberta's prospects have dimmed considerably in response to energy market developments. The same report noted that Ontario and Quebec would benefit most from increased consumer demands. As a Canadian I wish the people of Ontario and Quebec nothing but prosperity. However, it will not go unnoticed that the big loser in this Bill is once again economic development in western Canada.

I will skip what the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) said about this Bill being one of the three most important measures introduced since this Government came to office. The National Energy Program, which he included among those three measures, has had approximately the same effect on western Canada as the bubonic plague. For a Minister to say that the National Energy Program was good for Canada as a whole or for western Canada is self-evident nonsense.

Bill C-155 freezes in concrete the existing distortion in low freight rates for grains and oil seeds against those for processed products. The Bill will cost livestock producers $20 a tonne in extra costs to effect the subsidy of grain producers. According to the Minister's own words, the distortion will result in a loss of an additional $1 billion in livestock production and an additional $350 million worth of economic activity with respect to processing, packing plants and the feed mill industry in western Canada.

Our producers should be guaranteed an efficient, cost effective and reliable grain transportation system. Anyone who studies economics in western Canada knows that the railways were given basically downtown western Canada. I do not think it is necessary to turn around and give them another very rich gift from the taxpayers of Canada.

I see you are getting ready to stand, Mr. Speaker, so on behalf of urban western Canada I would strongly object to this measure.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

AGREEMENT TO MAKE MANITOBA OFFICIALLY BILINGUAL

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, I would like to comment on an agreement in principle of historical importance that has been reached by leaders of the Société franco-manitobaine and the Government of Manitoba with the Federal Government, with a view to making that province officially bilingual. The agreement includes a proposal for a constitutional amendment which would modify Section 23 of the Manitoba Act (1870) regarding the use of French and/or English in the proceedings and documents of the legislature and before the courts.

The House will remember that in 1979, the Supreme Court of Canada declared that a law passed in 1890, by which English was proclaimed the Official Language of this Province, was unconstitutional. The 1979 judgment therefore restored the officially bilingual status of Manitoba. Since this landmark judgment, negotiations have been taking place between the Franco-Manitoban community and the Provincial Government with a view to finding an arrangement agreeable to both language communities.

Today, Canadians are both proud of and pleased with an agreement whose effect will be to make the Province of Manitoba officially bilingual. Basically, the agreement recognizes both English and French as official languages in Manitoba and states that it is binding on the Manitoba Legislature to print and publish its statutes, regulations and other official documents in both official languages.

As a Franco-Ontarian, I wish to conclude by congratulating Franco-Manitobans, and I also wish to reiterate my invitation to the Province of Ontario to follow Manitoba's example by generously offering the same constitutional guarantees to its official language minority.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—CALL FOR REASSESSMENT OF CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in December, 1982, when it came to a purely humanitarian vote at the United Nations Third Committee on Human Rights dealing with Cypriot missing persons, Canada abstained on the excuse that it participates in the peace-keeping forces in Cyprus despite the fact that the greater majority of other peace-keeping participants in Cyprus, such as Austria, Denmark, Finland, Sweden, and Ireland, voted in favour.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) has reaffirmed, in a letter dated March 8, 1983, that Canada does indeed recognize only the administration headed by President Spyros Kyprianou as the sole legitimate authority for Cyprus, and does not recognize the self proclaimed Turkish federated state of Kibris which occupies almost 40 per cent of Cyprus seized by Turkey in 1974.

I believe, Madam Speaker, the time has come for Canada to stand on its own two feet, get off the fence and reassess its stand on the issue of Cyprus.

Canada's actions and voting pattern should clearly differentiate between the victim, Cyprus, and the aggressor, Turkey, in this dispute. Moreover, Canada should stop pussyfooting and exert strong pressures within NATO to convince Turkey to withdraw its occupation forces from Cyprus so that Greek and Turkish Cypriots can negotiate freely concerning their future rather than under the threat of a gun.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REMOVAL OF ASBESTOS FROM OTTAWA TERMINAL—RISKS TO HEALTH OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, next Thursday the long awaited removal of asbestos materials from throughout the main Ottawa post office terminal will begin. Work was to commence today, but in the face of union pressure and threats of employee job action, Canada Post retreated under fire and postponed action for one more week. The hazardous work of removal, with its consequent loosening and dispersal of cancer inducing asbestos fibres within the work environment, will continue for approximately one year and, despite the protests of postal workers and their unions, this work must take place while 1,100 to 1,200 employees stay on the job within the building.

Despite assurances from management, this insensitive action by Canada Post, operating within the inflexible restraints of Government policy, cannot help but pose additional and unnecessary risks to the health and life of hundreds of public employees.

About a year ago these employees were promised a new building, free of asbestos. This pledge was broken. This promise was then replaced by a commitment to relocate the bulk of the postal terminal activities to other buildings during the period of asbestos removal. Now this promise, too, has been scrapped. The employees and their union have simply been told that "business as usual is the bottom line", and that jerry built partitions, air pressure, and monitoring of hazard levels will be the only protective measures taken, a totally unacceptable response to such a dangerous risk to workers' lives and health.

I urge the Government to intervene and relocate the Post Office's operations during removal.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

THE CONSTITUTION

ABSENCE OF CRITERIA FOR CREATING NEW PROVINCES

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I want to put forth for a second time a matter that I believe is urgent. Under the new Canadian Constitution new Provinces can only be formed and provincial boundaries can only be extended with the approval of seven Provinces having 50 per cent of the Canadian population. Any Province can accept or veto any changes to its boundaries under Section 43 so that the land base and resources of any particular Province can be protected. However, there exist no criteria for creating new Provinces or for changing the boundaries of any Province. Parliament should therefore appoint a Royal Commission or a joint federal-provincial committee at the earliest opportunity to recommend basic criteria for such changes.

Indeed, criteria should be established for the granting of provincial status to the Yukon; for the eventual granting of provincial or semi-provincial status to the Mackenzie region and the eastern Arctic region; for the possible establishment of new Provinces within the central region of Canada, such as northern Ontario and for the possible extension of provincial boundaries north of the sixtieth parallel into the northern territories. Perhaps even Vancouver Island may one day desire provincial status.

The creation of additional Provinces would enhance national unity and provide greater equity to the entrenched constitutional amending formula.

Madam Speaker: Order.

EMPLOYMENT

CONTRIBUTION OF ASBESTOS UNION WORKERS TO AID ECONOMY

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Madam Speaker, as a result of our 6 and 5 policy and the recent budget, we are no longer talking about recession but about economic recovery. I should therefore like to take this opportunity to draw the attention of the House to a quite extraordinary example which, I hope, will be followed and repeated. I am referring to the announcement made by the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) to the people of Asbestos on May 16 of this year, according to which more than 300 jobs will be created.

This particular case is a perfect example of co-operation among economic partners. We have here a $35 million project, in which our Government is to invest $3.5 million, that is, $1.4 million under Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act and $2.2 million under the NEED Program. The Johns-Manville Company will be investing $30 million over a period of two years. The contribution of the Syndicat National de l'Amiante d'Asbestos will be approximately $2 million, in the form of a wage freeze, at the rate paid on May 15, 1983, until January 31, 1985. Furthermore, employees have agreed to give up the cost of living bonus provided by their collective agreement.

Unionized workers in the community of Asbestos made labour history in Canada in 1949. They have just made history again by taking an active part in our economic recovery. I wish to pay tribute to all those men and women who belong to the unions in question which are affiliated to the CSD.

Madam Speaker: Order!

AGRICULTURE

REDUCTION IN NUMBER OF FAMILY FARMS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, a deeply rooted tradition in Canada agriculture is the family farm, proven so efficient and profitable both from social and economic points of view. Generation by generation, family farms have improved the quality of life in rural and urban Canada as they kept up the demand for small tractors, trucks, and manufactured goods. Yet the nationwide trend becomes evident from the data available. Farms tend to become fewer and bigger.

The size of the average Canadian farm rose from 279 acres in 1951 to 463 acres in 1971, and recently to more than 511 acres. The number of family farms dropped from over 336,000 in 1971 to 275,000 in 1981. This negative trend, if not averted, will result in a concentration of land in fewer hands, which invariably leads to government control over agriculture.

If the Liberal Government fails to honour our traditional heritage—family farms producing the bulk of our food supply—then we will one day repeat the tragic example of socialist countries with their centralized farming, importing of food and food lines.

This Parliament must bring forth a strategy to rectify this serious trend and keep our Canadian farmers on the land.

BILINGUALISM

VIEWS OF MEMBER FOR SCARBOROUGH EAST

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, Canadians should be proud at what appears to be evolving in Manitoba with that Province's apparent agreement to become officially bilingual. If we English-speaking Canadians want to keep this country together, we must accept the basic duality of Canada by giving equal treatment to our two founding languages throughout Canada. However, according to today's Ottawa Citizen, such is not the attitude of the Hon. Conservative Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist). The Hon. Member is alleged to have said that "the British victory at the Plains of Abraham means that Canada should have one main language and Francophones outside Quebec should be treated virtually like any other minority".

The Hon. Member is also alleged to oppose recognizing French as one of the two official languages of work in the civil service. Undoubtedly the Hon. Member is entitled to his views, but that is not the official policy of the Progressive Conservative Party and this raises the question of how serious that Party is about its support of bilingualism.

The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) will be the official Leader of the Opposition of the Progressive Conservatives for a few more weeks, and these statements provide him with an opportunity to demonstrate the stuff of which he is made. Will he, like a distinguished predecessor, the Hon. Robert Stanfield, repudiate the Hon. Member, or will he remain silent? Canadians will be waiting to hear from him on this issue. I for one hope that all three official parties in this House will present a united front on this crucial issue. I invite him to speak up.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S POLLUTION INSPECTION TOUR OF NIAGARA RIVER

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) proposes to tour and inspect the great number of source pollutants along the Niagara River on or about June 6 of this year. This comes three years after the promise of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to take some remedial action and after three years of badgering by Opposition Members, as well as by the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain).

The extent of the pollution of the Niagara River is a matter of national concern. It affects the quality of drinking water for four million Canadians. Last February I urged the Minister to lift this environmental hazard from party politics and lead an all-party delegation on this tour. I want to be one of those able to greet and welcome the Minister to my home region. I want to be able to see with him the contaminating sources, and to hear the exchanges that take place thereat on why we continue to have this national disgrace.

If the Minister is truly concerned with getting the facts, with understanding the problem and taking positive action, he will put the health and well-being of those four million Canadians ahead of the fortunes of the Liberal Party, and make this an all-party matter of concern. To do otherwise will be irresponsible, and the actions of the Minister will continue to be suspect. Let him now show his good faith by acting in a forthright, non-partisan manner.

DENIAL OF NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE FRANCHISE TO SASKATOON

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, yesterday the NHL owners rejected the transfer of the St. Louis Blues to Saskatoon. Saskatchewan is now the only Province west of the Maritimes with no professional hockey team, despite the fact that hockey greats like Gordie Howe and present-day stars like Bob Bourne, Brian Trottier and Clark Gillies come from Saskatchewan. A major reason is that Harold Ballard, the owner of the Toronto "make-believes", said no to Saskatchewan.

Some Hon. Members: Boo!

Mr. Nystrom: If the NHL wanted to transfer his so-called team to Saskatchewan, the people of Saskatchewan would say no.

Another reason is that the Conservative Premier of Saskatchewan made the St. Louis Blues his only megaproject in his "open-for-business" Government. It is very surprising that he failed. After all, the Conservative Government brought Saskatchewan the unemployment blues, the agricultural blues, the potash blues, the economic blues, and the bankruptcy blues. The only thing it could not bring us was the St. Louis Blues. I suggest, in conclusion, an exchange of two losing teams, the Blues to Saskatoon, and Devine and his Cabinet to St. Louis.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION—PROVISION OF FUNDS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue, of which I have given him notice. What moneys, other than the $500,000 loan extended to the Canada Development Investment Corporation under the Financial Administration Act, have been given to that company?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Canada Development Investment Corporation has received certain sums of money as a result of transfers of shares to certain corporations, and especially to Eldorado Nuclear Limited.

[English]

AUTHORIZATION FOR ACQUIRING FUNDS FROM ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, what we have here is a situation where the Government cannot appropriate funds directly for CIDC because CIDC status has never been recognized by Parliament. Can the Minister confirm that in view of the desperation of CIDC to get its hands on funds which it cannot get directly from Parliament, it is trying to bleed various subsidiaries, it is charging management fees to Canadair and de Havilland, and has forced Eldorado Nuclear to buy back $10 million of its own shares, with the proceeds to go to the CIDC instead of the Consolidated Revenue Fund where they should have gone?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the reasons the Hon. Member is attributing to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, acting on behalf of the Canada Development Investment Corporation, for receiving revenue are not the right ones at all. First of all, as far as the legislation is concerned, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that we shall be tabling the Bill later today, and we hope to have an opportunity to consider this legislation in Parliament as quickly as possible.

As far as the sums of money charged by the Corporation as management fees are concerned, I think it is common business practice and entirely appropriate in this case. As for the amounts paid by Eldorado Nuclear Limited to the Corporation it was not because of any desperate need of money on the part of the Corporation but because by the middle of this decade, Eldorado Nuclear Limited would have to pay very substantial dividends to the Canada Development Investment Corporation, and to prevent any undue financial burden on Eldorado, the Corporation agreed to a financial arrangement under which certain shares held by the Canada Development Investment Corporation in Eldorado Nuclear would be bought back.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: It must be new math, Madam Speaker? I have sure lost him.

APPLICATION OF FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Can the Minister confirm that in fact Eldorado paid that money directly to CIDC and CIDC intends to hang on to that money as opposed to giving it to the Consolidated Revenue Fund, where it should go? Will the Minister tell the House whether, before this was done, he or any other official asked for an opinion from the Department of Justice with regard to Section 11(1) of the Financial Administration Act, which would direct that that money not go the CIDC but directly to the Receiver General of Canada and into the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I wish to confirm that the amount paid by Eldorado Nuclear Limited to the Canada Development Investment Corporation was for investment development. I have already indicated why payment took place, namely, to prevent any undue financial burden on Eldorado a few years from now, as a result of its commitments to the CDIC.

I also wish to remind the Hon. Member that this afternoon, he will realize when the Bill is read, that it contains provisions that Parliament will be asked to approve regarding the use of funds received by the Canada Development Investment Corporation from its affiliated corporations.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CANADAIR AND DE HAVILLAND CORPORATIONS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I had intended to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. In his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister.

Yesterday, when tabling the estimates, the President of the Treasury Board filed appropriations for Canadair for $240 million and $60 million for de Havilland Aircraft Corporation. Did the President of the Treasury Board or the Prime Minister have in his possession financial statements of these corporations indicating that the appropriation of $240 million in one case and $60 million in the other was sufficient to put these corporations back on an even keel, or is this just another infusion of cash for these corporations, like the cash infusion we gave these corporations last November, to keep them alive for another six months?

• (1420)

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I will investigate whether the financial statements were available to the President of the Treasury Board, and report back to the Hon. Member. The funds that were designated for Canadair and de Havilland were to strengthen their equity bases.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary has had an opportunity to look at these figures; otherwise I see no reason why he should be answering questions.

CORPORATIONS' FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I again direct my question to the Prime Minister as he should be on top of these things. I would ask the Prime Minister if there are financial statements available for these corporations and, if not, how does the Government propose to ask Parliament to approve a total of $300 million without any real indication of where we are going with respect to these losers and how much more money we will have to pour into them? Where are we going?

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, quite clearly the Government had the financial information that was necessary to make the decision to strengthen the equity base of Canadair and of de Havilland. It is important to recognize that this is an industry that Canada wants to keep, and an industry which has a high technology base.

SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

MANDATE OF PROPOSED FORCE—DEFINITION OF RESPONSIBILITIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The McDonald Commission did a lot of work over an extended period of time and pointed out that one of the problems with Canada's existing Security Service was that it had no clear mandate. Following up that analysis, the Commission took care to recommend rather precisely defined activities that could be put under surveillance. For instance, the McDonald Commission talked about "foreign interference" as an activity which, under certain circumstances, would warrant surveillance. Why has the Government disregarded this precision in wording, and why has it produced new and much broader wording that raises very serious questions about civil liberties? Very specifically in this context, what groups or individuals did the Government believe should come under surveillance that the McDonald Commission thought should be left in freedom?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, it is indeed a question of how precise a definition we as parliamentarians can come up with to guide the Security Service into the areas of improper foreign interference, domestic subversion and so on, and keep it out of the areas of legitimate dissent, protest, and advocacy. This has been a very difficult distinction to draw. I agree in many ways with the McDonald Commission's analysis about where the line should be drawn, and I believe that the definition that we have come up with is a definition that will stand up under scrutiny of the committee to indicate that, indeed, anyone in the country who wants to engage in dissent, advocacy and protest will not for that reason become a target of the Security Service.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Minister has provided no reassurances at all.

INVESTIGATION OF FOREIGN INFLUENCED ACTIVITIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the phrase used by the McDonald Commission was "foreign interference". The phrase substituted by the Government for that was "foreign influence", a fundamental distinction that could surely be made by anyone who believed in the free distribution of ideas between countries. I would ask the Minister very precisely why the Government substituted the phrase "foreign influence" for the more precise phrase "foreign interference" that the McDonald Commission used, a phrase that obviously demonstrated much more sensitivity to the maintenance of traditional civil liberties and freedom of the flow of information between countries?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I think that the expression "foreign influenced activities" is more specific than the expression "foreign interference", an expression which could have a number of interpretations that in my view "foreign influenced activities" clarifies.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I suggest that the Minister read the McDonald Commission report again because it went on to spell out in some detail why that particular phrase was used and the kind of meaning that was attached to it.

EXERCISE OF PARLIAMENTARY CONTROL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to go to another area entirely. There were many who were concerned that the activities of these security forces be subject to proper scrutiny, and particularly, in a parliamentary democracy, subject to parliamentary control and not simply subject to the control of the Government of the day. In this context the McDonald Commission recommended the establishment of a committee of experts, including representatives of all Parties in the House, surely an essential requirement in a democracy, I would argue. Why has the Government abandoned this very sensible recommendation, one that would ensure that Parliament would exercise control over this body rather than leaving control in the hands of the Government, a Government which in the past has gotten us into so much trouble when it comes to civil liberties?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I do not believe that it is at all accurate to say that this responsibility of oversight has been left to Government. Indeed, this responsibility of oversight has been assigned to an external review body. The difficulty I had with the McDonald Commission's recommendations were that so many machineries of oversight were recommended, each of which would be supported by its own bureaucracy, that there would indeed be a very heavy bureaucratic weight on the effective operation of the agency. I believe that there can be effective external review by the machinery which is proposed, and I think I can demonstrate that to the House when the time comes to look in depth at these proposals.

Finally, so far as parliamentary review is concerned, I think parliamentary review is created by this Bill to an extent far greater than we know it now, because the external review committee will submit an annual report to a committee of Parliament. There will be the opportunity to examine the report, call witnesses, look at other documents—

Mr. Broadbent: Very different from what McDonald recommended.

Mr. Kaplan: Indeed, if I heard the Hon. Member correctly, it is different from the recommendations of the McDonald Commission. It is less bureaucratic. I think it is equally effective and I think that it will give Parliament, together with every other opportunity there is to question the Minister and examine the Estimates of the Security Service which will be part of the Estimates of the RCMP, more than an adequate opportunity for parliamentary review and a far greater opportunity for parliamentary review than there is under the present arrangements.

Oral Questions

AIR CANADA

APPEARANCE OF OFFICIALS AT COMMITTEE MEETING

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of today's notice of a Transport Committee meeting this afternoon, "regarding the appearance of Air Canada on Tuesday, May 24 . . . ", has the Prime Minister or any of his Ministers given instructions that Government Members on the Committee should stonewall the appearance of Air Canada officials and its Chairman?

REQUEST THAT CHAIRMAN TAKE LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Since we now understand that the police investigating the Chairman of Air Canada and his friends must obtain evidence in the Caribbean and in Europe, with no finality of conclusion, and since the Prime Minister had enough interest in the appointment of his friend to take a helicopter to his farm to invite him to be Chairman, does the Prime Minister not now think that, for the sake of Air Canada and its reputation, he should at least pick up the phone and ask the Chairman to stand down and take a leave of absence pending completion of the criminal investigation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the gentlemen opposite could hold their applause. The facts are completely wrong and they come from an ignorant and prejudiced mind.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

ABSENCE OF GATING AUTHORITY

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Yesterday, Donald Oag flew from Edmonton to Toronto effectively as a free man as a direct consequence of the Supreme Court of Canada's recent decision on gating. Does the Minister have any comments to make beyond saying that Oag, Wayne Sparling, Patrick Truscott, Patrick Noonan, William Smith, Scott Hyggen and other highly dangerous convicts will be watched once outside? More important, will he tell us why a viable but fair gating procedure was not brought before the House a good long time ago?

• (1430)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the individuals the Hon. Member named are indeed released from penitentiary but they are under mandatory supervision. This means that they have an obligation to report regularly to their parole supervisor. I am not satisfied with that; I would prefer to have the authority to see them continue to serve their time behind bars until the end of their sentences, but the decision of the court is as the Hon. Member said.

I have brought legislation forward and it is being presented to the Senate. It will re-establish the gating authority of the National Parole Board. I would ask the co-operation and assistance of all Hon. Members to get this sensible and needed legislation implemented into law.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, as we say in the West, from the standpoint of public safety the Minister does not know whether he is on foot or on horseback.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows perfectly well that next week the Legal Committee of the Senate will, in all likelihood, rule that his gating amendments to Bill S-32 are improper. Why has he not brought a fair but adequate gating procedure before this democratically elected body?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, in reviewing the proposals when I submitted them to Cabinet the Government made the decision that they would move more expeditiously if they were introduced in the Senate because of the relative work loads of the two Houses. I cannot say whether that decision was right or wrong in the event, because it is impossible to guess whether that legislation would have been treated in this House the way the Opposition has treated all the other legislation presented by the Government. I am glad to know that the Hon. Member supports gating legislation. I hope when that legislation comes to us, all of us will take steps to see it implemented as quickly as possible.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT CANADA INVITE SYRIA TO REMOVE TROOPS FROM LEBANON

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier): My question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Following the agreement concluded by Lebanon and Israel, which reads as follows, and I quote:

[English]

"The parties agree and undertake—to respect the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of each other, and the parties confirm that the state of war between Lebanon and Israel has terminated and no longer exists—"

[Translation]

Does the Prime Minister intend to emphasize the need for making a lasting peace in that part of the world by inviting Syria to withdraw its troops from Lebanon and to sign the agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I agree that it would be much better if Syria were to adopt the position recommended by the Hon. Member. I do not know whether the Department of External Affairs intends to transmit this suggestion to the Syrians. The negotiations that took place were very complex, and I do not know to what extent or at what point Syria was involved. It is therefore difficult for me to suggest that things might have been different if the negotiations had been conducted in a different manner. I really have no idea. The negotiations, as far as I know, were conducted without Canada being informed, and I believe that the solution proposed by the Hon. Member would of course be an excellent one. However, I do not know how Canada could persuade Syria to adopt this position.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

APPROVAL OF APPLICATIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last fall the Prime Minister appointed a new Minister in charge of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. In the first seven months of his mandate the new Minister has made sure that FIRA approved more than 95 per cent of the applications that came before it. Keeping in mind that FIRA screens less than 10 per cent of foreign expansion in the first place, can the Prime Minister explain why the Government has lost all interest in ensuring that foreign investment in this country offers some significant benefit to Canadians? This is the highest approval rate in the history of FIRA.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it may be a higher rate, but my recollection is that the approval rate over the last ten years has varied between 85 per cent and 95 per cent, or perhaps 90 per cent and 95 per cent. I do not see any change. Perhaps it is because foreign investors now know that Canadians are demanding with much more stringency that they bring benefit to Canada when they propose a foreign investment scheme. The lawyers who represent them have probably learned from our experience of the last ten years that there is no point applying for foreign investment approval if you are not going to be able to demonstrate that it will bring a definite benefit to Canadians.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I think the real reason is that the Government has changed the threshold rate, has changed the definition of small business, and has streamlined the Agency.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is his intention to implement a campaign promise made in 1980 that he would strengthen FIRA to make sure it had the ability to screen all expansion of foreign investment instead of only take-overs and new investment. He made that promise again in the Throne Speech in 1980. The Prime Minister made that promise. Is it his intention to keep that promise to the Canadian people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, we did move from a situation where we were only screening take-overs to now, new investment by existing companies. I think that is definite progress.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION—ADDITIONAL PERSON YEARS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, who has been in the House during Question Period for only one-third of the sitting days since he introduced his budget, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

One of his Department managers has been forced to advise his staff to stop reading books, magazines, and newspapers during work hours and to work a full day for a full day's pay. Further, the manager suggests that when employees do not have work to do, they go to their supervisor and request work.

In view of the obvious under-employment in his own Department, how can the Minister justify the addition of 1,500 person years to his Department in both the Main and Supplementary Estimates, or is this his idea of work sharing?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, first of all I should like to point out that the Hon. Minister of Finance has been representing this country abroad at a number of very important international finance meetings. I think it is a little unfortunate that the Hon. Member opposite would take that kind of cheap shot when we are trying to ensure that the best interests of the country are being protected and represented in international forums throughout the world. I think his activities are certainly far more productive than the activities of the front bench opposite who are saying nothing about anything.

As far as the question is concerned, I think it is a derogatory question. I happen to know that the public servants in my Department, faced with a substantially increased load on the unemployment insurance system and the job-creation system, have been performing a remarkable service and providing a service to the public. It does no one any good for a member of the Opposition to try to run them down.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, the Minister's answer indicates that he is the expert on saying nothing about nothing.

STATISTICS CANADA—EMPLOYEES' OBSERVANCE OF WORK HOURS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. The management of Statistics Canada is also concerned about the observance of the hours of work, specifically whether employees are employed for a seven and a half hour day and a 37.5 hour week. A StatsCan survey of the Department's employees shows that 15 per cent to 20 per cent of them are goofing off before the day's work is done.

Since there are 2 million Canadians unemployed, many of them highly qualified, has the Minister considered firing the employees who are goofing off and replacing them from the ranks of the unemployed?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, contrary to what the Hon. Member is saying, as a result of the budget that was introduced by the Minister of Finance, my Department, with no or very few additional person years, through the procurement process will be able to increase our level of procurement and thereby create jobs.

If the hon. lady needs some experience of the level of activity in my Department, I invite her to come over and see how hard the people in the Department of Supply and Services work. The most effective and most professional workers in the Public Service of Canada are to be found within DSS.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

APPLICATION TO ALL CANADIANS

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Government is the author of the so-called Charter of Rights. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he believes in equal rights for all Canadians?

BILINGUALISM

PETRO-CANADA—USE OF UNILINGUAL SIGNS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, I have a very simple question to direct to the Prime Minister. The Government is advertising that Petro-Canada is ours and it belongs to all Canadians. That being the case, Mr. Prime Minister, will you instruct your officials in Petro-Canada to stop installing unilingual signs on its gas outlet stations in the Province of Quebec and install bilingual signs because, if Petro-Canada is ours, it is paid for by all Canadian taxpayers, 75 per cent of whom are English-speaking and who should have some rights?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I discussed the problem of bilingual signs two months ago with the President of Petro-Canada, and I said then that I wanted services in Quebec to be offered in both official languages, the same as everywhere else in Canada.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

REFUSAL OF NHL FRANCHISE FOR SASKATOON—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday the Board of Governors of the National Hockey League rejected an application for the transfer of the St. Louis Blues professional hockey team from St. Louis to Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, which is an outrageous decision. The people of Saskatchewan and across Canada supported this transfer, except for the New Democratic Party which has been against it, as has been confirmed by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville. Has the Minister's Department looked into the possibility of an investigation under the Combines Investigation Act to see whether or not the possibility of prosecution exists under the freedom of trade provisions of that Act, particularly Section 32 of the Act?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would like to say that this matter is under review by officials in my Department at the present time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I appreciate that very much, and the people of Saskatchewan will appreciate the interest of the Minister in this matter. Indeed, the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport has supported the application for transfer.

UNITED STATES ANTI-TRUST LEGISLATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister if he will not also consider contacting the officials of the United States Government to determine whether or not this action on the part of the Board of Governors of the National Hockey League is a breach of the U.S. anti-trust legislation.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Director of Combines Investigations will do everything in his power and will pursue the matter to the limits of the law.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

AGREEMENT TO RENDER MANITOBA OFFICIALLY BILINGUAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and concerns the agreement in principle between the Federal Government and the Government of Manitoba regarding a constitutional amendment that would modify the Manitoba Act (1870) with respect to the use of French or English in the proceedings and documents of the legislature and before the courts. Could the Minister confirm, and give further details about, the agreement concluded by the Franco-Manitoban community, the Government of Manitoba and the Federal Government, for the purpose of finding an arrangement that would be agreeable to both official language communities living in Manitoba? Could the Minister also inform the House whether the Province of Ontario, which has one half million Franco-Ontarians, has indicated that after Quebec, New Brunswick and Manitoba, it too would be prepared to extend generously the same constitutional guarantees to its official language minority?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I am both pleased and proud to confirm that an agreement has been reached between the Government of Canada and the Government of Manitoba, with the collaboration of the Société franco-manitobaine. The two Governments have already ratified the agreement, and we are now waiting for the approval of the Société franco-manitobaine.

Madam Speaker, I am sorry I cannot reveal all the details of the agreement today, but I can assure the House that the agreement will clarify the full equality of both official languages in Manitoba. As for the position of the Government of Ontario, I certainly do hope, with my hon. friend, that Ontario will now be willing to follow Manitoba's example.

VICTIMS OF VIOLENCE ORGANIZATION—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of the additional numbers of dangerous people on the street, I requested the Minister earlier to give some consideration to the organization called "Victims of Violence". Would he reconsider that request to provide some assistance to that organization which is helping families who have been hurt by criminals?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, there are few subjects which preoccupy me more than the question of victims of violence, as my recent statements have indicated. In fact the second National Conference on the Law to be held here next week will concentrate in part on that very subject. My hon. friend, however, is asking me about a grant for a particular organization. It is certainly one of the organizations whose work is welcomed in this field. However, with respect to some form of endorsement of the work of that organization in particular, we obviously must be dependent on the total resources which are available. This is a subject which is taking a large part of the attention of the federal Government and, indeed, of some of the provincial Governments, in this field. I can assure my hon. friend that it is not being neglected.

DESIGNATION AS CHARITABLE INSTITUTION

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question directed to the Minister of National Revenue. This organization, "Victims of Violence", has been trying for a year and a half to get a charitable donation number. Would the Minister follow this up and do something about it so that these people could raise funds in order to send out newsletters and provide an important service?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, we have already had several opportunities in this House to discuss the matter of charitable contribution numbers. First of all, this is a very complex matter since it concerns the indirect use of public funds. Moreover, a large number of requests have been made for such numbers. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that we shall make every effort to pay particular attention to this request.

INCOME TAX

CERTIFICATION OF SUPPORT PAYMENTS SENT TO PARENTS IN CHINA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, as the Minister knows, many Canadians from Third World countries such as China, have claimed income tax exemptions, according to the law before 1982, for money sent to their aged parents back home. They are now being reassessed for 1981 with the demand that they prove that their parents have no means of support, or pay the exempted amount for 1981.

The Minister also knows that it is very difficult, if not impossible, to get documentation from places like China which would be satisfactory to Revenue Canada, and that even many who have obtained documents from China, duly certified and translated, have been turned down by Revenue Canada. In view of the fact that some of his officials have undertaken to review some of these cases, will the Minister direct his officials to hold off from any enforcement action for the collection of these moneys? Will he also give consideration to accepting a statutory declaration in cases where it is impossible to get documentation from overseas?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, before making such a commitment to the Hon. Member and the House, I would have to examine the provisions of the Act voted by Parliament to determine whether the Minister has this discretion. However, I can assure him that since he and other Members have already expressed their concerns on this matter, I shall pay particular attention to his representations.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CHILE—PLIGHT OF PEOPLE SEIZED BY POLICE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I will direct my question to the Minister of State for External Relations. In light of the recommendations of the parliamentary committee on Canada's relations with Latin America, will the Government of Canada protest, in the strongest possible terms, the recent seizure by the Chilean police of 1,000 people in pre-dawn raids, and the subsequent incarceration of many of them? Will the Government also bring pressure on the Pinochet Government, with which the Canadian Government has close trade and investment links, to give out a complete list of those detained, in order to make sure they will come before competent courts, or be released? Will the Government also urge that they not be tortured while in prison?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, the Government is especially concerned about the recent developments in Chile and the apparent resurgence of human rights violations in that country.

As recently as yesterday, our embassy in Santiago was instructed to make representations to the Chilean Government expressing our great concern about the situation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

AIRCRAFT OVERHAUL—ALLOCATION OF WORK

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. His Department's Boeing 707s are due for overhaul early in 1984. Has the Minister made any decision on where those planes will be overhauled? Is he keeping in mind that the largest lay-off of Air Canada machinists is going to take place in Winnipeg, and will he give top priority to Winnipeg for the 707 overhaul?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, it is true that the Boeing 707 fleet of the Department of National Defence is due for an overhaul, but I do not have any information today as to when. I do not think it should be before two years time in any case. The planes are still in good shape, but the overhaul is on the priority list and we will see when and where they will be done. I do not know at this stage if it will be under public tender or through negotiations with the contractor.

STARTING DATE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the Minister that the expertise is in Winnipeg because they have overhauled these 707s before. In light of the fact these machinists are going to be laid off this September, will the Minister check and provide me with an answer on whether the overhaul could start ahead of time, say sometime this Fall, to avoid these lay-offs in Winnipeg?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the efficiency and competence of the machinists in Winnipeg are well known. It is a good shop, and I will supply the Hon. Member with some detail of when, how, and what procedure we will follow when the overhaul comes.

INCOME TAX

CASHING OF REFUND CHEQUES—DIFFICULTIES EXPERIENCED BY RECIPIENTS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue who will know that a number of income tax refund cheques are now in the mail. Does he know that in fact recipients are having a great deal of difficulty cashing those refund cheques if they do not have an account in the bank where they present the cheques to be cashed? Does he realize this is the policy of most banks across the country because of the number of cheques stolen in the mail? Does the Minister know how many cheques are stolen in the mail, in other words, not received by the proper recipients, and why is the Minister not directing his Department to send the refund cheques by registered mail?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the problem the Hon. Member has raised is not peculiar to Government cheques alone, for anything which is sent through the mail may be stolen, just as any parcel which is delivered by other courrier services.

As to the number of income tax refund cheques which may be stolen in the mail, I must confess that I have no idea. Perhaps the question ought to be adressed to the Department of Supply and Services whose responsibility it is to print the cheques and mail them.

I believe that the practice of financial institutions is to ask for a deposit. Would it be possible to make it more flexible? I think that the Minister of Finance would be glad to convey the Hon. Member's concerns to the Inspector General of Banks.

[English]

REQUEST THAT CHEQUES BE SENT BY REGISTERED MAIL

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, the point I am trying to make to the Minister is that financial institutions across the country, indeed businessmen generally, are very leery of cashing income tax refund cheques because they know there is an epidemic of theft of these cheques from the mail. Why does the Minister not make it a policy of his Department that refund cheques go out by registered mail, recognizing that there is an added cost but also recognizing that the Government has had that money in its possession for upwards of three months and has drawn interest on those funds?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): On many occasions, Madam Speaker, we have heard in the House the Hon. Member who has just asked a question express concern over Government expenditures. On one hand, I am convinced that he is aware of the fact that the benefit derived from sending income tax refund cheques by registered mail would be definitely offset by the additional expenses incurred by the Government. On the other hand, I am not sure that financial institutions would be prepared to show more flexibility when cashing those cheques. Still, I will gladly look into the pros and cons of the Hon. Member's suggestion.

RAILWAYS

ALLOCATION OF ORDERS FOR NEW ROLLING STOCK

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and has to do with yesterday's awarding of the hopper car and coal car contracts, wherely the industry in Hamilton came out on the distinctly short end of the stick. National Steel Car traditionally gets 40 per cent of the new grain car manufacturing business and it is now down to 35 per cent. It was bypassed altogether on the coal car contract.

Why did the Minister allocate these contracts under the special recovery program, when this was being discussed last Fall, and it was known that the CN yards in Transcona, Montreal and Moncton had, as it were, the inside track? Was National Steel Car considered at all in so far as getting a piece of that coal car contract was concerned?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, National Coal Car got quite a piece of it. As a matter of fact, it got an order for 483 hopper cars, 35 per cent of the order. We followed the usual practice in this matter, a practice which has been used four or five times in the past ten years. The criterion is simply that the one with the best price gets 40 per cent; the one with the second best price gets 35 per cent; the one with the third best price gets 25 per cent. In the past the Hamilton company came up generally with the best price and it would get the 40 per cent. This time Marine Industries in Sorel was lower. As a matter of fact, Sorel bid at a lower level than it had bid the last time around and that is why it won first prize.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, with the involvement of Canadian National some of us in Hamilton have to wonder if perhaps the Minister responsible for Hamilton does not have the political clout that the Minister from Manitoba has, or that the Members from Montreal or Moncton have.

REPAIR WORK

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, since there are several hundreds if not thousands of cars sitting on the tracks, which need refurbishing right now, did the Minister not consider letting the CN yards handle that kind of work and not get into competition with the private sector such as National Steel Car which has the capacity to produce the new coal cars? I am now referring specifically to the coal car contract. Could that not have been considered, and could it still not be under consideration by the Minister?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it was indeed studied as a possibility but we thought the way I indicated was a better way. As a matter of fact my hon. friend is probably not totally informed about the Transcona facility. Transcona has been in the business of building all kinds of cars in the past. It has all the facilities and it has 400 employees to keep at work. That is why a Solomon's judgment was made on the way we divided the coal cars and hopper car orders, and the way the hopper car order was divided between the three traditional suppliers.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HNATYSHYN—APPLICATION OF EIGHT-HOUR TIME LIMIT ON DEBATE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I would like to raise a legitimate point of order, unlike that of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Smith: It will be the first.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This point of order relates to instances which arose last Monday during the course of debate in which I was invited by the Assistant Deputy Speaker—

Madam Speaker: A point of order which arose last Monday should have been raised last Monday.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Madam Speaker: If the Hon. Member does not have any other point of order, I cannot hear him.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, the point was that the Acting Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker), asked me to come back after checking Hansard. This is the first opportunity I have had to come forward with respect to rulings of the Chair which were diametrically opposed. I think I am entitled to raise this matter, as it is important.

Mr. Nielsen: Go ahead.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, on Monday morning when the—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, but would the Hon. Member wait for just a second? Since I was not in the House, I want to be informed as to what is exactly happening.

I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I appreciate that very much. This is a very serious matter which deals with the interpretation of the new temporary rules which we are now experiencing during the course of this year.

On Monday morning, when the Deputy Speaker was in the chair, a number of points of order were raised concerning the eight-hour rule on second reading stage. In particular, I raised the issue as to whether the clock began to run again once a second reading amendment was placed on the Table. In this case the amendment was that of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), with respect to the six-month hoist motion on Bill C-155. The Deputy Speaker reserved his decision on that particular issue.

At that point the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) raised the issue as to whether points of order should be taken out of the eight-hour period. May I quote from the Hansard blues because I think the matter is important. The Hon. Member for Bow River said:

> I just want to make one comment. On Friday there was a point of order which lasted for 22 minutes. We have now been on a point of order which has taken approximately 20 minutes. Surely this point of order should not come off of the eight hours.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), then said:

> The Hon. Member's point is well taken. If there are no further interventions concerning the point of order that has been raised, the Chair will reserve a decision on the matter. The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) rose and said:

> Mr. Speaker, I join with the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) and urge the Chair to make sure that the eight hour period for debate, whether on second reading or on the amendment, does not include interruptions, for good purposes, to deal with matters—

He was interrupted by the Deputy Speaker, who said:

> Order. The matter has been settled. The Chair is not counting the 20-minute intervention against the eight hours.

Then he went on to say:

> The Hon. Member is recognized for debate.

The point I am making is that it was clear that at that point the Deputy Speaker had made a final ruling with respect to whether or not legitimate points of order which were received by the Chair would be included in the calculation of the eight hours which the new rules specify are the time within which speeches can be made for a 20-minute limit.

The debate then continued, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich spoke. At the conclusion of his remarks, the Deputy Chairman of Committees then came back into the Chair. The Deputy Chairman, at the conclusion of the Hon. Member's remarks, made a number of rulings. His final rulings appear to be in clear conflict with the one made by the Deputy Speaker on the point raised by the Hon. Member for Bow River. More particularly, the Deputy Chairman said at that point:

> I want to inform Hon. Members that I am aware of the wording of the Deputy Speaker who was in the Chair at that time. It may be that Hon. Members will want to check Hansard very carefully in that regard.

I assure Your Honour that I have read this into the record so that there will be no question as to what was said. The Deputy Chairman continued:

> The quote that my memory tells me is accurate is that the Chair informs the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich, I believe it was, that "the point is well taken". In any event, my understanding is that no final ruling has been made and I will proceed on that basis.
> In the tradition of the House, where the debate or speech of an Hon. Member has been interrupted by points of order, the Chair at its own discretion has allowed the Hon. Member additional time; sometimes the exact amount that was accorded the point of order, or at other times the Chair makes a judgment as to what seems to be fair in the circumstances. However, it is conmpletely the tradition of the House that points or order, while they may not be taken from the debate time of an individual Member, are very definitely taken from the total allotted debate time on a motion. There is no question about that.

I suggest to Your Honour, and I do not think there is any question, that the records show that the ruling on the issue had already and categorically been made by the Deputy Speaker. It is, of course, a fundamental point, for if the second ruling became the precedent, it would be conceivable for the House to lose the entire eight-hour debating time because points of order had been raised on the other side of the House.

I suggest that the Acting Speaker was under a misrepresentation as to what the Deputy Speaker had previously ruled. In Beauchesne, Citation 119, reference is made to the situation where previous rulings have been made and a Speaker makes a ruling given under misrepresentation. It states:

> Speakers' rulings, once given, belong to the House which, under S.O. 12, must accept them without appeal or debate. They become precedents and form part of the rules of procedure. The Speaker is not vested with the power to alter them of his own accord. If they have been given under misrepresentation, the House itself, and not the Speaker, should take the initial steps to avoid the consequences or implications. Such actions would not be considered as an appeal against a decision of the Speaker. Journals, March 28, 1916, p. 201.
> (2) The Speaker's rulings, whether given in public or in private, constitute precedents by which subsequent Speakers, Members, and officers are guided. Such precedents are collected and in course of time may be formulated as principles or rules of practice. It is largely by this method that the modern practice of the House of Commons has been developed.

Madam Speaker, the point is simply this. It is inconceivable to me that the Deputy Speaker's ruling was anything but correct. I thought it was appropriate. I cannot understand how legitimate points of order or matters of disorder in the House could possibly be considered in any way as being part of the debate or the consideration of any stage under the old Standing Orders, or, indeed, under the provisional rules under which we are now operating. My point is that while we are dealing, in the case of Bill C-155, with a highly emotional and extremely important piece of legislation, in this particular case it becomes rather important that the fullest opportunity be given to Hon. Members to participate in the debate. Any suggestion of curtailment of the right of Members to debate is a serious infringement upon the privileges and rights of Members of Parliament.

I am suggesting that his order does not constitute the subject matter of any debate. It is, in fact, quite separate. It is a matter of the procedure and operation of the House of Commons.

I suggest and humbly submit to Your Honour that the ruling of the subordinate officer of the Chair, the Deputy Chairman, who is subordinate to the Deputy Speaker, was out of place and inappropriate and should not be taken to bind us with respect to a ruling under which we in the House should be obligated to consider the business of our country.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I have three specific points I would like to raise in addition to the remarks made by my colleague. My colleague covered the circumstances and I would ask the Chair to consider three further items in its ruling.

The first is that a point of order does not speak to the substance of the matter under debate. A point of order is merely a procedural instrument so that the debate can run along smoothly. Citation 238 of Beauchesne notes that points of order should not be viewed as usual phases of procedure and should not be raised on matters which could be disposed of by moving amendments.

The second point I would make to the Chair is that the question of how to count the time at second reading was not covered by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. However, it did in fact specify that it felt there should be eight hours of debate. In other words, there should be eight hours during which the House considers the matter under debate. I submit to the Chair that for that reason one should not take into account points of order which flow out of the debate and which, I submit, do not pertain to the actual question under consideration by the House.

The last item I would point out to the Chair is this. Citation 235 of Beauchesne states:

> Even the provisions in Standing Orders that action must be taken 'forthwith' or 'forthwith without debate' with respect to certain proceedings do not bar a Member from raising a point of order when a serious irregularity occurs.

Finally, I suggest to the Chair that the House has set very carefully under the Standing Orders what happens between two o'clock and three o'clock Monday through Thursday and between 11 o'clock and 12 o'clock on Friday. During that set time covered by the Standing Orders, a point of order or question of privilege is not allowed to interfere with the time that the House has decided under the Standing Orders should be set aside for statements under Standing Order 21 and Question Period. If you take the remarks of my colleague and the points I have raised under consideration, I submit that one should find that the eight hours of debate should be eight hours.

I would also point out that, to the best of my knowledge, this is the first time since we have been operating under the new Standing Orders that we have had a substantial point of order since the beginning of the eight hours. For that reasons we have delayed arguing this point. We wanted to delay until Madam Speaker was in the Chair. I would ask that you find that points of order and questions of privilege that occurred during that eight hours should not be included as part of the eight hours of debate.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I enter this exchange only because I am concerned that a ruling which stated that points of order were to be considered as part of the allotted time for debate might in fact cause a great hardship. I can appreciate that points of order are used illegitimately and that there are times when a matter is raised under the guise of a point of order when it is in fact not a point of order. It is simply an opportunity to raise a particular point which a Member may or may not recognize is not quite in keeping with the strict terms of a point of order.

However, I submit that the Speaker has the discretion to determine whether a matter is a legitimate point of order. If it is a legitimate point of order, then that time should not be taken from the hours allocated for consideration under the Standing Orders. For example, if a Member were to raise a point of order in order to draw to the Speaker's attention that there was not a quorum present in the House of Commons, it took 20 minutes for that to be ascertained and at that time a quorum was then to be determined, the time taken would be legitimate because there was a violation of the Standing Orders. It would be unfair to lose that time from the debate, yet it is the responsibility of every Member to make sure that the Standing Orders are obeyed. Therefore there is a dilemma. The Hon. Member is doing the job that is required of him under the Standing Orders when he draws the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is no quorum, but at the same time he is jeopardizing the opportunity of his colleagues to take part in the debate because of the loss of time.

I submit that a ruling which allowed the Chair to have discretion and determine whether time can be reimbursed on a legitimate point of order or that it simply be seen as lost time on an illegitimate point of order would be satisfactory to a majority of Members.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I was in the House when the incident which has just been referred to occurred. I do not believe that the suggestion that somehow the Deputy Speaker and the Acting Speaker are on different wavelengths is at all logical. If you would look at what the Deputy Speaker said on page 25479 of Hansard, after the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) raised the point of order, the Deputy Speaker said:

> The Chair will reserve a decision on the matter.

On the following page 25480, the Deputy Speaker said:

> The matter has been settled. The Chair is not counting the 20-minute intervention against the eight hours.

If you refer to the comments made by the Acting Speaker on page 25483 of Hansard, you will see that he said:

> In the tradition of the House, where the debate or speech of an Hon. Member has been interrupted by points of order, the Chair at its own discretion has allowed the Hon. Member additional time; sometimes the exact amount that was accorded the point of order, or at other times the Chair makes a judgment as to what seems to be fair in the circumstances.

I am suggesting that the Deputy Speaker exercised that discretion and said that he was not, under all the circumstances, going to deduct that 20 minutes from the allocation of what constituted the eight hours. However, the fact that he exercised his discretion in that way in that particular instance does not mean that what the Acting Speaker went on to say is incorrect. I would submit that he was correct. He went on to say:

However, it is completely the tradition of the House that points of order, while they may not be taken from the debate time of an individual Member, are very definitely taken from the total allotted debate time on a motion. There is no question about that.

I submit that what the Acting Speaker said was correct. I would also submit that what the Deputy Speaker did was not at variance with that. He chose to exercise his discretion in a particular way, but the fact that he exercised his discretion in that way does not mean that the tradition of the House is changed.

Were we to have an approach where we could avoid having time allocated in calculating the amount of time spent on a debate by raising countless points of order, that would leave us open to gross abuses of the time of the House. I think it would inevitably lead to lengthy filibusters.

I suggest that there is no difference between what the Acting Speaker and the Deputy Speaker said and I support the position of the Acting Speaker. Nothing that was said by the Deputy Speaker really contravenes that.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, as the person who was seeking the floor when this particular ruling was given, it was declared to me:

The Chair is not counting the 20-minute intervention against the eight hours.

That was not against my time but against the eight hours. That was stated at page 25480 of Hansard. My concern is that this is the first occasion we have had to consider the meaning of that eight hours. This is really the first opportunity.

It is conceivable that legitimate points of order might be raised for eight successive hours that ought to be devoted to debating an issue. If the ruling which seems to be hovering over our heads at the moment, namely that points of order should be included in the eight hours, comes to fruition then we would find there is no debate whatever on the motion before us.

I would remind you, Madam Speaker, that there is a slight variance in the amount of time consumed during that eight hours on Bill C-155. The Table has indicated to me that 63 minutes were used for points of order. Another timing done independently indicates that 66 minutes were used. In other words, for the consideration of this particular Bill, a very important Bill—which is also true of any Bill we consider, and I think this is a good time to resolve the matter—one full hour at least has been removed from debating time. That means six speakers have had their debating time cut in two. Six speakers have lost one half of the time they might have otherwise had to elaborate matters—

Mr. Chénier: You are wasting time.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I do not consider that an intervention of that sort is legitimate. I am not wasting time. We are considering a very important matter, namely the determination of what constitutes eight hours of debate.

My hon. colleague from Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has made a number of points, as has the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). All of these matters are germane to the issue before us. If we are going to have to live with this eight-hour business and 20-minute speeches followed by the ten-minute period for questions or comments, I think we should resolve this issue now because we have another six months to live with it. I think we should know now exactly what goes into those eight hours.

I will just remind you also, Madam Speaker, that when the Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker) came to make a ruling on the matter he differentiated very, very neatly between three issues that were before us. One was the determination of whether the eight hours was on the main motion only or on the main motion plus the amendment. The second was whether the ten-minute intervention for questions and comments would be included in the eight hours. Third was the inclusion or the non-inclusion of points of order in those eight hours of debate.

Finally, there is something that has me confused. I do not know how to interpret it and I bring it to your attention. It was mentioned briefly but indirectly by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

My ruling is always open to question.

It was my understanding, and we have been told so in very certain terms, that the Speaker's ruling is not open to question. The Acting Speaker has suggested—perhaps because he is the Acting Speaker—that his ruling is always open to question. I did not understand that at all. I think that matter ought to be taken into account. Possibly what he intended was that he was not really quite sure about this matter of points or order being included in the eight hours. Therefore, he felt that he should not make a definitive ruling on this occasion.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, on this same point of order and the approximately one hour that has been referred to taken up with points of order during second reading debate, may I suggest, with all respect, that the points of order raised had to do with the application of Standing Order 35. They were not aimed at either the content or the debate on the Bill before the House. They have to do only with the interpretation and application of Standing Order 35, particularly Standing Order 35(2)(b) having to do with how the eight-hour period is arrived at by the Chair.

Point of Order—Mr. Hnatyshyn

The Chair ruled on earlier points of order, which I accept. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) raised the point about not counting proper and legitimate points of order in the eight hours, and I support that position on the ground that when the points of order were raised having to do with the interpretation of the rule that applies to second reading, that time should not be counted against the eight hours taken out on second reading.

On the matter of frivolous points of order mentioned by the Parliamentary Secretary, it is there that the discretion of the Chair should enter, I submit, because Hon. Members could get up on points of order and object to the clothes that some Hon. Member is wearing, or that the clocks were inaccurate, or a host of other things. It would be patently obvious that Members were trying to take up the time of the House. That is where the discretion of the Chair enters. Obviously, the Speaker should then say to the Clerk at the table that the time taken up by those kinds of frivolous points of order should be counted in the eight hours for debate. That eliminates Hon. Members who might be tempted to get on to frivolous points of order.

When a point of order is raised having to do with the interpretation of the rule that applies to the length of the debate at second reading, surely that is a legitimate concern of the Chair and the House regarding the rules and should not be counted against the time taken up for debate.

Similarly with the point made by my hon. friend from Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) in the matter of a quorum, surely 20 minutes or 25 minutes of discussion which has to do with the decorum, the order, the attendance in this House and nothing to do with an item under debate should not count in the eight hours allotted for 20-minute speeches.

I hope, Madam Speaker, you will rule that the discretion of the Chair will apply rigorously to frivolous points of order and that they should count in the eight hours for debate, but that proper points of order raised having to do with conduct, order and attendance in this House, all having to do with the rules of this House, should not be counted in the eight hours for debate on 20-minute speeches.

Madam Speaker: I just want to tell Hon. Members that we have a situation here where a ruling has already been made, but as far as I can see the ruling has been made on particular circumstances. What Members are asking me now and arguing is that the Chair should consider the broader matter of the application of those eight hours for debate. I am prepared to consider that and to rule on it later.

I think all of the arguments have been given because the last Members rising have given me the same arguments as those who spoke in the first instance. If Members agree, we will find a way out of the problem that the ruling has been made and still there is some doubt as to the application of those eight hours. We will find some way of discussing this among ourselves, and I am sure that we will find a satisfactory solution.

• (1530)

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, with the greatest of respect, as one of those who was involved in this sort of thing many years ago—

Mr. Deans: Two weeks.

Mr. Lambert: —that ruling may I say, as I indicated to the Table Officers at the time, was made with indecent haste, and I say that advisedly. In that case, I would agree with the submissions made by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) that it is always incumbent upon the Chair to determine that which is frivolous and not applicable. Points of order raised by the Opposition should not necessarily be considered frivolous. I have known, and I think you have too, Madam Speaker, and I say this with the greatest of respect, that there are points raised by Government supporters, particularly Parliamentary Secretaries who are in there as hatchet men, that are often frivolous and that there are—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Will the Hon. Member please speak to the point so that the Chair can use some of the arguments in order to reflect upon this problem. There is no point in explaining to the House that there are frivolous points of order. That is obvious to anyone who has sat in on one day of debate in the House. If the Hon. Member has new arguments to offer, the Chair will welcome them.

Mr. Lambert: Madam Speaker, it is incumbent upon Members also to reinforce certain opinions from time to time. It is not necessarily so that once an argument has been stated, to repeat it is frivolous. May I submit that in this particular instance the Chair is the final arbiter and in that particular case, unaccustomed as you may be, I am supporting you in this particular case, and may I say with the greatest of respect that I claim the right to say so.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the movement of the affairs of the afternoon, the House Leader for the Conservative Party raised a point concerning House business. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) then rose on a point of order. I stood at the same time to ask a question about House business. I wonder if I might carry on with that.

I direct this question to the House Leader. The other day we discussed an important point concerning legislation coming before this House which affects absentee voting for individuals who are not in their own polls. As there are tens of thousands of Canadians who are disenfranchised, is it the intention of the Government to bring forward reasonably soon something to provide an absentee balloting opportunity under the Canada Elections Act in order to comply with the requirements to have that before the second sitting of this House?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I presume the Hon. Member means the second session and not the second sitting.

Mr. Skelly: Yes.

Mr. Pinard: The Hon. Member knows that under the existing statute, the Chief Electoral Officer has to make a report to the House at the beginning of the second session of each Parliament. I suppose when that time comes his report will deal with the important matter raised by the Hon. Member. Then we will see what we will do.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, the House Leader knows how very important that is in order to comply with the requirement of the Constitution which ensures that every Canadian has the right to vote. The Chief Electoral Officer has indicated he has not been getting that much information when many Members of Parliament have expressed a concern. Is the House Leader prepared to call this matter to his attention and to ask him to report on it?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, even though this is not properly House business, I will be glad to bring to the attention of the Chief Electoral Officer the questions asked today by the Hon. Member.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BENJAMIN—INADEQUATE SUPPLY OF COPIES OF BILL C-155

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday I raised a point with you, Madam Speaker, about the inability to get additional copies of Bill C-155. I was wondering whether you have been able to look into that matter since I am still limited to ten copies and I have over 50 requests for copies.

Madam Speaker: We now have additional copies, so the Hon. Member should be able to get them in the usual place.

PETITIONS

MR. KORCHINSKI—NUCLEAR ARMS RACE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 38 members of All Saints Anglican Church in Melfort in the Province of Saskatchewan who are concerned that the increasing danger of a nuclear war and the building of ever-more destructive weapons, if used, would threaten the very survival of human life on this earth. These people pray and call upon this Honourable House to urge the Government to renounce all present and future involvement in a nuclear arms race and turn every effort to the attainment of peace, giving positive leadership through Canada's ambassador for disarmament in the United Nations.

RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition to the House from 40 residents of Canada, Portage la Prairie, Lowe Farm, Balmoral, Winnipeg, Morris and Woodside, Manitoba, in which they exercise their right to present a grievance that western farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow rate in 1982. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to our balance of trade. The undersigned believe it is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow. The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from 39 or 40 residents of the Morse Saskatchewan district. Most of them are farmers, a number are business people, housewives and labourers in that area who are petitioning the Parliament of Canada to maintain the Crow rate because of the disruption that may occur to their communities because of the proposal that is before the House at this time.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present to this House a petition signed by 46 residents of Lloydminster, the Alberta and Saskatchewan area in places such as Vermilion, Vegreville and Calgary. These petitioners bring before Parliament their grievance and humbly call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow grain rate.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and my honour to present a petition on behalf of some 35 to 40 residents of my Province in towns like Cadillac, Admiral, Shaunavon, Valmarie and places like that. These are local farmers who are petitioning to keep the statutory Crow rate as is. Theyd do not want to see any change in the Crow rate whatsoever. They are concerned that if there is a change, it will drive a lot of these small and ordinary-size farmers off the land. Because of that, it is a great pleasure for me to present this petition on their behalf.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I have a petition of some 36 names of people from my Province of Saskatchewan representing such towns as North Battleford, Rosthern, Adams, Biggar, Medstead, Cut Knife, etc. It is my pleasure, indeed my duty, Madam Speaker, to present this petition to you.

• (1540)

The petitioners are concerned by the change in the Crow rate. They are concerned, Madam Speaker, that the proposals before us would indeed have a tremendously harmful effect upon the Saskatchewan agricultural community, and I wish to present their petition to you.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present to you a petition from the people of Saskatoon, Biggar and Vanscoy who are concerned about the Bill now before the House of Commons that will take away the Crow rate. They ask that the House and the Government of Canada see fit that this Bill is not brought into effect but rather that the statutory Crow rate continue, so I place this petition before you, Madam Speaker, and hope that it will be respected.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from some 35 or 40 Canadians from towns such as Gull Lake, Webb and Tompkins in the Province of Saskatchewan who have pointed out to the House, through their ancient right of petition, that western Canadian farmers have paid some $131 million to export grain during the fiscal year 1981-82, that this grain in turn contributed some $6.3 billion to the balance of trade, and that this is a fair contribution by western farmers to the Canadian economy. They therefore petition the House that there be no change in the Crow rate so that justice can be done.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from some 20 Canadian citizens, mostly residing in Herbert.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Heap: These citizens feel that the Crow rate is a fair rate and that they have paid their fair share of transportation costs and their fair contribution to overseas trade. They therefore ask Parliament to see to it that the Crow rate is not increased, and as in duty bound, they humbly pray.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I hear a lot of noise coming from the Liberals and the Tories. I suppose that is because in terms of the Crow rate, their constituents do not know where they stand. But I have the honour to present a petition, Madam Speaker, from a number of Canadians. They say that the western Canadian farmers have paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year and this grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned Canadians believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, which means no change. They therefore humbly pray that you take whatever steps you can, Madam Speaker, to ensure that the Crow rate does not change.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from the riding of Dauphin-Swan River, and the undersigned petitioners indicate that the Crow rate is an important benefit to western Canada and one of the earliest incentives granted to the settlers. They want the Crow rate retained. I would like to point out, especially to the Hon. Members opposite, that the Crow rate is considered in my riding to be just as sacred as is the ability to speak French in Canada to the constituents of my hon. friends from Quebec. So I have the duty and the honour to present this petition to the House of Commons, and we trust that when it is examined, it will be found that it is signed by people from Gilbert Plains and Grandview.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present to the House this afternoon a petition signed by some 33 individuals from the southwest corner of Saskatchewan, the communities of Cadillac, Admiral and Scotsguard, who, at the same time as they appreciate the need to upgrade the rail transportation system in Canada, do not want the full weight and cost of upgrading that system to be borne on the backs of the grain producers in their area. They therefore humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate, otherwise known as the Crow rate, and although they do appreciate the other concerns that exist over grain transportation, they do want the Crow rate to be maintained. I do present their petition this afternoon, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I present a petition signed by residents of The Pas, Manitoba, people who live in a community which is on the line going to the Port of Churchill. They also express their concern with regard to the proposed changes to the Crow rate. They indicate in their petition that they would like to see the present Crow rate maintained, they would like to see the Government invest money in the railways of Canada, and they would also like to see the Government take a public equity in CP and ensure that there is no variable rate which will hurt and probably kill the Port of Churchill.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition on behalf of a large number of residents of Pelly, Saskatchewan, and Arran, Saskatchewan, and they state that the western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. That grain in turn contributed over $6 billion to the balance of trade, and the undersigned believe that the farmers have made a fair contribution to the Canadian economy. They humbly pray, Madam Speaker, that this petition will be heard and there will be no change in the Crow rate.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I have another petition. This petition is from some 33 ordinary Canadians such as Helen Beech, Leonard Lovestone—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is not allowed to cite the names on the petition. Let him just tell the House briefly what the petition is all about. That is all that is allowed.

Mr. Keeper: I will keep the petition anonymous, Madam Speaker. It is from some 33 ordinary Canadians from western communities who have exercised their ancient right of petition in the House in order to present a grievance, and their grievance is that the Government is moving in an arbitrary fashion to remove an ancient and historic right, a right which they feel is central to the Confederation bargain that brought this country together, and they wish that the House would impress upon the Government the need for fair treatment and that they be allowed to earn their livelihood in a just and fair manner—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I could see that the Hon. Member was ad libbing. Hon. Members are allowed to read only the title of the petition, and it seemed as if the Hon. Member was going far beyond the title. I would just like to remind Hon. Members that in presenting a petition, they are allowed to read only the title.

Mr. Keeper: The Canadians to whom I made reference petition the House with regard to a grievance that deals with the statutory Crow rate, and they wish that the Government would treat their economic affairs justly.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I present a petition that is signed by 36 people. The subject matter of this petition is based on the fact that the western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow rate in the year 1981-82 and that this grain in turn has contributed some $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that the western farmers will pay only one times Crow, in other words no change.

These petitioners humbly pray and humbly call upon the Parliament of Canada to maintain as it is the present statutory rate, which is, of course, the Crow rate. I am very pleased to present this petition on behalf of these people from small towns throughout the Province of Saskatchewan, including many from my own riding.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I am not rising on a supplementary, I am rising to pretend—present—

Some Hon. Members: Pretend is the right word.

Mr. Blaikie: I am rising to present a separate and independent petition on behalf of 30 or 40 residents of Saskatchewan from the communities of Consul, Fox Valley, Maple Creek and Sceptre. These Canadians want to exercise their right to present a grievance and humbly point out that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. They believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, or no change.

• (1550)

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners ever pray, Madam Speaker.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, while I fully intend to follow your admonition and simply read this petition, I cannot forgo the opportunity of saying that I wish the Leaders of the other Parties, even those without them right now, would join with us on these petitions.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise the right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade—I say to my Conservative friends to my right. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, which means no change.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, I have a point of order. I am pleased to see that the Leader of the NDP has finally realized that the West is alive, in contradistinction to that Party's position on the Constitution, the right to property and the National Energy Program.

Madam Speaker: That, of course, is not a point of order.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from the people of the town of Harris, Saskatchewan, the town that has had a railroad service since 1908. This petition is addressed to the Hon. House of Commons in Parliament assembled and says that the residents of Harris do now exercise their right to present a grievance, and they humbly sheweth that western grain farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year and that this grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that it is the farmers' fair contribution to the economy, and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, which means no change. It goes on:

> Wherefore we, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

I am happy to present this petition to the House of Commons.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, as a mountain boy from the woods products industry of B.C. I am particularly proud to present a petition on behalf of a number of signers from both Saskatchewan and Ontario who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate and object to the Government's attempts to whipsaw and divide and rule as between farmers and industrial workers in Canada.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Madam Speaker, it gives me great delight to be able to present this petition. Upon examination you will notice it is mostly from the Hutterite colony. Those of us who live out West appreciate the fantastic contribution to agriculture that they have made. They address the petition to the Hon. House of Commons in Parliament assembled. They exercise their right to petition, a right which, of course, dates back to the times even before the Crow rate. They show that the western Canadian farmers have contributed some $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. It is their wish that the western farmer retain the Crow rate as it presently is.

I am delighted to be able to present this particular petition.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have another petition that I received from 63 residents in Kamsack, Verigin, Churchbridge and Togo requesting to exercise their right to present a grievance and asking that the Parliament of Canada agree that they shall continue to pay one times the Crow and that Parliament maintain the present statutory grain rates, and as in duty bound these petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of this great country who petition the House with regard to the Crow rate. They point out that farmers paid $131 million to move export grain during the crop year 1981-82. This grain contributed some $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. These farmers therefore feel that they have made a fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that the Crow rate should not be changed.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition from a number of Canadian citizens mainly from Ernfold and Chaplin in Saskatchewan. This petition asks that Parliament give consideration to the fact that Canadian farmers have paid their fair share of the transportation costs not only last year but ever since the Crow rate was established. They are contributing heavily, mainly over $6 billion, to the balance of trade in the past year. They believe that is a fair contribution and that they should pay no more than one times Crow rate.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, your petitioners, acting in the tradition which I believe goes back to the Magna Carta, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners will every pray.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I also have a petition signed by residents of communities along the rail line to Churchill. In their petition they humbly pray that the Government retain the statutory Crowsnest rate and ensure upgrading and improvement of services in all regions of Canada, including areas ignored by the Pepin-Gilson report.

They also ask that the Government of Canada, through Parliament, make public equity investment in the railways as proposed by the New Democratic Party caucus.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from some 41 residents of the area around Weyburn in southern Saskatchewan who petition the House of Commons to take note of the great contribution that agriculture and farmers have made to the balance of trade in this country. They say that the farmers' fair contribution is being well recognized in the Crow rate. They petition the House and the Parliament of Canada to maintain the present statutory grain rate.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I have just recently received a petition that I have been requested to present to you from some 33 or 36 petitioners from such places in Saskatchewan as Cut Knife, Maymont, Biggar, North Battleford and Battleford itself, Glenbush and Rabbit Lake.

The petitioners point out to you and to the Parliament of Canada the inequities in the proposals that would change the Crow rate. They point out that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year; that this grain in turn contributed some $6.3 billion in the balance of trade; that they believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy; that western farmers will pay one times Crow, meaning no change. Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to place before the House today a petition primarily from residents of Gravelbourg, but not just farmers; this includes doctors, businessmen, contractors and a variety of other people who signed the petition. It is addressed to the Honourable House of Commons in Parliament assembled and says that the petitioners are residents of Canada and have the right to present a grievance. Western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers should pay one times Crow, Madam Speaker, which means no change. Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from the Town of Biggar, Saskatchewan, with the Village of Duperow, a Town which has been built—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: New York is big, but this is bigger.

Mr. Ogle: Right on. It is a town which has been built over the years on both grain transportation—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. Will the Hon. Member simply read the petition.

Mr. Ogle: The people of Biggar, Saskatchewan, Madam Speaker, to the Honourable House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the citizens of Canada now exercise their right to present a grievance and humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. And this grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay no more. Wherefore, the undersigned, our petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray. I am happy to present this to the House of Commons.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to present on behalf of a number of citizens of Swift Current, Saskatchewan, a petition to the House of Commons in which the petitioners exercise an ancient right to present a grievance, that being that western Canadian farmers have paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year, and that this grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade in Canada. The farmers of these communities feel that this is a fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western Canadian farmers should pay no more than the existing Crow rate. They have submitted this petition in accordance with their ancient right to do so.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, again I have received a petition from residents of Canada, some 38 of whom are from Southey, Raymore, Keliher, Leross and Lestock, Saskatchewan—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Simply read the petition, please.

Mr. Benjamin: —and wish to exercise their right to present a grievance. They are willing to pay one times the Crow rate, and they believe this to be the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy. Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and honour this afternoon to present a petition from residents of Kamsack, Verigin and Preeceville, Saskatchewan, in regard to the high rate of farm bankruptcies, 130 per cent up this year over the same period last year, and their wish to maintain the present statutory Crow rate. Western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain in turn contributed some $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair share of contribution to the Canadian economy, and the western farmers will pay one times Crow, which is no change. Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present on behalf of 43 members of the community of New Norway in Alberta a petition in which they exercise their right to present a grievance. Western Canadian farmers have contributed massively to the economy of the country. They feel that that is a fair contribution. They are willing to pay one times Crow. Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from another Hutterite colony. I underline again the fantastic contribution that this group of people have made to agriculture in western Canada. This colony addresses itself to the Honourable, the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now exercise their right to exercise a grievance, humbly show that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the crop year 1981-82. They feel that this contribution of $6.3 billion to the balance of trade is their fair contribution to the economy of Canada. Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I have a petition with several names on it from Pelly Saskatchewan and Kamsack, Saskatchewan. It is my honour to present to the House of Commons in Parliament assembled the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now exercise their right to present a grievance, stating that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, that is, no change. Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of 33 residents of the Towns of Schuler and Craik in southeast Saskatchewan. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now exercise their right to present a grievance, humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow, that is, no change. Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Madam Speaker: I hope Hon. Members will excuse me. I am quite ill and I would like to leave the chair. The Deputy Speaker will take the chair.

Mr. Chrétien: It's enough to make anybody sick.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: How can you even talk about democracy?

An Hon. Member: This is democracy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the people from the various communities in Saskatchewan who signed this petition will be impressed by the fact that the Government Members would not let them present the petition.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ask Hon. Members to conform to the rules of the House. The Hon. Member may present the petition.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by various residents in different communities in Saskatchewan. As you know, many people in Saskatchewan ship their grain on the rail line to Churchill at the Crow rate. In their petition they beseech the House of Commons to maintain the present statutory grain rate. They believe that they contribute a lot to the Canadian economy. They pay their fair share for the cost of shipping grain in this country and they help the economy of this nation. They ask that the House of Commons not change the Crow rate.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have the honour to present a very important petition which concerns the Crowsnest Pass rate. It was signed by 37 or 38 people from my home province, Saskatchewan.

[English]

It is a petition, Mr. Speaker, which concerns itself with variable rates and the importance of not abandoning the rail lines so important to serving the people of Saskatchewan and their shipments of grain. It concerns things like the Port of Churchill which is so important to farmers in my part of Saskatchewan. The petition comes from many different towns, and what is noteworthy here is that all but three of these farmers are members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. They are very active grass roots members—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please state the petition and not describe the characteristics of the petitioners.

Mr. Nystrom: The petition says that the undersigned farmers of Canada are very, very concerned about variable rates. They are very concerned about the abandonment of rail lines, and that the Crow rate not change. They petition the Parliament of Canada to keep the Crow rate, that there be no change. They say that the farmers have already paid over $100 million to move export grain to market and this grain in turn has contributed some $6.3 billion to Canada's balance of trade. Because of that, they have asked me to present the petition, and I am honoured to do so.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition to present to the House. It has some 36 signatures. The petitioners wish to point out to the House of Commons in Parliament assembled that they are all residents of Canada. In fact, most of them are from North Battleford, some indeed from Saskatoon, and from Battleford itself.

Mr. Peterson: Anguish is the Member from there.

Mr. Anguish: We traded petitions.

Mr. Peterson: You should not trade petitions.

Mr. Anguish: They were sent to him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) has the floor.

Mr. de Jong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If we could have some order in the House.

Mr. Peterson: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will hear the point of order at the end of the Hon Member's presentation.

Mr. de Jong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The petitioners say that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow rate in the 1981-82 crop year, and that this grain in turn contributed some $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The petitioners believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, meaning no change. Wherefore, Mr. Speaker, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate, meaning the Crow, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I humbly submit to you that it is an abuse of the process of this House when not only one Member but many Members stand up and present at least three petitions each, all on the same subject. Second, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from the content that the Member presenting the petition is not even the Member of Parliament serving those people.

Mr. Deans: Oh, sit down!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. Members of Parliament, according to our Standing Orders and procedures, have the right to present petitions.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition properly and duly signed by 37 residents of Canada, submitted to me to present to the Parliament of Canada, in which they exercise their ancient right, going back to 1066, to present a grievance. Their grievance is that they wish the Parliament of Canada to recognize that grain producers have paid a fair contribution to the Canadian economy, that western farmers should continue to pay one times the statutory Crow rate. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners, Mr. Speaker, will ever pray.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present to the House of Commons a petition concerning the Crow rate from citizens of Saskatoon. They address themselves to Parliament assembled and point out that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in 1981-82. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. They believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, which is no change. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

I am happy to present this to you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have the honour and privilege of presenting a petition signed by a number of Canadian citizens—

Mr. Smith: How many from the Beaches?

Mr. Young: —to present a grievance humbly showing that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow rate, which is no change. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I too am proud to stand in the House and—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Members are laughing, but I say I am proud to exercise a right of ordinary people which goes back to the time of Sir Thomas More, the great Chancellor of England.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not invited to make a speech on the history of petitions, simply to state his petition.

Mr. Waddell: I will not say any more about that. But I will say that I have a petition signed by 19 people from places like Young, Saskatchewan, Manitoba Beach, Saskatchewan, and other places, and Ottawa as well. The petitioners humbly say that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the Canadian balance of trade. The undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow rate, that is, no change. Wherefore the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain or Crow rate. I present this petition.

[Translation]

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition signed by Canadians who are concerned about the Crowsnest Pass rate. These people live in a Hutterite colony—

[English]

In their petition they state that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain in turn contributed some $6.3 billion to the balance of trade, and they feel this is a fair contribution to the Canadian economy from themselves as farmers. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate. In duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

• (1620)

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I also stand today in the House of Commons to present a petition signed by a number of Canadians, people of the Province of Saskatchewan, in the communities of Wadena, Kelvington and Rose Valley area, and members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. They petition the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, that is no change.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from citizens of Canada representing small towns in Saskatchewan, Rockglen, Killdeer and Gravelbourg. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmer's fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow, that is, no change.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, as Member for Spadina, but having regard for the needs of the whole of Canada, I have a petition from a number of residents of Canada who are now exercising their right to present this grievance. The petition humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned also believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow rate with no change.

Therefore, the undersigned, that is, your petitioners, Mr. Speaker, humbly pray and call upon this Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain, that is the Crow rate and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of 45 farmers from the Lloydminster area of Alberta and Saskatchewan, a group of farmers who feel that they contributed nothing to inflation in Canada. These petitioners, the undersigned residents of Canada, who now exercise the right to present a grievance, humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow, that is, no change.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, again it is my pleasure and a privilege to present a petition on behalf of 34 Canadian farmers who state the following in their petition. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray, since those farmers do not believe that they are responsible for inflation in this country.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to introduce a petition at this time, as is my privilege and, indeed, my duty. It is a petition from some 36 Canadians, mainly from around North Battleford, though including people from Cut Knife, the Battlefords, Saskatoon, Lashburn, et cetera. The petitioners wish to humbly petition the House of Commons, which is assembled here, to exercise their right to present a grievance. The grievance is that our western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the crop year of 1981-82. This grain, in turn, contributed some $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. Indeed, the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy. Mr. Speaker, I might say that I also believe this—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Good for you.

Mr. de Jong: Western farmers are willing to pay one times the Crow, meaning, again, that there will be no change.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate, meaning the Crow rate. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Speaker, if I am allowed, I also wish to point out that most of them are farmers and members of the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not to describe his petitioners. He may simply present his petitions.

Mr. de Jong: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am sure Your Honour and most Hon. Members of the House are aware that farmers and Canadian taxpayers are putting hundreds of millions of dollars into upgrading of the rail lines and development of a major grain facility in Prince Rupert, in my riding. Farmers from across Canada and constituents in my riding are petitioning the House. In this case, most of the names on the petition I will be tabling are those of members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. They present the following petition for your consideration, Mr. Speaker, and for the consideration of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin).

To the House of Commons in Parliament assembled, the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now exercise their right to present a grievance, humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that the western farmers will pay one times Crow, which means no change. They are certainly not, as some Hon. Members would suggest, members of the flat earth society. These are all members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, and farmers.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate, which I am sure the Minister of Transport will soon come to realize.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition with which I have been presented, and which I feel honoured and duty bound to present, from 37 farmers, members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool from Fosston, Canora, Buchanan and Springside, Saskatchewan, in which they, as undersigned residents of Canada, exercise their right to present a grievance because they believe that they, as farmers, have made a fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that they are willing to pay one times the Crow rate.

Wherefore these undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the citizens of Rockglen, Saskatchewan. Most of these people are farmers but they also represent a cross section of the community.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade, and that the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy, and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, that is, no change.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate, and as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition which I am pleased to present from retired farmers and homemakers from the area of Watrous, Saskatchewan; Viscount, Saskatchewan; Raymore, Saskatchewan and other areas.

These farmers deeply resent the fact that a Government with no representation in their area should try to change a historic bargain of Confederation. They also humbly show in their petition that they paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow rate in the 1981-82 crop year. The grain contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of payment of Canada which is important for the whole country.

They also believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that they should not be further penalized. They also believe that the western farmer should pay one times Crow, that is, no change. Wherefore all the 24 undersigned humbly pray and call upon this Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate.

I would like to table this petition.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty this afternoon to present a petition which has come about as a result of the proposed Pepin plan which became Bill C-155 in the House of Commons. The petitioners who sent this petition to me present to the honourable House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of Saskatchewan, who now exercise their right to present a grievance, humbly sheweth that the western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade, and the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow which is, in effect, no change.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate, more commonly referred to as the Crow rate. As in duty bound, your petitioners ever pray.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition signed by Canadians which concerns the Crowsnest Pass rate. These people are members of a colony in Spring Creek—

[English]

To the Hon. House of Commons in Parliament assembled the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy, and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, in other words, no change.

Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I also have the unique pleasure of presenting to the House of Commons a petition signed by numerous individuals from the thriving metropolis of Gravelbourg and Limerick, Saskatchewan. These individuals wish to petition the House to show that western Canadian farmers have paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed in the order of $6.3 billion to the Canadian economy to enhance and improve our balance of trade which created employment for all Canadians and strengthen the economy generally.

The undersigned believe that these farmers have made a fair contribution, contrary to the Government's proposal, to the Canadian economy. Those western farmers will pay in a voluntary and forthright manner one times Crow, which is essentially no change.

Wherefore the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate. As in duty bound, your petitioners ever pray. The petition is dated Tuesday, March 17, 1983.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Members in the fourth and fifth rows he seated. We are dealing with the third row. The Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant).

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured and duty bound to present to the House of Commons a petition signed by residents of the Province of Saskatchewan and the communities of Fosston, Lintlaw and Clair, among others, all Members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and all farmers.

Your petitioners share the sentiments expressed in an editorial in yesterday's Toronto Star which called on Ottawa to back off. The petitioners feel that the federal Government has no right to impose such fundamental social and economic changes on a region of Canada without the approval of the provincial Governments most directly affected.

The petitioners, or the undersigned, are residents of Canada who now exercise their right to present a grievance. The petition humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade of Canada. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy. These farmers state that they will pay one times Crow, that is, no change to the present rate.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon this Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition on the Crow rate which has been sent to me by the Members of the Lutheran Church in Langham, Saskatchewan, which happens to be the first Lutheran Church in Saskatchewan.

To the Honourable House of Commons in Parliament assembled the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy, and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, which means no change.

Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray. The petition is duly signed by members of the Lutheran Church in Langham, Saskatchewan.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): I rise to present a petition, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Come on over, Jim.

Mr. Peterson: This petition reads that the undersigned citizens of Canada humbly pray the NDP hijack of Parliament will cease in order that we can get on with the business of renovating Canada's western rail system. Western producers need and deserve a new rail system which will enable them to get their products to market, the construction of which will create thousands of jobs for Canada's unemployed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Speak more slowly, Jim.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my petition is signed by farmers who understand and who have had to live and work with the Crow rate for many, many years. During the long winter they have had a chance to sign petitions to present to the House of Commons. In their petition these farmers who are concerned about the Crow rate talk about the $131 million which they paid to export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-1982 crop year. This grain in turn has contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. It is understood and felt by these farmers that that is their fair contribution to the Canadian economy. These farmers also believe they should be paying the Crow rate in the future and that there should be no change. These farmers, not Members of Parliament, not Liberal Members of Parliament humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain and present the present statutory grain or the Crow rate, and as duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to refrain from editorial comments. I ask that they simply state their petitions.

The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 11 Canadian farmers who are petitioning Parliament assembled, and the petition prays that the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise the right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow, which means no change and, wherefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate, which is the Crow rate, and as duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is recognizing Members in the second row to my left. I would ask other Members to be seated.

An Hon. Member: When do we get our turn?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of Canadian citizens in Cut Knife, Battleford and Landis and a number of other Saskatchewan towns. These residents of Canada now exercise their right to present a grievance which humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-1982 crop year. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. These petitioners believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that the western farmers will pay one times the Crow, which is to say, Mr. Speaker, no change. Wherefore these petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate, and as duty bound these petitioners will ever pray. This petition was signed on Tuesday, May 17, 1983.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with my other colleagues in presenting a petition to you this afternoon that has been presented to me by Canadians from in and around the city and town of North Battleford, Saskatchewan. These petitioners are petitioning the House of Commons assembled here to present their grievances to the House. These petitioners humbly sheweth or is it showeth?

Mr. Blaikie: If the shoeth fitteth, weareth.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member can do his best. I am sure Hansard will do its job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: The petition humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-1982 crop year. It is estimated that in the following decade the amount will come close to $1 billion, meaning that close to $600 for every man, woman and child will be paid to the railroads. This will mean less money spent in Saskatchewan, a decrease in jobs and sales in many of the communities from which many of these petitioners come. That is why these petitioners are so concerned. They are not only farmers but salesmen, shopkeepers and housewives, etc.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member needs to state only the petition.

Mr. de Jong: This export grain in turn contributed some $6.3 billion to the balance of trade and to the benefit of all Canada. These petitioners believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy. Indeed, as I mentioned before, Mr. Speaker, so do I. Western farmers at present pay one times Crow, and that is what they are willing to pay, which means no change. Wherefore, these petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate, meaning the Crow rate, and as duty bound these petitioners will ever pray. This petition was dated Tuesday, May 17, 1983.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before calling on Hon. Members in the first row on my left the Chair would like to announce questions to be raised tonight during the adjournment debate.

It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—National Defence—Aircraft—Allocation of work—Starting date; and the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Tessier)—Canada Council—Alleged scandal at Sherbrooke, P.Q.

The Chair felt that, with consent, that was the appropriate moment at which to introduce a slightly different note.

PETITIONS

RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents, some from Saskatchewan and some from the Province of Ontario, including Timothy Woods, to the Honourable House of Commons in Parliament assembled. These petitioners, residents of Canada, now exercise their right to present a grievance. It humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow rate in the 1981-1982 crop year. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The petitioners believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers are prepared to pay one times the Crow rate which, in essence, is no change?

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate, that being the Crow freight rate. And as duty bound these petitioners will ever pray. They hope the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) will, for a change, listen to them.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by 37 citizens, 30 of whom are members of the Wheat Pool from Saltcoats, Canora, Buchanan, Invermay, Melville and Kelvington. These petitioners exercise their right to present a grievance pointing out the amount of freight they paid to move export grain under the Crow rate. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade to the benefit of all of Canada. They, the undersigned, believe this is their fair contribution to the Canadian economy. Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to maintain the present statutory grain rate for grain producers and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their ancient and unchallenged rights to present a grievance, with the assurance that your Honourable House will provide a remedy.

Humbly sheweth that:

Whereas western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year.

That this contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade of Canada.

Whereas the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy.

And whereas western farmers will pay one time Crow.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

This petition, Mr. Speaker, is signed by 37 Canadian citizens.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands. The other rows can be seated for the moment.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, as a Member from British Columbia and as one who was born on a grain farm in Saskatchewan, I have great pleasure in presenting the following petition. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now exercise their right to present a grievance, humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, that is, there will be no change in these statutory rates. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker. I have the honour to present a petition from residents of Canada in towns such as Hallonquist, Neidpath, Hodgeville and Swift Current to the west of Spadina, and Ottawa, to the east of Spadina. This petition of the undersigned residents who now exercise their right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade for Canada. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy. Furthermore, they will pay no more than one times the Crow rate, that is, no change from the present rate. Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain, that is the Crow rate and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray. This petition was signed on Tuesday, May 17, 1983.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from residents of Langham and other places in Saskatchewan. I will exercise my right to present it in Canada's other official language, because I think I can speak more quickly in that language.

To the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled:

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada—

[English]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Normally I would hear it at the end of the petition and not the beginning.

Mr. Waddell: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: After the Hon. Member's petition, I will recognize the Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Waddell: I hope the Minister is not going to interrupt while I present a petition in the other official language of Canada.

To the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their ancient and unchallenged rights to present a grievance, with the assurance that your honourable House will provide a remedy,

Humbly sheweth that:

Whereas western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year.

That this contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade of Canada.

Whereas the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy.

And whereas western farmers will pay one time Crow.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

[English]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the point of order I am making is that it is evident from the behaviour of the Members of the New Democratic Party that they are systematically utilizing one of the rules or orders in the Standing Orders in order to prevent our reaching Orders of the Day. The point is that the abuse of the rules constitutes a disorder.

An Hon. Member: You are perceptive.

Mr. Blais: The hon. gentleman across the way says I am very perceptive in identifying the ploy that they are using.

One of the functions of the Chair, as you will recognize, Mr. Speaker, is to maintain order in this place in order to permit the House to function in an orderly fashion. Any abuse of the rules or Standing Orders of this House constitutes disorder and ought to be recognized as such by the Speaker and ought to be dealt with as such by Mr. Speaker asking the hon. gentlemen who are engaging in that disorder to cease and desist.

My point is that the Standing Orders of this House are supposed to foster the debate among Members and ought not to be abused. It can be seen from the presence here of all members of the New Democratic Party, which has not happened before so late in the day, that that is their intention.

In addition, they have made public statements to the effect that they will use any measure they have at their disposal in order to stop this House from debating a Bill. Bills are made to be debated in this House and then put to a vote. Obviously the gentlemen of the NDP do not want that to happen. In effect, they are acting against the basic principles of parliamentary democracy. They are doing that with the full knowledge of what their intentions are. Mr. Speaker, for you to permit that to be carried out in effect permits disorderly conduct in the House.

• (1700)

Mr. Speaker, I shall speak to the House in the other official language. It is unfortunate that the reactionary Members of the New Democratic Party—I mean reactionary in the broadest sense of the word—and as conservative a lot as we have ever met up with, should be using dilatory tactics in order to obstruct the proceedings of this House. They call themselves the New Democratic Party, but they are using anti-democratic tactics to prevent this House from starting proceedings that are essential to the national interest. The correct approach is to analyze the measures that are presented and provide the Canadian people with arguments that could persuade it to oblige us to vote against this Bill or at least to refrain from tabling the Bill in the House. They are doing something else entirely. They are trying to use a measure that is provided for in the Standing Orders in order to obstruct debate on the matter before the House.

Mr. Speaker, our conclusion must be that this bunch of rowdies I see before me, and I hope the term is parliamentary, that these rowdies have failed to recognize the essence of parliamentary democracy, which is to provide a forum for open, frank and comprehensive debate among intelligent Members of Parliament. It is obvious that intelligence is not with us this afternoon.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Standing Order of the House is clear. Standing Order 71 subsection (1) reads:

71.(1) A petition to the House may be presented by a Member at any time during the sitting of the House by filing the same with the Clerk of the House.

It goes on in subsection (2):

(2) Any Member desiring to present a petition in his or her place in the House must do so during Routine Proceedings and before Introduction of Bills.

Subsection (3) reads:

(3) On the presentation of a petition no debate on or in relation to the same shall be allowed.

The Chair has tried within the limits of the Standing Order to enforce the Standing Order. Some Hon. Members have attempted to debate and they have introduced extraneous matter, which is contrary to the Standing Order. The Chair has a much more serious concern, however. The Chair has received what is alleged to be a petition containing a written statement but containing no names or signatures. The Chair's recollection of the subject matter of the petitions that have been read is reasonably accurate, although sometimes confused, but the fact is that this was a petition that obviously came from the side of the House which is on my left and not from the side of the House which is on my right. It becomes difficult for the Chair if Hon. Members do not present legitimate petitions when the Chair recognizes them. Hon. Members of the House are responsible for their own actions. The Chair is a servant of the House.

On the point raised by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais), the only observation the Chair can make is that there is a committee of the House charged with reviewing the procedures and practices of Standing Orders. That Committee will have to address itself to the question of whether or not there are abuses of the Standing Orders, but under the circumstances, the Chair can do nothing else but enforce the orders such as they are in the best possible way that the Chair can. It is not easy.

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate very much the comments you have made and I also appreciate that you have done extremely well in making sure that Members stayed within the confines of what is allowable in the presentation of petitions. I wonder if I might ask, Sir, on a point of order, whether you might be able to inform us if you are able to ascertain where the petition you mentioned that is in blank form came from and whether it is signed on the back. I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I personally looked at every petition that has been presented this afternoon and every petition was signed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, a petition that was not signed came from the Party which he represents. It was presented to the Table.

Some Hon. Members: Who, who?

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of 117 citizens of the community of Riverhurst, Saskatchewan, a community which recognizes the difference between changing the Crow rate and building up the railways, addressed to the Hon. House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who do now exercise their right to present a grievance, humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-1982 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, that is, no change.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray. I present this petition, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the residents of Riverhurst.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present on behalf of 42 residents of the area southeast of Regina, the Sedley-Francis-Kronau area. In a petition to the House of Commons in Parliament assembled, the undersigned residents of Canada, who now exercise their right to present a grievance, humbly show that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, that is, no change.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow grain rate and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Having had the opportunity to review the question you raised with regard to the blank petition, I believe that we are all in agreement that the piece of paper that you had before you was a French translation of the petition which is being presented and was not intended to go to the Table at all but rather was intended to go to Hansard by way of a page. The actual petition itself was filed appropriately and properly with the Table.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, there was a petition sent to me by some people from southwestern Saskatchewan, Admiral, Cadillac and the surrounding communities, people who are concerned about what they see as their Confederation bargain with regard to the Crow rate. They have asked me to present to the Honourable House of Commons in Parliament assembled the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their right to present a grievance which humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed some $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that they do not want any change in the statutory Crow rate as has been proposed by the Pepin plan. Western farmers will pay one times Crow, which would mean no change to the present statutory rate.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory rate, otherwise known as the Crow rate and, in duty bound, your petitioners ever pray.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a fresh point of order relating to the petition which has just been presented. Again I point out to you, Mr. speaker, that the tactic that is being employed by the NDP, if it were to be followed, could completely immobilize any of the workings of the House. You know as well as I do that on any individual issue on a Bill that we may be dealing with at any given time, we can mount any number of petitions from any region of the country that supports an opposing point of view. Indeed, that is why we have Members of the Opposition.

• (1710)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) has made the point for the second time.

The Chair is interpreting the Standing Orders of the House and is attempting to deal with this as evenhandedly as possible in the circumstances. Whether or not the Standing Orders have to be reviewed in the appropriate manner at the appropriate time and place is a matter which the Chair cannot decide at this stage. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper).

[Translation]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, to the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled:

It is my duty, on behalf of the undersigned residents of Canada, to present this petition to this House of Commons.

Whereas these Canadians in Western Canada paid $131 million to move grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year, this grain in return has contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade.

And whereas the undersigned believe that this is a fair contribution to the Canadian economy, and whereas western farmers are prepared to pay the present rate for moving their grain, that is why the undersigned, your petitioners, call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin) on a point of order.

Mr. Daudlin: Mr. Speaker, it appears from the presentations that are being made by my hon. friends, on the other side that all the petitions are headed by the exact, same, identical preamble. If you were to examine the petitions and so find, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you might also find that we have before us today not a number of petitions but one petition, as anticipated by the rules of the House, being presented by a number of Members. I wonder whether, in order to allow the House to deal with this issue promptly and efficiently, the Chair might not invite Hon. Members on the other side to present their petition as what it really is, that is, one petition, and then allow us to get on with the issue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his suggestion. The Standing Order is quite clear. It says that Hon. Members have the right to present petitions. They are examined by the Clerk as to form and a report is made to the House on whether or not the petitions are in form.

In the recollection of the Chair, on many occasions in this House petitions with identical wording have been presented by Hon. Members at different times, on different occasions. In this case the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky).

[Translation]

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition to the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their ancient and unchallenged rights to present a grievance, with the assurance that your honourable House will provide a remedy.

Humbly sheweth that:

Whereas western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year.

That this contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade of Canada.

Whereas the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy.

And whereas western farmers will pay one time Crow.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

[English]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, this is a fresh point of order upon the last petition which has just been presented. This is additional evidence that there is a systematic tactic being employed by the NDP to prevent us from reaching the Orders of the Day and dealing with the Bill which ought to be debated by this House. It is some sort of—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister has been recognized three times. In the judgment of the Chair he appears to be making the same point of order. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that there is a tradition in this House that we do not challenge the Speakers' rulings. A Minister of the Crown, who has been in this House a long, long time, should know better.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller).

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and pleasure to present on behalf of 27 residents of Coronach, Saskatchewan, many of whom are farmers and are concerned about their livelihood, a petition addressed to the Hon. House of Commons. It humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade, and the undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the economy and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow rate.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. It is based upon the additional petition which has just been read. I suggest that members fo the NDP are indicating by their behaviour their adoption of a systematic tactic whereby they are preventing us from reaching the Orders of the Day and dealing with the Bill which ought to be debated on this day, as announced by the Government House Leader.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the Hon. Minister has now been recognized four times on the the same point. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the Hon. Member opposite would be happy if I switched petitions—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member deal with his petition, please.

Mr. Murphy: I just want to oblige the House. I have a petition signed by the residents of three different Provinces expressing their opinions on the Crow rate. In their petition to the Hon. House of Commons in Parliament assembled the undersigned residents of Canada exercise their traditional and long-standing right in suggesting that the western Canadian farmers have paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, has contributed over $6.3 billion to the balance of trade in this country. The undersigned in the three different Provinces believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers should pay one times the Crow, no change. Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray. The petition is dated this month, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a fresh point of order based upon the additional petition which has just been presented. The point is that every time there is a new petition it strengthens the argument I have been making. It is a predetermined tactic.

• (1720)

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from citizens of Langham, Asquith, Vandura and the City of Saskatoon, from Saskatoon east, and particularly from Saskatoon west. The undersigned residents of Canada exercise their right to present a grievance. It humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow, which means they wish no change in the Crow rate.

Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Blais: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant).

Mr. Blais: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have recognized the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) five times on the same point of order. It is not the intention of the Chair to recognize him again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Out! Out!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Supply and Services.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, Sir, the question is that I have risen after the petitions have been brought to your attention. The petitions are being brought to your attention on a repetitive basis. They are coming forward basically as the same petition signed by—allegedly signed by—different people.

All I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that I want you to recognize me so that I can put to you the point of order relating to the abuse of the process which is being employed by the New Democratic Party in order to frustrate the workings of this House. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that with each one of those petitions, there is additional evidence of the predetermined intent of the NDP to interfere with the due process of this House and the deliberations of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake.

Mr. Orlikow: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), the Chair is appealing to the House at this point. The alleged points of order are not really points of order—

Mr. Smith: They are more legitimate than those petitions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair at this stage is doing its best to enforce the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. If Hon. Members have legitimate points of order, that is one thing, but points of order which are simply repetitive and making a point which was made before, I believe with all due respect—

An Hon. Member: How about the petitions?

Mr. Smith: They are simply the same petition word for word and presented on the same day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is in a difficult position. The Chair asks Hon. Members to reflect on the dignity of the House and to maintain the decorum which is appropriate in the circumstances, difficult though it may be. The Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake.

Mr. Orlikow: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North and seriously requests the Hon. Member, if he does not have a legitimate point of order, not to attempt to take the time of the House. However, I will recognize him.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, my point will be very brief. The Minister, in raising his alleged point of order, said—and I am sure that Hansard will show this—that the signatures which are being presented in these petitions were "alleged" signatures.

Mr. Smith: One was not even signed.

Mr. Orlikow: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, to the Hon. Minister that he is impugning the honesty of Members of Parliament, and I take—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not making a point of order. The Hon. Minister of Supply and Services has indicated that he is going to rise after every petition. The Chair is not in a position to rewrite the rules under such circumstances. I cannot help but feel that there may well be some merit to the contention of the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services, but the facts are that the Chair is a servant of the House and the Chair must observe the Standing Orders of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: And so should the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In the circumstances, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of 43 citizens of Saskatchewan.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their ancient and unchallenged rights to present a grievance, with the assurance that your honourable House will provide a remedy.

Humbly sheweth that:

Whereas western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year.

That this contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade of Canada.

Whereas the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy.

And whereas western farmers will pay one time Crow.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

[English]

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I wish to quote from Erskine May Parliamentary Practice, Fifteenth Edition, under "Presentation of Petitions to the Commons". It reads:

—a Member may present a petition, at any time during the sitting of the House, by placing it in the petition bag kept at the back of the Speaker's chair.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bockstael: Mr. Speaker, since all Members of Parliament want to put the House of Commons to work and accomplish their duties, I have acquired a bag used for Royal Mail which I suggest you hang behind your chair and invite—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Out! out! out!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member's intervention has the aspect of novelty, which is a little welcome. Nevertheless, a display is not permitted in the House. We are following the procedure spelled out in the Standing Orders. The Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett).

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I aslo would like to present a petition on behalf of 38 working farmers and retired farmers who live in Willow Bunch, Saskatchewan, which is south of Swift Current. This is a petition duly signed by the 38 working and retired farmers to whom I just referred who say to this Honourable House of Commons in Parliament assembled that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. They want particularly to emphasize that this grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. These farmers, the 38 who have signed the petition, believe that this is a fair contribution from the farmers of western Canada to the Canadian economy and that farmers should continue to pay one times the Crow, which is to say, no change, and humbly pray and call upon this Parliament to maintain the present statutory Crow rate.

• (1730)

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I present to the Honourable House of Commons in Parliament assembled the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now exercise their right to present a grievance which humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $130 million to export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow. The undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory rate, which of course is the Crow rate. As in duty bound your petitioners ever pray.

[Translation]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): I wish to present a petition to the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their ancient and unchallenged rights to present a grievance, with the assurance that your honourable House will provide a remedy.

Humbly sheweth that:

Whereas western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year.

That this contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade of Canada.

Whereas the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy.

And whereas western farmers will pay only one time Crow.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to draw your attention to Citation 120 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition on page 39. It says:

> Foremost among his many responsibilities, the Speaker has the duty to maintain an orderly conduct of debate by repressing disorder when it arises—

As a result of the last petition presented, Mr. Speaker, I again indicate that in effect the sum total of all the petitions presented today constitute a disorder. I call to your attention Citation 123(5) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which says that the Speaker:

> —calls to order any Member who is being irrelevant or repetitious in debate.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that there is indeed in this instance a large amount of systematic repetition in order to create disorder. It is true that you are the servant of this House and you have to maintain decorum, but decorum is not identical to order. There could indeed be very great decorum while there is disorder. In this instance the disorder stems from the fact that the NDP Members, as the Tories did during the constitutional debate with their questions of privilege and the ringing of the bells episode, are interfering with the proper deliberations in this House, the debating process for which this House was constituted, by the systematic abuse of a Standing Order of this House. They are bringing this House into disrepute, as did the ringing of the bells and the questions of privilege put by the Tories during the constitutional debate. There is a limit to what this House can suffer in the way of abuse of its process and Standing Orders.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I find this attack on you to be unconscionable. I have noted with interest the care you have taken to make sure that each of the petitions was in fact in proper form and that the Member presenting the petition kept within the rules. When any Member strayed outside those rules, you, Sir, very quickly rose and brought him back to order.

I want to say that I resent the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) attacking you in this way. I can see no justification for his calling into question the actions of the Speaker in this regard. The Speaker has made it quite clear that what is being done is within the rules of Parliament, and just because the Minister does not like it does not make it wrong!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is looking at the clock and it has listened attentively to the argument and will take the matter under consideration. At this stage the Chair will call upon the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to present this petition to you. I have examined it and I believe it to be in proper order and properly signed. This petition addresses itself to the concerns that Canadian citizens have regarding the Crow rate and the cost to western Canadian farmers for the movement of grain. These people are concerned with the effect the proposed resolution will have on their livelihood. They are concerned that this institution will pass legislation which will destroy many farmers. In their petition they state that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed some $6.3 billion to the balance of trade and therefore to the benefit of the whole country.

The undersigned petitioners believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers are in fact willing to pay one times the Crow, or in essence no change. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory rate, meaning the Crow rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners would ever pray. This petition has been signed on Tuesday, May 17, 1983.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a petition to table from 33 Canadians, most of whom are farmers, and about half of whom are members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. The impact of Bill C-155 may reduce the incomes of farmers in British Columbia by 30 per cent or more and take billions away from farmers on the Prairies. The 31.1 million tonne cap and Crow rate change are widely opposed and may damage the future of the Ridley Island grain development in Prince Rupert.

To the Honourable House of Commons and all its Members in Parliament assembled the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, particularly of Saskatchewan, who now exercise their right to present a grievance, humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy. Western farmers will pay one times the Crow, which means no change.

Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain or Crow rate and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray. Those petitioners are from Maymont, Gravelbourg, and Guybourg, Saskatchewan.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition to the House on behalf of quite a number, about 70 I think, citizens of Canada, living in Saskatchewan and Ontario. Many of them are farmers, some are not, who present this petition. To the House of Commons and Parliament assembled, the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada—and I emphasize that for the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais)—who now exercise their right to present a grievance, humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. That is a lot. That is really a lot. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair—

• (1740)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member will confine his remarks to the petition, please.

Mr. Deans: I am sorry. I was just commenting to my colleague, who is sitting beside me. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy, and that western farmers will pay their share.

Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament and, in particular, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), who rarely listens, to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 37 residents from Yorkton; Melville and Canora, Saskatchewan. Some of them are farmers, some are teachers, carpenters and so on.

To the Honourable House of Commons in Parliament assembled, the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now exercise their right to present a grievance, humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow, which means no change.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) on a point of order.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like the Chair to be given the opportunity of ascertaining whether those who signed the petition, were at that time duly informed of the use to which it would be put in this House, namely to paralyse the workings of the House, or whether they were simply told that their views would be put before the House of Commons. Because if indeed the people who signed those petitions intended to paralyse the workings of the House, Mr. Speaker, I am prevented as a member of this House from performing the duties, for which I have been elected. This is my point of order. I would therefore like the Chair to ascertain from the people who signed the petitions whether they were informed that by signing those petitions, they would hinder my work as a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Under our Standing Orders, obviously, the Clerk of the House will be dealing with the signatures on the petitions, because it is his duty under such Standing Orders to report later to the House. As Deputy Speaker, I am not in a position to now verify the signatures. The Clerk will look after that later on.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. Am I to understand that you are assuring me that the Clerk of the House will check with some of the people who signed the petitions whether they had been informed beforehand that their signatures would be used to deprive me of my right to speak in this House? I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, if you are giving me the assurance that this will be verified with those people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Under our rules, I am under no obligation to verify the signatures myself. Neither is the Clerk. But again, under our Standing Orders, any Member has the right to check the signatures himself if he so desires.

[English]

Mr. Thacker: Point of order!

Mr. Smith: Point of order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills on a point of order.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean should not be upset with the NDP strategy, because he is the Hon. Member who said that the Liberal Party would adapt to anything and would be communistic if necessary.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not making a point of order.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for verification, because those petitions are interfering with my right to speak. I ask that they be—

[English]

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been listening with interest to the wording of the petitions that we have heard from Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party. It seems to me that there has been identical wording in perhaps the last couple of dozen. What I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, if you will hear me out—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You've listened very carefully.

Miss Jewett: It's the same problem.

Mr. Smith: —that, as such, they are repetitions. I would refer Your Honour to Bourinot, page—

Some Hon. Members: Bourinot?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This point was made earlier this afternoon. The Chair can recall a number of occasions when petitions on capital punishment were presented in the House with exactly the same wording. There are many instances, in the experience of the Chair, in which wording of petitions has followed exactly the same form, for instance, on right to life, on capital punishment, on a series of issues. There are even precedents of Hon. Members presenting in an afternoon more than one petition at one time. The point has been made by others in the course of this afternoon's debate. The Chair cannot find that a point of order is involved.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, perhaps if a pertinent reference from Bourinot had been heard at that point, the petitions would not have been heard. I would urge Your Honour to at least hear out the citation from Bourinot which I believe is on the point.

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There has been a point of order raised upon which the Chair has reserved judgment. The Chair has not ruled on a point of order which has been raised. At this stage the Chair intends, between now and six o'clock, to hear the rest of the Hon. Members who are seeking to be recognized on petitions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Parliamentary Secretary has something new to contribute, the Chair would like to hear it. However, if he has nothing new to contribute, I would ask him not to make a false point of order.

Miss Jewett: Sit down. Have some respect for the Chair.

Mr. Smith: It is very difficult to contribute something new when Your Honour has not even allowed me to make my contribution.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Deans: When you've got a weak case, attack the Speaker!

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would refer you to page 235 of Bourinot. It states:

> Petitions containing lengthy extracts from other documents or publications or having such extracts printed in separate forms and annexed to petitions are irregular.

I would submit that these are really copies of the original petition, which really constitute lengthy extracts from another document.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Smith: Accordingly, they are irregular, and irregular petitions cannot be received. I think that is a valid point of order.

An Hon. Member: That's a serious accusation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary knows the provisions of the Standing Order. The Clerk of Petitions will make a report to the House as to form, as to whether the petitions are in form or not in form. That is a Standing Order of the House, and presumably the normal provisions will operate in the Standing Order.

I will recognize the Hon. Member for Regina West.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Gimaïel: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, one last time for a few minutes.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean twice. I can understand his frustration, but I assure him that his frustration is only equalled by that of the Chair.

[Translation]

I recognize the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) for the last time.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, I am taking one more minute to make you understand clearly what I want. I want the petitions deferred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for a verification of their authenticity. I would ask for a ruling, Mr. Speaker, because—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 71 states very clearly what is to be done with the petitions tabled in the House. As Deputy Speaker of the House, I have no authority, I cannot change the Standing Orders of the House.

To the Honourable House of Commons in Parliament assembled, the petition of the undersigned residents of Canada, who now exercise their right to present a grievance, humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. The petition humbly sheweth that Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed over $6.3 billion to the balance of trade in Canada.

The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' contribution to the Canadian economy and that the western farmers agreed to pay one times the Crow, in other words, no change.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—NEW BRUNSWICK POTATO INDUSTRY. (B) REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, on two occasions I have addressed questions to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) pertaining to the economic calamity which is descending upon the potato industry of New Brunswick.

Mr. Berger: You turkey.

Mr. McCain: I do not think I have ever extended such uncalled for discourtesy to a fellow Member and I bemoan the fact that anyone would display such poor manners as the departing Member just did.

Mr. Taylor: He is a Liberal.

Mr. McCain: There is an element of respect demanded. I shall not raise a question of privilege or a point of order, but I wanted to draw this to your attention, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair was not aware of what happened. I was distracted for a moment. The Hon. Member may wish to continue.

Mr. McCain: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The problem of the potato industry is virtually of a catastrophic nature. On May 6, 1983 I drew this to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture in questions listed on page 25226 of Hansard. The Minister responded in a rather oblique sort of way. At that point in time I tried to point out to the Minister that if there was no response with respect to the means at his disposal for assistance to this industry it would be too late. He has offered diverging sort of answers, delaying responses and nothing has happened.

However, I want to address one of the requests that I made of him, namely, that the Government should allow the agencies which make loans to farmers for storable crops some leniency with respect to collection. As the policy has been administered, the potato agency, New Brunswick in this instance, is responsible for collection. If it does not collect, it has to pay whatever the farmer does not pay back on the loan for storable crops. This would not be a very difficult thing to do. It is something the Minister could have done forthwith had he chosen, but he did not choose to follow that route. The farmers in this circumstance may be faced with the necessity of the agency hiring a collection agency to get the money from the farmers who do not have money enough to plant crops, let alone pay back loans. This is something with which the Minister could have dealt forthwith but did not. I do not think this is very good consideration in view of the circumstances which exist.

I repeated my question a little later, on May 13, 1983. The Minister chose to diverge from the subject matter of my question. This was particularly true on May 6 when the Minister said the New Brunswick people should have a potato marketing board as that would resolve all their problems. The Minister said every Province but P.E.I. was ready to go into some kind of an agreement. I join P.E.I. in not being willing to advise the potato industry of New Brunswick to enter into any marketing board structure as long as the Minister of Agriculture of Canada does not lay upon the table a specific arrangement whereby price and production can be controlled. In that case it becomes a socialist state which I do not like anyway. Until an agreement is tabled in this House for Members to examine I think the Province of P.E.I. has followed exactly the right route, and New Brunswick farmers would be very ill advised to fall into a trap.

Time does not permit me to expand on the trap into which they could fall but they could find themselves in a situation without a market, having lost their export market, due to control of other Provinces over our affairs, or the affairs of P.E.I. It is not an easy resolution to simply say "let us put up a marketing agency" without asking what the abilities of the agency as a marketing board in New Brunswick or as an eastern Canadian potato marketing structure would be. We have to know who stays in business. That is a divergence from the necessity which exists in New Brunswick today.

The Minister has at his disposal four avenues through which he could have proceeded. He has apparently refused to follow any of these. At this moment in time farmers are sitting idle in their homes, looking at their machinery and their fields, unable to plant crops because of the delay of the Minister of Agriculture in acting within his scope of jurisdiction and within the judicial opportunity he has to interpret the regulations. He will not say that he will defer the repayment of storage loans. He will not say he will support the provincial farm loan agency in providing any assistance it might extend to the farmers. He will not say there will be a price stabilization program to help those who have marketed as little as 20 per cent of their crop at very depressed prices.

This is a catastrophe, a disaster. It is not normal circumstance. The industry does not want handouts per se. However, when we have a problem of disastrous proportions the Minister should act on an emergency basis. Has he yet met with the New Brunswick Minister to discuss this?

The Minister could announce a price stabilization program which would enhance the credit of the farmers when they go to the bank so they can put in their crops. He will in no way make a statement on price stabilization. This is a discretionary capability which he has. He could do what he said he had done and has not done, namely, put Farm Credit Corporation lending officers in those areas where the potatoes are planted to approve loans forthwith on a bridge financing basis. None of these things have been done, and the planting season is upon us. I told the Minister last week, and I repeat, a week from now is too late, we need it today. The next question is will the Minister address the problem in the response which he will have dictated to somebody who will now answer me?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, although no specific allocation of the funds under the Special Farm Financial Assistance Program of the Farm Credit Corporation has been made to potato producers, there is a conscious effort being made in the Maritime Provinces to handle these applications with urgency. To date the Farm Credit Corporation has been able to handle the demand without difficulty.

The Farm Credit Corporation has always been sensitive to the needs of farmers in sectors facing special problems, and potato producers are no exception. If the farmer is presently a borrower, the corporation can carry the account in arrears or can re-amortize the loan to help see the individual through this difficult period.

An essential part of the Farm Credit Corporation's mandate is its advisory services, to which all farmers have access. The corporation's credit advisors are trained in financial manangement and can help farmers work out various alternatives for their businesses.

In 1982-83, over $4 million was approved in the Atlantic Provinces for some 46 farmers who required help under the Special Farm Financial Assistance Program. Another ten loans have been approved since April 1. This is in addition to $10 million in regular loan approvals for 1982-83 and $1.6 million so far this year.

Under the Advance Payments for Crops Act, $6,801,500 has been advanced to potato producers in the Province of New Brunswick this year. These advances are considered current until July 31, 1983. The legislation for this Act does not allow forgiveness of the advanced for any reason. All advances must be repaid. However, the legislation does allow an extension of the repayment period for good cause. In this event, each producer would have to enter into a repayment agreement.

There are other possible solutions which we are currently investigating to determine the net impact on the producer. Normally the advance payments are to be repaid as the potatoes are sold. However, due to current circumstances, we are not applying any pressure for repayments until this issue is resolved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—AIRCRAFT—ALLOCATION OF WORK—STARTING DATE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, today I questioned the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) regarding future layoffs of 420 Air Canada employees, and specifically the 150 Winnipeg Air Canada maintenance workers who are to be laid off in September. I am suggesting another alternative to the unemployment of Air Canada maintenance workers in Winnipeg.

In early 1984 it will be necessary for the Armed Forces 707s to be overhauled. Winnipeg has provided this service in the past and with their excellent facilities and skilled workpersons who are eager for the employment opportunity I believe that the upcoming contract should be awarded to Winnipeg. Not only is Winnipeg a logical choice, but this would provide a solution to the problem of layoffs as well as lessen the hardship on the over-burdened Unemployment Insurance purse.

As this overhaul contract is scheduled for early 1984, I am further suggesting that the date be advanced to September of 1983, the time Air Canada expects to lay off its employees. I understand that the 707s are experiencing nose landing gear problems, Mr. Speaker, so it would be advisable to bring them in for overhaul earlier. I would ask that the Minister of National Defence consider my proposition with a view to taking immediate action.

I would also like to stress that under no circumstances should this contract be awarded to the Montreal area as is feared in Winnipeg. As it is, too many contracts have been awarded to Montreal and Quebec, only to find that as a result of these deals additional loads are placed on the backs of the taxpayers.

Take as an example our infamous Canadian white elephant, Mirabel Airport. As it stands now, and that is about all it does, it is costing Canadian taxpayers $1 million a week. Another example is Canadair, something that I have warned the Government about since 1976. We now see that this Crown corporation will be laying off 570 people by mid-July and it will cost Canadians $2.3 billion to bail the corporation out. In 1976 I made clear my concern about Canadair and the $50 million loan guaranteed by the Government. Canadair would have to sell 500 aircraft in order to recover from its disaster course. Now Canadair is looking for $2.3 billion, and to break even it will probably have to sell thousands of aircraft. The next obstacle for consideration is to determine whether or not there is a market for these aircraft.

The west was also overlooked when Quebec was chosen to receive 48 per cent of the new fighter aircraft spinoffs. Another example of the same situation is the aerospace training centre. In August of 1981, it was recommended by a task force study that Winnipeg be the site for this centre. However, due to the fact that the Quebec caucus of the Liberal Party and its Chairmen stated that the centre would be built in Montreal or not at all, the chances for Winnipeg receiving the centre quickly diminished, even though it had been determined that Winnipeg was indeed the superior location.

It is time that the Liberal Government stopped writing off the West and started looking at the vast amount of skilled ability the West has to offer. I need not remind the House that every Canadian bears the weight of unemployment which only creates low morale and high taxes.

It has been proven that the Winnipeg Air Canada maintenance workers are exceptional candidates for the 707 overhaul work, and I would strongly recommend that very serious consideration be given to the awarding of this contract to Winnipeg in September of 1983. The Winnipeg Air Canada maintenance workers, my Progressive Conservative colleagues and I will welcome an encouraging reply from the Liberal Government.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the specific question that the Hon. Member asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) this afternoon concerned the possibility of accelerating the time frame in which the DND 707 fleet would be overhauled and to do this by offering the contract to the Air Canada facility in Winnipeg to avert the layoff of 120 machinists.

After listening to his preamble and comments this evening I question very much the credibility of the statements he has made. I am particularly upset by the statement he made concerning the efficiency of the fleet at the present time. He referred in an off-hand way to some problem dealing with the landing mechanism of these planes. I think that is an irresponsible statement. What he is doing is using scare tactics that may cause concern to those people who are using that fleet now, and that is unfair to the very mechanics and machinists he is trying to keep employed.

I question his credibility in talking about regional disunity and favouritism. We do not need that at this time. He has already asked these questions on two previous occasions and seems to expect the adjournment debate to involve two other departments, namely Transport and Labour, on the subject of jobs for mechanics.

We are well aware of the quality of workmanship available for overhaul in the machine shop in Winnipeg. We have no quarrel with the quality of work carried out by the machinists, but it is not our intention to get into issues that involve two other departments.

With respect to the specific DND requirement to overhaul 707s, this work has been done in Winnipeg in the past. The Department has been satisfied with the quality of the work. However, the planes are not scheduled to require overhaul until some time in 1984. If the planes do not require the overhaul the Department is not in a position to request an accelerated program. To consider such an overhaul would not only be destructive to the good functioning of the Canadian

Armed Forces where it would no doubt disrupt operations, but would also be wasteful in terms of money which is always in short supply.

I reiterate, the inference that there are mechanical faults in the fleet at the present time is false, incorrect and completely misleading.

CANADA COUNCIL—ALLEGED SCANDAL AT SHERBROOKE, QUEBEC

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, I rise in order to follow up on the question I put on May 5, 1983, to the Minister of Communications, who is responsible for the Canada Council. Actually, within the framework of the Oral Question period I did not have the opportunity to put my question clearly and completely, for it would have had to be preceded by a long preamble in order to be easily understood. Since questions from the government side must be shorter than those coming from the Opposition benches, that is, without any preamble, my question was not complete and hence, the answer was also incomplete and most unsatisfactory. That is why I must put it again today, and in doing so, I hope the matter will be deferred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture and that officials of the Canada Council will be called on by the Committee to explain publicly the decision to subsidize to the tune of $9,500 or $12,500—I would like to know the exact amount—the Art/Action performance produced by Darcheu, a so-called artistic performance produced from April 29 to May 1, 1983, by the Association d'artistes contemporains de l'Estrie.

Does that mean that we should add another $3,000 to set fire to irons in Montreal, with the same kind of gawking onlookers as were seen last weekend?

In Sherbrooke, the so-called Art/Action performance consisted of two artistic events, that is, artistic only for the so-called initiated, while normal and ordinary people would rather consider these eccentricities as being committed by crazy people or else drug addicts completely reckless and "freaked-out" or "permanently high", as such artists might say. Should I even try to argue as to whether this was really art? I do not think so. I will simply say that a first demonstration consisted of setting on fire a car in which live rats had been placed, while costumed people were gesticulating all around, the whole thing being watched by a handful of spectators who were not even entertained, except for the so-called initiated.

The second consisted in distributing to members of the audience small bags containing wood and paper shreds stuck between two planks and then cut with a chainsaw. If, at least, this was art for the initiated, well and good! But what is even worse and not good enough is that those events were subsidized by the Canada Council.

Mr. Speaker, I must admit that it is very difficult for the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) to tell the Canada Council anything because he would be accused either of not understanding a thing about art, as others have been before, or even worse, of interfering for purely political reasons. It is much too easy to deny the Minister the right to intervene, and the Canada Council must be warned that if it spends public funds, it must be held accountable according to the standards approved by so-called normal Canadian taxpayers, both when they pay and when they see what they have paid for.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion and that of many others, the action performances in Sherbrooke and even in Montreal are a waste of public money, and there can be no justifiable reason for us, as elected representatives of the people, to tolerate such waste. If such insanity must be treated, the Minister of Health should be asked to take care of it, but the Minister of Communications should not be asked to promote such things and even less to finance them. This is not art or even a sickness, but shameful goings-on that the Government should ban and prevent. It even has the duty to protect the people against this type of manipulation. Consequently, because normal and right-thinking people need to be reassured about the Minister's ability to act under such circumstances, the Minister must be accountable for the use of this subsidy, otherwise he must publicly denounce the Canada Council, or at least take this opportunity to warn the Canada Council that such autrageous waste of money might jeopardize the allocation of funds by the House and the Government. As members of the House, it is inconceivable that we should agree to be party to such waste. Mr. Speaker, I have with me a letter which Mr. Timothy Porteous, the Director of Canada Council, addressed to the Minister of Communications and which reads in part:

"That the artists involved in the Sherbrooke incident are supposed to be people of experience. That his only qualm is that they violated a municipal by-law which makes it illegal to start a fire without a proper permit, and that the release of live rats before the fire would be a significant point and would indicate the participants' opposition to the use of animals in laboratories."

It becomes therefore extremely difficult to separate the four-legged rats from the two-legged variety.

Mr. Speaker, the Canada Council is clearly trying to find an excuse, but I think we should urge the Minister to have the Canada Council appear before the Committee on Culture and Communications in order to account for this subsidy which was granted to this group in the Eastern Townships.

[English]

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Tessier) I have several comments to make on this subject in addition to those I made on May 5. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) has been advised of the Sherbrooke incident and of the circumstances under which the Canada Council grant was provided.

As Hon. Members know, the Canada Council is an agency which makes its artistic decisions independent of Government. It has a mandate to help reflect and develop all types of artistic expression. This mandate includes funding of experimental works in the various art forms, some of which occasionally will be controversial, and sometimes, even offensive to certain people. As with most Canada Council grants to artists, the grant application for this series of "performance" events was reviewed by an independent jury of visual arts experts. For the information of the Hon. Member, $9,500 not $12,000 was awarded for 14 events of which this was one—the only controversial one. The organization receiving the grant is co-directed by the director of the art gallery of the University of Sherbrooke. The artists involved included some of Canada's most reputable and experienced performance artists.

The Hon. Member, in this question of May 5, qualified the Sherbrooke event as a "bizarre and grotesque initiative" undertaken by the Canada Council. Given my earlier comments, it is clear that the performance was not an "initiative" of the council. Rather, the Council simply responded to a grant application in the normal manner. The Council regrets that this activity may have violated the municipal law against setting a fire without a permit. Obviously, when the Council provides a grant for an activity it does not intend that a law be broken. Given the large number, and the wide range of activities which the Council funds, the resulting number of abuses of the freedom of artistic expression is very small, but they do tend to draw extensive press reaction, as this particular one has, and thereby call into question the broad range of worthwhile activities funded by the council which are of undoubted value.

Given this fact, Mr. Speaker, and the concern of the Hon. Member, I would recommend that this particular question be further answered by the Canada council before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock.

At 6.25 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, on Monday I spoke to a class of bright, young students at Henry Street High School in Whitby. I was impressed with their intelligence, and disturbed by their anger, for these students, Mr. Speaker, were very angry. Imagine facing a future where there are no jobs, a future where the old rules do not apply.

I want to get some answers to the students' questions. What is the Goverment going to do about youth unemployment? We all know that it will be over 50 per cent this summer. Yet, when the Opposition asks serious questions of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), he will only recite a list of short-term programs instead of long-term solutions. Mr. Speaker, the statistics for youth unemployment prove that these programs are not effective, and the human factor is even more telling.

This is a letter I received from one of my constituents:

> I am writing to you and I need assistance. I have a problem. I cannot get a job. I have been unemployed for over a year. I have a bookkeeping certificate and am now taking an accounting course through the Ministry of Education. I am also on the NEED program through Manpower. Nothing. Please is there anything you can do?

The letter was signed "Desperate".

It is time to bring together a task force, with representation from labour, industry, small business and the Provinces, to examine the transition from the post-industrial to the technological era.

The next time I speak to a class of students who are about to start their working lives, I hope the Government will have some answers for them.

EDUCATION

LEVEL OF ILLITERACY

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, it is incredible and tragic that in this day and age, in this era of space travel and electronic wizardry, one out of four people across the Province of Ontario cannot read a simple newspaper article.

Experts speaking recently for the Movement for Canadian Literacy believe that up to 70 per cent of Canadians read so poorly they cannot understand information brochures sent in the mail by various levels of Government. Indeed, there is reason to believe that the problem may be more acute now than ever. The advent of the electronic media has made it easier than ever before to exist from day to day without reading. Use of the telephone saves many poor readers from having to use the rudimentary skills they may have.

The connection between illiteracy and unemployment has been established by many experts in the field of literacy. Illiterate people have difficulty reading newspaper ads for jobs, and health and safety notices at the worksite. Since grade ten, and sometimes grade 12, is required for many technical retraining programs, illiterate adults are denied even this opportunity to improve their lot in life.

Given the seriousness of this situation, perhaps the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) would consider using some of the money allocated to his Department through the Special Recovery Program to initiate literacy programs across the country.

As well, the Minister is aware of organizations in the voluntary sector which are devoted to helping out illiterate Canadians. I would ask him on behalf of these organizations to make sure that any tax regulations affecting the volunteer workers and their organizations are fair and geared to their best interests.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT AMENDMENTS TO ACT BE ADOPTED BEFORE JUNE 4

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased with the news that the Bill proposing amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act has been tabled. The proposed changes would confirm the authority of the Employment and Immigration Commission to establish regulatory provisions concerning fishermen's benefits. These provisions differ from those regulating ordinary benefits in order to allow for the specific needs of this particular group. If we authorize the Commission to establish special regulatory provisions for fishermen's benefits, it would also be possible for the Commission to implement the recommendations contained in the Kirby Task Force Report, especially the suggestion that benefits paid to fishermen who have accumulated fifteen weeks of employment or more should be based on the earnings of their ten best weeks of fishing.

I am therefore asking for the co-operation of Members of all parties in this House so that we can adopt this Bill before June 4, which will be in the interests of all fishermen in Eastern Canada, and especially those in the Gaspé.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

FORMER DEFENCE PERSONNEL'S EXPOSURE TO NUCLEAR RADIATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I wish, through you, to call to the attention of the House an important matter related to the Canadian atomic veterans. The Government knows that during the 1950s and 1960s approximately 300 members of the Canadian Armed Forces participated in a nuclear defence group, and a number of fighter pilots were exposed to nuclear radiation in the course of their duties. Exposure sites included atomic bomb tests at Nevada, and Maralinga in Australia.

It is our contention that some years ago the Department of National Defence made a commitment to protect those individuals exposed to radiation in the course of their duties. That protection had not been forthcoming. The Government has largely turned its back on those veterans today.

In the United States, however, the United States Government has now acknowledged the potential difficulties of the exposure to radiation of its servicemen in the bomb tests in Nevada, and has agreed to provide free medical services to all those veterans. This is a major step forward in the process of recognition of the dangers of exposure to nuclear radiation.

With other Members of the House I suggest it is time the federal Government recognized its obligations and fulfilled its commitment to the Canadian atomic veterans. The Government should immediately issue a statement that all Canadian veterans who participated in the nuclear defence group, all those fighter pilots who were exposed in high altitude flights to atomic bomb tests in other countries, should—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—STUDENT MARTYR VICTIM OF MARTIAL LAW

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, police brutality in Poland resulted in the death of a 19-year old student, Grzeyorz Przemyk, and a new martyr for the cause of opposition to martial law in Poland was born.

Twenty thousand mourners, in the largest peaceful demonstration held in Warsaw since the imposition of martial law, heard read the Lech Walesa telegram, "Every death is painful but this one is especially brutal—it will not be forgotten." The Solidarity movement was a peaceful movement by masses of Polish people simply wanting a little greater freedom of individual expression. Now, with the alleged suspension of martial law, civil, human and workers' rights continue to be brutally trampled upon. The Gdansk Accords are still being completely and flagrantly violated. In short, all of the major advances of Solidarity over its 16 months of existence have been rolled back.

The free peoples of the world must not allow the alleged suspension of martial law to serve as a political ploy to convince the world that, for a people who have enjoyed one thousand years of Christianity, life for them has returned to normal. We must all protest in the strongest terms possible the continued grievous violations of basic civil and workers' rights in Poland.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—SUPPORT FOR PEACE INITIATIVES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, major peace initiatives in Central America are currently being promoted by Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Venezuela, referred to as the "Contadora Group". These countries are discussing ways and means to bring about a reduction of violence and tension in Central America and an eventual peaceful settlement.

In a communiqué dated May 11, 1983, the Government of Canada indicated support for the work of the Contadora Group. It considers this work as an important step in the process of reconciliation and peaceful settlement. It has been the view of the Government of Canada that the resolution of difficulties in Central America requires a process of discussion and dialogue between the various Governments concerned.

The Government of Canada is prepared to do whatever it can to facilitate and encourage this process if the countries directly concerned feel that Canada can play a useful, positive, and effective role. Canada has protested the waves of violence in those countries. It has offered its good offices to provide a site in Canada, or abroad at a Canadian embassy, for negotiations. Canada supports the right of each country to enjoy genuine independence, non-alignment, and stability, without threat of outside interference. It is a concern that, to date, countries directly involved in facilitating and encouraging dialogue and discussion have not availed themselves of this genuine offer. Nevertheless, I feel that it is important that Canada keep its lines of communication open to these directly concerned nations in the event that its help is requested.

HUMAN RIGHTS

IRAN—PERSECUTION OF BAHA'I FAITH

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I associate this statement with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). There has been much talk recently, in the media and in legislatures across the land, about the Holocaust and the attempted extermination of a race more than 40 years ago. Everyone keeps saying that such a human tragedy must never happen again. However, a 1980s' version of the holocaust is happening again. The Government of Iran is determined to wipe out that country's largest religious minority, the Baha'is. The hateful Ayatollah Khomeini régime is quietly, but systematically, executing hundreds of people every year. The most recent death camp exercise has claimed at least 200 lives.

This continuing horror story was graphically brought to the doorstep of my constituency office in Dundas, Ontario, a few days ago. A delegation from the Baha'i Assembly of Dundas included a lovely young lady, Dr. Feri Jabbari, who had just lost her distinguished father before an Iranian firing squad. The Baha'i delegation's message was twofold: first, to bring about greater public awareness of the campaign of terror being visited upon Iran's largest religious minority, and second, to thank the Parliament of Canada for being among the first of the world's democratic nations to pass a unanimous resolution expressing alarm at what is happening to the Baha'is in Iran.

I only wish, Mr. Speaker, that the international community could do more than just pass formal resolutions about the persecution of the Baha'is. Another holocaust is in the making, and no one seems able or willing to stop it.

RAILWAYS

ALLOCATION OF RAIL CAR ORDERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the announcement made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) earlier this week with regard to the allocation of the rail car orders was most heartless and did not even begin to recognize the unemployment which has almost become structural in National Steel Car. There has been hardly anyone working there over the course of the last year. There is a sufficient amount of work which needs to be done and which could be done by those employees and by the employees of the other plants across the country. There is the necessity to repair the existing rolling stock, work which is not currently being undertaken, and should be undertaken.

The Minister on many occasions has expressed his concern for rail safety. This would be an ideal time both to meet his commitment to rail safety and to provide much needed employment in many centres in every part of the country.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

RAID ON MONTREAL SHIPPING OFFICES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, it is alleged in the newspapers that yesterday officials of the Anti-Combines Investigation Branch raided the offices of Canadian National Shipping in Montreal, together with the offices of CAST North America Container Lines, and Sofati Container Lines. My question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs asks whether in fact these raids by his officials, as alleged, did in fact take place and, if so, can the Minister indicate if the underlying cause for this investigation is the reason behind the long, long delay in the public inquiry with respect to the relationship between Canadian National Railways and CAST North America Container Lines?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, although I can confirm that an inquiry is under way, I cannot confirm who has been investigated. Normally, under current practice, we do not confirm or deny that a combines investigation is taking place except when those who are the subject of the activity go to the press and make it public. Then it is the people concerned who are making it public and it is difficult to deny it.

I agree that an investigation is taking place, but I want to warn the Hon. Member not to draw any conclusions. Because a particular company's premises have been searched does not necessarily means that this company is under suspicion.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the caution issued, to me, but where price cutting is going on in the North Altantic and a major Crown corporation in this country is involved, I think we have some responsibility to pursue the matter.

EFFECT ON COMMITTEE'S INVESTIGATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Transport, who will be fully aware that twice in recent days the Standing Committee on Transport has had to delay or postpone hearings with respect to the annual reports of Canadian National Railways and Air Canada. I would ask the Minister whether or not, in his judgment I suppose, the actions which took place yesterday in Montreal will preclude the Standing Committee on Transport from pursuing its investigation of Canadian National's annual report and the relationship between Canadian National Railways and CAST North America?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to quarrel with the Hon.

Member's preamble to his question. It is not for him to investigate combines matters. Parliament has passed a law and has vested this authority in the Director of the Combines Investigation Branch. The Director is doing his job, he is performing under the responsibility given to him by an Act of Parliament and I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that he does not at all need the help of the Hon. Member to do his job.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's arrogance does not really cut an awful lot of ice with me. The fact of the matter is that in the last four or five months at least four or five major Crown corporations have landed in hot water.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

GOVERNMENT CONTROL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): May I direct a brief question to the Prime Minister and ask him if, in the continuing absence of the Government's Bill on Crown investment, the CDIC measure, he has considered taking any interim action? We have Air Canada in some trouble, Canadair facing some difficulties, and the Canada Dairy Commission in some trouble. Now we have Canadian National Railways under investigation. Has the Prime Minister considered any interim or any specific action he might take or might suggest to this House so the Government would regain some control or seem to have control over these massive giants in our system?

• (1120)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is before the House a Bill dealing with government control of Crown corporations. We would appreciate it from the Hon. Member if he could put a little pressure on his House Leader to ensure that we can in fact deal with these Crown corporations in a way which, as the Hon. Member says, is controlled, that is, as far as the law is concerned.

Insofar as the allegations made by the Hon. Member are concerned, I am not aware of any investigation into CNR. I am not quite sure what the Hon. Member is alluding to when he speaks of the Canadian Dairy Commission. However, as I said, there is a remedy before the House, and we would urge the Hon. Member to co-operate in getting it implemented.

Mr. Beatty: If there is no problem, why do you need the remedy?

AIR CANADA

QUERY RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER'S ASSOCIATION WITH CHAIRMAN

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the muzzling of the Transport Committee which occurred yesterday and which makes it extremely unlikely that witnesses for Air Canada will be appearing before the Committee this session, and in view of the answer of the Prime Minister yesterday to my supplementary question when he said that I was "completely wrong", I would like to ask him which of the following facts are wrong: that the Chairman of Air Canada is his friend; that the Prime Minister invited Mr. Amyot to be Chairman of Air Canada; that the Prime Minister travelled by helicopter to make that invitation.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I believe you would wonder whether I could comment on what is called a muzzling of a Committee yesterday. I understand that a majority of the Committee reached a decision. As the Hon. Member calls that muzzling, perhaps it is another indication that he disagrees with the democratic process.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I can repeat that the statement that the Hon. Member made yesterday or the day before was dead wrong and came from a prejudiced mind.

REQUEST THAT CHAIRMAN BE GIVEN LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, my grade six teacher told me years ago that "sticks and stones will break your bones, but names will never hurt you". I will not really be detracted by the petulance of the Prime Minister in terms of prejudice. However, I will return to my supplementary question yesterday, not in terms of facts, but, rather, to talk about prejudice.

Does the Prime Minister not think that there is potentially some prejudice to continue to allow the Chairman of one of our largest Crown corporations to carry on duties for that Crown corporation when, in effect, the policeman on the beat takes a leave of absence when there is a criminal investigation of his conduct? Surely this must be causing some stress and strain to the board of directors, let alone adversely affecting the operation of the airline, especially when this matter could go on for months and we have had no evidence whatsoever of when it could be concluded. Surely the same standards should apply with no admission—I appreciate the difficulties—but with no suggestion of implication, but the fact of the ethics—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member should ask his question.

Mr. Nowlan: I am simply asking whether the Prime Minister does not think the same standards should apply to the Chairman of a Crown corporation under criminal investigation as to a policeman on the beat.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I always understood that under the rule of law in Canada there is a presumption of innocence on the part of a person. I have always acted in that way. As far as the Hon. Member is concerned, he speaks of names and sticks and stones. I would accuse the Hon. Member of being a coward, because he has made repeated statements in the House that he does not dare to repeat outside the House. He is abusing his parliamentary immunity.

Mr. Chrétien: Big chicken.

Mr. Nowlan: He knows I can't answer him. You know I can't answer. You are the coward.

Mr. Chrétien: Big chicken.

Mr. Nowlan: You have no political morality. Always smear, Jean, when you are in trouble.

TASK FORCE REPORT—RECOMMENDATION THAT FOREIGN FIRMS SHOULD CREATE JOBS IN CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In 1980 in Windsor, the Prime Minister promised not only the people in that community but Canadians at large that the Government of Canada, and his Party specifically, if elected, would produce an over-all industrial strategy and a particular strategy for the automotive industry, which currently employs 100,000 men and women directly and many more thousands indirectly across Canada.

Yesterday a task force report which represented a consensus from automotive companies, automotive parts producers and the trade union movement, produced such a strategy which it recommended to the Government. As the Leader of the Government, does the Prime Minister accept the key principle of that report, which is that foreign automotive producers ought to produce jobs in Canada in rough proportion to their sales in this country? Does he accept the principle that, if they are going to make profits from Canadians, they ought to be producing jobs for Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to a report which he says was made public yesterday. I am sorry but I have not been made familiar with the contents of that report.

Mr. Broadbent: I did not expect the Prime Minister to be familiar with the content. That is why I did not ask him about specific details of the report. If some of the Ministers responsible in that area were in the House, it would have been helpful.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACCEPT PRINCIPLE OF RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Prime Minister a fundamental question of principle. I come back to his own commitment to produce a strategy. The principle involved is whether other automotive producers around the world such as the Japanese, French, and Germans, now have to meet the same standards that we imposed upon the American producers back in 1965, namely, that they have to provide job guarantees and investment guarantees in this country if they are going to sell here.

Given the implications for the future of thousands of existing jobs and potential jobs, will the Prime Minister commit the Government to accepting the principle that, if automotive producers will be selling to Canadians, they must invest in order to produce jobs for Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept that principle without having read the report. It may be that that principle is ensconsed in a certain number of guarded phrases, and it may be in the context of a particular auto pact that we have with the United States.

As a principle of international trade, surely it is impossible for a trading country like Canada to assert that anything that is sold in Canada must be counter balanced by investment for jobs in Canada. It would be impossible for Canada itself to meet those standards in our sales in every country. We try to sell at prices and values which are competitive in the market. We do not make demands of all those who are buying our goods, and we would not want them to demand of us that we would have to create a certain number of jobs in their country or to bring a certain amount of investment to their country in order to have the privilege of selling to their consumers.

Mr. Broadbent: I simply point out to the Prime Minister that the Japanese have agreed to start producing in the United States. They have agreed to start producing in Great Britain, West Germany, Venezuela, Mexico, and Australia, to name just a few countries that have Governments which are interested in producing a manufacturing base in their nations and have solidly imposed these standards to which the Japanese have agreed.

ROLE OF AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Does the Prime Minister not agree that we ought to be a nation that not simply exports our resources but also creates a dynamic and imaginative manufacturing sector, and that the automotive sector is key to that principle?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course I have been making that point in just about every country I visit, including Japan. As far as attempting to achieve that result is concerned the answer is that there is no disagreement.

The Hon. Member asked if I accept the general principle. I told him that I could not accept the general principle for the reasons I gave. But in a specific case, that is a matter for negotiation between countries, and the Minister responsible for international trade has previously answered those questions in the House. He is trying to get the best possible deal from those who trade with us, but not to the point of wrecking international trade.

REPORT OF PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It was reported in the western press that the Prime Minister earlier in the week stated to producers in western Canada that the Crow Bill was going to go through without changes. It was also reported that the Prime Minister indicated that it was not the best Bill that he could offer, and it was not economically viable. Would the Prime Minister be prepared to comment on that?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as stated, the question is against the rules of the House. I am not supposed to comment on things reported in the newspapers. But if the Hon. Member wants to hear my views on the Crow, I certainly did not indicate the Bill would go through without changes. On the contrary, the various representatives I met in the West were anxious to appear before the committee of this House and present various forms of amendment. I indicated they would be welcome, that I was expecting them. I was hoping that this or next week they could present their amendments. I am somewhat ashamed that the stalling tactics of both Opposition Parties have deprived those in the West who think that this Bill can be improved. Both Opposition Parties have deprived them of the opportunity of coming before the House and therefore shorten the time in which the Bill can be approved.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate that I am ashamed also that the Prime Minister of my country would go to western Canada and indicate that no changes would be made, or very little change, and that the Bill was going to go through—

Some Hon. Members: He did not say that.

Mr. Shields: —that it could not be done at the whim of western producers because they cannot produce Liberal votes.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Prime Minister was the Prime Minister of all Canadians, whether they be NDP, Liberal, or Socialist.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Run, you're a socialist.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if that can be turned into a question, I suppose I am Prime Minister of all Canadians.

Mr. Kempling: Supposed to be? You are.

Mr. Trudeau: I hope that on my trip in the west I conveyed to those westerners whom I met that we are anxious to deal with Crow rate, the hundred year old problem in the West.

Mr. Deans: It was not a problem until you made it one.

Mr. Trudeau: Incidentally, it was reported in the press that I had said we have changed the Bill in order to placate our Members from Quebec. I had said exactly the contrary. I had said that the Members from Quebec do not need a change in the Crow.

An Hon. Member: Neither do westerners.

Mr. Trudeau: As far as Quebec is concerned, the Crow can stay for another hundred years, or two hundred years.

Some Hon. Members: Good.

Mr. Trudeau: Some Members are saying good, particularly the NDP Members, and the petitions they have. But I can assure this House, as I assured the West, that in so far as the Quebec Members are concerned we do not need a change in the Crow.

Mr. Deans: Don't change it then.

Mr. Trudeau: But we think that the people in the West themselves are agreed that the Crow should be changed, in ways that they cannot agree upon among themselves. They think that the Crow should be changed. It is because the Members from Quebec believe in policies for Canada, not only for Quebec, that they are prepared to support this Bill.

FINANCE

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT'S DEFICIT

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the continuing absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. This week the Minister of Finance announced that the deficit for the last fiscal year ending March 31 was $21.3 billion, double the deficit of the previous year, and subject to revision in August. This is the sixth estimate of the deficit by the Government in the last eleven months. August will be the seventh. Why is the Government so sloppy in the spending of money that it does not have? Why are these constant revisions necessary?

Mr. Lang: You still do not understand principles.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member began her comments with the observation that the Minister of Finance was not here today. I would like to point out to the House that the Minister of Finance was here on Tuesday when the Opposition took a holiday and decided not to come into the House of Commons.

It is very obvious, too, that the Hon. Member who makes that comment is the third Member from the Opposition who has had the job of finance critic. Her two predecessors are not in the House today. They are out campaigning.

Mr. Kempling: Cosgrove logic.

Mr. Cosgrove: I wish the Hon. Member would recognize that the Minister of Finance is either in the House or is in the country working on matters dealing with the finances of this country that primarily concern jobs for Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: If you weren't in the House nobody would notice.

BUDGET DISCUSSION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of State for Finance. It is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance to bring a budget to this House of Commons.

Mr. Ouellet: He did.

Miss Carney: It is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance to appear in this House and defend it. It is very difficult to discuss a budget in the continuing absence of a Minister who is now in Toronto talking the Tory line. He is talking about how double-digit interest rates and renewed inflation will start our economic problems again.

If the Minister of Finance is not prepared to defend his budget, and the Minister of State for Finance is not prepared or cannot defend the budget, with whom does the Minister of State suggest we discuss it?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, Parliament has indeed discussed the budget. We have had three votes on the budget. The Hon. Member's criticism of lack of participation, or lack of debate, on the budget is hollow, when you consider that approximately half of the Official Opposition was absent and did not even bother to show up to vote against the budget during the votes that we had, following debate on the budget and following release of the budget in this House. What on earth is the Hon. Member talking about?

SUGGESTED NEGOTIATION OF CANADA—JAPAN AUTO PACT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I would like to return to the auto task force matter. As a western Member of Parliament I was one of the perhaps few who favoured the Prime Minister's trip to the Pacific Rim on a trade mission because trade is so important to my part of the country. Can the Prime Minister tell me whether he was briefed on that trip, and is he aware that Nissan Motor Co. of Japan has been manufacturing engines in Australia since 1978? Nissan built 50,000 Australian units last year. Is the Prime Minister aware that Toyota has just expanded a huge overseas plant in Australia to build engines and transmissions?

Will the Prime Minister not agree that we can have it both ways, in the sense that he can accept the principle that we can be a resource exporter to Japan, as is Australia, and at the same time we can protect our manufacturing base here in Canada? Would the Prime Minister agree with that principle? We do the same thing with the United States. We export to the U.S. We have an auto pact. Does the Prime Minister agree with that principle, and would he indicate to the House what he is going to do with that task force report, and what is the next step in getting an auto pact deal with Japan?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes. I would agree with that statement as much as the Hon. Member agreed on the importance of my trip to the Pacific Rim countries.

The second question asked what I will do with the task force report. I will ensure that it has been received by the Minister of State for International Trade and his Department and that they will bring to Cabinet recommendations which would be the best possible for Canadian trade and for the consumers in Canada.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister could also give the task force report to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

ASSEMBLY OF CARS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister further push and take as a public position that some of the manufacturing, if and when we get manufacturing and the assembling of Japanese cars in Canada, should take place on the West Coast, specifically British Columbia, to add to our manufacturing base so that we are not completely dependent upon resource exports.

• (1140)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be very interesting if some of that development could happen in western Canada, not only in British Columbia but perhaps in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, or even the Yukon.

Oral Questions

PETRO-CANADA

BENEFICIARIES OF MORTGAGE LOANS—JUSTIFICATION FOR NON-DISCLOSURE

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last October I asked the Minister through a question on the Order Paper for details concerning certain mortgages that Petro-Canada had on its books and regarding the beneficiaries of these mortgage loans. Six months later the Minister replied, saying that that was for the management of Petro-Canada alone to know and was none of our business in this House.

How can the Minister justify this secrecy when, under provincial securities law, private corporations must make such information known to their shareholders? In the case of "our" supposedly Crown corporation, as the ad indicates, how can he justify that we in the House are not allowed to have information which private companies by law are required to give to their shareholders?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is according to the practice which has been followed in many instances. For example, over the years many Members of Parliament have complained because they could not obtain, for example, the salaries of people who work for the CBC. They were not available to the public because of the competition in the market. Following that through, because this corporation is operating in the market, it does not want to reveal to the public information which its competitors do not reveal.

I will check the point the Hon. Member is making. He is making a very interesting observation that, under provincial law, they are obliged to do so. I will check that again with the directors of Petro-Canada. Personally I have no objection, but we have a Crown corporation which has to compete in the private market under the same rules as the others. If the Hon. Member is telling me that its competitors are obliged to do so, I will certainly find out why Petro-Canada cannot do the same.

Mr. Andre: If the Minister is to look up the law, it is Section 127 of the Alberta Securities Act; I do not know about the other Provinces.

FURNISHING OF INFORMATION BY CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. Given what has been happening with Crown corporations—all these incredible messes which have been occurring—and given the fact that the Auditor General pointed out that Petro-Canada refused to provide information necessary for him to complete the mandate given him by Parliament, would the Minister not agree that it is about time for all Crown corporations, but particularly the ones under his jurisdiction, to have a policy of openness, and of making information available? Would he not agree—and he seemed to earlier; I hope he will confirm it—that at the bare minimum the Crown corporations must live up to the standards expected of private corporations?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the exact nature of the difficulty between Petro-Canada and the Auditor General. There was a problem about one transaction, but under the law Petro-Canada has its own auditors, like many other Crown corporations. There was one problem mentioned to me in relation to the acquisition of Petrofina by Petro-Canada, and there was some explanation given of that. I have appeared before the Committee where this question might have been asked of me. I think this is the first time in seven months that I have been asked such a question by the Hon. Member.

NATIONAL RESOURCES

PROCESSING OF URANIUM—EXPORT OF CONCENTRATE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Could the Minister clarify the Government's policy concerning further processing of uranium in Canada? At the present time the Government is spending some $200 million to build uranium refining facilities at Port Hope and Blind River. However, last summer it exempted a large sale of uranium concentrate from being upgraded in Canada, representing a loss of $10 million in foreign exchange and many jobs for Canadians. In view of the money being spent for refining capacity and the need for jobs, will the Minister make a clear statement that we will require our uranium to be upgraded in Canada before being exported to our customers abroad?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is always a very difficult problem. Every application for export is reviewed by a committee of three Departments which looks at the advisability of giving a permit for export without refining or only after refining. Every case is looked upon on its own merits. Sometimes permits are given when we feel that it is in the best interests of Canada to export it directly, because otherwise we might lose the sale. As I said, every case is being investigated and judged. At this time there is a review of that policy. It is always a difficult judgment to make. We want to maximize refining in Canada, but at the same time we cannot create a situation where uranium mines in Canada will lose too many sales.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—THREAT FROM PROPOSED U.S. LEGISLATION

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I appreciate that he has not had a chance to read the report of the auto task force, but he does know about the auto pact of 1965. Presently there is a bill before the United States Congress, called the Domestic Contents Automotive Bill, on which our Ambassador has written a letter. What other action will the Prime Minister take to protect an already existing pact with the United States, namely, the auto pact?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. That Bill has given us a great deal of concern. It has been raised in various fora with the United States administration. I myself raised that general subject when I had lunch with President Reagan two weeks ago. The administration is somewhat inclined to say, "Well, this is Congress and we cannot always control them,"—any more than we can control the House of Commons as well as we would like—"but we, the administration, believe in international trade and will see what we can do." That was their general attitude, but the Hon. Member knows that our embassy in Washington is very busy trying to convey to Congressmen the danger of this kind of protectionist trend.

NECESSITY TO LOBBY CONGRESS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I realize the Prime Minister is doing what he can, but as he knows that in the United States lobbying is done extensively on all Bills. Has he formed some potential lobby organization to protect the auto pact? There are many people in my riding and across Canada who are terrified that this pact might go down the drain and they will lose their jobs.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I just indicated that the Canadian embassy in Washington is concerned and that it is involved in lobbying. I am not sure, but I understand that there are even lobbyists hired on behalf of the Canadian Government to ensure that the lobbying is done properly. I recollect—and it is vague in my memory—that there was even some complaint from some quarters that we were hiring lobbyists in order to protect Canadian interests. I am happy to see that we have the Hon. Member's support on that.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—ORIGIN OF DEMAND FOR CHANGES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He indicated in answer to a question by one of the Conservative Members that there was no need to change the Crow rate as far as Quebec was concerned. I note with interest that there has been no great push for change from the Maritimes, Ontario, or British Columbia. To the contrary, the people in the Prairies, who are most affected are very much opposed to the change. Other than CPR, who wants this change?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is obviously rhetorical. The Hon. Member knows that many westerners want the change. I can assure him that it is not for the benefit of Quebec, the Maritimes or, for that matter, Ontario. It is in the West where a consensus has developed that the Crow—

• (1150)

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot understand why the Hon. Member's Party is laughing when I make that statement. The other day one of the spokesmen for his Party was on his feet suggesting certain forms of change to the Crow. The Hon. Member shakes his head. Mr. Speaker, I cannot remember exactly what Member asked the question, but I remember there was a question asked of this side of the House suggesting that, if we were going to change the Crow, we should change it in a certain way.

Every single leader whom I met in the West, Mr. Speaker, from various interests, cattlemen, grain people, elevator people, every single one said that the Crow had to go. One of them said "Well, I have had four people phone me saying that they would not like any change to the Crow".

Mr. Deans: Four people?

Mr. Trudeau: Four people. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have heard people in the streets and I have heard petitioners say that they did not want any change, but every responsible leader with whom I have met said that there is a consensus that the Crow must be changed for the good of western Canada, not for Quebec, not for the Maritimes, not for Ontario. Premier Bennett has said it. The Hon. Member said that British Columbia did not want it. The Premier of that Province has said that he wanted the kind of change that the Minister of Transport is proposing.

The Premier of Alberta has said that he wanted the Crow to go. The then Premier of Manitoba, Premier Lyons, wanted a change in the Crow.

Mr. Deans: That is only two Tories so far.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am on the verge of committing indiscretions, but I can tell the—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Go ahead.

Mr. Trudeau: I have the permission of the NDP, Mr. Speaker. I can tell the Hon. Members that every western Premier who had dinner with me when we had the meeting on the economy a couple of months ago, every western Premier there said he thought we should change the Crow.

Oral Questions

INDUSTRY

FEEDSTOCK PRICES CHARGED TO PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He will know that the petrochemical industry in Canada is under continuous distress and that that distress comes from the feedstock prices that are being charged to the industry. He will know that governments account for approximately 75 per cent of the cost of the feedstock to these industries. I would ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if he has any intention, on behalf of the Government, to change the feedstock pricing policy to the petrochemical industry.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that issue is a very complicated one because there is no clear cut policy on that. At this time there are many people in the market place who are asking the Government to go to a policy where there would be only one price for oil, for everybody, which would be the international price. What the Hon. Member is suggesting at this time is not what is being asked of all of the Tory candidates who go to Alberta to appear in front of a court these days. I believe that the Hon. Member will have to reconcile his views on that.

I welcome views on the subject and I gather that the Opposition Party wants to maintain a Canadian price that is lower than the international price for oil. I would like to hear the views of other members of that Party.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RATIFICATION OF AGREEMENT WITH GERMANY ON TAXATION OF PENSIONS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but since he is not in his seat I address my question to the Minister of State for Finance. Could the Minister of State for Finance tell the House today the status of the ratification measure related to the bilateral agreement between Canada and West Germany on double taxation of pensions? This agreement was signed by the Prime Minister two years ago. Could the Minister tell us what could possibly stand in the way of having this matter finally dealt with in the House of Commons?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Hon. Member's question is a supplementary designed to follow a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I did not have notice of the question, but I do recall that the Hon. Member has raised the issue. My recollection, and it is simply a recollection, is that there were some legal difficulties with the implementation of the agreement. I will undertake to get an update on that for the Hon. Member.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

PROTECTION OF SUSPENDED SEAMEN'S INTERNATIONAL UNION MEMBERS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. What steps does the Minister intend to take under the Canada Labour Code, or any other provision, to protect the rights of the three Canadian seamen members of the SIU who were suspended from that union? Two of them were suspended for ten years and a third was suspended for life plus 18 years, meaning that they are virtually blacklisted from working as seamen on the Great Lakes. I would say that the punishment is excessive as their only apparent crime, Mr. Speaker, was that they campaigned against the incumbent president. What steps is the Minister taking to protect the rights of these Canadian workers from this excessive kind of union activity?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not seem to realize that, under the Canada Labour Code, there is a provision which protects employees against termination of employment because of suspension from union membership. In addition, the Code protects union members against discriminatory application of trade union membership rules or standards of discipline. I am referring to Section 185 of the Code. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if there ware any complaints to be made about violations of the Code, those complaints should be made to the Canadian Labour Relations Board for remedy.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

REVISION OF CUSTOMS ACT—OPENING OF CROSS-BORDER MAIL

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. As the Minister knows, his Department, the officials of his Department, and I presume the Minister and his predecessor have been working on amendments to the Customs Act, the revision of that statute being long overdue. Is it the intention of the Minister to table in the House at some point, perhaps in the Fall, some amendments to the Customs Act, or even a new Customs Act?

Second, now that the Solicitor General has bitten the bullet with respect to mail opening under certain rules in terms of the Security Service, is it the intention of the Minister to recommend for inclusion in that statute a provision for the opening of first class mail passing through Canada Customs for the purposes of finding narcotics, contraband, and other matters that his officials have no doubt told him constitute a great problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I admit I am very pleased with the question put by the Hon. Member, especially since it shows the Hon.

Member's interest in having a new Customs Act in Canada that would contain provisions aimed at monitoring the use of the mails for sending contraband goods, and especially narcotics.

I may also say that I am counting on the Hon. Member supporting the Bill within his own caucus, to ensure that if the Bill were tabled in the House shortly, it could be considered with due dispatch and quickly referred to the appropriate standing committee, which would then be able to proceed with a thorough study of the Bill. We might then have a new Custmoms Act by the end of June.

I can assure the Hon. Member that if he can guarantee the co-operation of his caucus, I will discuss with the Government House Leader the possibility of tabling this Bill as soon as possible and getting it quickly through the second reading stage for consideration in committee and then back to the House for third reading.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—RAILWAY UPGRADING—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister seems to be confusing two separate issues when he discusses transportation problems and the Crow rate in western Canada. I would ask the Prime Minister if he has discussed these two policy decisions separately with the Premiers of the Provinces and with the groups in the West, because it seems to me that he is confusing a favourable response to his question about the need for railway upgrading with a favourable response to his question about the need for changing the Crow. Does he indeed speak of them as two separate issues, or does he insist on combining them as one issue as is the case with the Bill that the Minister of Transport has brought before the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. There are two aspects, and some of my interlocutors are more interested in one aspect than in the other. For instance, it is easy to see that those who are interested in an improved transportation system would probably include a lot of Manitobans, because I understand the Minister of Transport has announced or will announce that there will be some 1,000 proper cars or so built at the Transcona plant in Winnipeg.

The Hon. Member should realize, as the people of Winnipeg should realize, that one goes with the other. We are not going to need those cars if we cannot move the grain. We will not be able to move the grain if we cannot pay for the movement of grain. Therefore, the whole matter is interlinked. That is why I repeat that every person I have met from the West realizes that the Crow must change. The whole system must change in order that transportation be made more efficient, and in order that the industrial development of the West becomes a greater possibility.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Western Arctic.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but I am afraid he has already departed.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that all the petitions, with the exception of three presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, May 19, 1983, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petition presented by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Peterson) and two of the petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NOWLAN—LANGUAGE USED BY MR. TRUDEAU DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will surprise you that I rise on a question of privilege, but I will not take too much of the time of the House. I have checked the rule book but I really do not care about the rule book in terms of getting into a dissection of what is privilege and what is not.

A few minutes ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) called me a coward. We in public life are called many things and will be called many things outside this Chamber, and obviously sometimes we will be called things in this Chamber. But, Mr. Speaker, I would really like the Prime Minister to reconsider that remark. In view of the dignity of this Chamber, let alone the prerogative of its office, does he really think that type of language is the type of language that should be used by a Prime Minister who is supposed to set some standards? In yelling out the accusation he is implying the basest type of motives to what a Member is trying to do by asking questions that are in the public domain. A Crown corporation and the political appointment of its head are matters that are certainly within the public domain.

I am going to ask the Prime Minister to reflect on that and see if he wants to continue to have the language of this House become the language of the school yard or sometimes even the language of the barnyard. Surely there is some onus on him.

I am asking the Prime Minister to withdraw, not that I am personally upset as I said earlier, especially in view of the source, but there has to be some dignity in this Chamber. On that basis I am asking the Prime Minister to withdraw the word rather than my getting into a dissection of all of the rulings made in this House for the last 50 years or 60 years.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think it is very well recognized that the word I used is not unparliamentary. I would suggest that what the Hon. Member has been doing repeatedly is using his privilege to make accusations and insinuations in the House, which he knows would bring a libel case against him if he were to make them outside. I suggest that is contrary to the spirit of Parliament and is undignified to the utmost degree.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to let the Prime Minister know that I have every intention, outside the House, to pose the same question about the cowardice or courage of the Prime Minister in allowing a chairman, where legitimate questions have arisen over the conduct of this office regardless of criminality, stay in office heading the board of one of the most prestigious Crown corporations in the land.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, the Hon. Member is going beyond the point he raised in the beginning in terms of parliamentary language. I was hoping that at this point there would be a disposition to go on.

Is the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) rising on the same matter?

Mr. Broadbent: A different question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) rising on the same matter?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): I am rising on the same matter, Mr. Speaker. I would draw your attention to Beauchesne at page 111 where it suggests that it is parliamentary to use the word "coward". However, if the Chair were to examine the reference in the debate the Chair would find that that reference was used by a Member who suggested that another Member, who did not have the courage to take the floor, was being a coward by not taking the floor to rise in debate. I suggest to the Chair that the word "coward" as used by the Prime Minister was not parliamentary and it can be distinguished by looking at the case which is referred to as supporting the use of the word "coward".

I do not think one can simply look at Beauchesne; one has to look at what the ruling was based on. I suggest to the Chair that the word "coward" is unparliamentary, and the Prime Minister should be asked to withdraw it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am now citing from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Chapter 7, page 110 and 111 as follows:

Since 1958, it has been ruled parliamentary to use the following expressions:

One of them is the word "coward". The Chair at this stage cannot go beyond the citations in Beauchesne.

The Chair has taken note of the fact that the Prime Minister, in his second statement, rephrased his remarks very carefully and made his statement in very temperate and careful language. I would hope there would be a disposition by the House at this point to proceed to another matter.

MR. BROADBENT—STATEMENT OF MR. TRUDEAU DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a separate question of privilege. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said earlier that he was about to commit an indiscretion. I think that is to put it euphemistically. He stated to the House that at a dinner—I presume he was referring to the dinner at his own residence at the time of the First Ministers Conference recently—all the West—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member appears to be entering into debate.

Mr. Broadbent: No, I am not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member rising on a point of order? What is the purpose for which he is seeking the recognition of the Chair?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege, if you will listen to it. Just listen to the question of privilege.

Just a few minutes ago in the House the Prime Minister got up and said to the House of Commons that the western Premiers who were at that dinner, without exception, agreed that there should be a change in the Crow rate.

I want to say to the Prime Minister that he misinformed the House, deliberately or otherwise. He had better correct that because I have just contacted the Premier of the Province of Manitoba who says that that assertion if false.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I want Hon. Members to bear in mind the dignity of the House. At this point the Chair cannot permit Members to enter into debate, and the fact that there is an opportunity and a forum to do it—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair cannot, on the face of it, see a question of privilege. It may be a matter of debate. On the face of it, it is not privilege.

Is the Right Hon. Prime Minister seeking to be recognized?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interfere with your ruling but I can say that I am somewhat surprised, if the Hon. Member is quoting Premier Pawley correctly. Premier Pawley is on record—in his case I did not think I was making an indiscretion—Premier Pawley is on record as saying that the recent changes made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin)—he is happy that they have been made. He is happy with them. So maybe the Hon.

Member could spend another dime and get the whole matter straightened out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With due respect to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, this appears to be a difference of opinion as to fact. A difference of opinion concerning facts is not a matter of privilege.

Presenting reports.

Mr. Broadbent: As a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I am on my feet and I say to the House that the Prime Minister has lied to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1210)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Language has been used by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) which is unparliamentary. I request the Hon. Member for Oshawa to withdraw the unparliamentary language.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister a few minutes ago made a comment, with reference to a conversation which took place at a dinner at his place, in which he attributed words to the Premier of Manitoba, and I have just checked with the Premier of Manitoba who has told me that it is incorrect. In normal language that means lying. I repeat, the Prime Minister has misinformed the House about that conversation. If he were a man of integrity, instead of turning around and waltzing out of the House, he would have had the courtesy to say to the House that he misinformed the House. He did not do that. I do not withdraw my comment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again, Hon. Members are acutely aware of the language which is considered parliamentary and unparliamentary by the House. I must ask the Hon. Member for Oshawa if he would rephrase his remarks so that he would not use language which is clearly unparliamentary. Again I must ask the Hon. Member for Oshawa, for whom I have a high regard and who has generally observed parliamentary procedures, as well as other Hon. Members of this House, to withdraw the remark, which I am sure he knows is not parliamentary.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be helpful. I am the one who said to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that the Premier of Manitoba had indicated he was satisfied and was pleased with the changes I had made.

Mr. Broadbent: At the dinner at 24 Sussex?

Mr. Pepin: No, no. I do not think that was a reference, in the last contribution by the Prime Minister, to the dinner. I do not think so. Anyway, I just want to take the credit or the blame for having said to the Prime Minister that Premier Pawley had rejoiced in the changes which I had made. My reasoning is that in the past, the Government of Saskatchewan, for example, had indicated that it had nine conditions which it wanted to apply, and there was a vote in the Legislature in Regina, Saskatchewan, to the effect that if the Government of Canada were to accept those nine conditions, it would be in favour of change.

That would indicate therefore that the Government of Saskatchewan is in favour of change. The same resolution which was passed in the Legislature in Regina was copied and was passed also by the Legislature in Manitoba. That also would indicate that in certain conditions are met, the provincial Government, the Assemblies in Manitoba and in Saskatchewan, would be in favour of change also. Hence, the general conclusion which the Prime Minister reached, and I had reached a long time ago, that leading politicians in Saskatchewan and Manitoba are in favour of change, that is, of a transformation, a reform, an adjustment, a modernization of the Crowsnest rate.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I as a relatively long-time Member of this House have always had respect for the rules but, to be perfectly candid, I am sick and tired of the Prime Minister's having it both ways, a Prime Minister who systematically has misinformed this House many times in the past, who plays his cute little tricks and then waltzes out of here. If that Prime Minister, for once, behaves with a certain respect for all the Hon. Members of the House, and respects the rules of the House himself, and if he came back here and faced head on his assertion that he was told at a dinner in his residence that Premier Pawley accepted the change in the Crow, if he came back and dealt with that honestly, he would have to withdraw his remarks. If he withdraws his remarks, I will withdraw my comment, but not one minute before!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Order. While I can understand the arguments which have been raised by the Hon. Member for Oshawa, the fact remains that he has used language which is clearly unparliamentary.

An Hon. Member: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) lied. What do you think?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would again request the Hon. Member, who is an experienced and distinguished parliamentarian, to respect the rules and practices of this House and withdraw his remark. I would hope that there would be another forum in which the differences concerning the facts could be resolved. However, the differences concerning the facts and the possible way in which such differences can be resolved, can hardly be a matter to which the Chair can pay attention at this time. The Chair must ask the Hon. Member for Oshawa to withdraw language which is clearly unparliamentary.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe, whatever may be the line of argument of the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party and it could be the subject of disagreement, that the fact of the matter is that he has used unparliamentary language and he cannot excuse—

An Hon. Member: So has the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Ouellet: —cannot excuse his conduct, by pointing, as an excuse, to the conduct of another Member of the House. What is the question here is the abuse of the Leader of the New Democratic Party in his language. Whatever may be his reasoning, it is not anyone else who is under scrutiny at this time; it is his own wording. I have known him for a long time. I know he is a good parliamentarian. I know his Party has very strong views on the Crowsnest legislation which is before the House. I believe that the attitude of that Party in recent days, and the attitude of the Leader of that Party today, show that they are going to try to use every trick to delay the passage of this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: Surely, the Hon. Member will withdraw his words.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again, I would ask the Hon. Member for Oshawa, for whom I am sure all Hon. Members of the House have a high regard in terms of his integrity and spirit, whether he would withdraw a remark which is clearly unparliamentary.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said as a person who has respected the rules of this House and throughout my political life have shown, I hope, greater respect for the truth than even for the rules of this place. If you want to hold your judgment and hold your ruling, I will respect that, in order to give the Prime Minister time to withdraw his comments. But I repeat, if there is not a withdrawal on the part of the Prime Minister, there will be no withdrawal on my part.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the point is not whether or not a Member has misinformed the House, but whether the language used by a Member is or is not parliamentary. The issue is quite straightforward, and I think the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) knows by experience that this is strictly a matter of procedure—as simple as that. He says that the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) used unparliamentary language. That is not true. The Prime Minister did not say anything unparliamentary. I suppose what the Hon. Member meant was that from the Hon. Member's point of view, what the Prime Minister said did not conform to the Hon. Member's view of reality. The Hon. Member for Oshawa is entitled to disagree with what someone else says. He is under no obligation to agree or disagree. The point is that he reacted by saying that the Prime Minister lied, and it is generally acknowledged, by parliamentary practice, that this word constitutes unparliamentary language. The point is not whether the facts were or were not properly presented, but whether the Member for Oshawa has the right to accuse another Parliamentarian of lying. He may say that a Member of Parliament has misinformed the House—this is quite acceptable—but when he says an Hon. Member has lied, that kind of language is not acceptable to our parliamentary practice and our Standing Orders, and I think he knows that perfectly well.

If the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), with his parliamentary experience, insists on refusing to withdraw an expression that is obviously unparliamentary, that is a clear indication that he wants to take advantage of the situation—as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) was saying—to obstruct the proceedings, but I want to give him the benefit of the doubt. And if he is really asking—

• (1220)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Mr. Broadbent, I have to name you for disregarding the authority of the Chair.

Mr. Nielsen: I wish to rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps we can avoid the procedure which is triggered by the naming process if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) could now perhaps respond to the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). That would avoid a vote and salvage an Opposition day which is about to go down the drain. Would the Prime Minister perhaps respond to the invitation of the Leader of the NDP?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, though I missed some of the debate, I understand the matter is on whether Premier Pawley, yes or no, indicated that he was favourable to—

Mr. Nielsen: At 24 Sussex.

Mr. Broadbent: At your dinner.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, at the dinner, Mr. Speaker, I can only stand by what I remember to have been an exchange between ten Premiers, that the matter of the Crow was raised. To the best of my recollection, Premier Pawley—and the other Premiers present, those who participated in debate, and they included the western Premiers, indicated that they thought the Crow should be changed. I do not say they indicated any particular way. They thought the Crow was something that would have to be dealt with. I am not indicating there was any detailed discussion of the proposals made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). But as to the matter of the transportation of grain and other matters in the West, as to the importance of making those changes, I can only stand by what I said.

I am sorry that I perhaps was led to make these statements because these dinners are supposed to be rather confidential. It is not the first time that comment has been made on conversations taking place there. I repeat, I feel all the more confident in repeating my assertion that, as the Minister of Transport has indicated, Mr. Pawley is on record as wanting some form of change.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I heard the Prime Minister. If he is now prepared to say, in contrast to what he said some time ago when he made the flat assertion that Premier Pawley and the other western Premiers—and I understand that, too, is incorrect—but with reference only to Premier Pawley, if he is now saying that he might be mistaken, then I am prepared to withdraw my remark. Is the Prime Minister prepared to say he might be mistaken in his recollection?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, one can always be mistaken. In this particular case I do not think that was the case. I remember we had a discussion on various aspects of federal policy in areas where it ran into difficulties in the Provinces. I remember that basically the sentiment of that meeting—and not everyone spoke—was that, including the Premier who is of interest to the Hon. Member, was that the federal Government was correct in proceeding with some policy relating to western transportation and the Crow.

Some Hon. Members: And the Crow.

Mr. Trudeau: And the Crow. Mr. Speaker, the subject came up over the Crow and I asked one Premier present: Why don't you support the Crow more publicly? And the answer was, well, you know, it is not good politics.

Mr. Broadbent: What Premier?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, one Premier who was there. So the Hon. Member can make what he wants of—

An Hon. Member: You are evading.

Mr. Trudeau: No, I am not evading, Mr. Speaker. There is obviously no written record of the meeting. If Premier Pawley were across the aisle and we were exchanging recollections, Mr. Speaker, I would be more inclined to take his statement of what he said than when it comes to the Hon. Member in a phone call, which was probably on a yes or no basis. I can only suggest that if the Hon. Member wants to carry on this debate and not lose an Opposition day, I would be happy to settle the matter with Premier Pawley. If, in his view and that of the other Premiers present, there is some misunderstanding on my part, I am prepared to say that. But I am not prepared to say it now without talking to Premier Pawley or without having the views of the other Premiers present.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, we have just witnessed a historical first. For the first time the Prime Minister of this country has publicly admitted that he might have misinformed someone. On those grounds I will categorically and completely withdraw my comment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Presenting reports from Standing and Special—

Mr. Trudeau: I think—

Mr Nielsen: Don't screw it up.

Mr. Trudeau: I think the Hon. Member would have been a little more gracious if he had withdrawn his remark without saying that I admitted that I had publicly misinformed—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I stand by what I said. There was no misinformation. The exchange occurred the way I put it to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Presenting Reports from Standing and Special Committees. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

PRESENTATION OF SIXTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to have to interrupt this lively exchange among Parliamentarians, but I have very good news for the House. The Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, which I have the honour of chairing, is tabling its Sixteenth Report which deals with an order of reference received from the House to consider and receive testimony by parliamentary delegations. Last Friday, the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence considered a report by the parliamentary delegation which attended a meeting of the International Parliamentary Union held in Rome last September. This is a first, and we intend to pursue consideration of reports from various delegations on their meetings abroad.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—SPECIAL RECOVERY PROGRAM—FUNDING IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East) moved:

That this House recognizes the need for long-term solutions to the economic difficulties facing Atlantic Canada and, although welcoming the injection of funds provided under the Special Recovery Program, rejects the manner in which those funds are being allocated, particularly the decision to use partisan advantage rather than need as the basis for the provision of funding, and condemns the Government for its failure to adopt policies which would create lasting economic growth with permanent jobs and investment in Atlantic Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my motion having been seconded by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), who is from western Canada, I did not really want the final phase of today's motion to stand in reflection of my colleagues from western Canada, although, God knows, they need almost as much help as we do.

The concerns that bring us here this afternoon are legendary and historic. They have cried out for help from this Government for many years. Now that we have a golden opportunity with respect to accelerated recovery of the national economy, most of us in Atlantic Canada thought something permanent and good might happen, that perhaps at last we might be able to tackle, in a long-term way, the problems facing our imbalance in agriculture, our deficit with our neighbouring Provinces with respect to meat, feed grains and other things. We did not see that. With respect to the fisheries, we looked forward to the Kirby Report. We looked with anticipation to funds under the Special Recovery Program to assist in bringing order out of the chaos which is there and to provide permanent, long-term jobs. Did we get it? No, we did not.

In the area of transport, in the eastern Canadian Provinces which, by definition, mean parts of eastern Quebec and the four Atlantic Provinces, in transportation requirement alone, $1.5 billion would not even begin to scratch the surface. We need highway strengthening. We must do something about rail transportation in Newfoundland. We must improve our Gulf ferry services to Prince Edward Island. We have taken some meaningful measures in the last two or three years, but the point is that we are running way behind in ferry fleet renewal.

Where we stand today, we should have been 10 or 12 years ago. In the fisheries, for example, there is an additional $140 million. I want to tell the House what concerns me when I speak of mid- and long-term assistance. We have heard all kinds of evidence from professional fishermen, their unions and associations, about the way in which the Minister designated to head the special ministerial grouping under this recovery program has handled matters. We heard from those fishermen suggestions as to how and what long-term projects could be put into place which would provide permanent jobs, provide the markets, provide the acceleration of this very critical and very vital industry in Atlantic Canada. Instead, what did we get?

I will just point to Nova Scotia and deal with it very quickly because I use it only as an example. We see that $25.4 million of the $140 million is going into the Province of Nova Scotia, the largest fishing Province in this country of ours. What percentage is that of $140 million, I ask the Minister? It is very small. Where is the money going? When the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) received his share, and when the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) received her share, there was nothing left over for anyone else.

For seven years now, I have been trying to persuade the Government to build a wharf, for example, serving the only fishing community left in Halifax harbour, located at Eastern Passage. That wharf is now a peril and a menace to the general public. It should be torn out, destroyed and replaced with a good, adequate facility. When I called to ask whether or not that particular project might be considered, Public Works officials, Fisheries and Oceans officials and Small Craft Harbours officials were all, without exception, embarrassed to even talk to me about it. When we press them, this is what we learn: that there is a list of projects put forward by the various Departments and, in the case of Fisheries and Oceans, if one was not a Liberal Member, one did not get a look in the door. Not one single Tory riding in Atlantic Canada, I will bet you a buck, will receive any of that money at all. Some may have to go into the riding of my colleague, the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), because it is the largest fishing constituency in this country. The Government will regret even doing that.

These are legitimate concerns of people, mid- and long-term legacies, much needed wharfs, breakwaters, skidways, haul-outs, but not a nickel will go into any Conservative riding in Atlantic Canada by choice. It suggests to the fishermen that the Government does not care about their legitimate needs, short-term, mid-term or long-term but, rather, cares more about porkbarrelling, the tradition of the present Government which it has finely tuned. The Liberals are expert at it, absolute experts.

It is not good enough under the Special Recovery Program to allow this situation to continue to exist. The Government has allocated $640 million for transport in general. It is earmarked and will go into fleet replacement for the Canadian Coast Guard, something absolutely vital and necessary. Where will the building be done? How much will go to Halifax? How much will go to Saint John? Who will determine where that building program takes place? Given the experience of the HMCS Nipigon and the actions of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) in the last couple of weeks, the Government no longer calls tenders. It calls for prices. Remember "CFP" Canadians, because that is what we will live with under the Government, a call for prices. The prices go into the Minister's office. He sits there, and what does he say? "We will put this one in Sorel. Let us put this one hither and yon". He will not put anything in Halifax or in Saint John. I doubt if Ferguson Industries will get anything. I doubt if Marystown will get anything. It will go somewhere else in Canada.

Mind you, on the other hand, if the Government did give us some work, 80 per cent of the capital costs, the hard components of vessels, would leak back to central Canada in any event. That is not good enough. The Government, presumably because of its heartfelt concern for Unemployment Insurance exhaustees, is to use the Special Recovery Program to get these exhaustees some form of regular income, which is Unemployment Insurance benefits in this case. It has decided that one method of doing this quickly and expeditiously will be to lay off casual but for all intents and purposes long-term employees and replace them with workers who have exhausted their Unemployment Insurance benefits.

While this sounds good, I must question whether the Minister and his Government have given any consideration to those employees who will have their income reduced from $8 or $10 an hour to $5 or $6 an hour. The Government is telling him to go home and meet his obligations, educate his children and feed his family at this lowest level. How can that be done without massive social disruption within his community and in his own life?

Under the Goverment's program these exhaustees who have completed a minimum of 12 week's employment will be right back out the door and the Government will put some more through that process. Is the Government changing the structure of our society? Is it condemning the underemployed to live this way for the rest of their lives? Is that the best that a nation like Canada can do? I do not believe it is and I suggest that my colleagues on this side of the House share that concern.

While massive amounts of borrowing being used for short-term make-work projects may very well be absolutely necessary, surely that could be tempered or balanced by a form of investment that would ensure long-term permanent job opportunities for Canadians.

It is a historical fact that when the Canadian economy goes down, the Atlantic economy ends up at the bottom, and when the Canadian recovery resumes, the Atlantic economy stays at the bottom. We have historically been the first to suffer from recession in this country and, without question, we have been the last to recover. Where is the social concern on the part of the Goverment for Canadians who live east of Diamond Point?

We would much sooner see this money being spent more wisely. For example, we would rather see $2 billion spent in an effort to make eastern Canada self-sufficient in its food supply. Later this afternoon some of my colleagues will deal with the impact of the Government's intention to kill our own eastern Crow rate, the Maritime Freight Rates Act. It already has a task force travelling throughout the country side asking Maritime and Atlantic businessmen what will happen if that freight rate is eliminated altogether. We know what the answer is because for over 60 years the MFRA in that little piece of Canada has enabled our producers to compete in the marketplace of central Canada. Its destruction will mean that we will not be able to compete or afford to put our goods and products in the marketplace of central Canada. We are concerned about the Government's intention in that area. Why has the Government not designated some money toward the long-term solution of this marketing problem?

If the Government is bound and determined to kill the Maritime Freight Rates Act and stop the social and economic benefits that flow therefrom to producers, truck operators and railways in terms of access to central Canadian markets, it should earmark some money for offshore development. The Government should give that money to the wandering minstrel, the only Member who is in the House as infrequently as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), my colleague from across the harbour in Halifax, the wandering trade Minister. I have not seen him in the House since Christmas.

Mr. Nowlan: Marco Polo.

Mr. Forrestall: Incidentally, the same Minister went to Halifax recently. Let me finish by talking about long-term benefits. He announced the provision of $52 million for a federal office building to be erected on a prime piece of Halifax waterfront to house all the federal public servants in Halifax. He would then empty Queen's Square in Dartmouth and empty about eight major office buildings that are strategically located around the city. This action would probably bankrupt the entrepreneurs who own those office buildings. Furthermore, he will put that building on a piece of land that has long been earmarked for the cultural needs of our Province and the metropolitan area. He has earmarked $52 million for this project when Nova Scotia needs a new provincial hospital, the construction of which has been shelved for three or four years because we do not have the funds.

Bridge pier fendering is needed from Halifax to Vancouver in order to protect lives. But is there any money earmarked for a project like that, which is a long term, permanent and visible legacy? No. Instead, the Government borrows and borrows to the point where no Government will be able to move anywhere in an economic sense by the mid 1980s. The cost of servicing our debt will be astronomical and almost undefinable. That Government will keep on borrowing until it is thrown out of office.

God help one of those distinguished Canadians who is seeking the leadership of my Party when he must face the mess that will be left as a result of this Government's irrational and irresponsible borrowing. This massive irresponsible borrowing is compounded by the fact that the money is not being spent for medium or long-term job creation or on projects which will have a permanent legacy. It is not being spent in order to give incentives to the entrepreneurs and businessmen of this country, the manufacturers. That is what we regret and why we stand today to condemn the Government for its ad hoc approach, boorish and downright crass porkbarrelling. It is to be rejected by every thoughtful and thinking person. The Minister laughs because he has won for his colleagues in the backbenches of the Liberal Party every little thing that they want and to hell with the rest of Canada.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire whether questions will be posed to the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)? I intend to speak on this motion and I am prepared to do so, but perhaps some Hon. Members wish to ask questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I would ask my hon. friend if he knows the whereabouts of the Atlantic Members on the Government side? Are they out carving up the pork barrel that he referred to in his remarks?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I do not know where they are today. I do not know where the Hon. Member for South West Nova is or where Members from northern New Brunswick are. I do not know where my colleagues from Newfoundland are. Given the long weekend, I do not think it would be hard to find them. I will tell you where they are. One of them at least is in northern New Brunswick, at a $15 million resource centre, which is very vital and necessary, but in three years' time, when the single purpose for which it was built has come to an end and it is over and done with, it will be another white elephant in northern New Brunswick as a result of the activities of this Government.

• (1250)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there other Hon. Members rising to ask questions? If not, I will recognize the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston).

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat disappointed in the comments made by the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) for whom I have a great deal of time and respect. I would like, in the few minutes available to me, to relieve him of the anxieties and concerns which he apparently feels with respect to the Special Recovery Program, over which I as head of a subcommittee of Cabinet have over-all responsibility. When I refer to over-all responsibility, I mean to say responsibility for the implementation and monitoring of these projects to ensure that they move forward expeditiously and meet the criteria laid down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) at the time he tabled his budget in April, and ensuring that they, in turn, are brought in on time and within the budget.

The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, I think, has perhaps not examined as he should have the nature of these projects, their intended purpose and the fact that they will indeed bring into existence long-term permanent jobs for Canadians.

Let me for a moment talk about the program in general and then deal with the situation in Nova Scotia, which I might say is a Province to which I am deeply attached myself, not having had the fortune to be born there but having had the wisdom to marry a Nova Scotian and to spend a good deal of time in many areas of the Province, more particularly in the area represented by the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), who is with us here in the House today.

[Translation]

Because of that, Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with this opportunity to explain to my colleagues once again—the purpose of the program in question, the criteria selected for implementing the program, how we went about selecting the projects and the procedure and the mechanism we have established to ensure that the program is implemented as soon as possible.

[English]

In the budget there were a number of Special Recovery Programs. One, of course, deals largely with fiscal incentives, tax incentives, investment tax credits and so on. But the other side, to which the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East has more particularly addressed himself, is the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program. I would like to say that in both these cases, whether one looks at the Special Recovery Program introduced by the Minister of Finance on the fiscal side or the Capital Projects, to which I will speak more specifically, they are designed to create long-term permanent jobs. In addition to that, the budget did deal with some specific improvements or augmentations to programs for direct job creation. More importantly, the budget recognized that long-term permanent jobs will be found by a strengthened private sector. The budget moved very firmly in that direction on the fiscal side, and I will argue convincingly, I believe, for the benefit of my colleague from Dartmouth-Halifax East that these augmentations did the same thing with respect to the Capital Projects.

The Program on Capital Projects has $2.4 billion allocated to it. That is the largest single capital investment program which has ever been undertaken by the Government of this country. It will create jobs. It will create jobs now, both temporary construction jobs in many instances and, more important, long-term permanent jobs. I know the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East argued a few moments ago that this was a pork barrel, and his motion deals more particularly with Atlantic Canada, but I will address this concern of his in a moment because I believe I can satisfy him on that count as well.

But let me first speak about the project itself. Why was it introduced at this particular time? The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East has referred to his concern with respect to the deficit, or to borrowing. He refers to this Government as a Government that borrows. As the Minister of Finance has said, this Government is concerned about that deficit and, accordingly, it was decided that these Special Recovery Capital Projects would be implemented. Programs would be implemented at this time because private sector investment intentions are not strong in the upcoming fiscal period. In fact, it is anticipated there will be a net decline of capital investment of something like 3 per cent this year following on the heels of a very substantial decline last year. But in the private sector it is predicted for the coming year that there will be a decline of something like 8 per cent.

It is clear that if the Government is going to accelerate Capital Projects of the kind that are the subject of this particular program, this is a very propitious moment to do it because we will not be crowding out private sector investment intentions. We will be putting in place projects that would have been undertaken in any case at some time during the decade but instead they will be brought forward into a nearer time frame. They will enable the Government to establish some basic fundamental economic infrastructure and, in turn, will be supportive of private sector recovery and investment when that comes.

Clearly, in terms of the over-all fiscal position, this is the way for the Government to proceed. But when we add to that the fact that we are suffering unreasonably and unacceptably high unemployment, that we have many construction workers unemployed in this country, that we have many suppliers and manufacturers working well under capacity, surely it behooves us also to create jobs in this period and to stimulate suppliers and the manufacturing sector of this country. That is exactly what this proposal does with this $2.4 billion investment.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may add a few more comments. My colleagues may have forgotten the basic criteria we used to select these projects. First of all, these are projects that were already planned for the departments in question, and second, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has added some very specific criteria. First, the project must be ready to start within the six-month period following the budget, and second, they must be completed for up to 60 or 70 per cent within the next two years. That is the accelerated process I was referring to.

[English]

I see we are approaching one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, but I want to underline the over-all investment intention and the importance of it in terms of the budget itself. I cannot let this motion go unanswered with respect to these charges of pork-barrelling, as the Hon. Member says, and the accusation that none of this money is going into Tory ridings in the Atlantic Provinces.

These projects have been selected for their economic potential and importance. I will refer to a number of them which are going very specifically to Tory ridings in the Atlantic region. Shall I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, when I stopped at one o'clock, I tried to situate our special recovery projects within the policy announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in his budget speech. I gave the criteria we used to select these projects. I explained how they must be accelerated and how they would make a long-term contribution to the Canadian economy by creating permanent jobs as well as creating jobs in the short term.

I would like to get back to the point raised by our hon. colleague from the riding of Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), when he accused us of applying partisan criteria in selecting recovery projects for the Maritime Provinces.

An Hon. Member: He is not here.

Mr. Johnston: I believe he has left the House for the time being, but in any case, he accused us of not spending a nickel—those were his words—in Tory ridings in Nova Scotia, and in fact I think he said the Atlantic Provinces. Perhaps we should look at some of the details of this matter, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

When he said that these projects had not gone to any Conservative ridings I fear he had either not examined them or was reacting in a negative fashion to the program in question. When I look at some of the most important investments made under this program I find that there are a number of significant investments in Conservative ridings. As I explained, these are projects which were selected on the basis of economic criteria. They are projects which were moved ahead in the sense that they were brought into a nearer time frame. They are projects which Departments had already determined would be implemented at some time during this decade.

• (1410)

For example, let us look at the announcement made earlier this week by our colleagues, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) and the regional Minister for New Brunswick, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc). On May 18, 1983, they announced the construction of the Maritime Forest Research Centre in Fredericton. That is a $22.5 million federal investment. The centre is to be located on property which is owned by the New Brunswick Government, and it is my recollection Mr. Speaker,—and I do not think I stand to be corrected on this point—that it is to be located in the riding of the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) and it will serve three Maritime Provinces. Now I certainly do not think that that looks like a project which, as the Hon. Member has said, is one of partisan advantage.

[Translation]

In fact, the work to be carried out in Fredericton will be done as part of our program, the program I described this morning and which my hon. colleague for Dartmouth-Halifax East is criticizing. The centre in question is an intergrated research and training complex in Fredericton will bring together a number of organizations in the Maritime Provinces with an interest in forestry. Thus, the Canadian Forestry Service from Environment Canada, the New Brunswick Department of Natural Resources, the Forestry Research Group of the University of New Brunswick and the Maritime Forest Rangers School will take part in the project. This is indeed a very important project and also very important to the health of this industry. I fail to see how the Hon. Member can accuse us of being partisan about these choices. I see the Hon. Member has just taken his seat. Perhaps he would like to have an exchange of views with me during question period after my speech.

[English]

The Maritime Forestry Research Centre is one example which shows that there clearly is no partisan advantage.

I see also that the Government has announced that it is prepared to contribute up to $18.25 million, another major investment of Canadian taxpayers' money, to build an Atlantic Veterinary College in Charlottetown, contingent on equal contribution by the four Atlantic Provinces. Here again is a project which will benefit the entire Atlantic region, a project which is obviously fundamental to the entire agricultural sector of the Atlantic region, and one of course which carries with it evident long-term economic benefits in the training of veterinarians for that part of Canada in particular, although I hope that we will see them in the rest of the country as well. This project is in response to a need which has been identified for some years of which all Members from the Atlantic Provinces are aware.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I believe that surely we cannot be accused of partisan advantage in the selection of that particular project. My understanding is that it is to be built in Charlottetown and located in the riding of Hillsborough which, at last count, was not represented by a Member from this side of the House.

I had the opportunity to exchange some comments with my hon friend, the Hon. Member for South Shore just before lunch, and my understanding is that on this very day, May 20, 1983, a small crafts harbour project totalling almost $4 million was announced; $4 million in small crafts harbour projects is a lot of money, and this project is apparently being announced in parts of the South Shore riding, the riding of the Member to whom I referred a moment ago. Again, this project will touch cities and towns represented by Members from both sides of the House. It is clear that when the Hon. Member says that not one Government nickel is spent in Tory ridings, he has not looked at the dossier and he is being partisan in his comments. I expect more than that from the Hon. Member.

I am pleased to see that the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is in the House today because on May 13, 1983, my colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey) and the Premier of Newfoundland announced some $45 million for road work in the Province of Newfoundland. Of this $45 million, some $12 million will go to the Conception Bay South Arterial, which, if I am not mistaken, is in the riding of the Hon. Member for St. John's East. I see him nodding his head in the affirmative, and I am sure that he is very pleased with that initiative.

I would like to make another point because I feel that it is good to kill two birds with one stone when one is allotted so little time to speak. I believe I have a moment or so left, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East indicated that the Government was neglecting such things as strengthening the transportation system, and he referred specifically to highways. I can refer to two major highway projects, the one in Newfoundland that I just referred to, and Route 11 in New Brunswick, a second major highway initiative. I would point out that I am looking at a headline from the St. John's Daily News, May 13, 1983, which reads:

Peckford and Rompkey together: SWEETNESS, LIGHT AND $45M. FOR ROADS!

This again is an example of the Province and the federal Government successfully coming together and financing a very important infrastructure project in that Province.

I can only conclude, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East is disappointed that there were perhaps no specific projects allotted to his own riding. I am sure that many of us would share that disappointment. None of these projects, I might add, have been allocated to my riding of Saint-Henri-Westmount. I am sure that there are many Members from both sides of the House who have not had any of these Special Recovery Capital Projects allotted to their particular ridings, but that is not to say that other projects will not be of substantial benefit to their ridings because, I would suggest, any project which is good for Nova Scotia is good for Dartmouth-Halifax East. I am sure that my friends from the other side of the House would agree with me.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I invite the distinguished Minister to rise in his place and read us a complete list of the small craft harbour projects in the four Atlantic Provinces and in eastern Quebec. He could table the list if it is too large for him to deal with. I wonder if the Minister would entertain that request.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I would be quite happy to entertain that request when all the projects are announced. In fact, it is my intention to ensure that all projects are brought to the attention of all Members of the House. It would be difficult for me to enumerate them at the moment. I am not sure if in fact they have all been announced. I mentioned that some projects were announced today for the South Shore riding of Nova Scotia. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that that had nothing to do with my speaking on the subject today. I did not know until last night that I would be doing so.

I have no objection to complying with the Hon. Member's request. If the inference that I am to draw from it is that in eastern Quebec, all the small craft harbour projects are in Liberal constituencies, I would have to agree with that.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I too direct a question to the Minister on the subject of small craft harbours. One of the major problems that appears to exist with this project is that no priority list has ever been published of those harbours which should be developed. When an area finds out that it is to receive funds for small craft harbour project, that news suddenly bounds out of the blue when a Cabinet Minister announces it. But there does not appear to be any indication of what harbours are going to be developed and what is the priority listing of the many, many harbours that require federal assistance.

If the Minister is prepared to accommodate the request of the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), I wonder if he in fact would be prepared to provide a complete list of harbours which require major renovations costing $0.5 million and up, and what the Government's priority list would be for some of those harbours so that the people who are depending on them can do some economic planning and development in relation to it?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I have overall responsibility for the implementation of this Special Recovery Capital Projects Program. That does not mean that I have any responsibility other than as a Minister chairing the committee for selection of projects. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) indicated on the night of the budget, these projects had already been chosen. I should say that there have to be feasibility studies associated with some, so there may have been some changes since. But effectively the projects were chosen on the basis of the Departments' priorities, what the Departments brought forward.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans is responsible for small craft harbour projects. I am not in a position today to provide a priorization of that Department. I think the question should be more properly put to the responsible Minister when he is in the House. Since small craft harbours have been chosen for this particular program, it is my responsibility to ensure that they move forward quickly and efficiently, and that they are brought in on time and within budget.

I am pleased the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) rises on this particular point. When we talk about partisan advantage, there is work being done on a small craft harbour on the West Coast. It is perfectly evident, quite unfortunately, that that work is not being done in ridings which are occupied by Liberal Members of Parliament.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question. Since he mentioned small craft harbours and since the item is now under his attention, would he consider the representations which were made by the former Liberal candidate at the provincial level who is now a member of the town council of St. Andrews respecting the small craft harbour requirement there both for fisheries and the tourist business? Would he also consider the application of the mayor of the town of St. George, who aspired to a provincial Liberal nomination, to improve the harbour in St. George, again for both tourist and fishing purposes? These two harbours have been downgraded by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and will receive no attention unless it is from the Hon. Minister. I sincerely hope that he takes these two under consideration, in view of the number of trips each has made on behalf of his community and his small craft harbour.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, again I reiterate that the program is not one for which I have responsibility, except within the narrow context of the administration of the Special Recovery Capital Projects. I will be more than pleased to bring the representations of my friend to the attention of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) who is not in the House at the present time.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Minister. It has been pointed out that small craft harbours seem to be either on the East Coast, as the previous speaker said, or on the West Coast. I would point out with respect—and ask for confirmation of my information—that the riding of St. Catharines, which is a Conservative riding, received a grant of $1.6 million as announced last Friday. Indeed this is a neighbouring riding to mine, and I would suggest that the grant is helpful not only to that particular riding but to the entire Niagara Peninsula. What we are looking at here is a waterway—

Mr. Forrestall: We are talking about jobs.

Mr. Parent: Wait a second.

Mr. Forrestall: We are not talking about your little, picayune question.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I take great exception to anyone calling my area picayune. I cannot let this go unanswered. He puts down not only my riding but the riding of one of his own colleagues. I am simply asking the Minister for confirmation that this is the greatest inland waterway in the world and that it is also being given consideration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

Mr. Parent: What about my answer?

An Hon. Member: It was a picayune question.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister would accept a suggestion. Would the Minister recommend to his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané), that Members of Parliament from both coasts and from the inland areas, but from the Atlantic Provinces especially, be canvassed as to the priorities in their constituencies, just as Members are canvassed with regard to the Canada Community Development Program? If the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans would only do that, he would go a long way toward eliminating the accusation or the seeming prospect of this program being used for partisan political purposes. I offer that to the Minister, whom I respect, as a serious suggestion.

Mr. Johnston: I take that as a suggestion. I do not think it is my place to decide how these projects are chosen by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. I would point out that the whole small craft harbours program we are now discussing, in the context of the entire program, is one relatively small part of the $2.4 billion projects distributed across the country. As I demonstrated in my earlier comments, some of the major elements of the program in Atlantic Canada are the college in Charlottetown and the Maritime Forestry Research Centre in ridings occupied by Members of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of the Hon. Member for St. John's East is in fact a very serious one, and I would like to add to the seriousness of it. The new innovation for price requests, processes and procedures for determining how these projects will be carried out is of some concern to us. Could the Minister find some way of advising the entrepreneurial or industrial community whether or not this is in fact government policy? If it is, would he take into consideration the real difficulty of Atlantic firms, entrepreneurs and business people in the Atlantic region, even where they are successful with respect to costing proposals to the Government either through tender or through a call for prices? Since we are in fact dealing with a Special Recovery Program and we are trying to look at the short, medium and long-term, would the Minister take up with his colleague the proposition that it is important in the final implementation of the program to take into account the seepage back into central Canada? I am referring to the very narrow portion of it, but I could expand it to include, for example—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of State for Economic Development, and having responsibility in terms of the administration of the Program, I can say to the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East—that he can rest assured the processes established by the Treasury Board as part of the regulations are being used with respect to these projects. When we talk about fast tracking or—

—or "la voie express" as they say in French, we are merely referring to mechanisms we have introduced for the purpose of accelerating the process, but we shall still be observing existing regulations and procedures. Of course, we are going to maximize work on the projects in each region. So let us hope that entrepreneurs in the Atlantic region will have a fair share of the work available in those provinces, and the same applies to the Western Provinces, Ontario, Quebec, and so forth.

Again, we are going to stick to existing regulations, and we are just going to speed up these projects within a closely monitored and, I believe, very effective system.

• (1430)

[English]

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate there is no chance for one more brief question, but maybe—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I note that a number of Members have not yet been recognized during the period for questions and answers. Some Hon. Member may seek the unanimous consent of the House to extend the period of questions and answers, if he so sees fit. However, in the position of the Chair I have no alternative but to hold it to within the ten minutes, a period of time which has already, incidentally, gone past that.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, in commencing debate on this subject, I might put a proposition through my speech to the Minister. That proposition is that if we put the partisan questions aside and say that the improvements which are being made in the region are certainly desirable and in the communities' benefit, there is still, in the observations which are made, one major problem and that is, with the way that the Government chooses to announce the programs. It causes confusion and no small amount of animosity on the part of constituents. To use only one example, and there are many others, what you have is a situation where the Ministry of Fisheries and Oceans—and I certainly do not want to criticize the Minister—but his Department is responsible for small craft harbours; the previous speaker's Department is responsible for implementing them; and a third Minister travels around making the actual announcements. Unfortunately, what we have is absolute chaos in the situation. No one knows what is going on and people wonder where projects come from. They seem to drop out of the blue. Those with great needs are certainly left aside to wither.

What might be a far better approach to this process is, where projects needed development, whether they were small craft harbours, highway projects, airport developments or wharf and dock transport improvements, that somewhere a priority list of these be developed and that people be given an indication of when those projects could be expected to come on stream. In that way, they would be given an opportunity to plan for those projects. Under the present circumstances we have seen quite a number of projects which seem to drop directly out of the blue, and subsequent planning in some areas has to be "hothoused" in order to get that money nailed down in that community. It has meant that we have had a less than desirable situation. Therefore, one of the things which definitely has to happen is better communication and some indication in advance of what projects are in the works and what their priority is on the list.

The debate today is on the subject, of course, of Atlantic Canada. The motion states, and I quote:

> That this House recognizes the need for long-term solutions to the economic difficulties facing Atlantic Canada and, although welcoming the injection of funds provided under the Special Recovery Program, rejects the manner in which those funds are being allocated particularly the decision to use partisan advantage rather than need as the basis for the provision of funding, and condemns the government for its failure to adopt policies which would create lasting economic growth with permanent jobs and investment in Atlantic Canada.

It is kind of ironic, Mr. Speaker, to have this resolution coming from members of the Official Opposition who are committed to having no long-term planning. I would be very interested as time goes on in this debate to hear their explanation of what appears to be a reversal of policy. Certainly, we in the New Democratic Party are extremely concerned about Atlantic Canada and the kind of abuse inflicted on that region by the present Liberal Government. And certainly the unemployment rate in Atlantic Canada is higher, and has been higher consistently in this region, than in any other region in this country.

Reflecting back on the March labour force statistics, it is worth mentioning with a bit of cynicism that it is showing an unemployment rate in the order of 15 per cent to 20 per cent in Atlantic Canada when in fact the labour force statistics have been jerry-rigged to reflect a much lower level of unemployment than that which exists. The bet would be that it is in the order of 25 per cent to 30 per cent. If we threw in an equation for underemployment, then certainly people who live in Atlantic Canada have been very badly served by this Liberal Government.

It is a bad situation and I believe you can point to the recent examples of hostility between the federal Minister of Energy and the provincial Minister of Energy in Newfoundland. That is one example of a bad situation. Certainly the kind of relationship which exists in some of those areas is not conducive to creating a positive climate in which economic development could occur. I have a feeling that we might see a worse situation with a Conservative federal Goverment and a Conservative provincial Government. Nevertheless, what we are faced with now would have to be described as a bad situation.

One aspect of this that is rather interesting, Mr. Speaker, is the philosophical positions which are used to approach the problems, the philosophy from which we would approach the problem of Atlantic Canada, or any other region in the country. It is ironic to watch in this House the gamesmanship which is played between the Liberal Members of the Government and the Conservative Members of the Official Opposition. They really have a philosophy which is not consistent with what is proposed in this motion. Time and time again the Conservative Members of this House have said. "Let the private sector do it. The private sector is the only one which can guide this country, shape its future, and provide economic benefits." Reflected in the Liberal budget and the comments of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is that the engine of economic recovery will be the private sector.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Skelly: It is not "right on", as the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) says, for Atlantic Canada. His riding is one which is particularly blessed, with an enormous number—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I just heard my riding taken in vain. I was sitting here, listening attentively to the Hon. Member's speech. All of a sudden he says I have made a comment about something he was saying. I made no such comment.

Mr. Skelly: I had assumed indirectly it was the kind of comment which the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre made.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, that is totally uncalled for, and I would ask the Hon. Member to withdraw that comment.

Mr. Skelly: In that case, I would have to withdraw it. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we have a situation, going back to the philosophies in this House—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): No, no. I feel I have to intervene. I happen to be personally aware of the fact that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) did not make an intervention with respect to the speech of the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly). I believe the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is entitled to be protected on the record of the House of Commons. He made no such intervention. It is not normal for the Chair to provide evidence, but in this case I feel that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, if he has stated that he did not make such an intervention, is owed that acknowledgement.

Mr. Skelly: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks I said I would withdraw my comment if I was in error.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Your microphone was not on.

Mr. Skelly: I am sorry, the microphone maybe was not on. I just said that I withdrew the comment after being corrected by the Chair. The situation which I was discussing was the philosophical thinking of both Parties, the Liberal Government and the Conservative Opposition. Both have said, "We are going to leave it alone. The private sector will be the engine of growth." It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that there really appear to be only two approaches in this country for strengthening and developing the Canadian economy, I would suggest: the philosophy which underpins the approach of the Conservatives and the Liberal Government, "Let the private sector do it all", and the approach which the NDP is advocating, that there be some consistent, rigorous long-term planning for regions of this country and that there be a partnership between the private sector and the Government. Certainly that kind of approach is going to be far more effective and constructive in Atlantic Canada than those we have had to date. Let the record speak for itself. After decades of Liberal Government, Atlantic Canada still has the highest rate of unemployment in this country. That region still suffers from enormous difficulties in obtaining a stable and developing economy. Unfortunately, over that period of time it has also been subjected to difficulties with Conservative provincial Governments.

• (1440)

To pursue this philosophical approach a little further, Mr. Speaker, it was reported that a former Leader of the Conservative Party, during his swan song at a convention which elected the current former Conservative Leader, had said that anyone who suggests the Conservative Party is different from the Liberal Party is doing the Conservative Party a great disservice. He said those two Parties believed in the same thing, that the Liberal Party was basically incompetent and the Conservatives would do it better. Now, I do not take exception to that because the fruits of the efforts of the Liberal Government indicate tremendous incompetence, a small piece of which we were just discussing this afternoon. But certainly the Conservative Party has not had a great track record. There was R. B. Bennett as Prime Minister decades ago, and the former Member for Prince Albert and his Government which proved itself incapable of developing an approach in this country which worked. Certainly the current former Leader of the Conservative Party did not demonstrate, when in power, a great competence for handling the very serious problems of this country.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We will never have the chance to judge you.

Mr. Skelly: The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton says he will never have the chance to judge us.

Mr. Evans: That is true.

Mr. Skelly: We will see, when the people get fed up with the failures of those two Parties. What we may require is a new approach—

Mr. Shields: The Liberal Party West is speaking.

Mr. Skelly: Both Parties seem to be rather unified in their approach, Mr. Speaker. Nevertheless, the problem we are discussing today is the approach to economic recovery in Atlantic Canada. In its philosophical and policy approach to this problem, the New Democratic Party would adopt on a long-term basis the approach outlined in this motion. The Party's record in election campaigns is very consistent. The Government of Canada must adopt a full employment policy. There just has to be a policy put in force by law in which targets are delineated, goals set and a commitment made to full employment. Unfortunately, we do not have a Government in power which believes that that can or should be done. Nor do we have an Official Opposition which believes it can or should be done. Until they take that kind of policy approach, it will not be done and Atlantic Canada will continue to have the highest unemployment rates in this country.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You have a Government in Saskatchewan which takes that approach.

Mr. Skelly: The next item, of course, is tax reform. This Party has talked at great length about tax reform, and I have to laugh at the efforts of a very prominent Member from Atlantic Canada, the previous Minister of Finance, who came before this House with three budgets and created total chaos in this country in the name of tax reform. An absolute joke. We have seen many efforts at tax reform, but unfortunately the tax reform of the Official Opposition and the Government is one in which you reform taxes for the rich to leave money in their pockets so they can go out and make more money, and hope some of it trickles down to those individuals who really need federal Government assistance. Mr. Speaker, tax reform pays the bills in this country. It distributes wealth in this country. It shakes the structure of the Canadian economy. But this tax regime we have does not do that. It does not give a break to Canadians generally; it gives a break to a very small minority of people and leaves the rest hung out to dry. This is one of the major problems with the shaping of the Atlantic regional economy. Until you develop a long-term plan based on full employment, the commitment to which is based on a tax regime which will structure the economy of a Province in such a way that it is a desirable place in which to build and nurture industry, that is not going to happen. And the question of the redistribution of wealth is a very important aspect of that problem.

With regard to taking a long-term approach, Mr. Speaker, another thing that the New Democratic Party has brought before this House is the question of an industrial strategy. What we have got from the Liberal Party and what we will get more of from the Conservative Party is the shot-in-the dark approach to economic planning. They have both stood in the House and criticized the need for the Government to become involved in concentrated, serious long-term planning. We are again back to the engine of growth being the private sector; the plans and goals of the private sector are the ones that should be nurtured and fostered. The end result of that is that we will have economic development in Toronto and Montreal, and the rest of the country will be left hung out to dry. I see my old friend, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) sitting busily in the House today, and maybe we can go through the question of an industrial strategy once again.

Mr. Pepin: One year is enough.

Mr. Skelly: That is, the question of shipbuilding. I know the Minister lends both ears to this very vital question and that of the need for a Canadian merchant fleet. He is paying vigorous attention now.

Mr. Pepin: I could repeat everything you said.

Mr. Skelly: Shipbuilding is extremely important to the Atlantic Provinces. But we do not know where the Government is going with this issue. The Government came before the House and made a policy statement that it was going to extend the customs boundary to 200 miles in order to try to capture offshore benefits for Canadians. It was going to remove the preferential treatment of Commonwealth and developing nations so that Canadians could have an opportunity to bid on and build these ships. But unfortunately that is a very passive policy without the force of law. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) says he will be drafting a Bill, but we have nothing before the House. The Government could afford to become far more active on the question of shipbuilding.

We have two vessels to be refitted, the Nipigon and the Athabasca. It is a small amount of work, but we have this crazy system throughout the country where everyone goes out and spends an enormous amount of money to bid on that work when only one yard will get the work. There must be a way of rationalizing our shipbuilding and repairing capability in such a way as to eliminate this enormous amount of wasted effort so that yards can plan on work and make investments in leading edge technology and maintain trained crews. But in absolute and rigid adherence to the free enterprise of Adam Smith, the Government has taken the approach of letting the yards go out and bid on and count on work that only one or two yards will get.

Mr. Huntington: Tell us about the state enterprise in—

Mr. Skelly: The Athabasca—I hear the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) hollering about state enterprise. It is not state enterprise. I think if that Party yanks itself into the twentieth century and takes a look around, it will see many other successful nations which do not use state enterprise but use partnerships in long-term planning with private industry. In that they have serviced their populations well. I hope that the Hon. Member will join us in examining some of those opportunities.

• (1450)

However, to return to the subject of shipbuilding, we certainly have some very serious problems. Two sets of companies across this country are considering the frigate program which, I presume, is in the order of $2.6 billion. There are yards which are absolutely desperate for the frigate program, yet the Government is back to its old bidding system, and many yards will lose out. The one sector in which Atlantic Canada has an opportunity is the shipbuilding sector. There is a great deal of suspicion that Atlantic Canada will see none of that work appearing in that area.

Mr. Pepin: How do you know?

Mr. Skelly: How do we know? Well, we will find out very soon.

Mr. Pepin: Yes, you will find out.

Mr. Skelly: I see that I am coming to the end of my allotted time. I would like to suggest that there are many industrial sectors involving shipbuilding, a merchant fleet, transportation and ports development and, as my colleague mentioned today, the automotive industry, in which we could find many opportunities if there were a commitment to planning and partnership between Government and industry and some determination to do it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Are there any questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of Atlantic Canada that only in passing and in the last gasping breath did the Minister of Powell River get off his philosophical diatribe and approach the subject matters which are of concern to Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Skelly: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McCain: It is of no value to talk in those terms—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That's not a point of order.

Mr. Skelly: A point of order it certainly is. I am not a Minister nor a member of the Treasury benches, and I am certainly not a man of the cloth.

Mr. McCain: The Church and the Government are fortunate in that regard. We do not have to look forward to either.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, the matter is ever so much more serious that that. I would like to draw attention to the Chronicle-Herald issue of Wednesday, May 18, which printed the full text of the remarks of Mr. Robbie Shaw, Vice-President, Administration and Finance, Dalhousie University. The remarks which are recorded in the newspaper are those which he recently delivered to the Rotary Club of Wolfville. He touches on several matters, but among others he mentioned the fact that there was appointed, at one point in time, a group of people in Government to arrange for a National Economic Development Conference. Mr. Shaw was appointed or hired by Mr. Pitfield to undertake or participate in the development of this Conference and to the concept of cooperation between the various segments of the economy of Canada.

I think it is rather interesting to note that Mr. Shaw was very much surprised when he was retained in the same capacity under the Clark administration and therefore has had considerable bipartisan participation in Canadian policy and the subject matter of our economics. He drew attention to many matters, and I would love to have 40 minutes in which to speak, in which case I would read his speech because I think it is something which should be in the record of this House in full. However, time does not permit that.

In his address, he stated:

—there are many fundamental problems remaining in the Canadian economy.

He listed five. He stated:

—Unemployment is projected to remain at unprecedented levels for several years, in spite of substantially improved economic activity.

—Canada is experiencing a severe decline in productivity relative to many of its trade competitors.

—Recently, heavy international competition has developed for the sale of our natural resources such as nickel and coal.

—Developing countries are providing growing competition in the sale of many of our traditional manufactured goods.

These are some of the problems which he outlined and which we must address. He also pointed out that we are in an adversarial position, and one of the paragraphs is headlined: Setting "adversarial". What it means is that the various economic forces in this nation are in an adversarial position and are not cooperating in the direction of Canadian economy, which will correct that the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) might correct and all the political Premiers in Atlantic Canada never can correct until we get away from the adversarial situation.

Let me quote again from the paragraph under that heading:

Virtually every major developed country in the world has a tradition of having some form of structure that formally permits the three economic players to meet on an equal ground to exchange information. In most cases, this has resulted in the building of some form of consensus on major problems affecting economic development in the country.

Even in the United States, which has less formal tripartite structures than virtually any other country in the western world, achieves a greater degree of meeting of minds in dealing with government;—

This also includes dealings with labour and business.

When the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office, Mr. Shaw was then dismissed from his position in the development of the economic conference, a job which he was hired to do. After the election of 1980, he stated:

All initiatives regarding the National Economic Development Conference and the establishment of a formal consultative process, came to a halt.

That was a rather tragic remark made by someone hired by Mr. Pitfield and retained by Mr. Clark. He went on to outline problems which we should recognize as follows:

1. That we recognize that we have some substantial economic and social problems in Canada; problems that won't be solved by a simple international economic recovery. We must recognize that these problems will require more open-minded and imaginative thinking by management and labour in this country.

2. We must recognize that business, government and labour are becoming increasingly interdependent on each other.

I wish I could expand upon that, but time does not permit it due to the specifics which I think I must address. It is a philosophy which I have tried to enunciate in the years that I have been in Ottawa. Unfortunately, I do not have the profile to obtain a full page in the Chronicle-Herald or any other newspaper in Canada where I could state that the economy of Canada can go nowhere until such point in time as the Government, management and labour do in fact sit down around the same table and assess our economic problems one by one, but not as a sector, because I say to Your Honour that there is no way that every mine in Canada can pay the same wage as every other mine in Canada.

Mr. Huntington: Absolutely right.

Mr. McCain: It may be necessary for different arrangements to be made between business, Government and labour in individual circumstances throughout the economy of Canada. That is what this man is saying.

Mr. Evans: Good point.

Mr. McCain: Until we get that in place, we shall go nowhere in this country's economic development or in the reduction of unemployment. He states, as the Government has stated, that unemployment will remain at unbearably high levels for several years to come. It is on that basis that the Government of Canada should begin to address the Atlantic area and its needs and address them with the reasonableness which a tripartite consideration would extend to each problem as it arose.

I regret very much that the Minister who spoke this morning has absented himself from the House, because I think he has a perception and an understanding of that principle, but does not have the prerogative of introducing it to a Government with policies such as those of the one presently to Your Honour's right.

• (1500)

I would have to say again that the moneys which are being spent supposedly for permanent benefit to this country and for the creation of short-term work have not extended themselves to the smaller communities of Canada. I recognize and appreciate the allocation of funds in Atlantic Canada which he mentioned. I also support the position taken by the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

While some of these expenditures are purely for Government edification and do not necessarily reflect the needs of the community, I approve of the forest structure which is going up in Fredericton and the school being built in Charlottetown. I would point out, however, that the moneys allocated for the school in Charlottetown rested in the office of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) for five years, I believe. That money remained unspent while he would not go down and negotiate a location acceptable to all. He sat inattentively in his seat for nearly five years after allocating the money. Therefore I do not think the Government has much to brag about in that regard.

I raised two issues with the Minister in question and I wish to repeat those now. They concern small craft harbours in Atlantic Canada and in my constituency of Carleton-Charlotte, in particular. Those harbours have been mercilessly and almost criminally neglected. The two harbours which I mentioned, St. George and St. Andrews, are important tourist attraction centres. They need those wharves both for the benefit of the fishermen and the tourists. They have been classified as unnecesary by the Department of Fisheries but have been promoted by myself, my constituency and the Government of New Brunswick. Wharves have been denied to those harbours by successive Ministers of Fisheries and Oceans and I suggest that the Minister now responsible for the expenditure of this developmental money put a permanent asset in these two communities as a result of the representations by their mayors. That would not be porkbarrelling; it would be recognizing a need.

A committee has been appointed under the Hon. Member from Cornwall whose ministry I cannot identify since they have been shuffled to the point of incomprehension. That committee will experiment with the processing and marketing of forest products. I am concerned that no one has chosen to address the subject matter which is most pertinent to the ongoing health of that industry. It is the forest management program. Once again, the Government has criminally neglected its responsibility, which has been under Government authority for decades, to undertake the research and development aspects of the forest industry. While the pulp and paper industry has perhaps conducted most of the research in that area, the research of forest management has basically been under federal responsibility and has been neglected since its reduction in the budget introduced by the Liberal Government in late 1978. An increase in research funds has not been reinstituted and I cannot think of any better use of this developmental money which is at loose ends than funding such a forest management program. I only hope that the full approval for the forest complex will be achieved in the very near future.

At this time I must briefly mention the neglect of the needs of the potato industry. The industry was neglected by the Minister of Agriculture who was advised in late March or early April of the problem arising in New Brunswick in this regard. He was asked to declare it a disaster area. Let me make a final suggestion to the Minister which I believe he could accommodate rather quickly if he chose to do so.

Since the Province of New Brunswick has had to fill the void which was left by federal responsibility, I submit that the Minister should become the co-guarantor with the farmers of the money loaned by the New Brunswick Farm Adjustment Program. That program is financing the planting of crops in New Brunswick. Not only do I believe that this approach is the only easy way out, but it is now the practical step for the Government to take. It does come within the jurisdiction and capability of the Government under various enabling legislation which has been passed in the House for ministerial discretion. I ask that the Minister follow that route.

The Minister told the House that he was seeking a meeting with the Minister of Agriculture in New Brunswick. That was nearly two weeks ago but no meeting has yet been held. I can assure the House that the farmers of New Brunswick are waiting for the Minister of Agriculture of Canada to have that meeting and that it be meaningful.

Another area of concern in Atlantic Canada is transportation. It is an issue which has not been studied. This question applies to Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. It is a problem that affects all of Atlantic Canada. Apparently the Government does not feel that this subject deserves consideration. The only action I have seen taken in the ten years I have been in Ottawa is the withdrawal of subsidies. Those subsidies have been withdrawn under the heavy club of the Government saying that while it will contribute small amounts for our highways it will withdraw subsidies in other areas, leaving no room for negotiation. That was essentially the position presented to the Premiers of Atlantic Canada as certain subsidies were surrendered.

The MFRA has become inadequate for any Province in Atlantic Canada. It is indefensible by any conscientious Atlantic Member of the House of Commons. If billion of dollars are going to be spent in permanent development for Canada, it is high time that transportation be addressed whether it is in form of assistance to the industry or development of harbours, railroads or other infrastructure. There is no better place to spend money on a permanent, long-term basis than on the roads of Newfoundland, the narrow gauge railways of Newfoundland or in other port, rail and road facilities that are required. I am amazed that the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River has never been to Atlantic Canada and therefore cannot know of our transportation problems.

Before I am critized for my next remarks, I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to refer to the remarks I made on the borrowing Bill. I must briefly address the problems in the administration of the bilingual policy of the Government. While there is a contractual option in most contracts for private enterprise on federal Government property which may demand bilingualism, I must say that it has not been nationally demanded. However, it is being demanded in New Brunswhich. People who presently hold jobs there will find themselves unemployed because of a very harsh interpretation of the capability of the Department of Transport and other Government departments to enforce bilingualism in Quebec City versus how it is enforced in other areas of Canada.

Let me give the most recent example. A young lady who has been a temporary employee of the Department of National Revenue has applied for a permanent position which is becoming vacant. As a temporary employee she has attempted to get bilingual training. It was not available. She has privately undertaken to become bilingual and has gone as far as she can with records and tutoring. She was asked to take bilingual test and was told that she failed. Having failed, she was advised that she will not have another opportunity to take that test.

Since time is short, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to refer to my remarks on the borrowing Bill before criticizing my remarks. This is not an equitable application of the bilingual policy. As I said in the debate on the borrowing Bill, unilingual persons from St. Quentin, New Brunswick or unilingual persons from Florenceville, New Brunswick should not be denied opportunity in the public employ if they merit the job. If we are to have a bilingual civil service capability, the onus is upon the Government of Canada to train those people to be bilingual and to make sure they are posted within their capability. It is not right to say to a person from St. Quentin that he cannot work for the Government because he does not speak English. It is not right to say to a young lady in Woodstock that she cannot work for the Government because she cannot speak French.

Let us get away from the heavy-handed application of bilingualism. Let us be realistic. I was promised in 1972, 1973 and 1974 that the Government would not delineate between applicants with bilingual and non-bilingual capability. I was betrayed. The little girl in Woodstock is betrayed because I told her years ago she would have the opportunity in the federal service to become bilingual and that she would not be denied a job. I was betrayed, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments, debate.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in the debate. I have read the motion. I feel that the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) is not really serious in this motion but has simply put it forward in order that we may put on the record the needs of the Atlantic Provinces and the responses to those needs. I feel there has been a response, and a good response, to the needs of the Atlantic area.

I want to start by talking about the fishery.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. When an Hon. Member suggests that something is done in this Chamber facetiously and without seriousness, particularly when it is directed at me, I must take some exception. Could the distinguished Minister from Newfoundland reconsider the allegation that motions put forward in this Chamber by Members of Parliament are not, in fact, put forward in anything other than under the most desperate and serious of situations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is no doubt that Hon. Members ought not to ascribe motives to other Hon. Members; but I want to point out to the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) that it is a common characteristic of debate in the House of Commons that some Hon. Members will refer to a motion as specious or something in that order. I do not want to find a question of privilege at this moment. I will leave it to the Minister to see whether and how he wants to handle the issue. But if the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East persists, then I will give due consideration to his question of privilege.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, let me clarify my remarks. I have no doubt about the serious intent of the Hon. Member to draw attention to the needs and the need for long-term solutions to the economic difficulties facing Atlantic Canada. I recognize that we should be talking about that. I recognize that is a serious motion. I recognize his sincerity in bringing it forward and encouraging this debate. I welcome that and I congratulate him for doing so. However, the line with which I had some problems is the one that reads "partisan advantage rather than need". What I want to show, if I can, is that we have addressed needs. They have been real needs and we have addressed them, I think, in depth.

I want to talk about the fishery first. I am sorry the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) is not here because I want to pay tribute to him. I had thought that we were not going to find a worthy successor to the Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc), the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, but I feel we have. If we read the press coming from Newfoundland, people are saying much the same thing. Negotiations have been going on in the past few days between the Newfoundland Minister of Fisheries and my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans for Canada, with regard to restructuring. The Minister announced recently $100 million for the Atlantic fisheries. This is probably the most important industry we have in the Atlantic region. It means not just jobs for our people but involves the very culture and lifestyle, the way of life, of our people.

The fishery is a $1.3 billion business. It is a major contributor not only to the economy of the five eastern Provinces but to the economy of this nation as a whole. We are the world's largest exporter of fish products. It also provides jobs for 48,000 people in the processing sector. There are approximately 48,000 fishermen divided between full-time and part-time fishermen. That is to sketch in the importance of that industry in the eastern Provinces of Canada.

The $100 million for the fishing industry in the five eastern Provinces was split up among the various Provinces. It can be said and shown that this money was divided according to need. An amount of $24 million will be spent in my own Province of Newfoundland and Labrador to do wharf repairs, harbour improvement, breakwater repairs over the next little while and on two marine service centres. This amount of $24 million, is about a tripling of the annual budget that we have had in small craft harbours over the last little while.

Mr. McGrath: And not a dollar for St. John's.

Mr. Rompkey: It is very important that this work be done. The work is going to be done. In Nova Scotia spending is going to be about $25 million in various parts of that Province.

Mr. Forrestall: Name them.

Mr. Rompkey: In New Brunswick an amount of $10 million will be spent on fisheries infrastructure. Fishing unloading and handling systems are to be installed at 28 different locations.

An amount of $8.8 million will be spent in Prince Edward Island for various harbour reconstruction and development projects.

In the Province of Quebec there will be $25 million for a variety of fisheries, infrastructure projects, including harbour improvements, fish unloading equipment, marine service centres and bait depots. In these Provinces a total of $100 million is allocated for the most important industry that we have.

The Atlantic fishery envelope also includes funds to build a modern electronic acoustic sweep vessel which will be used to survey shipping and navigation channels. Many of the seasonal ports on the East Coast require this annual depth service before they can be opened up to ships in the Spring.

In addition to the Special Recovery Program the Government of Canada will also invest $71 million in the Quebec fishing industry under provisions of the Quebec-Gaspé-Lower St. Lawrence Economic Development Plan. This package comprises a wide variety of projects to get underway this year, carrying on for a five-year period. These projects are aimed at the improvement of the fishing fleet, upgrading productivity, ensuring the production of consistently high-quality fish and seafood products. That is the recovery program. That is to put new money into the fishery to try to create jobs and to include the infrastructure.

You will recall also, Mr. Speaker, that last February we announced the Government's commitment to invest almost $200 million to put into effect the recommendations of the Kirby task force report, another additional $200 million for the Atlantic fishery. Those sums do not include the funds which the Government of Canada in all likelihood will be contributing to the restructuring of the companies in the Atlantic region. That process is now going on. Complex discussions are taking place as to how that restructuring might be done. I hope we will have a solution very soon to meet the needs which will be satisfactory to all concerned.

These are steps taken to improve the most important industry that we have in the Atlantic area, but that is not all that has been done. Under the recovery program additional funds have been allocated. I was surprised to hear my hon. colleague from New Brunswick who spoke a few moments ago saying that somehow we were not concerned about infrastructure in the Atlantic Provinces, and where we were there were some strings attached. I want to say to him that we have just signed with the Government of Newfoundland a $45 million roads agreement. It has no strings attached. It is for roads in Newfoundland and Labrador, roads that need to be done. I do not apologize for any of those roads. I do not apologize because sometimes Liberals happen to represent areas of need. I do not apologize for that. That is a fact. For example, the Labrador highway has been a dream of people in Newfoundland for a long while, not only a dream of mine but a dream of the Premier of Newfoundland and the dream of the Premier before him and the Premier before him. Two of those two Premiers were Conservatives. This is not a partisan matter; it is a question of need and things that need to be done.

Let us look at the distribution of the funds. There was Conception Bay highway in an area of Newfoundland represented federally and provincially by Conservatives. Other roads were constructed in areas of need which will contribute to the economic well-being and tourism of the Province. It is high time they were constructed and I am glad they have been. They were built under an agreement that my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), put in place with Newfoundland. Of course, it was based upon the concept of multi modal transportation and of building for the future, not for the past. We put in place the things that needed to be done. We modified some transportation patterns, some sea routes and some sea transportation patterns which needed to be done. I pay tribute to the Minster of Transport for his sensitivity and response to the needs of my Province.

In addition to the $45 million roads agreement, we signed a $10 million agreement for the improvement of the Corner Brook harbour and to put in place the infrastructure needed in that great port in order to attract sea traffic to it. Without it Corner Brook would not be able to compete. I am sure transportation critics opposite will agree that sea traffic is the most cost effective in the long run for my Province and for the Atlantic Provinces.

We have put in place the Corner Brook harbour development, which of course is building on other infrastructure projects of the Minister of Transport. For example, $12 million has been spent for a new airport in St. Anthony on the northern peninsula of Newfoundland. Also $77 million was put into the Newfoundland railway to provide it with a five-year period in which to see whether we could make it economic. We are making it economic, we are making it viable, and it is starting to work. The Minister of Transport has had the vision and foresight to say, "We will give it a try". That is happening and we will try to make it work. Another $23 million was put into airstrips along the Labrador coast.

Some can say that it is partisan if they like, but these are people who are in need and up to now have had some of the worst transportation infrastructure anywhere in the country. Again, I do not apologize for responding to that kind of need. It was $23 million spent to bring Labrador into the twentieth century and to give it up to date transportation services.

Also I would like to point to the other measures taken by the Minister of Transport and by the Government in the Atlantic Provinces. For example, a new air terminal building and runway was constructed at St. John's airport at a cost of $2 million. A Coast Guard college was erected in Cape Breton at a cost of $17 million. These are projects throughout the Atlantic Provinces. Approximately $15 million was spent for port development on the Miramichi River. There was $5.5 million spent on a federal wharf in Digby. The time had come for all these projects, they needed to be done. The idea is to move forward on projects for which we did not have the money until now and to create jobs before the tax measures had a chance to take their bite. I pay tribute to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and again to the Minister of Transport for their foresight.

With regard to partisanship, I would like to refer to several other ongoing projects which were done because of need, not as a result of partisan consideration. For example, a $55 million Arctic Marine Vessel Research Institute is being built in St. John's. We can add to that the $27 million or 60 per cent of the cost of a new fisheries college in St. John's. These can hardly be said to be partisan projects because they are in ridings not held by us and they are educational institutions. As everyone knows, education is a provincial responsibility, but there is a need for these facilities. If we do not do it, Newfoundlanders will not be able to participate in a meaningful way in offshore development. Yes, the money might come, but jobs will not be had unless people have skills. This is what the fisheries college will provide; it will give Newfoundlanders skills. This is being done with federal dollars.

I am pleased and proud that the Government of Canada is responding in this way. The Marine Arctic Vessel Research Institute, the fisheries college and the university facilities will make our Province—St. John's in particular—a key centre of excellence not only in Canada but in the world. We in Newfoundland had to be the best we could be at what we do, and what we do is concerned with the sea. Ever since our Province was discovered, our people have made their livelihood from the sea. This is what they know and this is what they do best. These facilities, largely paid for the Government of Canada in agreement with the Government of Newfoundland, will help to make our Province a centre of excellence in marine research and development, not only in the country but in the world. I am proud we are doing that, and I think it is important to put it on the record.

I welcome the opportunity the Hon. Member has provided by introducing his motion for debate. We on this side of the House intend to continue to respond to the needs of Atlantic Canada in transportation, in fisheries and in many other areas. Just the other day we signed a $63 million ten-year agreement with the Government of Newfoundland for further development of the Gros Morne National Park, including some funds for that park and some funds for the Terre Nova National Park. My colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), has also shown foresight in building up the infrastructure in those beauty spots in our Province. They will not only create jobs but will attract tourists in the long term. These are irrefutable facts which show the Government's response to the real needs of the Atlantic Provinces, and the Government intends to continue with that kind of response.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to my learned and hon. friend. I agree with many of the things he said. Many of the projects he listed are very essential ones. No one can quarrel with the need for a trans-Labrador road, for example, and others as well. But there is a concern which has to do with the small craft harbours budget where there is clear evidence of partisan abuse.

The harbour of St. John's, Newfoundland is one of the busiest inshore fishing ports in the Province. The Minister knows that as a result of the building of the synchrolift St. John's fishermen have no place in which to put their boats. Also he knows that when we were in Government we allocated funds to provide a small boat basin for St. John's fishermen. To this date they still have nothing in the way of facilities. Indeed, they are worse off because they were displaced by the synchrolift. The President of the Newfoundland Fisheries and Allied Workers Union wired the Minister a few days ago, bringing this matter to his attention. Why have funds not been included to provide badly needed facilities in St. John's for inshore fishermen? There are over 120 of them and they have no place to tie up their boats, to handle their fish or for shelter in storms. Would the Minister please address that question? It would go a long way toward reducing the charge that there is partisanship at work in the allocation of moneys under the small craft harbours budget.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to address spending as a whole. I mentioned the fisheries college and the Marine Arctic Vessel Research Institute, both of which are in St. John's. I could mention other amounts to be spent on the Avalon Peninsula and in St. John's as well.

The point of my hon. friend is well taken. It is a project to which I am certainly very sympathetic. It needs to be done. There are a lot of fishermen in the St. John's area. Sometimes people do not think of St. John's as a fishing port. They think of it as a transport port, one of the great ports in Canada, but they do not necessarily think of it as a fishing port. But there are many fishermen in St. John's and I met with them, and indeed I want to say that I am very sympathetic to that project and would like to see it implemented. We in the House cannot always do what we want to do right away. This is a project, though, that I think we should implement and I certainly commit myself to try to get the funds to do it. It was not included in the present allocation, but hopefully it can be included in a future allocation. I certainly support my colleague's efforts in his attempt to get it included.

Mr. McGrath: I appreciate the Minister's support and I believe that he is sincere because he himself comes from St. John's and knows whereof I speak. Will he go one step further and make a direct representation to his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané), to allocate money now when the need is urgent so that our fishermen can at least enjoy some degree of protection, so they will have some place to tie up their boats, some place to handle their fish, things that are not denied to fishermen anywhere else in the Atlantic Provinces? Will he make that direct representation to his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I certainly undertake to discuss that with my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and I am sure that he will be sympathetic to the project as well. As I say, the money has not been allocated because there is not an unlimited supply of funds that would allow us to do all that we want to do at any one time. But I recognize that this is an important project, it is something that should be done, and I certainly lend my support to it.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on the motion before the House, especially as it relates to Atlantic Canada and my native Province of Nova Scotia. I would be the first to admit that the income disparity between Atlantic Canada and the rest of the country is slowly closing, but I am sorry to say that we still have a very long way to go.

According to statistics made available last month, real family income in the Atlantic Provinces was still well below the national average last year. While the gap may be closing, the average family income in Nova Scotia listed at $21,872 was still more than $5,000 below the national average listed at $26,748. Families in the remaining Atlantic Provinces fared even worse, and of course this is simply not good enough. Prince Edward Island households trailed the country with average incomes of $20,666, New Brunswick families averaged $21,155, and in Newfoundland the figure was $20,971.

While Nova Scotians can be proud of their showing, it is obvious from the figures I have read in the House that Atlantic Canadians made less than their counterparts in points west. These figures encouraged the Conference Board of Canada to predict that Nova Scotia will be a leader among the other Provinces as they eventually emerge from the current economic recession. In its February report, the Board predicted that Nova Scotia will experience 2.3 per cent growth in real domestic product this year, second only to Alberta's predicted growth of 2.6 per cent and almost double the 1.2 per cent growth forecast for the country as a whole. The Board attributes the above average growth rate expected for Alberta and Nova Scotia to developments within the mining sector and to the benefits from oil and gas exploration efforts in 1983.

This, Sir, is of course heady stuff. It is what dreams are made of, and all of us hope that these dreams come true. But there is always a little black cloud or two on the horizon. The same Board predicts that Nova Scotia will have a 14.5 per cent unemployment rate this year compared to a national average of something like 13 per cent, while its sister Provinces have much higher projected unemployment rates.

Of course, these are only predictions. Offshore developments including a build up of the necessary infrastructure must, I submit, commence soon if the 1987-88 target for production is to be met. This calls for sending in the $200 million range for infrastructure alone, and I cannot help but wonder if the federal Government has earmarked these funds in its recent budget so that these developments can go forward as planned.

I regret that the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) is not now present in the House. Today he announced $4 million for two projects in South Shore. While I agree that this will be helpful, Sir, it is really only a drop in the bucket when the massive dredging projects that are required throughout the length and breadth of my riding are considered. It is somewhat regrettable that we as Members of the Opposition are not consulted by the Government when it plans for projects of this type within our constituencies, because we could be helpful in earmarking some of these funds which are obviously available.

One of the clouds on the horizon is the concern expressed by business and transportation industry officials over federal moves to reduce or eliminate subsidies on freight shipped within the region or to other Provinces, and I am glad that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is present in the House because I realize that this is a matter which is very close to his heart. In fact, the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce and the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission at a joint news conference described as ominous the terms of reference for a planned Transport Department study on regional and westbound rates. In addition to altering the Crowsnest Pass Agreement, which will of course raise the price of feed grain for eastern farmers and place them at an economic disadvantage—

Mr. Pepin: That is not true at all.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, the Minister states that that is not true. I hope he is correct, but I am only repeating to the House, Sir, what farmers have said to me on the telephone. I have not only received telephone calls from people from the South Shore in Nova Scotia, but I have had telephone calls from people from Prince Edward Island as well. He will have to convince them in his own speeches that—

Mr. Pepin: It is the Hon. Member's responsibility to tell them a few things. It is his responsibility.

Mr. Crouse: Well, the Hon. Minister will have to convince them. They are still not convinced.

Mr. Pepin: The Hon. Member will convince them.

Mr. Crouse: No, I am sorry, I am telling the Hon. Minister what the people have told me.

Mr. Pepin: They are wrong.

Mr. Crouse: The Minister says that they are wrong. Well, they feel that this will place them at an economic disadvantage vis-à-vis the farmers of Ontario or the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. Pepin: The price of feed is determined at Thunder Bay.

Mr. Crouse: The Minister states that the price of feed is determined at Thunder Bay. The people are looking at this change as one that will give the farmers in the West an opportunity perhaps to use their wheat to raise more cattle and pork in their own area rather than ship it further east to the Atlantic Provinces, and Atlantic farmers will therefore face hog prices which will be cheaper than what they can produce. This is the threat that they are concerned about. I leave it to the Minister to make his own speech. I will lose my 20 minutes if I keep on discussing this particular point, though it is a very important one.

What disturbs the people even more is that the federal Government has called for tenders for a study and it has told applicants that they will be expected to examine, among other things, the effect of the complete removal of subsidies. Freight subsidies on goods shipped within our region dropped to 12.5 per cent from 15 per cent on April 1, 1982, and they dropped to 10 per cent on April 1, 1983, with a promise to give more federal money to the four Provinces for highway maintenance. Now, this may sound good in principle, but I would point out that the federal Government has recognized since 1925 that manufacturers in the Atlantic Provinces are at a distinct disadvantage when trying to sell to major markets in Quebec, Ontario and points west.

The subsidies have varied from different shipping points, but in my opinion they must be retained. I say this because Atlantic manufacturers with a limited market must export from the region at least about 80 per cent of what they produce in order to break even while an Ontario producer could, I submit, happily survive without exporting anything to the Atlantic Provinces. I would point out that a firm located in Ontario might well spend something like $100 to send a shipment of its goods to the major market of Toronto while the shipment of that same amount of goods from my riding to Toronto would cost $1,200 or more.

I would not like to predict the number of lost jobs in industries as a result of subsidy elimination for Atlantic Canada, but such a move would certainly cause some firms to go bankrupt in our area and would in effect extend the recession for all Atlantic Canada manufacturers. This is without a doubt the most important economic transportation threat to our survival within the last 50 years. It is this type of threat, real or imagined, which keeps our industries on tenterhooks while curtailing the establishment of new industries which would depend on central Canadian markets for some of their sales. These proposals affect all industries, but I submit they hit hardest at our farming community.

In the Town of Bridgewater, Nova Scotia, we hold every summer one of the largest agricultural exhibitions in the Province. This affords me, as a Member of Parliament, the opportunity to meet with my farming constituents and they have told me that a broader range of farm credit policy and financial instruments are needed to provide farmers the flexibility and security required to undertake long-term planning. In fact, the young farmers are the most important of all, those with very little equity who made substantial investments in the late 1970s. They are especially vulnerable today to the instabilities which are presently being experienced.

It is estimated that more than 10 per cent of the farmers in Nova Scotia today are facing substantial financial difficulties as a result of current depressed commodity prices. Half of these farmers are in very critical financial trouble at the present time. The failure to find a solution to the dilemma of these farmers will not only result in increased hardship today, but it will also aggravate the long-term problem of transferring ownership of Nova Scotia farms to a new generation of farmers. In fact, some farmers have expressed concern to me that their annual net income is not sufficient to pay for the interest on capital investment. This, of course, is understandable when you realize that the minimum capital requirement to start a viable farm enterprise today has risen to approximately a quarter of a million dollars. There is a need for policies to enable producers better to cope with problems of fluctuating cash flow, especially in the early years of farming.

Perhaps the Government should consider the leasing of land to new farmers with a provision for eventual purchase. An interest rate stabilization program would also be helpful. What I wish to stress is that our farmers, who are the backbone of this country, require more consideration from Goverment planners than they are receiving at the present time.

It is not only our farmers in Nova Scotia who are facing economic difficulties. In spite of Mr. Kirby's recommendations, our fishermen are facing not only economic problems but social and legal problems as well. I wish to bring a legal problem to the attention of this Government. I do so this afternoon more in sorrow than in anger. I refer to the unfortunate burning and sinking of two Department of Fisheries and Oceans chartered fisheries patrol ships in West Pubnico on Wednesday, May 11. I raised this issue on May 12 in the House through questions to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. De Bané). Unfortunately, his answers left much to be desired and indicated to me, and to the people of Nova Scotia, that the lines of communication between the Minister and his officials are somewhat blurred and could be improved.

There is trouble between the fishermen and officials of the Minister's Department. However, it must be clearly understood, Sir, that it is not the fishermen who started the trouble. From discussions I have held with the fishermen and their wives, as well as from the large number of letters I have received from fishermen and from their wives in my constituency, it is obvious, at least to me, that the fishermen in this area have been unreasonably provoked and harassed. A 62-year old lobster fisherman, with whom I spoke on the telephone, has fished for 45 years of his life. He told me that this is the first time that trouble of this nature has occurred along the South Shore.

The fishermen have been provoked, laughed at and harassed for over a year by federal fisheries inspectors. These inspectors have cut off their buoys, taken their traps, snarled and cut their lines and left them with absolutely nothing. The fishermen tried to reason, they tried to talk, they tried to rationalize with the officers, all to no avail. The plastic tags for the lobster pots, which are something new in 1983, in place of the metal tags which were nailed to the pots previously, plus the lack of replacement tags,is one of the items at the root of the dispute. It sounds simple to you, Sir, and it is simple to me. However, when you have officers who do not seem to understand that these plastic tags can be lost and are fining the fishermen, this becomes a major problem.

As I understand the problem, all these men are asking for is the right to make a living. They are not pirates. They are not criminals. They are not Mafia types. They are not ruffians. They are hard working, Christian, family men who have been provoked beyond all reason. They have been trying for a lengthy period of time to get through to someone within the Department who will listen to reason, someone with common sense. But this, obviously, does not seem possible. They diligently tried to stop the harassment before someone was killed, but instead of reasoning with these men the Department put five more boats in the area and armed its patrol officers with shotguns.

Does anyone in this House really believe that this is the proper course to follow when dealing with Canadian fishermen? If they do, Sir, then I say to this House that the Government is unaware of the facts and that it is turning a blind eye and a deaf ear to the pleas of Canadians who, in desperation, under severe provocation, broke the law and destroyed the two patrol boats which symbolized their misery and frustration.

This type of action, of course, is related to the very motion we have before us, because it affects the productivity of my people. I would like to tell the House what some of my constituents have had to say. Throughout all of some 50 or more letters plus phone calls which I have received, I find the same thread of reason. This is only one of some 50 letters I have available. It was sent to me and it reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

I am a resident of Woods Harbour and also a fisherman's wife. I am writing to show my concern over the situation here in this community. So far nine of our men have been arrested on piracy charges and even as I am writing this letter they are arresting more. I am appalled at the justice system in this country. Only one side of the story has been told. The Department of Fisheries side. Every attempt of the fishermen to settle this matter in a peaceful manner has been turned down. Their last resort was the destruction of two boats leased to the D.F.O. If this hadn't happened it would have been lives instead of boats. This is where the situation was headed.

I would like to see a full scale federal investigation take place.

Since the beginning of the lobster season the D.F.O. have been hauling and seizing traps, from this area, tagged or not. Woods Harbour area was hit the hardest. The morning the D.F.O. boats were destroyed, the D.F.O. were armed and willing to challenge the men to a game of cops and robbers. They were given permission to shoot. The fishermen had no defence. Which would the justice system rather see? The loss of two boats which can be replaced or the loss of many lives which cannot.

The fishermen were provoked beyond endurance. They are hard working men trying to support themselves and their families. The D.F.O. is trying to enforce a law 15 years old, which should have been retrieved the year after it went into effect and through neglect on their part failed to do it. The fault lies there.

Now our men are charged with piracy. If they are convicted there is no justice left in this world.

I am begging you to try your best and do something for these men and the situation here in Woods Harbour. We are not pirates. We are honest hardworking people trying our best to make a living. We need help from somewhere.

Yours truly

"Mrs. Gilbert Devine"
Woods Harbour

The same lady also wrote to the Minister of Fisheries a very short letter, and I quote:

I am a resident of Woods Harbour and a fishermen's wife. I am deeply concerned over the situation here in Woods Harbour. I feel an investigation should be conducted into the D.F.O.'s methods of trap enforcement. The morning of the destruction of the two boats leased by the D.F.O. the RCMP advised them to leave the wharf as they were only antagonizing the situation. The fishermen were challenged to a game of cops and robbers by the D.F.O.

I was extremely upset by your statement against the fishermen. It is apparent you know nothing about what goes on in your department or you wouldn't be so quick to condemn our men. Your people refused to negotiate with our men. You listened with deaf ears and closed minds. You should be thankful it was only two boats lost and not many lives. If anyone should be charged with piracy it's the D.F.O. for removal of legal traps from the water and the destruction of these traps because the proper size boats were not used or the proper equipment. Your sympathies lie in the wrong place. Without the fishermen you wouldn't even have a job.

"Mrs. Gilbert Devine"

I could place many more letters of that type on the record but I will close with just a few other comments. In view of the comments made by so many of my constituents over a vast area, comments which reflect upon their very lives, their productivity and on Nova Scotia's economy, I wish to endorse the pleas of these fishermen and their wives and families for a full-scale federal investigation not only into what has occurred in West Pubnico but also into the facts concerning the fisheries officials who have apparently been breaking the law for some time through illegal acts against hard working, law abiding Canadians.

In conclusion, Sir, no one condones law breaking, but I say to the House that this rule applies equally to Canadian fisheries officers as well as to Canadian fishermen.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to remind my hon. friend and ask him to pass the message on to his constituents that the cost of feed grain in the Maritimes will not be affected by the western rail initiative, for the very simple reason—

Mr. Forrestall: Is that a promise?

Mr. Pepin: —for the very simple reason that the cost of feed in the Maritimes, Quebec and Ontario is determined by the cost of feed at Thunder Bay. That will not change.

Mr. Benjamin: And the cost will be higher because the freight rate is higher.

Mr. Pepin: The price of feed might be slightly lower in the West, indeed, but the cost of feed in the East will not be affected by this measure. Now, would he spend some time on the weekend trying to reconcile his views on the cost of feed in the West with the western Members of his caucus, because it would be rather useful if they could come to terms, the two sides of Canada, within the bosom of the same Party?

Mr. Crouse: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his intervention and his views, but in response I must reiterate one of the major concerns of the people I represent in the farming community is simply this: they realize that these changes will bring about a larger investment by western farmers in what will be a market close to them, namely the raising of more livestock by using their own feed grains. The fear of eastern Canadian farmers is that they will face a glut of pork and beef products on the market at a price with which they will be unable to compete. We are concerned that they will be driven out of their markets, if not because of an increase in their feed cost, then because of low-priced western farm products.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) on his speech. I was in Nova Scotia, in a constituency north of Halifax, and talked to farmers who raise poultry, eggs, hogs and whatnot, and they had granaries full of barley and feed wheat from Saskatchewan and Manitoba. When the Hon. Member is talking to his constituents will he convey to them the fact that if the freight charges on grain to Thunder Bay are increased, the increased freight charges for grain arriving in Thunder Bay will be passed on to feed grain users from Ontario eastward?

Mr. Pepin: Not true.

Mr. Benjamin: I ask my hon. friend if he is aware of that and would he be good enough to convey that to his people in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Crouse: I thank the Hon. Member for that intervention. I will convey that to those farmers I represent, but I am also going to convey to them the Minister's promise, on scout's honour, that there will not be any increase in the price of their feed grains. It will be interesting to observe just which of the two points of view they believe.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to listening to the Hon. Member's comments, especially with regard to the lobster fishery. I have some very close friends who happen to come from that area and are familiar with the lobster fishery. It seemed to me that the Hon. Member was indicating there was some justification for the burning of the fisheries vessels, that in fact the situation had become intolerable and the fishermen were in some way justified. Is that what the Hon. Member meant, because I certainly do not think that is what he meant. I certainly would not condone that situation.

It is well known to people from that area that there is a problem with poaching. it is well known to people in the area that the physical size of the lobsters is becoming smaller and smaller because there is overfishing. There is a need to cut down the number of traps, exactly the same problem faced by the salmon fishery on the West Coast. There are too many boats fishing for too few fish, and it is driving the fishery into serious recession, depression and perhaps extinction. The same thing is happening to the lobster fishery. When that fishery is gone, what happens to the livelihood of the people then?

Does the Hon. Member have any proposed solution to that kind of problem, because that is where the situation is heading if indeed the Department of Fisheries does not put a stop to the poaching and overfishing taking place on the West Coast as well as the East Coast.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) and I will try and give him a precise answer. I have to because he happens to be my Member of Parliament here in Ottawa, so I have to be fair in my response. But I question whether you will give me sufficient time, Mr. Speaker, in which to inform him about the major problems.

First of all, I would point out that I do not, as I stated in the House when questioning the Minister, condone illegal acts or the breaking of the law. But as I stated in my short address a few moments ago, that belief applies not only to te fishermen but equally to the law enforcement officers on the payroll of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. They, too, must respect the law, and if they did then this problem would not have arisen.

There is a serious matter of poaching but this has never been fully addressed by the Department. When the Hon. Member speaks about the Department of Fisheries' concern about conserving the species, he must realize that those close to the scene—and I speak now as a man who has gone to sea and who has owned ships on Nova Scotia for 20 years—we who are so closely associated with the industry, are much more concerned about making certain that any species of fish is not decimated. This is the attitude that the fishermen in Woods Harbour and along the south shore who fish for lobster have towards their industry. They will watch it a lot closer than the Department of Fisheries inspectors ever need to.

Lobsters are not being decimated. The stock in fact has been rejuvenated and it will sustain the present fishery. The problem is that the 15 year old law which allowed only 375 traps per boat was sufficient 15 years ago when boats were smaller, but now they have been enlarged for the protection of the men and they carry not one fisherman to sea but sometimes two and three. It is impossible for a boat 60 feet in size to earn a living with increased operating costs generally, and therefore they have asked for a review of that 15 years old law with an updating to maybe 500 or 600 traps per boat, so a sensible living can at least be earned by the fishermen. This is one of the major parts of the problem.

I submit that common sense, sitting down and reasoning it out with all the fishermen would resolve the issue. However, unless it is done, as stated in the letter that I read in the House, this fire will not burn out easily and more damage could be done of a physical nature.

The letters I have received indicate that a man named Mr. Stan Dudka, of the Department, threatened the lives of fishermen with a shotgun, boasting that he was the authority, that he had a gun and that he knew how to use it. A number of the letters—I cannot read them all into the record—have requested, "Please remove Mr. Dudka from the area or there will be more trouble". I hope this message gets through to the Minister and his officials.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Are there any questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have a chance to speak to the motion of the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), because it gives a chance to speak of the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program the Government has been implementing during these past few weeks and will be implementing in the weeks and months ahead. Of course, the $2.4 billion in the program is only half of the program. The Special Recovery Incentives Program for industry is something which will take longer to initiate because it is an incentive to the private sector. I submit that it will be just as important as in the long haul.

The other part of the motion which I found to be especially interesting involves the question of economic development in Atlantic Canada because, as Your Honour knows, since 1969 the area in northern Ontario which I represent has been under a DREE designation very similar to Atlantic Canada, those slow growth areas of our country, often with resource-based industries, where we have been trying to stimulate economic development. Therefore, a debate like the one this afternoon is of special interest to me as it would be to all Hon. Members from that area.

The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East called attention to the number of Government Members who are in the House today. I would just point out that the motion was put down last night. The Opposition obviously knew that it would put down this motion for several days. In spite of that fact, most of the time today the Opposition has only had three or four Hon. Members in the House. On this side, we did not know what motion would be put down, so it was no possible to have as many Hon. Members here. However, I am surprised that every Hon. Member from Atlantic Canada was not here when the Opposition obviously knew for many weeks that it would be presenting this motion today, because I know it does a lot of long-term planning on these matters.

I would like to deal with the question of partisanship in the Special Recovery Capital projects because I think there are some obvious disparities in the arguments put forward by the Hon. Member. Certainly the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) and the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey) have made very good accounts of the whole issue in the debate. However, I would also like to raise a couple of aspects.

It should be pointed out that we are discussing 100 Special Recovery Capital Projects. The minimum size is something like $1 million, but most of them are major federal Government installations costing $10 million or $20 million. Naturally, if there are 100 projects, with 282 seats in the House of Commons not every constituency or area in the country will have one of these projects. In fact, it is probable that it will be something like less than one in every three. We should keep that in mind.

Of course, long-term economic benefit has been the special criterion which the Minister has attached to these projects which are being implemented during these few weeks. It is important that the Government implement them in a fast, dramatic way so that the economic benefit in terms of job creation is there. We know that our industry is down right now. The economic turnaround is starting. However, it will take time for those industries which have been working at less than full capacity to take up the economic incentives and $2.4 billion in tax credits which were included in the federal budget and which will have such a dramatic effect on our industry in developing jobs during the next few years. Right now the Special Recovery Capital Projects will be very beneficial in doing that. Of course, they are located in many industries, in transport, in research, in vessel construction and in tourism.

I would just like to refer to two or three projects which have been mentioned here this afternoon in the course of the debate. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East and the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) have mentioned the small craft harbours allocation. It is important to note what a tremendous injection of money the federal Government has committed to the small craft harbours program. It is also important to note that $67 million of the $127 million allocated to the program went to the Maritime Provinces—$24 million to Newfoundland, $25.4 million to Nova Scotia, $10 million to New Brunswick and $8.8 million to Prince Edward Island. That should be compared to Ontario which has a population of over eight million. The Ontario allocation was $27.3 million under the small craft harbours program.

Some may say that Ontario does not have the fishery and so on. That may well be true. We do not have as large a fishery as Atlantic Canada but we do have an important inland fishery. More importantly, we do have a tremendous tourist industry which depends on small craft harbours.

I want to congratulate those people who work in the small craft harbours branch of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in the Ontario region because they work with a staff of about seven permanent employees and about five temporary employees. They carry out a simply tremendous program. If anyone said that a $27 million construction program had to be implemented with a staff of 12 or 15 people, it would be very difficult to imagine that happening. However, these people work in a very constructive and purposeful way.

Yesterday, in my own constituency, I announced a program of $1.84 milion for small craft harbour development. I was pretty proud of that. I thought it was a tremendous injection, certainly the largest since I have been a Member, for capital construction for small craft harbours. I would like to discuss it a little further. However, by comparison, today a $4 million small craft harbours program was announced in the constituency of the Hon. Member for South Shore and he called it a drop in the bucket. I hope my constituents in Algoma-Manitoulin, which has the largest number of harbours of any constituency in Ontario, will not hear his comments so they will not think the allocation we received of $1.84 million is not very much. It is certainly an important injection of capital.

It is obvious that the comments of the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East are simply not the case when we consider how much money has been allocated to the Maritime Provinces compared to Ontario. Over 50 per cent of all the boats in Canada are in the Province of Ontario. Eighty per cent of all vessels visiting Canada from the United States come to Ontario waters. Therefore, our allocation, by comparison, is very small. It simply disproves the argument that less funds proportionately are being allocated to the Maritime Provinces than to Ontario. The allocation of funds for small craft harbours under the Special Recovery Program is very important to my constituency. There were eight projects approved yesterday.

An Hon. Member: How many?

Mr. Foster: There were eight small projects included in the $1.84 million program. I point out to the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East that that is less than 50 per cent of the amount approved for the South Shore constituency and which the Hon. Member for South Shore called a drop in the bucket. I hope his remarks will not be heard in my constituency where we received half that amount.

We have a number of projects to develop the small craft harbours around the north channel of Lake Huron which is, without doubt, the best cruising and sailing area in North America. It rivals the British Virgin Islands and the Greek Islands which are the two most often compared with our area.

Just to the south, at the end of Lake Michigan and Lake Huron, there are some 25 million Americans who come to the north channel of Lake Huron to sail. It is unquestionably the best tourist opportunity we have for economic development in that part of the country. Not only are we attracting literally thousands of people and hundreds of American boats to that area, but we will be able to develop major new harbours as a result of the allocations given yesterday in Little Current. We will be able to carry on dredging in the Spanish River for that harbour of refuge, complete a new harbour at Bruce Mines as well as other harbours at Richards Landing, Gore Bay, Manitowaning, Gros Cap, Thessalon and Blind River.

These are all harbours which surround the north channel and which will provide an access for people to the water. As well it will provide to those tourists sailing in from American waters an opportunity to rest and buy fuel, food and accommodation in those many communities. This is not simply a convenience for the person who has a boat to go sailing on a Sunday afternoon; it literally brings hundreds and millions of dollars from the United States to that part of the Great Lakes. I would point out that even though it is a major injection of funds it does not come very close to the amount which is being expended in Atlantic Canada.

I would also like to comment on the question of forestery laboratories. In the City of Sault Ste Marie, which is in the constituency next to mine, a major forestry complex was announced a week or two ago. That complex is to be an addition to the existing forest research laboratory and will cost some $13 million. The Hon. Member for Sault Ste Marie (Mr. Irwin) worked very hard to secure that major addition to a most important industry of northern Ontario.

I would point out that the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East said in his partisan comments that all these projects were going to Liberal ridings held by Government Members. However, when one sees the Maritime Forest Research Laboratory located in Fredericton, $22.5 million has been allocated to that constituency which is held by the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) who is a Member of the Official Opposition and a former Minister of the Crown.

I suggest that this disproves the argument being made about partisanship being involved in the whole question of Special Capital Projects. What is more important is that I think Members on both sides of the House would agree that those major laboratories for forestry research are very important to that industry. I am sure it is as true in Atlantic Canada as it is in northern Ontario and areas in B.C. that major strides are needed to be made in forest research if we are to reach the objective chosen by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) and his provincial counterparts to increase our forest products by 40 per cent during the next 17 years. This will involve a major investment by the federal Government, and in fact the forestry Minister said that we would have to increase our funding from $300 million annually to $650 million a year during the next few years in order to increase the production of wood fibres to meet the needs of the future.

I cannot think of any more important factor in achieving that goal than forestry research. The massive losses from insects and diseases clearly demonstrate the important and vital role of research. I know some of the people who are involved in this research at the Great Lakes Forest Research Laboratory in Sault Ste. Marie and I am delighted that those facilities will be expanded. In no way do I detract from the importance of the $22.5 million to be spent in the York-Sunbury riding for the Maritime research lab; I am sure they have equal needs in that area. I believe there was the announcement of three or four labs during the past week and they were obviously not made on a partisan basis but clearly on economic and need criteria, as the Minister indicated this afternoon.

I would further point out to the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East that the funding of $18.25 million from the Special Recovery Capital Project Program to the Atlantic Veterinary College went into the riding of the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), who is a Progressive Conservative Member. No one on this side of the House detracts from that allocation. It is a project which has been waiting for funding and I am pleased that it has received it.

Since the Hon. Member has suggested that these allocations of funds are provided on a partisan basis, being a veterinarian myself, I can tell him that if we wanted to be partisan, that same amount of money could have been spent on the Ontario Veterinary College. That college has just lost its full accreditation as a veterinary school in North America; it now has a limited accreditation. The Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Schroder), who is a Liberal on the Government side, used to be on the staff of the Ontario Veterinary College. That money would have brought the school up to full accredited status. If these projects were implemented on a partisan basis, the obvious place to spend that $18 million would have been at the University of Guelph which does not have full accreditation even though it has a long and distinguished history.

The review committee discovered that that college had inadequate lab facilities, inadequate classroom facilities and rundown office and clinical spaces as a result of inadequate funding. I would also point out that the federal Government has put up approximately 50 per cent or 60 per cent of the money for funding of the university. Therefore we must ask ourselves whether the Ontario Government has given it adequate priority.

I think many of the arguments made by the Hon. Member simply cannot be true. What about the three or four projects about which I have spoken? The motion, however, has given us a great opportunity to speak about the special highway projects, small craft harbours, veterinary colleges and topics near and dear to the hearts of Members from Atlantic Canada and those of us from areas like northern Ontario. We all face the same kinds of slow growth and economic problems which many of the outlying areas of our country face today. From that point of view I am glad we have had a chance today to have this debate.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the distinguished Member a very brief question. Does he believe in the final analysis, when all is said and done, whether major projects such as research centres, so vitally needed in the forest industry, the research centres in the Miramichi region, not altogether a Conservative riding, if you will, programs that have been in our budgetary process for many years, are not best funded out of general revenue?

In other words, is the Hon. Member suggesting to us that Canadians must wait until there is a massive economic crisis to get much needed help for the forestry and research centres? Is that what we are looking for? Twenty years ago the West Coast, for example, got an aquarium. An equivalent amount of money was promised for the East Coast. Are we only to go after these programs when Special Recovery Projects are underway or should they not be included in the ongoing, long-term process of normal Government expenditures?

I am prompted to ask the Hon. Member this because he is lamenting having received only eight special projects in his riding. I represent two-thirds of Halifax harbour. I do not even have one public marina in my harbour in spite of having pleaded for one over the last 15 years to 18 years. The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) has eight special projects for small craft harbours. I have a fishing community of 60 or 70 families directly dependent upon a wharf that is not safe to walk on. Indeed, the last 100 metres of it is, or should be closed.

Where is the justification for that, Mr. Speaker? Should we be waiting until there is a major economic crisis for a Special Recovery Program or should not these major things that are the basis of research, medical research not being the least of them, forestry research and mining, not be part of the ongoing budgetary process of Government?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member poses a couple of questions. One aspect I find important in the Hon. Member's question is that we tend to get more of the big projects, such as I have outlined today in large centres, not in the small communities. For example, in my constituency there is one project with eight locations. Even that is a relatively small amount of money compared to the costs for big veterinary colleges or forestry laboratories. But thank heaven there are projects of that type which can be implemented and that have a long-term economic spin-off.

With regard to the second part of the Hon. Member's question, I would not say that we are doing projects now that have been in the wings. Some of them have been in the wings for some time, such as the Atlantic Veterinary College, because we could not get agreement. We still do not have an agreement from the Provinces for funding but at least we have a firm commitment of money. Nearly all of these projects were projects that were in the pipeline two or three years down the road and have been brought forward. I think that is the economic wisdom of the budget in taking those projects which were going to be built two or three years from now and building them now while we have slack in the economy, unemployed construction workers and the plant and capacity to do them. Many of these people will be facing unemployment benefits and so on. If we do those projects now we can give an immediate injection of job creation with economic benefits later on. It may mean there will not be so much money to spend on these kinds of projects three or four years from now; if we spend the money now, obviously we will not need them later because they will already be onstream. However, the economic benefits will flow from them. They will improve transportation, fisheries or whatever.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Are there any further questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): I am pleased to be able to speak in this debate on Atlantic Canada. I live 5,000 miles away, I suppose, from the beginnings of Atlantic Canada, yet I have listened today with great interest to some good speeches that have been made in the House. I have listened to some of the comments and questions. I think we have a lot to learn from Atlantic Canada; I know I have learned a few things today.

I want to read the motion again just in case some people have forgotten it. The wording is quite interesting. It reads:

That this House recognizes the need for long-term solutions—

I just want to emphasize the words "long-term solutions". The motion continues:

—to the economic difficulties facing Atlantic Canada and, although welcoming the injection of funds provided under the Special Recovery Program, rejects the manner in which those funds are being allocated, particularly the decision to use partisan advantage—

I underline the words "partisan advantage". The motion continues:

—rather than need as the basis for the provision of funding, and condemns the government for its failure to adopt policies which would create lasting economic growth with permanent jobs and investment in Atlantic Canada.

When I read that motion I smiled to myself, especially at the words "partisan advantage". Here are the Conservatives giving it to the Liberal Government for using patronage in Altantic Canada.

An Hon. Member: It sounds like the NDP.

Mr. Waddell: It is sort of like the pot calling the kettle black.

The last time I was in Altantic Canada was during the Nova Scotia provincial election. A couple of days before the election I was being driven down the street and the roads were all being paved. It was even warm under the car. I said to my host this was excellent. I asked if this were done all the time. My host replied: "No, only around election time". If you want to talk about patronage, you have to blame both old line Parties.

Mr. Pepin: Watch your halo.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister is suggesting that I should watch my halo to see that it won't slip. I will try to refrain, because it has slipped lots of times before, from being holier than thou. I would only be human—and I say this to the Minister—if I did not point out that we in the NDP get people criticizing us. They say: "If you get in power, maybe there will not be economic growth. The Conservatives and the Liberals are Parties of economic growth."

I have always thought of that as a nonsense argument, but all you have to do is look at Atlantic Canada. For the last 100 years there has been a chronic recession. You cannot blame the NDP for that because we have not been in Government in Atlantic Canada. The Grits and the Tories have had the power, the old line Parties. The people there have received the same kind of nonsense from both old line Parties. The people have received excuses and poor government for that period. I know there are other factors, but poor government and excuses have contributed to chronic recession.

When I look at the words "Special Recovery Program" in the motion before the House—and I have not had time to research it—I wonder how many such programs there have been in Atlantic Canada. In my lifetime there have been hundreds of special recovery programs to pick up the economy and suddenly make it work. The motion applauds the Special Recovery Program and worries about partisan advantage. In essence it suggests really more of the same. It talks about long-term solutions but does not really specify what those solutions are. It is really bits and pieces, the same kinds of hand-outs which Atlantic Canada has been getting for years.

I have to walk delicately here because it is not up to me as a British Columbia Member to tell people in Atlantic Canada what is good for them, unlike what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in the House today. He is prepared to tell western farmers what is good for them and that they will benefit, whether or not they like it, from changes in the Crow rate. Surely that is nonsense. It would be inconsistent of me to suggest that I have all the answers to the problems in Atlantic Canada or to tell Atlantic Canadians what is good for them.

I would like to indicate what we in the New Democratic Party can do and have done. First I will indicate one specific example and then I will talk about the general problem affecting Atlantic Canada, indeed all of Canada. I and other Members of the NDP have been active in the regional economic expansion committee in examining the work of Devco, the Cape Breton Development Corporation, which is responsible for coal and various aspects of coal development in that area. I have been in touch with a former Member of the House, Father Andy Hogan, who used to be the Member of Parliament from Cape Breton.

Mr. McCain: They knew better than to elect him again.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member should not worry because he will be back after the next election. He continues to have an interest in the area. I would like to tell the Hon. Member about one area on which we have been working, which I am sure he will support. The Devco officials appeared before the committee, at which point we asked them whether they were receiving many job applications. I am not sure whether the figures are correct, but they said that something like 14,000 people had applied for jobs and that they just could not provide them. We suggested that they should open up new mines, for example, the Lingan mine. They told us that they had applied to the federal Government but that there was delay.

What they were receiving from the federal Government was NEED funds for local development programs and so on. It was basically the same pattern of short-term jobs, clean-up projects such as raking leaves and so on, rather than real projects such as mining. The world market for coal is down now but it is improving. Devco just found some new markets in Korea and other places. They should be opening up these mines and providing real jobs for people in Atlantic Canada rather than being subjected to the hand-out programs of the Government.

We have much to learn from Atlantic Canada, but I have something to say of a general nature. The rest of Canada may soon suffer some of the recessionary effects that have been with Atlantic Canada for so long. I am referring to the high rate of unemployment which we now have in the country. This has been more traditional in the Maritime Provinces, in Atlantic Canada generally. It seems that a third of that unemployment is unemployment created by Government, by monetarist policies or by tight policies which have literally squeezed the economy and produced a lot of unemployment. It is purposeful unemployment. People in the Maritimes and elsewhere in Canada should realize that the Government through the Bank of Canada created a high level of unemployment.

As I said, I think that amounts to about one-third. I think the other two-thirds of the present unemployment is structural, that is, the result of a change in the whole structure of industry. We are seeing more robots. We are seeing more high technology and more office machines replacing secretaries and so on. This is affecting the entire country and will continue to do so. The budget itself predicted the unemployment rate at about 12 per cent to 13 per cent this year and again next year. It could even be worse. We will have to face the new society. We can talk about long-term solutions, but in the motion before the House there are in fact no long-term solutions.

Let me suggest a few solutions before I sit down. First, we need to retrain workers; all Parties agree with that. We have to go at it in a big way. We need more than just retraining; we need to give working people, in Atlantic Canada and elsewhere, some control over what capital is doing and what companies are doing. Often companies want to go through technological change, so they move, for example, from Atlantic Canada or from central Canada to the United States, or from British Columbia to Manila. What happens to the workers in these industries? They are thrown out on the streets. Some people say that more jobs will be created in the high-tech society. I am not so sure about that, because the jobs will go outside the country.

Other people say that more jobs will be created in the manufacture of the robots or the machines. If we look at the history of Canada, we have not really made machines. If we look at the mining industry in particular, we do not make many of the mining machines in Canada; we import them. We will have the same problem with high-tech. As the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) said publicly, we could have a major problem in Canada with workers rioting in the streets; at least, that is what the headlines indicated. We have to look at controlling the areas in which the companies will move. Workers should be given some say and be on the boards of directors. We have to talk about part-time work, a lot of which is in Atlantic Canada. We cannot have small employers paying full wages for part-time work. We will have to subsidize the part-time work, which may mean a new idea of a guaranteed annual income. We will have to make companies and Crown corporations more open, and we require some real economic plan for the country.

In my limited amount of time I suggest to the people of Atlantic Canada, and indeed to all Canadians, that we have to adapt some really radical programs. I am not afraid to say the word "radical", unlike the Conservatives and the Liberals. We need radical programs to survive in a radically new age. I know what Hon. Members opposite will say. I see the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). He wants to leave it to private enterprise. This is what Atlantic Canada has done for the last 100 years. Atlantic Canada is an example of where investment and industry has moved out. It is a wonderful place with great people, but we have not been fair to Atlantic Canada. The same process will happen in central Canada and in western Canada if we do not get a handle on the new high-tech society of the future.

I thank the House for the opportunity to raise that point and to say basically that some of the problems in Atlantic Canada require long-term solutions, as do those in the rest of the country.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in this debate which will either close with my words or the clock, one or the other, by 5 p.m.

I listened with interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I understand his traditional, doctrinaire approach. He was not trying to be condescending to Atlantic Canada; he tried to be fair in his way.

Since I come from Atlantic Canada, let me indicate that we are sort of a test tube of a mixed economy situation. We have had the philosophy of private enterprise. We are small and have had to compete against central Canadian markets. We are supposedly the wharf of the Atlantic, but with the rates on Atlantic shipping sometimes we do not obtain the benefit of our geographical position. We in Atlantic Canada have had by circumstance and by reality a mix of the private sector with the public sector and that is one reason we have survived.

• (1640)

In these closing minutes before five o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I want to address my remarks to one of the matters that has been touched upon by all of the Members from Atlantic Canada who have spoken today. That is the Maritime Freight Rates Act which, in our opinion, is our symbolic Crow. As in other parts of Canada, there has been concern about fundamental change to the Crow legislation.

Before I get into that, I would like to compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for Darmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), in whose name this resolution is put. As Members know, today is what is called supply day, a day when the Opposition can pick a topic and debate it. It serves as a substitution for discussion of estimates in Committee of the Whole and it affords an opportunity for Members to debate and express their points of view and points of interest. Frankly, it would be much more real if there was to be a vote at the end of the motion. This is one procedure where there is debate without a vote.

The Hon. Member's resolution is so general and so good that I would think that if it was to be voted on, as long as it did not bring down the Government, I believe that almost anyone would be prepared to vote for it. The motion reads:

> That this House recognizes the need for long-term solutions to the economic difficulties facing Atlantic Canada and, although welcoming the injection of funds provided under the Special Recovery Program, rejects the manner in which those funds are being allocated particularly the decision to use partisan advantage rather than need as the basis for the provision of funding, and condemns the Government for its failure to adopt policies which would create lasting economic growth with permanent jobs and investment in Atlantic Canada.

I certainly subscribe to that whole-heartedly.

I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to take any time talking about what other Members have talked about, the partisan nature of the allocation of the Special Recovery Capital Projects. I think that that topic has been covered very well. I agree with my friend from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who said that the need is for the creation of permanent jobs.

The resolution says that lasting economic growth is required. That is the subject I wish to discuss because there can be much pump priming and porkbarrelling and as many press announcements of Special Recovery Capital Projects which will last a finite time to provide much needed employment in a time of economic difficulty, and those are good; but they are just the old provisional, proverbial, band-aid approaches.

I compliment the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East and the Members for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) and South Shore (Mr. Crouse) in particular who, along with other Members, have contributed to this debate. They have focused on something that we in Atlantic Canada have but something that is under a real threat in terms of change. This gives us concern because we are not afraid of change if it is to be constructive change, but change for the sake of change and change that is stimulated and defined in the hallways of the bureaucracy gives us real concern. Of course, I am talking about the Maritime freight rates matter.

I think the timing of this debate is most interesting, Mr. Speaker, because there has been a preoccupation with western problems, be they energy problems under the National Energy Program that has devastated so much of the oil and gas industry of the land, or more recently and topically, the changes the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has brought in to, in effect, fundamentally change the Magna Carta of the West, the Crow legislation. I believe that now is the time that Atlantic Members in particular from all sides of the House must be careful that, among the larger issues affecting Crow and energy and the general economic climate, some of our specific concerns do not get lost in the shuffle.

I have a unique opportunity this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, to show you how something can get lost in the shuffle in the answer of the genial Minister of Transport. I will confront him with an answer he gave to a question I asked on Monday, May 9, 1983. I asked him that question in particular that day because that was the day the Crow legislation was introduced, although there were some difficulties getting it launched.

I asked the Minister a very direct question that dealt with having the Crow rate changed in a manner that would be deemed in the best interests of all of the country, not just in the best interests of two of the western Provinces. Even though that was western Canada's Magna Carta, I did not want to lose sight of what we in Atlantic Canada have, that old Maritime Freight Rates Act which goes back to the 1920s. Quite frankly, although it is not tied up in constitutional amendments, procedures and protection, the freight rate in Atlantic Canada, though it has been eroded away, is just as important to the East, philosophically and economically, as the Crow rate is to the West. As the Government plays with the big numbers in the West, the Atlantic freight rate might get lost in the shuffle. While the numbers in the East are not as big, they are just as important.

Because of that, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister a question that in effect dealt with the concern that his Department's study to review the Maritime Freight Rates Act had brought protest from three Provinces, and perhaps I will read the question. I asked:

> Has the Minister received the protest of four provincial Ministers of Transportation about the narrow terms of reference, very narrow timeframe, and lack of public input to this study, and what does he intend to do about this?

I rarely get the chance to dissect a Minister's answer after the event with information that has come to my hand. Part of the Minister's answer is as follows:

> Madam Speaker, my information is quite different. I understand two Atlantic Provinces have agreed, one has remained neutral, and one has disagreed . . . The studies and review of the nature indicated by my hon. friend are the type of thing we try to do together, namely, attempt to spend as well as we can—

Pay careful attention to this, Mr. Speaker, in view of what I will read into the record in a moment:

> —the hundreds of millions of dollars in support the federal Government gives to the Atlantic Provinces in matters of transportation.

He said hundreds of millions of dollars. Well, I will refer him to his own terms of reference for this study, and since we are on the topic I will do it now. The document I have in my hand is titled, "Terms of Reference, MFRA/ARFAA Subsidy Program, Industry Impact Analysis", Transport Canada, dated December 1982. In describing what is meant by Maritime freight rates, the terms of reference said:

> There are two components to the subsidy program—

As most of us here know, there is the intra subsidy for the select territory and the western subsidy outside the select territory. But then listen to this, Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer the Minister gave me previously. I do not believe that the Minister was trying to deceive me; he may have been thinking about global figures, but my question was on Maritime freight rates and the concern about losing that. Here in his own impact study it say of the expenditures on MFRA and the new one, the Atlantic Regional Freight Assistance Act, the child of the parent:

—subsidies are estimated to become $70-80 million by 1986/87—

I will not dwell too long on that topic because there are other things I wish to speak about, but when the Minister answered the question the other day by saying hundreds of millions of dollars, I was in such a state of shock that I really did not get back to him. I wanted to ask a supplementary question, which I did, and that is also how I will end my speech today. But the Minister's own impact study says $70 million to $80 million, and I hope that the Minister will have a chance to explain that.

• (1650)

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the totality, as Joe Clark would say, the totality of contribution which the federal Government makes to the Maritime Provinces. Hence the meaning. The maritime freight rate is but one part of it, and this arrangement which we have with the Maritime Government covers more than the Maritime freight rate. So I really think I was very honest.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I did not take issue with the Minister the other day, and I know he was not deliberately trying to deceive, and I did not intend to give the impression today that he was deliberately trying to deceive, but he is so gosh darn plausible and pleasant in some of his answers that he gives the wrong impression. As far as I am concerned, I was not talking about the totality of the circumstances, or transportation of all the Atlantic Provinces. I was talking, as my question was properly framed, about the Maritime Freight Rates Act, my dear Minister, and his answer, which is what I am coming to in the second part, referred to the memorandum of understanding. He suggests that because I have been busy at other things I did not really understand what the memorandum was.

I will get to my second part affer we get past the amounts involved, which is not hundreds of millions of dollars flowing into Atlantic Canada, certainly in freight rates assistance. I believe my friend has perhaps been oversaturated with hundreds of millions of dollars because he has been so involved with Crow. That is why I say we may get lost in the shuffle unless we speak loud and often on our concerns.

Let us go now to the memorandum of understanding and what the Minister said in his answer to me, that we do these things together. He suggested he had the support of two Ministers of Transport; one was perhaps a little negative and one was a little dubious about the terms of reference. I have in my hand, Mr. Speaker, copies of the letters from the four Atlantic Ministers of Transport. I will read parts of the first one, which is dated March 29, 1983. My question, of course, was on May 9, so these letters were already there.

This letter is from the Hon. Mr. Giffin, the Minister of Transport for Nova Scotia. He says in his opening:

I am very concerned that Transport Canada has recently called for proposals to undertake an MFRA/ARFAA Industry Impact Analysis. My officials became aware of the proposed analysis when it was brought to their attention on February 10, 1983 by a consultant who had received the terms of reference.

He goes on to say in the second paragraph:

The main thrust of the January 1983 Memorandum of Understanding between our governments is one of joint strategic transportation planning. In the M.O.U. we agreed that:

"through cooperation better transportation facilities and services can be planned and provided for the Maritime Provinces".

Then he goes on to say:

If a study of this nature is to be done it should be undertaken if the provinces assist in determining the objectives and scope of the work and are given the opportunity to ensure that the consultants' work adequately satisfies the terms of reference.

In effect, there is the same message from the other three Ministers of Transport. The Minister of Transport for New Brunswick, the Hon. Mr. Bishop, said in a letter dated March 28, 1983:

Dear Mr. Pepin:

I was extremely concerned to learn recently that your Department has awarded a contract—

"Has awarded a contract". He did not phone them to ask them about it. Here is something so gosh darn fundamental in Atlantic Canada yet they read about it in the paper, and as one Minister said, they hear about it when a consultant comes into their office. This is completely defying the memorandum of understanding which the Minister referred me to in his answer that day in May when he said "We do things together". Not one of these letters said they did it together. They were informed after the fact.

Mr. Bishop points out in his letter:

I was extremely concerned to learn recently that your Department has awarded a contract for a study of freight subsidies paid under the Maritime Freight Rates Act and Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act without permitting the traditional and appropriate involvement by provincial representatives.

That is as clear as it can be. There was one of this joint discussion, this co-operation, as in the memorandum of agreement which my hon. friend referred me to the day I asked him the question. I suppose he has been very busy on many things. However, certainly the answer he gave me in May, and I will repeat it, was:

The studies and review of the nature indicated by my hon. friend are the type of thing we try to do together—

Hosanna! We try to do it together, namely, attempt to spend as well as we can the hundreds of millions of dollars. I just quoted two letters saying it was not done together. Mr. Bishop, the Minister of Transport for New Brunswick, goes on to say:

I am further advised that my officials first became aware of the federal study when they received inquiries from consultants who had been asked to bid on it last month.

He then goes on to say in the very last paragraph:

It is critical that any analysis of their effectiveness—

That is the study.

—take place in a forum where the provincial Governments fully participate in determining the objectives, scope and execution of the work, as has been the traditional approach, and as we envisaged when we signed a Memorandum of Understanding a year ago. Therefore I request that the present federal study not be proceeded with and that future work on this matter be conducted jointly.

In effect, we have the same message from the Minister of Transport of Prince Edward Island who reviews the history and says:

Dear Mr. Pepin:

It has come to my attention that your Department plans to undertake, unilaterally, a study of the westbound subsidy programs under the Maritime Freight Rates Act—

On the second page he goes on to say:

—I find it quite alarming that your Department would proceed with a comprehensive analysis of it which would consider the "removal or partial removal"—

There is no doubt the terms of reference are definitely directed to removal or partial removal of the subsidy program. He continues in his letter:

—of the subsidies without consultation with or input from the Provinces.

In effect, the Minister of Transport for Newfoundland says the same thing, that there was no consultation prior to the awarding of the contract; and he says in his letter of April 5, 1983:

—the Province of Newfoundland in this issue has not been consulted and is deeply disappointed.

In the last paragraph the Minister of Transport for Newfoundland says:

I believe Transport Canada should reaffirm its commitment to joint co-operative transportation planning and commence honouring that commitment.

The answer the Minister gave me in May, Mr. Speaker, was reassuring; he had hundreds of millions of dollars to spend and "we try to do it together". Yet in his Department, somewhere in his files, there were these letters from four Ministers of Transport who were saying the direct opposite and chastising the Minister for going ahead unilaterally with a fundamental study of the Maritime Freight Rates Act in which the Atlantic Ministers of Transport were not involved, contrary to the memorandum of understanding which the Minister himself had directed me to in those dulcet tones which were supposed to seduce me, and did in part, until I received this correspondence. It is the first time I have had correspondence which is so directly contrary to the soothing answers and statements by the Minister on something which is so fundamental.

We do not have to have a study, Mr. Speaker; we know from Mr. Craig Dickson, the General Manager of the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, and Mr. Elwood Dillman, who is the Chairman of the Commission, from statements they have already given to the papers, and I know as an Hon. Member representing my area, as do other Members from Atlantic Canada, that there are so many industries—mine are based on the land; my friend's from South Shore are more based on the sea—that are so marginal. It may not be the hundreds of millions of dollars the Minister is talking about, but if that subsidy was removed, I can predict today, as Mr. Dickson and Mr. Dillman have, who are outside of this House and very experienced people in transportation, there will be industries which will go down the drain.

We have areas which are going to be adversely affected by the removal of a structure which has given us help through a consultant's report—and I can go through it. It is an Ottawa consulting firm. We are very concerned with the terms of reference.

My time is almost up and I come to the last part of my question that day when I pleaded with the Minister. In view of the fact there is this difference of opinion on how the study started, there is real concern from the Ministers about how it started. There was no consultation. Read the terms of the study and you will see it is very definitely directed to removing in part or totally the intra and external westbound subsidy.

I could go through all this in another speech, but I plead with the Minister to be a little more direct in answering the last question I asked him so as to ensure that there is a chance for public input in any study. I do not mind a study if the study is not going to have binding conclusions which are going to eliminate something which we feel is as fundamental as the people in the West feel about the Crow.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, the answer the Minister gave me in May, when I asked for public input—that is, public input from the people who are hurt, who are going to be hurt, not just Ministers of Transport behind closed doors—was this:

Yes, there will be consultation at least with the Governments of the Atlantic Provinces.

There has to be more, Mr. Speaker. There has to be consultation and meetings and a chance for Atlantic industry and Atlantic businessmen to be heard on whatever the report is which these consultants dream up within the closets of the bureaucracy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Section (11) of Standing Order 62, proceedings on the motion have expired.

Pursuant to Standing Order 2(2), this House stands adjourned until Tuesday next at eleven o'clock a.m.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Thursday, May 19, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pepin that Bill C-155, to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin(p. 25389).

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before time ran out last day, Bill C-155 is an abomination to the Prairies, to western Canada and I believe Canada as a whole. It strikes at the most inner parts of prairie economic interests. It could, in a sense, be better called an Act to say "adieu" to the Liberal Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and to the Liberal Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael), and to all Liberal candidates in the west in the next federal election. It could be better entitled "an Act to say 'adieu' to the Liberal Party in western Canada for the next 30 years or so". And it could be better called "an Act to make prairie people hewers of wheat and non-producers of meats and processed foods for generations to come."

It is an abomination, Mr. Speaker, to the economic interests in western Canada because its basic thrust is to tell the prairie farmers that we should all go back to producing wheat and wheat alone. Diversification is unacceptable to this régime and it is going to cost it, Mr. Speaker, as dearly politically as it is going to cost those of us who live on the Prairies.

As I pointed out earlier, a number of old meat packing plants are being closed in the West and are not being replaced. This Bill will only accelerate that process. It is well known that thousands upon thousands of western yearling calves are already being shipped to central Canada feedlots because of feed freight assistance, and Ottawa-set tariffs for moving dressed and live beef.

I would like to quote from a statement, Mr. Speaker, recently made to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about the Bill as it is now on behalf of western cattle and hog organizations. I will quote three brief portions:

> The livestock producer organizations in the west are completely opposed to the revised Bill C-155 under which government subsidy payments on grain will be paid entirely to the railways. This decision will do enormous damage to diversification and agricultural processing in western Canada—

• (1110)

Further down it says:

> The federal government's own figures suggest that there will be a potential reduction of approximately $600 million in livestock production annually by 1990 under the "pay the railway" solution. Further analysis in Alberta shows that by 1990, domestic grain prices will be artificially increased by $35.00 per long tonne relative to export returns and that this will be sufficient to cause a reduction of 60 per cent in hog and cattle feeding. Such a reduction will mean a loss of $1.5 billion in economic activity and approximately 6,000 jobs to the provincial economy.

Finally, it says:

> A subsidy paid to the railways to move raw product to other countries for feeding and/or processing is the worst possible way to encourage diversification and economic development in Canada. Its implications stretch far beyond prairie agriculture. It will mean reduced economic activity, lower exports and ultimately higher food prices for consumers.

On the question of the proposed $651 million per annum subsidy to the railways, I previously mentioned that the railways have already been given in effect downtown western Canada by Ottawa. Even Carl Snavely, who has been commissioned by Liberal Governments numerous times to determine the actual cost of moving grain, has stated that the Bill is too generous to the railways. They will receive 100 per cent of their long-run variable costs. We have seen with VIA Rail what this can mean in terms of enriching the railways unjustly.

I guess I am out of time, Mr. Speaker. The Prairies will not accept this cross of thorns. The Prairies are well aware that they have been used only as a whipping boy at election time by this Government for too long and it is going to stop at the next election.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, it is the hope of the men and women who work in agriculture in my area to be able to lead good family lives. This Bill and the political high jinks that have gone along with it pose a bigger and more dangerous threat to that way of life than anything I have seen since coming into this House over ten years ago. Grain policy, Mr. Speaker, should be as simple as possible and as close to "grow it and sell it" as you can get.

The old grain rate was simplicity itself. One half a cent per tonne mile for wheat and flour on the Prairies to the Lakehead, later expanded to other ports and other grains and grain products. The new formula is almost beyond belief. It uses language such as this: "The percentage to be borne by the Government of Canada for the crop year is equal to the quotient expressed as a percentage obtained by dividing", etc., "less an amount equal to the CN adjustment in respect of the year, plus or minus the total of the interim adjustment for the current crop year by", etc. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, who can understand that?

Mr. Pepin: I do.

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): The confusion and complexity of this Bill is almost mind boggling. The blended rate is the rate combining the new freight rate below the 31.1 million tonne export limit and the freight rate above the 31.1 million tonne export limit. We can easily remove this problem by removing the 31.1 million tonne limit, which is nothing but a disincentive to increased production.

Now, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has advanced some very important points, one being that producers must be guaranteed an efficient, cost effective and reliable grains transportation system. When we look at the Bill, what does it do for us? There are no lower railway performance guarantees for the first three years. Under Clause 21, there will be only a notional scheme. I want to return to the word "notional". Sanctions to the railways will only be tallied and not levied. Also the chance to implement railway performance guarantees must pass parliamentary review. For three years the railways will get a free ride. I think Jack Horner must be smiling.

• (1115)

Our only hope in this whole business is the grain transportation Administrator. For a moment, let us consider how the Act treats him. First, a Senior Grain Transportation Committee must be set up. These people will be picked from a hide-bound institutional maze known as the Canadian grain industry. Under them will be the Grain Transportation Administrator. Clause 13 of the Bill states:

> The Governor in Council may appoint an officer to be known as the Grain Transportation Agency Administrator to hold office during pleasure for a term not exceeding seven years.

These words, "to hold office during pleasure", mean that one is just a phone call away from dismissal. This man will be without any security of tenure. He will be at the whim of every senior bureaucrat and every senior grain trade member in Canada.

We can go further and consider some of the "mays" and "shalls" of this man's duties. Clause 17 states that the Administrator may do thus and so with the concurrence of the Committee, that is, the Senior Grain Transportation Committee; he may make recommendations to the Minister and he may provide advice. However, the one I like is found in Clause 17(f) which states that the Administrator may, in consultation with the Committee, review the role of the Committee with a view to identifying means of strengthening that role. Talk about the executive electing the executive!

If we consider some of the "shalls", as found in Clause 18(1)(e), the Administrator shall develop a notional scheme of sanctions applicable to the railway companies, and then a system of awards and penalties.

Everyone is familiar with the notions counter in drugstores or in Woolworths, supplying hairpins, bobbypins, nail files, etc. My dictionary defines "notional" as being "theoretical, speculative, existing in the mind only, imaginary, or given to foolish or fanciful moods or ideas". I have never seen this word used in previous legislation. Add that to a "notional scheme". My dictionary defines "scheme" as being a plan or program of action, especially a crafty or secret one.

It is interesting to note at the end of the schedule that, while we have to toil with the metric confusion, the railways can still use what I suppose are "as the Crow flies" miles, statute ones at that.

There are other methods and means of providing efficiency and cost effectiveness to rail and grain transportation which the Bill does not address. A few days ago, the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) asked, "Does grain really have to be weighed six times and graded three times before it is exported?" Maybe with the old box cars it was necessary, but it is certainly not with the new hoppers. Why do the railways operate on a 24 hours a day, seven-day-a week schedule? The grain companies, especially the terminals, normally operate five days a week, sometimes with eight-hour shifts, sometimes with 16-hour shifts. It is impossible to mesh these two systems. Reduction in turnaround time of our hopper cars of one day would be the saving of the equivalent of 1,000 hoppers, some $73 million. These shortcomings will remain.

We should take a good look at what our competition in the United States is doing. Almost revolutionary rail and grain handling change is taking place. More interchange agreements are needed. Concerning use of producer hopper cars, there is a potential savings of $600 per car to the producer.

The Bill will freeze us to the status quo, to our present system, for all time, and what do we have? The old rail lines and old elevators in western Canada have been written off years ago. Even the gravel ballast under the rails depreciates at the rate of 4 per cent a year. These structures rightfully belong to the taxpayers of Canada. Producers simply do not believe the railroad costing figures, yet we are asked to increase our expenses greatly without any assurance of increased returns. Canada has always said to our grain customers, "If you want our wheat, come on over and sit down and maybe we will sell you a little bit". We have never allowed one bushel of wheat to leave this country unsold. Surely this is not the way to merchandise in 1983.

I realize that this Bill does not look beyond the accumulation of our grain at terminal position, but with the billions of dollars to be spent under this legislation, surely we could try selling it from at least one overseas terminal even if it was necessary to build one, which I doubt. Let us put it where the customers are, such as in Singapore, Hong Kong or Rotterdam. Not all customers want nor can they handle grain in million-bushel lots by shiploads.

We need a crash program on research for hardy winter wheats if the Government is serious about increasing the returns to our western grain industry. As has already been indicated, the railways will receive under Bill C-155 100 per cent of their long-run variable costs, 20 per cent overhead and 20.5 per cent of their contributions to capital. By 1990, the railways will receive a 1000 per cent increase in the freight rate compared to today. There is no provision to reduce the rates if costs should fall and even CP Rail must like this.

I ask the Minister not to freeze us to this deal. Give us the freedom of choice as to where the so-called Crow benefit goes so that our system can evolve. Let the producers decide if they want the Crow benefit payment personally or if they want it paid directly to the railways. The mechanics can be worked out. It is simple to do for Board grains and for domestically used grains it is simpler than the present formula in the Bill.

It is hard to find any humour in this Bill. However, with the many references to the Crow rate being part of the Magna Carta of the West, and the shoddy, off-handed manner of its handling by the Government, I am reminded of the setting of the original signing of the Magna Carta, the beautiful little meadow at Runnymede just outside of Windsor in England. It was an incident when the tour buses were rolling in at approximately noon one day. The official guide was well into his pitch saying, "It was 1215 when King John was forced to sign the Magna Carta by the barons of England". One of the tourists, I suppose from Texas, looked at his watch and said: "If the bus driver had not taken the wrong turn we would have been here in time to see that"! The Government is treating our Magna Carta the same way.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, ten minutes to debate the principle of a Bill of the importance of C-155 just gives one enough time really to clear one's throat. Let me begin my remarks by quoting for the Hon. Minister a sentence from a very famous piece of writing:

> There is nothing more difficult to take in hand, more perilous, or more uncertain in its success, than to take the lead in the introduction of a new order of things, because the innovator has for enemies all those who have done well under the old conditions and lukewarm defenders in those who may do well under the new.

Of course, that sentence comes from a person whom the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) admires so much, Machiavelli, from "The Prince".

In the words of the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), Bill C-155 is the third major piece of legislation that has been presented in this session of Parliament, which is the longest session on record. We hear the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) list the dozens of pieces of legislation that he is so proud of every time he rises to speak in the Chamber. Yet his colleagues say that this is the third piece of major legislation that the Government has submitted in this session.

The Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) comes into the House to give notice of moving closure on this Bill. We have had 651 minutes of debate on principle. Here we are, struggling against closure on a Bill of this impact and importance to the nation.

I am from British Columbia and some may wonder why I am so interested in this Bill. I am interested in it because it touches the whole food chain of Canada.

What is this Government up to? It has Bill C-85, the Canagrex Bill, on the backburner. It is threatening to impose closure and rush that Bill through Parliament. Now this Government comes in with Bill C-155 and immediately puts closure on something of this magnitude and importance to every single person and region in Canada. There is something very wrong with the attitude of a Government that wants to abuse and use its arrogance and power in that manner, Mr. Speaker.

I have in my hands a couple of communications from interested parties in British Columbia who want to support Bill C-155. They urge Members from British Columbia to support Bill C-155 as presently presented to this country and to this Parliament. One is a telex from British Columbia Forest Products Ltd., signed by Mr. K. P. Benson, President and Chief Executive Officer. This telex urges Conservative Members from British Columbia to support Bill C-155 in its present form. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, and through you I will tell Mr. Benson and the British Columbia Forest Products, that there is no way, as a Member from British Columbia, that I will accept this kind of lobby instruction from him.

How did I receive this telex? I received this signal from B.C. Forest Products, and so did every other Member from British Columbia, in an envelope from the Privy Council Office. It shows what kind of lobbying is being done by the Government to interested parties in British Columbia and from those interested parties back to elected Members.

I have another letter of different vein from Columbia Containers Limited, Vancouver, B.C. a very interesting small business that utilized some abandoned elevator equipment and legs and put in some silos. This company started to fill the empty containers leaving the port of Vancouver with malt from the Prairies because we do not have enough export container traffic. That was an advantage which the Crow rate in its present form gave Columbia Container. This company started to fill a market void and it is very concerned that if the Crow rate does not stay the same and Bill C-155 is not passed, it will probably have to move its operation or reduce tonnage.

I can understand that company's concern, but I am also in the world of business. I have been changing my mode of operation all my life. Transportation is something that affects every single business in the world. As soon as a mode changes, as soon as something improves, you either lose a market or you gain a market. It is up to people in business to be sharp enough to anticipate what these moves are.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) was doing very well in western Canada. He was accessible. He talked, he listened and he was courteous. I think the whole people out there genuinely liked him. Press reports and statements led us to believe that the Minister was going to move on the Gilson recommendations. This meant a secondary industry could grow in the West, that once again our packing plants could become modern, our feeding systems could integrate with packing plants and we could move ahead and add to our secondary structure and strata on top of our primary agriculture in western Canada. This meant producers in western Canada would have a wider market. They would have more freedom and potentially more diversification. It meant that most industries could stabilize and rationalize and that something would happen down the road, that change would come in. We would break out of old habits and old chains and could start to utilize all that tremendous strength and wealth that we keep talking about here but do nothing about.

Then we had rumour of trouble with the Quebec caucus, trouble in Cabinet and trouble with the Quebec Ministers. They felt that payment to the producers was a threat to emerging and growing agriculture in the Province of Quebec. I have looked into that. I am told that there is no threat. I understand the Government has charts and graphs it is trying to show to the Quebec agricultural industry to prove it has a false attitude toward change. We have also had word that the Pools were against payment to the farmers and they want payment to the railroads. Frankly, I do not understand that. I think the bureaucracy of the Pools and the elected board of directors of the Pools are really not acting in the best interests of their producer members.

I was amazed to learn that both Quebec politics and the politics of the Pools favoured payments to the railroads. Then the Minister of Transport, who had gained and earned a measure of trust in the West, immediately reversed, almost 180 degrees, the pattern and plan of the Bill he was to bring in. He rushed the Bill in and there were not enough copies for interested Members. New Democratic Party Members and Members of my Party were trying to obtain more copies to distribute to very interested people in the Prairies. There were only 651 minutes of debate, in the Government's words, on the third major Bill in this session, and the Minister of Agriculture was up on his feet limiting us to ten-minutes speeches on something which touched every one of us in Canada. There is something very, very wrong.

Mr. Pinard: That is not true.

Mr. Huntington: He has given notice of closure.

Mr. Pinard: Ten-minute speeches are under the rules.

Mr. Huntington: Yes, ten-minute speeches are under the rules, but it is difficult to touch anything of this magnitude in ten minutes; one could barely clear one's throat on something as important as this. If the President of the Privy Council were acting properly, he would negotiate with the Leaders on the other side to suspend the rules with unanimous consent so that we could have 20-minute speeches, debate and questions. Then we could open up all the matters which are not understood, such as how the Bill will touch each and every one of us involved in the food chain across the land.

The Bill is a national issue. It is not only a western farmer and grain producer issue; it is not only a western cattleman's issue. It is not just the hog producer of Quebec who is involved. Every activity in the Canadian food chain will be affected by what we do with this Bill. The Government has a fundamental opportunity within the palms of its hands to put something in which will create not an industrial strategy but an industrial environment in Canada if the correct decisions are made on the principle of the Bill.

I am against the principle of this Bill because it has not used the House and its powers to discuss and debate it. There are various matters involved which are contrary to the health and wellbeing of the future of the nation. I see Mr. Speaker indicating that I am out of time. I am against the principle of this Bill. I urge the Minister to withdraw it, redraft it and put its subject matter into committee so that we can return with something that is meaningful and good for the country.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, in the brief ten minutes which I have today, as the previous Hon. Member just mentioned, there is hardly time to go into the depth and complexities of Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

The Bill is really an omnibus piece of legislation. It deals with the rail transporation system, with very rich western coal lands and with the statutory rate for the movement of grain. Although people may say that some of the leadership of prairie farm organizations do not represent grassroot farmers at the local producing level, I think farmers are saying clearly that they do not want the statutory Crow rate changed. It is one of the few subsidies western farmers are receiving.

With it being removed or increased to the magnitude of the plan of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) in Bill C-155, we are looking at about $1 billion being lost by prairie farmers. In terms of the prairie economy, it is much more than $1 billion. If we listen to agricultural economists, they will tell us that an agricultural dollar has a multiplier effect of anywhere from four to seven times. We could be dealing with as much as $7 billion out of the Canadian economy by the year 1990. A very heavy portion of that will be placed on the backs of western grain farmers. Although we in the New Democratic Party agree that there is a need to upgrade the Canadian rail transportation system and badly want jobs to put more Canadians back to work, we do not feel that the entire cost should be placed on the backs of western Canadian farmers.

Grain producers contribute some $6 billion to the balance of trade. Approximately 20 per cent of all wealth in Canada is derived from agriculture. If we want to upgrade the transportation system, it should be done with the participation of the entire Canadian economy, not just a few agricultural producers and farmers in western Canada.

I will not go into the history of the Crow rate because of the brief time I have. Back on February 17, 1982 I talked at length about the Crow rate under the borrowing authority. I referred to its history and importance to western Canadian grain producers. On February 1, 1983, after much discussion the Minister of Transport introduced his plan in Winnipeg. Now we see it reflected in Bill C-155. Between the time of the public announcement on February 1 and the time the legislation actually came into the House, there was clearly no consensus within western Canada on this Bill.

The Minister of Transport promised three additional changes to the initial February 1 announcement. First he promised that payments would go directly to the railways; second, that the cost of transportation would be linked to grain prices; and third, that there would be an increased number of commodities under the new statutory rate. I believe it was a very devious and Machiavellian plot by the Minister of Transport.

The promises were made but when the legislation came before the House they were not all reflected in Bill C-155. It is true that within the piece of legislation the payments directly to the railways were included. There was some increase in the commodities under the statutory rate or what the Minister of Transport is proposing as the new statutory rate, but there are other commodities which will never make it. I will explain that in a few moments. The linking of the cost of transportation to the price of grain was not included.

The Minister will tell us that these promises will be brought in in amendments at committee stage. If the Government plans on pushing through the legislation as fast as it has already indicated in the House and if those changes are made in the latter stages of the Bill, the promises will never appear in the final version of the Bill. This will be blamed on someone other than the Minister of Transport who made the promises. I do not think they will ever see the light of day because the Liberal Government will bring in closure in committee and stop the process just as it wishes to do on second reading. Those promises have some very big holes in them, and I think the Minister knew that when he made them.

The NDP made a proposal to the Government, but we have not received a response to it. As I mentioned, Bill C-155 is a very complex piece of legislation. We asked that instead of its being an omnibus Bill as it is now, the Minister of Transport look closely at our proposal to break it into three separate areas. First, the upgrading of our transportation system is very important and we want to see that done, but it should be taken out of this legislation and presented in a separate Bill. The second area that should be taken out of this Bill is the leasing and dealing with the very rich coal lands in British Columbia, Alberta and other parts of western Canada. We should no longer be giving guaranteed annual incomes or such prosperous gifts to the railway companies. Third, we want the statutory rates split from this Bill.

Those are three very distinctive and separate areas of the debate which obviously go in different directions. We want an upgraded transportation system. In Meadow Lake in my riding there used to be a million-bushel storage for grain in the elevators. The hopper cars that have been purchased can go into Meadow Lake but cannot haul the grain out because the rails are in such bad shape that they cannot handle fully-loaded hopper cars on that branch line. Of course, we want an upgraded transportation system. The gifts from the coal fields to the CNR and CPR must stop. We want the freight rates maintained.

The Minister of Transport has heard that loud and clear. We in the NDP believe we should stop giving a guaranteed annual income to the railways. The railways should be paid for their actual losses for hauling grain. Payment should be made directly to them. When money is spent on upgrading our transportation system, or helping out the railways, there should be dollar-for-dollar equity for the taxpayers' money that is spent on the railway companies.

The message in western Canada has been loud and clear concerning the statutory Crow rate. We want the statutory Crow rate maintained because it is the only real subsidy, the only extra benefit for our grain producers. That is why it should be dealt with separately from the omnibus legislation before us. What the western Canadian farmers are saying has been heard many times by the Minister: "Keep the Crow, let Pepin go".

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am frankly astonished by the attitude of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and his Cabinet colleagues, and although on the other side of the House they are insisting that closure is not being imposed at this time, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), the most diplomatic Minister in this Government, indicated quite clearly that he would shortly be presenting a motion under Standing Order 82, which for all practical purposes would impose closure on a debate concerning transportation in Canada.

[English]

This is not simply the Crow rate as it applies in Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan. It is something that is fundamental to a national transportation policy. The Atlantic Provinces will be severely affected by this Bill. Central Canada will be affected as well. The hardest hit will be the prairie Provinces. There are some rather stupid results coming out of this in so far as British Columbia and the shipment of grain to British Columbia is concerned. These proposals purportedly only affect the movement of grain for export and the many controls and costs involved. Therefore, high-quality grain being shipped into British Columbia will naturally be hit.

I am going to put on the record, if no one else has, what the Alberta Cattle Commission has said about this Bill. Possibly my colleague from Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) has already referred to this. I will put it on the record in its entirety because it is an important reaction to the volte face by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and this administration, a volte face which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when meeting the western agricultural leaders less than a fortnight ago said was very much a change-about and a capitulation to certain vested interests and the Quebec caucus. The Quebec caucus was under pressure from its farmers because the Quebec provincial Government has embarked upon a distortion of the raising of beef in this country by outsized subsidies, then insisting that there shall be low rates on feed grain.

Over the past ten years in my city I have seen the closing of packing plants and the laying off of work forces, not in the hundreds but in the thousands. Unfortunately, that has been proportionately portrayed in all major western centres and in many smaller ones as well. What should be the heartland of beef raising and processing in this country is now in a very sad state. We do not get anything better out of it, that is the point. We sell a lot of cattle for export to the United States. However, if the western cattle industry is reduced, there will not be that volume of stock to sell to the United States. This volume has been traditional and will not in any way be replaced from Ontario and Quebec surplus beef. It is a fool-headed exercise to try and distort the development of beef in eastern Canada. That is only one of the results.

I cannot see loading down the railways systems with excessively high costs of maintaining rights-of-way to everywhere if it is only to haul grain. There must be some better way of moving grain, such as changing the elevator system. That is part of the rationalization. I find the attitude of the NDP and its agricultural affiliate, the NFU, to be tantamount to the Luddites in so far as the movement of grain and freight rates in western Canada are concerned.

Let us look at what the Alberta Cattle Commission says. The Alberta Beef Bulletin of May, 1983 begins with this desperate cry:

The Federal Government has announced it will adopt a 'pay-the-railways' solution to the Crow rate issue, despite the advice of economists and consultants, despite the advise of Dr. Clay Gilson who was appointed by the Government to advise it on Crow reform, despite the advice of its own Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin, despite the fact paying the Crow benefit to the railways will continue and accelerate the damage being done to the livestock and secondary processing industries in the West, despite the fact the Government is told Canada will get a less efficient and more expensive grain handling system for its tax dollars, despite, despite, despite.

Quebec has been integral in scuttling the Gilson and Pepin plans. Certainly producers and the Provincial Government are aware of the distortions and damage created by the artificially low Crow rate. Certainly Quebec is aware that, while increasing grain transportation rates would allow more market-fair prices on the Prairies, a 'pay-the-producer' solution to Crow reform would not change their feed grain prices. Certainly Quebec has been told that the anticipated increase in livestock production in the West which would follow a Gilson or Pepin type solution, would be exported and not affect Quebec markets. Quebec may not believe this, but the exports are already occurring. Certainly Quebec is aware of all these facts, and it is equally certain Quebec could not care less.

So Quebec has wielded its considerable political clout and the Federal Government has bowed to it and sold out the Western livestock industry. According to the Government's own publications, the Crow is costing the West $150 million annually. Yet the Government will move to preserve the system which creates the losses and will see a systematic erosion of the livestock sector in the West.

The last point I should like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that I do not think the railways should receive all the subsidies. A former minister of transport, Jean Marchand, was asked about the role of the railways at the Western Economic Conference and he insisted that they would open their books, but they have consistently refused to do so. In my opinion the railways must come clean on the matter of costs. I do not believe they can show figures. We have never had one iota of real information from either the CNR or the CPR. They have some excess feather-bedding around in their systems which they have charged up in the same way as they charged rail transport to VIA Rail, thus booming the cost of passenger traffic. Not one page of justification for those costs filed by the railways has ever been shown to us.

If there is going to be any benefit to the railways—and undoubtedly there will be—by the improvement of their facilities and the twinning of track where necessary and so forth, they have an obligation to come clean with the people of Canada and their customers. They must establish a trust between themselves and us. Before we pay anything they must exhibit a better attitude.

I am opposed to this Bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, once again it is with sadness that I stand to speak to a Government proposal. It seems there is a continuation of these things that divide our country but it is possible that the Government has never done anything to divide the country as much as this Bill will. It is ironic that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have been able to alienate western Canadians so quickly.

For a time a lot of residents and farmers in western Canada thought they had a friend in the Minister of Transport but at the flick of a switch he turned his back and walked away from them. It would have been far better if he had never said he was going to do something for western Canada. At the present time he has alienated everybody.

At first there was a division of opinion between grain growers and the red meat producers but now they have come together to object to the Minister's proposal. The President of the United Grain Growers would not attend the latest meeting with the Prime Minister in Jasper because he had already said he was not going to change his position. It is just ludicrous for the Prime Minister to meet representatives of agriculture in western Canada if he is not going to make some changes to the proposals the Government presented to them. That makes the producers in western Canada very, very angry. As well, it will have a devastating effect on the economy of the western agricultural community.

When the Government brought in the National Energy Program we warned it of the effect the program would have not just in western Canada but also in eastern Canada. That warning has proven to be true. Now we find the Minister of Transport proposing another program that will have a devastating effect on western Canada, a program which could be likened to the National Energy Program.

Several proposals have been made. First, there was the report of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall which was discussed at length. Then we had the Snavely report which was also discussed at length; and now there is the Gilson report. The three reports were presented to the House; all were discarded and the Government came up with its own proposal. This led the people of western Canada to believe that something would be forthcoming from the Government but these hopes have been dashed.

I have to warn you, Mr. Speaker, that 30 years ago grain prices were almost the same as they are today. The only way farmers have survived in western Canada is through their efficiency. They have made their operations so efficient that they have been able to survive. But I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that they are approaching the breaking point. There is no room for them to stretch any more. The cost of their operations has gone up about tenfold in the last 30 years.

Hon. Members opposite do not seem to realize that ultimately the western grain producers has to sell his grain on the Third World market. The Third World is $600 billion or $700 billion in debt and cannot afford the extra cost of the grain. Just the other day the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) pointed out that a lot of the Government's premises are based on $8 barley and $12 wheat. That is fine; the western grain grower could stay in business with those prices but when he has to sell to the Third World countries at a price they can afford, there is no room left. The world market sets the price for grain.

The Government says that the railroads are going to assess the farmer exactly what they consider to be the cost of moving that grain. This is something which I never did like about the Snavely report because it simply took into consideration the figures which the railroad provided. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), touched on that.

• (1200)

We cannot accept that, Mr. Speaker, because there has to be room in there somewhere for improvement. There must be a guarantee that there is going to be some improvement. For instance, when Dr. Hugh Horner was on the Grain Transportation Authority and he went out to examine what was happening on the West Coast, he mentioned—and I have confirmed with some railroad officials that it could happen—that there were 50 switches on one trainload of grain required in order to get that grain unloaded. To me, that is ridiculous. It is ridiculous for the CNR to pull their grain trains in, unhook its engines, and put on the CPR engines because the unloading facilities are on CPR tracks. That is absolutely ridiculous, Mr. Speaker, and there is no guarantee that the grain producer in western Canada is going to be protected against that. My goodness gracious, I would not be surprised if we could cut the cost of moving that grain in half if there were people in there who had the desire, the knowledge and were required to improve the system. That is what is needed. That guarantee must be in the system, Mr. Speaker. We cannot put our producers at the feet of the railroads, which is exactly what the Minister has done. He has turned his back on the western grain producers. We cannot allow that to happen, and to whatever extreme we must go in order to protect those producers, I hope you will understand we are doing it for their protection and we have the backing of 100 per cent of the western farmers.

I appreciate the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, of explaining this to you at this time and I hope that the Hon. Members opposite will be cognizant of what the real issues are—that the grain producers must have some protection and cannot undertake any extra costs at the present time because too many of them are going broke already.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a sense of déjà vu today because it was in an all-night emergency debate involving western grain transportation that I first rose to speak in the House of Commons. I remember very well that it had to do with the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. There was great indignation at that time about the Minister of Transport, the Hon. Otto Lang, having bypassed the Western Grain Stabilization Act, or having anticipated it, as I recall, bringing forward a policy which raised the ire and indignation of many Members on this side of the House, including Members from eastern Canada. I remember in those days—and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) will remember also—the famous LIFT Program, "Lower Inventory for Tomorrow". That was going to be the panacea for western grain producers. Actually, it turned out to be one of the worst programs which was ever implemented.

Mr. Mazankowski: "Lower income for tomorrow".

Mr. MacKay: It was lower income for tomorrow instead of lower inventory, as the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has pointed out.

I get the feeling as I stand here today, Mr. Speaker, that we are seeing another Minister of Transport, this time from the eastern part of our country, dealing with western problems relating to transport and the growing of wheat who will also find that his policies are exactly what was not needed at this particular time. I ask as an interested Member of Parliament, how will we monitor the railways to see that the vast amounts of money which they are paid are expended for the purposes which this legislation envisages? At a time when we are still undergoing a very fragile recovery of our economy, how is this going to help the western grain producers and, indeed, the heavy equipment producers who are going to be victimized by increased costs of transportation?

I was here in the House the other day when the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) pointed out, as I recall, that two industries with which he was very concerned, namely, Massey-Ferguson and White Farm Equipment, are going to be victimized because of the adverse consequences he sees as implicit in this piece of legislation. I believe many of us tend to look upon this as merely a piece of legislation dealing with the Crow, as the media and the public are wont to call it. It is really much more than that. It has to do with the fabric of our national transportation policy. The tendency of this Government to change and manipulate programs and institutions, often without a clear understanding of the effects and the proper perspective of the final product, I believe, is what is causing some of the hesitancy and some of the difficulties in Members of Parliament accepting this piece of legislation at this time.

This administration in the past has instituted many reforms in the fabric of our Parliament and of our country. Without straying too far from the rules of relevance, Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but remember, and you can look it up in Hansard, when the Hon. Paul Hellyer said proudly that we were in the very forefront of the nations of the world in integrating our armed services. This was something else which was going to be a great innovation, but 15 years later approximately I do not know of any western nation which has followed our lead, or whose military and armed services have received less attention than ours.

Let us look at the National Transportation Act which used to be such a cause of concern in the House. I believe the Hon. Member for Vegreville can correct me if I am wrong, but I do not believe Part III was ever proclaimed. We have a mish-mash of conflicting and counterproductive regulations across this country which continue to hurt the trucking industry very badly. Let us look at VIA Rail, which the Minister announced in the House with such high hopes.

Mr. Mazankowski: Again avoiding Parliament.

Mr. MacKay: Again avoiding Parliament, as the Hon. Member for Vegreville has said. After the high hopes which were held out for solving another transportation crisis, not involving grain this time but involving people, what have the results been of the much heralded VIA Rail? I suppose the kindest thing one can say is that the reviews are very mixed.

Now we are coming to yet another great initiative of this Government. However, the Premier of Saskatchewan is on record as saying, after looking at the details of the program of the Minister of Transport, that he would have preferred to leave the existing program in place.

There are many anomalies which continue to surface about this particular piece of legislation. I see the "Western Grain producer" had a front page story quoting the Deputy Minister, Mr. Kroeger, as saying that the freight rate is going to go up about two cents a bushel. Then we have the 3 per cent of 13 cents formula which does not add up to that at all. Apparently there must be two kinds of inflation in this country, consumer inflation and railway inflation. I believe there are a lot of things which must be explained before this legislation receives the confidence of the people of Canada.

We have to look at what our competitors are doing, Mr. Speaker. The western grain producers are probably, if not the most efficient, certainly one of the most efficient sectors which contributes to our economic development and our export sales. However, what do other countries do to protect their producers? I believe that in Australia under the Victoria State Railway system the farmers pay less than 50 per cent of the average cost of moving grain.

In Argentina, which is a major competitor of ours, effective October 7, 1981 the National Grain Board of that country provided free rail freight for grain from the nearest station available to the shipping port.

What does the European Economic Community do? They make sure that wheat farmers receive a direct subsidy of $2.53 a bushel.

In the United States they are paid an average subsidy of $13.81 U.S. a ton for wheat and $6.84 U.S. a ton for barley. This payment-in-kind program will provide about $11.4 billion in further support to farmers.

The problem here, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, is that this legislation is really a massive attack on one of the fabrics of Confederation. To put it in terms of eastern Canada, it is almost as if suddenly there was a dramatic change made in the guarantees which would provide water transportation to Prince Edward Island, it is that basic. It is almost as if suddenly the basic concept of equalization payments was questioned. It is compounded, of course, by the fact that the Government—and it is unfortunate for the country—does not have adequate representation in western Canada. Our Party does not have adequate representation in another region of Canada, in Quebec. These suspicions and these fears are fuelled by that kind of situation which exists in the country.

• (1210)

Don McGillivray, who is a very astute financial columnist, has an article in today's Ottawa Citizen which is quite relevant to this discussion. He says that:

—the Commons hasn't been shown the whole of the Crow rate legislation.

I am sure that is a matter of great concern to all of us. He says:

One key part that is supposed to protect Prairie grain farmers from unduly high rates is being kept back, only to be revealed after the Commons has given approval in principle.

That is a very poor way to do business, Mr. Speaker. He continues:

This secret provision is a link between the price of grain and the freight rate to be paid on the grain. When he brought in the bill, Pepin said this was an "important feature designed to protect grain producers from freight rates that would threaten their financial security."

Members representing Prairie farmers would, naturally, like to see the exact terms before the bill is given initial approval in the Commons.

The second reason for the present impasse is even more fundamental.

The proposed change in the Crow rate represents the attempt of a government to impose a historic change on a region from which it has no members.

That is the point I just made. He goes on to say:

The Liberals hold all but one seat in one region of the country—

The opposition parties hold all but two seats in another region of the country—

Such a polarized House deserves extra care by the government, especially where legislation concerns the established rights of that part of the country where the Liberals have no members.

It should move cautiously in wiping out something such as the Crow rate, which—rightly or wrongly—has been regarded as a "Magna Carta" of the West.

Surely the Government owes it to the House to spell out with great precision some of the effects before we pass this legislation. Let us not get into a situation such as we have seen with VIA Rail or the unification of our Armed Forces where the cure has perhaps been worse than the disease. Let us have another very close look and take as much time as necessary before passing legislation as fundamental as this is to our country.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in the short time available to me in this debate I would like to cover a few areas which I think are pertinent to the debate on Bill C-155. I would first like to register my full opposition to the Bill. It will drain between $600 million to $1 billion out of the Saskatchewan economy every year. That means roughly $600 or $700 for every man, woman and child will not be spent in Saskatchewan. It means less wholesale and retail sales in Saskatchewan. It means less jobs in Saskatchewan. The social and economic fabric of my Province cannot stand such an assault on its economy. In my district alone, Mr. Speaker, in the Port Qu'Appelle area, assuming a 3 per cent average volume increase over the next ten years, that would amount to around $3 million taken out of the Port Qu'Appelle economy. That is something that area cannot afford. If we are to maintain the local economy, we need that $3 million circulating and supporting the implement dealers and garages, the local hardware store and grocery store which in turn create employment in the Port Qu'Appelle area. In terms of its social and economic impact on Saskatchewan, this legislation is madness.

Why is this assault taking place, Mr. Speaker? The Government justifies it because it claims these old rates are out of date. In fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) calls us reactionary because we oppose what the Government, rightly or wrongly, feels is a progressive measure. Well, let us have a serious look at this. The Government claims that the Crow gap, the difference between what the farmers pay to move wheat and what it costs the railroads, is so great that the farmers must begin to make a higher contribution to moving the grain. Yet all these figures are based on a study that a certain Mr. Snavely did at the beginning of the 1970s.

I would like to spend a few minutes examining some of his assumptions because they are at the heart of this proposed legislation. Mr. Snavely admitted in his report that his figures tend to favour the railroads. At page 236 of his report Mr. Snavely says this:

> Our selection of gross ton-miles and revenue ton-miles as physical measures of the inputs and outputs of railway operations tend to produce results which bias, to the high side, the contribution required of heavy loading, long-haul commodities such as statutory grain.

To go into a little more detail, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Snavely used figures based on the revenue ton-mile basis for the movement of statutory grain to determine the cost of moving grain. Using that basis accounts for an average of 19 per cent of the workload of CN and CP. However, it accounts for only 9.6 per cent of the workload when car loadings are taken as the unit of measure and 13.6 per cent when loaded car-miles form the basis of measurement. In other words, Mr. Speaker, it really depends on what measurements you are using. Mr. Snavely admitted using the ones that tend to favour the railroads and increase the cost of moving grain. He could have used other measurements which would have drastically reduced the cost of moving grain. But that is not all. Mr. Snavely also determined, and I quote:

> Donations and grants were treated as common equity in the development of the capital structure.

What does this mean, Mr. Speaker? It means that all the public gifts and subsidies that the railways have received in the past are used as a capital expenditure on which the railroads have a right to a return. In other words, included in the cost of moving grain is a capital return on gifts to, and public expenditures on behalf of, the railroads. This becomes acutely insane, Mr. Speaker, when we apply it to the branch line rehabilitation program. Under this program public moneys were used to rehabilitate existing branch lines. How does Mr. Snavely deal with these public investments or subsidies to the railroads? He claims they are part of the capital expenditures and so therefore the railroads are entitled to a rate of return of some 25.4 per cent on this money. For example, in 1980 the public paid the railroads some $67 million under this program. Mr. Snavely figured that about $39 million of this is a capital cost. Therefore, he grants them a rate of return of some $9.9 million on that sum. In other words, he is allowing them a rate of return on money they never spent. It is public money. That rate of return effectively increases the Crow gap by some $37.9 million.

Complicating the matter even more is the assertion by the railroads that they should receive higher payments under this program because of the enhancement of the value of their assets through the payments under the rehabilitation program. Snavely supports this position. In other words, the more we give them the more we owe them. It is insane, Mr. Speaker. It is a rip-off of the highest degree.

The final piece of lunacy, Mr. Speaker, is when Mr. Snavely deals with those branch lines where there were neither public investment for upgrading or maintenance and where the railways did not invest any money themselves. He subtracts the amount the railroads actually spent on maintenance from the amount he says they should have spent to keep the branch lines in proper repair, and he calls this amount the maintenance shortfall. He then grants the shortfall a cost of capital rate of 25.4 per cent to arrive at a figure of $34.6 million for 1980. The total is then charged to the cost of moving grain. These imaginary dollars effectively increase the Crow gap by $34.6 million. Snavely has gone beyond granting the railroads the right to a return on capital which they did not invest. He now grants them the right to a return on capital which no one invested, as well as a claim for reimbursement of maintenance that they did not do.

The Crow gap, the imaginary amount which the farmers are supposed to begin to make up to the railroads, is a false amount. We in this Party cannot accept it. No farmer in western Canada can accept it. The first requirement, if the Minister is interested in having an honest debate on the question, is to have the books of the CN opened, and particularly those of the CPR, so that the public can determine what it really costs to move grain, and to come to some accepted definitions and measurements, again to determine the real cost of moving grain. When we have those figures, then we can sit down with the Wheat Pools and farmers' organizations across Western Canada and perhaps begin some serious discussions. However, as long as those figures do not exist, this exercise is an exercise of Alice in Wonderland, or perhaps it is really a ploy to give more money to the railroads at the expense of the economy of western Canada, Saskatchewan in particular.

We do not even know the effects of this proposed legislation. Concerning production of papers, on July 23, 1982 I asked for any documents the Government might have in terms of subsidies paid in the United States to American farmers compared to the subsidies we receive. My question was addressed to the Government as a whole and the reply was that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was not aware of the existence of the documents requested. Unless the Government has not conducted any studies on the type of subsidies American and Canadian farmers receive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. de Jong: I was just beginning.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I heard my hon. friend, who had begun his speech in the short ten minutes allotted to him, say "I was just beginning", and I thought he was beginning rather well. I am somewhat sorry the rules of the House do not allow him to continue, but those are the rules to which we have agreed. All of us have a few moments in which to speak in the debate.

There are some in this country who regard Bill C-155, the Western Grain Transportation Act, as being a subject which is somehow only of interest to westerners. I do not agree with them. At this stage of the legislation we are discussing a Bill which is fundamental to the country. If there is any country in the world which depends for its existence, its advancement, and its enhancement on transportation, it is Canada. If we were to consider the importance of railroads to the country in opening up the West, ensuring that the West became part of Confederation and, equally, ensuring that the producers in western Canada depending upon the railroads could share in the development of the country, then I think we would suddenly see dawning upon us the realization of the importance of the Bill. I rise today to tell my colleagues, my friends and, indeed, my political opponents on the other side of the House that the Bill is not of significance only to western Canada.

It is important to say that the Bill has its genesis in a number of factors. In particular, I believe it has its genesis in the fact that not only is there no representation from western Canada on the Government's side, that is, representation which really matters, but there is also a complete lack of understanding of the importance of this matter to western Canada.

Someone has described the Crow rate as being the Magna Carta for western Canada. It was the basis upon which western Canada's part in Confederation was given strength and substance. It has gone on for a long period of time. People will wonder, of course, why there is an outcry against the removal of the Crow. Let us put the shoe on the other foot for a few moments. In terms of Bombardier in the Province of Quebec, let us imagine that the Government managed to so arrange its affairs that there would be an increase in the cost for Bombardier, therefore jeopardizing jobs, jeopardizing production, jeopardizing sales by a large percentage over a period of years, the Government then demanding, of course, that such legislation pass through Parliament by the end of June. Could one imagine the outcry in the Province of Quebec if that were the case? Yet that is what is happening in western Canada to a business and to an undertaking which is basic to western Canada.

Could one imagine the screams of outrage there would be in the Province of Ontario if the Government decided to go into the industrial heartland of Ontario and by statute, by Bill, by giving notice of closing off debate, rearrange and change the Province's economic life? Could one not hear the screeches and screams there would be from the Province of Ontario?

If the Government went into Atlantic Canada and tried to do that with the fisheries, would one not hear some screeches of outrage, especially if the attempt were to be coupled with a threat that if such legislation did not pass through Parliament within a short period of time, the Government would use the rules to push it through? Would there not be outrage as well if, in the face of the importance of it, the people were threatened that they would not be allowed to speak? That is the kind of importance western Canada attaches to this matter. I said it had its genesis in the fact that the Liberal Party is not represented in western Canada, and I believe that is true.

One night the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) said publicly, within my hearing; "We have nothing in western Canada, and we have gambled everything on the Crow". That seems to be the attitude of the Government. The Minister says; "The words get the forum". It was taped and it was televised. It was a speech which he made with a television camera on both of us that night. It was therefore public. If it had been said privately, I would never mention it. If anyone is interested, call Ottawa Cablevision.

Mr. Pepin: Oh, I have said it in the West too.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There it sits. One will see the Member for Nepean-Carleton looking in disbelief at the Minister as he said it. I could not believe it. In any event, there it stands: "We have nothing to lose in western Canada, so we have gambled everything on the Crow".

What does the Crow mean? What did it do? The Crow rate, upon which people relied for years and years, meant that there would be a fixed rate for the transportation of goods.

Mr. Blais: Grains.

• (1230)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): For grains. It was not a flexible rate; it did not have any elasticity in it. There could not be any rubber rule involved. We used to have a surveyor whom we called "Rubber Rule Rabinzky." He would produce a survey which would fit any dimension at any time. He could do it within five minutes.

An Hon. Member: He must have been a Liberal.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I do not know what he was but he certainly had elasticity. As the Crow rate currently exists, there is no elasticity. That high input cost of production is fixed. As a result, this fixed cost was translated to have an effect on every other aspect of the cost.

What is the effect of this Bill? It says for the first time that the principle of a statutory freight rate is not to be retained. In other words, there is elasticity and flexibility and all those other variables. While some may say that this situation exists for other businesses, I say that not every business had enshrined in its legislation, for a good quid pro quo, that element of fixed overhead or fixed cost. This cannot be changed overnight. It cannot be changed by saying that it must be done by June 30. Is there anything sacred in change? Is there to be a change for change's sake or is it to take place with understanding? Will it take place as a result of an understanding among those elements of the community that are affected by it?

I suggest to the House that the Minister of Transport has done what no other politician has been able to accomplish. He has united the West with the East. He has united the West and the East with the centre. He has managed to have everyone in the country oppose him. He will be known throughout western Canada, central Canada and eastern Canada as the great unifier; he has everyone against him.

Mr. Thacker: I thought only the Prime Minister could do that.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We thought that only the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) could do that but he now has a rival.

That is the situation we find ourselves in today as we debate this matter. While the Government may have nothing to lose in the West, the country has a great deal to lose if the Government continues to ignore what is a legitimate regional concern in this country. If anything has been shown as a result of this debate, it has been the demonstration of the failure of the Government to understand Canada and those forces which bring it together and make it work. It has shown its failure to understand the differences so that it can reconcile them. This Bill should go.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with probably the most important Bill we have seen during this session. I say that in spite of the fact that we dealt with the Constitution.

This Bill deals with the production of food and the livelihood of those who work in the fields and raise livestock. Without food we cannot have a country. This Bill is doing more to destroy the hopes, ambitions and aspirations of those who produce food than anything which has been done in Canada in the last 100 years.

Last weekend I was at four meetings with grain growers, hog producers, livestock producers, processors and some consumers. There were over 200 people representing a cross-section of my riding of Bow River and not one person supports Bill C-155 as it exists. I wish the Minister would listen to that. Surely if not one person supports a Bill affecting the producers of western Canada, the Government should stop in its tracks and re-examine it.

It is being supported by the Quebec caucus but this is a western initiative. What has the Quebec caucus got to do with that? Why is it poking its nose into it? This Bill will not even hurt the Quebec farmers in the first place. It might help the Quebec Liberals but it will not help the Quebec farmers.

The Quebec farmers have a hog market now. They have their choice between barley and corn. They need not worry about the hog producers of Alberta and Saskatchewan because there is a potential market there as well which will not interfere with the Quebec market. However this Bill will prevent our farmers from obtaining this market. This Bill will make it impossible for the hog producers and livestock producers of Alberta and Saskatchewan to continue.

I see a Member from the Quebec caucus smiling. Is that your ambition? Do you want to destroy western Canadian agriculture? There must be something the matter with you if you talk like that. You are not talking sense. Why can we not try to build all of Canada instead of trying to destroy a part of Canada?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I invite the Hon. Member to address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I am addressing the Chair. I am telling the Member that he has no sense at all when he is trying to destroy one part of Canada. He certainly has no right to smile about it in the House. I say that through you, Mr. Speaker.

Let us deal with the Crow benefit. It was not a transportation issue in the first place. It did not concern subsidies either. It is a rate that was found acceptable when it was put into legislation and it has been acceptable for many years.

It was only in the early 1960s that the contortions became evident. When these contortions began to show up, the Minister outlined them very well and he knows what they are. First, the railway was not getting a fair return on its investment. That was the railway's comment with which many people agreed. As a result of that the railways were not maintaining their lines and carrying out an efficient transportation system. That adversely affected the farmers.

The third contortion arose when it became cheaper for the farmer to ship the raw material from western Canada than to process it. Processing in western Canada was being discouraged. Furthermore, it cost the livestock producers and hog producers money to feed their animals which created a disadvantage.

When the Minister set out the Gilson recommendations he pointed out these three contortions. The purpose of the Gilson study was to solve those problems. These problems would be solved if his recommendations were accepted. A total of $287,000 was spent for Gilson to find a solution to the problems. The Minister then changed that solution by cutting it in half. The vast majority of western Canadians would have supported the Gilson solution. Cutting that recommendation in half whereby the producer would receive half of the money and the railway the other half was a reasonable compromise, but the Minister has gone to the extreme and it is no wonder that he has lost all support from western Canada. Not one person from that cross-section in my riding, for example, will support Bill C-155.

That should bring home a message to the Minister. Surely he should withdraw this Bill and return to the Gilson report and perhaps even to the more favourable alternative presented by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who has suggested that we go back to freedom of choice, upon which this country was originally built. The farmers of Quebec, Alberta and Saskatchewan and across the whole nation could decide what they want to grow and how they would grow it, without Government interference. It is a freedom of choice issue. The Hon. Member for Vegreville has gone back to the very beginning, back to the people.

We would say to the producers: "You decide where this money will go; it is a shortfall in agriculture, but you decide. The choice is yours." Some may say: "We will pay it to the railway". That is fine. The farmer could get a card showing he paid the money to the railway and get the appropriate rate. Others may say: "I want to feed my hogs". That is just as much agriculture as shipping wheat to the export market. This person would get his payment. Another person may want to haul his grain to the feedlot. The choice is his. Why should the choice not be his? That is what Canada is all about, freedom of choice, not the Government telling people what is good for them, or the Government telling you what you have to do. It is not the Government telling you how it is going to spend your money. For once let us go back to the people and find out what the people want. The Government should go to the producers and find out what they want.

I challenge the Hon. Minister to go to meetings like the one I attended last weekend. I challenge him to ask the producer what he wants. The Minister will find there is not a producer—I say this with good reason—in western Canada who will support this Bill as it is today. The Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) say: "We have the Wheat Pool behind us". I say to them that they have not got the Wheat Pool behind them. They have not got the Alberta Wheat Pool behind them. I do not think there are five out of 25 or one out of ten of the Wheat Pool members who are supporting this Bill. When the Minister says they have 130,000 members of the Wheat Pools, that is balderdash. It is nonsense.

When I mainstreeted in my riding last year, farmers came to me and one out of ten said: "Pay the money to the railway". In a meeting in Standard the other night the delegate for the Wheat Pool stood up and said: "I do not support paying the money to the railway; I support paying the money to the producer".

The Minister can do something if he wants for Canada. He can do something really good for Canada. He can withdraw this Bill and give the people a choice. Give the producers a choice. Let them decide how their money will be spent. Then you will see this country really do something worth while. We will see processors who can process. Give us a chance to process in the West. Give us a chance to raise hogs. Give us a chance to raise cattle. We have our own markets. We are not trying to interfere with the Quebec market. Already the Quebec market has a waterway all the way to Japan where it can ship its live hogs. Already the Quebec producers have a hold on the market in New York. But we are closer to California. We are closer to the western U.S.A. where there is a tremendous market for hogs and cattle.

Why is the Government trying to kill us? Why is the Government trying to kill agriculture in western Canada? Give us a chance to grow. Give us a chance to contribute and make this country a greater and better nation. That is all we ask the Minister to do. Give us a chance. Give us a fair deal. If you give us a fair deal, we will hold our own with anyone in this country or anyone in the world. Our producers will do that if they are given a chance. But if the Government is going to handcuff them and then expect them to raise hogs, handcuff them and then expect them to raise cattle, handcuff them and then expect to have processing, the Government is dreaming wildly. That is a wild dream that cannot take place because the Government is making it impossible for western agriculture to be competitive. This Bill makes it impossible for our cattlemen, our hog producers and our processors to be competitive. All we ask for is a fair show. We ask the Minister to withdraw this Bill and to bring in a bill that will build Canada, not destroy Canada.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by saying that our position is clear. We do not intend to let this Bill pass through the House of Commons and become law. We will do whatever we must in order to stop it within the rules of Parliament. We are not going to enter into any kind of arrangements, other than arrangements to eliminate this threat to the Crowsnest Pass freight rate. I want to put on the record just a little bit of the history so that people will understand what it is we are talking about.

In 1881 the CPR syndicate accepted from the people of Canada land, cash, rail lines and other significant benefits in exchange for a commitment thereafter and forever efficiently to maintain work and run the Canadian Pacific Railway. Specifically the Crow rate was agreed upon by the CPR and the Government of Canada and remains a valid and binding contract.

In 1925 Parliament put the Crow rate into a statute when the railways offered to keep grain on the Crow rate if they could be relieved of the agreement for low rates on other commodities. At the time the CPR made it clear:

> We are not asking for any change in the conditions established in 1897 in regard to grain and grain products.

The Crow rate has been the subject of considerable debate over the intervening years. The railroads surreptitiously attempted to influence Government to bring about change, with Government and Parliament hanging tenaciously to the original agreement.

This is not the first occasion on which the CPR has attempted to change the Crow. This will not be the last occasion on which it will attempt to change the Crow. But the CPR will fail this time as it has failed every other time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I want to read from the statement issued by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall when he studied the matter in 1980-81. In a statement dated November 24, 1981, he said that there is no position to take except to adhere through thick and thin that the Crow rate is not bargainable.

He also said that the railways receive full cost of transporting grain originating on lines covered by the branch line subsidy. The subsidy applies not only on the branch line but right through to the port terminal; so much grain is now carried at compensatory rate.

In 1981, he also said that the railways have been given the use rent-free of 14,000 hopper cars which cost roughly $700 million, besides money to rehabilitate their own fleet of boxcars and money to rehabilitate their neglected lines on which they have been collecting subsidy. He added that western grain producers now subsidize eastern bread and pass it on to the consumers to the tune of five cents a loaf by virtue of the interest and storage payment for sales made to eastern millers by the Wheat Board.

I put those passages on the record to show that this is not some idle preoccupation of the New Democratic Party and a few farmers in western Canada that the grain freight rate ought not to be changed. It was quite clearly, when originated, an agreement that gave to the CPR significant benefit and from which the CPR has derived ongoing benefit in terms of its availability of land; but even more important for the purposes of this discussion it has received significant cash benefits and product in lieu of cash intended to offset whatever it was the railways were losing by way of freight rate charges.

The Crowsnest Pass arrangement is quite clearly a subsidy of sorts. It is a subsidy paid for by all Canadians in an effort to make our grain competitive world-wide. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that if it were true that we were to change the Crow rate, then we would undoubtedly raise the price of grain. If we increase the price of grain we will reduce the competitive nature of our grain farmers. Either that or the grain farmers will have to absorb the additional cost brought about by the changes proposed by the Government. If they absorb the additional cost it means their cash flow will be diminished. If their cash flow is diminished then the amount of money they, the farmers, have available for the purchase of other products necessary either to maintain their farm operations or to maintain their families will in that way also be diminished. If that happens then eastern producers of farm machinery will not have a market for the sale of their machinery. Other of those who supply grain farmers will find that the grain farmer does not have the capital to meet either his bank obligations or to meet his purchase requirements.

We say to the Minister that whatever his motivation, it goes against the accepted agreement of the latter part of the nineteenth century and all things which have been attempted over the years and turned back by Parliaments. It goes against what Mr. Justice Emmett Hall indicated was the situation as it applied to the transportation of grain. It goes against the best interests of western Canadian grain producers inasmuch as it reduces their income capacity. It does nothing of consequence to enhance the economics of the rest of the country. Therefore it is unacceptable legislation.

We have asked that the Bill be divided into three distinctly different sections. We have asked that there be a section dealing with what happens to the coal lands, how we can best deal with them and how they can revert back to the Province of British Columbia in the event some changes are in fact undertaken. We have suggested that there should be a section dealing with the upgrading and maintenance of railroads, not only for the transportation of grain but for the transportation of all commodities which we hope at some point will be marketable world-wide and will be transported from where they are manufactured to the East and West Coasts and in that way gain access to world markets.

We agree that some changes can be made in the way in which CN and CP have not lived up to their obligations to maintain railroads suitable for modern requirements. If the Government wants to bring forward changes to the Crow rate, we guarantee that we will do all in our power to oppose them; but we suggest that those changes should be brought forward in a separate Bill dealing strictly with the changes and nothing else.

The linkage which is being made by the Government is unacceptable. Changes to the Crow rate have no direct bearing on whether or not the railroads should upgrade their facilities. They must maintain their facilities at a level to enable them to move Canadian products across the country to the various and many markets either within or outside Canada. A change to the Crow rate does not facilitate that.

It may well be necessary at this point to discuss the ownership of the coal lands and who should have jurisdiction over them. In our opinion it may be necessary that they revert to the Province of British Columbia rather than be left in the present situation. Therefore we think it is necessary for us to take a serious look at the question in the House of Commons, unfettered by the entire question of the Crowsnest Pass freight rates. These matters are unrelated. To draw them together into one Bill does a disservice to the serious questions of compensation and ownership of the coal lands.

Finally, we have made a commitment. This commitment will stand. Nothwithstanding what the Government attempts, there will be no change to the Crow rate in this session of Parliament by this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I say that in the full recognition that the Government will attemp to bully us, to ridicule us and in every conceivable way to make it appear that we are obstructing useful and valuable things. We will suffer that in order to stop the Government from doing what will have immeasurable, long-term, harmful effects not only on western grain producers but on the majority of Canadians, regardless of where they live, who at this point in time do not fully understand the implications of Bill C-155.

This Bill will not pass. If the Government wants to see parts of it pass, it must withdraw it and bring it back in three separate parts. If the Government hopes to see other legislation pass, it had better reach an agreement not to proceed with any change to the Crow rate. If it wants to get ahead with other things that it believes are important, it had best sit down and discuss what alternative it can bring forward with which we are prepared to deal. But we will not allow this Bill to become law.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in joining in this debate and especially coming from eastern Canada, I feel I might be able to introduce a perspective which has been overlooked. As has been stated many times already, the Crowsnest Pass Agreement was negotiated by CP and the Government on behalf of Canadians. The intention was to induce settlement of the West in reliance on the Government's promise of a fixed freight rate. The Government of Canada and CP have made many agreements. Either in committee or in the House we will at least be able to refer to some of them.

Some people may not know about the very complicated dealings of CP with respect to its trackage. How many people, even those in the House, realize that the hundreds and thousands of miles of rail trackage, which are commonly referred to as the CP line, are owned by 14 subsidiary companies—and in one case it is not even a subsidiary company—having minority shareholders? For the benefit of those who have travelled by rail from Montreal to Toronto and even further west, whose rail lines are they riding, if they are lucky enough to obtain seats in a passenger car? They are not riding on CP trackage. It is trackage owned by the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company under a perpetual lease for 999 years. I want to familiarize the House—and hopefully in committee subsequently if the Bill ever gets that far—with how unfairly treated are the minority shareholders and debenture holders of such subsidiary companies.

I have letters from people whose ancestors invested in good faith in companies such as the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company and the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company, only to discover today that they can obtain no meaningful information from CP concerning their ancestors' investment. In many cases the assets with which their security was secured have disappeared or simply been transferred to other CP companies or even to third parties. In short, when CP says that it is inequitable to hold it to the Crow rate, it is not telling us about the inequity it inflicts upon shareholders and bondholders in various subsidiary companies where rates were set as much as 100 years ago and which CP says it will never renegotiate under any circumstances.

For example, Mr. Speaker, how would you like to be the holder of part of a $3.7 million New Brunswick Railway Company bond with a 4 per cent coupon whose lease is due in 2880? That is a first mortgage bond CP is taking advantage of today. How would you like to have part of the $924,000 lent to the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway Company at 4 per cent, due on June 14, 2883, or part of the $1.8 million which was lent to Quebec Central Railway Company, due August 1, 2911? How would you like to have part of the $8.1 million lent to the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company at 5 per cent on a perpetual lease? Even the Government of Canada took its perpetual bond issue and made a termination date of 1996.

Mr. Speaker, do you remember the old 3 per cent bonds? When I have an opportunity to continue, I will indicate that if it is just to adjust the Crow rate, it must also be just to adjust all those things of a perpetual or long-term nature of which CP is taking advantage, to the detriment and disadvantage of shareholders and bondholders.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

MINES AND MINING

FUNDING NEEDED FOR MILLING OPERATIONS

Mr. Ray Chénier (Timmins-Chapleau): Madam Speaker, in its April 19 budget the Government of Canada made the one-third depletion allowance for mine exploration more attractive to the junior mining companies. This initiative will help finance these firms and will encourage Canadian investment.

The new incentive was received with enthusiasm by many small mining companies in my riding.

At this time I would encourage the Government to look at including the mining sector under the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. Many of the small mining firms need funding in order to establish their own custom-milling operations. If they had their own operation, it would reduce transportation costs, other related costs, and it would create additional jobs.

Funding is presently available to companies involved in the manufacturing of goods and they can obtain assistance for the construction of their plants. There is nothing of this sort available to the mining sector. If the Government were to introduce such an incentive under DRIE, this would further encourage the junior mining companies, and I am sure we would see jobs created in all parts of the country in all related industries.

HOUSING

CANADIAN HOME OWNERSHIP STIMULATION PLAN—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, Canada's economy is at a delicate point of balance and the question of government applied stimulus at this moment in time is a critical one. Consideration must be taken of the employment generating effect of the stimulus, the multiplier effect of the government funding, the public need met by the program, and so on.

One of the most successful such initiatives—and I congratulate the Government for it—has been the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan which provided a federal grant of $3,000 to new home buyers to stimulate both the purchase and the construction of new homes. It is proving to be the right stimulus, applied to the right sector of the economy, at the right time.

As part of his budget a month ago, the Minister added some $30 million to the program. So right was the program that within a few weeks the allocated funds were all paid out. Having stimulated demand in a major way, much of that demand was allowed to die because the allotted funds were spent.

When one considers the number of ill-advised and ill-conceived schemes through which the Government has blown the taxpayers' money to the four winds, it seems clear that a successful program like this one must be expanded, if necessary at the expense of some of the Government's less successful enterprises. I therefore call upon the Government to extend this program further by adding more funds to it immediately.

MARINE TRANSPORT

UNITED NATIONS LINER CONDUCT CODE—DEMAND FOR CANADIAN SIGNATURE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of the House that West Germany and The Netherlands have signed the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for the Code of Liner Conduct, and that this Code is now ratified. This development will allow trading nations to require that a portion of their international trade be carried in their own ships. It is hoped that this will reduce the scourge of flags-of-convenience shipping which has blighted international trade for many years.

There is disappointment, however, that Canada has yet to sign the Code, and there is every indication that the Government will not do so. In fact Canada has not yet issued a statement on what Canada's official response will be to those nations which do put the Code into practice. Canada's only response to date is a rather irresponsible statement made by an employee of the Canadian Transport Commission, threatening possible retaliation against nations which adopt and use the Code to ensure that at least a part of their trade is carried in their own ships.

A number of our important trading partners, including West Germany, have signed the Code. Furthermore, Canada would benefit greatly from signing the Code and adopting the position that a specific portion of our international trade must be carried in Canadian ships staffed by Canadian crews.

The Government must not declare a carrier as being Canada's carrier without any guarantees that the economic benefits would accrue to Canada in the form of work, shipbuilding, and taxes for the Canadian Government. Any attempt to declare a Canadian company with foreign flag vessels as Canada's flag carrier would amount to an incredible act of hypocrisy on the part of the Government. The Government must move immediately to sign the Code of Liner Conduct and ensure the development of a Canadian merchant marine.

THE CONSTITUTION

POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—STATEMENTS BY LEADERSHIP CANDIDATES

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, I am sure all Canadians are aware that the Progressive Conservative Party is presently engaged in a leadership race. The candidates should remember, however, that Canadians are not easily fooled, and they will have to explain very clearly where they stand on the Constitution. For the time being, confusion reigns, since neither the candidates nor the party have taken a position. The ex-president of Iron Ore supported the position of the Liberal Party during the debate on the Constitution and does not seem to have changed his stand. The Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) and former Leader of the Party has been courting Quebecers and is trying again to get Quebec separatists on his side. The Member for Etobicoke-Centre (Mr. Wilson) stated recently that an alliance should be made between Quebec Nationalists and the Conservatives, an explosive mixture to say the least.

Finally, the Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) who seems to be more candid than his opponents, stated recently that the Progressive Conservative Party has tricked Quebecers at the last constitutional talks, that the so-called overture to Quebec was made only to embarrass the Liberals, and that the real reason did not go beyond the desire to score some political points.

These gentlemen have proved that they are better at bringing about disunity in a party than at governing the country.

AGRICULTURE

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF FARM BANKRUPTCIES

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, the current Liberal depression continues to claim its toll in rural Canada in the form of staggering farm bankruptcies and plummeting farm income. Farm bankruptcies increased in 1982 by some 160 per cent compared with 1980. Total net farm income fell more than 19 per cent in 1982 to about $3.8 billion and is expected to drop below $3.7 billion in 1983.

Canadian farmers, despite tough economic times and bureaucratic obstacles, continued to contribute greatly to our economy. During the 1980s, agriculture generated 40 per cent of the nation's gross national product. Today one farmer produces enough to feed 67 persons as compared with only 11 in 1940. Surely such performance by this efficient sector deserves greater consideration on the part of this Parliament.

Instead, the Liberal Government continues to attack our farming community and fails to come up with policies which would ease their plight. The Liberal policy makers, tangled in the vicious circle of high deficits and spending, ignore the consequences of capital gains taxes imposed on farm land, high inflation rates and, most important, fuel taxes. We hear Government officials bragging about the low cost of Canadian food, some 17 per cent compared with 30 per cent spent by West Europeans.

Madam Speaker: Order.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S DUTY TO ASSUME ITS RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, unemployment has reached unprecedented proportions in Quebec, especially among young people. However, the Federal Government has failed to propose any employment strategy to cope with this social disaster. The Federal Government and the Government of Quebec must stop their useless bickering. Their sole priority should be to provide employment for 500,000 unemployed workers and 600,000 welfare recipients in Quebec. This week, thousands of Quebecers will be taking part in a great march to urge both governments to act according to the mandate they were given by the people who elected them. The New Democratic Party, with the Conference of Bishops, the unions and various social organizations, supports the objectives of the organizers of this demonstration of hope. Young people, women, union and non-union workers must be given decent living and working conditions.

HEALTH

SMOKING IN PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE ROOMS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, recent clinical studies have dramatically illustrated the serious health effect of second-hand smoke, otherwise known as passive smoking.

Non-smokers exposed to a chronically smoky environment have been found to have respiratory impairment equivalent to that of smokers who inhale up to ten cigarettes a day.

Patients with heart disease manifested by chest pain, angina pectoris, showed increased risks of attacks by 22 per cent as judged by exercise tolerance after exposure to passive smoke in a well ventilated room, and by 38 per cent when exposed to passive smoke in an unventilated room.

Lung cancer mortality rates in non-smoking married women were 5.6 per 1,000 for wives of non-smokers, 9.3 per 1,000 for wives of light smokers, and 13.1 per 1,000 for wives of heavy smokers of 20 cigarettes per day or more.

These studies should convince us in the political field to prevail through you, Madam Speaker, to ask the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services to regulate smoking in parliamentary committee rooms in order to improve the quality of our indoor air and thereby set an example for the Canadian public to control smoking in public areas.

SHIPBUILDING

NEED OF HALIFAX SHIPYARDS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the Halifax shipyards have been suffering the malaise common to the Canadian shipbuilding industry but, in this case, the result could be fatal. In national terms, order books are at the lowest point in a decade and employment in Canadian shipyards was down to 9,000 at the end of 1982.

In its quest for work, Halifax Industries Limited sought the $20 million refit for HMCS Nipigon. Reports indicate this contract may be placed in a Quebec shipyard. The remaining hope for Halifax is the vessel construction proposed by the federal Government plus the HMCS Protector refit.

If the Government is serious about accelerating its construction project for the Canadian Coast Guard and finalizing the Patrol Frigate Program, the industry may be salvaged.

The Halifax shipyards need immediate attention. First, government policy must create economic terms and conditions that permit fair competition nationally and internationally.

Second, the Government must "fast track" its specific shipbuilding projects and programs to provide immediate work, otherwise a highly trained and capable work force will be lost and a labour intensive activity will vanish.

This is not just a local problem. A viable East Coast shipbuilding and repair facility is a national asset and resource, and must be protected.

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Government appears to be hell-bent on pushing Bill C-155 through the House even though all indications are that the majority of the farmers do not want it. In four meetings held in the Bow River constituency over the weekend, namely, at Carbon, Nanton, Vulcan, and Standard, attended by more than 200 producers and consumers—producers of grain, pork and cattle—not one person wanted Bill C-155 to pass as it is. Ninety-nine per cent wanted the alternative presented to this House by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) in which the producer, not the Government, not the railways, not the farm organizations, but the producer would have freedom of choice to decide whether the shortfall went to the railways or to the producer. If given all of the facts I believe this same result would happen all over Canada. The people want some say in Government; the people want some freedom of choice once again; the people resent this compulsion by Government, and resent the Government telling them what is good for them.

I urge the Government to heed the wishes of the people, withdraw Bill C-155, and replace it with a new Bill, a democratic Bill, giving the producers the opportunity to exercise their God-given right to choose and decide how their money will be spent.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROJECTIONS OF SUMMER STUDENT UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration—I was given to understand he would be here today—perhaps I could direct my question to the Minister of Finance. It concerns an aspect of the unemployment problem which is causing a great deal of concern. There is a consensus growing among sociologists that it is the number one social problem in the country today. I am talking about youth unemployment and the impact it has on young people and, indeed, the impact it will have upon our society if we do not do something about it.

In 1982 officials of Employment Canada projected that the unemployment rate among returning students would be in the range of 16 per cent, whereas in actual fact it was 19.3 per cent. Given the fact that we have dropped 180,000 student jobs between April this year and April of last year, does the Minister have available to him projections of—

I see the Minister of Employment and Immigration is just coming into the House, Madam Speaker. Perhaps I can rephrase the question and put it to him.

The question concerns student unemployment and projections of student unemployment based on the inaccuracy of the projections last year. At that time it was projected that the unemployment rate among returning students would be 16 per cent, when in actual fact it was 19.3 per cent. The rate for non-returning students was 28.1 per cent. Since that time we have lost 180,000 jobs for young people. I want to ask the Minister if he has projections on what the youth unemployment rate will be in July of this year, which is supposed to be the peak month of student unemployment.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I should point out to the Hon. Member that projections are based upon historical trends. The reason for the experience of last year when the figures were less than the forecast indicated, was the general downturn in the economy as a whole. The employment rate across the board slipped substantially in that period. We hope that coming into the summer we will be able to encourage the private sector in particular, as we are trying to do now, to make a greater effort to hire students. That is why we have undertaken a fairly major "Hire a Student" campaign through our offices.

I hope that we can maintain the same level or better than last year. Reports coming in from some of our offices are reasonably encouraging, but it is hard to tell at this time as most of the students are in school. We really will not know what the actual figures will be until June or early July.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, my figures are based on the rate. For example, youth unemployment last year was 17.1 per cent but as of April this year it was 21.5 per cent, which represents 624,000 unemployed young people. That does not take into account the students who will be coming onto the job market this month. That is what prompted my question.

CONFERENCE SPONSORED BY NEWFOUNDLAND COUNCIL ON YOUTH

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, perhaps I can ask the Minister if the Government intends to assist, in any meaningful way, the Newfoundland and Labrador Youth Advisors Council on Youth which is sponsoring a national conference on youth unemployment in St. John's on August 26, 27 and 28. It intends to invite 20 delegates from each Province and Territory, and has budgeted for $150,000.

As the Minister knows, this is a Province where unemployment is critically high and the economy is as bad. The Minister has already indicated that he is prepared to support the conference with $40,000. Is he prepared to go a little further and contact his provincial counterparts so that this conference may become a real, meaningful dialogue on exactly what we intend to do about the phenomenon of youth unemployment as we get into the area of high tech?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, to put the historical record in perspective, I personally supported and recommended the idea for such a conference to the Newfoundland Advisory Council. I met with it some two months ago when I was in Newfoundland and we had a very good discussion about the report it had released. At that time it was simply proposing to undertake a conference within the Province. I felt, as the Hon. Member does, because of the importance of the issue, that we should attempt to get a cross-section of views, attitudes, and recommendations from young people across Canada.

At that time we undertook discussions with the Newfoundland Youth Advisory Council to see if it would organize a national youth employment conference for us. It agreed to do that and we are working together very closely with it and are providing financial support. We would undertake to recommend that, but I would want to assure the Hon. Member, seeing that it was our idea in the first place, we are obviously lending it our full support.

• (1420)

Mr. McGrath: No matter whose idea it was, it was a good idea and it is an idea whose time has come. I am happy to know it is receiving the support of the Minister.

OPENING OF YOUTH EMPLOYMENT CENTRES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): The Minister referred to the fact that the statistics regarding student unemployment are not in yet. The Minister knows that the situation is so serious that it requires a bipartisan multi-Government private sector/public sector approach. For example, I have here a memorandum from the Regional Manager of Public Affairs in the Minister's Department to his manager in Charlottetown, regarding the opening of Canada Employment student centres. The memo lists those to be invited and states that Conservative MPs are not to be invited even if the CEC is in their riding. If that is the kind of approach which the Minister has taken to this very serious problem, which is a cause of a great deal of concern, then the Minister can only stand condemned by it. I would like to ask the Minister if that is his policy.

Is it the policy of the Government to exclude Conservative Members of Parliament from supporting young people in their endeavours to find jobs through student employment centres, or whatever? If that is the policy of the Government, then the Government should be widely condemned for it.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, before the Hon. Member begins to run off at another tangent, let me remind him that it was this Government which last year initiated a major national discussion on the question of youth employment. In fact I presented a policy paper to the provincial Governments, in which the Conservative Party is well represented, upon which we are now trying to base our youth employment strategy which was announced in the budget of the Minister of Finance. We are continuing those meetings with the provincial Governments to see if we can find, as he indicated, a broad based level of support to tackle what is unquestionably a major national priority to help young people get back to work.

As far as that individual memorandum is concerned, my office had nothing to do with it. In fact, if the Hon. Member would talk to his caucus more extensively, he would recognize that many Members of his own caucus have in fact been at openings of youth CEC's.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PLIGHT OF SINGLE ELDERLY RECIPIENTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that the National Council on Welfare has just published the revised 1983 poverty line, based on Statistics Canada definitions. These figures show that the elderly poor, single elderly people, if they are receiving only the old age pension and the Guaranteed Income Supplement, are well below the poverty line. In fact these figures show that they would be more than $2,000 below the poverty line.

On March 29 the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated in committee that $300 would be sufficient to bring these single elderly poor up to the poverty line. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not the Government has abandoned the practice which it has always followed of accepting the low-income cutoffs provided by Statistics Canada as the poverty line. And what justification would the Government have for saying that $300 would be sufficient to bring these people up to the poverty line, when the National Council on Welfare says that it would take $2,000?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated in her question that although she was using the expression "poverty line", the expression used by the National Council on Welfare is low income and not poverty line. As the Hon. Member is aware, there is a considerable difference between the two, and we could have quite a long discussion on what term should be used. In any case, the main thing is that the Government has undertaken to concentrate its efforts and assistance on those who truly need help. We made this clear when we introduced the 6 and 5 program and exempted from capping any payments made under the Guaranteed Income Supplement or the Child Tax Credit. These measures are fully indexed to allow for the special needs of people on low incomes. In addition, the measures contained in the budget were also aimed at assisting people on low incomes so as to maximize the effective use of public funds in the fight against poverty.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, whether the Minister uses poverty lines or low-income figures, I would like him to know, in case he has not realized it, that there are 500,000 elderly poor in this country who are living well below the poverty line, and the Government ought to make it one of its priorities to correct that situation.

GOVERNMENT PRIORITIES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, in recent days the Government announced an expenditure of almost $300 million to bail out Canadair and de Havilland, two Crown Corporations. Again, the Minister of National Health and Welfare said in committee that the $300 million for the elderly poor, to bring them up to the poverty line, had been approved by Cabinet, and that it would be authorized for expenditure—and I use her words—"whenever we can afford it". I would like to ask the Minister how many Crown Corporations such as de Havilland and Canadair stand ahead of the elderly poor in the Government's list of priorities.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, one thing is certain, and that is that this Government will not make the mistake which the Conservatives made in the 1960s when they cancelled the Arrow program and put the aeronautics industry in this country behind by ten years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: What the Government is doing is not only protecting thousands of jobs for Canadians, but it is also protecting a strong Canadian presence in the aviation industry, a high technology industry, and one which is important for the future of the country.

As far as the question raised by the hon. lady is concerned, she knows that the expenditures in question would be, indeed, expenditures which would not be on a recurring basis, year after year. As I have indicated in my budget speech, we are currently examining the situation on a current basis and we very much have in mind the problem raised by the hon. lady.

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry. The Minister knows that the American automotive companies are producing in Canada roughly 75 per cent of what they sell to Canadians. The federal task force on the automotive industry has recommended that the principle involved, namely, that automotive companies which make profits from Canadians ought to be creating jobs for Canadians, should be applied to all automotive companies and not just to the American companies. Does the Minister accept this sensible recommendation?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as I stated last Friday in response to the task force report, we think it is a very comprehensive report and it will receive serious consideration by the Government. My officials, are already working on a paper which will be discussed with my Cabinet colleagues.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INSIST ON JOBS BEING CREATED IN CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister did not answer the question specifically. I agree it is comprehensive, and I also agree in principle that it is saying essentially the right thing. However, I would like to ask the Minister if he accepts the principle in the report. More specifically, since the major import which is causing a loss of Canadian jobs in that sector right now happens to be from Japan, and since the Japanese have agreed to produce cars, or parts, in the United States, Australia, Mexico, Great Britain, amongst others, and if they met the minimum 60 per cent standard here in this country, we would have an additional 35,000 jobs, will the Minister agree with the principle in the report? Secondly, will he, in his discussion with the Japanese industry, insist upon their acceptance of the principle?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion):

Madam Speaker, with respect to the principle, I believe the Prime Minister answered more than adequately the question of the Hon. Member last Friday. Obviously Canada, a major trading nation which relies on merchandise trade surpluses should not on a quid pro quo basis, adopt the principle as the Prime Minister responded to the Leader of the New Democratic Party on Friday. However, as the Prime Minister stated, in very specific cases, such as the trade imbalance in the automotive industry, there is some justification room to negotiate with other countries.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, as with most questions recently, the Prime Minister answers one way on one question and another way on another question. In short, the Government's position is by no means clear on this issue. Since thousands of Canadian jobs are at stake I hope the Government will soon make up its mind.

PRINCIPLE OF CANADIAN PRODUCTION QUOTA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, since the task force correctly points out that General Motors, Chrysler, and Ford, currently meeting 74 per cent production in Canada, are likely to drop to the 60 per cent minimum for competitive reasons if companies from other countries are not forced to comply, does the Minister recognize that, if they do that, we could lose some 22,000 existing jobs and, if so, will he now give us a commitment to negotiate on this principle with the Japanese so Canadians can get the jobs in this sector that they deserve?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I do not know what stronger commitment the Hon. Member wants, as I have already indicated that we will give serious consideration to the recommendations in the task force report. I have also stated that I will be sending a letter to the chief executive officers of the Japanese automotive manufacturing companies inviting them to Canada for discussions, as I requested on previous occasions when I was in Japan.

HOUSING

INQUIRY WHETHER GRANT APPLICATIONS WILL BE ACCEPTED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): My question is directed to the Minister responsible for Housing.

Recently, the Minister announced on the radio that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation still had 16,000 applications pending for the $3,000 grant. The Minister also said that it was almost certain that applications made before April 30 would be accepted, and this of course would benefit all applicants who made their requests before April 30, according to the Government's initial commitment. Within this context, could the Minister inform the House today whether Canadians who applied for the $3,000 grant before April 30 will receive a positive reply from CMHC?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I do not remember having said 16,000, but it is quite clear that the problem whose extent we are now determining is quite considerable, and that there was a flood of requests during the last two weeks of April and in the first week of May.

Right now, we are looking at ways of meeting the needs of Canadians who applied before April 30, and if possible, of those who applied before May 5. I hope to have an answer for the Hon. Member within forty-eight hours.

Mr. La Salle: I have a supplementary. If I understood correctly, the Minister just promised that he would tell us within forty-eight hours that applications for the $3,000 grant will be accepted up to April 30. He could also provide some clarification regarding the rash commitment made by the Minister of Finance who raised the hopes of Canadians by saying that the grant might be extended until the end of May.

In any case, is the Minister prepared to repeat that Canadians will be told once and for all about the commitment made regarding April 30, and could he also, within forty-eight hours, inform the House whether the Minister will be able to meet the commitment made by his colleague? Madam Speaker, I am not accusing the Minister but his colleague, the Minister of Finance, of raising the hopes of Canadians. The Minister has given us the assurance today that within forty-eight hours, Canadians will know whether grant applications made before April 30 will be honoured, and what is going to happen regarding the commitment for the month of May.

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance made it quite clear that after adding $100 million to this program in October, he was adding $30 million in his April 19 budget, especially to assist Canadians in isolated and northern areas where construction cannot start before the end of April.

As I said before, we have received a flood of requests, far more than could be expected according to the statistics for even the best years for housing in Canada. I cannot blame the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) for having put a ceiling of $30 million on this program, since the housing industry is doing very well at the present time and interest rates have dropped considerably thanks to his predecessor's budget and the measures taken by the present Minister of Finance.

What I would like to say to the Hon. Member, if he could perhaps refrain from taking this unusually aggressive stance, is that we shall do everything in our power to accommodate Canadians who applied before April 30, and if possible, up to May 5.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INCIDENCE OF CF-104 AIRCRAFT ACCIDENTS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. During the last week we lost two more CF-104 Starfighters, for a total of four in the last six months, with the loss of three pilots and now, unfortunately, five civilians killed in Germany. Has the Department of National Defence formed any early conclusion as to the causes of these latest two crashes? Were they caused by pilot error, or mechanical failure in these aging aircraft?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, it goes without saying that it was indeed a very regrettable accident in Germany, and in the name of the Government of Canada. I expressed our sincere condolences to the families of those persons in Germany who lost their lives. This Government very much regrets this accident.

As for the airplane itself, the 104, as far as fighter aircraft is concerned, has a very good safety record. It is—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lamontagne: Well, what do you know—Madam Speaker, these people who are laughing, what do they know about the safety of a warplane? I think I am more aware and more knowledgeable about what airplane safety is than most of those people who are laughing on the other side.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: Madam Speaker, we have the record of all accidents which happened to 104s since 1961. In some years, like 1972, we lost none. In 1965 we lost—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lamontagne: Well, in 1965 we lost 12. It is part of the ups and downs of any war plane.

Mr. Broadbent: Up and down is right.

Mr. Lamontagne: They have to be involved in exercises, Madam Speaker, in very difficult missions with low and high flying. It is a warplane which has to be exercised in very difficult situations. Germany flies the 104, some other European countries fly it, and we can match their record and our record in so far as our good safety record is concerned with this warplane. I am not talking about commercial airplane safety; I am talking about warplane safety. These are two different worlds, Madam Speaker.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I must say that to claim the CF-104 has a good safety record brings the answers of the Minister to a new level of unlikelihood.

REQUEST THAT REMAINING CF-104 AIRCRAFT BE GROUNDED

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, in 1979, when an F-16 crashed, every F-16 then flying was grounded until the cause of the crash was made known. Has the Minister in any way considered grounding the Starfighters because of their attrition rate, which to many of us is already unacceptably high? While he is on his feet, could he tell us whether the CF-18A, the new fighter aircraft, will replace the Starfighter first, or will priority be given to replacing the CF-101 Voodoo, which is even older than the Starfighter?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, if there were any unreasonable risk in letting our pilots fly any of our planes I would stop them from flying right away. We are checking everything we can to make sure the planes we are flying have a good safety record and can be flown in safety, and can help our allies in every eventuality.

You have many reasons why a plane can crash, Madam Speaker, we have here the reasons for every crash of the 104. It could be personnel, it could be the material, it could be the environment, it can be operational, foreign object damage, or the reasons could be undetermined. All accidents have been investigated and we know why 95 per cent of the accidents occurred. Unfortunately in the case of some others we were not able to discover the exact cause of the accidents. But we are following matters very carefully. I think the last accident was among the most unfortunate, and one we regret greatly, but I do not think that this is any reason to stop the 104 from flying, because Germany and several other countries fly it, too.

INDUSTRY

APPOINTMENT OF PETRO-CHEMICAL TASK FORCE

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The oil based petrochemical industry welcomed the announcement of the Minister about assistance to Petromont and the loan guarantees to Petrosar, which the shareholders applauded. However, the second part of the Minister's press release indicated that there would be a task force established with two co-chairmen. I wonder if the task force is expected to be in place soon or if the co-chairmen have been selected. If so, I would like to know their names and when the task force is expected to be mobile.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first I want to apologize to Hon. Members. I have been a little tardy in putting together the task force, contrary to what I originally intended. However, the co-chairmen are in place and will be having a meeting this week with our officials. We have asked the co-chairmen to suggest competent people from the industry from across Canada to be represented on the task force. I do not think it is appropriate to announce any individual names until such time as the whole task force is finalized.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST THAT CF-104 AIRCRAFT BE BANNED FROM AEROBATIC DEMONSTRATIONS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I would like to follow up on the comments about the absolutely unjustified carnage which has come about as a result of crashes involving the CF-104 Starfighter. My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. If the Minister and the Government are not prepared to stop the carnage, would they be prepared to change the operational role of the aircraft in its operational procedure by not allowing it to participate in any more aerial demonstrations, any more aerobatic demonstrations, and to keep the aircraft out of civilian airports where it must approach or depart over heavily populated areas such as Vancouver and Winnipeg? Would he be prepared to make some operational changes in the use of the aircraft so that the danger is minimized in its use?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think that some people are trying to make a tragedy of this, which, of course, is regrettable. However, in this instance we were flying in Germany, accompanied by the German Air Force. We were both doing some exercises. An accident happened which, again, is very regrettable. That does not mean that the aircraft is no good and should be put out of service. It has great utility as an air mission aircraft. It must be used in all kinds of training circumstances.

Unfortunately an accident happened, and I agree that it was very tragic, and I regret it. It was because we were requested by the Germans to fly with them in a low level mission practice. Obviously, the Germans were flying the same kind of aircraft we were flying, so it was strictly an unfortunate accident. For example, if the Hon. Member drives the same kind of car as I do and he has an accident and I do not have an accident, does that mean that his car is no good? It could depend on many causes. Why does the Hon. Member not wait, because the investigation is currently being carried out by the German Government and our people in Germany, see what in fact was the real cause, and stop making it appear to be so dramatic?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, when 600 aircraft out of a total manufacturing component of 1,900 crash, there is absolutely no excuse for the Minister's response. There is no excuse for the Government to continue to tolerate an accident rate like that anywhere.

REQUEST FOR DOCUMENTATION ON ACCIDENTS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, would the Minister of National Defence be prepared to provide the House with the documentation on the remainder of the Canadian accidents back since the beginning of production, so that the public can have an examination into other civilian aviation expertise as to a common thread in the kind of accidents which have occurred? Would he be prepared to table in this House the results of the other accident findings, instead of keeping the material secret?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, there is no question of keeping information secret. Of course, the investigation is still secret because sometimes we ask opinions in confidentiality. However, the causes of all the accidents which have occurred since 1962 are all well known to us. I will in due course be able to supply the Hon. Member with the reasons why the accident happened.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY TASK FORCE ON YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and relates to the questions which were asked earlier by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East, involving the whole area of youth unemployment which has now hit almost crisis proportion. Is it not now time for a parliamentary task force on youth unemployment and youth issues in this country?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, just to remind the Hon. Member, we put forward a very clear set of proposals under the youth employment strategy at the time of the budget debate. We referred that document for examination in front of the Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. In the meantime we have introduced a number of new proposals. The new proposal for wage subsidies for work experience programs would provide a brand new program to bring people into their first time jobs. There has been the proposal for youth job corps across Canada and proposals to provide substantially for more people in the Katimavik program and the DND program. We have those programs in place as well as the training programs. My attitude at this point is to get things happening rather than just go into further study.

REQUEST FOR EARLY STUDY

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, the Minister well knows that criteria for programs like the youth internship program, which are desperately needed today, are not even in place yet. Students are coming on the job stream right now, this month and in the next month, and the Government will not likely have those criteria in place until Fall, at the very earliest. Can the Government not explore this very serious problem, which is not only an immediate problem but also one which will be going on for the next few years? Can it not be explored through a parliamentary task force?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I return to the point that the programs we introduced need some proper preparation, which means discussion with those in the private sector in particular, who would be the major sponsors and users of the wage subsidy program. We do not want to rush into something before it has been properly discussed and there have been consultations with that particular group, which is what we are now doing.

In terms of the longer range issue, as I have indicated we put forward a paper last January which laid out the dimensions of the problem and referred it to the provincial group for study. As I say, we are prepared to discuss it with colleagues in the House of Commons through the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, which we have already initiated. Therefore, I am not sure why the Hon. Member would want to duplicate what has already been initiated.

METRIC CONVERSION

ABOLITION OF COMMISSION

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. For approximately four years the Conservatives have been arguing that we should abolish the Metric Commission and follow the course set by the U.K. and the United States in abolishing their metric boards and returning to a voluntary process of implementation. Would the Minister now be able to confirm to the House that the Metric Commission has been notified that it is being abolished?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am surprised to hear the Hon. Member saying that he has been asking for the abolition of the Metric Commission for four years, according to his own words. The Hon. Member may recall that the Progressive Conservative Party was in power for about ten months, and not only did it not abolish the Metric Commission but it even passed an Order in Council to put into effect part of the compulsory metric program. It was a Conservative Cabinet that approved this Order in Council, which is certainly not in line with the views of the Member for Peterborough. As for the Commission's duration, the Commission is doing its work, and despite the systematic opposition of the Progressive Conservative Member, it is about to finish its work, and as soon as it has, it will of course be dismantled according to plan.

[English]

Mr. Domm: I should point out that it was the Conservative Government in 1979 which abolished the Order in Council that brought metric into the retail food sector. It was the Liberal Government, in March of 1979, when it still held Cabinet position, which gazetted the order in council that brought metric into the floor covering business.

USE OF IMPERIAL MEASUREMENT IN STOCKYARDS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the Minister confirm to the House that, under pressure from provincial Governments, from agricultural associations and organizations, and from consumers, the federal Government has decided to return to imperial measurement in the weighing of beef on import and export and that all the stockyards from Montreal through to Prince Rupert will remain or return, if they have converted, to imperial measurement?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I do know that at the present time agriculture, in total, is about 85 per cent metric. There was a delay by the previous Government, in the short-term, in converting the total beef operation into metric. There has been a delay in that. I believe the arrangement that the Hon. Member is talking about has been made.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

PRIME MINISTER'S ROLE AT WILLIAMSBURG SUMMIT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Recently, in his answers to me in the House on May 18, and in his Toronto Star interview, the Prime Minister appears to be casting himself in the role of an honest broker or mediator between the United States and the Soviet Union. Is it his intention to push that role at the forthcoming Williamsburg Summit in the hope that the United States can be persuaded of his expertise in that direction, in spite of his public musings about the warlike propensities of President Reagan?

INVITATION TO PRIME MINISTER TO VISIT MOSCOW

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister will recognize, of course, the difference between the musings that he may have had in private with Mr. Gorbachev during his recent visit here and his public criticism of the President of the United States. Can he tell us whether the private stance that he took with Mr. Gorbachev was in any way responsible for the invitation that he received to visit Moscow, and while answering that could he say whether he intends to accept that invitation?

While he is still on his feet, might he also say whether he has received any indication with respect to the manner in which his statement about President Reagan's warlike propensities have been received in Washington?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, there is a whole series of questions there and I am not sure that I can deal with them all. As far as the invitation to Moscow is concerned, it would please the Hon. Leader of the Opposition to know that most heads of Government or senior members of Government who come to Canada invite me to visit their countries, knowing full well that it will please the Opposition that I be absent some days from this place. So it is nothing new.

In the case of the Soviet Union, I think we have been receiving visits for at least the past half dozen years on the basis that the last bilateral exchange with the Soviet Union at the level of heads of Government was when Premier Kosygin came. That was almost ten years ago, if my memory is correct. It would normally be Canada's turn to visit the Soviet Union if one considers past records. I should not be surprised that the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), when he was Prime Minister, would also have been invited to the Soviet Union with as much urgency.

The other part of the question concerned my musings. I merely want to say that I am happy that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition finds them amusing.

PRIME MINISTER'S INTENTIONS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, with respect to the Prime Minister's comments concerning the reaction of the Opposition, his inferential forthcoming visit to Moscow, and his statement that we would like to see him go from time to time, is he inferentially saying by that answer that he is threatening us with his return or promising that he will stay there?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is a rather singular question, coming from a man who, we know, will no longer have his job in about three weeks from now.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

OFFER TO PURCHASE UNITED STATES RAILWAY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Both Canadian railways are holding Canadian grain producers and taxpayers up to ransom by refusing to upgrade their rail systems unless they get more money from both. Even if they get five or six times the Crow rate, both railways have said they will not even buy hopper cars. They expect the taxpayers to do that.

In light of that, I wish to ask the Minister about Canadian National's bid of $300 million to buy 3,100 miles of the bankrupt Milwaukee Road Railway's lines in the United States, and CNs offer to take on the $180 million of debt owed by the Milwaukee Road to the United States Government. Why is he asking farmers and taxpayers to give CN and CP more money to rebuild rail lines in Canada when these companies apparently have enough resources to bail out American investors and the United States Treasury?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, with respect to the first part of the question, the adequacy of the compensation given to railways, I thought that this is one of the items of the Crow reform which was generally accepted in the West. In particular I remember a study made for the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool on the adequacy of the compensation, and the figure arrived at was not very much different from the one recommended by Gilson. This is really a problem on which there is general agreement.

With respect to the purchase of the Milwaukee road by CN, that possibility still exists. It has not yet been approved by CN or the Canadian Government. We will discuss that in due course.

Mr. Benjamin: The United States Justice Department has already approved these. They are only waiting for the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the United States.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

INVESTMENT IN UNITED STATES RAILWAY LINES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, the question concerns CP's $150 million expenditure and CN's $300 million expenditure. Would the Minister answer the question? How can railways in Canada insist on moneys from grain producers and taxpayers to build lines here while they can afford to invest in over 4,000 miles of United States railway lines, to the tune of about $600 million in Canadian funds?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I already answered the question the other day when I ventured the opinion that the presence of Canadian owned railway companies in the United States was beneficial to Canadian exports. These are services rendered by companies and consequently it is a form of export which is very beneficial to the country as a whole. Would my hon. friend prefer to have U.S. railways operating in Canada?

Mr. Benjamin: No.

Mr. Pepin: Consequently it is beneficial for Canada to operate these railways in the United States because it is part of Canadian services and Canadian exports to the United States.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Approximately two years ago the Minister announced a fund of $345 million, as I recall, to be used for various Indian programs across Canada. The Minister has not yet announced any specific payments out of that fund.

A few weeks ago the Minister announced a committee to help dispense those funds. As I recall, it was to be composed of Members of the Liberal caucus. Once again there have been no payments as a result of that. One committee in particular, the agricultural committee of Ontario for the natives, has been waiting. I have been talking to the Minister and his staff for almost two years. When will we see some of that $345 million which was promised so long ago?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, with regard to the $345 million, the Minister responsible for that is my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, essentially because it deals with the Métis, Inuit and all Natives, not just status Indians for whom I am responsible. In particular, the Métis have an interest in this matter. That is why it is not only a concern to the Indians but to the people for whom the Hon. Member is concerned. Therefore I would suggest that he direct his question to my colleague, the Minister responsible for small business.

• (1500)

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, if I had time I would ask everyone over there. Obviously in order to get that answer the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development had to ask the Prime Minister. Because it is an agricultural problem I have already employed not the small but the great help of the Minister of Agriculture. Since I do not yet have any money, would the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Minister responsible for small business tell us when and if, or if it is ever going to be spent, namely the $345 million that was promised by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I am told that my colleague, the Minister responsible for small business, is not in the House. Let me just assure the Hon. Member that although undeniably there have been delays in making announcements under this particular fund, the Minister responsible for small business will be in the House shortly. I can assure the Hon. Member that attention will be given to this matter and announcements will be forthcoming relatively soon.

RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House of Commons a petition signed by a significant number of western Canadian farmers who want to bring to the attention of the House the problem that western Canadian farmers will face in the event that the proposed changes to the Crow rate take place. They have humbly prayed that western Canadian farmers now paying $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate will have to pay significantly more than they can afford.

The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain or Crow rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition from the residents of Langham, Saskatchewan. The petition is addressed to the Honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow rate in the 1981-1982 crop year. This grain, in turn, contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmer's contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, that is, no change.

Wherefore the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain, this is the Crow, rate. This petition is signed by some 36 petitioners from Saskatchewan.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have a petition signed by residents of Saskatchewan expressing their concern with the Government's intention to change the Crow rate. In their petition these western Canadian farmers who paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-1982 crop year claim they have contributed over $6.3 billion to this nation's balance of trade. The undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times Crow, which is no change.

Wherefore the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain or Crow rate and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

AGRICULTURE

SITUATION IN QUEBEC—POSITION OF OPPOSITION PARTIES

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): All Quebecers involved in the agri-food business have welcomed the changes made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) in his plans for improving the Crowsnest Pass rate.

On the Opposition side, both the Progressive Conservatives and the New Democratic Party have been filibustering in order to prevent passage of Bill C-155, either by refusing to appear in the House for a vote, as was the case yesterday with our Progressive Conservative friends, or by presenting a staggering number of petitions—there were 92—as our friends from the New Democratic Party did.

Both parties have been courting the Quebec electorate for many years without ever making any serious commitments. I therefore challenge the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party to explain before the House the positions of their respective parties on the transportation of grain as it effects the Quebec agri-food industry.

We shall then hear, in public, in front of the television cameras, what our colleagues opposite have to say to Quebec farmers.

It is the truly controversial issues that are a test of character.

I therefore ask the Members of the New Democratic Party and the Progressive Conservative Members to rise and speak frankly to Canadians in the Province of Quebec.

ELECTION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATE IN BRANDON-SOURIS BYELECTION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, yesterday, May 24, an event of national importance took place in the federal riding of Brandon-Souris. The overwhelming victory which resulted in the Progressive Conservative candidate, Mr. Lee Clark, receiving 62.1 per cent of the votes cast, was confirmation of support for the Progressive Conservative Party and an expression of the desire of thousands of electors, when given an opportunity, to pass judgment on the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: The result is a tribute to the late Hon. Walter Dinsdale who faithfully represented Brandon-Souris for 31 years, and was a positive endorsement of an excellent candidate, Mr. Lee Clark. It was a response by thousands of citizens to get involved in the electoral process and, through that process, send a message to the Government. The Liberals sent in Cabinet Ministers, its Party President, and workers who offered jobs, airport extensions, and a voice in Government if their candidate would be elected. For their efforts the Liberal Party received 17 per cent support. It is the hope of all Manitobans that the Liberal Party will conduct itself in an uncharacteristic manner and keep the election promises it made.

The NDP, too, should take no comfort from the results. It tried to hold its vote in the city of Brandon, and especially in the provincial riding of Brandon East. The electorate judged the NDP and recognized that that Party, which has supported the Government on major issues, is certainly no spokesman for the western Canadian farmer. The NDP is not an alternative to the Government, and consequently was rejected absolutely.

Lastly, the byelection in Brandon-Souris gave the voters an opportunity to state in clear terms—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: More!

AVIATION INDUSTRY

EXPRESSION OF SUPPORT

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, Canada has an international reputation for excellence and reliability in specialized aerospace systems and products. This has resulted in Canadian aerospace industry sales of $3 billion a year in a highly competitive international export market. To sustain this worldwide reputation and to achieve the potential foreseen for the Canadian aerospace industry through the 1980s and the 1990s requires a very positive attitude on the part of prospective buyers. With that in mind it is with great concern that I mention the recent criticism of one of Canada's outstanding high technology products, the Canadair Challenger Executive Jet. It is one of the finest aircraft of its class ever produced. It only requires a chance to work out some of its developmental problems.

Because of Government funding the aerospace industry is always going to come under public questioning. In this regard Canada is no different from any other nation. But, to achieve growth, the marketability of our aerospace products must be maintained and not be undermined by destructive expressions of opinion. As the editor-in-chief of the Aviation Week & Space Technology magazine commented editorially, "Canada's aerospace industry has served the national interest better than its critics allow. Canada should look at both sides of the issue and not drift into an anti-aerospace mode that would lose the economic and technical benefits generated by this industry."

PORTS

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I would like to make a statement on behalf of the New Democratic Party, which is the only Party in this House to support the Port of Churchill consistently. Senator Argue recently offered to give $50 million to the Port of Churchill if the advisory board to the Canada Wheat Board would guarantee 700,000 tonnes of grain for export through the Churchill Port. Yet the Liberal Government has taken a number of steps to hurt that Port.

The Government has cut off grain sales to Poland, one of the main users of the Port of Churchill, on the basis of less than credible arguments—first of all, that Poland is a bad credit risk, yet we continue to deal with countries which have worse debt records; secondly, that Poland has a poor human rights record, yet we continue to sell grain to Chile and Brazil; thirdly, that we are punishing the U.S.S.R., while the U.S., pushing for a de facto embargo of Poland, recently sold 22,000 tonnes of wheat to Poland.

In the past the Government also failed to make improvements to the railway and port facilities necessary for the Port of Churchill. The Liberal Government has also refused to provide icebreakers to lengthen the shipping season on a regular basis.

However, the major concern of the people in western Canada is that the proposed changes to the Crow rate will kill the Port of Churchill. Once variable rates come in, then no grain will go through that Port. How can Senator Argue ask for—

Madam Speaker: Order.

INCREASES IN FARM INPUT COSTS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, Canada is one of the few countries exporting food, and therefore food production must be doubled on available arable land in order to feed the expected world population of about seven billion in the year 2000. Technology exists to double our food production by less summer fallow and applying fertilizers and pesticides. However, this would involve a threefold increase in energy use by farmers. As the price of oil and gas keeps rising, the cost of farm inputs increases.

Recent oil product price hikes will cost our farmers more than $70 million a year. Last February's increase in the price of natural gas will directly raise the Prairie's fertilizer bill by approximately $2 million annually. The cost of pesticides and other natural gas based chemicals is also rising.

The federal farm fuel tax accounts for 44 per cent of the cost of fuel paid by farmers. The PC Party has consistently pointed out the need for elimination of taxes on fuel used to produce food. However, the Government continues to turn a blind eye to the plight of farmers already hit by low commodity prices and high interest rates.

• (1410)

If the Government's irresponsible policy toward the cost of energy for agriculture persists, future generations may well find themselves desperately short of food.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE LEADERSHIP CANDIDATE'S REACTION TO CBC NEWSCAST

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it is interesting to note the reaction of Brian Mulroney to a CBC news item which suggested his organization was making some efforts to rally the non-Clark supporters around Mr. Mulroney. The story so irritated Mr. Mulroney that he is reported to be considering suing both the CBC and Michael Duffy, the CBC's highly respected parliamentary correspondent.

Such a sensitivity and overreaction can only be explained by Mr. Mulroney's lack of political experience. Had Mr. Mulroney run and won in 1979, 1980, or in any of the numerous by elections since the last election, he would long since have become immune to these slings and arrows which those of us who have actually taken the plunge are subjected to regularly.

If this is Mr. Mulroney's reaction to the gentle and even-handed Mike Duffy, I fear he will become apoplectic when the likes of Allan Fotheringham is turned loose on him. Those of us on this side of the House who would welcome his entry into electoral politics, urge him to remain calm and to press steadfastly on to the convention lest this attack of the media jitters turns out to be the big mistake of 1983.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BOMBING OF MOZAMBIQUE BY SOUTH AFRICAN AIR FORCE—CALL FOR CONDEMNATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, the statement made today by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) about the bombing of Mozambique is a weak statement which does not begin to meet the occasion. The fact is that South Africa has admitted bombing a city of a neighbouring country; it has claimed to have killed guerillas, which claim is disputed; and it has used as an excuse a bombing in Pretoria which was neither proven against Mozambique nor has been admitted by Mozambique. Yet the statement by the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs appears to lay equal blame on all parties for the violence that is occuring there.

The fact is that the source of the violence, both the violence which we condemn among the terrorists and the violence of the Government of South Africa against a neighbouring state—the source of all that violence is the violent regime of South Africa against the majority of its people, which is carried out through murder, starvation, and enslavement. Therefore the Government of Canada ought to condemn not only apartheid in South Africa but its blatant act of war against a neighbouring state and its continued murder of its own black people.

POLL RESULTS ON SUPPORT FOR FREE ENTERPRISE SYSTEM

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, in Brandon-Souris yesterday, Lee Clark, a university professor, defeated the NDP candidate, a corporation president, in all but eight out of 200 polls. Apparently there was also a Liberal candidate in the race.

Permit me to focus today briefly on the myth in a few quarters that the Liberal Party is still on the free enterprise side of the political spectrum. Last week an extremely interesting Gallup poll was published on the question, "Do you think the future development of Canada should depend more on private enterprise, more on Government control, or on the same mixture of private and Government control as we have now?"

The result showed that, across Canada, of those surveyed only 10 per cent favour more Government control and 40 per cent favour the present mix. For the Prairies and B.C., the percentages favouring more free enterprise are, respectively, 56 per cent and 57 per cent. Across Canada, 61 per cent of PC supporters favour more free enterprise and 41 per cent of NDP supporters, but only 30 per cent of Liberal supporters.

In other words, Madam Speaker, Liberal partisans across Canada appear to be more hostile to free enterprise than both the NDP and the Canadian population as a whole.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. For over a week we have known the thrust of the report of the automotive task force on the industry. We have heard from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who has not said anything that would instil confidence in the unemployed workers, and the Minister responsible for international trade has been conspicuously absent on this extremely important matter affecting his portfolio.

Is the Minister in a position to tell the House and the industry today whether he—not Cabinet—as Minister and International Trade at least supports in principle the recommendations contained in the report? If so, what is he doing about it?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that I have been more conspicuous by my absence since I have been out of the country on a very successful trade mission to the ASEAN countries during the time since that report of the task force came forth.

I think that this was an extremely well qualified task force. The report that they have presented to my distinguished colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, is one that will be studied very carefully by Government in relation to determining whether it provides the best method of assuring that our industry will be competitive and able to provide the necessary jobs for Canadians. I believe that is the goal that we all seek.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I am simply trying to find out where the Minister stands on this very important issue.

Notwithstanding the task force report, could the Minister tell the House whether he is in agreement in principle with the position that I, for example, have been taking for the last two years, which involves two basic principles—one the provision of incentives for offshore importers to invest in Canada and therefore create jobs in this country, and the second, to establish content regulations for all offshore importers as we do with the Americans, also to create jobs in our country? Forgetting about the task force report, does the Minister believe in principle in those two viewpoints, or does he categorically oppose them?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I would find it unusual if I were in agreement with the usual right wing reactionary views of the Hon. Member. In this particular case I certainly am in agreement with the principle of providing incentives for offshore producers to invest and produce in Canada when such investments are in the Canadian interest. That has long been the stand of the Canadian Government.

When the Hon. Member says that we should be strict on content on all types of products—

Mr. Jelinek: Automobiles.

Mr. Regan: —and require that production occur in Canada, I think that would go to the absolute heart of destroying the multilateral trading system. Since we are a country that depends upon our exports for over 30 per cent of our GNP, we of all people would stand to lose. I think the Hon. Member must keep in mind that whenever we sell locomotives overseas, or boilers overseas, or power stations, or anything else, that means jobs in Canada just as much as the goods that are sold in Canada. Indeed, it is a very important part of our economy.

We must find solutions that will protect the existing jobs, those that relate to sales in Canada and those that relate to our export sales, and not throw away one or the other. If we erect protectionist barriers we have to expect that we will be countered by retaliation in those markets.

Mr. Jelinek: If I understood the Minister correctly in the long speech that he just made in answer to my question, he is categorically opposing content regulations for automotive imports. Therefore he is opposing the thrust of the tax force report on the automobile industry.

VOLUNTARY RESTRAINTS ON IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, on a related matter, as the Minister knows, voluntary restraints on Japanese auto imports under last year's agreement run out in just over a month, on June 30. Once again the industry is being kept in the dark in this regard.

Could the Minister shed some light on this matter and relieve the anxiety that exists in the minds of many unemployed automotive workers and their families, in my riding and right across the country?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I want to say first to the Hon. Member that I am not rejecting any of the recommendations of the task force at this point. I think they need to be carefully studied. If the Hon. Member will reflect on the words I said, he will find I said that we cannot have a general system of that type. But GATT itself has recognized that, from time to time, for the protection of a vital domestic industry temporary conditions can be arranged.

• (1420)

If you want to refer to the Auto Pact with the United States, that is a question where two parties entered into an agreement. There well may be agreements that we can enter into with the Japanese. There are interesting areas there to be discovered and I think the work is worthy of very careful examination.

In relation to the state of the negotiations for a continuation of an agreement level beyond July 1, these are continuing. We as yet do not have an agreement. We are hopeful that an agreement on figures for an ongoing period of time will be achieved before July 1. If it is not, then I will recommend appropriate steps to the Government.

CANADIAN CONTENT REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I trust I will get more succinct and shorter answers. First I would like to commend the Minister and the authors of the task force report. However, there is one concern which many auto workers have, namely, the content under the Canada-United States pact at the present time is approximately 74 per cent. Is it possible for the Minister to keep the Auto Pact for the North American automotive manufacturers separate from any other foreign manufacturers so that their content of 74 per cent will be kept intact, and the 60 per cent mentioned would only apply to the new outside foreign manufacturers who set up business in Canada?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am sure the members of the task force will appreciate the Hon. Member's compliments. The matter, however, will depend on what can be negotiated. The Auto Pact was something that was negotiated between the U.S. and Canada. Therefore, the answer to the second part of the Hon. Member's question will depend upon what could be negotiated with a third country.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF PARTS MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, could we leave the 1965 Auto Pact in place and deal country by country on the other ones? A new agreement is not going to be as beneficial to Canada as the one we have now that was arranged in 1965.

In many other countries there is tremendous assistance for small business related to the automotive industry, namely, grants, tax write-offs, and high technology assistance. Could the Minister address himself to encouraging those industries that are supplemental to the major automobile manufacturers?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, with respect to the first part of the Hon. Member's question, because it should be negotiated obviously it would be predicated on what the two countries could negotiate. Second, I hope the Hon. Member was here on April 19 when my colleague, the Minister of Finance, announced a substantial number of investment incentives for Canadian companies to expand and to modernize. There is also the $25 million ILAP program for the auto parts industry. The Hon. Member knows that an expansion has been requested. The new Industrial Regional Development Program which was announced during the budget will provide further financial incentives for industry right across Canada in the manufacturing and processing sectors in order to expand and modernize, or even to establish new industries, Madam Speaker.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED TRUCKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for international trade. It is clear the Government's vacillation on the principle of the task force report on the automotive industry has given the upper hand to the Japanese in these negotiations. No one can have any doubt about that.

Will the Minister confirm that the level of imports for trucks from Japan is up over 50 per cent this year compared to last year? And while the Minister is answering that, will he acknowledge that a clear commitment by the Government to accepting the principle of the report would strengthen his hand immeasurably in negotiations with the Japanese?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member, again I have difficulty in dealing with the premises to his questions. It seems to me again and again that Hon. Members, of all Members in the House, fails to show any concern about the jobs of people who work in plants that depend upon export orders. He never takes the trouble to think through the consequences as to whether every other country would lamely lie back and buy our goods regardless of how we treat its goods. I ask the Hon. Member to take just a little time to learn a bit about the multilateral trading system which means so much to the workers of our country.

• (1425)

The next thing I say to the Hon. Member is, no. I think our negotiations with the Japanese, with reference to the levels of car imports, are going well. I am confident that we will be able to reach a settlement. In relation to the number of trucks coming into the country, which was his third question, the Hon. Member will recall that we can only make judgment on how many automobiles come in, at the end of the year, because in the first portion of the year there is often a surge in products coming in at that time.

Mr. Broadbent: When it comes to lying back, one can just observe that the Government has performed that way for the past ten years, and that is why we are short some 35,000 automotive jobs today. That is a result of the Government's actions.

COMPARISON WITH SITUATIONS IN AUSTRALIA AND UNITED STATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, considering that we in this Party are interested in maintaining exports in resources, as well as having a manufacturing nation, would the Minister tell the House how it has been possible for the Australians to continue to sell resources to Japan and also obtain automotive plants from Japan? Could he tell us how the Americans have been able to obtain the commitment of the three largest automotive companies to put plants in the United States, and continue to sell resources? Why is it that every other industrial country with an automotive sector and resources is able to achieve success in both, while this Government fails in both?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, it is obvious the Hon. Member has never had the experience or the responsibility of carrying out office and has only been in the comfort of opposition, and I am afraid he never will. I think if he did have that experience it would be very sobering to him very quickly.

Let me just tell him about the differences between the United States and Canada. The difference is that we sell a great deal more to the Japanese than we buy from them, while the Americans have the reverse situation. Therefore the Americans are in a different negotiating position. The same thing applies in relation to trade relations between Europe and Japan.

Having said that, we are selling a great deal more to the Japanese than we are buying from them, and we are in the position that we have now received a task force report, which was called for by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. That report has been in our hands for a very short period of time. The Japanese are cognizant of its existence.

They are fully aware of our concern about having greater Canadian content. The Hon. Member is not on sound ground when he says that this Government is not proceeding in a way to best protect not only automotive jobs but all Canadian jobs.

CANADIAN NEGOTIATING POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, continuing the Laurel and Hardy routine, I will direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Would he tell the House whether in his view, as a person who should be interested in the preservation of jobs in this key sector, it would strengthen his amateur colleague's negotiating position with the Japanese if we had a bill in the House which indicated that all foreign producers selling cars in the Canadian market had to reinvest their profits to produce Canadian jobs?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as I indicated to the Leader of the NDP when my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, was out of the country, as he has throughout his illustrious career, I am sure the Minister will be very successful in his negotiations with the Japanese.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH COMMITTEE ON YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday I talked with the Minister briefly about having a task force formed on youth issues. He should know now that his colleague, the Secretary of State, has indicated his plans for a parliamentary committee to deal with youth issues. Will the Minister advise when the two of them will be getting together to sort out whether or not we will be having such a committee?

• (1430)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the position put forward by my colleague, the Secretary of State, is to look at a broad range of issues relating to young people. I presume that because employment is a matter of continuing concern it will be one of the issues referred to that parliamentary committee. I look forward to any deliberations. Considering that the Secretary of State has over-all responsibility in the Government, for youth matters, obviously we will continue our concern with their employment prospects.

REQUEST FOR EARLY ESTABLISHMENT

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, is the Minister saying that we can expect the formation of this committee very soon, that he will support it, and that we can begin on it in the next couple of months?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should refer that question to the Secretary of State.

LABOUR RELATIONS

THREAT OF WEST COAST PORTS STRIKE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It arises out of the current dispute between the grain handlers and the elevator companies which could lead to a strike or a lock-out as early as this week, thereby curtailing the flow of grain out of the western ports. What action is the Minister taking to ensure that such a work stoppage will not occur? In other words, can he give the producers of Canada assurance that grain will continue to flow through the West Coast ports in an orderly fashion?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour, who is presently representing the country at ILO meetings, I am the Acting Minister of Labour. I can inform the Hon. Member that the Department of Labour has kept in constant communication with the two parties to the dispute. We have received the proposal for some form of mediation at this particular time, but no decision has been taken on the issue because that may prolong the strike rather than have it come to a proper settlement, which we would all like to see.

INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE APPOINTMENT OF CONCILIATOR

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Minister. Since the dispute centres around the Government's six and five program and the issue of wage parity with the longshoremen, has the Minister had any consultation with his colleague, the Minister of Labour, and has the Minister of Labour been actively involved? Also, is he considering the appointment of a conciliator to ensure that this matter will be resolved in an orderly fashion, having regard to the fact that there seems to be two government policy issues that are directly related to this issue?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, that question could be more properly handled by the Minister of Labour on his return. According to the briefings we have received, they have been in very close contact with both parties. The question of whether to appoint a commissioner of conciliation was raised. It was felt that at this particular time it would delay a settlement. The facts of the case are clearly known. Certainly all the facts are on the table. The concern of the Government is to get a resolution of the problem as quickly as possible and not to intervene at this time as it could simply appear to prolong the problem.

EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS DISPUTE—SAFETY AUDIT REQUESTED

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport concerning the airline pilots' strike at Eastern Provincial Airways. The Minister knows that the matters in dispute must be resolved by the Canada Labour Relations Board, but in the meantime EPA continues to fly its aircraft with management and new pilots, at 70 per cent capacity. My question relates to air safety.

There are reports of incidents involving potential accidents, long flying hours, and overworked pilots. Has the Department of Transport made an audit of safety regulations at EPA? If not, will the Minister ensure that a safety audit is made? Also, will he assure the House that the situation will be closely watched and that EPA will not be allowed to reduce safety standards during the strike?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Frankly, Madam Speaker, I have been told by the Minister of Labour that problems concerning labour are his responsibility and I should stay out of them. I am doing that now. I am sure he is attending to this problem. The subject of safety is indeed my responsibility. My Department has assured me repeatedly that all precautions are being taken to prevent a loosening up of safety rules by the company.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, the Minister did not indicate whether he was aware of breaches of any safety regulations by EPA during the course of the strike. He knows that the strike creates a very difficult situation in relation to safety measures.

AIR TRANSPORT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF JOINT EPA-CP AIR SERVICE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Minister another question involving EPA. It does relate to the Ministry of Transport. EPA and CP Air have proposed a joint service in Atlantic Canada and have made a presentation to the Canadian Transport Commission. How can EPA announce that this service will be instituted in early June in the absence of any approval from the CTC? Will he look into that situation and advise the House how EPA can promote this service during the course of a strike, and without the approval of the Canadian Transport Commission? Will he look into that and advise the House of what is going on?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): As I said previously, Madam Speaker, and I was laughed at to a certain extent, it is very difficult for me to know when the CTC announces a decision that is made or when it makes it. Indeed, I was informed of that today. For the moment I can only say that the possibility of EPA operating from Montreal to Halifax appears to be a very favourable one.

EMPLOYMENT

EXTENSION OF WORK SHARING PROGRAM

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Madam Speaker, the Work Sharing Program of the Government expires on May 27. I wonder whether the Minister of Employment and Immigration is able to indicate to the House whether there are any plans for the future of the Program?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. I hope to have an opportunity to discuss the issue in committee later on today. I can inform the House, because I know the Hon. Member is anxious about this very positive Program continuing, that it may be extended for a further year so that some 13,000 agreements signed up until now will continue to have that kind of security in the workplace. I can also indicate that we will be undertaking a number of controlled pilot projects to use work sharing to help industries affected by job dislocation to retrain workers, and also to help permanent lay-offs. We will be undertaking additional modifications to the Program which, I believe, will be of great benefit to Canadian workers.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE AT WEST COAST PORTS—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF CONCILIATOR

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the possibility of a grain port shutdown or lockout as early as midnight tonight on the West Coast, and the importance of our $5 billion grain export trade, as well as the fact that a conciliator was involved, but the talks broke down about a week or ten days ago. I would like to ask the Prime Minister precisely whether he would agree to the appointment of a conciliation commissioner, or a board, since my understanding is that both parties agreed to this procedure. If they both agree, why does the Prime Minister not agree to the appointment of a conciliation commissioner?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member I would only repeat what I indicated in a previous answer. The Minister of Labour has been in constant touch with the situation in Vancouver. While a strike vote has been taken, full authority has not been given by the membership. The judgment at this time is that we would like to see the parties arrive at an agreement through the collective bargaining process without introducing an additional factor that might only prolong the disagreement and, therefore, add to the problem. At this time the best situation for the Government, in the judgment of the Minister of Labour, is to continue a close monitoring of the situation without having any direct intervention.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, there is also the possibility of a lockout. In light of the fact that both parties have called upon the Government and are willing to agree to a conciliation commissioner being appointed, why does the Government not try to get an agreement from both sides to keep the operation going while the conciliation commissioner or the board does its work, and thereby keep the ports open for that period of time? In that way grain could continue to be exported and, hopefully, there could be a satisfactory settlement. Why does the Government not follow that procedure since it makes sense to both sides?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, there is a very basic principle involved in the whole system of collective bargaining. Each side to a dispute must accept its own public responsibilities. It is not up to Government to intervene at every point in time. It is our sincere hope that both sides in this dispute will recognize their public responsibility and come to a settlement without in any way injuring the public interest.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

INVESTIGATION OF NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE'S REFUSAL OF SASKATOON FRANCHISE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday, Ralston-Purina, the owners of the St. Louis Blues hockey team, launched a lawsuit in the United States under American anti-trust laws. The National Hockey League is a type of public trust, Madam Speaker. Numerous benefits have been granted by Canadians to the League, including the amateur draft, a virtual monopoly status, and public money for arenas and television rights. More than that, hockey is central to the Canadian identity.

In view of the Minister's undertaking to launch an investigation under the Combines Investigation Act, and in view of the fact that legal proceedings have now commenced in the United States, can the Minister indicate to the House when this examination and investigation will be concluded?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I understand that the Director of Investigation and Research is pursuing the matter. He has been in touch with some of the Governors of the NHL. I understand that he has also been in touch with the directors of Ralston-Purina and he is looking into the matter. No decision has yet been reached as to whether there is any breach of the Combines Investigation Act, but as soon as the Director terminates his fact-finding search, I will report to the House.

REQUEST THAT COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT BE AMENDED

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I appreciate, and the Minister will understand, that time is of the essence in this matter because there was a real question raised as to whether the Saskatchewan application was given a fair hearing. According to all reports, the hearing was merely a charade. There should be some principles of natural justice that apply to these particular applications.

Under the present provisions of the Combines Investigation Act, the matter of transfer and operation of professional sports franchises is specifically excluded from the operation of Section 32, the Freedom of Trade Section. Has the Minister given consideration, or will the Government give consideration to amending this provision in order to make it applicable to the transfer of franchises within the National Hockey League?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, it may be a little premature to deal with this aspect of the law at this time. I hope in the near future to be able to introduce a series of amendments to the Combines Investigation Act. I hope that at that time the Hon. Member will support my initiatives.

HEALTH

QUERY RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I wonder if the Minister can tell us today when we will see the Canada Health Act. Could she also tell us whether the Canada Health Act will be centred on more control for Ottawa or on better Health care for Canadians?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, we will see the Canada Health Act as soon as possible and, of course, its purpose has always been to strengthen the best social programs Canadians have ever had.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MEETINGS OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, under the British North America Act, jurisdiction over health and welfare is shared with the Provinces. I wonder if the Minister could share with us any information she has as to when she last met face to face with any provincial Minister in terms of the preparation of this Act.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, in terms of the negotiations I have had, no, I do not think that it is a good practice for me to show my hand before the time comes, but I will be meeting face to face with Mr. Russell in Alberta tomorrow.

CANADIAN HERITAGE

RELOCATION OF HMCS "BRAS D'OR"

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. While I have not had time to give him the courtesy of notice, the Minister is aware that I am concerned about the final resting place of HMCS Bras d'Or. May I ask the Minister of Supply and Services whether or not, when making the decision to move the Bras d'Or from Halifax, or from a logical site at the Alexander Graham Bell Museum on Bras d'Or Lake, the federal Government undertook to expend any federal money for the transport of that vessel, for its relocation, and for its maintenance?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, we have recently made an announcement to the effect that the Bras d'Or will be brought to an exposition centre at L'Islet-sur-mer which is down the St. Lawrence River from Quebec City. Had I received notice of the question, I would have been able to provide the hon. gentleman with more details in terms of the expenditure of funds in order to transport the Bras d'Or. I will have to take his question as notice and provide him with more details at a subsequent time.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR MOVING VESSEL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, it had been a very clear undertaking on the part of the federal Government that it would provide no funds to any interested group with respect to a final resting place for the Bras d'Or. In checking as to whether or not there were any federal funds involved in this, because if there had been, the Minister would be aware that many other places, including the Bell Museum on Bras d'Or Lake where in fact it should be, would have wanted it, would the Minister undertake very clearly to expose to the House, to the Canadian people, and particularly to those members of the Canadian Armed Forces who had the privilege of serving on H.M.C.S. Bras d'Or, just what arrangements were entered into with respect to the Bras d'Or, and tell us just exactly how many other areas were explicitedly or implicitedly interested in receiving the Bras d'Or as a museum piece?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I might say that my Department has been asked to provide help in moving the ship to its final destination, which is the museum already referred to by my colleague. No decision has been made yet, but I understand that there are precedents to that effect where the Coast Guard has helped such ventures.

EMPLOYMENT

EXTENSION OF WORK SHARING PROGRAM—EFFECT ON TRAINING

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, at one o'clock the Minister of Employment and Immigration sent me a statement on work sharing and said that it was embargoed until he was to meet the press at three o'clock. Obviously the embargo only applies to Conservative Members of the House. Now that we know just exactly what the Minister's word is worth, I want to ask him questions that I was unable to ask before because I gave my word.

Now that the Minister intends to extend the Work Sharing Program, what are the extent of the changes in the Program with regard to training, and how will these changes and the extension of the Program affect those who are already in the Program under contract?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, let me explain first that there was no intention to have any embargo on the statement. I indicated that we would be presenting further elaboration on the concept at the committee at three o'clock, and we intend to do that, but certainly there was no intention to restrict the Hon. Member's to ask questions to which I would be very glad to reply. I hope he will not take any serious umbrage at that. That was not the intention. I think that we were simply giving him advance notice of statements that we would be making at committee this afternoon.

As far as the question on training is concerned, as indicated we want to undertake a number of controlled pilot projects in relation to using the Work Sharing Program to provide for a training alternative in firms which see themselves facing a possible change in technology and equipment. Rather than having workers simply take the extra day away from work, they would use that day to be retrained over a period of time. We would have the Manpower Consulting Services work out the terms and conditions under which that training would take place as an alternative, with each company and its employees. This is a matter which the Hon. Member has raised several times. He has asked how we intend to deal with the problems of industrial change. I point out to him that this is one potentially very effective answer, but we do want to test it out first to see if it can be fully applied.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I want to tell the Minister that I phoned his office and I was told by one of his senior aides that the statement was embargoed until three o'clock, and that I was not to ask questions in the House. That is all I can say, Madam Speaker, but I am glad that the Minister is at least prepared to answer questions in the House.

EFFECT ON PARTICIPANTS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, perhaps the 1415;-1 Minister can address the latter part of my question. How will the changes in the Program and the extension of the Program affect those who are already under contract? Will they be able to take advantage of the new changes? Could the Minister tell the House as well, since he will be telling the press at three o'clock, just exactly how much money the Government intends to spend over and above that which has already been allocated, and how much will go into the training aspects of the Program?

• (1450)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, on the specific question of the training allocation, the contracts which we already have under way would hold firm. This is a new extension of the Program which we want to try on a pilot project basis. Therefore, existing contracts would be honoured under the existing conditions, but I believe the development of alternative ways of training are to be tried out in a new phase which would be subject to the kind of negotiation which I have described. It would take place between a firm and the Manpower Consultative Services which we presently employ. The over-all budget for the Work Sharing Program has been increased to $250 million over the life of the next year's agreement. We have not a specific target for the training portion of it, although we have set a $15 million target for those contracts which would be entered into, to avoid permanent lay-offs.

BANKS AND BANKING

PENALTIES IMPOSED FOR RENEGOTIATION OF MORTGAGES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who will be aware that thousands of Canadians who are attempting to renegotiate their mortgages are finding that lending institutions are asking them to come up with penalty payments far in excess of the three-month standard clause. The Minister himself said two months ago that he would undertake to take such cases and submit them to the institutions involved, either through the Inspector General of Banks or any other appropriate agency, so that they would be closely scrutinized in an effort to prevent financial institutions from being unfair to some citizens. There is no question, Madam Speaker, by any definition, that the excessive penalties being requested of these people are unfair. Has the Minister of Finance followed through on this promise?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to thousands of Canadians. I would like to refer him to the millions of Canadians who would like to see this House debate the Crow issue and ensure that we will modernize railway transportation in this country. This House is prevented from doing so by the New Democratic Party. In effect it is preventing Parliament from working, and preventing Canadians from having an opportunity to have their views heard in this Parliament.

I want to tell the Hon. Member with respect to the issues with which he is concerned, that indeed, all the representations I have received have been referred to senior officers of the corporations concerned so that they may be examined and the people concerned could get a fair hearing and a fair review of their situation.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I want to tell the Minister of Finance that most of us in the House of Commons, I am sure, have sent along to him dozens and dozens of letters over the last two months. I would be surprised if any of us have even heard a response from the Minister's office, let alone from any of the financial institutions. In other words, if he believes that the financial institutions are examining each case and adjusting them in order to be fair, he has been misled.

I would ask the Minister of Finance not to provide us with a little discussion on the Crow debate and the proceedings in this House.

Is he now prepared to take some action and himself approach the financial institutions in an effort to have them stop this usurious practice of requiring people to pay out penalty payments far in excess of the traditional three-month penalty clause?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am not arguing about the Crow debate. What I am arguing against is the tactics of the New Democratic Party in preventing this House from debating the Crow, and preventing Parliament from working in a normal way.

As far as his specific question is concerned, I must tell my hon. friend that he is probably not reading his correspondence because, indeed, Hon. Members who have written to me have received answers reasonably quickly. If he has not received his answer, I would certainly want to check with him. I want to point out also that I have sent the list of reviewing officers in the corporations concerned to all Hon. Members who have written to me, and if the Hon. Member has the interest of his constituents at heart he will do his own job and pursue the matter himself with the reviewing officers of the corporations.

DISARMAMENT

PURPOSE OF VISIT BY U.S.S.R. DELEGATION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister explain what Canadian Government policy purpose is served by the presence in Canada of a delegation, I believe called the "Peace Committee", from the U.S.S.R., apparently sponsored by the Canada-U.S.S.R. Association, perhaps the Gorbachev visit, whose chief purpose appears to be the dissemination of propaganda to Canadians with respect to the high degree of freedom to be found in, and the peaceful intentions of, the U.S.S.R.?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asks me what purpose is served. I know of no direct purpose which the Government has sponsored. I suppose, if there is a general purpose, it would be that Canadians feel free to invite people from other countries who have other views so they would be exposed to a debate on disarmament, which is very important for Canadians. It is not in the traditions of this country, and certainly not of the Liberal Government, to prevent Canadians who want to hear varying points of views from listening to those points of views.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if it is the policy of the Government to encourage the propagation of such propaganda in Canada by such groups from the U.S.S.R.? If that be the case, is the Canadian Government requesting reciprocal courtesies from the U.S.S.R. so that Canadian peace groups can similarly demonstrate the peaceful intentions of Canada and the high degree of freedom in this country, to the citizens of the U.S.S.R.?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As they say in the Ukraine, fair is fair.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asks me if it is the purpose of the Government to encourage. The Government, as far as I know, and I have just consulted with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has not done anything in particular to encourage or discourage. Canadians in this country are free to invite people of other lands, if they do not come here for subversive or illegal purposes. They are free to invite people from anywhere to come and espouse points of view. This Government does not propose to interfere with that.

INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBILITY OF RECIPROCAL VISITS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister failed to answer that last half of that question, namely, whether the Canadian Government was encouraging reciprocal courtesies from the U.S.S.R. so that Canadian groups could travel to Russia for similar purposes.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asks a question which is not reciprocal. There is no parallel here. I know of no invitation extended to Canadian groups to go and talk peace in the Soviet Union. That is a reflection on the Government of that country, not on the Canadian Government.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF POLISH PROFESSOR TO TEACH AT UNIVERSITY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I would like to ask the Minister about the appointment of Professor Jerzy Wiatr to teach an introductory course in political science at the University of British Columbia this summer. There have been complaints that Professor Wiatr should not be admitted to Canada because he is an adviser to the Polish Government and is the director of the Marxist-Leninist Institute of the Polish Communist Party. Will the Minister investigate the acceptability of Professor Wiatr for admission to Canada, in view of his position in Poland and in view of allegations that he was refused admission to the United States, and in view of the fact that many other academics are capable of teaching the introductory course which he has been invited to teach?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member would be good enough to submit the information he has, to me I would be glad to look into the case.

SHIPS AND SHIPPING

PROTEST AGAINST USE OF FOREIGN-OWNED VESSEL ON ATLANTIC COAST

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It involves Canadian content, and shipping used to develop the offshore resources in Atlantic Canada. The Minister probably knows that a formal protest has been entered by Ferguson Industries Ltd. of Pictou, Nova Scotia, which company spent a great deal of money developing a vessel for offshore standby and rescue purposes. At the same time the Department is permitting foreign-owned and built vessels, like the Rescue Kim, a 1957 whale chaser of Norwegian manufacture, to come into Atlantic Canada, without any Canadian content, and take charter, presumably, away from this vessel built by Ferguson Industries Ltd. Will the Minister use whatever powers he thinks he has under Section 22 of the Canada Shipping Act and protect some of the shipping interests in Atlantic Canada from this kind of incursion from foreign-owned vessels?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, Canadian ships are protected on coastal trade at the moment. It is only when no Canadian ship is available that foreign ships can come and take contracts, and that necessitates the approval of the CTC. However, I will check into this particular incident to ensure normal procedures have been followed, but I have no doubt that they have been followed.

METRIC CONVERSION

USE OF IMPERIAL MEASUREMENT IN STOCKYARDS

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, yesterday when the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) put a question to me, I misinformed him. On page 25683 of Hansard he said that:

—under pressure from provincial Governments, from agricultural associations and organizations, and from consumers, the federal Government has decided to return to Imperial measurement in the weighing of beef on import and export and that all the stockyards from Montreal through to Prince Rupert will remain or return, if they have converted, to Imperial measurement?

I stated:

I believe the arrangement that the Hon. Member is talking about has been made.

It has not been made, Madam Speaker. There are ongoing meetings. All the meat packing firms are on metric in Canada at the present time, and they are encouraging the livestock yards and dealers to go metric also.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) for his correction but I point out that the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) is not in the House and he may want to reply at a later date.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. DEANS—APPLICATION OF STANDING ORDERS 50 AND 28

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have two points of order arising out of yesterday's proceedings. I would like to deal with them in a way which does not reflect necessarily their relative importance but simply for ease of handling.

Yesterday afternoon, during that time normally referred to as Routine Proceedings, specifically that part dealing with petitions, on page 25686 of Hansard there appears the following under the heading "Business of the House":

HON. YVON PINARD (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin):

That the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

MADAM SPEAKER: That motion, of course, is in order, pursuant to Standing Order 50. All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

I rose at that point, Madam Speaker, but was not recognized. That is incidental. However, my point of order is that the motion was not in order.

Madam Speaker: I just want to tell the Hon. Member that if he did rise at that point and say that he wanted to raise a point of order, I know that some time lapsed because I was waiting for the sheet of paper to be brought to me, but I did not see or hear the Hon. Member. I am very sorry but I did not see or hear him.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I accept that you did not see me. I am not suggesting that I was intentionally ignored. I just make the point that I attempted to rise at that point to raise with you my concern about the procedure. I also attempted to rise, as you may recall, at the point of adjournment to raise the matter I am now going to raise.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member has to understand that I did see him after six o'clock yesterday, but I had just adjourned the House and therefore I could not listen to his point of order at that point.

Mr. Deans: That is fine; I am not quarelling with that either.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is two strikes, Ian.

Mr. Deans: Now that we are in agreement about something, let us get to the disagreement.

Standing Order 50, Madam Speaker, under which the Minister moved his motion, says:

When a question is under debate, no motion is received unless to amend it; to postpone it to a day certain; for the previous question; for reading the Orders of the Day; for proceeding to another order; to adjourn the debate; to continue or extend a sitting of the House; or for the adjournment of the House.

Now, the portion I want to refer to is that which says:

When a question is under debate, no motion is received—

Unless it does one of the things listed. There have been numerous rulings, Madam Speaker, including by yourself, that there can be no debate during the presentation of petitions. Yours is not the first ruling in that regard; there have been numerous others going back to the beginning of the practice of presenting petitions. It is therefore clear that Standing Order 50 is not applicable inasmuch as no matter could be under debate during the time when petitions are being presented.

Debate, Madam Speaker, is quite clearly spelled out in a number of different ways going back over many, many years. I do not want to bore the House with all the definitions but I think it is important to set out clearly how debate takes place. In Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 295 says:

The proceedings between the rising of a Member to move a motion and the ascertainment by the Speaker of the decision of the House constitute a debate—

There was no motion moved at the beginning of the part dealing with petitions, nor was there any debate taking place. Beauchesne goes on to say:

The interval between the proposing and the putting of the question, which is usually used for discussion, gives an opportunity for further proceedings such as the moving of an amendment—

Or the moving of a motion. This is equally clearly set out in the standard Oxford Dictionary which says "debate" means "dispute about; discuss (a question); hold formal argument. Generally in legislatures or public meetings. To consider; to ponder; to contest." That quite clearly sets out what debate is. Neither of those things was taking place, nor can they take place during the consideration of petitions.

The Nineteenth Edition of Erskine May, Chapter XVIII, says at page 358:

The proceedings between the rising of a Member to move a motion and the ascertainment by the Chair of the decision of the House constitute a debate—

Going back to your rulings, Madam Speaker, and the rulings of others in the chair, there can be no debate during the presentation of petitions. There are many other arguments to be made, but based on just that and that alone, Standing Order 50 cannot possibly be used during that period of the day reserved for petitions. That Standing Order, as I said, says quite clearly that when a question is under debate these motions may be made. Quite clearly, by every ruling of every Speaker I have been able to find there is no question under debate at the time petitions are being received. Therefore, for the Government House Leader to rise at that point and, using Standing Order 50, move the motion he attempted to move would be quite out of order. The motion could not be received at that time.

However, Madam Speaker, in the event that the Chair should believe there was perhaps an error in citing Standing Order 50 and that it was possible to move it under another Standing Order, I refer the Chair to Standing Order 28 which says:

A motion for reading the Orders of the Day shall have preference to any motion before the House.

Again under the provisions set out for dealing with petitions, quite clearly there was no motion before the House. Standing Order 29 deals with a motion to adjourn, and a motion to adjourn shall always be in order. If Standing Order 28 said that a motion for the reading of the Orders of the Day shall always be in order, then, of course, a motion at the point of petitions would be acceptable, I submit. But it does not say that. It says simply " . . . shall have preference to any motion before the House".

• (1510)

I suggest that yesterday, as every other day, at that part of the Routine Proceedings that deals with petitions, there was no motion before the House. So neither under Standing Order 50, I submit, nor under Standing Order 28 is it possible to move a motion for the reading of the Orders of the Day.

I suggest, Madam Speaker, in addition to that, that a motion for the Orders of the Day, being a privileged motion, falls into a category that has been dealt with by many other Speakers but not necessarily in this way. I can find no precedent for this having happened in exactly this way, although perhaps the Speaker may be able to find one and point it out to me. But Speakers have moved that other privileged motions, such as a motion to adjourn the House, are unacceptable under certain conditions even though the Standing Orders quite clearly state that they are always in order.

This Standing Order has been interpreted by many Speakers, including the Speaker immediately preceding the present occupant of the Chair who ruled quite clearly on a number of occasions that even a motion to adjourn, which might be considered a privileged motion, cannot be accepted during the Question Period. The Speaker ruled that at that point in time it was unacceptable.

That ruling was based, I contend, on a decision made many, many years ago that the Speaker has the right, even in a privileged motion where the motion may appear to be in order under the Standing Orders, to refuse to accept the motion. It is the prerogative of the Chair, even if the motion appears to be in order under existing Standing Orders, to refuse to accept that motion.

I raise this with you, Madam Speaker, because you can imagine the consequences if this were to be established as a precedent. You can imagine the consequences if yesterday's actions were to be established as a precedent. It would then be possible for the Government to rise at two o'clock on any day and move that we go to Government Orders and to forgo all the normal proceedings of the House, including the Question Period, the moving of motions by Private Members, the introduction of bills, the making of motions by Government Members or other Members, all those things that normally fall under routine business.

I contend that to allow that precedent to stand would be to deny Members of the House their rights, long established by Parliaments long before this Parliament, to take part in the proceedings and properly to represent their constituents. It is a right of Members of Parliament to present petitions in the House, standing in their place, on behalf of their constituents. That right goes back to a point in history before Parliaments were even established. That right goes back to the right of citizens to present their petitions to the Crown and was subsequently adopted by Parliaments as a right. Initially it was not even in writing; it was initially an accepted right and as an accepted right I agree with Philip Laundy, who in his book when discussing matters such as this said as follows:

The right of petitioning the Crown and Parliament for redress of grievances is acknowledged as a fundamental principle of the Constitution. In considering the history of the petition it should be realized that law originated as unwritten custom and as such could not be changed.

I put this argument to you succinctly, Madam Speaker. Under Standing Order 50 it was not possible for the Minister to rise on other than a petition. Anything other than a petition at that point in time was out of order. On rising during the petition part of the Routine Proceedings, the Minister was recognized for the purpose of presenting a petition or, if he was not recognized for the purpose of presenting a petition, then he should have advised the Chair in advance that he was rising on another matter. I do not believe that was true. If he was not rising on a petition he would have had to advise that he was rising on another matter. If he was rising on another matter it was clearly out of order. If it was his intention to rise under Standing Order 50, that was out of order for the reasons that I have stated.

I ask you, Madam Speaker, in the interests of preserving the integrity of Parliament, in the interests of protecting the Opposition from a Government that would steam-roller over rights that have been long established, to find in a ruling that these proceedings were completely out of order and do not constitute a precedent to which reference can be made on any future occasion.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I do not think that the Hon. Member's interpretation of Standing Orders 50 and 28 is correct. His interpretation is restrictive as to the appropriate time for presenting the motion I moved yesterday to proceed to Orders of the Day. I think there is no justification for a restrictive interpretation, which is not supported by Standing Orders 50 and 28 because of our parliamentary practice and also because of the nature of the motion presented. First of all, I think that the title of the motion clearly indicates its nature, and we can therefore conclude that it can only be moved at a certain time of the day. It is a motion inviting the House to proceed to Orders of the Day, so that logically, if we had reached Orders of the Day, the motion could not have been moved. However, it is my view that at any time before reaching Orders of the day, this motion, which is provided under Standing Orders 28 and 50 and which invites the House to proceed to Orders of the Day, is entirely in order. I think this is eminently logical. Standing Order 50 says, and I quote:

When a question is under debate, no motion is received—

With some specific exceptions, it does not exclude a motion inviting the House to proceed to Orders of the Day before that stage has been reached. The same applies to Standing Order 28, which says, and I quote:

A motion for reading the Orders of the Day shall have preference to any motion before the House.

That does not mean that if a motion is not before the House, we do not have the right to move a motion inviting the House to proceed to Orders of the Day. On the contrary, if, as it says in Standing Order 28, a motion for reading the Orders of the Day has preference to any motion before the House, all the more reason for it to have preference during Routine Proceedings to any other item before the House. This is particularly true, and the implications of Standing Order 28 are so far-reaching, that our conclusion is that we can present a motion to proceed to Orders of the Day, even when the House is not actually debating a motion, since this motion is far more important than any other item under Routine Proceedings.

To justify this interpretation of the Standing Orders, I think it would be useful to see what the experts have to say, and to consider the nature of the motion itself. Yesterday's motion was basically a dilatory one, but it was not moved to prevent debate but to enable the House to get on with the Orders of the Day and consider the main question. It was dilatory in that it was meant to postpone other items preceding the Chair's call for Orders of the Day. And if we look at the reference work whose title in English is:

"Dubroy, Bourinot, Rules of Order":

The term "dilatory" is used by most writers on parliamentary law as a convenient means of grouping together motions that postpone a question for the time being. For instance, motions for reading the orders of the day, for proceeding to another order of business, for the adjournment of the House or debate, have the effect of superseding or delaying the consideration of a question. Such motions must be decided forthwith without debate or amendment.

[Translation]

Bourinot says that the motion in question, that is, a motion inviting the House to proceed to the Orders of the Day, is in fact a dilatory motion and takes precedence over any other question—not only motions but any question before the House—before the Chair has called Orders of the Day, and that this motion must be put forthwith, without amendment or debate.

I think it is therefore clear, Madam Speaker, that the motion I moved yesterday to enable the Opposition to consider a major piece of legislation—an opportunity that was turned down by the Opposition—clearly conformed to our Standing Orders. The Chair called a vote on this motion and also had Members called in. Unfortunately, the vote could not take place for reasons we all know.

Finally, I have a subsidiary argument. I would like to refer the Chair to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fifth Edition, Citation 282, where it says under the following heading, and I quote:

Motions to Pass to the Orders of the Day

When an Order of the Day is under debate, a motion "That the Orders of the Day be now read" is a nullity as the House has already reached that stage of its proceedings—

Upon reading this citation, and in the light of what I said earlier, I must conclude that although this kind of motion cannot be called once the House has reached Orders of the Day, the motion is, by its nature, acceptable at any other time. Madam Speaker, that is why I must conclude that the objection made by my learned friend from the New Democratic Party has no basis in law. He certainly cannot complain about the fact that we moved to give his party an opportunity to consider Bill C-155. He had the privilege of voting on the motion. He also had the privilege of considering the Bill. However, they preferred to obstruct the proceedings and to prevent Parliament from considering an important issue. That was their choice, but it does not strengthen the Hon. Member's case, because the motion was moved at the right time, that is, just before we reached Orders of the Day.

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I followed with interest the remarks of my friend from the New Democratic Party with respect to Standing Order 50. I will be interested to hear the Chair's comments on his remarks.

I point out that if the tactic that was used yesterday is available under Standing Orders, that very same tactic might very well have been used by the Government during the constitutional debate when various questions of privilege, points of order and other parliamentary items available to the Opposition were used. I would be interested to hear if the Chair could differentiate between the situation that existed then and the situation which existed yesterday.

In joining the discussion on the ruling, it would also be interesting to note Citation 417(b) at page 151 where there is a definition of a dilatory motion. It refers to the motion "that the House do now proceed to . . . " That motion is described as being one which is:

—though independent in form, are moved in the course of debate on questions which they seek to set aside.

The Chair may also want to draw that into the discussion on the argument. It would seem to me that Routine Proceedings must be defined. If there are questions to be decided, I would be interested in knowing exactly how the Chair would deal with Citation 417(b) under those circumstances.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Madam Speaker, I wish to make my small contribution to this particular item under discussion. Yesterday I had a petition from my constituents which I was prepared to present. The Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) is normally a very reasonable person and I have found that when he makes mistakes in the House he rises to correct them. I submit that the hon. gentleman erred greatly by affecting my privileges as a Member.

I submit that it is a privilege of the House to present a petition. Citation 666 of Beauchesne clearly indicates:

The right of petitioning the Crown and Parliament for redress of grievances is acknowledged as a fundamental principle of the constitution and has been exercised without interruption since 1867.

Furthermore, with respect to the method of presentation, Citation 692 makes it very clear that:

(1) While a Member may, if he desires, present a petition from his place in the House during Routine Proceedings and before the Introduction of Bills—

That is the part of the sentence that concerns me. I was standing in my place prepared to present a petition during the Routine Proceedings. This was during the time provided to make representations in the House on behalf of my constituents.

I submit that as a result of the Hon. House Leader bringing in his motion, he infringed upon my privileges to present a petition. That is the only time when I can present a petition. I had a petition on behalf of my constituents, mainly on behalf of those in Swan River, that I wanted to present at that time.

I submit again that the House Leader greatly erred and affected my privileges as a Member of Parliament representing my constituents. I wish to present that argument, Madam Speaker, for your consideration and hope that in the future the Hon. House Leader and others in the Government would not violate privileges of Members to present a petition on behalf of their constituents.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I wish to make two points. The first is in response to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) when he cited Citation 282 of Beauchesne. It states:

When an Order of the Day is under debate, a motion "That the Orders of the Day be now read"—

And it goes on. The citation reads "When an Order of the Day is under debate", and I remind the chair that we were not under Orders of the Day yesterday, we were under Petitions. I think that is an important point. I do not think the House Leader can use as support Citation 282 of Beauchesne which describes what he can do once we are on Orders of the Day.

The second point he made concerned when Orders of the Day are under debate. I believe there is a number of precedents of previous Speakers as well as yourself that said we were not engaged in debate at that particular time. I refer to a ruling that you made on October 24, 1980, as reported at page 4069 of Hansard. I quote:

Order, please. I believe I have a number of petitions today. I must remind Hon. Members that they are allowed to present their petitions but not to enter into debate. The presentation should be kept extremely short—and when I say extremely short, I mean generally within a minute.

In other words, no debate is allowed during the presentation of petitions. I am sure you are referring to Standing Order 71(3) of our green book on rules of the House.

I think it is very clear, Madam Speaker, that we had not reached Orders of the Day. There was no question before the House and there was no debate before the House.

The last point concerns Standing Order 50 itself. I think it is very clear. It states:

When a question is under debate, no motion is received unless to amend it—

It goes on from there. I remind you that we were not debating a question yesterday. I think it is very clear that we were discussing petitions yesterday and there was no question before the House. If there was no question before the House, I do not think a Member can get up to propose a motion.

As has already been mentioned by our House Leader, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), we were not conducting a debate. I have already referred you to your own ruling of October, 1980 when you supported that position at that particular time. As a result I wish to argue that the motion presented by the House Leader yesterday was out of order. Indeed, if that motion was in order, I suggest this whole place could become very chaotic as Members of the House could rise at almost any time to move a motion that we proceed to Orders of the Day or something else.

Point of Order—Mr. Deans

• (1530)

Madam Speaker: I think I have to dispose immediately of the arguments brought forward by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) because he did use—I do not think it was a ruling but an admonition I was making to Hon. Members as they were presenting their petitions. I reminded Hon. Members that they should not debate while presenting a petition. I was simply admonishing their Members who go on for an excessive period of time describing petitions, debating in fact, when the only thing they are allowed to do when presenting a petition to the House is to give the title of the petition or something of the substance of it. That argument I have to dispose of because I do not think it is relevent to the situation we are discussing.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Should this occurrence of yesterday prevail, as my colleague from Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has already said, a member of the Treasury bench can eliminate the Question Period, Questions on the Order Paper, Private Members' Bills, Government Bills, Petitions and even motions.

Mr. Pinard: The House can.

Mr. Benjamin: Routine Proceedings, Madam Speaker, by their very definition mean routine. They are firm and they are fixed, except the House by unanimous consent can do anything it wants with Routine Proceedings or with anything else in this Chamber.

If this practice were to prevail, then the Government or anyone else can say that Parliament cannot exist when Members on all sides are prevented from exercising a right, as my colleague from Hamilton Mountain said which is inherent by practice and by history. Only Members of the Treasury benches need to be in this place if what I heard yesterday is to prevail. All other Members from both sides of the Chamber may as well proceed to their home constituencies and stay there.

The Government House Leader mentioned the word "dilatory". What is dilatory about an authentic petition with the actual signatures of citizens who exercise the right to petition their Parliament and their Sovereign through their Parliament?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have to stop the Hon. Member because I want these arguments to be put to me so I can decide on the question. I will not allow Hon. Members to go beyond the scope of this discussion. The Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), when he spoke of dilatory practices, was not saying that petitions were dilatory. He was saying that the motion to proceed to Orders of the Day had to be considered as a dilatory motion or the contrary, a motion to advance to Proceedings of the House.

Mr. Pinard: That is what I said.

Madam Speaker: I do not think the Government House Leader referred to petitions as being dilatory.

Mr. Lewis: That is right.

Madam Speaker: As we all know, it is the right of Members to present petitions.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, you have helped me very much with what you have just said. Whether the presentation of petitions is dilatory or whether the Minister wants to be dilatory himself in terms of how he deals with the Routine Proceedings of this Chamber, it seems to me the Minister is drawing a very long bow without an arrow in it. May I remind Hon. Members on the other side that when—I did not say if but when—they are in opposition, as they will be whether after the next election or ten elections from now, they will regret what happened yesterday because then any member of the Treasury benches can prevent anything from happening under Routine Proceedings in this Chamber. If Routine Proceedings do not mean Routine Proceedings, why are they on the Order Paper every day?

An Hon. Member: Why don't we all go home?

Mr. Benjamin: Where does this stop, Madam Speaker? If 280 Members of this Chamber—I will leave out Madam Speaker and I will leave out the Prime Minister—by some accident each had a petition to present on a given day, it would take up the remaining time of the Chamber that day, the following day and the day after. Would the House Leader then rise in his place and move to proceed to Orders of the Day, interrupting the presentation of petitions of citizens of our country by Members of Parliament from all sides of the House? Surely, Madam Speaker, yesterday's occurrence, which because it was the first time—and I submit it was illegal—caught Members on all sides, except the Government House Leader, with some degree of surprise and shock, cannot be allowed to prevail unless you want this Parliament to become impotent, a shambles and chaotic.

I submit the points made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), and the House Leader for the Conservative Party are well taken. I ask on behalf of Members on all sides that that kind of motion should not be allowed. The very presentation of it means debate at a point where debate is not allowed and it is totally out of order. Just the presentation of the motion is debate, and that is not allowed during the presentation of petitions.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I too was on my feet yesterday to present a petition when the Government House Leader put forward his motion which was accepted by Your honour pursuant to Standing Order 50, as you then stated. I certainly want to concur with the remarks of the House Leader of my Party and other speakers who have indicated that we are talking about a motion which goes right to the nature of Parliament and indeed to the nature of parliamentary democracy itself.

There are three relevant Standing Orders here. The most important is Standing Order 50 to which the Speaker herself referred. That Standing Order talks about a question being under debate and then refers to a series of possible motions which might be received under appropriate circumstances. One of those motions is to read the Orders of the Day. Yet another motion is to proceed to another Order, including Orders of the Day.

There is a point which has not yet been raised but one which I believe is very important in the context of what the Government House Leader has said. The Government House Leader referred to Standing Order 28. Standing Order 28 refers to a motion for reading the Orders of the Day which shall have preference to any motion before the House. The fact of the matter is that that was not the motion that was before the House yesterday. Why the Government House Leader would make reference to Standing Order 28 which refers to a motion for reading the Orders of the Day, and then go on to refer to a citation from Beauchesne, which also refers to a motion for reading the Orders of the Day, I do not know. With respect, that is completely irrelevant.

That was not the motion before the House yesterday. The motion before the House yesterday was that the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day, not that Orders of the Day be read. How the Government House Leader can argue that a motion which refers to reading the Orders of the Day somehow applies to a motion that refers to proceedings of the Orders of the Day, which is also entirely separate and comes under Standing Order 50, when both are distinct and separate motions, is certainly beyond me. I suggest, Madam Speaker, that any purported reliance on Standing Order 28 is entirely without foundation.

The final point is once more with respect to Standing Order 50. Standing Order 50, as has been noted by a number of my colleagues, starts out with the words "When a question is under debate". Madam Speaker rose at one point to indicate in response to a submission from my colleague from Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) that there was no real issue in terms of the Speaker's earlier ruling on the question of debate, that she merely indicated that there should not be debate. With respect, the issue goes beyond that. Standing Order 71(3) does not leave any discretion. It indicates very clearly:

• (1540)

On the presentation of a petition no debate on or in relation to the same shall be allowed.

How could it possibly be argued that Standing Order 50, which refers to a question being under debate, is relevant when pursuant to Standing Order 71(3) there can be no debate? Therefore I suggest that Standing Order 28 is not relevant in the circumstances because that was not the motion on the floor. Standing Order 50 is not relevant because there was no question under debate. We were dealing with petitions which pursuant to the Standing Orders cannot be debated.

I strongly urge you, Madam Speaker, to recognize that what was attempted yesterday was an undermining of the parliamentary process itself which must not be allowed to be repeated.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, I do hope that when you announce your decision in a few moments you will act as you did on many previous occasions, namely render your ruling not only in keeping with the intent of the Standing Orders, but also in light of the circumstances surrounding the events.

Upon hearing the arguments just made by some of my colleagues opposite, a visitor in the gallery might come to the conclusion that someone on this side of the House is attempting to question the right of any Member to present a petition. Obviously, such is not the case.

As the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) has said, the privilege of presenting a petition is one that I have as much as he has, as have all other Members in the House.

However, what some Members may object to and, in my opinion, what Your Honour must object to, is the abuse of that privilege. In addition to the number of Members who rose yesterday to present petitions, we now have a few who take the floor today to shed tears over the fact that, unfortunately, they were deprived of that privilege. Since I simply want to prove my point—

Mr. Deans: Be honest!

Mr. Guilbault: Ah, that hurts. I guess it hurts, because they are trying to prevent me from speaking.

I must point out that when someone imputed motives to the Government a moment ago, when the Member opposite said that the Government was trying to do away with Routine Proceedings, they were on a witch hunt. The Hon. Member who is at fault wants to blame somebody on this side of the House, and that is quite amusing. They impute motives to the Goverment, and yet yesterday they did try to delay the business of the House.

What I am asking you, Madam Speaker—and I am convinced that you can and that it is your duty indeed to do so—is that in your interpretation of the Standing Orders you do not take into consideration the academic arguments which were made earlier about the Standing Orders without reference to the circumstances, but on the contrary that you keep in mind as well the incidents which have occurred when the situation first came up. You cannot really make a judgment without keeping the circumstances in mind and concluding that even what is going on today could be interpreted by some Members, including myself, as being an attempt to slow down the debate and keep us from reaching the Orders of the Day. Some Members want to pursue the debate and proceed with Government Orders.

Mr. Deans: I will stop your Bill, but that is not the way I will be doing it.

Mr. Guilbault: I can see that some of my remarks must have an element of truth since a few Members opposite are trying to cut me off.

I can say that the rights and privileges of this House will always command better respect when individual Members enjoy the privilege of taking the floor without their colleagues making attempts to prevent them from debating the real basic issues, which is what we have been elected for.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Presumably the Hon. Member is rising on the same point of order, because we cannot have a new one until this one is settled.

Mr. Kilgour: On the same point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I will allow only a very brief commentary because I think I am now in a position to rule on this particular point.

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I will be quite brief. You have already made a decision and delivered your judgment almost 45 minutes ago. Today is allotted to private members to allow them to introduce private Bills. The left wing of the Liberal Party is trying to encroach on the rights of the Members to introduce their legislation. Would you kindly allow us to proceed without delay?

An Hon. Member: You have no lesson to give to anybody.

[English]

Madam Speaker: I have listened with great care to all the arguments which have been presented on this particular point of order. I thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) for raising it because he saw some grounds on which it was possible to do so. It is always good for the House to have someone explore the meaning of the different Standing Orders so that we can be guided by those arguments for the present and for the future.

I listened very carefully to the arguments and I must say that to a certain degre the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is right in saying that Standing Order 50 is not applicable. That is true in one sense because quite obviously there was no debate going on in the House at the time at which the motion to proceed to Orders of the Day was proposed. However, it is very difficult to say under which Standing Order a motion of this particular nature could have been moved because there are no other references concerning motions to proceed to Orders of the Day in the Standing Orders. One cannot conclude it cannot be used because it has been used innumerable times in the House. We know that a motion of this nature can be moved.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain referred to Standing Order 28 which reads:

> A motion for reading the Orders of the Day shall have preference to any motion before the House.

There is reference to the circumstances surrounding the moving of a motion to proceed to Orders of the Day, but it does not completely enlighten us on the particular point which the Hon. Member raised. Nowhere in the Standing Orders is it indicated that we cannot move it at any other time but when something is under debate. Standing Order 50 says "When a question is under debate", and then refers to motions to proceed to Orders of the Day. It is not indicated anywhere in the Standing Orders that at any other time one cannot move a motion to proceed to Orders of the Day.

Also the Hon. Member pointed out that, contrary to what we have in the Standing Orders concerning a motion to adjourn, where the Standing Orders indicate that it is always in order, we do not have that either in the case of a motion to proceed to Orders of the Day. I think the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain will follow the logic of the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) in his presentation. It cannot be said that it is always in order, for once we have reached Orders of the Day we cannot move that we should proceed to Orders of the Day. There is a logic there which allows me to retain the idea that the motion to proceed to Orders of the Day was in order. The logic of the President of the Privy Council suggests that it has to be moved before we get to Orders of the Day, that is to say, before debate commences.

I have to conclude that Standing Order 50 refers only to the fact that use can be made of such a motion but does not explain—

Mr. Deans: Under certain conditions. It says so quite clearly.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: No, I do not think that means that when a question is under debate, it has to apply to every possible motion that is enumerated in Standing Order 50. That preface is relevant to certain of the motions described in Standing Order 50, but not to all of them.

The basic point that we are discussing is whether a motion to proceed to the Orders of the Day can be moved before we reach Orders of the Day. In the particular circumstances we are discussing, if it can be moved when a Member was presenting a petition, I have to say to the Hon. Member that we have a precedent which goes along with what I have explained about a motion to proceed to Orders of the Day.

A motion to proceed to Orders of the Day was moved in the course of the Question Period at a time before which my predecessor, in an agreement with all of the leaders of this House, determined that the Question Period could not be interrupted by any kind of dilatory motion. It was decided that even questions of privilege would be considered only after the Question Period. But prior to that time a motion was moved during Question Period to proceed to Orders of the Day. That was on November 13, 1970. That motion was moved by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and was accepted by the Chair.

Based on that precedent and on my interpretation of the particular situation, I have to say that the motion presented by the President of the Privy Council was in order.

To refer to the arguments presented by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and others as to the sacredness of the right of a Member to present a petition, that right is not affected by using a dilatory sense motion, or as in this particular case a motion to advance the proceedings of the House. That right is not affected because, to quote Standing Order 71(1), Members may present a petition to the House during the sitting of the House "by filing the same with the Clerk of the House". There are other ways of presenting a petition. I do not feel the right of Hon. Members to present a petition has been affected, other than what is acceptable in this House. We all know that dilatory motions are an acceptable procedure which is confined by certain rules which we look at when a certain dilatory motion is presented to the House. In this particular case I have to say to Hon. Members that the motion presented by the President of the Privy Council yesterday was in order.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I listened to your ruling with a great deal of care because our House Leader presented what I thought was a totally cogent argument about an unfortunate ruling that came yesterday. I heard you make two points, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Order. I am very sorry, but I could not hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain on a point of order today because I did not make a ruling yesterday. I did certain other things at six o'clock. I adjourned the House on the basis of the logic of certain circumstances, but I cannot allow Hon. Members now to discuss this particular ruling. I just caution the Hon. Member about that.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I do not want to quibble on the point. We are faced with an extremely important matter in this Parliament. I am talking about a decision to accept a motion yesterday and the ruling which you have perhaps made or are about to make. If I understood what you said, you said that if there is not a rule in the book that prohibits something, then it will be permitted, which is, to understate it considerably, quite dubious. Second, you cited the one case to support your ruling—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It is quite true that I did mention the fact that sometimes if there is nothing to prohibit something, we might consider that it is permitted. It is permitted through the practice of this House. We have had these kinds of motions before in circumstances that were quite similar. I have quoted a precedent which goes back to 1970, a time when a motion was moved by one of the Hon. Member's colleagues who is very conversant with the procedures of Parliament. I am really sorry but I will not accept any further commentary on the ruling.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I must say I do regret the ruling. I wonder if I might ask a question.

Madam Speaker: Order. If the Hon. Member regrets the ruling, he knows what he can do. There are procedures whereby a Member can express regret about a ruling by the Chair. There is no way that this Parliament will work if we proceed by insinuations about the validity of the Speaker's ruling. I do ask Hon. Members to be careful about this particular point. It has nothing to do with me personally, but it does have to do with the office and the function that I have in this House.

MR. DEANS—OUTCOME OF VOTE TO BE DETERMINED BY MEMBERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I want to raise a separate point of order. Last evening at six o'clock the Speaker determined, I assume as a result of consultation although I must confess I was not party to it, to adjourn the House. This is the second occasion on which this has occurred, having occurred last week during a motion to adjourn. The bells were ringing and the Speaker determined at six o'clock that the motion to adjourn was in fact enforced by the Standing Order which requires the House to adjourn at six o'clock.

Last evening the motion before the House was quite different. It was not a motion to adjourn but a motion to adjourn, the outcome of which required a vote of the House of Commons to determine.

I submit it is inappropriate for the speaker to adjourn the House while the bells are ringing on a matter other than a motion to adjourn. The Speaker has considerable latitude in suspending the sitting, if it is the desire of the occupant of the Chair to do so, until such time as she is satisfied the House is ready to vote, as whoever the Speaker may be is entitled to do.

I suggest with all the respect that I can muster that the Chair does not have the authority to determine the outcome of a vote that has nothing to do with adjournment itself. The only people who can determine the outcome of a vote are the Members of the House of Commons. The Chair does not have that authority. It may well be that by some extension of logic, and I must confess this afternoon leaves me with some question as to logic in this place, the Chair may decide that by allowing the vote to take place it would simply take time and nothing much else could occur. That, however, is not for the Chair to decide. That is not the Chair's prerogative. The Chair's prerogative is only to ensure that a vote once called for takes place. The Members of the House of Commons who determine that a recorded division should occur should be given the opportunity to have that recorded division occur.

I suggest, without asking for any particular ruling at the moment, that the Chair consider the implications of such an act. The implications of such an act are that the Chair will now be put in a position of deciding the import of every motion that is up for a vote. The Chair will have to determine on every occasion at six o'clock whether or not the motion is of sufficient importance, not to the Members but to the Chair, to justify waiting until the Members are prepared to vote.

• (1600)

I do not believe that it is the prerogative of the Chair to make that kind of judgment. I do not believe that it is the prerogative of the Chair to evaluate the worth of a motion before the House of Commons. I considered yesterday's motion to be out of order and the bells ought not to have been ringing at six o'clock anyway, and I still feel that way. However, regardless of what the Chair may feel is the value of a motion, if a motion is duly moved, the only ones who can dispose of that motion, unless there is a specific Standing Order that intervenes, are the Members of the House of Commons by recorded division.

I ask, Madam Speaker, in the interests of the House operating with any degree of fairness and common sense, that the Chair please not put herself in the position of having to make judgments about the relative values of motions that are standing before the House awaiting disposition by Members of the House of Commons.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I think that this is a very simple matter. The Hon. Member wrongly stated that you, Madam Speaker, cannot stop the bells the way you did last night at six o'clock because there is no Standing Order authorizing you to do so. I respectfully submit that that is very wrong. Standing Order No. 1 is very clear. It states:

1. In all cases not provided for hereafter or by sessional or other orders, the usages and customs of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland as in force at the time shall be followed so far as they may be applicable to this House.

There is no Standing Order in our book, Madam Speaker, that states that you have the right to stop the bells at six o'clock. Just because there is no Standing Order does not mean that you have no authority to do so, because Standing Order 1 refers to practice followed in the United Kingdom. The other day you referred quite rightly to May's Nineteenth Edition at page 295 where it reads:

Dilatory motions, i.e. motions for the adjournment of the House or of the debate, or that the chairman do report progress, or do leave the chair, pending at the moment of interruption, lapse without question put.

Since our Standing Orders are silent on this subject, the passage I just read is applicable because Standing Order 1 refers to practice in the United Kingdom and the case referred to happened in the United Kingdom.

It now becomes important to know what a dilatory motion is, and that is why I say that the matter is simple. If the motion I moved yesterday is a dilatory motion in the sense understood by May, then that solves the matter.

Let me quote from Bourinot's Fourth Edition, page 322:

There is a class of motions, common to all parliamentary assemblies, intended to have the effect of superseding or delaying the consideration of a question. For instance, motions for the adjournment of the house or debate, for reading the orders of the day, and for the previous question, are all in this direction.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, it is obvious that the motion to go to Orders of the Day is, in a sense, a dilatory motion as understood by the authors May and Bourinot. It was a dilatory motion to move to something else, something which was the main subject of discussion and is so important, something which we want to debate and which the NDP does not want to debate.

What I am saying is that the motion moved yesterday was a dilatory motion in that sense. It is covered by the precedent in the United Kingdom that you have referred to, Madam Speaker, and which is quoted in May's Nineteenth Edition at page 295. It seems obvious to me that logic is important but understanding and knowledge of the rules and practice of the House is also most important before judgment is passed on any situation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I have two points to make. I followed the argument of the Member for Hamilton Mountain on the question of vote with interest. Referring to page 25686 of Hansard, you make the statement, Madam Speaker:

That motion, of course, is in order, pursuant to Standing Order 50. All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

I submit, Madam Speaker, that at that point we have gone beyond a debate and are now into the putting of the motion which, under Standing Order 12, gives Members an opportunity to be recorded as to where they stand on whether or not they should move to Orders of the Day.

It was perhaps missed in the discussion last week, but the motion last week that the House do now adjourn was in fact won by the Opposition on the verbal division and was so declared by the Chair. We are sure that the Government felt it was very important that it have an opportunity to have a recorded division on that vote. It did not have that opportunity, but that is a question that I believe should be addressed, the question of whether or not, once the question is called for on the yeas and nays, the House does not move out of debate and into the question under Standing Order 12 of a vote. That is one point.

The other point I would make, Madam Speaker, is this, the Government House Leader has referred to Standing Order 1 which provides that under the rules, if the House finds that something is not covered by our Standing Orders, it can refer to the Standing Orders of the United Kingdom. Standing Order 1 and Standing Order 27 of the United Kingdom make reference to what can be debated and what cannot be debated. I am by no means an expert, and I do not know who in this House is an expert, on what the Standing Orders of the United Kingdom say with respect to debate on this type of motion, but it would appear that under the Standing Orders of the United Kingdom the House can debate the question whether the House shall now adjourn. In fact, under Standing Order 27 of the United Kingdom, it suggests that the debate shall be confined to the matter of such a motion.

I suggest, Madam Speaker, that that would indicate that there is a difference in how a motion that the House do now adjourn should be treated between Canada and the United Kingdom. I would draw that to the attention of the Chair.

If the Government House Leader wants to use part of the Standing Orders of the United Kingdom, I suggest that the Chair, in ruling on the matter, must refer to the Standing Orders as a whole, and I know that the Chair would not want to pick and choose between different parts of the Standing Orders of the United Kingdom in order to support the Government House Leader.

Madam Speaker: I thank Hon. Members for their contributions. I want to say to the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) that I will look into these matters, but the other day when I acted upon those motions at six o'clock, I did not fall back on Standing Order 1 which says that when the Standing Orders do not provide for something, one can use the Standing Order of Great Britain. I think that must be done very carefully because those Standing Orders could in some ways be contradictory to our own Standing Orders and should only be used when there is no other way of interpreting a particular situation.

I relied on Standing Order 8(1) when I adjourned the House the other day and explained that after six o'clock, when the House was indeed supposed to adjourn, a motion to adjourn had lapsed and had become a nullity. A motion to adjourn made no sense any more because the House is supposed to adjourn at that time.

Now, if that logic is accepted, and I know that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has accepted that logic, the same logic must be accepted pertaining to a motion to proceed to the Orders of the Day. After six o'clock there is no way to proceed to the Orders of the Day, so the motion again lapses; it becomes a nullity and has no meaning. It cannot be applied and it cannot be acted upon because it is past the time at which the House can consider the Order of the Day.

The Hon. Member very briefly mentioned that he was not part of the consultations which took place before I acted upon the situation which occurred in the House yesterday. I want to remind the Hon. Member that on the floor of this very House I did discuss with him, and asked him if the Members of the New Democratic Party were intending to come to vote; and I did say that something will happen at six o'clock, in the way of a warning. The Hon. Member had his comments at that time and I had my own comments. However, we did discuss briefly on the floor of this very House, right in front of these steps.

There were no consultations, I want to tell the Hon. Member, with other Parties except for a phone call which I made, as I have on other occasions, to the Whip of the Conservative Party, who I could not reach, to the Deputy Whip, who I could not reach, and then I spoke to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen), who I reached immediately, and asked the simple question; "Are the Members of your Party prepared to come and vote?" Very simply, there were no consultations. Of course, the Speaker does not consult before making a ruling except if she needs some clarification.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is quite right. The Speaker may not evaluate a motion. I believe I can comply with that plea entirely. I did not evaluate a motion in another case. The Hon. Member will remember that on a certain day when Hon. Members were not coming in to vote on a motion to introduce a Bill, I did not adjourn the House but simply suspended the sitting, precisely because the House has to resolve these matters. The motion to adjourn, or a motion to proceed to Standing Orders, was not disposed by the Chair. It was disposed by our Standing Orders, and I refer to Standing Order 8(1). That is quite different. The Speaker should interpret the Standing Orders and should inject certain logic into the proceedings of the House, referring herself to the Standing Orders; and that is what I did on those two occasions. However, when there was a matter of evaluating a motion, the Chair did not do that but simply suspended the sitting.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I rise on another point of order. The Chair, and the Chair's predecessors, have ruled frequently in the presentation of petitions that there shall be no debate. May I ask the Chair, on a point of order, if the moving of a motion during the presentation of petitions constitutes debate, either the entering into or the starting of a debate? And if it does constitute a debate, Madam Speaker, I would like to have your advice on this matter.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is discussing the ruling which I made nearly an hour ago.

Mr. Benjamin: No, I am not.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member may not do that. I believe he knows the rules.

Mr. Benjamin: I did not do that.

Madam Speaker: I even disposed of his argument, which he is now repeating, before I ruled. In answer to the Hon. Member, I did not rule, and I did not have to rule, on whether or not debate was permissible in the course of presenting a petition. The Standing Orders are quite clear. No debate is allowed in the course of presenting a petition. Simply, the reading out of the title or the substance of that petition is allowed. I have often reminded Hon. Members that they were taking too long in presenting their petitions, and some of them were in fact debating them. I only reminded Hon. Members that they could not debate their petitions. Therefore, the Hon. Member is referring to something which is quite outside of this particular question. I did dispose of that argument and I will not allow him to come back to it.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to seek some clarification. I do not in any way challenge the earlier ruling of the Chair, but I wish to seek clarification with respect to a reference to a precedent from 1970 involving the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The Chair did, I believe, indicate that that particular incident occurred following consultation and agreement involving all House Leaders. Perhaps the Speaker might indicate whether that is the case, because if that is the case—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member did not hear me correctly. I am not going to start giving clarifications about my ruling, but the Hon. Member is a bit confused. I did say that this precedent occurred in 1970. That was prior to the time at which my predecessor, Mr. Speaker Jerome, in consultation with all the Leaders of the Parties, determined that during Question Period no other proceedings could occur. It was meant to preserve the Question Period as a bloc which would not be interrupted by any other proceedings. That, in a sense, is a bit illogical because, for example, we have the right of an Hon. Member of Parliament to raise a question of privilege. A question of privilege supersedes everything; the House is not supposed to be able to function if there is a real question of privilege to be discussed. However, even a question of privilege, it was determined, would be delayed until after the Question Period. That is all I said.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I fully accept your ruling and I am not questioning it or debating it, not in this Chamber. I would like to ask, Madam Speaker, if the moving of a motion constitutes debate in any way, shape or form under the rules. Just the action of moving a motion, does that constitute debate?

Madam Speaker: Is the Hon. Member saying the moving of a motion or of a petition?

Mr. Benjamin: The moving of a motion. Does that constitute debate?

Madam Speaker: The Speaker is not here to answer questions from Hon. Members. If they want a course on procedure, I can indicate many places where they can receive a course on procedure. I am not here to answer questions on procedure.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ANGUISH—RIGHT TO PRESENT PETITIONS

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. If you find it in order, I would like it referred to the appropriate committee, the Committee on Privileges and Elections, because I feel there has been an infringement on Hon. Members' rights within this House. I refer to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 275(1), and I quote:

> It is a fundamental rule that, with the exception of certain matters dealt with under Routine Proceedings, no question can be considered by the House unless it has been previously appointed either by a notice or a regular Order of the House. The paper known as Order Paper and notices is the official agenda printed on the responsibility of the Clerk of the House, containing all the proposed questions set out in accordance with the Standing Orders. All the proposed proceedings of the House are recorded in abbreviated form in that paper. To add to, or suppress from it, any proposal which the House has ordered would constitute a serious infringement on the privileges of the House of Commons. If any serious errors are made they may be corrected by the House only in open sitting with the Speaker in the Chair.

End of quote.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. I have this particular reference in Beauchesne. It is quite long. I do not believe the Hon. Member needs to read it out to me. I would just like to know what his question of privilege is.

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, if you would allow me, I said I had come to the end of the quote, or that section which I—

Madam Speaker: Order. I would like to know, so I will understand the reasons for the Hon. Member quoting this particular article, what the question of privilege is. Because the Speaker has to rule immediately after the question is posed, the Hon. Member should give the Speaker a chance to know what it is all about. If I lose two or three minutes listening to quotes, that is time in which I cannot reflect on the Hon. Member's particular problem. Therefore, if Hon. Members would like to accommodate the Chair by telling the Chair immediately what their problem is, then I can reflect upon it.

Mr. Anguish: Coming directly to the point, Madam Speaker, many of my constituents in Saskatchewan had submitted to me a number of petitions which I had every right to expect I would be able to present in this House of Commons. I have reason to expect that because of the ancient and historical right of presenting petitions—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. There will be occasion to do that in the course of Routine Proceedings. Alternatively, under Article 71(1), I believe, if for some reason or other the House does not reach that particular time in the Routine Proceedings, an Hon. Member may file the petition with the Clerk. I suppose that answers the Hon. Member's question.

• (1620)

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, please allow me to finish my question of privilege.

Mr. Cousineau: Sit down!

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, my question of privilege is that up until yesterday I had every reason to presume that I could present these petitions on behalf of the petitioners yesterday in this House. Some of these petitioners were told that their petition would be presented in this House yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anguish: I have every right to expect to be able to tell them—

Madam Speaker: Order. If the Hon. Member felt that it was an absolute necessity to present those petitions yesterday, he could have filed them with the Clerk of the House of Commons. I understand the Hon. Member's predicament. He would prefer to read them out to the House because it does give some publicity to the problems his constituents want to address. But there are two ways of doing it and the Hon. Member could have resorted to that other means yesterday. On other days the Hon. Member will have a chance to present those petitions. That right has not been affected.

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, unless I am in error there was debate entered into during that period and there was no opportunity to do that yesterday in this House after I had told my constituents these petitions would be presented in the House.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. There was no opportunity because the proceedings of the House turned out differently from what the Hon. Member expected.

Mr. Nystrom: That is right.

Madam Speaker: Well, yes, but that is a predicament we all have to face at certain times in the House. The Speaker has no opinion on these particular circumstances, but the Speaker does have an opinion on that particular point which the Hon. Member is raising. He may have presented those petitions yesterday by filing them. If he still wants to read those petitions in the House, he will have further opportunity at another time.

Mr. Benjamin: A point of order, Madam Speaker. Since Rule 71 says there shall be no debate, Madam Speaker, my colleagues were unable to present petitions yesterday—

Mr. Kilgour: The same point.

Mr. Benjamin: —because there was debate entered into.

Madam Speaker: Presenting reports from Standing and Special Committees.

Mr. Anguish: You are a corrupt bunch.

Madam Speaker: Tabling of documents.

Mr. Cousineau: Repeat that.

Mr. Anguish: You want your petitions—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Anguish: There is the greatest lack of democracy we have ever seen in this place, and I repeat that in this House.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Anguish: You are a shame to the whole system and to the country of Canada. All of you, including from that half over.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Anguish: When your back is against the wall, you change the rules so you can never lose.

Madam Speaker: Order. I have to remind the Hon. Member that, as during proceedings for a vote and during Routine Proceedings, it is not considered proper to interrupt the Speaker in the fashion the Hon. Member is now doing.

EMERGENCY PLANNING ORDER

Question No. 4,404—Mr. Mitges:

1. Did the Cabinet give directives to all Departments to implement any or all parts of the Emergency Planning Order, passed as Order in Council P.C. 1981-1305, and, if so, to what extent has (a) the Department of (i) the Solicitor General (ii) Agriculture (iii) National Defence (iv) Employment and Immigration (v) Communications (vi) Energy, Mines and Resources (vii) Industry, Trade and Commerce (viii) Transport (b) the Prime Minister's Office implemented the provisions of the Order?

2. Does the Government plan to introduce legislation to enact the Order and, if so, on what date?

3. Did the Government receive any legal opinion from Department of Justice lawyers or from lawyers outside the Government that implementing the Order without first having passed appropriate enacting legislation through Parliament may be "extra legal" or illegal?

4. Has the Government sought legal advice as to whether or not the Order conflicts with the newly proclaimed Charter of Rights and Freedoms and, if so, what was such advice?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Emergency Planning Canada and by the Departments named below, respectively, as follows:

1. Order in Council P.C. 1981-1305 directs Ministers to prepare emergency plans to respond to those peacetime or wartime emergencies that are within or directly related to their areas of responsibility. The Order is an administrative tool only which assigns responsibility for the preparation of plans. It does not authorize the implementation of action pursuant to those plans.

(a) (i) The Ministry of the Solicitor General has reviewed all its existing contingency plans, formed an intraministry steering committee and a working group, whose tasks are, in consultation with other concerned departments and agencies, to modify, update or develop where necessary contingency plans for all possible types of emergencies within or directly related to the Ministry's area of responsibility.

(ii) In the Department of Agriculture, the limited currently available staff participates in international and national planning related to the new responsibilities.

(iii) In the Department of National Defence, a draft has been completed for review by senior management of updated resource allocation guidelines to permit expeditious and proper allocation of funds during periods of emergency or increasing international tension.

The Department has assisted a number of other federal Government departments in preparing their respective planning documents which could, in an emergency, lead to the establishment of National Emergency Agencies.

In addition, DND continues to: participate in exercises testing, inter alia, the adequacy of its defence plans in the event of an emergency; maintain emergency Government accommodation and facilities for which it is responsible; support the civilian Radiological Defence (RADEF) System; and operate and maintain the Canadian Forces Warning and Reporting System, including support for that portion of the CFWRS (i.e., sirens) which warns the public in the event of an attack until such time as the Department of Communications develops an alternative public warning system.

(iv) In the Department of Employment and Immigration Canada (EIC), updated Emergency Planning guidelines have been prepared and were distributed throughout EIC during November, 1982. They provide advice and guidance on planning for emergencies at the local, community level.

(v) The Department of Communications has a number of emergency response programs in existence related to their area of responsibility. They were largely developed as a reaction to P.C. 1965-1041 but fit the requirements of P.C. 1981-1305. They range in completion levels from 10 per cent to 80 per cent.

Documentation expanding on Part I of the Emergency Planning Order specifying the role, functions and structure of the National Emergency Agency for Telecommunications has been completed to final draft form. The release of this document in the near future will initiate expanded department emergency planning and co-ordinating activities.

Some policies, procedures and regulations applicable under the National Emergency Agency for Telecommunications are completed in draft form and others are under development.

The Department has completed studies and made recommendations for a National Warning System which has been approved by the Interdepartmental Committee on Emergency Planning.

The preparation of plans for telecommunications censorship await development of over-all censorship policies.

(vi) The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has prepared and approved a three-year program to develop plans for the establishment and operation of a National Emergency Agency for Energy. This agency would be activated only in the event of a declared emergency. In addition, this planning includes making necessary arrangements so that the NEAE will be able to operate effectively within 30-days notice. The program is progressing on schedule.

(vii) In the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce/Regional Economic Expansion, one Emergency Planning officer has been hired to meet the Minister's national and international planning responsibilities to the extent possible.

(viii) In the Ministry of Transport, the Order in Council is considered to be a re-emphasis of Government interest in emergency preparedness. Emergency planning activity is therefore continuing much as it has in previous years.

(b) The Prime Minister's Office is not responsible for undertaking any of the planning indicated in the Order.

2. No; see 1. above and 3. below.

3. Legislative authority is not required in order to assign the planning responsibilities set out in the Order. Any authority to implement planned emergency response measures during an actual emergency, where not already provided for by law, would be sought from Parliament.

4. See Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, Citation 171(gg).

STATUS OF INTERNMENT CAMPS

Question No. 4,415—Mr. Gilchrist:

1. What is the state of development of the internment camps approved for construction by the May, 1981 Order in Council?

2. Have any camps been created and (a) if so, how many (b) if not, how many sites have been chosen and at what locations?

3. How many and which prisons have been selected and assigned for replacement of criminals by political detainees?

4. Will the military or police forces be the designated guards?

5. Have manuals of procedure and instruction been draughted and published for the procedures of detention of prisoners?

6. What provision under the law has been made to define the rights of citizens who have been chosen for detention and to what courts or judicial bodies will a detainee be permitted to appeal for release?

7. Has a manual (a) of censorship control and procedure (b) of fuel rationing (c) of farm production (d) of food rationing (e) outlining the registration, movement and allocation of civilian manpower (d) for the management and control of national information services (propaganda and censorship) been developed?

8. Are any of the above-mentioned manuals available for inspection and, if not, when will such outlines of procedures be ready and available?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Emergency Planning Canada and by the Department of the Solicitor General as follows:

1. Emergency Planning Order P.C. 1981-1305 dated May 21, 1981, assigns only planning responsibilities to federal Ministers in areas of either peacetime or wartime emergencies. The Order does not approve the construction of any internment camps and this part of the question is, therefore, not applicable.

2. Not applicable: See 1. above.

3. None: See 1. above.

4. Not applicable: See 1. above.

5. No.

6. As the Order clearly indicates, planning responsibilities for civilian internment camps relate only to their use in the case of war. In the event that Canada does become involved in a war and civilian internment camps are established in accordance with the provisions of the War Measures Act, anyone detained in such facilities would have the legal right to have the validity of the detention determined under Section 10 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

7. The schedule to the Emergency Planning Order assigns to 19 federal Ministers responsibilities to plan certain emergency response functions for use in periods of national emergency. With regard to the development of manuals on the response functions identified in the question, I am informed that the situation is as follows:

(a) Censorship control and procedure: No manuals have been developed. (b) Fuel rationing: The regulations provided for fuel rationing were published in November, 1980. (c) Farm production: No manuals have been developed. (d) Food rationing: No manuals have been developed. (e) Outlining the registration, movement and allocation of civil manpower: No manuals have been developed. (f) Management and control of the national information services: No manuals have been developed.

8. (a) Censorship controls: See 7 (a) above. No forecast can now be made as to the completion date of such a manual. (b) Fuel rationing: See Canada Gazette, Part I, November 8, 1980. (c) Farm production: See (d) below. (d) Food rationing: See 7 (d) above. No date can be forecast by which outlines of procedures will be ready and available. (e) Civilian manpower: See 7 (c) above. No forecast can be made concerning the time of availability of such a publication. (f) National information services: See 7 (f) above. No forecast can be made as to the completion date of such a manual.

DVA—BEDS AVAILABLE AT VICTORIA HEALTH CENTRE

Question No. 4,774—Mr. Howie:

In the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82 (c) 1982-83, was consideration given by the Department of Veterans Affairs to acquiring more beds to supplement the beds available at the Victoria Health Centre in Fredericton, New Brunswick?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): (a) 1980-1981, yes, (b) 1981-1982, yes, (c) 1982-1983, yes. Waiting lists for admission are monitored on an ongoing basis and, as veterans' needs are now frequently age-related, efforts are being concentrated on providing beds closer to centres of veteran population where none have existed previously.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS OF CRIME

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona) moved that Bill C-682, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (victims of crime), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak on this Bill which, I am told by the National Association for the Victims of Crime, is the first measure ever introduced into the House to do something for the deplorable condition of the victims of crime across Canada. It is a measure whose time has long since come for many reasons.

First, most of the provisions in the Criminal Code come from the pre-1960 era when crime was a much smaller problem in Canada than it is today. Victims were mere witnesses in the whole procedure. They had no institutional status whatsoever nor even any effective institutional position in our criminal justice system. They are now the forgotten people as any judge, crown attorney, defence attorney, probation officer, or anyone who has ever been in a criminal court would surely agree.

Second, there are unfortunately a great many victims of crime in the country today. Statistics Canada indicates that in 1980, the most recent year for which statistics on reported crimes are available, more than 160,000 Canadians were victims of Criminal Code offences. There were 632 homicides; 836 attempted murders; 124,000 non-sexual assaults; 25,000 robberies; and 12,787 sexual assaults. At this yearly rate we obviously have more than 1.6 million Canadian victims of crime every decade. Unfortunately, the rate is increasing. A lot of crimes are never reported, and I am thinking particularly of sexual assaults. I believe part of the reason for that is that the victims know they will get very harsh treatment in our criminal justice system as it is at present. In January, 1982 the Gallup pool reported that one in four adult Canadians were victims of a Criminal Code offence during the previous 12 months. If that is correct, there were obviously more than 160,000 victims in 1980 or in the current year.

Third, the raw statistics are often not very helpful. Let me give a couple of examples in more real terms. A rape victim is normally obliged to sit in the witness room with friends of the accused attacker. I am told that six in ten fathers of murdered children turn to alcohol; whether or not they become alcoholics, they certainly turn to drink. About six in ten families in which one of the parties has been sexually assaulted break up.

A mother in a northern Alberta town, listening to the untruths spoken by an accused man in court charged with murdering and raping her daughter said, "There was no one even to give me a kleenex. Everything is for the criminal. They are allowed to get on the stand and lie—absolutely lie all they want. You are listening while they are trying to make your daughter out to be a slut and you can't say a thing. I was sick and disgusted. I have no faith in the justice system any more because of what happened at that trial. The justice system doesn't give a damn about the victim."

Don Sullivan, President of the National Association for the Victims of Violence, had a similar experience in the trial of the man who was charged with raping and murdering his daughter. He said, "When the trial is over and the jury hands down the decision, you suddenly realize you sat through 14 months of court and you have heard the murderer talk, the lawyers talk, everybody talk, and you haven't had a chance to say one word."

As someone who has acted in the criminal courts for more than a decade as defence counsel and Crown attorney, I believe the problems of the victims can be reduced to three major ones.

First, they should be given a say in sentencing. This is not illegal at the moment but in practice it is almost unheard of in most criminal courts in Canada. It seems to me the victim or survivor of a deceased victim should at least have a chance to say something in the sentencing process.

Next, I think we should give them a better break in terms of protection from intimidation by accused persons. They should at least have a separate room to sit in while waiting to give testimony.

• (1640)

Third, I believe that we should give victims of crime a chance to apply for mental and physical damages resulting from a crime.

Basically, the Bill establishes a procedure through which a judge could award personal or mental damages to a victim of a crime when someone is found guilty of a crime. The judge could perhaps adjourn the matter of damages but he could hear the evidence, perhaps from a doctor, and award those damages. Some may say that this will delay the courts. The answer is quite clear that the courts should sit longer than six hours a day, which most do at present. If the matter must be adjourned to another day or perhpas even for a hearing by a master in chambers, this could be done as well.

The point is that this system of awarding damages works. I am told that it works very well in Switzerland. For example, it saves the victim of an assault the necessity of hiring a lawyer and waiting for two years while a civil action goes through the courts.

I do not think that there is any question that the last thing on earth that an assailant worries about is being sued by his victim. If this Bill is passed, it would allow the damages question to be settled in the criminal court at the same time as the evidence for a criminal case is heard. I suggest that it would significantly cut down on the time because the same evidence would not have to be heard twice.

I hasten to point out that this Bill is based in large measure on a Bill that was passed in the United States Congress approximately two years ago. That Bill is called The Victim-Witness Protection Act. My Bill simply refers all of these questions to the Attorney General of Canada and the Solicitor General and their provincial counterparts so they can study these problems and come up with a comprehensive plan to help victims within 270 days.

I believe that by working together these law enforcement officials from the federal Government and the Provinces would come up with a very good and comprehensive plan to improve the position of victims.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has been kind enough to write me a letter which I received a short while ago today. Allow me to anticipate what may be said on the other side, although I do not see anyone there who intends to speak. One of the provisions to which the Minister objects in my Bill is the one which would give our criminal courts an opportunity to make awards for pain and suffering. It is his belief that this is beyond the Criminal Code power within the Constitution. I would argue that this could be done as an ancillary matter to the criminal law power which this Parliament has.

The second point he makes is that there is already a task force of federal and provincial officials currently looking at these questions. It is to report in June. I am concerned that if this task force follows the practice of other such bodies, it may well not report in June. I would like to see a legislated time period stating that this group must report within nine months. While I hope the Minister is right that the task force will report within a few weeks, I fear that it may not.

I look forward to hearing what other Members have to say about the matter and I hope that the Members present today will see fit to refer this much needed Bill, in my opinion, to the Justice Committee so that it may be examined in detail.

[Translation]

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize the fact that the issue raised by the Bill presented by the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) is a very complex one. I am very interested in the subject of recognizing victims' rights not only formally but also factually, and it is one of my major concerns. Unfortunately, it is also a matter that does not lend itself to quick and easy solutions. In fact, it has given rise to considerable debate and various institutional reforms in many parts of the western world in the last twenty years.

There are a number of factors that explain this newly awakened concern for victims of criminal acts. The suffering of victims appeals directly to our humanitarian feelings, and people are often very surprised when they realize that our judicial system has traditionally acknowledged only very indirect responsibility for providing assistance to victims.

Many people claim that the State has a moral obligation to the victim because our judicial institutions have failed to protect these individuals against crime.

Finally, from the strictly utilitarian point of view, it must be recognized that our judicial system itself, if it is to function properly, depends on the close co-operation of the victim and potential victims. Even if that is not always our main reason for being concerned about what happens to victims of criminal acts, we cannot ignore the findings of various studies on the subject. These studies clearly indicate that victims of criminal acts are becoming more and more reluctant to report such acts to the police and co-operate with police authorities so that the criminal can be apprehended, convicted and punished.

This refusal to co-operate on the part of victims is often related to a previous experience or previous contacts with the judicial system. Very often, such experience only adds to the suffering already caused by being a victim of a criminal act. Confronted with a system that was basically designed to preclude any participation by the victim, the latter cannot but feel profoundly alienated. Furthermore, the victim receives little or no information regarding his rights and duties before the law. Decisions in the case concerning the victim are usually made without consulting him and are very seldom communicated to the victim.

In cases where the judicial system has operated effectively, and the offender has been apprehended and convicted, the sentence seldom takes into account the concerns of the victim and his perfectly legitimate desire to receive some kind of compensation for the harm inflicted on him.

Should we be surprised that an increasingly large group of victims are refusing to report such occurrences to the police?

Fortunately, this loss of confidence in the judicial system is not yet widespread, and there is still time to do something about it. However, it is a very serious and urgent problem, because in the final instance, it may affect the ability of our institutions to maintain order and peace in our society. This loss of confidence may take several forms. When citizens no longer trust the judicial system, they are very tempted to take the law into their own hands. It is not a coincidence that today, we are seeing an increasing number of vigilante groups and private security services.

When a society fails to protect efficiently its members against criminal activities, not only does chaos result but also suffering. It is obvious of course that we cannot remain indifferent to either of those social consequences of crime.

In the past two years the Department of Justice has stepped up its research activities in the field of assistance to victims of criminal acts. However obvious it may be that the best way to assist the victims of criminalaction is still crime prevention—in other words, doing everything possible to prevent victimization—it is still necessary to meet the needs expressed by individuals whose victimization could not be anticipated.

To gain better insight into the needs personally expressed by the victim, we have been listening to the victims and their concerns. Interviews with the victims have enabled us to single out three major types of needs expressed by the victims themselves.

• (1650)

First, the need to be better informed. Too often the victims of criminal acts feel alienated from the criminal justice process. They do not know what their legal rights and obligations are. Oftentimes they are not aware of the legal recourse open to them. Quite often they complain that they are given little or sketchy information about the decisions which are taken and which concern them.

Second, the need for assistance and support. The victims often ask for concrete assistance and support which existing services are not always in a position to give them. When such services already exist, the necessary mechanisms to make them available and readily accessible are not always adequate. The victims, particularly when they are still under the shock of criminal action, cannot always obtain the services they seek.

Third, ever more victims are asking for the right to participate in the criminal process and to be consulted when decisions which affect them are taken by those who are in charge of the system. They do not understand why they should be excluded from the legal process, and why their claims should not be taken into account.

Many consultations were proposed to meet the needs of victims of crimes. Several people have suggested that new resources should be allocated for the establishment of adequate services for such victim? Others suggest that the people involved in the administration of justice deliberately should accept to review their own practices and attitudes towards the victims. Others want a formal recognition of the rights of victims. Many of those proposals are interesting, but how are the trade-offs to be made? How are we to ensure that the efforts and resources invested in that area will bear fruit and give victims the maximum support? In such a complex matter, we would be remiss if we were to be led haphazardly by proposals and pressures that go against the penal system. Provincial programs for the compensation of victims of crime have been in place for a number of years and the Canadian government has been financially involved.

Besides, and on the initiative especially of women's groups, specialized services have been developed to assist victims of violence in the home and of sexual aggression. Also, with our growing awareness of the extent and significance of the problem of battered children, assistance programs have been developed in that area. More recently, a number of pilot projects have been launched to meet the needs of other groups of victims, on top of the more general types of services that social assistance networks already were in a position to offer, both to the victims and to the citizens at large. However, a review of the services currently available to victims of crime clearly points to the lack of consultation between those services themselves on the one hand and with the criminal justice system on the other. Many of those services have been developed haphazardly, without consultation and especially without an overall and concrete management policy in that area. The lack of such an overall policy has important implications, both for the victims and the criminal justice system. Too many efforts and resources have been squandered in vain by well-intentioned people, for lack of effective co-ordination between the various initiatives. The services whose value and necessity have been acknowledged are in such a bad financial situation that they have been brought to a standstill. The development of a comprehensive policy in that field is therefore a priority. It is a fact which has been recognized by all Canadians ministers in charge of Justice. They have reconvened a federal-provincial task force to consider the whole question. Now that task force should table its report early this summer. It is apparently quite important to try and take advantage of the information gathered and of the recommendations proceeding therefrom. We therefore suggest that we should wait for that report before proceeding with the consideration of this Bill.

[English]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support Bill C-682.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McDonald: I think it is very important to have this question discussed. There are certain points that could be approved but the general thrust of the legislation is good. Victims are indeed the ignored people in our criminal justice system. This has been pointed out year after year by citizens and by all kinds of groups. The frustration of victims has been pointed out in dealing with the criminal justice system. We have survey information which shows that victims are not well treated. They are confused and they feel that their needs, with good reason, are not being met. It is, therefore, important to address this question.

There are a few points about which I want to raise some questions. First, let me talk about the question of compensation. Clearly there will be difficulties if the offender is in prison. In no way can the prisoner, from the pittance that he is able to earn while incarcerated, pay any compensation ordered. There will also be problems for an offender who is not able to pay, in the loss of a house, for example. If a judgment is entered against an offender, it could be that the wife and children will suffer. Clearly justice will not be advanced in such a case if the wife and children are innocent and have had nothing to do with the offender's action, as is most likely. Indeed, they themselves may be victims of other crimes. It will be entirely inappropriate to make innocent people suffer. This then is a matter that we must ensure is dealt with with a great deal of care.

The question about interfering in the sentencing process generally is a very complex one. I would like to remind the House that very frequently good intentions lead to unexpected results and to results at variance with what was intended. I raise the specific example of diversion projects. We have had all kinds of diversion projects in many Provinces that are intended to see that our overcrowded jails do not become more overcrowded but divert people out of the criminal justice system, especially out of our institutions, and into other forms of community treatment through community service orders. In other words, we seek alternative sentences that would attempt in a very fundamental way to redress the wrong that is done in a way that is satisfactory to victims. These are important considerations, very valid ones and ones certainly similar to the general thrust of the Bill before us. However, what happens very often with these attempts at diversion is that a new layer of persons becomes integrated into the criminal justice system. We have the same number of people going to jail and, indeed, in some places a greater number of people going to jail. Yet we have this new layer of offenders who are added to the system and who are dealt with in the community. The diversion does not keep people out of the criminal justice system but simply adds a new layer of less important offenders who get a level of treatment not as bad as incarceration but nevertheless have their lives interfered with in a serious way.

It is important that these considerations be addressed to ensure that we do not add a new layer of offenders. We should have better methods of dealing with offenders and of reintegrating people. We should ensure that the needs of victims are respected and are met as far as possible.

• (1700)

Now I would like to turn to the issue of jurisdiction. Of course, the Criminal Code is a federal matter, and civil matters come under the jurisdiction of the Provinces. Victims have to seek restitution civilly; they are required to go to the civil courts on such matters. This is clearly inconvenient for them. I am sure one of the purposes of the Bill is to ensure that they do not have to go to two courts but only to one court to have both matters dealt with at the same time. This would be a great convenience, but there are problems because civil matters come under provincial jurisdiction. It is important that we do not have the strong arm of the federal Government moving into a provincial area. This is something which must be carefully considered, with the participation of provincial attorneys general. Some kind of arrangement should be made that would be acceptable to all of them. Certainly the matter should be explored, but it should not be proceeded with in a heavy-handed way by simply taking over another area of jurisdiction.

Subclauses 3(d) and (e) provide for consultation with victims at various stages. Certainly I support the principle that victims ought to be consulted and heard in the process of the matter going to court and in the process of sentencing. I do not want to indicate precisely how they could be heard. Perhaps they could be seen by probation officers or have input at the time of pre-sentence reports, for example. However, the provisions in the current Bill are cumbersome. I think they would be extremely expensive and there would be an enormous amount of administrative work involved in sending out forms to numerous people at the various stages of the procedure. I think the provisions are excessive, although I support the principle of consultation. We want to work out precisely how this should be done. It should be simplified and we should not add an enormous bureaucracy to deal with the victims of crime. Bureaucracies create their own problems. I want to simplify matters rather than to introduce an expensive and cumbersome new procedure.

I speak in favour of the Bill. I think it should be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Its general thrust is good, but there are matters to be worked out. The Committee needs to be directing its attention to this very important question. It should hear from witnesses who could provide some expert advice on how to refine it.

The second choice, which one could expect the Government to argue, is that this matter should be considered in conjunction with the general sentencing project which, we could say optimistically, will be coming up next Fall, at the earliest. I would rather see us proceed with this in the near future than postpone it. The merits of the Bill are sufficient that we should not leave it to the general sentencing review. We should begin to address the entire complex area of giving due regard to victims of crime without further delay.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, this Bill concerns a matter which is very close to my heart. I have worked on it for approximately three years. Its subject matter came to my attention through a constituent of mine, Mr. Don Sullivan, whose daughter was murdered, to whom the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) referred. He faced a real tragedy when his daughter was murdered by a man on mandatory supervision. After his frustration with the legal forces in the region, he got in touch with me. The message I gave him, which he carried forward, was: "Don, keep your cool; don't be antagonistic because you really have an important message". He has done that extremely well. He has handled himself beautifully across the country.

I have asked questions in the House of the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières). I really wanted the Minister of National Revenue to give a charitable donation number to the victims of violence organization. Personally I do not believe in grants—and I discovered that grants were coming from the Minister of Justice—but I believe in helping people to help themselves. The request was turned down on the basis that the organization must change its position in order to obtain a proper number. The organization is prepared to co-operate as long as the Minister discusses the matter with me.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) have been of great support in this cause. Through the contact of Don Sullivan with other people across the country, chapters have been set up in Vancouver, Edmonton and other parts of Canada. Victims of Violence has taken a very positive position. It has been set up to provide a listening board for families who are in a state of shock, some for at least two years.

Another gentleman in my riding was brutally killed. His wife called me a number of times. I told her that she should talk to Don Sullivan who could relate what he has been through and help her. This woman was really distraught. It was a terrible experience for her and her family. Finally she was in touch with Victims of Violence and discovered that she had a forum in which to express her concerns and her feelings, which were similar to those of other victims of crime. These feelings start out as anger against society. These people feel an inner frustration because they cannot do anything. They cannot spill out their feelings or get anyone to listen.

To establish a government agency for this purpose will not solve the problem because a social worker, psychiatrist, sociologist, or whoever, has never lived the experience of having a loved one killed. The Bill adapts itself to the problem. Even though we have the Constitution, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the law, there is little to look after the poor guy who is really hurt. The criminal is fully protected and receives his just dues under the law, but the Bill addresses those people who suffer because of the crime.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta and I have received various letters which refer to the advantages of listening to Don Sullivan on the radio and talking to the people in his group. One letter referred to the fact that it would be beneficial for the average citizen to listen to the comments of Mr. Sullivan. The last sentence of one letter read, "Keep up the great work, Scott; we are all behind you 100 per cent". This makes it worth-while.

As I indicated earlier, I really wanted to speak on this Bill because I feel for these people. I have two daughters, three sons and a wife. I am lucky that nothing has happened to them. I know how I would feel, and I can relate to how these other people must feel.

Just after the court proceedings, Don Sullivan wrote a letter to me in which he said this:

> I went to these proceedings with the thought of vengeance for my daughter and my family and was looking for the courts to give it to me. But, as the trial unfolded my thoughts started to change to wanting justice to be done, which is a big difference. Then, to my grief and dismay, I started to hear that my daughter died needlessly, in fact, she died because of our system.

This is really what it is all about. It is difficult to understand until one is exposed to the suffering of these victims.

Since I have been a Member of the House of Commons there have been four such cases in my riding. I am in a very peaceful, safe community where these kinds of things do not happen. I am not in the centre of the City of Toronto. I am on the outskirts of a city, in a farming community, a dormitory community. It is the trauma that these people go through. I have seen all of them.

• (1710)

The first one was a great shock to me. During the second election, a man ran up to me on the street and asked me directly "Mr. Fennell, are you for or against capital punishment?" We discussed it. The next thing I knew, I was at his funeral. I saw his wife and children there. It was hard to realize that they were left alone with nobody to talk to other than family. They had nobody who had the same experience.

It is for this reason that I think this Bill should go to committee. The Bill is not perfect, as I do not think any Bill brought forward by this Government is perfect. However, it should be allowed to go to committee. I plead with the other side to permit this to happen. This is a very important start. We are not in any rush for this Bill to be brought forward, but we want something done for those who suffer so dramatically by the loss of a loved one.

There is another point I would like to deal with. The Minister of Justice has written to us and stated his tremendous personal interest. His problem is that he wants to set up a task force. Unfortunately, the victims of violence will be excluded from all the hearings on the Bill in the Senate at the present time. How do we know that those people will be heard? Will it only be the bureaucrats, the police and the lawyers who can contribute to this?

Unfortunately, I do not have faith. I want to know that these people can be heard. The only way I can be sure is if this matter is allowed to go to committee to be thoroughly reviewed and discussed. When witnesses are brought in, Members of Parliament will get the feeling of what these people go through.

I appreciate the support we have from our friends in the NDP, in particular the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). There have been only a few people who supported the Bill. I appreciate the support, as does Don Sullivan. I am sure that every Member wants to stand up and express the feeling that we have expressed in the House.

I plead with the Opposition—I mean the Government. I feel it is the Opposition in this case. I appeal to the opposition, who happens to be the Government today, not to talk this Bill out, but, instead, move it to committee because this is a worthwhile subject. It takes care of many people who are hurting. Since 1978, the number of these people has multiplied 300 per cent.

I appreciate the opportunity to talk on this Bill. I feel it is very important for the citizens of this country. It is important to every family in this country because it could happen to anybody. Once again I plead with the Government for this Bill to go to committee.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), Bill C-682, proposes to amend the Criminal Code to provide assistance to victims of crime. I note with interest that several of the provisions are almost identical to those in the United States Victim-Witness Protection Act, 1982.

I know that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) shares the Hon. Member's interest in providing assistance to victims of crime. In fact, the Minister indicated his concern to the Hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona on April 26 when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Many suggest that the victim has been a forgotten person in the criminal justice process. The system places many demands on the victim, especially when appearing as a witness in a trial. However, it seems that at the same time the emotional, physical and financial needs of the victim-witness are not adequately dealt with by the system. He may suffer loss of wages, transportation difficulties, lack of information about the investigation or the prosecution, or about the services which are available to him. Is it any wonder then that the victim perceives that the criminal justice system is overly concerned with punishing the offender and insufficiently concerned with the needs of the innocent victim?

I am sure that every Member in this House would agree that we must overcome this neglect of the victim. In fact, in July, 1981 the Ministry of the Solicitor General and the Department of Justice undertook a comprehensive review to assess the victims' needs and the gaps in delivery of services to victims, to promote improved services for victims of crime and to develop ways of disseminating informatiom to victims. In addition, to complement this work, in December of that year a federal-provincial task force was created to promote cross-jurisdiction co-ordination in the area of assistance to victims in light of the primary provincial responsibility in administration of justice to provide services to victims. I understand that the task force will submit its report to the Ministers responsible for Justice in a few weeks' time.

I understand that many of the provisions in Bill C-682 are in fact being considered by that task force. It is examining the needs of victims and their experiences in the criminal justice system. It is exploring appropriate legislative opinions to give greater recognition to victims of crime. The task force is also exploring funding implications, both to the federal and provincial Governments, of better and more effective services to victims.

What is perhaps most important from the federal Government's point of view is that the task force is examining the division of responsibility between the federal and provincial Governments and will take this division of responsibility into account when it drafts its recommendations.

This task force seems to meet the need in Clause 2 of the Hon. Member's Bill that the Ministers responsible for Justice "consult with the provincial counterpart". In fact, given their wide mandate and the protracted period of time that the task force has been studying this whole area, it would be less than wise to put forward any kind of Bill which does not take their recommendations into account.

Let me assure the Hon. Member and this House that it is my understanding that the Minister of Justice intends to do just that. The recommendations of the task force will be studied in detail by the Minister, and the options for implementing appropriate recommendations will be assessed in the light of the extensive research that has been done by the Department of Justice for more than 18 months.

Even though the Hon. Member's Bill is to be applauded, it does not in fact address many of the issues that the Department of Justice and the task force are considering. The Minister of Justice, in collaboration with his colleague the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and their provincial counterparts, intends to address the subject of assistance to victims in a comprehensive manner when they meet in early July to consider the task force report.

Let me now examine the content of Bill C-682. The first Clause deals with compensation to victims of crime. It proposes to add Section 655.1 to the Criminal Code which will allow a court that has convicted a person of an offence, before imposing sentence, to order the accused to pay compensation to anyone who has suffered physical or mental injury as a result of the offence. The current provision, Section 653, allows a court which has convicted a person of an indictable offence at the time of sentencing to order compensation for damage to or loss of property.

The proposed amendment will broaden the scope of the Section to include summary conviction offences, and would allow an order to be made before, and not as part of, the sentence handed down. Furthermore, it seeks to extend awards of compensation for physical or mental injury or, in other words, for pain and suffering. This would most likely be held by the courts to be unconstitutional. The Supreme Court of Canada held that Section 653 of the Code was intra vires of the federal Parliament because it was part of the sentencing process, a process which comes under the criminal law power as set out in the Constitution. The Court indicated furthermore that the provision for compensation was valid only for readily ascertainable loss or damage to property. This is partly because the criminal courts have no experience in determining the quantum of damages, and partly because the introduction of medical evidence at a criminal trial would confuse the civil rules of evidence with the criminal rules.

• (1720)

The second part of Clause 1 allows for the filing and execution of an order for compensation as a civil judgment. This is the same procedure that is already allowed under Section 653 of the Code. In fact, the enforcement of civil orders for damages, and particularly criminal orders filed as civil judgments, are frustrating for the victim and of no particular use at all when the offender has no money or is serving a term in jail.

I have already mentioned Clause 2 of the Bill which calls upon the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General to consult with their provincial counterparts to develop and implement guidelines for victim assistance. In fact, as I have stated, this is well under way.

Clause 3 lists the objectives to be considered in developing the guidelines. Both Clauses appear to be based on the American legislation which called upon the U.S. Attorney General to develop guidelines for the fair treatment of victims of crime.

As I have indicated, the federal-provincial task force has accomplished much of what Clauses 2 and 3 propose. Many of the matters specified in the Hon. Member's Bill are clearly not appropriate for inclusion in the Criminal Code. Rather, these matters should be the subject of uniform guidelines or policy directives which the provincial Attorneys General may give to police officers and court officials, including Crown counsel, in their respective Provinces.

The proposals set out in Clause 3 reinforce even further the need for federal-provincial co-operation in this area. Let me explain. Paragraph (a) deals with services to victims of crime which should be provided by law enforcement officers. It stipulates that law enforcement personnel are to ensure that victims routinely receive emergency social and medical services and information on specified topics. This guideline would apply to the police who could only comply if the necessary services existed within the particular community. Such a guideline would have to be considered by the provincial Attorneys General.

Paragraph (b) calls for notifying a victim or witness of measures that the police can take to protect them from intimidation by the offender. Although this is a problem in the United States, we have little evidence of its magnitude in Canada. A victim only needs to be told to report any threat or act of intimidation to the police. This guideline would also require the consideration of the provincial Attorneys General.

The next two paragraphs call for notifying the victim and witnesses of changes in the dates of their appearances in court and of the dates of various stages of the criminal process from arrest to the date of sentence. These matters are part of the administration of justice and are the domain of the Provinces. Thus, the provincial Attorneys General will have to consider them.

Paragraph (e) concerns consultations between the victim and the federal Crown prosecutor. I assume that the Hon. Member intended to say prosecutor since Criminal Code offences are prosecuted by provincial Attorneys General. This guideline requires the prosecutor to obtain the views of the victim or his family on the disposition of the case, dismissal of charges, bail if granted, plea bargaining, etc. We understand that in serious cases, Crown attorneys do consult with the victim on certain of these matters. Of course this should be encouraged.

I would think, Mr. Speaker, that a more effective way of finding out how the victim feels is to include a victim impact statement as part of the pre-sentence report presented to the sentencing judge. This statement would be one of the many factors considered by the judge in imposing sentence on the convicted offender. It would give the victim a chance to tell the judge the extent of the injury, damage or loss which he has suffered by the actions of the accused. The victim could also express his own views on what he thinks the appropriate sentence should be. This would increase the feeling on the part of the victim of having an active role in the process, a role that, until now, seems to have virtually been ignored.

Other proposals for separate waiting areas for victims and Crown witnesses, for the training of police in victim assistance and for the provision of certain services, are again the responsibility of the provincial Attorneys General as part of the administration of justice in the Provinces.

Finally, notifying employers and creditors of the problem that the victim or witness may face has not been seen in Canada to be a concern of victims. Guidelines which propose the prompt return of property are being examined by the Minister of Justice as part of the package he intends to present to the House after he reviews the recommendations of the task force.

The final Clause of the Hon. Member's Bill disallows a cause of action against the Crown as a result of a breach of the provisions of the Bill. This is another clause that is borrowed from American law, but it is not applicable in Canada since the proposed guidelines do not fall within the scope of the federal criminal law power.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the subject of assistance to victims is a matter of high priority for the Minister of Justice, and I am sure that he would agree with me that it should also be dealt with on a non-partisan basis. I applaud and support the Hon. Member in this initiative.

The sentencing reform package, which will be presented to Parliament by the Minister of Justice this Fall, will include specific amendments to the Criminal Code designed to provide for greater use of restitution and compensation to assist the victims of crime. It is only by dealing with the matter in a comprehensive way that our efforts will be effective in providing the kind of help that victims need.

I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) for bringing to our attention the very real problem that victims face. For too long we as a society have shown an over-abundance of concern for the criminal but, in a large part, have ignored the innocent victim. Mr. Speaker, we should wait for the task force report and the proposals of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in the debate on the Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), Bill C-682, and support not only the provisions which have been incorporated in the Bill, but the spirit of those provisions. We in Canada have suffered under the duality of a criminal justice system that allows the Parliament of Canada to enact the laws applicable to crime in Canada and require the provincial authorities to administer those laws. As a result, there is very little unity in the criminal justice system in Canada, which results particularly in situations that this Bill seeks to remedy, namely, the situation in which the victims of crime find themselves in Canada.

We have just seen evidence in the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bloomfield) of the fact that this duality prevents the necessary action from being taken by either one of the jurisdictions. I believe the Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona goes right to the heart of that problem. It does very important things, Mr. Speaker. It contains specific provisions whereby the victim of a specific crime brought before a court for which a person is convicted anc receive, by an order of that court, every specific compensation. I find it hard to believe that any Member of the House of Commons would quarrel with that kind of a provision.

Even more important, the Bill would force federal administrators and provincial administrators to get together and find a method and a system for assisting victims of crime through the labyrinth of the criminal process. The best kind of crime prevention, Mr. Speaker, is a system which ensures that criminals are apprehended and prosecuted before the courts and dealt with in accordance with the applicable laws. In other words, criminal offenders cannot go undetected and unpunished.

A large element in this system of criminal detection and prevention is the innocent victims who are involved in the crimes. How many times, Mr. Speaker, has a person had his house burgled as property damaged and simply refused to get involved in the criminal process, knowing it could take time and effort on his part, and knowing it would expose him to embarrassment and even the wrath of the offender? This bill in its substance attacks that problem in a very understanding way, and I commend the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for his insight into the situation. This ensures that Canadians who are victimized in this way will be helped immediately by the police authorities and will be given immediate relief and assistance as they enter into that criminal procedure process which so many Canadians find distasteful.

I cannot help but be reminded, Mr. Speaker, of an incident which occurred to me very recently in my home city of Halifax. My car was badly damaged by a vandal. I contacted the police because I was willing to involve myself in the criminal process and to appear in court, if that were necessary, to give evidence. I was willing to utilize my time to ensure that such a vicious crime, even at that minor level, would not go unpunished. After reporting the incident to a constable on the Halifax city police force, I was given this bit of advice; that I should call my insurance company and forget about it because they would pay me compensation, and that would be the end of the matter. That should not be the end of the matter, Mr. Speaker, because the only way that Canadians are going to protect themselves from that kind of unlawful act is to see that the offender is apprehended and prosecuted. If we do not provide a criminal justice system and criminal law enforcement agencies that realize and recognize those needs and react and act in response to those needs, then we will not have any hope for improvement of our current system.

I am happy that we will have an opportunity to vote on this Bill so that it will go to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and be considered there. May I again endorse the position taken by the Hon. Member, represented by the provisions of this Bill, first, to provide specific compensation to victims of crime and, second, to ensure that the whole matter is reviewed and dealt with by the federal and provincial authorities so that we can have some real and meaningful improvement in our system which will benefit all Canadians, because it will ensure that criminal offenders are apprehended and prosecuted and brought to justice.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to thank the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) for his work on this private Member's Bill, which is on a subject of current interest. As all Hon. Members of this House know, the matter is in the hands of the federal task force which will be reporting very soon and will give an opportunity for the provincial Attorneys General and their officials to consider the matter. As we know, the administration of justice is a matter of concern specifically to the Attorneys General of the Provinces.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 17, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): My understanding is that the floor is free at the moment. I will therefore recognize the Hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to enter into debate on this borrowing Bill. It is obviously an important subject for the House to consider. It is one which I think has become increasingly important to Canadians from coast to coast because, more and more, what the Government does with its money, how it obtains its money and the way it spends it, is having an increasingly dramatic effect on our lives, whether we be farmers, businessmen, housewives or Canadians in virtually all walks of life. It has now come to the point where it has become very significant to us. That fact was driven home to me last night as I was returning from Toronto. I was speaking with a cab driver about the impact taxes are having on his life, on his job and all the other effects.

This is, in fact, the seventh borrowing Bill with which we have dealt in this long session, one which seems to be going on forever and ever. We are wondering whether this session will ever end. I understand the total borrowing now amounts to some $77 billion, somewhere in the neighbourhood of $77,300 million, which is an awesome amount of money. At one point we would have considered $1 billion as being a figure we could hardly imagine, yet today it is becoming quite commonplace. I understand, in fact, that at this point the Government already has some accumulated borrowing authority in the neighbourhood of $16 billion. I understand that comes from a certain amount of carryover. We find out that what the Government really needs this time is in the neighbourhood of $10 billion. What the Government is asking for, however, is around $14 billion. As a result there is a surplus amount of $2 billion for this year or perhaps for the next year. The question that remains is why there is this surplus and why these requests have been averaged. Is it in fact nothing more than a type of hiding or delay?

When one looks at the projected Government borrowing requirements for the next while, to the year 1987, one sees that the Government will be looking for some $93 billion. That is an astounding amount of money. Perhaps that is why we are seeing an increased borrowing at this particular time rather than for the amount that is actually needed. Is it because the Government does not want to startle Canadians with those high figures and is trying to average it out over time and create a nonchalant feeling about the significance of a billion dollars? Perhaps it is the fact that it will end up creating a need for less the next time. In other words, simply forestall and delay the borrowing requirements over a period of time.

Obviously we and all Canadians want to warn the Government that we are concerned about deficits. I would like to refer to a recent article in the Ottawa Letter, Vol. XVI, No. 20, page 156 which describes this concern rather dramatically:

> In a Gallup Poll released May 12, an overwhelming 85 per cent of Canadians think that the federal government should introduce economy measures to lower the huge federal deficit. No matter which party they support politically, those surveyed were of the same mind. Eighty-nine per cent of Conservative supporters chose economy measures as the best deficit-fighter; 85 per cent of New Democrat supporters wanted economy measures; and 82 per cent of Liberal supporters in the survey wanted more economy measures. Only 3 per cent of those questioned in the late March survey wanted higher taxes to fight the deficit—

That is something that I believe all of us can understand and identify.

> —and 5 per cent suggested that borrowing abroad would be the best solution.

Essentially, the fact is that Canadians are becoming very concerned about deficits because they see it having a dramatic impact upon them. I think that fact is demonstrated very well in this recent Gallup poll. Only 3 per cent of Canadians want to see an increase in taxes in order to solve the deficit problem. That is a natural reaction. Once people see the relationship between the deficit and their own tax burden, they obviously will want to have that deficit cut back. I suggest that is the situation today and why we in the Opposition, when we discuss a borrowing Bill, want to warn the Government of the serious situation which exists when it allows the deficit to grow.

We find that deficits will have an inflationary pressure on the economy. It will tend to stimulate inflation which I believe is a generally accepted view.

We also find that the Government is now projecting deficits of over $25 billion for the next four years. We can begin to see and forecast the kind of pressure that will place on our economy. I understand the Government currently has in the neighbourhood of $115 billion in unmatured Government debt. That is debt that has not yet come due but will in the near future. We are now arriving at a situation where the debt load itself is adding to the deficit significantly. Presently, $1 out of $3 in revenues that come to the Government are going to service the debt itself. Every third dollar coming into the Canadian Government is going out to pay the deficit with which it is currently faced. Half of this year's deficit comes from financing deficits accumulated over the past few years. This becomes even more significant when you think about the fact that over the next four years we are projecting high budget deficits of over $25 billion per year. Government spending is now 26 per cent of the Gross National Product which is having a very significant impact on the Canadian economy and all Canadians. Eighty-four per cent of the savings of those who put their money into a savings account for a period of time is going to be needed to meet the financial requirements of the Government.

Therefore, the Government will be in a situation where it will be forced to grab a very large chunk of available funds that would normally be allowed to go into the regular economy to stimulate it, and create the jobs and the opportunities which all Canadians want. I am thinking particularly, as youth critic for my Party, of the young people who so desperately need employment opportunities at this point. The unemployment rates for our young people are running between 23 per cent and 25 per cent. The projections of the Canadian Conference Board indicate these rates will continue in that fashion well into the 1990s. This is a very serious situation and it demonstrates the future of our country and our economy.

Speaking of the future, this is one of the big concerns that we have with this borrowing Bill. Essentially, the Government is borrowing against the future of our country. Our young Canadians must realize that their future is in a sense being mortgaged to finance the present situation, which has a significant impact in the country. It destroys investor confidence which in turn does not create jobs. Those people who are unemployed are forced to collect Unemployment Insurance, putting a further drain and pressure on Government spending. It forces a whole cyclical approach.

When confidence in the country's future is destroyed and you start to borrow against it, pressure is put on interest rates. Interest rates become a very important factor when you are trying to turn an economy around. This is significant to a small, struggling business that employs, three, five, six, or eight people. Interest rates are one of the biggest expenses people in small business are forced to face in the every day existence and survival of their business. With those high interest rates and the pressures associated with it, jobs are threatened. Once again, the whole cycle starts rolling again.

Then there is the pressure that is put on the dollar. That has a particular impact on Canadians because we tend to import many things on which we rely for our day to day living; for example, food in the winter and clothing. This in turn puts pressure on the Canadian economy.

Instead of trimming the fat of Government spending, this Government continues to carry on in much the same tradition that we have seen over a period of time. There is the whole idea of the pork barrel. We saw that recently in the Gillespie coalgate affair. We have seen the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) hire his friends; for example, the architect for the American embassy. We have seen mismanagement in some of the Crown Corporations. The most significant one of late that has been the topic of discussion in all our newspapers is Canadair. There are some concerns with Canadair. Canadair should be a topic of discussion before Parliament. We have to discuss those types of issues and address the very serious problem as to whether or not the taxpayers' dollars are being well spent and well invested.

Another area of Government expense that I find most aggravating is what we call advocacy advertising. We saw that most glaringly in two recent examples. The first one occurred during the constitutional debate. We saw the beautiful geese flying across the water. The Canadian taxpayer was paying for that. It was an advertisement advocating a particular position which was not yet the position of the Canadian people or of Parliament; it was simply the position of the Government, the Liberal Party. We saw it very recently, in the last few weeks, in terms of the advertising of the Crow rate issue. We know what is happening today in this regard. The Government is spending a significant amount of money to put forward its position on the Crow rate at the expense of taxpayers. We have to look very carefully at some of the areas in which we could begin to trim Government spending.

• (1120)

Of course we would like to encourage entrepreneurs to get out and enrich the country, which would essentially increase revenues to Government, by creating opportunities and employment. Instead we find the Government stifling them by continuing policies such as the National Energy Program, which is of particular interest to myself. In my riding unemployment quadrupled as a result of the National Energy Program. What happened was that a number of small Canadian firms that were struggling in the oil industry for ten years to 15 years and had increased their employees from two or three to perhaps 15 or 20, supplied welding material, cars, trucks, oil, gas, or whatever were the particular needs of the oil rigs in the area. But when the National Energy Program came in, all this suddenly ground to a halt. The net result was that unemployment in my area went up four times because of one program that instead of increasing revenues, which seemed to have been the Government's purpose, actually resulted in lost tax revenues and unemployment in my area rising.

We have concerns for small-businessmen. There are many things we could do in order to create opportunity for them. I receive constant mail about the paperwork they are required to do. It is becoming so complex and technical to operate small businesses that business people are now spending a lot of their funding on high-priced accountants and advisers, which money could be going to create a stable situation in their business opportunities and thereby create more jobs.

I see my time has just about run out. In an attempt to wrap up, I want to emphasize that the whole business of Government borrowing and spending is a very serious matter. It is becoming very serious to all Canadians. They view it as being a personal issue. Again I refer to that Gallup poll. People now see it as being a significant issue. They are now relating it to themselves personally. They are now seeing that unless the deficit is dealt with, very soon the Government will have to raise taxes and as a result all Canadians will have to pay.

I want to conclude by saying that it is an important issue. The Government will have to look at its spending and encourage the private sector because it is the only way we will be able to raise revenues in the country and, as a result, reduce the pressures on the deficit.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) a question. He referred to supporting and encouraging the entrepreneur and assisting the private sector to maximize profits. Bearing in mind the advice given to Canadians by the Catholic Bishops in the document entitled "Ethical Reflections on the Economic Crisis", in which they called for economic policies that realized the needs of the poor as a priority over the wants of the rich and indicated that the rights of workers are more important than the maximization of profits, is the Hon. Member satisfied that his plans to help with the profits of the private sector will guarantee that the economic benefits will indeed be shared by poor people? Does he not see some value in the borrowing authority before us today which will help the Government with its policies to assist the unemployed, for example natives?

• (1125)

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I was also very interested in the Bishops' statement and read it with great care. I found the area the Minister referred to very interesting. It caused some thought. The more I read on in that report, the more I become aware that one of the things the Bishops put forward was the fact that many people have to be able to create opportunities that will help themselves in their own situations. I refer to one example the Bishops put forward, the whole area of encouraging co-operatives, encouraging co-operative investment in communities. We see that in housing and employment.

In my area a grocery store was put together by the farming community. A group of farmers got together. This has created significant employment. They provide a good product at a reasonable price. It is working very well.

The Minister used the words "profits of those companies". I do not think that is necessarily what is significant. What you are doing is looking after the well-being of the corporation. That will translate into security of employees, which is very significant. The Bishops related to that very well. If the Minister reads further in that statement, he will find it in there.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member therefore in agreement with the increased allocation the Government has given toward co-operative housing, which now carries a total financial cost of $500 million annually in support of co-op housing? I will put my question another way. I take it the Hon. Member agrees with that part of the Government's initiative that supports co-op housing and that it is a cost that will have to be shared by all Canadians in the future.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, what the Minister is effectively trying to do is turn my argument around. I talked about Government fat, the need to trim it and the need to look very closely at Government waste. There are programs which have some legitimacy, significance and importance. None of us disputes that fact. That does not destroy my essential argument, which is that there is fat in the Government's budgets that should be trimmed. I referred to a couple of examples. Something we would like to look at is Canadair. We would like that brought forward for parliamentary debate. Also, let us look at the Gillespie coalgate affair. Let us look at the architect chosen to do the embassy job in the United States. It is that kind of thing that is Government fat. There is no point trying to compare a legitimate Government program with one that is waste and saying that if you accept this, yoou accept the other. That is not the case and the Minister should recognize that.

Mr. Cosgrove: With respect, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. If he says he relies on the statement of the Bishops as to what the Government can do, he cannot disavow what the Bishops say. The Bishops say:

> In our view, it is important to increase the self-sufficiency of Canada's industries—

The Government is doing that with Canadair. The support of technology in that industry is one of the more significant ways in which the Government supports private industry to be a leader in the industries of the future. How can the Hon. Member complain about that when the Government is doing exactly what the Bishops asked it to do?

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I just heard the comment made that Canadair is not a leader, it is a laughing stock in terms of what it is doing in advances. If the Minister wants to talk about the Biships' statement, he should look at the speech that I made in that regard. I thought their statement was very significant. I have given a great deal of thought to it. I made a speech, which is on the record of this House, in which I stated I felt it was significant.

I am not disputing some of the solutions put forward by the Bishops. At the same time, I am not saying that is justification for the Government to go ahead and not look at the waste that is in its budgets. The Minister will have to accept the fact that there is a certain amount of waste.

There are legitimate programs. One program that is very important now is Unemployment Insurance. Everyone in this House can relate to an individual Canadian who is now collecting Unemployment Insurance and who comes under that program. It is a legitimate program. It costs money. I am not saying that that makes it wrong, but the point I am trying to get across to the Minister and to the Members on that side is, let us look for the waste. There is waste. The Minister would not have to look very far, I am sure, even in his own Department, to begin to find some of that waste. That is what we want to address because that is how we will ultimately reduce the deficit.

• (1130)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments? Debate.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-151 on the borrowing authority shows that the Government has no shame. It lacks wisdom, it lacks decency, it lacks respect for ordinary people, it lacks compassion for the unemployed, the elderly and especially elderly Canadian women who have spent their lives raising our country's children and face retirement without a decent pension. The Government now shows a lack of ability even to blush.

The approach taken in the borrowing authority Bill is the big lie: It is better to borrow an outrageous amount of money than to reveal economic incompetence bit by bit by borrowing billion by billion. The Government has even admitted that it does not need all of the money immediately. It needs the money for so-called contingencies so it will not have to raise the delicate issue of our economic problems closer to election time and so it will have cash on hand for the projects which Liberal Cabinet Ministers will be announcing. At these announcements, there will be fanfare, there will be the opportunity for political speeches and the opportunity to operate the traditional Liberal pre-electoral pork barrel.

The borrowing authority is the logical accompaniment to the budget. The budget announced a series of projects. These projects are of modest proportion but they will afford splendid opportunities for Cabinet Ministers to make public appearances and to give the appearance that they are doing something for the economy. The appearance is there, yes, but the reality is not.

What is wrong, Mr. Speaker, with borrowing? Of course, it depends on what the money will be used for. We could accept the borrowing if it were part of a long-term economic recovery plan, if the Government would begin to recognize our serious economic and structural problems, if it would begin to solve these problems and if the borrowing would provide money that would go into real, substantial, well thought out job creation programs. We could accept the borrowing if it would mean that people would get back to work and start paying taxes again instead of taking Unemployment Insurance, thereby creating demands for other goods and services and putting more people to work. We could accept the borrowing if it were directed to the recovery of the economy, for that would reduce the long-term drain on the economy as dividends, interest payments and management fees go out of the country.

If it would save the generation of our children and our grandchildren from having to continue to pay for our economic short-sightedness, we could accept the borrowing. Even if the money would go to increase pensions, for example, or social services, it would be serving the higher purposes of decency and equity. It would not be building a long-term economy, of course, but the economic consequences would at least be partially good because people at the margin would spend their additional income mainly on domestic goods and services. They would be creating employment for unemployed Canadians and unemployment is the major problem that we face at the present time. Unemployment is the problem that we should certainly be addressing.

We could accept the borrowing if it were directed toward research and development, and I do mean serious research and development, not the band-aid measures that were announced in the budget and not in isolation from other institutional changes which are needed. With our branch plant economy, we will never have enough research and development because branch plants are not intended to do research and development and put products on the market which would compete with the home country. But we need to spend more money on research and development if we are to have an efficient and productive economy and if we are to reap economic benefits when we begin to do this.

Unfortunately, the purpose of the Government's spending program is not to provide for research and development projects, social services, economic recovery and job creation, not according to the budget that was brought down recently by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

What is the purpose of this budget? It is to give handouts to private corporations. Small- and medium-sized businesses stand to benefit very little, despite the fact that, as employers, they are very important to our economy. Once again, the Government is demonstrating its lack of consideration, even contempt, for small- and medium-sized businesses. This is a pre-election budget where expenditures have been chosen for their publicity value. The budget gives Liberal Ministers an opportunity to announce projects, to cut ribbons and open institutions, research centres, improved harbour facilities, and so forth. These projects must be paid for through taxes and loans that will have to be reimbursed later on. This makes the budget even less attractive, because the bills will be paid by low- and middle-income Canadians. The same budget announced tax increases for low- and middle-income Canadians, in the form of capped deductions and postponed sales taxes. The budget grants tax rebates to private corporations and so, the Government is demanding more and more from the average Canadian and less and less from corporations. In the 50's, corporations paid half of the tax bill and individual Canadians the other half. Now, individuals pay 80 per cent and corporations only 20 per cent.

The financial burden on individuals has been substantially increased by this Government, and this is entirely unfair and unacceptable. We of the New Democratic Party feel that the responsibility for supporting Government programs should be shared equitably by private corporations and private citizens.

[English]

I would like to point out some anomalies in the Government's spending priorities, Mr. Speaker. There could be a very, very long list of these anomalies, but I will confine myself to a few examples. First of all, take as an example the Public Service Commission. It does not have enough money to promote women. Women will just have to be patient because now is not the time for affirmative action. Women will just have to stay in the lower-paid jobs and in the dead-end jobs. Yet the number of people earning over $60,000 a year, almost all of them men, increased threefold this past year.

The Government does not have the money to increase Old Age Security. It has even cut it back with the partial deindexing in the six and five program. It does not have enough money to increase the Guaranteed Income Supplement even for single people to bring it up to the Statistics Canada poverty line. Yet the Government cut income taxes for high-income Canadians.

The Government does not have enough money for serious job creation apart from the PR event-type job creation that we have already seen in the budget. Yet the Government is continuing to increase military expenditures. I would not want to suggest that our problems with military expenditures are remotely as bad as those problems of the United States and the Soviet Union, countries where their enormous expenditures on military hardware are a serious strain on their economies. Our mistakes in this area are more modest, but coupled with the seriousness of our structural problems they are grave enough.

The point is that money spent on the military hurts the economy and fuels inflation. Money spent on research for military hardware is money not spent on research and development in the industrial sector. High military expenditure is associated with low productivity in industry. In Canada we need to invest more money in research and development for industry and any diversion from this goal ought to be looked at very, very carefully.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us is unsound and unjustified and it ought to be defeated. Its intent is to postpone the day of reckoning and to enable the Government to evade its responsibilities. Its hope is that the public will be fooled, that the public's memory will not be long enough to last until the time of the next election and that when the election comes by, the public will remember only the cute projects and the fanfare and will not consider the Government's absolute failure to deal with long-term problems. Certainly my Party will do its best to prevent that from happening by exposing the incompetence of the Government's plan and the ineptness of the Conservatives' response as an alternative. Mr. Speaker, we have serious problems to address in this country. Irresponsible Bills like the one before us now are not going to help.

• (1140)

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, could I start by saying that I listened to the views expressed by the Hon. Member on this Bill and the budget and have been very impressed by her contributions. It seems to me that she always expresses her priorities very clearly and has a passionate way of expressing what she sees as priorities for ordinary people. I should like to congratulate her. I do not agree with all her priorities as I believe that our course of action is better than the one she proposes but, contrary to many of the contributions in the House, her contribution is always worth checking to ensure that reasonable alternatives are not being overlooked.

I should like to differ with the Hon. Member on one point—perhaps a somewhat technical one—and I should like her opinion on it.

At the beginning of her comments she said that the contingency borrowing requirements in this Bill were unacceptable to her. I should like to point out that the Government has always put those provisions into its borrowing authority Bills. This is not a new idea. We hope that it helps us to come to Parliament less often. It is strictly an administrative move on the part of the Government to try to avoid parliamentary logjams on borrowing Bills.

When we do this we end up, we hope, with better financial management. This gives the Government a great deal of flexibility in its borrowing program so that it can get the lowest interest rate. In this way we can use different financial instruments at different times to borrow at the best rate, whereas last March when the Tories were filibustering this Bill we were forced to borrow on expensive instruments.

I should like to point that out to the Hon. Member and indicate to her that while she raises the concern of contingency, on this side we feel that we are accountable to Parliament for this. We also feel we are accountable to the people and must set up the best borrowing program we can so we can manage their money as cheaply as possible.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly in favour of managing the economy so that money can be borrowed as cheaply as possible. That is a laudable objective. My concern and the concern of this Party is with the amount of borrowing, which keeps going up enormously. I spent most of my time talking about the sins of omission rather than commission. I think it is what the budget is not doing and its failure to address long-term problems that is wrong. It is not just that we are borrowing this rather large amount of money now but that we will continue to borrow because our economy continues to decline and foreign ownership continues to grow. We are losing control of the economy and not beginning to address those problems.

If this were a one-shot effort, that would be a different matter. If we were really beginning to go after the structural problems, it would be a different thing.

Regarding the question about timing in Parliament, I must point out that there is another response to obstruction on the part of Opposition Parties and that is to work in a more reasonable way with them. If there is obstruction there is usually a reason for it. There are many opportunities for difficulties to be talked out and resolved. Clearly, we are committed to the adversarial system and things get hot and heavy and difficult when there is ill will. Some of this could be prevented by better consultation. Opposition is not always opposed to the objectives of the Government; it is sometimes opposed to the means by which the Government is trying to achieve those objectives.

I think the Government would do well to assume a little bit more reason on the part of this side of the House, or at least this corner of this side of the House, than it often does.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I should also like to congratulate the Hon. Member for joining in this debate, unlike other Members of her caucus who are afraid to come to the House to debate, for example, the Crowsnest Pass legislation which would provide $15 billion of investment money to create jobs.

I am interested in the last answer given by the Hon. Member wherein she stated that the Government is going to continue to borrow. I should like her opinion on the special recovery tax element of the budget which is designed to recoup the special recovery spending that will take place in the next two years. For example, does she share the opinion of the Conservative Party that we should not have introduced the tax to pay for that deficit next year? We have allowed a 12 to 15-month period in between. Does she feel we should have extended that or, as they did in Ontario, in addition to providing stimulation, should we have introduced taxes on a selective basis immediately to recoup those deficit funds?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to deal with one item in isolation from the others. The objections of my Party, which I very fundamentally share, are that we have an extremely unfair tax system. I refer to the burden between individuals and corporations where individuals are paying more and more tax. It is now 80 per cent whereas in the fifties it was 50 per cent of income taxes. The shift occurred mainly under the Liberals but it started with a Conservative Government, so we cannot blame one Party alone. I think that is an extremely important point. Then, of course, there is the individual level.

Sales taxes are regressive taxes and very unfair taxes. The less sales tax possible, the better. Obviously there are differing circumstances. Where does the burden fall? We feel that there is a great deal of unfairness in the way the Government is having the tax burden shared at the moment.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I take it the Hon. Member is saying we should not have introduced the special recovery tax so as to reduce the deficit within a year and a half. If she says that, I must ask her how she can reconcile that statement with her earlier statement that she was opposed to the Government continuing the deficit.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, there are other ways of raising taxes. My point was that taxes should be borne equitably by the Canadian population. The shift from corporations to individuals is extremely unfair. The lowering of taxes for high-income people and the raising of taxes for low-income people is extremely unfair. Earlier, this Party proposed a surtax on high-income people because they can more easily bear the tax.

We have a reasoned proposal. We have not just said that money grows on trees. Clearly it has to be raised, but we want to see it raised fairly. That is not the case right now.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I should like to take issue with the last statement. I hope the Hon. Member accepts the fact that if we drain taxes away from corporations then at various times we are also draining away their ability to create jobs.

Prior to the budget we heard very clearly from people like the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business that indirect taxes like payroll taxes, which help low-income people through the payment of things like medicare fees and Unemployment Insurance, might be a good thing to use but that the timing was poor. They pointed out that additional loads imposed on corporations with these kinds of taxes would prevent corporations from undertaking job expansion activities. I think there is a balance on this and I am sure that we are reaching for it. At this point in time, however, corporations have told us very clearly that we must choose between taxes and jobs.

Given the performance of the economy, we surely must accept that kind of testimony from corporate leaders. It is not doing any worker any favour if we increase a company's obligations to pay his OHIP but at the same time take his job away.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, corporations and organizations of corporations are always going to say that now is not the right time to raise taxes for corporations. They always say that. Let us look at the banking industry, for example. We see jobs being lost in banks, but not because of taxes; they are paying less and less taxes. They are being lost because of automation. I just do not think there is any clear relationship between taxes and the ability to provide jobs. The shift of taxes has been from corporations to individuals. If the Parliamentary Secretary's logic is correct, Mr. Speaker, we should have seen an increase in employment as taxes shifted from corporations to individuals.

• (1150)

Mr. Cosgrove: We have.

Ms. McDonald: We have the highest unemployment we have ever had.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I come from a farming and ranching constituency. Of those farmers and ranchers I doubt there would be 10 per cent who have never borrowed money in the past. Almost all farmers and ranchers borrow money. But for those farmers and ranchers who are in some economic difficulty, their neighbours still have respect for them when they know they borrowed money for the purchase of another tractor, the acquisition of land, or for some project to increase their capacity to earn a living. But farmers and ranchers in my constituency view with unspoken ridicule those persons near the state of bankruptcy and who borrow to purchase pianos, new television sets or new and larger convertibles.

Sir, we have a Government today which is borrowing and borrowing without economic direction. It is buying pianos, television sets, Alastair Gillespie's oil companies and Mirabel airports. The list of waste and extravagance goes on and on, to the point where Canadians pay $1 out of every $3 in taxes just to pay the interest on the national debt. Sir, what an insult to Canadians. One-third of all their tax dollars goes to pay the interest on the national debt.

Seven times, Mr. Speaker, in this one session the Government has come to Parliament to ask for more money.

Mr. Fisher: Listen to this! This is the same guy who will tell you about parliamentary responsibility.

Mr. Malone: Seven times the Government has come here to beg for more and more money.

Mr. Fisher: These are the people who made us come back.

Mr. Malone: We have had Bill C-30, Bill C-59, Bill C-111, Bill C-125, and Bill C-143. Now we have Bill C-151. Then there is a Liberal across the way telling an NDP Member that somehow all of that is because they have some great responsibility to the Canadian people and therefore they should be able to borrow money without accountability. He is trying to tell the NDP Member over here, Mr. Speaker, that that is why the Government can borrow $2 billion more than it needs or has budgeted for. Well, Sir, going back to my farming and ranching constituency, they do not go to banks and say: "Look, Mr. Banker, I want $2 billion extra". The banker will ask what he needs it for. The farmer says; "Well, I do not know; it might be for some emergency or contingency". I come from Conservative country, Mr. Speaker, and farmers do not automatically know there is going to be an emergency. The Government comes from Liberal country, and Members opposite can budget that way because they know that as long as they are in power there will be an emergency; therefore they will need $2 billion. When they borrow, they have to borrow all kinds of extra money because the Hon. Member who is heckling knows that as long as they are over there, there is going to be a problem. The Liberals are buying oil companies and airports and supporting their friends, and that simply cannot be economically justified.

I remind this House that the country of Mexico, with seven times the population of Canada, is teetering on the verge of bankruptcy with a debt load of $80 billion. Yet this Government, in one session of Parliament, has borrowed $81.5 billion, with one seventh the population of Mexico. How can this great and wealthy land of Canada sustain itself? We have a land of agriculture, of forests, of hardrock minerals and one-tenth of the world's fresh water. We have all of that natural wealth and resources, along with a talented people, and this Government is borrowing to the extent that we are mortgaging the children of tomorrow.

This is the greatest country in the world, Mr. Speaker, with the greatest potential. That is not just some political statement; I believe that to be a fortunate geographic fact. I believe this country is potentially far wealthier than the United States of America. Yet in comparison Japan, this land of rock with 110 million people and natural resources consisting of tin and fish, has a booming economy, the second biggest in the world. Here we are with 20 million people, wanting in no resource, rich in virtually everything, an accumulated national debt of between $160 billion and $165 billion, and a Government which has come to Parliament seven times in one session to ask for more money. And the Liberal heckler opposite thinks that is a legitimate activity. It is simply a disgrace and every Canadian from coast to coast should rise up and demand that this group of rascals be thrown out for sheer incompetence. They simply cannot manage this great country of Canada. Among the leading industrial nations of the world we are in fortieth position behind countries like Belgium. That is simply a disgrace, Mr. Speaker, for a country with Canada's economic capacity.

This Government's latest budget forecasts that over the next five years we are going to have debt on debt on debt. That is also at variance with the views of the farmers and ranchers in my constituency. They may go out to buy a new tractor, but they always look forward to the day when that tractor is paid for and they are debt free. All business persons work with that objective in mind, yet here we have a Government which has got into a rut—as an aside I might say that a rut is just a grave with the ends kicked out of it—believing that we can achieve prosperity tomorrow by borrowing year after year and living on borrowed money. Well, it simply cannot be done. At some point Canada, like Mexico, will come to the point where the International Monetary Fund will say that the ratings are such that we simply cannot continue to borrow and we will be on the verge of bankruptcy like Mexico, Venezuela and Argentina.

It is therefore important to underscore the first principle, that is, that our country cannot be sustained on continued borrowing. The Government must think in terms of efficiency, of cutting inefficient programs and decreasing the amount of Government involvement. Added to that point, I want to make the following observation: when the Government continually borrows on the private market to the extent that it has, borrowing $81 billion in one parliamentary session, then it is obvious that $81 billion less is available to those in the private sector to borrow.

What do we see in a society which is built on enterprise? Virtually all economists agree that it is the private sector which creates wealth. At best, what the public sector does is to redistribute wealth. The Government is locked up in the mentality that it must redistribute more and more of the wealth. The truth is that the private sector, because it must compete for these borrowed dollars, is getting into a tighter and more difficult position with regard to being able to borrow for the creation of wealth. Today the Government is trying to redistribute more wealth than there is the capacity to produce.

From another perspective, when we take the view that the private sector creates wealth and the public sector, at best, redistributes wealth, we find that any time there is a situation where a Government is trying to borrow 50 per cent plus one penny of our Gross National Product, then it is trying to redistribute more wealth than there is the capacity to create. Governments taken collectively, meaning the three levels of Governments, are today spending half of the nation's wealth. They are simply redistributing money. This country must back away from that kind of percentage, where Governments spend half, to allow greater entrepreneurship so there is greater creation of wealth.

Hon. Members who have been asking questions of others who have spoken today have come to the view that if the pie is only so big and some need or poverty is evident, then it is obviously incumbent upon Government to take a bigger section of the pie to erase the poverty. I am suggesting that the percentage of the wedge of the pie for Government should remain the same, but the Government should have the imagination to stimulate the country in a way which would create a bigger pie. There should be greater wealth and then from the greater wealth the private sector will be able to produce its section and the Government's section will also be larger. By the mentality of the way in which the Government approaches the question, it is driving us to a point of perpetual bankruptcy. Today we are only surviving on tomorrow's children and the development of tomorrow's resources. That is folly in terms of economic planning and certainly defies any logic in terms of where the country is going.

I submit to Your Honour that as my friend, the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), stated earlier in his very excellent speech to the House today, the fact is that the people of Canada, who are reflected in the Gallup polls, know that a country simply cannot be managed in the manner in which this country is being managed by the Government. That kind of borrowing upon borrowing, involving billions upon billions of dollars, an amount of money which the public does not even understand, simply cannot go on.

When the Government borrows billions of dollars, people have difficulty putting that volume of money into prespective. Perhaps I can be of some assistance by giving them an image of the actual size of $1 billion. I ask the people of Canada to think of their location in Canada now and then to think of some town or community or other point 80 miles away. If $1 million in one dollar bills were laid end to end, they would reach from where they are to that point 80 miles away. However, if $1 billion in one dollar bills were laid end to end, they would reach from Vancouver to Halifax and back, two and one half times. The Government, having in one session of Parliament borrowed $81.5 billion, is trying to wallpaper Canada with one dollar bills. That is the kind of borrowing it does. It just borrows and borrows.

Now, when we pay our taxes, one-third of our taxes buys us nothing. It buys us no more health, no more airports, no more military equipment or agricultural research. It simply goes toward paying for the interest on the accumulated debt. One-third of our taxes does nothing except pay for interest charges because the Government has been spendthrift in its thinking and has been a novice in economic management. The Government should be roundly condemned for pure incompetency from a business perspective.

To those unemployed persons in Canada today, the amount of money which the Government is borrowing represents $3,252 for each of them. I submit that those people who are unemployed today, who know the rate of the Government's borrowing, who know that they continually cannot obtain jobs, also know that the main reason our country is in such a state is the psyche, the mentality, of the Government, which cannot put an incentive into growth sectors.

I come from a Province where the people are deeply angry with the present Government. We once had an oil industry which was the leading engine of the economy of Canada back in 1978. After the 1980 election, the Government came through with a new energy program. Today, out of approximately 400 oil rigs in my Province, 32 are operating. The rest are shut down. However, when an oil rig is shut down, a whole service industry also shuts down. There are places in my Province of Alberta where a Liberal Member of Parliament could not walk from the front door of a bar to the washroom; he would be skinned alive because the people would blame him absolutely for unemployment.

Part of the reason the Government thought it was legitimate to pick on the Province of Alberta was that no Liberals were elected. Therefore it thought it could hurt Alberta or Saskatchewan or any other part of the Prairies with Crow rate changes. But when the Government hurt the oil industry in the West, it did not just hurt Alberta, it also hurt Canada. Alberta is only a part, because in the projected 25-year lifetime of one tar sands plant, $108 billion of direct spending goes into the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, $800 million in transportation, $700 million in technical development, in iron and steel fabrication.

What was the choice of the Liberal Government? It chose to kill the industry, to force Canadians to buy from other oil companies every time they bought some gas. It has not produced one more litre of oil anywhere in the country, but has chosen to import hundreds of thousands of barrels of oil from offshore, from other countries, creating jobs in other countries but not in Canada.

At the time the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that Albertans would become rich beyond their wildest imagination. I say to him through Your Honour, so what if an Albertan did become rich? Suppose an Albertan does get rich. He will buy a new refrigerator, a new car and new furniture, all of which come from central Canada. I see the Hon. Member from Prince Edward Island here. This Albertan would also tend to buy more potato chips. When Canada becomes richer in one part of the country, we can all be more wealthy.

• (1210)

Surely when we have a wealthy Province there is a responsibility for the Government to see to the redistribution of funds. I accept that. However, it is unacceptable to stop activity in one sector of the country for the advantage of purchasing offshore so that people in other countries will get jobs and drive that opportunity and potential away from Canada. That is simply a policy that we cannot endorse. Our debt is now almost three times the per capita debt of the United States.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. I have been signalling the Hon. Member that his time has expired. Of course, he can seek the unanimous consent of the House to complete his remarks. He may also realize that there is a ten-minute question and answer period.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I will not seek the time to speak longer because no one would grant me the two years that is necessary to talk about the Government and its incompetence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments and answers.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have always listened to the speeches of the Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), and I have always considered him to be an optimist rather than a pessimist. I liked his story about the banker, but I think what he failed to mention, and perhaps he could be a little more specific in this respect, is that if I go to a bank manager to borrow money and I tell him, to borrow a phrase from the Member for Crowfoot: I am going to use this money to paper my walls with dollar bills, and I have absolutely no specific planning program ... On the other hand, the Liberal Party tells its bank manager: I need money and here is my spending program and this is how I am going to use it. I want to create jobs, re-train manpower, develop advance technology industries, invest 700 million in a technology development program for manpower re-training, I want to stimulate homeownership, and here some of the items in my program and the reasons why I want a loan. I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he agrees that when a person borrows money, a distinction must be made between a loan to pay the grocery bills and a loan that will be used to stimulate and invest and maximize those investments. That is the whole difference between the Liberal philosophy and the approach of the Progressive Conservatives, which is pessimistic—using the money to paper the walls. I would therefore like to ask the Hon. Member whether he realizes that in Canada, the savings rate is twice as high as in the United States. Does he agree with this percentage? I think I would like to know more about these two aspects as they concern the Liberal and the Progressive Conservative borrower in front of their bank manager.

[English]

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I believe part of the Hon. Member's question with respect to borrowing asked if it was not all right to borrow for those aspects for which there is an investment in the development of the country. I believe that my analogy was an attempt to establish that that is the only reason we should be borrowing. In its Bill before us today, the Government is asking for $2 billion for which there is no budget and no accountability. No one should lend that volume of money for which there is no established program for its expenditure. The Government is asking for $14.5 billion, $2 billion of which cannot be accounted for. That is simply unacceptable to any group. My colleague says it is $4.7 billion. If that is the case, then it is twice as bad.

With respect to Canada having twice as much savings as the United States, the Hon. Member should not have brought up that subject. It only underscores the lack of confidence that Canadians have. It only makes it evident that Canadians know they have some money but dare not invest it because of their experience with the kind of economy that the Government runs. They have experienced skyrocketing interest rates which depreciate the value of their money, and rather than risking their money in venture capital they are putting it into savings. Rather than investing, Canadians have preferred to buy lottery tickets.

I am telling he House quite frankly that Canadians will start to invest their money when they have confidence that the country is run on sound managerial principles. The Canadian public is not at fault; they just do not have the confidence. When that confidence is restored, savings in Canada will greatly diminish.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) began his remarks by criticizing the Government for presenting seven bills before the House requesting borrowing authority. He complained that the Government has returned to Parliament on obviously too many occasions to ask for this kind of authority. Yet the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who sits next to him has introduced a motion in the House asking that the Government do the exact opposite to the Hon. Member's suggestion. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South asks that we split the present Bill before the House, multiply it by two, and bring it back. This would increase the number of times the Government will come before the House for borrowing authority.

I read a quote attributed to one of the eight candidates for the leadership of the Conservative Party to the effect that the Conservative Party is the only one that has it together. The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) said that the Conservative Party is the only one that has it together. The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) said that the Conservative Party has it all together.

Could the Hon. Member for Crowfoot tell me what position the Conservative Party is taking? Should we split the Bill and increase the number of times the Government comes before the House? Will he support the motion of the Opposition finance critic, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South? What is the Conservative Party's position?

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, because we have it together I agree with the Right Hon. Member. I underscored the number of times the Government has come to the House for borrowing authority to show how incompetent it is. Yet I will never endorse the principle of borrowing money which is not accounted for or for which there is no plan or budget. The Government should borrow what it needs and not $2 billion extra, telling Canadians that it does not know what it is for. The Government will show its incompetence by returning once more. It should return once more.

We stand together on both points because we are both correct. I believe Canadians will endorse that. It will underscore the fact that the Liberals borrow too much money all of the time.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). He attributed the precipitous decline of the oil industry in Alberta to the Government's National Energy Program. If one looks at the United States, which has one of the most pro-business Presidents in approximately 50 years, one sees the same situation. American journals such as Time magazine and others show that the majority of oil rigs in operation two or three years ago have been mothballed. According to American reports, the reason for that is that the oil drilling taking place a few years ago was in anticipation of the world oil price increasing by 10 per cent or 15 per cent a year. The new oil, whether found through conventional ways of drilling for oil or developing shale deposits in Colorado or in developing the tar sands, would be too expensive and could not compete with the likely price of conventional oil for the next couple of years.

• (1220)

If that is the case in the United States and in other countries—and I am not defending every aspect of the Liberal Government's policy with regard to oil—why does the Hon. Member continue to blame the shutdown of so much of the oil industry in Alberta on the Government? It seems to me that what is happening in Alberta and in other parts of Canada is the same as what is happening in other parts of the world, given the fact that the world price of oil is not rising but will probably come down in the next year or two.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, in part world conditions obviously had an impact on Canada as well as on other countries in the world. But the significant difference between Canada and the United States is that the United States has increased its volume of oil production. As a result that country is much closer to self-sufficiency than Canada.

Mr. Blais: That is baloney and you know it.

Mr. Malone: That is absolute fact. Here in Canada we are still importing large volumes of oil from offshore. Those imports should be decreased in favour of producing jobs here in Canada and making Canada more energy self-sufficient. What the Government program has done is not to lead to oil sufficiency in Canada. It is simply taking the oil industry from private ownership to Government ownership, charging the individual Canadian every time he goes to the gas pump. That charge does not create more oil, it simply saps out of the Canadian wallet more dollars for the Government for the single purpose of saying "It is ours". Therefore, the oil industry is not Canadian privately-owned but Canadian Government-owned. That is not an objective that meets the target of greater production of oil, the greater creation of wealth in the country or the greater creation of jobs. In fact, it has diminished all three.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Before the Chair recognizes the next Hon. Member for debate, and it will be the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), may I remind all Hon. Members that the eight-hour period for debate will end at 12.27 p.m. I take the view that the Hon. Member who has the floor at that time is entitled to his full 20 minutes and the ten-minute question and answer period. Thereafter debate will be restricted to ten minutes for each Hon. Member.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I have just listened with a great deal of interest to the last speaker. I have a question for him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): At this point that would require the unanimous consent of the House because the ten-minute question and answer period has expired. Does the Hon. Minister seek unanimous consent?

Mr. Blais: I am sure I will not get it, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I shall put the question for the Hon. Minister. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Minister does not have unanimous consent. Therefore I recognize the Hon. Member for Vegreville.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I think the exchange that just took place between the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) clearly demonstrates it is the Liberal Government that does not have its act together. Of course, the clear manifestation of that is the result of the Brandon-Souris by-election last Tuesday. The people in that constituency know that the Liberal Government does not have its act together. Only 17 per cent decided to vote Liberal. That should be a warning to this Liberal Government that it is now the third Party in western Canada. People in western Canada recognize that and increasing numbers of Canadians are recognizing the fact that this Government is out of touch, incompetent, corrupt, full of deadwood and that it should do the honourable thing and call an election and clear the air.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The New Democratic Party cannot take much solace in the results of that by-election in Brandon-Souris either. Members of the New Democratic Party promenade around the country and speak in the House implying that they speak for western agriculture.

Mr. Huntington: They are not even in the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: It should be noted, according to the reports I have, that the New Democratic Party did not win one rural poll in the constituency of Brandon-Souris. I guess we know what the people of Brandon and the surrounding area think of the New Democratic Party's policy.

I was interested as well in the challenge of the Minister of State for Finance when he was responding to the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). He suggested to her that if we were to pass Bill C-155 this would immediately trigger $15 billion worth of investment to create jobs. That is really stretching it a bit, Mr. Speaker, if we base that contention on the record of the Government in the past and on the promises made during the last election, particularly those of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), as well as the promises contained in the Speech from the Throne which started this first session of Parliament.

We westerners are still looking for the $4 billion western development fund that is supposedly still being kicked around. However, it has literally vanished. It is now being suggested that this fund might find its way into the rail transportation Bill. But that was an exchange for the very generous energy agreement negotiated by the people of Ablerta in terms of rechannelling some of that money back to western Canada for needed industrial development. Nevertheless it was vanished.

I should also say to the Minister that perhaps he could point out to his colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), not only the inadequacies and the divisions within that Bill but that it is incomplete. That Bill is a bureaucratic nightmare, incomplete and divisive. It enjoys literally no support in western Canada. If the Government brought in a Bill that could have a modicum of support in western Canada, then the Bill might proceed in an orderly fashion. However, that has not occurred.

We are dealing here with a Bill in which the Government is requesting another $14.7 billion to help cover its $31.3 billion deficit. As has been pointed out by previous speakers, particularly by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), the Government requires some $26.7 billion. It has currently $16 billion in borrowing authority. The Government's requirements are really $10.7 billion, but it is asking for $14.7 billion, $4 billion more than it needs.

The obvious question is, why this additional money? What does the Government need it for? The first thing that comes to mind is that this Government is putting together another porkbarrel fund. In other words, an election slush fund. It will distribute this fund in a manner in which its individual Members of Parliament can go about the country making grandiose announcements, all in the name of recovery, but essentially in the name of trying to bolster sagging Liberal fortunes.

We have just dealt with the budget that is supposed to have in it a special recovery component. Yet it fails to address, I would say, the three most important elements of the Canadian economy, elements which could generate some new growth and some new wealth in the country, namely the agriculture sector, the energy sector and the small business sector.

I want to deal with those things in a moment, but first I think it is fair to say that the budget presented last month also failed to address some of the long-term issues, such as the structural defects that we must face currently. A recent study by the C.D. Howe Institute pointed out that 40 per cent of our unemployment is due to the recession and that 60 per cent of the unemployment, or approximately one million of those unemployed, is a result of the structural problems that exist within the Canadian economy. Those structural deficits have to be dealt with, but they were not dealt with in the budget and they do not appear to be addressed by the Government in terms of its over-all approach to economic policy.

The issue of productivity must also be addressed because it ties in with our ability to compete in the international marketplace. We all know of the importance of exports and the vital role they play in the wealth of the total Canadian economy. Over 30 per cent of our economic activity is attributed to exports. In order to capture that market and further penetrate it, we must be competitive. In 1982 our productivity dropped once again. Statistics Canada reported that the industrial output for each hour of work dropped during that year by .6 per cent, unit labour costs rose by 11.4 per cent as production dropped and labour compensation climbed 4.5 per cent. When we add all these together, we realize that they further deteriorate our competitive position and reduce our productivity even more. Our productivity record is the worst among leading industrialized nations of the world.

I believe as well that the budget failed to address the issue of worker training and retraining. It failed to ensure that we could mesh more accurately job requirements with skilled trades and develop skilled trades to meet job demand. These are the kinds of long-term issues which we need to address but which were not addressed in the budget.

As the Hon. Member for Crowfoot indicated earlier, we have to approach economic issues in a twofold manner. We must maximize efficiency in terms of Government expenditure, trim the fat and get rid of the deadwood. At the same time we must inspire and rejuvenate the private sector and wealth-generating enterprises in the country. I singled out the three areas in which this could occur, namely the energy industry, the agricultural industry and the small business sector. Notwithstanding the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) paid a great deal of attention to and said all the correct things about, the need to inspire the private sector and to use it as the main engine of economic growth, upon closer examination we find that these were merely buzz words that were not backed up with any realistic policy.

We know that small business is the best source of creating new jobs. It has been stated time and time again in the House that in the North American continent some two-thirds of all new jobs created were created by firms with less than 50 employees. This is clearly an area in which we could rejuvenate the dynamic, creative and innovative spirit of Canadians and Canadian enterprises. I contend that the budget does little to promote small business growth. When we look at some of the things which could have been done but have not been done, we get a clear picture.

I would like to refer to a paper which was put out by the firm of Drache and Goldstein which commented upon investment tax credits and the proposal with respect to the issuance of equity shares. It was pointed out that while all this looks good on paper, small business had never been a major user of investment tax credits because of the various limitations imposed on the nature of the assets which must be acquired. Also it pointed out that the total benefits to small business looked like an addenda to plans to stimulate big business, sort of a mere afterthought which did not really address the real problems of small business. Not a word was said about the removal of the 12.5 per cent corporate distribution tax, about the repeal of the reduction in the capital cost allowance, about the potential of restoring the Small Business Development Bond, about ways and means of liberating some of the RRSP funds which could be channelled back into future investment for small business, or about the prospect of employment tax credits to stimulate employment in the small business sector.

I could suggest a tax holiday on the first $100,000 worth of profit because small-businessmen, like farmers, are the last ones to take salaries. They plow their profits back into the business sector to create jobs and to provide a stable and economic environment in all areas of the country. There were a whole host of suggestions and recommendations advanced by various groups that deal closely with small business, but they have been ignored.

Another area is energy, to which the Hon. Member for Crowfoot referred as well. I support what he said because he was speaking the absolute truth when he indicated that we had a dynamic oil industry in western Canada, particularly in the Province of Alberta. He said that it was dominated by small Canadian companies, particularly in the drilling, service and supply sectors. Those enterprises were in business for ten years to 15 years but many of them were forced into liquidation or into bankruptcy. This is a sad tragedy.

There was some suggestion that the budget would help the energy sector. Referring to the April 21 edition of the Edmonton Journal, Mr. Hans Maciej, an economist at the Canadian Petroleum Association, is quoted as saying:

> The federal budget will neither help nor hurt the petroleum industry very much—
> In terms of an activity impact, there is none immediately—

When we place this behind the backdrop of the disastrous National Energy Program of 1980, we realize that the Government has yet to undo the damage it inflicted upon the industry. I repeat that the National Energy Program of 1980 cost the industry some 20,000 jobs. It forced the cancellation of many major megaprojects. My colleague outlined its impact not only on western Canada but on Canada as a whole. I remind the House that every job created in the oil industry produces two other jobs in other parts of Canada. We know the difficulties of the petrochemical industry. The fact of the matter is that Canada was once a world leader in that industry, but because of heavy upfront taxes the Canadian petrochemical industry is non-competitive on world markets.

There is still potential in the energy sector, such as the potential of a heavy oil upgrader in the Lloydminster-Wainwright area. It would involve an investment of some $3.5 million to generate some 93,000 man years of work. We have a situation where Petro-Canada is exploring for oil in China to help China become self-sufficient, but we are no closer to oil self-sufficiency in real terms than we were when the National Energy Program came into place. We have failed to turn our energy advantage into an economic advantage, and we have that opportunity.

I repeat, in the course of this whole exercise we have destroyed a very vibrant service and supply industry. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot is correct; of some 400 rigs in western Canada, there are less than 50 which are currently working. The Hon. Member used the figure 32; I know it is less than 50. Even with the initiatives taken by the Alberta provincial Government, we will be lucky if we get 100 rigs working out of the 400. What a disaster! What a change! Here was a golden opportunity for our young people that is lost. Many western Canadians are involved in the energy sector. Rather than building upon that potential, we have a deliberate Government policy which has destroyed that opportunity and potential.

I turn now to agriculture. This is another area with tremendous potential which was literally ignored in the budget speech. We are all aware of the difficulties that the farm community has experienced, particularly since 1980. In excess of 400 bankruptcies have occurred in the farm community. That is only part of the story. It does not take into account those who liquidated voluntarily or gave up. The situation in western Canada is such that bankruptcies are up by 200 per cent. The banks are not helping the situation, nor is the Minister of Finance who has undertaken to examine and to deal with the banks which are ripping off many of our farmers by imposing severe penalties upon pre-payment of mortgages.

I have a situation in my constituency where a certain bank decided to suspend an operating loan. The customer was forced to move to another bank where it arranged credit facilities. The amount owing was in the order of $378,000. Because the mortgage was pre-paid, the bank imposed a penalty of $42,561. A competing banker told my constituent that was three times the normal three-month interest penalty required for pre-payment of mortgages.

Two months ago the Minister undertook to deal with this and to issue an ultimatum to the banks either to clean up their act or face the consequences. I challenge this Minister now to get on his toes and deal with the banks so that we can avoid this kind of rip-off.

We are trying in this House and in the Agriculture Committee to bring in a piece of legislation that will give farmers of Canada who are up against it some relief. At the same time, the Minister of Finance merely pays lip service to the real issues. I have written to the Minister but I have not received an acknowledgement. I challenge him to deal with this issue. It not only destroys the integrity of the banking system, but destroys the ability of farmers to go into a bank with any degree of confidence without getting ripped off.

Our Party has advanced a ten-point agricultural program that would assist in some small measure. It is by no means total. We have made the following recommendations and suggestions. There needs to be some relief in terms of the ability of farmers to bail themselves out of high interest rate mortgages. We recommend the use of the agri-bond system.

Sales tax on farm fuels and natural gas used in the production of food should be removed. Initial grain prices should remain at the same level as last year. Cash advances on farm-stored grain should be doubled. Changes should be made to the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the Agricultural Stabilization Act. We are recommending a voluntary national incomes stabilization program for the red meat sector. We recommend changes to Section 31 of the Income Tax Act so that those farmers who have to supplement their income off the farm will be treated in a fair and equitable manner.

These are some of the suggestions we have advanced. They will by no means resolve all the problems in the agricultural industry, but they should be considered by this Government. I present them for the consideration of the Government, if not in the course of the next few weeks, at least when, hopefully, drafting the new Speech from the Throne which will start a new session of Parliament soon.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, as usual we have heard a refreshing speech from the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). He pointed out three areas of concern to him: shall business, energy and agriculture. The Hon. Member said that the budget was a disaster for small business, that it did not do enough and did not go far enough.

I received in the mail today the May-June issue of "Impact" from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. It states "Federal budget will strengthen economic recovery: Chamber". "Canadian Chamber reacts favourably to recent federal budget". These are just the headlines. "Business was the big winner". "Box Score: The Canadian Chamber and the April 19 federal budget". Under that heading it lists 30 ideas from the Chamber: 16 wins, 8 partial wins and six losses. I was concerned when I looked at the losses, but I found that they were pretty minor issues.

Among the 30 ideas are the issues raised by the Hon. Member for Vegreville.

At the beginning of his speech, the Hon. Member said the budget does not do enough for productivity. Point three states in part that "The Chamber recommended ... significant strides in productivity." The April 19 budget "provided tangible responses". The Chamber recommended "steps to be taken to increase business and consumer confidence". The April 19 budget was "tuned to this objective." It was rated "Win". We find these very powerful statements in this pamphlet. At the end it states, and I quote:

> The Chamber has contended that the success Canada will have in attaining economic growth will, to a large extent, rest on the health of our small-business sector since small business employs a large number of Canadians and is responsible for a significant share of new-job creation. With this in mind, it applauded the Minister for recognizing the important role of the small business sector by introducing a number of special tax and other measures that may help to alleviate certain elements of the difficult financial situation faced by small business.

That is an endorsement from the Chamber of Commerce representing thousands of small businesses. There are similar endorsements from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. They rank this budget as a "win". The Hon. Member says we do not do anything for small business. I wonder whether he has been reading his mail.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has seized on an oportunity to exaggerate. I did not say the budget was a disaster for small business. He is fabricating words. I said it did not do enough to assist the small business sector.

As far as the Chamber of Commerce is concerned, I think they would be judging their comments on the basis of the previous two budgets. Compared to the last two, this one is a winner because the other two were absolute disasters.

Notwithstanding what the Hon. Member may say about the support which the Chamber of Commerce is giving to the budget, I would rather look at the level of support that is emanating from the people of Canada with respect to the policies of this Government. We had a good test in Brandon the other day. Only 17 per cent of the people in Brandon approved of the Government's record, approved of its budget, approved of the way the Government is handling the economic and political affairs of the country. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that that is the better test. Even in the Gallup poll, which takes into account the heavy proportion of support that the Liberal Party still continues to enjoy in the Province of Quebec, the Government can only eke out about a 27 per cent or 29 per cent level of support across the country. I believe that that is the real test.

• (1250)

The fact of the matter is that others have said the same things as the report by Drache, Goldstein and Company, which said:

> The "benefits" for small business, in sum, look like addenda to plans to stimulate big business, a mere afterthought which does not address the real problems of small businesses.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, supplementary to what the Hon. Member has just said, I believe that Arthur Drache is the same lawyer who sat in the Tory lobby during the debate over the Income Tax Act and fed questions to the Tory Members of Parliament. I would not expect a man who would do that to stand up the next day and automatically applaud anything the Liberal Government does. I do not think he would be willing to do that, nor on the other hand do I expect partisan comments from the Chamber of Commerce. That is why, unlike the other Member, I chose a non-partisan body for its assessment of the budget rather then some gentleman who made a lot of money from the Tory Party during the income tax debate.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that Norman Godfrey of HUDAC said on April 20, as reported in The Globe and Mail, "The pro-business budget will generate confidence and create jobs".

On the night of the budget, John Bulloch said that the budget was a combination of good politics and economics and that business will generally give high marks.

Those people are not partisan like the gentleman who sat in the Tory lobby and fed questions to Tories who could not themselves understand what they were supposed to ask.

I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that in the budget there is indeed a very short section dealing with small business, but everything else in the budget stimulates the interests and the benefits of small business. The RHOSP will stimulate the business of furniture companies and stores. Again the RHOSP will stimulate activity among small construction companies and housing contractors. The tax incentives, the investment incentives, the construction equipment incentives will all stimulate small business. I can go on all day. Those incentives are not listed under the section dealing with small business, Mr. Speaker, but they sure help small business.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in responding briefly to the Parliamentary Secretary's rhetoric, I should point out that Mr. Drache has a very distinguished record as a public servant who worked for the Department of Finance and who, I suspect, has drafted a few budgets himself. As far as the Parliamentary Secretary's other rhetoric is concerned, it has become fairly well known across the country that this is a budget of short-term gain for long-term pain.

Unemployment levels will not be affected very much. There will be at least 10 per cent unemployment plus into the next two to three years and 12.4 per cent for the rest of this year. That figure will hopefully moderate to a level of 10 per cent. I do not think that a level of 10 per cent unemployment is acceptable in any industrialized nation, and certainly not in Canada with the potential and opportunity that we have.

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, I have just one question for the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). He, along with his colleagues, constantly refers to the exodus of oil companies and drilling companies in particular, with their rigs flowing in vast quantities south from Alberta into the United States. This was quite true back in 1980 and 1981. I was wondering whether or not the Hon. Member attributes this exodus to the downturn in OPEC oil prices throughout the world, to the fact that there is a world glut in oil, and to the fact that we have found alternate sources of oil and petroleum products. How does he account for the fact that, without very much fanfare and publicity, particularly in the West, most of these oil drilling companies are now bringing their rigs back into Canada and are saying that the reason they are coming back to Canada is that there is no work for them in the United States, that they cannot compete in the United States, that there is no demand in the United States, that their balloon has burst in the United States? The oil industry in the United States is a totally private sector industry, all privately owned. There is no national energy policy, Mr. Speaker, south of the border. Why are all these rigs now coming back into Canada? Because they cannot make a living down in the United States.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for the Member who posed the question, although I would not expect him to be totally abreast of the realities in Alberta. The fact of the matter is that in 1980 and 1981 when we saw the exodus of drilling rigs south of the border, there was not an OPEC crisis. The fact of the matter is that things in western Canada were really humming for the oil industry and the service sector. The whole industry was really humming. We saw not only an exodus of drilling equipment and men and capital, but we saw an exodus of expertise.

I speak with some experience, Mr. Speaker, because I have two boys who are involved in drilling activities and they too found their way down south temporarily. Yes, they are on their way back home now because there is renewed activity in Saskatchewan. There is a new Government in Saskatchewan that is open for business. It happens to be a Progressive Conservative Government. There is a recently announced drilling incentive program in Alberta and there was a drilling incentive program announced which was in effect a year ago. But these are provincial programs that are needed to compensate for the disastrous effect of the federal energy program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, in view of the proximity to the hour, might I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I remind Hon. Members that the eight-hour period has now passed and that speeches and contributions from now on will be in the order of ten minutes. It would certainly be difficult for the Hon. Member to commence his speech now. That would leave him with perhaps six minutes or so remaining when we reach Orders of the Day again. Accordingly, with the consent of the House, shall we call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

HOUSING

$3,000 GRANT PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, under the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan, a grant of $3,000 was paid by the Federal Government to all Canadians wishing to buy a home. This program was very popular and has helped to stimulate construction in Canada. Unfortunately, the program had to be discontinued on May 4 of this year for various reasons, including a moderating trend in interest rates, which have dropped considerably. Since this announcement, the caucus of Liberal Members from the Laval-Larentians area, which is honoured to have you, Madam Speaker, among its members, had a meeting on May 12 with the Quebec Provincial Home Builders Association. At this meeting, the Association submitted an official resolution that was transmitted to the national Liberal caucus and received the unanimous support of caucus members, who urged the Government to acknowledge the commitments of home buyers who had signed their purchase offers. We are now anxiously waiting for a decision by the Minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation with respect to this vital sector of our economy.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

CLOSING OF REGIONAL OFFICES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I wish to protest, in the strongest terms, the recent decision by the National Film Board of Canada to close down eight of its regional offices across the country, including one in my constituency of Kingston and the Islands.

The savings projected by this move are minimal compared with the contribution of these outlets to the concerned communities. For instance, the resources of the National Film Board library in Kingston are in constant demand by local school boards as a valuable supplement to Canadian studies. Ethnic communities make great use of films which show Canadian life and history, particularly that of their own forebears in Canada. Senior citizen groups in the area regularly schedule film screenings for the enjoyment and entertainment of their members. All of these usages will be drastically curtailed should the local office be closed.

The National Film Board office in Kingston ranks fifth in terms of efficiency out of 30 NFB offices in Canada, so its closing is particularly difficult to comprehend.

I therefore urge the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) to take early action with a view to reversing the short-sighted decision of the National Film Board with regard to the closure of so many of its local film libraries.

HOUSING

ASSISTED HOME OWNERSHIP PROGRAM—PLIGHT OF FAMILIES IN HOMES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my purpose today is to call to the attention of the House and, I hope, to the Government, the plight of those families who entered into the AHOP Program several years back, who have really tried to make a go of things and have done everything to live up to their responsibilities under their agreements. These families now find themselves in the aggravating position of, in effect, being punished by the Government for being responsible people. The people who did not or could not repay their loans, and/or who simply walked away from their AHOP homes after not making payments for a while, are in some cases actually better off than those who stayed and now see the value of their investments being eroded by subsequent CMHC handling of vacated AHOP homes in their neighbourhood.

If the Government could see its way to providing $3,000 to those who wish to buy a new home, I do not see any reason why it could not, at this time, reward the perseverance and responsibility of those AHOP home owners who have persisted, by forgiving outstanding loans or paying back the loans which have already been paid up. This is the least that could be done for these people in a very difficult situation.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

IMPORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, on Wednesday, April 13, I made a statement under the provisions of Standing Order 21 about the clothing import situation, and at the time, I urged Cabinet to look into the matter and decide accordingly.

Yesterday, I read in the papers, after a press conference held by the Canadian Institute of Clothing Manufacturers and the unions to discuss the situation in the clothing and textiles industry, that these two groups have asked the Canadian Government to make a decision with respect to imports.

Madam Speaker, after listening to news reports and reading newspaper articles on the subject, I must say that I do not entirely agree with all the statements made by labour and management, although I do share some of their views on the import situation, and I would like to make it clear to both labour and management that Federal Members with a special concern for the textile and clothing industry are discussing the issue with the Ministers concerned and have asked Cabinet to make a decision on imports. When people talk about convincing Federal Members about the importance of this issue, the fact is that Members with a specific concern for these problems have already made considerable progress with the Ministers in working on the situation, and I would like to say to workers in the textile and clothing industry that Members in the various ridings concerned are working very hard on this case, and we hope that the Government will shortly be able to make a decision that will be favourable to workers, employers and the unions.

GRAIN

TWO-PRICE WHEAT ACT—NON-OBSERVANCE BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the Government has essentially been breaking the law since November, 1978. This has come about as a result of the Government acting as though the Two-Price Wheat Act had been repealed in 1978. The Two-Price Wheat Act was put into effect to protect producers and consumers from the fluctuations in the world market. As of November, 1978, the Government acted as though the Two-Price Wheat Act had been repealed, but in fact it was not. At that time, as a result of the Government not adhering to the law, the price of flour to domestic millers went up, thereby causing an increase in the price of bread to consumers.

If this had happened to any other smaller group or individual in the country the Government would have been taken to court. All consumers have been disadvantaged and there has been no move by consumers, through a class action or otherwise, to take the Government to court or call it to account.

I suggest that the Government should show some respect for the rule of law and start obeying its own laws by giving priority to Bill S-6, which is now in Committee, to repeal the Two-Price Wheat Act, or go back to obeying the letter of the law as in the Two-Price Wheat Act.

AIR TRANSPORT

QUEBECAIR AND RÉGIONAIR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Undoubtedly, Madam Speaker, you are aware of the wide expanses of the Manicouagan riding and the difficulties in the aeronautical field. I would like to ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to bring us up to date on the Quebecair issue, because all residents of the north shore region as well as those of Eastern Canada are anxious to see Quebecair and Air Canada reach an agreement as soon as possible. Such an agreement would be a boon to those people who use the services of Quebecair and it would ensure that Quebecair personnel are directly involved in the negotiations and can rest assured that the issue of their employment will be resolved to their satisfaction.

Madam Speaker, I believe that this matter is very important and that the House ought to know exactly what is going on with respect to Quebecair. I would also urge that Régionair be directly involved in the negotiations because this case relates to the area between Sept-Îles and Blanc-Sablon as well as between Sept-Îles and the Magdalen Islands.

I hope that the Minister of Transport of Canada will take this representation into consideration so that, in the region of Quebec City or Montreal, this matter be cleared up very quickly, vital as it is to northern cities along the north shore and in Eastern Canada.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

DEMAND FOR WITHDRAWAL

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, in 1973, at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference in Calgary, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in part: " ... What the West wants is a fair deal—wider choice and opportunity within the West, and a fair chance to build a West which will be an integral part of a stronger and more prosperous Canada."

Right on, Mr. Prime Minister! But why do you not let us do just what you said—why are you and your Government handcuffing agriculture in the West with Bill C-155? Why are your actions not in conformity with your words? Your National Energy Program all but destroyed our gas and oil industries—your Bill C-155, if passed as is, will force every farmer to take his grain to the elevators. He will lose his freedom of choice.

• (1410)

During this Prime Minister's time in power we have seen our livestock production move east, our packing plants close, our oil and gas drilling dry up. Gilson's recommendations gave us hope. The Minister's "50 per cent of Gilson" dimmed that hope a little, and then Bill C-155, ordered by the Prime Minister and the Liberal Quebec Caucus, blotted out all hope.

If the Prime Minister meant what he said in Calgary, withdraw Bill C-155, return to Gilson, or better still, to the alternative suggested by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). Let us have freedom of choice. Do not talk sweetly and then fence us in.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHANGE IN RULES GOVERNING MOTIONS AND POINTS OF ORDER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, on November 13, 1970, during Question Period, a dispute arose over the lack of Cabinet Ministers present to answer questions. After some considerable wrangle the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rose on a point of order and moved that the House proceed to the Orders of the Day. It was acceptable in 1970 to make motions and points of order during Question Period. That practice wad discontinued in 1971. I contend that as a result of that discontinuance that particular practice cannot be considered as a precedent.

Madam Speaker: Well, I was wondering where the Hon. Member was going with that particular statement under Standing Order 21. I have some doubt about whether this is a proper time to discuss procedural matters.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PLIGHT OF SOVIET DISSIDENT, ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY

Mr. David Smith (Don Valley East): Madam Speaker, about 15 minutes ago I received a phone call from Avital Shcharansky in New York, the wife of Soviet prisoner of conscience, Anatoly Shcharansky. No member of his family has seen him for 17 months, and during that time he underwent a hunger strike which was widely reported throughout the world press. That hunger strike was finally terminated, but it is generally recognized that he is in very poor health. In a letter which his mother received just a few days ago he described in great detail symptoms which would appear to indicate that he may have suffered a heart attack. Yet he is not receiving medical treatment.

I feel quite strongly about this, Madam Speaker. A meeting with his family, scheduled for June, has been postponed until July. I think it is important while Mr. Gorbachev is in this country that Canadians indicate that these flagrant denials of human rights of people like Mr. Shcharansky and others will not go unnoticed. I call upon him to intervene when he returns to Moscow to allow Mr. Shcharansky to be released and join his wife, whom he has not seen since the day after they were married, in Isreal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL UNITY

COEXISTENCE OF FOUNDING RACES

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, since Confederation the national question has been how is the French fact to be accommodated in Canada. Three general possible solutions have evolved through time, resulting from social organization, technological inter-relations, and economic interdependence. These solutions are separation, assimilation, and coexistence.

Various Canadian organizations, political parties, and even some Members of this House, have directly or inadvertently favoured and fuelled the separation option.

Some Canadian organizations, some members in high political office and organizations, and even some Members of this House, are perceived to favour and even promote the assimilation option.

The statesmen, the realists, and the nation-builders have promoted and strived to implement the coexistence option. It is the only acceptable option for most Canadians, and I count myself as one of these, particularly so during the recent constitutional drama. Canada has for several decades moved boldly towards this workable option of coexistence between two founding races, two solitudes, two linguistic and cultural identities. Manitoba is to be applauded and respected for its recent historical action. The nation waits on Ontario for a similar response.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

APPROVAL OF ACQUISITIONS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue who yesterday tabled one of the most dangerous pieces of legislation to be introduced in Parliament in the past decade, the Canada Development Investment Corporation Bill. The CDIC will be the largest holding company in Canada and a massive intrusion into the marketplace. It will have special privileges that its private sector competitors will not have.

Can the Minister confirm to the House that in fact CDIC, when it decides to buy or sell a company, will not require parliamentary approval and that all it will require is the approval of Cabinet? Can he tell the House why it is he feels the Parliament of Canada should not be required to give its consent before CDIC purchases more companies?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I fail to see how the Hon. Member could have concluded from the Bill tabled in the House yesterday that it was the most dangerous piece of legislation he had seen for a long time. Actually, it is a very positive measure, and it is a response to one of the Government's concerns, a concern that the President of the Treasury Board in the previous Government had as well, although he lacked the imagination to find a solution to this kind of problem. So, the Government's concern is to provide for tighter management of certain corporations that are wholly-owned by the Government, to return to the private sector certain shares held by the Government through the Canada Development Corporation and, finally, to act in an important consulting capacity by advising the Government on management of certain Government assets.

Prior to making any acquisitions whatsoever, the new Corporation will have to refer to Cabinet, which may or may not authorize the Corporation to carry out the transaction. I should also like to point out, and the Hon. Member must have noticed, that the Bill tabled in the House will oblige the Corporation to submit its investment programs and that these documents will be examined carefully and thoroughly by a standing committee of this House.

[English]

CORPORATION'S POWERS—IMMUNITY FROM LAWS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, now that the Minister has unburdened himself with that speech, will he answer the question? Will the Minister confirm that in fact CDIC can purchase any company it wants to, and that if it used internally generated funds all it would require is the consent of Cabinet, and no consent from Parliament would be required? Will the Minister confirm that because CDIC will be an agent of Her Majesty it will be immune from provisions of the Combines Investigation Act and federal legislation dealing with false and misleading advertising?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think that instead of commenting on the kind of answer he was given, the Hon. Member would do well to listen carefully and relate the answer to the questions he asked in the first place. Perhaps I may be allowed to say, in answer to the same question about the authority of the new Corporation for making acquisitions, that—and the Hon. Member can read this in the Bill—before using any funds to make any acquisition whatsoever, such plans must be submitted to Cabinet. Furthermore, the Corporation will have to submit operating and capital plans, which will have to be examined by the committees of this House. Parliamentarians will therefore have an opportunity to make a careful and thorough study of such plans provided of course, that the Members sitting on the committee are prepared to be thorough, unlike the Hon. Member who is asking these questions.

[English]

REQUEST THAT AUDITOR GENERAL BE REQUIRED TO AUDIT CORPORATION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, what a piece of flimflam. Does the Minister not realize that the Bill he tabled says that the capital plan becomes effective immediately upon approval by Cabinet? There is no time limit for tabling in Parliament. There is no requirement that Parliament approve it. Does he not realize that this is an agent of Her Majesty? Will the Minister now answer either of the two questions I have asked him, honestly and in a straightforward way?

Will he also tell the House why there is no provision whatsoever that the Auditor General have access to the books of CDIC? Will he give the House and people of Canada the assurance that with this largest and most dangerous holding company in Canada the Auditor General will have full access to the books and he will be able to conduct comprehensive audits of the activities of CDIC?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, yesterday, the Minister responsible for the Canada Development Investment Corporation said at a press conference that he was still looking into the matter of having the Corporation's books audited by the Auditor General of Canada. However, I may point out that private auditing firms are already auditing corporations whose new shareholder is the Canada Development Investment Corporation, and furthermore, the question of audits by the Auditor General of Canada is still being studied by the Minister responsible, and we shall probably have an opportunity, at the clause-by-clause consideration of this Bill in committee, to take a closer look at this question with the Minister responsible. I should also like to point out to the Hon. Member that for the first time, standing committees of the House will have an opportunity to make a thorough study of the financial statements of the corporations that will be controlled by the new Corporation.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—FILING OF FINANCIAL REPORT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my questions are directed to the President of the Treasury Board who will know how the Government flaunts the law with respect to Crown corporations. He will know that on April 13 he promised the House that he would file a report on Canadair. On May 19 his parliamentary secretary repeated the promise. The President of the Treasury Board will know that Section 75 of the Financial Administration Act requires that a Crown corporation file its financial report three months after its year end. He will know that that same Section requires the statement to be filed in Parliament 15 days after it is with the Cabinet.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Blenkarn: Where are the reports?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question? He has been enumerating quite a number of things.

Mr. Blenkarn: Well, certainly. Let me give it.

Madam Speaker: Let us proceed to a question.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, we will get to the question. The question is: where are the reports? Why have the reports not been filed? Why does the Government of Canada continue to let Canadair flaunt the law?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I do not accept the premises of my hon. friend's question. I could be wrong, but I do not think that the year end of Canadair has taken place as yet. I will check into it. Like my hon. friend, I want to see the requirements of the Financial Administration Act properly met.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is amazing that the President of the Treasury Board does not know the year end dates of his own corporations.

APPROVAL OF ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board also knows that under Section 70 of the Financial Administration Act the capital budgets of a Crown corporation must be approved by the Government and filed with the House. How does he now come to this House demanding $240 million for Canadair—

Mr. Nielsen: On his knees.

Mr. Blenkarn: —without filing a capital budget, at the same time saying that this money is for equity in the capital of the Crown corporation?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the supplementary estimates in question will be studied by the appropriate Committees of the House. The Committees will certainly be in a position to be assured and satisfied that they have the relevant financial information. I will be consulting with the Minister responsible, to be in a position to assist him in providing the necessary information.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

COMPOSITION OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS—TERMS OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue and it also concerns the Canadian Development Investment Corporation Bill. I should tell the Minister that we in the New Democratic Party feel that Crown corporations must be open, accountable, and free of patronage, if they are to survive.

If the Minister were to study the Bill would he agree with me that the people associated with the CDIC comprise the same old group, the Strongs, the Bells, the Austins, and the Cohens, the old NEP gang, the return of the Jedi, if you like, who are known for being elitist and independent of Parliament? Can the Minister tell the House how he can say that the CDIC is responsible and accountable to Parliament when, in fact, the CDIC will be almost completely directed by Order in Council?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I find the question of the Hon. Member rather amazing, because I was myself pleasantly surprised today to read a headline in a newspaper saying that the new Corporation would provide more information to parliamentarians, and more important to the public, about the activities of these corporations, and second, that parliamentarians would also be able to question the managers of these corporations and hold them accountable to Parliament. Indeed, the bill contains provisions requiring the parent corporation to file regular financial statements for its subsidiaries, as a result of which parliamentarians will be able to ask questions, be better informed about management matters, and give a much more detailed account of the administration and operations of these corporations to their colleagues and the public.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: The Minister should have the experience of trying to challenge an Order in Council, as I did. It took me three years to get into court to challenge the pipeline Order in Council.

Mr. Lalonde: No case.

PURPOSE OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question in a more general vein. If the Minister reads the Bill, he will find that there are, in fact, inconsistent goals in it. At first, it is to privatize. Second, it is to have a window in the industry, for some corporate or commercial information. Finally, it speaks of a corporate plan, which is more like modern social democratic economic planning. I want to ask the Minister which is it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Smile, Svend.

Mr. Waddell: I know that the Conservatives do not like that. They want to sell it off.

Mr. Beatty: Who would buy it?

Mr. Waddell: Is it, in fact, the purpose of the Government—because it is not really spelled out; it is inconsistent—to begin modern economic planning to solve the work crisis we have in Canada by using the Crown corporations in part, or is it just to provide a tool, a vehicle for the old Austin gang to play some power games, and to leave undefined what the Government wants to do?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, first, I should like to remind the Hon. Member of the four major objectives of the Corporation. He must know that the Government and the taxpayers are concerned about the way some corporations operate. There is no need for me to mention specific cases. I am certain that all Hon. Members already have some in mind. It was therefore necessary to take drastic action to ensure a closer control over these corporations and provide a businesslike solution to the business problems they were facing. The first objective of the new Corporation is therefore to oversee these corporations more closely.

The second objective is as follows. We all know that the Government has holdings in several corporations which could easily be privatized when market conditions make it possible to get a good return on the sale of these holdings for Canadian taxpayers. That is the second objective to be met by the Corporation.

The third objective—

Madam Speaker: Order, please! The answer of the Hon. Minister is a bit long.

[English]

CORPORATION'S OBJECTIVES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister assure the House that the new umbrella corporation will be more than just the latest evolution of the bureaucratic state capitalism that we have received from the Liberals over the years?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: You've got to be joking.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Author?

Mr. Blaikie: Does the Prime Minister intend to ensure that, in the future, Crown corporations will become an instrument for the pursuit of genuine alternative economic development, that is, accountable to social and environmental indicators of productivity as well as traditional profit criteria—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: —and that it is a kind of economic planning—

Some Hon. Members: Louder!

Mr. Blaikie: Does he intend to insure that it is a kind of economic planning over which Canadians have authentic control?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Or are—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That enumeration and that long preamble are just a bit too much on a third question on the same subject. I would ask the Hon. Member to proceed immediately to ask his question.

• (1430)

Mr. Blaikie: Are we to see the continuation of Crown corporations merely being mirror images of their counterparts in the private sector?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I can only advise the Hon. Member to read carefully what the Minister responsible said in the important statement he made yesterday, when he indicated the main objectives of the Corporation and how this new instrument the Government had created would be used to resolve a number of existing problems and also other problems that might arise in the future.

GEORGES BANK BOUNDARY DISPUTE—STATEMENT MADE BY UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. At the present time the U.S.-Canada Georges Bank boundary dispute is before the International court at The Hague. In light of the recent presidential proclamation which says that in case of conflicts the boundary of the exclusive economic zone shall be determined by the United States and other states concerned in accordance with equitable principles, was the Prime Minister aware of this statement and, if so, will he discuss this matter at Williamsburg with the United States President to make certain that the U.S. move does not pre-empt the International Court's decision at The Hague on the boundary issue as it applies to Georges Bank?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, first I should inform the Hon. Member and the House that the purpose of Williamsburg is not to have bilateral discussions with the U.S. President but to discuss the agenda which is before the Economic Summit, and particularly the importance of having a lasting economic recovery both in the industrialized countries and Third World countries. Therefore I do not propose to raise any specific bilaterals with President Reagan.

If I understood the quotation correctly, and I was not aware of it, there seems to be nothing wrong, in my opinion, with the President suggesting that the solution be found in terms of equitable principles. I believe that is what the reference to the court leads us to expect. We hope that the court will judge on equity and international law. That is our expectation, and nothing has changed.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER DISCUSS ISSUE WITH U.S. PRESIDENT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I thank the Right Hon. Prime Minister for his answer. I can appreciate that it may be difficult to discuss this matter at Williamsburg.

However, since Canada contends that the dividing line on Georges Bank should be equidistant between Canada and the United States, while the Americans claim the entire Georges Bank, will the Prime Minister undertake to hold discussions, when convenient, with the United States President, pointing out that their move to declare a 200 nautical mile coastal economic zone further complicates the boundary problem between our two countries and could establish precedents affecting other international boundary disputes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, the declaration of the 200-mile economic zone by the United States is no different from our own declaration which was made a few years ago in terms acceptable to the Law of the Sea conference. That is another matter entirely. In my view I think the Hon. Member is a couple of years too late. We have negotiated this situation. Of course there is a difference of interpretation of where the boundary lies, whether it be in the trench or on an equidistant line.

That whole matter had been solved in bilateral negotiations with the United States. It was rejected by the U.S. Senate. Consequently, we have gone to the international court of arbitration. It is now before the court. There has been no move on the part of U.S. or Canada to withdraw it from the jurisdiction of the court, where it is by mutual consent.

THE ADMINISTRATION

MEMBERSHIP OF CABINET COMMITTEE ON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Can the Minister tell the House whether he has recently been made a member of the important Cabinet Committee on Economic Development?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): I am sorry, Madam Speaker, but I did not hear the first part of the Hon. Member's question.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Could the Minister tell the House whether or not he is presently a Member of the strategic Cabinet committee on economic development?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Madam Speaker, I think these questions should be put to the Government House Leader and not to individual Ministers.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BE APPOINTED TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister or the President of the Privy Council. In view of the importance of the Canadian Development Investment Corporation to the country, in view of the fact that it seems to report through a member of the other place, and in view of the fact that the Minister of National Revenue has expounded at length on the strategic importance this company will be to the economy, does the Prime Minister or the Government feel that the Minister who does all the reporting should be a member of the Cabinet Committee on Economic Development?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, a list of Members of the various Cabinet Committees is tabled regularly in the House, and perhaps my learned colleague would like to read it. He will see for himself whether there have been any changes. Obviously, we will be announcing these changes in due time, but since the last election, we have made a habit of regularly tabling a list indicating the membership of our various Cabinet Committees.

HOUSING

$3,000 GRANT PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 21, I brought to the attention of the House the fact that the Canadian government apparently had dropped, on May 4, its $3,000 Grant Program promoting home ownership, and this had raised a number of questions. I see that the Minister responsible for the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation is in the House. I would now ask him the following question: Further to the representations made by thousands of Canadian renters who wanted to take advantage of the program and purchase a home under the federal program, and further to the many meetings which Members on this side had with the Minister to convey those representations submitted by thousands of Canadian residents, is the Minister willing to extend the program and accept the applications already filed with the various offices of the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation across Canada?

These are applications filed by people who wanted to buy homes but because of the bad weather conditions that have prevailed these last few months, building operations have been delayed. So I would ask the responsible Minister whether he wishes to state the government's intent as to the representations made by thousands of Canadians and discussed in caucus?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for raising this very important question. I am indeed amazed that the Opposition critic, to whom I had indicated my readiness to answer within 48 hours, has failed to do so. I am very pleased to report to this House that further to consultations with Cabinet Ministers, and especially the Minister of Finance, the Government is ready to accept all valid applications that were filed with the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation offices up to May 5, the date after which applications were no longer accepted.

I would also indicate that in the case of remote areas, rural areas where construction could not start, we will be accepting applications until June 15 to accommodate people in those parts of the country where construction operations are more difficult.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR RESUMPTION OF RELATIONS WITH POLAND

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since the Western Allies will be meeting in Williamsburg this weekend to deal with foreign debt problems in many countries, is the Prime Minister prepared to deal with the case of Poland which is one of the smaller international debtors when compared to Brazil and Mexico? Our trade with Poland has degenerated because of adherence to the Reagan line. Will the Prime Minister take a Canadian position at Williamsburg so that we can re-establish our trading links with Poland? Specifically, what steps will the Prime Minister take, with or without his Summit partners, to resume trade with Poland?

• (1440)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on that specific question I would have to defer to the Secretary of State for External Affairs for an answer. I am not sure whether any specific steps are being contemplated beyond the ones we have already taken and are following.

On the general matter of debt ridden Third World countries, or weaker countries, it is a concern that certainly will be discussed at Williamsburg and which I personally intend to bring to the attention of my colleagues at the Summit if it is not otherwise raised. It is certain that it is not only the huge debtors which must be of concern to us but the dozens and dozens of much smaller debtors, each of whom could see their economy and systems imperilled if the question of their debt is not addressed.

EXTENSION OF CREDITS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I would like to go a little deeper into the subject. Poland has been our third largest grain purchaser, has a better debt record than either Mexico or Brazil, and we have extended credits to those countries. Will the Canadian Government extend credits to Poland for Canadian grain purchases, and allow us to sell some of the two million tonnes which we have on hand of frozen and damaged grain which the Poles will buy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the House knows we have extended credits to Poland to buy wheat.

Mr. Benjamin: Not lately.

Mr. Trudeau: If the Hon. Member is asking for further steps in that direction, once again I would have to defer to the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the answer.

DISARMAMENT

INQUIRY RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER'S ROLE AT WILLIAMSBURG SUMMIT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I would like to follow up with the Prime Minister on the Williamsburg Summit and once again refer to the not so amusing musings of the Prime Minister with respect to the warlike nature of the President of the United States.

Since making those observations, has the Prime Minister had any personal discussions with President Reagan with respect thereto, and in pursuit of his honest broker role of trying to maintain an even handed approach with respect to Canada's approach to the Soviet Union and the United States, does the Prime Minister intend at the Williamsburg Summit to raise the question of the detente agreements which were lapsed by the United States following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in his question the Leader of the Opposition has managed once again to distort the reality of what I said. He has spoken at least four or five times in this House about my statements concerning the "warlike" attitude of the President of the United States. Either the Leader of the Opposition is extraordinarily gullible and he just reads headlines, because I do recognize that those words were used in a headline, or he is determined not to place my position in the sense in which it was stated. I would like to quote what I said in that interview with a representative of The Toronto Star and put it on the record. I was talking about members of the peace movement. Here is what I said:

They—

Members of the peace movement.

—are demonstrating against what they—

Members of the peace movement.

—see as the policy of an American president who has rightly or wrongly been perceived as warlike—

The sentence is not me saying the President of the United States is warlike. That is saying he is perceived, rightly or wrongly, as warlike by members of the peace movement. Perhaps the Hon. Member would rephrase his question. Perhaps he would even want to recouch his entire frame of mind—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —in order to try to ask questions which are based on the truth and not on some fabrication of the media.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister will the next time he rises, answer my question which he failed to do in putting that explanation on the record which failed to refer to his further observation with respect to the justification of the holding of that perception of the warlike nature of the President of the United States.

CANADIAN POSITION ON DETENTE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, in addition to answering the question that I just put to the Prime Minister, which remains unanswered, can he explain to the House whether in view of the lapsed detente agreements, something which took place after the Afghanistan invasion, and in view of the threat to detente caused by the pro-Soviet takeovers in Angola, Ethiopa, Southern Yemen, and Afghanistan, and the deterioration resulting therefrom, he believes there is any point in Canada continuing to support a detente stance in view of those circumstances and in view of the United States lapsing of those agreements? Does the Prime Minister intends to raise those matters at Williamsburg?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, very much so.

PRIME MINISTER'S CONVERSATIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, there is one more important aspect to the question which the Prime Minister has failed to answer yet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cousineau: Nonsense.

Mr. Nielsen: Since making those statements has the Prime Minister had a conversation with President Reagan with respect thereto?

Mr. Lalonde: Thereto what?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have had very many conversations with President Reagan over the years, some personal visits, some phone calls and so on. I have had two conversations very recently with President Reagan, one in Washington in the White House about two and a half weeks ago, and another in a phone call about ten days ago. It was the Sunday preceding the last Sunday that the President phoned me from Camp David, just as I was leaving for my beloved Edmonton.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: They love you too, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: And again we continued exchanges we had begun in Washington on the subject of disarmament.

Mr. Nielsen: With respect to those statements?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I can say that the President may or may not have known those statements. If he did know them, I can assure the Hon. Member that he knew them correctly and not incorrectly as quoted by the Hon. Member and carried in the headline.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Before or after you talked?

FISHERIES

RESTRUCTURING OF EAST COAST INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. As he knows, Georgetown Seafoods Ltd. in Prince Edward Island and other fish processing plants throughout the Atlantic region are desperately awaiting government action on the Kirby report's call for a multimillion dollar restructuring strategy. Given that the Government has now had some several months to negotiate such a strategy with the companies involved, with the banks, with the fishermen and the employees of the various plants, is the Minister in a position to tell the House, and through the House, all interested parties, what action it is prepared to take on this urgent problem?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is referring to a problem of great magnitude that concerns over 60 plants in Atlantic Canada, starting with Quebec, Nova Scotia, and also Newfoundland. This comprises assets of over $500 million, thousands of employees and 60 plants and, as the Hon. Member knows, the question of industries in the different Provinces is essentially a provincial matter.

• (1450)

Because of the magnitude of it, the federal Government has decided to do its utmost to prevent any major failure of that industry. We are having intensive negotiations with all partners at the moment. For instance, two days ago we had the pleasure to meet here in Ottawa with Premier Peckford. The meeting was chaired by my colleague, the Minister of State for Economic Development and the Minister who represents the Province of Newfoundland. I hope our efforts of the last few months will show up in the very near future in the reopening of as many plants as possible. I cannot guarantee to the Hon. Member that every single plant will reopen. I am working toward a maximum solution—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

COMMITMENT OF FEDERAL FUNDS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Last night the CBC reported that the federal Government has already made a decision to pump $100 million into the restructuring strategy to which I made reference in my first question. Will the Minister confirm that report? Will he at least indicate when an official announcement will be made? In connection with that restructuring will he assure the House that any such strategy for restructuring Atlantic fish plants will ensure that the Georgetown Seafoods plant in Prince Edward Island will be allowed to operate as a separate entity, perhaps in the context of an over-all strategy, rather than being the rear end of some larger plant which will smother it and make it impossible for that plant to operate as a viable and profitable entity?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I understand the intention and inspiration of the Hon. Member, but surely he is not asking me to say what level of assistance the federal Government will provide, because that is at the core of the negotiations with the creditors. Surely the Hon. Member expects the Provinces to play their share. The banks and the financial institutions will also have to put in money. We represent all taxpayers of the country. We are ready to do our share, but it would be most unwise for me to say at the outset what will be the ultimate position of the federal Government. As for this or that plant, that is not the way we are looking at it at this moment. We are trying to revamp the different companies which are technically bankrupt, and after that of course we will have to address each of the different plants.

FISHERIES

CONFLICTS WITH QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and concerns the fishermen on the Magdalen Islands. There is a conflict between the Federal Government and the Provincial Government. The Federal Government controls fishing licences and the Provincial Government has control over the fishing companies. Is the Minister prepared to settle its problems with the Provincial Government so that the fishermen can get on with their work?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question. It will not doubt interest him to know that representatives of Pêcheurs Unis, and Madelipêche is one of the branches of this company, came to see the Canadian Government to ask for help. Today, I am happy to say that most of the Pêcheurs Unis plants are open again, thanks only to a financial contribution made by the Canadian Government. In two weeks we have already paid more than $1 million. The first bills paid in order to reopen the plants were accounts with the Government of Quebec, but we are prepared to go that far. The only plant that did not open was the only Pêcheurs Unis plant whose licences the Government of Quebec would like to have. If it is a matter of money or administration, we are prepared to help, but if licences are involved, I think this kind of action for obtaining access to resources is unacceptable.

URGENCY TO RESOLVE CONFLICTS STRESSED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, this is a matter of federal-provincial co-operation, and I would like to know whether the Minister realizes that a sit-in is being staged at the Federal offices in the Magdalen Islands and that a solution to these problems is urgently needed so that these fishermen can earn their living.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that before the Government of Quebec seized the ships, they asked me whether the licences could be transferred. My answer was negative. Subsequently, they seized the ships, and today, unlike what the Hon. Member said, it is no longer a matter of federal-provincial relations but blackmail or worse. I understand perfectly well that the people on the Islands are only concerned about their plant. However, if I allow one creditor, even if he happens to be the government of one of the provinces, to proceed with seizure, there are sixty other plants where creditors could also act to protect themselves by seizing plants. If that happens, there will be a wave of bankruptcies throughout the Maritimes, and it is my responsibility to consider the welfare of all concerned.

HOUSING

REGISTERED HOME OWNERSHIP SAVINGS PLANS—WITHDRAWAL OF FUNDS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for housing. May I first thank him for responding positively to the pressures applied by the applicants and by this side of the House. In regard to the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, since there is some confusion and it seems impossible to withdraw funds without any guidelines, will the Minister indicate when certain guidelines or legislation will be brought forward so that people can take advantage of the program announced in the budget?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I apologize to my hon. friend if I cannot give him a full answer. As he well knows, this program is not administered under my responsibility. Although we have been working with the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue to ensure that as much information is distributed to CMHC offices as possible, I am told that some institutions are releasing funds. I think it was really a question of clearing up some details, and this appears to have been done. However, I would defer for details to my colleagues who are more responsible than I am.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Are you saying that you are irresponsible?

APPLICATION OF PROGRAM TO RENTERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Finance may be able to enlighten me on this particular situation. Since there seems to be some discrimination against apartment dwellers and people who rent homes, and since this plan is supposed to be a stimulation for the furniture industry, could the Minister look at providing these people with a similar opportunity as home owners enjoy?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the provision in the budget concerns the use of registered home ownership savings plans, and only Canadians who are eligible for such plans will be able to make use of this provision.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND—APPROVAL OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. F. It relates to the $345 million "phantom" Native Economic Development Fund. I see the Minister returning to his seat. Would he be in a position today to tell the house whether Cabinet has given approval to the spending of this money and whether this approval is in accordance with the memorandum to Cabinet of April 29, 1983?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, today being Thursday, I would like to ask the Government House Leader what is the business of the House for tomorrow and for as much of next week as possible.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, tomorrow, Friday, we will deal with four items. First, 45 minutes will be allowed to start debate and consideration of the objections which are Nos. 5 and 6 on the Order Paper relating to the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Alberta. I have had consultation and if within 45 minutes, which seems to be a reasonable period of time, we have terminated consideration, fine. If not, it will be adjourned for further consideration at a later date.

After 45 minutes we will consider all stages of the Bill to amend the Salaries Act, to be introduced later today concerning the Lieutenant Governors. We have an agreement for one speaker per Party.

Third, two resolutions to approve the appointment of Inger Hansen, Q.C. as Information Commissioner and John W. Grace as Privacy Commissioner will be dealt with. We have an agreement to deal with the two resolutions with two speakers per Party.

Fourth, we will deal with Bill C-152, an Act respecting the organization of the Government. That is the business for tomorrow.

[Translation]

Monday will be an Opposition day. Tuesday, unless we finish today, we shall resume debate on Bill C-151, which authorizes the Government to borrow certain sums of money. We are now at the second reading stage, and this Bill must be passed as soon as possible. Wednesday will be a day set aside for Private Members' Business. As for next Thursday, agreement has been reached between the parties to pass all stages of Bill C-156, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (No. 3), with the amendments relating to this Act, by 6 p.m. at the latest.

Madam Speaker, that was the order of business for next week.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HNATYSHYN—APPLICATION OF EIGHT-HOUR TIME LIMIT ON DEBATE—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I would like to rule on the matter which was raised concerning the inclusion of the time concentrated on points or order in calculating the time of speeches and the total amount of time that is given for discussing a certain matter. After having examined the arguments put forward very carefully, I would like to make the following points touching on the substantial elements put before by me last Thursday.

First, I must say that it is highly unusual for me to consider arguments on a ruling given by the Deputy Speaker or an Acting Speaker. We all know that a Speaker's ruling under our Standing Orders and our practice cannot be appealed. In this case I heard the Hon. Member because he made it clear that he had been invited by the Acting Speaker on May 16 to make those arguments to the Speaker, but I am now making the point that an Acting Speaker's decision has the same finality as if it had been rendered by the Speaker.

Second, the Acting Speaker gave a ruling as to the substance of the problem. That ruling is entirely correct and reflects our rules and our practices in that whenever a specific length of time is attributed to any proceeding in this House, the time taken up by points of order within that period is not subtracted from the total time allowed. That is the general rule. However, as the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) stated, the Chair at its discretion can extend the time allowed for a Member's speech if, in his opinion, he has been unfairly interrupted by points of order. Whether such an extension ought to apply equally to the total time for debate is similarly to be determined in any specific case at the discretion of the Chair.

The general practice of counting the time used by points of order against the allotted time for a specific proceeding is not new to this House. It certainly was the practice under the Standing Orders prior to September, 1982, and I see no reason to change that practice under the Provisional Standing Orders.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, may I get clarification of your ruling with regard to points of order. I believe you indicated that a ruling by the Acting Speaker is the same as that of the Speaker and is not subject to appeal. May I ask when is the Deputy Speaker the Acting Speaker and when are the two Assistant Chairmen Acting Speakers? Because the ruling that was originally made, I submit to you, was made by the Deputy Speaker. Our rules provide very clearly for an appeal from a ruling of the Deputy Speaker. There is a procedure for it. Therefore, I say that there is a difference between the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker. When is a Deputy Speaker and a Chairman not acting in his or her capacity? There is only one Speaker in this House.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that whenever a Speaker or Acting Speaker or Deputy Speaker is in the Chair, what I said about their decisions applies. I think the Hon. Member is confusing the time at which a Speaker is sitting as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. At that time there is a procedure, I believe, to appeal the decisions of the Chairman.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I listened intently to your ruling but I have to confess I was not altogether clear as to the exact nature of your ruling. Maybe you can clarify it for me from this point of view. In terms of the debate on Bill C-155, which is the proposed amendments to the Crowsnest Pass rates, is it your ruling that the time, which consisted of about one hour, taken up by points of order with respect to the interpretation of the rules is to be subtracted from the eight hours which is allocated to the 20-minute speeches, or is it your ruling that that time is included in the eight-hour calculation?

Madam Speaker: Hon. Members are in the habit of asking for clarification of rulings. They should know they can read them in Hansard. If they require clarification, they can speak to the Table officers. The Hon. Member perhaps had a moment of distraction. I said that there is an amount of discretion allowed on the part of the Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

THREAT OF WEST COAST PORTS STRIKE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I have a brief point of order. It arises out of a response to a question yesterday to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) at page 25693 in his capacity as Acting Minister of Labour. I believe that he, inadvertently perhaps, misled the House when in reference to the question of the grain handlers dispute on the West Coast he indicated in his answer that a strike vote had been taken. This morning I was informed by the President of the grain handlers that a strike vote has not been taken and that—

Madam Speaker: That is not a point of order, it is debate. Furthermore, the Hon. Member may not correct a statement made by another Member. If that Member wants to correct his statement that is up to him.

PETITIONS

MR. WENMAN—PENALTIES FOR DRUNK DRIVERS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition today on behalf of Mothers Against Drunk Drivers. Madam Speaker, the petition that I have to support is in fact on behalf of 7,000 Canadians who share in the tragedy of these mothers who have lost their sons and daughters to drunken driving. The name of this organization is becoming known across the country as MADD, and support for this particular petition comes not only from the 7,000 names that are affixed to it but from the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Association of Police Chiefs, the Attorneys General of many Provinces; and as well the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has indeed indicated some sympathy and concern toward this type of correction.

This petition purports to have a threefold purpose: the first is that upon a third offence and subsequent conviction there would be a mandatory six-month incarceration and ten-year licence suspension. Second—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member may not read all that out. We have heard the title of the petition and the object of it so I believe that is sufficient for the time being.

Mr. Wenman: Madam Speaker, the petitioners hope that you will receive, find in good order and refer this matter to the appropriate committee. The petitioners hope that you, Madam Speaker, might, with your own strong sense of fairness and justice, give full force to the capacity of your office and make the appropriate reference which, under precedent, does appear to be within your authority. This petition is the type of petition by which both justice and democracy can be forwarded at the same time, and through the limited capactity of your office I urge you to give support to this petition by recognition of—

Madam Speaker: I will show the Hon. Member how strong I am by interrupting him now.

MR. OGLE—SASKATOON REGIONAL PSYCHIATRIC CENTRE STAFF CUTBACKS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I present a petition from 160 citizens of my constituency of Saskatoon East where the Regional Psychiatric Centre comes under the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). A recent recommendation to cut back on staff has given me this petition.

To the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, the petition of the undersigned citizens of the City of Saskatoon in the Province of Saskatchewan do now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that staff cutbacks have occurred at the Regional Psychiatric Centre in Saskatoon. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to provide sufficient staff at the said Regional Psychiatric Centre to assure the safety of the staff and the general public, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of 158 residents of Canada.

To the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, the petition of the undersigned residents of the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Ontario who now exercise their right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that the removal of the Crow rate will see its replacement by rates that will impose higher freight costs of five times the present Crow rate; that the increases will be imposed at a time when prices for producers' grain are now at the 1974 level; that detailed calculations show that a rate of 5.1 times the Crow rate will cost the community of Hudson Bay $789,700 in each year in the payment of grain freight that would have otherwise stayed in the community based on the actual deliveries in 1980-81. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the Crow rate in perpetuity as presently guaranteed by statutes, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present a petition from 37 residents of Canada, 34 of whom are members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and who come from Melville, Invermay, Preeceville and Spy Hill, in which they humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year. This grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade; the undersigned believe this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy and that western farmers will pay one times the Crow. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a petition.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now exercise their ancient and unchallenged rights to present a grievance, with the assurance that your Honourable House will provide a remedy.

Humbly sheweth that:

Whereas western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year.

That this contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade of Canada

Whereas the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy.

And whereas western farmers will pay one time Crow.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain Crow rate.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

[English]

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): I thank you, Madam Speaker, for this opportunity to present the following petition to you and to the House. It is a petition, Madam Speaker, of some 35 Canadian citizens, mainly from centres such as Cut Knife, North Battleford, Adams, Grand Forks, et cetera, in the Province of Saskatchewan.

The petitioners wish to petition you, Madam Speaker, and the House, and humbly sheweth that western Canadian farmers paid some $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year and that this grain in turn made a contribution of some $6.3 billion to the balance of trade for Canada. The undersigned petitioners are mainly farmers and believe that this is a fair contribution to the Canadian economy. They are willing to continue to pay this amount to move export grain. They do feel, however, that the proposed legislation will put a burden on them which will force many of them out of business. They therefore wish to present this petition, Madam Speaker, and I as well as the petitioners thank you for being afforded the opportunity of presenting this petition.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I too have the honour to present a petition in relation to the Crow rate, a petition primarily from the residents of Dawson Creek, Pouce Coupe, Grand Prairie and other small communities in that area.

To the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, the petition of the undersigned residents of the Provinces of British Columbia and Alberta who now exercise their right to present a grievance humbly sheweth that the removal of the Crow rate will see its replacement by rates that will impose higher freight rate costs of five times the present Crow rate and higher by 1990; that such increases are being imposed at a time when prices for producers' grain are now at 1974 levels; and that detailed calculations show that a rate of five to one times the Crow rate will cost the community of Dawson Creek $4,658,800 in payments for grain freight rates that would otherwise have stayed in that community based on actual deliveries in the 1980-81 crop year. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the Crow rate in perpetuity as presently guaranteed by statutes, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of residents of Landis, Wilkie, Unity and Luseland in Saskatchewan.

The petition humbly sheweth that:

Whereas western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year.

That this contributed $6.3 to the balance of trade of Canada.

Whereas the undersigned believe that this is a fair contribution to the Canadian economy.

And whereas western farmers will pay one times Crow.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly call upon Parliament to maintain the present grain Crow rate.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition from the residents of Asquith, Saskatchewan, named, of course, after the late Liberal Prime Minister who did not believe in pushing things down people's throats.

The petitioners say that western Canadian farmers paid $131 million to move export grain under the Crow freight rate in the 1981-82 crop year; that the grain in turn contributed $6.3 billion to the balance of trade; that the undersigned believe that this is the farmers' fair contribution to the Canadian economy; and that the western farmers will pay one times the Crow rate, that is, no change. Wherefore these petitioners, all 36 of them, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the present statutory grain rate, that is, the Crow rate, and they are duty bound in petitioning this House.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to present a petition mostly on behalf of constituents in the Swan River area of my riding who now exercise their right to present a grievance and humbly sheweth that the removal of the Crow rate will see its replacement by rates that will impose higher freight costs of five times the present Crow rate and higher by 1990; that such increases are being imposed at a time when prices for producers' grain are now at the 1974 level; and that detailed calculations show that a rate of 5.1 times the Crow rate will cost the community of Swan River some $1,187,000 in payments for grain freight that would have otherwise stayed in that community based on the deliveries that were actually made in the 1980-81 crop year. Wherefore the undersigned, your petioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain the Crow rate in perpetuity as presently guaranteed by statute.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-151 now before the House seeks to provide the Government with authority to borrow $14.7 billion. That money is needed because, as has been the case from the time the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office 15 years ago, the Government's uncontrolled expenditures have greatly exceeded its revenues. Indeed, this is the seventh time in the current session that the Government has had to come to Parliament, cap in hand, for additional borrowing authority.

The implications for the Canadian economy of such massive borrowing by the federal Government are as harmful as they are far reaching. The main problem for the Atlantic Provinces is that in the years ahead exorbitantly high interest payments on the national debt will leave little budgetary room for stimulative measures designed to resuscitate the crippled economy of the region.

In particular, I ask how the Government will find the $500 million that the Kirby Report says is needed for a complete restructuring of the Atlantic fishery. Clearly the state of the fishery on the East Coast is the single most urgent problem faced by the four Atlantic Provinces since World War II. Unless it is resolved, we in the Atlantic Provinces, all four Provinces alike, will continue to be forced to be wards of the federal Government, reduced to living from hand to mouth on the strength of transfer payments to provincial Governments and individuals.

Throughout the Atlantic region, the fishery has a potential work force of something like 100,000 people, about half engaged in the fish processing plants and the other half engaged in the actual catch. Much of the potential, however, is not being realized because the industry is literally on its knees. The fishing season is upon us and a black cloud hangs over those trying to eke out a meagre living from what was once a thriving concern.

The immediate challenge, of course, is to rationalize the small handful of major fish plants that employ the bulk of the 50,000 workers in the fish processing part of the industry. For example, H. B. Nickerson and Sons Ltd., which is of vital importance to Prince Edward Island because of its Georgetown Seafoods plant, at one point had a work force of some 10,000 people. In fact, in Georgetown alone, in that one plant, some 300 full-time jobs were eliminated when the doors were closed in the Fall of 1982. When part-time workers are taken into account, as many as 570 jobs were at stake.

I have been pleading with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) and the Government as a whole to help revive Georgetown Seafoods. But those pleas have fallen largely on deaf ears.

• (1530)

Now I would be the first to admit, Sir, that the plant's problems cannot be resolved, cannot be dealt with or addressed, and should not be, in isolation from any over-all strategy for the Atlantic fishery. By the same token, however, the plant's difficulties should not be totally ignored while a broader solution is being pursued. In fact, the major obstacle to the reopening of Georgetown Seafoods is the lack of high quality fish supplies required for processing and for making the plant profitable. Only a more generous fish quota from the federal Government—and the federal Government is the one with authority in this respect—is keeping Georgetown Seafoods from once more playing an important role in the Island's economy. But in response to overtures from myself and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass), and from the P.E.I. Government for such increased access to fish supplies in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) has stubbornly refused even to consider the proposal, arguing that it would dislocate supplies in other parts of the Atlantic region, especially in the Province of Nova Scotia. The Minister's concern is grossly misplaced, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that any assured fish quota for the Georgetown Seafoods plant, even if it involved a transfer of licences from Nickerson's to another operator, would not necessarily jeopardize fish supplies elsewhere in the region.

The Atlantic fishery, Sir, is on its knees. Fish processing plants are closing all over the region. Consequently, there is an oversupply of fish for procesing purposes. The Government has had the Kirby Report in its hands for many months, well beyond the point when it could justify procrastination and delay. The report was publicly released on February 17. The Deputy Prime Minister told me in the House, in Oral Question Period, on April 29, that the Government concurred with virtually all of Mr. Kirby's recommendations, including presumably those relating to the restructuring of the fish processing plants. If that is the case, why is action being delayed? Surely there has been ample time to consult with all concerned, among them the companies themselves, the banks, the respective provincial Governments and the workers.

If the fishery were instead located in Ontario and Quebec, central Canada in general, action would long since have been taken. The Government has hinted broadly that it may not be able to afford a master plan for the fishery in the current fiscal year, but it was able to come up with $200 million out of thin air within 24 hours to save what little was left of the reputation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in order to patch up the celebrated budgetary leak a few weeks ago. Why could that money not have been spent instead on the Atlantic fishery? The budget provides some money, I grant you that, to the fishery under general categories like Special Recovery Capital Projects. But as Mr. Kirby has rightly pointed out, what is needed is not a few dollars here and a few dollars there for a wharf or a vessel here or there or wherever; a total strategy designed to rebuild the fishery from the ground up is what is required. I urge the Government to recognize the fact and get on with the job.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that the task will be costly. On the other hand, the cost of not acting now in terms of lost output, lost wages and lost taxes on earned income would be even greater. If the federal Government still refuses to act, it should step aside and let someone else do the job. That is a message, Sir, which I think the Atlantic Provinces will doubtless send to Ottawa in the next federal election.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I enter this debate this afternoon, albeit for only ten minutes, on Bill C-151, an act respecting borrowing authority. In this Bill the Government is asking for a total of $14.7 billion. It used to be that we would talk around here in terms of "well, what's a million?" Today the buzz words are "what's a billion?" We all know that the cost of running a government and the country has increased substantially, but we on this side of the House constantly wonder whether or not those funds are being wisely spent.

This afternoon I would like to address very briefly one aspect of Government expenditure, that of national defence, and more specifically, the defence of our most northern reaches, the high Arctic. The reason I have chosen to zero in on this specific aspect of Government spending and the woefully inadequate aspect of Government expenditures for our defence in the far North is that I recently returned from a 13,000 kilometre trip in the High Arctic along with other Members of this House and European deputies and Members of Parliament who are members also of the North Atlantic Assembly. I was absolutely shocked to learn of the woefully inadequate defences that our country actually has in the far North when one considers the Soviet Union encompasses the whole eastern and far northern part of the High Arctic. I am not going to give a brief sabre rattling speech, but I just want to give you a few facts and statistics. Believe me, our European friends were more shocked than we were when we discovered some of the following figures and facts.

To begin with, the Government is at present engaged in negotiating the purchase of several hundred F-18A jet fighters. I do not know why this country is involved in the purchase of jet fighters. We no longer have a raison d'être, as it were, to be in that phase of defence or offence should a war occur, except in a very limited capacity in Europe within the NATO umbrella. But in North America we are dealing with ICBMs, and the Russians would have to have rocks in their heads to send manned bombers over the Arctic ice cap to bomb North America. I notice some of my Liberal friends are getting a little excited over there. They are still thinking in terms of the 1950s. Those jet fighters are going to cost us at least $5.5 billion. They will be totally useless for Arctic patrol. They cannot go any distance at all, whether it is in the High Arctic or in Europe. In the High Arctic there is no place for them to land. There are only three airfields in the entire far North, and I am speaking of well above the 60th parallel. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is $5.5 billion for a useless jet plane which cannot be used to defend our own country. I am not talking about NATO or the European theatre.

What have the Soviets got? They have six divisions, 400 warships and 600 aeroplanes, mainly for reconnaissance and surveillance. Against that, Mr. Speaker, we have a junior ranking general at the brigadier level. We have the grand total of 75 people attached to National Defence in the High Arctic, of whom 42 are civilians. The rest are professional soldiers. In addition to that, we have several hundred Inuit and Indian scouts on a part-time basis. They perform a very valuable service in search and rescue, but really, as a fighting unit, with all due respect, they cannot be considered professional soldiers. Our Air Force in the far North consists of two planes, both of them Twin Otters, one of them seconded from the RCMP. Again, facing us across the polar ice cap: six Soviet divisions, 400 warships and 600 fighter airplanes.

The other aspect of our woefully undefended High Arctic is, of course, our relations with the United States. No one is anticipating an invasion from United States, granted. However, from an economic point of view and from the point of view of maintaining our sovereignty, it was not until 1969 that we even attempted to prove to the United States that we in fact controlled our High Arctic up to and including the North Pole and the polar ice cap. It is so bad, we learned from our military advisers in Yellowknife, that the Americans send their nuclear powered submarines through our territorial waters, under the polar ice cap, and when they return to the U.S. bases, only then do we give them permission for the journey that they have already made. This means that the Americans do not respect the longitudinal line that geographically divides the Yukon from Alaska as it is extended to the polar ice cap.

The reason the Americans refuse to accept this line and de facto, in effect, refuse to accept our sovereignty over the high North or the High Arctic is that the Prudhoe oil well basin comes down in a southeasterly direction and it does not extend in a northwesterly direction. The Americans know that much of that oil may very well fall under Canadian jurisdiction. So, for the time being, militarily, as a first step, the Americans are refusing to recognize the extension of the Yukon-Alaska border to the North Pole. Economically, that will of course be extremely important to Canada if and when we strike oil in the Beaufort Sea.

The Government is requesting $14.7 billion more, to borrow most of its money on the open market, I presume, and is proposing to spend at least $5.5 billion on the F-18A jet-fighter, which is of virtually no tactical use in North America in view of the fact that the Americans already have a massive interceptory jet-fighter presence in the United States, and in view of the fact that if the Soviets should attack Canada and the continental United States, it will not be from manned bombers of 1955 vintage but, rather, with ICBMs.

I really question the wisdom of borrowing $5.5 billion. Indeed, by the time we receive delivery of these planes, the capabilities and, in fact, safety of which are extremely questionable at the present time, the figure might well reach $7 billion or $8 billion, which would be half the $14.7 billion which Bill C-151 is asking the House to give the Government authority to borrow. In the next three or four years, half of that amount could conceivably go toward a jet-fighter which we do not need, which is, tactically speaking, unnecessary in this part of the world. We all know very well that the Government should be spending money on reconnaissance and surveillance, hardware in the form of reconnaissance and surveillance planes and sea-based craft, such as submarines. That is our role within NORAD and within the purview of our own defence. It is not to spend $5 billion to $8 billion on jet-fighters when, at the present time, we have 75 military personnel in the North, two Twin-Otter planes, one of which is seconded to us from the RCMP, and a few Inuit and Indians attempting to scout for us, mainly in the area of search and rescue.

Therefore, on the one hand, in conventional surveillance and reconnaissance, we are woefully inadequate in the North, and on the other hand, the Government is proposing to waste $5 billion to $8 billion on tactical jet-fighters which we do not need and which cannot be deployed in the High Arctic.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that my allotted time has expired, and I appreciate the opportunity to make this intervention.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply distressed, as I am sure many Canadians are also, that the Government has once again come forth to borrow more money, this time under the authority of Bill C-151, with very little thought given to the fact that the money must be squeezed out of the already hard-pressed Canadian taxpayers. To date, the Government has come to Parliament an unprecedented seven times in this session to ask Parliament for more and more money. In fiscal year 1982-83 alone, the Government came to Parliament four times to seek more and more money. At present, the Government already has borrowing authority for this fiscal year, 1983-84, for $16 billion.

Bill C-143 provided for $14 billion to be granted for fiscal year 1983-84, and for an extra $2 billion, which was slated for last year, to be carried over into this year. All in all, some $16 billion was already earmarked for the present fiscal year. Now, based on the Government's financial requirements of $26.7 billion, and existing borrowing authority of $16 billion which I just mentioned, the Government requires some $10.7 billion in additional borrowing authority for this year. However, the Bill which we are asked to pass is requesting $14.7 billion in new money, $4 billion more than is indicated by the national requirements of the $26.7 billion. Of this amount, it has been estimated that $2 billion does not have to be used this year, and may be carried forward into the future. What this really boils down to is that the Government not only has a cushion of $2 billion for this year, but it has also arranged for itself a further cushion of $2 billion to be used in any year.

I would also like to point out that there is really no urgency to the passage of this Bill, because the Government already has $16 billion in borrowing authority, as I have already indicated, which is more than enough to last for several months.

Spending taxpayer's dollars without due attention to priority by the Government, or by any person, is an act of irresponsibility and a violation of trust which should never be condoned. Further, the Government does not even follow its own guidelines of six and five, because spending for this year alone will be up some 12 per cent. What is even more calamitous is that spending by the Government has risen from 21 per cent of the Gross National Product four years ago to 26 per cent. When one adds all of this up, including the spending of all the provincial and municipal Governments across Canada, this figure is dangerously close to 50 per cent of the Gross National Product. When one takes into comparative consideration the figures for the United States of approximately 35 per cent to 36 per cent of their Gross National Product, one can readily see that the total public spending in Canada is completely out of hand, to the detriment of the private enterprise system which is being financially drained of its capacity to produce jobs and to increase production.

To emphasize this point further, in 1982, borrowing by the federal Government accounted for 51 per cent of all new security issues placed in Canada. Borrowing of that magnitude has a marked effect on the supply and demand for money and on the interest rates, again to the detriment of private enterprise. To make matters worse, the budget points to little by way of deficit reduction over the next four years. If this keeps up, there is no question but that the deficit will be in excess of $25 billion for each of the next four years.

The gross debt of the Government has risen from $134 billion as of March 31, 1982, to between $160 billion to $165 billion by March 31 of this year. However, this does not include the debts of the 306 Crown corporations and the money that is owed by Governments to the various pension funds. All in all, when everything is taken into consideration, the true debt of the Government is a staggering $262 billion to $265 billion, which works out to just about $11,000 for every man, woman and child in Canada.

I would ask, Mr. Speaker, what has happened to common sense? The taxpayers' pockets are not bottomless pits. There must be an end to this terrible injustice done to the people of Canada. What has happened to a responsible Government and to responsible spending by Governments in Canada? I believe that all Governments must come down from cloud nine and face the realities of this nation.

• (1550)

I would also suggest that Ottawa in itself is a very poor example of what makes up Canada. I would suggest that the decision makers in this capital come down from their ivory towers, get out of Ottawa, and face the real Canada of two million unemployed, the real Canada of continuing high interest rates, the real Canada of people living on relief through no fault of their own and living on a subsistence allowance which is often less than what some bureaucrats charge to their expense accounts for an evening out on the town entertaining at Government expense.

That is the real Canada about which many people living in Ottawa know nothing and about which some care even less. Yet the Government ignores these realities and extracts more and more money from the taxpayers for more and more questionable spending.

I have no quarrel with productive and necessary spending on such things as old age pensions, medicare, hospitalization and other similar worth-while projects. I fully support those, but I draw the line at some questionable spending that has been going on. I have listed just a few examples that highlight the magnitude of these expenditures and provide instances of questionable spending on the part of the Government. I have drawn these examples from several sources including the annual reports from the Auditor General, Order Paper questions, newspaper articles and the Estimates.

We all know that bureaucrats have a reputation for being paper pushers. In 1981, the Department of Supply and Services purchased 12,600 metric tonnes of office paper at a cost of $17 million. That works out to roughly 90 pounds of office paper per public servant. Between March 1, 1980, and May 31, 1981, the Government gave out $3.5 million in taxi fares. The largest single bill from any Government Department was perhaps appropriately from Transport Canada, amounting to $422,000. At current Ottawa taxi rates of approximately $1.20 per mile, this is enough to go around the world about 100 times.

In fiscal year 1981-82, eleven Government Departments spent a total of $10.4 million on hospitality which includes food, booze and entertainment. That is the equivalent of 700,000 bottles of liquor. It is also only the tip of the iceberg since it only includes contracted hospitality where the total bill of a Department was greater than $25,000.

Between April 1, 1980 and June 30, 1981, the federal Government spent $674,972 to supply public servants with briefcases. Surely Government employees are paid enough to buy their own briefcases.

With the full blessing and knowledge of the CMHC President, CMHC paid $15,000 to defray the travel costs of employees participating in a staff hockey tournament in Toronto.

In February of 1981, the CNR spent $64,244 to purchase advertising space for wishing the CPR, its chief competitor, a happy birthday.

In 1978-79, the cost to CIDA of late and damaged food shipments was $1.5 million. To date, spending by the federal Government on the metric conversion program exceeds $65 million. Last year alone the Metric Commission spent $12.4 million.

During the 1981 postal strike the Metric Commission spent $12 to send a 14-page metric cookbook by air courier to a Winnipeg woman. In 1981, two TV chefs—Bruno Gerussi and Madame Benoit—were given a six-week TV contract worth $110,000 to promote metric cooking. This list goes on and on.

On the day that the Post Office became a Crown corporation, the Government helped employees celebrate by providing $300,000 of taxpayers' money for free coffee, doughnuts and souvenir envelopes.

In July, 1981, the Post Office spent $200,000 to run advertisements in 39 newspapers and publications to tell Canadians that postal service will improve in the future. One would think that improved service would speak for itself.

Janet Smith, an assistant secretary to the Cabinet, was sent to Nice in southern France for four months to learn French. The cost to the taxpayer of this Riviera education was $12,000 plus Ms. Smith's salary which is in the range of $60,000 to $70,000 per year. I can go on and on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, it seems like a long time ago but once there was some real economic growth and progress in this country. It now seems that we are spending more of our time in this Parliament in an ironic kind of situation where the only real activity in this country is unemployment and its related spin-offs. It has become something of a growth industry.

The borrowing Bill we are dealing with today has the title "The Borrowing Authority Act, 1983-84 (No. 2)". That is appropriate because it is only a few weeks ago since we discussed Bill C-143 under which the Government borrowed a substantial amount of money. But that does not begin to tell the story.

I believe that the people of Canada should know that this Government has come to Parliament seven times in this session to ask for more borrowing authority. In the fiscal year 1982-83 alone the Government has come to Parliament, cap in hand, four times to seek borrowing authority.

As other Members have said, it is absolutely imperative that we keep the federal programs involving social and other essential services for our country funded. It is becoming equally evident that we cannot go on bleeding to death from wasted expenditures, some of which previous Members have outlined.

I wish to talk about another area of great expenditure which was not touched upon by the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) or the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges). In this year's Estimates, $2.5 billion is projected for professional and special services, which is for consultants for the most part. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that ten years ago the figure for professional and special services was $700 million. That was a figure that many of us, specifically those from Atlantic Canada, thought rather excessive at that time. It has now more than tripled to $2.5 billion.

The Public Service has grown enormously as well. I ask Members of the Government: why do we need both? Do we not have a very large and capable Public Service? If so, why must we spend over $2.5 billion to back it up with consultants' reports? Is this not, rather, another convenient tool for patronage?

The Minister responsible for CMHC—who holds my old portfolio which I occupied for a few months—conceded to me in a letter recently that no less than 25 different consultants were used to try to set up a mortgage portfolio management system which the Minister has now concluded cost $24 million. I still maintain that it cost a lot more than that.

I have a list of these consultants. I would like to read them into the record but that would take too long. Let the record simply show that all 25 are in this list. Again, I believe that there were probably more than 25 consultants used when one learns the whole story.

We are also disturbed by the way money is wasted, even under the guise of worth-while projects. I can talk about our own region of Atlantic Canada, Mr. Speaker. The replacement of the old ferry Abegwait, which has been probably taken in the past from Borden, P.E.I. to Tormentine, N.B. cost $100 million. It is beyond any shadow of a doubt that CN Marine needlessly spent about $100 million. The old vessel was quite good and seaworthy and, in many ways, a better vessel than the new one of the same name. If $2 million or $3 million were spent on that vessel it would have provided good service for another ten years. Just think of what we could have done with that kind of saved money in Atlantic Canada.

Of course I could go on for hours relating such horror stories. In passing let me mention another story to which allusion has been made today. It is the $125 million spent on a project of which the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) is very familiar since he was very instrumental in it, the celebrated Consolidated Computer debacle. In that case $125 million of taxpayers' money went right down the drain.

While it is not particularly positive, I would like to trace how our image in the world has gone down as our economic capabilities have declined. There was an interesting feature in a recent issue of Time magazine which described how our influence in the United Nations has become that of a bit player. We now have a walk-on part, when Canada once had an influence that was disproportionate to our population, disproportionate because we had the capability, the respect and the capacity to do great things on the world scene. What has happened to us since 1968? Canada's position has declined steadily. Anyone who wants to look at the OECD statistics—you need not believe me—will see that right now Canada is last in terms of the industrialized nations of the West. Why has this occurred? I think it has occurred largely because of economic mismanagement. The results of that economic mismanagement we see here today. The Government wants more and it has to come to Parliament to borrow money which, as the previous speaker said, is not really needed. If this Bill goes through, the Government will have an extra $2 billion to play with, almost as much as the Government is going to spend on professional and special services this year. This is very bad for economic development. I do not understand why this Government continues to abuse the priorities that made this country great.

• (1600)

The Hon. Member for Brant in his previous speech pointed out the ridiculous situation that exists in our North, one of the greatest storehouses of wealth, treasure and pride that any country in the world could possibly have. But we cannot even patrol it. We are reduced to using native people, who have the skills to be trackers, to provide the kinds of services which other nations have provided by military means, electronic surveillance and things like that. We are reduced to almost frontier Daniel Boone or Davy Crockett techniques in the twentieth century to patrol our own North. We do not have the money to improve the situation. Even the wealthiest nation in the world, the United States with its large internal market, has made some tough choices. By contrast, countries like ours which have placed their faith in unrestrained deficit spending and socialist policies are having extreme problems. We do not have to look very far to see the results.

Recently the great nation of France elected a socialist government. Now its President, President Mitterrand, is reaping the benefits of his particular socialist policies, which have a startling resemblance to the policies this Government has been prescribing for our country. François Mitterrand came into power on the basis that France was going to spend its way to prosperity. What does France have now? It has monetary and currency controls, and the freedom of French citizens to take vacations has been curtailed. There are riots in the streets and there is talk about some of their more radical elements beseiging Parliament.

Let us take a look at Michael Foote, the Opposition leader in the United Kingdom. He has espoused all sorts of socialist policies, again similar to the policies which this Liberal Government, under the guise of asking free enterprise to be the engine of economic recovery, is foisting off on this country. What has happened in Great Britain? The Prime Minister, Mrs. Thatcher, has made hard choices for the U.K. She has reduced inflation and put a sense of pride and priority back in that nation. She is ahead in the public opinion polls by an unprecedented lead as the British approach their upcoming election. The socialist opposition is once more having difficulty and obviously will go down to defeat.

Why cannot Canada learn from the experiences of our neighbours? I cannot understand why not. I know it is trite in this House to quote cliches and homilies from the past, even though I maintain it is useful, Sir, but if they did not have some intrinsic value they would not have survived.

Let me put a few passages on the record from the statements of a great American president, Abraham Lincoln. He has been noted in the past for uttering the odd word of wisdom. Some of his prescriptions for national development are as follows:

> You cannot bring about prosperity by discouraging thrift. You cannot help the wage earner by pulling down the wage payer. You cannot establish sounder security on borrowed money. You cannot keep out of trouble by spending more than you earn.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that you are signalling to tell me that my allotted time has expired. That is a pity because I would have liked to have put more of Abraham Lincoln's philosophy on the record. Certainly my friends opposite would benefit from reading them.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I am especially pleased to follow the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) in this debate. Many things that affect his contituency also affect mine. We are neighbours and we attempt to work together over and over again to be of assistance to the constituents of northern Nova Scotia. One of the facts of life, as I see it, as much as I object to this borrowing Bill, is the gigantic sums of money that will be taken out of the free market system. This will do two things. First, it will take away money that could be used by free enterprise to inject the economy in a productive way and to provide the employment required that we do not have. Second, there is a real danger that interest rates which have slowly declined are going to escalate once more because of the tremendous interference in the money markets by the central Government. This takes away potential funds that would be available at more sensible interest rates to small business and medium sized business, the real effective backbone of this country. These business people are the people who produce the jobs that would eliminate the unemployment problem facing us today.

Right now we have an unprecedented rate at which home building grants have been requested. This has happened because of lower interest rates and because of a re-evaluation by the Canadian public which has created new confidence. Instead of the Government using additional funds to assist those new home owners to build the homes that will provide the jobs—the home building industry is the best indicator of the degree of prosperity that will exist—what does the Government do? Because of its intransigence and insensitivity to the individual Canadian, no more funds are available. Indeed, for a period of time the Government initially said it would. Assistance to prospective new home owners and the home building industry would be the greatest single stimulus we have to help this nation pull out of this recession. We do not have that.

In Atlantic Canada, the Maritimes and in many parts of Quebec we are still in a very deep recession. The one thing I have found out in the time I have served in this House is that even when we are coming out of a recession we, in Atlantic Canada, experience it last. Usually we need an extra degree of stimulation to catch up with the rest of the country that starts enjoying the new prosperity that happens following a recession.

One of the sad things about this Government and its insensitivity to our part of Canada is that we see no new capital works projects of any significance. We had the Minister from Nova Scotia, the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) come to Halifax. Rather than trying to produce some industrial infrastructure for Halifax to stimulate the building of new industry, what does he do? He announces that he is going to build another office building to interfere with the private sector. If additional office space is required in Halifax, the private sector will produce it.

Mr. MacKay: Right.

Mr. Coates: But what does the Minister say? He says, "We are going to build a new office building". This is to be built on a piece of land which the federal Government does not even own. In other words, the federal Government is trying to take a piece of land from the provincial Government that could be used for industrial purposes to put up an office building which will be in competition with office building owners in the private sector who would be quite willing and able to produce new office space, if that is what is required. That is the insensitivity of this Government to our area and the difficulties we face.

• (1610)

The Government wants to take money out of the money market and run a deficit in excess of the six and five it is asking public servants to accept over a two year period as increases in their incomes. The new spending estimates for this year are running something like the 11 per cent in one year that the Government is asking public servants to accept as increases in their salaries over two years. Members of the House of Commons are faced with a situation where they are not in a position to give their office staff even a 1 per cent increase because of the passage of the Bill which put the six and five in place. Some people wonder why there is bad morale on Parliament Hill. The Government's insensitivity to the people who work here is the best example.

We hear talk about the things the Government will do for our areas. At the same time we are facing a cut in the transportation subsidy available to our businessmen upon whom the Government relied to move their products to central Canada. What will the Government do with that subsidy? It will cut it by 10 per cent. It will try to eliminate it altogether and put us in the position where we were after World War I when we were nothing more than the captive market of central Canada.

I say to western Members of Parliament, who are now thinking about allowing the Government to do something with the Crowsnest Pass rate, to use Atlantic Canada as an example of what happens when one gives away something that is one's birthright, as were the Maritime freight rates to Atlantic Canada. What happened? We found out that the Government sold us a bill of goods, and just when things started to happen, it pulled the rug out from under us. I say to western Members that the Crow rates are a birthright of the people of western Canada. Canadians gave tremendous advantages to the railways of the country which made CP one of the largest multinational companies in the world. I say that we should let the railways work under the Crowsnest Pass rate from here to eternity. I say to western Canadians that they should never give away what they have to bureaucrats, especially to Government Members across the way who will tell them one thing today and something else tomorrow.

The Crow rates should be protected. Every Member of the House, regardless of where he comes from, should tell the railways to work out some other scheme. I say to the Government that if the railways figure they are being shortchanged by the Crow rate, they should work out a scheme whereby they can present evidence to Canadians that they are not being paid the equivalent of the difference between the Crowsnest Pass rates and their actual costs. Also I say that they should pay them out of the general revenues of Canada but keep on the statute books forever the Crowsnest Pass rates. It was a special deal given to western Canadians. It was to entice people to go to western Canada, to entice people to farm and to grow wheat and other grains in western Canada. That is what made our country great today. I ask Members from western Canada to stand firm and fight against any tinkering with these rates. If they do not, they will get the same double deal as we in Atlantic Canada got as far as the Maritime Freight Rates Act was concerned. Tomorrow they will discover that they are not able to sell their wheat because the federal Government has shoved up the prices of wheat so that we are no longer competitive with the other great wheat growing nations of the world.

Those are just some of my concerns about this borrowing Bill and some of the ways in which I think we might be able to do something that would be advantageous to the people of Canada, especially the people of Atlantic Canada.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Ships and Shipping—Protest against use of foreign-owned vessel on Atlantic coast; the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields)—Western Grain Transport Act—Report of Prime Minister's statements. (b) Position of Prime Minister; the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell)—Income Tax—Deductions for child care expenses. (b) Request that tax credit replace current provision.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to put a few remarks on the record regarding another proposed borrowing by the Government. I think most Members of the House are aware of the rather unusual and somewhat immoral borrowing practices of the group across the floor. With Bill C-111 just less than a year ago, the Liberals borrowed $6.6 billion. With Bill C-125 last July, they borrowed another $7 billion. With Bill C-128 they borrowed another $4 billion in November. Will Bill C-143 they borrowed another $19 billion just over a month ago. Now they come before the House to borrow another $14.7 billion. This accounts, in just 11 months, for $51.3 billion. I think the House should look quite carefully at the matter this time. The Government comes before us with $16 billion in borrowing authority still available to it.

According to its budget, which was brought down only a few weeks ago, it estimated a $26.7 billion deficit. The amount proposed here, combined with the existing borrowing authority which is still available, means that the amount of deficit listed in the budget will be exceeded by an additional $4 billion. Once these kinds of amounts are being borrowed ahead of time and we have bureaucrats from the Department of Finance telling the public that they are just for a contingency fund, we have to start informing Canadians and looking inside ourselves to see just what exactly is the Government's plan. Some people say that it is patronage. Some people say that it is slush. Some people say that it is a pork barrel. But the Government's own record demonstrates its inability to spend the dollars of Canadian taxpayers appropriately.

I would like to put a few examples of this on the record. A recent one was Consolidated Computer with $100 million down the tube. There has never been a proper parliamentary investigation into it. It has never really been revealed as to who in the chain of command was responsible or the kinds of firings that would be appropriate. Then we had Candu. I am glad to see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) in the House. We know that the Candu program is running into continued rough times. It is continuing to write off more than $100 million per year just on its heavy water production. Our recent customer, of course, is Argentina. Its head of state is on record as publicly saying that he wants the Candu reactor program to continue so that Argentina can make atomic weapons, perhaps to use against Great Britain or even against Canada. Who knows whether or not we would be drawn into the Falklands conflict?

The Cruise is another example of where the Government has gone to seed. The majority of Canadian public opinion is opposed to it, but because of some desire to have more credible links with the White House and the Pentagon, the Government is dragging us along on that. As the former speaker mentioned, now there is the proposed Crow change where the Government, through the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), is trying to describe the position of the New Democratic Party as reactionary. Of course we have some concern about the position of the Tories on this. We have some Tories who are for it and some who are against it. It should be clear that what is being proposed by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Transport will certainly not help farmers on the Prairies. The Minister of Agriculture knows that by 1990 it will take at least $1 billion out of the farming communities on the Prairies. These are dollars which will simply not stay there. These are dollars which will not go into the purchase of new machinery or new equipment. These are dollars that will not go in the form of municipal taxes for road upgrading, so everybody has to rubberhaul and so on. Yet Government Members, the few it has who will travel west of Ontario, are saying that the NDP position is reactionary and will stop the movement of all kinds of commodities.

The fact of the matter is that we have proposed the only sensible way to deal with any kind of rail line upgrading, that is, to pay the difference between the Crow and the real costs to the railroads for grain and other commodity movement to their point of exit from Canada and to take Canadian tax dollars to pay for the actual upgrading. However, to change the Crow is ridiculous. That is the sleeper in that Bill, along with the sleeper on the Dominion coal blocs.

I am not going to spend a lot of time speaking on the record of the Liberals because they will not be the Government very much longer. I am worried that there may be a minority Tory Government and we will have some trouble keeping them in line. Perhaps Canadians will come to their senses and elect the NDP in the next federal election. Perhaps they will do so as a result of a few of the remarks I want to make. We do not get to hear any Liberals speaking in the House. They rely on their flacks and hacks upstairs with the machinery to put the glint on everything and then put it out on the street and try and make it saleable. The Party is so unsalvageable now, the flacks and hacks are beginning to head for cover knowing there will be a change in Government fairly soon.

The Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) made some interesting comments. He said the Government of France is in great difficulty because it is a socialist government. What he tried to focus on in that case was exchange controls, particularly related to people travelling outside the country on holiday. The Hon. Member for Central Nova should recall, since he likes to rely so frequently and heavily on Americans, that his idealogical predecessors, Richard Nixon and Lyndon Johnson, brought in exchange controls in the United States, something the Tories do not like to talk about too often.

I want to deal with the relevance of his argument with regard to Margaret Thatcher's lead in the polls. That is because of the way she is taking food out of the mouths of children. Many people in this world are aware of that kind of reactionary politics of taking milk money away from families with school-aged children who cannot afford to provide milk for their children. That is where a pretty good chunk of the funds in terms of cutting those kinds of social programs came from for Mrs. Thatcher and her Party. I seriously hope that the Brits show a little more sense in the coming election than to re-elect the "iron lady" who has laid all over the working people in that country.

I would like to talk about what I see as the main difficulty with the Liberal-Tory policy. I think the Liberals waste more than the Tories would, but it is hard to know because we have not had a chance to observe them in action for more than two decades. The Liberals have a tendency to throw money at things rather than having any kind of industrial plan or a plan that involves the workers and small business people. The Tories are always saying that if you only give private enterprise a chance, away it will go. An example of free enterprise failing to operate is B.C. Timber in my area. Prince Rupert was shut down. The operations in Terrace were shut down, as well as The Nass, Kitwanga and over into the Hazeltons where Rim Products is still down.

What does the Government come in with? The Tories say to leave them alone, they will come back to life, don't worry about the fact that all these communities are dying. That is what you get with free enterprise, a lot of dead communities all over the place. What do the Liberals do? They use a new kind of right-to-work legislation which is called NEED, FLIP, JET, all Government programs that are supposed to salvage the communities. They are, of course, short-term. They get everybody up on their feet again. They really are right-to-work. However, what it does is effectively to lower the wages being paid to those working on these sites. It effectively destroys the concept of collective bargaining, or at least makes it much more difficult in many of those communities where literally thousands of workers are out because of this "free enterprise".

I want to say that this is another sleazy attempt by the Government to borrow money when it does not even need the money. It still has $16 billion. It wants to slip this through so that if it has to go to a quick election in the Fall, it will have a little bit of pork to throw around.

It is about time there was some kind of intelligent approach to expenditures. There should be a certain amount of statutory expenditures for social programs, and all Parties should work to keep those safety nets and social programs in place. The important money should be put forward to encourage co-ops, worker-owned and operated industries. We have seen the problems private enterprise gets into when it does not go out and find adequate markets, as with B.C. Timber. It should be going into panel board, chipboard, paper, furniture and other items. That will only come if the local communities are given the opportunity and some support, technical, R and D and financial, to re-tool and re-finance those industries to make them locally owned.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on Bill C-151. It brings back memories of the Liberal platform in the 1980 election. They were going to be all things to all people. What have we seen? They asked the people for their confidence, that they will lead them to the Promised Land, and everything else. This is a complete reversal. It has been nothing but downhill and borrowing all the way.

This budget, were it tabled when the polls showed the Liberals in an advantageous electoral position, would be called an election budget. This borrowing authority Bill will provide the pork barrel, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) used to finance the next election, whenever it comes. I want to say this: the people will not be fooled as easily as they were before.

I will deal with the summer student program because it affects my riding to a great extent. There was an allocation of a further $70 million in addition to the $170 million already allocated to try to beef up the unemployment situation with respect to students across Canada. In my constituency of Victoria-Haliburton, last year we received $151,876 in funds for this program. The formula devised for the allocation of funds this year was based on a survey of the student surplus rate in each constituency. This survey, taken last summer, indicated that only 358 students were unemployed in my riding. I am not sure who did the survey, but I can assure Hon. Members that that figure bears no relation to reality. The method used in conducting the survey varies from riding to riding.

There was a great discrepancy with regard to rural ridings. My riding is 150 miles east and west and close to 150 north and south. There is a manpower Outreach office in Haliburton, a manpower office in Peterborough, one in Lindsay, one in Oshawa and one in Newmarket. Students in rural Ontario do not have the facilities nor the funds to travel to the manpower offices. They know perfectly well that there is no work for them. Why should they travel 100 or more miles to a manpower office to be told, "We will take your name and if something comes up, we will let you know"? This formula was wrong for determining the number of students unemployed in a riding such as mine.

I have appealed the additional allocation of only $4,194 to the Minister, but as yet I have not had a reply. It is unbelievable that neighbouring constituencies have received thousands of additional dollars. Why is that? They are close to a manpower office. There is no problem for the students there to register. It is a totally different situation from the one in my riding.

If this survey is upheld, the additional funding in the budget will not be seen in my riding, even though we have applications this year for well over $500,000 on an allocation of only $156,100. Obviously, judging by these figures, the additional $4,000 funding is welcome and is most needed, but it will be only a drop in the bucket. The $100 million allocated to the Farm Credit Corporation will be helpful only to a few farmers, those who are really in distress. When you realize the depth to which farmers are in debt, you quickly see that $100 million will not go very far in this day and age. The change in loss carry-over rules will help the struggling farmer, but it will do little to help those who are in dire straits and cannot get any of this $100 million. The expansion of the role of the Federal Business Development Bank may or may not be of assistance to farmers. Details in the budget are quite sketchy as to exactly how the role of the Federal Business Development Bank may be expanded.

I want to say something about Government institutions and how their employees treat farmers. I may say that I personally have experienced this treatment when speaking on behalf of my constituents to some of the managers of the Federal Business Development Bank. I want to tell you at this time, Mr. Speaker, that their attitude was less than co-operative, and yet these civil servants are there to serve the people. Their attitude could be a little better, and I have been very disappointed especially by the attitude of one manager whom I personally contacted on behalf of a very sincere, dedicated business within the farming community. I was more or less told that the affair was none of my business, but this businessman eventually got the money. I do not want to go into detail about how he received the money, but he received the money from the Federal Business Development Bank. There probably was a change in the people who were dealing with his specific application. Now, this should not happen. This did not happen on only one occasion, and I think that this is something that the Minister in charge should probably look into. This is just not the way people should be treated when they go to a Government office.

The Government's intention to remove the Canadian ownership special charge in respect of companies was merely a formality. I do not think that anyone expected the Government to remove this tax even after Petrofina and Dome had been paid for. It is, however, an additional tax that was originally to have been of limited duration. Yet another new 6 per cent tax has been added on probably in order to pay for cable TV and Pay TV.

Related to what I said a few moments ago regarding Dome and Petrofina, let us look at the gasoline tax situation. Approximately a week ago, we in Ontario saw a gasoline price war. Gasoline was selling for 25.6 cents per litre. The price of gasoline went down as low as 24.6 cents or 24.5 cents per litre, but today at the same pumps this gasoline is selling for 45.6 cents per litre. This can be seen here in the City of Ottawa, it can be seen any place in Ontario. This is a 20 cent difference in the price of a litre of gasoline.

What does the price of gasoline do to inflation in our economy? The price of gasoline in this day and age is probably one of the biggest creators of inflation in the cost of productivity, and hurts the tourist industry and probably every sector of the economy. Why is there such a discrepancy in the price of gasoline, a discrepancy of 20 cents a litre? I have put this question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) in the House of Commons before. The Minister has never really given me an answer; he just skates around the question. The tourist industry is a big industry in Canada today and it is especially big in my area, and one of the biggest deterrents to the tourist industry is the difference between the cost of gasoline per litre or per gallon in Canada and the cost of gasoline in the United States.

The second deterrent to the tourist industry is the Government tax on the cost of beverages. I do not argue whether or not beverages, as we know it in the tourist industry today, are needed. It is something which is there and it is there to stay, my friends, and it is something which plays a big part in bringing tourists to our country.

Then we may move to the field of accommodation as well. These are all services which are greatly affected by the Government tax here and the Government tax there. I will conclude in just a moment, Mr. Speaker, if you will give me a second. The Government is very, very prone to imposing a tax here and a tax there in order to raise money that is ill-spent. Thank you very much for your patience, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, it gives me no great pleasure to rise again to discuss another borrowing Bill. Not too long ago, the Government came before the House to ask permission to borrow money under a previous Bill. Bill C-151 seeks the aproval of the House to borrow $14.7 billion. This, Mr. Speaker, is almost an unbelieveable amount of money in view of the fact that the Government has come before this session of Parliament with the same request seven times. It came before Parliament under Bill C-30 to borrow $12 billion, under C-59 to borrow $14 billion, under Bill C-111 to borrow $6.6 billion, under Bill C-125 to borrow $7 billion, under Bill C-128 to borrow $4 billion, under Bill C-143 to borrow $19 billion, and now the Government is seeking to borrow $14.7 billion. That is a total of $61.6 billion, an unbelieveable amount of money to be borrowed in one session of Parliament.

This year's deficit as forecast by the Government will be approximately $31.3 billion, but can we believe that figure in view of the changes that have been made over the past year? I believe that we all recall the $200 million which was tacked on to the budget so that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) could squeeze out from under the allegation that he had leaked some of the provisions in the budget. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, the Government has said that its financial requirements are $26.7 billion, and yet, as of April 1 this year, it had $16 billion in unused borrowing capacity, which means that it really needs to borrow $10.7 billion. However, the Minister has told us that he needs a cushion of $2 billion this year just in case. He does not really tell us what "just in case" means. Then he wants a surplus of another $2 billion next year "just in case", and again we do not know what that means. But we do have a clue that perhaps there will be a run on the Canadian dollar. That does not augur well for any of us. If the Government has to borrow money in the case of a run on the Canadian dollar, then we will be in desperate trouble over the next year.

I believe that it can be said without any exaggeration, Mr. Speaker, that the Government's expenditures are out of control. I do not think that it really knows how much the deficit will be this year. I do not think that it really knows about or has planned for a true expenditure plan. In effect, the Government is just hoping. It is hoping that the American economy will turn around sufficiently to pick up the Canadian economy.

The Government's expenditures boggle the imagination, Mr. Speaker. We are told that it spent $6 million each on two water bombers for the Yukon, and of course the fire season in the Yukon occurs at a time when ice covers most of the lakes. We would like to know what the Government are going to use the water bombers for. Perhaps they will be used to take Liberal Cabinet Ministers to the Yukon on fishing trips. As we get closer to the election, we will need to have these little handouts just in case they do not come back.

We heard in committee just recently, Mr. Speaker, about some of the wasteful expenditures of the Canadian International Development Corporation. Last year, the Government of one of the developing nations asked for an advance of $20,000 against a loan that it would be receiving from the Canadian Government. Did the Canadian Government give it the $20,000? Of course not. It gave that country $250,000, and no one knows why. The acting Deputy Minister says, "We don't have an answer". Last year over $8 million was allocated in such a manner. The record goes on and on and on. Petro-Canada, the window on the oil industry, has investment capital of somewhere around $7 billion, and last year had earnings of $10 million. That is unbelievable. This oil company is supposedly in the private sector yet it is wrapped up in bureaucracy. Perhaps this is speculation, Mr. Speaker, but it would not surprise me if one of the greatest scandals in this country in the next five to ten years will be the way the Government has operated Petro-Canada.

• (1640)

How did we arrive at this stage of excess, uncontrolled expenditure by the Government, with one hand not knowing what the other is doing? For the answer we must go back and consider a number of things. First, there is the National Energy Program. No one really believes that the National Energy Program ever did any good. One does not just have to read the newspapers; one can easily tell by talking to the bankers and investment people in many parts of the world. I have visited England, Germany and the United States in the last three months, and people there all repeat the same thing. They have told the Government their opinion, but Government Members would not repeat that in the House. They have said, "If you want investment capital in Canada, get rid of the National Energy Program, get rid of FIRA." The Government knows this.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Recently the head of the Bank of Cologne from West Germany was in my city. He said that Canada was one of the easiest countries in the world in which to invest and one of the best countries in the world to invest in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. That may be a contribution to the debate but it is hardly a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. All day the Liberals have not got up once. Why do they not get up and make a speech if they have something to defend instead of rising on fake points of order?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker, it does too take much imagination to know what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is good at flinging.

Mr. Whelan: Mine would grow something, but what you are flinging will not grow anything.

Mr. Wright: What he says about the head of the Bank of Cologne is hogwash.

Mr. Whelan: I would not try to wash any hogs in what you are saying.

Mr. Wright: He knows that and he knows that not one Canadian ambassador in Europe, the United States or any western country will agree with the statement he made. He knows, or should know, that reports have come back from our ambassadors, in either written or verbal form, outlining the problems. They have said, "We will not invest money in your country".

The Minister of Agriculture is interested in figures. He should know that $6.8 billion in investment capital left Germany last year for the United States. If the Minister is so bright and knows what is going on, he should be able to tell us how much came to Canada. I can tell him that it was not very much. He can sit there and say that people tell him this is a great country, but that is not true. He cannot back it up.

Until we get rid of the national energy policy and FIRA we are not going to solve the problem of investment capital in this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: According to the best of my information, the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright) was interrupted by the Minister of Agriculture. Surely that is not going to be taken off his time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, it may appear from your vantage point that the side of the House to your right was ready for the question before the debate even started. That is the side of the House where the sheep sit. They have been told to be here today but not to participate in the debate because, after all, it is just a little Bill. I hold it in my hand. It is unfortunate that the automatic cameras are not permitted to scan this place. Those Canadians who keep an eye on it would be interested in the fact that we are discussing Bill C-151 to give the Government authority to borrow on our behalf the sum of "fourteen billion seven hundred million dollars as may be required for public works and general purposes." We are permitting the Government to spend that amount on our behalf and to put the signature of the taxpayers of Canada on instruments that will be marketed throughout the world and which the taxpayers of Canada will have to pay back at some point.

If the cameras could scan the House they would see five Liberals, none of whom has made a speech or given any explanation of why—

Mr. Whelan: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: If the Minister of Agriculture interrupts me—

Mr. Whelan: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Oberle: He will find it very difficult to do that because he is one of my very special friends. He has a sort of foghorn voice and only speaks when his gas moves him. That usually happens when someone else has the floor.

Canadians would be interested in the situation we have here because they know full well the crime of taxation. They know full well that the promises of today usually end up as the taxes of tomorrow. Canadian taxpayers and small and medium-sized businessmen know that today's deficits are going to be the taxes of tomorrow. Canadians have become accustomed to the fact that the Government adjusts its economic forecasting almost every three months.

Over the last two years we have gone from a projected deficit of $11 billion to $19.8 billion; that is almost double. And that was just a miscalculation, Mr. Speaker.

For people who do know what a billion dollars is, Mr. Speaker, I can tell them that it is 1,000 million dollars, which would make a stack of one dollar bills about 85 miles high. At one time there was a Member of this House who said, "What's a million?" It was a large sum of money when the Government took over power. I say "took over power" because there is no longer any power with the Canadian people or with Parliament. That has all been usurped by the Government. When these people took over, the total spending authority that the Government used to lay before Parliament was about one-third of what it is now running in deficits alone. The deficit went from $11 billion to $19 billion to $24 billion, and it is projected now at $31 billion. One could say, "So what, we live in difficult economic circumstances. We have entered into all kinds of social contracts from which we cannot extricate ourselves. The Unemployment Insurance bill this year is $12 billion and there are of course statutory arrangements with the Provinces where the federal Government is locked in, and these agreements cannot be renegotiated. So up goes the deficit".

• (1650)

There is another way to pay back borrowed money rather than raising taxes later on. You can pay it back through inflation. That is the great con game which governments of this type have become accustomed to and comfortable with throughout the world. Spend money today, water down the currency, and pay your debts with watered down dollars. Not only are governments like that cheating themselves, they are really cheating the old age pensioners and people on fixed incomes who rely on governments for their sustenance. They are being paid in watered down dollars. When the currency is devalued through inflation by 10 per cent, the old age pensioner who thinks he is getting $480 a month is really getting 10 per cent less, but for all intents and purposes the social contract has been fulfilled. But the Government has cheated them out of a lot of money. This is even more serious for people such as civil servants who have, in good faith, paid into pension funds all their lives and find that the benefits are much less than what they thought they had contracted for. That is how the con game works. That is how you can pay for a deficit of $31.8 billion.

There is one other part of this Bill I must point out to you, Sir, because it is the one which causes me even greater concern. Listen to this very closely, Mr. Speaker. I know you will be shocked by it. Clause 2, Subclause (3) says:

> For greater certainty, any amount borrowed under this Section may be borrowed in a currency other than that of Canada and may be repaid in the currency in which it was borrowed.

What that means, Sir, is that the Government no longer has any lenders in this country from whom it is welcome to borrow money.

Mr. Fisher: Wrong.

Mr. Oberle: Our pension funds have run dry.

Mr. Fisher: Wrong.

Mr. Oberle: They are already over-committed. Our banks are in such a precarious situation, they are now looking for Government to bail them out because of stupid decisions they made in international lending and financing of certain Canadian companies with the endorsement of the federal Government. They are now coming to Government to bail them out, so they do not have the extra $14 billion to lend to the Government. Where does the Government go then? It goes to New York and Switzerland—

Mr. Fisher: Wrong.

Mr. Oberle: —and I assume it will borrow from the Arab countries or wherever the Government can find the money. That is particularly important because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) gets up repeatedly in this House, as does the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), to compare our situation with that of the United States. That is rather like the first mate of the Titanic who said, "I am no worse off than the captain". Well, they all sank together.

The fact is that the U.S. deficit in comparison with ours is roughly half, if you calculate it on a per capita basis. But the problem is that when we go abroad to borrow money, the interest is paid to foreign lenders, it does not recirculate in this country. In the U.S. the Government does its borrowing internally and the interest paid stays in the country and is recycled. It is available to small business for venture capital and risk capital and for the development of a much needed recovery in the economy. In our situation the interest we pay on this $14.7 billion will all be paid abroad.

Mr. Fisher: Wrong.

Mr. Oberle: That money will come right off the top, so that 25 cents of every taxpayer's dollar will of course go to a foreign lender, to some American or Swiss bank. It will not stay in our economy, and that is why it will take so much longer for our economy to achieve the recovery necessary to create jobs and build a bright future for our children.

I see you rising, Mr. Speaker. I think I have made my point.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, if I remember correctly, you came into the House about the same time that I did, that is, in 1972. Well, I stand to be corrected, but anyway, in 1972, as you will remember because you were here at that time, we had a minority Government. That was the time when the Government started to get into trouble because, as I understand, prior to that time the federal Government had a surplus of approximately $700 million. That was in 1970. In order for that minority Government to stay in power for as long as it did, and it lasted two years, it had to respond to the wishes and kicks of the NDP. That is where we started to go wrong. Then, of course, the problem escalated until the Auditor General, in approximately 1978, made the statement that to all intents and purposes Government expenditures were out of control.

I believe that to be true, Mr. Speaker. I do not think that even today the Government has the public purse under control. In fact, I was speaking to an individual not so long ago who made the comment that unfortunately the Government is not aware that it does not have control of the purse strings. This is where the danger comes in. If we do not do something very quickly, we are going to create the situation where we are going to have a financial collapse. Consider our total debt, including provincial debt. It increased last year approximately $35 billion. We cannot stand that, Mr. Speaker. The total debt of the Third World is somewhere in the vicinity of $700 billion, and yet here we are in Canada with a debt of about one third of that amount. Certainly that is a disastrous situation to find ourselves in.

The worst part of it all is that this year the Government will increase that amount, possibly up to $35 billion, and it will probably be the same next year. How long can we stand that? Surely the members of Government should have enough basic business knowledge and understanding to know that the Government cannot continue along those lines. Surely they must realize that Government is the biggest business we have in Canada today, and that the guidelines which must be followed by any successful businesses in our communities must be applied to the federal Government. This is not happening. This is the part that concerns me. For instance, as I said earlier, this year it will cost us $18 billion just to pay the interest alone. If one uses one's mathematics, one will find that that amounts to $2 a day for every man, woman and child living in Canada. Every Canadian should realize upon rising in the morning that the first two dollars each person makes must go to pay for this interest cost.

So much of our funding is going without any return. Take, for instance, payment of interest. We do not make any financial gain from that. There is no productivity. The Government is placing a heavier load, as each successive year goes by on our people, on our Canadian taxpayer, on our business community. Actually, it is killing the goose that laid the golden egg, and yet it does not seem to realize it. Unless a change is made very soon, we will find far too much of the productivity of our country going simply to finance the debt. There does not seem to be any inclination on the part of any Hon. Members opposite to stop that.

Some years ago I was flabbergasted when the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Hon. Otto Lang, brought in the stabilization program for the western Canadian grain producer. It was set up in such a manner that the farmer, the producer, paid his dollar into the fund and the Government was to pay its $2 into the fund. I would have thought that it was a fair, honest and straightforward way to set up any program. However, what happened shortly there after? Your Honour will remember that Mr. Lang brought in another piece of legislation providing that the Government did not have to put in its $2. It would calculate it and keep it as a paper figure; but it would pay interest on it. However, somewhere along the line, there must be a payout. Otherwise, the program will not do the job for which it was intended. So what will happen? Next year, in our Estimates, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will probably have to be responsible, a pretty substantial payout to the western grain producer will be necessary because of the fact that we are now going through times of extremely low prices. This is the irony of the whole situation.

In 1970 there was a surplus in the budget. These 12 or 13 years have been good years to us, except perhaps for the last two or three years. Those were the times when the Government should have been building up a balance in the bank. However, what did it do? Each successive year it went further and further into debt. What will happen now? Suppose that in 1984 or 1985 the economic cycle makes a turnaround. It is said that it makes a turnaround every 50 to 60 years. If Hon. Members opposite would remember, it is now just exactly 50 years from the 1930s. Now we are going into a down cycle and must pay off the tremendous debt. It will put a tremendously heavy load on our children and our grandchildren. However, there does not seem to be any thought concerning this matter. That is my concern.

What is the Government doing during these good years, by exploding the budget to this extent? It is unbelievable, the way it is exploding. For instance, last year when the budget was presented to us, it was supposedly to be just a bit over $10 billion; but it ended up being $25 billion or $26 billion. We do not have the final figures. However, it will be somewhere between those figures. Then, of course, as the Minister said, next year there will be a deficit of $31 billion. Are we to have another escalation of $16 billion? That would put it up in the $47 billion bracket, if that holds true.

Certainly, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) mentioned, and also my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright), a part of the problem was the National Energy Program. It is true that the Government saw some bucks out there and wanted to get its hands on the money, and it did. It took a few hundred million dollars out of the system. However, what has happened now? The chickens have come home to roost because of the fact that this year it is estimated that there will be a $6 billion payout on refunds on income tax alone, simply because the oil energy business has been cut back.

I could go on with other figures and show Your Honour where the Government is going wrong, but hopefully some Hon. Members opposite will be wise enough to see what the Government is doing to our country.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak today with regard to the borrowing legislation, because it gives me an opportunity to put on the record my concerns over the economic policy, the taxation policy, of the Government. When we consider the borrowing Bill, we really must not look only at the numbers. Certainly, the numbers involved in the Bill are enough to impress anyone. The number of times the Government has come before the House to borrow are impressive in and of themselves. However, the real question upon which we must focus our attention is: What is the purpose of all of this borrowing? What kind of policies have led to this present situation? What are the values, the fundamental priorities of the Government when it comes to borrowing?

I think I would feel much better about this borrowing request if I thought it related to meeting the needs of people and to providing employment for Canadians. However, if we consider what is going on in the country, if we take a brief look at the budget which the Government introduced and which was recently passed through the House, we find that there is double-digit unemployment in Canada. We find the fact that the budget has accepted unemployment of 12.4 per cent for this year and unemployment of 11.4 per cent for next year. It even made predictions that after recovery, after a number of years, the best we could hope for would be to bring unemployment down to 7 per cent or 8 per cent.

In this context, it is very difficult to accept the notion that this borrowing will continue for the purpose of putting people back to work, because it is clear that the economic and manpower policies of the Government have failed to put Canadians back to work. The Government has, in fact, accepted a level of unemployment in this country which, until today, was unheard of. This is unprecedented in terms of a Government accepting such a level without really facing up to the problem and making a commitment to do something about it. So there is no way we can justify this borrowing by saying that the Government has turned its effort toward employment creation.

I might approve of this borrowing if I thought it would improve equality in the country. For example, if the money were used to bring about greater equality between men and women in the Public Service I would be in favour of its expenditure. We know from a recent report that was made public and tabled recently that the gap between the wages of men and women in the Public Service has increased by some 12 per cent between last year and this year. That is a direct result of legislation brought into the House by the Government. The Government's policies have had the impact of increasing inequality, certainly in the Public Service. Therefore I cannot justify this legislation on the grounds that the Government is borrowing money that will fulfil worth-while human purposes and result in greater equality between men and women in the work place.

If I thought that this legislation concerned rational economic policies for the country, I might be able to approve of it. However, when one considers the budget which was recently passed through the House, the words that stand out are those of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when he said that he was leaving the lead in economic matters to the private sector. The Government has actually washed its hands of the very tools that could allow it to provide employment for everyone and bring about a real recovery in this country. It has ignored its opportunity to give some energy and thrust to economic activity in the country. I make that point because when one considers a country such as Japan one can see that it learned long ago the lesson of economic planning, which is, that you cannot leave the direction of the over-all economy to the private sector. Unemployment in Japan is currently in the neighbourhood of 3 per cent, while our unemployment rate is well over 12 per cent. We should learn from our neighbours on this planet.

We should understand that we have a responsibility for what happens in our community and our country. We must set objectives and goals and be committee to the importance of employment for every Canadian in order that we might grow as individuals through meaningful work.

If this borrowing authority being requested by Members opposite were put to a useful and sane purpose, I would approve of it. So long as the Government washes its hands of economic matters by saying that it no longer takes the responsibility to steer the ship of state and to provide employment for every Canadian, it is incumbent upon Members of this side of the House to condemn the financial activities of the Government. It is important to condemn the amount of money that the Government continually asks for authority to borrow.

The Government's request for this money could be legitimate if it came to the House in good conscience to borrow that money for Canadians so they could meet their own basic human needs and find employment for individuals who are unemployed today. This borrowing request would be acceptable if it were meant to bring about greater equality between men and women, between handicapped and other Canadians and between natives and the rest of the population. But borrowing without reason is irrational and deserves to be not only questioned but condemned.

I call upon the Government to re-examine its commitment. Rather than attempting to redefine the notion of full employment upwards, which it has been doing lately, it talks participation rates, the regional nature of the country and the difficulty of penetrating foreign markets. All of this talk is an attempt to convince Canadians that it is acceptable to have the number of people unemployed that we have today. That certainly is unacceptable to our Party and unacceptable to a majority of Canadians.

Before the Government comes to the House to ask for borrowing authority it should first examine its purposes and adopt as its first objective the provision of employment for all Canadians and the greater equality for the people in this country.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), lamented the fact that in spite of all the serious problems and challenges facing the nation today and the seeming inability of the Government to react, he felt that the Government did not even realize the seriousness of those problems.

As is my usual custom, on Sunday I went to church. I listened to the minister as he referred to the fact that it is sometimes necessary to use dramatic or sensational methods in order to catch the attention of the people before they are willing to listen. He used this illustration: a man had a donkey which was hitched to a cart. No matter what he said to it, it would not move. He kept shouting at it until he got rather disgusted and took a hammer and hit the donkey between the eyes. A bystander asked, "What in the world did you do that for?" Why did you hit the donkey in the head?" He said, "I had to do it to get his attention."

I believe that is similar to the situation we have today. It seems to necessitate the use of some dramatic or sensational effort to get the Government to realize the seriousness of the situation and to act upon it.

I am not implying that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) or anyone else is a donkey. I do not know if that would be parliamentary. I am not implying that the Minister of Finance is a donkey, but it appears as though he shared that proverbial characteristic of a donkey, that is stubbornness.

It has been pointed out that this is the seventh time that the Government has introduced a measure asking for authority to borrow more money to finance its operations. Therefore, it has been seven times that we have endeavoured to use that hammer of reason to convince the Government that the direction in which it is headed is not the one which will lead us to a satisfactory destination.

Instead, the Government is leading us in the opposite direction. Rather than bringing us out of the problems and difficulties which we face at present, it is driving us deeper into the ground and making the problem even more difficult.

The Government has failed to recognize and acknowledge the challenges that have been drawn to its attention and the warnings which have been given to it by successive Auditors General, the Comptroller General, taxpayers of this country and Members of the House. We are convinced that continuing overspending, increasing deficits and massive borrowings could bring this country to economic collapse.

• (1720)

The amounts for which the Government has asked borrowing authority have been placed on the record. They are in the following order: $12 billion, $14 billion, $16 billion, $11 billion, $4 billion, $19 billion and $14.7 billion. Clearly this indicates that this request is not a request to meet an emergency but is consistent with the Government's propensity to overspend. Then, with indecent and unblushing arrogance, it forwards a dunner to the taxpayers of Canada to pay up or face the consequences. Everyone knows that the country has been going through a very difficult period and, although some signs would indicate some slight improvement, I have seen nothing to indicate that anyone is about to celebrate a dawn of a new era. In fact, I saw three economists on the television not long ago. One said that things are looking better, another said just about the opposite, and the third one was in between the other two. He indicated that even among economists, which is perhaps usual, there is such a divergence of opinion that they know nothing more about the situation than any other sectors of the community.

If we reviewed the record of the Government we would find there is little to justify the Government's calling upon the people of Canada to increase the borrowing and the money available to Government. Not only should we consider the following facts: That Gross National Product is falling sharply, that capital investment is to fall again, that manufacturing is at only 63 per cent of capacity, that business bankruptcies continue to increase, that we have record unemployment, that corporate profits are down, that manufacturing and shipments are declining together with inflation—that is the record—but we have to take into account the predictions for the future. Woods, Gordon in its April, 1983 "Business Conditions" report expresses concern that inventory shortages could lead to higher prices. In that document we find this paragraph:

> In particular, inventories of many raw materials appear to be exceptionally low and cannot be replenished quickly. The business recovery could trigger sudden bottlenecks and sharp price increases, which could, in turn, touch off renewed fear of inflation, tighter monetary restraint, and rising interest rates.

The record is pitiful, the forecasts are discouraging, yet the Government continues on the course, and rather than improving the conditions of this country it is even threatening to make them much, much worse.

Speaking about the deficits, an article appeared in the paper under the heading "Deficit cuts needed as soon as possible." The article is written by Mr. Ronald Anderson. He pointed out a very significant factor. He wrote:

> —the proposed increase in federal spending this year and next, together with the absence of any new spending restraints in later years, will result in an increase in the federal Government's share of the Gross National Product. In 1980, before the recession, Ottawa absorbed 21 per cent of GNP; in the November, 1981, budget, the federal share was projected to increase to 22 per cent; this proportion now is expected to increase, in the 1983-1984 fiscal year, to 26 per cent.

I want to put more on the record from this article but there are time constraints. However, the C. D. Howe Institute said:

> —the federal public debt will rise to 46 per cent of GNP in 1987, compared with 29 per cent in 1982 and 15 per cent in 1975.

This statement concludes with these words:

> —the commitment contained in the budget to reduce the deficit is not a convincing one. If the deficit persists, little room will be left for stimulative measures if they are needed in the years ahead.

The Government is moving in such a direction that it is evident that rather than improving the situation it will eventually make it worse. I call upon the Government, without hitting it on the head with a hammer, I beg the Government to take another look at the course it is following and the course it is leading us into and request that it change direction and do something really worth-while for the great nation of which we are a part.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it almost seems like yesterday when I last spoke on a borrowing authority problem. I spoke during the budget debate about what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) indicated would be his financial requirements for the coming year. At that time it was indicated we would have this present Bill sometime during the course of this year. We have not yet reached the month of June and already the Government is upon us with Bill C-151.

Mr. Fisher: Four more days.

Mr. Lambert: Bill C-143 asked authority to borrow $19 billion. In between Bill C-143 and Bill C-151 only eight Bills have been introduced. Let us look at the totality of what has happened in this session which started, of course, in April, 1980, and is now well on into its fourth year. We get this cradle of numbers, I said cradle, I should have said litany of Bills—Bills C-30, C-59, C-111, C-125, C-128, C-143 and C-150. They come along like a series.

Last year the Government came before Parliament four times. I suppose this year it says, "Never again", and yet it has come twice with ever increasing gulps. It may be that this is what the Government is going to do in the future if this administration continues for another year. We have been told, on the good authority of the Minister of Finance, that the projected shortages, the Government requirements, will be something like $93 billion by the time we get to 1985-1986. One can understand that the gobbets will be bigger and bigger each year. It may be that the Government is doing a job on the public, accustoming it to a bigger dose every time.

What will be the result of the Bill? Several of my colleagues have indicated what it will do. At the present time there is a carryover of $2 billion for 1982-83, and there is at least $5 billion now. Bill C-143 provided for a carryover of $2 billion for 1983-84. This particular Bill also provides for an unexpended portion of $2 billion to be carried on into 1984-85. What do they do with all this money? Is it an absolute necessity? The public tells us, "halt". I do not know whether the present administration has stuffed cotton wool or noise preventers in its ears. It simply continues to spend and spend and spend. Unfortunately, the expenditures are of a kind that are temporary. There is no lasting effect. There is no multiplier effect, with the possible exception of the $3,000 grant for the acquisition of new homes. That program has come to a halt. While the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) boasts about the increased rate of new home construction, as soon as that program effectively stops, there will be a most dramatic downturn in the construction of new housing units. Canadians lack sufficient confidence in this administration and in economic recovery to say that they will take chances because their employment is insecure. There are still very serious lay-offs. Some of them are reaching very high levels. As soon as one sees serious cuts in mid-management, those below who still have employment in the firms become very, very conscious of just how precarious their employment tomorrow may be.

We are going through a very unbalanced time. What this massive borrowing will do to the domestic market of savings, I do not know. It could be that this will wipe out a lot of funds sitting in pension plans and others that are not normally active in industrial investment. Certainly I think it is the Government's good fortune that at this time the industrial demand for funds for investment is not as high as it might be, because there is a great deal of unused capacity and uncertainty as to the value of future investment and the Government has more freedom of action in the sale of its bonds. What the Provinces will do under the circumstances is hard to say. In view of the fact that the Government only needed about $10.7 billion in order to arrive at a fair balance of figures, why must there be a cushion of an additional $2 billion?

When we talk about $2 billion, we are not talking about a weekend's expenditures. For the likes of Hon. Members of the House and most of the public, $2 billion is a great deal of money. It is difficult to provide for a $2 billion carryover, but personally I think it is totally wrong for the Government to come at this time and ask for this much money. The Government must become accountable, and to that extent I am opposed to the Bill.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to address a few remarks to Bill C-151 with which the Government seeks to borrow $14.7 billion. That amount of money is rather difficult for anyone to imagine in terms of his or her own funding. I thought it might be interesting to try to relate it to how it affects the average Canadian in my riding of Simcoe North.

Government spending for which it is borrowing money this year will be equal to $10,100 per taxpayer. That is quite a sum of money, especially when one realizes that when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office in 1967-68 the Government was spending $1,700 per taxpayer. The Government, on a per capita basis, is spending $4,000 per man, woman and child in Canada, as opposed to $500 per capita that it spent in 1967-68. One tax dollar in three is used to service the Government debt, compared with one tax dollar nine or ten years ago.

The people of my riding are quite concerned about deficits of $31 billion per year and about a Government with runaway spending. When I am in my riding, they stop me and ask, "Doug, how can the Government spend that kind of money; where is it going?" I tell them about the pork-barrel which the Government has going with a sort of bottomless pit. I tell them that they have to be like Maislin Transport which needed $31 million to $34 million because it made a bad business deal and the Grits, the Government, decided to bail the company out. They shake their heads. I tell them about Dome Petroleum which got into trouble—

Mr. Fisher: How much did we put into Dome?

Mr. Lewis: —because of the National Energy Program.

Mr. Fisher: Not a penny.

Mr. Lewis: I tell them about the Great City of Windsor and ILAP. I compare the City of Windsor and its three Liberal Cabinet Ministers with metropolitan Toronto, represented by my noisy friend across the way, which has 30 seats and five Cabinet Ministers, none of them with anywhere near the power of those from Windsor. One might think about that if one represented Mississauga North. One might find it embarrassing to explain to one's constituents the case of Windsor with three seats and three Liberal Cabinet Ministers and that of metropolitan Toronto with 30 seats and five Cabinet Ministers. That might be a little tough to take home to Mississauga North, if my friend had the nerve to go back there on occasion.

• (1740)

The ILAP Program, on which the Government was spending money, was rather important to Simcoe North, in particular the areas of Penetanguishene and Midland which has 33 per cent unemployment under this Liberal Government. It applied for an ILAP grant. I put together a brief. I was at the initial meeting of the committee. It worked long and hard putting together a comprehensive brief indicating exactly what the situation was, thanks to Liberal economic planning. It was sent here in February.

There was a latecomer, Allan Martin, a former Member from the unrepresented City of Toronto. He jumped on the bandwagon at the last minute. He went to great lengths to say how he would get an ILAP grant and that the money would be spent on Penetanguishene, thanks to Mr. Martin. On budget night, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) found that the ILAP restrictions were rather tight. He had only been able to get it for nine or ten Liberal ridings, one NDP riding and one Conservative riding. He wanted to spread the pork. ILAP was dumped.

Mr. Martin had another excuse. He was going to do something else. We now have what is called the special recovery fund, which is the pork-barrel gone global. The Minister is going to spend money according to a development index. Very nice. For years the Government has calculated unemployment according to 60 economic regions in Canada. Now it is going to be 260. It will be done by census regions. That is one part of the development index. The other part is average income and the ability of the Province to pay. That is how money will now be spent. We, as a responsible House of Commons, are being asked to condone that kind of hokery-pokery.

Today in the House we heard the epitome of Government spending gone mad on the Canada Development Investment Corporation. It is a neat little corporate manœuvre, in place for some six months, designed to allow the Government to invest taxpayers' hard-earned money in some of the classic income earners such as Canadair. It is an opportunity for more of our money to go to Grit ridings, an opportunity for the Government of Canada to have a Crown corporation in the hands of an esteemed Member of the other place. One would have to caution the corporation not to try to float any share issues on the Vancouver Stock Exchange, not under the management of the esteemed Member of the other place.

We heard the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) go on at great length. He is our link to that Crown corporation which is spending our money. He is the House of Commons link. The only problem with the link is that he is not part of the chain. The Minister has not been made part of the chain because the Economic Development Committee of Cabinet includes Senator Austin, but does not include the Minister who reports to this place. He comes in and waxes eloquent at great length, but he has no idea of what is going on because he is not a Member of the Committee. That is how the Government is spending our money. When I go to Simcoe North, my constituents ask what the Government is doing. I have to try to defend the Government in its mad spending. That is how it is seen at the riding level. It is not seen that way by Members on the Treasury benches. They think they are helping by spending money. However, it is the people of Simcoe North who pay the shot.

We are opposing this Bill. We are opposing this grand scheme which asks for more than $4 billion, more than the Government needs, according to his recent budget. This is the seventh time this Government has come to this House to ask for more borrowing, and we oppose it. It has some $16 billion worth of borrowing authority left. The Government suggests it needs only $26.7 billion. The balance, according to my arithmetic, is $10.7 billion, not $14.7 billion. Once again, under the aegis of the Minister of Finance, who found $200 million worth of spending over the course of 24 hours, we see sloppy arithmetic from the Government.

In closing, we oppose the mad spending of this Government as we have opposed all of its roughshod tactics. We continue to stand on behalf of the taxpayers, not only of Simcoe North, but of every riding in this country. It is obvious the Members supporting the Government have no interest in supporting their ridings. We are pleased to do the job for them as well.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I am both pleased to speak on this Bill and not pleased. I represent constituents who are very concerned. Farmers, business people and other taxpayers are as concerned as Members of Parliament about the additional borrowing of $14 billion.

It is significant to note that when I came to this House four years ago, the total debt of the Government of Canada was $78 billion. Today the total debt is almost $160 billion. The increased debt for each man, women and child is in excess of $800, and for each taxpayer it is in excess of $1,700. These figures are very alarming.

It is not enough to just point out the problem. There must be a solution. We on this side of the House have some very positive solutions regarding the direction in which this country has been going. One of the major vacuums in this place is the complete lack of understanding of supply-side economics. We must stimulate the private sector to create wealth in this country. You cannot continue spending money to create jobs or in any other direction that is not, in return, building and strengthening this country.

We have a very serious problem in Canada. Governments are too loose with the taxpayers' money. I represent an agricultural riding. Productivity is very imporant in my riding. Productivity has been eroded by the reckless spending by Government. We see this in our oilfields and farms. Taxpayers now find there is not a great deal of incentive to work and to produce, basically because taxation is so high. When an employee works overtime, he finds that he is taxed to death by the income tax department. There is no incentive to produce. As a result, the balance of payments in the country has dropped to a level where we cannot compete in many ways in the international marketplace.

I believe that we must take a whole new look at production, a whole new look at taxation in Canada. The Government's whole taxation program is counterproductive in many areas of society, and particularly in the House.

One area of expenditure that the Government does not seem to be concerned with is the larger bureaucracy which is being created year by year, day by day, in the House of Commons. It is significant to note that while 5 per cent and 6 per cent guidelines were created, many members of our society, and particularly farmers, realize that they face increased costs of production along with dropping world prices for wheat or beef, or whatever it is that they produce, and in that case, the six and five guideline is not there. But the bureaucrats are protected by the 5 per cent and 6 per cent increase, and if one makes a wage of $70,000 and gets a 6 per cent increase, that is a pretty healthy increase, Mr. Speaker. This is happening year after year at the expense of the taxpayer.

Somewhere down the line, there must be some accountability to the taxpayer by the Government, and I as one Member of the House believe that the Government and each Member sitting in the House owes a great deal of responsibility to the taxpayers of the country. We in the House, and I suppose I am speaking for the Government now, have not in many cases been accountable to productive people who have found it difficult to pay the kind of taxes that are demanded of them by the Government of the country. I call upon the Government to be more accountable to the taxpayers and to bring into practice some incentive program for production that will allow this Government to decrease some of the heavy-handed taxes which have been placed upon the people of Canada.

I suppose that there are many areas which I could look at in terms of expenditure. I have already mentioned a couple of items like the large bureaucracy that the Government carries and the circulation of funds in many areas. In latter years, the Auditor General has spoken out and suggested that Government spending was out of control, that it was not being controlled by the Finance Minister, and yet year after year the deficits have been rising and the budgets have been coming later and greater.

Four years ago when I came to the House of Commons, I believe that the deficit was $13 million. Today we are looking at a $31 billion deficit. Expenditures are out of control, Mr. Speaker. I call on the House to bring them under control. I call on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), each Cabinet Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to be accountable to the taxpayers of the country to whom I am sure we owe a debt of responsibility as Members of Parliament.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to address myself to the particular Bill under consideration as we resume debate on the motion of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) on this, the second reading and reference of Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority.

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I would like to be able to register some of the concerns I have as a Member of Parliament who represents a western riding, a riding which is in northern Manitoba, and I would just like to state why we are in opposition to this particular Bill. Doubtless, Mr. Speaker, you have heard quite a bit from this side of the House with regard to the position we have taken on the Crow rate, for example. The way the Government has been spending money is of real concern to us because in debate on the Crow rate, for example, a great deal of attention has been paid by the Government to trying to bring forward its position. I am referring especially to the Crow advertising which was seen all across the country. The Government spent a considerable amount of money, and in the process of spending that money, it purported to bring forward its position. However, when the Bill was finally introduced in the House by the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), we found that the Bill was incomplete in its form and that whatever changes would be introduced would make the advertising obsolete. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, if this type of Government spending on obsolete advertising is not a waste of taxpayers' money.

Mr. Fisher: You people sound like good Tories.

Mr. Lewycky: As I mentioned, that advertising is obsolete. I think it is important for us to consider this sort of thing.

Mr. Fisher: I have been listening to this from the NDP all day.

Mr. Lewycky: The Hon. Member opposite is shouting and is trying to generate a little bit of noise because he is afraid to listen to the concerns which we have in this regard. I think one of my hon. colleagues has also indicated that the CNR has been purchasing bankrupt railways in western Canada. What is happening with regard to money which should be spent to upgrade the railways and upgrade certain branch lines in constituencies such as mine is that we find that that money has been given to the railways without proper accountability. I personally have never been able to get a reasonable explanation from the railways with regard to the formula which is used for money that the railways are receiving and expenses which they claim for depreciation of equipment, and it is of great concern to us that the Government constantly gives money hand over fist to agencies or companies such as the CPR, a corporate welfare giveaway, and there are no real results in various constituencies such as mine.

There has been no focus or plan with regard to some of the expenditures which the Government has brought forward, and by this I am underlining what is of great concern to many of the younger people in my constituency, a group of people with a high percentage of unemployment. I know that we in the House have heard that the unemployment rate among youth is well over 20 per cent, but I would just like to point out to the Hon. Members opposite that there are quite a few Indian reserves in my area. There are some seven Indian reserves, and if I were to look at any one of them, Hon. Members would be horrified to find out that the unemployment rate for youth would be 100 per cent, Mr. Speaker.

I am concerned that this borrowing authority does not have the kind of focus that is needed to deal with the problems which we as Members of Parliament are facing on a day to day basis. Our constituents come to our constituency offices and bring to us some of their concerns. As well, a high proportion of women are unemployed, especially in the rural areas. There is supposed to be an affirmative action program that is concerned with unemployment in this area, and yet there is nothing from the Government which really addresses these concerns and problems.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

SHIPS AND SHIPPING—PROTEST AGAINST USE OF FOREIGN-OWNED VESSEL ON ATLANTIC COAST

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) apparently did not really understand, or deliberately chose to evade my question about vessels of foreign ownership or registry being permitted into this country. The Canada Shipping Act does give the Minister of Transport authority to do something about foreign vessels of dubious quality and design being allowed to serve as offshore vessels for standby rescue and supply purposes.

I want to read into the record Section 22 of Part I of this important piece of legislation as the basis for what I am about to say. It is as follows:

Notwithstanding anything in this Part, a ship built outside Canada shall not, without the consent of the Minister, be registered in Canada.

The Minister knows that shipbuilding and ship repair is an important industry in this country. He must know as well, that the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association has been making very sensible recommendations to see that our Canadian interest may be protected. Henry Walsh has been very assiduous in bringing certain things to the attention of the Government.

On September 2, 1980, the Association made a number of proposals for non-subsidy measures of support for the shipbuilding industry. Proposals No. 9 and No. 10 recommend the banning of importation of old vessels, and No. 9 reads as follows:

Fishing vessels over five years of age should be prohibited from importation into Canada.

Proposal No. 10 says:

"All other vessels over ten years of age should be prohibited from importation into Canada."

Even so, we have the current example of an old, obsolete Norwegian whaling ship being brought in to Halifax by the Karlsen Shipping Company Ltd. and undergoing sea trials in Halifax harbour. At the same time, as I pointed out to the Minister yesterday, Ferguson Industries Ltd. of Pictou, Nova Scotia, has been attempting to secure a charter for a vessel that it has extensively modified in order to make it suitable to fit in with offshore oil and gas development and the attendant regulation. You would think that the Government and the Minister would be anxious to help an industry like this in an area of Canada that suffers from high unemployment. Apparently that is not the case.

On January 6, 1983, the Government of Canada announced a series of measures to promote Canadian shipbuilding, including the extension of custom and excise laws for goods used in resource exploration and development, from the present 12-mile limit out to the limits of Canada's Continental Shelf; the closing of loopholes to existing customs jurisdiction, resulting in a 25 per cent duty to all ships and 20 per cent for offshore drilling rigs, and the retention of the 3 per cent performance improvement grant and the extension of the 9 per cent shipbuilding industry assistance program subsidy for ships delivered by June 30, 1985.

Adjournment Debate

I want to give the Government credit for taking some constructive steps. These measures made some sense, but why is the Minister so slow in acting on other measures that are needed to protect our coastal shipping and our small shipbuilding yards? Frankly, although I like the Minister of Transport, I am sick and tired of his cordial but very often evasive and ill-informed answers on vital matters. I am also very disturbed at the obvious prejudice being exhibited against small industries in certain parts of my Province of Nova Scotia.

Recently I pointed out that one of the largest employers in Nova Scotia, Hawker Siddeley, Canada, Ltd. situated in Trenton, is not being given fair treatment. Now we have another example of a key industry, again in my constituency, Ferguson Industries Ltd., being prejudiced by the inconsistency, or perhaps even outright negligence of the Department of Transport in not putting Canadian marine interests first.

The sensible thing to do is to take some of the actions that other countries have taken to inhibit fishing vessels of over five years of age, and other obsolete vessels over ten years of age from coming into service in our waters. If nothing is done these kinds of vessels can come in under international rules and conventions in the absence of any specific ban or controls by Canada.

Our fleet is aging so we need modern and upgraded vessels. Our shipyards can do the job. As usual, it is the indifference of the Department of Transport and the carelessness of the Minister that is making it hard for them to get on with this type of program. Once more I ask the Minister and his officials to read the very sensible proposals made by the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association, and, after reading them, to do something positive.

• (1805)

The Department of Immigration, I might add, should also take a very close look at some of the practices being followed in allowing mariners from other countries to come in and take jobs from Canadian seamen. Certain companies often advertise very complex job descriptions which are not really indicative of the actual work which has to be done, and use that as a basis for taking in mariners from other countries, often the United Kingdom, to do jobs that could be done just as well and sometimes better by Canadian seamen.

I hope the Government will do something about this because it is ironic that, at a time when we are discussing the borrowing of billions of dollars, a little bit of help to some of the indigenous industries we have could generate some wealth in this country and stop the financial hemorrhaging which sees Parliament tied up in a constant parade of Borrowing Authority Bills.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take the Hon. Member's representation for review by my Minister and also by officials of the Department.

The Government's policy, as the Hon. Member knows, is to support an environment whereby shippers and shipowners have freedom to make commercial choices with a minimum of interference from Government. Surely that policy should be supported by the Hon. Member. This allows shipowners, for example, to purchase vessels from the cheapest source. This policy is consistent with Canada's international position on free trade. However, this policy of minimal interference does not prevent the Canadian Government from taking steps to protect shipping interests in Canada.

On January 6, 1983, the Government announced policies to extend and modify the coasting trade regime, thereby providing greater opportunities for Canadian flag vessels to work, increasing employment opportunities for Canadians. At the same time an extension of the customs and excise regime to the offshore was announced which will encourage the building of more ships in Canada. I was pleased that the Hon. Member gave the Government credit for that. This will support the new shipbuilding policy which extends the shipbuilding assistance program until July 1, 1985, and which provides for duty rates on ships operating in Canadian coasting activities of 20 per cent to 25 per cent of the fair market value.

With particular reference to the Rescue Kim, standard procedures must be followed by those wishing to register ships in Canada. Entry is not normally denied to ships which meet the ownership criteria and Canadian safety standards, which are among the highest in the world. The Rescue Kim has followed normal procedures and has complied with coastguard requirements.

The Government is concerned about Canadian shipping interests and, until new legislation is introduced into the House, all applications for foreign ships to work in Canadian waters, either temporarily or permanently, are being monitored closely. However, it is not the intention, through powers given by the Minister under the Canada Shipping Act or otherwise, to embark on a program of import restrictions that could be contrary to Canada's international obligations under GATT.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT—REPORT OF PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENTS. (B) POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I am thankful for this opportunity to respond to an answer I received from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during Question Period on May 20. This flows from my feelings as a sitting Member in this House representing every man, woman and child in my riding, whether they be Conservative, Liberal, NDP, Communist or Rhinoceros. That is the fundamental tenet underlining the parliamentary system.

When an election is called and the writ is handed down, everyone lines up behind their favourite candidate and goes hell bent for election to get every possible vote so that candidate can arrive here in this House. But once those candidates arrive they become Hon. Members of certain ridings, as I am the Hon. Member for Athabasca. It really upsets me when the Prime Minister of my country, holding the highest office in this land, goes from one end of the country to the other stating certain things to western producers who question the Crow rate changes because they are going to have such detrimental effects on western farmers.

• (1810)

Mr. Mills represents the cattle producers in Alberta. The Edmonton Journal of May 17 states:

> Mills said Trudeau told the prairie wheat pools and farmer and cattle industry representatives "he didn't think this was the best solution they could come up with . . . not the best economic solution".

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was admitting that the Crow was bad.

I would also like to quote from the Edmonton Journal of May 19, which states:

> At his recent Jasper dinner to discuss freight rates, Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau told agriculture industry representatives legislation to replace the Crow will not be changed to suit the West because the region "can't deliver Liberal votes in Parliament".

It is easy to be outraged at a statement from the Prime Minister of my country to western producers because they happen to vote NDP or Conservative. I see two Hon. Members sitting across the way who think that this is a big joke.

Mr. Fisher: No, no, we're just looking at you, Jack.

Mr. Shields: Come with me to my riding and speak to some of the producers who are going bankrupt. They are upset because of the Crow debate and the change in statutory freight rates which will actually increase their shipping costs by 500 per cent within three years. Just think of that, 500 per cent! Yet people have come from across Canada to march on the House of Commons because they had mortgage rates which, when they renewed them, rose by 100 per cent. In some cases, their mortgage payments doubled. They marched on this House, they made their feelings known, and legislation was brought in to help these people. They were helped by the Provinces and by this Government.

In the last two years input costs to the farmer, the producer in western Canada, indeed in all of Canada, have increased four fold or five fold. They are hit with high energy costs.

One might think that increase applies only to gasoline and diesel fuel. Of course, it does not. One of the largest single outlays of a producer is the cost of the fertilizer he uses when he plants in the spring. Where does the fertilizer come from? It comes from plants that are users of energy. The energy is being taxed. Fertilizer comes from Petrosar and some of those plants which are paying the wellhead tax, the petroleum gas revenue tax. All of those taxes are included in the price of the very basic commodity of the fertilizer.

The producer must use diesel fuel to move his machinery around. Where does that fuel come from? He pays the same amount for his diesel fuel as the trucker or anyone who drives a diesel car. There are increased gasoline taxes. The Government is hitting the farmer with all those taxes, not recognizing or considering the fact that the farmer produces from renewable resources—constantly renewing—and adds to the balance of payments of this country by something like $8 billion.

Yet the Prime Minister goes out to western Canada and says, "I know that this is not the solution", and he shrugs. "I know that this is not the best economic solution for the producers in western Canada, but they cannot produce votes in western Canada. You people cannot produce Liberal votes". That underlines a feeling in this House.

I had a totally different perception when I came to Ottawa. I felt that I would be able to work hand in hand with many of my colleagues on the other side and, indeed, many of my colleagues in the NDP. At times, we have sat on committees and have done that. It must be at the direction of the Prime Minister and a bankrupt front bench that the Government has taken this different attitude toward these matters that have come before the House for discussion.

• (1815)

The Government has now introduced a borrowing authority Bill through which something like $4 billion or $5 billion will be held in reserve to be used to buy votes. I was aware that this does happen, but I was surprised to see it done so blatantly.

It is totally bankrupt, immoral and unjustified on the part of the Prime Minister to go to western Canada and say such a thing to producers who are worrying about their very livelihood, about losing their farms, who fear they will not be able to pass their family farms on to their children because they foresee bankruptcy as a result of a change in statutory freight rates that the Government is forcing through under closure. He has the unmitigated gall to tell those people, "You cannot deliver votes, therefore the Bill will go through."

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I could not agree more with the Hon. Member when he says that once a Member arrives in the House he or she represents every Canadian in that riding. If we expand that, the Prime Minister and this Parliament represent all Canadians across Canada.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did not say what the Hon. Member suggests. If the Hon. Member spent more time in the House, and it has been quite some time since I have seen him in his seat, although I am pleased to see him here during the Adjournment Debate, he would not misquote the Prime Minister as he has today in an attempt to score a few political points. I think it is a disgrace that the Hon. Member stands in his place and misquotes the Prime Minister of Canada the way he has done tonight.

I think the Crow rate debate involves a very emotional issue. I think we can categorize it into two areas. The first is whether there should be a change. I think most organizations across Canada agree that there has to be change. Even those organizations which want no change, proceed to give five or six points they would like to see changed in the Bill. They are saying, "yes, give us the Bill but with these changes." I suggest that we have come a long way in an effort to accommodate those amendments that Canadians, especially those out west, have asked for. Whether there should be change is not negotiable. There must be change.

The second element of the Crowsnest debate is what sort of change should take place. The bigger question is what change is considered desirable. It is clear that on this question there are deeply held differences of views in the west and across Canada.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) have been candid in admitting that the original proposal was perhaps better—that is what the Prime Minister was saying out west—but that the present proposal under Bill C-155 is still considerably better than doing nothing, which is what the Hon. Member and the NDP want to do. His Party does not want to do that. Their official critic and Members speaking on that side have been saying we should bring the Bill to committee, but with changes. I do not know where the Member has been during these weeks, because he seems to be missing what his own Party is asking for. His Party is not rejecting the Bill outright. It is saying to bring in the Bill but with some changes.

I urge the Opposition to understand the need for the revision of the Crow rate to allow for the upgrading of the western rail transportation system. It is important to all Canadians that this legislation should pass.

INCOME TAX—DEDUCTIONS FOR CHILD CARE EXPENSES. (B) REQUEST THAT TAX CREDIT REPLACE CURRENT PROVISION

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to elaborate on my question of May 2 to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

The child care expense deduction is intended to help defray expenses incurred for the care of children under 14 while parent or parents are working. The system of providing some relief for child care costs through the current tax deduction is inadequate, inequitable and discriminatory. The Minister's answers were also inadequate.

A change to the child care expense deduction proposed in the April budget which removes one discriminatory aspect of this deduction creates a new and more insidious discrimination against the unemployed. Prior to the April budget any working mother could claim the deduction, regardless of the husband's presence or absence, and regardless of his activities, whether he was working, studying or unemployed. However, a man could claim the deduction only if his wife was clearly not available to care for the children, one circumstance being separation. In addition, the man had to meet stricter requirements, such as legal proof of separation. No one would deny that it is overwhelmingly women who assume child care responsibilities, or that the law was seen to reinforce the traditional view that women are responsible for child care, but as well created inequities for some fathers.

The budget proposes to remove sex discrimination from the Income Tax Act and make the child care expense deduction available equally to men and women. Once the proposed change comes into effect the spouse with the lower income will be required to claim the deduction. For a couple, both spouses must have jobs to be eligible for the deduction, unless one spouse is infirm, in an institution or a full-time student. Before the change a mother could claim the deduction if her husband was laid off or unemployed. When the law is changed neither the mother nor the father will be able to claim it if one of them is unemployed. This is the point I was trying to stress to the Minister.

With a record number of unemployed, this inequity will hurt many Canadian families who require assistance with their child care costs. Many, as I pointed out, have been unemployed for a period of over one year. The lack of child care is often a barrier for women looking for jobs. The costs of child care are even more prohibitive for people without an adequate income or for a family with both parents normally working suddenly faced with only one pay cheque.

The new budget change will be of greater aid to rich mothers. Tax deductions always benefit higher income families more than lower income families. Even though many people in lower income brackets claim this deduction, those in the higher brackets receive a bigger benefit.

An example of how this inequity comes about was mentioned in an article by George Brett in his column "Dollars and Sense" in The Toronto Star on May 2. It referred to two Ontario women, a secretary and a lawyer, each of whom has two children in day care. The low paid secretary when she makes out her 1983 tax return will get back $1,124 while the high paid lawyer will get back $1,776. Doubling the deductions simply increases this inequity and the regressivity of the tradition. Neither women receives anything close to the actual amount she spends on child care costs estimated at $12 a day or $3,200 a year.

There are other problems with the child care expense deduction besides its inherent regressivity. Many people cannot claim the deduction because of the requirement for receipts and the social insurance numbers of the care givers. A large group of parents not claiming the deduction are low income parents who are unable to get the required receipts. While receipts are readily available from day care centres and live in nannies, these types of care are the most expensive and, therefore, used by higher income parents. Lower and middle income families tend to use unlicensed less expensive babysitters who do not provide receipts. More families in the coming year will find that they cannot claim the child care expense deduction if one of them is unemployed.

We believe the Government could have chosen other mechanisms to spend money more equitably on child care. In the 1980 taxation year the cost to the federal Government in forgone revenue was approximately $54 million. This money should be spent in the most equitable manner possible.

The NDP believes that all families regardless of income must have access to affordable quality child care. Our long-term goal is a universally accessible fully funded child care system. In the interim, a refundable child care expense tax credit would be the most equitable system. This conclusion was supported by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in 1970, by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, the National Action Committee and many other groups across the country. The National Council of Welfare and the Canadian Council on Social Development have long been calling for a restructuring of the child benefit system. The Government should stop ignoring good advice and act to create a better system of contributing to child care costs.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, being very interested in child care services yourself, you will agree with this.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised four points which I would like to address very quickly. First of all she claimed that the new measure discriminates against unemployed people. For the second time I would like to clarify for her that this is not the case. The work status of the taxpayer is irrelevant. The income level of the taxpayer is the only relevant standard applied here. The taxpayer cannot claim more than two-thirds of earned income under this deduction. If a taxpayer with two children wants the full $4,000 deduction, that taxpayer must have $6,000 of declared earned income; from where it comes is irrelevant. Whether it is unemployment insurance, private income or working income is irrelevant. It must simply be no more than two-thirds of earned income. That is the only test.

Second, she said that in the past we discriminated against fathers. That was true, and that discrimination was removed in the budget.

Third, she said that the budget measures discriminate between rich and poor. I ask her to look at the other measures which are connected very directly in the budget to this one. For example the employment expense credit can only be used to its fullest impact by low income earners, by people who earn up to $16,000. People with incomes beyond that level do not obtain the full benefit of that deduction. The high Child Tax Credit is being continued and indexed fully because of our concern for lower income workers.

Finally she said that low income people cannot obtain receipts for their child care expenses. She should recognize in those circumstances that the people providing the child care will not give receipts because they do not want to pay income tax. She is asking us to approve and to continue a system of cheating. We are not about to do that.

I would like to close with the observation that I agree with her that there should be a full system of child care available from the day of infancy until a child graduates from school. I ask her to join with the Government and with other spokesmen to pressure some of the provincial Governments into accepting their responsibility. We pay half the cost of the Canada Assistance Program and the other cost sharing efforts in this regard, and it is about time people like the Honourable Bill Davis in Ontario accepted their full responsibilities under these measures.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

CROWN CORPORATIONS

ACCOUNTABILITY TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, last week the Liberal Cabinet dished out another $250 million of public funds to Canadair to continue its money losing fiasco. The Cabinet did not think that this transaction required parliamentary approval. This is one example, of many, of the failure of parliamentary accountability and thus the failure of democracy. Crown corporations for too long have escaped public and parliamentary scrutiny.

To correct this the Liberals have brought in Bill C-153, which I can only describe as feeble. The Bill does not provide for comprehensive audits and fails to improve in any substantial way the accountability of Crown corporations to Parliament.

Crown corporations must be made accountable to Parliament. Burgeoning sub-government must be controlled. In the first place, all audits should be done by the Auditor General and not by some external auditing firm. Second, the competitiveness of Crown corporations should not be enhanced by public funds. Any and all public funds allotted to Crown corporations should be detailed in the budget and then thoroughly examined by a parliamentary Committee.

The accountability of Crown corporations should not stop at the Cabinet level. Crown corporations should be made accountable to the people through the Parliament of Canada.

GARRISON DIVERSION

UNITED STATES PLANS FOR PHASED DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, earlier this week I and two other Members of this House, and two from the Manitoba legislature, travelled to Washington to meet with a number of Members of both Houses of the American Congress to inform them of Manitoba's concerns about the proposed Garrison Diversion Unit. These types of meetings are very good and will go a long way to ensuring that Manitoba's waterways are protected from the negative aspects of the current design of the Garrison Diversion Unit.

The bottom line, Madam Speaker, is that the Garrison Diversion Unit must be redesigned to remove any transboundary transfer of water.

A new wrinkle is that the U.S. Interior Department is now proposing a phased program. It maintains that in Phase I nothing would be constructed that would adversely affect Manitoba, but Phase I includes the Lonetree Reservoir which is on the Hudson Bay side of the Continental Divide.

Even more alarming is that Interior is now proposing that the fish screens proposed for the McClusky Canal not be built, thus allowing foreign biota clear sailing across the Divide. I would point out that the International Joint Commission found the screens to be an uncertain protection against the biota transfer. Now to propose no protection at all is especially alarming. Perhaps Interior is hoping this threat will scare us into accepting these screens, flawed as they may be. Manitoba's bottom line, I repeat, is that Garrison must be redesigned so as to prevent any and all biota transfer.

Madam Speaker: Order.

BANKS AND BANKING

WITHDRAWAL OF RHOSP FUNDS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, in his April budget speech the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) proposed an additional economic stimulus whereby individuals would be permitted a tax-free withdrawal of part or all of their accumulated savings in RHOSPs for the purchase of new home furnishings and appliances. This special short-term consumer incentive was intended to spur the sale of furnishings and appliances which Canadians have delayed purchasing as a result of the uncertainty caused by the recession. In the budget papers the commencement date of this proposal was stated as being April 19. However, several of my constituents have complained that when they have gone to their bank or trust company to make their RHOSP withdrawal for the purchase of furnishings and appliances, their request for the withdrawal has been denied.

The denial of these RHOSP withdrawals affects not only individuals wishing to purchase home furnishings and appliances but also affects the sales of manufacturers such as Camco Limited, which is located in my riding of Hamilton West. I would therefore strongly urge the Minister of Finance to clarify the present status of this proposal with banks and trust companies, and I would also urge the Opposition to abandon their procedural delaying tactics so that legislation for the budget measures, as well as other necessary legislation, can be passed before the summer recess of Parliament.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ATTENDANCE AT PORT DOVER PROJECT ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, earlier this month the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) held a press conference in my constituency at which he announced a $2 million recreation and fisheries project for the Port Dover Basin in front of, to quote the press, some 50 councillors and local dignitaries.

It was interesting that the regional chairman and myself were not invited to this function, although we had worked with many of the people for many years on this project. I do hope it was not because we happen to be Conservatives. However, I will take the Minister's word that it was the responsibility of the local mayor to invite the dignitaries, but I will also take the local mayor at his word that he thought it was the Minister's responsibility to invite the dignitaries.

• (1110)

In any case, Madam Speaker—don't get me wrong—I am not opposed to the Minister coming into my area, and I am certainly not opposed to him announcing a "pork barrel project". In fact the Minister can come down to my riding at any time he so wishes and announce funding for some of the projects we are trying to get going in that area. I will go even further. If the Minister would have someone in his office contact my office I will ensure that he gets a list of the projects we would like to see the Liberal Government "pork barrel" in Haldimand-Norfolk. I even promise, if he so wishes, to stay away when he comes down to make the announcements of funding.

INCOME TAX

EXPENSE EXEMPTIONS SOUGHT FOR VOLUNTARY FIREMEN AND NON-PAID COUNCILLORS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, it is high time that the Canadian Government recognized the contribution being made by volunteers like firemen who work without remuneration, and councillors who work without pay. Provisions for exemption from income tax now for such councillors is one-third of the general expense allowance. Firemen who work without wages receive no consideration whatsoever, even though they work for the good of the community.

I recommend that consideration be included in the Act for income tax purposes for such volunteer firemen who ruin their clothes and give their time, et cetera, in fighting fires in an amount of the average claimed by firemen who do accept wages and qualify for expense exemption. I also recommend that where councillors and mayors receive a sum of money in lieu of wages to cover costs attending meetings, travelling, checking hydrants, checking buildings, checking complaints, checking wild dogs, et cetera, this be acknowledged and accepted in the amount approved by their councils. MPs, MLAs, and MNAs all receive an expense allowance exemption from income tax, and Canadians who give their time freely, without pay, warrant consideration.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

REQUEST THAT BILL BE DIVIDED INTO THREE PARTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, according to news reports last evening, the Conservatives and Liberals are back together again discussing ways and means of doing away with the Crow rate. Parliament and the country know nothing of what is going on, what items are now negotiable, what new policy changes are under consideration. The only thing that is consistent in this process is the apparent support of both of the old Parties for the killing of the Crow.

This House has been asked to pass a Bill, Bill C-155, that is not yet complete. By the Minister's own statements there is more to come. He says he has important amendments to make to the Bill, yet we are being asked, in effect, to buy a pig in a poke. We are asked to hear witnesses' opinions at committee stage prior to the introduction of the amendments to the Bill, because amendments come after the evidence of witnesses. This process is totally unacceptable.

I call on the Progressive Conservatives to reconsider the cozy relationship they continue and insist upon maintaining with the Liberals on this issue, in order that all of the proposals can be placed in the legislation before us. For that to happen it is vital that the current Bill C-155 be withdrawn to be broken into three separate Bills, so we can deal with each of the three separate policy items in a full, proper, and a public manner.

INCOME TAX

DEPARTMENT'S TREATMENT OF FUR TRAPPERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, the lot of the trapper is these days not a happy one. Revenue Canada has set snares and deadfalls for him at every turn. Whereas previously the Income Tax Act was administered with some degree of leniency and common sense as far as trappers were concerned, they are now subject to the harshest impositions the Act allows.

If we cannot go back to the days of yester year, then at least a special simplified form should be made available to trappers so that they stand some chance of understanding what is required of them.

This problem, however, pales into insignificance when the question of foreign opposition to the Canadian leg hold trap comes into view. It is incumbent upon the Government of Canada to go to bat for the Canadian trappers, just as it did for the Newfoundland sealers, when this threat to the future of our fur industry is raised by foreign opposition groups.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

WILLIAMSBURG SUMMIT—EFFECT ON AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY OF MINISTER'S PROPOSAL

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arises out of my concern over his statements in the newspapers this week regarding free trade which he will promote and propose at the Summit meeting in Williamsburg. This is the same week that the task force report on the automotive industry was read and reviewed by everyone in the House. It was very important because it was written by employers of a large number of people in the country, and by union leaders who represent a large group. Could the Minister explain what might happen to the automobile industry if he proceeds with the free trade proposal which he is taking to Williamsburg?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I should explain to the Hon. Member that last November at the GATT ministerial meeting the Ministers present all undertook to resist further protectionist measures. That undertaking was made by all contracting parties to the GATT. Just recently the OECD ministerial meeting not only agreed to refrain from new protectionist measures but also agreed to dismantle, as recovery proceeded, protectionist measures now in effect. Those are commitments which have already been made by member countries. Unfortunately the record of performance is not as sterling as the commitments themselves.

It would seem to me, if the summit at Williamsburg is to have credibility, that commitments with respect to anti-protectionism ought to be conducted in a meaningful environment. For that reason I have explored with my colleagues the possibility of having some way by which members of the Summit could examine the conduct in light of the commitments that have already been made, and will undoubtedly be repeated at Williamsburg. What I am stating is not a new commitment made by any government, but commitments that will appear more credible in the eyes of the public at the present time.

CANADIAN SHARE OF MARKET

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has a commendable attitude, but he is as aware as anyone that other countries may not be quite as fair as we are. He knows that certain tariff barriers or NTBs within the automotive industry have a negative effect in the country.

We are concerned about jobs. If we go to free trade, there is a danger that American automobile manufacturers will say that it is cheaper to have one large plant in Detroit than to have one in Detroit and another in Oshawa. I would like some assurance that, instead of using the words "free trade", he would try to negotiate fair trade and at least get our fair share of employment in world trade.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not think in my press conference yesterday or in my statements that I used the expression "free trade". I talked about the danger of protectionism and, if it is continued, the danger it poses to recovery and jobs, throughout the world. I think the Hon. Member will realize that open markets for all countries are a pre-condition for recovery and also for additional jobs. There was no suggestion in anything I have said that we do anything more than resist further protectionist measures.

The Hon. Member referred to the automobile industry. I would only make one comment about that. It seems from his argumentation that he regards the report of the task force as protectionist in nature. I have not yet reached that conclusion.

• (1120)

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, that report is not protectionist, but at least it sets out a fair base from which to start. That is really what it was all about. My concern is that we are behind in new technology. We should have started five years earlier. I will acknowledge that at the present time the Government is moving very quickly in this direction, but we are behind. If the Minister moves too quickly into free trade we could lose many jobs, not only in the auto, textile, and shoe industries, but in all small businesses across Canada. Will the Minister take a little softer stand on this country going for free trade and the loss of jobs?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is again drawing conclusions that are not justified. What I have been talking about is the necessity of avoiding further protectionist measures at the present time. That is quite a different matter than to urge the further dismantling of protectionist measures that are in existence at the present time. In fact, at the OECD meeting, that commitment was made.

I have a more modest objective in terms of the Summit, that is, if commitments are made with respect to resisting further protectionism at the present time, that these commitments appear to be credible in the eyes of the public. That is precisely the point. That is why I have been arguing that, if commitments are to be made, they ought to be made with the view that they will be lived up to. Otherwise these Summits will become rather meaningless to the public of all the industrialized countries.

APPLICATION OF IMPORT QUOTA SYSTEM TO TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the same Minister. I do not necessarily accept all the arguments he makes with regard to protectionism and what flows from the GATT negotiations.

It troubles me when the Minister says we do not want to enlarge on any protectionist measure. I would ask him to be a little more definitive. For example, as the Minister knows, we have quotas on imports of textiles. That has been the measure of protection which we have offered that particular industry in Canada. Would the maintenance or expansion of either the quota within that industry, or other quotas, in his view be offensive or be a breach of the GATT negotiations and the intent thereof? In other words, when he says we do not want to enlarge our protectionist measures, would the quota system for imported products such as textiles offend that particular principle, in his view?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member realizes that even with the GATT negotiations themselves, which were finally ratified by the Government of which the Hon. Member was a member, textiles certainly had a special status, and that the industrialized countries, including Canada, the United States and the European Community, have had to take measures to protect their domestic industries against very strong competition, particularly from the developing world.

In my reply to the Hon. Member who began the Question Period, I drew a distinction between additional protectionist measures and dismantling existing protectionist measures. It is the former that I had mainly in mind with respect to the Williamsburg Summit.

PROTECTION URGED FOR MANUFACTURING SECTOR

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I am not sure the Minister has answered my question, but let me go on. If we proceed either to dismantling or to no further protectionist measures, we run the risk within certain industries, particularly consumer goods—I have already mentioned textiles; I also think immediately of furniture manufacturing, and I am sure the Minister's colleague responsible for energy would be very informed of this, coming from the riding he does—the risk or peril in which we put a large number of Canadian workers.

I would be much more comfortable about Williamsburg if I knew that within the Government of which the Minister forms a part there was a strategy for protecting or providing alternative employment for large groups of Canadians within various manufacturing sectors, particularly in central Canada. I see no sign of that, so is the Government going to Williamsburg, as the Minister has said, with respect to this anti-protectionism and the implementation of GATT agreement, without any alternative long range strategy for dealing with a situation that could very well create, as I think the Minister would agree, potentially large groups of displaced workers within the various manufacturing sectors in central Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Madam Speaker, I do not agree at all that what is being proposed leads to the displacement of large numbers of manufacturing jobs. I think that to draw a conclusion like that from what I have been saying is very unjustified. What I have been saying is that it is a very simple proposition. If we intend to nurture the recovery that is now beginning, one of the most solid ways of doing it for Canada and for other countries is to ensure that markets are kept open and that there is the possibility for Canadian exporters to sell in other markets. This is in our interests as a country because of our dependence on foreign trade and because of the large proportion of our Gross National Product that derives from foreign trade. It is in our interests to ensure that markets are kept open to the greatest possible extent.

It seems to me that it would be a great mistake for industrialized countries, having gone through the worst part of the recession and having, in my view, resisted protectionist measures to a great extent, to slide into protectionism now that the recovery is beginning. I believe that that would hinder the recovery and hinder the growth of jobs in Canada and in other countries. That is the point of view which I will be expressing at Williamsburg along with the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance.

BANKS AND BANKING

SPREAD BETWEEN INTEREST PAYMENTS AND INTEREST CHARGES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I had intended to direct my question to the Prime Minister, but in his absence I will direct it onto the Secretary of State for External Affairs since it was he whom I heard quoted this morning as indicating that, in addition to the trade matters that he has just finished discussing, the Government intended to raise the question of interest rates when the Ministers met with the world leaders. I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs might tell the House how he can justify the situation which currently exists in Canada with the inflation rate at 6.6 per cent and with chartered banks allowed to charge interest rates of 21 per cent for credit cards, 13 per cent to 14 per cent for consumer loans, 11 per cent to 13 per cent for mortgages, while paying out interest rates of only 6¾ per cent to 8 per cent on deposits.

Hon. Allan. J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I did say that it would be our intention to raise the question of high real interest rates at the Williamsburg Summit. I believe it is generally acknowledged that the continued persistence of very high real interest rates is not an obstacle but is certainly a drag on further recovery and is a very heavy burden on debtor countries. It is certainly in our interests as a country to see a drop in high real interest rates.

An old and familiar comment that I have made before is that I think there is a very strong relationship between interest rates in Canada and those in the United States. There has been a very great drop in interest rates since the Versailles Summit, for example, and there ought to be a further drop. The best way to bring that about, in my judgment, is to ensure that there is some reduction in fiscal deficits in the United States in order to make room for further drops in interest rates.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT TO REDUCE SPREAD

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, it is clear that the United States Government will pursue the policy that it believes is in its own best interests.

• (1130)

May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can explain why the chartered banks in Canada are allowed to charge between 80 per cent and 200 per cent more for the money they lend out than they are prepared to pay for the money that is deposited in their accounts?

How can the Government stand before other world leaders and ask them to take action when it will take no action at home to protect Canadian citizens against this usurious practice?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is overlooking recent Canadian history. The fact of the matter is that we have succeeded in reducing inflation very substantially in Canada. I think the Hon. Member referred to an inflation rate of 6.6 per cent. It was not so long ago that the inflation rate in Canada was close to 13 per cent, if not 13 per cent. Because of a drop in the inflation rate in Canada, in the United States there have been considerable drops in interest rates.

It is my view that what the Hon. Member is talking about is the spread that exists in deposits made by customers and the amount that is paid or sought in interest. I think the Hon. Member ought to have attended the Standing Committee of the House that examined the existence of bank profits and whether there was any extravagant or any unjustified difference or toll taken by the banks. The NDP boycotted those Committee hearings but, if they had attended, they would have concluded, as did other Members on this side of the House and in the Conservative Opposition, that there was no unjustified toll taken by the banks, and that there was no unjustified profit that called for action by the Parliament of Canada. The Hon. Member has the evidence in the form of a parliamentary inquiry to enlighten his mind on this very important point.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, after Question Period I will send the Minister a copy of our minority report and some letters from my constitutents, about bank interest rates.

THE ECONOMY

WILLIAMSBURG SUMMIT—PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will agree that the world has a new economy where workers are being replaced as old industries change and even new industries follow the quick movement of capital. An example is Atari moving to the low-wage areas of Southeast Asia. Yesterday, Robert Long of the Canadian Advanced Technological Association told a Commons Committee that even our Mitel could some day move to the United States.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister what position the Government will take and what it will tell the other leaders at Williamsburg on behalf of Canadian workers, many of whom are insecure in their jobs or are not working at all. What will the Minister say to world leaders with respect to the recovery which many Canadian workers see as a profit recovery and not a recovery that deals with high interest rates or the continuing long-term problem of people out of work?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is perfectly correct in drawing attention to the existence of very high unemployment. There is very high unemployment in North America and in Europe. That will obviously be an underlying and overlying concern at the Williamsburg Summit. The Hon. Member asks what we will be saying about jobs and unemployment, and what we will be saying on behalf of Canadian workers. I believe that what we have to do is take every possible step to ensure that the recovery that is now beginning will be maintained and sustained and will not be aborted, frustrated, or imperilled by wrong actions taken by a number of industrialized countries.

That is why I think it is important to talk about trade, it is important to talk about high interest rates, it is important to talk about energy, and it is important to talk about the debt of the developing world. Each of these matters, if not properly handled, could imperil the recovery and, I believe, imperil the jobs that are in the making if this recovery flourishes.

PROTECTION OF DOMESTIC TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and follows the line that is being approached on this side. The Minister talks about increasing exports, imports, and free or fair trade. Will he go to Williamsburg with the intention of guaranteeing the continued protection of Canada's textile industry?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that we have frequently taken steps to maintain jobs in the textile industry. In addition, we have attempted to establish adjustment programs that would make the Canadian textile industry more efficient and more competitive. The Hon. Member does not have to fear when we go to Williamsburg we will forget about the interest and support we have already shown the textile industry in Canada.

Mr. Bradley: Madam Speaker, we become concerned on this side when Hon. Members opposite say that they are going to "sunset" the textile industry out, in Canada.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER GUARANTEE PROTECTION

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, I will repeat my question. The Minister and I are aware of the number of jobs in the textile industry and the concern there is in the textile industry about guaranteed employment. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs go to Williamsburg and protect Canada's textile industry and its guarantees of continued protectionism?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the same answer applies to this question. The answer I have already given is the answer to the second question, as it was to the first.

PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—INQUIRY RESPECTING COMPLETION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on the Alaska Gas Pipeline. The Minister will know that last week the General Accounting Office, which is the U.S. congressional watchdog, issued a report which concluded that the long stalled pipeline is beset by so many financing and marketing problems in the United States and Canada that its completion, even by late 1989, is doubtful. In view of that, would the Minister care to repeat the iron-clad guarantee given by his predecessor that the line will be built?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we said that we wanted to build that line and, in fact, we have built a big part of the line in the southern part of Canada. Of course if the Americans are not interested in taking their own gas from Alaska to their own market, there is not much we can do to force their hand. It is as simple as that.

As far as the Canadian commitment to build it is concerned, we passed the law, we cleared the way, and we are ready to get it built. Of course if the Americans do not want to have their own gas in their own system because of the glut they are having—

Mr. Waddell: They will take all ours, like our oil.

Mr. Chrétien: You are waking up, Waddell! You have been very silent on that in the last six months. You were so inefficient that they kicked you out of the job of critic of that portfolio.

We have, as usual, delivered from this House what we have to do, but the American Congress and the American administration are much slower.

POSSIBILITY OF UNITED STATES RENEGING ON COMMITMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I certainly understand the difficulty in which the Minister finds himself but, if he will recall, the deal was not quite the way he said it was. The deal was that we were going to give Americans authority to take our gas for some time on the condition that they would construct a pipeline and then not have to use our gas, so we would be in a position to use it ourselves. At that time all manner of documentation, such as letters between President Jimmy Carter and the Prime Minister, and congressional resolutions, was tabled in the House.

If it is the intention, as it now appears to be, for the Americans to renege on their commitments, Canadians want to know what it is that the Minister plans to do to make sure they keep to their commitments?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, it is amusing to have an anti-American statement made by the Tories, but I will take note of it. When they are complaining about the fact that we are selling gas to the Americans at this time and imply that we should not, I should like them to consult with Premier Lougheed. He is calling me or his minister is talking to me every day to make sure we sell even more gas to the Americans than we do at this time. I said that I am willing to sell Canadian gas to the Americans, and I am not embarrassed about it. I see some Hon. Members over there will agree with me. I believe they should talk to each other because they are blaming me because I am selling too much gas to the Americans.

• (1140)

An Hon. Member: How about the answer?

Mr. Chrétien: We want to sell gas to the Americans. This is the answer. And I am glad to see that some Tories do not want me to sell gas to the Americans. I will note that and have a lot of fun noting it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

INFORMATION REQUESTED ON USE OF $30 MILLION GRANT GIVEN TO DOMINION TEXTILES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, since the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) is not in the House.

Not long ago, the Government announced that the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board was going to give a $30 million grant to Dominion Textiles for the purpose of re-structuring operations and consolidating its work force of 9,000 employees.

Since the company has already closed down its plants in St-Hyacinthe and near Brantford and is planning to close its Sherbrooke plant, and since it is also in the process of opening new plants in the United States, I would like to ask the Prime Minister to inform the House what Dominion Textiles is going to do with the $30 million the Government has collected in taxes from Canadian workers?

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, Dominion Textiles is still talking to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and as far as other requests from industries that are experiencing problems in the textile sector, everything is under control. We have experts who are analyzing the situation as it develops, the CIRB has already taken effective measures, and we have the satisfaction of seeing that a lot has already been done in this particular area, and the Canadian Institute of Clothing Manufacturers has even congratulated the Government on the measures it took a year ago.

LAY-OFFS AT DOMINION TEXTILES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, since the Minister is not saying anything, I have a supplementary.

The Government is also aware that Dominion Textiles is going to close the Galt plant in Valleyfield next month. In the spring of 1982, there were more than 300 workers in this plant. Now, there are only seventy-five, and after June 23, there will be none at all.

My question to the Minister is this: since he has given $30 million to Dominion Textiles, what is he going to do for employees who are still working for Dominion Textiles and for those who have been laid off?

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member could also have mentioned the millions of dollars that have been spent to help other companies in the textile sector. My answer to the Hon. Member is that I will prepare a complete report on other measures that have been taken with respect to Dominion Textiles, and in fact, the Department is now talking to Dominion Textiles to see what can be done, not only for the company itself but also for its employees. In fact, a year ago, a series of programs were set up under which hundreds of employees were able to continue working.

ENERGY

FLUCTUATIONS IN ONTARIO GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Just before the holiday weekend last week, gasoline in Ontario was selling at many service stations for 24 cents and 25 cents a litre. Prior to the holiday weekend they jumped the price up to 45 cents to 49 cents a litre, depending on the station and the company. What justification can the Minister and his Department give for this increase of over a dollar a gallon in the price of gasoline just prior to the holiday weekend?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we do not control the price of gasoline at the pumps. There is a big fluctuation in the market at this time because there is a war between the different companies trying to keep their shares of the market. If the Hon. Member thinks there was collusion among the companies to increase the price just before that long weekend, he can always ask the question of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who has authority to investigate such matters. We do not control the price at the pump. We control the price at the wellhead. I am happy to see that the Hon. Member does not want the market forces to decide the price, that he would like to have the price controlled by the Government. Unfortunately, however, at the pump level price is not controlled by my Department.

IMPACT OF TAXES ON PRICES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my concern is that the Government has too much control over the price of gasoline, that Government has interfered too much in the market. This is why we are having the problem with the price of our gasoline. Why can the Americans buy gasoline from Canada and sell it so much cheaper in the United States of America than can the service stations in Canada? This is government interference, with some 60 cents per gallon of federal tax on a gallon of gasoline.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is wrong on his assumption. I would like to tell him that when we made the deal on oil with the producing Provinces we decided to have a Canadian price for Canadians, and at that time there was no provision for the ad valorem tax added to the price in Ontario.

In fact the Ontario Government is receiving more money out of a litre of gas than the federal Government or the Government of Alberta. The energy plan was not made in such a way to inflate the treasuries of Quebec and Ontario, but they have added this ad valorem tax on top of everything. This is why the prices are higher in Ontario than in the State of New York. However, where there is no provincial sales tax, like the Province of Alberta, the price is cheaper than in American States. In Alberta, as in Ontario, the federal Government takes exactly the same amount of money.

DISARMAMENT

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S POSITION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Apparently in his telephone conversation with the President of the United States, when he attempted to put a different face on his interview with The Toronto Star, the Prime Minister suggested that his remarks were taken out of context and he, indeed, read an excerpt from The Toronto Star yesterday. At the risk of living somewhat dangerously in assuming that everything coming from the office of the Prime Minister is the truth, I would like to quote from the official release from his office of the text of that interview. It sets forth what the Prime Minister correctly put on the record yesterday, on page 8, and I quote:

> Basically, once again, they are demonstrating against what they see as the policy of an American president who has rightly or wrongly been perceived as warlike, or so hostile to the Soviet Union that he cannot be trusted to look for peace.

However, in that same paragraph, as the Prime Minister referred to his text, there appeared this further sentence, and I quote:

> As I said earlier, unfortunately President Reagan and some of the people around him, have given some justification for those fears.

Is the Prime Minister saying that that last sentence was taken out of context?

TELEPHONE CONVERSATION BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the next question then logically follows. Does the Prime Minister stand by that statement, that, unfortunately, President Reagan and some of his people around him have given some justification for those fears, that is, the fears with respect to the warlike stance, or in his telephone conversation with President Reagan did he apologize for making that statement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, to the last question. There was no call for an apology. President Reagan knows what I think about these things. I spoke quite openly when I went to Washington. I spoke to Vice President Bush and to President Reagan. I indicated that they had to appear much more interested in successful negotiations than they did. I said in essence what I did to The Toronto Star. The record speaks for itself. I only wish the Americans would take as much interest in what I say as the Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S VIEWS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Of course, Madam Speaker, I am always intensely interested in everything the Prime Minister says. Would he please, for the benefit of those of us in the House today, explain what words or actions on the part of President Reagan justified him in describing President Reagan's words or actions as justifying the arousal of the fears of the individuals he was speaking about? Just what did the President do or say which aroused the fears which the Prime Minister feels are justified?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member can refer to the rest of the transcript. If he looks at page 9 and page 10, for instance, and other pages, he will see the answer to his question.

AIRPORTS

STEINBACH, MAN.—APPLICATION FOR UPGRADING

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Last year the Minister of Transport announced a program for upgrading of secondary airports and said that those airports, through the upgrading, could become part of the airport infrastructure of Canada. Applications were made. The Government, of recent date, has been stating that these projects should go ahead, that they should be "fast-tracking", I am sure a word that the Minister of Transport understands, and that red tape should be cut.

There has been an application on the Minister's desk from Steinbach, Manitoba, airport for months and months, yet we cannot seem to either fast-track the project or cut through the red tape. Could the Minister indicate whether the program is still valid and whether a decision has been made?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am having a bit of a hard time understanding to which one of the programs reference is being made. There are a number of them. The Hon. Member for Provencher might be referring to the Small Airport Program, the $5 million a year which I have at my disposal for small airport development. If that is the case, then I can report to him fully on what use was made of the money in the past year. If Steinbach made an application and did not receive satisfaction, I will also look into that matter to find out the reason.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW APPLICATION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): I would like to ask a brief supplementary question of the Minister of Transport. If he has that plethora of programs for small airports, I would ask him to reconsider the words he used and commitments that he has made to a number of these operators to see whether or not the programs which he has in place cannot be used, when applicants make a great deal of effort and then do not receive a word from the Minister in time.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Yes, I will look into that matter, indeed. However, the Hon. Member is partly responsible for the confusion I am in, because in the next part of the sentence in his question he referred to the recovery project program following the budget, which is an entirely different program. Therefore, I am justified in not being too sure what the Hon. Member meant.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just help Steinbach. That's all we ask.

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS PROGRAM

ADAPTATION OF PICTOU HARBOUR CAUSEWAY FOR RAIL TRAFFIC

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Transport a question with respect to another infrastructure program in his Department which would perhaps fit in with the Special Projects Recovery Program. The Minister, being an expert on railways, knows that the viability of the Oxford-Stellarton subdivision in Nova Scotia, of the CN, which is not only a valuable part of the railway network but also a possible alternative in the event that the main line is disrupted, would be greatly improved if the existing causeway over Pictou Harbour were modified to accommodate this rail line. Over the years the CN has deliberately neglected to keep a large bridge in repair, which is primarily the basis of its application before the Railway Transport Committee of the CTC to abandon this important subdivision.

I have already spoken to the ministerial officials in a preliminary way. Would the Minister consider allocating some of the funds from the program to which he referred earlier to assist in making this important modification which would be of great benefit to the railway transport network in Nova Scotia?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is obvious that the poor Minister of Transport cannot follow all the aspects of all transportation matters in the country.

Some Hon. Members: He doesn't care.

Mr. Pepin: It is physically impossible to do that. I wish my hon. friend would speak to me instead of speaking to officials before he comes out with these questions. However, in my usual pleasant fashion I will, of course, pay a lot of attention to the case he just mentioned.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, now that the Minister has indicated the proper channels of communications, I will do that. I always thought that he would have preferred to have a little bit of preliminary work done. I would always assume that his officials would tell him what was going on, saving time for both of us.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

REPORT OF PLANS TO INSTALL REACTORS IN NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I am sure the Minister is aware that many Canadians, particularly in the North, are concerned about the increasing volumes of gas and oil being exported to Chile, Japan, and the United States at costs far below what they have to pay in the North. However, it has now been revealed that the Minister, along with the AECL, has plans to put Slowpoke III reactors in northern Canada. I wonder if the Minister would tell the House in exactly what communities it is being planned to put those Slowpoke III reactors.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I do not know about this question of the Hon. Member. I will check. There is nothing—

Mr. Epp: The reactor is named after the Government.

Mr. Chrétien: I will check and report to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, it has always been my assumption that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had responsibility for the AECL, and they certainly do have these plans well evolved.

REQUEST THAT INQUIRY BE CONDUCTED INTO WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would he tell the House, in light of the enormous amount of highly radioactive waste which comes from Slowpoke III nuclear reactors, whether or not he would be prepared to have a full public inquiry into waste disposal for nuclear reactors should this proposal from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and AECL go ahead?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member wants or does not want such a development in northern Canada. Concerning the problem of disposal of radium waste, there is some consultation taking place at this time between ourselves, the provincial Government and different agencies, to find a mechanism whereby to dispose of waste safely and rapidly. I do not think that there is need for a public inquiry.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

OPENING OF MAIL—INQUIRY RESPECTING PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Government House Leader in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue. He will recall that last week I asked the Minister of National Revenue whether or not it was the intention of the Government to recommend for inclusion in the new Customs Act, which the minister indicated was ready, a provision for the opening of first class mail, for the purpose of finding contraband, narcotics and other things. The Minister did not answer that part of my question. Would the Government House Leader now indicate whether that particular provision is included within the new Customs Act?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I was present last week when the question was asked of my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, and I heard his answer to it. I think that it was a wise answer. He said that he would take the suggetion made by the Hon. Member under serious consideration and that it would greatly help to include that if we had an indication that we could get the Bill through the House before the end of June. I think the suggestion is worth while considering.

We would very seriously consider including it in the Bill provided we have the support of the Hon. Member's Party. I know the Hon. Member was previously Minister of National Revenue. He cares for that disposition. With his support, if we can get the Bill through the House before the end of June, there are indeed good chances that the legislation would include such disposition.

REQUEST THAT AMENDING LEGISLATION BE INTRODUCED

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have nothing to do with the question of the Bill going through before the end of June, but I am naturally very concerned about its provisions, as are many other people in the country, not just with respect to mail opening but also with respect to a whole host of changes. The entire commercial community in Canada is very interested in those revisions which, his colleague will tell him, are long overdue.

Would the Minister undertake in the House to have the Bill at least introduced for first reading so that, whether it passes by the end of June or whether it comes on later this session, whatever the case may be, the interested constituencies in the country will have a chance to study it? It is a large Bill, so I am given to understand, and it contains some rather far-reaching revisions.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Certainly, Madam Speaker, I am willing to discuss the suggestion with the Minister of National Revenue. However, once again, it would greatly help if, on his side, the Hon. Member would try to convince his House Leader to make it possible for the legislation to pass through the House as early as possible, if it is important and if it is so urgent.

HIGHWAYS

YELLOWHEAD HIGHWAY RECONSTRUCTION—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I know the Minister is aware of the significance, the importance, of the Yellowhead Highway in western Canada. I know that he is aware of the various representations which have been made by the Yellowhead Highway Association to his Department for assistance in funding the reconstruction of this very important second Trans-Canada Highway.

In light of the budget and the Special Recovery Capital Projects Fund, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport if he has made any representations to his colleague, the Minister of State for Economic Development, as to whether the Yellowhead Highway reconstruction could be included as a part of that program.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Through Saskatoon.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, concerning the first part of the question, I am indeed aware of the importance of the Highway. A number of years ago it was considered that the participation of the federal Government was not essential in this particular venture, substantiated by the wealth of the western Provinces and the fact that this was not part of the primary Trans-Canada highway.

The answer to the second part of the question is, no, it did not come up as one possibility under the Recovery Program.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: First you take away our trains, now our highways. What is next?

Mr. Trudeau: You.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER SUPPORT PROJECT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, 47 per cent of the potential megaproject development will occur within close proximity to this Highway. In light of the fact that it now carries as much traffic as the main Trans-Canada Highway, and in light of the fact that it could generate a significant number of jobs, would the Minister not reconsider and make representations to his colleague to have this included as part of the special recovery projects?

• (1200)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am glad that my hon. friend acknowledged the fact that there were a great number of other projects in the West that are being accommodated by the recovery program.

Indeed, in the selection of transportation projects there were choices made in different regions of Canada. In other words, the federal Government has not done the same thing in every region. We went out to select what we considered most urgent in each part of the country. It happens to be quite different between one region and the other. In the West there were a great number of airports which requested more funding over a period of time. A lot of attention was given to Fort McMurray Airport, Regina, and others in the West. There will be a great improvement of airports in the West following this program.

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SEXUAL ASSAULT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-685, to amend the Criminal Code (reasonable grounds).

He said: Madam Speaker, I have the honour to introduce a Bill which would make amendments to the Criminal Code provisions respecting sexual assault in two key areas.

One amendment would eliminate the defence of "honest but unreasonable belief", which was accepted by the Supreme Court of Canada in Regina versus Pappajohn, and require that this defence be based only upon reasonable grounds.

The second major amendment in the Bill would prohibit any evidence of previous sexual history of the complainant with a person other than the accused and make it very clear that "no" must always mean "no".

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,541 and 4,807.

[Text]

SATELLITE RECEIVING DISH FOR ELBOW LAKE MINIMUM SECURITY FACILITY

Question No. 3,541—Mr. Friesen:

1. Did the Government purchase the satellite receiving dish for the Elbow Lake minimum security facility and, if so (a) at what cost (b) what will be the total cost for installation (c) on what date will the dish be delivered?

2. Is it government policy to purchase such satellite receiving dishes for other federally operated penitentiaries and, if so, what is the justification for such expenditure?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

1. Yes. (a) $21,000 for equipment (which has since been recovered from the contractor). (b) Not applicable. (c) Delivery was never made.

2. It is not a general government policy to provide satellite receiving dishes for television and radio reception purposes at all federal penitentiaries. However, the CRTC Resource Development Installation Licence Order clearly applies to forestry camps such as Elbow Lake.

CFB GAGETOWN—HARVESTING OF TREES

Question No. 4,807—Mr. Howie:

1. In the fiscal year ending March 31 (a) 1981 (b) 1982 (c) 1983, how many permits were issued for the harvesting of trees at CFB Gagetown?

2. In each year (a) what was the total revenue from this operation (b) was reforestation required in any instance (c) were woodlot management techniques practiced or were there instances of "high grading"?

3. Were public tenders called in all cases and, if not, for what reason?

4. (a) Who determined what areas each permit holder could harvest (b) what criterion was used to determine which permit holder could harvest the most profitable areas of most marketable timber?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): 1. (a) 1981—732, (b) 1982—539, (c) 1983—800.

2. (a) 1981—$457,939; 1982—$337,414; 1983—$395,040. (b) No. (c) Yes. Woodlot management techniques were practiced but there were also instances of highgrading due to poor markets for hardwoods.

3. No. Public tenders were not called in all instances because, over the years, operators have established road networks in designated areas and have harvested the wood located in these sections of the base.

4. (a) The District Ranger. (b) The criterion used is which operators have traditionally worked in the given area.

Mr. Smith: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION'S REPORT RESPECTING ALBERTA

The House proceeded with consideration of objections to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Alberta.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, I would like to comment first of all, and I believe it is the general opinion of my fellow Members from the Province of Alberta, on the high quality of the Commission's work. I think that this time, we are generally satisfied with the commissioners' proposals, and it is certainly the best report we have had on electoral redistribution in the Province of Alberta.

[English]

I know the commissioners. I may say that they have used some of the political sense that we hope all commissioners have. One of the great difficulties in the past has been that those who know their constituencies best, the Members, were the least listened to concerning their knowledge of such factors as ease of communication, general representation, cohesiveness and interest in the community. These are all factors which I, and I believe the majority of Members, deem far more important than just the mere numbers indicated in census reports, which are quite often too outdated by the time recommendations come into force in the actual field to be meaningful in the representation of the people of Canada.

At a later occasion a few incidents will be raised by some of my colleagues. I trust that this will not simply be a transfer of debate on this report aux calendes grecques, in other words, some six or eight months from now. I rather suspect, with the dilatory interest the Government has shown in matters of this kind, that it will be put off and delayed, thus making a redistribution more irrelevant as time goes on.

As I indicated, a few points will be raised in regard to one or two constituencies. It is not with that particular point that I want to deal. As far as my constituency is concerned, I am more than satisfied with the geographical distribution because the Commissioners in Alberta have finally paid attention to recommendations made by many others and myself. One former Commissioner had told me on occasion, "You have had three kicks at the cat." But he did not pay any attention. The urban communities are chosen boundaries that are well recognized thoroughfares so that the people affected have an easy indicator as to whether they are in one constituency or another. Too often boundaries are traced through a zigzagging of streets which make no real political sense.

On this occasion I believe that the Commissioners acted with practical wisdom. I notice as well that they have given reasons for their changes. I fought a long time to have reasons included in decisions. In fact, there is a Bill presently on the Order Paper which I filed in April, 1980. It goes even further since it recommends the disqualification of a report if the Commisioners fail to respond to the representations that are made and do not include the reasons for having made changes.

I trust that I will have the opportunity to debate that Bill and put it forward again so that it will be accepted. It imposes no additional burden on the Commissioners. Under the first two redistributions that I have been through, I must say that the Commissioners' reports were simply flat-footed statements as to changes. There were no reasons given for those changes. The burden was on members to raise the objections. The Commissioners were under no obligation to listen to any recommendations. Frankly, we have some terrible dogs' breakfasts in many of the Provinces. It was so bad in one case after the 1971 redistribution, the proposals were so uniformly bad that, as one of my colleagues, who is no longer here, said, they had been gerrymandered by ignorance and incompetence. I do not say that on this occasion. I think people have learned. Therefore, I want to talk about another aspect within the limited time I have. I believe it is 45 minutes and three of us are to speak. I will take 15 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

• (1210)

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) joins me absolutely in the general representations I am now going to make. This redistribution is leading to a total of 310 seats in the House. While the redistribution is carried out competently, the Commissioners were set the wrong tasks. This House should not have its seats increased to 310.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert: That is supreme nonsense. I could not think of any more ideotic thing, with all due respect, Mr. Speaker, than this sort of formula being included in legislation, after the first aborted attempt was made to set redistribution back on the rails in the early 1970s. To respond, shall we say, to a certain amour propre in certain quarters, it was decided not to reduce the number of seats in certain Provinces but, in fact, to increase the numbers in the Province of Quebec as a sop to that caucus, despite a considerable decline in population there. Quebec gets 79 seats out of this redistribution. That is four more seats, even though the population has declined. I hear Government backbenchers say that the people want that and that "we are going to be more". But that means there are four more frogs—that is the wrong term, I mean tadpoles.

Mr. Ouellet: Who said that?

Mr. Lambert: I said that. I am sorry. My simile is not wanted that way.

[Translation]

Well, if the House insists, I will come right out and say it. These are four little fish which have been added to a bigger pond. Who is going to notice? I think Hon. Members should take the trouble to listen to what I am saying, because I think the Hon. Member is a little sensitive. It is not an expression I use to be denigrating.

So I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau) that I remember when my colleague from Red Deer (Mr. Towers) was talking about maintaining the number of Members in the House at its present level—although we believe that even that number is no longer reasonable if the House is to be at all effective—that he said: All right, Quebec is getting four more, but we cannot complain, because they are getting only one-seventh of a total additional number of twenty-eight. So they are getting one seventh! Some quota—twenty-four to four. And then they tried to sell the public on the fact that it would have more power in the House because it would have four more Members. That was the reason! However, right now there is no good reason for increasing the number of Members in the House. In view of the progress that has been made in communications technology, and the latest report by Madam Speaker in this area should be read in this connection . . . We have a budget of $4 million for the OASIS electronics and computer system. Two or three years from now, when the program is operational, Members will be able to review any issue of Hansard just by pushing a button. Members can communicate with their riding offices and send letters to their ridings through this system. So why should we increase the number of Members in the House?

Mr. Speaker, I ask you: Are we going to have to use the so-called ladies' gallery to accommodate our Members? We might take down the wall in front, and then the Chair would need binoculars. Are we going to build another balcony or are we going to lower Members from the ceiling? Or are we going to put the Speaker's chair on the mezzanine upstairs, right under the ceiling? And then at question period, twenty-eight more Members will ask to be recognized. During debate, we will have twenty-eight more Members trying to take the floor. Perhaps the party whips could look into this. Do they have any plans over in the Wellington Building or does the Government have any plans for building on the site of the former Rideau Club and where the American Embassy now is to house twenty-eight Members? On top of that, ten years from now, a further increase in the number of Members in the House is expected, unless Canadians forget to have children and the population decreases.

All I can say is that it is high time we put a stop to this and started reviewing the situation. We are already spending over $140 million on administration in this place, including salaries and the rest. Does anyone know how much one Member's office would cost? Well, we are now spending more than $85,000 on one Member's salary, including his or her riding office, plus all expenses and trips and the rest. Is multiplying these expenditures going to be of any real benefit to the Canadian people? I do not think so. Considering this technological age and our means of communications, whether communicating person-to-person or by telephone, by computer or by plane, if a Member feels he or she needs additional help, it is easy enough to hire another assistant or another qualified secretary. And it costs a lot less and is a lot more effective than electing one more Member with everything that entails.

Mr. Speaker, since there are other Members who would like to speak, I merely wish to say that I urge the Government, my party Leader and the Leader of the New Democratic Party to agree to stop this redistribution, not because the Commission's work is unsatisfactory but for the very simple reason that we do not need redistribution at this time, unless perhaps to reduce the number of Members in this House. Our work would be a lot more effective. The Government Whip is aware that the committee system has been changed, that is, the number of Members sitting on committees has been reduced. Last year, when we were still operating under the old Standing Orders, committee work was done by from sixty-five to eighty Members, more or less.

Now, I think the Hon. Whip will agree that as far as committee work is concerned, except for special committees or task forces, only forty-five Members are involved. Why do we need any more Members? Thirty more in the House? That makes no sense at all, and it is going to cost us the earth and make this House an administrative mess. And what about the dignity of this House, Mr. Speaker? Will it have to look like a football stadium? I hope not. And I also hope that we shall continue this debate.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to take part in the debate today on the question of electoral boundaries and how it will affect the Province of Alberta. As the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has already enunciated, the Commissioners have done an excellent job in their task. A number of Members of Parliament will be speaking on this subject. They will have some questions to put forward and some comments to make with regard to suggested changes they would like to see made, but the general feeling has been positive about the changes.

I am a Member of Parliament who represents a large, sprawling rural riding which at present contains 113 communities, villages and hamlets. My riding will become about 15 per cent larger. In spite of that, I welcome those new constituents. I feel privileged in representing a rural constituency as opposed to an urban one. It is more in keeping with my intentions of knowing the people.

However, I seize this opportunity to put on the record virtually the same concerns that were expressed by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West. I believe the House has long passed the optimum time to ask the logical question: How big should this institution become? Surely it should not be the perspective that every ten years the numbers of Members of Parliament increase. Surely we should not follow that road, fast-tracking into history without ever asking the question: When do we stop having a bigger and bigger Parliament?

The Electoral Boundaries Commission did its task well. It was under the direction of Parliament. The Commission was told the number of seats it had to carve out of Canada. We must ask a fundamental question: Is there some purpose or meaning to having 282 Members in the House of Commons? If there is one person in the chair and one person standing and speaking, it means that there are 280 persons listening. Is Canada better served by this? In fact, if we consider that the Speaker is listening also, then one person is speaking and 281 are listening. Will we be better served as Canadians when we have a House with 310 Members, with one speaking and 309 listening? How can we expect to sell to Canadians the idea that there is some advantage to that?

It must be recognized that the present system was put in place when Members of Parliament travelled from the Prairies, from British Columbia and from the outreaches of Atlantic Canada to Ottawa by train, when campaigns were conducted on horses and buggies. Also it must be recognized that today we live in the era of electronics. I visited the office of a Senator in the United States. He was able to a type letter, push a button on the typewriter and have it transmitted to Portland, Oregon, to be signed with his signature by a signing machine there. Thus, when someone wrote to him to complain about the post office, within two days they had received an answer indicating what kind of service he was trying to create. This type of technology can put out massive amounts of mail. We can provide extended use of telephone calls. We can virtually go anywhere in Canada within less than a day's time. We can reach the more populated areas in four hours to five hours. Most of central Canada can be reached in 80 minutes or 90 minutes. Surely the theory that the population of the House of Commons has to grow larger and larger does not make sense.

At this point I want to emphasize that as the House becomes larger and larger, the concept of Parliament becomes less and less. I say this because each of us who represents a constituency will be able to speak that much less and will be able to ask fewer questions. Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party will be able to present fewer petitions because there will be the same number of hours in a day and the same number of days in a week.

Mr. Blaikie: We will just keep presenting them.

Mr. Malone: Well, the only way we will change that is to adopt the metric week, the ten-day week and the 100-hour day. If we increase the numbers of Members, then by the pure bureaucracy of Parliament itself we will guarantee that the House of Commons is run by the executive council or by Cabinet. But we want a parliamentary situation where the Crowfoots, the Bow Rivers and other constituencies across the country have input in the House of Commons. We do now want to have a situation similar to the one in our mother Parliament in Westminster which now has 600 Members of Parliament, some of whom scarcely have an opportunity to speak in a month's period of time. That system is not acceptable.

• (1230)

Moreover, there are optimum sizes for decision-making groups. Once you get beyond 200 or 300 persons involved in making a decision, you are long past the optimum size for the House of Commons. If we are going to make joint decisions, the size of the House of Commons must be compatible with the objects of decision-making. We should not in every census period continually increase the size of this House without ever pausing to ask the basic and fundamental questions as to the size of House we should have with regard to the purpose by which this House is to serve the people of Canada.

I submit to the Government House Leader that before we go through this exercise again, we should make a study of how large this Parliament ought to be. There should be a new fundamental principle by which we guide ourselves with regard to where we put the boundaries. The automatic presumption that we will grow larger without end and without ever asking the question as to whether the public of Canada will be better served by having more Members would demonstrate that we as parliamentarians lack the skill to ask the fundamental questions in problem solving.

If there are to be more Members of Parliament, there will be less time for each to speak. We will have an executive council running this place. Backbenchers will simply rubber-stamp the decisions that are brought forth.

The question ought to be looked at in a number of ways. Perhaps Members representing densely populated constituencies could be granted a larger staff. Members in very large rural areas could be granted more money so that they could have more than one constituency office. Constituents would then have greater accessibility to their Member of Parliament. In this day and age with modern technology, just because the population of this country grows larger, it is not necessary that the House of Commons grow larger as well.

It would be wrong for us to move as Great Britain has moved. I fall the Members of Parliament in Westminster wanted to be in the House of Commons at the same time, there would not be room. We remember occasions such as when Ronald Reagan, the President of the United States, visited Canada, and another time during the constitutional debate when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was going to speak and answer questions being raised by the public and the Opposition Members. There was intense interest in those speeches because of the importance the nation attached to them. Every seat in this House of Commons on both occasions was occupied. How can duly elected Members of Parliament feel comfortable about the fact that if we want to go to the House of Commons to listen to a very important speech we may arrive a moment too late and the House of Commons would be full? That would be unacceptable.

More important is the question of what size is optimum for decision making. There is also the fear that as we grow larger and larger we will have more and more government by executive. The backbencher will become increasingly less important. There will be less and less time for Members to ask questions and make speeches. The power of the executive will grow and balloon and grow and balloon to the point where it will become all-powerful. Parliament will be virtually destroyed.

My colleague for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), who also represents a large rural riding, wants to put some thoughts on the records, so I will wrap up very quickly. I recommend that the House of Commons embark—and I hope Government Members put this initiative forward—on a system which asks basic questions. First, how large should this place be? In my riding there are 113 villages and hamlets. I burn up a car every two years—figuratively, not literally. I travel about 150,000 kilometres. We must therefore ask what services there should be to facilitate a Member serving a large rural riding, and what extra staff is required for urban ridings.

Mr. Keeper: You should have expressed that in miles.

Mr. Malone: The NDP Members want me to talk in terms of miles. I can tell them that in my riding I have miles and miles of miles and miles. We must ask what services are needed for Members and what is the optimum size. The botton line question is, how will Canadians be better served? No other question matters but that one. How can we get the best representation for Canadians? Fast-tracking toward a mammoth House is simply an expense and will lead to less service. That is certainly an unacceptable route.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to put a few thoughts on the record today. I begin by saying how pleased I am with what has happened with the changes in boundaries as they affect my riding. In my case, there were absolutely no changes. That is a good way to start. I am pleased with my riding and I would like it to stay that way. I will do my best to keep it that way for a long time.

It is important, when you look at the part of the country I represent, that the riding stay the same. That is certainly the case in my area. It is unique. It is an area set aside unto itself, an area that geographically must stick together. To separate any community would be to take it out of that real, live, living part of that central riding and put it into an area in which it would not fit comfortably. I can refer to several areas such as Fort Vermilion and La Crete. If you pull those out of my riding, the only other riding in which they would fit would be the neighbouring riding of Athabasca. It could only be reached by air or by travelling a distance of some 600 miles from the riding of Athabasca. That was the situation many years ago when Athabasca was represented by Dr. Yewchuk. At that time he represented that part of my district. It must have been very difficult for him and the people he represented in terms of traditional communication.

We have the example as well of an Indian reserve in another riding that is part of a group of Indian bands which I represent. The Band's head office is in my riding, but this particular band is represented by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). I know that he represents them well and he is happy to represent them, but from time to time I have visited with the band—I visited recently with Chief Johnson—and we had quite a discussion because I am already working on many of the concerns that affect that band as they affect the other bands in my riding. We can see that there is a natural link there.

• (1240)

Going to the southern part of the riding there is the area of Valleyview and McLennan. There again a unique pocket exists that needs to be part of the Peace River district.

Both of the Members who have spoken today about this particular Bill have dealt with the concerns on both sides of the House about increasing the number of Members we seem to be heading toward. I certainly have some concern about that, but today I want to talk about the impact that riding boundary changes could have on northern Alberta.

When talking about the formation of a riding, several factors must be taken into account. The first factor is, of course, the geographical factor, and I have referred to that. Things like roads become very significant, because roads are the line of transportation, the communication route that, ordinary people tend to use. Things like rivers and lakes and, of course, mountains become natural barriers and those barriers must be considered when making sure that various ridings work together and fit together.

Another factor to be taken into account is that of social concerns. Those concerns take in a whole variety of things, and include, for example, business trade. In the North, there are very defined business routes and many communities shop within other communities. They are all tied in very closely. I believe that must be considered when designing new ridings and new riding boundaries. Another concern that, although it may not be significant in some parts of Canada, certainly is significant in northern Alberta is the whole concept of sports. We tend to have natural boundaries within which we compete, whether they be hockey teams, baseball teams or various other sports such as curling or golfing. Those concerns too must be considered in terms of boundaries.

Still another concern is that of industry. In a large agricultural community where much of the shopping and much of the industry needs are found within a certain area, it is obvious that those areas should be brought together and related together.

A third factor to be taken into account is communications. Radio stations, newspapers, television, become very significant within a riding because areas that are close together tend to communicate within that specific area as is certainly the case in my riding. There are certain newspapers which are distributed within my riding and, therefore, to have a certain portion of that riding taken away would make it difficult both for the Member and for the people within that area to keep communications flowing on an ongoing basis.

Of course there is the fourth factor which must be taken into account, that of historical concerns. These include agricultural and business relationships, family relationships, traditional communications, and so on. The ethnic groups must be considered as well. There are various ethnic groups living in certain areas which want to be included in the same area in terms of the same representation in the House of Commons.

The last factor which I think must be taken into account is the future of the area. This is what I consider to be a really important factor regarding riding adjustments in the northern part of Alberta, because we in the North work together, have many dreams in common, and therefore there are many natural tendencies which make us want to work together as a unit. We want our future growth and development to be considered in the choosing of riding boundaries.

When talking about the northern part of Alberta, I think that one of the big concerns I have is that the new riding boundaries, as they are selected, would tend to create splinters or little segments coming away from the central boundaries around Edmonton rather than create ridings which are truly northern ridings. We, of course, want ridings which are made up of that particular geographical region of our part of the Province. We do not want a little piece taken from the North and added to the South just to create a more balanced population, because we really want to see that we can all continue to be represented in much the same manner.

My riding is very much like the riding of my colleague, the Hon Member for Athabasca. We have similar concerns, similar worries, similar problems simply because we face similar conditions and similar circumstances. I am speaking particularly of the growth potential which exists in the north of Alberta. The agricultural sector is still trying to develop new land. I have mentioned this to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) in terms of our concern about the provision of railways and rail services for some kind of assistance to get grain from some of the farms into the central elevators which are, in many cases, 120 miles away. That is one concern that we both have because that is a concern which is common to the northern part of Alberta.

Another concern is respecting oil and gas, because there are oil and gas deposits in my particular region and, as result of that, those concerns tend to be common to a large number of people in that particular area. Those concerns may not be the same concerns as those of people in the southern part of the region.

The third resource which is present in the north of Alberta is forestry. Again this is a very common interest which tends to bring that area together. Of course there are other resources such as the tar sands which we all hope will go ahead some day soon. They were going ahead rather well before implementation of the National Energy Program, and of course right now everything has slowed down a little bit and there are some concerns about that. The glass sands as well are present in my riding and they will be developed along the Peace River in the next little while. Things are starting to happen with regard to glass sands.

You can see, Mr. Speaker, that all these resources are unique to the region of northern Alberta and therefore tend to make the interests of northern Albertans unique. Our relationships and communications are unique. As a result of that, we want to be certain that when there is another riding in the North, it is representative of those particular concerns. We do not want to see the people of northern Alberta become splinter groups.

There are many communities in northern Alberta which I think demonstrate what I am trying to point out. These communities include Edson, which is of course represented by the Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), Valleyview, Whitecourt, all communities that tend to be areas that are based upon resources, whether they be agricultural or oil and gas. There is a sort of camaraderie that exists between those communities which, though they are fairly close to the City of Edmonton, relate very well to a community like High Level, which is very near the territorial border in the northern part of the riding of Peace River. There is a common thread that runs through them all and allows them to relate to communities like Fort McMurray and Boyle in Athabasca.

So I think that it is absolutely essential that in forming these new riding boundaries, these kinds of concerns be taken into consideration. Of course, as I mentioned in the early part of my comments, I am very pleased because in the riding which I represent, that of Peace River, the boundaries have not been changed. That allow us some flexibility to make certain that the boundaries do reflect that uniqueness.

The reason I am speaking today is that the motion which has been put forward relates to the riding of Athabasca. I just want to read into the record the particular concerns which exist, and they fall under the fourth concern of this particular motion. One of the objections reads:

4. In establishing the boundaries of the electoral district of Athabasca the Commission failed to give adequate consideration to demographic factors and revised the boundaries between the ridings of Athabasca and Lakeland in such fashion as to cause the population of the riding of Athabasca to fall well below the provincial average and the population of the riding of lakeland to increase to a level well above the provincial average.

That is essentially what I am trying to address, Mr. Speaker.

I see that you are signalling that my time is now up. I would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for affording me the opportunity of speaking. I look forward to future changes that will be made, and my main concern, which I am pleased to have had the opportunity to put on the record, is that we would like to be certain that those new ridings in the North are in fact northern ridings and represent the uniqueness that I think exists in northern Alberta.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is informed that there was an understanding of the House that debate would be limited to 45 minutes. Is that so agreed?

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might be afforded an explanation of this understanding and who in fact agreed to this understanding of limiting debate time to 45 minutes. I happen to be the Member from Alberta. I do not recall anyone in this House asking for my permission with respect to an agreement to a limit of 45 minutes for the debate on redistribution in Alberta. I wonder if you could give me an explanation of how the understanding was reached, Mr. Speaker.

• (1250)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, under the statute we have to start debate on such a report within the first 15 sitting days following tabling of the report in the House. Today is the last day. There is no Standing Order clarifying the length of debate. I submit that it comes under the principle in the Standing Orders that it is up to the Government to establish the business of the House of Commons. There is no motion in front of the House. What we did last time was that I, as Government House Leader, when we were debating Reports of other Commissions dealing with other Provinces, allowed one hour of debate to start debate. After one hour, not to deprive any Member of the right to participate, we adjourned the debate to a later date to be determined by the House Leader under the Standing Orders.

I have had discussions with the House Leaders, and what we are doing today is to plan the business of the whole day. We will start the debate, but not necessarily conclude it today. I recognize that the Hon. Member, being from Alberta, must have an interest in participating, but he does not have to do that today. For the purpose of the House business for today, we have set aside 45 minutes that have now expired.

I recognize that the debate is not complete and that the Hon. Member has the right to participate. Therefore, at a later date I will allow an opportunity for debate to go on. Insofar as today is concerned, I think the debate should be adjourned to a later day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement of the House that at this point debate be adjourned and we proceed to the next item of business?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, as a point of clarification I should like to ask the Government House Leader whether this particular 45-minute period which starts the debate has a termination time. Is it one hour, three hours? Is it to meet the needs of the Members from that Province to express their views on the redistribution?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I concur with the 45 minutes limit but I just want to say that I want to have the right to speak. I think this whole exercise is unnecessary and expensive.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the last time we had to deal with such a debate, House Leaders came to an agreement to allow five minutes to start the debate and then postpone the debate on all the reports of the Commissioners to a certain date. This year, for reasons that I do not want to judge or discuss, House Leaders were not able to come to such an agreement. That is public knowledge. I stated it the last time in their presence.

This time we decided, after discussion, to start debate on each report if there is any opposition and allow debate to go on later on. Certainly we have to start debate within the first 15 days. That is why, rather than giving only five minutes, I thought that 45 minutes was more acceptable. The debate is not terminated today. It will go on at a later date and I will inform the House accordingly.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I am in basic agreement with the Government House Leader with respect to giving the House 45 minutes to debate this matter. What bothers me is that three people were singled out in the House from the 21 Members in Alberta to occupy and take up the whole 45 minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko), the Chair recognized the Members who rose. On each occasion only one Member was on his feet seeking the eye of the Chair when the Chair recognized him.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, this arrangement was made internally among Members for Alberta. I think it is inappropriate that only three were chosen to occupy the full 45 minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement that we now adjourn the debate?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so agreed.

SALARIES ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE SALARIES OF LIEUTENANT GOVERNORS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Prime Minister) moved that Bill C-160, an Act to amend the Salaries Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think there is agreement, as I said yesterday, that we go through all stages of this Bill today. Therefore, the motion should be that the Bill go to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement that the motion be amended to refer the Bill to Committee of the Whole by unanimous consent?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was informed by my House Leader that that is the case. On behalf of this Party I should like to agree.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed, then, that the Bill be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, be referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased at this time to introduce for second reading Bill C-160, an Act to amend the Salaries Act in respect of the Lieutenant Governors of the Provinces.

Lieutenant Governors are perhaps the least understood of constitutional officers in Canada. The fact of their appointment by the Governor in Council by instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, coupled with this Parliament's responsibility for their salaries, provides an impression that these are federal officials. They are, in fact, the Sovereign's representatives in the right of the Provinces, as much Her Majesty's representatives for all purposes of provincial Government as the Governor General himself is for purposes of Dominion Government.

As such, these officials play an integral role in the fabric of their individual Provinces. While the degree of financial and other support provided by the Provinces for these officers varies considerably, they have ensured that these officials have the means to maintain the dignity of their role as Her Majesty's representatives.

Our Constitution charges this Parliament with "fixing and providing" the salaries of Lieutenant Governors. The amendment tabled today will provide these distinguished officials with salary increases of 6 per cent effective January 1, 1982, and 5 per cent effective January 1, 1983. In addition, the amendment will provide for automatic annual adjustments, beginning in 1984, based on the formula which is used to determine annual increases for federally appointed judges.

The need for this automatic adjustment provision becomes obvious in view of the salary history of Lieutenant Governors. Since Confederation, there have been but three formal adjustments to these salaries, in 1873, 1965 and 1975. In the past, during periods of low inflation, there was not the necessity to adjust salaries on a regular basis, and this pattern of substantial periods of time, between increases, was evident in all salaries fixed by federal statute, including those of Members of Parliament, Senators and judges. This House has in recent years moved to provide automatic adjustments to those other salaries, leaving Lieutenant Governors without such a mechanism.

There are those who will argue that we should be proposing today increases higher than those contained in this Bill, in recognition of the period since the last increase. However, bearing in mind the sacrifices being made by all Canadians as we unite in our efforts toward economic recovery, and the allowances and support provided by both the federal and provincial Governments toward the expenses of the office, I know that these leading Canadians will support the level of increase proposed by the Government, and this and their respective provincial Governments' continued commitment to economic growth.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I understand that when the House rose at one o'clock the floor was free, but that the Chair should now recognize the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to speak in the House on what I like to call "ecumenical Friday". It seems that quite often we deal with matters on Friday afternoons in the House of Commons in a very sane and civilized way, with some agreements. That has not always been the case on some Fridays over the last little while, but today, I believe, is one of those "ecumenical" days.

In continuing the debate begun by my friend, the Government House Leader, on an Act to amend the Salaries Act respecting Lieutenant-Governors of Canada, let me begin by referring the House to the power source of the Lieutenant-Governors. I quote the following from the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1975, at page 18:

For each Province there shall be an Officer, styled the Lieutenant-Governor, appointed by the Governor General in Council by Instrument under the Great Seal of Canada.

The Act then goes on to indicate that he holds office during the pleasure of the Governor General, and I quote:

—but any Lieutenant-Governor appointed after the Commencement of the First Session of the Parliament of Canada shall not be removeable within Five Years from his Appointment, except for Cause assigned—

In other words, when a Lieutenant-Governor is appointed, he takes on a particular and peculiar status in the hierarchy of Government. I believe the Government House Leader was right when he said in his remarks that there were some people in the country who did not understand the significance of the role of Lieutenant-Governor. I believe it is important that the House and the country understand that it is not an honorary position. It is a position the holders of which enjoy particular powers within the community.

I want to say at the outset that I believe that every Government, whether it has been Liberal or Conservative, over the course of the years has taken great pains to ensure that the person who holds that position of Lieutenant-Governor—and I hope to demonstrate this a little later in my speech—is a person of standing in the community, not just of standing in the social or economic sense, but in the sense of accomplishment. The history has been that most of the Lieutenant-Governors in the country are appointed at the end of a long career in some other occupation where they stood for something, and in their appointment they stand for something by the nature of the persons who have been appointed.

Having said that, let us consider what the office is. It is an office which combines the monarchical and federal principles in the government of the Canadian Provinces. As the chief executive officer in each Province, the Lieutenant Governor succeeded the pre-1867 colonial Governor in his office, if not in his person, and as such he is the representative of the Crown within the Province and for the purposes of the provincial Government.

The category of representative of the Crown has some interesting and important constitutional perimeters. I believe it is well when we are considering the salaries of the Lieutenant Governors of Canada that we understand just how far that power ranges.

In his capacity, a Lieutenant Governor possesses the formal powers necessary for the working of the Cabinet or parliamentary Government. Moreover, the Lieutenant Governor has broad discretionary powers which may on occasion be exercised and, indeed, have been exercised. He alone has the responsibility, whatever the circumstances, of finding a Minister who can form a Government. He must be consulted on the summoning and the prorogation of the legislature of each of the Provinces. He must agree to the dissolution of the legislature and the date of an election. He can question and discuss Government policy. He has the power to dismiss a Government for unlawful or unconstitutional actions. He can, in short, refuse to follow the avice of his Ministers if, in his opinion, the public interest requires it. These powers cannot be defined, and while their exercise has been and must necessarily be infrequent, their existence provides the ultimate safeguard of the Constitution.

In the past, Lieutenant Governors have felt it necessary to refuse dissolution, to decline to make appointments, and on five occasions have found it necessary to dismiss their Governments. The Lieutenant Governor is also an officer of the Government of Canada. He is appointed and paid by the federal Government. He is liable to its instructions and may be dismissed by the federal Government. Two Lieutenant Governors, in Quebec in 1879 and in British Columbia in 1900, have been dismissed. The Lieutenant Governor is appointed and holds office "during pleasure", but the normal term is for about five years. All expenses of the office other than the salary and a small expense are borne by the provincial Government.

I thought it wise, because there are some people who would wonder why we would be looking to the salaries of Lieutenant Governors in this period of time, to indicate to the House of Commons that it is not an office pro forma; it is an office of substantial constitutional powers and duties. Going back to my opening remarks, I would like to say that it is an office to which Governments have given some considerable attention concerning the people who would fill them. It is wise for the House to understand that the woman and the men who are Lieutenant Governors in Canada now are very fine people. The salary was not their attraction to the office but, rather, the prestige and honour of serving in public office. I think this is true for all of them.

• (1410)

First, I would like to speak of our own Lieutenant Governor in the Province of Ontario, the Hon. John B. Aird, a very distinguished lawyer, a Member of this Parliament in the sense that he was a member of the Senate at one time. He has garnered a host of honorary degrees. He stood for excellence and he now stands for public service. He has been a distinguished military man, a chancellor of a university, a high officer in his church and one who has always taken an interest in public affairs. He succeeded the honourable Pauline McGibbon, who was the first women to be Lieutenant Governor. I do not think there is anyone in the House who would not say that Pauline McGibbon distinguished herself on every occasion as one who understood the nature of the office and its duties. She has been ably succeeded by the Hon. John B. Aird, who has brought great enthusiasm to his office and its duties, which, to some of us, would seem very onerous indeed. I have been with him on occasion in his Province and I have watched him on other occasions. I think that his appointment was brilliant. He has carried himself in that office with the same distinction as he has fulfilled every task he has undertaken. I said that the Lieutenant Governor stands for something, and that is indeed true of John Aird. I congratulate the Government on its choice. It could have found no one better.

Then there is the Hon. Henry Pybus Bell-Irving of Vancouver, a person who has distinguished himself in business, in his service to the Boy Scouts movement in Canada, in the work of the Children's Hospital in his city, and in the Armed Services. It was a fine appointment. He followed another distinguished person, the Hon. George Perks, winner of the Victoria Cross. The Hon. Henry Bell-Irving has the distinction of living in a delightful mansion in the Province of British Columbia, a mansion similar to that which we should have for our Lieutenant Governor in Ontario, something I wanted to say just in case the Minister of Government Services for Ontario might read today's debate as reported in Hansard. I pass him a very broad hint that it might be appropriate to do something to improve the residence of the Lieutenant Governor in the Province of Ontario. However, in the Hon. Henry Bell-Irving there has been found a distinguished Canadian who holds that office with great distinction.

The Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté, a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council, a former Member of the House of Commons and Minister of the Crown, works under very difficult circumstances in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Pepin: He understood.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is interesting that in the present political context of that Province, it is not the Lieutenant Governor who reads the Speech from the Throne. It is the occupant of the Throne, the Premier, who reads the speech. It is a manner of downgrading the office. It is a rather sad thing. It is important that the office be upgraded. I think that even those of us who disagreed politically with Mr. Côté when he was here in the House of Commons feel that he is carrying on under some rather difficult circumstances. I thought it might be appropriate, on this ecumenical Friday afternoon, to mention that. He was a public servant. He served as a Minister of the Crown and he did his best in that office. History will decide whether or not his best was good enough.

The distinguished holder of the office in Prince Edward Island is the Hon. Joseph Aubin Doirion, a dentist, who occupied himself in work in the Chamber of Commerce, in the Heritage Foundation of that Province, the Canadian Folk Arts Council, as a school trustee, in positions of authority and responsibility in his church. Wherever one looks in Prince Edward Island, I am told, people are found who extol the virtues of this man who stood for what is best and stands for what is best in those unique and great people from Prince Edward Island.

In Alberta, the holder of the office at the moment is the Hon. Frank Lynch-Staunton, who has been a rancher in the south and western part of Alberta, tucked up agaisnt the foothills of the Rockies. I often wonder, as I wonder about some people who come here from Alberta, how one could possibly leave that beautiful part of Canada with the magnificence of the Rocky Mountains. He was able to open his eyes every morning to look out and see those Rockies, yet he has left the comfort of his ranch, in such a lovely setting, to take on this office for the paltry sum which we pay him. To my mind he is also a distinguished Canadian who, in the public interest and with a feeling of public service, has decided to accept the call to that position. He carries it out with great distinction. The Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) said that he is a fine man. When the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat says that anyone is a fine person, that is a medal for that person.

In Saskatchewan, the holder of the office is the Hon. Cameron Irwin McIntosh. The great claim to fame of Lieutenant Governor MacIntosh is not just the fact that he has been Lieutenant Governor. Before he took office, he was distinguished in the newspaper field as an editor and publisher, a person who looked after and felt strongly about a free press and stood for something in that sense. He is a distinguished Canadian and I congratulate the Government on his appointment.

Two or three times I have had occasion to deal with the holder of the office in Newfoundland, the Hon. William Anthony Paddon. I want to tell Hon. Members something about that gentleman. He was a surgeon during the war. He went to work with the Grenfell mission in Labrador, being a native of Labrador, where he endured sacrifices which very few physicians anywhere must endure in order to carry out his profession. He practised his profession the way he wanted it to be practised. He has been the recipient of numerous awards for his humanitarian approach. He thought so much of the office and the importance of his being there on the occasion of the meeting in St. John's, Newfoundland, of the Canada-Europe interparliamentary group, which I had the privilege to join a couple of weeks ago, that he cut short his well earned vacation in England. He flew back two or three days earlier than his wife in order to receive the delegation at Government House, where he received us with kindness and warmth. Although I had met him before and read about him before, I felt that if there are little things that make great men greater, it is that kind of sacrifice in order to carry out the office. We would have forgiven him if he had not been there, but he did receive us. I think that that speaks volumes for the kind of person who sits in Government House in Newfoundland. It epitomizes the character of his colleagues in offices across the country.

• (1420)

One has only to visit the Lieutenant Governor in Government House in Halifax, Nova Scotia, to know that when the Hon. John Elvin Shaffner was appointed Lieutenant Governor of that Province, a fine man was appointed. He is a good businessman. He rose to the top of his profession. He was interested in the affairs of Acadia University and has done much good work. He stands and has stood for all that is good in the society of that Province.

The Hon. George Francis Gillman Stanley is the Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick. When one reads his curriculum vitae one finds that in that high office in Government House there is a very distinguished author and historian who has brought nothing but credit to every institution with which he has been associated. He is a retired military officer, decorated in the service of his country, who has written a number of books which I think would be interesting to Members of the House. They include such books as "The Birth of Western Canada", 1936; "Canada's Soldiers", 1954; "In Search of the Magnetic North", 1955; "In the Face of Danger", 1960; "For Want of a Horse", 1961; "Louis Riel", 1963; "The Story of Canada's Flag", 1965; "New France—The Last Phase, 1744-1760"; "A Short History of the Canadian Constitution", 1969; "Mapping the Frontier", 1970; "Canada Invaded 1775-1776"; "L'Invasion du Canada 1775-1776"; "The Military and Hospitaller Order of Saint Lazarus, a Short History of the Canadian Grand Priory". The list goes on and on. No one can doubt this man's distinction. If one were to look for people worthy of filling the post, one could not find a person more worthy than he, if Hon. Members agree with me that the Lieutenant Governor is a person who brings something to the office and whose presence in the office enhances it.

Finally, I want to talk about the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba. The Lieutenant Governor is the Hon. Pearl McGonigal who is the second woman in Canadian history to occupy a vice regal post in Canada. The first woman, the Hon. Pauline McGibbon, brought distinction to her Province, herself and her sex in the performance of her duties.

I am satisfied that not only has the beginning of her service indicated the same for the Hon. Pearl McGonigal, but her period of time in that office will indicate the completion of that prophecy. Her great distinction is that she has been described as a veteran civic politician and one who is engaged in public life at the grass roots. Some of us ought not to forget about the grass roots. She has carried out the duties of her office and will continue to do so with great distinction. Those duties are rigorous indeed when one sees her schedule.

I thought I should mention that because, when we talk about the salaries of these people, Members will be as shocked as I was when I opened this Bill to learn of the level of the present salary for people who fill that office and carry out those duties which are ceremonial and constitutional and require attention seven days a week, 12 months of the year. I hope the House also shares the feeling that the proposal for the very small increases in salary, approximately $38,000, is not only overdue but small by any standard and beyond criticism.

Therefore, I wish to inform the House that it is our intention to support this Bill and have it put through at all stages. A Bill such as this should have been introduced long ago. While I can understand why the Bill was not introduced at the time we dealt with judges' salaries some time ago, it was certainly as timely then as it is now. Indeed, it is overdue.

What is the duty of Parliament? Judges are a peculiar breed of Canadians. They have no one to speak for them amongst their numbers except privately. If they speak out publicly, whether it concerns salary or anything else, they are admonished. I believe that is quite right and proper since they are put in a special place and given special responsibilities. The Lieutenant Governors are in no different position in terms of their ability to speak out for themselves on public issues. The fact that the clientele under this Bill are mute by law and tradition puts a duty on this House to speak for them. We have a duty to protect them and make judgments with respect to proposals that are brought forward for salary increases or anything else.

What criteria should a government apply? Certainly the salaries paid, whether to judges or Lieutenant Governors, ought not to be the factor which attract men and women to those offices. I can assure you that the Lieutenant Governors' salary is not what would attract a potential candidate to that office. But neither should a salary be at a level which would deter someone from accepting a call to fill that position. Once the Government has completed all its requirements for making an apointment, it should not have to overcome that impediment.

If the Government of the day feels that that is sufficient, then I am not prepared to argue with it. I am not prepared to argue with it in principle. I think it meets the tests in the criteria which I have put forward which I believe apply to those who cannot speak for themselves.

I want to tell the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) that it is our intention to support this legislation. I think it is fair, reasonable and long overdue.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, we also support the legislation. This afternoon, I do not intend to spend a great deal of time listing the Lieutenant Governors I have known. As you are aware, I have served in the legislature of Ontario during the tenure of three Lieutenant Governors: Earl Rowe, Ross McDonald and Pauline McGibbon. I want to say that I have not met three finer people in my years dealing with them, as I frequently did as House Leader.

My experience with Ross McDonald was an absolute pleasure. He carried out his office with great dignity and worked very hard. He was quite elderly come the end of his tenure, but he put in the very long hours that were necessary.

Pauline McGibbon was also a person who devoted a great deal of time to public service and continues to do so. I see her from time to time during my flights in and out of Toronto. She is continually working on behalf of the arts in particular in attempting to improve the quality of life and the opportunity for a better quality of life for many Canadians.

The increase in salary is not substantial by any means. The salary paid is equally unsubstantial. I was not aware how much Lieutenant Governors were paid, and I must confess that upon seeing that amount again, I thought it was not overly generous by any means, given the office that those people hold. I undersand from a previous discussion that there had not been any adjustment in that salary for some many long years. It is appropriate it be adjusted.

• (1430)

The six and five program which the Government brought in some time ago certainly limits the amount of the adjustment and we will, therefore, support the Bill before us.

I am interested in one provision of the Bill, namely, Clause 2(2). I will not likely speak at the committee stage since I presume the Bill will go through rapidly. But the provision in Clause 2, Paragraph 2 which applies to the retroactivity feature, particularly for those who are deceased, I think is an interesting one to put forward and one that I have felt should be in other legislation dealing with other people who perhaps do not enjoy the same level of public presence that Lieutenant Governors do. It always strikes me as unfair that people who have served long and leave office for one reason or another do not get the benefit of a change in salary, even though the change in salary turned out to be retroactive.

We will support the Bill. In the interest of time and since much of what can be said has been said, I will urge passage of it immediately. We can get it through and get on with the equally important legislation with which we have to deal this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Blaker in the chair.

On Clause 1—Salaries of lieutenant governors for 1982

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, the Government House Leader, the President of the Privy Council, is no doubt aware that until 1905 there used to be a Lieutenant Governor for the Northwest Territories. At that time the office of the Chief Executive Officer of the Territories was downgraded. The appointment is now no longer made by the Governor General of Canada. The person is appointed by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and in former times by the Minister of the Interior.

Has the President of the Privy Council ever given any consideration to letting us have a Lieutenant Governor again?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I will be pleased to bring this concern to the attention of the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development and also to my other colleagues in Cabinet. I understand my colleague wants us to seize this opportunity when we are discussing a salary increase for Lieutenant Governors. I will raise the concern of his region and I will bring that to the attention of my colleagues.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PRIVACY

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice) moved:

That, in accordance with Section 53 of Schedule II of an Act to enact the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act, to amend the Federal Court Act and the Canada Evidence Act, and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, Chapter 111 of the Statutes of Canada for the present session of Parliament, this House approves the appointment of John W. Grace, Esquire, as Privacy Commissioner.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, could you call the motion concerning the appointment of Mrs. Inger Hansen as Information Commissioner first, and we could proceed with the motion dealing with the Privacy Commissioner afterwards?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the proposal made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) in which case I will withdraw the reference to Section 53 of Schedule II.

Motion withdrawn.

INFORMATION

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice) moved:

May 26, 1983—That, in accordance with Section 54 of Schedule I of an Act to enact the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act, to amend the Federal Court Act and the Canada Evidence Act, and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, Chapter 111 of the Statutes of Canada for the present session of Parliament, this House approves the appointment of Inger Hansen, Q.C., as Information Commissioner.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before speaking to the motion before us today, I would like to say how pleased I am that we have been able to make time to debate this resolution, since the proclamation of the Access to Information Act is awaiting the appointment of Canada's Information Commissioner. Should the motion being discussed be approved here today, as I hope it will be, and soon in the other place, proclamation of the Access to Information Act can take place 30 days after the appointment has been made. This is the earliest possible date that allows time for the Information Commissioner to establish her office in preparation for the coming into force of the Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members already know, Section 54 of the Access to Information Act, passed last July by Parliament, provides for the appointment of an Information Commissioner by the Governor in Council, and I quote:

—after approval of the appointment by resolution of the Senate and House of Commons.

The Information Commissioner holds office during good behaviour for a term of seven years, but may be removed by the Governor in Council at any time on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

[English]

The purpose of this motion is to comply with the requirements of the Access to Information Act in requesting approval of the House to the appointment of Miss Inger Hansen to this position under the Great Seal of Canada. I do not believe there is anyone here today who is not aware of the work that Ms. Hansen has already done, in her effective and untiring way, in her present position as the Privacy Commissioner under Part IV of the Canadian Human Rights Act. However, a few biographical details may be helpful in the House in considering this motion.

Inger Hansen is a native of Denmark and a graduate of the University of British Columbia Law School. As a member of the B.C. Bar she spent eight years in the general practice of law in Vancouver. She came to Ottawa in 1969 as a lawyer with the Department of Justice attached to the Ministry of the Solicitor General. One of her primary responsibilities there was to review the Juvenile Delinquents Act and prepare a proposal to replace it. Some Hon. Members will no doubt recall her appearances before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in connection with this matter.

In 1973 the Department of Justice lost a good lawyer and the inmates of penitentiaries gained an outspoken and effective ombudsman when Miss Hansen became Canada's first correctional investigator. In this position Ms. Hansen gained her initial experience in the art of being an ombudsman, an art she has mastered so well. She took her ombudsman skills to the Canadian Human Rights Commission in 1977 when she was appointed a Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission and the first Privacy Commissioner under Part IV of the Canadian Human Rights Act.

Today Ms. Hansen has earned the right to call herself Canada's senior ombudsman, having been in the field for ten years. In addition, she has built a solid international reputation for herself and for Canada in the ombudsman and data production fields. Over the past several years she has been active in the International Ombudsman's Association as a member of its planning committee. She is also a very active member of the International Association of Data Commissioners. She has chaired two of the latter group's recent annual meetings: in 1980 when Ms. Hansen hosted the meeting in Ottawa and again, by special request of the conference, in London this past summer. In all, Inger Hansen legitimately lays claim to a vast national and international network of friends and associates.

I would also like to say personally how much I have admired the work of Ms. Hansen. I first met her when I was a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and she first began her work in Ottawa. Subsequently, as Chairman of that Committee and as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Penitentiaries, I had good reason to observe her work closely in the last number of months. As the Minister responsible for the Canadian Human Rights Commission, I have also had many contacts with her. She has not only been unfailingly courteous but also unfailingly effective in the performance of her duties. I would add that in my 15 years in Ottawa she is one of the people in the Public Service of Canada I have come to admire the most.

[Translation]

With all her experience, Inger Hansen is the ideal person to take up this challenge and set another precedent as the first Information Commissioner in Canada. The role of Information Commissioner is, of course, that of an ombudsman and is closely related to that of the Privacy Commissioner. The Access to Information Act provides that any Canadian who has been denied access to a document he has requested under the Act, who has failed to obtain the requested document within the prescribed time or who feels the fees charged are excessive, may lodge a complaint with the Information Commissioner.

The Commissioner will have extensive powers of investigation which will allow him to look fully into the problem and try to find a solution. I believe that this will happen in most cases and that no longer being required to institute an action at law will save Canadians both time and money. It will always be possible to appeal to the Federal Court in those cases where the problem has not been solved.

[English]

Of course the Information Commissioner is an officer reporting directly to Parliament. Being entirely free of the executive, the Commissioner will be at liberty to recommend release of government information, criticize the actions of the executive taken under the Act, table her recommendations in Parliament and take government institutions to court herself to obtain the release of information.

The Office of the Information Commissioner, as part of a two-tiered review system under an access to information scheme, represents a uniquely Canadian approach which the Government feels will maximize the disclosure of information under the Act at a minimal cost to Canadians. I am pleased to be able to speak on behalf of the Government to the motion that Inger Hansen be appointed to this position. In my view she is the ideal person to ensure that the position is developed to achieve its full potential. Therefore, on this basis I recommend to the House the resolution that the nomination of Inger Hansen as Information Commissioner be approved.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have been asked today to sepak on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition with respect to this appointment and if the rules permit it—certainly our customs do—to say that I second the appointment of Ms. Inger Hansen, Q.C., as the Information Commissioner. I think the Government has made a good choice. It is important that the new ombudsman or Information Commissioner start her role, not just with the approval of the Government, but with the approval of all Parties in the House of Commons to which she will report from time to time during her tenure in office.

We have come a long way in the quest for freedom of information in Canada. For many years Mr. Barry Mather, a Member of the New Democratic Party, and Mr. Ged Baldwin, a Member of the Progressive Conservative Party, advocated the whole approach to openness in government. It was with some reluctance that the present Government was brought to the position where, if it was not intellectually committeed to access of information or freedom of information, it at least had to become politically committed to it.

We had a long debate and a long committee hearing on Bill C-143. The Bill was a shade different from Bill C-15 which I had the honour to bring in during the period of the Conservative Government. It was the first Government Bill on freedom of information, at least at the federal level, in Canada. Nonetheless, Bill C-43 was a welcome addition to the Order Paper of the House of Commons and will now, I am pleased to hear, be proclaimed on July 1 or thereabouts. July 1 is the date thirty days more or less from today. That is an important landmark or benchmark in the legislative history and in the evolution of the operation of government in Canada.

I will speak for a few moments about how important is the job of Information Commissioner in terms of the change this legislation heralds for the work, role and functions of government and the Public Service. The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) spoke a few moments ago about the ombudsman aspect of the role. That is right. In that role quite often the Information Commissioner will be called upon to go to reluctant Departments or heads of Departments to urge them to comply with a request, to intervene and to guide Departments. From time to time that Information Commissioner upon request will have to say to the subject, "You are not entitled to that information; it falls within an exemption". From time to time the Commissioner will instigage legal action or take other administrative action, including reporting to Parliament on defaulters within Government in terms of looking to the provisions of the Act and abiding by the provisions of the Act.

One cannot predict where this will go. Indeed, my Party is committed to looking at Bill C-43 in order to see where the present Access to Information Act does not comply with the Freedom of Information Act which we brought in in 1979 and to make amendments thereto. It would be wise for the House to consider Bill C-15 as well as Bill C-43 for the future.

• (1450)

Ged Baldwin used to day that once you put your foot upon the path, you cannot withdraw it. Frankly, I regret that the Information Commissioner, and the courts if necessary, because of limitations in the Bill will not have a chance to look at confidences of the Queen's Privy Council to see whether they are indeed confidences of the Queen's Privy Council. She will now have the responsibility, as I see the Act, of looking at those things that are to be declared confidences, at least in historic terms to see whether those things styled confidence of the Queen's Privy Council have not suddenly become confidence of the Queen's Privy Council as a matter of convenience to avoid release.

I say all of those things because I believe that while this is a very exciting age in terms of openness in Government, the Commissioner, graced as she is with education, background, training and knowledge to do the job, is not going to find the job to be an easy one. There are some who would advocate that she become a pro counsel, so to speak, become quite aggressive in terms of the public and in terms of her activities under the statute. I do not know which is the right role. I cannot guide anyone in that respect. Miss Hansen will have to make her own way, as she has done in other matters and has done so competently. It is important that she be in the role to get her office organized. I suggest at the outset there will be a number of organizations and groups testing the waters of freedom of information rather quickly. Whether that flood is a continuing one or will diminish is a matter of opinion.

I spoke earlier about the relationship of the public servant and the adjustments that will have to be made within the Public Service. Those adjustments will take a great deal of time. The Government has done some preparation internally. There are information officers now either in place or about to be put in place in every Department. The Privy Council has done a great job in getting this organized. Banks of information, exempt and otherwise, are available and are being added to. The highest technological aids will be or are being used with respect to the information available. All of those things are there.

What has to happen is a natural change from a Public Service, which in the British tradition was secretive, to a Public Service which in the new Canadian tradition of openness which this Bill and this appointment is the beginning of openness. It is going to be hard, it is going to be quite difficult, expecially for older public servants to make that adjustment. Gradually as time goes on and the Information Commissioner does her work and the information officers begin to work, I am confident that the Public Service will adjust to the change. Let no one think it will not be difficult at the beginning for that adjustment to be made. Indeed, we are plowing new ground with this appointment, certainly in terms of this statute.

I share with other Members of the House of Commons a concern that the costs for obtaining information from the Government might very well be excessive. As I understand it, we have heard no final word with respect to that matter. My friend from British Columbia brought an indication of that to the House. It would be nice if today there could be tabled in the House of Commons a list of the fees so that we would know how much it is going to cost and we can make judgments with respect to it. I gather that is not to be.

I certainly hope the costs revealed by my friend for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) will not turn out to be the final cost and that a leak in that sense will have the same effect as the leak did with the budget. At least that provided more money for some programs. Perhaps the leak found by my friend for Burnaby will cause some sober second thoughts in terms of costs. It is very important that it not be viewed as a project on a cost-recovery basis. That would bar many Canadians from access to information to which they are entitled.

We will probably have some expressions of regret or approval when we see what the final costs are. I ask the Government not to deal in anything but the most open way, understanding the purpose of the statute, expecialy at the beginning so that Canadians can get used to it and not be barred by excessive costs in the production of information.

The reporting to Parliament is important. She becomes a servant of Parliament. She also becomes a very important instrument in the ultimate parliamentary review that will take place in a few years down the road in the operation of that statute.

I said at the beginning that I think her appointment is a good one and a sound one. On behalf of all my colleagues in this Party, I wish her well. I hope and I believe that she will bring to her office the same accomplishment and dedication to duty that she has brought to every public office she has held. I congratulate her. I warmly welcome her to the office and we all wish her well.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and support the resolution before the House and thus make it unanimous, representing the desire of Members of Parliament of all Parties in this House that the newly appointed Information Commissioner, Inger Hansen, conduct her activities with the full support of Parliament and not just the Government of the day.

I am pleased that this legislation is finally going to be proclaimed. As Members know, for some time we were promised the date of April 1. I now understand that the legislation will be proclaimed on or about July 1.

I might also say with respect to the previous speaker that certainly the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) had a great deal of responsibility for the fact that this legislation is before the House today. It was that Hon. Member, in his capacity as Government House Leader and President of the Privy Council, who brought Bill C-115 before the Justice Committee in 1979, of which I was a Member. I am convinced that had it not been for that initiative on the part of that Member and that Government, the Liberal Government would not be bringing forward freedom of information legislation in this Parliament today. All of us in this House and indeed the Canadian public owe a debt of gratitude to the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton.

We also owe a debt of gratitude to Ged Baldwin who was instrumental in bringing this matter before the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, as well as one of my predecessors in this House, Barry Mather, who for a number of years from the mid-sixties tabled a Private Members' Bill and urged the Government to move forward in this very important area. I note that while the legislation will be proclaimed on July 1, there is, unfortunately, still a built-in delay in the Bill. The Bill provides for a transition period which in some circumstances will mean that information in the hands of the Government will not be made available until July 1, 1986, some three years after proclamation of the legislation.

The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton made reference to the question of bureaucratic barriers that might subvert the spirit of freedom of information legislation. In my view it is absolutely essential that this spirit not be subverted by either unwarranted delays in the availability of information or certainly not by excess costs. Sometime ago I released a document which was a draft regulation which, in my view, would have meant that the costs proposed for access to information would be most unreasonable and excessive.

This fundamental right of access to information in a democratic society would have been turned into a privilege for those who could afford it. The draft regulations would have restricted access considerably. There would have been an initial application fee of $10, photocopying charges of 25 cents per page, and charges for computer time of $2.50 per quarter hour, this in a time when records are becoming increasingly computerized.

I am hopeful that the Government will recognize the degree of opposition to this proposal, which would have turned access to information legislation into basically a revenue-generating device for the Government as opposed to a means for ensuring that the Government is held to account by the provision of information.

As Ralph Nader, one of the pioneers of access to information legislation in the United States, said:

> A well informed citizenry is the lifeblood of democracy . . . The democratic process cannot function adequately without timely information about the activities of Parliament. A person should have the right of reasonable access to all public information in the possession of governments—

I might note as well that both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party supported an amendment to the Charter of Rights, the fundamental statement of principles and values in the country, which would have recognized that access to information and freedom of information should be included as one of those fundamental rights in a free and democratic society.

Both the Minister of Justice and the spokesperson on behalf of the Official Opposition have made reference to the distinguished record of Inger Hansen. I need not add much to their remarks. I might say that I was particularly impressed by her outspoken and independent performance as the first correctional investigator for Canada. Most recently she has served as Privacy Commissioner under Part IV of the Canadian Human Rights Act. It has been argued by some that the profile she adopted in that particular role and the extent to which the public was perhaps not made aware of the role that she was playing and indeed their rights under that Act was something that perhaps should have been changed. I am somewhat sympathetic to the arguments of those who have suggested that that office should indeed have a high profile. It is one thing to have rights entrenched in statutes but it is quite another thing for members of the public to be aware of those rights and to seek to enforce them.

I would hope, therefore, that as Information Commissioner Inger Hansen would, in pursuing her new responsibilities, in fact seek to make the public very much aware of her new role and of the powers of her office, and indeed of the responsibilities that she has as Information Commissioner. I would certainly strongly support any request that she would make before the Justice committee or any Committee that may be monitoring this legislation for a sufficient budget in order that there may be widespread knowledge and education of the rights of the public under the access to information legislation. In short, I believe that Miss Hansen should have a very high profile in this role, unlike the role which she played as Privacy Commissioner.

I am confident that now that Miss Hansen has had an opportunity to study very carefully the legislation, and I know that she followed with great diligence the progress of the Bill through the Justice Committee, she will recognize that there is still a good deal of work to be done. I know that in her testimony before that Committee she did not express any criticisms of the substance of the Bill, although certainly most other witnesses who appeared before the Committee did express some serious concerns about a number of elements of the Bill. But I am confident that Miss Hansen will indeed recognize that the weaknesses in the Bill must in fact be corrected. It is fortunate that there is provision within the legislation for an ongoing review process as well as a report back to Parliament at the end of three years for general review and recommendations with respect to strengthening of the Act.

I believe that Inger Hansen has a very important role to play in the review process. She must not hesitate to speak out with her respected and articulate voice so that she will be heard, and of course the fact that she reports to Parliament and not to the Government will enhance her possibilities of doing so.

I have mentioned weaknesses in the legislation. I draw to the attention of Parliament three of the major areas of concern which I know that Miss Hansen herself is aware of. One area is the sweeping nature of the exemptions within the legislation, whether it be references to federal-provincial exemptions or law enforcement and subversive or hostile activities. Another area of concern is the second-class nature of judicial review within the legislation when there should in fact be full de novo review on the merits, and once again I am hopeful that the Committee which examines this legislation will recognize that indeed the original proposals in this respect in Bill C-15 should have been adopted.

The final area of concern is that sweeping provision which was inserted at the last stages of Committee hearings which permits the Government essentially to stamp any document it wishes as a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council, and which contains no review procedure whatsoever to ensure that that discretion on the part of Cabinet will not be abused.

I signal those areas of concern because, of course, the Bill itself does contain a number of weaknesses; but fortunately there is the provision for review. I am confident that Inger Hansen will exercise her responsibilities with distinction and that indeed her outspoken and independent performance as correctional investigator will be repeated in the performance of her new and very significant role as Information Commissioner. I congratulate her on her appointment and I am looking forward to working closely with her in the review process of this legislation. I know that all Members of Parliament would join with me in commending her for her record of service to the people of Canada and in wishing her well in the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. MacGuigan) agreed to.

PRIVACY

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice) moved:

That, in accordance with Section 53 of Schedule II of an Act to enact the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act, to amend the Federal Court Act and the Canada Evidence Act, and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, Chapter 111 of the Statutes of Canada for the present session of Parliament, this House approves the appointment of John W. Grace, Esquire, as Privacy Commissioner.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as with the motion to approve the appointment of the Information Commissioner which was discussed earlier this afternoon and just approved, I am pleased to be speaking to this motion today. Proclamation of the Privacy Act, an Act which will significantly extend the rights of individuals with respect to the protection of information about themselves held by the Government of Canada, awaits the appointment of the Privacy Commissioner. If the motion being discussed is approved here today and soon in the other place, the proclamation of the Privacy Act will occur 30 days after the appointment has been made, parallel with the proclamation of the Access to Information Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members already know, Section 53 of the Privacy Act, passed last July by Parliament, provides for the appointment of a Privacy Commissioner by the Governor in Council, and I quote:

—after approval of the appointment by resolution of the Senate and House of Commons.

The Privacy Commissioner holds office during good behaviour for a term of seven years, but may be removed by the Governor in Council at any time on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

[English]

The purpose of this motion, therefore, is to comply with the requirements of the Privacy Act and to request the approval of the House for the appointment of Dr. Grace to this position under the Great Seal of Canada.

• (1510)

Although I think everyone who is here today is familiar with Dr. Grace, in particular through his work as Editor and later Editor-in-Chief of the Ottawa Journal, I would like to put on record a few biographical details about him which I hope will be helpful to us in considering this motion.

John Grace is a native of the Ottawa Valley. He was born in Ottawa in 1927 and obtained his early education here. After receiving his BA from St. Patrick's College in 1949, he pursued post-graduate studies in English literature in the United States. When he completed his doctorate at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, he was appointed to the Faculty of English Language and Literature at that University. Dr. Grace was, in fact, the first graduate of the University of Michigan to be hired back by the University in 17 years. This action speaks for itself as an indication of the high esteem in which he was held.

Canada was very fortunate in 1959 when John Grace decided to return to Ottawa to join the Ottawa Journal as an editorial writer and member of the editorial board. This was the beginning of his long association with that newspaper. He was named Associate Editor in 1962 and, since 1972, was responsible for the editorial policy of the Ottawa Journal. From June, 1978 until August, 1980, when the newspaper ceased publication, he held the position of The Journal's Vice-President and Editor-in-Chief.

Most Members of the House are aware of Dr. Grace's reputation as an independent-minded, outspoken editorial writer. Whether or not we always shared Dr. Grace's views on particular issues, I believe we would all agree that integrity was a key quality in his editorials.

His skills as an editorial writer were certainly recognized by his peers. His editorials won two National Newspaper Awards in 1975 and 1977 and one citation for merit in 1974. These awards are the most prestigious awards in Canadian journalism. Today, he acts as a judge for those awards, again an indication of the respect those in the newspaper profession continue to hold for him.

During the period of time he served at The Journal in Ottawa, Dr. Grace also lectured on a part-time basis in the graduate school of the University of Ottawa. He has been a radio and television commentator on public affairs and served as a member of the Canada Council for six years. John Grace is currently a member of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission, having been appointed to that position in October, 1980.

The independence he has demonstrated in that position will serve Dr. Grace extremely well in the position of Privacy Commissioner. The Privacy Commissioner, like the Information Commissioner we discussed earlier this afternoon, will be an ombudsman. One of the key responsibilities of the Privacy Commissioner will be to investigate complaints from individuals with respect to denials of access to information about themselves. In this role, the Commissioner will represent individuals in ensuring that Government institutions are persuaded to provide as much access to personal information as is possible.

[Translation]

However, the Privacy Commissioner will not deal only with complaints. He will act as the Government's guard dog with regard to the collection, retention, use, disclosure and disposal of personal information by Federal institutions. He is specifically responsible for monitoring the implementation of all rules relating to information contained in the Privacy Act in order to ensure compliance by federal institutions. The Privacy Commissioner will report to the federal institutions when he is convinced that these rules are not being followed and he may report such instances to Parliament.

[English]

The Privacy Commissioner has also been given the responsibility of overseeing the use of exempt banks. If he finds that personal information has been improperly included in an exempt bank, he can refer the issue to the Federal Court. If the Court agrees with him, it can order the information removed from the bank.

Thus, the role of the Privacy Commissioner is an extremely important one. Through him, Canadians will be able to ensure that information about them held by the Government of Canada is protected in accordance with the requirements of the Act.

I am pleased to be able to speak, on behalf of the Government, to Dr. Grace's appointment to this position, and to add my personal estimate of his merits. He is a man of integrity; a man who has proved he is willing to stand up for his principles and beliefs. In addition, John Grace's long and distinguished career in journalism and his involvement in community services reflect his keen respect for individual rights.

It is therefore with pleasure that I move that the nomination of John Grace as Privacy Commissioner be approved.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to be able to join the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. MacGuigan) in this resolution. In fact, if the Chair wished to call upon me afterwards in connection with the formalities that are necessary in this House of Commons, I would be delighted to second the nomination of Dr. Grace as the new Privacy Commissioner, the new ombudsman.

Dr. Grace is not a constituent of mine but I think any Member of the House would be honoured to call that gentleman his constituent. The Minister mentioned that he is a true son of the Ottawa Valley. I think he has taken from that rich heritage some of the important attributes of independence, judgment, good humour, goodwill and an ability to work hard, to work diligently and to work well.

There is not a word that the Minister of Justice has spoken about him with which I could disagree. During his membership of the CRTC he has been become known as the great dissenter. He is the Oliver Wendell Holmes of the CRTC. Dissent is a difficult thing among colleagues but he has shown that independence of spirit and mind that enables him to do that. His role is important and is becoming more important all the time. With advances in technology it becomes less difficult for information to be spilled and put into the wrong hands, particularly personal information.

I suspect that the Government looked over the field of available candidates and came to the conclusion, as I would if I were sitting in the seat of the Minister of Justice, that there is no one more able, no one better fitted by temperament, education and attitude, than Dr. John Grace to fulfil the role of Privacy Commissioner. This is really a pioneering role under this new statute.

The Government has chosen wisely and has chosen well. I commend the appointment to the House and urge that it be accepted today.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, once again I am pleased to join with the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) in supporting the resolution before the House naming John Grace Privacy Commissioner, with new and expanded powers under the Privacy Act passed by Parliament some time ago.

I have not had the privilege of meeting John Grace personally but I have had conversations with him. In light of those conversations and my review of his record, I am confident that he will exhibit the independence and intellectual integrity so necessary to carry out this job with distinction.

I know of his record at the CRTC as a dissenter. I might say that on most of his dissents I profoundly disagree with him on the substance, but nevertheless the fact that he is not afraid to take a position which at times differs from that of his colleagues augurs well for his future independence in this important role of Privacy Commissioner. It is an essential role for a number of reasons. The Privacy Act which the Government has brought forward, in my view and in the view of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and a number of other commentators, is in many ways a sham. What has been proposed by a number of these individuals, and what in fact I moved in the committee examining this Bill, is that we should have separated the Privacy Act from the other provisions in the Bill because, far from being an Act which extends the protection of privacy of Canadians, it represents in a number of ways a sweeping attack on the privacy of Canadians. It grants broad new powers to heads of Government institutions, to the RCMP and to the new civilian Security Service to intrude into the most confidential and personal aspects of Canadians' lives. In many ways the Bill expands the powers which these agencies presently have.

• (1520)

I said that the Bill is in some sense a sham and I believe probably the best authority for that proposition would be the McDonald Commission itself which examined this legislation, having been tabled in the House during the time they were considering changes in the area of security. The McDonald Commission was very critical of the proposed Privacy Act. They said, and I quote:

> This legislative change goes too far in opening up access of confidential information to investigative bodies including the RCMP. . . . the RCMP Security Service and the Criminal Investigations side of the Force have up until now been denied access to virtually all personal information possessed by other government institutions. (I emphasize legal access)

We all know the history of illegal access by the Security Service during, particularly, the 1970s. I quote again from the McDonald Commission:

> The Commission refers to the "dangerously ambiguous reference" to the definition of "subversive or hostile activities" in both the freedom of information and privacy part of the bill.

Finally they say, and I quote once again:

> —the proposed Privacy Act does not provide a satisfactory test or definition of the national security needs which may justify access to personal information in the government files. . . . we think it is a mistake to provide statutory information for security intelligence gathering in such vague terms.

The McDonald Commission was absolutely right, Mr. Speaker. This Bill as drafted, the legislation which is shortly to be proclaimed, constitutes, as I have indicated, an attack on the privacy of Canadians and, certainly, not an extension of the protection of privacy of Canadians. In many ways the Bill is a misrepresentation.

The new Privacy Commissioner has his work cut out for him, certainly, but I am confident that John Grace will ably perform his mandate under this legislation. It is important to emphasize, as with the case of the Information Commissioner, that he reports not to the Government of the day but rather to Parliament itself. It is in recognition of that that this resolution is being brought before Parliament.

The provisions for ongoing review of the Bill are particularly significant in the case of the Privacy Act. Many of the most glaring inadequacies of this Bill I am confident John Grace himself will recognize quickly and will want to see changed.

I have referred to some of the criticisms of the McDonald Commission. As well, I would note that there are other weaknesses in the legislation which I would hope that Mr. Grace would be dealing with. There is no provision, for example, for the disclosure of the salaries of publicly appointed officials, whether it be the Northern Pipeline Commissioner, Mitchell Sharp, whether it be the head of the Canada Post Corporation, Michael Warren, or a number of others. These have remained hidden from public scrutiny.

As well, the legislation is totally inadequate in the manner in which it deals with the phenomenon of trans-border data flow. We see increasingly the flow across the Canadian border of confidential and sensitive data about the lives of Canadians, whether it be computerized data or other data. Once it has gotten into the data banks in the United States, for example, there is absolutely no guarantee, and there are no safeguards in this Bill, that the information in question will not be abused. The issue of Social Insurance Numbers and the potential abuse of Social Insurance Numbers was ignored in the Privacy Act and I would certainly hope that once again the new Privacy Commissioner, Mr. Grace, would be addressing this question.

I made reference in my comments with respect to the Information Commissioner to the importance of public awareness and education of the rights which they may have under this legislation. In view of my concern and the concern expressed by many commentators and, as I mentioned, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, this Bill does in fact represent a threat to the privacy of Canadians, taken particularly in conjunction with the new omnibus legislation tabled by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) to create a civilian security service likely in 1984. It is essential, Mr. Speaker, for a person of the integrity, background and independence of mind of John Grace to bring his full powers to bear upon the Government and work very closely with the review committee to ensure that this fundamentally flawed piece of legislation will be significantly improved and amended following the review process. I hope that John Grace will not hesitate to speak out as the weaknesses in the legislation quickly become apparent.

I certainly hope as well that he will have an adequate budget to inform and educate Canadians as to his role as Privacy Commissioner, to make them aware of the rights which they may have under this new legislation, and the safeguards which exist in the Bill.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with Hon. Members of the House in agreeing to this resolution, and wish John Grace well in his very important and significant responsibilities over the next years in the interpretation and enforcement of the new privacy legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion (Mr. MacGuigan) agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1983, BILL C-152

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Prime Minister) moved that Bill C-152, an Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that we are back to the Fridays of old, and I appreciate the co-operation of Members on both sides of the House. I am particularly pleased with the major role being played in expediting the work of the House, and I may say it is most welcome, by the Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) with whom it has always been a pleasure and will continue to be a pleasure to work. I hope that these preliminaries will not prevent the Bill from being passed before five o'clock, even if we do not have a firm agreement in this respect.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill before the House today is basically proposing three things: a new Government structure in the areas of regional economic development, regional industrial expansion and external affairs, including international trade, as well as certain provisions relating to Parliamentary Secretaries, and finally, it also deals with the transitional provisions resulting from the proposed changes. Canada's economic and cultural resources are the result of both the diversity and the complementarity of its regions. This diversity and complementarity developed as a result of our history, the geography of our country, our political institutions, our cultural roots and our will to live together while respecting each other's differences. It is thanks to these immense human and material resources that we have developed so rapidly and that we are able to start our economic recovery with confidence.

National economic development that respects the regional differences in our country has always been one of the major concerns of the present Government. In the early 70's, we added to the then existing Government structure a department whose sole concern would be regional economic expansion. All Ministers who have been responsible for this Department have worked very hard to give Canadians in less developed regions a chance to realize the potential of their part of the country and thus contribute to the prosperity of all Canadians.

More than ten years later, Mr. Speaker, regional economic development has become so important that a single department can no longer meet the standards and objectives set by the Government. We therefore made a careful review of the administrative structures concerned with economic development and international trade, and we reached three main conclusions.

First, regional economic development could no longer be considered a specialized activity, restricted to the confines of a single department. It would now have to permeate all the Government's economic activities. Each sectorial department would, so to speak, have to be turned into a department of regional economic expansion for its own specific field. Thanks to DREE and to the efforts deployed by the Government, regional economic development had reached a level of maturity which made it necessary to integrate its objectives in the activities of all departments with an economic input.

Second, this redistribution of regional responsibility made it necessary to co-ordinate all Government efforts in this regard. It therefore became necessary to give regional economic considerations their proper place within the Government's central decision-making process.

Third, the close relationship between domestic economic growth and our international trade activities, the complexity of the modern international environment, and the need for maximizing the use of Government resources allocated to international relations, made it necessary to reinforce Government structures in this area. It therefore became necessary to regroup our international trade resources and to integrate their activities in the general framework of international policy, while at the same time modernizing the institutions responsible for our international relations.

Mr. Speaker, it was therefore abundantly clear that the Government had to act quickly to acquire the structures needed to implement these recommendations. An in-depth review of the various structures involved was undertaken so that, in January 1982, the Government was in a position to announce its intention to revamp certain Government structures and introduce the present Bill into the House.

Part I of the Bill gives the Department of External Affairs a new organic act and highlights many respects of the evolution of the Department since the adoption of the Department of External Affairs Act in 1909.

The Bill brings together the responsibilities concerning international trade and the traditional activities of the Department with respect to external relations. Although it regroups the duties related to international trade within a distinct entity, the Bill acknowledges the need to stress their presence in our international relations as a whole. This Bill reflects the evolution and maturity of our diplomatic institutions. Ever since Canada gained recognition as an independent nation through the 1931 Statute of Westminster, it has distinguished itself on the international scene as a trade partner, an international system stabilizing agent, a host country for immigrants and refugees, and a dispenser of international development assistance. The interdependence of those various international roles and the complexity of the contemporary international environment have transformed the traditional diplomacy. The institutions proposed in this Bill reflect the conjunction of the various international activities required for coherently and efficiently representing the many Canadian interests. Hon. Members will note as well that, under the Bill, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be responsible for monitoring the Canadian International Development Agency.

Part II of the Bill creates the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion which will partly replace the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, thus bringing all industrial programs under the same roof. I would urge Hon. Members to read carefully that part of the Bill to realize the significance given to regional development. The regionalization of that new Department will be a model for all other sectorial Departments. The regional impact of all Government intervention processes will thus be heightened, and every effort will be made so that sectorial and regional considerations will indeed be taken into account in the preparation of our policies and the implementation of our programs.

Part III has to do with special areas and is aimed at deleting from the organic act of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion the provisions which concern special areas and which are now part and parcel of the Department of Regional Expansion Act. My colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) will soon introduce in the House a Bill on the new regional industrial expansion program. He will need that Bill to carry out his new mandate, in addition to the tools which are already available.

Finally, Part IV introduces certain amendments to the Parliamentary Secretaries Act. It provides for the inclusion of Ministers in charge of ministries of state in figuring out the maximum number of MP's or senators who may be designated as Parliamentary Secretaries.

The fifth and last part of the Bill comprises a certain number of transitional provisions and amendments to the proclamation respecting the ministry of state for Economic Development. The proclamation spells out the new regional responsibilities of the Minister and proposes a new nomenclature to stress the importance of his role in the co-ordinating of regional economic development policies. The series of transitional provisions in that part of the Bill would indeed enable the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development to co-ordinate the overall regional economic development policy of the Government and would temporarily give the various sectorial Ministers the authority needed to assume their regional responsibilities in their respective areas. Under such provisions, those Ministers could, for instance, until the House approves the amendments required to the various statutes concerned, conclude sectorial agreements with Provinces under the new General Agreements on economic development that will be negotiated by the Minister of State on behalf of the Government.

The various Ministers whose portfolios are affected by these organizational changes will give details of how they were prepared and what improvements would ensue.

These changes essentially would guarantee a better management of regional economic development and increased benefits for all Canadians, wherever they may be. Moreover, they would enhance the importance of international trade within the overall context of our foreign relations. We will of course welcome any proposal that would improve the Bill as it now stands, but it is my hope that Members from both sides of the House will recognize the importance of expediting the Bill. It is in that spirit and to prevent any waste of time that I have so cursorily reviewed the contents of Bill C-152. It is my hope that in their comments, Hon. Members will show the same spirit of brevity and efficiency, and that the Bill go through all stages today, so that it may give effect to the reality of changes experienced in the organization of the Government over the last few months.

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I must disabuse the Government House Leader right at the beginning that the Bill will receive easy passage in the House of Commons, because it will not receive easy passage in the House of Commons. I do not want to put an end to the ecumenical nature of the Friday afternoon, but ecumenicalism demands not only friendship but also honesty.

I must say to my friends opposite, that great phalanx sitting across from me, that it is not our intention to give easy passage to the Bill because I believe there is something fundamentally wrong here. I suggest that this is organization and reorganization gone mad. The "locomotive engineer" behind this Bill has now left the Public Service; he rests in the other place. I believe Hon. Members know who I mean but I will be more specific: he is Michael Pitfield.

● (1540)

I was in the Parliamentary Library reading about Government organization and I came upon a statement by Edmund Burke written in 1791 which I believe everyone should keep in mind as we consider this latest animal from a Government that has gone mad in terms of reorganization. Edmund Burke said:

An ignorant man, who is not fool enough to meddle with his clock, is, however, sufficiently confident to think he can safely take to pieces and put together, at his pleasure, a moral machine of another guise, importance and complexity, composed of far other wheels and springs and balances and counteracting and co-operating powers. Men little think how immorally they act in rashly meddling with what they do not understand.

That is what this Bill is. It represents the little fingers of Government meddling around in Departments and agencies of the Government which were already doing their job quite well. There is a resentment within both the Department of External Affairs and the old Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce over the intent of this Bill.

This paper goes on further to say:

The urge to reorganize functions, authorities and relationships is evidently one of the most fundamental drives of senior public servants. If one thinks of organization structures as skeletal arrangements, then we suffer from a surfeit of radical chiropractors, who believe that manipulating the bones will somehow cause the organic diseases to disappear.

That is what this manipulative statute reminds me of. It goes on to say:

Second to this urge to reorganize is an urge to add on new layers of management, either under central agencies or within departments. If management is perceived as poor, we simply add more of it until the swamp is so full of swamp-drainers that managers have neither the time nor the clean line of sight for shooting the alligators.

Then it makes a plea:

There is a need then for a return to simplicity, clarity and speed of decision-making in the arrangement of functions and authorities, and a willingness to forego the highly-ornamental refinements that have given a rococo cast to our organization designs.

That describes to a tee what this Bill is intending to do to two fine Government Departments. Each of those Departments is designed for a specific purpose in the scheme of things and such is not only understood within Canada but abroad.

Let me quote from an article written by Jim Robb of the Ottawa Citizen. Under the byline it says:

Ed Lumley admits it.

The once lordly department of industry, trade and commerce, now the department of regional industrial expansion, has fallen in the government pecking order.

It has and that is what he says. It goes on:

"Industry, trade and commerce was Central Canada and manufacturing oriented, that's why it lost clout in the cabinet," Lumley said.

With high unemployment in the country and a necessity for upgrading our manufacturing sector in Canada for the good of its workers, the country and the world for that matter, I do not believe any Minister of the Crown ought to say that it has lost its clout. If it has lost its clout, as they say, do not blame the people in the Department and commence to reorganize it. I suggest a better solution is to strengthen the Department.

I have talked to people in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce who tell me that what has happened to that Department as a result of the intent of this statute has not been to strengthen or augment its powers and increase its scope, but to narrow it, downgrade it and render it ineffective. It has been to render it ineffective in the important sense that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was the route through which business came to Government. The managers, middle managers and upper managers in that Department understood their role. It was to be the touchstone of those industries to Government and a window of Government in the world in which those people move.

That purpose has been weakened and set aside. That is the wrong step to take in a period of reconstruction. It is equally wrong because Industry, Trade and Commerce had an external aspect to it. Furthermore, it is wrong for those people in the Department to be brought down and to intermingle with those who have a diplomatic and political role to play in the world abroad at a time when we require as much world trade as possible.

I want to say at the outset that there are no grounds upon which it could be reasonably argued that this Bill should have easy passage. While the Government has a majority and the Bill will eventually pass if the Government persists, I would rather that the Government would not persist. Instead, I would like to see the Government withdraw the Bill and reconsider it. I know it may be difficult for the Ministers of State to recreate it but it would not mean the end of the world.

I do not believe this reorganization is good either for the Department of External Affairs or the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the people who work in those Departments. That is why there is resistance which has caused difficulties and the delayed timetable. The reorganization has been a mess. The facts should be told as they are.

The second aspect of the Bill which I want to deal with concerns Parliamentary Secretaries. I want everyone in the House to know that suddenly it is the intention of the Government that Senators will be eligible to become Parliamentary Secretaries. I particularly draw this to the attention of that row of Private Members on the Government side who chaff to get into the Cabinet in the dying days of the Government. Is it not wonderful that Senators can now be eligible to become Parliamentary Secretaries?

Aside from the fact that it borders on being irrelevant to take that position, which has been taken quite easily, I believe that it has the effect of downgrading and overlooking the capacity which languishes on the backbenches of the Liberal Party. That capacity will likely languish there for another year and a half until it languishes on this side of the House when those backbenchers move over here.

In the meantime the Government has decided that it will create Senators as Parliamentary Secretaries. Furthermore, it will increase the number of Parliamentary Secretaries by four. Do we need more Parliamentary Secretaries? Is there any Member of the House of Commons who believes that the Government is gagging because of an inadequate supply of Parliamentary Secretaries and that Departments are unable to function because of a want for four Parliamentary Secretaries? I suggest not.

I would like to find the person who dreamed up this idea. I would like to find him and have a chat with him. You are pointing to someone, Mr. Speaker, but I do not know to whom. If you have secret information on this subject, perhaps you would tell me afterwards, because I would be interested to know.

In any event, to put Parliamentary Secretaries in the Senate not only downgrades my colleagues on the other side of this House, but it tends to downgrade Parliament. It is not necessary to have attention paid to Parliamentary Secretaries. We must augment the powers of this Parliament in real terms, and for that reason, instead of the Government concentrating on creating more Parliamentary Secretaries, I would rather see it upgrading the prestige of Members of Parliament who chair parliamentary committees. I believe that is where the balance ought to be struck.

I commend the sixth report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures to the Government. In that report we spoke not only of enhancing the status of the chairmen of parliamentary committees but also of allowing Members of Parliament on both sides of the House of Commons to chair those committees. It is the sort of neutral chairman concept. It is not quite accurate but it is a neutral chairman concept to develop a cadre of chairmen of parliamentary committees within this place from both sides of the House of Commons, people who are chosen because of their ability to develop, instead of an enhancement to the Government and to the apparatus of Government in the parliamentary sense, an enhancement to Parliament in the accountability sense. I think that is a very important concept.

But this Government, at least by this Bill, is not thinking that way. We will have more Parliamentary Secretaries. We have them running out of our ears now. I would like each of them to stand up some time and tell us what they do and how they advance the cause of their Minister. You know and I know, Sir, that whether a Parliamentary Secretary has anything to do depends very much on his Minister, whether the Minister is prepared to give that Parliamentary Secretary any work, whether that Minister is prepared to trust the Parliamentary Secretary and whether the Minister is prepared to delegate tasks to the Parliamentary Secretary. I think rather than having more Parliamentary Secretaries, and indeed Senators as Parliamentary Secretaries—think of it, Sir, Senators as Parliamentary Secretaries—

Mr. Fennell: They will sit in the gallery.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —I think it would be better that we enhanced some of the parliamentary roles here. If we are going to spend any extra money, we should do it in that sense. I must say I cannot understand this. I have never understood why we needed so many Parliamentary Secretaries in the first place, but to add four and to say that they are coming from the Senate is beyond belief.

It is the third aspect that I want to speak to, and other speakers will be dealing with this matter. It concerns what the Government has done to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. That Department was a signal to regions of the country that the Government of Canada cares, that it cares for disparities that exist in the country. Disparities have changed from place to place and from degree to degree, but disparities existed in Canada long before Confederation, at Confederation and up until today. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion was the beacon light to the people and the regions of Canada that regional disparities would be cared for and were important. But that Department is gone.

Lest you think I am being partisan about this, Mr. Speaker, let me assure you that I am not. The Senate of Canada in the Senate report on the dissolution of DREE had some pretty cogent things to say about this hatchet job being done by this Bill on a good Department of the Government. Let me quote from that report:

> The long and short of the 1982 reorganization—

This Bill is a result of that reorganization.

> —is that some basic components of the past ten years' efforts to encourage the development of Canada's least prosperous regions have been abandoned, and it is not at all clear how they are to be replaced.

What the Senate is saying is that the Government has reversed itself by this reorganization. Where they were prepared to give priority to a Minister in the Cabinet to alleviate disparities, it has now been abandoned. What is worse, not abandoned for anything clear and decisive but abandoned to the extent that it is not clear how this Department is to be replaced. That is not a condemnation from a Conservative; that is from the report of the Senate of Canada. The majority of members on that committee are members of the Liberal Party. Let me quote again from page 70 of this report as follows:

> As for the new approach to working with the Provinces, implicit in the January, 1982 statement, we have serious concerns.

You can read the report, Mr. Spekaer; I do not want to take up that much time putting it all on the record. But again let me point out the Senate report says "We have serious concerns". Not one of those concerns was addressed by the Minister here, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), in advancing the case for approval of this Bill by Parliament. I think a Minister has a duty to come forward and say why the Bill is a good thing, why it should be approved by the House of Commons, if he can persuade us that it should be approved. Maybe there is no good reason for it to be approved except for this mania of reorganization which has infected this Government like the plague.

The report goes on:

> Under the previous structure, the least developed regions had a defender within the federal Government—the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.
> Now that this department has been disbanded, its policy mandate transferred to the Minister of State for Regional Economic Development, and its program delivery responsibilities to DRIE, who will champion the cause of the least developed regions in cabinet?

Who will champion the cause of the least developed regions of Canada? Who indeed will champion that cause? The Minister says that all Departments will be aware of it, but how? Who will be the beacon light? Who will be the great leader or the champion against disparities in the country? It is not clear in the legislation nor in anything the Minister said. It is not clear in the Prime Minister's statement on January 12, 1982, in which he dealt with reorganization. In fact, it became blurred in the Prime Minister's statement. That is what I said at the outset, that I do not believe this thing has been carefully, methodically thought out from the point of view of function and duty.

At page 72 of the report the Senators, most of them Liberals, say this:

> We are concerned that the word ("regional") was never used to refer to the least developed regions within each province. Our concern was reinforced when we failed to find even a single reference in the (government's reorganization announcement) to the word "disparities".

Not a single reference, Mr. Speaker. My friend the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) and his colleagues on the regional development committee of our caucus will be dealing with this in later stages of debate.

I think this program is deficient even on its face. Too many areas have been designated. Governments are afraid to take risks because they are highly publicized new Departments responsible to and for the haves as well as the have-nots. The political reward of development in the have areas is far greater. I suspect that is what we will see here. The Minister of this Department will be looking now in the last year or so of the mandate of this Government for the greatest political rewards and not to the matter of righting disparities.

I have dealt with the three main sections of this Bill in my opening speech in this debate. I think the Government deserves a chance to withdraw this Bill. We will give them that chance right now. I say to the Government, withdraw this Bill. I ask the Government to remove this blight from its legislative program. The Government is worried about other legislation. It has necessities I understand by June 30. Let us be delivered from the necessity of having to deal with this Bill. But I ask the Government not to withdraw it and do nothing; it should retrace its steps through the organizational rearrangements that were done.

• (1600)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The labyrinth.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes, this labyrinth, as the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) says, which no one can understand. Many senior managers and middle managers in the Public Service wish that it had never been laid upon them. They wish it had been taken to the Senate and buried with Michael Pitfield, not dealt with here at all. The Government has taken the traditional, clearly defined roles of the Departments and melded them together in a way which has made them or shall render them ineffective. At least, the Government has tried to meld them together. It looks good on paper to say that External Affairs and International Trade go together, but the thing has to work well. That will not happen.

I urge the Government to take advantage of the opportunity that I am giving it this afternoon. I will give consent to end the House early today if the Minister would just withdraw the Bill and take the opportunity to rethink it. It is ill-conceived and it will not serve the country well. If the Government brought forward a Bill which sharpened the focus in some way, we would be bound to support it; but we are not bound to support this ramshackle excuse for failure. That is the position of my Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I see the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) rising to ask a question. I have to remind him and the House that following the first three speakers on a Bill there is no provision for a ten-minute question and answer period. However, if the House wishes to give its consent, I could do so.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this Bill and I will not speak at any great length. In essence, we are putting into law what is already in practice. I want to speak about that, in addition to the substance of the Bill. It is a bad practice to precede the enactment of the law in most instances, and I believe it to be bad in this instance as well. I do not agree with putting into practice or putting into force provisions of any law which has not received the approval of Parlliament. I suggest to the Government, just from that point of view alone, that it should be very cautious about that kind of procedure.

I have raised this objection on a number of different occasions as it applied to such things as the application of taxes and the collection of taxes where by precedent the Government assumed the right to impose that which it believed would become law at some subsequent date. In the process the Government has been able to dip into the pockets of people—and in this case too in an indirect way—to extract moneys which they can ill afford in advance of any legislative approval. In this Bill similar things have happened. I want to register my strongest objection to that.

I hope that this is a practice which will cease, that we will no longer be required to deal some months and in some instances years after the fact with proposals that the Government has deemed to be of value from its perspective but have not yet been given either the benefit of debate or approval by the House of Commons.

On the substance of the Bill, I have grave reservations about what the Government has done. I am vitally concerned about the effects of putting together two quite different functions of Government. I do not think that External Affairs and International Trade necessarily knit together under all circumstances. In fact, one can very frequently be an impediment to the good operation of the other. I also believe that each is of vital importance in its own right and should stand separately in the organization of Government. I believe that each has a priority position within the affairs of a nation, particularly this nation, a nation that sees itself in a middle role in international affairs seeking out compromise in a major dispute and attempting to influence the course of events, not as a major power but as a middle power.

For this country international affairs are of vital importance. I am always concerned when we are faced with matters of significant international import and we see the Government drawing back from making tough decisions about our relations with another country at the international and ambassadorial levels. I am always concerned when I see the Government drawing back because of the implications the decision might have on our trade arrangements.

Even separating the two functions may not totally eliminate that problem, but putting them together certainly compounds the problem. There are times when international relations or relations between countries are strained for one reason or another, but long established trade continues. To put the two together under one operation makes it very difficult to carry on those two vitally important functions without a very serious overlap. In looking at this Bill I must think that for whatever reasons—and I have tried to think of the reasons the Government has in mind—the Government decided to go ahead with this, it cannot be as compelling as the reasons for not doing it.

For example, we have had strained relations of late with Poland over the imposition of martial law and the inability of the communist Government there to deal in a way that we think would be proper with the people of that country and their right to free collective bargaining and free association. We have felt that we wanted to indicate to that regime that we were not favourable to what it was doing, that we were displeased and that we did not think it was an appropriate step to take.

On the other hand, Poland is one of our major trade partners, particularly for western grain. Because of this difference in international relations we have seen a loss of the market for grain. The question one must ask is, who was hurt in that? Did we hurt the Government of Poland? Not very much because the European Common Market quickly filled the void in terms of the grain it wanted to purchase. Did we hurt the people of Poland? Not very much because, as I said, the European Common Market filled the void created as a result of our action. Well, whom did we hurt? We hurt the farmers of western Canada. We reduced the potential for sales.

In doing that, and some people might agree that is the appropriate thing to do, I predict the time will come when we will once again have normal relations with Poland at the international and diplomatic level. However, the chances of re-establishing the market for western grain will have been severely impeded, if not done away with entirely. I use the example to show the conflict. On the one hand, we have a diplomatic conflict, a conflict over the actions of another Government, an action that we absolutely abhor and want to see stopped. On the other hand we have an ongoing relationship at the trade level. What we have seen happen is that the people who in the end suffered from our actions were ourselves.

This is not the only example; there are other examples that have occurred over the years. I am not making a plea for change. I am suggesting that these matters have to be looked at singly. They cannot be looked at in tandem. I am concerned that by lumping trade in with External Affairs, the decisions that are going to be made about our trade arrangements will be very much determined by our attitude at the time at the international level with regard to our sense of the appropriateness of actions taken by one Government or another which may or may not be there for a long or short time, who knows.

Therefore, we will be detrimentally affecting our capacity to grow, to meet our needs, our capacity to provide opportunities for those who work in Canada and provide job opportunities for others. We will have detrimentally affected that as a result of lumping together these two vitally important issues.

For the foreseeable future, this country will depend to a great extent for its growth and economic future in terms of job creation, flow of finances and our ability to trade. Trade being a vital part of the Canadian way of life, it is very important that we should have a trade Minister, full status, dealing on behalf of Canada with the support of a Ministry that is capable of going out and, in a single-minded way, trying to improve the trade relations that Canada has to have in the future.

That does not mean that from time to time Governments may, for one reason or another, decide that the actions taking place in another part of the world are of such an important and reprehensible nature that we do not want to have anything to do with that country at all. Of course, there will be times like that. On those occasions the Government will make a political decision. That political decision will be transmitted from the Government to the House of Commons, from the House of Commons to the people of Canada and from the people of Canada ultimately throughout the world that we are in the midst of a serious dispute with another country, that even to the level of trade we are prepared to enter into some kind of embargo arrangement, some kind of withdrawal of normal relations.

I suggest that under normal circumstances in international conflicts that likely will not arise. If it is our hope that we will build this country so that we will be able to provide for the needs for this generation and generations to come. If we are going fully to utilize the resource potential of this country, if we are going to take that and turn it into a manufacturing sector that will provide stability for people, if we are going to be able to say to those who have long been the backbone of our trading, farmers mostly in western Canada but not necessarily all, that there will be some conscientious effort put out by this Government through an agency or, I suggest, a Ministry, to try to build on what we are able to do well and create an image outside of Canada that countries can rely on Canada for providing certain goods and services that we are able to produce through our expertise and provide in a competitive way, then we need to have a single entity charged with the primary responsibility of trading. We must have a Minister in charge of a Department that is solely and completely directed toward the sale of Canadian products and trading with other countries of the world.

In my judgment, this is going in the wrong direction. If this were an attempt to streamline Government, if we could see Government trying to cut costs, make itself more efficient, provide for a more aggressive kind of external effort on the trade front while establishing an independent foreign policy—although I do not know how—I concede that I might be persuaded that this could be done. However, this is not the purpose. As the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) pointed out, what we are doing is enlarging the size of the Government simultaneously with amalgamating two vitally important functions.

I have extremely grave doubts about the appropriateness of the direction the Government is going in this regard. I predict that within ten years this super Ministry will be split in two. The Government will see that it is too cumbersome, too difficult to operate in this way, that the conflicts are too many to resolve properly, that the decisions that must be made by the Minister who is primarily in charge come into conflict too often to allow decisions to be made properly, and will within the next ten years revert to separate operations, one dealing with external affairs and one dealing with trade.

In saying that, I do not propose that when that happens it automatically becomes once again the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I thought that Industry, Trade and Commerce was much too large. It covered too many conflicting interests. For a country like ours, there has to be a recognition that industry and commerce seen as a domestic matter are to be separated and dealt with in a separate way from our trade effort around the world. I do not suggest for a moment that they are not interrelated, that there is not an overlapping of concern and operation, because there is. On the one hand you have to focus on what we have to do in order to build in Canada an infrastructure that will provide for our domestic needs, which quite clearly are our primary responsibility, and for our international requirements which are a great source of revenue to us and of great benefit to many other countries.

I suggest that that can only be done if the Government becomes somewhat single-minded about the need to encourage economic development on a world scale in Canada, economic development that recognizes the three frontiers which are open to us now in terms of trading, these being the Pacific rim, the United States and the European frontiers. There is the opportunity to move into those areas as they become somewhat more vulnerable and also to recognize the entire southern hemisphere. Over the years we will want to develop a good relationship with the southern hemisphere both in terms of our external operations at the diplomatic level and in terms of our trading arrangements, to our own benefit and to the benefit of the developing nations.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that all of those things can be accomplished by lumping everything together under one Minister. I do not think that anyone in the Cabinet could handle that, and not for one minute am I suggesting that Cabinet Ministers are less than competent, although I may have doubts about the odd one. I will not say which one because he is in the House. Nevertheless, I would say the same thing regardless of who I was speaking of. I would say it if my own colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), who I think would probably make an excellent Cabinet Minister and no doubt will when we form the Government after the next election, was the one to take on that responsibility. But I would even say to him with his infinite capacity which we all recognize, a capacity which is probably not even touched by anyone else in the House, that not even he could take on that much responsibility and do the job well.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, you can gather that I am not over-eager to approve this Bill. I am not really keen to put into law what I consider to be an inadequate piece of legislation dealing with matters that I frankly think are headed in the wrong direction. I do not think that the Bill would be a bad idea if there was some honest committee consideration of the whole question, and I stress honest. I think there is a need for Members to listen to each other as we try to explain why we are worried about the Bill. It is not a question of Liberals versus Tories versus NDP or, as is normally the case, Liberals and Tories versus NDP. This is a not a case like that at all. This is a case of being concerned about the future of the country, about what is actually best for the country. This is not a Liberal idea. It is not a Conservative idea. It is a wrong idea. These three things are frequently one and the same, but in this instance it is a wrong idea that we frankly must try to come to grips with.

If the opportunity arises, I would urge that we should have the subject matter of the Bill looked at extremely carefully.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Which subject matter?

Mr. Deans: I am addressing myself primarily to the question of the reorganization of the two Ministries. I recognize that there are other matters, but I am addressing myself primarily to that. The subject matter should be referred to committee and looked at in the most non-partisan way possible. It should be looked at from the point of view of how will it serve the various regions of Canada; how will conflicts arise between the two different functions; how will the one function be able to operate when a conflict is clearly there in the other function; how will it be able to maintain the equilibrium necessary between our country and another country when there is a serious conflict arising that is at the diplomatic level while there is the desire to maintain trade relations at the other level. How would we resolve those things within one Ministry? How could we make sure that both points of view are adequately expressed at Cabinet by people of similar rank? How would we give voice to the concerns within the Cabinet so that the Cabinet will be able to deal properly with concerns that may well be different but are of equal status?

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the start, I wish that we had had an opportunity to debate this Bill before it became a fait accompli since I am convinced that it will ultimately be changed anyway. Let us not ram the thing through and then find ourselves in a position of rewriting the law again, and debating again because on the next occasion we may find that the Conservatives are on the other side of the argument, who knows. Let us not do it that way.

Let us see if maybe the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) might consider referring at least that portion of the Bill that I am concerned with to one or other of the standing committees or maybe even setting up a committee to deal with it by itself so as to see whether or not the conflicts that I envisage are real or imaginary. I will abide by the ultimate decision of the committee, as I must, and I will do it willingly. But let us at least give this a fair hearing and try to do what in the final analysis we believe is best. If we do not do so, then we will end up in the position we have found ourselves in so often in the past of having to come back and make amendments to something that everyone knew was not adequate enough to be passed at the time it was before us.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) and he expressed some serious concerns which are well justified. I was rather amused by his fulsome praise of the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I gathered that he is getting in early with his support for one of the leadership candidates for the New Democratic Party in British Columbia. Why the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway would want to become the captain of that small Titanic is beyond me, but he appears to want it and he is getting his cheering section going early.

The Bill begins as follows:

Bill C-152, an Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto—

I think that part is well worded. "Matters related or incidental thereto" could mean anything that could be thought up and amended. I agree entirely with the Member for Hamilton Mountain who said that this is the wrong time for the Bill to come in. It is coming in in the middle of a process that presumably was to have had quite some time to go or else should never have been started. The amalgamation of the two Departments did get started in 1982, and now they are in a terrible shambles and want a Bill apparently to authorize the mess that they have made of it so far.

I think that they might better have taken some kind of initiative a year or so ago, brought out a white paper or a green paper saying that they planned to reorganize these two Departments and meld them into one Department, and then let it go to a committee to be studied so that there could be some warning given and possibly soem suggestions made by practical people. From reading the Bill, one cannot determine that there was any practicality at all in the genesis of this Bill. It looks very much like the product of a seventeenth century renaissance man's theorizing. I certainly agree with my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), that the renaissance man with probably no sense of practicality whatsoever has decided that these two disparate Departments should work as one.

None of Canada's major trading partners has so far combined their departments of trade and foreign affairs. No other country thinks it will work. The last time something like this happened was about 15 years ago when it was decided not to integrate the Canadian Armed Forces but to unify them. About two years from now I expect they will be back where they were before this ill-conceived experiment started. I believe that if we go ahead with this ill-considered Bill we are going to have to do the same thing with External Affairs and Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Everybody knows that these Departments have to work together and there must be some integration of their activities. It would be nonsense if the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce sent a trade mission to Moscow to try to sell 10,000 refrigerators or something like that and at the same time the Department of External Affairs decided to break off trade relations with Moscow. I do not suppose there is a likelihood of such things happening but it shows the kind of integration that is needed.

When the Government saw the requirement its answer was: "Let's mash them together like potatoes and carrots and see if anyone likes it when it comes out". As far as I can see, no one does.

New positions have been imposed on a very rigid and fairly well working structure in the Department of External Affairs. I might say that I have always had a great admiration for the staff in the Department of External Affairs. It has had a long succession of nonentities as Ministers, with one glowing exception in 1979 when the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) was Minister. Other than that they have unfortunately had to take second-rank Ministers because the Prime Minister (Mr.Trudeau) wanted to run the place himself. It is much easier to do that if someone without too much intellectual muscle is the figurehead.

These people were put together by a kind of fiat in 1982, and suddenly 200 extra people had to be accommodated in the Pearson Building. Since then it seems they have just let them have a kind of group love-in until everyone found a place or what they might be able to or wanted to do. In other words, you kind of found your coffee mate there and decided between the two of you which department, section, division or subsection you wanted to work in. Then you tried to make a job description suit what you wanted to do. This has been going on ever since this ill-conceived idea came into full force.

It seems that we need some authority for the creation of all this confusion and that is why we have this Bill. I feel very certain that the Government does not really know what the Department will look like a year from now.

The effect of these changes so far is that the Department of External Affairs now has three Ministers. Presumably the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), that prescient Minister, is going to be in charge. When he was funding Alastair Gillespie's project in his constituency he did not know who Alastair Gillespie was, despite the fact that they had served together in Cabinet for years.

The other Minister will be the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan), I presume, although what he is supposed to do is questionable unless it is to act as a kind of batman for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Then there is the Minister of State for External Relations (Mr. Lapointe), who has a questionable job as well. I do not know why we need a Minister of State for External Relations and a Secretary of State for External Affairs. Perhaps this will enable them to continue their travelling; one will be away and one will be at home—a kind of tag team wrestling match in the diplomatic field. This entire shuffle seems to be similar to a game of musical chairs. They were one chair short and someone was going to be left out if they did not dream up a job for them. Now they have it.

Chart No. I, on the left-hand side, shows the same number of boxes as before the move with Ministers in them; after the move there is the same number of boxes, six, and a Minister in each.

An interesting thing appears in the Schedule I to the Bill if consequential amendments have to be made. Column I shows the Act that is affected, such as the Salaries Act, 1980, 1981 and 1982 and that Section 4 is to be amended by deleting "The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce $30,800" and "The Minister of Regional and Economic Expansion $30,800". I do not think anyone should rejoice about that because that $61,600 is not going to be saved. Below that appears an amendment to add "The Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion $30,800, The Minister of International Trade $30,800 and the Minister for External Relations $30,800". This seems to me to be $30,800 more than was cancelled.

Perhaps someone on the Government side might be kind enough to explain in the days or weeks ahead whether we are going to spend an extra $30,800 on an extra Minister as well as the four extra Parliamentary Secretaries mentioned by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) a few minutes ago. I support what he said. It seems ridiculous to think of a Parliamentary Secretary being in the Senate. We cannot even talk to the Ministers who are in the Senate but have to listen to some stooge in this House when we have a question that belongs over there. That they would have Parliamentary Secretaries help them be unavailable is difficult to contemplate.

The Minister of State for External Relations, in his unusual job, is responsible for francophone, cultural and humanitarian affairs. It is difficult to know what his place will be in all of this. Among the people who are selling things, he has a very narrow job description.

In addition to these Ministers there is a plethora of Deputy Ministers. There is one of whom I highly approve. There will be one Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, the deputy head of the Department. We all know that Mr. Massé is an excellent administrator. I can only feel sorry for him, being given this garbage to sort out.

There will also be three Associate Under-Secretaries of State for External Affairs with the rank of Department Deputy Minister. Bill C-152 provides that one may be appointed Deputy Minister for International Trade and one may be appointed Deputy Minister for Foreign Policy. That is two, so it is a little difficult to see why we need another one but we have another one.

Meanwhile, at the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce there are more problems. Parts of the Departments are going to merge and become the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. According to the job descriptions, one Minister will be in charge of manufacturing, processing and service industries within Canada, regional industrial development, tourism, small business, and trade and commerce within Canada. I do not know if this means we no longer need a Minister of Small Business and Tourism or not. The Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), who is at present the Minister of Small Business and Tourism, seems to be looking for a role to play in all of this. I do not know whether he is going to find one or not. It is difficult to tell in this hodge-podge of a Bill.

One of the big concerns in the country among businessmen is that the new organization will effectively kill the trade commissioners and that service which used to answer directly to the Minister of State for International Trade under the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Canadian businessmen are concerned that the officers of the Department of External Affairs will be unable to maintain the close industry sector contacts which they had at Industry, Trade and Commerce. Just how much trade expertise are our foreign service officers expected to accrue? It is a very important question in light of the fact that the changes have been selected to give trade matters a much higher profile. The answer to that question will affect not only the way the foreign officers go about their jobs, but also their career progression. All these changes will, of course, have a substantial effect on Canada's policy. Unfortunately, no one seems to know what the effect will be.

• (1640)

In February of this year the Financial Post, in an article by a brilliant young journalist by the name of James Bagnall, summed up the changes this way, and I quote:

> On paper, all of these changes had a certain elegant rationale. But in the short run, they have produced bureaucratic infighting over office space, line responsibility and policy mandates. In addition, they have badly damaged morale within I.T.C., stirred the resentment of the trade commissioner service, which prided itself on its independence, left at least 300 employees from various Departments in a non-man's land with no obvious place to hang their hats and will eliminate more than 400 full-time jobs by the time the dust settles.

The article went on to say, and I quote:

> Trade officials are still concerned their impact on foreign policy will be diluted by the new arrangement—they are outnumbered by foreign service officers nearly three to one domestically and nearly two to one abroad.

The sad part of all of this is that this came about without any recognition being given to the McDougall Report which was, as Hon. Members know, a Royal Commission Report on External Affairs. It was commissioned by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), no less, who said at the time that he thought that the Department of External Affairs needed to be reorganized to give the people a clearer understanding of their role in the Department. This report was handed in and within six weeks after that this reorganization was put into effect, apparently without any recognition being given at all to the Royal Commission Report by Miss McDougall, a very highly regarded member of the Department of External Affairs for several years. She was, unfortunately, somewhat hindered by a degree of independence which caused her report not to fulfil the secret dreams and wishes of the Government. It simply made sense.

I would like to point out that I agree with my hon. colleague that this bears all the earmarks of the work of Senator Pitfield, the person who brought in the National Energy Program, where he collected a lot of people who knew nothing about energy and devised a program to help the poor industry out which was doing very, very well up until then. He has now decided to reorganize that Department, where his knowledge is equally scant. As I read about the reorganization, I kept thinking to myself that I have heard of these things before, but where was it? Where it was was in "Gulliver's Travels", written in the eighteenth century. It is about the third trip Gulliver made to a place called "Laputa". This was an island in the sky where everyone dreamed funny dreams which were very, very impractical. In the capital city of Lagado they had a place called the "Grand Academy" where all of these impractical ideas everyone had were brought together and they tried to put them into production.

I would just like to read something which Mr. Pitfield could well have thought up himself. They had a department of agriculture in this Grand Academy, and someone decided that they should find a device for ploughing ground with hogs so they would save the charges of ploughs, cattle and labour. The medhod they came up with was this, and I quote:

> —in an acre of ground you bury, at six inches distance and eight deep, a quantity of acorns, dates, chestnuts, and other mast or vegetables, whereof these animals are fondest; then you drive six hundred or more of them into the field, where, in a few days, they will root up the whole ground in search of their food and make it fit for sowing; it is true, upon experiment, they found the charge and trouble very great, and they had little or no crop. However, it is not doubted that this invention may be capable of great improvement.

So they were quite satisfied with the experiment and they went on for years trying to sow ground which they had ploughed in this fashion.

There was another idea at the Grand Academy which would do Mr. Pitfield very well. I sometimes wonder if he could not have been a resurrection from the days of Jonathan Swift. At the Grand Academy everyone knew how laborious the usual method was of attaining to arts and sciences, whereas they contrived that the most ignorant person, at a reasonable charge and with a little bodily labour, may write books on philosophy, poetry, politics, law, mathematics and theology, without the least assistance from genius or study. We have a lot of people in this country who want to be able to do great things, but they are not all that willing to study and are not in the genius field either. A professor at the Grand Academy showed Gulliver a frame he had built, about the sides whereof all his pupils stood in ranks, and I quote:

> It was twenty feet square, placed in the middle of the room. The superficies were composed of several bits of wood, about the bigness of a die, but some larger than others. They were all linked together by slender wires. These bits of wood were covered on every square with paper pasted on them; and on these papers were written all the words of their language in their several moods, tenses, and declensions, but without any order. The professor then desired me to observe, for he was going to set his engine at work. The pupils at his command took each of them hold of an iron handle, whereof there were forty fixed round the edges of the frame; and, giving them a sudden turn, the whole disposition of the words was entirely changed. He then commanded six-and-thirty of the lads to read the several lines softly as the appeared upon the frame; and, where they found three or four words together that might make part of a sentence, they dictated to the four remaining boys who were scribes. This work was repeated three or four times, and at every turn the engine was so contrived that the words shifted into new places, as the square bits of wood moved upside down.
> Six hours a day the young students were employed in this labour, and the professor showed me several volumes in large folio already collected of broken sentences, which he intended to piece together, and, out of those rich materials to give the world a complete body of all arts and sciences—

Of course, it did not work. He was an impractical man. He was the "Pitfield" of his day. Mix everything up and maybe something sensible will come out of it. It is like the dictionary which some soul wrote as the words came into his mind. He ended up with the world's only dictionary which was not in alphabetical order. It was a very good dictionrary but not very practical.

That is what this Bill is like, Mr. Speaker. They do not know what they are doing. The people are milling around in the Pearson Building and the Government seems to be hoping that something good will come of it all, which would be just about as accidental as finding a word you are looking for in a dictionary which is not in alphabetical order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments? Debate.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) mentioned, towards the final part of his comments, the report of Miss McDougall. I believe we must go back to that particular report to understand the genesis of this Bill, or part of the Bill, and also to understand what is not in this Bill.

On December 15, 1981 the Report of the Royal Commission on Conditions in the Foreign Service was released. One of the most important comments in that release, Mr. Speaker, was in the second paragraph. It is most important as far as I was concerned, because, having served 25 years in the Department of External Affairs, I was aware of the problems which Miss McDougall was asked to consider in the course of her Royal Commission. The press release stated:

• (1650)

> Miss McDougall stated that the problems in each of these areas were of sufficient scope and complexity to raise doubts about the capacity of the foreign service to continue to function effectively. It was the cumulative impact of these problems on the service that eroded morale, purpose and confidence—

That was a very penetrating comment about the Department of External Affairs as it existed during the seventies and on into the eighties. I am not sure, but presumably it was at the back of the mind of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he asked Miss McDougall to undertake the Royal Commission and to examine the conditions in the foreign service. I rather suspect that it was not in the Prime Minister's mind, as a matter of fact, although he did appoint the Royal Commission.

I would like to read one other section of her Report and then return to some of her recommendations because they have a bearing on the Bill which I will consider in a couple of minutes. On page 21 of her Report, which was made public on December 15, 1981, she states:

> There is indeed a profound malaise in the foreign service—a malaise that if not met by decisive and early action may put in serious question the viability of the career rotational foreign service as we know it today.

The Report was released in December of 1981 and today we have before us a Bill which was given first reading on May 5 of this year, roughly 18 months later, which purports, I suppose one might say, to deal with this malaise. I can assure Your Honour before going any further that it will not do anything of the kind. It will increase the malaise, there is no question in my mind.

This particular Report outlined in very careful terms the problems confronted by the Department of External Affairs both here and abroad. Miss McDougall made a couple of even more succinct comments about the malaise, one of them being Recommendation 44, which states:

> Concrete steps be taken to correct the widely held view that those in positions of power consider the activities and the product of the foreign service as largely irrelevant to federal Government or Canadian objectives.

That sentiment had its genesis upon the arrival, in the seat of the Prime Minister's office, of the current Prime Minister, because he determined that he should be running the foreign service regardless of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

As I say, these matters were made public on December 15, 1981. Within a month, almost four weeks to the day, the Prime Minister announced a major reorganization of the Department of External Affairs in terms which we now find more or less embodied in the Bill, in more or less legal language, language which I would hardly call legal; but I will return to that subject in due course.

The Prime Minister's statement in January of 1982 was in total disregard of the recommendations which were brought forward by Miss McDougall in her Report. I suggest that that, in itself, was enough to destroy any hopes that there might have been, which could have emerged from the Report of Miss McDougall. It is really distressing, when one comes to think of it, that a Royal Commission was appointed to examine the role of the foreign service officer and the problems of serving in the foreign service and then to find that within a month the Prime Minister came out with a completely different sort or organization. To my way of thinking, this merely carries out the sequence of the unsettling change and the transfer to which the Department of External Affairs has been subject since 1968.

If I may, I would simply like to list some of the changes which have been introduced into the Department of External Affairs since that time, over the last 15 years. I cannot list them in the exact chronological order, but I think it deserves to be said that no sooner had one of these particular changes started to take root and become assimilated and the personnel were not even becoming accustomed to these various changes, that lo, the next one was brought on top of the others.

One of the changes that I remember, even from when I was in the Department, concerned an examination of the organization of the Department by a managerial firm called Ulrich, Currie and its subsequent report. The main outflow from the report was that members of the firm, Ulrich, Currie, or those who were carrying out the examination of the Department in the name of that particular company, found niches for themselves in the Department of External Affairs and started the expansion of that particular Department. Granted, they were in the administrative field, but that, in itself, was enough to unsettle a number of members of the foreign service.

The next change was program budgeting. As I say, people were just becoming accustomed to one change and then another one came along. Program budgeting consisted of a course in business administration which was carried on by a number of hotshot managerial experts going about the country and in the Department of External Affairs, trying to reorganize the Department on the basis of the programs which the Department was carrying out. There was a great general shift of desks in the Department at that particular time. The program was just about assimilated when along came the managing of the Department by committees. A committee structure was set up within the various programs and the Department was being organized and run by that sort of committee.

On top of all this, of course, came the bilingualism program. At that time one might call a colleague only to find that he was not there. He was not being replaced; he was off taking a course in either English or French. That, of itself, was certainly unsettling. This affected mature, professional people who had earned a place for themselves.

One of the most important criticism which one can make of the bilingualism program, then and now, is that there is being foisted upon mature, professional people, the necessity to undertake studies in an area where they feel they are not able to meet the same professional standard they met when they were a little younger. It is folly to impose that on mature adults who, in any event, are involved in their professional expertise and doing the best that they can in those conditions. The absences from their desks, of course, was also a very serious criticism.

May I call it five o'clock at this point, Mr. Speaker? I have a good many more comments to make on the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being five o'clock, I do now leave the Chair. The House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock Monday morning. Have a good weekend.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—FOREST INDUSTRY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its neglect of Canada's forests and its indifference to the threat posed to Canada's forests and forest industries by pests, fire, pollution and foreign competition, and calls upon the Government to stimulate the research needed to promote superior growth and diversify export products, and acknowledge its responsibility to protect the Canadian environment and the millions of Canadians whose livelihood depends upon Canada's forest resources.

• (1110)

He said: Mr. Speaker, let me first express my appreciation to my colleagues on this side of the House and thank them for their foresight, their interest and their concern for our forests, which of course is reflected in our decision to set aside this parliamentary day to talk about forests, in competition with many other weighty issues that are occupying our attention now.

The motion I have introduced may appear unreasonably harsh to those people who have listened to the Minister whose responsibility it is to speak for the Government on matters relating to our forests. At the outset I wish to say that I appreciate the sincerity and the genuine commitment to this important component of the dual responsibility of the Minister. I know he believes as I do that in a country depending to such a great extent for its economic and social well-being on its forest resources, it is imperative the management and care of this resource be given the undivided attention of a Minister. This view is shared and strongly advocated by all sectors of the forest community.

I know the Minister is trying his very best, but considering the limits of his mandate and the competition he faces in Cabinet from his colleagues for power and scarce financial resources, his best efforts fall far short of any expectations his pronouncements have generated. We intend today to remind the Minister and the Government of its neglected responsibility regarding our forests and the multifaceted, important economic and social issues associated with this most precious of our natural resource heritage.

In 1871 Sir John A. Macdonald said:

> The sight of immense masses of timber passing my windows every morning constantly suggests to my mind the absolute necessity for looking into the future of this great trade. We are recklessly destroying the timber of Canada and there is scarcely a possibility of replacing it.

Also he said:

> It occurs to me that the subject should be looked in the face, and some efforts made for the preservation of our timber.

Of course, I have no idea from which particular vantage point Sir John A. made his observation, but I can assure the House that whatever it was he would no longer have to be troubled by such sights here in Ottawa Valley. The timber is long gone. The great trade of which our first Prime Minister spoke has rapidly expanded over the years, but it has moved on to other parts of Canada as the forests became depleted and until a decade ago no one heeded the warning of how recklessly we were destroying our forests. The crisis which was foreseen 100 years ago for the Ottawa Valley now affects the whole country. One might say that the Ottawa Valley really has not suffered all that much. As we always do, we simply adjust to a different economy, one less dependent on natural resources.

We might be able to renew our industrial structure with robots and computers. I have every confidence that we as Canadians can compete with the best in the new information-based world economies. But our real strength as an industrial nation will always flow particularly from those of our natural resources which are renewable as is the case of our forests.

There are four major biological systems on which the world will depend for its survival. Trees are one of them. Canada owns 10 per cent of the world's total forest inventory. Our wood-converting industry produces 22 per cent of world market requirements in manufactured forest products and 30 per cent of its pulp and paper products are traded internationally. This trade generates $12 billion annually in net foreign exchange earnings, which exceeds the earnings of all other major resource sectors such as fish, grain and hydrocarbons combined. According to forecasts by the United Nations, Food and Agriculture Organization, the world's demand of industrial softwood will increase by 2.1 per cent every year over the next 20 years.

Merely to maintain our market share would require an increased output of 50 per cent of wood products by the year 2000. Everyone except the federal Government knows now that such a goal cannot be realized with present policies. We would have to produce 210 million cubic metres of wood by the end of this century, and to sustain such massive harvests it would require equally massive efforts toward advanced scientific research and new management practices, with the emphasis on forest protection, the enhancement of productivity of existing stands through thinning and fertilization and, of course, the replanting of harvested areas.

• (1115)

The cost of such efforts after so many years of neglect are high, but they are not high in comparison to the economic benefits which we derive from our forest harvest. Governments receive approximately $2 billion annually from taxation and other direct and indirect benefits. That is roughly shared fifty-fifty between the federal and provincial Governments. That, if nothing else, should be sufficient reason for our Government to commit itself to a greater share of the cost connected with maintaining a healthy resource base. We in fact believe it to be a fundamental principle that the responsibility for funding the maintenance of the resource should be relative to the benefits received.

With that in mind, let us see what commitment the federal Government is prepared to make. Last year the Minister published a policy statement entitled "A framework for forest renewal". It recognized the most basic requirement identified by the committee of provincial resource ministers to increase public spending in areas of government responsibility by 10 per cent annually. Estimated expenditures for forest renewal in 1982 were about $300 million. The federal Government contributed $100 million, or 37 per cent. To meet even the most minimum targets, $650 million in 1982 dollars will have to be spent by the year 1987. The federal contribution to this amount would be $130 million or 20 per cent of the total, hardly a substantial increase over a five-year period. Fully 80 per cent of the cost will be passed on to the Provinces. Again this can hardly be seen as being relative to the benefits received.

I have spoken earlier of the Minister's limited mandate in forestry matters and the competition he faces in Cabinet. An example of that is the most recent announcement by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) regarding the establishment of a task force to advise him of the forest industry's needs in terms of assistance to help the industry maintain its competitive position in the world market and expand its productivity.

I give the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce full marks for recognizing the forest sector's potential for growth and the creation of new jobs and for realizing the forest Minister's limited authority and resources to respond to the industry's requirements. However, it is because we have in the past segregated the industrial side of forestry from the management side that our forests are in such a state of neglect.

All that was to change with the announcement in 1981 by the Minister of a new forest sector strategy committee. The tripartite approach involving industry, the Provinces and the Federal Government in an all out effort will try to remedy some of the past sins. Already that appears to be forgotten. Incredibly, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce testified before the committee last week that his star-studded task force and the resources he plans to put at their disposal will be concentrating only on the expansion of our industries and the development of new markets. Anything to do with management of the forest will be left to his colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). Is it not that type of divided jurisdiction which got us into all this trouble in the first place?

For a while we thought that some of the new people we had brought into the Canadian Forestry Service, together with some fine professionals already there who understood the problems and knew the solutions, were getting their message across. When the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was reorganized, the Canadian Forestry Service was to get that share which was earmarked for the forest sector, or so we thought. The new federal-provincial agreements of the type which had been signed with Nova Scotia were to include long-term forestry plans of at least 20 years' duration. The federal money was to be used to help industry and the Provinces to improve timber stands and plant new forests on lands for which there were no competing uses.

However, Industry, Trade and Commerce now appears to be taking charge again with its own set of priorities. What I find exceedingly difficult to understand is the apparent new frame of mind of our present generation of industrial leaders. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I was in a very modest way involved in the business before I came here. In my day, all you wanted from the Government was a tax and royalty regime which compared favourably with that of our offshore competitors. The only help asked for from the Government was toward transportation, communication and community infrastructures which were required to develop new areas and get our products to market as cheaply and efficiently as possible. We kept arguing with government for a set of rules and standards in terms of environmental and other considerations which were firm and fairly applied without a whole lot of overlapping jurisdictions exercised by federal over provincial regulators, or rules that were overruled by conflicting mandates of different departments of government.

• (1120)

The new generation of corporate managers appears to have additional requirements from government. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce testified before the committee that he is receiving literally hundreds of applications daily from major and minor forest companies, applications which have been filed with his Department for grants and subsidies to rebuild and expand their plants and to construct new ones. They are looking to government and the taxpayer to take most of the risk out of their enterprises. As we know, the Government has been most accommodating to this new approach which provides it with the necessary justification to intrude even further into the private sector. That is a worrisome trend indeed.

Sir, in my humble opinion the forest industry needs a stable supply of feedstock that is commercially viable and accessible. As we know, 95 per cent of all our wood supply is publicly owned and therefore it is obviously in the public interest and is a collective responsibility to keep our forests healthy and ensure an adequate supply.

Insects, disease and fire destroy two-thirds as much timber as is being harvested commercially every year. Much greater efforts must therefore be made to protect our forests from these predators. We must learn to manage our forests much more intensively. Our Scandinavian and American competitors spend many times what we commit in terms of money and human resources in the management area. For instance, we in Canada have a professional forester for every 380,000 hectares of forest land. In Sweden, the ratio is one for every 15,000 hectares.

In terms of research and development, the record is not much better. One major U.S. company spends more on forest products research every year than the total combined efforts of all of the governments and industry in this country. To produce the wood required by industry to keep its world market share, it is estimated that our scientific research efforts will have at least to double over the next ten years. This would require an additional 150 forestry post-gratudates per year for the next ten years. Our schools have produced 55 masters and a mere 11 doctoral degrees per year since 1978. Of those, nearly half were foreign students who have left for their home countries. Our forestry schools require massively increased block funding to permit them to respond to the challenge.

The federal Government must play a leading role in basic research in biotechnology, genetic engineering, soil chemistry and so on. Together with industry, we must invest much more in forest products research to develop new harvesting techniques, new products for a changing world market and techniques for reforestation and intensive stand management. The privatization in 1978 of our forest products labs did not bring about the results which had been predicted, even though this is clearly one area where industry can and should participate.

We suggest that a charge be levied on industry, either on stumpage or on the basis of the grade stamp, to provide a fair share of an expanded effort toward forest products research and development. We also recommend that federal funding for research and development, forest renewal and forest protection should be based on a fixed percentage of annual gross forest products sold averaged over a five-year period. As can easily be seen, this would provide greater stability and facilitate long-term planning of research projects and indeed ensure that they are carried through to conclusion.

In addition to that, there is nothing wrong with programs which the Government might initiate from time to time to reduce periodic manpower surpluses. I applaud the recent initiatives of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) designed to entice unemployed workers to work in our forests; but again, such special efforts can only reap maximum benefits if they are properly planned, managed and co-ordinated with existing silviculture programs by people who know what they are doing. Any moneys therefore committed by the Government for such special needs must be channelled through the Canadian Forestry Service.

There is even a role for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the superministry, particularly now that it has been integrated with External Affairs. Our industry needs help in finding new markets and developing them to suit our products. But again, it will be of little benefit to Canada to have the world's most modern harvesting plants without a stable and sufficient supply of raw materials or the markets to sell the products.

• (1125)

The Science Council of Canada recently published a statement which is worth considering. It points out the potential benefits of improvement in forest management policies. If the goals we have set ourselves are achieved, we would increase our sales by $22 billion, $12 billion of which would come from exports. We would create between 75,000 to 100,000 new jobs and generate in excess of $3 billion in additional tax revenues. Such is the magnitude of this important sector of our economy.

The report also points out the cost of failure to act. We would experience mill closures, increased unemployment and the economic destabilization of whole regions of our country whose livelihood depends on logging and wood preserving industries. A decline in our forest industry would have a pervasive effect, the report states, on our whole economy and our balance of trade. A thriving forest industry is essential to the prosperity of Canada.

Let us, as John A. Macdonald urged, look the subject in the face. The industry can no longer move on to exploit new areas of virgin timber. Even this great land has limits to the rich bounty of her forests.

We must do now with what we have and must care for it responsibly. The great philosopher Goltz said a century ago: "Of all nature's scenes, it is the woods in which all her secrets and all her favours are found together". Our forest are truly our most precious resource and our greatest riches. Let us realize this fact and begin to act accordingly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are any Hon. Members rising to ask question of the Hon. Member who has just spoken? If not, the Chair recognizes the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts).

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I was glad that the mover of the motion had some kind words about my sincerity and my efforts in relation to the forest problems in Canada as well as kind words for the efforts of my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley). In turn, I want to say to the Hon. Member that I recognize his strong commitment to this extraordinarily important industry in Canada, and recognize the work that he has put into it on the Opposition side. I welcome the very constructive approach that he has usually taken in the House and almost always in committee when we are dealing with these issues.

The language of the motion, with its absurd charges of neglect, is clearly erroneous. I do not think that even the Hon. Member who moved the motion believes there has been that neglect. I can understand, of course, that he can hardly stand up on an Opposition day and move a motion which praised, recommended and supported the efforts we have made. I think what underlies his motion is a desire to discuss before the House and before the people of Canada our major most important industry, the challenges that face it now and that will face it in the future. I share his general expressions on the importance of the industry and the need for industry, provincial Governments and the federal Government to co-operate and tackle the problems it faces.

When I gave my first speech as Minister of the Environment in March, 1980, I dealt with the forestry problems which face Canada. I will not read the whole speech to Hon. Members, although I recommend it to them because it lays out what our hopes and aspirations were for forestry. It concluded as follows:

> It is my firm intention to strengthen federal involvement in forestry. I am determined that, working with the Provinces, we shall create a climate that will permit and encourage the Canadian forest industry to stay on top in our increasingly competitive world.

I welcome the chance provided by the Hon. Member's motion to give a progress report on what we have been able to accomplish over the last three years and how we have been able to respond to that challenge which I described three years ago when I was given responsibility for this portfolio.

I think the most important thing to recognize, as I indicated I wanted to do, is that we have strengthened the Canadian Forestry Service. To head the service we brought in as Assistant Deputy Minister Mr. Les Reed from the private sector. His appointment was welcomed by all Members of the House who believed that a man of his experience and capacity would give effective direction to the Canadian Forestry Service. Two years later, we can see that the promise of his performance, the hopes and expectations, have indeed been fulfilled.

We have had the transfer from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion of the management of the forestry subagreements, which were previously the responsibility of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. We have had in that time a remarkable strengthening both of the funding and of the man-years in the Canadian Forestry Service. The number of person-years of the Canadian Forestry Service has increased from 10,029 in 1980-81 to 11,047 in 1983-84. So that the need which we recognized for strengthening the personnel resources of the Canadian Forestry Service has been met. Its budget has increased from just over $48 million in 1980-81 to just over $60 million in 1983-84 an increase of almost $12 million in its budgetary expenditure. Therefore, there has been a strengthening in human resource and financial resources.

We have established the Canadian Forestry Strategy Committee, led by the Canadian Forestry Service. It is a co-ordinating Committee which directs the efforts of the federal Government on the forestry side. It seems to me that the Hon. Member who moved the motion does not really understand the role of the Committee, nor the role of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the role of the Minister of the Environment within that context. He may be genuinely confused about that and I would like to take a few moments, later to describe how that works.

The foundation of the forestry policy which we described as the one we wished to pursue three years ago, and the one which we in fact are pursuing, is one which is based on co-operation with the provincial Governments. We recognize their ownership of the resource and we realize that there must be not a pulling apart or a moving at cross-purposes between the provincial and federal Governments in this area, but that we must work together and we must both work with industry. As a result, the foundation of the policy which the federal Government is pursuing is one which rests in the co-operative work which we have done in the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers with provincial Governments.

It was as a result of our discussions with the provincial Governments, as well as discussions with industry, that we came forward with the forest strategy paper in October, 1981. This is the paper to which the Hon. Member who moved the motion referred. It outlines our analysis of the problems in the Canadian forestry sector. This analysis was arrived at jointly with the Provinces and indicated the major focal points which we should deal with in an attempt to resolve the challenges with which the Canadian forestry sector is faced.

That forest strategy, Mr. Speaker, outlines several problem areas. The major ones it touched upon were the need to improve forestry statistics in Canada, the need to develop a stronger market strategy for the exploitation abroad of Canadian forest products, and the need to focus in on problems of human resource development, so that the industry would have the kind of specialists and skilled woodworkers available to it who will be needed in the future. There was also a concern for the insufficiency of research and development, and a concern to meet the problems of forest protection and forest renewal. Those were the major areas of concern which were crystalized in the forest strategy paper which we had brought forward, as a Government, in the Autumn of 1981, after our consultations with the Provinces.

I would like to touch upon how we have responded to those challenges which were presented in that paper. I believe almost a mere listing of the actions which the Government has taken would be an effective and substantive refutation of the charges of neglect which, in a formal and, I believe somewhat artificial manner, were brought forward by my colleague from across the Chamber. The first problem was that of the insufficiency of a forestry statistics base in the country.

In October, 1981, at the same time as the strategy paper was introduced, the Cabinet approved the increase of the resources flowing into that forestry statistics base by $500,000. The base at that time was just under $1 million of expenditure for the establishment of forestry statistics. This kept on increasing so that the level of increase over the original base of $1 million is up over $1.5 million by 1983-84, with an increase of 15 person-years in the Canadian Forestry Service devoted to that work. Given the need to strengthen our support for forestry statistics research, that response has taken place.

The second area of concern was that of a market strategy. Quite clearly, the Hon. Member seems not quite to understand that the responsibilities in relation to marketing are largely in the hands of the Minister responsible for DRIE, my colleague from the Cornwall area. This is not, as the Hon. Member seems to believe, an example of some kind of "conflict"—I believe was the word he used—within Cabinet over forest responsibility. There is no such conflict; I can frankly tell him that. If he believes there is some sort of inner contention or tension or disruption, that there is some sort of battle over responsibilities going on between my colleagues and myself, I must say to him quite honestly that that is a figment of his imagination. There is no such tension or battle going on.

It is clear that my colleague the Minister does have responsibility in the areas of commercial development. He has appointed a committee of private sector people to advise him on how we might improve the marketing of Canadian forestry resources. He has not done that contrary to my wishes; he has done that with my strong support. I believe it is an extremely important and valuable move which he has taken, one entirely within his responsibilities.

I also have an advisory council which advises me on matters in relation to forestry. There is some overlap between the committee my colleague has established and mine. However, there is no confusion or conflict of purpose. In a Cabinet, necessarily, a variety of Ministers have responsibilities and they manage to co-ordinate the way in which those responsibilities are exercised, one with the other. The way we do that in relation to forestry matters is through the federal Forestry Strategy Committee which brings together in consultation on a regular basis the Departments which are concerned. That Committee is chaired by the head of the Canadian Forestry Service. It is a relatively simple and rational structure ascribing responsibilities to those Ministers who are best placed to fulfil them and to ensure that proper co-operation and co-ordination takes place at the federal level. There is no great mystery about that, no great complication and no great battle. It is a most effective way of trying to ensure that the responsibilities of the federal Government are co-ordinated. If, as the Hon. Member seems to suggest, those responsibilities were given entirely in to my hands, he would be the first one to suggest we were not adequately ensuring that the activities of other governmental departments which touch upon forestry were being considered and integrated in our over-all forest strategy. What we have done is establish an effective working mechanism which ensures that that co-operation and research take place.

As I have said, my colleague has brought forward these new structures to help develop and improve market strategy for Canadian forest products. I should say in passing, however, that he and my colleague, the Minister responsible for international trade, have been remarkably successful in assisting the private sector and industry over the past few months in order to protect the Canadian forest products markets in the United States which, as you know, Mr. Speaker, were under threat of countervailing action. The industry, quite properly, organized itself to make representations in Washington, bringing a fair explanation of their case to the American authorities, an explanation which was successful in protecting legitimate Canadian interests. In that effort the federal Government, through myself and my colleagues, was effective, I believe, in providing support to the private sector representatives concerned.

The forest strategy in 1981 outlined the need for a concern for the improved development of human resources in the forestry field. We have acted. We have brought forward an increase which was announced in the Spring of 1982 of over $15 million in support of human resources development.

We increased the support going to forestry schools throughout the country from just under $300,000, by adding another $1 million for the year 1982-83—in support of the forestry faculties across the country, at the University of New Brunwick, the University of Laval, the University of Toronto, Lakehead University, the University of Edmonton and at the University of British Columbia. We have added $3.5 million in support for forestry schools in contract research and development, and for the employment of 300 summer students in 1983-84. Support in the development of human resources will increase to $6 million in expenditure in 1985-86. As I mentioned earlier, there is an increase in funding in that period of over $15 million in support of human resource development.

In order to improve our research capability, which was another aspect we focused on in the discussion of the forest sector strategy, we brought forward funding proposals for strengthening our efforts. We have signed research agreements with over half the Provinces to ensure there are neither overlaps nor gaps in our mutual research activities. By the end of this year we expect to have signed research agreements with all ten of the Provinces. We have increased our expenditures on research and development in the Canadian Forestry Service by $5.5 million for the year 1983-84. This will increase and improve the research into the production and increased utilization of our forest products in Canada. Again, in that area which was described as one of key concern in 1981, we have indeed responded.

One of the major ways in which we have responded to the forest challenge was our commitment in September, 1982 to enter into arrangements with each of the Provinces in support programs to meet the reforestation needs of the Canadian industry. Over the next two or three years we intend to sign with a forest renewal agreement with each Province, as we have already with the Province of Nova Scotia. An agreement with Prince Edward Island is ready to be signed. We will assist and encourage the Provinces and the private sector to co-operate in the needed objective of reforestation.

It is true, as the Hon. Member said, that one of the most desirable features of the forest renewal strategy is that in signing these agreements with each of the Provinces we require as a basic condition that there be a long-term renewal plan in each Province with goals related to timber production, forest renewal and protection, and better utilization and increased productivity in the mills. That is and should be an essential precondition of the signing of our agreements. In this way we will ensure there is a better focusing on reforestation needs than there has been in the past.

In discussing what we were doing in this area, the Hon. Member, I think inadvertently, did not describe to the House exactly what our commitment is and why it constitutes such a novel commitment for us, as it relates to past practice. He quite correctly spoke of the quite strong need for forest renewal in Canada. We need by mid-decade to be spending something between $600 million and $650 million in Canada on forest renewal. That will virtually double the amount being spent at the present time by the industry, Provinces and the federal Government. Up to this point the federal Government has not been substantially involved in reforestation activity. It has always been considered that since the ownership and management of the resource was essentially in provincial hands, the federal Government did not have a major responsibility for participating in financial support for this area.

That position was changed by this Government. We have earmarked as a minimum, and it may turn out to be much more, federal expenditure of $130 million a year by 1985-86 for this purpose. I cannot say exactly what the figure will be because it will depend upon the negotiations with the Provinces. Of course, I cannot predict exactly what proposals they will make to us and how we will respond to them.

Now, the hon. gentlemen opposite seem to me to be arguing that is not a very significant increase over what we are doing at the present time, but in fact it is an increase to $130 million from virtually zero. It is true we have been spending something like $50 million a year under the DREE subagreements related to forestry matters, but those agreements were not specifically oriented to reforestation. It is also true we have been spending, under the Unemployment Insurance job creation program, money directed to short-term job employment opportunities in the forest sector, but that is and was always intended to be a one-shot program in relation to forest employment. So you would really be comparing apples and oranges to look at the $130 million a year to which we are committed for 1985-86 and compare it to the present level of expenditure on rather different Government programs.

The fact of the matter is that for the first time the federal Government is entering in a very substantial way into the support of reforestation in this country. What we believe will happen, and I certainly hope will happen, is that as a result of this initiative we will have an indication that we are prepared to support reforestation rather extensively, and we will get an equivalent response from the private sector and the Provinces, so that the $650 million figure which badly needs to be met will be met. It is an extraordinarily important step we have taken.

A few moments ago I touched upon job creation. That is another example of Government efforts in this area. Under the Unemployment Insurance job creation program we have added something like $35 million for 1982-83 alone in the forest sector of capital expenditures to assist with employment in the forest industry. It is short-term employment but it will have consequences for the longer term by improving Canada's wood supply. Obviously that $35 million is in addition to the $170 million which comes from Unemployment Insurance funds administered by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. To date, if memory serves me well, something like 11,000 to 12,000 positions have been created in the forest industry as a result of that program.

I see that you are ready to rise, Mr. Speaker. I regret that because it does not give me a chance to describe the most recent initiatives we have taken. If you could just spare me another 30 seconds.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Minister to extend his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Roberts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Hon. Members of the House. I will not trespass on their patience for very much longer.

I would simply touch upon the announcements over the last few weeks, some of which may have escaped the attention of some Members of the House. The first concerns the support of the research facilities and the pulp and paper research institute's efforts, both in Montreal and Vancouver. We recently announced that we are increasing federal funding of those efforts by something like $17 million.

I hope it has not escaped the attention of Members of the House that we recently announced a very considerable expansion of our funding of capital development of our research institutions all across the country. We made the commitment to go ahead with the Maritime Forest Research Centre in the Maritime forest complex in New Brunswick. We are committed to considerably expanding our research facilities in Ste. Foy, in Sault Ste. Marie, and in Victoria the home territory of the seatmate of the Hon. Member who made the motion. We have announced a very considerable strengthening of our research facilities.

Of course, it is not satisfactory to do research and undertake reforestation without taking into account the need to protect the forest resource. I could speak at much greater length about the activities of the fire control centre in Winnipeg which we established in conjunction with the Provinces. I certainly would have liked to have more time to describe the importance of the federal Government's commitment to support the acquisition of supplementary water bomber fleets across the country to provide a much more effective response to forest protection needs in Canada. This is an initiative we took as a response to the requests flowing to us from provincial Governments that we take the kind of action we have taken.

• (1150)

All of those things which have been done have been done very recently. I suggest that if any fair minded Member of the House were simply to review the list of what has been done in these major problem areas that we identified three years ago, he would have to say that there has been a vigorous effort and considerable success in responding to the challenges before us. Undoubtedly we still have more to do. There are still paths to be followed to the successful conclusion in the forest industry while it goes through the current transition period. We are moving from treating the resource as one to be mined to one which is a sustainable and renewable resource.

The record of the last three years is extraordinarily impressive as an example of Government commitment and our ability to work with the Provinces and the industry in order to respond to the needs of the Canadian forest industry.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Minister relies heavily on the advice of the forest sector strategy committee and the Council of Resource Ministers. I have no quarrel with all the documents and the strategy paper which have been published. I have no quarrel with the speeches he has made after he assumed his portfolio, since they were really a carbon copy of the speeches made by my colleague from Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) when he was Minister.

Could the Minister tell us what kind of advice he expects to receive from this new panel that his colleague, the Minister of DRIE, has established? First, does he know that this panel has organized itself into sub-committees, not to study export potential or other industrial needs proper, but to study management techniques of the resource? They are techniques which would lead to the renewal of our forests and related manpower requirements which are essentially a duplication of the advice he is receiving.

Have his officials been invited to participate in this new panel and does he know what kind of information this new panel is giving? While there may not be any quarrel in Cabinet, I can tell the Minister that the bureaucrats are quarrelling. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is digging in again and usurping the role that we had hoped the Canadian Forestry Service would once again play.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked quite a few questions; I will try to answer them in a general way. I am familiar with the work of this committee. I am aware that it has broken down into a variety of subcommittees. I have met with them along with my colleague, and have had two short but general discussions with them.

I am not concerned that they are looking at a variety of problems. I suppose there are times when one can receive too much advice on problems, but I do not believe that is a risk with respect to the forest sector. Ultimately they will report to my colleague, in a continuing manner, who will reflect upon their recommendations and come forward with suggestions which will be discussed with the Forestry Strategy Committee chaired by my Department. If we decide to make proposals to Cabinet as a result of their deliberations and recommendations and after an assessment by the Forestry Strategy Committee, this will occur through that mechanism.

I am certainly not aware of any concern and my officials have not expressed any great concern to me about the establishment of this committee or its operations. Indeed, for some considerable time we were pressing my colleague's Department to focus in on the marketing, commercial and industrial management questions. We were happy to see them doing that. We endorse their efforts.

I am not aware of any concerns expressed along this line by anyone other than the Hon. Member. It may be that he feels there is some threat here, but it is not clear to me what he thinks that threat is or why it is so wrong. I can honestly say that this is not my sense of the situation. I welcome what is taking place and do not see how it can do any harm. It may provide some helpful counsel and I have undoubted and strong confidence in the ability of my colleague and myself to work together in a co-ordinated and co-operative way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Bearing in mind that Hon. Members are seeking to ask questions, the Chair is trying to distribute the opportunity in the limited time.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question. I paid as much tribute as I will to both Ministers. His colleague did not know of the existence of these subcommittees dealing with matters that are normally those of concern to the Canadian Forestry Service. I suppose he will pass the advice on to the Minister.

The Minister is aware that his Department's manpower strength has declined by 50 per cent over the last 12 to 15 years. Since he no longer has that 50 per cent of manpower strength, who is doing the work that needs to be done in terms of the serious neglect of our forests? While the Minister said the strength is increasing, it is not nearly increasing to the level at which it was 12 years ago. Who is doing the work that those people did 12 years ago?

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I would simply have to reiterate some of the points the Hon. Member has already made in his question. In some ways he has answered the question himself.

There was a great decline in person-years at the end of the 1970s and we both would agree that that was regrettable and unfortunate. I am sorry that that happened. We have turned that around over the past three years and have had an increase in the Canadian Forestry Service by something over 10 per cent.

Some of the work that was done previously is now being done outside Government. For instance, the Hon. Member knows that some of the operations which were previously undertaken in the practical application of the research side have been transferred to Forintek, which is outside federal Government service. The essential work done in bringing together the elements of the Canadian forest strategy in negotiation with the Province is undertaken by the Canadian Forestry Service. That does not mean that there are not civil servants working in DRIE on forestry matters, particularly on the commercial side, and doing so in a useful and helpful manner. But the lead responsibility for the research, reforestation, human resources and forestry policies generally rests in the hands of the Canadian Forestry Service and the Minister of the Environment in Canada who is responsible for it. That is where the work will be done.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister concerned about the partial or total overlapping or duplication of services between the two levels of Government? If so, what mechanisms and strategies are in place for the resolution of that overlapping and duplication in order that the services offered by both levels of Government can be most effective to the recipients of that service?

Mr. Roberts: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am not only concerned about overlaps but also about gaps in the services provided by both federal and provincial Governments.

I believe the short answer is two-fold. On the research side we have negotiated research agreements with the Provinces. We have signed agreements with five or six Provinces at the present time and expect to sign with all of them by the end of the year. Those research agreements are focused exactly on the question posed by the Hon. Member. They are an attempt to ensure that we are not duplicating research that is done at the provincial and federal level. The purpose of those agreements is also to try and ensure that there is not a failure to do some research that is required.

On the reforestation side, the mechanism for co-ordinating our efforts is the reforestation agreements which we are signing with each Province. Those agreements outline the kind of efforts that are taken at the federal level and those expenditures which are required at the federal level to meet reforestation needs, and describe at the same time the programs which the provincial governments will undertake with their expenditures. As well, they will describe some occasional joint programs which are funded and operated together.

In terms of reforestation, we are trying to ensure that there is not an overlap or a gap in services in the process of negotiating these agreements and the allocation of responsibilities as determined by the negotiated final agreement.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister is quite brief. I think all Hon. Members of the House are aware that the amount which the Government takes in and puts back out in terms of taxation is very small. It amounts to about five cents return for every dollar taken. For example, in 1980, of $3 billion taken in tax and resource revenues, 43 per cent went to the federal Government and 57 per cent to the provincial Government. The federal Government only put in 5 per cent of every dollar which it took in.

I notice that the Minister referred to his policy statement, "A Framework for Forest Renewal". On page 5 the Minister notes that this year, between DREE, UI Section 38 and DOE support, about 37 per cent—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, the time limit is very brief, if the Minister is to reply. The Hon. Member will have an opportunity to speak, but would he make his comments briefly.

Mr. Fulton: By 1987 the Minister projected that would drop to 20 per cent. Could the Minister comment on what he expects UIC Section 38 and DOE support to be by 1987?

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman was not in the House when I discussed that point earlier in response to some remarks which had been made by the mover of the motion. One must make a distinction between two things: short-term, one-shot programs oriented to employment creation as part of our general effort to create employment in Canada; and other expenditures which are continuing, which become incorporated in the A-base of government expenditures which go on from year to year.

I cannot forecast what Unemployment Insurance expenditures will be two, three or four years from now in the context of this program. What I can say is that on the base level of virtually zero, we have indicated that we will be spending at least $130 million on forest renewal by 1985-86. That is a very different kind of expenditure because the forest renewal expenditure which we are discussing is permanent, ongoing, built into the A-base.

The two items which the Hon. Member has compared in his question to me are items which are of an entirely different nature, chalk to cheese. I did touch upon the point in my remarks in response to what had been said by the mover of the motion. Perhaps he would like to consider those, if he did not hear them clearly, when he reads Hansard tomorrow.

Mr. Kristiansen: Debate, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period of questions and answers has expired, unless there is unanimous consent to extend it. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In that case, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask one question of the Minister, if I may. It relates to the comments he made concerning the appointment of an ADM in his Department, taking full credit for it. I think that in the interests of honesty and justice he would have to admit, and I hope he will admit, that the provisions for expanding the forestry section of the Department were in hand under the former Minister of the Environment, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser); that the appointment to fill that particular position was made by the current Minister, although all the groundwork was done beforehand.

Mr. Roberts: Yes and no, Mr. Speaker. My predecessor had a strong commitment to forestry development. I salute it, recognize it and welcome it. However, it is not true to say that all that simply happened was that we implemented plans which were already in the works. That is not the case. Many of the programs which I have described were not considered previously to my appointment. The appointment of the head of the Canadian Forestry Service was my responsibility. It was not simply the formalization of something which had been agreed upon earlier.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) for debate.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to take part in this debate on forestry. It is one of those industries which, while it is extremely important in terms of both the fabric of Canadian society and our chances and hopes for economic growth, receives little attention within this federal Parliament, due in large measure to the fact that the jurisdiction has rested mainly with the provincial Governments.

I should begin by reading the motion so that we can be clear as to just what is being said and what is not being said. The motion proposed by the Opposition states:

> That this House condemns the Government for its neglect of Canada's forests and its indifference to the threat posed to Canada's forests and forest industries by pests, fire, pollution and foreign competition, and calls upon the Government to stimulate the research needed to promote superior growth and diversify export products, and acknowledge its responsibility to protect the Canadian environment and the millions of Canadians whose livelihood depends upon Canada's forest resources.

In addressing the motion which is before us, bearing in mind the quote from our first Prime Minister in 1871—to which reference was made by the lead-off speaker in the debate—in which Sir John A. Macdonald recognized the dangers presented by the then and, in fact, continuing frontier psychology of cut and run, I cannot help but think of the biblical quotation, "Let he who is without sin cast the first stone". In this business, bearing that phraseology in mind, the silence in answer to that invitational phrase would probably be deafening from all quarters, not only in terms of the record of successive Governments federally, but in terms of virtually every provincial Government which has held office in this land since Confederation. Last, but most certainly not least, the private sector in this country has since time immemorial been one of the most irresponsible in failing its duty to protect the ongoing opportunities afforded by what is our nation's greatest resource.

In spite of recent and rather widespread general agreement among industry, management, labour and Government, as expressed perhaps most eloquently and most loudly, in drawing the whole issue to the public's attention, at the Canadian Forest Congress in Toronto in September of 1980—in spite of the rather widespread agreement stated eloquently at that time, we have still not seen, at least in those areas of our economy and those areas of Government in Canada most responsible—historically, constitutionally and practically, very many signs that this strengthened commitment to forestry is being kept.

I should say with regard to this aspect that there has been at least a reasonable amount of goodwill expressed in terms of the motivations of both sides of the House on the question. The federal Government since February of 1980, and, I believe, the former Minister of the Environment responsible for forestry in the Government from 1979 through to February of 1980, began to show the beginnings of the kind of commitment which was expressed so well at that congress. However, in the Provinces, and I am speaking in particular of my own Province of British Columbia, we have seen exactly the opposite of any commitment other than in words.

Because the Provinces still have the prime and fundamental responsibility for forest management, forest growth, reforestation and the management of the industry, it is very regrettable to me and, I think, to most people who are concerned with this issue across the country that we have seen both the industry and the Provinces backtracking just when we have finally begun to see, under both the existing and the past federal Government, the beginning of acceptance of federal responsibility. I hope, as the federal Government indicates, that it will keep some of its increasing commitment to the major resource in this country, that we will not continue to see a falling off in commitment of both the private sector and the Provinces in anticipation that the federal Government will continue to assume a larger share of the responsibility and fill their vacuum.

I find it somewhat strange that in presenting its motion the Official Opposition seemed to forget that, while its Conservative Government placed some increasing emphasis in words and directions on the forest industry in its 1979 budget, it did not appreciably increase the financial commitment of the federal Government. I return once again to the quotation, "Let he who is without sin cast the first stone".

It strikes one perhaps not as hypocritical but certainly as passing strange to see the venom in the first few phrases of the motion before us. Also it is interesting to note that it is the very close political allies and bedfellows of the Official Opposition, whether it be the Social Credit Government in British Columbia or the Conservative Governments of Ontario and the Maritimes, who are responsible for the declining attention paid to what should be a vital commitment to this industry, at a time when the federal Government, however reluctantly and however slowly it is beginning to act, is beginning to make the necessary kind of commitment. Perhaps they do not talk to each other, but they should start.

The old definition of leadership, whereby we look to see which way the crowd is going, then run like the devil to get in front of it and appear as though we are leading, may be fine as regards a whole host of issues; but when it comes to a resource which requires 80 years or 90 years to grow, which is the case with our major species in British Columbia, it will not wash.

My own Party is not without sin in this regard in areas where it has had provincial power. It behooves us all, regardless of our concepts about leadership and partisanship, to rely to some extent upon public opinion to push us into choosing one priority over another. In this nation the public sometimes has difficulty sensing the importance of the forest industry because it is everywhere and thus seems to be nowhere. It is scattered throughout some 300 communities across the length and breadth of the land. It does not therefore have the political sex appeal of an industry in which, when there are problems, some 10,000 people are affected in a given community. It is not that way, so there is little public consciousness, except that which is organized within the confines of the industry or among those who have some direct interest in the resource, of the kind which causes governments to feel compelled to act. The usual public pressure is often lacking.

I ask the Government—it may have been mentioned by my colleague previously; I know it has been on many other occasions—to look again at the recommendation of the members of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, that we have a forestry task force to travel Canada, not only investigating the facts as they affect the industry, but raising and keeping raised the public consciousness which is so important to prod all of us, provincially and federally, including the industry, into the action we recognize is vitally needed.

I would like to comment briefly upon the demand as most recently expressed by the Science Council of Canada. This proposal which has been broached many times by Opposition representatives of both Parties, is that greater consideration should be given to the immediate establishment of one ministry within the federal Government responsible for all areas related to the forest industry. The jurisdiction within the federal Government is now divided into some 23 departments and subdepartments. As was mentioned earlier, we may be seeing a renewal of the departmental tug-of-war with the appointment of the new industry advisory committee under the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This may tend to direct attention—and federal attention as well—away from the area where Government has prime responsibility—the maintenance of the forest resource itself.

That past ignorance of our resource base is the greatest crime perpetrated on this industry and on the communities dependent upon it since Confederation.

It is largely the responsibility of the private sector—because that is the nature of our economy—to modernize its own plant capacity and to reinvest some of its earnings in its own industrial plant. The prime duty and obligation of governments, primarily provincially, but also the federal Government which, after years of inaction is now moving in to fill some of the vacuum, is responsibility for the resource. But it is mainly the responsibility of the companies involved in forest production, not government, to ensure the modernization of their own plant and their ability to remain competitive.

It was a matter of consternation to a number of my colleagues and myself that two or three years ago several hundred million dollars were put in to what was called the forest industry modernization program. This money was expended largely within central and eastern Canada. There is no wish on my part to decry the needs of the industry there, but we have some pretty old and outdated operations in western Canada as well. We regarded the expenditures under the DREE program as being inappropriate in terms of the priorities of the federal Government or any government. At a time when it was obvious that unemployment in Canada would rise, particularly unemployment in the forest products industry, government funds, government incentives and government grants were used to modernize plants in such a way that they drastically curtailed employment and caused significant lay-offs.

We know that modernization must take place in order that we remain competitive. But given that it is the primary function of the private sector to modernize and keep modern its own plant capacities, that action was a totally inappropriate allocation of financial resources, particularly in view of the never ending backlog and continuing pile-up of backlog in the area of forest management. Whether it was backlog planting or keeping up with cutting practices, it was just a total misallocation of resources. I am afraid—and I am not the only one—that the emphasis which will almost naturally develop in this new forest industry task force, with its specific terms of reference will result in even more inappropriate allocation of funds, resources and priorities at a time when the crying need is to place more emphasis upon the maintenance of a healthy resource.

The situation in Canada in terms of our reforestation backlog is indeed frightening. Canada's forest companies cut about 8,000 square kilometres per year and plant or reseed about one-quarter of that area. In addition, about 2,000 to 3,000 square kilometres grow reasonably well on their own, but about 3,000 to 4,000 square kilometres per year are abandoned to lie idle and produce unusable scrub or trees. In the Province of British Columbia not only are we not keeping up with the current cut, but the backlog continues to increase. We have made no noticeable dent in the backlog of devastated areas.

Earlier in my remarks I mentioned what might happen if something is not done to force provincial Governments to fulfil their responsibilities. I think it was last December that the federal ministry made a commitment of approximately $60 million. I may be incorrect on that figure; I stand to be corrected. In return, the Provinces were expected at least to uphold their commitment to reforestation.

• (1220)

We did not hear anyone deny his share of responsibility. We assumed that that silence was general acceptance that the Provinces would undertake to fulfil what should be their historical role and responsibility, in return for an increased commitment from the federal Government, whose own financial buckets are not exactly overflowing.

What has happened since? We have seen another proposal. Give them an inch and they take a mile. I do not know whether the proposal was made officially, but it was certainly captured by the press in British Columbia. The proposal was that if the federal Government would pick up all the backlog reforestation in British Columbia, the Province would do its share by maintaining the current situation and ensuring only as much is planted as is cut every year.

The provincial Governments and the Official Opposition want to diversify and give more power to the provincial Governments. How can we trust that kind of situation? If all they are saying is more, more and still more, that is worse than the Old Sam Gompers kind of trade unionism. They want more and more federal Government money expended, yet they are not prepared to fill their existing responsibility or even the diminished responsibilities that are now there since the federal Government is willing to take up its share.

Some Members of this House had better talk to their colleagues in the Provinces and in industry. According to the Associate Deputy Minister when he appeared before the committee a few weeks ago, it is not only in education but in terms of the commitment to reforestation that the companies and the Provinces have been falling back over the last two to three years. They claim some temporary financial hardship. However, I have not noticed the federal Government rolling in wealth over the last while.

It may be true that while we should not cast stones unless we are without sin, in this situation no one would talk about or do anything if he took that kind of advice literally and obeyed it. We have to admit that in the private sector, in the Provinces and the federal Government, it has taken a long time—and the Liberal Party has been in power for 19 of the last 20 years—to recognize that this is an emergency situation. Regardless of traditional areas of responsibility, the federal Government must move. After all, it is Canada's most important industry in terms of its contribution to our balance of payments.

Federal and provincial Governments, industry, management and labour must begin to work together as we successfully did, regardless of Party or interest, in combatting the unjustified appeal by some parts of the industry south of the border in its application for countervailing tariffs. That was a situation and a conflict we would have liked to avoid, but the fact that we did work together successfully presents us with certain examples and opportunities.

If we begin to work together in a constructive way, recognizing our responsibilities, we will commit ourselves to the maintenance of Canada's most important resource, not only to our economy in general, but to the fabric of those communities spread across this country which are the soul of our entire national being.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken? If not, the chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the one thing that strikes me about this debate is that Parliament is coming slowly back to its primary function of discussing something that goes beyond Party politics. Canada traditionally, certainly since 1905 at the federal level, has paid very little attention to resource industries. This tradition has grown up in our civil service. It affects Members of all Governments. It is believed that since the resources belong to the Provinces, there is nothing we have to do.

Periodically there is a slight movement by the Parliament of Canada in connection with resources. In 1953, in view of all this evidence, a very good friend of mine, the Right Hon. Louis St-Laurent, introduced the Department of National Resources. He set it up for the first time. He made a very significant statement that should be quoted in relation to this debate and in relation to the remarks by the Right Hon. John A. Macdonald. His statement was that we in Canada have dealt with resources in a complete absence of mind. Therefore, he set up the Department.

That was a forward step. Unfortunately for him, he collected his Department from the existing civil service, the Department of the Interior and so on. He put a whole group of sections together who held the same body of opinion that had been held all along; therefore the history did not develop very fast. When in trouble, civil servants simply suggest re-organization. No Department has suffered from this more than forestry.

I had the honour to present to Cabinet in 1959 that we take forestry out of my Department, give it the importance that it demanded and make it a full Department under a Minister. It is true that we laid down the fact that the future lay in the strong co-operation and support of the Department of Forestry by the Department of Agriculture. It was clear from the demand factor reported to the people of the world by the United Nations through the organization called FAO.

Ever since 1949, that organization of the United Nations warned the world of the declining shortage of wood and other types of fibre. Because of that, we got a Department of Resources in Canada in 1953. We went one step further and made it a separate Department of Forestry and got the support of agriculture at that time, the heavy-weight Department, to give it full support.

I would like to say that we have made some progress. We received agreement from all the Provinces, even P.E.I. We brought in the ARDA in 1961 with the support of all the Provinces. We said the Provinces own the resources and have complete responsibility, and we own the resources in Canada lands, which are much greater than theirs. We said we would develop it as a unified operation. That is why we started to work in 1957 on the Resources for Tomorrow Conference which dealt with the renewable resources. Those four volumes are must reading for any Minister.

Before I leave that, as part of that Resources for Tomorrow Conference it was recommended that the 11 Governments work together as equals. We set up the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers. I am sorry that Walter Dinsdale is not here; he had the honour of setting up that Council. The first president was selected from the Provinces. Who do you suppose was the first president? It was a man who came to that conference absolutely opposed to the federal Government having anything to do with the resources of his Province. That man was then a Liberal. He is now the Premier of Quebec, the Hon. René Lévesque. When he met with us not only at the Resources for Tomorrow Conference but also at the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers, he accepted the presidency. He said that that was the only way the federal system would work, the Provinces and federal Government co-operating in the interest of the resource, leaving the politics out until it has been decided what is right for the resource, and letting each section do what it is responsible for.

That was a high point in the forward motion at that time. Quite frankly, the last twenty years have been largely wasted. I read these fine words written by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), the present Minister and other Ministers, but the only person who really tried hard to put some clout into it since 1963 was the Hon. Maurice Sauvé. But he got tied up with Quebec politics and was shuffled out of the House. He is now the head of a paper company.

Reference has been made to the Cabinet decision of 1980, and the Minister says that he has kept this decision going and deserves credit for it. But the key objectives in the Cabinet decision of 1980 were to go for the markets and for new uses for forests. This is what I want to deal with in the next ten minutes.

The phrase "research and development" is widely used. In forestry, it could mean selective breeding. We have done wonderful work in selective breeding both in Petawawa and in the Provinces. Petawawa is where the Canadian Forestry Service field work operates. But the need for new forest uses and market demands has not been fully met. These are the two things I want to emphasize.

Genetic breeding has long been used in Europe. The federal Department used genetic breeding on one or two varieties of trees, and the work was carried out in the applied sense with the Province of Ontario and the Province of British Columbia. The Province of Ontario used the federal Department of Forestry's work on genetic breeding and applied it to a tree which we look on as a weed, a tree called the poplar tree or the aspen tree, which was crossed genetically with several varieties. The Government turned this knowledge over to the various Provinces. Ontario took it up and in a ten-year program demonstrated that this weed tree would produce five to seven tons an acre per year.

The Province of British Columbia applied this knowledge to the alder tree, a tree which is almost considered a weed in British Columbia, and produced 15 to 20 tons an acre per year. That can be translated into dollars and cents. I can recall that in my day I fought hard to prove that I could get $30 per acre per year from forestry for every farmer in the Ottawa Valley and in the marginal areas of eastern Canada. That proposition was accepted by the Treasury Board which set aside $2 billion for it. I was the Minister of Agriculture at the time.

This concept of forestry, not only reforesting but reforesting with the right type of tree for the market, was to be put into the hands of farmers. That is where the costs come in. It was the intention to get all that money back from the farmers when they got into a profit position, which was demonstrated to be a cost of $30 per acre per year, and then they would pay back 15 per cent of their profits. It was the same technique as was used in Malaysia.

I tell you these things, Mr. Speaker, because they are still necessary. There are new programs which will give us the opportunity to help all of eastern Canada, particularly the boreal forest area. Nothing of a positive nature has been done. I know that some work was done by the Quebec Government in the Gaspé and that some work was done by the Godbout Government of Quebec in the 1930s with forest plots. The rich areas of the Ottawa Valley, all around Georgian Bay and all through the clay belt right through Quebec and into the Maritimes, should be the wealthiest agricultural and silvicultural area of the world.

Thanks to the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), we have now come to the realization that we must put our views forward, though not in a partisan way. No Party should bring partisanship into the resource industry, whether it be agriculture, forestry, mining or anything else, because the resource industry is our lifeblood. The key opportunity exists now in the field of markets.

For too long now the forest industry in the far west has concentrated on long-term agreements for paper with the United States. The lumber industry is more controversial and more competitive. At one time the Japanese log market was being developed, but when I came back from China in 1964, I pointed out to the forest industry the tremendous opportunity there was for markets in China. China is 80 per cent mountainous country with a lot of overburden, land that is good for growing trees. I know that the Japanese had burned those hillsides down during the war so that the Chinese would have no place to hide. I know that the Chinese people from every village and city volunteered millions of man-hours to plant those hillsides in the evenings.

In China, there are factories with long production lines. When a workman is setting his machine, he must run all the way down the production line, twice the length of this Chamber, to study the blueprint. He then must run all the way back and set the machine. He might perhaps have to go back again to revise his figures. What would this workman do if he had papers in front of him? Even school children are only allocated four or five little pieces of paper two inches by three inches each day. What a market for paper there is in China.

I say the same thing today as I said to the delegates from China who were here three weeks ago. I told them that what I recommended to them in 1964 is still true. The way that Canadians can help them most is by using our knowledge and know-how to protect the Chinese hillsides from erosion and to develop a forest industry for China over 50 or 60 years that the whole world will need. I told them that they would have to buy considerable supplies and receive much knowledge from us. I told them that they should set up joint enterprises with Canada so that we may exchange our knowledge and create a tremendously increased future for both nations in the forest industry.

In 1964 I suggested to the Canadian forest industry that it dedicate 10 per cent of its production to the Chinese market and that it combine legally for export purposes as allowed by law; but it did not want to give up that nice, fat market in the United States. We are paying a heavy price for that today.

I am not trying to pin the tail on any donkey. I am simply saying that the opportunity is still there. The Chinese delegation came here three weeks ago. They know that the proposal that I made to them in 1964 is long overdue and they want to do something about it. As the Minister spoke, I wondered if he was aware that the Chinese delegation was here and if he was aware of their tremendous interest in exchanging our products for 20, 30 or 40 years to build up their forest industry. I wondered if he was aware of the tremendous need the Chinese have for lumber. If you have ever lived in a cement house, Mr. Speaker, with cement floors and cement walls—and you know how clean the Chinese people are—you would know what a wonderful thing it would be to have a wooden frame in the window and to have a wooden floor. The need for paper in China for even the most elementary uses boggles the imagination. The same thing applies to the whole Pacific area and applies especially so to Africa.

In summary, my ideas are the same as they were in 1964. Read my speech in the Fall of 1964, which is nearly 20 years ago, a speech which put my proposals on the record of the House. There proposals included joint enterprises, international commodity agreements, the setting up of legal combines recognized by the Government for export and research for private enterprise, the setting up of international selling agencies that sell to these countries, and if these countries do not have the money, we would sell their produce so that they would have enough money to pay for it. I could go on listing these proposals, but I think that I have demonstrated what I mean.

In conclusion, one thing that was mentioned in the ministerial statement from Cabinet back in 1980 was other uses for the forests. We know that the forests are the greatest producers of waste in the world and waste is a much bigger asset than is the product. The Crosbie budget, which was referred to a moment ago, was a small step toward getting at that waste by making it legal for people to have stills, for example. What is important is the animal feed that comes out of the forest—plywood, the lumber, the pulp, and finally the energy.

Twenty-five years ago the average production from agriculture in the Ottawa Valley was $7 per acre per year. I was able to persuade Treasury Board that $30 per acre per year in the future would warrant a $2 billion expenditure over 20 years. I know that with these types of uses today we can produce $200 per acre to $300 per acre per year from so-called wasteland and we can restore Ontario to its earlier position of a great forest and farm area.

Sixty per cent of the land that was opened up in Ontario has gone back to bush. Let us put a good type of bush in place and let us make money from it. At the same time as we are making money we know that we are helping a lot of people all over the world. Whether it is a woman who has a floor to sweep instead of cement floor, the child in the school who has a paper to work with, or the worker who has a blueprint in front of him instead of having to run a quarter of a mile every time he wants to put a setting on a machine, it is enough to gladden the heart. Not only do we make money in this way but we help our fellow man.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to congratulate the Hon. Member on his speech. I first become involved in forestry matters when I was an assistant to the Hon. Maurice Sauvé. I have tried in some ways to carry on the work he did at that time and which the Hon. Member has touched upon.

The Hon. Member mentioned the importance of relations with China on forestry matters. I wonder if he is aware that I have visited China and discussed forestry relations with the Chinese Government. In about a month's time I will receive a visit from the Chinese Minister of Forestry in order to carry on these discussions.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Yes.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this is the most important day for forestry that this House has ever witnessed. You might even suspect that the Government had actually inspired the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) to name this as "forestry day". It provides us with a golden opportunity to record the accomplishments which the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) has achieved. He will be remembered, I assure you, as the most successful advocate of forestry that this House has ever seen.

It is my pleasant task to describe for you the cornerstone of the Government's forestry strategy, forest renewal, and then tell you how it is being implemented from coast to coast. At the outset however, I want to remind the House that the Government has pledged over $1 billion to Canadian forestry in the last two years. This is not neglect, Mr. Speaker; quite the contrary. The $1 billion represents a fundamental commitment to forest renewal, and to the wise use and conservation of Canada's most valuable natural asset, its forests.

May I begin by reminding the House that the most important issue facing the forest sector is timber supply. Local shortages of wood at a competitive cost have emerged in every Province. In the past, it was customary to harvest virgin timber and leave nature to replenish the supply. In effect, we mined the virgin forests and gave too little thought to the future crop. Forestry is now in a critical transition stage where mining must give way to systematic forest renewal and harvesting.

The limits are in sight for premium softwood sawlogs in many locations and supplies of larger, higher quality hardwood logs have been largely depleted. Pulpwood shortages are emerging in communities across the country. Only a fraction of our forests are being managed for sustained production, even today. In most cases the timber resource is renewable, both promptly and adequately, only if action is taken immediately following harvest or natural calamity.

Even in British Columbia there are projected shortfalls. These can be prevented only by a major improvement in forest renewal performance.

The best evidence we have shows that only four Provinces have uncommitted softwood timber reserves and that these reserves are largely uneconomic because of the high costs associated with remoteness, low volume per hectare and other factors. The Provinces appear to be approximately in balance and the remaining four are in a deficit position.

Another important factor in timber supply is that averages for a large region tend to cloak severe local problems. For example, a surplus of low-quality fir pulpwood is of no value to a sawmill designed for large diameter pine and spruce logs. And a surplus of timber in one area may be too costly to move to a deficit area, even if the specifications match perfectly.

The hardwood resource contrasts sharply with the softwood situation described above. There is a marked surplus of hardwoods, with only one quarter of the allowable cut being harvested at the present time. But the hardwood expansion potential is limited almost exclusively to poplar and aspen types.

The higher value hardwood species, maple, ash, birch and walnut have been severely overcut. Canada is now importing hardwood logs, lumber and veneer for furniture and other industries. The majority of these high-value hardwoods are located on private land in the Maritimes and the southern portions of Quebec and Ontario. Even today, serious forest renewal is practically non-existent in most hardwood forests on public and private land. Interest in managing the hardwood resource is lagging at least a decade behind that for softwoods.

This description of Canada's timber supply may sound exaggerated to some, but it has been verified by recent inquiries in each of the Provinces. To others it may convey a message of pessimism and hopelessness, although this is certainly not intended.

The existing industry can be stabilized and indeed launched on a new period of expansion, provided that the challenge of forestry is understood and accepted. What is needed now is action to harness the expertise and the necessary financial resources.

Before I describe what is actually being done, allow me to remind the House of what we mean by "forest renewal". First, it is prompt regeneration, after harvest or natural losses from fire and insects. Second, it is timber stand improvements following regeneration, such as spacing, pre-commercial thinning, weeding of brush and other competing vegetation, and fertilization.

How does forest renewal fit into intensive forest management? Intensive forestry embraces all the above, and in addition includes inventory work, harvesting, protection from fire, insects and disease, planning, access roads and administration.

Forest renewal means that higher quality timber can be produced in a shorter time. It also means lower logging and handling costs to the extent that intensive treatments are applied near manufacturing plants and on less rugged terrain. The longer run gains will include higher volumes per hectare, more uniform tree size at maturity, and less decay, waste and breakage. Each of these will tend to lower costs of delivered wood and thereby contribute to our competitive capability in export markets.

The additional timber can often be made available as soon as management is accelerated. You may not have to wait until the newly planted tree matures before achieving benefits. Where an adequate volume of mature timber is still available in a timber supply area, intensive forestry gives rise to the "allowable cut effect". Simply stated, you can harvest more if you grow more. Unfortunately, the mature timber may be so badly depleted in a given area that no increase in the annual harvest is possible for two or three decades. In these cases forest renewal is geared to survival rather than expansion of the industry.

As a general rule, however, forest renewal promises substantial gains. Experience in Canada and in similar northern forests elsewhere has demonstrated that gains of 50 percent to 100 per cent or more can be achieved in volume available for harvest. Additional benefits include timber of lower cost and higher quality than can be secured through closer utilization or harvesting remote stands.

Before a decision is made to push back the forest frontier in some remote area, it would be prudent to consider first the associated public and private costs, and then compare what the equivalent expenditure would yield if directed to intensive management on lands adjacent to the mills. Today's high energy and transportation costs make it imperative that we begin to examine benefits and costs in this way.

Current expenditures on forest renewal by senior governments and industry are believed to be in the order of $300 million annually. Recent information from the Provinces indicates that an additional $100 million will have to be spent just to sustain existing harvest levels. If we are to increase the harvest in line with increasing demand for forest products and to reflect economic development opportunities, it is expected that a total annual expenditure of $650 million will be required by all parties. The foregoing estimate is based on a regular program involving increasing replanting on current cutover from 200,000 hectares to 500,000 hectares annually with genetically superior seedlings, and on increasing silvicultural treatments, such as weeding, spacing and fertilizing from 100,000 hectares to 400,000 hectares annually.

In addition, a special program area is the backlog of idle forest land. It has been mentioned as a medium-term project where federal initiative would be welcomed by Provinces and industry alike. Rehabilitation of at least 100,000 hectares annually over a decade would bring back into production a good share of the neglected land which is adjacent to producing mills. The costs of keeping up with the current harvest and catching up with the backlog of neglected land are estimated to be $650 million annually in 1982 dollars.

Of course, better forest management will cost more. On the other side of the ledger are the expected benefits from the increment in available timber volume which, together with the anticipated increases in both real price and value added, could be expected to yield the following dividends for the Canadian economy annually: employment opportunity for 75,000 to 100,000 people in forest renewal, logging and manufacturing; increased annual sales of $22 billion, or double the present value; additional exports worth $12 billion, also double the present value; consequent benefits in related supply and service industry; increased tax revenue in excess of $1 billion.

The net revenue picture needs to be underscored. An expanding industry with a healthy resource base would generate additional tax revenue to senior governments which would be several times the additional forestry costs. In contrast, further neglect of forestry would quickly lead to widespread economic dislocation and bills of a different kind would fall due. The regional impact of the strategy would be pervasive because of the widespread importance of the sector. In the Maritimes, the first effect would be to stabilize the wood supply of the existing industry. Eventually increases in yield would allow increases in mill production. Increases in production should be possible much sooner in parts of Quebec and northern Ontario. This is particularly true of the Lakehead region where much productive forest land was not regenerated. The prairie Provinces would benefit materially from development of technology to use poplar. The greatest long-term impact, however, would probably be in British Columbia, which currently produces half of Canada's timber.

Some would argue that the federal Government has no responsibility for renewing the forest, citing provisions in the Constitution Act of 1867. Nevertheless, a historical review of federal forestry activity reveals a long-standing commitment to the forest resource and its related manufacturing sector. The pay-off has been directly in line with obvious federal responsibilities and priorities, such as: stable growth in employment; foreign exchange earnings; regional economic development; and environmental quality.

The allocation of funding responsibility varies from one Province to another. The provincial forest services have traditionally concentrated on silviculture and forest protection, with the federal Government tending to focus on silviculture by way of cost-sharing agreements and on forestry research. The private sector has concentrated on items related to timber production, such as inventory, working plans and roads, giving less attention to forest renewal and protection.

The provincial Governments now pay for the majority of forest renewal on their Crown lands, either through direct expenditures, payments to industry for work done under tenure agreements or indirect payments to industry through a stumpage offset system. Over the past ten years stumpage prices have risen dramatically. The most notable example is in Quebec, which recently announced an increase in annual stumpage charges of 130 per cent. Other Provinces have either increased stumpage or are planning to do so. The trend is in response to a scarcity of general revenues and to the need to fund increased forest renewal programs.

The private sector's direct share in forest renewal is expected to increase sharply in this decade, judging from recent moves in several Provinces. In Newfoundland, the two major companies are now carrying nearly half the costs. They are spending $4 million annually on Crown provincial land, compared with less than half a million dollars two years ago. New Brunswick's new legislation puts a heavy demand on the large freeholder to manage land intensively. Saskatchewan is studying means to increase industry and Crown Corporation responsibility for renewal. Quebec will soon place about half the forest renewal burden on companies.

One of the principles stated in the document "Forestry Imperatives for Canada", and subscribed to by the federal Government, is that responsibility for funding maintenance of the resource should be proportionate to the benefits received. This is actually a jointly held view of the provincial and federal Governments, adopted by them within the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers.

There is another fundamental fact involved here. Federal leadership is absolutely essential to the wise use and conservation of natural resources. Forest management in Canada since 1945 has depended in large measure on joint programs. Many will recall the old Canada Forestry Act which provided complementary federal funding to the Provinces. That was before the days of DREE general development agreements and forestry subsidiary agreements. Federal leadership will be expressed once again in the new generation of forest renewal agreements, beginning with the Nova Scotia agreement in the summer of 1982. A new agreement will be implemented shortly in Prince Edward Island, and negotiations are progressing in all the other Provinces. This Government's objective is to have agreements in place in all ten Provinces by the end of this year.

In summary, there is a great deal to be done. The nature and scope of this work is fully appreciated by the federal and provincial Governments as well as by industry. Now we must find the resources to support the Canadian Forestry Service which has the lead role for the forest sector.

Forestry in Canada is indeed undergoing a transition, from exploitation of the resource to more systematic forest management. The momentum towards forest management must be increased in order to ensure that the resource is capable of sustaining current and expected levels of economic activity. Indications are that the present levels of forest renewal activity, the most important aspect of forest management, will not sustain a harvest level sufficient to fulfil future needs.

Finally, the climate for co-operation has never been better across the country. I hope and expect that all the Parties in this House will join with the Government in the cause of forest renewal.

AGRICULTURE

NEED TO CONSERVE ARABLE LAND

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, we cannot afford to degrade our vital land resources because there exists a fundamental interdependence between energy and land resources in the world and Canada. As our farm land is continually shrinking, the need for conservation of this scarce resource becomes more and more pressing. Only 13 per cent of our total land area can support agricultural activity, yet substantial crop land is lost annually by soil erosion. The continual degradation of land requires increased quantities of fossil energy in the form of fertilizers and other inputs to offset lost soil productivity.

According to calculations by U.S. specialists in soil erosion, an estimated five-gallon equivalent of fuel per acre is used to offset the soil erosion loss on crop land. On the estimated 281 million acres in production in Canada, 1.4 billion gallons of fuel equivalents have to be used annually to offset past losses. This equals some 40 million barrels of oil annually, or about 30 per cent of our oil imports. The direct cost of erosion to the prairie farm economy is estimated at $368 million a year. The total soil loss due to erosion equals a yearly yield reduction of more than 71,000 tonnes of wheat. These high figures point out how acute the problem of soil erosion is and its implications in terms of future high energy inputs and lost potential.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, we have heard nothing from the Government about its plan to turn native Canadians into Liberals—otherwise known as the Indian Economic Development Fund—since a Cabinet document was revealed here in the House last week. As you know, that was the document which advised that money from the fund is not to go to the people who need it, or for social services such as housing. It also said that the board of the proposed Crown corporation should consist of native people who are Liberals, and not representatives of native political organizations. It proposes to produce yet another classification of Indian "Luie", or "Liberal urban Indian entrepreneur".

At the time it was first uncovered the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suggested it might be a forgery, but when we attempted to table it here in the House the Liberal Members refused to allow that. We would like to think a fund exists. God knows the Indian people of Canada need and deserve some attention from the federal Government, although I do not think this callous "buy a Liberal Indian" plan is exactly what they had in mind.

Instead of making lists of ridings where Indian votes could be crucial, why does the Government not make lists of useful, humanitarian programs it could implement with this fund? We need another special recovery program to try to recover a sense of decency and honour in dealing with Canada's native people.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S OBLIGATION TO ADOPT ADEQUATE POLICIES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, Saturday, more than 15,000 demonstrators marched in the streets of Montreal to draw the attention of governments to the unemployment problem, and there was a demonstration here today as well. These demonstrators were demanding the right to steady employment and policies aimed at not only maintaining existing jobs but also promoting full employment, as set forth in the United Nations Charter of Rigths. Furthermore, the Federal Government should adopt policies that will stimulate the economy, meet the needs of Canadians, ensure greater economic independence, bring about tax reforms aimed at taxing the richest and largest corporations and finally, develop an industrial strategy that recognizes the right to work. In addition, concrete measures must be taken to fight against social inequality which has grown steadily in the last twenty years. These specific and concrete demands from Canadians across Canada, in Montreal, Regina, Toronto and Saskatoon, are addressed to the federal Government. It is now up to the Government to act.

PUBLIC WORKS

AWARDING OF ARCHITECTURAL CONTRACTS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, architects, engineers, and lawyers, having completed their studies and complied with the regulations of their special regulating bodies, deserve to be given consideration in practising their speciality in their local community, and they should expect the support of the various levels of government. Two highly respected architects in my constituency, who have excellent qualifications and experience, feel that a type of discrimination is being shown in the awarding of contracts by the different levels of government whereby local firms are ignored in favour of larger firms, usually from outside the local community.

Under federal Government procedures, when a project is announced a competition is held to choose the architect to be granted the contract. The same is true at the provincial and municipal levels. The competition is based on a number of factors, including the design submitted, the record of previous projects completed, the capitalization behind such architects, as well as the engineering firm with which they work. It appears that a small number of firms, generally located in larger urban centres, have attracted a larger team which wins the majority of contracts.

This practice is unfair to a number of highly trained, locally-based professionals who have skills as competent as those in the larger firms. These smaller local companies should be awarded more of these contracts. This would help to direct more Government funds to local architects, and there will be—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

PROPOSED PAYMENTS TO RAILWAYS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, Bill C-155 has inflamed separatism in Alberta. Hundreds of loyal Albertans are now asking: will Alberta ever get a fair deal from Ottawa?

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) astonished and pleased Albertans when he indicated that he would follow the Gilson recommendations and pay the shortfall of the Crow to the producers. In every part of the Province hope was rekindled. Finally, Alberta hog and cattle producers and processors were going to be able to build their industry and find new markets. But the glad tidings were shortlived. The same Minister, ashamed even to face the House, announced across the street from the Parliament Buildings that the Government had changed his mind, that the shortfall would not be paid to the producers after all but to the railways, thus sentencing Albertans once more to be "drawers of water", for the benefit of Quebec.

It is rumoured that the Minister wanted to give the West a chance but that the Quebec Liberal Caucus and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), helped by Ministers from Quebec, forced him to change his mind. If this is so, the Hon. Minister should resign rather than remain the chattel of one Province. This action told western Canada and the world that the interests of Quebec come first, and the rest of Canada can have the crumbs. Mr. Trudeau is not heading the Government of Canada, he is the head of a Government of and for Quebec. If this Liberal Government is hell bent on breaking up Canada, it is surely going about it in the right way. I give fair warning: Albertans are not going to accept this kind of treatment very much longer.

FISHERIES

PLIGHT OF MAGDALEN ISLANDS FISHERMEN

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, the Liberal Government does not seem satisfied enough with having many fishermen in Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, and New Brunswick out of work; now it is carrying the fight into the Magdalen Islands.

The fight between the Quebec and Canadian Governments over the licensing of six fishing vessels owned by Madelipeche Incorporated is wreaking havoc on the livelihood of 500 families on the Magdalen Islands. The Minister stated in the House last week that his primary concern is to prevent a precedent being set. While this may have some merit further down the line, the immediate problem is to get those fishermen and shoreworkers back on the job. They have already lost a third of their fishing season. In a region which is under severe economic hardship, such a loss is devastating.

• (1410)

The Minister and his Quebec counterpart can continue their long term negotiations, but it is imperative that they first enter into an interim agreement which would allow fishing to resume and the plant to reopen. This dispute is between the two Governments, and it should be dealt with in Government offices, not on the backs of the fishermen and their communities.

FINANCE

SIZE OF DEFICIT—ENUMERATION OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Finance Minister (Mr. Lalonde) have the unmitigated gall to criticize our ally, the United States, for its high deficit and interest rates as causing our economic woes, when our own deficit is at record levels and is nothing but a deferred tax being foisted on our children.

Our deficit must come down. This can readily happen if the Government cuts its own prolifigate spending, such as wasting $245 million on its own information and advertising budget, the $350 million spent on Liberal caucus, the $4 billion it is owed on loans to foreign countries, which are really grants; the visible $454 million it spends on bilingualism plus the invisible amounts; the $33 million first quarter loss of CDC, not to mention the $2 billion capital used up in the CIDC Maurice Strong pork barrel, and the $2.3 billion wasted in Canadair.

As well there is the $700 million spent on the white elephant, Mirabel, which alone is the equivalent of giving 800,000 people a free round trip ticket from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Vancouver, B.C.

This is just the tip of the iceberg and Canadians are feeling the freeze. The U.S. is not the economic culprit. This Government is. Instead of criticizing the United States, the Finance Minister and the Prime Minister could take a lesson from free enterprise which took over the Summit meeting in Williamsburg, Virginia, which cost 90 per cent less than the Summit meeting held in Canada in 1982.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INCOME TAX

PAYMENT OF QUARTERLY INSTALLMENTS BY SENIOR CITIZENS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Some weeks ago I raised with him the issue of quarterly installments of income tax payments made by senior citizens. At that time the Minister indicated that he might take some steps to mitigate that policy in order not to unduly prejudice certain senior citizens whose income, while it might be taxable, was so modest that it was hardly worth while insisting that they make quarterly payments.

Can the Minister bring us up to date on what progress he has made within his Department so that those senior citizens who must pay very modest income taxes will no longer be forced to pay them by quarterly installments as a result of a recent innovation in departmental policy?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member must have a special talent for guessing what is being discussed in the Department, because I happened to raise this matter again this morning with my Deputy Minister for the Income Tax Division of the Department of National Revenue. The Hon. Member knows perfectly well that it is extremely difficult to ignore the Act as it stands and the provisions made under the Act. I have asked my officials to review those provisions and to find out exactly how many senior citizens have to pay quarterly instalments as a result of the provisions of the Income Tax Act and also because of the way their income is distributed. We are still analyzing and collecting this information. Once the data have been studied, we shall be in a position to make a decision.

[English]

PRIOR PAYMENT OF TAX ON INCOME FROM CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I understand the provisions of the law. I am not encouraging the Minister to suggest that senior citizens should break the law. I am concerned with the unjust imposition of the law in situations which simply do not warrant it.

If the Minister and his departmental officials are reviewing the situation, would they pay very special attention to a not uncommon situation where a senior citizen's sole source of income, other than old age pension, is interest from Canada Savings Bonds which comes due November 1 each year? Many citizens who receive this modest extra income are being asked to pay three quarterly installments toward their tax before the receipt of their interest from Canada Savings Bonds. No one can be more patriotic than those senior citizens. Will the Minister undertake to give very careful consideration to that situation in his departmental review?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I can make a formal commitment only with respect to the case mentioned by the Hon. Member, namely, a senior citizen who receives income from Canada Savings Bonds which are probably income the individual has been saving throughout his or her working life. We are going to pay special attention to this kind of situation in order to avoid putting an undue burden on senior citizens who have only one source of income as in the example given by the Hon. Member and who would have to pay income tax in quarterly instalments, before having received their income. That is the kind of situation we are examining, and I can assure the Members of this House that we are giving this problem our special attention.

EMPLOYMENT

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL ADOPT NEW MEASURES TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

I suppose the Minister saw the headlines this morning with reports on the great march for jobs, and he must have noticed the demonstration by unemployed workers at the entrance to the Parliament Buildings.

Over 20,000 people met in Montreal this weekend and hundreds more in Regina, Saskatoon and Toronto, while several hundred people are demonstrating in front of the Parliament Buildings. Madam Speaker, these people are protesting on behalf of over 1,500,000 registered unemployed Canadians and as many welfare recipients who are living on the meagre pittance provided by Government welfare programs.

Can the Minister inform the House when he and his Government will finally understand that the time has come to help these three million Canadians, the majority of whom are willing to be active participants in Canada's economy, by working and not by living off their friends, those Canadian workers who are still employed?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, this is a very serious situation, and our Government has established a number of programs. When the budget was brought down, we established the NEED program with the budget of $750 million for groups that have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits. My Parliamentary Secretary will be meeting groups of unemployed Canadians this afternoon to continue discussions on this subject.

GOVERNMENT'S YOUTH EMPLOYMENT POLICY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Everyone knows that employment programs set up by the Government are temporary programs which create temporary jobs, and that in the final instance, very few permanent jobs are actually created. For instance, the Minister is well aware that the NEED program or the Student Employment Program will end some time, by the end of the summer. It is unconscionable and unacceptable that Canadians should invest billions and billions of dollars in the education of our young people and then find that today, 600,000 of them are unemployed, with as many on welfare.

Could the Minister inform the House what his Government intends to do to make young and dynamic Canadians more confident in a future that right now seems pretty bleak?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I find it strange because some of our fellow Canadians, Members of this House and the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party want to do away with job creation programs and it was the Government that established them in the first place.

As far as we are concerned, we are setting up training programs under the National Training Act and billions of dollars are being budgeted for the training of young people in Canada.

CREATION OF PERMANENT AND PRODUCTIVE JOBS BY PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Could the Minister perhaps inform the House whether he has anything else to offer besides make-work programs which only last a few weeks, in other words, could he not use his imagination, and, in co-operation with his colleague at the Department of Finance, make it possible for the private sector to create permanent and productive jobs so that Canadians who are unemployed today will be able to earn their living with dignity tomorrow?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, unfortunately, the Hon. Member is not familiar with the new programs that were announced in the budget. For instance, the ACCESS program for young people, which, in co-operation with the private sector, would create jobs through a Federal Government grant for young people and the first job after completion of formal training.

MEDICAL CARE

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTRODUCE NEW HEALTH CARE ACT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is now back from her meeting with the Minister of Health for Alberta.

The Minister finds herself in the position of having to accept the actions of the Alberta Government or, come October 1, she can withdraw all federal funding from Alberta, thus risking an interruption of services and a federal-provincial political crisis that would entail great risks as well. However, she does have a third option and a more positive one than either passive eloquence, which is what we have received so far, or total war on Alberta, which is the only option that the existing legislation provides her, that is, to table in the House a Canada Health Act which provides the federal Government with a more flexible response to delinquent Provinces, which clarifies and strengthens the five basic principles of medicare, and which would constitude a truly viable and more positive political option around which pro-medicare Canadians could rally. Will she now table such an Act?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As soon as we are ready, Madam Speaker, and I count on the Hon. Member to obtain the official approval of Mr. Larry Desjardin, the provincial Minister of Manitoba, for such an Act strengthening medicare. I have not heard many provincial Ministers up until now, if I have heard any, saying that they are against user fees and other extra charges. I do not recall having heard that clear message. Canadians are waiting for it.

What happened in Alberta has shown us that even user fees, which Provinces impose as taxes on the sick, really are detrimental and, contrary to what the provincial Ministers believe, cannot be policed by the political process for the simple reason that they do not equip their citizens with the basic facts and information. That is what I am presently reviewing with regard to the future Canada Health Act, to ensure that it deals with everything that can happen against medicare.

INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, how long must Canadians who want to preserve medicare wait for this long awaited Canada Health Act? The Minister is always waiting for someone else to act. She is waiting for someone else to say something. We are tired of these nice little homilies from the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: We want to see some action, because what she does in the next few months between now and October 1 will have everything to do with whether medicare survives or not. Therefore, I ask the Minister, when are we to see the Canada Health Act? I asked the question a month ago, a month before that, and a month before that, and we are still waiting for the answer. When are we to have the Canada Health Act?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As soon as it is ready, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member does great damage when he puts everything on my shoulders. All Canadians who believe in medicare, and I have appealed to them, are in the business, with me and with him, if he believes, and he does believe in medicare, to save it. We will save medicare. As a result, we will conserve the best acquisition of 25 years. We will. There is no doubt.

Mr. Blaikie: Stop talking and do something.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—USE OF CANADIAN AMMUNITION BY GUERILLA FORCES

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services. Over the weekend we learned that right wing guerillas are being supplied with Canadian-made ammunition in their bid to destabilize and overthrow the Government of Nicaragua. The ammunition was intended for NATO troops in Europe. This is not the first time Canadian arms have ended up in the hands of forces with whom the Government prohibits military trade or assistance.

Will the Minister tell the House how this ammunition came to be in the hands of these guerillas? Will he make a statement that this is in contravention of government policy? Will he conduct a serious examination of government safeguards to ensure that Canadian arms do not end up in the hands of people involved in hostilities or the suppression of democratic rights and freedoms?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, Canadian policy and Canadian law with respect to exports of military equipment are well known. No military equipment may be exported without a special export permit issued by the Government. All requests are examined on a case-by-case basis. An export permit is required for each export shipment. After the New York Times printed an article about the possibility that Canadian bullets were being used in Nicaragua, we made enquiries within the Department that issues export permits. No permits for exports of arms or military equipment have been issued for shipments to Nicaragua, and in any case, it would be against the law, which forbids exports of arms to a country where armed conflict exists. We have checked and in the last fifteen years, no export permits have been issued for shipments of this kind of equipment to Nicaragua. We checked the material described in the New York Times. We checked where this material was exported within the last ten years, and we are in touch with governments to whom this military equipment has been exported, to find out whether there has been re-sale or re-shipment of the equipment. I have no further information at the present time.

COMMUNICATIONS

LACK OF JOBS FOR TELIDON TECHNOLOGY GRADUATES

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. To my knowledge, Loyalist College of Applied Arts and Technology, which is situated just outside my constituency, is the only school in North America giving a special course on Telidon technology. The problem is that the students graduating from the course have no place to go to work. There are no jobs available for them. We have been trying since March of this year to persuade the Minister to give us some idea or some practical approach to enable work to be found for these young people who are higly skilled in a brand new technology, but one for which there are very few jobs.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right in stating that it is a new technology. It is one which we have transferred to the private sector. Obviously, along with the additional help which the Government has given to the program with an additional infusion of $22 million in funds this year, we expect opportunities to be created by the private sector.

I simply point out to the Hon. Member that the private sector companies which have taken up the Telidon technology have indeed created many jobs because of the transfer of technology and Telidon to the private sector. I can think in terms of both the information providers, such as Infomart and a number of companies that are manufacturing these sets, from AEL Microtel on the Pacific to Norpak in this area. I can also point out that just last week Infomart itself successfully conluded an arrangement with the Washington Post. It has also just recently concluded an agreement with Mitsui and seems to have an opportunity of penetrating the Japanese market. Therefore I would say that job opportunities would indeed seem to be coming along in that area.

INQUIRY RESPECTING NATURE OF AVAILABLE JOBS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a brief supplementary question. If all of the information is available, I would really appreciate his putting it in writing because we did ask his office some time ago. However, would the Minister tell me whether the jobs which are being made available are in preparing the technology or in the page preparation and the carrying out of the technology, which is where the training is being done in the school?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I would be delighted to send the Hon. Member additional information on it. I would like him to know that the information I have just given to him has indeed been the object of a number of press releases emanating from my office, and which I distributed to the offices of all Members of Parliament.

Mr. Ellis: Nobody reads them.

PIPELINES

ALASKA HIGHWAY GAS PIPELINE—DATE OF COMPLETION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Does the Minister still anticipate that the target date of 1989 is reachable with regard to the Alaska Highway Gas Pipeline, and can he give assurance that the pipeline will be started in 1984?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I replied to that question on Friday. I think that we have fulfilled our part of the commitment we made. We passed the necessary legislation and we have prebuilt a big section of the pipeline in Canada.

• (1430)

Of course the Americans have not been able so far to resolve the problems of marketing their own gas from Alaska, or financing the project. As long as they cannot finalize their part of the project, there is nothing I can do to force them. We have finalized our responsibility in that regard and have moved forward very quickly on our responsibility. It is up to the Americans to develop their sections now.

Mr. Malone: The Minister knows that he did not answer that question on Friday. It was a different question about the same subject.

COMMISSION'S BUDGET

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, how in the world can the Minister possibly say that the 1989 deadline will be reachable when in fact it will take five years for the conditioning plant on the North Slope to become operative? If we do not start on it until next year that target cannot be met. With that in mind, would the Minister say why Mitchell Sharp and the Northern Pipeline Commission are presently budgeted for more than $5 million when there is no hope of the Government putting the project in place? What useful service are they performing, with many other jobs lacking in the country, and this expensive study going on for about 40 people across the street?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as to the presidency of the agency, I should like to inform the Hon. Member that he is now working on a part-time basis. As far as the main problem is concerned, I gave my explanation. If I came from Alberta with its large surplus of gas, perhaps I would have an interest in not seeing the pipeline built too fast because, if they take the American gas from Alaska to the American market, there will be less room in the American market for Alberta gas.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY RESPECTING CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC CONTRACT FOR PETERBOROUGH PLANT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, on May 12, 1983, the Leader of the Opposition asked a question of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It read:

> Has the Government approved a five-year EDP contract involving Canadian General Electric in Peterborough in the amount of $12.5 million, which is expected to generate 2,000 new jobs? Are the 2,000 jobs spread over the five-year period, or are 2,000 jobs generated each year of the approved contract?

At that time the Parliamentary Secretary answered as follows:

> A formal answer will be given to the Leader of the Opposition as early as tomorrow.

That was 17 days to 18 days ago, and I wonder whether the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce could answer that question today.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I saw the Hon. Member's press release as a result of the question which the Leader of the Opposition asked the Parliamentary Secretary. I would like to advise the Hon. Member that the information the Hon. Member included in his press release to his riding was not accurate.

Mr. Domm: The information came from the Minister's own document, circulated on May 11, which clearly read:

New Hydro Electric Generators; $12.5 million EDP for new hydro-generators. Over the five-year lifetime of this contract, the project is expected to generate approximately 2,000 new jobs.

APPROVAL OF CONTRACT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Also it is indicated in his own ministerial document that this project is approved. Is it approved or is it not approved? Why does it also indicate that the sister project in Montreal, Quebec, needs to come onstream in order to make the Peterborough announcement which, according to the Minister's own document, is already approved? Are you stating that this is not your document?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, not being in the practice of pilfering other people's documents, I want to say to the Hon. Member that it is not my document. It happens to be a document which somebody from my Department put forward. When my name is on the document, the Hon. Member will be the last one to know about it.

AGRICULTURE

NATIONAL MARKETING BOARDS—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): In a speech which he made last week to representatives of various national marketing boards, the Minister indicated that he would be considering the disbanding of national marketing boards unless more provincial co-operation or more co-operation within the boards could be found. Obviously that statement has raised some considerable concern among farmers who market agricultural products through these boards. I would like to ask the Minister whether we should take him seriously, or whether he was bluffing.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member can take me whatever way he wants, but I was quite serious.

Mr. Epp: The Minister will know that I would not really mind taking him in any way.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, obviously those statements create some very deep concern in the agricultural community among farmers who have made investments on the basis of the guidelines and conditions by which they market their products. Can I take it from the Minister's answer in the House today that he has no serious intention of changing significantly the manner in which these products are marketed?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, marketing boards are comprised of provincial marketing boards that agree to join in a national program to market products. I, as the Minister responsible to Parliament and to Canada for the operation of these national boards, have some deep concerns about what is going on in some of them. They seem to be on a trend of running their show in the way they see fit. There is squabbling between the different members of the boards from coast to coast. If they really follow what is indicated in the intent of the National Farm Products Marketing Act and have a desire to co-operate, they will not have any problem. They will adhere to the National Farm Products Marketing Board which is the overseeing body that reports to me. If the Hon. Member reads some of the proceedings which were open to the public, he will see what some of the provincial Ministers said. There has to be more of this kind of co-operation and more of this desire to work together, or it will not work. They recognize this themselves.

I have asked them for the last two years to do this kind of thing. I have only one alternative if they do not, that is, to issue an Order in Council giving them 90 days' notice that their boards will fold up. As far as I am concerned, it is up to them to do this. I have begged and pleaded with them to do some of the things—and they are not major things—we want and, I am sure, the Hon. Member wants done in a proper fashion.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CONTRACT TO BUILD PATROL FRIGATES—REGIONAL ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. It is my understanding that the successful bidder for the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program will be announced shortly, that it is vitally important the best frigate be selected and, in addition, that the best regional distribution of benefits be achieved. It would appear that the best distribution would come out of two, two, and two—the allocation of frigates; two in Atlantic Canada, two in central Canada, and two in western Canada. Would the Minister be prepared to give some kind of commitment to the House that he will see that regional distribution occurs no matter which frigate is selected?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, of course the question of regional distribution is of importance. However, the question of the price which has been allotted for that particular contract is of primary importance. While we will be selecting the best ship in accordance with the objective criteria I have already identified for the Hon. Member, we are caught by the size of the economic envelope under which the analysis and the eventual selection will be made.

Mr. Skelly: That answer is simply not acceptable to the thousands and thousands of shipyard employees in Canada who are unemployed.

DISTRIBUTION OF WORK

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, a two, two, and two distribution would mean that 24 per cent of the benefits would go to Atlantic Canada, 39 per cent to Quebec, 24 per cent to Ontario, and 13 per cent to British Columbia. Cost is one function of the benefits to Canadians. Would the Minister be prepared to give the House some information on whether the figures in terms of the distribution of benefits are accurate, on whether he would be prepared to call the contractors together to look at an improved regional distribution, and on whether he would give his commitment, and the Government's commitment, to supporting this kind of distribution, rather than an all or nothing situation which looks as if might occur now?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, because of the nature of the analysis and because it is a highly competitive process, until such time as a final decision is made I am not in a position to provide the sort of information the Hon. Member is soliciting from me. However, I have heard his representations and his comments. They echo other representations which have been made by other Members of the House. I will take due note of them.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE CANADA

POLLING OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Some weeks ago the Minister of Justice informed us in committee that the Government does not govern by polls; you know, wink-wink, nudge-nudge. Just recently the Solicitor General's Department commissioned a poll to be conducted among the employees of Corrections Canada to see what their attitudes are toward the work place and working conditions. What is the crisis among the employees of Corrections Canada which forced the Government to move away from its policy of no polls to see what is going on in the work place?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Government's policy is not a no-polls policy. I think my colleague stated it correctly, that polls are not the only factor to be given weight in making decisions. There is a large body of employees within Correctional Service Canada, 10,000. I can assure the Hon. Member that their opinions and concerns are very important to me. I want the Correctional Service to be informed about them so that any changes that come along in management-labour relations can be weighed in the light of views of employees, along with other factors that have to be taken into consideration, like the views of taxpayers.

ROLE OF MANAGEMENT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, can the Minister tell us what group of officials here in the Department in Ottawa, or in the regional offices, are so far removed from the work place and the employees that they cannot make an analysis of where the problems lie in the work place?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, there are many in the service who can make good analyses of these without the use of surveys, but surveys are a technique for learning about the concerns of a group as large as 10,000. I hope the Hon. Member will have some interest in seeing the survey because, by new Government policy, the results of the survey will be available, along with the questions, when it is completed.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—PROJECTED SALES—OFFICIAL'S POSITION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue who answers for a host of companies under the social development umbrella. Can the Minister tell us whether Mr. D. Hurley, senior vice-president of Canadair, who represented to the Finance Committee that there were sales for 902 Challenger jets, on a regressive analysis of sales, is still with the corporation? If so, why is he still with the corporation when the Minister knew, Mr. Hurley knew, and everyone on the inside knew that such a sale of jets was totally impossible, particularly in view of a Cabinet document which the Minister and the other Ministers had in their possession early in October, 1982?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, as indicated by the Minister responsible for the new corporation which holds Canadair's shares, corporation officials will appear before a Standing Committee of the House very shortly, and I believe this is the type of question that should be put during a review in committee of the votes of Corporations such as the Canada Development Investment Corporation. It woulld be an excellent opportunity for the Hon. Member to question Corporation officials about the kind of details in which the Hon. Member is interested.

[English]

SALARY SCALES OF TOP EMPLOYEES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, will the Minister confirm that at least 100 employees of Canadair earn more than $95,000 a year, and that the top 20 employees of Canadair earn in excess of any emolument ever paid to a Cabinet Minister in Canada, and probably more on average than the Prime Minister?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, unfortunately, I do not have a breakdown of the number of employees earning a specific salary. In fact, I fail to see how this could be relevant to the Corporation's activities. Like any other company, Canadair pays its employees according to their skills and responsibility, and I think that if the Hon. Member has some specific concern about the salary levels paid by Canadair, he will have an opportunity to ask questions about the Corporation's salary policy when the Committees meet early in June.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—PARKING FEES FOR SMALL AIRCRAFT

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport concerning aircraft parking fees at Vancouver International Airport. I mentioned this to the Minister earlier. Those fees are now over eight times what they were six years ago, and another increase is expected this month. What is the policy of the Government with regard to the parking of small aircraft at Vancouver International? If it is the policy to get rid of them altogether, why does the Government not confess this and prohibit them, rather than trying to starve them out?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the policy is to try to increase the cost recovery. There is no doubt about that. My friend may be surprised to hear that the general return to the Government from general aviation is from 5 per cent to 10 per cent across the board, so something has to be done. Increases in parking either took place before the six and five policy or, if they have taken place since the six and five policy was implemented, they have been within the rules.

GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, is it the Government's long-range intent to phase out small aircraft altogether at Vancouver International Airport?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): No, Madam Speaker, it is not. As my friend from Vancouver is aware, there is a policy to develop satellite airports around the main ones in order to relieve the congestion. Therefore we have a combination of developing these satellite airports and of raising the level of fees for parking at main airports. We try to balance these in the best possible way.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

OTIS ELEVATOR COMPANY—PHASING OUT OF OPERATIONS BY UNITED TECHNOLOGIES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In 1979 United Technologies was given permission by FIRA to take over Otis Elevator. It made a large number of commitments with regard to the future of the company. Since then it has either phased out or is in the process of phasing out seven different operations within the company. Has FIRA undertaken a review of the commitments made by United Technologies? If so, is it satisfied that it is in fact manufacturing in Canada up to the commitment that it made in 1979?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am not familiar with the specific details the Hon. Member requests. I will check and get back to him. The enforcement branch of FIRA on an ongoing basis checks to ensure that commitments that are made, and undertakings that are given, are adhered to by the companies. Because of the recession over the last couple of years, several companies have not been able to undertake some of the commitments they made. I will check for the Hon. Member and get back to him.

COMPANY MEMORANDUM—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, in the last year Otis Elevator has given an indefinite lay-off notice to over 300 people, which in effect means they will not be back to work. Does the Minister believe that the following is an appropriate way to deal with Canadians, and I quote from a memo sent out by Otis to its distributors and sales people:

> We would further emphasize that at any time when talking to customers regarding deliveries, no mention is made of deliveries from the U.S.A. or reference made to Bloomington. As far as our customers are concerned, we are still ordering the equipment from our Hamilton factory, located in Hamilton, Ontario.

Will the Minister investigate this company and determine whether this is an attempt being made by the company to do an end-run on its commitment to Canada to provide employment opportunities in Canada for Canadians, and to provide in Canada a growth of Otis rather than having it phased out, as it appears to be doing?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as I indicated to the Hon Member, I will investigate his allegations and get back to him.

DELAY IN RATIFYING PENSIONS AGREEMENT WITH GERMANY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, would you permit me to follow up on a question I asked of the Minister of State for Finance last week, having to do with the bilateral agreement we have with the Federal Republic of Germany with respect to the double taxation of pensions and other considerations. The Minister undertook to research his Department to find where this particular agreement is buried. Keeping in mind that the Federal Republic of Germany ratified this agreement a year and a half ago and the Senate has passed a Bill, what is holding up this Bill from getting to the Commons?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It gives me the opportunity to say that I have responded to the Hon. Member in writing. He should have the response.

In dealing with the legislation which governs the agreement, the Senate did make a couple of amendments. They were accepted by the law officers of the Crown, and amendments will have to be processed in the House in order to ratify finally the agreement referred to by the Hon. Member. That is set out in my response to the Hon. Member. Agreement by Members that those changes could be dealt with by the House would expedite the objective the Hon. Member seeks.

QUERY RESPECTING RETROACTIVITY OF PROVISIONS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Minister whether he has consulted with the President of the Treasury Board to see whether he would take the initiatives needed to bring the Bill to the House? I also ask him whether, as was intended by the agreement in 1981, the benefits to literally thousands of Canadians who have earned pension rights in other countries would be retroactive to 1978 and those benefits would be paid in this taxation year.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I have sent a copy of the correspondence to the President of the Privy Council who is responsible for setting the agenda for House business. On the second point made by the Hon. Member, I cannot give him a definitive answer at this time.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION—COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Minister is undoubtedly aware that the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior, a Liberal and obstensibly a Government supporter, and Chairman of the Parliamentary Sub-committee on the Northern Canada Power Commission, has accused the Government of ill will, or lack of will, in not responding to the recommendations made in that report. I am now giving the Minister an opportunity to redeem himself and tell us when he will respond to the recommendations made in the NCPC report.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I have already indicated that when we have completely reviewed the task force on energy that involved the Northwest Territorial Government as well as the Yukon Government and, in conjunction with that, when we have reviewed the Penner Report to see what further subsidies can be made over and above the whole mix of subsidies already given to defray energy costs in the North, a program which was announced six weeks ago, as the Hon. Member may note, we will see what we can do with respect to the extension of further subsidies in the North in the future.

While the Hon. Member might be implying that there has been a lack of attention to the North, let me tell him that there has been a whole series of multi-million dollar announcements made by the federal Government right across the Yukon and Northwest Territories with reference to the North and, if he has not noticed these announcements, it is certain that most northerners have, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nickerson: Madam Speaker, we have noticed all kinds af announcements, like $12 million for the Canadair water bomber that nobody wants. The last time I asked the same question, the reply was that the response would be forthcoming by January of this year. That certainly has not taken place, and I do not know whether we can expect it in the next five months either.

PRICE OF ELECTRICITY SUPPLIED TO PINE POINT MINES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question concerns the price of electricity to Pine Point Mines, and is directed to the same Minister. In order to get that mine back to work, many organizations, including CN Railway, the union, and the smelter, have given a little bit, but not apparently NCPC. Will the request to reduce the cost of electricity to the actual cost of production rather than charge the additional 20 per cent surtax be now complied with, or will the mine still be obliged to pay 20 per cent more than the actual cost of the power?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member had asked that question in the first place, he would have received an answer. The answer is yes, we have made representations to NCPC with respect to some amelioration with regard to Pine Point, and we hope we will be as helpful to them as indeed we were to Cyprus Anvil, a matter which the Acting Leader of the Opposition may know about.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PRACTICES USED IN HIRING RESEARCH SCIENTISTS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology. Is the Minister aware that the federal Government's current hiring practices for research scientists are restrictive? In fact, where the federal Government requires universities to advertise, it does not require advertising for research scientists in its own service. I would like to ask the Minister if he is aware of this restrictive practice and if he has any thoughts about a mechanism that will change the practice.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the practice to which the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey makes reference, but I will be very happy to look into the matter. I would like to have more details, and perhaps the Hon. Member would be in a position to furnish me with some of the advertising which was actually seen. It would be helpful for me in following it up.

BIOLOGICAL COUNCIL OF CANADA RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The point that I would like to make to the Minister is that it is indeed the lack of advertising which is the problem. The federal Government is not advertising for research scientist positions. I would like to refer the Minister to the Biological Council of Canada and to the very specific recommendations and concerns expressed by the Biological Council of Canada in its most recent publication. I think in reading that publication the Minister will find that there is indeed a double standard that should be redressed if we are to provide the best opportunity for the federal Government's research facilities, as well as for the scientists of Canada.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, as I said, I will look into the matter. The hiring of scientists by the Canadian Government is of course done through the Public Service Commission, so I will look into the matter and determine whether or not the information that the Hon. Member offered is correct.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S MEETING WITH HEAD OF UNITED STATES ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister has just returned from the United States where he met with the new Chief of the Environmental Protection Agency. Could the Minister tell us whether he discussed with the new Chief the whole problem of chemicals from toxic waste dump sites, entering the Niagara River?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Madam Speaker, I did meet with Mr. Ruckelshaus, the new Chief of the Environmental Protection Agency, on Friday morning. The purpose of that meeting was to establish personal contact and to discuss in a very general way environmental problems shared by both our countries. Most of the time that was spent in discussion was devoted to the acid rain issue, and the question of toxic chemical entry into the Niagara River system and possible measures which our two countries could take to respond to those problems. There was no specific conclusion reached in our discussions, and no specific timetable was established. The discussions were more of a general attempt to resolve the problems. The subject matter of the Hon. Member's question was very much at the forefront of our discussions on Friday.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

PRESENTATION OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Would the Minister advise the House when he intends to table the amendments with reference to the Crow rate?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Tomorrow, Madam Speaker. I understand, however, that it will not be a tabling. The amendments will be given to the House Leaders of each Party.

INDUSTRY

SUBSIDIES AND GRANTS—REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and follows up on the question put to him by the Hon. Member for Peterborough having to do with the mystery of the purloined document, which was found resting snugly in the interior of a plain brown envelope. No doubt the Minister has already seen question No. 4,918 on the Order Paper, which was placed there on May 16, listing—

An Hon. Member: What page?

Mr. Nielsen: Page 193 of this year. That question was placed there by myself and lists some 200 projects by name, with the amount of federal money going into each project in various parts of the country. Since it would only take about ten minutes for a single member of the Minister's staff to verify that that list of projects and those amounts came from the purloined document, I wonder if the Minister would have that done and cause that question to be answered tomorrow or, at the very latest, the following day, since it is a very simple matter to check that information.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, my Department identifys projects which the federal Government may possibly be involved in on a regular basis, but my experience in the private sector, and in both municipal and federal Government, has been that the more discreet one is with respect to investments of this nature, the more likely one is to be successful. Usually pre-announcements of this kind jeopardize many of the projects that could take place in the private sector.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INFORMATION TO MEMBERS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Since the projects have obviously been authorized by virtue of the specificity with which the amounts are set forth beside the various names, and since it seems that I was right on, two weeks ago, when I announced Canadian participation in the A-320 which was announced at the Paris Air Show and confirmed by President Reagan, does the Minister not feel that we in the House are entitled to information from our Ministers before we hear the same information from the President of the United States, or through the Paris Air Show?

• (1500)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I will repeat what I just said. Those documents are identified and revised on a regular basis with respect to possible federal Government participation. As well as the document that the Hon. Member has, we have other papers that I will be happy to send him about industrial prospects.

I do not think the Hon. Member serves the purpose of any colleague on either side of the House by pronouncing on something when no final decision has been taken.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

THREAT OF WEST COAST PORTS STRIKE—CORRECTION OF ANSWER BY MR. AXWORTHY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I should like to rise on a point of order. Last Thursday the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) rose to indicate that a statement I had made on May 26 may have been inadvertently incorrect. I checked the record on my return from the West Coast and I find that what he said is true.

If I am permitted, I should like to correct the statement I made on May 25, as reported at page 25693, where I indicated in reference to the labour dispute on the West Coast that a strike vote had been taken but that full authority had not been given by the membership. That should be the other way around: authority had been given but the strike vote had not been taken.

Question No. 4,825—Mr. Fretz:

1. What level of funding is provided to the Canadian Hunger Foundation from the Canadian International Development Agency?

2. Is the Foundation a non-government organization?

3. Is the Foundation audited regularly?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The level of funding provided by CIDA to the Canadian Hunger Foundation (CHF) for 1982-83 was $1,153,562.

2. Yes, the CHF is a non-governmental organization.

3. Yes, the CHF is audited annually and audited financial statements are submitted to CIDA.

DEFINITION OF NON-GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

Question No. 4,826—Mr. Fretz:

1. Does there exist a written definition of a non-government organization?

2. At what level of funding from the Government does a non-government organization cease to become such?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes, for the purposes of the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA), there is a written definition of non-governmental organizations, viz., organizations, agencies or institutions which are non-governmental, non-profit and identifiable as Canadian.

2. There is no prescribed level of funding from the Government that will cause a non-governmental organization no longer to be deemed as such.

MANDATORY AUDIT REQUIREMENT

Question No. 4,827—Mr. Fretz:

Does a regular audit become mandatory after receiving a certain level of funding from the Government and, if so, what is that level?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): At present, there is no mandatory audit requirement based upon a particular level of funding by CIDA.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—FOREST INDUSTRY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Oberle:

That this House condemns the Government for its neglect of Canada's forests and its indifference to the threat posed to Canada's forests and forest industries by pests, fire, pollution and foreign competition, and calls upon the Government to stimulate the research needed to promote superior growth and diversify export products, and acknowledge its responsibility to protect the Canadian environment and the millions of Canadians whose livelihood depends upon Canada's forest resources.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we owe a debt to the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) for having provided this opportunity to raise a matter of prime importance to Canada. I should like to put the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) at his ease a little bit because he was worried about the language used in the motion. As far as I am concerned the wording stands. It begins as follows:

That this House condemns the Government for its neglect of Canada's forests and its indifference to the threat posed—

I should like to inform the Minister here and now that as far as I am concerned the purpose of the debate is to strengthen his hand with his Cabinet colleagues so that we will no longer have to condemn the Government for its neglect of our forest lands.

From time immemorial our forests have been relentlessly attacked by fire caused by lightning and by pests. Happily the destructive efforts of these two plagues are intermittent and forests have somehow or other managed to survive. Now a third attack on the forests has been launched and is being sustained. The forests are beginning to show excessive wear and tear. Many a qualified forester indeed will tell you that our forests are being used up under this new threat.

Whence does this threat come? From man, with his insatiable hunger for wood products either to protect him from the elements, the wind and the cold, or when that does not work, products on which he can blow his nose when he has a cold or to record his thoughts—some good thoughts and some not so good. Modern man could be the forest's greatest foe; if man wants the forest to help him he will have to co-operate with the forest and not be content with destroying it.

Yet modern man has within him the power, if properly awakened and awakened soon enough, to repair the damage he has done and preserve that valuable heritage for generations to come. A warning was given to us in Canada over a century ago; we have yet to show that we have heeded that caution. John A. Macdonald said in 1871 and I quote:

> We are recklessly destroying the timber of Canada. There is scarcely a possibility of replacing it. It occurs to me that the subject should be looked in the face and some efforts made for the preservation of our timber.

What prompted this comment, it would seem, was the sight of the destruction of the white pine in Ontario. Records indicate that in the winter of 1866 and 1867, 400 men felled nearly 30,000 huge white pines. In less than a century the white pine forests that once covered large parts of eastern Canada has been reduced almost to a memory. There remain only a few lonely giants which were skipped by the cutting crews.

Speaking of lonely giants, and I hope they are not too lonely, I should like to tell the House that in British Columbia MacMillan Bloedel provided a sanctuary by preserving a small park where there is a majestic stand of Douglas fir and cedar which is called Cathedral Grove. It straddles the road crossing Vancouver Island west of Parksville on the way to the Pacific Rim Park. It has to be seen to be believed. There, in Cathedral Grove—how aptly named!—one strains backward and upward to see them rise, 250 to 300 feet tall, 30 and 40 feet in girth. Those trees were standing tall—20 feet or so—when King John—John Lackland—in 1215 was forced on to Runnymede Island to sign the Magna Carta, 700 years ago. That is what the forest can do.

Our resolve to preserve our forests may need stimulation. Let us consider this debate as a stimulant; let it be a catalyst; let it be anything you like provided it provokes positive reaction and promotes sustained activity in favour of forest regeneration. I repeat to the Minister, we are here to strengthen his hand with Cabinet.

Let us remember above all else that we have it in our hands—and we are at a crossroads as many a forester will tell you—to do one of two things. We can ensure that our consumption of the forests will not devastate the forests, or we can say to the generations which come after us: "Tough; we used your forests, but it never occurred to us to put them back, to regenerate them for your use".

• (1510)

Are we prepared to act today to earn the gratitude of our grandchildren or will they curse us for our wanton wastefulness? The motto of my first alma mater, Mr. Speaker, was "Tuum est", "It's up to you". I believe our motto should be "Nostrum est", "It's up to us". It is up to us. We can go either way. We can preserve and deserve thanks, or we can destroy and merit obloquy.

How important is conservation? Aside altogether from the value of the timber cut, there is the value of the timber standing. Trees—and mark this, Mr. Speaker—or their absence, produce our climate. Rain forests or deserts? These are the outside options. Within those outer brackets, Mr. Speaker, we have the option of renewing forests and grasslands or facing a future of desert. Which do we want?

This debate today, for me at least, is an exercise aimed at reaching out for and activating the springs of action of the public, in both levels of Government and in industry. It is an exhortation to action. For that reason, I personally am extremely grateful to the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). That is the best we can do on this side of the House. However, I would like to remind all listening that even during those brief nine or ten months in office the Progressive Conservative Government took major steps to restore the federal forestry service to its rightful place by appointing a knowledgeable and enthusiastic forester as the Assistant Deputy Minister of Forestry, a man who knows how to get his message across to Ministers and to the public. We are grateful to him and I am happy to acknowledge his presence under our roof today.

Much more needs to be done, much, much more. Somehow or other we have to provoke, inspire, encourage, lobby, incite, instigate, and perhaps even coax a little or wheedle. The Greeks had a word for it which we borrowed, "ecphorize", meaning to remove obstacles. That is what we must do, Mr. Speaker; we must remove obstacles, whether they be caused by ignorance, lethargy or red tape.

How do we do that? I think perhaps the shock treatment might help and I would like to deliver a few shocks. I believe they are shocks. They were shocks to me when I first became aware of them. For example, let us consider the revenue which this country receives from all quarters and the revenue it receives from forestry, its expenditures across the country and its expenditures on forestry. It is really quite interesting when you realize that the revenue from the forests, grosso modo, is about 1 per cent of the revenue expected by this Government this year, and its expenditures on forestry are about .1 per cent. That is a shameful comparison; I hope it shocks you, Mr. Speaker. One per cent in terms of revenue to the federal Government and 0.1 per cent in expenditures on forestry.

The Food and Agriculture Organization reported recently that the forest land base of the world is disappearing at the rate of 50 acres a minute. This is around the world; it is not just a Canadian problem, Mr. Speaker, I admit that. However, we do not have to lag behind. It is the livelihood of a good many Canadians. It is the basis of our foreign trade. The forest land of the world is disappearing at the rate of 50 acres a minute. If you worked that out in other terms, it is about 72,000 acres a day, about 112 square miles a day, of 41,000 square miles a year, almost the size of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick combined. That amount of forest land is disappearing from the face of the earth every year.

Something else which I believe is a real shocker is that to produce one day's issue of the Toronto Sun requires seven acres of bush to be chopped down, 2,400 acres per year. That is four square miles per year for one paper. And that is just one paper in one metropolican city in Canada. What about the New York Times? How many acres or square miles are required even for the Sunday edition of the New York Times?

One thing we seem to forget, Mr. Speaker, and that is that trees take a long time to grow, but if permitted they will grow and stand tall. Once they are chopped down, however, or burned out, or eaten by pests, they take years to replace. The present Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts)—I am happy to see he is still in the House—was quoted in something I read recently as saying: "There will be a disaster in our forest heritage if we let nature take its course". He was speaking of forest fires and infestations. I say that there will be an even greater disaster if we let man have his way without inducing him one way or another to replant whatever he fells.

Let us look at what we stand to lose if we lose our forest industry. The total production value from our forests is about $13 billion, of which approximately $9 billion is for export. Total public revenues from forests to both levels of Government, federal and provincial, are about $2 billion. Forest products account for about 18 per cent, nearly one-fifth of Canada's total exports. Forest products are far and away the most important of Canada's exports. It has already been mentioned but it is worth underlining, Mr. Speaker, that forestry makes a larger, positive contribution to our trade balance than agriculture, fisheries, mining and petroleum products combined. Forestry produces more than those four industries. Forestry directly or indirectly employs one out of every ten Canadians in the work force. That is a very important consideration.

What are we doing partially that we ought to be doing more thoroughly? At what sort of rate are we reforesting or restoring to the ground that which we are taking from it? Sweden, about the size of Alberta, plants 400 million seedlings a year. That country is just about one-tenth the size of Canada south of the 60th parallel. Who plants these seedlings? It is the industry which plants them. Canada plants from coast to coast about 350 million seedlings. We ought to be planting three times as many trees, Mr. Speaker. Even then we would still not be up to the rate at which Sweden plants trees. We plant only one acre for every four acres harvested, and nature provides another acre. So we have two unplanted and infertile. That is a disgraceful record and we need to and could do more, not for ourselves but for those who follow us.

Let us look at some of the more disconcerting facts. The federal Government receives about $1 billion annually from forest enterprises and the federal forestry budget amounts to about $66 million, or roughly 6.5 per cent of the revenue that forestry generates. The other figures I have already mentioned. Provincial Governments derive about the same amount but they do not do all that much better. Over all, no more than 20 per cent of the revenue from the forest is restored to the forest. Only $400 million across this whole country for an industry which produces $12 billion to $13 billion in products and $9 billion in export earnings.

This is an age of buzzwords, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, and the buzzwords I would like to get out and about on everyone's tongue are "forest management", and "sustainable yield". Those are the important objectives which have to be formulated and pursued consistently year after year after year. A 20, 30 or 40 year program has to be laid down. We have to farm our forests properly, and I use the word "farm" advisedly. We have to plant seeds as a farmer plants seeds if we want a crop down the road. I have heard, for example, that there have been notions of putting seeds in little pellets and spreading them out from an aircraft flying over cut land. Not all will germinate, but many of them will and take root.

We also have to thin the forests to make sure that the hardiest trees survive and produce the best crop. We have to plant today at a rate which will give us the crop we are going to need 20 or 30 years hence. We have to cull and thin and in places even fertilize. I understand the Swedes fertilize their trees, which is an interesting concept and it can be done. It will take a lot of tender loving care as well as scientific knowledge.

In the care of our forests today, we are behaving not much better than our forefathers who managed to demolish the white pine so effectively in such a short time, as Sir John A. reminded us over 100 years ago.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed very much the presentation of the Hon. Member. He pointed out many important issues. However, there is one glaring omission and I wonder if he might take a moment to comment. It might have simply been an inadvertent oversight.

In Canada, especially in the particular areas represented by the Hon. Member and myself, there are thousands and thousands of native people. The economy of most of their communities is based on Unemployment Insurance and welfare. They do not have access to the forest industry. Does the Hon. Member care to make a statement as to why native people were omitted from the resolution and why there has been no assistance from the federal Government so that the native people can gain access to the forest resource and its development? The native land claims are the key by which they could be given access to this resource and thereby strengthen the economy of the native communities. The land claim is one of the few mechanisms by which native people can have access to forest resources in a fair and equitable way.

The Hon. Member mentioned that the biggest engine of the Canadian economy was the forest industry, so why has his Party neglected to place in its resolution before the House of Commons a statement on the access by native people to that forest resource?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) for drawing to my attention that omission. Twenty minutes was all I was permitted. I had hoped that I would be able to include something along those lines because it has to be remembered that the federal Government, which has a tendency to say it is all the Provinces' fault, that they should do more for forestry because they own the resource, itself tends to forget there is an area of Canada south of 60 and about the size of Nova Scotia which is federal Crown land. Much of that land is taken up by reserves where the Indians would be happy to develop a forest industry to supply existing mills or to build mills of their own. They could earn their living in that way. That was mentioned in many of the things I read to prepare myself for this debate today, but the 20-minute rule prevented me from developing it any further. I do hope the Hon. Member will do so.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate. I am very pleased at the very constructive position taken both by the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) and the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). I agree with all of the comments that the latter Member has made, except for his assumption that the Government was not sympathetic to the representations being made by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) who is responsible for the Canadian Forestry Service.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Not sufficiently sympathetic.

Mr. Blais: In fact, there has been a great deal of support given to the Minister concerning the forestry policies he has advanced. Indeed, I am sure the hon. gentleman will recognize there has been more activity in the forest sector in the last three years than at any time before by the federal Government. The Government has assumed a leadership role at the national level which in my view, it ought to have assumed some time before. But in view of that assumption by the Minister of the Environment, I think we ought to commend him for having taken that initiative.

I can well recognize why the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich and the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River would be in love with the forest. I had occasion last summer to take my family into the interior of British Columbia and I insisted on travelling two days on lumber roads up and down the mountainside to observe the size of the forest.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): How is your car?

Mr. Blais: The car is fine. It was a rented car. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that forest is as bountiful, attractive and beautiful as anyone would want. I ahve a particular love for the forest because I come from northern Ontario. It just so happens that this year is the one hundredth anniversary of my great grandfather's arrival in northern Ontario where he worked for E.B. Eddy at the time they were cutting ties for the CPR which was then starting its long journey across the country to the region represented by my hon. friend. I can tell him that since that time my family, which has now become bountiful and plentiful also, occupies a large number of areas in northern Ontario and a large number of my family are involved in the forest products industry. So I felt very emotional having observed that which the hon. gentleman speaks of.

As well I was very sensitive to his comments relating to the white pine, the prince of pines, and its demise from northern Ontario forests. That is a calamity and a tragedy which we will hopefully be able to reverse.

• (1530)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It must not happen again.

Mr. Blais: Not only must it not happen again, there must be a greater aggressivity on the part of the Ontario Government, a Province where these trees are found, to develop nurseries and grow seeds that will permit the replenishment of the forests in northern Ontario, not only with jack pine, red pine and spruce but also with white pine. It takes over 100 years for that tree to grow to full maturity. It requires a longsighted Government to recognize that, notwithstanding the fact it may take 125 years for the tree to grow to full maturity in northern Ontario, there is a responsibility to future generations of Canadians to plant and nurture now.

I agree with the hon. gentleman that we must begin to farm that resource now, which is an essential ingredient in my view.

It has been the history of humankind to exploit forests and to denude the land of forests. That was the phenomenon in the Middle East. We can base ourselves on the Holy Scriptures, both the Old Testament and the New Testament, where we see that there were forests there. They were not plentiful but they did exist. The fact is that in North Africa those forests are now gone, an area which I had the pleasure of visiting. In biblical times the atlas cedar grew there in bountiful quantities. It has now disappeared. It has disappeared to the point where it has become nearly a sacred material in the Moslem religion and is being incorporated in all their rites. The reason is that wood is as close to humanity as any material can be. It was the first hard material capable of being utilized by our ancestors. The fact is that it is being utilized now to an even greater extent than it was in those days.

Coming from northern Ontario I am even more sensitive to its importance. In terms of economic impact, the forest industry in northern Ontario is responsible for 55 per cent of all manufacturing jobs. That represents 31,000 jobs. It is responsible for 58 per cent of manufacturing wages and salaries, or some $560 million on an annual basis. It is reponsible for 57 per cent of the value of production, namely $2.2 billion. It is responsible for 54 per cent of value added to products in northern Ontario.

It is evident from each of the statistics that I have quoted that more than half the economic activity in northern Ontario is attributable to the forest products industry. But the state of Ontario's forests is not very good. I can speak of my own riding where I said, in a speech I made on the forest products industry seven years ago, that we had but 15 years left of marketable timber in the region. Very little has been done since then. In the Province of Ontario, 3.8 million hectares are depleted at this stage. The total number of acres needing reforestation would translate into 37,650 square kilometres. That is 37,650 square kilometres of backlog in northern Ontario which needs to be reseeded and put back into production.

Ontario's annual cut is 160,000 hectares, but its reforestation is in only half that area, that is, 80,000 hectares. Even with the huge backlog of over 37,000 square kilometres of forests which need to be replenished, it is falling behind 50 per cent annually. In Ontario twice as much is being cut as is being planted, and that is completely unacceptable.

In fact, the Province of Ontario has long been very weak in forest management. This is understandable when all the decisions relating to the forest products industry are being made in hogtown. I have nothing against Toronto, the Queen City, but the fact is that it is far removed from those areas where lumber is being exploited.

As I indicated, my family has been in northern Ontario for 100 years. We have attempted on a number of occasions to improve and encourage the improvement of forest management, but to no avail. The operators in northern Ontario are very much aware of the need for reseeding. Unfortunately, the private operators must meet the market and its requirements. Their profit margins are very slight and one cannot expect an operator, who tends to operate in terms of the benefits which will flow into his own treasury at the end of any given fiscal year of operation, to look 125 years down the line. We cannot expect him to finance the operation 125 years into the future or even 50 years down the line. It is only a public authority which really ought to have that kind of foresight. In the past the Ontario Government has shown a desire for the private sector to fund forest management and renewal. Of course, that did not happen.

The private sector is interested in immediate exploitation and is not looking forward to forest conservation in the long term. That is where the failure is. Finally, after stimulation by the federal Government, the Province of Ontario has agreed to enter into forest management agreements with the producers in the Province of Ontario. It has signed agreements with 13 producers in order to provide them with funding that would match or take into account the contribution from the private sector in order to enter into forest management agreements. While that is not representative of all the suppliers. It is better than nothing.

In effect, that agreement which was signed by the Government of Ontario and the Government of Canada provided for $82 million in investments over five years. That agreement will terminate in March, 1984, and the renegotiation of a new agreement is being undertaken. That new agreement will envision intensive efforts to reforest private and industrial lands as well as provide for the regeneration of the backlog of unsatisfactorily restocked Crown land. It will also provide for the expansion of nursery capacity since that capacity is insufficient. It is nearly one-third of what should be available. Furthermore, it proposes increased research and development in Ontario to meet that Province's specific requirements. It also takes into account Indian reserves forest management. The hon. gentleman from the New Democratic Party spoke about Indian lands and the fact that forests are the only resource available for exploitation by Indian people in a large number of those areas. Exactly the same situation exists in my area. One band has close to 50,000 acres of available forests for exploitation but has never before been encouraged to exploit that resource. I have obtained funds for them so they may exploit those resources in the future.

In addition, we will have technology transfers and increased public awareness, which is essential. This brings me to the subject of forest fires and the threat of forest fires which, in 1980, were responsible for the destruction of an equivalent of a six kilometre wide strip of forest from coast to coast in Canada and a $350 million loss in terms of income. As a result of that particular loss in 1980, I have been aggressively seeking to obtain the sort of firefighting equipment which is required for the firefighting patrol Canada.

[Translation]

That is why I went after the CL-215, a water bomber manufactured by Canadair. It is the most effective instrument we have, and it makes it easier to put out a fire when it first starts, as a result of lightning or electric storms in areas that are not accessible by road. The only way to get there is by air, and in that kind of situation, the best kind of aircraft is a plane, and the CL-215 was designed especially for fighting forest fires. This plane, which is entirely Canadian-designed, can carry more than seven tons of water per trip and make ten trips per hour.

[English]

That means seven tonnes per trip, ten trips per hour, 70 tonnes of water which can be dumped on to a fire anywhere water can be scooped. All that is required for the scooping is 1,200 metres, which is just a bit more than one kilometre. It can come in, scoop the water and take off with seven tonnes of water.

We have been able to export the aircraft. We have 15 of those aircraft flying in France, 17 flying in Spain, 12 flying in Greece, four in Yugoslavia, two in Venezuela, two in Thailand and two in Italy. In effect, with the orders that we are placing jointly with the Provinces, we will be in a position to encourage greater aggressivity by Canadair in the international marketplace. It is an aicraft which is required. It is an aircraft which not only provides us with protection against fires in the forest, but also one which provides a large number of jobs in a very sensitive area of Canadian industrial activity, namely, the aerospace industry.

It is recognized that Canada's future depends on the forest products industry. It is an industry which we have neglected in the past. It is an industry which will secure for us not only domestic markets, but also export markets for long periods of time, if we are wise enough to farm the resource, if we are wise enough to put back as much into forest management as we take out of it. It is something which we have not done in the past. We have been able to survive because Canada was so plentiful.

My region, Sturgeon Falls, was initially developed in the 1860s as a result of J. R. Booth going up the Ottawa River, the Mattawa River and then finding all the best white pines, topping the white pines, taking the best 16 feet and leaving the balance in the bush. Even today, one goes into the bush of northern Ontario and one trips over "des souches".

An Hon. Member: He must have been an headless Liberal.

Mr. Blais: No, as a matter of fact, he was not. He was a good supporter of the Tory Party.

An Hon. Member: A good one?

Mr. Blais: Yes.

An Hon. Member: Tell us the difference.

Mr. Blais: If the NDP had existed at that time and had had as many reactionary points of view as it has expressed as a result of the Crow debate, he probably would have voted NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Are you still eating Crow over there?

Mr. Blais: No, we will be dealing with the Crow for some time to come because we are a progressive Party on that matter. We do not have to deal with reactionaries such as those who have abided with the NDP. Especially with all those young faces opposite, it is just unbelievable to hear such reactionary old-time views. I note that Members of the NDP are present in large number. One of its Members must be speaking next. I hope that they will be as constructive in their approach as were the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) and the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

In concluding, I want to transmit some praise to my colleague and seatmate, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), because he has dealt with all the areas which have been identified in the motion. If one considers the motion, one finds that it condemns the Government for neglect but identifies the areas, all of which have been addressed by the Minister. Indeed, the pest problem has been well addressed by the Canadian Forestry Service. There is still work to be done. I have already discussed fire control and the amount of moneys we are investing in the water bomber. In terms of pollution, again there is work concerning acid rain. In terms of foreign competition as well, I have discussed our ability to penetrate the American market and to resist the protectionist measures which the Americans threatened to take.

I would like to make one last point. Last January, all the caucus Members from northern Ontario met in Thunder Bay and we dealt with forest products and the forest industry. We invited all Hon. Members from northern Ontario, including one Hon. Member from the Loyal Opposition. There were six Cabinet Ministers, all of whom had an interest, direct or indirect, in the forest products industry. We invited members of the private sector who were involved in pulp and paper, in sawmill operations, in planing and drying operations, in order to discuss the industry and the measures which should be taken by the Government in order to advance the industry's cause. The results of that particular conference are now being implemented in large measure. One of them has been implemented because there was a recommendation by the industry relating to water bombers, and that has gone forward. However, the others are now being worked upon and are being implemented by the Canadian Forestry Service.

I think that the Government has done a great deal. There is still a great deal to be done, but what it has done, primarily, has been to assume the leadership role in the protection and in the exploitation of our forests, which really devolves upon the Government of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members rising to ask questions?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, listening to the Hon. Member and his constructive remarks in response to the motion which is filed under my name, one cannot help but be reminded of the old saying that if he could only harness the energy expended in talking of the crisis, it would very soon be ended. There is no question but that the Liberals have done much talking and, hopefully, sooner or later, their talking will be followed up with some action.

The Minister made reference to a very important subject, one very dear to my heart, that is, the development of private woodlots and the necessity for developing government programs and regimes which would encourage and entice private owners of marginal farmland which should be forested or private owners of woodlands to begin planting and restocking. As he said, it would take 25 years to 100 years, so there is really no great incentive for anyone, in one life time, to undertake such a project. He heaped scorn on the Province for not being more innovative in encouraging people. Could he tell me what initiatives are being taken by the federal Government? The Tax Act really comes under federal Government jurisdiction. What initiative is the federal Government taking to develop a tax regime which would encourage and entice private woodlot owners, industries and Provinces to follow suit and match the efforts of the federal Government in that kind of endeavour?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the development of woodlots, of course, would have to come within the agreements which are executed and would have to be envisaged within the agreements which are being negotiated as between the federal Government and the provincial Government.

I am not one to start encouraging the federal Government to engage in a confrontational stance vis-à-vis the Provinces in an area as important as the forest products industry. I would fear that if the Government of Canada would unilaterally start offering incentives to private entrepreneurs in terms of the development of private woodlots, especially where Provinces have huge areas of forestry which come under provincial Crown jurisdiction, we would get into that sort of confrontational stance. However, I recognize that in certain areas that may be the only way to go. I know that in the Province of Quebec the question of the development of private woodlots and the incentives being advanced by the federal Government in terms of the development of private woodlots is one of the options at which the Government is looking.

In my area the Province controls most of the Crown lands, except for Indian lands in certain areas. Therefore, it tends to be able to adopt its own policies in order to favour the Crown lands within the Province, and private woodlot operators tend to benefit as a result of the spin-offs of provincial policy. Having said that, the best way to address the individual situations in individual Provinces is to negotiate terms affecting private woodlots within federal-provincial agreements.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the answer of the previous speaker reminds me of the old saying that talk is cheap but it takes money to make things move. I wonder where his priority was in the 20 minutes he took. Would the Minister be prepared to indicate what kind of support he would give to native people across Canada for access into the forest industry? I would just like to mention two or three things. One would be access to the resource. There is a desperate need to resolve the land claim issue and to give them access. Does he support that? The second is the creation of a native forest development corporation for the funding and for the development of silviculture inventory, reseeding and production. The third would be the establishment of an Indian forest economic development fund, a special fund so that native people can become involved in it. The fourth would be an affirmative action program where in companies are financially assisted by the federal Government, whether they be Crown Zellerbach or MacMillan Bloedel. Would the Government be prepared to undertake an affirmative action program so that young Indian people will have employment opportunities in forestry operations? The fifth would be the development of specific training programs for young people so that they can become directly involved in that industry. The sixth would be some form of co-operation between the Department of the Environment and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to develop an effective forestry program for native people. Would the Minister raise these with his caucus colleagues and press for them as a member of the Cabinet of this Government?

Mr. Blais: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) who went on at some length in his speech describing the excellent deal in terms of fire-fighting aircraft on which the federal Government has taken initiative. I want to say that I agree with him in part, that in fact it was an important breakthrough and will assist many Provinces. However, the Province with the major component in the Canadian forest industry is the Province of British Columbia and its neighbouring territory, Yukon. The aircraft which the federal Government is now pushing takes considerable time to land, to pick up water and to take off once again. When the Government made the decision, did it overlook the fact that British Columbia does not have wide valleys and easy access to water sources? More specifically, did the Government consider that a good deal of northern British Columbia and Yukon are fighting forest fires when all the lakes are frozen over, particularly at this time of the year and still for many, many weeks? How could the Government see using this aircraft to scoop up water to fight forest fires when the lakes are frozen over?

Mr. Blais: First, the Hon. Member says that it takes a long time for the aircraft to land in order to load on water. The fact is that the aircraft does not land. It takes six seconds to scoop up water. It needs only a bit more than a kilometre to go from 50 feet above land or water, to dip down and load something over seven tonnes of water, and then to take off again.

Mr. Riis: Did you say 50 feet?

Mr. Blais: Yes, just slightly over one kilometre or 1,200 metres is what is required for the aircraft to dive from 50 feet above ground level—

Mr. Riis: In British Columbia they wou have to be higher than 50 feet.

Mr. Blais: The fact is that the aircraft can do it. I have asked that specific question of my officials who told me that in British Columbia the aircraft would be very useful, even more useful than the fire retardant bombers that are now being employed there.

However, the situation in British Columbia is that there are a number of companies using older type aircraft such as the DC-6 and some smaller type of aircraft which are using fire retardants. I think there may be some pressure by those contractors vis-à-vis the British Columbia Government relating to their getting involved with water bombers.

In terms of the Yukon Territory, I can tell the Hon. Member that indeed in my area of the country where lakes are frozen over for some period of time, when there is ice on the lakes, there is snow in the bush and when there is snow in the bush, there is very little chance of fire starting. In fact, that is the case in Yukon as well. The survey at which we looked indicated that while there are some forest fires in the early portions of the season, the high incident of forest fires is after the lakes are opened and there can be the scooping of water and dumping of water on to fires.

In addition, we have looked at lakes and the availability of lakes close to where valuable forest lands are to be found. We have ascertained that the lakes are sufficiently close to make the water bomber a viable firefighting mechanism.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of Hon. Members who have participated so far, particularly to those of the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais). My family, like his, has had a bit of a feel for the forests. We were chased out of Scotland a bit earlier than his family arrived in this country because the English at that time preferred sheep, and we landed in Nova Scotia. Ever since that time my family has been interested in forestry. My own grandfather began to plant trees over 60 years ago. My father has continued this tradition, and so have I. It makes me laugh when I hear the Minister say that it is only the public sector which has a commitment to undertake long-term forestry projects. It has to be a partnership between the public and the private sector. When I think of the shortsighted policies that have existed in the public sector with respect to forestry and compare them with some of the things that industrialists like K. C. Irving have done to entertain large scale forestry, I realize just how out of touch the Minister is.

At one time Canada had a federal forestry department. Its first Minister was a distinguished former Premier of New Brunswick, Hugh John Flemming. He was also an outstanding Member of the House for many years. However, at this point in time the forestry department has been merged or submerged into the greater Department of the Environment. This is not acceptable because the size of the contribution of this Department would dictate that it certainly deserves equal status to agriculture and to fisheries. It is pretty obvious that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan)—to whom I want to pay tribute for doing something which our administration suggested should be done and which we had begun to do, that is, to move the PFRA back into that Department where it should have been and extend services across the country—would be the first to agree that forestry deserves equal status to agriculture. I am sure the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) would agree as well. It is unfortunate that this step cannot be taken.

As other Hon. Members have said—and I think it should be put on the record once more—the forestry sector deserves at least equal treatment because directly or indirectly it provides one out of every ten jobs in the country. It provides jobs for 13 per cent of all people employed in manufacturing and generates over $1 billion in tax revenue for the Provinces. Forest products exports, as the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) said, amount to many billions of dollars and account for about 18 per cent of all Canadian exports. It makes a larger positive net contribution to trade, as he said, than agriculture, mining, fisheries and the petroleum industry combined, yet the forest industry has been downgraded over the years simply because it has not been making the demands or has not received the attention that it should have.

• (1600)

People tend to view forests in extremes. Some, like the American poet Joyce Kilmer who was killed during World War I, were very eloquent on the subject. Who can forget his testimony that "Poems are made by fools like me, but only God can make a tree".

On the other hand there are those pragmatic individuals who run large pulp companies or who take part in some other sectors of the industry who look upon forests as only the raw material for cellulose or as a source for so many cunits of lumber. I believe that this important industry has to be viewed with enlightened concern, a blending if you will of the aesthetic and the practical so that this great renewable resource is administered and developed, if not with idealism, at least with sensitivity for all that it can do and what it represents and has represented for this country.

The federal Government has been slowly responding to problems in the forestry sector caused by past neglect. Evidence of this growing federal concern has been indicated as speakers on the Government side have emphasized, by the initiation of a shared-cost program for modernization of the forest products industry. Major increases in federal input to forest management through DREE sub-agreements with the Provinces has been another initiative which has been helpful. There was the decision to raise the Canadian Forestry Service to a separate service headed by an Assistant Deputy Minister and the establishment of the federal forestry sector strategy committee to co-ordinate and assess federal initiatives and actions relation to the forestry sector. More effort is needed. Certainly there has to be a greater effort made by the provincial as well as the federal Governments if we are going to continue to stop the neglect and the discrimination of this great industry.

Some people may say we do not need a federal forest Minister because so much of the jurisdiction lies with the Provinces. That is not so. Even excluding the vast Territories, Yukon and N.W.T. in this country, there are still areas of land under the control of the federal Government in Provinces that are greater in total area than the Province of Nova Scotia.

It seems obvious that to deny a resource of this magnitude a separate Ministry is a situation that should not be allowed to continue. The different regions of Canada have their own traditions. It is fascinating how the history of forestry blends in with the history of this country. Each region has its own methodology, from the rain forests of British Columbia to the Acadian forests in eastern Canada. There have been different historical developments and different ways of life which have developed.

In our school it was interesting to learn how the lumberjacks in New Brunswick and Maine almost caused a war between our two countries, called "The Pork and Beans War", when they began to take umbrage at certain things that went on in the forests in their Province and State respectively.

Our national capital was once a lumber town. That was the very reason for its existence at the time that Queen Victoria decided it had the potential to be the capital of Canada. Some cynics would agree that it made a greater contribution as a timber centre than it has ever made as a political centre. That probably is a topic for another speech.

As a Member of Parliament from Nova Scotia, I am proud to say there was no Province in the country that had a more unique approach to the ownership of land and the utilization of forests. It has been a remarkably cosmopolitan Province in terms of the evolution of this country's history. To deviate from the strict topic of forestry for a moment, let me say that upon its stage many dramas involving Britain, France and the United States were once played. It was a gateway for French exploration. It was a British military staging ground and became, as the great author Thomas H. Riddell stated when talking about the Port of Halifax, "The warden of the north" which stood guard over the vast interior of this country for many years. Our Province was front and centre during the fraternal struggle between Great Britain and the United States.

From the War of Independence to the United States' Civil War, Irish, Scots, Germans and United Empire loyalists, people from Quebec or France, all for their own good reasons, settled in Nova Scotia, and a unique land system evolved. The ownership of land always meant a great deal to the people of Nova Scotia, and no other Province in the country, to my knowledge, had such a high percentage of private land ownership, free from encumbrances.

Nova Scotia achieved great prosperity from the so-called square timber trade and the use of its high-grade of spruce and pine, not only for shipbuilding and the supplying of masts for the British Navy, but also because Napoleon's blockades in Europe dictated that new sources of timber be found. The result was that the beams and interiors of many large and stately structures, residences and public buildings in Great Britain have come from the forests of Nova Scotia. However, as the Minister of Supply and Services pointed out, in his region this high grading of resources took a very high toll. It was very bad for the general health of our forests. After this industry reached its peak in the late 1800s replanting and other steps to repair the quality and the extent of our forests have never to this day been adequately undertaken.

Also, there has been a dramatic change from a sawlog to a pulpwood type of economy. It has been only in the last 25 years that any significant amount of reforestation has been undertaken. I want to again pay tribute to K. C. Irving for what he has done in the Province of New Brunswick and to mention that some of the large forest companies in Nova Scotia have come to a belated realization that they have to put something back in, that they have to take part in reforestation and make certain that the kinds of trees that are planted are of good quality.

At the present time there has to be, as other speakers have said, a great deal of work undertaken to improve the forestry sector. I want to speak primarily about eastern Canada. Various diseases affecting both hard and soft woods have caused great losses to Nova Scotia. Our beech, birch and now our elm have been affected. Logging practices in recent years have been abominable. Heavy equipment has been taken in and the land has been scarred. New growth has been destroyed, which has led to erosion and very severe damage to the environment. Small streams are clogged with brush and silt. The situation has become very offensive to people who care about forestry and the environment.

I believe that one of the things that both the Nova Scotia Government and the federal Government can do is to encourage the retention and expansion by private land owners of the small woodlot holdings they have. This, as I mentioned earlier, is part of the historical pattern that characterized our Province. Much can be done to encourage such ownership. Better forest management and marketing opportunities for small land owners can be facilitated, not by Government interference or by the use of a lot of subsidies, but by more education and assistance in marketing pulp and lumber from small producers.

Pulp companies and large processors have no objection to exporting the end result of what they produce. For some reason, and I suppose it is natural, they would like to have a captive source of supply. They are very reluctant to see small producers get involved, as they used to do, in exporting lumber and even pulp to other countries. The balance of payments and the general business procedures affecting the best interest of this country should be looked at. The federal Government together with the provincial Government should look at some of the captive supply situations that exist in some of the markets in eastern Canada. The federal Government can participate, not only in cost sharing projects and the supplying of expertise but, as was said earlier by my friend, the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) in a question to the Minister, by imaginative taxation policies that provide shelters and opportunities for long-term development in forestry resources under private ownership.

It is also in the interest of the Government of Nova Scotia in considering forestry regulations, and this true of other Provinces I am sure, to refrain from allowing municipalities to pass regulations and bylaws which will affect the proper use and long-term planning of both agriculture and forestry properties. Governments themselves have caused problems because large areas of land have been wasted by highways and power corridors and some large tracts of Crown land have not been utilized in accordance with good forest practices.

When Crown grants were the rule in Nova Scotia, land owners were not restricted to any significant extent and, for the most part, they used the land to its best advantage. Increasing limitations on the use of forest land, either for bureaucratic convenience or to further satisfy the interests of Governments which have become ever more intrusive and manipulative have, to a large extent, eroded the landowner's rights to the point where it is now an exaggeration to say that an owner can truly call himself a freeholder of property. Pretty soon he will simply be a tenant subject to the arbitrary interference of either the municipal or provincial Governments.

I repeat that the best thing that could happen for the encouragement of forestry and for the highest and best use of forest lands in the Province of Nova Scotia would be more opportunities for the purchase of small tracts of Crown land by Nova Scotians, or indeed by Canadians or even people from other countries who wish to have the satisfaction of owning a piece of our Province and treating it properly, using proper practices of silviculture and forest management. Anyone who has a sincere interest in owning a few acres of forest land will treat it properly.

I have always been against the practice that has grown up in recent years of Governments acquiring large tracts of land. As one would really not expect, Governments made it very difficult for its own people to obtain access to it for the leasing of a few acres for firewood harvesting, or for building a cottage by a lake or stream. I cannot understand why the Government did not learn and does not continue to profit from the past experience, because people who truly care about forestry are not liable to be careless with matches. They are not liable to cut down all their trees. In fact, history has shown that people who own their own land are far more careful of it and take far better care of it than do people who lease timber rights from the Government and leave a wasteland behind them by clear cutting the land. In many cases, that land would have been better off if it had been burned rather than logged in the way that I have described.

It has been said that people who plant trees do not think of themselves. Certainly the long-term nature of forestry cannot be over-emphasized. The original stands of high quality timber, the black spruce and white pine, oak and ash, and other original growth that once stood in the forests of Nova Scotia, must be reseeded or replanted now. I sometimes think that the ravages of the spruce budworm might have been Mother Nature's way of removing a very undesirable and inferior type of growth that perhaps grew up simply because of an accident of history.

Your Honour probably does not know that by the turn of the century, there were over 60,000 small farms in the Province of Nova Scotia. When the industrial expansion in the United States began to accelerate, the decendants of the people who had labouriously cleared that land, sometimes by hand, decided that their fortunes would be improved if they went to Chicago, Boston or Los Angeles to work. As a result, when they left, nature quickly reclaimed all of those lands that were so labouriously cleared. What grew up, however, was not the original growth but generally a mixture of alder bushes and what we call cat spruce, as well as wild cherry and other waste trees.

This provides another possible area of research which could benefit areas like Nova Scotia where some of the land is marginal for farming in any event, but this land has demonstrated that it can grow good forests. I believe that in some cases, soils of this type, besides being planted with the original forest, could be planted with fast growing trees like aspen which would provide a ready source of wood alcohol or ethanol. Other countries have started to do this. Brazil is one of them. There is no reason why, with some imagination, parts of the land of eastern Canada could not in effect be re-ruralized by the growth of certain types of fast growing trees that could quickly produce ethanol. Certainly that would be a far better and higher use of the land than allowing it to lie fallow as it is now in some cases.

Another thing that I would like to see the federal and provincial Governments do, Mr. Speaker, is to become more interested in the highest and best use of timber. I see that my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker. Too often I have seen the scarce good timber that still remains in Nova Scotia ground up for pulp instead of converted into lumber which is a much more worth-while resource.

In any event, it is pretty obvious that with our traditions and respect for the ownership of land and in appreciation for what forestry meant to us in our early years as a Province and, before that, as a successful colony, we should be very conscious of the help that the federal Government can be to us. As a joint project, we should all work together so that both Governments can do their share, not by making subsidies available, not by being intrusive, but by providing expertise in research, scientific development and marketing for this industry.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I direct a short question to the Hon. Member which is again on the theme that I had raised before. In the Hon. Member's Province and, of course, in the adjoining Province of New Brunswick, there are many native people, and of course this particular resource is of great interest to them. In my own area there are large bands such as the Nimpkish people of Alert Bay, the Helltsuk people of Bella Bella, the Kitasoo people of Klemtu, the Nuxalli people of Bella Coola, the Mowachaht people of Gold River and Sechelt, the Sliammon people of Powell River, and each one of these particular groups of people either has access to large reserves of timber or they actually have band timber available. Yet there are no Government programs that provide any meaningful assistance to allow these people to develop those resources, balance out and strengthen and diversify their economy.

It is my understanding that the same limitation exists in the region of the country for which the Hon. Member was putting forward a case on development of the forest industry. I would ask why he has not chosen to stress this very important, albeit small, area of forestry development and what he would be prepared to do as an individual to bring this case forward quickly with the Government to try to make sure that native people are in fact given access to forest industry in a meaningful way.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent question. I am pleased to say to my colleague that I can see no reason why, in the Province of Nova Scotia, some of the Crown lands which are under provincial ownership could not be made available to some of the native people who, as he knows, are mostly Micmac. In my own constituency, there is a small band which is desperately in need of access to some timber. I think that it is an excellent initiative.

If there was ever a case for an affirmative action program in terms of giving native people a chance to take part in the lands and forest industry where they have a special feel for the forest and nature or for giving them access to Crown lands, I think that this is a valid one. It is very tough to run an equal opportunity program and an affirmative action program at the same time, and I am pretty sceptical of some of them, but this is one affirmative action program that I would support. From time to time, I have spoken to the Government of Nova Scotia about it.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I think that this is an interesting bit of progress made by Members of the House. I heard the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) and several Members of the Opposition speak on this. I know where this Party stands but I wonder if the previous speaker, whose inclination seems to be as clear as my own, would be prepared to join with this Party and press the Minister of Supply and Services, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) to develop quickly, before the House adjourns, a specific program to aid our native people with access to and the development of their forest resources.

• (1620)

I wonder, also if it would be possible for the three groups in the House to move on that question. Would the Hon. Member be prepared to consult and work toward that goal before we rise in June?

Mr. MacKay: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I realize that the Hon. Member has a sincere interest in this, but he should not be giving the impression that only he and his Party favour such an initiative. I would be very pleased to join with him.

[Translation]

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I intend to do part of my speech in French, to show Francophones that there are a few Newfoundlanders who realize that French is more important in Canada than Chinese.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, another very important reason is that when my fellow Newfoundlander, my dear friend the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), is chosen as the new Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, he will need someone who can understand French, translate it into English and then translate the English into Newfie!

[English]

I begin my few remarks without wanting to disturb my good friend, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington). For the information of the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) I simply said that I fully support the candidacy of my compatriot and dear friend, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I recognize that he will have many needs once he becomes, as he surely will, the Tory Leader.

I want to begin by saying how I commend the Opposition for choosing forestry for today's debate. Just when I was about to lose completely all my confidence in the Official Opposition, it came through with something sensible. I suppose that is exactly what we can expect from the eminently sensible Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle).

Forestry is big business in the Province which I represent. I grew up a couple of miles from a pulp mill and a dozen miles from the giant paper mill at Grand Falls. It is now owned and operated by Abitibi but was formerly known as the Anglo Newfoundland Development Company in the great days of British imperialism. I worked for AND for two weeks as a woodcutter in the days before chainsaws. I might say that my career was cut a little short. I was living in camp and therefore the cost of my board and lodging was deducted from my wages. At the end of the first pay period I discovered that I owed money to the company, so I concluded very quickly that my destiny was elsewhere than in the forest industry.

An Hon. Member: You should have worked harder.

An Hon. Member: That is free enterprise.

Mr. Simmons: They are a live bunch opposite today, Mr. Speaker. That is a sign of a restful weekend. They would be more tired if they visited their constituencies more often and came back here for a rest.

The electoral riding of Burin-St. George's—

Mr. McDermid: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: That is on the south shore, on the South Coast of Newfoundland, I say to my friend from Brampton-Georgetown. I am willing to wager, Mr. Speaker, that sometimes the Hon. Member does not talk; that there are actually times when he does not babble all the time.

In the riding that I represent, Burin-St. George's, forestry is a very important component in two particular parts of the riding, St. George's in the western part of the riding and Bay D'Espoir in the central part of the riding.

I take particular interest in the resolution set down by the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River. I would invite him to reflect on the wording of the resolution, particularly in light of the comments made in the House today by his colleagues, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). I thought those two gentlemen were careful to put some distance between themselves and the resolution. I thought they were wise to demonstrate that they really did not support the strong condemnation in the wording of the resolution. I was encouraged to hear from them and from the Hon.

Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) that not all Government initiatives in the forest industry are wrong. Those Hon. Members voiced a feeling that is widespread in the forestry sector.

The federal Government's contribution to a healthy forest industry in this country has been and continues to be impressive. Under the leadership of the Minister of the Environment and the Assistant Deputy Minister for the Canadian Forestry Service, Mr. Les Reed, we have made great strides in the last few years in lending adequate and appropriate support to the forest industry.

I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich. He continues to confuse me somewhat, not by his brilliance, although he has that and is unquestionably a very able man, but by the inconsistency he brings to the debate. Usually I hear him lamenting what in his view is the considerable extent of Government intervention in private enterprise. Today, however, he makes a case, and a very good case, for even more intervention. I think particularly of his comments relating to reforestation. He talks rather passionately about the need for more involvement of Government in that particular area. That is not consistent with his other remarks about Government involvement. I am pleased to see that in this particular area he recognizes that if our forests are to be properly conserved and regenerated, continued and active federal Government involvement will be required.

I want to draw the attention of the House to a number of important initiatives taken by the Government. Perhaps the highest profile is enjoyed by the forestry agreements between the Government of Canada and the several Provinces. These agreements are now in place and most of them will shortly come up for renegotiation. I have no doubt that the Government's commitment in that particular area will continue. Over a five-year period under these agreements the Government's commitment is in the order of $750 million.

The Minister of Supply and Services referred to the water bombers, the CL-215, which represent another $150 million federal money. I could mention the job-creation activities in the order of $200 million, the forestry school for $15 million, research and development for $5.5 million, the initiative in the Gaspe which is another $20 million. With those figures I have enumerated amounts which total about $1.25 billion. It is important to keep the mandate of the federal Government in mind in this particular respect.

It is important to keep in mind that almost any initiative which the federal Government takes in the forestry area has to be hand in glove with those of the provincial Governments. Having said that, I stress that the federal Government does have important responsibilities in this sector in so far as regional development is concerned, as well as employment growth, export development and its impact on balance of payments. The whole research and development area as it relates to forestry is one in which the Government must continue to show new leadership.

I suppose if one were to state concisely the over-all mandate and responsibility of the federal Government in this area, it would be in terms of the wise use and conservation of the renewable resources of the forestry industry. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the most important way in which Canada can become more competitive in this sector is with an abundant supply of high quality timber at an economical price. The forest renewal policy of the Government is designed to offset threatened timber supply problems and thereby, in the long run, to reduce costs.

There is more to the forest sector, Mr. Speaker, than simply planting seedlings and tending the new crops. There is a human resources program already implemented by this Government which provides for high quality manpower. Some of the components of that particular human resources program include summer jobs for 300 forestry school students, graduate scholarships for 50 Canada forestry scholars every year, grants to forestry schools for visiting scholars and research contracts, and upgrading of the R and D scientific staff in the Canadian Forestry Service. More than $16 million have been committed by this Government to this program over a four-year period.

Let us take a look now at the expansion of the research and development program in the Canadian Forestry Service. For the year 1983-84, a commitment of $5.5 million has been made to that program. In addition, new and expanded research buildings will soon be started in Victoria, British Columbia, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, Quebec City and Fredericton, New Brunswick. The reason for proceeding first with high quality manpower and research capacity is that we can better field forestry and make our scarce forest renewal dollars stretch even further if we concentrate on those priorities at the outset.

I would like to speak for a moment on another issue which is important in any discussion of forestry and the forestry industry in Canada, and that is the United States countervailing duty threat against Canada's lumber, and this Government's role in successfully countering that particular threat. It has been 20 years, Mr. Speaker, since Canada has faced such an ominous threat to its export trade as the U.S. countervail action against our soft wood lumber. Fortunately, the countervail threat may now be distinguished, at least put behind us for a moment.

It has been alleged that the Government of Canada has failed to carry out its share of the responsibility for fighting the U.S. industry's pressure. The tension arose because of the severe slump in lumber markets world-wide, but especially in U.S. residential construction which was brought on by high interest rates. Normally, the U.S. customers are pleading for Canadian supplies because they themselves cannot produce more than 60 per cent to 70 per cent of their soft wood lumber requirements in a normal market. Fortunately, the Canadians were supported by the National Association of Homebuilders, the North American Wholesale Lumber Dealers' Association, the International Woodworkers of America, and by many others. Without taking you, Mr. Speaker, through the details of our repsonse to that countervail action, I believe it is important to record that the issue was successfully fought because all concerned recognized the wisdom of our case and the folly of the U.S. private enterprise case in his particular issue.

I would like to comment briefly on the criticism which was aimed at the federal Government for refusing to pay a part of the cost. First of all, the action by the U.S. people did not involve a charge by the U.S. administration, but rather by a small segment of the U.S. lumber industry. It is traditional that industry bear the main burden of defence, whether it is with respect to steel, potatoes or some other product, in this case, forest products. Second, the Canadian soft wood lumber committee had the expertise to conduct its own defence, and did so with the collaboration of the several Governments involved, the federal Government of Canada and the provincial Governments which were directly affected by this countervail threat.

Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding that rather ominous threat to which I have made brief reference, the forestry relations between Canada and the United States have been quite positive and, I believe, mutually supportive over many years. One could take a number of examples. Perhaps the first which comes to mind is the CANUSA agreement, the Canada-U.S. Forestry Agreement, which in particular embraces a co-operative research effort on the spruce budworm. It is a program from which we have seen some very positive results and some cost-saving benefit to Canada and, I am sure, to the United States. I could mention the collaborative initiative of fire suppression between the two countries. That agreement was signed last year by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) and Secretary Black of the U.S.

For many years there had been some exchange of water bomber aircraft. Much of this was done under rather awkward and hasty arrangements. However, now we have formalized those arrangements and put them in place to facilitate a rapid response to forest fire emergencies, particularly in those areas which are fairly near our border.

I could mention, as another example of U.S.-Canadian co-operation in this area, the supply-demand working group. The U.S. and Canadian Forestry Services are now developing working groups on timber supply and forest products demand. In the area of investment capital, there have been good signs of collaboration. The flow of forest industry capital funds has moved between Canada and the United States with relative freedom. As a matter of interest, foreign ownership of Canada's forest products manufacturing facilities has declined over the past 10 to 15 years from 35 per cent to something less tahn 25 per cent during that period. That change has occurred without any public controversy.

I could mention the area of wood promotion as another example of the kind of co-operation which exists between the two countries, co-operation which is to our mutual benefit. The lumber producers in Canada and the U.S. have worked closely together over the past 15 years in joint trade promotion activities. The National Forest Products Association of Washington derives one quarter of its annual budget for product acceptance from Canadian lumber producers. The American Wook Council secures 10 per cent of its budget from Canada. In this way, we work together as two countries to counter the threat of competing materials and to improve design standards. The forestry relations which I have described briefly give ample evidence of how closely our two countries are working together at the official level to the mutual benefit of all concerned.

There are many other issues, Mr. Speaker, but I see my time has expired.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members wishing to rise to ask questions?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—FOREST INDUSTRY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Oberle:

That this House condemns the Government for its neglect of Canada's forests and its indifference to the threat posed to Canada's forests and forest industries by pests, fire, pollution and foreign competition, and calls upon the Government to stimulate the research needed to promote superior growth and diversify export products, and acknowledge its responsibility to protect the Canadian environment and the millions of Canadians whose livelihood depends upon Canada's forest resources.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Hon. Member on the Government side of the House, who was at one time, I believe, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister concerned with this issue. Given the fact his speech did not include reference to native people and their access to the forest industry, although he rattled off a number of figures indicating employment opportunities, can he tell the House how many of the people hired through the initiatives he mentioned have been native people? How many of the research facilities will be targeted toward the natives to aid them in the economic development of native reserves? What kind of native employment targets has the Government developed in the forest industry?

• (1640)

Given the fact that a number of people in this House have indicated their support today for immediate initiatives to make sure that the native peoples have access to the forest resource, would he be willing to support, in co-operation with other Members here and in his own Party, access by native people to the forest resource for the development of something like a native forest development corporation? Or perhaps he would support affirmative action so that companies who receive benefits from the federal Government, such as Crown Zellerbach, MacMillan-Bloedel and others, hire native people on an affirmative action basis. Would he lend his support to training programs being established for young native people to get into the industry, whether it is in the Canadian Forestry Service, private companies or through Employment and Immigration sponsored programs?

Can the Hon. Member indicate whether or not he is prepared to try to work with other Members of the House to foster co-operation between the Department of the Environment and the Department of Indian Affairs to develop and execute effective programs so as to make native involvement in the forest industry in Canada a reality?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) for the question. I can support any initiative at the federal Government level which would give fair access to native people to the industry. I can identify with much of the spirit of the question the Hon. Member has put. I have in my own riding an important native community, that of Conne River, on the South Coast of Newfoundland.

Mr. Oberle: Are they Indian?

Mr. Simmons: Yes, they are Micmac Indians, for the benefit of my friend, the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Tell your Minister.

Mr. Simmons: The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) well understands that they are Micmac people. He has given much of his time on a priority basis to seeing that $1 million of federal funding flows to the people of Conne River, despite a rather deliberate and long-standing procrastination by the Hon. Member's political friends, the Tory Government of Newfoundland, who for 22 months blocked that money from going to that community at some considerable pain, discomfort and inconvenience to the native people of Conne River. I am glad he mentioned my good friend, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, because the Minister is the reason why I do not have any fear that this Government will continue to address the problem of fair access for native people to various programs.

I started to say a moment ago, before the interjection, Mr. Speaker, that the spirit of the question from the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River is one with which I can identify. But I am a little surprised he feels the need to ask the question because if he looked at the policy of this Government, whether it is in Indian and Northern Affairs, Employment and Immigration or other areas, he would see that what he is asking is reflected consistently in the approach of this Government to the expenditure of funds and employment policies.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the very reason I asked the question today is that, unfortunately and for whatever reason, it has not been part of the speeches of some Members of this House. It has not been part of the priorities and planning of this Government. What I suggested, and what other Members have recognized and said today, is that they are willing to commit themselves to try, before this House rises, to put constructive proposals to the Government. I outlined five things that I felt would work. I asked the Member whether or not he would be prepared to work with other Members of this House in a non-partisan way to try to improve the access of native people to the forest industry. It is a fact that since the turn of the century native people have suffered upwards of 90 per cent unemployment. In my area they are dependent on a sole resource, the fishing industry. Without finding fault, laying blame or going back to the past, I would like to see this House look forward to the future, and would the Hon. Member be prepared to offer his services in a non-partisan way to try to achieve this before the House rises?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I thought I answered that question in passing earlier. I said I could give my support to any initiative which ensures fair access by native people to employment and other programs underwritten by the public Treasury. That would certainly include working in a non-partisan fashion, as I am known to do on all occasions with the gentleman from Comox-Powell River, my good friends in the Tory Party—

Mr. Malone: Name one.

Mr. Simmons: —and my equally good friends in the NDP. By all means, Mr. Speaker, I would name many, but I would not want to give them an unfair advantage in the leadership race by so doing.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to ask the Minister a question, but as my friend opposite is the spokesman for the Government I will ask him about his private opinion of the Canadair water bomber. I concede it may have a limited use in some areas, but coming as he does from Newfoundland where it is not always possible to find suitable lakes, would he not agree that helicopters are also a very useful way to fight forest fires, sometimes more so than these, some say, obsolete water bombers? Would he support a representation to his colleague, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) to give the armed services a role in fighting forest fires as a part of their flight training?

Mr. Simmons: First of all, in relation to the preamble of the Hon. Member for Central Nova, I am not a spokesman for the Government. I am happy to support the Government because of the excellence of its policies but I am not a spokesman for the Government.

Having said that, he invited me to give my private opinion. That I can do very quickly because the technology of the two types of equipment is something I am not very well versed in. I can tell him, though, that our experience in Newfoundland with water bombers has been quite a happy one. We can point to a number of otherwise very grave incidents which have been avoided because we have had those water bombers available. As the Hon. Member knows, they have been used in Newfoundland for many, many years. How their capabilities compare with those of the helicopters he mentioned I have no idea because I am not informed on the respective technology involved.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to enter the debate, but before getting into the technical matters before us I should like to point out that there is a person in this House who has probably done more for forestry in Canada in the last couple of years than any Member sitting in the House, and that is the Deputy Minister, Les Reed, who is fortunately with us in the Gallery today. I am sure he is very interested in hearing the debate today.

Looking specifically at the motion before us which was put forward by my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), there are a couple of things I would like to raise because they have been put in there for very obvious reasons and they raise some concerns with me. He says in his motion that the House condemns the Government for its neglect of Canada's forest. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that the Government of Canada controls only 1 per cent of the forests in Canada, some 92 per cent falling within the provincial domain and some 7 per cent being in private hands.

• (1650)

I have some difficulty with another point raised by the Hon. Member, and I am sure he will be able to clarify it in the question period. It is in relation to a constitutional point which he raises toward the end of the motion which states:

—acknowledge its responsibility to protect the Canadian environment—

I recognize that the federal Government has a certain responsibility, but it is certainly my understanding that the domain of the Provinces includes the environment. We can deal with that in terms of acid rain and so on. I am sure he meant it in that light.

I certainly agree with the part of the motion which calls on the Government to stimulate research massively. More research is a crying need and, as we know from the committee and the excellent work done by Mr. Reed, it is an area where Canada has fallen drastically behind. It is an issue we must deal with very quickly.

While I agree with the theme of the motion, I have found difficulty with it after having gone to the Parliamentary Library to read a copy of the 1979 budget of the Hon. Member and his Party. The only references to forestry that are even close are to sparkling wine and pickles. The word "forestry" does not even appear in the entire Tory budget of 1979. Therefore, it is evident that in recent times the Tories have not held forestry in as high esteem as pickles and sparkling wine.

Let me talk about British Columbia for a moment, a Province which is of equal importance to myself and to the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River. I am concerned about the provincial sphere there where, in recent years, a fund has been set up to deal with silviculture and replanting. I believe there was approximately $230 million in that fund which was gathered from the forest companies. Unfortunately, it has all been spent on the big gas bag in Vancouver, B.C. Place, and northeast coal. Unfortunately for us and future generations of Canadians, and British Columbians, those hundreds of millions of dollars which should be going toward future forests have disappeared into other priorities of Mr. Bennett's Party, the copatriot party of my hon. friend for Prince George-Peace River.

I have another concern which I am sure the Tories will deal with. That concern is log export. During the last number of years it has reached epidemic proportions in British Columbia. We now see entire pages of logs for sale from companies such as Standing Green, Hemlock, Balsam, Spruce, Cypress and others, by companies such as Macblo, Canadian Overseas and Crown Zellerbach. They are all trying to sell off our future heritage.

A very excellent paper was written by the British Columbia local of the International Woodworkers of America. It concerns the number of jobs that will be lost by the year 2000 as a result of present levels of export. We are now looking at losing about 30,000 jobs by the year 2000 simply from the logs that are being exported now.

Let me quote from a recent article in the Vancouver Sun. It says:

> Shortage of Asian timber have also created a high demand for North American logs in the Far East but companies must prove the logs are surplus before they're approved for export. Shipments of uncut B.C. logs have jumped to 724,000 cubic metres during the first eight months of 1982, more than two per cent of the provincial harvest, compares with 591,000 cubic metres during the same period last year, about 1.5 per cent of the B.C. harvest.

I do not hear any Members from the Government side, the Tory Party or particularly from the Social Credit Party trying to deal with that. It is a very real issue. While it is free enterprise and those logs can be sold now, the logs will go to Japan or Indonesia and the jobs are there instead of in Canada. I think this country and the Province of British Columbia must very soon adopt a policy of no raw log export, because those jobs are for ourselves and future Canadians.

Let me deal with a point which has been raised continuously during the debate today by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly). It is in relation to the very important matter of the high levels of non-involvement by native people in the forest sector, not only in B.C. but across Canada. I would have hoped that this motion would have included that, but I think that, through the solicitation and questions and very positive responses from the Official Opposition and the Government, we will see some new policies coming forward in Parliament. Perhaps in the next Speech from the Throne we will see some major steps taken in terms of accessing native people to the forest industry in terms of research and development jobs, forest tenure, training, affirmative action with existing corporations in the industry as well as direct industrial development for many of the small rural communities. Many of these communities are similar to those shared by my colleague from Comox-Powell River and other colleagues from British Columbia.

Let me deal with the Environment Canada publication entitled "Policy Statement: A Framework for Forest Renewal". This is a good document which was produced last fall in Ottawa. I believe it gives us an idea of the analysis of the federal Government about where the forest industry is going and what problems exist. It points out the following:

> The total value of shipments exceeded $23 billion in 1981. Forest products make up one-seventh of all manufactured goods in Canada. The share runs as high as 30 percent in New Brunswick and 50 per cent in British Columbia. Forest industry exports reached $13 billion in 1981, or 16 percent of the total. The forest industry and its employees paid over $3 billion in taxes and resource revenues in 1979, of which 43 percent was federal and 57 percent provincial.

I will come back to those two figures in a moment when I get to the table in this document.

This document goes on to state that directly and indirectly this industry provides one million jobs in Canada. It goes on to say:

> As an employment generator among the primary resource sectors, the forest sector ranks first or second in 10 out of 16 economic regions in Atlantic Canada, in 8 of Quebec's 10 economic regions and in all 6 of those of Ontario. In British Columbia the forest sector is first in 8 regions and second in only 2 where mining and smelting dominate.

I think it gives us some indication of the reason why this debate is so important. I was interested to note, after reviewing the last 10 or 15 years of debates in the House of Commons, that it is very rare that any forestry matter is raised in the House of Commons even though it is the largest industry in Canada. In terms of balance of trade and actual job creation, it far exceeds the petroleum sector and agriculture combined. Those are two subjects which are frequently debated in the House, but rarely is that kind of profile given to forestry or consideration given to the steps that should be taken with respect to the forest industry. These steps should be taken particularly by the Government and, as I pointed out, by new Governments in office when the word "forest" or "forestry" fail to appear anywhere in its budget.

Let me continue to read from the same document. It says:

> This sector has the potential to provide additional employment for approximately 100,000 workers, of which one-quarter could be in forest renewal. The potential also exists to double foreign exchange earnings, increase timber sale and tax revenues, and contribute to regional development aspirations.

It is quite clear that a signal is coming from the industry that it wants to double its revenue at a time in British Columbia, for example, when the forest service has indicated that we are very quickly approaching a 20-year falldown effect. If we continue to cut at present rates without some kind of very substantial thinning, silvicultural and replanting process, we will run out of trees and actually be forced in a little more than a decade from now to reduce cutting rather than increase it.

The paper makes some interesting points with respect to the timber supply situation. It states:

> In effect, we mined the virgin forests and gave too little thought to the future crop. Forestry is now in a critical transition stage where mining must give way to systematic forest renewal and harvesting.

I very much agree. I know the writer of those comments. I think they are very true and something which this House must deal with. It goes on to say:

> World demand for pulp and paper is expected to grow by 3 percent annually for the next 2 decades, whereas demand for lumber and other wood products should increase by about one percent annually. However, market opportunities mean little if timber supply cannot be augmented.
> The limits are in sight for premium softwood sawlogs—

We are aware of this, but British Columbia still exports three quarters of a million cunit of our No. 1 logs offshore. It does this knowing full well that an accurate and undisputed study conducted by the workers in the Province point out that it will mean the loss of 30,000 jobs. Yet nothing is done in British Columbia. I do not hear any federal Tory Members from British Columbia publicly saying that this kind of practice should be stopped.

The paper continues:

> —in many locations and supplies of larger, higher quality hardwood logs have been largely depleted. Pulpwood shortages are emerging in communities across the country. Only a fraction of our forests are being managed for sustained production, even today. In most cases the timber resource is renewable, both promptly and adequately, only if action is taken immediately following harvest or natural calamity.

That means that if a fire has gone through the area a replanting process should be undertaken immediately. If it is clearcut, no time should be wasted. As we know, literally hundreds of thousands of square kilometres in Canada that have been harvested since the turn of the century are sitting idle and not returning in the type of soft or hard wood that forest companies and various forest specialists expected they would. In early 1980, CCREM, which is the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers, endorsed a target. The target was a level of 210 million cubic metres by the year 2000, or approximately 40 per cent above the harvest in 1981. The point which we must consider is that with the present practices in Canada and the present rate of harvest with which we are involved, we will simply never be able to achieve the levels which have already been endorsed by Environment and Resource Ministers.

• (1700)

The report goes on to touch on three aspects. One involves forest renewal. That is something which the House must debate extensively. Another is closer utilization of the existing forest in terms of fibre supply, recycling and all the rest. That must be done very soon. There must also be better protection from fire, insects and disease. I think all Hon. Members of the House are aware of the fact that far more forest is lost to disease and fire than is actually harvested in this country.

Although the Government side has moved on a few water bombers and a few techniques here and there, there must be a really substantive change in forest policy, not only in terms of the kinds of equipment provided, but as well, rather than continuing to pursue monoculture in terms of the forest sector, we must go back to the diversified forest. This is important because of the long distance crowning effect of certain kinds of fires and the massive movement of certain kinds of pests. There are problems which simply have not been alleviated by chemical spraying. We must move very quickly to some kind of integrated pest management approach whereby we start studying, more intensively, the biological side of controlling pests. I know it is something the Canadian Forestry Service is considering. However, having suffered massive reduction in staff for 15 years, it will be a long process, as touched upon by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). In the last three years the problem has increased about 10 per cent. We need a massive increase in the availability of highly qualified technical forestry staff to deal with the questions involved in returning to a diversified forest, silviculture problems and pest control.

The report goes on to point out that current expenditures on forest renewal by senior Governments and industry are believed to be on the order of $300 million annually, but that an expected total annual expenditure of $650 million will be required by all parties simply to deal with the present problems. It breaks it into two parts. Basically, planting must be increased by about two and half times, from 200,000 hectares to 500,000 hectares, with genetically superior seedlings. In terms of silviculture treatment, weeding, spacing and fertilizing, that must be increased by a power of 400 per cent, from 100,000 hectares to 400,000 hectares annually. That involves a cost of $300 million.

An area in the report which gives me concern, which I am sure is shared by my friend, the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River, is that an expenditure of only $50 million per year is proposed in the report to deal with the backlog of idle forest land. That would bring in only about another 100,000 hectares a year. With the enormous backlog we have, I think Parliament must make a much stronger move in getting a base fund into our national budget to deal with the backlog problem.

Some Provinces, such as British Columbia, have been using their replanting and silviculture funds for other purposes. Before they are given any comparable funds from the federal Government for reforestation, they should be encouraged, through whatever means possible, to ensure that their own programs are in order. There should be at least 20-year plans operating, as has been recommended in another part of the report.

The concern which I believe stimulated today's debate comes from the table on page 5, where we see the federal involvement, which has in fact been zero for many years, going to $50 million last year, which was really a shift of DREE funds, only rising to $130 million by 1987 in terms of overall forestry, out of $650 million. Whereas the federal Government's involvement was 37 per cent last year, it means that by 1987 it would drop to 20 per cent, an effective drop of 50 per cent. However, those figures are somewhat difficult to deal with unless one takes them in their proper context. In 1980, for example, the federal and provincial Governments took about $3 billion in taxes directly and from resource revenue, of which 43 per cent went to the federal Government and 57 per cent went provincially.

A myriad of studies have been done, and it is evident that only five cents out of every dollar taxed by the federal Government from the forest sector, whether directly in taxes or from income taxes or resource revenue, has ever gone back into the forest sector. This is a hideous state of affairs, because we have learned from other studies that we are getting into a massive fall-down situation in terms of inadequate supplies of wood. Earlier today I raised this question with the Minister of the Environment, but I do not think his response hit the nail on the head. He tried to fudge around on the issue, saying that UIC Section 38 and DOE support are not included in the 1987 projections because all those agreements are yet to be negotiated.

The House should be considering putting a very substantial sum before the House in terms of a base funding, permanent and perpetual funding, basically receiving a good chunk. Rather than having a situation where five cents out of every dollar goes back to the forest sector, let us ensure that 50 per cent plus goes back in terms of research and development, replanting and silviculture, and in terms of an integrated approach to recycling, getting native people involved in the industry, and so on.

I note that I do not have much time left in which to speak, but I would like to touch upon a couple of points with regard to recycling, something which is not included in the motion. However, the House must consider the matter if we are to discuss coherently the problems in the forest sector. It is not only a matter of having a proper study but also of considering the problems now being created at landfill sites, basically as a result of wood fibres in various forms, whether they be paper bags, cardboard, boards or whatever. Following a thorough and balanced assessment, we should consider the feasibility, benefits and costs of using recycled fibre, not only in the pulp industry but also in terms of biomass for electrical production, heat production, and so on.

A few moments ago I mentioned the need to change our ideas from monoculture to a more diversified and mixed forest, not only to help reduce insect and fire outbreaks, but also so that we may more appropriately utilize our soils and forest lands.

There is an abundance of information I would like to put on the record, but I would like to make one final point taken from a recent forestry publication. It points out that of the 800,000 hectares of timber the industry harvests each year, a mere one quarter is artifically replanted or seeded. Given that, another one quarter or so will regenerate reasonably well on its own. The depressing sum is that only half of the cut forest each year has a prayer of one day returning. Added to that was the current rash of forest fires in 1980, the worst fire season in 50 years. The area burned was five times the area harvested.

Parliament has a big job and I think it is a non-partisan issue with which we should deal more effectively than not even mentioning it in the 1979 Tory budget or in terms of the paltry sums which have been allocated for far during this Parliament.

Mr. Huntington: I am very interested in the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) that this is such an important matter for the country and that it should be non-partisan, then jabbing in the statement at the beginning and end of his speech that there was nothing concerning it in the Tory budget. I will address that subject when I am given an opportunity to speak in the House.

I am also interested in the Hon. Member's condemnation of the exporting of whole logs from B.C. to Japan. I think I heard him properly. I would not want to be unjust. I would like to ask him if he is not aware that there are at least four categories, fallers, buckers, truckers, sawmill workers and longshoremen, involved in the forest industry out in B.C., and that when the market collapsed before cut lumber was out of our sawmills, not only were these sawmill workers out of work, but the fallers and buckers, the truckers and longshoremen were also suffering, and that many logs were cut and fallen, particularly up in the Squamish area, and they could not get to market unless they were taken to market and sold as logs. Is he against that type of activity? Is he against a market activity which keeps the fallers, the buckers, the truckers and the longshoremen at work?

Mr. Fulton: I am glad to have an opportunity to address those two questions. I hope the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) does have a copy of the 1979 budget. I have read it through and I would be interested in learning where forestry is referred to. On the second point, in terms of the export of raw logs, as I said, an abundance of studies have been conducted. The present escalating levels of raw log export from British Columbia will mean the actual loss of 30,000 jobs, right from fallers, buckers, haulers, loaders, shippers to the sawmill workers, that will all go down the tube because logs are being exported now. Those are No. 1 logs which are being exported.

• (1710)

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned that with logs being exported 30,000 jobs will be lost. I am suggesting 30,000 jobs would not be lost on the export of the logs. There is no market for them, yet those logs were fallen and lying in the bush. I suggest to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) that it is far better to have those other three categories at work and the harvest of logs that was lying on the ground shipped to markets which can use the logs than to let it all go to pot.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am not completely sure whether the Hon. Member for Capilano has all his facts straight. If he would look in some of the more recent copies of The Sun of Vancouver, I think he would see that most of the logs which are being offered for sale are standing green.

An Hon. Member: That would be a great research facility.

Mr. Fulton: I hear an Hon. Member saying that that would be a great research facility. It is the only place in which we find the offers for sale published. They are standing green. They are in the bush. They have not been cut down yet. If we had the wood being processed, either through a pulp mill or through a sawmill, we would have the thousands of jobs at the other end rather than just the front-end jobs.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). Sometimes it is unfortunate that we cannot call upon the people sitting in the Gallery. I would like to recognize the presence of Les Reed who has just left, thus I will not embarrass him. Had it been possible for Mr. Reed to participate in the debate, he would have probably said that my colleagues and I have had very serious discussions with the Minister and with departmental officials to do precisely what Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party are suggesting. Indian people throughout the country deserve a share of the economy which is generated by the forest. They should first be encouraged on their own reserves and then on public forest lands to develop their economies and start rebuilding their lives from there.

My question for the Hon. Member concerns the statistics which he quoted. He said that the federal Government owns only 1 per cent of forest lands in Canada. I can forgive his ignorance because it is probably a statistic which he read from the forestry department or in The Sun; that would explain it more. The fact is that federal lands include Indian lands throughout the country. Federal lands south of the 60th parallel exceed in geographic size the Province of Nova Scotia. Most of the Indian lands are heavily wooded, some with commercially viable timber. Federal lands also include parks. While we do not cut timber in parks, the woods in our parks are a very important social asset and of course require the very tender care and attention of the federal Government, no one else.

Going to the Territories, the Hon. Member is totally ignorant because there is all kinds of commercially viable timber in the Territories and in Yukon. Of course it is difficult to get to, but if we think a hundred years ahead, we will realize that there are all kinds of land which would be marginal for agriculture but could be planted today with sufficient foresight and forward planning.

I know that this is not so much a question, but from time to time the Hon. Member needs a little enlightenment, as do all Members in the NDP, so I thought I would take this opportunity to provide him with that short enlightenment.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am always glad to have an opportunity to respond to high-rolling, tough questions like that. My perception has always been that Yukon and the Northwest Territories are lands basically under their own control. I recognize that they are a federal jurisdiction. However, I was quoting from an excellent article, which I recommend the Hon. Member read by Roy McGregor who was the Ottawa editor of Today magazine. It reads:

> But not in Canada, where it has never been clear just who might hold over-all responsibility. The federal Government once laid claim to the forests, but by 1930 the Provinces had been given most of the control, and today the Provinces own approximately 92 per cent, private sources 7 per cent, and the federal Government a mere 1 per cent.

I agree with the Hon. Member on his earlier comment. I would sincerely like to see more involvement of native people in the industry. I was glad to hear the comments of other Hon. Members of the House who would also like to see that proceed because unemployment among native people in Canada is still tragically at about 90 per cent. Something very serious has to be done very soon.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I have another brief question. Would the Hon. Member for Skeena undertake, or should I do it myself, to enlighten the author of the article from which he quoted, because he is obviously as ignorant as he was?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) quite rightly pointed out that the volume of timber lost annually to disease and to pests exceeds by many times the volume of timber lost by forest fires. Several months ago when we discussed in the Chamber the Pesticide Act, a number of Members of the New Democratic Party said that we should cease and desist from the use of pesticides, especially those applied by air. If the position of the New Democratic Party is that we should not use pesticides, how are we supposed to control disease and pests in Canadian timber lands?

Mr. Fulton: I recommend that the Hon. Member read some of the studies which have been done on the chemical spraying program carried out in the Maritimes. It is now quite clear that the majority of that spraying has been quite useless. It simply has not stopped the ravages of the various species of pest which very quickly became reasonably immune to spraying. The Canadian Forest Services entered into a very interesting program which I support. Unfortunately, people such as the Hon. Member who asked the question would not be interested in learning anything about natural biological forms of pest control. There is a very interesting and important bit of work being done right now where a natural pest has been dropped and is being allowed to breed to take over some of the pests that are parasitizing forests in Canada.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I also would like to ask the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) a question. Has he ever heard a definition of economic viability of timber which excluded all consideration of the distances to market and the costs of transportation? I was absolutely astounded by the question and the apparent definition of the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) a few moments ago when he said that the Arctic was full of economically viable timber but that of course it was too far from the markets to be sold. Has the Hon. Member ever heard such a definition of economic viability? It leaves me absolutely flabbergasted.

Mr. Fulton: No, I have not, but I hope the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River does not have anything to do with writing forestry policy for the Tories.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see the motion before the House today. I do not agree with the negative aspects of the motion of the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), but I believe the topic is one that should be debated in the House of Commons in view of the importance of the forestry industry to Canada. Not only is it important to the entire country, but it is of special importance to northern Ontario, an area which I happen to represent. In fact, it employs some 70 per cent of the region's manufacturing work force throughout northern Ontario. Throughout the Province of Ontario, 160,000 jobs are provided directly and indirectly by the industry. In fact, 17 per cent of the nation's export trade or $14.8 billion was earned from the forestry industry in 1980. Indeed, throughout the country there are some 310,000 workers directly or indirectly engaged in that industry. I am told that there are some 300 communities with the forestry industry as their sole industry. We do not have to look very far to see that this industry is very important to our country. In fact, new capital and repair expenditures in 1981 from this industry were estimated to be $4.5 billion, representing some 20 per cent of new manufacturing investment. Therefore, this industry is very important to every Canadian It is important to note that many industries are contracting in job opportunities. I am told that, with the potential in this industry, if we put in place the reforestation, research and further expansion and development of this industry, we can create some 100,000 new jobs.

On the first weekend of February this year, the northern Ontario caucus sponsored a conference in Thunder Bay entitled "Focus on Forestry". The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) and Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) chaired that conference. Some six Cabinet Ministers and also northern Ontario Members from both sides of the House attended. We made a very intensive study of the whole forest industry. We have been hurting during the past year because of the economic slowdown in North America. However, we wanted to look at the immediate problems of the industry and at such things as research.

We had people attend from the Great Lakes Forest Research Laboratory in Sault Ste. Marie. We wanted to look at infrastructure and the needs of the future. We spent a great deal of time talking about reforestation. I chaired the subcommittee working on reforestation. A very important discussion took place there. I want to spend more time talking about that this afternoon.

As well, we talked about trade, transportation and other aspects of the forest industry. A number of important recommendations and representations will be coming forward to the Government from that conference. The discussions we had at that conference on reforestation was of particular importance. I am very conscious of it because during the past seven or eight years we have put in place throughout Canada a massive new pulp and paper and sawmill capacity.

In my own constituency of Algoma, historically at Blind River we had the largest white pine sawmill operation east of the Mississippi River. During the thirties, forties and early fifties, that sawmill could produce some 28 million boardfeet of lumber a year. It went above that on a few occasions, but that was the average amount of production. Some 700 or 800 people were involved in the manufacturing and forestry aspect of that operation. It was the largest in eastern Canada.

The Rural Development Incentives Act, put in place in 1969 and the pulp and paper agreement between the federal and provincial Governments offered incentives for the pulp and paper capacity. In Espanola in my constituency, there is a sawmill with a capacity of close to 100 million board feet a year. I am told that when it is completely developed, it will have a capacity of close to 128 million board feet a year. That is larger by at least 100 million board feet of lumber than the historically largest sawmill operation located at Blind River. At the same time, the capacity of the pulp and paper mill at Espanola will have its pulp capacity increased from 500 tons or 600 tons per day to 900 or 1000 tons per day.

Those two developments are in one little area of northern Ontario. These agreements are nation-wide. Clearly the demand for wood fibre has increased. In the sawmill operation example I gave, it has increased fivefold. These economies of scale that are being developed are good. We will be competitive with sawmills throughout the world.

The problem is developing the fibre. A few years ago I had the opportunity to make representation on behalf of a small sawmill operator to the Deputy Minister of Natural Resources in Toronto. When I told him that this small operator wanted greater limits to operate his sawmill, his reply was "Well, we have really gone to the last row of hills". That is true of the whole forest industry. There are no new areas to cut. We have to grow new fibre. We have to stop mining our forests and start farming them on a renewable basis. One instrument for doing that will be the forest management agreements being put in place by many of the provincial Governments.

Ontario has put in place a forest management agreement program. Since 1979 six companies are not only cutting the fibre but are carrying out a regeneration of the fibre. This makes good sense. Obviously there is a public interest in seeing additional fibre grown. However, there is an intense interest in that for the individual company, which in many cases has spent hundreds of millions of dollars on pulp and paper and sawmill capacity. By having in place these forest management agreements, it is in their own interest to grow the fibre that will be needed in the years ahead. Under the Ontario arrangement, they will carry out silviculture treatment, road construction, maintenance and the operation of forest limits. It is a 20-year agreement, renewable on a five-year basis.

There are six companies with 131,000 acres of land that have signed these agreements. One is Eddy Forest Products in Espanola. In 1981 it planted 300,000 trees, in 1982 1.6 million trees and in 1983 it will be planting 2 million trees. By 1986 it plans to plant 8 million trees. The company is well ahead of schedule. This kind of agreement is important.

During the last five years, the federal Government has had an important forestry agreement with the Provinces for carrying out regeneration, enhanced forest management, acceleration of reforestation and the creation of employment opportunities. That $82 million program was for construction of forest access roads. When you put in a road, you not only provide an opportunity for harvesting the forest, but you provide an opportunity for management, fertilization, fertilizing the forest for forest fire protection, insect control, and ultimately the use of those in society for leisure, recreation and so on. The forest management agreement between the federal and provincial Governments provides for a nursery expansion program and $11.5 million for planting stock. As well, there is $4.7 million for research and assessment, $2.4 million for silviculture camps and $1.1 million for soil survey. That agreement will come to an end a year from now. It is essential that the two levels of Government put in place a new forest management agreement to reach the objective of the Minister's statement last fall. It was to increase production of wood fibre by 40 per cent over the next decade or so, and that will have to be achieved mostly by forest regeneration.

I want to comment on the concern the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) has about the question of native employment. My own constituency has, I think, the second largest Indian band member population in the Ontario region. There has been a very extensive program going on this past year under Section 38 in which $1.121 million has been spent under the Section 38 Job Creation Program on six reserves in my constituency which will be providing 2,702 work-weeks of employment. I think that there are six reserves in my constituency which have sawmills located on them and a number of sawmill operations which are close by.

This is not to say that there is not room for greater opportunity in native employment. Of course, there again the problem of shortage of fibre is faced. Many Indian bands have cut over their existing fibre, and so this Section 38 of the forestry program will provide an opportunity not only for improving these woodlot stands but likewise for planting of seedlings this year. This program is a co-operative effort between the Canadian Forestry Service and the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission.

It seems to me that at the Forestry Conference in Thunder Bay, one of the most progressive arrangements that I heard spoken of was that one of the Indian bands had their own forestry management agreement with the Ontario Government and were developing and providing wood fibre for sawmills in the area. It seems to me that there should be an opportunity for that to happen in other areas where Indian bands do not have adequate fibre on their own reserve lands. These bands should have the opportunity to opt into those forestry management agreements which would allow them to operate the license and sell to the operator of the pulp and paper mill or sawmill in their area, unless, of course, they have their own sawmill or pulp operation. It seems to me that there is a real opportunity there.

The proposal to increase employment by 100,000 people, much of it in reforestation, obviously offers a real opportunity. That is not to say that many native people do not already work in pulp and paper and sawmill operations throughout many areas of northern Ontario, but as the Hon. Member has indicated, the unemployment rate on many reserves is much higher than it is off the reserves. So this clearly provides an opportunity that we must expand upon. On several reserves in my own constituency, though, I have seen that the problem is that the limits put on the reserves tend to have been cut over. There must greater reforestation for the long haul.

It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that these forest management agreements will have to provide for a number of things if we are to increase the long-term need of greater fibre for the forest products industry. The proposal of the Minister of Forest Resources and Development suggests that spending by Government and industry on reforestation should increase by $300 million to $650 million per year by 1987, that long-term agreements should contain forest management agreements between the private sector and the provincial Government involved, that there should be a provision for transfer of technology, that there should be a provision for intensive forestry and an increase in the input of the provincial Government and the private sector, and that there should clearly be a greater development of private woodlots.

I was interested to hear the announcement of the Special Recovery Capital Projects because I have mentioned the importance of the Great Lakes Forest Research Laboratory in Sault Ste. Marie. That announcement, which was made a couple of weeks ago, in fact included provision for a $13 million expansion and upgrading of the Great Lakes Forest Research Laboratory which serves the Ontario region. It is interesting to note that likewise in other regions $22.5 million was allocated for a new laboratory in Fredricton, $14 million for expansion and upgrading of the facilities of the Pacific Forest Research Centre in Victoria, $10 million for expansion and upgrading of the Laurentian Forest Research Centre in Quebec, as well as $10.5 million contribution for the construction of a forest ranger school on the site of the Maritimes Forest Research Complex at Fredricton. This represents a very significant commitment by the federal Government, a commitment of some $60 million to these major forestry facilities for research. The federal Government, of course, has a special responsibility in research.

The importance of the purchase of the CL-215 water bombers has been mentioned. That purchase is important not only to keep Canadair viable but it is important to Provinces like Ontario, and especially the northern Ontario region. Much of that activity is based in the City of Sault Ste. Marie and will play an important role in preserving our forests.

It is interesting to note that the Canadair water bomber agreement provides not only for the federal Government to purchase some 20 water bombers, but I believe that it provides for the Provinces to purchase 16 water bombers on a reciprocal basis. If the federal Government spends money on water bomber fleets, the Provinces will do likewise. Similarly, the production of those water bombers probably becomes more economically viable because the agreement offers the opportunity for construction of water bombers for the overseas market. I believe that the announcement indicated that some 20 additional water bombers would be allocated for that. We are looking at a pretty massive project for Canada. It is a project in which I have a special interest because the sub-contractor who is to paint those water bombers is in my constituency of Algoma in northern Ontario. Even though the contract will go to Canadair in Montreal, the spin-off benefits will affect other parts of the country, including that painting subcontract which will help an aerospace facility in northern Ontario.

I would just like to review the Government's role in the establishment of the nation-wide forest fire intelligence and information system which will provide fire control agencies with added water bombing capacity and the opportunity to develop fire management systems to increase the effectiveness of provincial forest fire control operations. This program to which the federal Government is contributing, is centred in Winnipeg and will be a co-operative effort. It is typical of the way that the federal Government is recognizing its responsibility nation-wide, not only in silviculture research but in forest fire prevention and the whole gamut of the forestry industry. The Government is meeting that challenge for the future because of the tremendous importance this industry holds for every Canadian and especially those of us in the resource producing areas.

• (1740)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Do Hon. Members have any questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington).

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I think I just have enough time to say what I want to. The problem we are debating today is not new. I compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) on the motion because he has brought to our attention once again the serious need for co-operation between the federal level of Government and the provincial level of Government.

The same cry was heard in 1925 when C. D. Howe addressed the Royal Canadian Institute saying:

> Taking the Dominion as a whole, forestry is much in the same condition as that which Mark Twain once described with reference to the weather: 'Everybody talks about it and nobody does anything about it.'

I think that is why we are debating this Opposition motion today. Canadian forests are a facade. They look plentiful and nourished from the view of an airplane, but in reality they are an asset we are going to lose very quickly if we do not act now.

It is interesting that he was saying this in 1925. As the Hon.. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) keeps telling us, the longer he stays around the more things remain the same. The Government, which has been in power for a long time, really has not addressed this very serious national resource nor has it entered into co-operation with the Provinces to make sure that the total tax resource of the country is used wisely to enable the industry to recover from the position of being overharvested and undernourished.

We may ask why forestry is so important to us. Directly and indirectly it provides one out of every ten jobs in Canada; it provides jobs for 13 per cent of all people employed in manufacturing; it generates over $1 billion in tax revenue for the federal Government; it provides $1 billion in tax revenue for the provincial Governments; forest products exports total $9 billion and account for 18 per cent of all Canadian exports. This one industry contributes more to the federal economy than fishing, mining, fuels and agriculture combined.

Three hundred communities in this country depend on the health and well-being of our forest industries. Canada ranks first in the world in exports, second in forested area and third in forest products. Trees cover 44 per cent of Canada; 4.4 million square kilometres of which are in forest and half of this is harvestable. This is a very serious factor in our timber industry today. I agree with the forecasters who say that in the next 20 years, over 100,000 jobs will depend upon the initiatives we take today. The new Assistant Deputy Minister at the Canadian Forestry Service says that he believes that an immediate, massive and sustained reforestation program can avoid the imminent crisis in the forests. I should like to think that Members of all Parties in the House are prepared to assist him with the muscle, the energy and political pressure he needs to meet his objectives.

Forestry industry consultants, Ted Fellows, says that for at least the next 20 years we will not be able to develop our timber industry as fast as we could have if we had paid more attention to forestry 20 years ago or if we had heard the words of C. D. Howe back in 1925. We have to start immediately and plant like crazy with the best genetic and proved stock that we have. There are a lot of ifs, even if the industry is to start to take a more far-sighted view of the resource base.

It is interesting that we have harvested some 800,000 hectares and replanted only 200,000 hectares while 400,000 hectares have received no regeneration. British Columbia accounts for one third of the world's soft wood lumber exports. There is a world shortage of soft wood fibre. We have to put that into perspective and I hope I will be able to comment on it before I end my speech. About one half of every dollar earned in British Columbia stems from forestry and accounts for 42 per cent of total manufactured shipments from that Province.

I will take a risk and say that some of my best friends are foresters. I have travelled the coast. I love the coast and I love the mountains and I love the wilds, but I have seen some terribly stupid things going on out there. I have seen crews of university students hired on special summer programs go out with skid-donkey engines to pull snags and clean streams to allow fish to get up the natural streams to the natural spawning areas. I have seen them working in the middle of a stream when suddenly a truck will drive up, take the crew out and leave the donkey engine there. The project is finished with logs still lying in the stream because there is no more money. This is happening everywhere.

Fishery inspectors patrolling the northern waters of British Columbia have sat and had a drink with me. They have told me about the stupidity of not being allowed to take a chainsaw into a stream to cut away a dead fall or a new fall that is interfering with the fish migration. It is in these areas that we seem to be so blind. We cut off budgets where it is terribly important, out in the fields, in the streams, in the area of wildlife, yet we waste and squander so much money here in advocacy advertising, in administration and bricks and mortar. We need planning, reforestation, streams opened up out in the field where the meaningful work is.

When people are put to such work in the summers they feel they have gained something, because they feel the magnitude and majesty of the outdoors. They appreciate the size and scope of the country and know that in their days at university they did something meaningful to earn their education. I should like to see a lot more money from the UIC and from the Department of Employment and Immigration redirected to forestries and fisheries to provide meaningful jobs, not false ones. I get so frustrated with our activities here, Mr. Speaker.

I want to come now to the point made by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) that this Party was in Government for nine months in 1979 but did nothing. I know he will never have that experience so I will point the problem out to him. There is a bureaucratic pipeline, full of planning. The planning takes 42 stages—something gets into the pipeline and comes all the way through. Things in the pipeline normally have to flow through before you get a chance to implement something new. In the meantime you start your planning process and it starts to plug in behind the flow.

In 1978-79, the Government spent $196.1 million on the forestry sector of which $41 million went to the forest service—only $41 million—while $154.9 million was spent by other Departments. That shows the priority that existed with the Liberal Government prior to 1979.

In 1979-80, the brief period when there was a change in Government, the objectives of the Department were stated in the Estimates as being to promote effective economic management and use of the forest resources of the nation. The objective was to improve the management and sustained economic utilization of the forest.

As a result of the planning and the work that went on in that short nine months in 1979—credit for which goes to the next Government, as is often the case—they get the credit or the blame—the objective in the Estimates was changed as a direct result of work done by our Government. The wording started in 1980-81, and went through to 1983-84, as a result of the change in Government. It was as follows:

To promote and advise on the preservation, enhancement, and wise use of forest resource and terrestrial environment for economic and social benefits; to provide information for policy and program development and co-ordination of federal activities relating to the forestry sector; to carry out research aimed at solving problems and capitalizing on opportunities in all aspects of forestry including forest management, protection, harvesting and utilization; to participate in the evaluation of environmental impacts on the forest resource of forestry practices, air pollutants and major developments; to assess the potential for using forests and trees for energy, chemicals and new products; to provide forestry services and advice to other federal agencies and to promote public awareness of the economic, ecological and social value of the nation's forests.

The Government which was in power for nine months in 1979 set out a whole new area of objectives and a whole new direction. Also, I believe that that Government can take full credit for creating the post of the Assistant Deputy Minister of Forestry and, I believe, in the selection and at least the recommendation of its present incumbent, a man who, I feel, deserves a lot of support from all of us here in the House. I am not going to accept the little jibes of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), that we did not do anything in that nine months in 1979. We laid some very solid foundation and framework for what could go on, except that it seems now to be stifled with a lack of resources.

I am also troubled, Mr. Speaker, that the Pacific Forest Research Centre has in this Estimate only $775,000 this year. As I have already reported in this speech, the Province is responsible for 33 per cent of the world soft wood lumber exports. There is something very wrong there. Perhaps the free enterprise spirit out in that Province does not require of this Government all the money which some of the other sectors of Canada do. I am not going to stand here and ask the Government to send us more money. Perhaps we do not need it, because I believe there are lots of little things which go on to prove that the initiative and innovation of man in small units is far more effective than large bureaucracies which shovel out in wasteful sums the taxpayers' energy and resources.

In the Estimates we have some $94 million forecast expenditures in forestry for 1982-83. Yet the Estimates for 1983-84 dropped by $20 million. Is that not interesting? I notice that contributions to provincial agencies and to persons for development initiatives undertaken under the General Development Agreements and Subsidiary Agreements for the purpose of economic and socio-economic adjustment has dropped from $75 million to $63 million. This does not do us very much good in British Columbia, but we do get out of that $94 million the sum of $50,000 for the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia. The Council of Forest Industries is a very valuable organization in that it co-ordinates the activities of the industry in B.C. and communicates pretty well and effectively with the federal Government—I would say "all too well" with the federal Government because it is part of that lobby group of industrialist leaders who arrived down here last week to try to put enough pressure on the Opposition Members to have them support Bill C-155, the Crow Bill. It is that kind of debt which associations like the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia pick up when they accept money from Governments to sustain their needs. They would be far better off if they kept their independence and their honesty in terms of political force by remaining independent; $50,000 is nothing to the members of COFI out in British Columbia. I would suggest that they do not have to join that type of delegation to twist our arms to submit to something which is totally wrong in principle before the full debate on the Bill is heard.

Grants from the federal Government can control grassroots agencies out in the country. I would warn all of them to be very careful about accepting grants of that nature because they do pick up that kind of leverage, which I believe destroys their true impact and potential which they have as responsible associations.

The Canadian Forestry Service in the 1982-83 Estimates receives $92.5 million. Let us look at how that is distributed. There is $63.8 million for administration of the Canadian Forestry Service. I just heard the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), who is just leaving the chair, talk about all the bricks and mortar which was going to be put into the Department of the Environment, but there is $5 million for capital expenditures and there is $23.7 million in grants and contributions. Administration is two and a half times what they are delivering out in the field where the trees are and where the fish are. There is something very wrong when we can build that type of top-heavy over-burden on anything as important as our forest industry. I notice also that of $346.8 million in grants and contributions, our Province of British Columbia picks up 14 per cent. That is the combination of provincial and federal contributions.

I am very proud to stand in the House and take part in this debate, being from British Columbia, because we are a Province which has done well. Although, I will stand now and criticize our own Province for the fact that in its forest management licences, it has set its inventory far too high. It has included inventory in the higher elevations on the mountains which are difficult to get to and which are causing flooding and water problems and which, generally, has caused an overharvest in the Province which we are having to pay for. However, there are some interesting things happening in British Columbia. I believe we have to recognize, Mr. Speaker, that the world is short of fibre, short of soft wood fibre, and if we can get our act together and not accept the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that co-operative federalism is dead, if we can get back to a sense of co-operative federalism and have the federal Department of Environment work in co-ordination and co-operation with the Provinces, we can then start to replant, to give the generations of tomorrow some of the strength we are taking from them today in our overspending.

There is a tremendous opportunity which we have to serve the future generations by utilizing and making the federal Department of Environment go out in the field and be co-operative with the Provinces so that we can address the real issues of species research. The whole market is changing, Mr. Speaker. Out in British Columbia we have big sawmills collapsing. They will no longer work. The whole market is such now that as we go farther out from the tidal ports, we are moving into smaller more efficient sawmills. One of the greatest things we need now in our industry in British Columbia is a new type of saw. And we can do more of the manufacturing out in the hinterlands and cut down the transportation costs to market. We have a situation in the Okanagan and in the small forest areas now where we are finger-joining small cut trees, and that is opening up a whole new vista for us.

I am pressured with time here, Mr. Speaker, and I would love to explain what is going on in some of the forest culture. Crews are now going out and trimming the branches off trees for three metres in height in order that down the road, 60 years away, there will be tall, knot-free trees which will have maximum market use in the future. I personally was involved in the research which made the breakthrough for cottonwood farming on the deltas of our rivers out in British Columbia. That was over 25 years or 30 years ago now. We can now start to see the harvest of these cottonwoods. It is now becoming one of the most important areas for manufacturers of fibre products, such as Scott Paper. They are now expanding what we started in a very small way. It is now being expanded to the major river deltas all up through the coast of British Columbia. We have not done that expecting great gobs of money from Ottawa. That original research all came from the private sector which hired people like me to work on those research projects in the field and to make them possible. This type of thing does not come from these bricks and mortar monuments we build here with all these millions of dollars. We must feed it out, give incentives and encouragement into the field. We must allow the Department of Environment and that new ADM to start co-operating with the industry through the Provinces and see if we cannot get a spirit of well-being and growth going in this very important part of our lives.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

NATIONAL RESOURCES—PROCESSING OF URANIUM—EXPORT OF CONCENTRATE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on May 20, 1983, I put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) as follows:

Could the Minister clarify the Government's policy concerning further processing of uranium in Canada? At the present time the Government is spending some $200 million to build uranium refining facilities at Port Hope and Blind River. However, last summer it exempted a large sale of uranium concentrate from being upgraded in Canada—

I put that question to the Minister because last summer the Government's uranium review panel exempted from further processing in Canada some 1.8 million kilograms of uranium oxide. This decision resulted in the loss of some $10 million in foreign exchange and cost the country some 150 person years of work. All this at a time when we have 1.5 million Canadians unemployed.

My own personal concern is that at the present time in the town of Blind River in my constituency a uranium trioxide refinery is being built at a cost of $130 million. At the same time a uranium hexachloride upgrading facility is being built in Port Hope. We have been trying for a long time to achieve further processing of our natural resources in this country. Yet this large sale of uranium to the United States from Saskatchewan was exempt from further upgrading in Canada.

I understand this came about mostly because the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation put pressure on the Government, saying if it did not exempt this from further processing then the company would lose the sale. Mr. Speaker, that is hard to believe. I understand this uranium was sold for around $17 a pound. Yet Australia will not allow uranium to be sold for less than $35 a pound. So it is just hard to believe that if the federal Government had forced this uranium to be processed in Canada the sale would have been lost.

Even if the odd sale is lost, it seems to me that we should maintain the principle of continuing to process our own uranium. We are going to a lot of trouble and expense to create this processing capacity in Canada and we should not be knuckling under to the pressure of provincial Governments. It is my understanding that they are not only pressuring the federal Government, they are trying to coach other producers in how to avoid further upgrading in this country.

• (1805)

It can be clearly seen how committed the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation is to further processing of our natural resources in this country. I hope the Government will not allow future sales of uranium to leave the country without further upgrading and processing taking place here. Clearly, we do not want go back to being hewers of wood and drawers of water. We want to get the value added to our natural resources. We want to create and keep the jobs in this country.

I hope the Hon. Member responding to my representations today will make a clear statement that uranium will not be exported from this country without further upgrading. We have very efficient facilities for upgrading. We can do it as cheaply as any other country in the world. The Government should reaffirm its policy statement so that everyone will know that it is the policy of the Government of Canada that we carry out upgrading and further refining of our uranium resources in Canada.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should say at the outset that the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) has raised this issue on previous occasions, both in committee and in the House. Indeed, he has raised it in his discussions with the Minister and myself as well. I can appreciate his rightful concern.

We are all familiar with the problems in our uranium and nuclear industries. One common element of these problems is that we tend to be working toward conflicting goals. In the case of uranium, we are on the one hand expanding our uranium mining industry, while on the other hand we have placed certain conditions on exports which encourage development of our uranium refinery and conversion businesses. The conversion business presupposes the existence of uranium export contracts. Outright insistence on further processing could lose both the immediate uranium business and the sale of conversion services.

The Canadian Government has always been sensitive to the problems facing the uranium industry. The processing problem was addressed by the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in early 1974 when he stated:

> Uranium will be required to be exported in the most advanced form possible in Canada unless specific exemption is granted by the control agencies.

This position was reaffirmed in the September, 1974, statement on Canadian uranium policy.

The most advanced form presently possible for essentially all of Canada's uranium exports is uranium hexafloride, UF*in6, and this is likely to be the case for some years. The basic further processing issue is the degree to which Canada should insist on conversion of uranium to UF*in6 before export. If it does so, there is a risk of lost sales. If it does not, it puts at risk its investment in Eldorado's new refining and conversion facilities. It could also compromise its policy of industrial development based on natural resources.

It may be that the exemption issue will not affect a sufficiently large portion of Canada's substantial uranium exports to threaten the further processing policy. However, exemptions could be considered pragmatically on a case by case basis.

From 1973 to 1979, uranium was perceived to be relatively scarce and it was not difficult for Canada to obtain compliance from uranium customers in respect of its further processing policy. The present situation is very different. There is considerable overcapacity and some uranium customers have already contracted for their conversion services.

Canadian uranium producers are finding that the market is soft and that sales prospects are difficult to find and hotly contested. The condition of further processing in Canada is considered onerous by some customers, even if it is imposed only when there is a capacity available and when the Canadian services are competitive. Customers want complete freedom to to shop around for conversion services in a buyers' market.

However, the Canadian Government recognizes the importance of developing its own uranium and conversion business and does not freely grant exemptions from its further processing policy. The exemptions which have been granted have been made only after careful consideration by Ministers of the facts surrounding the sale.

• (1810)

In conclusion, I would like to reiterate what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) stated in the House on May 20, that the Government of Canada wants to maximize refinery in Canada, but not at the cost of losing uranium sales.

FINANCE—INCOME SECURITY INVESTMENT PLAN. (B) POTENTIAL OF SMALL BUSINESSES TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on April 27 last, I raised a question in the House with the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) concerning the Income Security Investment Plan filed with the budget. At the outset let me say that we on this side of the House are reasonably happy with the Income Security Investment Plan. We see nothing really dangerous about it. Indeed, the spirit of allowing those who invest in securities to shelter themselves from the effects of inflation, which is really the granddaddy of the production of all capital gains in this country, is a proper activity. Indeed, we would like to see, by and large, capital gains taxes removed from all business investment. However, what we have here is a plan which is very limited in its scope.

I raise the question because the plan is a help to those who are in large businesses which finance in the stock market, but it is of no help whatsoever to small or medium-sized businesses, to family owned businesses or closely held businesses. Most businesses in this country, even large businesses, are not listed on the stock market, nor can they be. This is not because they are relatively closely held. The families and individuals owning the businesses cannot easily accept the problem of turning their businesses into public corporations. These are they very businesses which are dynamic, growing and creating most of the jobs in the country.

The budget we faced on April 19 last was supposed to attack the problem of unemployment. Massive numbers of Canadians are unemployed. The Minister and the Government are looking presumably to the private sector to be the engine of growth, the engine of the supply of jobs. Frankly, the capital gains tax seriously hurts business in terms of encouraging people to invest and to create new opportunity, because with a capital gains tax facing an investor, the zing, the hope of profit, the smell of a go-ahead economy, is to a large extent taken away.

Mr. Fisher: Nonsense.

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend says "nonsense." I say to Your Honour that what we must do is encourage investment, investment by individuals of all kinds. To wind up with a system which helps only the rich, large corporations which happen to be listed on the stock market, and then only in a very bureaucratic fashion, is just not good enough. If the Government really intended to do something to create jobs, if it really intended to make business investment the kind of thing that was there for the engines of growth about which the Government speaks, then it would have come forward with a plan much broader and much more comprehensive in terms of business investment and the way inflation affects that investment. It has not.

These questions were asked of the Minister of State for Finance. The House should receive an apology from the Government for this Minister. He really does not understand the budget nor the Income Investment Security Plan. His answers can be read in Hansard as reported at page 24897. He went on to speak of the Special Recovery Tax and the $4.8 billion which is to somehow stimulate the economy. But the questions were directly with respect to this investment plan. It is too bad the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) is not more competent. I am hoping we will receive a good response from the Parliamentary Secretary who is certainly far more competent in financial matters than his Minister.

• (1815)

With that aside, it is important that we have a response from the Government to encouraging investment in business, something much more comprehensive than this plan which in some senses is only applicable to people who trade stock rapidly on the stock market. That was the suggestion of Lyman MacInnis, President of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. We should have a plan that does not require those who invest in the shares of any business to pay taxes on inflationary gains, or that allows them to deduct losses if there is a tax against a gain.

The present system of capital gains tax is really a tax on inflation. Most of the capital gains on which the Government has collected tax were gains that resulted from inflation. When it comes to business investment, particularly, it is totally improper that that type of gain should be taxed; indeed, we would be far better off in terms of employment and in terms of growth if we did not tax those gains at all.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let us put the income investment security plan into its proper context. Let us start with the post-budget analysis in Maclean's magazine wherein it was indicated that business was the big winner in the budget. Following the applause from Maclean's, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in its newsletter in May indicated:

> Canadian Chamber reacts favourably to recent federal budget.

It went on to indicate:

> With this in mind, it applauded the Minister for recognizing the important role of the small business sector by introducing a number of special tax and other measures that may help to alleviate certain elements of the difficult financial situation faced by small business.

That is a very strong statement which indicates to us that the small business sector, the sector which is not traded on the stock market, has reacted well to the budget as a total package. In fact, the Chamber of Commerce told us that it submitted 30 ideas, of which 24 were approved in whole or in part. The Chamber indicated that it agreed with the budget and viewed it as a win on behalf of small business. It also indicated that the budget would create investment, business expansion and new jobs.

There are three important tax measures in addition to the ISIP which the Hon. Member mentioned. There is the share purchase tax credit which was worth $240 million in business stimulus. There is the investment tax credit, with special new rules to enrich new investment, and those rules are even better for small business than they are for big business. There are the carryback and carryforward provisions on losses that allow people to obtain refunds on their taxes over the past three years or the next seven years to alleviate loss. These things will let small businesses obtain equity financing, get off debt and get themselves into a much better cash flow situation.

When we set up ISIP we listened to the Lortie Commission and to pre-budget consultations. In fact it was all a breakthrough in effective pre-budget co-operation. Perhaps it is because of that that I can close with a direct quote from the Investment Dealers' Association which indicated that the budget was "a carefully thought-out program to help the private sector in the recovery". I think ISIP has to be put into context, and that small business measures in the budget are one of our strongest points.

MINES AND MINING—CLOSING OF SHERRITT GORDON MINE AT LYNN LAKE, MAN. (B) REQUEST THAT TAX WRITE-OFF PROVISIONS BE CHANGED

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to make further comments to those I made in the House of Commons regarding the proposed closing by Sherritt Gordon Mines Limited of its Fox Lake mine operation in the area of Lynn Lake, Manitoba. One of the questions I asked in the House at that time was directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I referred to the fact that tax deductions allowed to companies for exploration are actually preventing exploration from taking place in the Lynn Lake area. I asked a supplementary question which was answered by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). I referred to the NEED program and the application which had been put forward by the company.

I wish to explain that the problem facing the residents of Lynn Lake, Manitoba is simply that the company will be closing its present mine in 1985 or 1986. As a short-term project it re-filed a NEED application with the Government on May 11, 1983, as the first application did not meet the criteria. In its request, the company asked for approximately $2.6 million of which Sherritt will pay $1,138,625. The federal Government is being asked for $1,011,575 and the provincial Government $547,200. The Manitoba provincial Government has indicated its support for the second NEED application. That is a good sign. I encourage the federal Government to give this application favourable consideration. It is recognized by the residents of my community that the first application did not meet the criteria of the program. I am glad that, after some consultations, the company has put forward what I believe to be an acceptable application.

In the few minutes available to me, I want to talk about the other matter I raised in my question to the Prime Minister. I recognize that in certain circumstances, perhaps not in all, the provisions that allow a corporation to write off either past or future profits against certain exploration costs do not necessarily encourage exploration. I will give the example of the operation of Sherritt Gordon in the Lynn Lake, area.

In that case, Sherritt Gordon does not have the money at this time for exploration. It has not been able to do much exploration in this area over the last few years. As a result, it has not been able to find a new ore body for its present copper-zinc operation in that area. The provincial Government has offered to come in on a joint venture whereby it would receive some equity control of that operation in return for doing exploration in that area. It is the same kind of negotiating for a contract that would exist between Sherritt and any other private enterprise operation.

The reason the company has given for not accepting the offer of the provincial Government, an offer which could save jobs and businesses in the town of Lynn Lake, is that the federal tax provisions for exploration are so good for private enterprise, that sometime in the future it may get a better deal if it forms a partnership with another private enterprise organization.

At the present time the provincial Government is offering to make a deal to carry out the exploration on the properties presently under the supervision of Sherritt Gordon, just as the provincial Government is doing the majority of the exploration in the area around Lynn Lake that is not directly under the control of the company. The company is sitting on the best leases, not because of any fault of its own, Mr. Speaker, but because at the present time it cannot afford to undertake the exploration, and because the federal Government's tax breaks, write-offs, depreciation and all the rest are so good that it does not want to give them up at the present time.

What I would ask of the federal Government is to do one of two things. It should make the Province eligible for a similar type of tax credit on the investment it puts into that area, therefore encouraging exploration at this time. As I stated earlier, the Province is willing to do this. It is only by exploration at this time that jobs in the Lynn Lake area will be saved. If that is not acceptable to the Government, then I would ask the Government to review its present tax write-off schemes for exploration, realizing that in this particular case those provisions are actually preventing exploration and may cause the death of a town, the loss of its businesses and the loss of the homes of the residents of that community.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the concerns raised by the Hon. Member, in particular his last two or three sentences in which he requested that certain tax write-off provisions be changed. I have certain information before me, Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with the Hon. Member. Perhaps I could read information into the record and, if he believes it to be incorrect, perhaps we could discuss the matter further.

I am of the view that senior officials of Energy, Mines and Resources have checked with a senior official of Sherritt Gordon Mines Limited as to why the company would not accept money from the Province of Manitoba because of the federal Government's tax write-off procedures. The senior officials stated that no money has been offered to the company by the Manitoba Government. He also stated that an application by Sherritt Gordon for a grant under the NEED Program for further exploration of a gold deposit near Lynn Lake is being considered by the Manitoba and federal Governments and that taxation policies of the federal Government have not at any time entered into this matter.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the federal Income Tax Act have always provided considerable stimulation with respect to mining exploration. In addition, most of the Provinces follow the lead of the Government of Canada in this regard. For example, for several years now exploration expenditures have been deductible from any income, to the extent of that income. Since late 1978, mining exploration expenditures have included pre-production mine development expenditures, also deductible from any income.

In the budget of April 19 an additional measure was provided to stimulate mine exploration. As may be known, mining exploration earns depletion at a rate of $1 of depletion for each $3 of expenditure. Prior to the budget the earned depletion could only be deducted from resource income. This made it difficult at times for various interests participating in mining exploration ventures to claim the benefit. This was especially true for individuals and non-resource companies. The budget provided that the depletion earned after April 19 on exploration costs can also be deducted from any income for federal income tax purposes. As most of the Provinces will also recognize this incentive, the after-tax cost of the high risk mining exploration activity is significantly lowered for investors.

In view of the Government's recent commitment to further encourage mining exploration, it would not seem likely to me that the tax incentives for exploration would detract from the Sherritt Gordon application under the NEED grant, as the Hon. Member mentioned.

I wish to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that most of those facts were taken from the Income Tax Act and deal with definitions which are contained in the definitions section. If the Hon. Member wants further information, I would be happy to provide it for him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Thursday, May 26, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that we have no representatives from our socialist Party in the House as we commence debate on this very important Bill this morning. I say that because while the Liberal Party must carry the main burden for the deficit financing that we are now into and the necessary borrowing which follows from such deficit financing, I think all Members of the House would agree that it is certainly the socialist Party that has egged the Government on month after month, year after year, into more and more irresponsible spending with the resulting deficits and borrowing requirements with which we are now faced.

One of the saddest things happening to us is that people are losing their perspective. They no longer can relate to $1 million, let alone to $1 billion or to $30 billion of deficit financing or requirements. The perspective is so confused or fudged at the present time that the Government sees nothing wrong with coming before us, as it did in its last presentation in the form of a budget, and indicating that between the 1983-84 fiscal year and 1986-87 the total financial requirements of the nation will be $93 billion.

Let me repeat that figure: $93 billion is what the Government has put before us as its financial requirements in the sense of what it will have to borrow either during this fiscal year or through to fiscal year 1986-87. I mention that because is it not strange that we have a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), to whom many refer aptly as the emperor, who went to Williamsburg and had the colossal nerve to say to the United States of America, the United Kingdom, Germany, Japan and various other participants in the conference, "You had better get your deficit in line; you had better cut back on your spending"?

• (1110)

That was the representation on the part of our Prime Minister who only weeks ago, through his Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), told us that our own deficit requirement for financial needs between now and 1987 would be $93 billion. That on a per capita and gross national product basis is much higher than they have or are anticipated to have in the United States. For example, in Canada our deficit for fiscal 1983-84 will be $31.3 billion, more than we spent at the federal Government level in total in the fiscal year 1975. It is about triple, in deficit terms alone, the total spending when the emperor took power in this country in 1967-68.

I mention this little bit of background because our socialist friends to the left, who have been so instrumental in putting the spending in place, have not only been allowing the Government but egging it on to increase this deficit. I still hear the odd socialist say that it is right to spend, that the Government should be borrowing, that somehow or other deficit financing is the way of the future. That is not true.

There is all kinds of evidence that the dilemma we face in this country with high spending, low revenues and big deficits is actually deterring rather than encouraging growth in this country. Some may claim it is Keynesian to argue that the state should be spending, fine tuning—as they call it—the economy with such spending and deficit financing. I invite those who attribute that approach to Keynes to read what Keynes said with respect to such deficit financing as we are now experiencing. He would have been shocked that socialists of the day, such as those who sit to our left or the dear socialists opposite who presently form the Government, would attribute their irresponsibility with respect to deficit financing to something that they learned from Keynesian teaching.

What Keynes suggested was that in times of a slowdown, the state can spend and go into a deficit position in anticipation of going into a surplus position in better times. You then pay off whatever you incurred in the form of debt during the slow time and somehow you have a levelling. Perhaps where this Government went wrong is that it only heard one side of the equation.

In the early seventies, at the behest of the New Democratic Party, the Government put in massive spending programs. When we were in power, we learned that they did not even have the foresight to ask about the projected ongoing trends with regard to the cash requirements for those programs year after year.

Mr. Kristiansen: What about MPs' office staff?

Mr. Stevens: There we have it again, a Member of Parliament earning over $60,000 a year shouting out "What about MPs' staff?" Another socialist is trying out for—

Mr. Kristiansen: It is a service to constituents.

Mr. Stevens: Let me tell that Member of Parliament that the best service he can give his constituents is to start cutting back on some of the federal spending that has been so rampant, largely at the behest of the NDP.

• (1115)

Mr. Kristiansen: Why does the Hon. Member not lay off his people if he does not want to spend the money?

Mr. Stevens: I would like to return to my central theme, Mr. Speaker, but it is clear how the rabbles start to get roused here. The socialists are the most intolerant group in the House. They never like to hear the candid truth about the thrust of their policies discussed in public.

I believe that before any borrowing Bill is passed, we in Canada must insist that the Government present a more meaningful program for the reduction of the ongoing deficit that it foresees for the country. There is absolutely no reason why we should be placing an invisible mortgage on the future generations of the country, a mortgage amounting to some $93 billion of federal financial requirements between now and 1987.

If I had an opportunity to speak longer, Mr. Speaker, I would tell you about the effect that, if in power, we in this Party could have on the deficit by stressing the greater productivity in industry and by seeing that agricultural produce is exported to a greater extent. In short, if we could do these simple things, we could reduce unemployment, reduce the deficit, reduce inflation in the country and we could raise the real growth to over 5 per cent on average per year. In truth, we would bring back to Canada a realistic prosperity, a Conservative type of prosperity that would be built on responsible fiscal financing with less deficit financing than this socialist-Liberal conspiracy has been frustrating the nation with for too long.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, it always amazes me that when a moderate like my colleague, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), gives the House the benefit of his experience and his knowledge with respect to moderation in government spending, it causes shouting and disorder in the House on the part of the socialists to his left and the socialists across from him on the Government side. They have gone absolutely berserk and wild in response to this man who speaks only common sense.

As a Member of Parliament who attempts to represent a constituency from western Canada, I would like to carry on in the enlightened way of my colleague and try to bring to the House some semblance of perspective with respect to the Government's spending program. For a number of very legitimate reasons, this spending program is causing very serious and deeply felt concern for the people I represent.

The Hon. Member for York-Peel has made reference to the meeting of the leaders of the industrialized seven in Williamsburg, Virginia. He has pointed out quite rightly that there was a rather unusual and almost unbelievable intervention on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the course of those discussions. During the course of the discussions, as reported widely by the press, the Prime Minister joined with other leaders in railing against the extent of the deficit in the United States. One must ask oneself who is fooling whom.

This is the seventh time in this session that the Government has brought a borrowing Bill before the House to ask for additional funds over and above those it planned to spend in terms of an increasingly enlarged deficit. On each occasion that the Government comes before the House to seek borrowing authority, we find ourselves in a more deteriorated economic circumstance. The Government cries to the Opposition that it is in dire straits and in dire need of additional funds. This having happened on seven occasions, the only conclusion one can come to is that the Government is incapable of dealing with the economy of the country. That seems to be a self-evident fact. Why are we becoming more and more reliant upon borrowing Bills to carry on the day-to-day activities of the Government?

I was interested in the final communiqué issued from Williamsburg because it referred to the debt situation. After deliberation, the seven leaders stated that they viewed with concern the international financial situation and especially the debt burdens of many developing nations. The concern that should have been expressed is for the debt burden being experienced not by the developing antions but by the western industrialized nations. That is a matter of great concern to many Canadians.

In western Canada where I come from deficit financing and the great debt are viewed with alarm and skepticism. The Prime Minister increased spending from $12.6 billion in 1968 to approximately $100 billion in 1983-84. Our deficit will be in excess of $25 billion for at least each of the next four years. Yet the Government is back for the seventh time asking permission to borrow money. Its obligations amount to $26.7 billion but it already has $16 billion in borrowing authority. Now it is asking to borrow $4 billion more than the $10.7 billion it needs to meet requirements.

One has to ask why the Government is asking for these additional funds when, clearly, they are not needed at this time. As a humble country boy from western Canada, I can only conclude that there is the prospect of an election sooner or later. The Government wants to get into a position where it can have a slush fund available if an election comes within the next few months. I ask Hon. Members opposite why the Government is asking for $4 billion more than it requires. There is only one answer, Mr. Speaker: it needs the money to try to buy its way back into power in a future election.

That $4 billion is an interesting figure, Mr. Speaker. In western Canada people realize that is the amount of the Western Development Fund. Government Members look blank at that because they do not remember it, but it was promised to the people of western Canada—

Mr. Pepin: And you voted against it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was promised to them with all the trappings of the Speech from the Throne. They were told this amount of money would be available in return for the amount that was going to be extracted by taxes on western resource development and energy prices. This phantom Western Development Fund has disappeared, Mr. Speaker. It has gone, it is kaput, it no longer exists.

Is it any wonder that people in Saskatchewan and western Canada are skeptical about the Crow proposal? I am glad to see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is present for this debate. The Speech from the Throne in 1980 is the only one we have had in this session of Parliament. At that time the Prime Minister said that the Government has no representation in western Canada and asked western Members of Parliament to stand up and address the issues that relate to western Canada. I propose to do that, Mr. Speaker, even if the Minister of Transport and the Prime Minister do not listen. I was asked to do it by the Prime Minister in the Speech from the Throne.

It is no wonder that the people of western Canada are concerned about the Crow proposals. They are skeptical about a Government that would commit $4 billion to western Canada and then completely renege on that commitment. How can they be impressed, therefore, with the commitment that the Crow benefit will be enshrined statutorily? That is precisely the question of trust which permeates this whole debate. The people of western Canada, the livestock producer, the grain producer, are looking at this Government in terms of the way in which it manages or mismanages its affairs, and because they are very wise people out there, they say to themselves: "We are not prepared to change what we now have for something which we describe out here as a 'pig in a poke'."

• (1125)

We have seen the way this outfit operates, the way it reneges on its commitments. It promised $4 billion to be expended to increase the industrial and manufacturing base in western Canada, yet not a cent has been committed under this program, of which I am aware, in any tangible way towards that objective. Where is the basis upon which we can expect anything from this Government that is not almost a matter of being enshrined in the Constitution, Mr. Speaker? I am looking forward to the amendments to the legislation which the Minister of Transport has promised for us today to see what exactly he has in mind. However, the federal Government under the present proposal holds all the cards. There are only two elements of statutory protection in the present proposals; one is for the railways. They are all right. The poor fellows, we should almost go out and have a tag day for the railways, they are so hard done by, according to the Minister of Transport; so he has looked after them in his legislation.

Of course, the other statutory protection is given to the federal Government. God knows, it needs some direction in writing as to what it is supposed to do. But that, Mr. Speaker, is not satisfactory. The farmer is stuck with an escalating rate. The protection given to the Government contribution is far more defined and comprehensive.

I see, Mr. Speaker, I have only a short period of time left. I look forward to the opportunity to carry on this debate. I will simply say, Mr. Speaker, I have given a couple of examples of what the feelings are in my part of Canada. There is dismay and disillusionment at the way in which this Government has carried on. The fact that it would ask for $4 billion more than it actually requires is offensive and reprehensible. It is the kind of fuzzy-headed thinking that this Government indulges in, which only says one thing to me, and that is that we may be having an election sooner rather than later. I look forward to that. I look forward to the chance which the people of Canada will have to vote on the performance of this Government.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I noted with interest that when this debate started 20 minutes ago there was not one Member of the New Democratic Party in the House. They have been trickling in ever since. They, of any Party in the House, are very big on borrowing anyway, and they have an interest in this debate, but it is usually retroactive. They always want the Government to borrow and urge the Government to borrow more, but then when we are before a borrowing Bill, they are against it, usually because the priorities are not quite the way the New Democrats would like them.

Mr. Fisher: What is new? You do the same.

Mr. Friesen: I wonder if it would be helpful, Mr. Speaker, in a case like this—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member has just referred to the fact that when we commenced our sitting today at precisely eleven o'clock, it was a few moments before Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party took their seats. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that some of us take our committee responsibilities very seriously and we were hurrying back from our committee meetings.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Order.

Mr. Friesen: I might remind the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), Mr. Speaker, that I just came from committee to speak in the House. His Party alone seems to be the guardians of the committee system, if you would listen to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap; no one else in the House is really interested in committees.

• (1130)

The Government seems to have quite a double standard, Mr. Speaker. If you go to a bank or to Household Finance to borrow money, one of the requirements that both this Government and the provincial Governments have laid on the lender is that before the borrower signs on the dotted line he has to be told exactly what the loan is going to cost him. Now, would it not be a unique experience if this Government were required to tell all the taxpayers of Canada exactly what its borrowing is going to cost them? Would it not be unique if each of the taxpayers could say to this Government: "We will not lend you this money until you explain to us how much this is going to cost us"?

The cost to the taxpayer, Mr. Speaker, is going to be astronomical. As the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has already pointed out, this year alone we have gone in hock for $31 billion, much of which is probably not necessary at this point. At that rate of borrowing the national debt is going to double over four years. We are already paying 25 cents out of every tax dollar just to pay the interest on the national debt. Imagine what that is going to do to the poor taxpayer out there given the borrowing trend we face in this country. It would be in the interests of fairness and equity to the taxpayer if he was able to extract from the Government some kind of statement about exactly what this is going to cost him.

As I have said a number of times in the House, Mr. Speaker, we are not going to repay this debt. There is not a Member in this House who is going to help repay this debt. Neither will our children. It is our grandchildren who will begin paying off this debt. That is the interest; I wonder if they will ever get a chance to start paying the principle.

If you borrow money in the business world you have to have some assets against which the borrowing takes place. But this Government's borrowing is like borrowing against the groceries. It is like some of the fishermen in my riding who would borrow money to pay for gasoline or groceries when they go on a fishing trip. They burn up the fuel, eat the groceries and afterwards there is nothing which the lender can attach to cover the debt. They cannot attach the boat or the fish or anything. The Government has spent this money and there is nothing which can be attached. It seems to me that we are in deep trouble, Mr. Speaker.

My friends to the left, who are always so interested in borrowing, should realize that there is a fundamental tenet in the borrowing world—that when you start putting yourself into debt you become at least a partial prisoner of your creditor. My friends to the left are always harping on the need for Canada to express its economic independence. Since this is the fourth time this fiscal year that the Government has come to us for borrowing authority, we need to ask ourselves how much is owned to Canadian citizens and institutions and then now much is owed by the Government to foreign institutions. I wonder if the financial critic for the NDP, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, has any idea of how much we owe to Wall Street bankers.

Mr. Riis: Do you?

Mr. Friesen: How much have we borrowed in the name of PetroCan? It seems to me to be a fundamental fact of life that once you start putting yourself in hock you become at least a partial prisoner of the one who extends the credit. It is one thing for the Members of the NDP to say we want economic dependence, as I would, but it is another thing for them to say we need to borrow more money, knowing full well that the Government is going to have to borrow from Canadians and perhaps from foreign institutions and thereby mortgage our independence to those institutions. You cannot cry for independence and put yourself in hock at the same time. You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Kristiansen: You would rather be in permanent hock to everyone by offering equity; is that it?

Mr. Friesen: The Hon. Member from Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), who is a great financial expert and used to be the union leader in that area and knows all about this kind of deficit spending, is interjecting.

Mr. Kristiansen: We never had a deficit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Mr. Friesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is time for order in this place, and any time the Hon. Member for Kootenay West speaks we certainly lose all sense of order here.

Mr. Kristiansen: It is because you are so titillating.

Mr. Friesen: Well, I would agree to that.

The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West brought forward an excellent point: Why is it that the Government is asking us to give it permission to borrow $4 billion more than it needs? That certainly is not in the interests of good husbandry. The Hon. Member indicated one probable reason, that very likely we are about a year away from an election and with $4 billion extra in the kitty there would be some kind of a slush funds for the election year goodies the Liberals want to have available to them.

There is another possible reason, albeit less likely because it would infer that the Government really knows what it is doing, that if the Government gets permission to borrow $4 billion more than it really needs, a year from now the Liberals could come back to the public and say: "Hey, we do not need that $4 billion; through very careful management and husbandry of our resources, through very careful cost accounting and cutbacks in all Government programs"—although we know that will not include advertising programs—"we have managed to save $4 billion for the Canadian taxpayer. Are we not wonderful people?"

That could be one of the ploys the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) wants to throw at the Canadian people a year from now and that is why he is asking to borrow $4 billion more than he really needs. I say that is not being honest with the Canadian people. It may be clever but it is not very smart. It may be cute but it is not honest. The Minister of Finance ought to come clean with the Canadian people and tell us exactly why he wants permission to borrow $4 billion more than he needs.

I say again that this is the fourth time this fiscal year alone that we have been asked to give the Government money, some of which it does not really need. We need to close the door on that. We need to tell the Government it has to be accountable to the Canadian people. Perhaps, as I said at the outset, we need to invoke the rule that the Government requires of lending institutions, that they are required to give the Canadian people a careful accounting of just exactly what it will cost them to borrow this amount of money.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I took note of the self-righteous comments of the last speaker when he made note of the fact that there were no Members of this Party here at eleven o'clock. I would like to inform the Hon. Member that we had advance warning that the first three speakers this morning would be Conservatives. Let me inform the House that that would be enough to delay all but the craziest people from coming into the House.

• (1140)

Mr. Kempling: Hurts, eh?

Mr. Sargeant: Once again, I welcome this opportunity to participate in a debate on the Government's borrowing authority. This particular Bill, which would authorize the Government to borrow another $14.7 billion, comes hot on the heels of the last appeal to Parliament for borrowing authority. A little more than three months ago, the Government asked for authority to borrow $19 billion. At that time Members of Parliament were asked to authorize that gang over there to borrow $14 billion for this fiscal year without even knowing what the money would be spent on. Therefore, when the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) proclaimed as he introduced the Bill that this time Hon. Members would be told where the money would be spent, I found his self-righteousness a little hard to understand. Of course the Government told us this time what the money would be spent on. However, it should do that each time it requests authority to borrow money. The Minister really has no right to puff up his chest as if the Government had done Parliament some great favour by telling us how it will spend the money.

When we add it up—the $14.7 billion the Government wants to borrow under the Bill, the $14 billion borrowed for this fiscal year under the last Bill, as well as the $2 billion left over in borrowing authority from last year—we find that the Government is asking to borrow over $30 billion, a tidy little sum. I would not begrudge this to the Government if I were convinced that it would be invested wisely in economic recovery, if it were invested in putting Canadians back to work and, by so doing, increasing the Government's tax revenues, reducing its expenditures on Unemployment Insurance and welfare. However, I am not convinced of that.

In spite of the grandstand statements about recovery and job creation in the April budget, all that is evident is that the Government plans to wait the recession out, hoping that it can claim credit for recovery when the recession is over. However, when the business cycle begins its upturn, the Government will surely not be able to claim any of the credit.

On balance, the Government's record shows that its tight fiscal and monetary policies spurred on the recession, throwing people out of work and bankrupting small Canadian businesses, farmers and fishermen, among others. The irony of ironies is that the Government, driven by the Conservative obsession with reducing the deficit, actually contributed to its incredible borrowing requirement today. Instead of investing its deficit a few years ago, the Government tried to cut its spending at the same time as it tried to slow down the economy with high interest rates. We all know what that brought us: recession. The recession brought on by those policies actually increased the Government's borrowing requirements as close to two million Canadians were thrown out of work and on to welfare and Unemployment Insurance rolls.

When I spoke to the borrowing authority Bill a few months ago, I had a slim hope that the new budget would hold something different for Canadians than the dreadful mix of Conservative economic schemes with which we have lived for the past five or six years. It was a slim hope, but nevertheless I harboured it.

At that time the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) seemed to be testing the waters to see how far he should go with economic stimulation in his new budget. However, when he brought down the budget on April 19, we did not receive the long-heralded economic stimulation and job creation. No, what we received was the promise of almost 1.5 million people unemployed for the rest of this year and not even a glimmer of hope of returning, by 1987, to the days of less than one million Canadians unemployed. What we received were grand statements about the Special Recovery Program which gives $2.4 billion to the private sector over the next four years, and additional spending on public capital projects of only $560 million this year, $760 million next year and only $390 million in the following year. That kind of spending will not go far at all in sponsoring economic recovery and job creation.

What we received with the April budget was another stab at identifying the private sector as the engine of economic recovery, another abdication of the Government's responsibility for directing economic development and planning in Canada, directing it to the likes of Canadian Pacific, Imperial Oil and the mines. I am not saying that the Government should take over and run the Canadian economy. However, what I am saying is that the Government has a responsibility to provide some long-term direction as to how the Canadian economy will develop for the benefit of Canadians, not for the benefit of the blue ribbon coupon clippers south of the border.

Therefore, by throwing $2.4 billion at big business over the next four years, the Government expects it will fuel investment and economic recovery. However, I would like to remind the Government that Canadian industry is now operating at only 60 per cent capacity. Without an increase in consumer spending, there is really no incentive for business to invest, in spite of Government tax giveaways. The April budget did absolutely nothing toward putting more money into the pockets of the average Canadian consumer.

Mr. Riis: It took money out.

Mr. Sargeant: In fact, what it did was to take $3.5 billion out of those consumers' pockets through higher taxes over the next four years, all the while reducing taxes for corporations.

I want to tell the House what a couple of spokespersons from the corporate world had to say about this situation, because it is probably the only kind of source some of my Tory friends to the right will consider seriously. Tom D'Aquino, President of the Business Council on National Issues, has said:

> In the budget, Lalonde identified the private sector as the engine of economic growth ... but what if the private sector does not deliver because it can't, because the demand just isn't there.

Tom Van Zuiden, senior vice-president of finance for Dofasco, said:

> Corporations are not going to expand just to get tax credits. They need expanded markets and the current economy is not such that further expansion in our industry is really warranted.

All this says to me is that the Government is heading in the wrong direction, that when it builds a recovery program around incentives for corporate investment at the same time as it is taking money out of the pockets of consumers, it is missing the boat. It is a shame for the Government to approach this House for authority to borrow an additional $14.7 billion when we can see that none of the economic programs the Government is sponsoring will turn the economy around or, in the long run, reduce Government borrowing requirements.

Finally, I want to make the point that the Government's economic policies are adrift. Rather than trying to do something positive about the recession, the Government gave Canadians lots of talk but not a lot of action on economic recovery. The April budget may have been good to big business, but it does not hold much hope for the rest of us looking forward to genuine economic recovery. The economic posture contained in the last budget is one of waiting and pinning our hopes on American recovery. It is exactly the kind of timid economic direction we have been told over and over again we could expect from a Progressive Conservative Government. I contend that Canadians deserve better.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago the gallery of the House of Commons was filled with young people, people in their early' teens listening to the debate. I wondered as I watched them what legacy this Government will leave to these young people. Will it be a legacy of opportunity or will it be a legacy of bankruptcy, indebtedness and high taxes?

• (1150)

Really this is a sad debate. This Bill asks Parliament to approve the borrowing by this Government of some $14.7 billion. This is the seventh time in this session that the Government has come to Parliament for borrowing authority and has requested a total of some $81.5 billion.

Many people do not understand what a billion means. If you relate that $81.5 billion to millions, Mr. Speaker, that means $81,000 million. That is the amount of money this Government has asked permission to borrow in this session which started in 1980.

It is interesting to look back on the history of the Trudeau years and see what has happened to this great country of ours. It is a great country. It is a country rich in resources, natural, physical and human, and a country which has the greatest potential of any country in this world. But this Government has not developed that potential. It has done its best to stifle it. Personally, I suggest it is because of the philosophy of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and this Government, a philosophy which embraces socialist and Marxist theories, believes in centralization and in government control. This "Big Daddy" syndrome has forced us into low productivity and has caused this country to end up with the highest unemployment record in history, high interest rates and an 80-cent dollar. The Government and the Prime Minsiter say: "Well, there is nothing we can do about it; this is a world-wide problem and basically the Americans are to blame. If the Americans can only pull out of their problems, then Canada will pull out as well."

It is interesting to examine what has happened in the last 15 or 20 years, that I call the Trudeau years. If one looks at the statistics, one will find that on a national accounts basis spending in 1968-69 was $12.6 billion. In 1983-84 it will be $100 billion, which in that period of time is an increase of some 693 per cent. If one looks at it on a public accounts basis, a basis commonly used, one will find that in 1968-69 expenditures were $12.3 billion. In 1983-1984 they will be $89.8 billion, or an increase of some 554 per cent.

Let me refer to the public debt. When the present Prime Minister took over as leader of this country, our gross public debt was $31 billion. At the end of 1981-82, the last figure that we are able to get, it was $134 billion. It is estimated that in 1982 the public debt will be about $165 billion. It is further estimated that by March 31, 1987 our net debt, that is after we take our assets away from our debts, will be some $232 billion.

What about the interest on this debt? Each and every taxpayer in this country is faced with the responsibility of paying the interest on this debt. In 1983-84 the interest on our national debt will be some $17.6 billion. That is about $700 for every man, woman and child in this country, or about $1,700 for every taxpayer. But let us look at the year 1968-69. The estimates, the total cost of running this country, in 1968-69 were about $12 billion. That $12 billion included all the cost of government, all the cost of defence; in fact, every expenditure of government. Now we are asked to pay $17.5 billion just in interest alone. The burden is almost unbearable.

I always relate the Government to a farmer, a worker or a small business. If you spend more than you take in, you are in financial difficulties. That is what this Government has done and is doing. It is spending more than it is taking in, and it is borrowing far beyond its means to cover the portion it is not able to take in. The result is we are very close to being in a bankrupt position.

I have told groups of senior citizens that they are probably the most fortunate group who ever lived in Canada because at the present time they are in receipt of the old age pension, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, the Canada Pension Plan, a health care plan and New Horizons grants. But I have to say to them that it is unlikely their children, or your children or mine, Mr. Speaker, or their children's children, will enjoy those benefits because there will just not be the money to cover those types of programs. With increasing budgets, increasing national debt and the aging population there will be fewer and fewer taxpayers to pay the cost of those programs.

Let me ask once again: What legacy will we leave to our children and our children's children? Will we leave them a legacy of opportunity, or will we leave them a legacy of bankruptcy and indebtedness? Unless we change our ways, unless we curb our spending and unless we base our decisions on economics rather than politics, I am very much afraid the legacy we will leave to those children will be one of bankruptcy, indebtedness and high taxes.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, a veteran Member of this House recently told me of a colleague who had one standard speech format available for all occasions. No matter what the debate, the speech was appropriate with only minor modification made to suit the subject. All that was required was a five-minute preparation to fill in the blanks.

That type of style would be an extremely efficient format for Members of this House confronted with this Government's legislative finesse of the past few years, and particularly of the past few months. This Government under the guidance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and latterly under successive Finance Ministers, has increased Government expenditures from $12.3 billion to $89.8 billion in the past 15 years. The Government, through waste and irresponsible neglect of fundamental principles basic to even a child's understanding of economics, has left the nation's productive capacity in shambles, while blaming the catastrophe on all the world around us and never accepting responsibility or putting it where it belongs.

The combination of excessive spending and a shattered tax base from which to draw revenue has had the inevitable result of ever enlarging annual national deficits. Now the nation, which a few years ago was shocked at the prospect of an increase in the national debt of Canada $4 billion, hardly blinks an eye as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) declares a deficit in excess of $30 billion and notes that the national debt has doubled in the past five years and will double again in the next five years.

The nation hardly grasps the implication of the Minister of Finance's figures, which show that a third of the revenue of Canada, which comes mainly in the form of taxes that Canadians pay directly or indirectly to the treasury, goes simply to pay the interest on the national debt or that 20 per cent of the expenditures of Canada go for that unproductive purpose. One can only pause to wonder what figures will be presented to the House and the nation five years from now when the national debt has doubled from $120 billion to $240 billion, if the Minister and the Government are allowed to pursue their unrepentant ways.

This is a special concern considering a growing conviction which is occupying thoughtful Canadians and was contained in an article in today's edition of The Citizen of Ottawa, headlined "Large federal debt will force up interest rates". I will refer to this article later if time permits.

In this circumstance of spending excesses, the only certainty which exists is that the Government of Canada through its Finance Minister will be back repeatedly to lay claim to the right to appropriate more and more borrowed money to maintain its expensive, expansive ways.

Thus the original concept of a standard speech would be entirely appropriate to the House. On how many occasions could it have been used in the past few months? A standardized speech on borrowing authority legislation would have been useful on seven different occasions during this session of Parliament.

The obsession for spending which consumes the Government has been demonstrated in Bills C-30, C-59, C-111, C-125, C-128, C-143, and Bill C-151 which is presently being debated.

In fiscal year 1982-83 the Government came to the House four times to demand authority to borrow a total of $22.6 billion so that it could continue its habit of unrestrained extravagance. And where are we today? In its April budget the Government indicated that it would require $26.7 billion to make up the excess of its spending over its revenue during the current year. At present the Government has borrowing authority in place of some $16 billion. If the Minister of Finance is forecasting a shortfall of $26.7 billion and has a reserve of authority to borrow $16 billion, the demand we should be debating today should be for $10.7 billion.

Why, then, are we faced with a demand for nearly $15 billion? I suggest it is because the Government does not have any faith in its own figures and, more specifically, it does not have any faith in its own discipline when it comes to curbing its appetite for spending. Government Members say: "Give us unlimited financing so that we can act as we have always acted—bestowing favour on our friends, using the largesse of the treasury for political advantage whenever and wherever it most pleases us and is seen to be to our advantage".

We should contrast this attitude with that of the newly elected Government of British Columbia which campaigned on a platorm of restraint and realism. The people of British Columbia understood and appreciated this, as evidenced by the manifest rejection of the NDP call for actions of spending which are the duplicate of what the Government in Ottawa is presently inflicting upon Canada. Both the NDP and the Liberal Party opposite would be well advised to take note of the clear, decisive message which the electors of British Columbia provided. Canadians want their treasury to be treated rationally and reasonably—the type of restraint promised and being delivered by Premier Bennett of British Columbia.

I would like to refer to an article which appeared in today's edition of The Globe and Mail headed "Curb needed in spending, Bennet says". It reads:

> Without fiscal restraint, the British Columbia Government will accumulate deficits totally $12 billion in the next four years, Premier William Bennett said yesterday.
>
> "Not only the provincial Government, but all provincial agencies and local Governments will be called on to exercise greater responsibility," Mr. Bennett told reporters . . .
>
> "It is fair to say that every program of Government, every Government agency, every Crown corporation, every board, every commission—all are under complete review over the next few days and the next few weeks."
> Mr. Bennett said the recession has ravaged Government revenue and he expects major shortfalls in tax income, particularly from corporations.

Where do we have any comparative degree of restraint shown by the Government of Canada? Of course, the answer is that we do not and will not have a comparative degree of restraint as long as this particular regime is in power.

Earlier I referred to an article in The Citizen by Seymour Friedland. It is in that context that I think we must be very concerned about what will happen five years from now when the national debt of Canada is double what it is presently because we have allowed the Government to continue in its unrepentant style of spending. An article entitled "Large federal debt will force up interest rates" quoted one Earl Bederman of the Canada Permanent Trust Company. I see Mr. Speaker is indicating that I have used up my allotted time, but the article reads:

> Part of Bederman's pessimism is based on the recent Lalonde budget. Although it has received widespread acclaim, Bederman argues that it will have a depressing impact on the economy for the next four years.

I advise my colleagues opposite to read this particular article.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

• (1210)

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, was there unanimous consent to let the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) finish? May I request that on his behalf?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to make a speech. Only the Member who had the floor previously could make that request and seek unanimous consent of the House. I gather he is not interested in doing that.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak for only ten minutes. This Bill is a symptom of the dreadfully serious mismanagement of the Canadian economy by its Government. Last year Canada ran dead last among the 24 member nations of the OECD. We placed 55th out of 81 countries in terms of economic performance, according to the publication "Euromoney". Some on this side feel that the Liberals have deliberately worsened the economy in order to fight inflation. We must ask ourselves, for example, how many of our constituents were put out of work because of the interest rate policy of the Government about a year ago?

As others have pointed out, this Bill will authorize the Government to borrow an additional $14.7 billion. It follows seven previous similar requests made by the Government in this Parliament. In his recent budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) indicated that the deficit for the coming year will be $31 billion, $28.8 billion for 1984-85, $26.7 billion for 1985-86 and $25.6 billion for 1986-87. That is $114 billion in the next four years. We must add to that the approximate $70 billion which those fiscal maniacs opposite ran up in borrowing in the eighties. That will be more than $200 billion before they are voted out of office in the next election.

Let me give some idea of their idea of irresponsible Government financing and what it is doing to this country. First, total Government spending in terms of the $100 billion the Government intends to spend next year is enough to buy a $100,000 home for every household in Alberta.

Second, the cost of interest on the debt exceeds the value of all federal income taxes collected from persons earning less than $50,000 a year.

Third, the Government's gross debt is the equivalent of $6,400 per capita and $16,000 per taxpayer. That is outrageous.

Fourth, in private industry, an enterprise with revenue that was only 70 per cent of its expenditures and gross debt that was four times the net value of its assets would be forced into bankruptcy. Where is there a place for those opposite to file for bankruptcy on behalf of their fellow citizens?

Fifth, the Liberals will spend between 1980-81 and 1983-84 a total of $49 billion more than had been planned in the Conservative budget when we were in office. That is $4,900 per taxpayer.

Sixth, the federal Government spends money at the rate of $274 million per day, $11 million per hour and $190,000 per minute. At that rate, $19 million was spent during the budget speech of the Minister of Finance.

Seventh, including operating deficits and capital expenditures, Mirabel airport today, as an example of the profligacy on the other side, has cost the taxpayers more than $700 million. That sum of money is the equivalent of giving 800,000 Canadians a free round-trip ticket from St. John's, Newfoundland to Vancouver, British Columbia.

Eighth, the federal Government has an information and advertising budget of $245 million a year, the largest of its kind in Canada. That sum of money is 18 times the total cost of Government in the first year of Confederation.

Ninth, in 1981 the federal Government spent $13.1 million on food, liquor and entertainment. I wonder how much of that was spent on other than Liberal friends. That is the equivalent of more than one million bottles of liquor.

Finally, the deficit this year will be $31.3 billion. If that incredible amount of money were turned into $1 bills and laid end to end, it would stretch just under three million miles. That is the equivalent of travelling the Trans-Canada Highway and back 304 times. The line would stretch to the moon and back six times.

What else can we say but that the Government is grossly irresponsible? It is doing its best to bankrupt the country, aided and abetted by its annex in the New Democratic Party. I sometimes wonder which is the annex of which. I ask that in light of the Gallup poll which came out a week ago. It indicated that 30 per cent of Liberal supporters favour a greater role for the private sector, contrasted to 41 per cent for NDP supporters, the Party of the Regina Manifesto, and 61 per cent for supporters of this Party.

The point is that the supporters of the new Democratic Party are now more in favour of private enterprise than the supporters of the Government Party. Times are changing and I cannot explain it. Maybe the New Democratic Party or the Liberals can explain it. Somebody looking at this country from Mars would consider that we were being run by a group of lunatics.

Mr. Riis: What about the guy speaking right now?

Mr. Kilgour: At least I have their attention. It is really what I was hoping for because there is nothing more boring than standing up and giving a speech where nobody listens and then everybody gets up and disagrees.

Mr. Riis: If you say something silly enough, people will listen.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I will end early. I have said everything I wish to say. I hope that all Members of the House will vote against this Bill.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise and speak again on this borrowing authority Bill which is in the order of $14.7 billion, of which something in the order of $4 billion is completely unaccounted for. Speculation runs high that that $4 billion would make a fairly substantial contribution to an election slush fund, paid out at something of the order of $10 million a day. That is a very serious matter. The matter of this House authorizing legislation to borrow taxpayers' money should receive a very careful and scrupulous accounting. If the Government is going to borrow that money, it should be targeted to specific projects that will fulfil a community need, an employment need and a need for economic development at this time. We do not see that occurring with the present initiatives of the Liberal Government.

Today I call to the attention of the House and the Minister some areas where it could allocate the $4 billion instead of dropping in into a slush fund. It is opportune that we have with us in the Chamber at this time the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). I recall to the Minister of Transport the need for an airport in the community of Bella Bella, B.C. Over the years that community of approximately 1,000 people has been looking for Government support by way of a borrowing authority Bill or a contribution. This is an excellent project and is worth studying. It is a native community with very high unemployment. There is a hospital in that community from which they evacuate people with difficult medical problems. There is an RCMP law enforcement establishment in the community and there are schools in the community.

• (1220)

It desperately needs an airport. The people have virtually scratched out of the ground by their own means the beginnings of an airport and, for a very nominal sum of money, could extend the airport runway to 3,500 feet which would accommodate not only their community but other communities on the central coast. Instead of spending that money, Mr. Speaker, It would appear that the Minister of Transport and his officials have decided that they would rather support an airport on another island.

Mr. Pepin: The choice is to be made by the Government of British Columbia.

Mr. Skelly: It would be very nice if the Minister would not pass the buck on to the Government of British Columbia but fulfil his Government's federal responsibility to native people through the mechanism of the borrowing Act by allocating assistance to the Indian community of Bella Bella.

There is no justification for allowing any government to go ahead and move a facility which is so desperately needed to an island with only 60 residents. I hope that my old friend, the Minister of Transport, will find in his heart a willingness to come forward and support that community of Bella Bella and the development on the central coast that will stem from it. I believe this is vitally important, Mr. Speaker. This is an important use for the funds that have not been accounted for in the borrowing authority.

The borrowing authority is an important mechanism by which funds can be allocated. It is interesting to note that the Ministers often complain that they do not have any money. Well, here in the borrowing authority it looks as if $4 billion has not yet been accounted for or allocated. The Government would like to see the House ratify the borrowing authority.

I bring to the attention of the Minister of Transport another project that is needed in the community of Bella Bella and which illustrates what I am trying to point out. If the Minister of Transport or the Government of Canada are looking for some way to account for those funds, the community of Bella Bella desperately needs a roll-on/roll-off ferry facility. The cost of living in that community is so astronomically high that it cripples any economic development that would benefit the approximately 1,000 people who live there. The cost of food is prohibitively high. Here in Ottawa we live in luxury in terms of the cost of food and facilities. The situation in Bella Bella could be changed, however, if the Government were to provide support for a roll-on/roll-off ferry facility. It is a nominal cost to create such enormous benefits in that community.

I hope that when the Government makes an evaluation about what it wants to do with that $4 billion it is asking the House to vote for, the Minister of Transport will provide that ferry facility for that Bella Bella. It would be very useful if the Minister of Transport could look at that project very carefully and find it within himself to support it as one of the priorities of the $4 billion.

In looking for ways to spend that $4 billion fund that has not yet been allocated, another very interesting application of those funds might be found in the community of Powell River. The community of Powell River has a single major industry, and its example is duplicated in many areas across the country. There are problems created by single industry communities. For instance, the pulp and paper mill in the community of Powell River has cut back production and has laid off 500 people. In a small community such as this, the lay-off of 500 people has a devastating effect. The people cannot move out because the housing market is depressed. There is no other source of employment in that community and the pulp mill will be virtually unable to rehire many of those people. The federal Government could provide support for work-sharing programs in that community. Even the apprentices who were laid off could be rehired to allow them to finish their training. The $4 billion that has not yet been allocated could be used in Powell River.

In addition, certain kinds of economic development could go ahead in a community such as Powell River, but initial support is needed. That initial support could help to diversify and strengthen the economy of a single industry community so that the boom and bust phenomenon would no longer occur. But that support is not forthcoming. It would be my hope that the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and other influential members of the Government would look at Powell River when addressing the question of how to spend the extra $4 billion. I hope they would look seriously at creating employment opportunities, at creating job sharing opportunities as a short-term arrangement, and then look finally at assisting a single industry community such as Powell River to create some kind of diversity in its local economy so that it can take the boom and bust phenomenon out of the economy and allow people to have some kind of employment security.

While I am on the subject and the Ministers are present and listening, I would like to call three communities in the Comox Valley to their attention. These are the communities of Courtenay, Cumberland and Comox. The community of Comox has an air base which is proposing to move approximately 500 people to another area of the country to reduce the size of that facility. Those 500 people, their families and their children will be removed from the valley. This will in fact have a very dramatic impact on the economy of that community. The community has already been hard hit by a recession and by the slowdown in the forest industries, and this is the present that they are to receive from the federal Government. I recognize why this is in fact being done, but certainly when 500 pay cheques are removed from a community with a stroke of a pen, the economy of that community is harmed.

Certain things can be done with this $4 billion slush fund that seems to be unaccounted for that would assist the communities in the Comox Valley. The Government could attempt to help the community with some offsets, and there are a number of offsets available. Hopefully, the Government would be concerned enough to provide the community with an alternate, such as another branch of the Canadian Armed Forces that could use the facility that is already there. The facilities are ideal for Sea King helicopter training. There are many other projects for which the federal Government could provide the offsets and opportunities after having caused a great deal of harm by removing 500 pay cheques from Comox.

It would be my hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Government would be in a position, through the $4 billion that is unaccounted for to begin to address some of these very serious problems that are faced by these people.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I represent 87,980 people who live in North Vancouver-Burnaby. Each one of those households operates on a budget. They have so much coming in as income and they have so much going out for rent, food and other expenses. If expenses exceed income, the first thing that the householders would do is to look for a way to cut back and change that situation. This may mean, of course, that there will be spaghetti for dinner instead of hamburger. That is logical, but the Government is incapable of such plain common sense.

Anyone who operates a business works on the basis of a yearly cash flow statement which will indicate to him what he is taking in and what his expenses are. Hopefully there may be a little profit left over. If there is no profit and the businessman sees that he is going into the hole, then obviously he must cut expenditures or increase revenue. Again, this is just plain common sense. But the Government seems to be totally incompetent and totally incapable of understanding such plain common sense.

It might be interesting for my constituents to know that all 87,980 of them are in debt to the extent of $1,600 and that every taxpayer in the riding is in debt to the tune of $16,000 as a result of the Liberal Government. I am reminded of the story of one of my constituents who just had a baby. He immediately rushed to Lion's Gate Hospital, looked through the nursery window at his child and said: "Congratulations, my child, you are now $1,600 in debt. A few years from now when you become a taxpayer, you will automatically be $16,000 in debt, unless we can elect a Conservative Government and turn this kind of loose spending around."

How does the Government do it, Mr. Speaker? What is a supplementary estimate? It is an admission of failure. Seven times the Government has come back to Parliament for supplementary estimates in this Session of Parliament. That is seven admissions of failure—seven admissions that it cannot figure out what it is doing with the money.

We could talk about the $12 billion or $14 billion which was granted before, but let us look at the last 11 months. If this does not demonstrate incompetence on the part of the Government, I do not know what does. Eleven months ago the Government got $6.6 billion; nine months ago $11 billion; six months ago $4 billion; two months ago $19 billion; and today $14.7 billion. It has received $77.3 billion over a three-year period, or about $25 billion per year.

It might interest my constituents to know that they have a Liberal Government which is borrowing at the rate of $2 billion per month and that it has been doing this for years, to the detriment of the country. It is a Government gone mad. I would point out to my constituents that every dollar the Government borrows means one less dollar available for them to borrow for any purpose. This has an effect on interest rates and on the confidence the world has in Canada. When the Government is a mad spender you cannot expect investors to have much faith in it. As a result, in the last year alone $10 billion has left Canada. We will never know how many jobs that would have provided for Canadians had it remained in this country. We know why the money left Canada, however—because of the borrowing of $2 billion per month, month in and month out, that the Liberal regime has foisted on the public.

The foregoing is not all of the borrowing, Mr. Speaker; it is only the things that we know about. How many debts do Crown corporations have that are disguised as loans? How many debts do Crown corporations have disguised as letters of credit? How much are they showing as assets on the books, such as buggy whips, which should be written off and accepted as a loss? The Opposition cannot get that information from the Government and I can understand why it must be kept a deep, dark secret. It must be a source of continual embarrassment that such terrible things are even suspected.

A succession of Auditors General have told us that spending is out of control. You do not have to be very bright to know that, Mr. Speaker. The Government has the authority to spend but it has no responsibility.

When I first came to this House I served on the Public Accounts Committee—until I gave up in disgust. I remember asking an official of the Treasury Board what I thought was a very key question. I wanted to know what happens when a bureaucrat makes a colossal error, such as the overspending on the Calgary Airport, or architects designing buildings that drop into the muskeg, or any of the other scandals that have happened with this Government. I wanted to know the penalty for someone who did not know what he was doing in his job—the penalty for a Government official who wastes money. The answer I got from Treasury Board was that there are no penalties. As my colleague says, the chances are that the official would be promoted because it would be an embarrassment to leave him in the same position. But no bureaucrat is afraid of his job or is prepared to take the responsibility as well as the authority when he spends money.

I could go on with a thousand stories and it would take all day, Mr. Speaker, but I have two or three that I would draw to your attention. This year the CBC wants $820 million. I wonder if the Canadian people are prepared to spend $820 million over and above the revenue of the CBC. As well, $45 million is required for the Official Languages Act and the metric Commission wants $32 million. The Metric Commission is a good example of what I call the rise of bureaucrats. In 1974 its total budget was $44,000 but it has managed to get that up to $32 million. Today, its payroll is $3.2 million. The Consolidated Computer caper wasted $125 million. Some of the bureaucrats responsible for that should have been hanged by their thumbs.

I would like to see one budget, totally complete and fully explained in simple terms but no supplementary supply and no borrowing. If the managers cannot do that they should be given their running shoes. If the Cabinet cannot do it, that should be the greatest news story in Canada.

There are 12 American States where the people, through the native shrewdness that enables them to survive, have passed laws requiring that the budget of the State must be balanced. We may see that sort of thing here. This country will not have fiscal responsibility until this crew of drunken sailors and spendthrifts is thrown out of office, the sooner the better. I do not mean Government restraint on the backs of the poor. What I mean is financial responsibility on the heads of the wasteful bureaucrats who spend, spend, spend, without a thought for you and me, the overburdened taxpayer.

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, we are once again witnessing the federal Government's need for parliamentary authority to borrow new money. Prior to this Winter, the Government had never had to use its emergency borrowing powers. To date the Government has come to Parliament seven times in this session to ask Parliament for more borrowing authority. We need only to recall Bills C-30, C-59, C-111, C-125, C-128, C-143 and now C-151. In fiscal 1982-83 alone, the Government came to Parliament four times to seek borrowing authority.

The Government has borrowing authority of $16 billion in the 1983-84 fiscal year. Bil C-143 had provided for up to $2 billion of the $5 billion of authority it granted for fiscal 1982-83 to be carried over into fiscal 1983-84 if it was not used. Bill C-143 also provided for $14 billion to be granted for this year, fiscal 1983-84.

Based on its financial requirements of $26.7 billion and existing borrowing authority of $16 billion, the Government needs $10.7 billion in additional authority this year. Bill C-151 provided for $14.7 billion in new authority—$4 billion more than is indicated by the financial requirements. Of this, $2 billion does not have to be used this year and may be carried forward into the future. The Government thus has a cushion of $2 billion for this year, plus a cushion of $2 billion to be used in any year. The money that is carried over in this bill does not have to be used next year and could be carried over indefinitely. The Government already has $16 billion in borrowing authority for this year, more than enough to last until summer. The past history of the federal Government is proof positive that it has mismanaged our country's finances and now must borrow more money to make ends meet.

Let us examine the federal Government's spending and the deficit which will outline the Government's mismanagement of the country's economy. Over the past 15 years, Government spending has risen at an unprecedented rate. On a national accounts basis spending has climbed from $12.6 billion in 1968-69 to an estimated $100.2 billion in 1983-84, an increase of 693 per cent. Spending has increased from $12.3 billion in 1968-69 to $89.8 billion, an increase of 554 per cent. Relative to fiscal 1979-80, spending has risen by 78 per cent on a public accounts basis or 84 per cent on a national accounts basis. In 1983-84, the Government plans to spend $20 billion more on a national accounts basis than the Progressive Conservative Government had planned to spend, and will borrow $22 billion more than the Progressive Conservatives had planned to borrow.

• (1240)

For every $3 the Government spends, it must borrow $1. A deficit can be financed only by printing money or by borrowing. In 1982, borrowing by the federal Government accounted for 51 per cent of all net new security issues placed in Canada. Borrowing of that magnitude clearly must have an effect on the supply and demand for money, and thus on the interest rates which must be borne by the private sector. The budget points to a deficit in excess of $25 billion for each of the next four years.

At the end of the 1981-82 fiscal year, the gross debt was $134 billion. The gross debt was probably between $160 billion and $165 billion as of March 31, 1983. In comparison, the gross debt was $31 billion when the present Government took office. The net debt was $120.1 billion as of March 31, 1983. This compares to $16.2 billion in March, 1968. Since the Government resumed power in 1980, the net debt has almost doubled from its March 31, 1980 level of $68.6 billion. In the coming year, one public accounts revenue dollar in three, or one expenditure dollar in five, will be used to pay interest on the debt.

There is the ever-growing interest burden. Interest on the debt cost an estimated $17.6 billion, the equivalent of $700 for every man, woman and child in Canada, or $1,700 per taxpayer, just for interest. Interest on the debt in 1983-84 will equal 4.6 per cent of Canada's Gross National Product. This compares to 2 per cent when Trudeau first took office.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I must invite the Hon. Member to refer to his colleagues in the House by the name of their office or their constituency, and not their proper name, please.

Mr. Gass: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. The third cost is that productive private sector borrowing is crowded out and interest rates rise. In the 1982 calendar year, federal Government borrowing accounted for 51 per cent of the net new security issues placed in Canada. If there was less federal Government borrowing, there would be less demand for money and interest rates would be lower. At the time of the 1980 election, the Bank of Canada rate was 14 per cent, the average mortgage rate was 13.5 per cent, and the chartered bank prime rate was 15 per cent. By August, 1981 the bank rate had climbed to a record 21.24 per cent, chartered bank prime was 22.75 per cent, and some lenders were charging in excess of 22 per cent for first mortgages.

While interest rates have fallen significantly over the past few months, the reason for this stems from factors other than sound economic management. First, the recession has created a shortage of demand for new loans and a significant increase in the level of deposits. The savings rate is at record heights. People are afraid to spend money out of fear for the future, and they are justified because of the actions of this Government. The forces of supply and demand are thus partly responsible for the decline in rates. Economic recovery will mean the end of this source of downward pressure.

Second, there has been a sharp decline in interest rates in the United States. Any increase in U.S. interest rates will send Canadian interest rates back up again.

Third, because the current economic recession has hit Canada more severely than any of our major trading partners, our demand for imported goods has fallen sharply while our exports have remained relatively stable. This has taken some of the pressure off the dollar, which has been propped up by high interest rates. Economic recovery will end this temporary phenomenon.

The Government will argue that lower inflation is responsible for the drop in interest rates. In fact, the factors outlined above have had a far greater role. Indeed, a significant part of the decline in the inflation rate is due to the recession, which is hardly a sign of sound economic management. This year the financial requirements of the Government will be equal to 84 per cent of expected personal savings.

The fourth cost is that of confidence and it is possibly our greatest. The investment community does not trust a Government which continues to live so far beyond its means. They do not want to hold a currency which continues to be debased by excessive Government borrowing. As a consequence, the dollar has fallen, thus driving up the cost of living in Canada. Interest rates remain high as the Government attempts to support the dollar. Job creating capital investment has gone elsewhere. The financial requirements of the Government of Canada over the next four years will total $93.2 billion. Bills C-143 and C-151 are just the tip of the iceberg.

The Government's credit is certainly damaged when it comes to the unemployment issue. The national unemployment rate in February was 12.5 per cent, which means 1,585,000 Canadians were out of work. Four hundred and nine thousand Canadians worked part-time because they could not find full-time employment. These unemployment totals do not include 149,000 discouraged people who have given up looking for work because there are no jobs available. In February, the youth unemployment rate was 20.7 per cent and in August, 1982 183,000 fewer students had a summer job than was the case in August, 1981. How can Parliament possibly support additional funding for a Government which has two million out of work and close to that number are on welfare? Unemployment Insurance benefits are running out and the Government does not offer concrete proposals which deal with this serious situation. In 1982 Unemployment Insurance payments totalled $8.6 billion. It is this very high unemployment rate which has been contributing to the increase in estimated financial requirements since October, 1982. By permitting the Government of Canada to borrow an additional $19 billion to finance the escalating spending deficit, now over $26 billion, Parliament is increasing the national debt to $160 billion.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that my time is almost up. I have one last comment and that is that I believe very firmly in the adage that somewhere, sometime, somebody has to pay. I also believe that the "sometime" is getting very close and the "somebody" is our young people.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, this is the seventh time in the current session that the Government has presented to Parliament a Bill to authorize the borrowing of a vast amount of money. This has been pointed out by other Hon. Members but I would like to underline that fact. Bill C-151, which enacts yet another borrowing authority, makes provision for the raising of an additional $14.7 billion.

On several occasions, Mr. Speaker, I have underlined the practical effect on Canadians of the enormous federal Government borrowings. Let me stress the fact that today most of the funds borrowed by the Government are used to meet current account spending deficits and not to construct public works and undertakings of an enduring nature. Annual borrowing to meet current spending deficits has a two-fold effect on Canadians, especially Canadian taxpayers. First, it increases dramatically the debt load which must be borne by all Canadians in the form of increased contributions to Government revenues. Second, the Government competes directly with Canadian businesses and individuals for available investment funds.

In the result, rates of interest on all forms of loans, from consumer car loans to loans for industrial expansion, are escalated upward. At present the interest rate is low, not because of Government policy but because industrial activity and consumer spending are at an all-time low. As we search for economic recovery, we need assurance that increased activity will not increase interest rates to the dramatic levels experienced in 1982 or we will be faced with a new burst of double-digit inflation.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, expressing the effect of the federal Government borrowing in simple factual terms, we are now utilizing over 25 per cent of annual revenues to pay interest charges. In addition, we are burdening 11 million Canadian taxpayers with an individual debt share of over $2,500 this current year, with a total debt share of over $20,000. To this burden must be added any provincial Government debt the taxpayer shares as residents of a particular Province. All of these Government debts must be repaid by Canadian taxpayers, or passed on to future generations. That is a poor legacy to pass on to our children and grandchildren.

When we consider the current state of the Government's purse, we realize and recognize the certain need for restraint in public spending. But we need real reductions in expenditure, not programs like the Government's six and five restraint which stresses perception and not fact. The Government pretends to save by cutting payments to senior citizens, young persons and retired public servants and then squanders money on Crown corporations like the post office, Canadian National Railways and projects like Mirabel airport and the Gulfspan ferry. To quote an example which is currently in the news in Nova Scotia, there is the $62 million loss on the investment in the CAST shipping group. Every time I stand in this House I remind the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) that was money thrown away. He was warned in advance, yet he allowed it to happen.

With spending restraint in mind, Mr. Speaker, let me consider some special areas of concern in Nova Scotia, indeed throughout Atlantic Canada, which are relevant to the financial status of the Government. We all know restraint must be exercised but we also should know that it must be implemented in a careful and prudent manner and in the hope and expectation that the Canadian economy can be restored to prosperity in the years ahead. Contemplating the fact that we will have a new Government and new direction in policy, I think we can look ahead seriously to the day when the Canadian economy will be restored to its former prosperity.

Let me examine some of those special interest areas such as the educational system. The Government with its alleged restraint has cut back on payments to universities and other post-secondary institutions to the extent of over $1 billion. This comes at a time when we need to provide education and train Canadians. Yet the Government, by keeping back this sum of money from our young people seeking an education, puts an additional burden on those 500,000 university students because it will become necessary in this and ensuing academic years to increase tuition fees.

Canadians are proud that we have an educational system which offers the opportunity to young Canadians to seek university level education if they have the academic ability to perform. But now we are placing that in jeopardy. That is a negative step in two ways. First, it destroys the initiative of young Canadians who do not now see an opportunity for advanced education. Second, it fails to provide Canada with the qualified work force we need to take advantage of the move to a technological economy. That is the kind of reduction in spending which has no productive effect. In fact, it is very damaging and we will realize this in future years.

The April budget spoke of a Special Recovery Program and allocated over $4 billion to the program. Some of it was to be for special projects, over 100 of which were to take place across Canada. One of the most important projects from the point of view of Atlantic Canada was the allocation for marine transportation, specifically vessel procurement. Some $630 million was alleged to be allocated in the April budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). But when we come to examine that in greater detail we find that a great portion of that money was to construct vessels for the Canadian Coast Guard and it was merely an acceleration of an existing program.

The net increase in expenditure is much less than the $300 million first indicated. We on the East Coast are very concerned about the plight of our shipyards, indeed all shipyards across Canada. We realize there must be an acceleration of Government vessel construction programs, both in the Coast Guard and the Department of Transport, more particularly in the Department of National Defence. The patrol frigate program, which is a $1 billion program to provide six modern vessels to the Canadian navy, must be accelerated but no mention was made of that in the budget. So we wonder how serious the Government is when it talks about accelerating activity in the shipbuilding industry.

In budgetary terms, in national defence we have undertaken to honour our commitment to NATO to expand and re-equip the Canadian Armed Forces. The budget lost sight of this and again we have this unproductive restraint. By investing in equipment to the Canadian Armed Forces we not only create jobs and activity for Canadians, but we also create an enduring asset for the future, one which will, in effect, save money by acting now. So I urge the Government to take a look at defence expenditures and make sure that some action is taken to improve equipment in the Armed Forces, particularly to upgrade the Canadian Navy through the patrol frigate program.

I want to speak of a local matter which is of great concern, the recent announcement that the contract for the refit of the HMCS Nipigon will go to Davie Shipbuilding in Lauzon, Quebec. This multimillion dollar contract would have made a great difference to the work force at the Halifax shipyards. With the loss of this contract we can expect an empty shipyard, for which the Liberal Member from Halifax will have to answer. He knows the difficulties which have occurred there.

I want to speak briefly of the fishing industry because in restraining Government expenditures the Government has apparently forgotten about its obligation to the Atlantic fishing industry. The task force report would require an expenditure of $300 million over and above the improvement of facilities at small craft harbours, but there is no provision for this.

We have to have some control over the offshore oil industry. I read in the paper that Husky—Bow Valley are going to expand activity in their project, yet they are going to use a drill rig imported from Norway. How does that create jobs for Canadians?

Let me end on this note, Mr. Speaker. While we appreciate and recognize that there must be restraints in Government expenditure, and while we oppose increases in borrowing, we want the Government to be responsible in its administration of the programs we now have on our books.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could call it one o'clock?

HOUSING

SUCCESS OF CANADIAN HOME OWNERSHIP STIMULATION PLAN IN BEAUCE REGION, P.Q.

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Beauce): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to an announcement made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) on May 25 of this year, according to which the Federal Government would honour all valid applications submitted on or before May 5, 1983, under the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Program. A number of my constituents will be able to take advantage of the program until June 15. I have personally received many telephone calls from contractors and future homeowners in my riding, who want to congratulate the federal Government on this very welcome initiative. I can therefore assure the House that this program has been a tremendous success and that it has had a very beneficial impact on the construction industry in the Beauce area. As of April 30, 1983, 612 grants, each in the amount of $3,000, had been given out in Beauce, representing a total $1,836,000. I am therefore very pleased with the announcement made on May 25, which has met with the approval of the vast majority of the Canadian people.

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

JURISDICTION OVER ARCTIC OCEAN SEABED

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, it is high time that the Government of Canada made a firm statement on the extent of its claim to sovereignty over the seabed of the Arctic Ocean.

Do we claim to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over the seabed within the entire sector extending from Canada's east-west extremities to the North Pole, or is the Government satisfied with something less?

At the time of the debate on the Canada Oil and Gas Act the Government was deliberately vague on the question. However, some maps issued by the Government tended to indicate a willingness to accommodate American claims to offshore resources under what has traditionally been considered Canadian territorial waters. Now speculation in the press puts into doubt Canadian jurisdiction over the Alpha Ridge in the Arctic Ocean.

The Government of Canada has waffled too long on this important issue, and must take a firm stand before the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. squeeze us out from our own Arctic resources.

STATUS OF WOMEN

MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, the second annual meeting of federal, provincial, and territorial Ministers responsible for the Status of Women opened this morning with great expectations. I congratulate the federal Minister for hosting this important conference. We sincerely hope that positive action will result from this year's deliberations.

The situation for women has worsened considerably in one year. Future employment prospects are dismal. Lip service is not enough. All Governments must back up their intentions by committing the necessary resources.

This morning the federal Government unfortunately could not report the implementing of mandatory affirmative action which should be an example for Provinces to follow. Provinces called for a greater federal commitment to educational upgrading and training, particularly for high tech jobs and non-traditional jobs in the future. Adequate pay and protection for women working part-time, and extension of affordable child care, are other issues which urgently require joint action.

While Provinces have gained greater awareness of inequities, most have a long way to go in establishing strong, independent Ministries responsible for the Status of Women. I regret that British Columbia did not send either a Minister or a Deputy Minister to this very important meeting. Several Provinces, notably Quebec, Newfoundland, and Manitoba, reported positive programs which are models for other Provinces to follow. However, as the Minister from Quebec stated, it is a long march toward autonomy and equality for women. The march, at least, has begun.

DRUGS

COST OF PATENTING NEW PRODUCTS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, last weekend a Member of the New Democratic Party stated that improved patent protection for new drugs would increase the cost to the consumer. He was correct. The consumer always pays. What he forgot to mention was that any increased costs would apply only to new drugs researched and developed in Canada. He also forgot to say that the generic companies, which literally stole their licences to manufacture for a paltry 4 per cent fee, have exported much of their ill-gotton profit out of Canada.

Compulsory licensing, which has been abandoned by other industrialized countries, has cost Canada over $1.2 billion in investment, plus thousands of jobs. The consumer has paid less for a popular tranquilizer. The two cents a pill that he or she has saved has cost thousands of consumers their jobs. That is the real price which has been paid.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT BORROWING—CALL FOR CUT IN SPENDING PLANS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the increase in interest rates, signalled last week by our Bank of Canada rate going to 9.5 per cent, the second substantial increase in two weeks, indicates that the demand by Government to finance deficits is already starting to crowd out the demand by business for funds, and is already starting to push up interest rates.

The Government must act immediately to change its fiscal plan, to cut back on its borrowing requirements, and to give strong signals to the marketplace that it will not be borrowing moneys indicated in the budget and that it will be reassessing its deficit and spending plans. If there is no immediate change in the Government's borrowing stance, then it is very likely that interest rates will rise rapidly and that any hopes for a recovery will be squashed.

Before the interest rate increase trend sets in too firmly, the Government must act dramatically. The Government could easily cut its spending plans by 5 per cent. This would reduce its borrowing by $5 billion and would significantly reduce the anticipated pressures on financial markets. Moreover, it would indicate to markets that the Government is prepared to be responsible with respect to its debt management. We cannot afford another round of high interest rates.

Mr. Rossi: Those are your figures.

S.O. 21

HIGHWAY SAFETY

COUNCIL'S ANTI-ACCIDENT PROGRAM

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, a harsh reality, road trauma, accounts for a greater loss of productive working years than either cancer or cardio-vascular disease. It is the most common cause of death and disability of Canadians under the age of 35 and should, therefore, be a matter of great concern to all Members of the House.

Aggressive community action programs are necessary across Canada to help prevent road accidents. An excellent model is the Council on Road Trauma of Hamilton-Wentworth which has been operating since 1981, and which is the only organization of its kind in Canada. The Council consists of community members, and involves the Academy of Medicine, Regional Police, the Hamilton Auto Club, and the Ministry of Transport. Its action program includes efforts to secure and restrain infants and children in vehicles, to investigate passenger restraints in school buses, to provide emergency care education, to educate high school students on the hazards of impaired driving, to increase awareness by cyclists and motorists of the hazards of cycling, and to assist the police department in evaluating the vehicular related deaths and injuries.

It is a matter of concern to me that this type of organization operating at grass roots levels is not yet utilized by communities across the nation in order to promote road safety measures and to foster accident prevention.

MINES AND MINING

YUKON PLACER MINES—POSTPONEMENT OF HEARINGS RECOMMENDED

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, the Yukon has supported, to various degrees, placer mines since 1886, and over $365 billion worth of gold has been put on the market by small enterprises and prospectors. Only a very small part of the Yukon area is considered to be viable for this type of mining, about one-tenth of 1 per cent.

At this time, in particular, with all significant hard rock mining shut down, placer mining is tremendously important to that economy and its people, yet the federal Government seems to be doing everything possible to chastise, demoralize, and potentially drive those miners out of business because, environmentally, it has been alleged that there may be some potential danger to some fish in a very few streams which are mined. Two reports, one slightly redone, have placed doubts in miners' minds about the priorities of the Government and its seriousness on coming to realistic grips with the problem—this, after 90 years of mining.

The problem is that public hearings, extremely important to the future of placer mining, are being held at the very time that the mining season begins. These miners need the hearings to put their case forward, which they feel is excellent. The situation is explosive, and the House must recommend the cancellation of these hearings until late Fall.

MEDICAL CARE

FUNDING FOR RESEARCH—EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT'S RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Nurses Association has made an important contribution to the debate about the future of medicare in Canada by calling on Canadians to reflect on the inadequacies of the physician-dominated health care model that is now in place, and the way in which this domination contributes to increased health care costs. Their call for a greater variety of points of entry into the health care system, through the insuring of services provided by other health care professionals, and for more emphasis on health promotion and disease prevention, reminds us that a great deal of the cost strains on medicare are not related to the principles of medicare but rather to the prevailing health care model, a model which is not changed but rather reinforced by practices such as extra billing and user fees.

In this respect the Government's shortsighted application of six and five to funding for medical research is particularly tragic. Not only does it deny employment opportunities to the many who would like to work in this vital field, and seriously damages the long-term viability of medical research in Canada, but it precludes any expansion of research into the efficacy of various health care delivery models, research which desperately needs to be done if we are to find an alternative to the costs which our present model generates.

The Government should rethink its penny wise, pound foolish ways, and make up the shortfall in funding as it has been called upon to do by prominent members of the research community in Canada.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

COMPLIANCE WITH INTERNATIONAL TREATIES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, this week the Canadian Association of Statutory Human Rights Agencies is meeting in Saskatoon. As part of its discussions this conference is analyzing how various federal and provincial laws, including the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, fare in their compliance with the provisions of international treaties signed by Canada, in particular the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

For instance, the federal Government refuses to bring forward legislation that would end discrimination against native women under the Indian Act. Canada promised these changes after complaints of native women were taken to the United Nations, but promises are all that this House and the native people have received.

Another example of the Government's refusal to honour treaty obligations can be found in the recent case of Donald Marshall. Article 14(6) of the International Covenant calls upon a signatory nation to provide compensation to persons who have been wrongly convicted or punished for a crime and later subsequently exonerated through new evidence. The Government's actions put the lie to its words.

I call upon the Government to honour these and many other treaty obligations as soon as possible. Canada should be a leader in securing and maintaining rights and freedoms for its citizens. To fail to do so brings shame to our nation and our goal of a free and democratic society for all Canadians.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

CALL FOR PRESERVATION OF NAVAL TRADITION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, over 15 years have elapsed since the Government of Canada, with great and grave controversy, unified our Navy, Army, and Air Force into one service called the Canadian Armed Forces. Whatever the merits or demerits of unification, the reality is that we have, today, distinctive elements in the Armed Forces under the new names of Maritime Command, Mobile Command, and Air Command.

In spite of the official nomenclature, Maritime Command has retained and maintained its status as Canada's Navy. The preservation of this tradition, so many years after unification, should be advocated, not discouraged. The existence of a distinctive naval force in Canada can be effectively publicized by utilizing the historic navy blue uniform. While the use of special insignia and the time honoured marine ranks should also be permitted, the whole world would recognize a navy blue uniform when worn by Canada's naval force.

I appeal to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) to help preserve the naval tradition in Canada by allowing Maritime Command to identify itself as Canada's Navy by wearing a navy blue uniform. The cost of changing military colours is a minor expense to incur in exchange for the strengthened morale that would result by returning Canada's naval force to its navy blue.

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

ASSURANCE SOUGHT ON USAGE MADE OF PROGRAM

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, when the NEED Program was introduced in October of 1982 it was billed as a program to give Canadians who were exhausting UI benefits a chance to work for a short period and then to requalify for unemployment insurance. It was nowhere stipulated that, instead of creating more employment, this Program would mean that other workers would lose their jobs so they could be replaced by people on the NEED Program who would be working for much less, often as little as half the original salaries for these jobs.

Recently the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) acknowledged that there had been some slippage on this point and that he would talk to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) in particular, to insist that employees hired under the NEED Program do not take employment from other workers.

In view of the situation, we, in this Party, would like a categorical assurance from the Government that it will put a stop to the practice of shuffling workers on and off unemployment insurance and calling it job creation.

FINANCE

WILLIAMSBURG SUMMIT—COMMITMENT TO REDUCE DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, and the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Cousineau: Who else do you have on your list?

Miss Carney: —my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Finance. At the Williamsburg Summit, seven nations delivered a joint statement which said in part:

> We must all focus on achieving and maintaining low inflation and reducing interest rates from their present too high levels.
> We renew our commitment to reduce structural budget deficits, in particular, by limiting the growth of expenditures.

How can the Minister square that commitment, to reduce budget deficits and limit government expenditures, with the Government's own record of increasing the deficit by a whopping 50 per cent this year, and increasing expenditures by 12 per cent, which is twice the rate of inflation?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes or no.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the former critic for finance, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre, and in the absence of the former Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Nielsen: I am here.

Mr. Cosgrove: —and, as matter of fact, in the absence of all the candidates who have any opinions on matters of finance for the Opposition Party, I would be very pleased to attempt to answer the question for the Hon. Member.

There are two items which the Hon. Member, of course, has not taken into account in the recent budget statement of the Minsiter of Finance. The first is the plan by the Government to recover the expenditure for the Special Recovery Fund from a Special Recovery Tax. That tax will come into place 12 to 15 months from now to reduce some of the expenditures used for stimulation at this time. The second is the second part of the speech, the undertaking of the Minister of Finance that the expenditures of government would not exceed the general rate of growth in the economy, and there is the performance of this Government which is consistent with that undertaking over the last five years.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REDUCE AMOUNT OF BORROWINGS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of State for Finance. I can point out that the Leader of the Opposition is here, and our finance critic is here. We are waiting for the day when Hon. Members over there are former Ministers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cousineau: Speak for yourself.

Miss Carney: Speaking for Canada, the Minister of Finance told the United States that it must reduce its budgetary deficit of about $200 billion in order to reduce interest rates.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Miss Carney: The Finance Minister warned that continuing high rates of interest could choke off the economic recovery. This is precisely the same argument that my Conservative colleagues and I have been making about this Government's own proposed budget deficit of $31 billion, which is 50 per cent more in relative terms than the United States deficit. If the Government feels that massive government borrowings will force up interest rates, shutting down businesses and throwing people out of work, why does the Government not take its own medicine? Why does it not practise what it preaches?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, it is very difficult to know, in fact, what is the position of the—

Mr. Nielsen: Government.

Mr. Cosgrove: —Official Opposition, when at least eight different opinions are offered on how the deficit should be treated, by the candidates for leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Epp: How are you treating it?

Mr. Cosgrove: It is interesting to know what the Hon. Member's opinion is. That is number nine. I would warrant that there are probably many, many more different single opinions of Members opposite.

On the question, Madam Speaker, I indicated in my first answer that the Government was concerned about the deficit. Indeed, the Hon. Member criticized the Minister of Finance for introducing the Special Recovery Fund Tax in the budget which was designed to recover, as I say, the expenditures that are used for stimulation at this time, namely, the Special Recovery Projects. The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. On one day she cannot complain that the Government is introducing a tax to reduce the deficit and then, on the next day, quarrel that the Government is increasing the deficit. What really is her position on the deficit?

• (1420)

GOVERNMENT OBJECTIVES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my third supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I am glad he recognizes, in spite of his poor mouthing, that I am the finance critic for this Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The Minister of Finance is quoted as stating that Canada will not change its economic policy in the wake of the Summit because he had achieved all the objectives he had set for himself for the coming year. Do these objectives include an unemployment rate of 12.5 per cent, which reflects two million Canadians without jobs, 3,700 businesses in bankruptcy in the first four months of this year—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is really exaggerating. She is really not asking questions but enumerating a lot of statistics.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, I was in the middle of my question—

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is not to argue with the Speaker. I have just told the Hon. Member that she must go directly to her question.

Miss Carney: Do these objectives, which he says he has achieved, include an unemployment rate of 12.5 per cent, which reflects two million people out of work, 3,700 businesses in bankruptcy, and a faltering economy?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, notwithstanding the present interim title or responsibility given to the Hon. Member, I would much rather, when it is apparent from the apparel of the Hon. Member, deal with a red Tory than with some of the Tory leadership candidates who have taken a very hard line on the deficit. It is very difficult to know what is the Conservative position on the deficit.

On the question of unemployment, the Minister of Finance has indicated that the figure of 12 per cent is unacceptable. The budget introduced a special recovery capital fund to create jobs at the present time. There is a special recovery fund of $2.4 billion designed to encourage the private sector to get involved and to help assist the Government, to take its share and provide jobs through the stimulation offered by those funds in the budget. We say that that amount of unemployment is not acceptable. There are steps in the budget in order to try to reduce that.

WILLIAMSBURG COMMUNIQUÉ ON LIMITING EXPENDITURES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Minister ought not to throw stones—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: I can remember when he was a full Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Blenkarn: I ask the Minister—

Madam Speaker: Order. It is hard for the Speaker to think there is a question coming when the Hon. Member starts with an admonition.

Mr. Nielsen: Look to your right.

Madam Speaker: That may be well placed in a speech, but not in a question.

Mr. Blenkarn: In light of the communiqué at Williamsburg which indicated that we should operate by "limiting the growth of expenditures rather than raising taxes", will the Government advise us whether it will be abandoning the plan to increase sale taxes in 1984 as its only method of reducing the deficit?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It is obvious that we have a tenth opinion on how to handle deficits, from the Conservative Party. I wish some day the Hon. Member has a title in his Party, since he is criticizing me for being a Minister of State.

I think I have addressed the answer to that question in my first answer. The Government has taken steps to reduce the deficit by the special recovery tax which will come into effect approximately 12 months from now when the observed recovery will have permitted the economy to be stronger and to afford that kind of recovery tax. Second, the Government indicated that it would maintain its program of not permitting Government expenditures to increase beyond the general rate in the economy, that is, the growth of the GNP.

Mr. Blenkarn: We know about the Government's commitment to reduce expenditures. Its expenditures are really up 18.9 per cent from a year ago.

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT BORROWING

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, let us talk about where we are going in the marketplace. Perhaps the Minister knows about a Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce study which indicated that Governments in Canada will be borrowing 82 per cent of domestic savings this year. What effort does the Government have in mind to reduce its demand for funds on the marketplace so that business can grow and will have an opportunity to create jobs? When will the Government cut down its deficits in line with the Winnipeg—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: —Williamsburg Summit? What action does the Government have in mind?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I am really repeating myself, but I will because the Hon. Member has obviously not paid attention to my first two previous attempts to point out that in the budget there is a program to reduce the deficit, that is, to introduce taxes in approximately 12 months to 15 months under the heading in the budget called the special recovery tax. It is a program commitment by the Government to reduce the deficit and recoup those funds that were introduced to stimulate the economy at this time.

In so far as the question of crowding out is concerned, which I think is implicit in the Hon. Member's question, I doubt if there is a respectable economist in Canada today who would argue that the private sector is presently being crowded or there is any anticipation that there will be crowding by the public sector in the demand for funds.

ENERGY

PRICE OF NATURAL GAS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. From a recent announcement in British Columbia it appears that the intention of its Government is to increase substantially the price of natural gas to consumers in the domestic market. Also it would appear that under the National Energy Program the federal Government made a commitment to consumers that, if they converted from oil to gas, it would see that there was a 65 per cent ratio between the two prices.

Could the Minister tell the House what he intends to do to ensure that British Columbians are not ripped off by a debt-ridden Government, and that in fact a 65 per cent ratio will be maintained to honour the commitment the Government made to consumers if they converted off oil and on to gas?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, in all cases we have an agreement with the Provinces. For example, in January we decreased the special tax on gas and liquid gas in order to accommodate an increase in the price by the Province of Alberta. If I recall correctly, this decrease applied to British Columbia, but the Government of British Columbia did not increase the price of gas as did the Government of Alberta at that time. I do not know what the plans of the Government of B.C. are at the moment. Of course at the time of the agreement with the Provinces we said that we would reduce the special tax on gas. We did so in January, but very soon we will be running out of that tax because we have decreased it a couple of times in the last while.

PROVINCIAL TAXATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, there are two parts to my supplementary question. First I would like to ask the Minister what he said. On the other side of the coin, in terms of the price increase it is very definite that the Province of British Columbia will tax natural gas in order to raise revenues. It will increase the price of natural gas over the next three years, which will close the gap between the price of oil and the price of natural gas as a heating fuel. The Japanese appear to be forcing down the price of oil on the world market, which is an even more serious situation.

Is the Minister prepared to take action to protect not only the consumers of British Columbia but, should it set off a chain reaction across the country, other Provinces which want to earn needed revenue from the taxation of natural gas?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member had listened carefully to what I said he would know that I indicated that we have already decreased the federal tax on gas in January. The British Columbia consumers have benefited from that. But our commitment is related to the federal taxes. The owners of the gas can decide further price increases. Alberta increased the price of gas in March, and I think the Government of British Columbia is planning to do the same at this time. Perhaps the Hon. Member is not satisfied with the Government of British Columbia. He had a chance to say something about it not long ago, but there was a judgment passed by its own people.

• (1430)

PRICE SPREAD BETWEEN OIL AND NATURAL GAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my last question is to ask whether the Minister is going to live up to the commitment to maintain a guaranteed spread between the price of oil and gas, or did he simply con the public when he stated that they would maintain that in order to get people to convert?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I invite the Hon. Member to read the agreement. We said we would maintain that ratio as long as there was tax room in which the federal Government could move. However, we do not control the producer price. It is controlled by the Province which owns the resource. In this case it is the Government of British Columbia, which was re-elected a few weeks ago.

MEDICAL CARE

MOOSE FACTORY GENERAL HOSPITAL—MAINTENANCE AND SECURITY CONTRACT

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the Minister advise whether a contract has been issued to the Moose Factory General Hospital for maintenance and security? There was a two-month interim contract. Has the new contract been issued?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am sorry, Madam Speaker, I thought I would have time to locate the answer. I was not given notice of this. I do not know whether a new contract was issued.

REQUEST THAT CONTRACT BE EXTENDED

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, the contract expires at midnight tonight, May 31. Will there be an extension of this contract for some period of time? If so, will the Minister explain why a $5,000 per month profit is being given to an interim company for two months, putting 16 workers out of work, workers who could have been used in that two-month period of time? Can the Minister tell me that?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Madam Speaker, absolutely not, unfortunately. I would like to have received notice. This is a very small contract among a great number of contracts that we give to universities or others to maintain health services to Indians. If the Hon. Member is suggesting there will be a breach whereby people will be without service, I can immediately deny that. As to the specifics, I will supply them to the Hon. Member later.

AIRPORTS

RESURFACING OF CHARLOTTETOWN RUNWAY

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns the closing of the Charlottetown airport for an eight-week period commencing August 15, in order to resurface the runway. I realize that resurfacing that runway is very important and that good weather is required in order to apply the asphalt. However, has the Minister done everything in his power to ensure that there will be as little adverse effect as possible on the tourist industry? Has the Minister looked into the possibility of closing the airport later, possibly some time in September?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I must admit that I do not have personal knowledge of the situation regarding the resurfacing of the runway at Charlottetown. I will inquire into it immediately to determine whether all measures have been taken to minimize the aggravation and discomfort of passengers.

REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer. I am sure he also meant to say that, as soon as he finds out, he will get back to me.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member reads my mind.

PIPELINES

ALASKA HIGHWAY GAS PIPELINE—JUSTIFICATION FOR CONTINUANCE OF COMMISSION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. For several days we have been asking him questions about the Alaska Highway Gas Pipeline. The Minister has repeatedly responded that that is an American affair and he is waiting until there is some commitment from the American people with regard to its construction. With regard to the pipeline commission across the street, for which there is $5.3 million for the Prime Minister's friend, how does the Minister justify keeping that commission in place if he cannot justify to the Canadian people that there is any hope in the foreseeable and predictable future that the pipeline will in fact be built? How does he justify that continuous expenditure, $3.3 million for staff alone?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I did not say that we can or cannot. We have a project at this time, with the Americans. We have upheld our side of the contract or agreement. The Americans have not been able to fulfil their side of the deal. We have not given up hope of building that pipeline. That is why we have to keep staff in place.

ROLE OF COMMISSION CHAIRMAN

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, it is not a question of hope. It is a question of how we account for an expenditure of $5.3 million. That expenditure is taking place. There has to be some justification for it. We all hope the pipeline will be built and jobs will be created.

How does this Minister justify a former Minister getting half salary, his civil service pension, and his ministerial pension, along with his MP and old age pension? How is he able to collect half his salary as head of the commission? What value are Canadians getting? When will we know when the pipeline is going ahead? If the Minister cannot answer that, why will he not, at least in the interim, stop the existence of the commission?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Member we are very fortunate to have Mr. Sharp working on that commission. If there is one Canadian who has very good connections in the United States and knows everyone in the oil and gas industry, it is he. The Hon. Member should be congratulating me for having convinced him to continue working for the Government when he could be enjoying his pension and not doing anything. We are very lucky to have him.

QUEBEC PROPOSAL ON EARLY RETIREMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In an article in today's Le Devoir, the Quebec Minister responsible for relations with citizens said the following, and I quote:

Early retirement: Miss Bégin has failed to understand the Quebec plan.

I would like to know whether this plan is really going to help Quebecers, which group will be affected, and whether the study which appeared under the title: Outlook for 2030, the future of pension plans, provides for a more flexible policy on pension plans, and whether the Canadian Government has or will have anything particular in mind in this respect.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the first part of the Hon. Member's question is very easy to answer. Dr. Lazure's plan to allow people to retire at sixty will—as far as we can judge since we were not consulted at all—only benefit the rich and well-to-do who already have very good private pension plans, and they are only a very small part of the population. We cannot say it is all bad, and I suppose everyone would like to retire at sixty. But how will people manage to live on $125 a month, since instead of getting the maximum amount of $345 now allowed under the pension plan, they would get only about $125 per month. I think this plan will benefit only those who do not really need any extra benefits, and I am referring to people who are getting very high private pension payments. To correct this anomaly, we started a long time ago, and we were the first to do it, with a green paper on pensions and national consultation. I regret that Quebec is doing this without consulting us at all, because it may get this issue off to a bad start and create expectations that no one will be able to satisfy. I think this kind of policy is most unfortunate.

BANKS AND BANKING

SLOW SERVICE FOR CUSTOMERS CASHING PENSION CHEQUES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In the last few days hundreds of thousands of Canadians received their old age pension, Canada Pension or veterans pension cheques from the Government. Like me, they probably went to their local bank yesterday, and had to wait between 30 and 45 minutes because there were only two wickets open. Surely the banks, which are making hundreds of millions of dollars profit and which enjoy such a preferred position in the economy, can give better service to the people of Canada? I ask the Minister if he would take this matter up with the banks.

• (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I should be glad to transmit the Hon. Member's complaint to my colleague, the Minister of Finance.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I would like to refer that question to the Minister of Finance, but he is not here. Every other business in Canada, whether it be a supermarket or a department store, brings in extra staff when it knows that it will have a large number of customers. Surely the banks can do that too. Surely the people of Canada are entitled to better service than they are getting. I would urge the Minister to—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order, please.

LABOUR RELATIONS

EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS DISPUTE—COMPANY IN BREACH OF LABOUR CODE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my question concerns the settlement of the Eastern Provincial Airways strike and is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canada Labour Relations Board in the absence of the Minister of Labour, although my question could also be answered by the Minister of Justice since it involves a legal question. The Board has decided that Eastern Provincial Airways management breached the Canada Labour Code, and failed to bargain in good faith and make provisions for a quick return to work by EPA pilots. I would like to know whether the Minister responsible for the Canada Labour Relations Board can assure the House that the Board's decision will be supported and enforced by the Government. I should tell the responsible Minister that the President of Eastern Provincial Airways has made public statements indicating that EPA will not abide by the Board's decision.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour I will tell the Hon. Member that, in fact, the Labour Board's decision indicated that EPA must revise its collective agreement. The Labour Board has asked the parties to come forward with new collective agreements. It is our understanding that jurisprudence supports the fact that those particular orders of the Labour Board cannot be in any way delayed even if some kind of an appeal is put forward by the President of EPA. It is our expectation that such orders will proceed according to the present jurisprudence. I would like to have permission to check that out further for the Hon. Member.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, I thank the Minister for his response because it indicates that there will be a quick settlement which will put the pilots back to work for Eastern Provincial Airways and Atlantic Canada will benefit from it.

AIRLINE SAFETY

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, because the Minister of Transport is also familiar with the problems of Eastern Provincial Airways, I would like to ask him if he has had a chance to look into the matter of safety in the conduct of the airline and if he has decided whether there ought to be a safety audit on the use of aircraft during the strike. Will he respond to our concerns with respect to airline safety and the involvement of the Canadian Transport Commission in the operation of EPA?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Yes, Madam Speaker, I did check once again. I do check almost every two weeks now to make sure that my hon. friend is satisfied. I did check again and I was again reassured that the Department pays much attention to the situation to make sure that the safety of travellers on EPA is not endangered.

POSSIBILITY OF REDUCING IMPORT QUOTAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

I imagine that the Minister has received a number of representations from representatives of the garment industry during the last few months, urging him to reduce import quotas in order to promote job creation or at least save existing jobs. Could the Minister inform the House whether, following representations made by representatives of the garment industry, the Government intends to respond positively to the requests made by this association?

Mr. Lumley: Madam Speaker, perhaps I may point out to the Hon. Member that clothing imports are the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of State (External Trade).

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of State (External Relations), who, I believe, heard my first question. I apologize for not directing my first question to the Hon. Minister. I would therefore ask him whether the Government is examining the possibility of responding positively to the arguments submitted by the the Garment Workers Association, and when it will be able to give that response, considering the increasingly urgent aspect of this situation.

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of State (International Trade) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of External Affairs have had several meetings to examine this question with representatives of the textile and garment industry, as well as with representatives of import firms.

This year, there has been a development on the market that has given considerable cause for concern. During the first three months of this year, a very large volume of clothing came on the Canadian market from Southeast Asia, mainly from five countries. My colleague, the Minister of State (International Trade), will be submitting a paper on the question to his Cabinet colleagues within the next two weeks.

SASKATOON PSYCHIATRIC CENTRE

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It has been brought to my attention that it is the intention of the Solicitor General's Department to phase out the Regional Psychiatric Centre in western Canada. Could the Minister advise why his Department is doing this in view of the fact that incarcerated people need this facility so much?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member is referring to the Saskatoon Psychiatric Centre I can assure him that we have no intention to phase it out but that, indeed, work is now under way to find a way of improving it, and we certainly do not intend to close it down.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—INQUIRY RESPECTING DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. In light of the urgency of the acid rain problem, does the Minister know whether the Prime Minister used the occasion of the Williamsburg Summit to discuss that issue informally with the American President, and in any event, does the Minister know whether the Prime Minister discussed any bilateral issues with the American President on that occasion? If so, and if not the question of acid rain, which issues were discussed?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I cannot answer that question in relation to the entire range of bilateral issues. I do not know whether the acid rain issue was touched upon in an informal way. It was not the formal intention to do so since, as the Prime Minister knew, I had met with the head of the United States Environmental Protection Agency on the Friday immediately preceding the Williamsburg Summit, and because a series of mechanisms has already been arranged for discussing those issues between myself and my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Secretary of State of the United States and Mr. Ruckelshaus of the EPA. There is already an established formal pattern of continuing contact that will assist us with those discussions. There was no need to deal with these issues formally at the Williamsburg Summit.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of the Environment. Does the Minister not think that the Williamsburg Summit would have been the ideal occasion for the Prime Minister to raise that urgent environmental issue with the American President, even informally if not through the formal structures of the conference? Does he not think that Canada's acid rain campaign would be greatly helped in a general way if he were to get more backing from his Cabinet colleagues, and especially from the Prime Minister who has all but ignored this most urgent problem?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, those two questions are absurd. The answer to the first part of the absurdity is no, the bilateral discussions on acid rain between Canada and the United States are more appropriately carried out in a bilateral forum and not a multilateral forum. In answer to the second part of the absurdity, I do receive very strong support on the acid rain issue from all of my colleagues including the Prime Minister who has raised it several times with the President of the United States.

I have no reason whatsoever to complain about the very strong support they have given to me, and the Hon. Member should not complain either.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

Some Hon. Members: Sing the blues.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, the only blues will be on the Liberal side after the next election.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

PRESENTATION AND NATURE OF AMENDMENTS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I had intended to ask a question of the Minister responsible for emergency planning, but in his absence I direct another question to the Minister of Transport. The Minister of Transport will be tabling proposed amendments to the Crow legislation today. In light of the fact that he will have a press conference after three o'clock in room 130S, I wonder if he can enlighten the Members of Parliament, who represent the people of Canada, as to what the nature of those changes will be.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Yes, Madam Speaker, I will make that announcement in a few minutes. I was told, though, that procedurally I could not introduce amendments during the second reading of the Bill, and I submitted to that view. That is why I should not be accused of lèse-majesté because I did not provide the documents. The Opposition will have the documents in a few minutes. I will announce them later this afternoon, as I promised. This has to do with the safety net and with the addition of specialty crops to the statutory rate.

• (1450)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, one of the great problems we have had in the House is that the Minister insists, and persists, on moving outside the House to make statements of major consequence to so many Canadians.

REQUEST THAT AMENDMENTS BE PRESENTED TO HOUSE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Minister when he is going to stop having debate outside the House of Commons and thus avoiding his responsiblity in the House? When is he going to bring these matters before the House so that we can ask questions, let alone the Press Gallery?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I definitely tried to do it the way my hon. friend is saying I should have done it. I was told that procedurally I could not do it. That is why I am doing it differently now. I was told that the Official Opposition was not opposed to that way of doing it.

HEALTH

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL—APPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and is with regard to the concern expressed by members of the research community in Canada about the application of six and five to the funding of the Medical Research Council. This concern has been brought to the attention of Members of Parliament and the Government by eight former presidents of Canadian Federation of Biological Societies who are concerned about the paradox the Government has created. On the one hand it is restraining the funding for medical research and, on the other hand, it is trying to develop a long-term plan. They have expressed some very serious concerns about the damage that will be done to the long-term viability of the research base in Canada as a result of the cutbacks in funding to the Medical Research Council.

I wonder if the Minister could tell us whether she has had a chance to review the concerns expressed by these important members of the research community. Will she provide the $20 million they have requested to make up the shortfall that has been identified? If she is not going to provide that money, could she tell the House why not?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I acknowledge the need for more money in medical research. I do not think anyone would dispute that. There have not been any cutbacks in the way the Hon. Member has suggested, except that the general policy of six and five, which does not apply to medicare, does apply to Crown corporations and agencies and in that way affects the Medical Research Council. The whole question of more adequate funding for the MRC is under review by Cabinet at the moment.

REQUEST THAT FUNDING BE RESTORED

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, there is nothing to review. We have a fact before us, and that is that only a small percentage of those who applied for new funding have been accepted. That is not something that is under review; it is a fact. We want action from the Minister to restore the necessary funding so that what is really under review, which is the long-term development plan, can have some authenticity. Will the Minister do that in the meantime?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, as the Minister I have to look arrogant and I regret that, but when I explain to the Hon. Member that the matter is under review it means exactly that—the matter is under review. That includes a five-year plan. It is so obvious that I did not know the Hon. Member did not know that it includes funding.

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. I should like to know when the Government intends to bring forward the Bill that arises out of the communiqué from the Constitutional Conference that was just held. Will that be done before the summer recess?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I certainly hope so. I understand the Hon. Member is referring to the constitutional amendment resulting from the conference on native peoples in March. I hope that Bill can be introduced very soon, and I hope that now that we have had endorsation by all the four native organizations, we can proceed quickly with it. If we have the co-operation of the Opposition Parties we can do just that.

PREPARATIONS FOR SECOND CONFERENCE

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, is it also the intention of the Government to instigate meetings between the participating native groups after this Bill has been introduced, or before, in order to prepare them adequately for the next conference to be held within a year? Months have passed already and nothing seems to have been accomplished since the last conference.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the two are independent, the introduction and passage of the constitutional amendment by the House and the Provinces, and proceeding with discussions for the next conference. I can assure my hon. friend that we intend to proceed vigorously with discussions leading to the next conference. We plan to have a meeting at the official level, within the next month, I believe. The native peoples have asked for time before proceeding with the next stage, but I think all parties are about ready to begin the process leading up to negotiations.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CRITERIA APPLICABLE TO MINISTERIAL EXPENSE ACCOUNTS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the genial President of the Treasury Board about matters in which he has often expressed great interest—special procedures and cost-effectiveness, value for money, and accountability. In this area I want to draw his attention to an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail today, which indicates a certain amount of concern by one of their ace reporters about the lack of specificity, to use another well-known word, in the expense accounts of some Ministers. I wonder if the President of the Treasury Board is going to look into this lamentable situation and take steps to correct it.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I will be happy to look into it. I understand that the guidance to Ministers from the Privy Council Office is exactly the same as that provided to Ministers of the previous administration.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, obviously the assiduity with which Ministers are following it is not equal to the standards of the previous administration, because we have seen other instances.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONDUCT EXAMINATION

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister again whether he is concerned about this and if he will look into the matter seriously?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am certainly prepared to look into it. It is not clear that the administrative policy manual in question is intended to apply to Ministers as distinct from the guidance from the Privy Council Office which, as far as I am aware, is being followed by Ministers. It is exactly the same as was provided to Ministers in the previous administration.

AIRPORTS

VICTORIA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—INSTALLATION OF RADAR EQUIPMENT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I am sure the Minister has seen the Government publication which I think is known as Foreign Trade. It has a very interesting article about the installation in Barbados of the most advanced radar installations in the world, put in place by a Canadian company, Raytheon. I wonder when the Minister is going to provide radar installations in Canadian international airports as well, such as Victoria International Airport.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the selection process for the radar is under way. The number of companies has been reduced to two and a choice will be made in the coming weeks. Production will then start and delivery of the radar equipment will take place in due course. Victoria is still first on the list.

DATE OF INSTALLATION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I think all Canadians who have the opportunity to visit Barbados will be very pleased that there is Canadian radar there. I think it would also be true that those who have an opportunity to visit Victoria would like to know when will radar be established at Victoria International Airport. I should like to know whether the Minister has a date for the installation of radar at Victoria International Airport.

Business of the House

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, Raytheon is one of the two companies on the list for the production of this radar. If my memory serves me well, the first radars will be introduced by 1986, according to the present plan. As I said, Victoria should be one of the first to receive one, so my hon. friend can promise radar for about that time.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

REQUEST THAT FUNDING BE INCREASED

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture who is in charge of the Farm Credit Corporation. Within two weeks of the new fiscal year the $100 million in funds that was allocated in the budget for special farm loans for farmers in financial distress, had run out. Many more farmers would like to apply, but cannot because there are no funds. Since the Minister of Public Works recently found $75 million for buyers of new homes, is the Minister of Agriculture planning to increase the funding of FCC for this very important program in the near future? Is he also planning to waive the penalty clause on Farm Credit Corporation loans in order that farmers in financial distress may renegotiate their high interest rate loans at a more affordable rate?

• (1500)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, first of all I believe the Hon. Member should realize that the very capable Minister of Public Works found the $75 million within his budget for the year. I would like to have that capacity to find the money within Farm Credit, but the demand for our money was so great that we do not have any left. We are negotiating at the present time to try to raise additional funds. We are having discussions on the mortgage rates, to which the Hon. Member referred, which were higher last year. However, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows as well as I that although they were higher than we would like them, they were still about 5 per cent below the rate at which anyone else in any other sector of the community could borrow. We are reviewing that matter, but I cannot promise what we will come up with.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on Government business.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I have a question I would like to ask today in order that the Government House Leader might consider it before our meeting which normally takes place tomorrow.

Is it the intention of the Government to bring forward legislation for debate and passage before the end of June which is now not currently on the Order Paper? In particular, does the Government propose to bring forward the Canada student loan amendments for passage before the end of June?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member agrees to pass that legislation now, we are ready to do so without debate.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, the issue is not whether we are agreed to pass it now. Is it possible that we in the House of Commons might see the legislative program which the Government hopes to have in place by the end of June in order that we can attempt, as we are supposed to do, to allocate adequate time for proper debate and consideration?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I sent a letter to the House Leaders immediately after the Easter recess outlining the main Bills with which we wanted to deal. When we have to call some legislation which is not on the list I provided to the House Leaders after Easter, and before that, after Christmas, I usually meet with them to discuss it. If the situation occurs that we want to deal with some new legislation within the next few days which is not in the letter I sent to the Hon. Member, yes, indeed, I would be pleased to negotiate with him. We do not intend to call legislation if we have no chance of success in getting it through before the end of June.

MR. SKELLY—MARINE INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition signed by numerous employees and unemployed individuals in the shipyards of Canada, asking that the Government implement an adequate marine industrial strategy. NUCLEAR GENERATOR AT POINT LEPREAU, N.B.

Question No. 4,838—Mr. Howie:

1. Did the Government enter into discussions with the Province of New Brunswick to examine the possibility of sharing the cost of construction of a second nuclear generator at Point Lepreau, New Brunswick and, if so, on what date and at what level did the discussions take place?

2. Did the Government make any commitment to share in the cost of building Lepreau II and, if so, on what date are tenders likely to be called?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows:

Borrowing Authority

1. No specific proposal with regard to sharing the cost of construction of a second nuclear power plant at Point Lepreau has been discussed as yet between the federal Government and the Government of New Brunswick.

2. The only financial commitment the federal Government has made regarding Lepreau II is the authorization for AECL to spend up to $10 million to initiate preliminary studies to determine the economic viability of the project. A schedule for calling of tenders has not been established.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-151, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, we are again asked by the Government to give authority for the borrowing of several billion dollars more in order to meet the costs of operating Government programs for the coming year. We are opposed to this borrowing Bill. We are going to vote against it. Not because we are opposed to borrowing money. Not because we are opposed to deficit financing. We are opposed to this Bill because we see no intention on the part of the Government to deal with the serious problems which this country faces. We see a Government which is prepared, according to the documents tabled at the time of the budget, to live with more than 10 per cent of the population unemployed for X number of years. We cannot accept that. We can see no concerted, well-thought-out plan by the Government to deal with the major problems facing this country.

I would like to spend just a few moments dealing with some of the points made by a number of the Conservative Members of Parliament this morning. In their attacks on the Government and in their attacks on the deficit, one could not help but feel that they believe, or were trying to create the impression, that this Government is the only Government which is running deficits, that somehow these deficits could be avoided.

It is interesting to look at the record of the provincial Governments. We see that every provincial Government will operate this year with a deficit. Let me just put on record some of the figures which were reported by The Globe and Mail on January 24, 1983. The Province of Alberta, the wealthiest Province in this country, will have a deficit of $2.3 billion. How are they going to deal with their problem? They are going to deal with their problem by putting a user's fee on the people who can least afford it, the sick when they must go to hospital.

The Province of British Columbia, which has a so-called Social Credit Government but which we know is really a Liberal-Conservative coalition, will have a deficit of $1 billion.

The Province of New Brunswick will have a deficit of $250 million.

The Province of Nova Scotia will have a deficit of $170 million.

The Province of Ontario will have a deficit of $2.2 billion.

The Province of Saskatchewan, which has a new Conservative Government, will have a deficit of $220 million, which is probably a bigger deficit than in all the years of the New Democratic Government under Premier Blakeney.

I ask Hon. Members of Parliament what the deficit of these Provinces would be if it were not the case that so many of the programs for health insurance, hospital insurance, post-secondary education, the Canada Assistance Plan, and all the others, were cost shared by the federal Government. All the Provinces would have larger deficits if the federal Government were not involved in funding these programs. The deficits are not because Governments have been wasteful, although there is, of course, waste in every Government, as there is in every large institution, public or private.

• (1510)

The deficits are the result of this major recession. The only way they might be eliminated would be if we took the meat axe approach to cutting social programs, as President Reagan has in the U.S. I point out to our Conservative friends that in the four years President Reagan will be in office he will probably be responsible for increasing the U.S. deficit by somewhere between $1 trillion and $2 trillion. That from a President who was absolutely opposed to deficit financing. I note that none of the Conservative Party leadership candidates is advocating major reductions in any of our social programs.

However, I want to say just a few words about why I cannot vote for this Bill. It is because this Government uses the money for political reasons and in wasteful ways. To use my own city as an example, the downtown core of Winnipeg has been declining for a long time. It has lost a third of its population. Business establishments, from the largest like Eaton's and Hudson's Bay, to the small retailers, are suffering. Many of them are going bankrupt. Downtown Winnipeg will not be revitalized unless there is a major, well thought out plan to do so.

Each of the three levels of Government has agreed to put in $32 million towards a program to revitalize the core area. Of course, the federal Government, through many other programs such as DREE, the Department of Transport or the Department of Employment, has tens of millions of dollars to be spent in Winnipeg which could be used to revitalize the city. For years it has been recognized that this could not and would not happen unless we had a redevelopment plan that put in place a large number of housing units near what used to be the most vital business area in the City of Winnipeg. There are many people in the downtown core in the daytime. They come to work between eight and nine o'clock in the morning and they go home between 4.30 and 5.30 in the afternoon. They have an hour or an hour and a half for lunch—not enough to liven up the area.

What the downtown core needs is well planned redevelopment with a large housing component, but what they are getting through the urging of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), who seems to have control of all the federal money which goes into the city, is a number of poorly thought out, harebrained, off the cuff proposals. We get a proposal for an arena. Winnipeg already has an arena; we do not need another one. Along with that we would need a 2,000 car parking garage which would cost $30 million. We do not need it. We have a proposal for a hotel when existing hotels in Winnipeg are operating far from capacity. We are getting an Air Canada building which is being designed without any reference to the existing surrounding buildings. It does not blend in. There will be no stores or restaurants on the ground floor as there are in other privately owned or Government buildings in other cities. We are going to get a National Research Council building, the idea being that it will develop its research and bring in private businesses which will build the kind of new products developed by the centre. There will be no space for them. It will not be the same situation as in places like Boston or Silicon-Valley in California. We are supposed to get a CBC building which will add nothing to the downtown core of Winnipeg.

What Winnipeg needs is not one or two buildings as the Minister has proposed and which are given front page publicity. What we need is an over-all plan to draw people into the area. Besides housing, we need to know that the new buildings will fit in with the existing buildings, that there will be walkways and arcades to protect against the heat of Summer and the snow and wind of Winter. We need a rapid transit system which could use the existing railway right-of-way to bring people from the University of Manitoba to the downtown area.

These are the kinds of things we need. The people who have been interested in the redevelopment of Winnipeg for years have been hoping to get these kinds of things. We had hoped the three levels of Government would co-operate in this development, but we have had a kind of bull in the china shop approach of the Minister of Employment. He has the money and he has tried to bulldoze these harebrained schemes through in the City of Winnipeg.

I cannot vote for this borrowing authority, Mr. Speaker, because I cannot see that this Government is prepared to do the kind of planning to provide the jobs and services required and meet the needs of the ordinary people of Canada.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I am pleased to participate in this debate but, frankly, it is a bit depressing. In fact, it is greatly depressing to be standing here for the fourth, fifth or sixth time in this incredibly long session debating a Bill to give authority to that group of bandits to go out and borrow another absolutely colossal amount of money, $19 billion. This is literally beyond human comprehension. We do not know how much $19 billion is; no one can get their head around that figure. What we do know is that it is going to have to be paid off at some time. That is what is most depressing.

We stand here making our speeches and we know that ultimately a vote will occur. The trained sheep and seals in the backbenches of the Liberal Party will say "Aye, sir, aye" to the request of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) for this authority. No one will really think about or contemplate that $19 billion, or think about the fact that future generations are going to have to pay that debt off, or about the fact that those who follow us will have the responsibility for the social programs that the Hon. Member for the NDP talked about.

Family Allowances are not going to go away; old age pensions are not going to go away; the assistance we provide medicare is not going to go away. The next generation will have the responsibility to pay for those programs. It will have to look at this generation in our old age. Obviously they are going to be interested in having money for themselves, educating their children and providing a good standard of living for themselves. But they are going to have to pay off this incredible legacy of debt.

We have left to the generation that follows a much poorer legacy than our parents left us. This Parliament, this Government, took over a country built by our predecessors which was much stronger, better placed than the one this crew is going to leave for those who follow us. That is what is depressing about what we are doing. We participate in the debate, we try and raise these concerns, but we know full well that our words fall on deaf ears. They will make not one whit of difference. After the Bill is passed the bureaucracy will go out, borrow the money and spend it as though it were nothing. To them it does not amount to anything. They will not lose one minute of sleep. There will not be one iota of expression of concern for the fact that this Bill will have to be paid off by the next generation. That is depressing.

The other depressing thing about this debate is the irrelevancy of this whole institution, all of us who are elected by the population of Canada, to the process of Government budgeting, spending, taxing and so on. Undoubtedly we in Canada have the most ridiculous system imaginable. It is certainly not democratic; it is anything but. Think about it. At the end of February each year, this year included, the President of the Treasury Board solemnly presents to the House the best estimate of spending for the fiscal year starting April 1. It is a great big, colossal, thick book. Members of Parliament, who have the responsibility for watching the public purse, for examining expenditures, are supposedly to oversee and examine the proposals, the estimates of the Government, and to deny the appropriations for inappropriate expenditures, to be the watchdog.

What happens in reality? In reality, nothing happens because, in fact, if the House does nothing, at the end of June the Government's proposals are passed in total anyway. If we attempt to do anything, the trained seals on the Government backbenches will prevent us. There is no one on the Government side who has the courage to challenge a Minister or the proposals of the Government. Therefore, in effect, the whole exercise is an exercise in futility.

Perhaps one can forgive it partially. I do not think one could forgive it if one has respect for democracy. However, perhaps one might partially understand it if the numbers were at least accurate, if one knew that that was really the amount the Government would spend. However, we know that those numbers bear only a passing resemblance to reality, because six weeks after the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) solemnly presented his estimate of spending this year, the Minister of Finance gave us another number which amounted to a difference of some $600 million. We are still supposedly seized with the responsibility of overseeing spending estimates for this year. We knew just six weeks after the estimates were presented to us that they were already inaccurate. Did the President of the Treasury Board say; "I regret that my estimates are inaccurate"? Did he issue a press release correcting the figures which he had presented? Did he say: "My original estimate of increased spending this year of 9.6 per cent is now wrong because the Minister of Finance has increased the spending"? Did any of those things happen? Of course, none of those things happened.

On the taxing side, on the revenue side, what is the role of the House? The new taxing regime has effectively been law since April 19, the day the Minister of Finance presented his budget. Oh yes, we must pass some amendments to the Income Tax eventually. However, they will backdated, retroactive to April 19, so effectively that means they cannot be changed. Therefore, on the expenditure side there is no control by the House. There is no accurate information from the Government because it can change very quickly, as it has done.

On the taxing side, we were in the preposterous situation of not being able to have any input into what was proposed. So that is effectively law. When they do not match, here comes a borrowing authority Bill of $19 billion. One might say, understandably: "If one is to spend more than one takes in, one needs to borrow some money, and therefore the borrowing authority should be that difference". Should it, Mr. Speaker? No, it is not. The borrowing authority is not the difference between revenue and expenditure. The borrowing authority is some other number that we know is out by $4 billion or $5 billion, anyway. The whole process is absolutely absurd.

If we were being honest in this place, we are fraudulently collecting indemnities from the public of Canada—

Mr. Cosgrove: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Andre: —as representatives of this House.

Mr. Cosgrove: You're never here. You have to be here to collect.

Mr. Andre: There is the mouthpiece, the junior Minister of Finance, saying "Speak for yourself".

Mr. Cosgrove: You have to be here to collect, but you're never here.

Mr. Andre: The junior Minister of Finance has yet to contribute anything at all. Even if he contributed some thoughtful discussion once in a while in this place, perhaps he would justify some fraction of what he is receiving from the taxpayers.

Mr. Cosgrove: At least I'm here.

Mr. Andre: He says that at least he is here. He is a well trained seal. He says: "At least I am here as a well trained seal, saying, "What would you like, sir? Aye, sir, aye"'. That kind of performance can be replaced by a teddy bear with a mechanical arm. That is all one needs. A teddy bear with a mechanical arm could perform that function. That is not why we are elected. That is not what the public expects of us.

Mr. Cosgrove: It expects you to be here.

Mr. Andre: That is why we, Government Members in particular, are in fact fraudulently pretending to our electorate that we are here representing them, that we are here genuinely acting on behalf of the people who elected us. That is absurd. We are not, because we have no power to act. There is nothing we can do.

There is no ability in the House to do anything on behalf of our constituents. Any Hon. Member opposite who is honest will admit that fact. We just stand here and watch these colossal sums going by: $89 billion worth of spending, $70 billion worth of taxing, $19 billion worth of borrowing. The zeros just keep adding on, and we care not one whit. Therefore the next generation will have to pay for it. "So what? We will not be here. It is the next group which will look after it. Who cares about that? By then we will be in the Senate or appointed to the chairmanship of CNR or Air Canada or some other worthy office which comes from being a loyal, stuffed teddy bear which says, "Aye, Sir, Aye" at the appropriate time." That is all the Government cares about. That is what is so fraudulent.

If we were in fact genuinely overseeing the public purse, spending, taxing and borrowing would come down at the same time and they would not become law until this place judged on the question. That is the system in the United States, in Australia and in countries which still have democracy. It is long past the time we should have returned to that.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I, like everyone else on this side of the House, have risen to speak on Bill C-151, a Bill which covers one side of a piece of paper measuring eight inches by ten inches or maybe eight inches by eleven inches, a Bill representing in sum total $14 billion plus, added to the $5 billion which was carried over from another borrowing Bill amounting to $14.7 billion. As well, the Bill includes the provision that on March 31, 1984, if there is any sum which exceeds $2 billion left over, a little bit in a slush fund, just a little bit extra to play with, it will be cancelled because, after all, that is not very much money, $2 billion.

This is the seventh time this session the Government has come before the House of Commons asking us to approve borrowing authority for money because the Government is spending much faster than its revenues are rising. That could be accepted if the expenditures of the Government and the huge deficit has made a contribution to the well-being of the people of Canada, who in fact are responsible for paying off the debt.

In 1982-83, the Government came before the House with four different borrowing Bills. Bill C-143 was the largest borrowing Bill brought in by a Government in the history of Parliament. There has been mismanagement and overuse of this authority, which all Governments must have, by the federal Government, which still has $16 billion left over from Bill C-145. The Government still has $16 billion left over from Bill C-143. The projections of the Government for the current fiscal year are $26.7 billion. The most this Government needs with the left over $16 billion is $10.7 billion. As the Hon.

Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) pointed out, if you take into account the Government's own on hand cash balances, the Government needs only to borrow $7.7 billion. That is all the Government needs in additional borrowing authority.

But we are asked, as Members of Parliament, blindly to approve borrowing authority for a Government which, as I hope to show later on, has not been responsible to the people of Canada in the expenditures it has undertaken. People presume that the Government is responsible to Members of Parliament, the Parliament of Canada, and that we as Members of Parliament, in turn, are responsible to the people of Canada. But the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when he brought in his budget, to save his own hide—a facade for the people of Canada—literally with the stroke of a pen, added $200 million. Just with the stroke of a pen the Minister of Finance threw in $200 million to change the budget he exposed through his asinine tomfoolery and his showmanship.

I do not know what the rush is to have this Bill passed, but I would presume that if this Bill is rammed through, as the Government wishes to do, then Parliament will not be able to scrutinize for the balance of this fiscal year any spending which this Government wants to undertake. This Government, and Members of the NDP who support the Government, have much the same policy lines. The Leader of the NDP in March of 1983, as reported in Grainews, said:

> What we're going to be doing is to express in emotional terms the need for action, rather than worrying about the details of the action that's needed.

That is what we see. It is a policy of "never mind what happens with the money. Just get the money, spend it and hope that after a long period of time some benefit accrues". It is policy of "for goodness sakes do not plan, do not set out priorities and do not try to bring the employment rate, which is devastating this country, below 10 per cent". It is a policy of "continue to borrow money and throw it against the wall. Some of it will stick and maybe then there will be some good for the people of Canada from this spending".

The people who pay for this Bill are the taxpayers of Canada. They will pay an additional $5.7 billion in tax increases over the next four years. The next Government and the next generation will inherit this burden, this legacy of debt, which this Government has put upon us.

The Government talks about fast-tracking. It is certainly fast-tracking when it comes to spending. In the past 15 years under this Government spending has increased almost 700 per cent. Since the re-election of the Liberal Government in 1980 spending has increased 84 per cent on a national accounts basis. Government spending now is equal to 26 per cent of Canada's Gross National Product. Over one-quarter of our productivity is channelled directly into Government and spent by the Government. What has been the result, Mr. Speaker?

In 1970-1971 the deficit was $370 million and the unemployment rate was 5.7 per cent. In 1975-1976 the deficit was $5.4 billion and the unemployment rate was 7 per cent. Today, with a projected deficit of over $31 billion, the unemployment rate tops 12 per cent. If we look at the projections of a $25 billion per year deficit over the next four years and the unemployment rate projected at well over 10 per cent for the same period; we see that the way this Government has been spending its funds and the way it has been abusing the power has not decreased unemployment. It has not helped those who wish to have jobs.

A $30 billion deficit works out to about $1,200 per man, woman and child. This Government is applying a debt of nearly $5,000 to each average family of four. That money is being borrowed on behalf of every average family in Canada. The people will have to pay off that debt through increased taxes.

Where could the Government have saved some money? Where was it not necessary for the Government to become involved and spend the money which taxpayers work hard to earn who would like to have a little bit left for themselves, a little bit to put away for a rainy day, and a little bit to enjoy on a holiday? This Government did not have to spend $350,000 on an advertising campaign in Quebec which gave out misleading information on the Crow. The Government did not have to spend an extra $300,000 on Crow ads in western Canada on a four-page circular to give different information that contradicted the $350,000 it had spent before along with a small brochure it sent to each permit holder of the Canadian Wheat Board. Over $1 million was spent on advertising the change in the statutory rate for grain. The Government could have brought the subject of the Crow into the House of Commons. The issue could have gone to committee. We could have debated the issue. Representations could have been made at committee stage. This process would not have cost the taxpayers of Canada. But it is not just the $1 million I have spoken about.

Let us examine some expenses of the Standing Committee on Transport. I would presume, because of the change in budgeting for the 1983-1984 fiscal year, that this Committee will have non-staff travel expenses, that is, expenses for professional services. The amount involved is $145,000 for travel. We did not have that expense last year. Let us look at the expense for Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence. Last year the Standing Committee on Transport budgeted for $57,000. That amount is now up to $98,000. The total for this coming year will probably be $110,000. Let us look at the cost of advertising for this Committee. It is $50,000. What about professional services? The amount there is $300,000. Now we come to this item of rentals. If committee hearings are held in Ottawa there is not a thing to rent. The amount opposite that category is $25,000. But look at what we have for miscellaneous. The amount is $115,860. Miscellaneous, just a small item.

I see that you are indicating my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for the courtesy. Let me say once again that I feel a great deal of regret at the spending of this Government.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this is the third time in four months that I have spoken on borrowing Bills. The first time, if I remember correctly, I tried to put across to the house the necessity in Canada of getting our interest rates down. The second time I put forward a couple of ideas about how to keep interest rates going down, and on this occasion I will simply use one technique that I believe is mentioned in the Bill.

Essentially, what we are at the end of is about eight years of a policy by all Governments to spend their way to prosperity and political support. Now we are paying the price.

In 1974 this Parliament accepted two budgets. Those budgets double taxation on the resource industries of Canada by the law of this land. That started us on the road to this tremendous borrowing. It was hoped inflation would come so that the borrowing could be paid back in cheaper dollars. This tend kept up. We applied in the year 1975, when I believe it started, a type of monetarism in our monetary policy that tried to control things by raising interest rates. Of course, this was the most fatal blunder of all. Interest rates were the inflation. Honest and sincere people in our various central banks around the world thought that if they could get interest rates up higher this would control the inflationary process. However, interest is the biggest cost there is today in large and small scale enterprises. The inflationary pressure of the cost push which comes from raising interest rates destroyed not only the little person, whether he was a farmer or a small-businessman, but the largest international companies all over the world. This is the situation we face. We were told several months ago that the Government wanted to borrow all these billions of dollars at a time when the country was striving desperately to get out of what was almost a depression, with many businesses going bankrupt and the cash flow declining. When the Government announced that it would borrow large sums of money, a terror went through the business world. When businessmen saw large amounts of deficits, not only in Canada but in other countries of the world, they thought that there would be no money for them to borrow themselves.

My warning has been constant—are there not other ways to get around the situation? I have tried to put forward some constructive suggestions. For example, on March 28 I suggested that we use the Bank of Canada like the Americans were using their federal reserve system. Their charts showed that since last July the money supply carefully put into circulation by the federal reserve had had increased by more than 10 percent. If we look at the charts for Canada, the money supply went up and down but now it is roughly the same as it was a year ago, if measured by the M-1 figure. The point of my suggestion was to indicate that as the Americans used their federal reserve system to get a little more money into circulation slowly and carefully, not saying too much about it, inflation came down. According to the book, when more money is put into circulation inflation is supposed to rise. But the opposite happened because, as they put a greater amount of money into circulation slowly, interest rates came down with it. The real inflation was the inflation rate. This is why the inflation rate dropped in the United States, and our country naturally followed.

We are at a very critical time. Our interest rates have come down a little, to around 10 per cent, using the bank rate and the prime rate. But they must come down another 2 per cent or 3 per cent to let us hang on. If we are to use the credit system in our business operations we must be able to do so at a reasonable cost which is not inflationary. Our country is beginning to struggle to rise to its feet again and the inflation rate is falling. If we want to check that gentle motion, all we have to do is to throw the big borrowings on to the Canadian markets and the United States. Then we will see inflation rise once again.

Again I suggest that we should look carefully at using the Bank of Canada. The law allows us to do so. It has been used by previous Governments to take advantage carefully of everything they could to save them from borrowing more money. As we know, this can be done under the Bank of Canada Act without interest.

My second suggestion, which I have been making in the House for two years, was that various Government agencies which have the power to lend money should use that power by accepting money from any source under the Farm Credit Corporation. They do not have to borrow it from the federal Government, but they could lend that money at half the interest rates. They could take away the tax rights of the borrowers and not apply tax to the lenders in order to arrive at half the interest rates. We could apply this suggestion to housing, to exporting and the Farm Credit Corporation, which covers a great section of our needs. The techniques of the Small Business Development Bond and of the income averaging annuity available, the people of Canada will provide all the money needed for these agencies outside the Government to supply the capital we need at a low interest rate in order to operate.

Bill C-151 has a clause which has been in other Bills. I would like to draw attention to it. Subclause 2(3) reads:

> For greater certainty, any amount borrowed under this section may be borrowed in a currency other than that of Canada—

An Hon. Member: It is always there.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): That is right, but the point is that it has not been used to the extent it should have been used. I know of one or two cases where it has been used but at high rates of interest. I am simply saying to the Government in all seriousness that with world banks overflowing with money it could go to any group of German or Swiss banks—and we know from where the money comes—and borrow money as low as 6 per cent as long as it is repaid in the currency in which it was borrowed. The Government could borrow all the money it wants, whether it be $14 billion or $20 billion. If it wants to be sure about the exchange rate, there is a special system whereby all banks work together to provide an insurance, for which the Goverment would have to pay a very small premium, in case of any future changes in the value of the currency.

Why should the Government go out and invade the markets of Canada and relieve the banks of their danger—they have too much money—by borrowing money at 10 per cent, 11 per cent and 12 per cent? It is almost criminal, bearing in mind that money is begging to be borrowed at 6 per cent for governments.

I know private businesses found this out. They cannot obtain money as cheaply as 6 per cent, but they have discovered that they can go to these money sources and borrow huge sums with no interest. What they do in exchange is to give a share of their profits in the form of shares or in the form of an interest in the profits. Even though the Government cannot use this technique of giving a share of the profits, because rarely does a government show a profit, it can be used by various Government agencies to relieve pressure on the Treasury. Above all, the Government should not go out and borrow in the United States where interest rates are too high. All western Governments are appealing to the American Government to watch its money supply because theirs have been rising for almost a year now. They have probably gone too far, but there are indications that they are now levelling off. We should continue to attempt to reduce our interest rates because if we get the interest rates down, inflation down and prices down, we may pull ourselves up and let the present forward motion continue.

I put this idea forward, not in the sense of trying to embarrass the Government but because it has the legislative power to bring it about. Ministers rise and say that they are all for it, but they never do it. In terms of all other Departments it is indicated that they can do this if they have the consent of the Department of Finance. I ask Government Ministers to assert themselves and use the muscle they should have and obtain the consent of the Department of Finance to get money into the country cheaper and to keep pressure on our money markets to get interest rates down further. I think this can be done. All the Government needs is the will to get off this suicidal course of borrowing more and more regardless of interest rates, which will send us back into a downward slide. We have had enough of that over the past eight years.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on Bill C-151 along the line of those of my colleagues who have spoken today.

Some people in Canada are beginning to see the recovery in our economy that we all want and need, but more than 1.5 million persons will remain on the unemployment rolls in the near future. The truth is that more people are entering the labour market when there are jobs to absorb them. Arguments that say we created more jobs than last year or the year before have little meaning. What is needed is more long-term permanent jobs. That has to be our number one priority.

We cannot under any circumstances place in jeopardy the recovery that is under way at the present time. If we allow inflation to return, we are betraying those who have sacrificed their jobs, businesses, homes and future as part of the price for beating inflation. They live in hope that a better time will allow them to recover their losses and build a new life, hopefully on a more sound foundation.

They have learned the hard way that you cannot spend your way out of inflation. They hope the Government has learned its lesson. They are looking for evidence to confirm it, but the evidence is not there. We see the deficit as a percentage of the Gross National Product doubling and tripling over a ten-year period. We see the level of borrowing going beyond our ability to pay in the future. The people who have been the biggest losers in the recession are expressing their concern at the level of borrowing because they know it will find its way in the rate of inflation and into the interest rates that we project in the years ahead.

We see the long-term national debt doubling and quadrupling over the next four years, according to predictions presented to us. Many of my colleagues have commented that this is the seventh borrowing Bill that we have had in this session. The present Bill is for $4 billion more than the budget indicated is required at this time. Projected financial requirements between 1983-84 and 1986-87 are $93 billion. This indicates that this Government will continue to try to borrow its way out of our financial troubles.

Our real Gross National Product fell 4.8 per cent in 1982. It has fallen 7.5 per cent since the second quarter of 1981. The recovery growth is estimated to be approximately 2 per cent growth in the GNP of 1983. That level will not keep unemployment from rising. That is the dilemma we really face in this country.

The Government has said that the engine of the private sector will lead us out of the recession and into recovery and a reduction in unemployment. Let us examine that statement. Manufacturing capacity is only 63 per cent of its potential. Capital investment will fall in 1983, according to Statistics Canada, by $2.4 billion. That figure, added to the 1982 decline of $4.5 billion, gives the total decline of $6.9 billion in capital investment in a two-year period.

That is not a formula for recovery. The worry in the business community is that the recovery we are experiencing is led by short-term inventory purchasing. If you are concerned that interest rates will climb, you are not going to invest in anything but short-term. That is another side to the dilemma we face.

What we need is long-term capital investment. Industry will not react in any meaningful way to tax credits that may be reversed in the following year. The economic and financial environment in which we operate in the immediate future has to improve dramatically if we are to see a reversal in the decision by the business community to reduce capital expenditures to the extent that it has. Until we make the connection between capital expenditures and jobs and then put in place a taxation environment that will attract long-term investment, we will not begin to make a dent in the growing unemployment that we have in this country.

Part of the taxation environment is better control of the spending practices. After all, inflation is a form of taxation from which no benefit accrues to anyone.

Part of our dilemma today is the fact that some expansion has taken place during high inflation and that inflated capital purchase is being paid for today. I cannot help but feel that we should look closely at the whole tax system, the way we value inventories, the way we depreciate assets and begin to rebuild our economy around a clear-cut tax system upon which long-term financial plans can be made. That is what we should be doing rather than throwing rhetoric back across the floor of the House of Commons. I believe we have the capacity in this House to do that.

Part of the reform would be a commitment to put in place better spending controls and a commitment to reduced borrowing. We need only read the daily press and the annual Report of the Auditor General to see the mess we have in financial control, or we can look at the mess in the control of Crown corporations to see the difficulty we face. The massive borrowing of Crown corporations, which in most cases is beyond the control of Parliament, certainly in almost every case beyond the control of Government, is one of our most serious problems. The contingent liability of the Government is rising dramatically directly as a result of the lack of control over the capital and operating expenditures of Crown corporations.

What all this leads to is a lessening of the amount of funds available to the private sector which could be used to finance capital expenditures needed to create long-term employment. I know there are some economists who will say it does not have that much effect. There is a mental hurdle that we must overcome, because it has an effect on the people in the private sector who closely watch interest rates and inflation rates. The fact that there is a continuous demand for funds by the Government with no meaningful attempt to reduce and control expenditures will surely drive up interest rates and fuel the resurgence of inflation.

In its recent comment on the budget, the C.D. Howe Research Institute said, and I quote:

> The commitment contained in the budget to reduce the deficit is not a convincing one.

Canadians are not convinced the federal Government is really giving anything more than lip service to a reduction of the deficit. Until they are convinced that there is a commitment, there will be little change in capital investments that are so desperately needed in this country at this time.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to share a few thoughts today regarding the supplementary borrowing authority which the Government is seeking through Bill C-151. The proper allocation of authority is vital to the survival of Parliament, but by whose authority are expenditures to be improved and laws made according not only to the traditions of this country, but also of other representative democracies throughout the free world? Is it to be done through Order in Council or in the lofty ivory tower of the Cabinet? No, Mr. Speaker, it should be discussed here in the House of Commons before people elected by the citizens of the country where decisions are made with the safeguarding of the best interests of the people of Canada in mind. These decisions are not, and I repeat, not to be made with the narrow partisan interests of the governing Party in mind.

• (1600)

Yet time and time again in the House we see gross examples of political engineering and manoeuvring instead of face to face negotiating on these very important points of borrowing authority and expenditure approval. I wonder if any self-respecting bank manager would lend money without having a fair idea of where that money was going and how it would be paid back. Of course not. Yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) refuses to disclose why $1.5 billion of his projected deficit cannot be accounted for. Not only that, but what contingencies does he have in mind when he asks for $14.7 billion through Bill C-151, yet only requires $10.7 billion for current needs? Is the clandestine setting aside of $4 billion for needs not yet known a responsible procedure? Where is the accountability to Parliament? Where is the accountability to the Canadian people? I believe that this is contempt of parliamentary tradition.

The word "tradition" is used by certain Cabinet Ministers who refuse to comment on allegations of scandal in major Crown corporations. Yet their colleague in the finance portfolio has, time and time again, broken the traditions of the House. Notably, he has broken the traditions by his refusal to resign over the budget leak and now by his release of budget figures that do not add up and borrowing estimates that are far too generous.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian public is tired of these kinds of shenanigans. The cart is losing direction because it has been going before the horse for too long. Why not do things in the proper order and let us know exactly how these moneys will be spent before requesting capital for "prudent financial housekeeping", as the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) once put it? Any of our nation's homemakers will tell you that he could never stay afloat with this kind of financial housekeeping.

Two months ago, the Government came before the House to ask for some $19 billion in supplementary borrowing authority through Bill C-143. We recall some of the vague remarks that were made about current demands on the public purse due to income tax refunds and other supposedly unexpected requirements. We now have before us a similar Bill, and we in the Opposition are still wondering exactly how the money that is requested will be spent. I must admit that the budget offered a few clues as to how taxpayers' money will be spent in the next few years. There is no doubt as to the specific allocation of a certain sum of $200 million. Indeed, that allocation could have been interpreted as a recovery measure to sustain employment levels in high Government positions. We know that it aided the Minister of Finance substantially in keeping his own job.

However, the real theme of the budget is expenditure, not recovery. As a past master of the art of spending taxpayers' money, the Minister is simply adding capital to the tail end of many existing programs or modifying them slightly. He is imitating the techniques of car manufacturers who put new curves in the bodywork to make buyers believe that they have a new and redesigned vehicle. For example, the RHOSP program has changed, but not meaningfully. A really beneficial change would have been to increase the limit for contributions to $20,000, for example. After all, what is $10,000 when you are purchasing a home?

The Finance Minister expected his housing stimulus program to last until the end of May. So did the Canadian people. However, the funds for housing grants inexplicably ran out. So did the Government's credibility. And now the Government expects us to approve its borrowing requirements with the stroke of a pen? Not when we have a Government with a record for misleading the public such as this one has.

Can one talk about recovery without discussing efficiency and restraint in spending? Common sense tells us that one cannot. But "Commons sense" is something different, especially when the Finance Minister speaks in the Commons. Billions of dollars are about to be spent, but no mention was made of cost cutting or restraint in public spending. Obviously, the Minister is content with the way the Government is managing things. Who is he fooling but himself? He must be content with the massive bail-outs of Crown corporations and with the blank cheque borrowing authority, not to mention the lack of accountability to Parliament evidenced in the Liberal regime.

However, the Minister of Finance is aware of discontent among Canadians for these and other reasons. That is why we saw him on national television last month with his Christmas goody bag and Santa Claus smile handing out voter freebies, including the extra $100 million to the Farm Credit Corporation and the new ruling that farmers can spread their losses out over a ten-year period. Realistically, though, will this help out the farmers who face bankruptcy right now?

Yes, there is spending, but there is little mention of how the money will be raised for the Minister's program. There is some minor tinkering with tax credits and increased taxes on alcohol, tobacco and construction material. The rest will be left for future generations to pay off. When the time comes to pay the piper for these lavish spending programs, the orchestra and its director will have been replaced. The Minister must be aware of the fact that he himself will probably not have to deal with the long-term and disastrous side effects of his actions.

We cannot operate indefinitely on such a huge deficit. Where does it end? There are too many hand-outs and too many golden handshakes. Until they stop, the deficit will continue to grow until our citizens are eventually taxed to death, the nation goes bankrupt and our dollars will become worthless souvenirs, like the deutschemark of bygone days when a full wheelbarrow would buy only a loaf of bread.

It was indicated earlier this Spring, supposedly in defence of Government spending practices, that Cabinet committees were taking responsibility for expenditure management following guidelines set out by the Lambert Commission. Glowing words were spoken about checks and balances on spending. If these checks and balances were in place and functioning, why did the Auditor General have so much to say in his recent Report? As Hon. Members will recall, there were many indictments of over-spending in that Report. Bill C-151 with its inflated requirements for capital is a good example of how much attention has been paid to the noble efforts of Mr. Kenneth Dye.

In the past weeks, we have heard abundant eloquence from Government benches justifying the supplementary borrowing authority on the grounds that it is inevitable spending and that somehow they have done their best and we should accept that. Well, their best is just not good enough. Figures abound to confirm the fact that Government spending has risen much faster than the Consumer Price Index or the Gross National Product. There can be no arguing there. Let us not turn this country into another Sweden where free enterprise is virtually dead and where the tax burden is unbearable. Yet that is where we are headed because of a Government that borrows increasingly and expects carte blanche to do so.

In conclusion, the Government must exercise more responsibility in dealing with the financial affairs of the nation. One way for it to do so is to determine right now that it will make an effort to cut down on the deficit by cleaning house and following the recommendations of the Auditor General. The second way for the Government to exercise more responsibility is to encourage the increased participation of Parliament in fiscal affairs. That is a tradition that all Members would like to see unheld and which would be of benefit to all Canadians.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-151, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with Bill C-151, let us first of all see what the Bill does. It gives the Government authority to borrow on behalf of the taxpayers of this country a further $14.7 billion. This is in addition to $16 billion in authority that it already possesses for this year through Bill C-143, for a total of no less than $30.7 billion. However, the financial requirements for this year are only $26.7 billion. The Government is thus seeking authority to borrow $4 billion more than it says it needs. What is this additional $4 billion for? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has never come into the House and explained what this further requirement of $4 billion is required for. Is it required for a Government slush fund? Is it the world's most expensive safety net, or just what is it? The Minister of Finance has never said.

Moreover, $2 billion of the authority granted in this Bill and $2 billion of the authority granted in Bill C-143 does not have to be used this year. It does not lapse until it is used. Parliament is being asked to grant authority today that might not be used until the year 2000. Think that over very carefully, Mr. Speaker. It is a long time ahead. Why is the Government so anxious to get this additional money that it may not use for a very, very long time?

This year's deficit has been 15 years in the making. It is due partly to slow economic growth and partly to irresponsible fiscal policies. The deficit has climbed from $491 million in 1968-69 to $31.3 billion this year. Spending has climbed from $12.6 billion in 1968-69 to $100.2 billion, on a national accounts basis, this year. Yet in August, 1969, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) warned, and I quote his words, "We'd be on the road to financial disaster if nothing was done to bring spending under control".

What has the Prime Minister done to bring spending under control? Absolutely nothing. Hon. Members opposite have been spending as though life is one great spree—spend, spend, spend—and the taxpayers of this country will make up the difference.

What are the costs of all this reckless spending? The growing interest burden is $1,800 per taxpayer or $700 per capita per year.

I should like to deal for a moment with the question of reduced fiscal flexibility. One revenue dollar in three today is used to service the debt, as opposed to one dollar in nine 15 years ago. For every $3 the Government spends, it must borrow $1. If there had been no deficits since 1968 the cost of servicing the debt this year would be $2 billion, not $18 billion. That is a shocking thought, Mr. Speaker. It shows the complete financial irresponsibility of the Government.

Let us look at the fact that private sector spending has been crowded out more and more by what the Government has been doing. This year the financial requirements of the Government will be equal to 84 per cent of expected personal savings. Interest rates could rise this Fall if private sector loans pick up as a consequence of recovery. As for confidence, the investment community does not trust a Government that continues to live so far beyond its means. That is one of the reasons it is so difficult for the economy of this country to get on its feet and produce the jobs our people so badly need.

Now let us look at the future. To date the Government has come to Parliament seven times in this session to ask for more borrowing authority in the following Bills, Bills C-30, C-59, C-111, C-125, C-128, C-143 and C-151. In fiscal 1982-83 alone, the Government came to Parliament, hat in hand, four times to seek borrowing authority.

The fiscal projections tabled with the April 19 budget would suggest that Parliament is in for a steady stream of borrowing authority Bills over the next few years. The financial requirements of the Government of Canada over the next four years will total $93.2 billion, so Bill C-143 and Bill C-151 are just the tip of the iceberg.

Over the four-year period extending from 1983-84 to 1986-87, the Government projects total spending of $438.1 billion on a national accounts basis or $390.5 billion on a public accounts basis. The deficit will total $112.3 billion.

The Government's fiscal mismanagement is hurting the business community very much indeed. Interest rates have been higher than need be the case as a consequence of heavy Government borrowing. The Government has tried to raise revenues through measures that will hurt the business community. The "half-year convention" will hurt the cash flow of business. The 12.5 per cent small business dividend distribution tax will punish small-businessmen who dare to become successful enough to pay a dividend.

The Small Business Development Bond has become a "bailout" bond with an interesting Catch-22 situation—you cannot apply unless you are in trouble and if you are in trouble, the bank will not lend you the money. Is that not a shocking situation, Mr. Speaker?

Small-businessmen are no longer able to participate in new deferred profit-sharing plans. Increased taxes on employee benefits will place increased wage demands on employers and make it hard to recruit employees in remote areas. There is a need for less Government red tape and paperwork.

The April, 1983 budget does not go far enough in undoing the damage of the 1981 budget, particularly as far as small business is concerned. The investment tax credit and share purchase tax credits are, in the words of CFIB President John Bullock " . . . much too restrictive . . . 90 per cent of business startups in labour intensive industries like retail, service and distribution are ignored."

The indexed security investment plan will be of use in attracting equity investment in large firms but no offsetting measures are offered for small business. The Liberal's national energy policy has virtually destroyed the oil and gas industry. It has brought energy investment to a halt and stopped megaprojects which would have created thousands of jobs across Canada. The Special Recovery Capital Projects are a drop in the bucket compared to the lost megaprojects.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it does not give me necessarily a great deal of pleasure to participate in the debate here this afternoon because I believe this Bill is a rather shocking record of the Government across the floor from us. We are in second reading of Bill C-151, the borrowing authority, where the Government is asking us for $14.7 billion to continue its general business of running, or lack of proper running, of the Government of Canada. This is in addition to $16 billion for which it still has borrowing authority approved under Bill C-143, which was passed by Parliament in February.

The reason this is so shocking, Mr. Speaker, is that since June, 1982, the Government has come to us, the Parliament of Canada, to ask for borrowing authority, including this time, on five separate occasions. There was Bill C-111 in June, 1982, in which the Government asked for $6.6 billion. Then it came back with Bill C-125 and asked for $7 billion. Following that there was Bill C-128 in which it asked for $4 billion. Then there was Bill C-143 in which it asked for $19 billion. Now there is Bill C-151 in which it is asking for $14.7 billion. That is an accumulated amount of $51.3 billion, Mr. Speaker, since June, 1982, until the present time, a period of one year. That is an average of over $4 billion a month which this Government is asking to borrow so that it can sustain the general operations of the Government which it has created. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that part of the problem is that there is a real lack of planning by this Government. There is certainly no long or medium-term planning. At best, there may be some short-term planning which comes into practice in the programs.

The Government purports to be doing good for the Canadian people, but I would suggest it is doing very little by way of good for the Canadian people when one looks at the horrendous amount of the national debt which has accumulated over the years from the deficit budgets of this Liberal Government. We are finding that an ever increasing amount of the general revenue which is coming in is going toward paying interest on the national debt. It is coming to a point where the taxpayers of this country can no longer afford to sustain a Government which goes on a spending spree which can be compared somewhat to that of a drunken sailor. Unless we start doing some long-term planning in this country, we are going to find ourselves in a position of not being able to maintain any sort of decent standard within the federal Government.

If one looks back to the time after the February election in 1980, one finds that we in western Canada were promised a Western Development Fund of some $4 billion. I would like to find out where that Western Development Fund is today, Mr. Speaker, because we have never seen it come into reality in western Canada. It is just the same as many of the programs promised in eastern Canada which have never come into existence. There have been false and empty promises, and that aggravates me and it is why it does not give me a great deal of pleasure to even participate in the debate today in this House of Commons on this borrowing authority Bill. When we asked questions about the Western Development Fund, we were told that it is still in the planning stage. When we asked where the money was, they said it had not been appropriated as yet. When we asked which Minister was in charge of the Western Development Fund, they knew not which Minister was in charge of it. When we asked which programs fall under the Western Development Fund, they could not tell us. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that there never was a Western Development Fund. It was an attractive bit of verbiage which was put into the Throne Speech when this parliamentary session first started back in the Spring of 1980.

That Western Development Fund, which was much talked about, was dreamed up in order to grab some headlines in the press for the present Liberal Government. Some people thought that maybe it would be at least a patronage program for some areas of the country, but it was not even that. The Western Development Fund did not exist. There were no special appropriations set out for a Western Development Fund. Instead of that, the bolstering up of the economy in western Canada has gone in reverse. Government has taken away from the economy of western Canada, particularly from farming.

In our agricultural sector we find that farm bankruptcies this year are up 130 per cent over the same period last year. In addition to that, an increased burden is being placed upon the farmers, the producers in Canada, by removing the statutory Crow rate. Just what does that mean? I will pick two delivery points, Mr. Speaker, one being that of The Battlefords, where, by the year 1990, just the cost to the farmers who deliver to that delivery point alone would be an additional $1.15 million per year. For the town of Meadow Lake, a population of only 4,000 people or a little less, to deliver to that one delivery point would take out of the pockets of the farmers $1.43 million per year. Depending on which agricultural economist you want to listen to, that agricultural dollar has a multiplier effect of between four to seven times. Therefore, in the Meadow Lake area alone, for the farmers who deliver to the elevators at Meadow Lake it could cost very close to $10 million a year out of that community. In The Battlefords it would be almost an equal amount. So instead of saying the Government is helping us by these great programs which it is putting into place, it is actually helping our country deteriorate in an economic sense. I believe that the consequences of that will have social repercussions which this Liberal Government will grow to regret in the years to come.

The Government takes away also from the fishing industry under the guise of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. In what should be a thriving fishing industry on the East and West Coasts, we find that fishermen have to go out to look for other areas of work, work that does not exist because of the way that this Government has run down the fishing industry as well. Lake Athabasca in the northern part of my constituency, which operates under the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, no longer has anyone fishing in the lake. This is the largest lake in the Province. It is now costing the fishermen more to transport their fish to the Strathcona plant in Winnipeg than the price they are receiving for their catch from the lake.

I believe, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that we are in very bad trouble. We are finding industries such as agriculture, fishing and manufacturing going down. Those people, especially in fishing and farming, are looking to other places for employment, either leaving agriculture and fishing, or looking to other areas to augment or supplement their incomes. But those jobs are not there in other areas as well, Mr. Speaker. I think that speaks volumes for the poor record of this Liberal Government.

• (1630)

I have many letters and, as you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, petitions which come in every week from my constituency asking that this Government do some sort of long-term planning that people can rely on for their own planning for the future. Canada should have a very vibrant economy. We have an abundance of natural resources and a very small population. If this Government cannot plan in such a way that our wealth can be distributed more equitably among the population of this country then I think the Government should go to the people of Canada and get the real message that people want to give to this Liberal Government.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish). That is probably the closest that side of the House has come to moving over to a conservative stand.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fennell: We are finally getting some wisdom from them. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, the whole world is going conservative. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has decided that his socialist programs are not working so he has turned over and is trying to go conservative. But I think it is too late for him and I hope we in the Opposition can build our support and become the next Government. I believe we will because we have been consistent, whereas the Liberals are inconsistent; they are up one day, down the next. So I commend the Hon. Member who just spoke. He hit on a number of very important points.

The Hon. Member referred to fishing and farming. That is a concern in my riding but not a large one because it is predominantly industrial and suburban. But we have the same problems in Ontario that they have in the West. There is no difference between what is happening in our Province and what is happening in the Hon. Member's Province. Perhaps in his Province things may be moving ahead a little more with the aggressive policy which has been established out there, but this federal Government is not addressing the major problem of a lack of long-term planning. The last time I spoke in this House, and I have spoken so often on this—

Mr. Fisher: That is true.

Mr. Fennell: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary knows how often I have had to speak against additional borrowing, five times in one year, and I think four of those were in about four months.

Mr. Fisher: We are accountable to Parliament.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What you need is a good accountant.

Mr. Fennell: Does the Government not know it should have a plan that will last at least one fiscal year?

Mr. Fisher: Tell that to your finance critic.

Mr. Fennell: The Government brought in its budget and now it keeps hitting us with additional borrowing. Where is it going to stop? This is a sham. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) set our deficit this year at $31 billion. He now indicates he does not expect it to be that bad. The game the Government is playing is very simple. It was going to be $31 billion but, ladies and gentlemen, we have done such an excellent job of getting this economy back on the tracks that it is only $25 billion. Well, Mr. Speaker, whether it be $25 billion, $30 billion or $50 billion, it is too much and the country cannot stand it.

This will have a negative impact on future generations. We are not going to be taxing the present generation because all this money will do is to cover 50 per cent of the interest expense on this Government's debt. In 1968-69 when the Prime Minister came to office, there was an annual expenditure of about $12 billion. I cannot get my hands on these figures, but I understand the debt was less than 10 per cent of what it is today. Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Parliamentary Secretary across the way should, if the Minister of Finance is unable to, develop a schedule of how much money we owe, to whom and when it is due.

Mr. Fisher: Read the budget.

Mr. Fennell: My concern is with the deficit, Mr. Speaker, because I have five children. I do not know how many hundreds of thousands of children in my constituency will be faced with this debt. The borrowing goes on and on and it does not reflect any over-all Government planning. I call it a band-aid, but it is a hodge-podge where everything is sort of thrown together.

I believe an election is coming, Mr. Speaker, because the Government is paying off all these areas across Canada with make work projects. That is not solving our criticial problem.

The Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) has acknowledged that we have an unemployment problem. These small, short-term programs are not going to solve that problem. We put $5 billion out here, $5 billion out there. I do not think many people in this country can comprehend how much $1 billion is, let alone $30 billion. Well, it is thirty thousand million. It has nine zeroes after the number. That is an immense sum of money and no one in this country can comprehend it. If our total debt is $135 billion and we divide that among the 24 million people, you have around $6,000 for every man, woman and child in the country.

We really cannot go on with this. I expect another borrowing Bill will be brought in in September when we come back or during the Summer, if we sit in the Summer. Where does it stop? We do not know why this money is needed now. Is the Government replacing previous high interest borrowings? If so, I can accept that. But I do not believe they have to come to the House for that. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), who spoke just before me the last time on this Bill, has developed, along with one of his colleagues, an excellent program which would really assist us in the House in dealing with our over-all expenditure. It would be a great benefit, but he cannot get the formula accepted by the committee in which he is working. That to me is a shame because we must look at Estimates, we must get them long before the budget, and we must know how each Department is going to function, where the money is going to go, and we should know this well in advance. Instead, all we get from this Government on where the money is going is press releases every day about giving more money away to the different sections of the country. It is very difficult for an MP to keep track of all these numbers. I have a file on them all and I will be using it in the next election because it will show where the money is going.

One thing I am very worried about, Mr. Speaker, is that the private sector has had a very short time to do some equity financing. If we go into the marketplace and start competing with the private sector, that opportunity will be eliminated. Again we will force the private sector cost of interest up and up. The higher it gets, the more the private sector must capitalize its interest costs and the less productive it is. This is the one point to which I am really violently opposed because I am sure that following this borrowing authority Bill our interest rates will rise. It has already been seen throughout the U.S. market, which is experiencing the same problem, but we are just following the Americans. We could have done something better, but we did not. Our interest rates will rise and the country will be in the same morass that we were in less than a year ago.

• (1640)

I understand that my allotted time has almost expired. I have enjoyed the opportunity of speaking to the House on the subject. I regret that we will not be able to stop this borrowing authority with our numbers; otherwise, we would. I am against it. I need more explanation. I need more reasons for the need for this money.

Borrowing Authority

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, it seems as if it were just yesterday that I was standing here in the Chamber debating a Bill in which the Government requested the right to borrow $19 billion, the largest borrowing authority Bill in the history of Parliament. Now, just a few short weeks later, I find myself rising again to debate what the Government is asking to borrow, an additional $14.7 billion. So little time has elapsed since then that I clearly remember well my concern. At that time the Government was requesting to borrow $19 billion. It seemed that my concerns had fallen on deaf ears. I was concerned about the wasteful Government spending which has been going on for the past 15 years. Tax dollars have been spent on advocacy advertising, $70 million to tell us, among other things, of the wonders of the six and five program, to tell us what a good job the Government is doing. Billions have gone toward bailing out Dome Petroleum and Canadair. I was also concerned about the effects an accumulated deficit of $134 billion would have on the youth of today and on each and every taxpayer who will have to bear this heavy burden year after year.

It is just a few weeks since I rose in the House, and nothing has been done to alleviate those concerns I expressed. Those concerns still stand today, but they have an even greater effect because the figures have changed. For the seventh time, we are debating the right to borrow additional money. We are now facing an accumulated deficit of nearly $150 billion and a deficit for this fiscal year of $31.3 billion. We cannot expect much change in the next four years with a predicted yearly deficit averaging $25 billion.

Since this time last year, the Government has received authority to borrow $41 billion to meet such costs as those involved in operating various social programs which have skyrocketed because of the recession. Every three or four months the Government has come and asked the House to approve yet another borrowing Bill. The frightening trend has been established and this financial practice just cannot be allowed to continue. The Government cannot continue to operate under the impression that it will be given additional authority to borrow billions of dollars every time it feels the need to do so.

As was evident in the last Bill and with respect to at least $4 billion requested in the current Bill, the Government is not justifying the need to borrow funds. Since 1980, a total of $61.6 billion worth of borrowing authority has come and gone through the House. We are now asked to give authority for a further $14.7 billion. The Government feels that it should be able to spend and spend without any control over its spending. I strongly believe that the Government has lost all sense of fiscal responsibility it once had. It appears to have lost the ability to budget accurately and cannot work within the financial limits it has imposed upon itself. I am amazed and, at the same time, frightened by the "laissez-faire" attitude of the Government which treats billions of dollars without any concern whatsoever. Those billions are adding up faster than we could ever have imagined, yet the Government keeps requesting more and more to add to our already escalating deficit figure. It is never ending.

Let us briefly consider the purpose of the latest request for borrowing authority. The Minister has indicated that the money will be used to cover the expenditures outlined in his recent budget. At that time the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) told us that he would need $26.7 billion to cover his current expenditures. Of that sum total, the Government had already received the authority to borrow $16 billion under the last borrowing Bill, Bill C-143, leaving an additional $10.7 billion to cover the remaining expenses outlined in the Special Recovery Projects, additional funding for Summer Canada and other employment programs, and for the Home Ownership Stimulation and Home Renovation Plans. We can certainly provide our support to fund these projects provided they achieve the goals they are set out to achieve. However, recent experience has revealed that many of these programs are only a smokescreen and will not create the number of immediate jobs which the Minister indicated they would, to say little of meeting long-term employment needs, which is desperately required here. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) has already outlined those inadequacies in her excellent speech given four weeks ago in response to the Minister's introduction of the financial budget. Therefore, I do not wish to dwell further on those. Instead, I will go on to deal with the remaining $4 billion of borrowing authority which I have not mentioned.

The Government has indicated that it is requesting this additional money as a contingency fund, just in case. Just in case of what? Can the Government not predict its expenditures for the next six months? Does it not know how much it will have to spend on the present programs? If it is not able to do so, then perhaps it should not be running the country.

It appears that we as legislators are constantly being asked to approve requests for additional funds without ever knowing the justification or the reasons. We do not know whether, in actual fact, there is a requirement of the Government for these moneys or for whatever reasons. If there is not a justifiable need for additional funds, then we should not be burdening the taxpayer with greater deficits to shoulder through the addition of interest payments on money which was not needed in the first place. We as legislators should be concerned with the responsible dispatch of tax dollars and the Government must be accountable to Parliament for the tax dollars spent. We must ensure that we have control over the public purse. I fear that we are coming dangerously close to losing that control.

Government Departments spend as if there were a bottomless pit. There are no incentives whatsoever for them to curtail their spending estimates from year to year, thus reducing their budgets. Naturally, each year a Department estimates its spending needs. Rather than turning back any funds it has not expended, projects or non-essential programs are found to utilize those funds. If the money is there, it will be spent. That is why I believe the Government must only request borrowing authority for what is actually needed and justified. Funds should not be requested for what the Government only thinks it may need. There is a big difference. Until the Government regains its sense of responsibility and justifies its request to Parliament, the country will forever be in debt, mortgaging away the future of Canada.

I appreciated the opportunity of taking part in the debate at this time.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to follow the speech of the Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt) in this debate in the House of Commons which is of some significance, and I will deal with it. I am glad that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) is present in the House, because I will consider the Bill in the light of a matter which was reported in terms of Government revenue today. I want him to be here to listen to what I have to say.

I very well remember the day the Leader of the Opposition and I had the privilege of bringing the Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville into the House and introducing her to the Speaker. It was a very happy day. She has justified the faith of those of us who helped her in the course of events since she has come here. I think she has shown great concern for the senior citizens, the youth, the unemployed, and those among whom I would call the disadvantaged in the community today.

• (1650)

I am also very pleased to have heard the speech from my friend, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish). He and I do not kick with the same foot politically. But I thought he was getting awfully close to putting on my shoes when he was worried about the size of the deficit. I want to congratulate him for his conversion, perhaps a death bed conversion, but a conversion nonetheless that warms our hearts when we listen to this kind of change that comes about when the House is considering further borrowing of $14.7 billion.

I do not know how the Government came to that figure. The Government said $14.7 billion and some cents. We would be no better than in the position we are. It is a mammoth figure. We have become so used to thinking in terms of billions that we have translated C. D. Howe's "What's a million?" into "What's a billion?". That is what has happened to this Government and its expenditures. Why, Mr. Speaker? It is because this Government forgot the biblical injunction that should hang over all governments that they should store up in the good years against the bad. What happened to this profligate Government through a whole range of Ministers of Finance from John M. Turner to the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), to Mr. Macdonald—what was his first name?

Mr. Fennell: Donald.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Donald Macdonald, now the Bay Street baron who is looking after the interest of our country on that Royal Commission, to the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), to the former Minister of Finance who has been sent to his resting place in External Affairs. What we have had is the policy of spend, spend, spend, no hard decisions, no choices, no priority giving at all, until we find ourselves in this position, that caused the present Minister of Finance to bow a little in the direction of some programs, which are important and which were contained in his last budget, and to defer the taxation and payment for those programs somewhere down the road when our Government will likely have to deal with the matter.

In the meantime, as the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake said, it has accumulated, up to and including this Bill, a borrowing record for any government per capita in North America an amount of $51.83 billion since June, 1982. That is $4 billion a month. That is what it amounts to. Why do I mention that figure, this grasping for borrowed money, this mortgaging of the future? Why do I mention that figure in relation to the Minister of National Revenue? I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker. I want to bring to his attention a case of a small company that has been victimized by the Department of National Revenue for the sake of some $60,000. This is an amount the company owes because it did not pay withholding tax on salaries. The company admits that was wrong. It was balancing priorities. The Minister's Department moved in on this company. The story is in today's paper. The company involved is Kitcraft Enterprises Ltd. This company is located in the riding of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). Where was he when that company needed protection? Where was he? The Department moved in and tried to collect $60,000. The Department did this when it knew there was evidence that the company was negotiating—it had the support of the bank—with the Eastern Ontario Development Corporation for more funds. What is their position now? If the company goes bankrupt as a result of the move by the Minister of National Revenue, the Government will not get the $60,000. The 20 workers or others who might come along will not get any security of employment in that situation. That is not supportive of a small business doing its best to get itself out of a difficult problem. I suggest that when that happens and the Government in the same breath asks me to approve, willy-nilly, $14 billion in borrowing, I will have to say that the Government has its priorities all wrong. That $14 billion in borrowing and its addition to the deficit will not provide the atmosphere where small business or large business will look forward to an era where the deficits will become less and less a drag on investment opportunities and opportunities to expand.

I listened to the Minister of Finance's budget speech. I tried to find some place where he did what should have been done, not wipe the deficit out in a week, or a month, or a year, or two years, but at least begin as my seatmate did, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Crosbie), who began in his own way to attack the deficit in 1979. But the difference between 1979 and 1983 is that we have lost those years. Members on the Government side know that. It burns me up when I read in the paper about the Government's sweating the taxpayer, putting someone out of business for $60,000, which action will not do the Government any good. The Government will not collect the money. At the same time that the Government does that it comes into the House and has the guts to ask the House to approve out of hand a borrowing that is criminal in its size and sinful in its intent, because its actions do not do one thing to lower the deficit. They do absolutely nothing to lower the deficit. Then I read the same budget which, in human terms—

Mr. Lang: Job creation.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The Parliamentary Secretary says job creation. If the Parliamentary Secretary had read the budget of the Minister of Finance, he would know that the unemployment rate during the period of time for which the Minister of Finance predicted is not going to change appreciably, and that he and other Members of Parliament are going to have day after day after day coming through their offices people whose legacies have been forgotten by this Government. I am talking about the young people of the country, those between the ages of 14 and 25 years for whom, as any statistical analyst will tell you, there is no hope of any change. I am an optimistic person by nature. I heard that budget, the plaudits, the acclaim, but I saw those statistics in terms of employment. I read the column of Jack McArthur in the Toronto Star who argues:

> It's true that the jobless rate for the 15-to-24 age group has bloated to terribly high percentages.

But then Mr. McArthur says:

> But it hasn't increased any more rapidly—

Isn't that a comfort? Mr. McArthur does not say unemployment will go down. Mr. McArthur says it will increase, that it is going to maintain itself. We have become used to these high figures in this country. We have become used to sin. We have become immune to these figures and these things. But I am not immune to them. I think they are a shame. I believe that before a government comes before Parliament to ask it to approve this kind of borrowing it had better do something about those people, that small business to which I have referred and a host of other people and businesses who are finding they are disadvantaged at the end of a long Liberal tenure.

• (1700)

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the contribution of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) who I think has put a great case before the Minister. As a farmer I have been required to go to the bank quite often this last while to try to keep my enterprise going. The banker is becoming more reluctant to say yes. In fact, the next time he may say no. We all know that there are limits on individuals in society as to how much they can borrow, yet the Government in this session of Parliament kept returning to borrow more and more money for programs. I believe the Government came before us seven times in this session of Parliament.

I have listened to my grandfather and my father talk about the recession and Depression of the 1930s and how they grew up with a feeling of frugality. They had to be cautious about their expenditures and plan their businesses well so that if times were hard there was a little something to keep them going. That generation grew up saving and preparing themselves for difficult times. Perhaps the Premier of the Province of Alberta had some experience in that regard. He set up the Heritage Trust Fund in the early 1970s when things were going well. Right up until 1980 there was revenue coming in. A decision was made then that perhaps the good times could not continue forever and that money should be set aside, which was not necessary at the time and could have overheated the economy, for difficult times. Now the Province of Alberta is reaping the rewards of that decision and is drawing on that fund to assist its people. In terms of unemployment, Alberta is suffering as much as other Provinces. Its unemployment rate has doubled in the last year, but at least that money was set aside.

As was pointed out previously, the Government of Canada set aside nothing in that period of prosperity. In fact, the Ministers of Finance established deficits in their budgets and added more and more programs, perhaps to gain another election victory or for whatever purpose. They saw no difficulty in going to Parliament to borrow. The same has happened to the generation in which I grew up. We were relatively pampered. Things went well in the early 1950s. It was easy for my generation to go out and borrow and prosper. Suddenly many of them have lost their businesses and homes because they went too far in that regard. The Government should recognize this.

In that same period of time young people were driving big cars and were not very concerned about the future when they left jobs. There was no problem because there were plenty of available jobs. But as the present generation leaves school, they find that the country has no need for them. They are faced with high unemployment rates at the same time as they reluctantly look to the Government for assistance. They find that there is not much assistance and that they cannot put their faith in governments to solve the problems. In fact, in many cases governments are causing the problems.

When I ask some of my young constituents why they are in despair, they say that they looked to a future in the oil industry but the Government took it away from them with its National Energy Program. Tens of thousands of jobs which should have been available to people in my riding have now been lost as a result of Government policy. They do not look to a bright future. I suspect they will grow up in much the same way as some of our ancestors, reluctant to invest and to help our country out of difficulties as a result of leadership which has not followed the best economic policies in the last ten years or 15 years.

The Government comes to Parliament requesting not only the necessary borrowing authority to take it through the next few months. No, that is not adequate. It comes with a request which is far greater than what is actually needed. If it provided leadership to the citizens of the nation and said that it would borrow what was needed this month and attempt to pull back on its programs so that it would not have to return for more money next month, then I suspect Canadians would tell Parliament to pass the Bill. But that is not what the Government is doing; that is not the leadership it is providing. Not only have we passed a borrowing Bill a few months ago, it still has adequate borrowing and in fact a carryover of $2 billion. It is coming to Parliament before the summer recess and asking for another massive amount of money, some $14.7 billion, with very little justification as to how it will be spent or how it intends to be frugal in its spending practices.

We have had some success in convincing the Government that this theory is wrong. We have asked it over and over to come before Parliament with reasonable requirements and we would pass them quickly. We have indicated that if it had to come to Parliament more often, it would be fine as long as there was justification for it and it could show that it was attempting to cut back in extraordinary expenditures. But when Government comes before us requesting much more money than it needs for the next few months, it is very difficult for me as a Member of Parliament and for many others in this Chamber to say yes.

We have to show Canadians that we are capable of functioning without ever increasing deficits, without constantly borrowing and spending beyond our means. If we do not, we are not providing leadership to our young citizens, businesses and others that will encourage them to participate. We still have groups of people in Canada who are demanding far more than they require. If some group is successful enough to receive its demand, then other groups ask for the same even with massive unemployment, massive bankruptcies and so on.

If we do not get our spending under control, the programs which will suffer first are the social ones. Many people are now saying that we cannot afford these programs. I agree that there are some we cannot afford, but there are many others in times of recession which are absolutely necessary. I am sure in the next while they will be the ones which the Government and people will be attacking.

Rather than spending billions of dollars on establishing new Crown corporations, even one that does not spend much money but is superfluous, such as Canagrex, the Government seeks authority to borrow more money. Instead of pulling in its horns and offering incentives to the private sector that can provide jobs and help us out of the recession, we are faced with budgets that provide for larger deficits and more borrowing for federal Government spending.

I see my time has gone, Mr. Speaker; it goes by so fast.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be here but I am not particularly pleased to be speaking on another borrowing Bill, Bill C-151 to borrow $14.7 billion, $4 billion of which the Government has given no indication as to how it will be spent or why it is wanted. This borrowing puts the borrowing per month over the last year at more than $1 billion per week. That is a fantastic record for the Government of Canada, probably a record among many countries of the world. Our friends opposite often challenge us to be specific about where we in the NDP or those in the Conservative Party would make cuts if we were in Government. Such cuts could easily be listed because over the years the Auditor General has given us thousands of examples of where Government has badly managed its expenditures.

• (1710)

What does a Government have to do? Quite a number of practical suggestions have been made over the past number of weeks that this Bill has been before us as to how the deficit could be cut. Government Members must ask themselves whether they should continue to advocate the kind of deficiencies that appear in the operations of Government because deficits just do not happen. They are either planned or accidents of bad management or planning. In many cases, analysing Government spending turns up examples of bad management and bad planning.

My constituents ask me why this was allowed to happen, how the Government ever got in the situation in which it finds itself. They ask whether this kind of deficit financing and borrowing is of value to the country and whether it has been necessary over a long period of time.

For many years Canadian Governments did well in balancing their budgets. The first big spender in Government was Diefenbaker. Every year of the Diefenbaker Government there was a fairly large deficit. When we look at it now, it appears as though it were a small deficit. That was the beginning of the big spenders. The Pearson Government which followed balanced a couple of budgets. However, since this administration has been in power, this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been the second of the big spenders.

This Government is well assisted in the expending of money by Crown corporations which the Government says must operate at arm's length. We in this Party are often attacked by the Liberals and Conservatives who say we are the big spenders. However, the Government record in Saskatchewan proves that even though we put before the people of that Province good programs and expenditures, we did not plan large deficits such as this Government is doing.

Saskatchewan was the deepest in debt of all Provinces in 1944 when the first CCF Government was elected. After 30 years, with the exception of Alberta, it had the least public debt. Over those years, it had put in place some of the best social programs in Canada, if not the world, and paid for them. That is what I mean when I say that planned spending is what is important.

Last year the Conservative Government of Saskatchewan had a larger deficit than in the previous 77 years. The planned deficit this year will be higher than in the previous 78 years. If it continues in this way, it will soon catch up to the federal Government.

When we allow the Government to proceed with a Bill such as the one before us, Bill C-151, it is our responsibility to see whether the Government is a good custodian of the taxpayers' money. It is part of our responsibility to ensure that what the Government spends is well spent. For example, if in the past it was a good custodian and spent well, maybe then we could be expected to support it when it asks for more money.

Let us look at the record of this Government. Let us look at the last annual Report of the Auditor General. I could go through many such Reports of the Auditor General and pick out thousands of authentic examples of bad expending of money. It is interesting to note that the Auditor Genral said in his 1982 report. It will paraphrase rather than read the exact quote. He stated that the examples they chose to put in the 1982 Report were not the worst or the best examples. If they are not the worst examples, I would like to see them, because what he listed in his Report illustrates the weakness in Government spending and control.

I would like to list some of those examples. A number of people who appeared before the committee talked about how the Government could take control of its spending so that spending did not continue, absolutely out of control, as stated by the previous Auditor General. There are a number of obvious examples in the Auditor General's Report. Statutory expenditures over which Parliament has no control are quite often over-expended and are often indexed. They were set 15 years ago and have been indexed ever since without any need or effort to make those increases viable in any way. They just increased automatically. We have no control over expenditures by Crown corporations. We have no control over money put out by this Government in the form of letters of comfort. Parliament does not have control, nor does the Government it seems, over tax credits established over many years and never reviewed expenditures. Let us look at some of these. All of these together have led to a $250 billion deficit, $180 billion in the public accounts and the rest in areas over which Parliament has no control. It is time we got that kind of control over expenditures, that we had some input with regard to the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, if I have caused some disappointment over there, I am genuinely sorry. It is my intention to join in the debate this afternoon. Rather than being somewhat repetitious by talking about what has been repeated many times, I think that it would be appropriate if my remarks dealt with the agricultural sector, a subject which I feel more at home with and which I think should be discussed at this time.

I want to talk about borrowing in the agricultural sector, and more particularly about the agricultural sector's repayment of borrowed funds. It is the repayment of borrowed funds that has brought on what I would consider to be a very serious crisis in the agricultural sector right across Canada. This crisis has been most noticeable over recent months.

I must say that it is one thing for the Government to come before Parliament and ask for borrowing authority for $26.7 billion but quite another to conscientiously explain how that amount may ever be repaid. If a member of the agricultural sector buys a farm or any part of a farm, repayment is a pretty important factor. The farmer dare not ignore the aspect of repayment or he will be in trouble right from the beginning. Of course, farmers do not have the luxury of a national debt that can pile up indefinitely without any concern, and this is the impression with which we in Parliament leave the farmer, especially when we talk about a borrowing Bill.

Private Members' Bill C-653, at present before the Agricultural subcommittee, is attemting to address this problem of borrowing and the consequential repayment of borrowed funds that is faced by the agricultural sector right at this moment. Various witnesses who have come before this subcommittee have emphasized a number of facts that I believe we should talk about and discuss. As has been brought out in the subcommittee, most of the farmers who are in serious trouble are younger, and I think it is fair to say that, to a degree, they are less experienced. Many of them seem to be around the age of 30 which, when one spends a whole lifetime farming, is a rather young age.

A larger percentage of those farmers who are in trouble seem to be involved in my industry, the beef cattle industry, and perhaps this is understandable since the cattle industry has traditionally been a long-term type of farming operation. It takes many years to become established as a beef cattle farmer with a complete turnover in operation. It does not matter what sector of the cattle industry one is involved in, whether it is the cow-calf sector or the feeding industry or even the breeding industry, they are all long-term operations. The long-term nature of the cattle industry is perhaps understandable since I have always felt that it takes at least four to five years before a complete cow-calf cycle can fulfill itself or, by the same token, fail. This adds considerably to the financing of any cattle operation.

The year 1982 continuing into 1983 was easily the worst year of many years, and for many farmers it was a disastrous year. We are still accounting for that, and the subcommittee is making it rather obvious. The immediate explanation for this unsuccessful year is that dramatically increased operating costs have been so apparent over this period of time. Such increased operating costs include interest rates that have been as high as well over 20 per cent, record high fuel and fertilizer costs, record high farm land costs at least up to the end of 1981, and a major reduction in farm production prices such as all cereal grain prices, some of which have dropped well over $1 a bushel over the last two crop years. We have also seen continuing low cattle prices persist industry-wide over the same two years. We have seen all-time record high machinery and equipment costs, and we must not forget that repair costs for that equipment are also at a record high. A continuation of all these factors has created this crisis in agriculture for many of the younger farmers. Essentially, it is a crisis in borrowing and repayment on the individual farm level.

Very often during the subcommittee hearings I have received personal comments and letters from farmers outlining their particular crisis. They invariably make a statement which I have heard many times and which goes something like this: "Through no fault of our own, a series of disasters has brought on some final crisis or final demise of my operation." The farmers emphasize that this occurs through no fault of their own. In many cases those farmers were probably alluding to such traditional farm hazards as drought, especially in western Canada, killing frosts, especially in the summertime, and various forms of plant pests and diseases. The same goes for livestock farmers.

These and many other farming hazards are more or less routine or standard hazards that any farmer must face. If the farmer is serious about engaging in the farming occupation all his life, then surely he must plan according to those risks. Certainly a serious drought or a killing frost is not the farmer's fault, and we all recognize that, but surely all farmers, especially successful ones, are well aware of this risk and must be prepared to acquire a philosophy of living with this possible difficulty. It is part of farming as a way of life. We must learn to farm in spite of these hazards, to forget about whose fault it is and to forget about trying to find somebody to blame it on.

One of the factors that has complicated agricultural financing is the dramatic changes that have occurred in Canadian farmland values. From 1971 through to late 1981, a period of about 11 years, the value of western Canadian farmlands, the only lands that I can speak for, has increased five and sixfold. This has occurred over the three Prairie Provinces and is now well documented. From late 1981 to the end of 1982, these same farmlands not only reached their peak in value, but dropped off dramatically. It is difficult to say how much the value dropped because farmland sales have fallen off so much and there are far fewer farms now being offered for sale and less available capital for such purchases. What the value of farmland has dropped to is rather difficult to determine.

As farmland values level off to new and, in my opinion, lower levels, we will perhaps see farmland values come closer to reflecting their actual or true productivity levels. Farmland financing will be more realistic and acceptable by all concerned when this happens. Surely there are serious lessons to be learned by both borrowers and lenders, and surely these are lessons that should have been learned from the example of history. I refer especially to the era of the drought and the Depression of the 1930s.

Over the almost 11 years from 1971 to 1981 while we saw a boom, it is also fair to say that we saw too much bad business judgment by both overanxious young farmers and overzealous and overly aggressive credit sources, mostly banks but also the Farm Credit Corporation and other leading agencies.

Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker.

• (1730)

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in this debate on Bill C-151 and the request of the Government for additional borrowing authority, the voters of Canada and the taxpayers of Kitchener-Waterloo, whom I represent, will want to be reminded that in past months the Government has already come to the House for a series of authorities. This $14.5 billion will bring the authority to a total of $73.3 billion, which in itself indicates the Government's failure to do what taxpayers have had to do, and that is, bring its operations in line with reality.

As we begin to look at this request for borrowing authority we are reminded that since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came to office some 15 years ago, federal spending has increased more than eightfold. The Estimates of the Government tabled some months ago are part of the continuum of economic mismanagement going back to 1968. As we are asked to give approval to this and as we seek to indicate why we will not vote for this authority, we are reminded that the federal budget was comfortably in balance when Prime Minister Trudeau and his Ministers took control in the 1960s. The years that followed brought a record of increased deficits.

The Government's expenditures have risen from $10.7 billion in the fiscal year 1968-69 to at least $88.9 billion in the 1983-84 fiscal year. Of this amount $2 billion does not have to be used this year and may be carried forward to the future. Thus the Government has a cushion of $2 billion for this year plus a cushion of $2 billion to be used in any year it may choose. This gives it far more flexibility than any Parliament ought to give any Government, let alone this Government with its track record of expenditures.

The authority granted through the borrowing Bill is only part of the picture. Many Crown corporations do not require special authority from Parliament to raise funds in the financial markets, nor must they tell Parliament what their financial requirements will be. I suggest there is no urgency for the passage of this Bill and that we as Members of Parliament have a right to give expression to the concerns of Canadians about the actions of the Government.

Part of that concern is reflected in the study undertaken by the Kitchener Chamber of Commerce on the matter of Government spending. It has undertaken a study of the Report of the Auditor General which was tabled recently and it has laid before the Treasury benches and local Members of Parliament copies of its comments. While these indicate that the Government seems to be paying some attention to the recommendations of the Auditor General in the March, 1982 report, the study contains this passage:

> Notwithstanding the improvements in government control procedures cited above, we have continued concern, as does the Auditor General, with the significant waste and inefficiency in the federal government bureaucracy. In particular, we are much concerned with the very apparent use of Crown corporations for political purposes to avoid public scrutiny of government policy and ineptitude.

The study paper indicates concern about Crown corporations as a sub-Government and notes the effect of Government mismanagement and the climate for troubled companies, many of which are in the Waterloo regional area. At one point this report reads as follows:

> Mr. Donald Johnston was recently quoted as saying that the current recession was responsible for eliminating a number of marginal Canadian companies and that we should alter our course and proceed with industries that are relevant and viable in today's economic environment. We believe that this policy should also apply to government ownership in the private sector through Crown corporations.

The study deals with the management style of the Government in light of the management style that has been forced upon many small-businesses. The report has this to say:

> In 1981-82, 33 per cent of the federal public civil servants collected a total of $219 million in additional wages as compensation for overtime and at the same time took time off in lieu of payment at additional estimated $25 million. Some public civil servants were paid more in overtime than their regular annual salaries.

This is at a time when the climate for investment and productivity was almost nonexistent, Mr. Speaker. The report says:

> We concur with the comments of the Auditor General for the need for better planning of overtime ... the control of absenteeism and the need for better allocation of overtime work.

In speaking against Bill C-151 for further borrowing authority, I suggest that not only are Canadian taxpayers concerned about the management of their resources but if there is to be expenditure, they are concerned about cost-effectiveness. As the same time as the Government wants great amounts of funds to use it is in the process of cutting off programs which could be of benefit and could be cost-effective in terms of our prison system, for example.

At the same time that it is seeking extra funds comes the penny-wise and pound-foolish announcement of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) that it is too expensive to continue educational programs for prisoners even though there is proof that as a result of these educational programs prisoners come back into society with much less recidivism.

Members of the House and the public will be interested in the case of Larry Cybulski. The Kitchener-Waterloo Record of May 2, 1983, reports as follows:

> Larry Cybulski's university education was cut short this spring only a few credits short of his graduation.
>
> Up to that moment, his education had turned an angry young man into a person who "appreciates that there's more to life," says one of his professors, Elliott Avedon—
>
> But the 34-year old Cybulski is serving a life sentence in Saskatchewan's maximum security prison in Prince Albert. In January, federal Solicitor General Robert Kaplan cut off money for his correspondence courses at UW, saying prisoners must pay for their own education from now on.
> Cybulski is one of 232 out of 10,000 federal prison inmates who are trying to improve themselves through correspondence and in-prison courses. He is proof that education is one of the most successful and cost-effective forms of rehabilitation that prisons have going for them—

This is the reason that university administrators, members of the John Howard Society, members of adult education associations and others have joined in condemning this short-sighted action. It is also why, in the light of no real plans for additional borrowing authority and the failure to be wise in the use of funds that are available, I will join with other Members on this side of the House in voting against the request of the Government for this authority.

• (1740)

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, what we have before us today, again, is the Government asking Canadians to pay more money. It is asking the Canadian taxpayer, through the legislative process, to give authority to this Government to go into the marketplace and borrow more money so it can cover the profligate spending for which this Government has become known. The Economic Summit on industrialized nations which was held at Williamsburg, Virginia, has just been completed, and it is interesting to note that in the economic communiqué there are two major principles which are expressed by the seven national leaders. he first is that the nations commit themselves to reducing their national deficits. The reason that they should commit themselves to reducing their national deficits is the acknowledgement of the effect these deficits have on international inflation and, of course, inflation within the given countries. This deficit results, just as we have before us today, in a Government which has to go into the money markets to get loans, and as Governments get into the money markets they affect the rates of interest which loans will bear. This obviously has an effect on business, on mortgages and, in fact, on any loans to which the average citizen wants to obligate himself in order either to increase his business or for personal use. The fear is that if these deficits increase, and if Governments continue to be so heavily involved in the money markets, interest rates will increase and thereby curtail the economic recovery which all of us are hoping will take place.

Therefore, the first principle of that economic communiqué has been to reduce the national deficits. The second aspect of the economic communiqué has been that these Governments, these nations, commit themselves to reducing their ever escalating expenditures. This, of course, is concomitant with the first principle, as ever increasing deficits are, but it is also a reflection of ever increasing Government expenditures. It would appear, Mr. Speaker, from the press conferences given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that it was these two points which Canada was insisting upon at the Williamsburg Conference, that it was Canada which was in the forefront of insisting that Governments commit themselves to reducing their deficits and their ever escalating Government expenditures. If only that were the case in Canada. If only those words of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, given to the nations of the world, were in fact the case here. But their actions in Canada give lie to the words they express at international forums, because the evidence before us today, namely, another borrowing Bill, is evidence again that they have not made any serious effort to reduce either the national deficit or the ever increasing escalating Government expenditures.

Mr. Fisher: What about the six and five?

Mr. Epp: Oh, I am going to get to the six and five.

Mr. Fisher: You voted against it.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I will get to the six and five if the gentleman will stop making the best speeches he does, and that is when he is sitting down.

An Hon. Member: Why don't you stand up and make a speech?

Mr. Fisher: We will.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I heard one of my colleagues say that the Hon. Member should make a speech. I must inform my colleagues, in case they did not know, that those gentlemen opposite are not allowed to make speeches on this Bill.

The evidence in Canada, Mr. Speaker, is that the deficit in Canada is increasing. In fact, the Prime Minister indicates that the projected United States deficit is too high. President Reagan, and other members of the U.S. Government, agree and they are trying to reduce that deficit. However, if you take a look at the magnitude of their deficit, either per capita or relative to the GNP, you will find that the Canadian deficit on both counts is much higher than the American one. What we are saying here in Canada, Mr. Speaker, is, "United States, get your house in order." For some reason the Government is trying to convey to Canadians that things are better in Canada than in the United States, the Government it condemns.

This Government wants a deficit of $31 billion. That is projected in this budget. If you take economies of scale per capita of ten to one to the United States, that would mean that the United States would have to have a projected deficit in the coming year in the order of $300 billion to $310 billion, when their projected deficit is somewhere in the order of $175 billion. How can this Government keep coming back to this House and saying to Canadians, "Look Canadians, we have our house in order, but our neighbour to the south does not"?

What about spending? It is said that expenditures should not be escalating as they are. I do not sit on the Public Accounts Committee, Mr. Speaker, but that Committee's record and testimony is replete with cases of legitimate programs having been brought into disrepute because of the lack of financial management of this Government. From 1968 to the present, on a public accounts basis, expenditures, since this Government has been in power, have increased by some 550 per cent, five and a half times. Yet it is going internationally and saying to its industrial allies, "Get your house in order". Let us start here. We can take an even more recent date; since its re-election in 1980, Government expenditures have increased by 78 per cent. That is in this Parliament. Yet it is trying to convince Canadians it is keeping its expenditures in check. The Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) asks about the six and five.

Mr. Fisher: You voted against it.

Mr. Epp: If you will give me a minute, I will give you some detail. Just hang on.

Mr. Fisher: You cannot hide. You voted against it. It is on the record.

Mr. Epp: Just keep your blood pressure down. The Government says six and five, Mr. Speaker, and inflation is 6.6 per cent annualized now. That is great, but business, long before this Government ever thought it gave leadership, had already made decisions relative to the economic reality in business. If the Government wants six and five, then why does its expenditures increase by double that amount?

An Hon. Member: Why?

An Hon. Member: Why? Answer that.

Mr. Fisher: What a weak line of thought.

Mr. Epp: If that is the case, why does Government not hold its expenditures to 6 per cent? If it wants wage earners in Canada to keep at 6 per cent, if it wants all services to be kept at 6 per cent, why does the Government of Canada feel justified in doubling and increasing its expenditures by 12 per cent? If that program is to have validity, and Government wants to reduce the inflation rate, then why does it increase it by 12 per cent?

Mr. Fisher: Surely you can use better logic.

Mr. Epp: That is absolute logic, and you know it.

An Hon. Member: "Six per cent for everybody but us".

Mr. Fisher: You are a man who could do his homework and yet you have not. That is shameful.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Epp: What is interesting, Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: You don't know the difference between $19 billion and $126 billion, where you will be a year from now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) has the floor.

Mr. Epp: What is interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that when you raise the point with the Hon. Members opposite that they seem to be saying, "Don't do as we do, do as we say", that is when they become sensitive. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, the Government is demanding from every Canadian a 6 per cent ceiling, but it will go to 12 per cent and tax all Canadians at that level.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: There is no way those Members opposite can escape that fact. That being the case, Mr. Speaker, this Government, must come to grips with its deficit and must come to grips with the escalation of its expenditures, both of which are absolutely at variance with the words Hon. Members opposite say in this House, words they want to have Canadians believe, and the words they say in international forums. Until they are able to square those words with actions, we will vote against this Bill.

• (1750)

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I had not actually intended to speak on this Bill, but after listening to the last two Conservative speakers I felt it important to rise and add just a modicum of sanity to the debate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: The Member who spoke just prior to the last speaker was going on at some length about the plight of farmers. First of all, I want to acknowledge that he knows as much about that as anyone in the House. He spoke lucidly and intelligently about the difficulties that farmers face. There is no doubt in my mind that the overwhelming majority of the farming community will well understand the logic of much of what was said by the Hon. Member. I find only one minor problem with his presentation. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, when we talk about this, that there is no doubt that the economic policy pursued by the Government of the day has wreaked havoc with all sectors of the economy, particularly the farming sector. The inability of farmers to match their cash requirements with their sales in many areas has resulted in many farmers going into default on their bank loans and being forced into bankruptcy. We have seen farmers so often, many of them not so young, having their equipment sold out from under them. I can remember when, not too many weeks ago in this House, there was a Private Members' Bill dealing with that very topic, supported by a significant number of farmers from all parts of the country. If I recalll correctly, it was Bill C-653, and it would have established a mechanism, albeit imperfect, for dealing with bank foreclosures. It was an intermediate step which would have allowed for consultation and apportionment of the indebtedness over a long period of time. But the Tories have locked it up in committee to the point where it will never become law. That is evidence of their commitment. When the farmers are really on the line they are standing shoulder to shoulder with them, only until they can stab them in the back.

We have seen so many other problems develop over the course of the last couple of years. The Government is its own worst enemy in that regard. There was the interest rate escalation which took place over the course of, oh, the 24 months preceding the last three or four months; in other words, starting back in 1980 and coming forward into the latter part of 1982. The Government not only allowed that rapid escalation of interest rates, it encouraged it. Had it not done so, then the cost of the borrowing that the Government undertakes so frequently would not have been so high. If that had been brought under control, the amount of money the Government is now asking for would have been considerably less.

So you cannot help feeling that on the one side we get the plaintive bleating of the Conservatives as to how they do not like what is happening, but when there is concrete action to deal with it, they refuse to do so. On the other hand you have a Government which has brought about much of this deficit because of its inability or unwillingness to come to grips with the usurious interest rates permitted to be charged in this country to farmers, small and large businessmen, and to private individuals or consumers who are trying to renew their mortgages, and of course to the Government itself.

I can remember that we argued from this corner of the House about high interest rates and the terrible toll they were taking on Canadians who were being driven out of their homes and businesses and off their farms. We sought the support of the Conservative Party in trying to push this Government to bring in an Act in order to take away some control of the Bank of Canada so we would not have high interest rates. I can remember when the then Tory finance critic, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), who is now ranked No. 5 in the Tory leadership race, said, when speaking in Montreal, that there was nothing that could be done other than what was being done by the Government. I even recall the previous leader, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), saying on May 4, 1982, that we have looked for a solution other than the current Liberal Government's solution and we could not come up with an alternative. That referred to the high interest rate problem.

We are opposed to this Government's economic policy, Mr. Speaker. We are opposed to the way it has mismanaged the economy. We are opposed to this Government's complacency in allowing the Bank of Canada to set interest rates which forced so many hardworking Canadians into poverty. We are opposed to the way this Government, together with their bedmates in the Conservative Party—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: —have devised and designed policies which have not been in the best interest of Canadians. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, in the minute remaining to me, that there is no doubt in my mind that the Tories are about to try to bring this Bill down a bit. Oh, they will probably be prepared to accept minor alterations to the Bill in return for quick passage, but I would not be surprised that the Tories might be prepared to allow the Government to go ahead with this borrowing if only it would borrow a little less. Well, I tell you, Mr. Speaker, we are opposed to this Government borrowing this money at this time. If the Tories want to sell out, so be it. If they want to join their friends in the Liberal Party and accept a somewhat smaller amount of borrowing in the interest of some short term political gain, then let me say to you, Mr. Speaker, that they can do that but we will not play that game. It is wrong, and the people of Canada cannot afford it. The Government has brought this on itself. I say to the Government: if you want to see the economy of Canada improve, then resign.

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I do not have much time. I might just point out that the NDP take up so much room in that Liberal bed there has never been room for us at any time. They sprawl out, spreadeagled from one side to the other, from top to bottom.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE CANADA—POLLING OF EMPLOYEES—ROLE OF MANAGEMENT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I rose in the House to ask a question of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) with regard to the administration of the prison system in Canada. All of us have been made very aware of many of the problems existing in the prison system. Most of the attention has been devoted to the inmates of the prisons, and rightly so, I suppose. However, in the process of giving that attention to the inmate population, concerning whether or not certain people should be incarcerated, what kind of treatment they should receive and so forth, most of the time we have overlooked the administration of the prison system itself.

Yesterday I asked the Solicitor General why it was that he has commissioned a Gallup study to be done within the work force of Corrections Canada to examine its opinion of the work place. I did so because I had received in the mail the Notice of Attitude Survey which the Solicitor General has commissioned. It states in part:

> The Correctional Service of Canada is planning a survey regarding staff attitudes toward their employment and work programs.
> We have commissioned the Canadian Gallup Poll organization to undertake this project which will consist of several hundred telephone interviews. The survey will deal with your attitudes and opinions in general and will not touch on private personal topics.

That comes hard on the heels of a study that was already done within Corrections Canada, a welfare program category study to the tune of $250,000—the cost to the taxpayer, not including the service of employees on the payroll. That study which cost the taxpayer a quarter of a million dollars resulted in acceptance by the senior management of all the recommendations of the study which could proceed no further due to the national restraint program.

The obvious question, then, is: why should a study be conducted if the so called six and five program prohibits Corrections Canada from implementing the recommendations of such study? Having spent a quarter of a million dollars on the study, the Government now commissions another one to an outside organization, the Gallup Poll. It will presumably cost quite a few thousand dollars. What will happen to the results of the study when they again are subject to the guidelines of six and five?

My reason for asking the question yesterday however lies in the fact that presumably, with the growth of the managerial sector of Corrections Canada, there ought to be enough in house expertise to conduct such a study. To be sure, it has already done so. It must therefore know something of the attitudes within the workplace.

I point out that in answer to a Question No. 3,505 on the Order Paper, I really received a wealth of information.

The Minister told me yesterday that there are 10,000 employees in Corrections Canada. I think that is probably accurate, because there are about 10,000 inmates within the federal corrections system, and we know that there is a ratio of about one employee to every inmate. That does not mean that there is one line officer to every inmate, but there is one employee. If we examine the return of the question as it was given to me some months ago, we find that about 50 per cent of the employees in Corrections Canada are somewhere in the managerial class. About 50 per cent—possibly as low as 40 per cent, maybe as high as 60 per cent, but in that range—of the employees of Corrections Canada are managerial and the rest are line officers. It is no wonder that the people at the CX level in Corrections Canada are nervous about the cutbacks in their program, because you can rest assured, Sir, that the cutbacks will not come at the managerial level. Cutbacks always seem to come at the line officer level, the CX class. That is why people are worried about whether or not the survey will continue.

• (1805)

I point out, for example, in the Joyceville Prison there are 156 CX officers and 145 other employees. In Millhaven there are 224 CX officers and 164 other employees. At the Regional Reception Centre there are 155 CX officers and 121 other employees. At Drumheller there are 162 CX officers and 134 other employees, and so on down the line it goes.

If we have that proportion of management in the penitentiary system, is there not enough expertise to conduct this kind of a survey? Is it necessary to spend more tax dollars on another survey? It is bad enough to spend those dollars. I am not so much concerned about the taxpayers expenditures, but the fact that the managerial staff is so cut off from the line officers that it cannot get to the heart of the problem. It becomes a staff management problem rather than an inmate management problem. If there is not enough trust between management and CX officers that they are unable to find out where the problems lie, then the problems of management are worse than the problems of the inmates.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, yesterday during Question Period, the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) asked the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) why Correctional Service Canada was conducting a poll among its employees. Correctional Service Canada, which employs about 10,000 people, has, in fact, sent its employees a memo urging them to take part in a survey aimed at obtaining a better understanding of their attitudes toward the workplace and working conditions. All are free to participate or not.

The Canadian Gallup Poll organization has been asked to conduct this survey which will consist of several hundred telephone interviews. The survey will cover general attitudes and opinions of employees and no questions of a personal or private nature will be asked. All the data collected will be strictly confidential, and replies of respondents will be compiled and analyzed in a statistical report.

Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General has also indicated that the opinions and concerns of employees within Correctional Service Canada are very important to him. The results will be put to good use in labour-management relations. I hope the Hon. Member will be interested in seeing the results of this survey. As the Solicitor General said, the questions along with the answers will be available when the survey is completed.

LABOUR RELATIONS—EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS DISPUTE—ENFORCEMENT OF SAFETY REGULATIONS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, once again my purpose is to review the labour-management dispute at Eastern Provincial Airways. Let me begin my remarks by providing some background material.

On January 27, 1983 the pilots of Eastern Provincial Airways, represented by the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association, exercised their right under the Canada Labour Code to strike after failing to reach an agreement through collective bargaining. Over the intervening weeks and months it became apparent that the pilots were willing to accept more onerous working conditions in order to return to work, provided their jobs would be reinstated on the basis of the existing seniority rules common to all Canadian airlines.

The management of EPA made it clear that any back-to-work agreement must provide for the retention of pilots promoted or hired during the course of a strike. This led to an impasse that precluded agreement on the terms and conditions under which the pilots would work. Whether one agrees or disagrees with the legalization of strikes, all Canadians must acknowledge that the right to strike exists under federal statutory law approved by the Parliament of Canada. Consequently, a denial of the right to strike when legal conditions are observed or interfering with the rights of strikers cannot be justified.

• (1810)

Faced with this situation I sought on two occasions, on April 29 and on May 25 of this year, to raise the matter in the House of Commons. My purpose was to ensure that the Canada Labour Relations Board would review carefully and quickly any matters in dispute so that a settlement could be reached at the earliest possible date. A second even more important concern was the safety of the public and its protection through the officers of the Department of Transport in carefully monitoring and enforcing the safety regulations that exist. Safety measures could easily be neglected when an airline operates during a legal strike with personnel who may not be familiar with the equipment or are overworked.

The Canada Labour Relations Board has made its decision on the matters in dispute between EPA pilots and management. The decision is public knowledge, but in basic terms it finds Eastern Provincial Airways management in breach of the Canada Labour Code and provides for a quick return to work by directing the restoration of seniority rights for pilots.

Let me say that I am not the only Member concerned with the settlement of the Eastern Provincial Airways strike. My colleagues in the Official Opposition, particularly the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), have discussed the issues and have offered assistance. Members representing the Government, including the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) and the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), have publicly stated their concerns and sought satisfactory solutions. But the Canada Labour Relations Board has rendered its decision. I sincerely believe that all Members of the House of Commons from Atlantic Canada desire the strike settled and full service restored to the travelling public.

Many of us view with alarm the indication by the management of EPA that it will not abide by the decision of the Canada Labour Relations Board. The President of EPA has stated publicly that he will appeal the Board's decision. Yet Section 122 of the Canada Labour Code indicates clearly that the Board's decision is final and cannot be reviewed or questioned by a court. There is the possibility of an intervention by the Federal Court of Canada, but this recourse is reserved for technical errors and is not an appeal on the merits of the case.

Today in the House of Commons we had an assurance of the Acting Minister of Labour to the effect that the Government expected compliance with the decision of the Canada Labour Relations Board, notwithstanding any reference to the Federal Court. In fact the Acting Minister said in the House today, that these orders of the Canada Labour Relations Board cannot in any way be delayed even if some kind of appeal is put forward by the President of EPA. Those were the words of the Acting Minister, and I take him at his word. I hope the Government will take every action possible to ensure immediate compliance with the decision of the Canada Labour Relations Board so that full service on EPA can be restored.

There are one or two other points which have arisen during the course of this labour dispute at EPA that are of real concern to myself and other Members. One is that the Canadian Transport Commission in the midst of this strike situation approved a merger between EPA and CP Air. Not only did it approve that merger, but apparently it took no offence with the fact that EPA announced the merger the day before, as far as I can determine, it was actually approved. For the CTC to be so insensitive to the rights of the employees involved in the operation by deciding an important issue like that, virtually without reference to the employees involved, is not a proper interpretation of the mandate of the CTC. It was bound to prolong the labour dispute. It was bound to encourage management to resist settlement of the dispute. I think the Canadian Transport Commission owes Parliament and the public an explanation of its action.

We from Atlantic Canada have always recognized that Eastern Provincial Airways is a community corporation, a corporation which contributes in a very important way to the economy of the Atlantic region. There are over 900 EPA employees in the area of Halifax which I represent. EPA contributes something in the area of $10 million to the local economy on an annual basis. We all have an interest in the continued success and viability of this air transport business and operation.

• (1815)

I can only repeat that we beg the management of Eastern Provincial Airways to recognize that the time has come for settlement of this dispute. I can virtually state on the basis of my many conversations with the pilots involved in this strike that they are more than willing to go back to work and co-operate, with all the reasonable demands of management.

One concern that should be important to management and the pilots is that the confidence of the public in the operation of the airline is essential to its continued success in the future. Any questions about safety will result in loss of consumer and customer confidence. I warn the management of EPA in a fair-minded way that if they do not sit down with the pilots and reach an immediate settlement of this dispute on the basis already approved by the Canada Labour Relations Board, this may in years to come affect the viability and success of the airline operation.

These are difficult times for all Canadian businesses. I can understand why any company would be concerned with its collective bargaining agreements, but I have every assurance from the persons involved that what is at stake here is that viability of the airlines and the continued interest of the employee in that commercial success for the airline. The Management of EPA have little to fear on the part of all their employees, particularly the pilots, if they commence to bargain in good faith, as the Canada Labour Relations Board has directed, and reach a settlement so that this matter can be put to rest and the airline put back into full operation.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to reply on behalf of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) and his Parliamentary Secretary. I should also thank the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) who has given me some advice. I know that the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate has taken a very deep interest in the welfare of the pilots and the company in the management of this issue.

The Canada Labour Relations Board ruled that EPA violated provisions in the Canadian Labour Code, and stated that EPA had failed to bargain in good faith and to make every reasonable effort to enter into a collective agreement; had unlawfully interfered with the internal affairs of the union; and had negotiated to an impasse provisions of the return-to-work agreement discriminatory as to the reinstatement of striking pilots.

The board ordered EPA to cease and desist from bad faith bargaining and from interfering in the union's internal affairs. EPA must cease from conferring permanent status to the replacement pilots hired during the strike. EPA must cease discriminating against striking pilots as to their re-instatement.

EPA is directed to remove from its proposed collective agreement a clause which added a third year to the two-year term earlier negotiated. The union has been directed by the board to submit the proposed collective agreement to its membership for ratification. If it is ratified, the union is to inform the board whether it is ready to sign the agreement. If ratification is confirmed, the board has ordered that a collective agreement is deemed to be in effect. The parties must further meet within five working days from the date of the board's order of May 27, 1983 and negotiate a return-to-work agreement.

Each striking pilot with seniority standing on January 27 who wants to return to EPA is directed by the board to confirm his desire in writing to the company and to send a copy to the board within 24 hours of the termination of the strike. The striking pilots, under a revised return-to-work agreement, are to be reinstated to their former positions or substantially equivalent positions. The board will retain jurisdiction to deal with any problems arising out of the implementation of its order.

Current media reports suggest that EPA intends to challenge the board's decision through a court appeal. While this is not a matter for which the Minister has responsibility, I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to Section 122 of the Canada Labour Code which states:

—every order or decision of the board is final and shall not be questioned or reviewed in any court, except in accordance with paragraph 28(1)(a) of the Federal Court Act.

The latter provision does empower the Federal Court to hear and determine an appeal concerning a decision of a federal board where it is alleged that the latter has failed to observe a principle of natural justice or otherwise acted beyond or refused to exercise its jurisdiction. I again thank the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate for his invaluable advice and support in settling this matter.

MEDICAL CARE—REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTRODUCE NEW HEALTH CARE ACT—INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to pursue a question I put to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) yesterday about the status of the proposed Canada Health Act. I would like to elaborate on why I think it is so very, very important to see an actual proposal for a Canada Health Act in the very near future.

I believe that the events in Alberta in particular, where we have seen the proposed introduction of user fees by October 1, make it incumbent upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare to act and to act very soon to do something about the erosion of the principles of medicare which the action taken in Alberta represents and which I predict will only be the beginning of many, many actions of that kind should nothing be done about what is happening in Alberta. I have asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare to bring forth a Canada Health Act and so far, her answers to me have been unsatisfactory. She either argues that she has powers within existing legislation to do something about what is happening in Alberta and so she likes to ask me why I am calling for a new Act, or, alternatively, she says that the Canada Health Act will be coming forward when it is ready, but there has never been any indication of when it might be ready.

My argument, Mr. Speaker, is that the present legislation puts the Minister in a position where she has no viable political options. She can only continue to lecture the Province of Alberta until October 1 at which time, if the Province is unpersuaded and brings in the user fees, she will have only one alternative other than simply complaining about it and that will be to withdraw all federal health funding to Alberta. In my view, that would not only risk interruption of health care services but would also contain a great many known and unknown risks. One of the known risks would be that it would provoke a federal-provincial political crisis of great magnitude, I am sure.

I suggest to the Minister that if she brings in a Canada Health Act which clarifies and strengthens the five basic principles of medicare but which also provides the federal Government with more flexibility in responding to Provinces which are seen to be in violation of the principles of medicare, she will accomplish two things. One, she will indicate to the Minister of Health in Alberta and any other Minister in any other Province which is considering these kinds of actions, that she is really serious about being able to deal with the problem. She will also give Canadians who are in favour of preserving medicare a more real and viable political option around which to rally and give support, providing that the Act does these things which I have mentioned.

Right now, she only has the negative option of literally kicking Alberta out of medicare, and this is not something around which, I believe, she can as effectively rally pro-medicare Canadians. Whereas, she could rally pro-medicare Canadians around a Canada Health Act, because it would be a positive action. That is why I suggest this to her and why I wanted to take this opportunity to elaborate on the reasons that I believe it is so very, very important that by the end of June, we see something around which pro-medicare forces in Canada could gather. Otherwise, if the Minister fails to indicate her intention to remove herself from the box that the federal Government put itself in as far back as 1977 went it adopted block funding, then the Minister of Health in Alberta and all the others who would erode Medicare, will know that the federal Government and the Minister are not serious about trying to do something. The federal Government will have failed to indicate its intention to give itself the capacity to respond to the crisis. As, within the existing legislation, it does not have the capacity that it needs in order to respond effectively.

I think the Government should go along with the recommendations of the Special Parliamentary Task Force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements that any new funding arrangements—and this is presumably what the Canada Health Act would bring in—would provide the federal Government with the capacity to gradually withhold federal funding from Provinces that were seen to be in violation of the principles of Medicare.

If we had a Canada Health Act which gave the federal Government that kind of flexibility and provided for a gradual withholding of funding, and provided that extra billing and user fees, and profit-oriented hospitals, and various other things that have been on the increase lately which threaten Medicare, were in violation of Medicare, then the Minister of National Health and Welfare would be living up to her responsibilities.

If we do not get an Act in the very near future, I am afraid the Minister will be quite justifiably open to the accusation that she fiddled while Rome burned by doing nothing except talk while Medicare went to pieces before our very eyes.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) who points out very clearly the threat that faces Medicare in Canada. It emphasizes the importance of a careful consideration before the Act is drafted.

As the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has stated on several occasions, and as recently as yesterday, it can only be restated that work is progressing as quickly as is possible on the new Canada Health Act, and that as soon as it is appropriate she will be meeting with provincial Health Ministers to complete the consultation process before introducing the new Act to Parliament. This is a very important program to Canadians with very large amounts of money involved and it is essential that the time be taken to develop the Act properly.

The Minister has received a great deal of mail in favour of maintaining and improving our universal Medicare system—the best in the world—and in support of her efforts to develop a new Act. She is grateful for this support. It is hoped that all Members of this House would put similar pressure on provincial Governments to likewise support these efforts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adapted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

At 6.28 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.
