

IMAGE EVALUATION
TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET
WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580
(716) 872-4503

CIHM/ICMH
Microfiche Series.

CIHM/ICMH Collection de
microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

© 1983

CIHM/ICMH
Microfiche Series.

CIHM/ICMH
Collection de
microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

© 1992

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below.

L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

- Coloured covers/Couverture de couleur
- Covers damaged/
Couverture endommagée
- Covers restored and/or laminated/Couverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée
- Cover title missing/Le titre de couverture manque
- Coloured maps/
Cartes géographiques en couleur
- Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black)/ Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)
- Coloured plates and/or illustrations/Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur
- Bound with other material/Relié avec d'autres documents
- Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin/La reliure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la distortion le long de la marge intérieure
- Blank leaves added during restoration may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming/Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.
- Additional comments:/ Commentaires supplémentaires:

- Coloured pages/Pages de couleur
- Pages damaged/
Pages endommagées
- Pages restored and/or laminated/Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées
- Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées
- Pages detached/Pages détachées
- Showthrough/Transparence
- Quality of print varies/Qualité inégale de l'impression
- Includes supplementary material/Comprend du matériel supplémentaire
- Only edition available/Seule édition disponible
- Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata slips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to ensure the best possible image/Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuillet d'errata, une pelure, etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.

This item is filmed at the reduction ratio checked below/
Ce document est filmé au taux de réduction indiqué ci-dessous.

10X	12X	14X	16X	18X	20X	22X	24X	26X	28X	30X	32X
<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

Library of Congress
Photoduplication Service

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol \rightarrow (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ∇ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

Library of Congress
Photoduplication Service

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole \rightarrow signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ∇ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

"But no answer came from the graves of the dead, nor the gloomier grave of the living."

THE
"EVANGELINE" BOOK

FOR

READERS AND STUDENTS OF "EVANGELINE"

BY

33

F. M. MUHLIG.

CHICAGO:
A. FLANAGAN, PUBLISHER.

4

1898

M

of the dead, ing."

PS2263
.A1
1898

20597

COPYRIGHTED 1898

BY

A. FLANAGAN.

TWO COPIES RECEIVED.

70631
Dec. 5. 98

52263
.A1
1898

CONTENTS.

INTRODUCTORY CHAPTER I.
POET AND POETRY	7
CHAPTER II.
DISCOVERY AND SETTLEMENT	10
CHAPTER III.
SETTLEMENTS AND DISTURBANCES	17
CHAPTER IV.
THE EXILE	23
CHAPTER V.
THE ACADIAN LAND	28
CHAPTER VI.
THE SUCCESSORS	35
CHAPTER VII.
THE SUCCESSORS.—CONTINUED	41
CHAPTER VIII.
THE ACADIANS AND ACADIAN RELICS	48
CHAPTER IX.
THE INDIANS	52
NOTES AND REFERENCES	57
EVANGELINE, THE POEM	69

D.

38

n
H li
..
A
ca at or
th
w fo
"
W fa
ha
fo
or
an ha

L
L

w

C M
or ac

INTRODUCTORY.

In presenting this little book, the author believes that he is not encroaching on a field already well stocked with literature. He knows of no book written for the same purpose as this little volume. It is intended as a helper to the reader of "Evangeline," and to anyone desirous of learning more of Acadia and its story than the ordinary text book of the poem can furnish. A complete history of Nova Scotia is not attempted. Only the thread of its earlier history is given in order to trace its most important events down to the Exile and the "occupation." Longfellow's line "Dwells another race with other customs and language," is very suggestive, and forms the "text" for the sixth and seventh chapters. Is that "other race" the people of Nova Scotia as they are today? We think not; and we believe that the older generation, now fast passing away, will agree with us. The people of today have the sturdy character, the honesty and integrity of their forefathers; but when we add to these the intercourse with the outside world, rapid transit, the army of modern inventions, and the growing advantages of education and government, we have a people differing from their ancestors in many respects.

No attempt has been made to give a biographical sketch of Longfellow; that can be found in any volume on American Literature.

Special attention is given to the Cornwallis Valley, which was the valley of the Acadians and the scene of the poem.

Indebtedness to Willoughby's "Land of the Mayflower," Campbell's "School History of Nova Scotia," Houghton, Mifflin & Co's "American Poems" and F. H. Eaton's article on "Bay of Fundy Tides and Marshes," is hereby gratefully acknowledged by

THE AUTHOR.

r
f P
n
e j P
a t v
t
l
v V
s P
E
i s n
f o
j
t
f

CHAPTER I.

POET AND POETRY.

To the end of time the early history of America will be read with interest; not only on account of the deeds of bravery, fortitude, endurance and heroism; not only for the great enterprises that with such small beginnings resulted in nations; not only for those principles involved that underlie the very existence of those nations; but also for the many true tales of joy and sorrow, romance and tragedy, success and failure, happiness and despair, life and death, fortune and misfortune, that are woven into it and therefore inseparable from it. Many of these tales are lost to us or are passed by historians with but a word of mention.

Here and there one of these incidents is brought to light by the mind and pen of historian or poet, a Parkman or a Longfellow. Had the poem of Evangeline never been written, how little would we know or learn of the story of the Acadian people. What hours we use with pleasure and profit in reading and studying that ever interesting poem. Why do we prefer the poem rather than the brief account given in our histories? Because the writer was a poet, and poets write poetry. Rhyme is not poetry. Harmonious verse is not poetry. Coleridge says "Poetry is the art of reproducing in words external nature and human thoughts and affections." The true poet finds sweet music and pathos in common things, as the ticking of a clock or the flight of a waterfowl. Poetry results from a just observation of human life—its hopes, affections, aspirations and ideals. The last is probably the most important, for the poet deals in the ideal more than the real. Our dictionary tells us that an ideal is a conception proposed by the mind for imitation, realization or attainment; a standard or model of perfection or duty. It is to be attained by selecting and assembling in one whole the beauties and perfections which are usually seen in different individuals, excluding everything defective or unseemly, so as to form a type or model. Longfellow wrote "The Old Clock on the Stairs." The old clock which he had in mind stood in "the old-fashioned country seat," which was the old Craige House in Cambridge, once used by Washington as his headquarters. Our highest and best ideal is Heaven. We read these words in the ninth stanza of the poem mentioned:

"Never here, forever there,
Where all parting, pain and care,
And death and time shall disappear Forever there, but never here."

Can we form a higher or nobler ideal than that contained in the above? In "The Bridge" there is an ideal which can be readily found.

"The moon rose over the city" of Boston,
"Behind the dark church tower."

And that dark church tower was on the old North Church, the tower Paul Revere watched so eagerly on that memorable night of the 18th of April, 1775. In "Paul Revere" we find a grand and heroic ideal. Let us look for these ideals as we read. We will find them well worth the search. There are ideals in the poem of Evangeline. Have we found them? Everyone, young or old, who has any wish for advancement, any ambition, any desire for something better than that now possessed by him, has an ideal. It may be crude and we may not be aware of its existence, but it is with us at all times unless it be realized. We know that it is what we strive to gain and not what we have.

Why
pure seek

It
by E story
of th betw shou decis Perh
Tom

L
ized amon
M tives they his fa select N
was s
"Art

"For two ideals I strove with eager quest.
The first I lost,—and why?
'Twas realized. The other, unpossessed, Stays with me till I die."

Why should we not strive for something higher, better and purer? Many strive for riches. If we choose this ideal, let us seek the true riches, for

"The riches of the commonwealth Are free, strong minds and hearts of health.
And more to her than gold or gain
The cunning hand and cultured brain."

It is said that the story of Evangeline was told to Longfellow by Hawthorne, who at one time contemplated writing a prose story based on the Exile. It is further stated that the heroine of the original story was named Gabriele. After a consultation between these two authors it was decided that Longfellow should make it the theme of a poem. We do not regret the decision. The poem has been translated into many languages. Perhaps in this respect it stands next to the Bible and Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Longfellow and his works are known through all the civilized world. He was given a place in Westminster Abbey among the greatest men of the English-speaking people.

Many years ago at a social gathering in Italy, representatives of six different nations met. During their conversation they agreed that each should select and recite a quotation from his favorite author. They did so, and strange to relate, every selection given was from Longfellow.

Not long ago a Technological Institute costing over $400,000 was erected in England. On its lintel are carved these words: "Art is long and time is fleeting."

CHAPTER II.

DISCOVERY AND SETTLEMENT.

The history of North America before the coming of the white man will ever be comparatively unknown to us. The beauties of mountain, valley, forest and shore were seen only by wild men and wild beasts. No human voice was heard save that of the barbarian as he met his foe in a death grapple, or chanted his weird songs of war, hunting or superstitious rites. But the change came. Across the ocean sailed the little vessels of the Norsemen, the Genoese and the English, followed closely by the French. They brought with them the civilization of the old world and sowed its seed on new ground. The seed thrived in this new soil even better than in the old, and from that day to the present a conflict has been waged steadily here between civilization and barbarism, between freedom and oppression, between liberty and slavery. The results have been tremendous for the good of mankind; but while the plan was divine the instruments were but human, and consequently we find here and there blots upon the record.

Previous to the year 1000, the hardy Norsemen had seen the shores of North America and perhaps made temporary settlements. In 1492 came Columbus, a native of Genoa, under Spanish patronage. His was accepted as the real discovery, as it was the first to be followed by permanent settlement. He was soon followed by others, and among the first of these was Americus Vesputius, who received the honor of having the country named for him. In justice it should have been called Columbia. In 1497 the Cabots sailed from England with a commission from Henry VII, three-hundred men, and a fleet of five ships and two caravels. They discovered lands to the

ENT.

the coming of the known to us. The more were seen only voice was heard save in a death grapple, or or superstitious rites.
an sailed the little the English, followed with them the civiliza-on new ground. The than in the old, and been waged steadily between freedom and
The results have
; but while the plan
n, and consequently rd.

Norsemen had seen aps made temporary ative of Genoa, under the real discovery, as ent settlement. He
the first of these was honor of having the uld have been called om England with a red men, and a fleet covered lands to the

NOVA SCOTIA AND VICINITY.

westward, which from their rude maps are supposed to have been Nova Scotia, Cape Breton Island and Newfoundland. They then sailed farther to the west and reached the mainland. They sailed again and northward to 67° 30', then south as far as Florida. They then returned to England on account of scarcity of provisions and mutiny among the crews.

For many years the English made no attempt to follow up the discoveries of the Cabots by actual settlements. Under Queen Elizabeth enterprise was awakened. With a patent for "discovering, occupying and peopling heathen and barbarous countries," Sir Humphrey Gilbert sailed with an expedition from England in 1583. After a voyage of one month he arrived at Newfoundland, which he took formal possession of. After remaining there for some time he decided to go to Sable Island and re-stock his larder before taking his long voyage homeward. Captain Hays of the sole surviving vessel wrote as follows: "Sable lieth to the seaward of Cape Breton, about 45°, whither we were determined to go upon intelligence we had of a Portingall during our abode in St. John's, who was also himself present when the Portingalls, about thirty years past, did put into the same island both neat and swine to breed, which were since exceedingly multiplied." In a dense mist and rain, with a high wind, they neared this bleak land, by later mariners named "The graveyard of the North Atlantic," on account of the great number of wrecks on its shoals and sand bars. Here Gilbert lost one vessel and one-hundred men by shipwreck. Escaping from the dangers of Sable Island, he encountered a fearful gale on the Grand Banks, and but one vessel survived to tell to England that the heroic Admiral hailed them during the storm, saying that "Heaven was as near by sea as by land," and soon after, standing by the helm, sorely wounded in his foot, and Bible in hand, went down beneath the waves. [See note at end of this chapter.]

In
ed a v died s posse of Sir found of its
In early purpo Verra
nent f Fear t river s and E plored Franc reach nizati swine 1538 t
the ne
that it prepar he left horses ponies quis c Fran Canad
gions.
as col Island

supposed to have and Newfoundland.
ched the mainland.
then south as far
and on account of e crews.

tempt to follow up settlements. Under

With a patent for then and barbarous with an expedition
the month he arrived possession of. After go to Sable Island
long voyage home-vessel wrote as fol-Breton, about 45° intelligence we had of a who was also himself years past, did put breed, which were mist and rain, with by later mariners tic," on account of d sand bars. Here men by shipwreck.
d, he encountered a e vessel survived to ed them during the y sea as by land," ely wounded in his h the waves. [See

In 1607 Sir John Gilbert, brother of Sir Humphrey, planted a weak colony within what is now the state of Maine. He died soon after, and the colony was broken up. The formal possession taken by Sir Humphrey and the actual settlement of Sir John, added to the discoveries of the Cabots, formed the foundation of the claim of the crown of England to the whole of its possessions in North America.

In the meantime the French had been active. At a very early period adventurers had visited North America for the purpose of taking possession of it for the crown of France.
Verrazani, in 1524, sailed along the eastern coast of the continent from a point one hundred and fifty miles south of Cape Fear to New England. In 1534 Cartier explored the gulf and river St. Lawrence. Cape Breton was known to both French and English before Nova Scotia was. The French first explored it, and it probably received its name from the Bretons of France. The French were probably the first, after Cabot, to reach Nova Scotia, and they were the first to attempt its colonization. We have already found that the Portuguese left swine and cattle on Sable Island. This was about 1505. In 1538 the Baron de Lery attempted to plant a French colony in the new world, but incessant storms so delayed the expedition that it arrived off the coast too late in the season to land and prepare for winter. To lighten his vessel for the return voyage he left his cattle on Sable Island. With these were several horses or ponies, from which have sprung the hardy, shaggy ponies that still run wild on its sand dunes. In 1598 the Marquis de la Roche was granted letters patent by Henry IV of France, giving him power over the "islands and countries of Canada, Sable Island, Newfoundland, and the adjacent regions." Forty convicts from the royal prisons were given him as colonists. He decided to leave his colonists upon Sable Island until he had selected and prepared a place for his settlement. Immediately after leaving the island a great and long continued storm arose, which drove his vessel so far eastward that he decided to return to France. In 1603 the king sent a vessel to bring the convicts back. Twelve out of the forty were alive. They were taken to France, where each received a full pardon and fifty golden crowns.

Old Earthworks at Annapolis (Port Royal). "When as a captive I lay in the old French fort at Port Royal."—Line 908.

In the year 1604 De Monts, who had been appointed governor general of New France, came with an expedition to make a settlement. After narrowly escaping shipwreck on the "Graveyard of the North Atlantic," he succeeded in planting his colony in the well chosen spot where the town of Annapolis now stands. This was the Port Royal of the French. After establishing his colony De Monts sailed along the coast, explored his territory, traded with the Indians and made them his friends. The English who settled Jamestown, Virginia, in 1607, learning of the French settlement and considering it within the limits of their charter, fitted out an expedition under the Royal i mission pillage ground

tory.
France, own rec rates, an his conc

Sabl
dred ten long an formed l most of grass.
Sable Is Its great that swe lent on t tains tw ication w stormy means o man can pieces o ever shif
Before was frequ
on the sh these wr

a great and long so far eastward the king sent a out of the forty re each received a ptive I lay in the old appointed goverpedition to make shipwreck on the eeded in planting own of Annapolis

e French. After g the coast, exand made them own, Virginia, in nd considering it n expedition under the command of Sir Samuel Argall, and attacked Port Royal in 1613. It was easily taken. Argall found the commission from the French king and concealed it, that he might pillage the town and treat the inhabitants as pirates, on the grounds that they had no authority for occupying the territory. Not having sufficient vessels in which to return to France, some of the French accompanied Sir Samuel, at his own request, to Jamestown, where they were imprisoned as pirates, and only escaped execution by Sir Samuel's admission of his concealment of the French royal commission.

NOTES.

Sable Island belongs to Nova Scotia and is about one hundred ten miles S. E. of Halifax. It is about twenty-five miles long and one mile wide. Its surface consists of sand hills formed by action of wind and water. There are no trees, but most of its surface is covered with a growth of long, rank grass. There is a lake of considerable size on the island. Sable Island is feared and shunned by mariners at all times. Its great dangers are its extensive shoals, the ocean currents that sweep around it, and the thick fogs which are so prevalent on the surrounding waters. The government now maintains two lighthouses and a life saving station here. Communication with the island by boat is almost impossible during the stormy months, but an exchange of messages is effected by means of carrier pigeons. A cable is contemplated. No man can tell the number of ships that have been beaten to pieces on its shoals and bars, and buried in its treacherous and ever shifting sands.

Before the government established a station there, the island was frequented by piratical wreckers who sought the spoil cast on the shore from the wrecks. Terrible stories were told of these wreckers. It is said that survivors who reached the shore from wrecks were murdered for their jewelry or valuables. Sailors still tell of the ghost of a lady which walks the shores of the island just before a storm, and holds up a bleeding hand to show that a finger was severed to obtain a ring she wore.

It was near this island that the Bourgogne went down in 1898.

SABLE ISLAND.

"Dark Isle of Mourning, aptly art thou named,
 For thou hast been the cause of many a tear;
 For deeds of treacherous strife too justly famed,
 The Atlantic's Charnel, desolate and drear,
 A thing none love, though wand'ring thousands fear;
 If for a moment rests the Muse's wing Where through the waves thy sandy wastes appear,
 'Tis that she may one strain of horror sing, Wild as the dashing waves that tempests o'er thee fling."

In
 was c Acadia
 Brunsv
 French lived t indicat or sea word C
 quoddy place o In t all the
 of St. J Scotlan
 with S Sir San
 settlem strengt ceeded govern the ord furnish But few Scotch opposite stands.

jewelry or valuawhich walks the holds up a bleed-1- to obtain a ring

he went down in named,

tear;
famed,
ear,
ousands fear;

stes appear,
ng,
o'er thee fling."

CHAPTER III.

SETTLEMENTS AND DISTURBANCES.

In the oldest records Acadia is called Cadie. Afterwards it was called by various writers Accadia, L'Acadie, Acadie and Acadia. Acadia under the French included Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and a part of Maine. The name is probably the French adaptation of a common word of the Micmac Indians who lived there, and signifies place or region. Used as a suffix it indicated the place where various things, such as berries, eels or seals were found in abundance. The French called this word Cadie or Acadie; the English called it Quoddy. Passamaquoddy means the place of pollocks. Shubenacadie means the place of ground nuts.

In the year 1601, James I. granted to Sir William Alexander all the territory lying between the river St. Croix and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The country was named Nova Scotia (New Scotland) in the grant. Sir William intended to colonize it with Scotch emigrants, but failed in his attempt to do so. As Sir Samuel Argall's conquest was not followed up by actual settlement, the French had regained possession, and had been strengthened by arrivals from France. Charles I., who succeeded King James, reappointed Sir William Alexander as governor general of Nova Scotia, in 1624. He also founded the order of Knights Baronet of Nova Scotia, who were to furnish colonists, and receive therefor 16,000 acres of land each. But few, if any of them, ever received their land. A party of Scotch emigrants landed at Port Royal and built a fort on the opposite side of the basin where the town of Granville now stands. The remains of this work are still called "The Scotch Fort." In 1632, when the English were getting well established in the country, King Charles I., by the treaty of St. Germain, ceded the whole of Nova Scotia and Canada to the King of France. Again in full possession of the French, Acadia received a French governor and many settlers. This governor, Isaac de Razilly, died and was succeeded by Charnise.

While the French officers were quarrelling about their several claims, an English fleet, sent out by Cromwell, easily conquered them, and again the country was in English hands. In 1667 it was again ceded to the French. For twenty-three years Acadia remained French. During all these changes the French settlers had never completely deserted Nova Scotia, but the colonists received little aid or attention from their government during this period following the treaty of 1667. The English colony in Massachusetts was growing rapidly, and soon made ready a strong force, under Sir William Phipps, to attack Acadia. They captured Port Royal and two smaller posts; dismantled the forts and returned to Massachusetts. The Acadians at Port Royal, with no fort or garrison, were soon visited by pirates who set fire to houses, killed their cattle, hanged some of the people, and burned one family after shutting them in their house. A new commander, Villabon, came from France, found the town unprotected, and decided to land the stores brought by his vessel at the French fort on the St. John river in New Brunswick. On his way to that place pirates captured his vessel, and he barely escaped with his life. He received aid from the Indians and renewed their friendship for the French.

William and Mary of England gave a new charter to Massachusetts, and included in it the colony of New Plymouth, the province of Maine and Nova Scotia with the intervening lands. Villabon rallied the French and Indians at the fort on the St. John, and with this force captured Pemaquid, a fortification in

New
hundr many church

In
of Ry broke came, lander came a a thou were n attack came v
to rem ever, r They
they i to brin tempt Nova Utrech
honor

For
tacks were s
to the burg w French
difficul Utrech
thousa
leaders

New England. To avenge this, Colonel Church, with five hundred men, sailed from Boston and ravaged the country at many points on and near the Bay of Fundy. They burned churches and houses, killed the cattle, and cut the dykes.

In 1696 Nova Scotia was restored to France by the treaty of Ryswick. Trouble arose over the fisheries. War again broke out. The French called the pirates to their aid. They came, and with the goods thus wrested from the New Englanders the French paid their Indian allies. Colonel Church came again in 1704, and again the country was ravaged. In 1707 a thousand men from New England attacked Port Royal, but were repulsed and forced to reembark. Again they landed and attacked, but were again defeated. In 1710 another expedition came under General Nicholson, and this time Port Royal fell, to remain in the possession of the English. The French, however, made many efforts to drive out their hereditary enemies. They endeavored to preserve the loyalty of the French settlers, they incited the Indians to attack the English, they attempted to bring help from Quebec and France, and at least three attempts were made to recapture Port Royal. But all in vain. Nova Scotia was finally ceded to England by the treaty of Utrecht in 1713. Port Royal was now named Annapolis in honor of Queen Anne.

For many years few settlers came, on account of fear of attacks by the French and Indians. Canada and Cape Breton were still French, and from the latter place came aid and trade to the Acadians, and assaults upon English settlers. Louisburg was taken by an English force, but given back to the French in 1748 by treaty of Aix la Chapelle. Old boundary difficulties now arose; the French claiming that the treaty of Utrecht ceded only the peninsula to England. In 1749 two thousand five hundred seventy-six settlers arrived under the leadership of Edward Cornwallis. They selected a site, and found Halifax India mission submit young of set Louis and p and a to tak still h tainly chang

"But as a traveller follows a streamlet's course through the valley."—Line 733.

in Ca
take t Engli mouth four Cornw
rewar
In Fren
in 175
India
ernor thous
lodge near a six

1.
that

founded the city of Halifax, named in honor of the Earl of Halifax, who had assisted the expedition. The French and Indians visited the settlers at Halifax, and tendered their submission to the English authorities. Notwithstanding this submission, the Indians, probably assisted by some of the younger Acadians, attacked the town by night, and a number of settlers were killed in the forests or captured and sold at Louisburg. The governor of Halifax, to prevent these attacks and protect the outlying settlements, built a fort at Windsor and a blockhouse at Horton. He then called on the Acadians to take the oath of allegiance to the British crown. They still hoped for the French supremacy in Acadia, and they certainly had reasons to expect it after the many preceding changes of ownership, and the repeated assurances of the French in Canada and Louisburg. In consequence they refused to take the oath, but again announced their submission to the English. The Indians remained actively hostile. At Dartmouth, a settlement on the opposite side of Halifax harbor, four men were killed and scalped, and others carried off. Cornwallis organized parties to hunt the savages, and offered a reward of ten guineas for every Indian scalp.

In order to strengthen their claim as to the boundary, the French built Fort Beau Sejour on the isthmus. Major Lawrence, in 1750, was sent to the isthmus and defeated the French and Indians. In 1752 Cornwallis returned to England, and Governor Hobson was sent out as his successor. In 1755 three thousand men under Monckton and Winslow were sent to dislodge the French. Beau Sejour and Gaspereaux, another post near by, were taken, and the garrisons sent to Louisburg under a six months' parole.

NOTES:

1. Arcadia was the only southern state of ancient Greece that had no sea coast. It was one of the most picturesque regions of Greece, and perhaps of the world. Lake, mountains, streams, forests, meadows, fountains, glens and caves were there. Without seaports, people are not commercial. The inhabitants, therefore, were hunters and shepherds, quiet and peaceful, given to music and dancing. In modern languages the term Arcadian means either beauty of natural scenery or rusticity of manners. While the Acadians may have been Arcadian in their manners, they did not live in Arcadia and were not Arcadians. If the name Arcadia was used by some early writers, it was an error caused by the similarity of the names.

2. The peninsula of Nova Scotia is connected to New Brunswick by an isthmus twelve miles wide. The peninsula is separated from Cape Breton Island, which is a part of the province, by the strait of Canso or Canseau.

3. Granville, the site of the old Scotch settlement opposite Annapolis, was formerly called Caledonia, and is so named on the old maps.

Ab and the French
the Ac
the Ind cil with from N colonie alarmin Acadia
came to summo 1755, w majorit ment, v

"

C

L

P

Y

N

F

Lake, mountains,
s and caves were commercial. The epherds, quiet and modern languages natural scenery or s may have been ve in Arcadia and was used by some e similarity of the connected to New

e. The peninsula is a part of the settlement opposite and is so named on

CHAPTER IV.

THE EXILE.

About this time the English met with reverses in Canada, and the Nova Scotia Governor feared another attempt by the French to regain the province. He believed that if that occurred the Acadians would join the invaders, and bring with them the Indians to prey upon the English settlers. He took council with his advisers, and it was decided to remove the Acadians from Nova Scotia, and scatter them through the other English colonies. Measures were taken to prepare for this without alarming the Acadians. Suspecting no serious trouble, the Acadians of Grand Pre, Minas and the adjoining settlements came together at their church at Grand Pre, in obedience to the summons of Colonel Winslow. This was on September 2nd, 1755, when the Acadians were busy with their harvest. The majority of them attended and, to their horror and astonishment, were informed of their intended fate.

"You are convened this day," he said, "by his Majesty's orders.

Clement and kind has he been; but how you have answered his kindness

Let your own hearts reply! To my natural make and my temper Painful the task is I do, which to you I know must be grievous.

Yet must I bow and obey, and deliver the will of our Monarch:

Namely, that all your lands, and dwellings, and cattle of all kinds Forfeited be to the crown: and that you yourselves from this province

Be transported to other lands. God grant you may dwell there Ever as faithful subjects, a happy and peaceable people! Prisoners now I declare you, for such is his Majesty's pleasure!"

Similar action was taken at Annapolis, Cumberland and other points; in all, about seven thousand souls were transported. The number collected at Grand Pre was one thousand nine hundred twenty-three. A few had escaped to the forest, and to deprive them of sustenance all buildings were burned, crops destroyed and cattle driven away. In the district of Minas 255 houses, 276 barns, 155 outbuildings, 11 mills and one church were destroyed. On the 10th of September the people were put on board the transports. Heartbroken and despairing, this whole community was carried from the only homes many of its members had ever known. They could carry nothing with them but a few household goods. Their crops, on which they subsisted, were gone. Their houses, in wh

Cape Blomidon from the Basin of Minas.

happ drive
ship;
along the F a reli provi pital appe
So
was s hunti amon peopl
nor c their escap live t and c

So
the o ing, k

in which they were born and in which they had spent so many happy days, were in ashes. Their cattle were slaughtered or driven away. Their farms had forever passed from their ownership; and they themselves were carried to the English colonies along the Atlantic coast, and landed among a people hostile to the French nation, speaking a language unknown to them, of a religion at variance with theirs, and unwilling or unable to provide for their maintenance. Their condition was truly pitiable. Is it surprising that their sufferings and wrongs appeal to us strongly even at this late day?

Some found their way to Louisiana where their language was spoken; some went to the western frontier and engaged in hunting and trapping; some went to Canada; others remained among the English; a number were sent to England by the people of Virginia and South Carolina, after asking the Governor of Nova Scotia for money for their support; a few found their way back to Nova Scotia, and, joining those who had escaped exile, formed little settlements; and their descendants live to-day in their Acadian land and still preserve the old dress and customs of their forefathers.

"Still stands the forest primeval; but under the shade of its branches

Dwells another race, with other customs and language.
Only along the shore of the mournful and mystic Atlantic Linger a few Acadian peasants, whose fathers from exile Wandered back to their native land to die in its bosom.
In the fisherman's cot the wheel and the loom are still busy; Maidens still wear their Norman caps and their kirtles of homespun,
And by the evening fire repeat Evangeline's story."

Some of the Acadians had signified their willingness to take the oath of allegiance when they saw that exile was forthcoming, but this privilege was refused them. They had asked to you may dwell

ceable people!
is his Majesty's

s, Cumberland and souls were transpore was one thousand escaped to the forest,

inas.

ldings were burned,
In the district
tbuildings, 11 mills 10th of September
orts. Heartbroken
as carried from the ever known. They household goods.
one. Their houses, be permitted to remove to the French colony in Louisburg, but this had been refused on the grounds that it would add to the strength of the force already there, and increase the danger of incursions. They had been threatened with removal, but did not fully understand the penalty. Something had to be done to settle this vexed Acadian question; but we shudder as we contemplate the full results of the settlement as carried out. After the exile of the Acadians, the home government desired that the land should be occupied by disbanded soldiers. The governor of Nova Scotia objected, claiming that they were not the proper material for a new colony. The governor was permitted to adopt his own plans, and he proceeded to invite settlers from New England, through the provincial agent at Boston. As a result several hundred settlers came from Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

The power of the French in the new world was rapidly waning. In 1758 Louisburg surrendered to Amherst, Prince Edward's Island was taken soon after, and in 1759 Quebec fell. By this final victory the English became masters of all Canada. By the treaty of Paris in 1763, the French gave up all claim to Nova Scotia, Cape Breton, Canada, and many islands in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

When the American Revolution broke out and the Thirteen United Colonies declared themselves free and independent in 1776, the province of Nova Scotia remained loyal to the crown, although there was some dissatisfaction. Immediately after the close of the war Nova Scotia received a large addition to its population by the emigration of loyalists from the states. Between fifteen thousand and twenty thousand of these refugees landed at different ports of the province. Many of them found homes in the valley that was the former home of the Acadians.

1. T colonists
the years Saintong limited a ern depa circumsta lands of where th in Acadia way that Hannay's
2. T
into the Acadians of the sar
3. T
Scotia, w

NOTES.

1. The people of Acadia were mainly the descendants of colonists brought out by Isaac de Razilly and Charnise between the years 1633 and 1638. These colonists came from Rochelle, Saintonge, and Poitou, so that they were drawn from a very limited area on the west coast of France, covered by the modern departments of Vendée and Charente Inférieure. This circumstance had some influence on their mode of settling the lands of Acadia, for they came from a country of marshes, where the sea was kept out by artificial dykes, and they found in Acadia similar marshes, which they dealt with in the same way that they had been accustomed to practice in France.—Hannay's History of Acadia.

2. The Gaspereau is a stream flowing from the southwest into the Basin of Minas, near Grand Pre. At its mouth the Acadians embarked. This must not be confused with the post of the same name on the isthmus.

3. The Cornwallis mentioned as the governor of Nova Scotia, was not the Cornwallis of the Revolution.

CHAPTER V.

THE ACADIAN LAND.

"A land which floweth with milk and honey."
"And ye shall dispossess the inhabitants thereof and dwell therein."

The site of the first settlement by De Monts, and the region made famous by Longfellow's poem, are both in the valley formed by two ridges of highlands called the North and the South mountain. This valley extends through the counties of Annapolis and King's. The North mountain fronts on the shore of the Bay of Fundy, and extends from Digby Cut, at the entrance to Annapolis Basin, northeastwardly to Capes Blomidon and Split at the entrance of the Basin of Minas. The South mountain is neither as steep nor as high as the North, but extends nearly parallel to it. To the westward through this valley, runs the Annapolis river, emptying into Annapolis Basin at the site of old Port Royal. In the broader eastern end of the valley, which drains into Minas Basin, there are many streams:—the Gaspereau, Cornwallis, Canard, Pereaue and Habitant rivers. The land drained by these rivers is the most fertile and highly cultivated of any in the province. It is fitly called the "Garden of Nova Scotia." Along the western shore of Minas Basin, from Grand Pre to the foothills of the North Mountain, are the dyke lands reclaimed from the sea by the French and their successors. This dyke land is the most valuable of the many soils found in the valley. In most instances of alluvial deposits in other parts of the world, the deposit is brought to the sea by the rivers. Here we find the process is oney."

thereof

s, and the region
th in the valley
e North and the h the counties of n fronts on the Digby Cut, at the to Capes Blom-of Minas. The h as the North, estward through g into Annapolis broader eastern n, there are many rd, Perea and ivers is the most ince. It is fitly
he western shore lls of the North the sea by the
is the most val-n most instances d, the deposit is d the process is

Map of Annapolis and Kings Counties.

reversed, and the deposit is brought up the rivers by the sea. This alluvial matter comes from the shores and bottom of the basin and bay, from whence it is torn by the mighty tides which ever sweep back and forth through their channels. The torrent sweeps up the Bay of Fundy and enters the Basin at Cape Split, where it reaches a velocity of ten or twelve miles an hour. Here it reaches its greatest height of seventy feet above low water mark. In some of the Acadian rivers, the upward flow of the tide against the fresh water current forms a wall of water called the bore of the tide. This sweeps up the stream at a rapid rate, and with a loud rushing sound. The height of the bore illustrated on page 42 is 5 feet 4 inches.

The largest unbroken tract of dyke land in the province is the Grand Pre, or Great Meadow, in Horton. This tract the Acadians reclaimed by building dykes from either end of Long Island to the mainland. South of Long Island, where the upland rises from the Grand Pre, was the village of the Acadians. In the field just in front of the row of old French willows, can still be seen the cellar of the house which is supposed to be the one used as Colonel Winslow's headquarters during his momentous visit. Here, too, is the site of the village church. The old French well marks the site of the village green, and a little farther eastward was the Acadian cemetery. The village probably extended irregularly from the church southward to the higher lands. Along the line of the village street may be seen many willows, the old French apple trees, the grave of an English soldier who died at the time of the exile, and the site of the village smithy. To the northward of the row of willows first mentioned, stretches the great meadow from which the village received its name; and beyond that is Long Island, easily distinguished by the trees and houses upon it.

...rivers by the sea.
 ...nd bottom of the
 ...the mighty tides
 ...r channels. The
 ...ers the Basin at
 ...or twelve miles
 ...t of seventy feet
 ...adian rivers, the
 ...ter current forms
 ...This sweeps up
 ...hing sound. The
 ...et 4 inches.

...in the province
 ...ton. This tract
 ...from either end
 ...of Long Island,
 ...was the village of
 ...the row of old
 ...the house which
 ...Winslow's head-
 ...oo, is the site of
 ...ks the site of the
 ...was the Acadian
 ...regularly from the
 ...g the line of the ...old French apple
 ...d at the time of

...To the north-
 ...etches the great
 ...me; and beyond
 ...y the trees and

The "Grand Pré" is the stretch of meadow seen beyond the row of French willows in the center of picture. Beyond the meadow is Long Island. Beyond Long Island and to the right of Cape Breton is the Basin of Minas. In the field between the willows and the R. R. are the French wall, the cemetery, the cellar of the priest's house, and the site of the village church.

"And away to the northward Blomidon rose, and the forests old, and aloft on the mountains
Sea fogs pitched their tents, and mists from the mighty Atlantic
Looked on the happy valley, but ne'er from their station descended."

Blomidon is plainly seen to the northward, and very often the "mists from the mighty Atlantic" roll in great masses over the top of the North mountain and hide much of it from view. At such times the mist or fog rarely descends to the valley. Great detached masses of fog often hang on the side or summit of Blomidon, and can be seen plainly from the land or from the waters of the Basin. Blomidon is a bluff headland of red sandstone, surmounted by a perpendicular wall of basaltic trap, the whole about six hundred feet high. This headland is a rich field for the geologist, as the varieties of specimens found are numerous and interesting. In the spring, after the severe frosts of winter, great masses are detached from its sides, and crash downward to be ground by the relentless tides. The geologist must work among these masses at low water, because at high tide the sea washes the face of the cliff. Many beautiful specimens of amethyst are found. The underlying sandstone is worn away by tidal action, and this hastens the fall of the trap rock from above.

The soil of the dyke lands consists mainly of a large percentage of silica, the iron which gives the reddish color, calcareous matter, and various salts of potash, lime, alumina, etc. This combination is a most favorable one, and its fertility is increased by sediment brought by the streams from the uplands. For nearly two hundred years these dyke lands have been producing from two to four tons per acre of the finest hay, and have also furnished autumn pasturage for cattle. The marsh mud is taken from tidal streams or rivers in autumn or winter, and u sults.

Ap
and a Grapes success

but th
the pr apple t
apple t
supply elm, an for ho herring or alew
and ma
of spec

In t lynx, w musk-r geese, the field beech ries, ju ries, bu mayflow

In t resourc certainl milk an

1.

2.

and used as a fertilizer on the uplands, with excellent results.

Apples and potatoes are the principal products of the valley, and are shipped mostly to England and the West Indies. Grapes, berries, plums, cherries, and various vegetables are successfully raised. Wheat, rye, and oats are a profitable crop, but the amount produced is much smaller per acre than on the prairies of our west and northwest. The longevity of apple trees is apparent when we notice, as stated above, that apple trees planted by the French are still living. The forests supply spruce, fir, pine, hemlock, birch, beech, maple, oak, elm, and other woods,—in fact nearly all the varieties required for housebuilding and shipbuilding. The sea supplies cod, herring, mackerel, lobsters, salmon, shad, smelts, gaspereau or alewives, haddock, pollock, flounders, sea-bass, sturgeon, and many other fish; while the streams contain an abundance of speckled trout.

In the woods are moose, caribou, bear, the timber wolf, fox, lynx, wild-cat, porcupine, rabbit and skunk. Otter, mink and musk-rat are in the streams and ponds. Of birds there are geese, ducks, plover, snipe, woodcock and partridge. From the fields and woods are gathered checkerberries, hazel nuts, beech nuts, strawberries, blueberries, huckleberries, cranberries, juniper berries, red raspberries, blackberries, gooseberries, bunchberries, and spruce gum. The dainty and beautiful mayflower abounds.

In this short chapter we can learn but little of the many resources and advantages of this wonderful country, but we certainly are convinced that it is "a land which floweth with milk and honey."

NOTES.

1. Dyke lands are worth from $300 to $400 per acre.
2. The amount given as the maximum yield per acre of hay on the dyke lands is four tons. This is considered fairly accurate, as the author knows of a yield of 44 T. 1800 lbs. from ten acres, and can furnish data from many reliable sources that place the amount at the figures given.

3. It is stated on good authority that four hundred bushels of potatoes were grown on one acre of ground near Kentville.

4. The name "gaspereau" is a local name applied to the alewives, for the reason that the Gaspereau is the only stream they ascend from the Basin of Minas. The Gaspereau is the only one of these streams that has its source in a lake, and the alewives probably seek this lake for spawning.

5. King's County raises 225,000 bushels of potatoes yearly. The estimated yearly apple product of King's and Annapolis counties is 500,000 bbl.

T
hardy
New
habit some Britai
of the first y
road, was li
T
of the poker was n eight consid time.
in the iron k was h were p factor biscui
the ha same p lifter,

considered fairly
F. 1800 lbs. from able sources that hundred bushels near Kentville.

e applied to the
the only stream aspereau is the
a lake, and the potatoes yearly.

and Annapolis

CHAPTER VI.

THE SUCCESSORS.

"Dwells another race with other customs and language."

The settlers who came to the valley after the Exile, were a hardy and industrious people. As many of them came from New England, they brought with them the customs, dress, habits and religious views of New England. These were somewhat modified by the presence of settlers from Great Britain, and the trade with that country. We know but little of the social condition and affairs of these people during the first years of the occupation, but, as they were without railroad, telegraph or steamboat, it is fair to presume that there was little change previous to the year 1800.

The houses were warmed and the cooking done by means of the fireplace, with its necessary andirons, shovel, tongs, poker, bellows, crane, bake-kettle and brick oven. The baking was mainly done in the brick oven. Quarters of meat, six or eight loaves of bread, a loaf of cake, and a half dozen pies was considered no unusual quantity to put into one oven at one time. Often a loaf of bread or cake, or a pudding, was baked in the bake-kettle over the fire. The bake-kettle was a round iron kettle about ten inches deep, and had an iron cover. It was hung on the crane over a slow fire. When baking, coals were put on the cover. The baking thus done was very satisfactory. Often, what was called short-cake, made like our biscuit, was baked before the fire in a long handled frying pan, the handle resting on a chair. Pancakes were fried in this same pan, and the cook would turn the cake without knife or lifter, but by a quick movement of the hand and arm. One young lady was thus frying cakes while a young man, who was greatly interested in her, sat in the chimney corner watching her dexterously turning them. Something that confused her must have been said, for she missed the turn on one, and it landed in his lap, raw side down.

Everyone kept sheep. The sheep were sheared, the wool was picked and greased, and taken to the carding machine, where it was made into rolls. It was then taken home, and spun into yarn on the big wheel. From there it went to the loom where it was woven into blankets, and cloth for men's clothes and women's dresses for everyday use. No young lady was ready to be married until she had prepared a stock of home made blankets, so much needed in that climate.

Flax was raised, cleansed of the tow, or hard part, on the hatchel, a board with long iron teeth, and spun on the little wheel. The product was then woven, and this too was an important part of a young lady's dowry.

Wheat bread and rye bread were used; also much corn meal. "Fine bread" was of wheat, "coarse bread" was of rye. Coal oil came into use about 1840. Before that time, and to a great extent for many years after, the light used was from dipped or moulded candles.

At church the conduct of old and young was governed by rigid rules. All actions in the house of God were most sedate and exemplary. Sunday school began at 9:00 A. M. and lasted until 10:45. Then an intermission of fifteen minutes was given for children to walk in the graveyard, read the inscriptions on the tombstones, and eat their lunches. Church services began at 11 o'clock. After the sermon, liberty was given to anyone desiring to speak. In the Presbyterian church they sang the Psalms of David, in the Baptist church Watts' hymns were used, and with the Methodist church came Wesley's hymns. Pews were either owned or rented. When a family had entered their p a low allowe

faced The r allowe
Lit
pantal

laced o for lac
West long p glazed buckle coats v white
many

their pew the door was closed and buttoned. Many pews had a low seat along one side for the children, who were not allowed to be conspicuous. During the prayer all stood and faced about, except in the Methodist church, where all knelt. The negro pews were in the gallery. Negroes were not allowed to enter the body of the church.

Little girls wore short dresses, as they do now, but with pantalets down to the shoe-tops. Their shoes were not high

Port Williams Bridge, Cornwallis River, Tide out.

laced or buttoned, but low, with two or three pairs of eyelets for laces. Their hats had very broad brims. Beads of glass, West India peas, or gold were much worn. The boys wore long pants and boots, short jackets, and flat topped caps with glazed visors. After the days of stocks, knee-pants and large buckles, the men wore white beaver hats, "swallow-tailed" coats with brass or horn buttons, vests of various colors, and white or black trousers. For work in the woods in winter, many men wore rawhide moccasins. In winter, the older men wore long camelot cloaks fastened at the throat by a chain. The old ladies wore long cloaks of broadcloth or shepherd's plaid. Large bonnets were worn, and in due time came the kind called the "scoop" bonnet.

Children did not have the toys and playthings of to-day. A wax doll or a London doll was a luxury and rarity. A whole family of rag dolls usually inhabited the garret. An old dormer window was also a favorite play house.

At school, the desks consisted of a board placed slantwise, and extending along the wall on three sides of the school-room. In front of this "desk" was a bench for the pupils, and under the "desk" was a horizontal board for the books. When the pupils wrote they faced the wall; when they studied or recited they swung their feet over the bench and faced the center of the room. Classes studied their spelling aloud and in unison, swaying together on the bench as the cadence rose and fell. When a school became crowded, a double "desk" with its benches was built down the middle of the room. Most school-houses were built with a dungeon, a small room with no windows, for the confinement of refractory pupils. Quill pens were used, and the teacher kept them in repair. When the school had a lady teacher, all the girls took their "work" and learned to sew. The teacher basted most of the work. After learning to sew, each girl was expected to work a "sampler," which was a small square of canvas, around the edge of which a vine with fruit was worked with crewels. Inside the vine was the name of the worker, her age, the alphabet, and sometimes a motto, a bird or an animal. The boys had but few playthings except those made with a jack knife. They played ball, hide and seek, tag and various other games similar to those of to-day. Girls and boys played together "Old Mother Hop-pity Clink," "Thornaway," "The Spanish Knight" or "The Rich Widow."

SPANISH KNIGHT.

Mother:

"My daughter Jane she is too young To be ruled by your false, flattering tongue."

Knight:

"Then fare-thee-well, my lady gay, For I must turn another way."

Mother:

"Turn back, turn back, ye Spanish Knight, And scour your boots and spurs so bright."

Knight:

"My boots and spurs they cost you naught, For in this town they were not bought;
So, fare-thee-well, my lady gay,
For I must go another way."

RICH WIDOW.

"I am a rich widow;
I live all alone;
I have but one daughter
And she is my own.
Come choose you a good one Or choose you none."

The young men gathered birch bark, which was used to make "lighters" for lighting the candles, kindling fires, and also to spread on the house under the shingles, to keep out the cold of winter. They gathered rushes for bottoming chairs. They gathered the moss from the uplands, and in summer the parlor fireplace was filled with it. In forest or field they saw blackbirds, jays, bob-o'-links, robins, the great snowy owl, the big brown owl, and the little screech owl. The little red squirrel was common, crows and gulls were numerous, and in some localities the raven was found. The housewife gathered for medicinal uses lobelia, catnip, boneset, tansy, wormwood, motherwort, celandine, pith elder and sumac. From the shores and mud flats came an abundance of clams and scallops, called by the people "skim shells," because they were extensively used for skimming milk.

From the rocks, at low water, was picked an edible sea weed called dulse.

Port Williams Bridge, Cornwallis River, Tide in.

NOTES.

1. The English custom of turning to the left when meeting on the highway was adopted.
2. The principal roads running east and west through this part of the valley were called streets.
3. In one of the old church-yards was a head-stone at the grave of "Hannah English and Child, 1767." This head-stone was broken, through age or accident, and in the summer of 1897 it was stolen by some relic hunting tourist.

The pr
sixty-five the trip to was used;
The produ geese, chic socks and the pair, were about per pair for thread, sug kept a gen
The dry go shillings an per, with o and French

The vel caracole, a used the w with broad of the dyk horses were with strips to the mou fowling pie wells by me horseback,

c. From the s and scallops, y were exten-
edible sea weed

CHAPTER VII.

THE SUCCESSORS—CONTINUED.

The principal market for their products was Halifax, about sixty-five or seventy miles away. Two or three times a year the trip to market was made. If the load was light, one horse was used; if heavy, three to five horses were driven tandem. The produce taken consisted of mutton, pork, cheese; eggs, geese, chickens, butter, apples, hay, and dozens of pairs of socks and mittens. Geese were sold per piece, and chickens by the pair, all cleaned and ready to cook. Prices varied, but were about 5c to 7c for mutton, 50c for geese, and 25c to 40c per pair for chickens. They brought back cotton cloth, ribbons, thread, sugar, silks, rum and molasses. The country stores kept a general stock from shingle nails to West India rum. The dry goods came from England. The currency was pounds, shillings and pence, consisting of English gold, silver and copper, with one pound and five pound notes of paper. Spanish and French coins were also in circulation.

The vehicles used were the "One Hoss Shay," the gig, the caracole, and later the wagonette. For hauling loads they used the wagon and the ox-cart. One variety of the latter, with broad wooden rims and no tire, was used on the soft ground of the dyke lands. To draw the stage coaches, four or six horses were used. The plows had wooden mould-boards covered with strips of band iron, and the shares were made and fitted to the mould-boards by the blacksmiths. All muskets and fowling pieces were flint-locks. Water was drawn from the wells by means of the well-sweep. Much of the travel was on horseback, and saddle-bags and pistol holsters were in common use. In winter the warming-pan, a large, round, shallow, metal pan with a metal cover and a long handle, was filled with live coals from the fireplace, and pushed between the blankets to warm the beds before retiring.

These people had a firm belief in witchcraft, ghosts, signs, and charms. A black cat shut in the oven and a wish made for some one to come, would certainly bring the person wished for. A black cat put under a tub would prevent any one from coming. The tongs turned upside down would bring the one wished for.

The "Bore" of the Tide. Height of Wave, 5 ft. 4 in.

A woman once put a black cat under a tub, to prevent the coming of some one from over the water. Such a violent and terrible storm arose that she became frightened, let the cat out, and the storm abated at once.

Here
living n sick or c them.
to disap
with oth hill, wo no trace over the Finger-r
One old reason f ache. S moon, fi seen ove over the
be fulfill unmarrie morning seeing.

Hall favorite t future.
some sup took a ha side of th these wo

and look would ce

Here and there were old women, said to be witches. People living near them could not get their butter to come; cattle were sick or chickens died, and of course the old woman had bewitched them. One old woman in particular, had often been known to disappear suddenly, while walking up a steep hill in company with others. Her companions, on proceeding to the top of the hill, would find her seated there quietly waiting for them, with no traces of effort or fatigue. A horse-shoe was often placed over the door, to counteract or prevent the witches' influence. Finger-nails were cut on Friday to prevent the toothache. One old lady, while cutting her nails on that day, gave as her reason for so doing, that it was a sure preventive of toothache. She had not, at that time, a tooth in her head. The new moon, first seen over the right shoulder, brought good luck; seen over the left shoulder, it brought bad luck. When seen over the right shoulder and a wish made, the wish would surely be fulfilled. Among the young people it was said, that the first unmarried person of the opposite sex, seen on St. Valentine's morning, would be the future companion of the person so seeing.

Hallow-e'en was celebrated in various ways. That was the favorite time for working charms, and seeking knowledge of the future. Spirits walked the earth on that night, and therefore some supernatural effects were to be expected. If a young lady took a handful of hemp seed, and walked once around the outside of the house, sowing the seed as she walked, and repeating these words:

"Hemp seed, I sow thee.
Whomsoever I'm to have Come after me and mow thee," and looked over her shoulder as she completed the circuit; she would certainly see the mate of future years.

If yarn, unwound from a ball in the hand, be let down a well, a pull would be felt, and the holder must ask who it was; in answer, a name would be pronounced from the depths of the well.

Cabbage was migratory on Hallowe'en. From the gardens of those who had a large quantity, it mysteriously traveled to the homes of the poor, who had little or none. Gates changed places, and other strange doings occurred; but no damage was done to property.

In fixing the time for planting or sowing, making soap, and for many other operations, strict attention was paid to the phases of the moon, and much dependence placed upon choosing a favorable time according to that luminary.

A popular ghost story was to the effect that a ghost visited the living, after they had retired for the night, and that a cold, clammy hand was pressed upon them, coming unexpectedly out of the darkness. Once a girl, a firm believer in ghosts, had been listening to this, and similar stories told around the fireplace in the evening. She went up to her room, feeling very nervous and frightened. On getting into bed, she covered up her head in dread of she knew not what. To her horror she felt a soft pressure on her feet. This soft touch stole toward her head, gradually and silently. She tried to scream, but could not. But, in her agony, she at last heard, near her head, a sound that ended the trouble. It was the purring of her pet cat. The "ghost" was at once joyfully recognized.

At various times and places, ghostly noises were heard, such as groans, and the rattling of chains; but we suspect that the solution in each case would have been as simple as that of the ghostly hand we have just read of.

Many were the stories of pirates' gold and Captain Kidd's treasure. On the face of the cliff at Blomidon, a cave was said to exist, that contained a vast quantity of treasure. Some hand, be let down a must ask who it was;

from the depths of the

From the gardens
teriously traveled to one. Gates changed but no damage was owing, making soap, attention was paid to the e placed upon choosinary.

at that a ghost visited light, and that a cold, coming unexpectedly
a believer in ghosts, ories told around the
to her room, feeling into bed, she covered that. To her horror s soft touch stole to-She tried to scream, t last heard, near her t was the purring of yfully recognized.

noises were heard, such we suspect that the simple as that of the

and Captain Kidd's aidon, a cave was said of treasure. Some venturesome spirits tried to reach and explore it. They returned empty handed, saying that they found the entrance guarded by a great serpent. This was in summer. Later they went again, and this time said they were driven back by a skeleton sentinel, armed with a sword and a blunderbuss. A third time the effort

The pipe stems and pipe bowls are from Acadian cellars. Bit of wood at extreme right is from French apple tree. The three shells in front are the scallop or "skim" shells. The bottle completely covered with basket work was covered by Micmac Indians. The old Bible in center is the one mentioned in the note. The other articles shown belonged to the early settlers of the province. Some were brought from Scotland and England, and some came from Connecticut about 1780. Among them are copper articles, horn spoons and some very old china.

was made by those who knew the secret of the difficult way to the cave. This time they took with them a charm procured from a negro voodoo doctor, which was proof against spirits or snakes. When they neared the cave, they discovered an armed party of rough characters in ambush in the woods, ready to take by force any treasure they might secure. A third time they returned unsuccessful, and soon after this, the cave was hidden, and the path to it carried away, by a fall of rock.

The Isle au Haut, in the Bay of Fundy, was believed to contain buried treasure, but it was asserted that when a party landed from a vessel, and began to dig in a certain place, a violent storm arose, which threatened to tear the vessel from its moorings. When the party rushed to the beach, the sea and air at once became still; but upon their return to their digging, the same disturbance occurred, and they were forced to abandon further effort for treasure.

An old man died, who had been considered as a blasphemer by the stricter church people. Those who watched with him at his death declared that just as the spirit left his body, a Beast, resembling a great black dog, came from under the bed, sprang through the window, and vanished in the night.

At one of the irus, numerous guests had refused to remain a second night, in a certain room of the house. They one and all declared that they heard a voice saying repeatedly, "Want to be shaved?" "Want to be shaved?" The landlord investigated, and found that a tree branch, blown by the wind, raked across the window with a noise that was almost an exact reproduction of the words the guests said they had heard.

An old clock, that had been in a certain family for many years, is said to have foretold the death of at least five members of that family, by striking between the hours, with no mistake in the strikes of the following hour. This was solemnly asserted by several members of the family, who said they heard it.

Suicide was almost unheard of. One case occurred, of which we have record. An old lady took her own life; and, according to the old law, she was buried where four roads met, and a stake was driven through the body.

The young folks were thoroughly taught lessons of polite-

e. A third time this, the cave was a fall of rock. y, was believed to that when a party a certain place, a ar the vessel from the beach, the sea
eir return to their l they were forced

ed as a blasphemer watched with him irit left his body, a rom under the bed, n the night.

l refused to remain
se. They one and repeatedly, "Want ne landlord investi-
by the wind, raked almost an exact rey had heard.

n family for many t least five members
rs, with no mistake is was solemnly as-said they heard it.
e case occurred, of k her own life; and,
ere four roads met,

ht lessons of politeness. Boys, on entering a school-room, bowed to their teacher. On entering a room in a house, or while walking on the highway, they always bowed to their elders. Girls, on similar occasions, "dropped a courtesy." One girl, who had been thoroughly drilled in these matters, was one day walking on the road, when she met a funeral. Mindful of her training, she stopped, and courtesied to each person in the procession.

Before leaving this chapter we will notice a little story of one of the school-masters of the old times. Some mischievous neighboring boys poked a stick through his pantry window at night, knocking down a pile of pans. His wife, awakened by the noise, called him and told him there were thieves in the house. His reply was, "Ann, get the broom and drive 'em out."—And immediately he resumed his sleep.

NOTES.

1. The author has in his possession the Bible of the old lady who committed suicide. The book was printed in 1725.
2. One boy, when not quite 14 years old, repeatedly made the trip to Halifax with his load of produce. When we consider his age, the value of his load, the distance traveled, stopping at inns among strangers, the then wild country through which he drove, and the great amount of purchases made for the return journey after marketing his produce, we consider this quite an achievement.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE ACADIANS AND ACADIAN RELICS.

Many tales were told regarding valuables concealed by the Acadians. It was declared by many that descendants of the French came to the province at various times, and dug up treasure left by their ancestors. It must be true, for had they not seen "with their own eyes" the hole where the digging was done? Much, if not all, of this digging was done by young men of the neighborhood, who were searching for the traditional wealth of the Acadians. The truth of the matter is probably this: The Acadians were not a wealthy people. They had little or no money, and but few articles of value. If they owned any jewelry it was probably in the form of heirlooms of such small size that they could easily be worn, or hidden in the household goods which they were permitted to take away with them. They knew that they would not return, and they would not be likely to bury such articles as the ones mentioned, and under such conditions.

A region that is as important to the student of Acadia and its Acadian remains as any in the valley, not excepting Grand Pre, is the country on the north side of the road leading from Upper Canard to Upper Dyke Village. Three or four French orchards stood here, and the remains of numerous French cellars and wells prove the previous existence of an Acadian settlement of considerable importance. In the old days, many articles used by the Acadians were found here. A descendant of the Acadians came to this region many years ago, and made careful inquiry and thorough search for an apple tree containing some links of a chain. He said that his ancestors had left articles buried near this tree; and if the tree were found he could find the articles buried, by following directions handed down to him. His search was in vain; but he found an old, white-haired negro who remembered the chopping of the tree. He could tell the orchard it was in, but could not locate the position of the tree. He remembered the finding of the chain, and described it accurately.

Some of the old French wells are still used. A very old Frenchman lived in this neighborhood as late as 1825. His house was said to be one that escaped burning by the English. It is probable that every Acadian cellar (and some that are not Acadian) has been probed in the useless search for valuables. Many a sturdy apple tree was undermined by the searchers, and many articles, considered valueless by them, but of greatest value to the collector or student of today, were lost or destroyed.

Near Port Williams, there was a deep place in the Cornwallis river, into which, tradition tells us, the French cast their valuables from the church. Another tradition is to the effect that the bell from the church at Grand Pre was filled with gold and silver articles, and sunk in the mud of the marshes.

The apples of the Acadians were of both sweet and sour varieties. They were not large apples, but the trees yielded large crops.

The Acadian relics that are actually found consist of a few articles, most of them rudely made, that tend to prove that they were used by a people who were poor as to money or articles of value; that things of luxury were unknown to them; and that they toiled to cultivate the soil, reclaim the marshes, and raise their crops and herds, to supply themselves with food and clothing. From the fields and cellars, are dug, from time to time, old ploughshares, coulter, spades, hoes, axes, hatchets, hammers, scythes, pitchforks, wrought-nails, bits of glass of a poor quality, links of chain, iron kettles of different sizes, and clay pipes and broken pipe stems. Some of these pipes bear the name of R. Tippet as the maker. Who R. Tippet was, and where the pipes were made, is a question not yet decided. Pipes of this same maker have been found in Indian graves of north-central New York, and on Manhattan Island. Were the pipes French, or were they English?

If we look on the valley at the season described by Longfellow when,

Relics taken from the old French well at Grand Pre.

"Filled was the air with a dreamy and magical light; and the landscape

Lay as if new-created in all the freshness of childhood," and see through the "soft still air the Basin of Minas," and
"the ships with their wavering shadows" lying at anchor, we do not think it strange that tales and legends were numerous among the Acadians and their successors. How could it be otherwise with such surroundings? We have no doubt of the existence of such stories and "signs" as:

1. The finding of the lucky stone in the nest of the swallow.
2. The luck attending the finding of a horseshoe.

3. The Loup-garou or were-wolf of the forest.
4. The goblin that came in the night to water the horses.
5. The white Létiche, the ghost of the child who unchristened died.
6. The talking of oxen in the stables on Christmas eve.
7. The curing of fever by a spider shut in a nut shell.
8. The luck attending the finding of a four leaved clover.
9. The signs of a hard winter, as foretold by the large supply of honey laid up by the bees, and the unusually thick fur of the foxes.

"With whatsoever else was writ in the lore of the village."

The lines of the poem of Evangeline containing the statement that

"At stated seasons the flood gates Opened, and welcomed the sea to wander at will o'er the meadows,"

have been criticized.

In the Cornwallis valley it has never been necessary to admit the tides. When the dykes have been broken by a great storm, and the salt water has swept over the meadows, two or three years have elapsed before the grass fully recovered from the effects. But there is a foundation for the lines quoted above. In the Chignecto region there are tracts of marsh lands that do not contain the ingredients found in the dyke lands of other localities, and therefore their fertility does not endure. To renew them the sea is admitted at intervals, and by a new deposit their fertility is assured for another period.

NOTES :

1. It is interesting to note the agreement of the implements and articles mentioned in the poem with the list of relics found.
2. Pipes have been found in the Acadian cellars in a position which verifies Longfellow's line :
"Take from the shelf overhead thy pipe and the box of tobacco."

pipes bear the ppet was, and t yet decided.
lian graves of
d. Were the bed by Long-

Pre.
light; and childhood," of Minas," and at anchor, we were numerous ow could it be no doubt of the he nest of the seshoe.

CHAPTER IX.

THE INDIANS.

The native Indians of Nova Scotia were the Micmacs, and many members of this tribe still live in the province. The early Micmacs were a warlike tribe, wandering from place to place, hunting, fishing, or fighting with the tribes of the mainland.

After gaining the friendship of the Indians, the Roman Catholic Missionaries taught them their religion and easily converted them to Christianity.

In Micmac tradition the most important character is Glooscap. His deeds and character, and the veneration in which he was held, remind us most forcibly of the Hiawatha of the western Indians or the Montezuma of Mexico. He was a combination of the human and divine, and he provided human conveniences for his people with omnipotent power and on a heroic scale. Minas Basin was his beaver pond, the dam being at Cape Split. Spencer's Island was his kettle turned upside down. All animals were obedient to his will. He could at any time call to his side the moose, the caribou, the bear and the lynx, and they promptly did his errands and carried on his work. He controlled the elements. When his enemies assembled in great numbers, intending to overthrow him, he extinguished their fires, and called to his aid the armies of the frost, so that soon the hostile force was cold in death. He possessed the proverbial Indian hospitality to strangers, who were at all times welcome to his great wigwam on Partridge Island. Glooscap made the first man from a tree. He gathered amethysts from Blomidon and gave them to his favorites. While the dam existed, the waters filled the Annapolis valley. Becoming angered at the beavers who inhabited this pond, he struck the dam with his tomahawk, and the blow split the solid rock, as seen at Cape Split to this day. He then seized with his hands a large portion of the dam and hurled it at the beavers. This mass so thrown is known today as the Five Islands. A large part of the pond was drained by this break in the dam, and the beavers fled, to return no more.

Strange to relate, geologists support this tradition to a certain extent, and tell us that the waters did cover the valley, until, by some great upheaval, they were forced within their present boundaries. Glooscap tamed the whale, and used him as a beast of burden. On the back of a whale he rode rapidly to places far distant across the waters. He dwelt for many, many years on Partridge Island, but when the white man came he decided to depart. He called together all the birds and animals, except the beavers, and gave them a grand farewell feast. At the close of the feast he bade them farewell, and departed in his canoe, in a manner similar to the departure of Hiawatha and Montezuma. After his departure, the birds and animals no longer understood one another, and there was great confusion and quarreling. The loons still call unceasingly for their friend, and the owls cry "Koo, Koo, Skoos!" "Koo, Koo, Skoos!"—meaning Oh, I am sorry! Oh, I am sorry! But Glooscap will surely come again; his kettle will be righted; his dogs, which he turned to stone when he departed, will be called to life; his unbounded hospitality will again be dispensed; beast, bird and man will again understand each other, and universal peace and happiness will prevail.

The later Indians were not hostile to the English-speaking settlers, and caused them but little trouble. They lived in their wigwams, built of birch bark in the summer, or of hemlock bark and earth in the winter. They sold to the whites baskets, birch-bark canoes, toboggans, snow-shoes, moccasins and hides. Many of the articles made by the squaws were ornamented with beads and porcupine quills of various colors. They picked and sold berries and other products of the woods and fields. When game was plenty they brought flesh, fish and furs to the settlements.

Partridge Island, the home of Glooscap. Cape Split in the distance at left.

Soon after the coming of the white man, small-pox made sad inroads among the Indians. Large numbers died of consumption, and any contagious disease seemed to take fierce hold upon them.

The stone relics of the early Indians of Nova Scotia are comparatively scarce. Here and there are found the rude arrow-head or spear-head, and occasionally a stone implement, such as a celt, axe or pestle. Some authorities on archæology believe that most of these larger stone articles were made by other and distant tribes, and were brought to Nova Scotia by trade, the ma

WI
an In hunter muzzle kill yo
of the strikin effects through revenge her ar
were and a alone,
'Napo
Indian threat mome
the fa neigh Heari
which I'll ki follow rose scarec

1.
to the
on the shoes, moccasins the squaws were of various colors.

of the woods
of light flesh, fish distance at left.

small-pox made many died of cond to take fierce

Nova Scotia are found the rude
stone implement,
as on archæology es were made by Nova Scotia by trade, or were captured during one of their occasional raids to the mainland.

When the "Eighteen Hundreds" were young and few, an Indian was accidentally killed near Annapolis. A white hunter met him, and jokingly grasping his gun near the muzzle, thrust it toward the Indian saying, "Will that much kill you?" The startled Indian sprang to one side to get out of the range of the weapon, and in so doing stumbled and fell, striking his head on a sharp stone. He died at once from the effects of the wound so inflicted. The joker fled. The Indians throughout the valley were greatly excited and threatened revenge. Shortly after this occurrence, a lady with a baby in her arms, was sitting in her house when the rest of her family were absent. Suddenly and quietly the outer door opened, and an Indian stepped into the room. Seeing that she was alone, he asked fiercely "Who kill 'um dat Ingun down 'Napolis way?" "I am sure I don't know," said she. The Indian then drew a long knife from his belt and, advancing threateningly, said "Me kill um you, anyway." At that moment there was an interruption. A man who lived with the family, making and mending shoes for them and their neighbors, was working at his trade in an adjoining room. Hearing the last exclamation of the Indian, he seized a gun which stood in the corner, and rushed out saying "I guess I'll kill you!" The Indian darted out of the door. The man followed and fired, and the Indian fell. After a moment he rose slowly to his feet and, apparently unhurt, ran like a scared deer. They never saw him again.

NOTES.

1. At the western extremity of Partridge Island the visitor to the summit may see an excellent outline of an Indian's face on the cliff wall. The likeness is rendered more startling by the reddish color of the rock of which it is composed. This is said to be the likeness of Glooscap; and that stolid face looks forever directly down the Bay of Fundy, through the gap where the tides are ever rushing and swirling.

2. Partridge Island is about 400 feet high. [See Illustration.]

"Then blest Acadia! ever may thy name, Like Britian's, be graven on rolls of fame;
 May all thy sons, like hers, be brave and free, Possessors of her laws and liberty;
 Heirs of her splendor, science, pow'r and skill,
 And through succeeding years her children still.
 Then as the sun with gentle, dawning ray,
 From night's dull bosom wakes and leads the day,
 His course majestic keeps, till in the height
 He glows one blaze of pure exhaustless light, So may thy years increase, thy glories rise,
 To be the wonder of the western skies;
 And bliss and peace encircle all thy shore, Till sun and moon and stars shall be no more."

Goldsmith.

LINE.

1.

2.

3.

4.

6.

9.

15.

18.

19.

20.

22-23.

24.

25-26.

28-29.

30-31.

33.

NOTES AND REFERENCES.

LINE.

1. Primeval:—Never disturbed by the woodman's axe.
The sound of the wind blowing through these trees is very similar to the distant sound of the surf. A light breeze causes a sound resembling a whispering.
2. These festoons of moss may be seen today in many of the ever-green forests of N. S.
3. Druids:—Priests, or ministers of religion, among the ancient Celtic nations in Gaul, Britain and Germany. They frequented or instructed in the forest, or sacrificed under an oak.
Eld:—Old times, former days, antiquity.
4. Harpers: See Walter Scott's Introduction to the "Lay of the Last Minstrel." Hoar: White, or grayish white; white with age.
6. Wail: Loud lamentation or expression of sorrow.
Roe: The female deer. Note the condition of the startled roe when followed by huntsman and hounds, as likened to the condition of the Acadians when they learned of their impending fate.
9. Thatch: Straw, hay, or rushes, used to cover the roofs of buildings for protection from the elements.
15. Grand Prt: Grand Prairie or Great Meadow.
18. Tradition: That which is transmitted orally from father to son or from ancestors to posterity.
19. Acadie: See Chapter III.
20. See map of N. S.
- 22-23. See Chapter V.
24. See Note 1, Chapter IV.
- 25-26. See Chapter VIII.
- 28-29. See Chapter V.
- 30-31. See Chapter V. Pitching a tent indicates an intention to remain.
Fogs and mists hang over the ocean all about the coasts of N. S., as well as in the nearby region of Newfoundland and its Banks.
33. See Chapter V.

posed. This is solid face looks through the gap

[See Illustra-

ne;
free,

skill,
green still.

ay,
is the day,

ght
light,
ise,

ore,
more."

Goldsmith.

34. Normandy: Ancient province of France, north-western part. People were descendents of the ancient Normans or Northmen who settled there. There were four Henries of France. The reign of the Henries began in 1031. 102.
38. Vanes: Indicators showing direction of the wind. 110.
39. Kirtle: An upper garment; a gown; a short jacket; a mantle. 111.
40. Distaff: Staff for holding the bunch of flax or wool from which the thread is drawn in spinning by hand. 117-18.
41. Looms: Machines for weaving the thread into cloth. 122.
- Shuttles*: Instruments for passing the thread of the woof from one side of the cloth to the other, between the threads of the warp. 124.
49. Angelus: Angelus Domini is the name given to the bell which called the people to prayer, in commemoration of the visit of the Angel of God to the Virgin Mary. See the picture called "The Angelus." 126.
50. Incense: A mixture of fragrant gums, spices, etc., used for producing a perfume when burned. Used in religious rites or as an offering to some deity. 128.
62. Stalworth: Same as stalwart. 135.
66. See Chapter V. 137.
68. Kine: Cows. 145.
70. Flagons: Vessels with narrow mouths, used for liquors.
72. Hyssop: A plant whose leaves have an aromatic smell and a warm pungent taste. 149.
74. Chaplet: A string of beads used in counting prayers.
- Missal*: The Roman Catholic mass-book.
76. See Note 1, Chapter IV.
84. Woodbine: The Honeysuckle; the Eglantine; Black Ivy. 150.
87. Penthouse: A shed standing aslope from the main wall or building; a lean-to. 152.
91. Bucket: Probably used with the well sweep. 153.
93. Wains: Wagons. 156.
94. Folds: Enclosures; pens.
- Seraglio*: The palace of the Sultan, inhabited by himself, his officers and dependents, and his wives. 159.
96. See Matthew XXVI: 74, 75.

102. Weathercocks: So called because they were originally made in the form of a cock. Any device to show direction of the wind; a vane. The little wooden windmills are meant here.
Mutation: Change or alteration.
110. Knocker: An instrument fastened to a door, to be used in seeking admittance.
111. Patron Saint: The saint regarded as the protector of the community.
- 117-18. See Tubal Cain, Vulcan, "The Village Blacksmith." 122. Plain-song: An ecclesiastical chant.
124. See mention of smithy in Chapter V.
126. Leather-slap: The leather apron worn by blacksmiths to guard their clothing from sparks.
128. The tire is heated and placed on the wheel while still hot. On cooling it contracts and thus fits closely to the rim.
131. Bellows: An instrument for forcing air through a tube to blow the fire in the forge.
135. In a hilly country, coasting is always a popular winter sport.
137. It is said that if the mother swallow finds that one of her young is blind, she seeks a little stone on the shore of the sea. This stone she applies to the blind eyes, and restores the sight.
145. The old proverb says: "If the sun shines on Saint Eulalie's day there will be plenty of apples, and cider enough." Saint Eulalie's day is Feb. 12th.
149. The Zodiac is a belt 16° wide, 8° on each side of the ecliptic. It is divided into twelve so-called signs, each 30° in length. Each sign is indicated by picture of an object. The three signs of autumn are Libra, Scorpio, and Sagittarius; or the balances, the scorpion, and the archer.
150. Birds of passage: Those which migrate to the south in winter and to the north in summer. See Bryant's "To a Water Fowl."
152. Refers to the winds which prevail at the time of the autumnal equinox, when the sun enters the sign of Libra, about Sept. 22d.
153. See Genesis XXXII; 24.
156. Indian hunters: Micmacs, Chapter IX.
159. Same as our Indian Summer.
 All Saints Day is Nov. 1st.
 See last paragraph of Chapter VIII.

168. The colors of the autumn leaves.
170. Xerxes found a beautiful plane tree, and became so enamored with it that he adorned it with fine robes, necklace and jewels, and placed a soldier to guard it.
176. Heifer: A young cow.
184. Regent: One who governs a kingdom during the minority, absence or disability of a sovereign.
186. Late because they could work on the salt marshes only at low tide.
187. Briny hay: The so-called "salt" hay, a grass which grows on land overflowed by the sea at high tide. It is cut and piled upon platforms in the marshes. After it is thoroughly dried or "cured" it is hauled to the farm yards. The wagons or carts used for this work were similar to those described in Chapter VII.
192. Udders: The milk glands of female mammals.
- 193-4. Who that has heard this sound can ever forget it?
205. Pewter: An alloy consisting chiefly of tin and lead.
206. Armed men are often distinguished at great distances by the gleam of their arms as the sun strikes them. The Federals, shut up in Chattanooga, first knew of the coming of troops sent to relieve them, by the gleam of their rifle barrels seen far over the hills.
207. Carol: A song of joy or exultation.
213. The spinning wheels give out a peculiar humming sound when in use.
- Bagpipe*: A musical wind instrument of Scotland and Ireland. The air is pressed into the pipes from a leather bag. The bass pipe is called the drone and the treble pipe is called the chanter. The "drone" here mentioned is the monotonous sound which comes from the drone.
217. The sound gives the sense. Note the sound of the clock in the pronunciation of the two words "clock clicked."
225. See Note 2, Chapter VIII.
228. Harvest moon: The moon near the full at the time of harvest, or about the autumnal equinox.
231. Ballad: A popular, sentimental or narrative song in simple verses.
234. The luck in horseshoes is mentioned in Chapters VII and VIII.
249. See historical account.

250. S

261. C

263. A

267. J

273-4.

275-6.

280.

282. S

284. T

285. I

286. ?

306. A

322. J

330. J

344. J

351-2. S

354. C

250. See Chapters IV and VIII.
261. Glebe: Turf; soil; sod.
263. Inkhorn: This may mean simply an inkstand, or a case holding ink and pens.
267. Notary: An officer authorized to attest or certify deeds, contracts and other writings, usually under his official seal, to make them authentic. Usually called Notary Public. See line 292.
- 273-4. See line 1261.
- 275-6. Either Queen Anne's or King George's war is meant.
280. The story of the were-wolf is, according to an old tradition of France and various other European countries, that certain human beings have the power to turn themselves into wolves that they may devour children.
282. Some white, wild animal probably gave rise to this story.
284. This legend is probably a form of the old story that on Christmas eve, the cattle in the stables fall on their knees in adoration of the infant Savior, as the older legend says was done in the stable at Bethlehem. If cattle are disturbed when lying down they rise to their hind feet, then to their knees, and then to their front feet. On entering the stable with a dim light the cattle might be seen rising from their knees in this manner, and thus the story originated.
285. In England a cure for ague was a spider shut up in a goose quill and hung about the neck. In the western states of the Union where ague was prevalent, it was said that swallowing a spider would cure the worst case of ague.
286. The four-leaved clover is an emblem of good luck.
306. An old Florentine story. See line 522.
322. Bronze: An alloy of copper with from ten to thirty per cent. of tin. Sometimes zinc is added.
330. Brazen: Made of brass.
344. Draughts: Checkers, so named from the drawing of the men from one square to another.
- 351-2. See line 1041.
354. Curfew: From couvre-feu, or cover fire. In the Middle Ages a bell was rung at a certain hour, from seven to nine o'clock in the evening according to the custom of the place, warning all honest people to cover their fires and go to bed. The Normans introduced this custom in England.

371. Refers to the influence of the moon on the tides.
381. See line 1095. Genesis XXI, 14.
413. The first named song was written in the time of Henry IV. The second was a song sung to a tune played on the chimes of Dunkirk.
421. A drum beat sounded over the meadows.
442. Solstice of summer: The time when the sun's rays are vertical at the Tropic of Cancer, June 21st.
454. Spar: A mast, yard, boom or gaff.
456. See Chapter IV.
461. Chancel: That part of the church where the altar is placed.
466. Tocsin: An alarm bell.
470. Vigils: Devotional watching.
476. See Luke XXIII, 34.
484. Ave Maria: An invocation to the Virgin Mary.
486. See 2d Kings, II, 11.
492. Emblazoned: Adorned with armorial ensigns.
498. Ambrosial: Delightful to the taste or smell. Ambrosia was the food of the gods of the ancients.
507. See Exodus XXXIV, 33-35.
533. See Note 2, Chapter IV.
575. Refluent: Returning; ebbing.
577. Kelp: A sea-weed. The ashes of kelp is used in the manufacture of glass. The slippery sea-weed mentioned has smaller leaves than the kelp. It sometimes covers the rocks and gives a very precarious footing.
579. Leaguer: The camp of a besieging army.
582. Nethermost: Lowest.
597. See Acts XXVIII. Melita is Malta.
615. Titans: Giants in Greek mythology who tried to deprive Saturn of his power in heaven, but were defeated and driven down into Tartarus by Jupiter, who hurled thunderbolts at them.
621. Gleeds: Burning coals.
The instructions of the governor to Winslow were: "You must proceed by the most vigorous measures possible, not only in compelling them to embark, but in depriving those who shall escape of all means of shelter or support by burning their houses, and by destroying everything that may afford them the means of subsistence in the country."
See Chapter IV.

657. A

660. A

667. 7

670. 8

672. 7

674. 1

675. 1

676. 7

677. 1

688. 4

705.

707.

713.

721-3.

732.

733.

657. Bell: The bell tolled to mark the passage of the soul to the other world.
Book: The service book.
660. Dirges: Funeral hymns.
667. They sailed with the falling tide because they could then pass Cape Split with the current. Sailing vessels never attempt that passage against the tide.
670. See Chapter IV.
672. The almost perpetual fogs of this region are probably due to the meeting of the warm Gulf Stream and the cold Arctic Current.
674. From the Great Lakes to the Gulf States.
675. From the Atlantic to the Mississippi.
676. The Mississippi often washes away its banks so that a new channel is formed during a single flood. See Kaskaskia.
677. Bones of great extinct animals are found at various places in the Mississippi Valley.
688. The trail leading to California through what was called the Great American Desert, was marked by the bones of thousands of cattle, mostly oxen, that died of thirst. At camping places the weak or worn out animals were often shot to end their misery.
705. Coueurs-des-bois: Men who accompanied the early furtraders of the north-west. They paddled the canoes, carried the goods and canoes at the portages, and assisted to gather in the furs from the Indians. They were French or half-breeds. By living long among the Indians they acquired many of the Indian customs. Parkman's "Conspiracy of Pontiac," and "Discovery of the Great West" contain many references to these men.
707. Voyageur: A river boatman.
713. Saint Catherine of Alexandria and Saint Catherine of Siena were both celebrated for their vows of virginity. Hence the saying, meaning one devoted to a single life.
- 721-3. Refers to the ceaseless round of the moisture which rises from the sea by evaporation, is carried over the land in the form of clouds, falls in the form of rain, sinks into the earth, comes to the surface in the springs, thence to the brook and the river, and finally to the sea, where the journey begins again.
732. Shards: Fragments of earthen vessels.
733. Muse: A genius of art, literature or music.
Essay: Endeavor; try.

738. Sylvan: Forestlike; pertaining to the woods. See meaning of Pennsylvania; Selvas. See line 1253. 816.
741. The Indians named this river the Ohio or Beautiful River. On the earliest maps the latter name was applied to it. 819.
820.
742. See map of U. S. 821-2.
743. Golden: Below the mouth of the Missouri the waters of the Mississippi have a yellow tinge caused by the yellow clay brought by the Missouri. 837.
840.
842.
750. Between the first of January and the 13th of May, 1765, about six hundred fifty Acadians had arrived at New Orleans. Louisiana had been ceded by France to Spain in 1762, but did not really pass under the control of the Spanish until 1769. The existence of a French population attracted the wandering Acadians, and they were sent by the authorities to form settlements in Attakapas and Opelousas. They afterward formed settlements on both sides of the Mississippi from the German Coast up to Baton Rouge, and even as high as Point Coupee. Hence the name of Acadian Coast, which a portion of the banks of the river still bears.—Gayarre's History of Louisiana. 843.
853.
755. Chute: A rapid descent of the river. 856.
865.
756. Probably cotton-wood trees are meant.
757. Lagoons: Shallow ponds or lakes. 868-9.
758. Wimpling: Rippling or undulating. 871.
759. Pelicans: Web-footed water-fowl, larger than swans, having an enormous bill, to the lower edge of which is attached a pouch capable of holding many quarts. 878.
885.
889.
761. Perhaps the sweet orange is meant, as this was called the China orange.
764. Golden Coast: A portion of the shore of the river. 890.
Citron: The tree which produces the citron of commerce. 914.
766. A bayou on the west side of the river. 914.
769. Tenebrous: Dark; gloomy; dusky. 924.
782. Mimosa: The sensitive plant. 953.
783. Possibly the reference is to the "Pale horse and his rider." See Rev. VI, 8. 956.
784. Stroke of doom: The final calamity. The culmination of fate or destiny. 961.
970.
- 786-7. See lines 700, 1145, 1244. 978.
803. Desert: Here means a wilderness; a solitude.
807. Lakes formed by a broadening of the river.

816. Washita or Onachita was the Indian name for the male deer. The deer fed on the tender twigs of this willow.
819. Cope: Anything extending over the head.
820. Trumpet flower: The trumpet honeysuckle.
- 821-2. See Genesis XXVIII, 10-12.
837. Palmello: A species of palm tree growing in southern states. See arms of State of S. C.
840. Refers to 821-4.
842. Tholes: Pins in the gunwale of a boat to keep the oars in the row-lock.
843. Trance: A state in which the soul seems to have passed out of the body into another state of being, or to be wrapped into visions.
853. Buoy: A float; used to mark channels, rocks or shoals. When a ship leaves her anchorage intending to return soon, the cable of the anchor is fastened to a buoy, thus saving the labor of hoisting and casting the heavy anchor.
856. Teche (tesh): A navigable bayou of La.
865. Magician: A conjurer.
Wand: A rod used by conjurers; supposed to possess magical charms.
- 868-9. See line 11.
871. See line 865.
878. Bacchantes: Devotees of Bacchus, the god of wine.
885. Amber: Resembling amber in color; yellowish.
889. Mistletoe: A parasitic evergreen plant bearing a glutinous fruit. A variety grows in the southern states. When found upon the oak, where it is rare, it was an object of superstitious regard among the Druids.
890. Yule-tide: Christmas time.
914. Sombrero: A kind of broad brimmed hat.
924. See line 635.
953. Ozark Mts.: Low mountains of southern Missouri.
956. Fates: The three goddesses who were supposed to determine the course of human life.
961. Olympus: A mountain of Ancient Greece, the abode of the gods.
970. Ci-devant: Former; previous.
978. In tropical regions there is little or no twilight. Contrast this line with 172 and 574-5.

984. Natchitoches: A parish of N. W. La.
 988-9. Refer to the cold climate and stony soil of Nova Scotia.
 991-2. A very strong hyperbole.
 1006. See page 285.
 1009. Creoles: People born in America or the West Indies, of European ancestors. It is also applied to anyone born within the tropics.
 1019. See line 415.
 1033. Carthusian: A monk of the Carthusian order, which is the strictest and most severe in its rules of all religious societies. One of its rules enforces almost perpetual silence. The monks talk together but once a week.
 1041. See line 352.
 1044. "Upharsin." See Daniel V. "The handwriting on the wall."
 1054. See line 627.
 1057. Oracular: From oracle, an answer from a god among the heathen to an inquiry made.
 1060-1. Probable reference to Luke VII, 37-38.
 1063. See Luke XV, 11-32.
 1064. See Matthew XXV, 1-13.
 1075. Garrulous: Indulging in long prosy talk; loquacious.
 1082. Oregon: The Columbia river.
Walleway: Probably the Walla Walla, which flows into the Columbia at Wallulu in Washington.
Owyhee: River 350 miles long. Rises in N. Nevada and flows into the Snake River.
 1083-4. See map of northwestern states.
 1091. Amorpha: False indigo. One variety is called the lead plant. The flowers are violet or purple in terminal spikes.
 1094. Prairie fires.
 1095. See line 381. The Arabs are supposed to be the descendants of Ishmael. Hence any wandering people.
 1097. The turkey-buzzard.
 1098. Implacable: Relentless; irreconcilable.
 1102. Taciturn: Silent; reserved.
Anchorite: An anchorite is a hermit or recluse; used here as an adjective.
 1106. The geography here is rather vague. The region of the Columbia is so far from the Ozarks that it can hardly be called the same "land."

1114. Fala Morgana: The Italian name applied to a phenomenon seen in the straits of Messina, and consisting of an appearance in the air over the sea of the objects upon the neighboring coasts. In the southwest of the United States, the mirage is often seen; lakes and streams and trees are seen by the traveler, but they exist only in his vision of the strata of air of different densities.
1119. Shawnees: A member of the tribe of that name. The Shawnees were of the Algonquin family. Some writers consider them as originally identical with the Kickapoos. They are first mentioned in history as being on the banks of the Fox river in Wisconsin, in 1648. They engaged in war with the Iroquois and most of them were driven southward to the Cumberland river, whence they dispersed, some going to Florida, others to North Carolina, and several bands to Pennsylvania. About 1795 a portion of this tribe settled in Missouri under the protection of the Spanish authorities. Shawnees were engaged in the conspiracy of Pontiac. They fought against Harmer, St. Clair and Wayne. They were at Tippecanoe and the battle of the Thames.
1120. Comanches: Spelled also Comanches. A warlike tribe of nomadic savages who roamed over a part of New Mexico and in the valley of the Rio Grande. Their principal occupations were robbery and war. They fought on horseback. They were probably of the same stock as the Shoshones or Snake Indians.
1124. Venison: Flesh of the deer.
- 1140-5. The tales remind us of the stories in "Hiawatha." 1167. The Jesuit missionaries were called the "Black Robes," from their long cloaks or habits.
1182. Susurrus: Whisper.
1211. Cloisters: A monastic establishment; a covered arcade forming part of a monastic establishment.
Mendicant: Begging; poor.
- 1217-21. Compass flower: Our common resin weed. The edges of the broad lower leaves always stand to the north and south.
1226. Asphodel: A perennial plant of the genus Asphodelus, cultivated for the beauty of its flowers. Called also "king's spear."
Nepenthe: A drug used by the ancients to relieve pain; supposed to have been opium or hashish.

1129. Wold: A plain; a country without woods.
1233. See map of Michigan.
1234. The Great Lakes.
1241. Moravian: The Moravian church is the church of the United Brethren. In the 15th and 16th centuries Moravia was one of its principal seats. It originated in Moravia and Bohemia, about 1457. They were established in this country and early sent their missionaries to and settled in the Great West.
Tents of Grace: Gnadenhutten.
1242. Armies of the Revolution.
1244. Notice the repeated use of the word phantom.
1253. Origin of the word Pennsylvania. Sylvan, or forest land of Penn.
1256. The principal streets of Philadelphia, running east and west, are named for the trees of the forest; as, Oak, Elm, Chestnut, etc.
1257. Dryads: Nymphs of the woods. Female deities who presided over the woods.
1261. See lines 273-4.
1264. The Quakers make much use of the ancient or solemn form in their speech.
1282. Abnegation: Denial; renunciation.
1292. In the early days watchmen patrolled the city at night and called the hours. At midnight his call would be "Twelve o'clock and all's well." When, during the Revolution, a courier rode into Philadelphia with a certain important message, the watchmen on their rounds shouted "Twelve o'clock, and Cornwallis is taken."
1296. From the settlement of Germantown, then some distance outside the city.
1298. Philadelphia was visited by the terrible pestilence of yellow fever in 1793.
1308. The old Friend's almshouse which stood on Walnut street has been pointed out as the scene of Evangeline's ministering and of her meeting with Gabriel.
- 1314-16. See line 106.
1318. The New Jerusalem as described in Revelations.
1328. The old Swedes church at Wicaco was begun in 1698. Wilson the ornithologist is buried in its churchyard.
- 1355-6. See Exodus XII, 3-14.
- 1390-1. See Introductory and Chapter VI.
- 1392-7. See Chapter IV.

The poem of Evangeline was published in 1847.

EVANGELINE.

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF PROPER NAMES AND FOREIGN WORDS IN EVANGELINE.

The diacritical marks given below are those found in the latest edition of Webster's International Dictionary.

EXPLANATION OF MARKS.

- A Dash (ˉ) above the vowel denotes the long sound.
A Curve (˘) above the vowel denotes the short sound.
A Circumflex Accent (ˆ) above the vowels a or u denotes the sound of a in cître, or of u in ūrn; above the vowel o it denotes the sound of o in ôrb.
A Dot (·) above the vowel a denotes the sound of a in pâci.
A Double Dot (¨) above the vowel a denotes the sound of a in câr.
A Double Dot (¨) below the vowel u denotes the sound of u in trû.
A Wave (˜) above the vowel e denotes the sound of e in hêr.

g sounds like z.

ç sounds like s.

g sounds like j.

z, s, ç are similar in sound to z, s, ç, but are not pronounced so long.

Note that the pronunciation of French words can be given only approximately by means of signs and English equivalents. A living teacher is requisite to enable one to read and speak the language with elegance.

Abbé Guillaume Thomas Francis Raynal (ab-bé' gô-yôrn', etc.).	Beau Séjour (bô sê-zhêjôr').
Acadie (â-kâ-dé').	Bénédict (bê-nê-dîk't). Bénédict Billefontaine'.
Acé'dia.	Bîsm'Idôn.
Adô'yes.	Briarens (brî-â-rîns).
Aelian (ê-li-ân).	Breges (brî-gêz).
Aix-la-Chapelle (âks-lâ-shê-pêl').	Châdêr'.
Amorphas (â-môr-fâs).	Châmû'chêg.
Angelus Domini (ân-jê-lûs dô-mî-ni).	Châkrê'.
Ârcê'dia.	Cape Brê'zû.
Asphodel (âs-fô-dêl).	Chêl'ic.
Atchafalaya (âch-â-fâ-lî-â).	Charente Inferieure (shêr-ân-êl-ê- rê-êr').
Attakapas (ât-tâk-pâs).	Charnisay (shêr-nî-êr').
Bacchantes (bâk-kân-têz).	Chartreux (shêr-trêz').
Bacchus (bâk'ûs).

EVANGELINE.

et-devant (eé-dé-vān').
 Cotille'.
 coureurs-des-bois (kōō'rē-dē-bwā), Contes Populaires (kōnā't pōp-ū-lā'r').
 co.vre-feu (kōō'vr-fē).
 Dante's Divine Commedia (dā-vē'nā oōm-nē'dī-ā).
 Ducanrol (dy-kā-rwā').
 E-ka'pōllus.
 FV'ā Mōrg'vā.
 Father Felician (fā-fāb'f-ān).
 Fontaine-qui-bout (fōnā'tān-kā-bōō).
 Gabriel Lajouneiss (gāb-ē-lāō).
 Gaspareau (gā-pā-rō').
 Gayarre (gā-kā-rē').
 Gnadenbüthen (gnā-dēn-hyt'ōn).
 Grand-Pré (grānā-prē').
 Hérōd'ōtēs.
 Horae Hellenicae (hō'rē hēll-ēnā'f-ā).
 Isaac de Basili (āz-rā-sē-yō').
 Kavanagh (kā-vā-nā).
 La Cité du Caveau (lā kīē dē kā-l-vō').
 La Casa Ladra (lā kā'zā lā'drā).
 Lā Hāve.
 Lā Sālle.
 Le Carillon de Dunkerque (lē kā-r-ō-yōnā' dē dūn-kā'rē').
 Létiche (lē-tēsh').
 Lilinau (lī-lī-nā).
 Loulaburg (lōō'l-bōrg).
 Loup-garon (lōō-gā-rōō).
 maître de chapelle (mā'tr dē shā-pēll').
 Malta (mā-ltā).
 Minas Basin (mā'nās bāzān).
 Mowia (mō-wīā).

Natchitoches (nāsh'ōsh').
 n'pēn'thē.
 Opelousas (ōp-ē-lōō'sās).
 Outre-Mer (ōōtr-mā'r').
 Ow'y'hee.
 Pissamāquōd'dy.
 Pierre Capelle (pē-rē kā-pēll').
 P't'iquid.
 Plaquemine, Bayou of (plāk-mēn', bōō).
 Pluquet (plū-kē').
 Pointe Coupée (pōnānt kōō-pē').
 Pqitou (pōl-tōō).
 René Lebiand (rē-nē lē-biānā').
 Rochelle (rō-shēll').
 Rossini (rō-sē-nī).
 St. Maur (sān mā'r').
 Saintonge (sān-tōnānā').
 Sān'adu Agēnā'stē.
 seraglio (sē-rā'l'yō').
 Sieua (sē-sē-ā).
 Siphium laciniatum (sīpī-ūm lā-sī-ā-t-f'ūm).
 Straits of Messina (mē-sē'nā).
 Tōche (tōsh').
 Tous les Bourgeois de Chartres (tōō lē bōō-r-shwō' dē shā'rtr).
 Upherata (ū-fēr-ā'tā).
 Utrecht (ū'trēkt).
 Vendée (vān-dē').
 voyageur (vōk-yē-shē'r').
 Wachita (wāsh'ā-taw).
 Wallaway (wāll'wē-wē).
 wēre-wōlf.
 Wicaco (wī-kā-kōō).
 Xerxes (shēks'ēs).

Th
 B
 B
 t Stand
 t Stand
 t Loud
 h Speak
 c
 Th
 1 Leap
 t Whe
 c Men
 Dark

EVANGELINE.

PRELUDE.

This is the forest primeval. The murmuring pines and the hemlocks, Bearded with moss, and in garments green, indistinct in the twilight, Stand like Druids of eld, with voices sad and prophetic,
Stand like harpers hoar, with beards that rest on their bosoms.
Loud from its rocky caverns, the deep-voiced neighboring ocean Speaks, and in accents disconsolate answers the wail
of the forest.

This is the forest primeval; but where are the hearts that beneath it Leaped like the roe, when he hears in the woodland the voice of the huntsman?
Where is the thatch-roofed village, the home of Aca-dian farmers—
Men whose lives glided on like rivers that water the woodlands,¹⁰
Darkened by shadows of earth, but reflecting an image of heaven?

Waste are those pleasant farms, and the farmers forever departed!
 Scattered like dust and leaves, when the mighty blasts of October Seize them, and whirl them aloft, and sprinkle them far o'er the ocean.
 Naught but tradition remains of the beautiful village¹⁵
 of Grand-Pre.
 Ye who believe in affection that hopes, and endures,
 and is patient,
 Ye who believe in the beauty and strength of woman's devotion, List to the mournful tradition still sung by the pines
 of the forest;
 List to a Tale of Love in Acadie, home of the happy.

PART THE FIRST.

I.

In the Acadian land, on the shores of the Basin of Minas,²⁰
 Distant, secluded, still, the little village of Grand-Pre
 Lay in the fruitful valley. Vast meadows stretched to the eastward,
 Giving the village its name and pasture to flocks without number.
 Dikes, that the hands of the farmers had raised with labor incessant, Shut out the turbulent tides; but at stated seasons²⁵
 the flood-gates Opened and welcomed the sea to wander at will o'er the meadows.

farmers for-the mighty inkle them iful village¹⁵
d endures,
ngth of wo-y the pines
the happy.

West and south there were fields of flax, and orchards and cornfields

Spreading afar and unfenced o'er the plain; and away to the northward

Blomidon rose, and the forests old, and aloft on the
mountains

Sea-fogs pitched their tents, and mists from the mighty³⁰ Atlantic

Looked on the happy valley, but ne'er from their station descended.

There, in the midst of its farms, reposed the Acadian village.

Strongly built were the houses, with frames of oak and of hemlock,

Such as the peasants of Normandy built in the reign of the Henries.

Thatched were the roofs, with dormer-windows; and³⁵ gables projecting

Over the basement below protected and shaded the doorway.

There in the tranquil evenings of summer, when brightly the sunset

Lighted the village street, and gilded the vanes on the chimneys,

Matrons and maidens sat in snow-white caps and in kirtles

Scarlet and blue and green, with distaffs spinning⁴⁰ the golden

Flax for the gossiping looms, whose noisy shuttles within doors

Mingled their sound with the whir of the wheels and the songs of the maidens.

he Basin of²⁰
of Grands stretched e to flocks raised with ed seasons²⁵
at will o'er

Solemnly down the street came the parish priest, and the children Paused in their play to kiss the hand he extended to bless them.
 Reverend walked he among them; and up rose matrons and maidens,⁴⁵ Hailing his slow approach with words of affectionate welcome.
 Then came the laborers home from the field, and serenely the sun sank Down to his rest, and twilight prevailed. Anon from the belfry
 Softly the Angelus sounded, and over the roofs of the village
 Columns of pale blue smoke, like clouds of incense⁵⁰ ascending, Rose from a hundred hearths, the homes of peace and contentment.
 Thus dwelt together in love these simple Acadian farmers,— Dwelt in the love of God and of man. Alike were they free from Fear, that reigns with the tyrant, and envy, the vice of republics.
 Neither locks had they to their doors, nor bars to⁵⁵ their windows;
 But their dwellings were open as day and the hearts of the owners;
 There the richest was poor, and the poorest lived in abundance.

Somewhat apart from the village, and nearer the Basin of Minas,

Benedi
 G Dwelt
 hi Gentle
 th Stalwo
 wi Hearty sn White br Fair w su Black
 th Black, sh Sweet
 in When no Flagor
 th Fairer fr Sprink
 h Sprink
 u Down
 b

Benedict Bellefontaine, the wealthiest farmer of Grand-Pre,
Dwelt on his goodly acres; and with him, directing his household,
Gentle Evangeline lived, his child, and the pride of the village.
Stalworth and stately in form was the man of seventy winters;
Hearty and hale was he, an oak that is covered with snow-flakes;
White as the snow were his locks, and his cheeks as brown as the oak-leaves.
Fair was she to behold, that maiden of seventeen summers;
Black were her eyes as the berry that grows on the thorn by the wayside, Black, yet how softly they gleamed beneath the brown shade of her tresses!
Sweet was her breath as the breath of kine that feed in the meadows.
When in the harvest heat she bore to the reapers at noontide Flagons of home-brewed ale, ah! fair in sooth was the maiden.
Fairer was she, when on Sunday morn, while the bell from its turret Sprinkled with holy sounds the air, as the priest with his hyssop Sprinkles the congregation, and scatters blessings upon them Down the long street she passed, with her chaplet of beads and her missal,

Wearing her Norman cap and her kirtle of blue, and the ear-rings⁷⁵ Brought in the olden time from France, and since, as an heirloom, Handed down from mother to child, through long generations.
 But a celestial brightness—a more ethereal beauty—Shone on her face and encircled her form, when, after confession, Homeward serenely she walked with God's benediction upon her.⁸⁰
 When she had passed, it seemed like the ceasing of exquisite music.
 Firmly builded with rafters of oak, the house of the farmer
 Stood on the side of a hill commanding the sea; and a shady Sycamore grew by the door, with a woodbine wreath-ing around it.
 Rudely carved was the porch, with seats beneath; and⁸⁵ a footpath Led through an orchard wide, and disappeared in the meadow.
 Under the sycamore-tree were hives overhung by a penthouse,
 Such as the traveler sees in regions remote by the roadside,
 Built o'er a box for the poor, or the blessed image of Mary.
 Farther down, on the slope of the hill, was the well⁹⁰ with its moss-grown Bucket, fastened with iron, and near it a trough for the horses.

Shieldi
 th
 There pl
 There
 fea Strutte
 th Voice t Pe Burstin lag Far o'e sta Under cor
 There t cer Murmu
 an Numbe
 mu Thus far Lived o his Many a
 his Fixed dev Happy
 of

Shielding the house from storms, on the north, were the barns and the farmyard; There stood the broad-wheeled wains and the antique plows and harrows;
 There were the folds for the sheep, and there in his feathered seraglio, Strutted the lordly turkey, and crowed the cock, with the selfsame⁹⁶
 Voice that in ages of old had startled the penitent Peter.
 Bursting with hay were the barns, themselves a village. In each one Far o'er the gable projected a roof of thatch; and a staircase,
 Under the sheltering eaves, led up to the odorous cornloft.
 There too the dove-cot stood, with its meek and innocent inmates¹⁰⁰ Murmuring ever of love; while above in the variant breezes Numberless noisy weathercocks rattled and sang of mutation.

Thus, at peace with God and the world, the farmer of Grand-Pre Lived on his sunny farm, and Evangeline governed
 his household.
 Many a youth, as he knelt in the church and opened his missal,¹⁰⁸
 Fixed his eyes upon her as the saint of his deepest devotion;
 Happy was he who might touch her hand or the hem of her garment!

Many a suitor came to her door, by the darkness befriended,
 And, as he knocked and waited to hear the sound of her footsteps,
 Knew not which beat the louder, his heart or the knocker of iron;¹¹⁰
 Or, at the joyous feast of the Patron Saint of the village, Bolder grew, and pressed her hand in the dance as he whispered Hurried words of love, that seemed a part of the music.
 But among all who came young Gabriel only was welcome;
 Gabriel Lajeunesse, the son of Basil the blacksmith,¹¹⁵
 Who was a mighty man in the village, and honored of all men;
 For since the birth of time, throughout all ages and nations,
 Has the craft of the smith been held in repute by the people.
 Basil was Benedict's friend. Their children from earliest childhood
 Grew up together as brother and sister; and Father¹²⁰ Felician,
 Priest and pedagogue both in the village, had taught them their letters
 Out of the selfsame book, with the hymns of the church and the plain-song.
 But when the hymn was sung, and the daily lesson completed,

Swiftly
 bla
 There s bel Take in pla Nailing of t Lay lik cin Oft on a dan Burstin
 eve Warm l bel
 And as
 the Merrily
 the Oft on a eag Down t
 me Oft in t on Seeking
 the Brings
 of Lucky
 sw

Swiftly they hurried away to the forge of Basil the blacksmith.

There at the door they stood, with wondering eyes to behold him ¹⁰⁶

Take in his leathern lap the hoof of the horse as a plaything,

Nailing the shoe in its place; while near him the tire of the cart-wheel

Lay like a fiery snake, coiled round in a circle of cinders.

Oft on autumnal eves, when without in the gathering darkness

Bursting with light seemed the smithy, through ¹⁰⁷ every cranny and crevice,

Warm by the forge within they watched the laboring bellows,

And as its panting ceased, and the sparks expired in the ashes,

Merrily laughed, and said they were nuns going into the chapel.

Oft on sledges in winter, as swift as the swoop of the eagle,

Down the hillside bounding, they glided away o'er the meadow. ¹⁰⁸

Oft in the barns they climbed to the populous nests on the rafters,

Seeking with eager eyes that wondrous stone, which the swallow

Brings from the shore of the sea to restore the sight of its fledglings;

Lucky was he who found that stone in the nest of the swallow!

Thus passed a few swift years, and they no longer were children.¹⁴⁰
 He was a valiant youth, and his face, like the face of the morning,
 Gladdened the earth with its light, and ripened thought into action.
 She was a woman now, with the heart and hopes of a woman.
 "Sunshine of St. Eulalie" was she called; for that was the sunshine Which, as the farmers believed, would load their orchards with apples;¹⁴⁵
 She too would bring to her husband's house delight and abundance, Filling it full of love and ruddy faces of children.

SECOND READING.

Now had the season returned, when the nights grow colder and longer, And the retreating sun the sign of the Scorpion enters.
 Birds of passage sailed through the leaden air, from the ice-bound,¹⁵⁰ Desolate northern bays to the shores of tropical islands.
 Harvests were gathered in; and wild with the winds of September Wrestled the trees of the forest, as Jacob of old with the angel.
 All the signs foretold a winter long and inclement.
 Bees, with prophetic instinct of want, had hoarded their honey¹⁵⁵

Till the hives overflowed; and the Indian hunters asserted

Cold would the winter be, for thick was the fur of the foxes.

Such was the advent of autumn. Then followed that beautiful season,

Called by the pious Acadian peasants the Summer of All-Saints!

Filled was the air with a dreamy and magical light;
and the landscape ¹⁶⁰

Lay as if new-created in all the freshness of childhood.

Peace seemed to reign upon earth, and the restless heart of the ocean

Was for a moment consoled. All sounds were in harmony blended.

Voices of children at play, the crowing of cocks in the farm-yards,

Whir of wings in the drowsy air, and the cooing of pigeons ¹⁶⁵

All were subdued and low as the murmurs of love, and the great sun

Looked with the eye of love through the golden vapors around him;

While arrayed in its robes of russet and scarlet and yellow,

Bright with the sheen of the dew, each glittering tree
of the forest

Flashed like the plane-tree the Persian adorned with mantles and jewels. ⁻¹⁷⁰

Now recommenced the reign of rest and affection and stillness.

Day with its burden and heat had departed, and twilight descending Brought back the evening star to the sky, and the herds to the homestead.
 Pawing the ground they came, and resting their necks on each other,
 And with their nostrils distended inhaling the freshness of evening.¹⁷⁶ Foremost, bearing the bell, Evangeline's beautiful heifer, Proud of her snow-white hide, and the ribbon that waved from her collar, Quietly paced and slow, as if conscious of human affection.
 Then came the shepherd back with his bleating flocks from the seaside, Where was their favorite pasture. Behind them followed the watch-dog,¹⁸⁰ Patient, full of importance, and grand in the pride of his instinct, Walking from side to side with a lordly air, and superbly Waving his bushy tail, and urging forward the stragglers; Regent of flocks was he when the shepherd slept; their protector, When from the forest at night, through the starry silence,¹⁸⁵ the wolves howled.
 Late, with the rising moon, returned the wains from the marshes, Laden with briny hay, that filled the air with its odor.

Cheer
 a While
 d Painte
 o Nodde
 b Patien
 u Unto
 c
 Into t
 s Lowin
 t Echoe
 s Heavi
 t Rattle
 s
 In-d
 t Sat in a Strug
 h Noddi
 f Dart
 d

Cheerily neighed the steeds, with dew on their manes and their fetlocks, While aloft on their shoulders the wooden and ponderous saddles, Painted with brilliant dyes, and adorned with tassels of crimson,¹⁹⁰
 Nodded in bright array, like hollyhocks heavy with blossoms.
 Patiently stood the cows meanwhile, and yielded their udders Unto the milkmaid's hand; whilst loud and in regular cadence
 Into the sounding pails the foaming streamlets descended.
 Lowing of cattle and peals of laughter were heard in the farm-yard,¹⁹⁵ Echoed back by the barns. Anon they sank into stillness;
 Heavily closed, with a jarring sound, the valves of the barn-doors, Rattled the wooden bars, and all for a season was silent.

In-doors, warm by the wide-mouthed fireplace, idly
 the farmer
 Sat in his elbow-chair, and watched how the flames and the smoke-wreaths²⁰⁰ Struggled together like foes in a burning city. Behind him, Nodding and mocking along the wall with gestures fantastic, Darted his own huge shadow, and vanished away into darkness.

Faces, clumsily carved in oak, on the back of his arm-chair,
 Laughed in the flickering light, and the pewter plates on the dresser ²⁰⁵
 Caught and reflected the flame, as shields of armies
 the sunshine.
 Fragments of song the old man sang, and carols of Christmas,
 Such as at home, in the olden time, his fathers before him Sang in their Norman orchards and bright Burgun-dian vineyards.
 Close at her father's side was the gentle Evangeline seated, ²¹⁰
 Spinning flax for the loom that stood in the corner behind her.
 Silent awhile were its treadles, at rest was its diligent shuttle, While the monotonous drone of the wheel, like the drone of a bagpipe, Followed the old man's song, and united the fragments
 together.
 As in a church, when the chant of the choir at intervals ceases, ²¹⁵ Footfalls are heard in the aisles, or words of priest at the altar,
 So, in each pause of the song, with measured motion the clock clicked.

 Thus as they sat, there were footsteps heard, and,
 suddenly lifted,
 Sounded the wooden latch, and the door swung back on its hinges.

Benedi
 the
 And by wi
 "Welc
 pa
 "Welc
 on Close wi
 Take f
 to Never cu Smoke fa
 Round
 of Then, v
 bla Taking sic
 "Bened
 th Ever in fil Gloom
 th Happy
 a Pausin
 br

Benedict knew by the hob-nailed shoes it was Basil
the blacksmith,

And by her beating heart Evangeline knew who was with him.

"Welcome!" the farmer exclaimed, as their footsteps paused on the threshold,

"Welcome, Basil, my friend! Come, take thy place on the settle

Close by the chimney-side, which is always empty without thee;

Take from the shelf overhead thy pipe and the box of tobacco;

Never so much thyself art thou as when, through the curling

Smoke of the pipe or the forge, thy friendly and jovial face gleams

Round and red as the harvest moon through the mist of the marshes."

Then, with a smile of content, thus answered Basil the blacksmith,

Taking with easy air the accustomed seat by the fireside:—

"Benedict Bellefontaine, thou hast ever thy jest and thy ballad!

Ever in cheerfullest mood art thou, when others are filled with

Gloomy forebodings of ill, and see only ruin before them.

Happy art thou, as if every day thou hadst picked up a horseshoe."

Pausing a moment, to take the pipe that Evangeline brought him,

And with a coal from the embers had lighted, he slowly continued:—
 "Four days now are passed since the English ships at their anchors Ride in the Gaspereau's mouth, with their cannon pointed against us.
 What their design may be is unknown; but all are commanded On the morrow to meet in the church, where his Majesty's mandate ²⁴⁰
 Will be proclaimed as law in the land. Alas! in the mean time Many surmises of evil alarm the hearts of the people." Then made answer the farmer:—"Perhaps some friendlier purpose Brings these ships to our shores. Perhaps the harvests in England
 By untimely rains or untimelier heat have been ²⁴⁵ blighted,
 And from our bursting barns they would feed their cattle and children."
 "Not so thinketh the folk in the village," said warmly
 the blacksmith,
 Shaking his head as in doubt; then, heaving a sigh, he continued:—
 "Louisburg is not forgotten, nor Beau Sejour, nor Port Royal.
 Many already have fled to the forest, and lurk on its ²⁵⁰ outskirts,
 Waiting with anxious hearts the dubious fate of tomorrow.
 Arms have been taken from us, and warlike weapons of all kinds;

Nothing
 scy Then w
 far "Safer a
 and Safer wi Than o can Fear no of s Fall on of t Built a of t Strongl
 the Filled t
 for Rene L ink Shall w our
 As apar
 her Blushin
 ha
 And, as ter

 Bent
 the

Nothing is left but the blacksmith's sledge and the scythe of the mower."

Then with a pleasant smile made answer the jovial farmer:—

"Safer are we unarmed, in the midst of our flocks and our cornfields,

Safer within these peaceful dikes besieged by the ocean, Than our fathers in forts, besieged by the enemy's cannon.

Fear no evil, my friend, and to-night may no shadow of sorrow

Fall on this house and hearth; for this is the night of the contract.

Built are the house and the barn. The merry lads of the village

Strongly have built them and well; and, breaking the glebe round about them,

Filled the barn with hay, and the house with food for a twelvemonth.

Rene Leblanc will be here anon, with his papers and inkhorn.

Shall we not then be glad, and rejoice in the joy of our children?"

As apart by the window she stood, with her hand in her lover's,

Blushing Evangeline heard the words that her father had spoken,

And, as they died on his lips, the worthy notary entered.

THIRD READING.

Bent like a laboring oar, that toils in the surf of the ocean,

Bent, but not broken, by age was the form of the notary public;
 Shocks of yellow hair, like the silken floss of the maize, hung ²⁷⁰
 Over his shoulders; his forehead was high; and glasses with horn bows Sat astride on his nose, with a look of wisdom supernal.
 Father of twenty children was he, and more than a hundred Children's children rode on his knee, and heard his great watch tick.
 Four long years in the times of the war had he languished a captive, ²⁷⁵
 Suffering much in an old French fort as the friend of the English.
 Now, though warier grown, without all guile or suspicion, Ripe in wisdom was he, but patient, and simple, and childlike.
 He was beloved by all, and most of all by the children;
 For he told them tales of the Loup-garou in the forest, ²⁸⁰
 And of the goblin that came in the night to water
 the horses,
 And of the white Letiche, the ghost of a child who unchristened
 Died, and was doomed to haunt unseen the chambers of children;
 And how on Christmas eve the oxen talked in the stable.

And how a nu
 And of th
 and With wh
 lage.
 Then up black Knocked
 ing
 "Father
 the t
 And, per ship Then wit publ
 "Gossip
 the v
 And wha othe
 Yet am I
 tion Brings th
 mole
 "God's r irasc
 "Must w why Daily inj
 stron
 But, with tary
 "Man is

And how the fever was cured by a spider shut up in a nutshell,²⁸⁵

And of the marvelous powers of four-leaved clover and horseshoes,

With whatsoever else was writ in the lore of the village.

Then up rose from his seat by the fireside Basil the
blacksmith,

Knocked from his pipe the ashes, and slowly extending his right hand,

"Father Leblanc," he exclaimed, "thou hast heard the talk in the village,²⁹⁰

And, perchance, canst tell us some news of these ships and their errand."

Then with modest demeanor made answer the notary public,—

"Gossip enough have I heard, in sooth, yet am never the wiser;

And what their errand may be I know no better than others.

Yet am I not of those who imagine some evil intention²⁹⁵

Brings them here, for we are at peace; and why then molest us?"

"God's name!" shouted the hasty and somewhat irascible blacksmith;

"Must we in all things look for the how, and the why, and the wherefore?

Daily injustice is done, and might is the right of the strongest!"

But, without heeding his warmth, continued the notary public,—³⁰⁰

"Man is unjust, but God is just; and finally justice

Triumphs; and well I remember a story, that often consoled me, When as a captive I lay in the old French fort at Port Royal."
 This was the old man's favorite tale, and he loved to repeat it When his neighbors complained that any injustice was done them. ³⁰⁵
 "Once in an ancient city, whose name I no longer remember,
 Raised aloft on a column, a brazen statute of Justice Stood in the public square, upholding the scales in its left hand,
 And in its right a sword, as an emblem that justice presided Over the laws of the land, and the hearts and homes ³¹⁰ of the people.
 Even the birds had built their nests in the scales of the balance,
 Having no fear of the sword that flashed in the sunshine above them.
 But in the course of time the laws of the land were corrupted; Might took the place of right, and the weak were oppressed, and the mighty Ruled with an iron rod. Then it chanced in a nobleman's palace ³¹⁵
 That a necklace of pearls was lost, and ere long a suspicion Fell on an orphan girl who lived as maid in the household.
 She, after form of trial condemned to die on the scaffold,

Patiently Justice
 As to her cende Lol o'er t thund Smote the its left Down on t
 the b
 And in th
 magp Into whos
 inwov Silenced, ended Stood like no lan
 All his t
 face, Freeze in the w Then E
 table,
 Filled, til home Nut-brown
 villag While fro and in Wrote wit partie

that often Patiently met her doom at the foot of the statue of Justice.
 ch fort at As to her Father in heaven her innocent spirit ascended, e loved to Lo! o'er the city a tempest rose; and the bolts of the thunder
 y injustice Smote the statue of bronze, and hurled in wrath from its left hand
 no longer Down on the pavement below the clattering scales of the balance, of Justice And in the hollow thereof was found the nest of a e scales in magpie, at justice Into whose clay-built walls the necklace of pearls inwoven."
 and homes Silenced, but not convinced, when the story was ended, the blacksmith
 e scales of Stood like a man who fain would speak, but findeth no language;
 n the sun- All his thoughts were congealed into lines on his face, as the vapors land were Freeze in fantastic shapes on the window-panes in the winter.
 weak were Then Evangeline lighted the brazen lamp on the table,
 in a noble- Filled, till it overflowed, the pewter tankard with home-brewed ere long a Nut-brown ale, that was famed for its strength in the village of Grand-Pre; aid in the While from his pocket the notary drew his papers and inkhorn, n the scaf- Wrote with a steady hand the date and the age of the parties,

Naming the dower of the bride in flocks of sheep and in cattle. ³⁰⁵

Orderly all things proceeded, and duly and well were completed,

And the great seal of the law was set like a sun on the margin.

Then from his leathern pouch the farmer threw on the table

Three times the old man's fee in solid pieces of silver;
And the notary rising, and blessing the bride and bridegroom, ³¹⁰

Lifted aloft the tankard of ale and drank to their welfare.

Wiping the foam from his lip, he solemnly bowed and
departed,

While in silence the others sat and mused by the fireside,

Till Evangeline brought the draught-board out of its corner.

Soon was the game begun. In friendly contention the old men ³¹⁵

Laughed at each lucky hit, or unsuccessful manoeuvre, Laughed when a man was crowned, or a breach was made in the king-row.

Meanwhile, apart, in the twilight gloom of a window's embrasure,

Sat the lovers and whispered together, beholding the moon rise

Over the pallid sea and the silvery mist of the meadows. ³²⁰

Silently, one by one, in the infinite meadows of heaven,

sheep and 315 and well were

and a sun on and threw on bags of silver;

bride and 310 and took to their

and bowed and

and used by the

and d out of its

and contention

315 and manoeuvre,

and breach was

and a window's

and holding the

and the mead-

350 and meadows of

IMAGE EVALUATION
TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences
Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET
WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580
(716) 872-4503

128 132 122 120

CIHM/ICMH
Microfiche Series.

CIHM/ICMH Collection de
microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

110 01

© 1983

CIHM/ICMH
Microfiche Series.

CIHM/ICMH Collection de
microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

© 1992

Blossom
ang

Thus
the Rang ou stra

Rose the
the

Many a door

Lingere glad

Carefully on t

And on t farm

Scon wit
lowe

Up the s ness

Lighted
maic

Silent sh door

Simple th
and

Ample a care

Linen an wove

This was hush

Blossomed the lovely stars, the forget-me-nots of the angels.

Thus was the evening passed. Anon the bell from the belfry
Rang out the hour of nine, the village curfew, and straightway
Rose the guests and departed; and silence reigned in the household. ³⁵⁵
Many a farewell word and sweet good-night on the door-step Lingered long in Evangeline's heart, and filled it with gladness.
Carefully then were covered the embers that glowed on the hearth-stone, And on the oaken stairs resounded the tread of the farmer.
Scon with a soundless step the foot of Evangeline followed. ³⁶⁰
Up the staircase moved a luminous space in the darkness, Lighted less by the lamp than the shining face of the maiden.
Silent she passed through the hall, and entered the door of her chamber.
Simple that chamber was, with its curtains of white,
and its clothes-press Ample and high, on whose spacious shelves were carefully folded ³⁶⁵ Linen and woolen stuffs, by the hand of Evangeline woven
This was the precious dower she would bring to her husband in marriage,

Better than flocks and herds, being proofs of her skill as a housewife.
 Soon she extinguished her lamp, for the mellow and radiant moonlight Streamed through the windows, and lighted the room, till the heart of the maiden ⁸⁷⁰ Swelled and obeyed its power, like the tremulous tides of the ocean.
 Ah! she was fair, exceeding fair to behold, as she stood with Naked snow-white feet on the gleaming floor of her chamber!
 Little she dreamed that below, among the trees of the orchard,
 Waited her lover and watched for the gleam of her lamp and her shadow. ⁸⁷⁵ Yet were her thoughts of him, and at times a feeling of sadness Passed o'er her soul, as the sailing shade of clouds in the moonlight Flitted across the floor and darkened the room for a moment.
 And, as she gazed from the window, she saw serenely
 the moon pass Forth from the folds of a cloud, and one star follow ⁸⁸⁰
 her footsteps,
 As out of Abraham's tent young Ishmael wandered with Hagar.

FOURTH READING.

Pleasantly rose next morn the sun on the village
 of Grand-Pre.

Pleasant
 Min
 Where t ridi Life had labo Knocked
 of th Now fro
 neig Came in peas Many a you Made th
 ous Where r in t Group at the Long ere silen Thronge
 gro
 Sat, in th
 geth Every h
 and For with toge
 All thin
 was

Pleasantly gleamed in the soft, sweet air the Basin of Minas,

Where the ships, with their wavering shadows, were riding at anchor.

Life had been long astir in the village, and clamorous labor 285

Knocked with its hundred hands at the golden gates of the morning.

Now from the country around, from the farms and neighboring hamlets,

Came in their holiday dresses the blithe Acadian peasants.

Many a glad good-morrow and jocund laugh from the young folk

Made the bright air brighter, as up from the numerous meadows, 290

Where no path could be seen but the track of wheels in the greensward,

Group after group appeared, and joined, or passed on the highway.

Long ere noon, in the village all sounds of labor were silenced.

Thronged were the streets with people; and noisy groups at the house-doors

Sat, in the cheerful sun, and rejoiced and gossiped together. 295

Every house was an inn, where all were welcomed and feasted;

For with this simple people, who lived like brothers-
together,

All things were held in common, and what one had was another's.

Yet under Benedict's roof hospitality seemed more abundant:
 For Evangeline stood among the guests of her father.⁴⁰⁰
 Bright was her face with smiles, and words of welcome and gladness Fell from her beautiful lips, and blessed the cup as she gave it.

Under the open sky, in the odorous air of the orchard, Stript of its golden fruit, was spread the feast of betrothal.
 There in the shade of the porch were the priest and the notary seated;⁴⁰⁵
 There good Benedict sat, and sturdy Basil the blacksmith.
 Not far withdrawn from these, by the cider press and the bee-hives, Michael the fiddler was placed, with the gayest of hearts and of waistcoats.
 Shadow and light from the leaves alternately played on his snow-white Hair, as it waved in the wind; and the jolly face of the fiddler⁴¹⁰
 Glowed like a living coal when the ashes are blown from the embers.
 Gaily the old man sang to the vibrant sound of his fiddle,
Tous les Bourgeois de Chartres, and Le Carillon de Dunkerque,
 And anon with his wooden shoes beat time to the music.

Merrily
 dan Under t
 me
 Old fol am Fairest dau Noblest
 bla
 So pa mo Sounded
 ows Throng out Waited
 hur Garland
 the Then ca
 pro Entered
 clar Echoed
 and Echoed port Closed,
 the Then up
 step

Merrily, merrily whirled the wheels of the dizzying dances⁴¹⁵
Under the orchard-trees and down the path to the meadows;
Old folk and young together, and children mingled among them.
Fairest of all maids was Evangeline, Benedict's daughter!
Noblest of all the youths was Gabriel, son of the blacksmith!

So passed the morning away. And lo! with a summons sonorous⁴²⁰
Sounded the bell from its tower, and over the meadows a drum beat.
Thronged ere long was the church with men. Without, in the churchyard, Waited the women. They stood by the graves, and hung on the headstones Garlands of autumn-leaves and evergreens fresh from the forest.
Then came the guard from the ships, and marching proudly among them⁴²⁵ Entered the sacred portal. With loud and dissonant clangor Echoed the sound of their brazen drums from ceiling and casement,— Echoed a moment only, and slowly the ponderous portal Closed, and in silence the crowd awaited the will of the soldiers.
Then arose their commander, and spake from the steps of the altar,⁴³⁰

Holding aloft in his hands, with the seals, the royal commission.

"You are convened this day," he said, "by his Majesty's orders.

Clement and kind has he been; but how you have answered his kindness

Let your own hearts reply! To my natural make and my temper

Painful the task is I do, which to you I know must be grievous.⁴³⁸

Yet must I bow and obey, and deliver the will of our monarch:

Namely, that all your lands, and dwellings, and cattle
of all kinds

Forfeited be to the crown; and that you yourselves from this province

Be transported to other lands. God grant you may dwell there

Ever as faithful subjects, a happy and peaceable people!⁴⁴⁰

Prisoners now I declare you, for such is his Majesty's pleasure!"

As, when the air is serene in the sultry solstice of summer,

Suddenly gathers a storm, and the deadly sling of the hailstones

Beats down the farmer's corn in the field, and shatters his windows,

Hiding the sun, and strewing the ground with thatch⁴⁴⁵ from the house-roofs,

Bellowing fly the herds, and seek to break their enclosures;

So on th
the Silent a

the

Louder
And, by
the

Vain wa
pre

Rang th hea

Rose, w bla

As, on a Flushed

wil

"Down
sw

Death hor

More h of a

Smote
to

In th ten

Lol the Entered

the Raising

int

So on the hearts of the people descended the words of the speaker.

Silent a moment they stood in speechless wonder, and then rose

Louder and ever louder a wail of sorrow and anger, And, by one impulse moved, they madly rushed to the door-way.

Vain was the hope of escape; and cries and fierce imprecations

Rang through the house of prayer; and high o'er the heads of the others

Rose, with his arms uplifted, the figure of Basil the blacksmith,

As, on a stormy sea, a spar is tossed by the billows.
Flushed was his face and distorted with passion; and wildly he shouted,—

“Down with the tyrants of England! we never have sworn them allegiance!

Death to these foreign soldiers, who seize on our homes and our harvests!”

More he fain would have said, but the merciless hand of a soldier

Smote him upon the mouth, and dragged him down to the pavement.

In the midst of the strife and tumult of angry contention,

Lol the door of the chancel opened, and Father Felician Entered, with serious mien, and ascended the steps of the altar.

Raising his reverend hand, with a gesture he awed into silence

All that clamorous throng; and thus he spake to his people;
 Deep were his tones and solemn; in accents measured and mournful ⁴⁶⁵ Spake he, as, after the tocsin's alarum, distinctly the clock strikes.
 "What is this that ye do, my children? what madness has seized you?
 Forty years of my life have I labored among you, and taught you,
 Not in word alone, but in deed, to love one another!
 Is this the fruit of my toils, of my vigils and prayers and privations? ⁴⁷⁰
 Have you so soon forgotten all lessons of love and forgiveness?
 This is the house of the Prince of Peace, and would you profane it Thus with violent deeds and hearts overflowing with hatred?
 Lo! where the crucified Christ from His cross is gazing upon you!
 See! in those sorrowful eyes what meekness and holy compassion! ⁴⁷⁵
 Hark! how those lips still repeat the prayer, 'O Father, forgive them!'
 Let us repeat that prayer in the hour when the wicked assail us,
 Let us repeat it now, and say, 'O Father, forgive
 them!'"
 Few were his words of rebuke, but deep in the hearts of his people

Sank th
 sion While t
 for

Then from Fervent peo Not wit
 Av Sang th wit Rose on to h

Mean
 ill, Wander
 and Long at rig Shieldin tha Lighted
 and Peasant its Long w
 the There s
 wit

Sank they, and sobs of contrition succeeded the passionate outbreak,⁴⁶⁸ While they repeated his prayer and said, "O Father, forgive them!"

Then came the evening service. The tapers gleamed from the altar; Fervent and deep was the voice of the priest, and the people responded, Not with their lips alone, but their hearts; and the Ave Maria Sang they, and fell on their knees, and their souls,⁴⁶⁹ with devotion translated,
Rose on the ardor of prayer, like Elijah ascending to heaven.

Meanwhile had spread in the village the tidings of ill, and on all sides Wandered, wailing, from house to house the women and children.
Long at her father's door Evangeline stood, with her right hand Shielding her eyes from the level rays of the sun,⁴⁷⁰ that, descending, Lighted the village street with mysterious splendor, and roofed each Peasant's cottage with golden thatch, and emblazoned its windows.
Long within had been spread the snow-white cloth on the table;
There stood the wheaten loaf, and the honey fragrant with wild flowers;

There stood the tankard of ale, and the cheese fresh brought from the dairy ;⁴⁹⁵ And at the head of the board the great arm-chair of the farmer.
 Thus did Evangeline wait at her father's door, as the sunset Threw the long shadows of trees o'er the broad am-brosial meadows.
 Ah! on her spirit within a deeper shadow had fallen,
 And from the fields of her soul a fragrance celestial ascended,—⁵⁰⁰
 Charity, meekness, love, and hope, and forgiveness,
 and patience!
 Then, all forgetful of self, she wandered into the village,
 Cheering with looks and words the mournful hearts of the women,
 As o'er the darkening fields with lingering steps they departed,
 Urged by their household cares, and the weary feet of their children.⁵⁰⁵ Down sank the great red sun, and in golden, glimmering vapors Veiled the light of his face, like the Prophet descending from Sinai.
 Sweetly over the village the bell of the Angelus
 sounded.

Meanwhile, amid the gloom, by the church Evangeline lingered.
 All was silent within; and in vain at the door and the windows⁵¹⁰

Stood by
 "Gabri
 no Came
 gr Slowly
 of Smoul
 th Empty
 ph Sadly ch In the ra Loud
 th Keenly
 ec Told wo Then ju Soothe
 sl

Four
 th Cheer
 far

Stood she, and listened and looked, until, overcome by emotion
 "Gabriell!" cried she aloud with tremulous voice, but no answer
 Came from the graves of the dead, nor the gloomier grave of the living.
 Slowly at length she returned to the tenantless house of her father.
 Smouldered the fire on the hearth, on the board ⁵¹⁵
 the supper untasted.
 Empty and drear was each room, and haunted with phantoms of terror.
 Sadly echoed her step on the stair and the floor of her chamber.
 In the dead of the night she heard the disconsolate rain fall Loud on the withered leaves of the sycamore-tree by the window.
 Keenly the lightning flashed; and the voice of the echoing thunder ⁵²⁰ Told her that God was in heaven and governed the world He created!
 Then she remembered the tale she had heard of the justice of Heaven; Soothed was her troubled soul, and she peacefully slumbered till morning.

FIFTH READING.

Four times the sun had risen and set; and now on the fifth day Cheerily called the cock to the sleeping maids of the farm-house. ⁵²⁵

Soon o'er the yellow fields, in silent and mournful procession, Came from the neighboring hamlets and farms the Acadian women, Driving in ponderous wains their household goods to the sea-shore, Pausing and looking back to gaze once more on their dwellings, Ere they were shut from sight by the winding road⁵³⁰ and the woodland.
 Close at their sides their children ran, and urged on the oxen,
 While in their little hands they clasped some fragments of playthings.

Thus to the Gasperean's mouth they hurried; and there on the sea-beach Piled in confusion lay the household goods of the peasants.
 All day long between the shore and the ships did the⁵³³ boats ply;
 All day long the wains came laboring down from the village.
 Late in the afternoon, when the sun was near to his setting, Echoed far o'er the fields came the roll of drums from the churchyard.
 Thither the women and children thronged. On a sudden the church-doors Opened, and forth came the guard, and marching in⁵⁴⁰ gloomy procession Followed the long-imprisoned, but patient, Acadian farmers.

Even
 a Sing a
 a So wit
 so Down
 a Forem
 th Sang
 M
 "Sacr
 Fill o
 a Then
 th Join
 s Ming
 d Ha
 s
 Not o
 a Calm
 a
 And s Tears
 n Clasp
 s

Even as pilgrims, who journey afar from their homes and their country, Sing as they go, and in singing forget they are weary and wayworn,
 So with songs on their lips the Acadian peasants descended
 Down from the church to the shore, amid their wives and their daughters.⁵⁴⁵ Foremost the young men came; and raising together their voices,
 Sang with tremulous lips a chant of the Catholic Missions:—
 "Sacred heart of the Saviour! O inexhaustible fountain!
 Fill our hearts this day with strength and submission
 and patience!"
 Then the old men, as they marched, and the women that stood by the wayside⁵⁵⁰ Joined in the sacred psalm, and the birds in the sunshine above them
 Mingled their notes therewith, like voices of spirits departed.

Half-way down to the shore Evangeline waited in silence,
 Not overcome with grief, but strong in the hour of affliction,— Calmly and sadly she waited, until the procession⁵⁵⁵ approached her,
 And she beheld the face of Gabriel pale with emotion.
 Tears then filled her eyes, and, eagerly running to meet him, Clasped she his hands, and laid her head on his shoulder, and whispered,—

"Gabriell! be of good cheer! for if we love one another
 Nothing, in truth, can harm us, whatever mischances may happen!"⁵⁶⁰
 Smiling she spake these words; then suddenly paused, for her father Saw she, slowly advancing. Alas! how changed was his aspect!
 Gone was the glow from his cheek, and the fire from his eye, and his footstep Heavier seemed with the weight of the heavy heart in his bosom.
 But with a smile and a sigh, she clasped his neck and embraced him,⁵⁶⁵ Speaking words of endearment where words of comfort availed not.
 Thus to the Gasperau's mouth moved on that mournful procession.

There disorder prevailed, and the tumult and stir of embarking.
 Busily plied the freighted boats; and in the confusion Wives were torn from their husbands, and mothers,⁵⁷⁰ too late, saw their children Left on the land, extending their arms, with wildest entreaties.
 So unto separate ships were Basil and Gabriel carried, While in despair on the shore Evangeline stood with her father.
 Half the task was not done when the sun went down,
 and the twilight Deepened and darkened around; and in haste the refluent ocean⁵⁷⁵

Fled av sar Covered slip Farther
 the
 Like to All esc
 the Lay en far Back to oce Draggi lea Inland sai Then, fro Sweet v fro Lowing ba Waited
 of Silence
 A Rose n fro
 But
 be

Fled away from the shore, and left the line of the sand-beach

Covered with waifs of the tide, with kelp and the slippery sea-weed.

Farther back in the midst of the household goods and the wagons,

Like to a gypsy camp, or a leaguer after a battle,

All escape cut off by the sea, and the sentinels near
them,

Lay encamped for the night the houseless Acadian
farmers.

Back to its nethermost caves retreated the bellowing
ocean,

Dragging adown the beach the rattling pebbles, and leaving

Inland and far up the shore the stranded boats of the sailors.

Then, as the night descended, the herds returned from their pastures,

Sweet was the moist still air with the odor of milk from their udders

Lowing they waited, and long, at the well-known bars of the farm-yard,—

Waited and looked in vain for the voice and the hand of the milkmaid.

Silence reigned in the streets; from the church no Angelus sounded,

Rose no smoke from the roofs, and gleamed no lights from the windows.

But on the shores meanwhile the evening fires had been kindled,

Built of the drift-wood thrown on the sands from wrecks in the tempest.
 Round them shapes of gloom and sorrowful faces were gathered,
 Voices of women were heard, and of men, and the crying of children.
 Onward from fire to fire, as from hearth to hearth in his parish, Wandered the faithful priest, consoling and blessing and cheering,
 Like unto shipwrecked Paul on Melita's desolate seashore.
 Thus he approached the place where Evangeline sat with her father,
 And in the flickering light beheld the face of the old man, Haggard and hollow and wan, and without either thought or emotion, E'en as the face of a clock from which the hands have been taken.
 Vainly Evangeline strove with words and caresses to cheer him, Vainly offered him food; yet he moved not, he looked not, he spake not,
 But, with a vacant stare, ever gazed at the flickering fire-light.
 "Benedicite!" murmured the priest, in tones of compassion.
 More he fain would have said, but his heart was full,
 and his accents Faltered and paused on his lips, as the feet of a child on a threshold,

Hushed
 en Silently ma Raising
 the Moved
 sor
 Then s
 in

 Sudd
 the Moon c ho Titan-li
 and Seizing sha Broader
 the Gleame
 lay Column
 fla Thrust qui Then, a tha Whirled
 hur Started
 mi

Hushed by the scene he beholds, and the awful presence of sorrow.

Silently, therefore, he laid his hand on the head of the maiden,

Raising his tearful eyes to the silent stars that above them

Moved on their way, unperturbed by the wrongs and sorrows of mortals.

Then sat he down at her side, and they wept together in silence.

Suddenly rose from the south a light, as in autumn the blood-red

Moon climbs the crystal walls of heaven, and o'er the horizon

Titan-like stretches its hundred hands upon mountain and meadow,

Seizing the rocks and the rivers, and piling huge shadows together.

Broader and ever broader it gleamed on the roofs of the village,

Gleamed on the sky and the sea, and the ships that lay in the roadstead.

Columns of shining smoke uprose, and flashes of flame were Thrust through their folds and withdrawn, like the quivering hands of a martyr.

Then, as the wind seized the gleecs and the burning thatch, and, uplifting,

Whirled them aloft through the air, at once from a hundred house-tops

Started the sheeted smoke with flashes of flame intermingled.

These things beheld in dismay the crowd on the shore and on shipboard.
 Speechless at first they stood, then cried aloud in their anguish, ⁶²⁵
 "We shall behold no more our homes in the village
 of Grand-Pre!"
 Loud on a sudden the cocks began to crow in the farmyards,
 Thinking the day had dawned; and anon the lowing of cattle
 Came on the evening breeze, by the barking of dogs interrupted.
 Then rose a sound of dread, such as startles the ⁶³⁰ sleeping encampments Far in the western prairies of forests that skirt the Nebraska, When the wild horses affrighted sweep by with the speed of the whirlwind, Or the loud bellowing herds of buffaloes rush to the river.
 Such was the sound that arose on the night, as the herds and the horses Broke through their folds and fences, and madly ⁶³⁵ rushed o'er the meadows.

 Overwhelmed with the sight, yet speechless, the priest and the maiden Gazed on the scene of terror that reddened and widened before them;
 And as they turned at length to speak to their silent companion, Lo! from his seat he had fallen, and stretched abroad on the seashore

Motion
 par Slowly
 ma Knelt a ter Then in his Throug
 slu And wh mu Faces o
 ing Pallid, v pas Still the lan Redden aro
 And lik sen Then a peo
 "Let us
 sea Brings
 lan Then sl chu Such w has

Motionless lay his form, from which the soul had departed. ⁶⁴⁰

Slowly the priest uplifted the lifeless head, and the maiden

Knelt at her father's side, and wailed aloud in her terror.

Then in a swoon she sank and lay with her head on his bosom.

Through the long night she lay in deep, oblivious slumber;

And when she woke from the trance, she beheld a multitude near her. ⁶⁴⁵

Faces of friends she beheld, that were mournfully gazing upon her,

Pallid, with tearful eyes, and looks of saddest compassion.

Still the blaze of the burning village illumined the landscape.

Reddened the sky overhead, and gleamed on the faces around her,

And like the day of doom it seemed to her wavering senses. ⁶⁵⁰

Then a familiar voice she heard, as it said to the people,—

“Let us bury him here by the sea. When a happier season

Brings us again to our homes from the unknown land of our exile,

Then shall his sacred dust be piously laid in the churchyard.”

Such were the words of the priest. And there in haste by the sea-side, ⁶⁵⁵

Having the glare of the burning village for funeral torches,
But without bell or book, they buried the farmer of Grand-Pre.
And as the voice of the priest repeated the service of sorrow,
Lo! with a mournful sound like the voice of a vast congregation, Solemnly answered the sea, and mingled its roar⁶⁶⁰ with the dirges.
'T was the returning tide, that afar from the waste
of the ocean,
With the first dawn of the day, came heaving and hurrying landward.
Then recommenced once more the stir and noise of embarking;
And with the ebb of the tide the ships sailed out of the harbor, Leaving behind them the dead on the shore, and the⁶⁶⁵ village in ruins.

SIXTH READING.

Many a weary year had passed since the burning of Grand-Pre.
When on the falling tide the freighted vessels departed, Bearing a nation, with all its household goods, into exile,
Exile without an end, and without an example in story.
Far asunder, on separate coasts, the Acadians⁶⁷⁰ landed;

Scattered win Strikes of M Friendle city From th
sav
From th
the Seizes th to t Deep in mar Friends
ing Asked o nor Written chu Long an war Lowly a thin Fair wa
ten Dreary a pat Marked
suff Passions aba

Scattered were they, like flakes of snow, when the wind from the northeast

Strikes aslant through the fogs that darken the Banks of Newfoundland.

Friendless, homeless, hopeless, they wandered from city to city,

From the cold lakes of the North to sultry Southern savannas—

From the bleak shores of the sea to the lands where the Father of Waters ⁶⁷⁵

Seizes the hills in his hands, and drags them down to the ocean,

Deep in their sands to bury the scattered bones of the mammoth.

Friends they sought and homes; and many, despairing, heart-broken,

Asked of the earth but a grave, and no longer a friend nor a fireside.

Written their history stands on tablets of stone in the churchyards. ⁶⁸⁰

Long among them was seen a maiden who waited and wandered,

Lowly and meek in spirit, and patiently suffering all things.

Fair was she and young; but, alas! before her extended,

Dreary and vast and silent, the desert of life, with its pathway

Marked by the graves of those who had sorrowed and suffered before her, ⁶⁸⁵

Passions long extinguished, and hopes long dead and abandoned,

As the emigrant's way o'er the Western desert is marked by Camp-fires long consumed, and bones that bleach in the sunshine.
 Something there was in her life incomplete, imperfect, unfinished;
 As if a morning of June, with all its music and sunshine, Suddenly paused in the sky, and fading, slowly descended
 Into the east again, from whence it late had arisen Sometimes she lingered in towns, till, urged by the fever within her,
 Urged by a restless longing, the hunger and thirst of the spirit,
 She would commence again her endless search and endeavor;
 Sometimes in churchyards strayed, and gazed on the crosses and tombstones, Sat by some nameless grave, and thought that perhaps in its bosom,
 He was already at rest, and she longed to slumber
 beside him.
 Sometimes a rumor, a hearsay, an inarticulate whisper, Came with its airy hand to point and beckon her forward.
 Sometimes she spake with those who had seen her beloved and known him, But it was long ago, in some far-off place or forgotten.
 "Gabriel Lajeunesse!" they said; "Oh, yes! we have seen him.

He was gone Coureur
 trap
 "Gabrie
 hav
 He is a Then w
 wa
 Are the Who ha
 loy Here is lov
 Many a be Then w
 "I Whithe
 and For wh
 illu
 Many t dar Thereu
 fes
 Said, w spe Talk n
 wa
 If it en
 tur

He was with Basil the blacksmith, and both have gone to the prairies;

Coueurs-des-bois are they, and famous hunters and trappers.⁷⁰⁸

"Gabriel Lajeunesse!" said others; "Oh, yes! we have seen him.

He is a voyageur in the lowlands of Louisiana."

Then would they say, "Dear child! why dream and wait for him longer?

Are there not other youths as fair as Gabriel? Others Who have hearts as tender and true, and spirits as loyal?⁷¹⁰

Here is Baptiste Leblanc, the notary's son, who has loved thee

Many a tedious year; come, give him thy hand and be happy!"

Then would Evangeline answer, serenely but sadly,
"I cannot!

Whither my heart has gone, there follows my hand, and not elsewhere.⁷¹⁵

For when the heart goes before, like a lamp, and illumines the pathway,

Many things are made clear, that else lie hidden in darkness."

Thereupon the priest, her friend and father confessor,

Said, with a smile, "O daughter! thy God thus speaketh within thee!

Talk not of wasted affection, affection never was wasted;⁷²⁰

If it enrich not the heart of another, its waters, returning

Back to their springs, like the rain, shall fill them full of refreshment;
 That which the fountain sends forth returns again to the fountain.
 Patience; accomplish thy labor; accomplish thy work of affection!
 Sorrow and silence are strong, and patient endurance is godlike.⁷²⁵
 Therefore accomplish thy labor of love, till the heart is made godlike, Purified, strengthened, perfected, and rendered more worthy of heaven!"
 Cheered by the good man's words, Evangeline labored and waited.
 Still in her heart she heard the funeral dirge of the ocean,
 But with its sound there was mingled a voice that whispered, "Despair not!"⁷³⁰ Thus did that poor soul wander in want and cheerless discomfort, Bleeding, barefooted, over the shards and thorns of existence.
 Let me essay, O Muse! to follow the wanderer's footsteps;—
 Not through each devious path, each changeful year of existence;
 But as a traveler follows a streamlet's course through the valley:⁷³⁵
 Far from its margin at times, and seeing the gleam of its water
 Here and there, in some open space, and at intervals only;

Then d
 glo Though
 mu Happy,
 an

It wa
 Ri Past th bas Into th
 sis Floated bo
 It was sh
 Nation
 ge Bound
 m Men an or Sought
 ac
 On th lo
 With F Onwar
 sc

Then drawing nearer its banks, through sylvan glooms that conceal it, Though he behold it not, he can hear its continuous murmur;
 Happy, at length, if he find a spot where it reaches an outlet. ⁷⁴⁰

SEVENTH READING.

It was the month of May. Far down the Beautiful River,
 Past the Ohio shore and past the mouth of the Wabash,
 Into the golden stream of the broad and swift Mississippi, Floated a cumbrous boat, that was rowed by Acadian boatmen.
 It was a band of exiles: a raft, as it were, from the shipwrecked ⁷⁴⁵ Nation, scattered along the coast, now floating together,
 Bound by the bonds of a common belief and a common misfortune;
 Men and women and children, who, guided by hope or by hearsay, Sought for their kith and their kin among the few-aced farmers
 On the Acadian coast, and the prairies of fair Ope-lousas. ⁷⁵⁰
 With them Evangeline went, and her guide, the Father Felician.
 Onward o'er sunken sands, through a wilderness sombre with forests,

Day after day they glided adown the turbulent
 river;
 Night after night, by their blazing fires, encamped on its borders.
 Now through rushing chutes, among green islands, where plumelike⁷⁵⁵ Cotton-trees nodded their shadowy crests, they swept with the current,
 Then emerged into broad lagoons, where silvery sandbars
 Lay in the stream, and along the wimpling waves of their margin, Shining with snow-white plumes, large flocks of pelicans waded.
 Level the landscape grew, and along the shores of the river,⁷⁶⁰
 Shaded by china-trees, in the midst of luxuriant gardens, Stood the houses of planters, with negro cabins and dove-cots.
 They were approaching the region where reigns perpetual summer, Where through the Golden Coast, and groves of orange and citron, Sweeps with majestic curve the river away to the eastward.⁷⁶⁵
 They; too, swerved from their course; and, entering the Bayou of Plaquemine, Soon were lost in a maze of sluggish and devious waters,
 Which, like a network of steel, extended in every direction.

Over th
 of Met in air Waved cat Deathl
 the Home t sun
 Or by t lau Lovely
 on Gleame
 tai Down t
 ch
 Dream
 are
 And o's
 an Strang
 con
 As, at pr Far in mi
 So, at t
 ev Shrink
 ha

turbulent encamped on en islands, they swept silvery sand-g waves of cks of pel-nores of the riant gar-cabins and reigns perl groves of away to the d, entering and devious
 ed in every

Over their heads the towering and tenebrous boughs of the cypress
 Met in a dusky arch, and trailing mosses in mid-air
 Waved like banners that hang on the walls of ancient cathedrals.
 Deathlike the silence seemed, and unbroken, save by the herons
 Home to their roosts in the cedar-trees returning at sunset,
 Or by the owl, as he greeted the moon with demoniac laughter.
 Lovely the moonlight was as it glanced and gleamed on the water, Gleamed on the columns of cypress and cedar sustaining the arches, Down through whose broken vaults it fell as through chinks in a ruin.
 Dreamlike, and indistinct, and strange were all things around them;
 And o'er their spirits there came a feeling of wonder and sadness,— Strange forebodings of ill, unseen and that cannot be compassed.
 As, at the tramp of a horse's hoof on the turf of the prairies, Far in advance are closed the leaves of the shrinking mimosa,
 So, at the hoof-beats of fate, with sad forebodings of evil, Shrinks and closes the heart, ere the stroke of doom has attained it.

But Evangeline's heart was sustained by a vision,⁷⁸⁵ that faintly Floated before her eyes, and beckoned her on through the moonlight.
 It was the thought of her brain that assumed the shape of a phantom.
 Through those shadowy aisles had Gabriel wandered before her,
 And every stroke of the oar now brought him nearer and nearer.

Then, in his place, at the prow of the boat, rose one of the oarsmen,⁷⁹⁰
 And, as a signal sound, if others like them peradventure Sailed on those gloomy and midnight streams, blew a blast on his bugle.
 Wild through the dark colonnades and corridors leafy the blast rang,
 Breaking the seal of silence and giving tongues to
 the forest.
 Soundless above them the banners of moss just stirred⁷⁹⁵ to the music.
 Multitudinous echoes awoke and died in the distance, Over the watery floor, and beneath the reverberant
 branches;
 But not a voice replied; no answer came from the
 darkness;
 And when the echoes had ceased, like a sense of pain was the silence.
 Then Evangeline slept; but the boatmen rowed⁸⁰⁰ through the midnight,

Silent a son Such as While t
 sou Far off for Mixed v
 the Thus
 sha Lay, in Water-l
 tion
 Made b
 the Lifted l
 me Faint v
 lia
 And wi
 isl Fragran
 he Near to slu Soon b su Under
 th Safely
 th

Silent at times, then singing familiar Canadian boat-songs,
 Such as they sang of old on their own Acadian rivers.
 While through the night were heard the mysterious sounds of the desert, Far off,—indistinct,—as of wave or wind in the forest, Mixed with the whoop of the crane and the roar of ⁸⁰⁵
 the grim alligator.

Thus ere another noon they emerged from the shades; and before them Lay, in the golden sun, the lakes of the Atchafalaya.
 Water-lilies in myriads rocked on the slight undulations
 Made by the passing oars, and, resplendent in beauty, the lotus Lifted her golden crown above the heads of the boatmen. ⁸¹⁰
 Faint was the air with the odorous breath of magnolia blossoms,
 And with the heat of noon; and numberless sylvan
 islands,
 Fragrant and thickly embowered with blossoming hedges of roses, Near to whose shores they glided along, invited to slumber.
 Soon by the fairest of these their weary oars were suspended. ⁸¹⁵
 Under the boughs of Wachita willows, that grew by
 the margin,
 Safely their boat was moored; and scattered about on the greensward,

Tired with their midnight toil, the weary travellers slumbered.
 Over them vast and high extended the cope of a cedar.
 Swinging from its great arms, the trumpet-flower and the grapevine⁸²⁰
 Hung their ladder of ropes aloft like the ladder of Jacob,
 On whose pendulous stairs the angels ascending, descending,
 Were the swift humming-birds, that flitted from blossom to blossom.
 Such was the vision Evangeline saw as she slumbered
 beneath it.
 Filled was her heart with love, and the dawn of an opening heaven⁸²⁵
 Lighted her soul in sleep with the glory of regions celestial.

Nearer, ever nearer, among the numberless islands, Darted a light, swift boat, that sped away o'er the water, Urged on its course by the sinewy arms of hunters and trappers.
 Northward its prow was turned, to the land of the bison and beaver.⁸³⁰
 At the helm sat a youth, with countenance thoughtful and careworn.
 Dark and neglected locks overshadowed his brow, and a sadness
 Somewhat beyond his years on his face was legibly written.

Gabriel
 and Sought i sorr Swiftly
 isla But by t met So that in t All und wer Angel o
 ing Swiftly
 the After th in t
 As from ma
 Said wi Fe Someth
 wa
 Is it a f Or has spi
 Then, v
 lou Unto e me But ma
 as

Gabriel was it, who, weary with waiting, unhappy and restless, Sought in the Western wilds oblivion of self and of sorrow.⁸³⁶
Swiftly they glided along, close under the lee of the island,
But by the opposite bank, and behind a screen of pal-mettos;
So that they saw not the boat, where it lay concealed in the willows;
All undisturbed by the dash of their oars, and unseen,
were the sleepers;
Angel of God was their none to awaken the slumbering maiden.⁸⁴⁰
Swiftly they glided away, like the shade of a cloud on the prairie.
After the sound of their oars on the tholes had died in the distance,
As from a magic trance the sleepers awoke, and the maiden
Said with a sigh to the friendly priest, "O Father Felician!
Something says in my heart that near me Gabriel wanders.⁸⁴⁵
Is it a foolish dream, an idle and vague superstition?
Or has an angel passed, and revealed the truth to my spirit?" Then, with a blush, she added, "Alas for my credu-lous fancy!
Unto ears like thine such words as these have no meaning."
But made answer the revered man, and he smiled as he answered,--⁸⁵⁰

"Daughter, thy words are not idle; nor are they to me without meaning, Feeling is deep and still; and the word that floats on the surface
 Is as the tossing buoy, that betrays where the anchor is hidden.
 Therefore trust to thy heart, and to what the world calls illusions.
 Gabriel truly is near thee; for not far away to the southward,
 On the banks of the Teche, are the towns of St.
 Maur and St. Martin.
 There the long-wandering bride shall be given again to her bridegroom,
 There the long-absent pastor regain his flock and his sheepfold.
 Beautiful is the land, with its prairies and forests of fruit-trees;
 Under the feet a garden of flowers, and the bluest of heavens
 Bending above, and resting its dome on the walls of the forest.
 They who dwell there have named it the Eden of Louisiana."

With these words of cheer they arose and continued their journey.
 Softly the evening came. The sun from the western horizon
 Like a magician extended his golden wand o'er the landscape;
 Twinkling vapors arose; and sky and water and forest

Seemed
 mi Hangin
 silv Floated
 tion Filled v swe Touche
 fee Glowed
 aro Then fr
 wil Swingin
 wa Shook t
 mu
 That t see Plaintiv
 to Seemed Ba Single en Till, ha
 in
 As whe
 tre Shakes
 the

Seemed all on fire at the touch; and melted and mingled together.

Hanging between two skies, a cloud with edges of silver,

Floated the boat, with its dripping oars, on the motionless water.

Filled was Evangeline's heart with inexpressible sweetness.

Touched by the magic spell, the sacred fountains of feeling Glowed with the light of love, as the skies and waters around her.

Then from a neighboring thicket the mocking-bird, wildest of singers,

Swinging aloft on a willow spray that hung o'er the water,

Shook from his little throat such floods of delirious music

That the whole air and the woods and the waves seemed silent to listen.

Plaintive at first were the tones, and sad; then soaring to madness Seemed they to follow or guide the revel of frenzied Bacchantes.

Single notes were then heard, in sorrowful, low, lamentation;

Till, having gathered them all, he flung them abroad in derision,

As when, after a storm, a gust of wind through the tree-tops

Shakes down the rattling rain in a crystal shower on the branches.

With such a prelude as this, and hearts that throbbed with emotion, Slowly they entered the Teche, where it flows through the green Opelousas, And, through the amber air, above the crest of the woodland,⁸⁸⁵
 Saw the column of smoke that arose from a neighboring dwelling;—
 Sounds of a horn they heard, and the distant lowing
 of cattle.

EIGHTH READING.

Near to the bank of the river, o'ershadowed by oaks from whose branches Garlands of Spanish moss and of mystic mistletoe flaunted, Such as the Druids cut down with golden hatchets at Yule-tide,⁸⁹⁰
 Stood, secluded and still, the house of the herdsman.
 A garden
 Girded it round about with a belt of luxuriant blossoms, Filling the air with fragrance. The house itself was of timbers
 Hewn from the cypress-tree, and carefully fitted together.
 Large and low was the roof; and on slender columns⁸⁹⁵ supported,
 Rose-wreathed, vine-encircled, a broad and spacious veranda,
 Haunt of the humming-bird and the bee, extended around it.

At each gar Statione
 bol, Scenes o
 riva Silence
 and Ran nea was
 And fro pan Into the ros
 In the r pat Throug
 lim
 Into wh
 ing
 Full in car Hangin
 in Stood a gr
 Just
 the Mounte
 sti Sat a
 de

At each end of the house, amid the flowers of the garden,

Stationed the dove-cots were, as love's perpetual symbol,

Scenes of endless wooing, and endless contentions of rivals.

Silence reigned o'er the place. The line of shadow and sunshine

Ran near the tops of the trees; but the house itself was in shadow,

And from its chimney-top, ascending and slowly expanding

Into the evening air, a thin blue column of smoke rose.

In the rear of the house, from the garden gate, ran a pathway

Through the great groves of oak to the skirts of the limitless prairie,

Into whose sea of flowers the sun was slowly descending.

Full in his track of light, like ships with shadowy canvas

Hanging loose from their spar in a motionless calm in the tropicis,

Stood a cluster of trees, with tangled cordage of grapevines.

Just where the woodlands met the flowery surf of the prairie,

Mounted upon his horse, with Spanish saddle and stirrups,

Sat a herdsman, arrayed in gaiters and doublet of deerskin.

Broad and brown was the face that from under the Spanish sombrero Gazed on the peaceful scene, with the lordly look of ⁹¹⁵ its master.
 Round about him were numberless herds of kine that were grazing Quietly in the meadows, and breathing the vapory freshness
 That uprose from the river, and spread itself over the landscape.
 Slowly lifting the horn that hung at his side, and expanding Fully his broad, deep chest, he blew a blast, that resounded ⁹²⁰
 Wildly and sweet and far, through the still damp air of the evening.
 Suddenly out of the grass the long white horns of the cattle Rose like flakes of foam on the adverse currents of ocean.
 Silent a moment they gazed, then bellowing rushed o'er the prairie,
 And the whole mass became a cloud, a shade in the ⁹²⁵ distance.
 Then, as the herdsman turned to the house, through the gate of the garden Saw he the forms of the priest and the maiden advancing to meet him.
 Suddenly down from his horse he sprang in amazement; and forward Pushed with extended arms and exclamations of wonder;

When t
 bla Hearty gar
 There i
 an Gave th
 fri Laughi
 th Though
 do Stole o' em Broke At How h bo
 Over E pa Tears o ul
 "Gone"
 on All her
 an Then t
 as
 "Be of de Foolish
 m

When they beheld his face, they recognized Basil the blacksmith.

Hearty his welcome was, as he led his guests to the garden.

There in an arbor of roses with endless question and answer

Gave they vent to their hearts, and renewed their friendly embraces,

Laughing and weeping by turns, or sitting silent and thoughtful.

Thoughtful, for Gabriel came not; and now dark doubts and misgivings

Stole o'er the maiden's heart; and Basil, somewhat embarrassed,

Broke the silence and said, "If you came by the Atchafalaya,

How have you nowhere encountered my Gabriel's boat on the bayous?"

Over Evangeline's face at the words of Basil a shade passed.

Tears came into her eyes, and she said, with a tremulous accent,

"Gone? is Gabriel gone?" and, concealing her face on his shoulder,

All her o'erburdened heart gave way, and she wept and lamented.

Then the good Basil said,—and his voice grew blithe as he said it,—

"Be of good cheer, my child; it is only today he departed.

Foolish boy! he has left me alone with my herds and my horses.

Moody and restless grown, and tried and troubled, his spirit
 Could no longer endure the calm of this quiet existence.
 Thinking ever of thee, uncertain and sorrowful ever,
 Ever silent, or speaking only of thee and his troubles, He at length had become so tedious to men and to ⁹⁵⁰ maidens,
 Tedious even to me, that at length I bethought me,
 and sent him Unto the town of Adayes to trade for mules with the Spaniards.
 Thence he will follow the Indian trails to the Ozark Mountains,
 Hunting for furs in the forests, on rivers trapping the beaver.
 Therefore be of good cheer; we will follow the fugitive lover; ⁹⁵⁵
 He is not far on his way, and the Fates and the streams are against him.
 Up and away tomorrow, and through the red dew of
 the morning,
 We will follow him fast, and bring him back to his prison."

Then glad voices were heard, and up from the banks of the river, Borne aloft on his comrades' arms, came Michael the ⁹⁶⁰ fiddler.
 Long under Basil's roof had he lived, like a god on Olympus,

Having
 tals Far ren fidd
 "Long l min
 As they stra Father l
 the Kindly
 enr Hailed
 gos Laughin
 dau Much th bla
 All his der Much t
 the
 And of wh
 Each o
 an Thus th
 ver Enter
 sup Waited
 tog

Having no other care than dispensing music to mortals.

Far renowned was he for his silver locks and his fiddle.

"Long live Michael," they cried, "our brave Acadian minstrel!"

As they bore him aloft in triumphal procession; and straightway

Father Felician advanced with Evangeline, greeting the old man

Kindly and oft, and recalling the past, while Basil, enraptured,

Hailed with hilarious joy his old companions and gossips,

Laughing loud and long, and embracing mothers and daughters.

Much they marvelled to see the wealth of the ci-devant blacksmith,

All his domains and his herds, and his patriarchal demeanor;

Much they marvelled to hear his tales of the soil and the climate,

And of the prairies, whose numberless herds were his who would take them;

Each one thought in his heart, that he, too, would go and do likewise.

Thus they ascended the steps, and, crossing the breezy veranda,

Entered the hall of the house, where already the supper of Basil Waited his late return; and they rested and feasted together.

Over the joyous feast the sudden darkness descended.
 All was silent without, and, illuming the landscape with silver, Fair rose the dewy moon and the myriad stars; but within doors,
 Brighter than these, shone the faces of friends in the glimmering lamplight.
 Then from his station aloft, at the head of the table,
 the herdsman
 Poured forth his heart and his wine together in endless profusion.
 Lighting his pipe, that was filled with sweet Natchitoches tobacco, Thus he spake to his guests, who listened, and smiled as they listened:—
 "Welcome once more, my friends, who long have been friendless and homeless, Welcome once more to a home, that is better perchance than the old one!
 Here no hungry winter congeals our blood like the rivers;
 Here no stony ground provokes the wrath of the farmer;
 Smoothly the plowshare runs through the soil, as a keel through the water.
 All the year round the orange-groves are in blossom;
 and grass grows
 More in a single night than a whole Canadian summer.
 Here, too, numberless herds run wild and unclaimed in the prairies;

Here,
 fo
 With a
 in After y
 w
 No Ki
 fr Burnin
 fa Speak
 h While
 or So tha
 as Sudd
 h
 But t n
 "Only
 fo
 For it Cured
 a Then
 s Soun
 v It wa
 P Who
 t

Here, too, lands may be had for the asking, and forests of timber
With a few blows of the axe are hewn and framed⁹⁹⁵ into houses.
After your houses are built, and your fields are yellow with harvests,
No King George of England shall drive you away from your homesteads, Burning your dwellings and barns, and stealing your farms and your cattle." Speaking these words, he blew a wrathful cloud from his nostrils,
While his huge, brown hand came thundering down¹⁰⁰⁰
on the table,
So that the guests all started; and Father Felician, astounded,
Suddenly paused, with a pinch of snuff half-way to
his nostrils.
But the brave Basil resumed, and his words were milder and gayer:—
"Only beware of the fever, my friends, beware of the fever!
For it is not like that of our cold Acadian climate,¹⁰⁰⁵ Cured by wearing a spider hung round one's neck in a nutshell!"
Then there were voices heard at the door, and footsteps approaching Sounded upon the stairs and the floor of the breezy veranda.
It was the neighboring Creoles and small Acadian planters,
Who had been summoned all to the house of Basil¹⁰¹⁰
the herdsman.

Merry the meeting was of ancient comrades and neighbors:
 Friend clasped friend in his arms; and they who before were as strangers, Meeting in exile, became straightway as friends to each other,
 Drawn by the gentle bond of a common country
 together.
 But in the neighboring hall a strain of music, proceeding ¹⁰¹⁵
 From the accordant strings of Michael's melodious
 fiddle,
 Broke up all further speech. Away, like children delighted,
 All things forgotten beside, they gave themselves to the maddening Whirl of the dizzy dance as it swept and swayed to the music, Dreamlike, with beaming eyes and the rush of fluttering garments. ¹⁰²⁰

Meanwhile, apart, at the head of the hall, the priest and the herdsman
 Sat, conversing together of past and present and future;
 While Evangeline stood like one entranced, for within her Olden memories rose, and loud in the midst of the music
 Heard she the sound of the sea, and an irrepressible sadness ¹⁰²⁵
 Came o'er her heart, and unseen she stole forth into the garden.

Beautif
 the Tipping
 the Fell he gle Like th
 de Nearer
 of Poured
 an Unto t
 Ca Fuller
 sh
 Hung
 m Seeme
 in
 As, th
 of Passed
 le Silent
 Gleam
 n
 Over h
 h Shone
 a Save v
 th

Beautiful was the night. Behind the black wall of the forest, Tipping its summit with silver, arose the moon. On the river
Fell here and there through the branches a tremulous gleam of the moonlight, Like the sweet thoughts of love on a darkened and ¹⁰⁸⁰ devious spirit.
Nearer and round about her, the manifold flowers
of the garden
Poured out their souls in odors, that were their prayers and confessions
Unto the night, as it went its way, like a silent Carthusian.
Fuller of fragrance than they, and as heavy with shadows and night-dews, Hung the heart of the maiden. The calm and the ¹⁰⁸⁵ magical moonlight Seemed to inundate her soul with indefinable longings,
As, through the garden gate, and beneath the shade of the oak-trees, Passed she along the path to the edge of the measure-less prairie.
Silent it lay, with a silvery haze upon it, and fire-flies Gleaming and floating away in mingled and infinite ¹⁰⁹⁰ numbers.
Over her head the stars, the thoughts of God in the heavens,
Shone on the eyes of man, who had ceased to marvel and worship, Save when a blazing comet was seen on the walls of that temple,

As if a hand had appeared and written upon them,
 "Upharsin."
 And the soul of the maiden, between the stars and the fire-flies,¹⁰⁴⁶ Wandered alone, and she cried, "O Gabriel! O my beloved!
 Art thou so near unto me, and yet I cannot behold thee?
 Art thou so near unto me, and yet thy voice does not reach me?
 Ah! how often thy feet have trod this path to the prairie!
 Ah! how often thine eyes have looked on the woodlands around me!¹⁰⁵⁰
 Ah! how often beneath this oak, returning from labor, Thou hast lain down to rest, and to dream of me in thy slumbers!
 When shall these eyes behold, these arms be folded about thee?"
 Loud and sudden and near the note of a whippoorwill
 sounded
 Like a flute in the woods; and anon, through the neighboring thickets,¹⁰⁵⁵ Farther and farther away it floated and dropped into silence.
 "Patience!" whispered the oaks from oracular caverns of darkness;
 And, from the moonlit meadow, a sigh responded,
 "To-morrow!"
 Bright rose the sun next day; and all the flowers of the garden

Bathed
 his With th
 of "Farew
 sh
 "See th
 fas
 And, t
 br
 "Farew
 Ba Down t
 we Thus h
 sh Swiftly
 sp
 Blown
 de
 Not th
 ce Found ri Nor, a
 an Rumo
 d Till, a Wear
 g
 That
 c

Bathed his shining feet with their tears, and anointed his tresses¹⁰⁶⁰
With the delicious balm that they bore in their vases of crystal.
"Farewell!" said the priest, as he stood at the shadowy threshold;
"See that you bring us the Prodigal Son from his fasting and famine, And, too, the Foolish Virgin, who slept when the bridegroom was coming."
"Farewell!" answered the maiden, and, smiling, with¹⁰⁶⁵ Basil descended Down to the river's brink, where the boatmen already were waiting.
Thus beginning their journey with morning, and sunshine, and gladness, Swiftly they followed the flight of him who was speeding before them, Blown by the blast of fate like a dead leaf over the desert.
Not that day, nor the next, nor yet the day that suc-¹⁰⁷⁰
ceeded,
Found they trace of his course, in lake or forest or
river,
Nor, after many days, had they found him; but vague and uncertain Rumors alone were their guides through a wild and desolate country;
Till, at the little inn of the Spanish town of Adayes, Wearied and worn, they alighted, and learned from the garrulous landlord¹⁰⁷⁵
That on the day before, with horses and guides and companions,

Gabriel left the village, and took the road of the prairies.

NINTH READING.

Far in the West there lies a desert land, where the mountains Lift, through perpetual snows, their lofty and luminous summits.
 Down from their jagged, deep ravines, where the gorge, like a gateway,¹⁰⁸⁰ Opens a passage rude to the wheels of the emigrant's wagon, Westward the Oregon flows and the Walleway and Owyhee.
 Eastward, with devious course, among the Wind-rivre Mountains, Through the Sweet-water Valley precipitate leaps the Nebraska;
 And to the south, from Fontaine-qui-bout and the Spanish sierras,¹⁰⁸⁵ Fretted with sands and rocks, and swept by the wind of the desert, Numberless torrents, with ceaseless sound, descend to the ocean,
 Like the great chords of a harp, in loud and solemn vibrations.
 Spreading between these streams are the wondrous, beautiful prairies, Billowy bays of grass ever rolling in shadow and sunshine,¹⁰⁹⁰ Bright with luxuriant clusters of roses and purple amorphas.

Over th
 an Over th
 les Fires th wi
 Over th
 ch Stainin
 rib Circles
 tu Like th
 in
 By inv
 Here a sa Here a ru And th
 th Climb
 th
 And o
 he Like t
 th Into M Gabrie
 be

Over them wandered the buffalo herds, and the elk, and the roebuck;

Over them wandered the wolves, and herds of riderless horses;

Fires that blast and blight, and winds that are weary with travel;

Over them wander the scattered tribes of Ishmael's children,¹⁰⁸⁶

Staining the desert with blood; and above their terrible war-trails

Circles and sails aloft, on pinions majestic, the vulture,

Like the implacable soul of a chieftain slaughtered in battle,

By invisible stairs ascending and scaling the heavens.

Here and there rise smokes from the camps of these savage marauders;¹¹⁰⁰

Here and there rise groves from the margins of swift-running rivers;

And the grim, taciturn bear, the anchorite monk of the desert,

Climbs down their dark ravines to dig for roots by the brook-side,

And over all is the sky, the clear and crystalline
heaven,

Like the protecting hand of God inverted above them.¹¹⁰⁶

Into this wonderful land, at the base of the Ozark Mountains,

Gabriel far had entered, with hunters and trappers behind him.

Day after day, with their Indian guides, the maiden and Basil Followed his flying steps, and thought each day to o'ertake him.
 Sometimes they saw, or thought they saw, the smoke¹¹¹⁰ of his camp-fire Rise in the morning air from the distant plain; but at nightfall,
 When they had reached the place, they found only embers and ashes.
 And, though their hearts were sad at times and their bodies were weary, Hope still guided them on, as the magic Fata Morgana Showed them her lakes of light, that retreated and¹¹¹⁵ vanished before them.

Once, as they sat by their evening fire, there silently entered
 Into the little camp an Indian woman, whose features Wore deep traces of sorrow, and patience as great as her sorrow.
 She was a Shawnee woman returning home to her people,
 From the far-off hunting-grounds of the cruel¹¹²⁰ Camanches,
 Where her Canadian husband, a coureur-des-bois, had been murdered.
 Touched were their hearts at her story, and warmest and friendliest welcome Gave they, the words of cheer, and she sat and feasted among them

On the en
 But wh
 co Worn
 de Stretch
 th Mashe
 w Then re Slowly
 In All the
 an Much
 an Haples
 di Moved
 co Yet in w
 She in Mute v
 ha Still v
 h Passed
 th Mowis
 a

the maiden each day to the smoke plain; but found only s and their Fata Morreated and ere silently
ose features as great as ome to her the cruel
eur-des-bois, nd warmest she sat and

On the buffalo-meat and the venison cooked on the embers.
But when their meal was done, and Basil and all his companions,
Worn with the long day's march and the chase of the deer and the bison, Stretched themselves on the ground, and slept where the quivering fire-light flashed on their swarthy cheeks, and their forms wrapped up in their blankets, Then at the door of Evangeline's tent she sat and repeated
Slowly, with soft, low voice, and the charm of her Indian accent,
All the tale of her love, with its pleasures, and pains,
and reverses.
Much Evangeline wept at the tale, and to know that another
Hapless heart like her own had loved and had been disappointed.
Moved to the depths of her soul by pity and woman's compassion,
Yet in her sorrow pleased that one who had suffered was near her,
She in turn related her love and all its disasters.
Mute with wonder the Shawnee sat, and when she had ended
Still was mute; but at length, as if a mysterious horror
Passed through her brain, she spake, and repeated the tale of the Mowis; Mowis, the bridegroom of snow, who won and wedded a maiden.

But, when the morning came, arose and passed from the wigwam, Fading and melting away and dissolving into the sunshine, Till she beheld him no more, though she followed far into the forest.
 Then, in those sweet, low tones, that seemed like a weird incantation, Told she the tale of the fair Lilinau, who was wooed by a phantom, ¹¹⁴⁵
 That, through the pines o'er her father's lodge, in the hush of the twilight, Breathed like the evening wind, and whispered love to the maiden, Till she followed his green and waving plume through
 the forest,
 And nevermore returned, nor was seen again by her people.
 Silent with wonder and strange surprise, Evangeline ¹¹⁵⁰ listened To the soft flow of her magical words, till the region around her Seemed like enchanted ground, and her swarthy guest the enchantress.
 Slowly over the tops of the Ozark Mountains the moon rose, Lighting the little tent, and with a mysterious splendor
 Touching the sombre leaves, and embracing and ¹¹⁵⁵ filling the woodland.
 With a delicious sound the brook rushed by, and the branches

Swayed
 whi Filled w hea Subtile
 As the o
 the
 It was n spin Seemed
 mo
 That, li pha
 With th
 pha Early u
 the Said, a slo Dwells
 the Much h
 an Loud la as Then, v
 an
 "Let u aw Thither
 of
 Just as vo

Swayed and sighed overhead in scarcely audible whispers.

Filled with the thoughts of love was Evangeline's heart, but a secret,

Subtile sense crept in of pain and indefinite terror, As the cold, poisonous snake creeps into the nest of the swallow. ¹¹⁶⁰

It was no earthly fear. A breath from the region of spirits

Seemed to float in the air of night; and she felt for a moment

That, like the Indian maid, she, too, was pursuing a phantom.

With this thought she slept, and the fear and the phantom had vanished.

Early upon the morrow the march was resumed, and the Shawnee ¹¹⁶⁵

Said, as they journeyed along,—“On the western slope of these mountains

Dwells in his little village the Black Robe chief of the Mission.

Much he teaches the people, and tells them of Mary and Jesus;

Loud laugh their hearts with joy, and weep with pain, as they hear him.”

Then, with a sudden and secret emotion, Evangeline answered, ¹¹⁷⁰

“Let us go to the Mission, for there good tidings await us!”

Thither they turned their steeds; and behind a spur of the mountains,

Just as the sun went down, they heard a murmur of voices,

And in a meadow green and broad, by the bank of a
 river,
 Saw the tents of the Christians, the tents of the Jesuit Mission. ¹¹⁷⁵ Under a towering oak, that stood in the midst of the village, Knelt the Black Robe chief with his children. A crucifix fastened High on the trunk of the tree, and overshadowed by grapevines, Looked with its agonized face on the multitude kneeling beneath it.
 This was their rural chapel. Aloft, through the intricate arches ¹¹⁸⁰
 Of its aerial roof, arose the chant of their vespers, Mingling its notes with the soft susurrus and sighs of the branches.
 Silent, with heads uncovered, the travellers, nearer approaching, Knelt on the swarded floor, and joined in the evening devotions.
 But when the service was done, and the benediction ¹¹⁸⁵ had fallen Forth from the hands of the priest, like seed from the hands of the sower, Slowly the reverend man advanced to the strangers,
 and bade them Welcome; and when they replied, he smiled with benignant expression, Hearing the homelike sounds of his mother-tongue in the forest,
 And with words of kindness conducted them into his wigwam. ¹¹⁹⁰

There
 ca Feaster
 of Soon w ni
 "Not
 se On thi pe Told m
 hi Soft w ac
 But on
 th Fall in de
 "Far t
 "
 When M
 Then
 su
 "Let af
 So see
 th Mount
 an Home
 th

There upon mats and skins they reposed, and on cakes of the maize-ear

Feasted, and slaked their thirst from the water-gourd of the teacher.

Soon was their story told; and the priest with solemnity answered:—

“Not six suns have risen and set since Gabriel, seated

On this mat by my side, where now the maiden reposes,¹¹⁹⁸

Told me the same sad tale; then arose and continued his journey!”

Soft was the voice of the priest, and he spake with an accent of kindness;

But on Evangeline's heart fell his words as in winter the snow-flakes

Fall into some lone nest from which the birds have departed.

“Far to the north he has gone,” continued the priest; “but in autumn,¹²⁰⁰

When the chase is done, will return again to the Mission.”

Then Evangeline said, and her voice was meek and submissive,

“Let me remain with thee, for my soul is sad and afflicted.”

So seemed it wise and well unto all; and betimes on the morrow,

Mounting his Mexican steed, with his Indian guides and companions,¹²⁰⁵

Homeward Basil returned, and Evangeline stayed at the Mission.

Slowly, slowly, slowly the days succeeded each other,— Days and weeks and months; and the fields of maize that were springing Green from the ground when a stranger she came,
 now waving about her,
 Lifted their slender shafts, with leaves interlacing, and forming ¹²¹⁰ Cloisters for mendicant crows and granaries pillaged by squirrels.
 Then in the golden weather the maize was husked, and the maidens Blushed at each blood-red ear, for that betokened a lover,
 But at the crooked laughed, and called it a thief in the corn-field.
 Even the blood-red ear to Evangeline brought not ¹²¹⁵ her lover.
 "Patience!" the priest would say; "have faith, and thy prayer will be answered!
 Look at this vigorous plant that lifts its head from the meadow, See how its leaves are turned to the north, as true as the magnet;
 This is the compass-flower, that the finger of God has planted
 Here in the houseless wild, to direct the traveller's ¹²²⁰ journey Over the sea-like, pathless, limitless waste of the desert.
 Such in the soul of man is faith. The blossoms of passion,

Gay an fr
 But th
 oc Only t
 af
 Crown
 th
 So c y Bloss
 ro
 Sound
 ca
 But on
 w Sweet
 se Far to fo Gabrie
 F
 And,
 S Sayin
 M
 W
 n
 She h
 g Foun
 r

Gay and luxuriant flowers, are brighter and fuller of fragrance,
But they beguile us, and lead us astray, and their odor is deadly.
Only this humble plant can guide us here, and hereafter¹²²⁵
Crown us with asphodel flowers, that are wet with the dews of nepenthe."

So came the autumn, and passed, and the winter—yet Gabriel came not; Blossomed the opening spring, and the notes of the robin and bluebird Sounded sweet upon wold and in wood, yet Gabriel came not.
But on the breath of the summer winds a rumor was wafted¹²³⁰
Sweeter than the song of bird, or hue or odor of blossom.
Far to the north and east, it is said, in the Michigan forests, Gabriel had his lodge by the banks of the Saginaw River.
And, with returning guides, that sought the lakes of St. Lawrence, Saying a sad farewell, Evangeline went from the¹²³⁵ Mission.
When over weary ways, by long and perilous marches,
She had attained at length the depths of the Michigan forests, Found she the hunter's lodge deserted and fallen to ruin!

Thus did the long sad years glide on, and in seasons and places Divers and distant far was seen the wandering maiden;—
 Now in the Tents of Grace of the meek Moravian Missions, Now in the noisy camps and the battle-fields of the army,
 Now in secluded hamlets, in towns and populous cities.
 Like a phantom she came, and passed away unremembered.
 Fair was she and young, when in hope began the long journey;
 Faded was she and old, when in disappointment it ended.
 Each succeeding year stole something away from her beauty, Leaving behind it, broader and deeper, the gloom and the shadow.
 Then there appeared and spread faint streaks of gray o'er her forehead, Dawn of another life, that broke o'er her earthly horizon,
 As in the eastern sky the first faint streaks of the morning.

TENTH READING.

In that delightful land which is washed by the Delaware's waters, Guarding in sylvan shades the name of Penn the apostle,

Stands
 he There a ble
 And th
 the
 As if ha
 There
 an Findin
 co
 There
 de Saw at an Someth
 of Someth
 lo
 And h
 th
 For it Where si
 So, wh
 d Endec
 p Thith
 th
 As fr
 n

Stands on the banks of its beautiful stream the city he founded.
 There all the air is balm, and the peach is the emblem of beauty.¹²⁶⁵
 And the streets still reecho the names of the trees of
 the forest,
 As if they fain would appease the Dryads whose haunts they molested.
 There from the troubled sea had Evangeline landed,
 an exile,
 Finding among the children of Penn a home and a country.
 There old Rene Leblanc had died; and when he departed,¹²⁶⁶
 Saw at his side only one of all his hundred descendants.
 Something at least there was in the friendly streets of the city,
 Something that spake to her heart, and made her no longer a stranger;
 And her ear was pleased with the Thee and Thou of the Quakers,
 For it recalled the past, the old Acadian country,¹²⁶⁷ Where all men were equal, and all were brothers and sisters.
 So, when the fruitless search, the disappointed endeavor, Ended, to recommence no more upon earth, uncomplainingly;
 Thither, as leaves to the light, were turned her thoughts and her footsteps.
 As from a mountain's top the rainy mists of the morning¹²⁷⁰

Roll away, and afar we behold the landscape below us, Sun-illumined, with shining rivers and cities and hamlets,
 So fell the mists from her mind, and she saw the world far below her, Dark no longer, but all illumined with love; and the pathway
 Which she had climbed so far, lying smooth and fair in the distance. ¹²⁷⁵ Gabriel was not forgotten. Within her heart was his image,
 Clothed in the beauty of love and youth, as last she beheld him, Only more beautiful made by his deathlike silence and absence.
 Into her thoughts of him time entered not, for it was not.
 Over him years had no power; he was not changed, but transfigured; ¹²⁸⁰
 He had become to her heart as one who is dead, and not absent;
 Patience and abnegation of self, and devotion to others, This was the lesson a life of trial and sorrow had taught her.
 So was her love diffused, but, like to some odorous spices, Suffered no waste nor loss, though filling the air with aroma. ¹²⁸⁵
 Other hope had she none, nor wish in life, but to follow, Meekly with reverent steps, the sacred feet of her Saviour.

Thus m freq Lonely
 the Where
 the Where neg Night a wat Loud, th
 the High at tap Day aft
 thr Plodded
 for Met he wat Then
 city Presage
 wil Darken
 the
 And, a Se Flooding
 in So deat
 gin

Thus many years she lived as a Sister of Mercy;
 frequenting Lonely and wretched roofs in the crowded lanes of the city, Where distress and want concealed themselves from the sunlight,
 Where disease and sorrow in garrets languished neglected.
 Night after night when the world was asleep, as the watchman repeated Loud, through the gusty streets, that all was well in the city,
 High at some lonely window he saw the light of her taper.
 Day after day, in the gray of the dawn, as slow through the suburbs Plodded the German farmer, with flowers and fruits for the market, Met he that meek, pale face, returning home from its watchings.

Then it came to pass that a pestilence fell on the city, Presaged by wondrous signs, and mostly by flocks of wild pigeons, Darkening the sun in their flight, with naught in their craws but an acorn.
 And, as the tides of the sea arise in the month of September, Flooding some silver stream, till it spreads to a lake in the meadow,
 So death flooded life, and, o'erflowing its natural margin,

Spread to a brackish lake the silver stream of existence.
 Wealth had no power to bribe, nor beauty to charm,
 the oppressor;
 But all perished alike beneath the scourge of his anger;—
 Only, alas! the poor, who had neither friends nor attendants, Crept away to die in the almshouse, home of the homeless.
 Then in the suburbs it stood, in the midst of meadows and woodlands;—
 Now the city surrounds it; but still, with its gateway and wicket Meek, in the midst of splendor, its humble walls seem to echo Softly the words of the Lord:—"The poor ye always have with you."
 Thither, by night and by day, came the Sister of Mercy. The dying Looked up into her face, and thought, indeed, to behold there Gleams of celestial light encircle her forehead with splendor,
 Such as the artist paints o'er the brows of saints and apostles,
 Or such as hangs by night o'er a city seen at a distance.
 Unto their eyes it seemed the lamps of the city celestial,
 Into whose shining gates erelong their spirits would enter.

Thus
 ser Wending
 al Sweet o
 the
 And sh
 an
 That th
 gr
 Then,
 co Distant be While,
 we Sounds
 th Soft as he Someth
 en
 And, v be Noisel
 an Moist
 in Closin
 th
 Where
 b Many

Thus, on a Sabbath morn, through the streets, deserted and silent,¹⁸²⁰ Wending her quiet way, she entered the door of the almshouse.
Sweet on the summer air was the odor of flowers in the garden,
And she paused on her way to gather the fairest
among them,
That the dying once more might rejoice in their fragrance and beauty.
Then, as she mounted the stairs to the corridors,¹⁸²⁵ cooled by the east wind, Distant and soft on her ear fell the chimes from the belfry of Christ Church, While, intermingled with these, across the meadows were wafted Sounds of psalms, that were sung by the Swedes in their church at Wicaco.
Soft as descending wings fell the calm of the hour on her spirit; Something within her said, "At length thy trials are ended;"¹⁸³⁰
And, with light in her looks, she entered the chambers of sickness.
Noiselessly moved about the assiduous, careful attendants, Moistening the feverish lip, and the aching brow, and in silence
Closing the sightless eyes of the dead, and concealing their faces, Where on their pallets they lay, like drifts of snow by the roadside.¹⁸³⁵
Many a languid head, upraised as Evangeline entered,

Turned on its pillow of pain to gaze while she passed, for her presence Fell on their hearts like a ray of the sun on the walls of a prison.
 And, as she looked around, she saw how Death the consoler, Laying his hand upon many a heart, had healed it forever.¹³⁴⁰
 Many familiar forms had disappeared in the night
 time;
 Vacant their places were, or filled already by strangers.

Suddenly, as if arrested, by fear or a feeling of wonder,
 Still she stood, with her colorless lips apart, while a shudder Ran through her frame, and, forgotten, the flowerets¹³⁴⁵ dropped from her fingers, And from her eyes and cheeks the light and bloom
 of the morning.
 Then there escaped from her lips a cry of such terrible anguish,
 That the dying heard it, and started up from their pillows.
 On the pallet before her was stretched the form of an old man.
 Long, and thin, and gray were the locks that shaded¹³⁵⁰
 his temples;
 But, as he lay in the morning light, his face for a moment
 Seemed to assume once more the forms of its earlier manhood;

So are v
 dyi Hot an fev
 As if spr That t
 pas Motion ex Seemed
 the Darkne
 sin Then t
 rev Heard
 su Whisp lik
 "Gabri
 Then h
 his Green
 the Village
 un
 As in t vis Tears
 ey Varish
 his

So are wont to be changed the faces of those who are dying.

Hot and red on his lips still burned the flush of the fever,

As if life, like the Hebrew, with blood had besprinkled its portals,¹⁸³⁵

That the Angel of Death might see the sign, and pass over.

Motionless, senseless, dying, he lay, and his spirit exhausted

Seemed to be sinking down through infinite depths in the darkness, Darkness of slumber and death, forever sinking and sinking.

Then through those realms of shade, in multiplied reverberations,¹⁸⁹⁰

Heard he that cry of pain, and through the hush that succeeded

Whispered a gentle voice, in accents tender and saint-like,

"Gabriel! O my beloved!" and died away into silence.

Then he beheld, in a dream, once more the home of his childhood;

Green Acadian meadows, with sylvan rivers among them,¹⁸⁶⁵

Village, and mountain, and woodlands; and, walking under their shadow,

As in the days of her youth, Evangeline rose in his vision.

Tears came into his eyes; and as slowly he lifted his eyelids,

Vanished the vision away, but Evangeline knelt by his bedside.

Vainly he strove to whisper her name, for the accents unuttered¹⁸⁷⁰
 Died on his lips, and their motion revealed what his tongue would have spoken.
 Vainly he strove to rise; and Evangeline, kneeling beside him,
 Kissed his dying lips, and laid his head on her bosom.
 Sweet was the light of his eyes; but it suddenly sank into darkness,
 As when a lamp is blown out by a gust of wind at a casement.¹⁸⁷⁰

All was ended now, the hope, and the fear, and the
 sorrow,
 All the aching of heart, the restless, unsatisfied longing,
 All the dull, deep pain, and constant anguish of patience!
 And, as she pressed once more the lifeless head to her bosom, Meekly she bowed her own, and murmured, "Father, I thank thee!"¹⁸⁸⁰

Still stands the forest primeval; but far away from its shadow, Side by side, in their nameless graves, the lovers are sleeping.
 Under the humble walls of the little Catholic churchyard,
 In the heart of the city, they lie, unknown and unnoticed.
 Daily the tides of life go ebbing and flowing beside them,¹⁸⁸⁵

Thousa
 res Thousa
 ar Thousa
 fro Thousa
 th
 Still
 sh Dwells
 lar
 Only At Linger ex Wande bo
 In the
 sti Maiden ki
 And by While
 bo Speaks
 of

Thousands of throbbing hearts, where theirs are at rest and forever,
Thousands of aching brains, where theirs no longer are busy,
Thousands of toiling hands, where theirs have ceased from their labors, Thousands of weary feet, where theirs have completed their journey!

Still stands the forest primeval; but under the shade of its branches Dwells another race, with other customs and language.
Only along the shore of the mournful and misty Atlantic Linger a few Acadian peasants, whose fathers from exile Wandered back to their native land to die in its bosom.
In the fisherman's cot the wheel and the loom are still busy; Maidens still wear their Norman caps and their kirtles of homespun,
And by the evening fire repeat Evangeline's story, While from its rocky caverns the deep-voiced, neighboring ocean Speaks, and in accents disconsolate answers the wail
of the forest.

T

You

Mu

Who

find sons

the l

The

the

how turn in ce

educ

of m

each

less

The

work

sket

for s ter t

have

spec

Th

Bo

Dece

May

tain

My

aary

the ot

and

recom

also is ever s

very t

A. I

The Plan Books.

FOR PRIMARY AND INTERMEDIATE GRADES.

Ten Guides or Sets of Plans. One for each month in the school year. Nothing to compare with them ever issued. A favorite with progressive teachers in all parts of the country.

Your Work Must be Planned

No school work can be well done that is not well planned. What to plan and how to plan are problems every teacher is now working out. What material to use for the different seasons of the year and where to find this material, are questions all are asking. How to correlate these lessons and find suggestions which will enable teachers to use this material to the best advantage when found, all wish to know.

The Purpose of the Plan Books

They aim, as far as possible, to supply the teacher's needs in this direction; to assist the teacher in making out her daily plans; to show how school work may be correlated; to enable her, from its references, to turn at once to the needed book for the appropriate song or story to be used in connection with the day's lessons; to provide seat work which will be of educational value, and to save money spent by the teacher in the purchase of many books for the sake of a very little which may be used in school work.

The PLAN BOOK has been issued in ten numbers or volumes, one for each month of the school year, bringing to hand the material for each day's lessons and plans.

The Contents

consists of science or nature lessons, black-board reading lessons, drawing lessons, seat work, related songs, poems, stories and gems for literature work, sketches of authors, studies of children of other lands, and programmes for special days or national holidays.

Each number has 112 large pages, and is the best, most practical matter to be had for the money. Issues such as December and February have several half-tone engravings. Each issue has many good pictures and special songs.

PRICE FOR ANY MONTH, 25 CENTS.

THE 10 MONTHS, SEPTEMBER TO JUNE, INCLUSIVE, $2.00.

Bound Volumes AUTUMN—September, October, November, 336 pages, flexible cloth, $1.00. WINTER—December, January, February, 336 pages, $1.00. SPRING—March, April, May, June, 448 pages, $1.00. The three volumes for $2.50. Total set contains 1,120 pages.

Send for a copy and you will want all of them.

CHICAGO, January 10, 1898.

My Dear Sir—I have received the January PLAN BOOK. It is in keeping with the others. I most cordially approve of it, and shall take the first opportunity to recommend it to my teachers. I may say also it is the first thing of the kind I have ever seen which I can fully approve. Yours very truly,

ORVILLE T. BRIGHT,
Co. Supt., Cook Co., Ill.

MARSHALL, MICH.

Our teachers are enthusiastic in praise of the PLAN BOOKS. Quite a number have a full set, and the general expression is, "The best thing out." You deserve the thanks not only of the primary teachers, but of all teachers, for publishing these books.

H. F. LOHN, Supt. of Schools.

A. FLANAGAN, . . . 267 WABASH AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILL.

THE STORY OF LAFAYETTE.

FOR INTERMEDIATE GRADES.

First History The first real attempt to give the history of this remarkable man and his achievements in story form, suited to the taste and ability of pupils of the third and fourth grades.

The Author a Teacher The author is a teacher of wide experience, thorough scholarship and literary ability, who has brought all these elements to bear in the writing of the most successful biographical story yet published.

Interest in Lafayette The wide-spread interest in Lafayette at this time taken in connection with the intense patriotic feeling recently awakened, will give wise direction to much of that feeling, and make plain to the youth the awful price of our liberties, as well as show them how much men of high motives, noble character and pure patriotism have contributed and still contribute toward the principles of liberty.

Credible and Charming Story The author has told a truthful story in a charming way, embodying the fruit of extensive reading and research in a condensed form. The historic facts are absolutely reliable, and the story is more fascinating than fiction, while the literary finish is all that could be desired. The illustrations are fine and add to the value of the book in every way.

Lafayette the Hero In fact, Lafayette the man, Lafayette the warrior, are the same as Lafayette, the heroic and chivalric friend of the peerless Washington. The story is timely, interesting, inspiring, well-told and well adapted to use as a supplementary reader or library book.

Poems of 1824, Letters, etc. It contains the poems spoken by the children of New York, Massachusetts and Connecticut in 1824, when Lafayette revisited America, besides extracts from many original documents, such as letters, diaries, etc., making it a mine of information and a great time-saver to the teacher and pupil. All this material is so deftly woven into the story as to make the past seem present.

Educational Value The educational value of this remarkable book is beyond computation, and it will do much to make many American Lafayettes who will fight the great battles for human liberty in the twentieth century.

Price: Paper, 112 pp., 20c.; Cloth, 30c.

A. FLANAGAN,

CHICAGO

markable ability of

gh schol-these ele-story yet

e taken in ntly awake plain to ow much Contributed

ing way.
earch in a the story that could
of the book

or, are the end of the g, well-told

New York,
afayette rents, such as great time-woven into

e is beyond y American the twen-

GAGO

