Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, I received this morning a telegram from the British Ambassador, Mr. Bryce, informing us that he had sent the treaty to the colonial office for transmission to this government in the ordinary routine, but that in the meantime, if we desired, he would have it sent directly to us. I answered in the affirmative.

MR. WILLIAM MACKENZIE.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I notice an item in the Toronto 'Globe' headed 'A Diplomatic Matter' announcing that Mr. William Mackenzie, one of the press gallery representatives, has been appointed by the First Minister to establish a new central bureau for handling the correspondence relating to imperial and foreign affairs. The 'Globe' goes on to say that it will be his duty to keep the correspondence in this connection properly centralized and attended to in an adequate and diplomatic manner. Then it mentions that there are some treaties at present under way, in connection with which Mr. Mackenzie will be found very useful. What are the duties and functions of this diplomat, if I may properly call him so? Is he invested with diplomatic functions? Is this a new office? Will he come under the Civil Service Act? How will his salary be paid? Under what department is he to carry on the work ? At present I understand the foreign correspondence is carried on through the Department of the Secretary of State or the Prime Minister's Department. Are these two to be combined in this new office? Is the work now being done by the Secretary of State and the First Minister to be centered in one individual and under what authority will he come?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In order to answer more categorically I shall to-morrow lay before the House the order in council which was passed appointing Mr. Mackenzie. In the meantime I may say that he has been appointed a clerk in the office of the Privy Council. His duties will be to classify and keep track of the correspondence, which is now accumulating very fast, from the imperial authorities and colonial and foreign governments. He will have no functions other than those of a clerk and is to be under the orders of the head of the department. His salary will be $2,800 per year, which will involve an appropriation of only $800 by this parliament, because the salary of Mr. Foley, who has been promoted to be Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, will be available for that purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not ask the question with any view of objecting to the individual, because, so far as I know, he is a suitable man for the position.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The question is quite proper.

ACCIDENT ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to a letter I have received regarding an accident on the Intercolonial Railway between St. Hyacinthe and Quebec, where there have been two accidents lately. The letter is as follows :

I lost a whole day, thanks entirely to the rotten state of the Intercolonial Railway which caused a bad accident to our train, but thanks to a merciful Providence no lives were lost. You ought to bring the matter to the notice of the minister. The line as it is now, is quite unfit to carry troops or in fact for any heavy traffic. Within two miles of the same place where the run off occurred last Thursday, where the line is perfectly level and so straight that you can see as far as the eye can reach, the weight of the engine caused the spikes in the absolutely rotten ties to give out and let the tender in between the rails. It caught the 90 pound rails and bent them up double. It rolled the baggage car and smashed the baggage and ditched all the rest on their side except the parlour car, which only had the front truck off, and the sleeping car behind. We examined the line carefully and there is no doubt that the accident occurred owing to the rotten ties and want of ballast. The track at that part is in the most disgraceful and unsafe condition.

Is it the intention of the minister to repair the line and has he heard anything about this accident?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I have heard about the accident and very much regret it, but the best conducted railways have their accidents, and as they are somewhat scarce on the Intercolonial Railway, when one does occur particular attention is drawn to it. The fact is that a part of that portion of the line is considered to have a roadbed equal to any on the continent of America. Just what the particular causes of that accident were I do not know. They are not only being inquired into, but the road has been repaired and the line is running, I presume, as usual. If my hon. friend will give me the name of the individual who has written him, I may be better able to judge the value of his complaint.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. When I make any statement in this House I assume the full responsibility, and my name will carry as much weight in this country as that of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham).

FLOODING AT STE. BARBE, HUNTINGDON.

Mr. R. N. WALSH (Huntingdon). Has the Minister of Railways received any report from his engineer with regard to the river St. Lawrence breaking through the embankment at Ste. Barbe in the county of Huntingdon and damaging a lot of property there? And has the government taken any action in the matter?

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot tell that personally I have received any such communication. I presume the chief engineer has, and if any damage has been done the matter will be attended to at once.

AGREEMENTS BETWEEN MUNICIPALITIES AND RAILWAYS.

Mr. HENDERSON. Some time ago I moved an amendment to the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company's charter providing that the company be penalized in the event of its failing to carry out certain agreements made between it and the municipalities. The Minister of Railways advised me not to press my amendment and promised that he would subsequently introduce a clause in the Railway Act which would compel a specific performance of these agreements. The session is passing away and I have heard nothing about the amendment. Has the minister forgotten it?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Bill has been introduced and explained and stands for a second reading.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have analysed that Bill and I do not find in it anything explicitly carrying out what the minister promised.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will find a clause there if he will refer to it.

TRENT CANAL—SURVEYS.

Mr. LENNOX. Has the minister had an opportunity of ascertaining when we may expect the report of the survey made between Georgian bay and Kempenfeldt bay in connection with the Trent valley waterway?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have that among my many other notes, but have been so busy to-day I did not get that far on the list.

ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES AT SOREL

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) is not in his place, but I would like to put a question which, perhaps, some of his colleagues will be good enough to convey to him. I wish to know if Mr. Gaudet, who was appointed to make an investigation into some irregularities in Sorel, has made a report. The gentleman has received his pay, and I should imagine that his report must be nearly ready, or ready. Perhaps the colleagues of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will call his attention to this point. It will facilitate the consideration of the estimates of the department.

THE WOOLLEN INDUSTRY.

Mr. C. L. OWEN (East Northumberland). I would like to ask the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if it is the intention of the government to come to the rescue of the woollen manufacturers in the near future with a specific duty?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am sorry to say that I cannot to-day give any specific answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Owen).

SUPPLY—IMMIGRATION.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding: That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply, and the proposed amendment of Mr. Monk thereto.

Mr. L. ROBITAILLE (Quebec County). Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned at six o'clock last evening, I was endeavouring to answer some of the arguments of the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. Wilbert McIntyre). I stated then that the arguments brought forward showing the development of the west are not entirely creditable to the system of bonusing immigrants. I stated that a majority of the people in at least a good portion of our western country were American citizens whose entry into our country was easy because of the contiguity of some of the American states to these portions of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I have here an article entitled 'Building a new nation,' and very cleverly written, which seems to corroborate the opinion I enunciated last night. It is a very lengthy article and I have no intention to force it all on the attention of hon. members, but there are certain passages that I desire to read. The author tells of a trip he made in 1901 to that western country and notes the changes which he found in a trip made in 1906. He says:

I travelled westward to the edge of the Rocky mountains and northward in Alberta through plains which, when I first visited them in 1901, were almost peopleless, but which are now thickly settled and more thoroughly American than the state of New York. I travelled through most of these regions in an immigrant car; talked with some who were seeking new homes, ate with them—in fact, inasmuch as I could, I became an immigrant myself, and tried to look at conditions and the country from the viewpoint of the thousands of Americans who are now flocking into the vast fertile regions of the Dominion. . . . . .

I could not have received a more vivid impression of the effects of the so-called 'American invasion of Canada,' than in this comparison of my first trip with my last. Four out of five of the homes that I looked upon were the homes of American farmers; the great majority of the people I met and talked with were Americans. For 1,000 miles westward from Winnipeg along the line of the Canadian Pacific the population of the country and towns to-day is, as I have said, more generally American than is that of the state of New York, and Alberta, especially from the border northward to Edmonton might be regarded as a typical American state.

It goes on to show that the west is so very much Americanized——

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Robitaille) allow me? The quotation he has read and his comments upon it would give one the impression that the province of Alberta is more American than the state of New York. Now it so happens that at the time this party visited the west, in the year 1906, the census of that province was taken. There can be no doubt, therefore, of the exact condition of affairs. The population of Alberta in 1906 was 185,412 people and the number of Americans was 43,251, or 23·3 per cent.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. Does the hon. member (Mr. Wilbert McIntyre) admit that there are 400,000 or 500,000 Americans in western Canada who have come in since 1901? The statistics——

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I can only say that the statistics are incorrect.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. What guarantee have I that the hon. gentleman's own figures are more correct than mine? It is a question of good faith. Following the main columns of this army of immigration back to their beginnings, the real reasons of its existence are soon discovered. The momentum is given at the source, and we find men pushing each other up the gangplanks of departing emigrant steamers to make their escape from incredible political and economic wrongs. There is another reason, based upon the first, but none the less potent. The traffic in ocean passages has reached a stage of fierce competition, unscrupulousness and even inhumanity, inconceivable to those not familiar with its details. Men who profit by the march of these millions of people have a drag-net out over continental Europe so fine in its meshes as to let no man, woman or child escape who has the price and the desire or need to go. Several cases of unscrupulousness have been brought to light. This summer, I met two families of French people who had come to Canada via London. One of these people had had some wealth which he had lost in certain mining ventures in Russia and he was coming to Canada to recuperate his lost fortune. He states that whilst in London, the immigration agent—a pretty foxy fellow—succeeded in learning what amount of money he had with him intended for investment in Canada, and, by a series of objections and delays, prevented him from getting on the steamer. The man was practically forced to stay in London for a period of at least three weeks in certain hotels recommended by the immigration men. I do not say these were directly immigration department officials, but booking agents. But it shows that the system affords opportunities for those who try to extract or extort money from intending immigrants on the other side of the water, and that these opportunities have been taken advantage of. It seems to me that it would be well for the government to have a close watch put upon such people through its own immigration officials, and to take every reasonable means to cause the bona fide immigrant to depend upon the immigration offices for information, for booking and even for steamship tickets, rather than leave them in the hands of these men who are but too eager to exploit them in every way. Also, a few days ago, we had what I may call the Doctor Dickey incident concerning which the following appears in a London despatch:

London, March 11.—The trial of Maikeal Lurkis, Charles Harnson and Arshay Atonia, charged with conspiring to defraud emigrants, began at Liverpool yesterday. N. Cockshutt watched the case on behalf of the Canadian government. When Atonia was arrested a large number of letters was found in his possession. Counsel said these letters showed that Atonia was on terms of very intimate relationship with the authorities who had to pass the emigrants on the other side. One of the letters found on him was from a man who described himself as Hugh L. Dickey, M.D., Halifax. A letter from Halifax, signed W. Dodds, said:

Your eleven people were all passed. Be a little more particular next time with Montreal cases. Do not let them make any signs whatever. If you describe something that they will wear it will be enough. I felt quite nervous when they all made signs with their hands on their ties.

This clipping shows that the immigration officials do not thoroughly enforce the regulations regarding newcomers when they disembark in Canadian ports. The proof of that is the fact that, in order to procure entry, they have only to put their two hands to their neckties, which is considered a sort of password. It shows further that these men are sent over by unscrupulous parties, probably the booking agents at the other end, in collusion with certain officials of the department who allow these undesirable elements to pass, and if there was no bonus given for each immigrant coming to this country these officials would not be so eager to force immigrants upon us. That bonus is an inducement to fraud and unscrupulousness, and it ought to be condemned on that ground.

Where do our immigrants come from? From the British isles. London absorbs into her mighty heart thousands of feeble human beings, talking a gibberish of tongues, and quickly becoming public charges. Last year I believe it was stated in this House that there were 1,200 immigration agents in the British isles. The other day certain people took offence at the remarks of my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) relative to the Salvation Army. Now I am free to say that the work which the Salvation Army has done in trying to elevate the depressed element of humanity is a most creditable one from a religious standpoint. But when we come to consider the class of people which the Salvation Army deal with we find that men who are broken down financially, men who are demoralized physically, morally and religiously, are brought into the barracks of the Salvation Army who try to do all in their power to make them good citizens. Moreover, we are told that there are certain political evils in England, such as Socialism and collectivism, which imperil the present order of things, not only the monarchy, but also the lords and the ruling classes. Naturally these ruling classes, being the moneyed people, are eager to foster any movement with their advice and patronage, and even with their financial assistance, which will diminish the number of these undesirable classes which the Salvation Army are taking away. The ruling class are all too eager to support the work of the Salvation Army in thrusting upon Canada some of the scum of the population. I do not say that all the English immigrants are undesirable, but I am speaking of the work which the Salvation Army is doing in taking hold of this low grade of people, and trying to elevate them in the scale of citizenship, and that is the class of people which the Salvation Army is sending over to Canada. We also receive immigrants from continental Europe, particularly from Italy, Austria-Hungary and Russia. These are countries where the majority of people are low in the social scale, and where the percentage of illiteracy is discreditable to the twentieth century. These people are directed to channels of emigration made easy by those seeking cargoes for their ships.

Now, Mr. Speaker, since it has been demonstrated that the bonus system has forced upon us a certain class of undesirable immigrants, what are the consequences that we have to contemplate? We find first of all an evil effect from a municipal standpoint. The Toronto, Winnipeg and Montreal newspapers report frequent attacks upon citizens Who are these sinister bandits, and what do they want? Look up the criminal records, and you will find that 95 per cent of the convicts are penniless immigrants who want to eat, and more especially to drink The charity organizations claim that there are thousands of people who lack the necessities of life. On Bleury street, Montreal, where a charitable institution is located, demands for help are made daily in the shape of food and fuel, In Winnipeg also if we are to believe newspaper reports, there is a large number of penniless and destitute people walking the streets, and armed attacks are made daily upon citizens. In Toronto matters are still worse. The 'Globe,' the 'World,' the 'Star,' the 'Mail,' and several other newspapers give us information regarding this class of people. It is not my intention to weary the House with statistics, but it may be well to give a concrete case where a too large number of immigrants have been forced upon the community. Several charitable organizations assembled in an extraordinary meeting at Mr. Goldwin Smith's residence, about the beginning of December, 1907, and adopted the following resolution :

1. That employees of labour are urged, in the name of fraternal spirit, to provide work for the greatest possible number, even if it were necessary to reduce every one's task to a half day's work—

2. That the municipal authorities are begged to give employment to the greatest possible number even if it is necessary to reduce the day's work to every one—

3. That for public works that have not been awarded, the city should exact from the contractors that they employ by day work people of all nationalities—

4. That all those who have projected work should endeavor to hasten their operations.

5. A delegation should wait upon the Board of Control asking to press the starting of projected public works—

6. That the government is requested to give without delay work on the Grand Trunk Pacific to as great a number as possible of immigrants—

7. That publicity be given that Toronto is congested with idlers, in order to prevent their increase in number—

8. That the Ontario government is requested to establish, without delay, an employment bureau—

I may also say that this memorandum, of which I have just given the substance to the House, shows what a burden upon local charities these immigrants have become, and what a tax they are upon citizens from a financial standpoint. I read the other day a very able article in the 'Globe,' covering about the same point I have been elucidating. The title of the article is 'Carefully selected immigrants.' The article deals with the economic aspect of the immigration question, and I will take the liberty of quoting a certain portion :

Indeed, the Canadian government have appointed over one hundred employment agents in the agricultural district of the province of Ontario, and are paying them out of public funds for the very purpose of obviating the necessity of a further influx to the large cities of those immigrants who claim that they are going on the land.

That is taken from a letter written by Mr. J. Obed Smith, Assistant Superintendent of Immigration for Canada in London, in reply to a gentleman named Hamilton, of the Church Army, and transmitting to him the new regulations which the government is trying to put into force to prevent the entry into Canada of immigrants thrust upon us by charitable institutions. To give the House an idea of how these people become a charge upon the community I will just glance for a moment at a report prepared by the House of Industry of Toronto in which it is stated that they have furnished relief to 2,387 families during last year of whom 484 were recorded as being native-born. If Toronto has to provide for the relief of 2,387 families how many others are there who are in need, but who have not made applicaion for assistance ? The report continues:

Despite the large arrivals of immigrants from southern Europe, comparatively few of them applied for assistance.

Another point that I wish to call the attention of the House to is one that has been brought forward by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, and it is one in regard to which the hon. Minister of the Interior has not given any answer. How can the government explain that from 1901 to 1906 the settlers reported by the department as having been located in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are 200,000 to 250,000 short of the number which the immigration returns are supposed to have shown? That is a point that the minister has not touched.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to the objection which can be raised to this forced immigration system from the provincial standpoint. The immigration policy, as carried out by this government, results in increasing the population of the western provinces and in enhancing the value of land retained by the railway companies as well as by companies of the stamp of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. It also increases the population of the province of Ontario who are supposed to take care of immigrants as soon as they arrive in the country and try to establish them on farms or secure positions for them in other walks of life. In Quebec, only a few years ago, we succeeded in getting one single agent appointed who was supposed, not to work for Quebec, but to try to augment the population of the eastern townships. I shall refer at greater length to this gentleman in a few moments. I do not enunciate this opinion in any unwarranted manner. A few days ago my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) enquired of the government to what religious denominations different people holding offices under the government belonged. If we could rely on our English friends generally sharing the sentiment which was expressed in reply to that question by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) we, in Quebec, would entertain no fears that our prestige would suffer as a result of the policy of the immigration branch of the Department of the Interior. The idea of the preponderance of any one race in Canada is contrary to the spirit of the constitution which was framed for the purpose of maintaining the equilibrium between the different races inhabiting this country. The question is brought up, not in a spirit of aggressiveness, but as a matter of self-defence, and it is a result of such racial appeals as that to which I shall now call the attention of the House. The Hon. Mr. Weir, who happens to hold an official position in the local government of Quebec, speaking on the 18th July, 1907, before a Protestant synod, described the English depopulation of the province of Quebec as a national peril and suggested the establishment of an organization which would prevent rural property from passing out of English hands. Protestant ministers would, he said, advise this organization of the departure of an English farmer in order that he might be replaced by one of the same nationality. This could only be effected by immigration. Why not, Mr. Weir asked, direct towards the province of Quebec, a portion of that large English immigration wave bound for the west. What was the effect of this speech? The first practical result of this suggested policy for the English population of the eastern townships was the nomination of Mr. E. W. Brewster, the only immigration agent who performs duties corresponding to those of the 199 agents in Ontario. That shows you how fairly Quebec has been treated on this immigration question. When we pay 40 per cent of the money that the government collect in revenue we ought, at least, to get our fair share of the expenditure not only in public works but with regard to this question of immigration the object of which, according to certain officials, seems to be to maintain the preponderance of one nationality. One and a half years' work by Mr. Brewster resulted in the location of about 1,500 immigrants in the eastern part of the province of Quebec, known as the eastern townships. That is the figure as given by the Minister of the Interior on April 15, 1907, in answer to an inquiry. The basic policy is to strengthen the British element. This policy has already borne its fruit in as much as within the space of one year it has added 16 English ridings to confederation. In fifteen years we, of the province of Quebec, shall form one-tenth of the whole population of this country, in twenty years this policy if carried out, will have caused the placing of 1,000,000 English immigrants in the northern part of Quebec, and in twenty-five years the English element will have conquered the eastern townships. Our premier himself sees no difficulty in admitting that in a quarter of a century Canada will have a population of 30,000,000. Sandwiched between the English of the far west, the English of the eastern provinces, between the Americans massed to the south of us and the English established in the north all along the Transcontinental route what influence will we have on the destinies of the nation? They say that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Let us put this into practice. Now is the time to act. To-morrow it may be too late. What effect has this undesirable immigration upon us from a national standpoint? It will be necessary to notice the influence of immigration on the growth of population and to follow the ethnic changes which are being wrought thereby. Equally important is it to observe the effect of immigration on the economic condition of the labouring classes in this country, whether it is made better or worse. In the same way it is advisable to study the influence of the newcomers on the ethical consciousness of the community, whether there is a gain or a loss to us. In short, we must set up our standard of what we desire this nation to be and then consider whether the policy we hitherto pursued in regard to immigration is calculated to maintain that standard or to endanger it. As to the character of the immigration I shall quote expressions of opinion from prominent Canadians, men who hold high position in the land and who can impartially view this question. I quote from Judge McMahon, who believes in securing immigrants that will be a credit to the country.

Mr. Justice McMahon, at the opening of the spring assizes yesterday, expressed his satisfaction that the duties of the grand jury would not be unusually onerous. But there was one matter which he brought to the jurymen's attention.

Dr. Clarke, superintendent of Toronto asylum, the judge said, stated recently: 'Of 362 admissions of lunatics last year 136 were foreign born, the majority recent arrivals. Those that the province will never get rid of amount to about 40. Each patient retained will cost the province $6,000.'

Sixty-five per cent of these weak-minded foreigners were afflicted with dementia praecox, the same form of insanity accredited to Harry K. Thaw. They were the failures sent from the old country by immigration companies to try and make good in Canada.'

The judge stated that the disease was usually contracted in early life and that 60 per cent of the cases became evident before the age of 25 years. 'We pay for immigration; then why not secure those who will be a credit to the country rather than a detriment to its progress?'

Here is another quotation from a newspaper:

M. Regimbal, assistant agent of immigration for the district of Montreal, left for Portland last evening having in his charge 21 English immigrants who came from the west and who are to be deported. One of these is a lunatic, and the others have refused to do any work, and so are sent back to their country.

I do not mean to have it inferred by these quotations that by any means the entire immigration from England is undesirable, but I read them simply as a basis for my statement that no matter from what country people come they should be of a class calculated to advance the interests of Canada. I quote from Mr. Justice Lavergne who was at one time a law partner of the right hon. the Prime Minister, and who said:

For the last year or so crime seems to have become epidemic among Italians of the lower classes. Men with the worst of records in the old country invade our shores and lead here a life of crime.

Mr. Bruce Smith, inspector of prisons for Ontario, in his last annual report to the government, says :

Although the year closes with the largest number that have been in confinement in the jails of Ontario within the past twenty years, this increase is not due to any increase in crime in the province, but is largely due to Canada, and especially Ontario, being made the dumping ground during the past year of some most undesirable immigrants. Every jail I have visited within the past six months has had among its prisoners persons who have been only a few months in this country. Some of them have spent most of their lives in English prisons. Several have admitted that they had been discharged by English magistrates on condition that they would emigrate to Canada. There must be something radically wrong with our immigration regulations that will permit such apparent neglect in the inspection of persons seeking and obtaining passage as immigrants to this country. The whole system of encouraging such people to seek a home in Canada is wrong, and the sooner the conditions complained of are recognized and changed the better.

These statements from men who are in a position to know show that undesirable immigrants are coming to our shores and that for the sake of gaining a few paltry dollars the immigrant agents are sending them here.

Let us look at this question from the economic standpoint. Economic well-being is a difficult thing for a nation to acquire, and once acquired is too precious to give up without a struggle—once lost it may require generations to attain again even if the economic conditions are favourable. The standard of living in this country should be jealously guarded, so that our working classes should not either consciously or unconsciously lose it. It may be lowered in either of two ways. Excessive immigration may overstock the labour market and reduce wages ; or immigrants accustomed to fewer of the comforts of life may supplant the native workman. In either case we have brought undue pressure to bear on the mass of the people and have forced them down to a lower level. We have substituted the lower for the higher and preferred that which is inferior. On this point I quote the following from the Toronto 'Globe' of April the 17th :

If there is a great demand for men in Toronto when the seductive steamship agent is talking to the intending emigrant in London, it is no assurance that there will be any demand when the same emigrant reaches this city. Such instances go to show how widely the impression has been spread abroad and accepted that Canada is a country in which the laws of political economy have no existence.

Now, let us look at the question from the electoral standpoint. The continued addition to our electorate of hundreds of thousands of persons who have had no training in self-government, who have other and quite different state of action—will this not tend to weaken our political capacity and self-reliance ? Will it not also effect the adjustment of our institutions to our people, an adjustment which is so necessary if the institutions are to work successfully ?

If the new beam of our political life have neither the aspirations which our ancestors cherished, nor the experience which we have cherished, will not the homogeneousness of our social organizations be seriously imperilled ? A free ballot which was safe in the hands of our intelligent and self-respecting democracy is no longer safe in those of an ignorant and degraded proletariat. Will these alien races rule at the ballot box ? Will they govern our great cities ? What will be their rule ? Will their be the dominant church life ? What will be their faith ? Will their children determine our social and industrial conditions ? What will be their ideals and standards ? We must answer for all this. These immigrants are our raw material out of which we make our to-morrow. Canada welcomes the self-supporting, intelligent and healthy foreigners ; but unfortunately for the peace and safety of well governed communities in this promising country of ours, a very large proportion of these now on the move cannot, even by courtesy or true sympathy, be placed under this classification. Patriotism, loyalty and other civic virtues are by the present immigration policy sinking to a low ebb. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk)—1. Because the premiums are paid to other parties than for those intended by the regulations ; 2. Because a bonus incites greed of graft and thereby has forced upon us undesirable immigrants which inevitably shall lower our standard of ideals. To these immigrants I would apply the words of the poet :

Canada, charge not thy fate to these;
The power is ours to mold them or to mar,
But freedom's voice, far down the centuries,
Shall sound our choice from blazing star to star.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford). Mr. Speaker, I have very much pleasure in supporting the resolution which has been brought forward by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). The question of immigration is one that is attracting and should receive more attention from this House and this country than probably any other question that can be discussed. When this House met in November last I took the earliest opportunity of placing on the Order Paper a resolution dealing with this very matter. As that resolution has not been and probably will not be again reached, I take this opportunity of making the few remarks which I otherwise would have made in closing the debate on that resolution.

The hon. Minister of the Interior the other day made the broad statement that there were ten men out of work in 1896 to one who is out of work in 1908 ; I think those were about his words. So far as my observation goes, if he had reversed that statement and said that there were ten out of work to-day for every one who was out of work in 1896, he would have been much nearer the mark. I think every hon. member of this House who has anything to do with labour will corroborate my statement. I deplore the fact of the hon. minister sending out broadcast the statement he made, when everybody knows that there are hundreds and thousands without employment in our towns and cities to-day. I have been found fault with because I have drawn attention to this state of affairs. There are two ways of meeting a difficulty : one is to say that it does not exist ; the other is to recognize it and endeavour to get a remedy for it. I have taken the latter course, but the hon. minister says no difficulty exists. It is true, the hon. Minister of the Interior and the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. Wilbert McIntyre) say that we are quite out of touch with western conditions, and that the immigration policy must entirely hinge on what the west wants. I think we might retort that these hon. gentlemen know very little about the requirements of the east if they make the statement that there is room in this country for many others seeking employment, and requiring to get work almost the day they land. The Minister of the Interior makes the statement that the bonus is doing a public good and has been adopted in order that we might have a selected class of immigrants. I do not find that it works that way at all. I think the minister, long before he became a minister, took the ground that the bonus was the means of bringing in those who were not desirable. That statement was made yesterday, and I did not hear the minister contradict it. Whether that is the case or not, in my opinion the offering of a bonus for immigrants is the most approved way of getting an undesirable class. There are other weaknesses in the immigration policy of the government, but none so great as the bonus. See how it works. A man who may be dissatisfied with his position in the country to which he owes his birth, or who may be out of work, makes up his mind to go abroad. He goes to a ticket office to make inquiries with regard to South Africa, Australia, the Argentine Republic, the West Indies or some other country, many or all of which are not offering a bonus at all. But the ticket agent, knowing that a bonus is offered by the Canadian government, at once sees an opportunity of turning an honest five dollars, and he endeavours to persuade the immigrant that Canada is the country to go to. The man may have felt that Canada was unsuitable for him, on account of climate or for some other reason, but he is deflected from the course he had intended to take by the ticket agent, and is induced to come to Canada. The minister will say : 'That is good policy ; I approve of that ; we are getting lots of people.' There are many other things to be taken into account in order to judge whether this great influx of immigrants is a public advantage. I can easily conceive of a situation in which a large immigration is a source of weakness rather than a source of strength especially if a large proportion of those we are getting belong to an undesirable class ; and that we are getting many of that class goes without saying—the fact is too well known. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Robitaille) has read a long list of pronouncements by judges and others. These men are not biassed, and yet they point out that we are receiving large numbers of the undesirable class, which is largely attributable to the bonus system.

I notice that some Liberal papers are taking the ground that people who oppose the bonus system do so because they do not understand it, they being under the impression that the immigrant gets the bonus, and not the booking agent. I think very few indeed are under that impression. That is simply drawing a red herring across the track. There might be a good deal said in favour of the poor immigrant getting the five dollars, because it would help him to pay his way for a little while after he lands in this country. But it is the booking agent who gets the five dollars. Though we are paying hundreds of thousands of dollars every year in this way, the money is a small matter compared with the wrong done to the country in getting here so many of the undesirable class—people who are not able to maintain themselves on the soil after they get here.

I was much interested and to some extent pleased with the speech which my hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. G. H. McIntyre) delivered in this House yesterday. We have several members of this House who may be said to be independent members. Their independence is not always evident ; yet on this occasion we have had three of the so-called independent members speaking, and all of them have condemned the bonus system. But our hon. friend from South Perth, who I am sorry to see is not in the House at the present time, delivered a long oration on this question. When that hon. gentleman was elected he posed as an independent; but of all the questionable policies that he could very well have called in question, he went so far as to endorse the bonus system as at present carried on by this government, although he said that the day was near at hand when it must go. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the bonus system has been retained very much too long. If there ever was any excuse for it, that time has long since passed away. It should have been abolished years ago. The hon. member for South Perth put the Minister of the Interior away up on a pedestal. He said that he stood as the one man who had more to say about what Canada was and what it should be in the future than any other man in the Dominion of Canada.

I am not willing to place the minister on quite so high a pedestal. I hold him responsible to a certain extent for this policy, but it is the government, which is paying out the money to enable him to carry out that policy, that the people will hold responsible. The hon. gentleman told us that we require people in this country and are not afraid to pay for them. He says that the west is badly in need of people and that the bonus system is approved of by the large majority of our population. Well, I have been in the west two or three times recently but did not have an opportunity of discussing the bonus question at any great length with our friends there; but I can speak for the province of Ontario, with which I am familiar, and I am satisfied that if to-day a plebiscite were taken in that province as to whether or not a bonus should be paid for immigrants from any country in Europe, 75 per cent would say no. And what I say with regard to Ontario, I believe, would apply with almost equal force to Quebec and the maritime provinces. I do not believe that the west would be unanimous on this question, but admitting that 50 per cent would be in favour of continuing the bonus system, if you take the whole country through you will find that 75 per cent of our people, if asked by a plebiscite, would say that we should pay no more bonuses for immigrants. Why should we? We have the best country under the sun. We give 160 acres of No. 1 land to every man who will take up a homestead. We have the freest and best institutions of any country almost under the sun and a country with a climate and opportunities second to none. Why then should we go beyond these natural resources? After we have given a man 160 acres of land, after we have offered him all this country has to give, why should we pay $5 a head to a booking agent to send him here? Is there any good reason for our doing this especially when the United States is charging $4 per head on immigrants going into that country? The Americans charge $4 a head for permission to enter the United States, and we pay $5 per head to get people to come to Canada, making a difference of $9 between the two countries. And besides we have more to offer intending settlers than has the United States. Let me point out a danger which is menacing, and which I have not heard any one discussing. According to the American papers there are between 4,500,000 and 5,000,000 people in the towns and cities of the United States to-day without employment. Those people are in many instances within twenty-four hours of our border and can cross at any moment. That is a fact which should receive the serious attention of the government. We are too close to our neighbours in the south not to feel every breeze that blows on them. When financial conditions are bad there, they are bad here, when the labour market is not good there it is not good here. To-day there are in the United States between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 people who are walking in the streets without anything to do. That is a serious problem. It is one which should cause us to pause in our policy of paying men to come to this country, who have no profession and in many instances are undesirable.

The hon. minister said that we had the right to deport undesirable immigrants within two years. If any municipality has undesirable citizens all it had to do was to deport them. But that must be done within two years of their arrival, and the minister throws the burden of doing it on the municipalities. The government brings them in at $5 per head and then unloads them on the municipalities and saddles on the municipalities the whole onus of the transaction. Why should the onus be thrown on the municipalities? If any deporting is to be done, it should be done by the government which brought in these undesirables and not saddle that expense on the municipalities. Let me point out the attitude of the government with regard to the Doukhobors, we have heard so much about. We had a long discussion the other day about the invasion of Ontario by these Doukhobors from the Northwest Territories. The Minister of the Interior then told us that these people could not be deported because they had been here eight years and were free citizens of Canada. Under that ruling of the Minister of the Interior, confirmed by the Minister of Justice, there is no man under the sun who could not come into this country and free himself from the risk of deportation. On landing he could go to some of the unsettled districts in the north, and we have lots of such districts in Ontario and Quebec and the other provinces. He could, as the Doukhobors did, settle outside the pale of civilization and remain there until the two years were up. That is what the Doukhobors did, and now we have them marching back into the heart of the country, and the Minister of Justice said that those men have been given the freedom of the country and can come and go as they please the same as any other citizen in Canada. But we are told by the Minister of the Interior that we are all equally responsible for their coming. Well, I do not hold myself in the slightest degree responsible, and there are dozens of others in this House who can equally say that they cannot be held responsible. We were not in this House ten years ago when the immigration of these Doukhobors was started; and no man who has been elected to this House since that time can be charged with any responsibility in this matter. These people were brought out at heavy cost. It cost the country $7.50 per head to bring them here, and if we could get rid of them at $50 a head we would be doing a great stroke of business in the interests of this country. But the Minister of the Interior says that they have been here eight years and are consequently free to go or stay as they like. I refer to this in order to show that, under our deportation law, we have no control over these people. Undesirable people may come into this country and settle in the northern part of Ontario and after they have been there two years, they are free to settle in any of our towns or cities or in any other centre of population in this country they please. If they went immediately to any city in Ontario, they would no doubt be deported at once. But they do not. What they are advised to do is to go into some remote district and remain there two years. Then they have perfect freedom to come and go and violate by their eccentricities the decencies of life, and there is no means by which we can rid ourselves of them. This government boasts of the great things it has done. Well, this country has not yet fully realized what this government has done with regard to immigration. They have inflicted on us a burden that it will take the toil and the strain of one to two generations to remove.

The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. G. H. McIntyre), who spoke very feelingly and very properly with regard to immigration in the old days, touched a theme he might very well have enlarged upon. Look at the immigration that flowed into the provinces of Ontario and Quebec when this country was being settled. Go back a hundred years when this territory in the midst of which we assemble was one vast wilderness. There came into this province and the province adjoining it a little band of sturdy citizens driven out of Great Britain by the stern law of famine. No bonus was paid to these men to come here. They came here and hewed out their homes in what were then the wilds. They settled in the forest and for forty or fifty years they lived almost shut out from civilization and humanity, but all the time hewing out places for themselves and building strong and true the foundations of the citizenship that we have enjoyed for fifty years. We owe to these people a debt of gratitude we never can repay. But we can show that at least we feel the gratitude we would like to express by preserving unsullied and undimmed the citizenship they handed down to us when they passed to their reward. But are we doing that under the policy of this government? I think not. We have thrown all that to the winds; we have no regard for it to-day but we are going on simply looking to numbers, as the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has stated—it is simply a matter of numbers to be brought in regardless of whether their coming will or will not be a lasting good to the country.

With regard to that particular point I wish to draw attention to the fact that the older provinces of Canada have been, thus far, mainly responsible for the settlement of the west. That is a statement that, I believe, neither the Minister of the Interior nor any other hon. gentleman on that side will gainsay—that the large proportion of the settlement of the West has been effected from the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Probably 50 per cent of the people in the West to-day are Canadian by birth. I have not the figures at hand, but I know that, at least, within recent times, that proportion would hold good. These people have been drawn from the older provinces very largely within the last ten years and so great has been the drain upon us, especially upon our farming community, that we have parted with almost every farmer's son that the older provinces could possibly spare—I fear far more than they should have spared—and to-day we have in the older provinces scarcely enough men to man our own farms. I am pointing this out to show that this element that has gone from the older provinces and that has become the backbone of the Northwest has been drawn upon to its limits—we can go no further; we have not the men to spare. The older provinces can no longer afford the population necessary to assimilate the incoming hordes of Europe. If that be the case, are we nevertheless to go on receiving a great immigration from Europe without mixing with it the representative Canadian citizenship to make these people good citizens? The colonization of any part of the West by a particular nation is bound to be a failure. It has always been a failure in every sense of the word. We must have only one citizenship in the Dominion of Canada, and that the citizenship of broad Canadianism; but this we can never have if we are going to keep together in one settlement the immigrants coming from any section of Europe, whether they be Doukhobors or any other. They will never get over the evils that they have brought in. The only way is to have population go in that will spread out to all the provinces of Canada and that will become Canadian in the broad sense.

Now, I have said that this is not a matter simply of the growth of the country, nor of the labour of the country. But I would point out that organized labour, I believe, without any exception, is utterly opposed to the bonus system. The hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville), who spoke the other day upon this question, the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) and the hon. member for Quebec County (Mr. Robitaille), representing as they do, large elements of labour, have all been against it. We know that almost every trade and labour council in Canada has passed resolutions opposing the proposition of this government to pay further bonuses. In considering this matter, we must not neglect the interests of labour for they are a factor of our population of which we should take the greatest care. They have been in this country many of them all their lives and others for many years. Is it right or just to bring in from the countries of Europe a lower class of citizenship to displace and supplant the men who, with their wives and families, are dependent upon getting work in the places in which they have lived so long? The common cause of humanity would declare this unjust and say that it should immediately cease. The Minister of the Interior seems to have the idea that he can force prosperity in this country by bringing in a vast influx of people. I take the opposite view. I say that if we have a stringency to-day or if our trade is at all depressed at this time, that stringency and that depression can be materially increased and the burdens of the people multiplied by bringing in more people, who, instead of being a help at this time will become an encumbrance and will add still further to our difficulties by their calls for charity. But this is what we have seen in Ontario. Yet the Minister of the Interior has the hardihood to rise in his place and tell us that there were ten men out of work in 1896 for one man out of work to-day. The hon. gentleman was entirely astray in his facts. There is no doubt that this bonus question is receiving, as it should, the very earnest attention of the citizens of the Dominion of Canada. And our hon. friends opposite seem to be disposed to continue this policy. If I were looking at this from a political point of view, I should not find fault with their taking that course, because the more they advocate this policy the worse will they stand in the opinion of the country. I could ask no better campaign literature than reprints of their arguments in support of this policy. I could ask no better campaign speech in favour of my election than to have the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. G. H. McIntyre) come down to Brantford and advocate the bonus system as carried on by this government. I would welcome the hon. gentleman as a worker in my interest. Nothing could be more detrimental to the interests of the government in the towns and cities of the Dominion than the continuation of this bonus on immigrants coming to this country. You may say: 'Why give away your tricks?' It is bad politics I admit. But the minister has charged me with keeping politics in view in everything I do. I admit that what I am doing is bad politics, but I feel compelled, in the interests of Canada, to declare that the government is pursuing a suicidal policy in regard to immigration. This system should have been stopped not this year merely but several years ago. There may have been a time when it was safe, when the immigration brought in was a negligible quantity as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has said. But that time has gone by. Our immigration has increased by leaps and bounds. And we need not fear that it will unduly decrease. This country is so well known, its resources have been so widely advertised, its capability of producing a living for additional millions of people is so widely appreciated, that it should not require a single dollar, either for advertising or for bonuses, to bring into Canada every man who can possibly be employed or planted upon the soil to advantage.

Take the history of the United States, our great neighbours to the south, and you will find the same facts I have pointed out with regard to Canada. Two or three hundred years ago that country was almost unknown. Look back to the days when the Pilgrim Fathers moored their barks on the wild New England shores, and laid broad and deep the foundations of the great citizenship of the United States. Look at the class of men that come out in those days and planted the flag, and started in to hew out a home in the wilderness where they could worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. That little band, under the providence of God, multiplied and increased until it was able to furnish a leaven that has made a nation to the south of us second to none, in intelligence and civilization, on the face of the earth. We have to some extent in the older provinces of Canada a like leaven that we seem disposed to part with very lightly. We cannot assimilate all the people that these gentlemen wish to bring in to the extent they have been bringing them in, without doing great injustice to Canada. I say it, and I feel it, Mr. Speaker, that we have to-day within the confines of this Dominion all the people of the classes that have been coming in lately, that can possibly be taken care of and given a good home, and become good citizens in the territory where they have chosen to settle. That applies, I think, to all the eastern sections of Canada. It is true that our friends in the west are desirous of growing, they want to bring in the settlers, and they say that we want to put a clog on their growth. Not at all. As I have shown, we have already furnished nearly 50 per cent of the people in the west from the older provinces. Surely it cannot be said that we do not desire the success of our sons in the west. We desire their highest success, but we want to point out that there are other elements that must enter into the formation of a great nation than the mere element of numbers, so that we may say at the end of the year we have brought in 250,000, or 300,000, or 400,000 from Europe and the United States. That is not what we should consider. It is far better to bring in one man who does well, who is a credit to himself and to the country where he takes his abode, than to bring in ten who will become a burden, who will be ne'er-do-wells in the country where they settle. There can be no gainsaying that fact. The bonus system is responsible more than anything else in the immigration policy of this government for the undesirables we have in Canada to-day. It is opposed by the workingmen of Canada almost universally, and I think very rightly. They say : Why take our money to bring out men to this country to dispossess us of the work we have to-day and that we are entitled to ? The minister responds : We are only bringing them out to settle upon the land. I have shown in a previous speech that many of these so-called farm immigrants remain scarcely any time upon the lands, they go back within a month or two into the cities and towns, to the detriment of the men that are there, and thereby they become burdens to those cities and towns. The workingmen of our cities and towns in Ontario have discussed this question time and again during the past winter, and I tell you they have discussed it feelingly, because their bread and butter is at stake. Speaking as I do for a community largely made up of workingmen, I cannot protest too strongly against the bonus system as it is at present pursued by this government. I sincerely trust that the Minister of the Interior will in the very near future see the evil of his ways in this respect, that he will amend his course, and announce that an order in council has been passed recalling any bonus to anybody to come into Canada to settle in the great and good country we have to offer to all people from every land so long as they come prepared to contribute to our good citizenship.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Nanaimo). I always listen attentively to my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), and especially do I listen to him with interest when he speaks on the question of immigration. I remember the speeches that hon. gentleman made in this House just twelve months ago, I read the correspondence which he had with the Minister of the Interior in favour of immigration into his own city just two years ago, and it is now a tremendous surprise to listen to the extreme denunciations of that same policy by my hon. friend. I remember that the member for Hamilton just one year ago presented to this House a petition from the manufacturing interests of Hamilton, calling upon the Minister of the Interior to provide men for mechanical labour of every kind. I remember that just a year ago my hon. friend from St. John, N.B., complained in this House, and especially to the Minister of the Interior, that in all the processes of immigration to this country New Brunswick was being passed by, that no interest was taken in the lower provinces, that immigrants were all sent out west. When I remember that just two years ago the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat repeated all these complaints and requests, I am utterly surprised at his inconsistency to-day. I think it is worth while to read to the House the correspondence of that hon. gentleman with the minister. This is an important question, and no doubt he thinks it is of tremendous political importance in his constituency. He seems to have committed himself this afternoon to the task of working up this question of immigration in view of its political importance in the district he represents. Well, let us read the letter which the hon. gentleman sent to the Minister of the Interior on May 9, 1905, in favour of this class of immigration which he denounces to-day :

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of the inclosed correspondence from the proprietor of the Employment and Information Bureau of Brantford, in which he makes a special request to me to endeavour to forward to our city the various classes of help that are at present urgently needed in that city and district. Would you oblige me by kindly noting the matter and advising me at your earliest convenience as to what method, if any, we can pursue to attain the required ends.

What end? That of getting all classes of labour sent to Brantford.

The letter, I believe, contains fairly correct information, and Mr. Hall, the proprietor, furnishes several letters of reference as to his standing and ability to place the various classes of labour required.

Hoping to receive an answer from you at an early date, or if convenient to wait upon you in connection with the matter, I beg to remain.

Yours very truly,
W. F. COCKSHUTT,

My hon. friend who, one or two years ago, was advocating a stimulation of immigration to this country, forgot that it was utterly impossible to carry on a national policy of immigration for any length of time without such immigration receiving a momentum that it would be impossible to stop all at once. If my hon. friend's requests are being answered to-day by the influx of the very people that he insisted upon getting two years ago, and one year ago, he ought now to remember that he has lent his influence to bringing about the very condition he complains of, and the very facts which he represents as existing.

Now here is the document; it is a long document and I do not desire to read it because it would take up too much of the time of the House. It impresses upon the Minister of the Interior the necessity of encouraging the immigration of these different classes, not of agriculturists, but of mechanics and artisans to the city of Brantford and yet the hon. member from that city, within two years of that very same period after lending his influence to the propagation of a national system for the encouragement of immigration of this class and which, after it receives a certain degree of momentum cannot very well be stopped at a moment's notice like a clock, refuses to-day, because there is a different industrial condition in Canada, to take his share of the responsibility for any condition that may or may not exist as a consequence of his own advocacy in this House. This was two years ago. But, my hon. friend spoke in this House one year ago—eleven months from the very period at which he made his speech and this is what he said:

> The farmers of Ontario, I believe, are in a very prosperous condition. They are suffering more perhaps, from lack of help upon the farm than from any other one cause. That I know is the main factor in our part of Ontario. I think it is the duty of the immigration department—

This was on November 30, 1906:

> —while they are bringing out the vast number of stalwart men from the old country that they do, to see to it that Old Ontario is not entirely passed by. They have taken from us our very best young men for the west. And with all our hearts we wish those young men well. Our sympathy is with them and our best wishes for their prosperity. I believe, that nearly fifty per cent of the settlers in the west come from the province of Ontario and Quebec. Having lost our young men, the farmers of Ontario have none to fall back upon except the immigrants. But the immigrants are going right through—

It was in this way that my hon. friend declaimed in this House a year ago. The burden of his speech was that by a system of bonuses certain classes of immigrants were brought to this country, that they were suffering in the industrial centres of eastern Canada for want of help, and he stated in this House that the immigrants were going right through and leaving the farmers without help.

> —and so the farmer is without help and has not been able to take advantage of the prices that are going so much as he would have done if he had been able to hire others to help him produce large quantities of goods.

I have a great deal of respect for my hon. friend in a personal way and in every other way, but I must declare to him that I do not know of any instance on record where any single man has manifested, on any single subject, such a degree of inconsistency as the hon. member for Brantford has on this question.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Did he find in the speech that he has just read any suggestion that artisans or labourers or any one else should be brought to the towns or cities? It was entirely to farm labourers that I referred.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Well, if it is any consolation for my hon. friend I will just need to go back one year and read that letter again. Will he stand up in this House and say that he did not, two years ago write this letter to the Minister of the Interior calling upon him to initiate a system of industrial immigration on behalf of the operators in Brantford?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. No, I deny that entirely. I never recommended any such course. I simply encouraged the hon. gentleman to give attention to the letter that I was inclosing to him from one of my constituents who had written me. I inclosed it to the minister, I called his attention to it and I might remark incidentally that the minister is retaining letters that do not belong to him, and that have not come back yet. As far as that is concerned I simply took the opportunity of inclosing this letter which was sent to me in the House here by one of my constituents. If the hon. gentleman says that I presented it in the House he is not correctly stating the fact. This letter has only come to light recently and it is only within a few days that anything damaging has been discovered in relation to it, if indeed there was anything damaging about it.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. My hon. friend takes the full responsibility of this letter:

> The letter, I believe, contains correct information.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. 'Fairly correct,' is it not?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. No, the hon. gentleman will excuse me:

> The letter, I believe, contains fairly correct information.

And further he says that he has sent letters of reference as to his standing and ability and of the necessity for these various classes of labour. The only point I want to make in regard to my hon. friend on this question is that having denounced the policy of the government with regard to bringing agricultural settlers to this country, he ought to be willing to share the responsibility of his own acts as a member of this House. Previously to the hon. member for Brantford taking the floor I was beginning to think that something had seriously happened down in the good old province of Quebec for the resolution was enunciated by a prominent member from the province of Quebec, and it was supported, one after another, by members from that province. The cloud of dismal description, pessimistic complaint presented to the view of the House by these gentlemen led me to think that something had happened in Quebec. To listen to those speeches one would think that Almighty Providence had left them, that Satan and his emissaries had been brought in and that by a combination of all the forces of evil with anarchism the whole country was going to be ruined. I have every respect for the representatives from the province of Quebec and for the hon. member who moved the resolution in favour of every kind of restriction upon competitive labour coming into this country, and on that point I am prepared to discuss the question : but in order that the supporters of the resolution might maintain their position they had to ignore the law, regulations and history of the restrictions which have been imposed by the Immigration Department in Canada for years. The contention of these hon. gentlemen is that the policy of bonusing booking agents is the cause of every evil in connection with industrial depression in this country. The hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Chisholm) gave extraordinary reasons and made extraordinary charges against the policy of paying a bonus to booking agents, and in the course of his speech he gave a number of results which he claimed had come from this policy. One was : He said that an ignorant Scotchman who had been transferred to some part of his constituency did not know the difference between a plough and a manure wagon. That was a very serious calamity, but no one will believe any such story. Then the hon. gentleman went on to say that another thing he had to complain of in connection with this policy was that the wives and daughters of the farmers in his district of Ontario were unable to go to the market in safety because there was such a number of automobiles on the highways. It was news to me that the Minister of the Interior was to be blamed for placing bonuses on the importation of automobiles; this was the first time I had the least suspicion that there was included in the immigration policy of this government the importation of automobiles to frighten the farmer's wives and daughters and to prevent them from getting to the market.

My hon. friend the member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville)—for whom I have the greatest respect as I have for the institutions which he represents in this House—he attached the blame of any evils that might exist in connection with the immigration policy upon the paying of bonuses to ticket agents. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman in that, and while I say I have the highest respect for my hon. friend and the institutions he represents, I do not think that when his speech is placed in the hands of the organized labourers in this country—for whom I have no mandate to speak more than in a general way, because in this House I represent every class—and always the masses of this country—when his speech is placed in the hands of organized labour in this country I think the conclusion arrived at will be that the facts were not properly presented by him. The hon. gentleman made very serious general statements as to which he gave very little proof, and later on I shall take the trouble of examining into some of these statements for the purpose of presenting what I consider to be a correct idea as to the condition of immigration matters. My hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) drew a doleful picture ; he said that our grand national edifice was going to be torn up, that the constitution of this country was going to be uprooted, and all because he had seen a socialistic parade in the city of Montreal. Well, if he comes out west he will see lots of them. He drew a fearful picture of existing conditions because he had met a few men in Montreal who shouted loudly and who have a perfect right in a British country to parade the streets of a city if they wish to do so, and having seen this parade the hon. gentleman suggested seriously that the Minister of the Interior should lock the door of Canada and keep everybody out.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Will my hon. friend allow me?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. My hon. friend wants to be allowed very often. He does not like to be told what he said. Does the hon. member dispute the correctness of my statement?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Yes. My hon. friend ought to remember that when I was speaking I answered without objection every question that was put to me. I want to say that these socialists in Montreal not only paraded the streets—a right which I concede to them, but which some of the aldermen sought to deny them—but they insulted priests and broke the windows of Laval university.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. We can find men in every community in every country in the world who do unreasonable things at times. But is that any reason why Englishmen who have contributed their share to the up-building of this country and who make no apology for coming to this country, should be debarred from entering here?

Let us remember that years ago they paid the taxes for the protection and security of the citizens of Canada and their action in this respect is appreciated to-day by all intelligent citizens of Canadian birth. If my hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne) has courage enough to follow up the logic of this argument, then he would get a whip and whip every one of us out of the country who were not born here ; he woutld lock the door of Canada, he would keep within the three and a half million square miles of the richest territory in the world which we enjoy only two or three millions of people, and let me tell him that if that condition prevailed the country would run to seed in a very little while indeed. My hon. friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne) spoke about the religious sentiment of the people. In this British country we do not ask a man whether he is an atheist, a Methodist, a Catholic, or a Protestant. That is not the test of true citizenship in a British country. Every true Britisher believes and every true man believes that even though his fellow man be not a professing Christian, he may still be a moral man, and the last thing a British subject would do would be to make a religious profession a test of citizenship. A man may be an atheist, but his moral character may be equal to that of the man who is not an atheist, and in my opinion it is simply mocking the intelligence of this House to raise such an argument against the British people who are coming to our shores. What the government of Canada has to do is to bring here people who are industrious and enterprising, and to prevent the imposition on the country of scoundrels who may be a menace to our civilization and our liberty. But to argue that you can have a stupendous system of immigration and that you can provide some kind of national sieve small enough to clean out every man who does not come up to a certain theological standard and who is not associated with some Christian institution and who may not be up to the average standard of the industrial people of this country, is to argue for an impossibility. But in this country of ours, with all its territory and all its wealth, when we speak of taking men from the congested districts of the British isles and giving them an opportunity to breathe free air and to have a little more room than they ever had in their lives before, I want to say on the floor of this House, that to me it is a proud thing to be a citizen of a country that can offer such advantages to this class of people when they are placed on the vacant land of Canada. Now, the hon. the mover of the resolution blames every evil that may exist on this policy of paying bonuses. It seems to me that the whole question is whether the immigration policy of the government as well as the machinery for carrying it out is beneficial to the people of Canada as a whole. Let us see what has been for years the declared policy of the government on this matter. It has been asserted that it was the policy of the government to bring artisans and mechanics here to compete against that class in this country. They encourage only people for the lands. Four years ago I brought up in this House the question of certain persons in England using their influence in favour of bringing artisans to this country, and the then Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) published on the records of the House an advertisement printed in every newspaper in the British isles giving notice to all the people of the old country that the immigration policy of the Canadian government was to bring no one to this country who would not come to take up homesteads and settle on the land, and domestic servants. Surely the hon. member from Maisonneuve must know that every time this government became aware that there was the slightest suspicion of any misrepresentations being made in the British isles which would induce mechanics to come to this country it at once instituted proceedings to correct these misrepresentations ?

They have circulated literature ; they have instructed their agents ; they have advertised in English newspapers ; they have passed a law prohibiting misrepresentation; they have sent a representative to the British government to ask them to pass a law against misrepresentation similar to the law passed in Canada. Taking the immigration policy of the government as we have it on record, and taking their action as disclosed by the facts I have mentioned, I submit that there is every evidence that the government have done everything in their power to prevent the bringing into this country labour that would come into competition with the labour in the cities and towns of the country. I have evidence in my hand that some of the strongest regulations that have been adopted to protect the labourers of this country against unsuitable labour from the old country, have been suggested to this government by the very booking agents who receive the bonuses that the hon. gentleman thinks should be dispensed with. I have a periodical in my hand, written by Mr. Bruce Walker, in which he lays before the minister the serious dangers of philanthropic societies in England. He mentions the East End Emigration Fund. the Self Help Emigration Society, the Salvation Army, the Church Army, the Church Emigration Society, the Central Unemployed Body and the Central Emigration Board; and gives the numbers they have sent out to Canada. But the point I am making is this, that the very machinery which hon. gentlemen condemn as inducing unsuitable people to come to this country is demonstrated by this very pamphlet to be the machinery that is keeping the minister informed, and is offering suggestions to him as a result of which regulations are adopted to prevent the very thing which these hon. gentlemen say is accomplished by this very machinery. On the 25th February, 1908, an order in council was passed which reads as follows:

The minister, therefore, recommends that an order in council be passed, prohibiting, from and after the fifteenth day of April, 1908, the landing in Canada, of any person whose passage has been paid, wholly or in part, by any charitable organization or out of public moneys, unless it is shown that the authority in writing of the assistant superintendent of emigration for Canada, in London, has been obtained for the emigration of such person, and that such authority has been acted upon within a period of sixty days.

That order in council was passed a little over a month ago, and no attention has been paid to it by the hon. gentlemen who are so sweepingly condemning this system.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Who made the recommendation?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Mr. Bruce Walker, one of the superintendents of immigration in England, the very instrument that my hon. friend said ought to be dispensed with. I have in my desk a large number of articles which have appeared since this order in council was passed in the most important and responsible newspapers in London, expressing the strongest possible complaint and condemnation of the department for the passage of such an order, because of the restriction it imposes upon English people who have the right to come to this country except for physical reasons. I cannot take up the time of the House to read them, but I mention the seriousness and importance of these articles and of letters written by responsible men who are at the head of different English societies, complaining of the tyranny of the Immigration Department of Canada. And at the very time these criticisms are being made upon the department, a resolution is presented by my hon. friend to this House complaining of the very reverse. I would like to remind the House again of the severe restrictions that have been imposed by the Immigration Department in the interest of proper immigration. On the 27th of March, 1908, an order in council was passed stipulating that immigrants must be in possession of a certain amount of money; and the whole policy of the government, if the hon. gentlemen would be honest in stating it, has been one continued disposition to restrict undesirable immigration to Canada.

Mr. MONK. Was the provision of the order in council extending the bonus to railway navvies in England and on the continent a restriction? That only dates a year or so back. Does my hon. friend approve of that?

Mr. R. SMITH.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The extension of the bonus to railway navvies in England and on the continent was a matter that might reasonably come under the consideration of the Dominion government. I want to say to my hon. friend that the most difficult employment in this country to get any kind of intelligent workmen to go on to is the construction of railways on account of the small wages paid for that kind of work. My hon. friend has not been very far out of the province of Quebec, and I do not propose to allow him to set up his experience in these matters as against mine; and I want to tell him that in the Nanaimo district to-day, times are slack and miners are out of employment but it is not easy to get them to work on railway construction, they prefer to wait for a chance of work in the mines rather than work on railways. My hon. friend must admit that the standard of wages in the construction of railways is very low.

Mr. MONK. That is not what I asked my hon. friend. I asked him whether the extension of the bonus to railway navvies in England and on the continent was a restriction or not.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I am answering my hon. friend that if it was a restriction, it was made necessary by the circumstances of the case, and I am maintaining that considering the enormous extent of railway construction in this country to-day, it would be utterly impossible to get the masses of skilled labour which is necessary for the construction of these railways in this country. If that is so, that is the answer to my hon. friend. If the government extended the bonus to railway navvies, it was done not in the interest of the government, but in the interest of Canada. It was because they had good reason to believe that it was impossible to get this particular class of labour for this particular class of work in Canada. So far as I am concerned, when I have looked into the matter and have come to the conclusion that the thing is necessary, I am quite prepared to take the political responsibility of that position. All that I, like any enterprising member of this House, want is to build up this great country; and every industry in which large capital has been placed that is running below its capacity of production involves loss to the labourers of this country just as it is an injustice to have more than is needed. If every railway has just the number of men it wants and every mine has just the number of men it desires, and every other business enterprise has exactly the number of men it requires, and everything is being developed to its greatest maximum of output, that is a condition of things that is in the interest of every labouring man in this country as long as the supply does not become greater than the demand. When any hon. gentleman advocates the principle that it would be in the interests of the workingmen—the men who work in the mines and the railway concerns and on the canals and in the development of all enterprises—to keep the supply of labour below the demand, he is doing them an injustice. If any of our industries are not producing to their full capacity, you are raising the cost of living and the expense of the working people. It is in the interests of all citizens, and especially of the working classes, that every enterprise should be fully employed and producing its maximum of benefit.

Mr. MONK. The labour congress does not admit it.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. If they do not, they are foolishly advised because the principle is indisputable. It is one on which the hon. gentleman would operate his own mill or his own mine.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. That is the employer's point of view.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. No, it is in the interests of the workingman. If an industry has the equipment and the capital to provide labour for 100 men and if it is short ten per cent of the labour it requires, there is a ten per cent loss in the production of that industry and the labouring men have to pay for it. There is not a living man who will take the responsibility, in the presence of the labouring men, of controverting a proposition of that kind. No man of the intelligence and experience of my hon. friend would ever think of adopting any other principle with regard to his own business.

I want to deal for a moment with the argument that bonuses are paid on all immigrants. I got a telegram from a friend of mine in British Columbia last Saturday which I should like to read to the House. My hon. friend's speech had been sent to the newspapers of that province, and this telegram gives the impression which the newspaper despatches of his speech made on the minds of the community:

The despatch report of Mr. Monk's speech contends that bonuses are paid on the total immigrants to Canada.

Does my hon. friend take the responsibility of that proposition? That is the impression which was made on the public mind by what he said, namely, that this government were paying out of the public funds bonuses on the total immigration.

Mr. MONK. I never said that. I said what I believe, and what is generally believed, that bonuses are paid in many cases where they are not due.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I do not think there is a man who would not say that the impression I have mentioned is one which would reasonably be drawn from his speech. If his speech be analysed, there is every indication to show that it was his intention to create that impression. Let me take the opportunity of placing on the records of the House a few figures that will remove that false impression. My hon. friend in his speech—see page 6892 of 'Hansard'—gave a statement of the total immigration to Canada in ten years. Immediately following that statement he gave a statement of the bonuses paid on immigrants during the same decade. Any ordinary man reading the statement showing the total immigration to Canada and right beneath a statement showing the total bonuses, cannot fail to conclude that the bonuses were paid on the total immigration. Certainly I could come to no other conclusion. But what are the facts? Many people believe not only that the bonus is paid on every immigrant but that it is paid individually to the immigrant. I have had to correct a misapprehension of that kind hundreds of times. But certainly lots of people believe it, and they believe it because of the speeches made by men like my hon. friend, and of tabulated statements given in the way I have referred to. No reasonable man reading his speech could fail to conclude that the total immigration and the total bonuses covered the same number.

Mr. MONK. I do not see how that could happen because the immigration is given for every year and the amount of bonuses paid every year, and it is easily to see, by comparing the two, that the bonus is not paid on every immigrant. But what I believe is that the bonus is paid to people who go to the States and the people who go to jail.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. There are people in every country, even in countries where there are no systems of immigration, that go to jail, and there are lots of men in every country who ought to be in jail and are not.

Mr. MONK. Is my hon. friend alluding to the grafters? They never go to jail.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. We have in Canada, as other countries have, people who are not desirable; but if we are superlatively good ourselves we ought to be thankful to be given the opportunity of redeeming the character of other men and communities worse than ourselves. In 1904-5, the total immigration to Canada was 146,266. I have compiled these figures from the records so as to place them in 'Hansard' and dispose of the misapprehension which exists among so many people. The number on which bonus was paid was 28,833 or one-fifth of the total immigration that year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The answer given by the Minister of the Interior, as recorded in 'Hansard,' is 32,604.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. My hon. friend, if he follows closely, will see that he is mistaken.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am referring to the answer given by the Minister of the Interior to be found in the revised 'Hansard' of the 19th March. I am not saying that the hon. gentleman is incorrect. I am merely pointing out that he is not in accord with the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. When I took these figures from the record, I compared them with figures given by the minister the other day, and I find that the statistics are the same.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The figures he gave were 32,684.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. In 1905-6 the total immigration was 189,064 and the total number on which bonus was paid was 33,608 or about one-sixth. In 1906-7, the total immigration was 124,667, and the bonus was paid on 14,094, or on one is nine of the immigration coming to Canada. In 1907-8, the total immigration to Canada was 235,328 and the bonus was paid on 20,492, or one in twelve. So, if we take the average, it seems to me we shall find it would range from fifteen per cent to twenty-five per cent of the total immigration coming into the country.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ralph Smith) is proving that we get immigration without the bonus.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I am correcting the misapprehension cultivated by hon. gentlemen opposite that the bonus applies to the total immigration to this country. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk— then made a reference to the United States, declaring that no immigration bonus was given in that country. I am not sure that there ever was a bonus system in the United States—certainly there has not been for many years. But I do not think that fact helps the hon. gentleman at all. There are over a million immigrants coming into the United States every year. But whence do they come? Largely from southern Europe. Whence come the immigrants to Canada under our system of bonuses to agents and careful regulation? They come largely from the British Isles and northern Europe. It is true that the State of Virginia has a system of bonus assistance to immigration from Belgium, designed to bring in a special agricultural class from that country. But, generally speaking, there is no bonus in the United States, and the hon. gentleman asks if we cannot have the same system in Canada. I declare with all earnestness my opinion that, if the government were to withdraw the whole of the machinery used in carrying on its immigration policy, the labour coming into this country would soon become very largely of the very class of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) complains as combined employer's associations and transportation companies would become the agencies. If we did as the hon. gentleman proposes to do—called back your agents from England, broke off relations with your booking agents, destroyed your immigration department, but merely kept on the Atlantic coast officers to enforce a reasonable protection so that the worst classes could not enter, we should receive a much greater proportion of the very nationalities of people of whom the hon. gentleman complains, but who would have the right to come into this country. But these very classes are kept out by the supervision which our present system affords.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ralph Smith) point out the words in the resolution which declare that the government agents should be withdrawn?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I say that if the resolution were carried out to its logical result——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where are the words that point to that?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) advocates doing away with the bonus. Can the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) tell me the difference between giving a bonus to a booking agent and having a special agent in the same place who would be paid out of the public treasury for using exactly the same influence in bringing immigrants to Canada?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is just this difference, that the resolution attacks one and does not attack the other.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. But the reputation of a successful immigration agent in any country depends upon exactly the same foundation as does that of the booking agent —it depends upon the successful service he renders in sending a good class of people to this country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How does it happen that 215,000 came without a bonus, and only 20,000 with the bonus?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is discussing a result which was due to the very energy I am speaking of exercised years before. These agents have been lecturing for years; they have been distributing literature for years; they have been advertising for years. All these agencies, paid for by the government, have been exercising their influence, and immigrants come to us as a result, not to compete with Canadian labor but to develop the lands of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was it these influences of the bonuses that brought the 215,000 ?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. My opinion is that the bonus is not the great influence that hon. gentlemen opposite think it is—and I think I know something about some of the men engaged in this work. Take, for instance, the evidence of Mr. Jury himself before the select committee of this House : Did not he declare under oath that every opportunity was taken advantage of by the paid immigration agents in England to instruct all engaged in the work as to the classes of people wanted in this country ? I do not think the booking agents in England simply go out and gather up the scum of the population for the sake of getting so many dollars out of the enterprise.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I am expressing an opinion, in opposition to the opinion held by hon. gentlemen opposite. It might be possible for the government to exercise the greatest discretion in selecting suitable men to do this work. But what I believe is that the government is doing its utmost to get the right class of men to operate these agencies, and I believe these men are a good deal more honest in their work than hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken on this question would have us believe.

I was speaking about the statement made concerning the United States. I have a few figures here which will not take a minute to read and which I would like to put on 'Hansard.' I take it that the following countries offer good material for immigration to Canada : Great Britain and Ireland, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Denmark, France, the German Empire, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, Australia and New Zealand. Now, I have collected the reports of immigration into the United States. I find that in the fiscal year 1905-1906, the total immigration into the United States was 1,100,735 people. Of these only 38 per cent came from the countries I have mentioned, the countries from which we most desire immigrants. From Italy came 25 per cent of the whole, and from Russia, including Finland, 20 per cent. That is, from the countries that we seek to protect ourselves against, the United States received 45 per cent of its total immigration for the year referred to. This immigration, of course, was without bonus and without the supervision and regulation that that system allows.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Is it not a fact that the proportion coming from these countries to Canada is greater than that going to the United States according to population ?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I will state the figures which are a complete answer to the hon. gentleman. I do not believe his statement for a moment. I was making a comparison in view of his statement, and now I will complete it. During the same year that Canada received 189,064 from these favoured countries, the United States took 30 per cent and Canada took 56 per cent. From Italy, from which undesirable immigrants come, we took 4 per cent, and from Russia and Finland, from which undesirable immigrants come, we took 2 per cent. From these three countries we took less than 9 per cent of their total immigration. From the United States, Canada received 30 per cent of the entire immigration for that same year, while the United States received from Canada and Newfoundland less than one-half of one per cent of our entire emigration. In other words, the United States received from Canada and Newfoundland in that year 5,063 souls, while in the same period Canada received from the United States, 57,919.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in understanding the hon. member to say that the United States got from Canada only 5,000 last year?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I have said more than once that in 1895 and 1896 the United States got from Canada and Newfoundland, 5,063.

Mr. SPROULE. What of 1907?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I have not got the figures for 1907.

Mr. SPROULE. They got 19,000.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Well, the hon. gentleman can say so at the proper time. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to deal with some statements of my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville), statements which are very general and very misleading. My hon. friend stated :

> But the bonuses have been diverted to other classes (other than farming).

Now if my hon. friend is content to make a statement of that kind in the face of the regulations, in the face of the orders in council, in the face of the advertisements from those countries, in the face of instructions to agents, of course he will have to take the responsibility for it. But I do not think he can prove in a single case that bonuses have been diverted to other than agricultural classes. I have been unable to find a single case, and I have made inquiry at the Immigration Department, and this is what the department told me, that whenever the labour men of this country could discover a case of a bonus having been paid for a man that had not settled on the land according to his agreement, the department would take the responsibility and expense of deporting that man back to the country from which he came. In not a single case has that been done.

I have before me several other extracts from the hon. gentleman's speech, but I have not time to refer to them, because I have to conclude at six o'clock. But I will take the liberty of handing them to the reporter, along with my criticisms thereto.

But the bonuses have been diverted to other classes (other than farming).

Bonuses are payable only on female domestic servants and on those coming to Canada to farm, to take up homesteads or engage in railway construction work, who in the old country have had at least one year's experience in one of the prescribed occupations.

During a previous discussion it was shown that misrepresentations have been made for the purpose of securing the bonuses on immigrants.

As the immigrants have no inducement in misrepresenting their past or intended occupations it is reasonable to suppose that they tell the truth, and the statements of the booking agents carry no weight whatever in the adjudication of their claims, as the only statements taken into consideration are those made by the immigrant, at the time of landing, to the port agent and his staff.

The bonus system has opened the door and permitted the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to flood the labour market.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association has never made any effort to secure for Canada the classes on whom a bonus is paid by the government; no bonus is paid on the persons brought by them, and so anxious is the department to discourage a propaganda for skilled labour that the booking agent who acts or acted as their representative on the British Isles is not even allowed a bonus on the farmers, railway construction men, of female domestics sent by him to the Dominion.

It (the bonus system) has also enabled land speculators to realize large profits.

It seems peculiar that huge profits can be made out of immigrants who according to the speaker in his previous sentence 'were sufferers and beggars.'

It (the bonus system) has even induced charitable institutions, church societies and the Salvation Army, to step in and organize on a solid basis all for one sole aim and object, the making of money no matter how.

With the exception of the Salvation Army, the societies mentioned are practically supported by private contributions, and it is safe to say expend $100 on immigrants for every $1 they receive in the shape of bonuses. With the object of making this clear the following table shows for the calendar year 1907, the number of persons whose passage was paid wholly or in part, and the amount received in bonuses during the same period from the Dominion government.

Society.	Number of Immigrants assisted.	Amount paid in Bonus.
Church Army,.....	1,595	99 ..
Self Help	506	109 ..
East End.....	6,096	325 ..
Church Emigration	663	47 ..
Central Unemployed.....	2,842	336 10
Central Emigration	228	15 10
	11,930	932 ..

It will be seen that bonus is paid approximately on only one in twelve of those brought out by the above societies.

It would seem that the time has arrived when the flow of population to Canada is so numerous, and Canada is so well known, that bonuses are no longer necessary.

The object of paying bonuses is to secure the co-operation of the booking agents in presenting Canada's claim as a desirable field for suitable immigrants. The booking agents besides presenting Canada's advantages in interviews with intending emigrants, advertise widely in the press, distribute immense quantities of literature, make capital displays of Canadian produce and keep posters concerning Canada constantly in the public eye. This advertising would largely cease if bonuses were withdrawn, and every one with any experience in advertising knows that spasmodic efforts in the case of printer's ink is not the method to attract attention.

We may have to pay as much as we have paid in bonuses to return certain classes to the countries from which they came.

The law provides that all undesirable immigrants may within two years of their arrival in Canada be returned to the country from whence they came at the expense of the transportation companies bringing them into the Dominion.

I acknowledge that the government have done this (discouraged emigration of mechanics) but other powerful bodies have taken upon themselves to do the unjustified work that some of the government agents were doing some time ago.

The inference that until recently government agents have been promoting the emigration to Canada of skilled labourers and mechanics is unjustifiable. In 1904 the following notice was inserted in the leading papers of the British Isles :

Ottawa, June 18, 1904.

The government of the Dominion of Canada having been informed that certain persons conducting labour agencies in London, Liverpool, Glasgow and elsewhere in the United Kingdom with the object of promoting the emigration to Canada of mechanics, and other skilled workmen, have been giving false information respecting labour conditions in Canada, representing themselves as agents of, or as having the sanction and endorsement of the Dominion government:—

Notice is hereby given that the Dominion Government has no such agents in the United Kingdom, and has not authorized, sanctioned, or in any way given its approval to any agency in the United Kingdom for promoting the emigration to Canada of mechanics or other skilled labour.

(Sgd.) JAMES A. SMART,
Deputy Minister of the Interior of Canada.

In addition to this advertisement, government agents, the home government and steamship lines were asked to use their influence to stamp out such organizations. Last winter one booking agency in the British Isles persisted in advertising for large numbers of railway labourers when there was no demand, refused to discontinue such advertising, was removed from the bonus-earning list, and finally on the representations of Canadian government officials had their booking agency license cancelled and was thus forced out of business. It will thus be seen that every effort is made by the Canadian government to see not only that no misrepresentation is resorted to, but that only the classes desired are advised to come to the Dominion

Instead of paying bonuses, I think the government would do better if it must have agents to send over to England, men who have settled in the west.

For a number of years the government has been sending farm delegates to the British Isles and these delegates lecture at meetings arranged for by the booking agents, and while stationed in a certain locality remain in the booking agent's office and give reliable advice encouraging desirable settlers and doing all in their power to dissuade people considered unsuitable from going to the Dominion.

We believe also that there is no harm in spreading reliable literature, but we think the people should be left to follow their own will as to whether they come or not.

This is exactly the policy pursued by the government, and even the harshest critic can hardly contend that persons are forced to Canada against their own wishes.

Lord Strathcona's interview.

This is a fair sample of interviews given by government officials to the press, and any departure by such officials from the well recognized policy of the government would mean a change in the staff.

Canada in a nutshell.

In this government publication there is no inducement held out to mechanics or skilled labourers to come to Canada, and the policy of the government is fully explained on page 11 of that pamphlet, the paragraph closing with these words: 'The Immigration Department does not encourage them.'

I would look upon every man who left for Canada in the light of the $5 that would go into my pocket.

This statement is misleading, as it implies that a bonus is paid on all immigrants, which of course is not true.

That shows that while the coal mines in Nova Scotia were far from wanting men, representations of this kind were made in order to obtain the bonus.

No bonus is paid on miners, consequently this statement is incorrect. No bonus is paid to any organization employing the word 'Canadian' or 'Canada' in its title, consequently this charge falls to the grounds.

Now, I want to deal with one fundamental principle. Is it a good thing for the great masses of the people in this country that we should have an immigration policy of bringing in men to settle our vacant lands? The hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Chisholm) said that the lands were going to be all taken up, and that in a few years hence his son would not be able to get any land. I want to say that the lands of this country cannot be settled too quickly by bona fide settlers. Being one of the members from British Columbia, I have collected statistics showing the prosperity of that province, and I want to say to this House that the prosperity of British Columbia dates from the inauguration of the immigration policy adopted by this government of settling the land. I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no country in the world, possessing as it does millions of acres of uncultivated land, that affords to settlers so great an opportunity of enriching themselves as does Canada. Yes, Sir, bring men on to the land. I have been brought up in England and I know something about the land grievances in that country. I have felt some of the hardships of twelve, fifteen or twenty landlords dividing up amongst themselves the lands of a great region and holding them in perpetuity. I can understand the grievance of the Irish peasants who have been deprived of proprietary rights in their native land. We have suffered in England in consequence of a similar policy. In bringing in and placing a settler upon the land you are bringing in a man who realizes that every time he puts a spade into the soil he is increasing his own wealth as well as the wealth of the country, and you are getting out of him the maximum of interest and labour that you will not get by any other process.

I want to say to this government: Settle all the vacant lands in this country, divide them up just as quickly as you can among bona fide settlers. Get the people on to the land and arrange as quickly as possible to alienate the public lands from railway companies and sell it reasonably to settlers. That is a foolish and false theory that is set up by my hon. friend from Maisonneuve, that it is possible to cultivate the lands to the injury of the industrial labour of this country. Why, Sir, it is the settled land that affords a market for the results of the productive labour of other industries. Keep the people from the land, keep the people out of the country, keep the lands barren, keep them tied up and you will have no need for factories. Does my hon. friend who is responsible to the associations of labour men place this consideration before them? Every argricultural settler brought into this country and placed on the land is creating a market for the man who works in the mine and in the mill.

Mr. VERVILLE. Who is going to absorb all the surplus labour in a slack time in the cities throughout the country?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Get the people on the land and provide a market and you are pursuing the best policy in the interest of industrial labour, but keep the people off the land and there is no need for factories. The barren lands of British Columbia, the immense stony hills of that country, that were not considered to be worth anything, are being made most fertile in fruit producing properties. Why? Because there is a market in the Northwest. The rich timber areas of British Columbia have been developed to an enormous extent. Why? Because they have found a market in the agricultural districts of the Northwest. Fish and coal production has developed enormously within the last two years. Where do they find a market? They find a market in the Northwest. I want to say to this House that when this country becomes settled with enterprising pioneers beneficial results will accrue to the industrial classes. It is not an easy thing to get people on the land. It is not an easy thing to collect men who are prepared to go to the backwoods and take up land. Hon. gentlemen opposite act upon the assumption that it is perfectly easy to get people to settle on the land. The member for Brantford says: Do you not give them 160 acres each? My hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. A. Lavergne) complains that Quebec is not receiving justice. Why do the people of Quebec or of Ontario or of Nova Scotia or of British Columbia not go upon the land?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Why is it that the government prevents a man from going west from Quebec and helps an immigrant coming from the old country?

Mr. R. SMITH.

Mr. OLIVER. How does the government prevent any man from going from Quebec?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. The government prevents a man from——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. No, Mr. Speaker, I want to answer the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. My hon. friend from Montmagny asked a question and I am going to answer it.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. The hon. minister has asked me a question—

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman rises to a question of privilege he has the right to do so.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. The minister has put a question to me and I think I should have the privilege of answering it.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Perhaps the House will give me three or four minutes as I am obliged to go to a meeting this evening. I want to say to my hon. friend that there is no citizen of Canada who has not an equal opportunity with every immigrant to take up land in the Northwest.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I deny that.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Well, my hon. friend is afraid to allow me to give him his answer. I do not make statements without being prepared to vindicate them.

Mr. TAYLOR. Six o'clock.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. My hon. friend asks: How is it that immigrants from the British isles can go to the Northwest at a less rate than people from Quebec? The government have nothing to do with that; they do not determine the rate.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. What about the railway commission?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Has my hon. friend submitted that grievance to the railway commission?

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Is it not the duty of the Minister of the Interior to submit it to the railway commission?

Mr. TAYLOR. Six o'clock.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I cannot conclude before six o'clock, and I must thank the House for their consideration. Will hon. members give me one minute? I want to say a word to the House and to the government. What the people of this country want is a bold and courageous government which will get settlers unto the lands. There may be weaknesses and mistakes in some cases, because the government is made up of human beings, just like other poor creatures, there are no such things as cabinets of angels in this country any more than in any other, but I want to say that the people are looking to the Laurier government to promote, even more extensively than they are doing to-day, the development of this great country by the extension of the principle that they have adopted in applying strict regulations to immigration on this side of the line and in granting financial and other assistance that discretion and supervision may be exercised on the other side of the line in favour of bona fide settlers to the end that these people may be placed upon the land, that more markets and greater opportunities may be opened up and that the country may be further developed as a consequence of this policy. I want to assure my right hon. friend that in spite of everything that has been said the great mass of the people will support this policy and forgive a whole lot of the small trifles that hon. gentlemen put before the country and waste time in discussing in this House. These are small matters that never reach the corridors of this House, but the great development of this magnificent country and the placing of settlers with a Crown title on the public lands, to hold them for ever for the benefit of themselves and their families, to live under our institutions and to be the subjects of a free British government, is the natural result of the policy which this government have adopted and I want to say that is the policy that will be supported by the people. The government wants to go ahead. Do not take any notice of these whinings and complainings. This whole debate has been one funeral dirge as if the country were going to the devil. We are getting into a terrible condition when some man in Liverpool is getting $10 for sending a man to this country which will enrich it to the extent of hundreds of dollars, or when some other individuals in some other countries are getting a few dollars for sending people here who will enrich Canada to the extent of thousands of dollars. The people understand this policy and they will support it. There is nothing in the position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite. If the government exercise close supervision and make a selection of suitable immigrants their coming will be a great benefit to this country as land settlers.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). The hon. gentleman from Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith), enunciated the view, so far as I could hear his closing remarks, that many of the attacks made on the government by the Conservative opposition would not penetrate beyond the corridors of this House. If the volume of his voice was the measure of how far the hon. gentleman's speech would carry, his utterances would certainly get beyond the precincts of this building, but I venture to think that when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ralph Smith) has time to reflect he will be glad if some of his statements in the latter part of his speech should remain in oblivion to those whom he mainly represents in this House. The hon. gentleman made a new departure this afternoon and although he had volume of voice he had not the volume of independence we would expect from him. The hon. gentleman has seen fit for reasons best known to himself to turn his back upon the labour party which he was supposed to champion, and to stand on both feet for the government party in support of their immigration policy. I do not propose to follow my hon. friend in his dealings with the labour party, because no doubt they will themselves determine how far they are satisfied with him. However, if you give certain people rope enough they will hang themselves, and that seems to be the misfortune of the hon. gentleman. He asked for more time to finish his speech, and then with the assistance of the Minister of the Interior he endeavoured to crowd down the statement of the member for Montmagny that in the matter of transportation, there was discrimination between immigrants coming to this country, and our own good citizens. A moment's reflection will show that there is a distinct discrimination against the people of Canada in the matter of transportation. If the sons of the province of Quebec for example, wish to go to the west they are not carried by the transportation companies upon the same terms as the poorest and most wretched foreigners who come to our shores.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. Does the hon. gentleman think that the policy of the government should be to transplant the people of this country from one portion of it to another ?

Mr. LENNOX. When hon. gentlemen on the other side interrupt me to ask a question that has no relevancy to the point I am discussing I do not propose to answer. The question of the hon. gentleman has absolutely no relation to the matter with which I am dealing. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) thought fit to deliver a vicious attack upon the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cockshutt) had the privilege of replying I would not refer to it for I know he could dispose of the hon. member for Nanaimo in good style. He attacked the member for Brantford because, he said, he has changed his views on this question since May of 1905. But what ground is there for condemnation. The hon. member (Mr. Ralph Smith) alleges that at that time the hon. member for Brantford advocated the importation of skilled labour into Brantford and other cities of the Dominion. I do not admit that such a position was ever taken by the hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It was.

Mr. LENNOX. I prefer to take the documents rather than the statement of my hon. friend from Cape Breton with respect to that. And the written evidence shows that what the member for Brantford did was to forward to the proper department a letter from one of his constituents.

Mr. JOHNSTON. And what did he ask ?

Mr. LENNOX. Never mind for the present ; you are very fond of breaking in.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I thought you would not answer.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. member for Nanaimo has condemned the hon. member for Brantford because he alleges that in May, 1905, that hon. gentleman advocated the immigration into this country of skilled labour, and that now he has changed his attitude in regard to that. Would the hon. member for Nanaimo dare to take the position to-day that he advocates the introduction of skilled labour into Canada ? He did take a pretty distinct departure from the position of an advocate of the labour party ; but he would not dare to take the position that he advocates the indiscriminate immigration into this country of skilled labour and artisans ; and yet, with his inconsistency, he attempts to condemn the hon. member for Brantford.

Again, he condemns the hon. member for Brantford because he says that a year ago that hon. member advocated immigration into this country, whereas to-day he says he condemns immigration into this country. The hon. member for Nanaimo has not properly sized up the situation. I venture to say that neither he nor any other member of this House can find, in all the speeches made by hon. members on this side, during either this or preceding debates on immigration, one utterance condemning immigration to this country. It is not immigration that we condemn, but it is the system which he government pursues of bonusing booking agents to send to this country a class of immigrants that we do not want.

The hon. member for Nanaimo waxed eloquent over the position he takes on the question of religion in connection with the class of immigrants he desires to see brought into this country. Now, I do not for a moment say that we are to make nice distinctions in this regard as to the class of people who come to this country; but when I find the hon. gentleman stating that he does not care whether an immigrant is an atheist or a Christian, that the moral or religious attitude of the immigrant is an entirely immaterial question to him, I venture to say that the good sense of the people of this country will not join with the hon. member in that position. Speaking for myself, while I draw no narrow lines in this regard, holding that a man can exercise his conscience in the way he sees fit, I do feel that it is important that we shall bring into this country a class who shall be God-fearing people, and that it shall not go forth that an atheist is an acceptable citizen of this country. What is atheism? It is the absolute repudiation of the existence of God ; and do you want it to go forth that the representatives of the people in this parliament have got to the position that they care not at all whether the class of immigrants who come into this country are or are not such as the hon. gentleman said he was quite willing to have come into the country—atheists and men of that class ? I am sorry the hon. gentleman is not here, but I strongly commend to the perusal of the labour party in this country the utterances of that hon. gentleman this afternoon. I think it will be a surprise to them to find that he has so utterly and completely abandoned them and gone over, as I could have predicted long ago he would, holus bolus to the present administration.

Now, I have never spoken upon the question of immigration, although I have thought very seriously upon it ever since I came into this House. I have been somewhat puzzled as to the best policy to pursue having regard to a certain class of the inhabitants of this country. I have always felt that the people whose interests should be most anxiously considered are the people who form the backbone of this country, the farmers; and from a careful watching of this debate, I think I can say without any fear of contradiction that not one note has been sounded from the government side in favour of the agriculturists of this country. I believe that whilst we should endeavour to advance the interests of all classes, the interests of the bulk of the community, of those who contribute most to the country's progress and prosperity are most to be considered. The farmers are the largest class in the country, and if I were convinced that a payment of money, by bonuses or otherwise, for the purpose of promoting immigration would be in their interest in the sense of giving them the labour they require on their farms, I would not be prepared to condemn it in any way. But I am convinced, from a careful observance of the policy of the government, that we shall never get in this country a class that are required to labour on the farms of Ontario and the other older provinces, or for assistance to the farmers who are settled in the west, by the system we are pursuing at the present time. Now, as to the relative position of the farmers and another great class in this country, the manufacturers, we have in Canada farmers, owners and tenants, to the number of 544,688. Computing in the ordinary way the residents on the farm, the people who are dependent directly on agriculture for their existence, will number 2,723,440, or more than 50 per cent of the entire population of Canada. From the census returns of 1901, I find that the farmers have invested in their farms and implements and various means of carrying on their industry $1,787,102,620. and that they pay for hired help $24,173,968 annually. On the other hand, the investments of the manufacturers amount to $446,916,487. Of this their working capital, which can hardly be called a permanent investment, amounts to $237,537,849, leaving only a little over $200,000,000 as an actual permanent investment by the manufacturers of the country. The farmers therefore have at stake as a permanent investment in this country, in order to advance its prosperity, four times as much as all the manufacturers of the country. Then, take the products. The farmers of Canada in 1901—and there has been a vast increase since then—produced $363,126,384, whereas the manufacturers, if we take the sales, produced $481,053,375. But the amount of raw material which went into the manufactured products and a large portion of which was produced on the farm was $266.527,858. Therefore the actual product of the manufacturers was $215,525,517, as compared with the figures I have given with reference to the farm. In other words, the products of the farm exceed the products of the factories some 70 per cent. What I say is this. We must not neglect the interests of any class, but all the same we should keep steadily in view the fact that Canada is preeminently a great farming country. The farming interests should therefore be the first consideration of any competent and wise government because that which is the greatest producer must tend in the greatest degree to the prosperity of the country.

I know that the policy of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) is a western policy and a western policy alone. I do not object to a western policy within proper limits. It is a policy to people the farm lands of the west. But we want something more than that. Our first object should be to secure farm help. Labour is wanted on the farms of Canada, and if we do not see to it, the finest land in any part of the world to-day—I refer particularly to the older portions of Canada—will be left uncultivated for the lack of an adequate labour supply. Therefore the first consideration of the government should be, not so much to get farmers to take up farms in the west, as to get in farm help. Get in people who will work on the farm, let these people acquire in that way a knowledge of the country, and after they have done so let them take up farms of their own and they will be successful to a degree they would not be, under other conditions. I have said that the policy of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) is a policy of occupying the farms of the west and a policy of that kind alone. Let me refer to his statement in the debate on the 15th of January last on this same question. Dealing with a letter written by Mr. Scott to the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) the Minister of the Interior said :

> He (Mr. Cockshutt) received his answer and it states the policy of the department, which then and before and since has been to secure settlement of the western lands.

And he follows that up on the next page by saying :

> I know it is, but it is my hon. friend and not I who is finding fault. He was at that time with the policy of the government so far as the need of immigrants was concerned, but his policy differed from the policy of the government in that he wanted to empty the overcrowded tenements of Europe into the city of Brantford and other cities of Ontario, when the policy of the Dominion government, as stated to him in black and white over the signature of an officer of the department, was to settle the Northwest, to cultivate the prairies, to fill up that western country in order that there might be employment and business for the commercial and financial interests of eastern Canada.

So that the policy of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) is a policy of filling up the farm lands of the west and that alone. We must no doubt fill the farms of the west, but if you bring into this country a hardy agricultural class who will assist our farmers before taking up lands of their own, who will graduate from farms tilled by men who understand the conditions of the country, you will develop this country in the most effective way and you will ensure that those who take up lands will not afterwards abandon them into the hands of speculators and grafters. This government have made no attempt of that kind to assist our farmers, particularly those of the older provinces and enable them to obtain the necessary help from the old country. Will the policy of the minister bring about an improvement in that respect ? I venture to say that when we pay a bonus to a booking agent, his chief effort will be to secure quantity rather than quality and thus increase his commission, and the same may be said of the transportation companies. All these are concerned in procuring the greatest possible number, regardless of quality, and in this way making the greater profit. Their interests are in that sense antagonistic to those of the people of Canada, and while that system continues we shall never acquire that class of immigrants which will be a benefit to our own farmers. What is the remedy ? I am not called upon to devise a remedy, although it will be but a little time before we on this side will have to propound a remedy. When that time comes I shall be prepared to give my advice in the interests of Canada, but in the meantime it seems to me that we ought to adopt the methods which any business man would use in securing assistance in his business. We might very well establish an Immigration Bureau which would keep a record of the labour required. Our farmers, manufacturers, merchants, miners, railway companies and other interests could then readily communicate with the government through this immigration bureau and inform them of their wants. They could define, not only the number of assistants, they required but also the terms of employment. A farmer for instance would state how many months he would undertake to employ one or more farm hands. When all that information is obtained, then work, not from this end, but from the other end. Employ reliable agents in Britain to come in direct communication with the class of men required and let these agents guarantee that the men they send out are the kind we want. Knowing how many farm labourers are wanted, they will try to obtain them. The responsible agents of the government will take pains to ascertain that the proposed immigrants are actually and bona fide farm hands or as the case may be. They will make arrangements with these people, having in mind the condition that exists on this side of the ocean and the actual farmers who want these men. Then they will enter into arrangement for these men to come here, and the farmers here will be advised that the men have come and will be asked to meet the men, make their contracts, and take the men to their homes. If you do this, you will be bringing in a class that will add permanently to the welfare of our country and will assist in supplying our producers with the men they require.

Now, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) seems to think that 160 acres of free land is not a sufficient inducement to the people of Europe and elsewhere to come in and occupy our territory. The hon. minister objected to comparing the conditions of Canada to-day, with its six millions of population, with the conditions of the United States with 80,000,000. He said : I ask you to go back one hundred and twenty-five years in the history of the United States. But let him take us back any number of years he likes, he will not find the United States ever made an offer such as we are making, or gave a bonus such as we are giving to bring immigrants into their country. And I ventenure to say that neither the United States nor any other country has offered the same inducements to hardy, sturdy, self-reliant immigrant that the Dominion of Canada is offering to-day in the lands of the west. We do not need to give prize-packages in order to get rid of these lands. Our west is the greatest and last west available for the teeming millions of Europe. And if you adopt the policy of endeavouring to restrict immigration to the end that none but the fittest should come in, that none but those who measure up to the level of our own citizenship should be allowed to enter, you will have these lands occupied as readily as by depreciating their value and crying them down—which you are doing at the present time by saying in effect: Here is a prize, an inducement for you to come in and settle these lands.

Now, what kind of immigrants are we getting by our efforts? I wish to refer you to some records upon that matter. I do not think that the hardiest and most reckless of the supporters of the government will dare to say that the class of immigrant that we are getting into this country make a better average than those they are getting into the United States. I do not think there is any of these hon. gentlemen quite hardy enough or indifferent enough to the facts to assert that, taken as a class, our immigrants compare favourably with those that go into the United States. Therefore, for a moment, I will direct attention to the class of immigrants that are going into the United States, even with all the precautions taken in that country, with all their rigid examinations and in spite of the tax of $4 per head that the immigrants must pay before they can enter that country. Before I go into that, let me say that the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Uriah Wilson)—a county with a very good name—wrote to the United States to ascertain whether that country ever paid a bonus to encourage immigration in the reckless and dangerous fashion in which we are endeavouring to encourage it. And he received the following letter from the acting Commissioner of Immigration for the United States :

> I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, which has been referred to the bureau for attention. So far as I am informed, the United States never solicited immigrants, although no restrictive measures were enacted until 1875, prior to which time foreigners came to the United States of their pleasure.

So they have had restrictions upon immigration ever since 1875. Beginning with a charge of $2 per head, they now charge $4 per head for admitting immigrants to the United States, besides subjecting all to a most rigid examination as to their fitness, physically and otherwise. Let me read a few quotations from the report of Thomas Darlington, M.D., president of the board of health of New York. Under the heading of 'Inspection of School Children in New York City' he said :

They are subject to a rigid physical examination. During the first three months of 1906, 23,733 children were examined and 17,462 were found to be suffering from some physical abnormality. Of this number of defectives, 12,170, or 70·1 per cent were of foreign birth. It is safe to assume that a large proportion of the remainder were of foreign parentage, for their names give satisfactory evidence of foreign extraction.

In 1905 the 88 children in one truant school in Manhattan were examined. Of these 77 were found to be physically defective; 74 or 96·1 per cent of these latter being of foreign birth. In 1900 about 40 per cent of the school children in the city of New York were foreign born.

In another paragraph of this report I find the following:

An investigation of 500 consecutive deaths of infants from diarrhœal diseases in New York city, shows that 120 or 125 per cent were of native parentage, while 325, or 75 per cent were of foreign parentage. These conditions exist although 63·5 per cent of the total population of New York are natives of the city.

And again:

Practically 33 per cent of the insane—

And this is a very important question.

—in the United States are of foreign birth.

The New York State Lunacy Commission in 1904 reports that 60 per cent of the insane patients in New York city were foreign born. From 1885 to 1894 the total admissions to the hospitals for adults of New York city were 282,928; of these 63·7 per cent were of foreign birth. During 1905 there were admitted to 7 of the largest hospitals of the city 26,839 patients; of these 12,550 or 46·6 per cent were native born, and 14,289 or 53·4 per cent were foreign born.

So we get a pretty clear idea from this report of the condition of things in the United States. With all the rigid examination, with all the care, with all the regulations adopted by the United States, we find that the large percentage of those who are physically unfit are people of foreign birth. Now take our own country. I will read only brief extracts from the inspector of hospitals in Ontario:

There is marked evidence that public attention should be called to the large number of undesirable and unsuitable immigrants that are being induced to seek a shelter in Ontario. This has been found nowhere more noticeable than in the city of Toronto, where more than half of the indigent casuals, who have had to be provided for, belong to the immigrant class. . . .

The present policy of Canadian emigration agents in Europe would seem to be to secure the number and pay no heed to the quality of persons urged to seek a haven in this country. The system of the Dominion government of bonusing agents to send out in an apparently indiscriminate manner a class of people totally unfit to provide a livelihood for themselves is deplorable.

Further on, and summing up, he says:

But you must have noticed how crime is on the increase in Canada—crime of an abominable character. Evil deeds are rife in this land which we never knew before. Our nation was a better one before these people came.

I do not think there can be any doubt as to that. Now, Mr. Hanna the other day spoke in regard to lunatic asylums, perhaps the most serious phase of the whole question:

We seem to be bringing into this country a class of people who are going a long way towards peopling our insane asylums, towards peopling our jails, and towards supplying a pauper population for the cities during the winter time.

Mr. Hanna points out that five years ago, of the total commitments to the insane asylums in Ontario, 20 per cent were foreigners and 80 per cent were Canadians. Now, the percentage of foreigners has increased to 30 per cent, and the percentage of Canadians is 70 per cent. During these five years Mr. Hanna points out that the cost of maintaining those immigrants in Ontario has increased from $24,613.20 to $51,744.30. He shows that last year the total number of patients was 1,162, and of these 346 were immigrants. He also makes a computation, which I presume is correct, to the effect that taking the probable average length of life of these people, the province of Ontario will pay for their maintenance during their lives the sum of $1,487,038.80. He says that of the total population of the province over 16 years of age, 20 per cent are immigrants, or 291,675, and 80 per cent are Canadians. or 1,209,308; but that although the immigrants are ouly 20 per cent of the population, the jail population is composed of 38 per cent of immigrants, and the cost of maintaining them last year was $21,724.65.

Now we have had a large influx of these undesirable people, but for some reason, I think without reason, the Minister of the Interior has seen fit still further to stimulate the bringing in of these people. He cancelled the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company on the 30th of November, 1906, and we paid no bonuses down to the 19th of February, 1907. From this latter date to the 8th of January last we were giving 5 shillings per head for children, 10 shillings for adults of certain classes, such as farmers, farm labourers, navvies and miners, and 10 shillings for domestic servants. But at a time when every city in this Dominion was groaning under the weight of taxation, voluntary taxation it is true, brought about by the invasion of these helpless people, this government, with a recklessness which has not been explained, saw fit to double the bonus to be paid, and no earthly reason can be suggested for it unless it be some ulterior motive of assisting those pets of the government who are in some mysterious way brought into relations with the government in order to bring about this immigration.

Could any sane government imagine for a moment, that, at a time when every city in this country was complaining of the presence of foreigners who were a tax upon the generosity of the good people of those cities, when every jail was more than crowded by the class of people who had been brought to this country, it was necessary or wise for the Minister of the Interior to double the bonus and thereby increase the difficulty under which this country was groaning? What was the bonus for? I have only heard one explanation—that it was for the purpose of enabling the booking agents to advertise Canada in foreign lands. I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior—and before he joined the government he was a sensible man—who should do this advertising? Do we always want middlemen intervening in the affairs of Canada or, if we have to advertise Canada, would it not be better that the people of Canada should do their own advertising and not go to middlemen such as the North Atlantic Trading Company was and such as these men now are not knowing even whether the money has been expended or not? If I remember rightly, if there has been anything that the minister has boasted about or prided himself upon it has been, in this House and on the public platform, to let the labour party know that he was not hand in glove with the Manufacturers' Association, that, in fact, he was hostile to the Manufacturers' Association. Is the government honest with labour unions and skilled labour? I want to know and to-morrow the labour unions, and skilled labour, will want to know, whether the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) has been honest to-day or not, and I think they will bring in a verdict adverse to that hon. gentleman. I want to say definitely and emphatically that all the evidence goes to show that the government have been playing a double game in this matter, that they have not been honest with the labour unions or skilled labour but they have been playing into the hands of the Manufacturers Association, while they pretended by their speeches to the labour party that they were fighting the Manufacturers' Association. The Minister of the Interior, like his brave supporter to-night, made a vicious attack upon the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) and I think in that regard he did not go too far, if he was judicious, because he had a foeman worthy of his steel. He realized that the hon. member for Brantford was doing the government very serious harm in regard to their immigration policy, but in the discussion he brought in some questions which resulted in the hon. member for Brantford retaliating. Among other things the hon. member read a letter which came from where?—which came from the Department of the Interior—and which showed pretty conclusively the attitude of the government in regard to skilled labour in this country. Now, I will read that letter and I will point out to you, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the reading of it, that the Minister of the Interior did not dare to ask that the hon. member from Brantford should give the name of the official, who sent out this letter. Why? Because if he had got the name he would have been bound, if this gentleman had done wrong to call him to account. The only reason I can suggest in connection with the matter is that he knew perfectly well from the tone of the letter that it was in accordance with the express or implied instructions of the government to that official and he dared not call him to account. Here is what the letter says. It is an unsolicited letter which shows what the minister calls the aggressive immigration movement of the government:

Interior Department of the government of Canada.

Immigration branch,
Agent, John McLennan,
26 Guild Stret,
Aberdeen, June 3, 1907.

W. F. Cockshutt, Esq.,
Brantford, Ont., Can.

Dear Sir,—I see by reports of various newspapers, that numerous members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association are in need of skilled and unskilled help. As representatives of the government here, we have many inquiries from skilled mechanics in nearly all branches of the trade, desiring information about opportunities for their line in Canada and having no specific information we must be governed in our replies by general terms and conditions.

That looks like a desire on the part of the government to be put in a position of supplying necessary information to these men who are making inquiries in order that they might come and find homes and employment in the labour market of Canada and to that extent, come into rivalry with the skilled and union labour men of Canada. This letter goes on:

I believe that if the secretary of your association would supply the government offices from time to time, of which the inclosed is a list; of the needs of your association, that it will be of great practical assistance in securing some of the needed help, say for instance, in this form, that there are so many carriage blacksmiths, so many boilermakers, lathe men, moulders, carriage builders and so forth wanted If we had such a list as that in our hands we could give definite assurance to men that they could get work, and then refer them to the headquarters of your association in Toronto, Montreal or other large centres, for distribution.

That looks like wanting to enter into a contract with the Manufacturers' Association, to concur with them and carry on this aggressive propaganda, which the Minister of the Interior is so fond of speaking of—in bringing into Canada skilled labour in competition with the skilled labour of Canada. It goes on :

I make this as a suggestion, as we are quite often at a loss what to say, not having any definite information respecting the needs of numerous lines of work, for which we have inquiries here.

I am directing this communication to you, as I believe that you are the president of the association or was, the last information that I had.

Mark you what he wants done.

I know in any event that you will forward it to the proper authorities, in the event that you are not at present the active executive of the association I will be glad in any event to hear from you, your opinion respecting this suggestion.

Very truly yours,
JOHN McLENNAN,
Canadian government agent.

And the Minister of the Interior recognizing the significance of one of the his principal agents in the old country coming into direct conflict with the organized labour unions and skilled mechanics of this country, did not dare to ask the hon. member (Mr. Cockshutt) the name of his informant. Do the union men of this country want more conclusive or damning evidence of the guilt of the government and of the minister than the production of that letter? I do not think so. But the Minister of the Interior even though he be not always brave is daring, and he concluded his eloquent but irrelevant speech by reading a document which was issued by a certain historical personage whose alias is Lazarus. Was it not daring and indiscret for the minister to mention Lazarus or Leopold in connection with immigration. He read a letter to show that Mr. Leopold was advertising as follows :

This week's vacancies are: fitters, turners, joiners, labourers, tinsmiths, toolmakers, coatmakers, brushmakers, hammersmiths, chairmakers, cottonweavers, brass workers, cabinetmakers, paper mill engineers, wood working machinists. Fresh vacancies from Canada by each mail. Girls! Girls! Girls! Also families, high wages, assisted passages. Experienced and inexperienced machinists for straw hats, caps, whitewear, tailoring. Mill hands for knitting, woollen and cotton mills. Chocolate dippers, &c., &c.

And the Minister of the Interior said this was signed by Mr. Louis Leopold on behalf of the Manufacturers' Association. Who brought Leopold from oblivion into the position he occupies ? Who but this present government, and who but the Minister of the Interior and his predecessor. Have the people of Canada forgotten that this Louis Leopold alias Lazarus who was picking up large crumbs at the expense of the people of Canada was the man who acted hand in hand with W. T. R. Preston, who is still in the employ of the government, and as to whose acts although the government promised an investigation they dare not investigate. It was this Mr. Lazarus who had an office in the same building with Mr. Preston when he was representing the government in England, it is this man whom the Minister of the Interior resorts to in an endeavour to refute certain facts. The chickens have come home to roost. Such an incident opens the eyes of the labour unions and the skilled mechanics of this country who are struggling to make an honest and competent living, and who have been befooled far too long by this government. Now, I want to revert to a statement made by the Minister of the Interior in this debate on April 13, when he thought fit to refer to the amendment to the immigration law passed this session, and to the attitude of the opposition in connection with it. He said :

It is not long since in an effort to make it possible to carry out our understanding and to complete the fulfilment of our obligations, there was before the House a little amendment to the Immigration Act, a trifling little matter of some four or five lines.

Mark you, this was to enable the government, as he said, to carry out their understanding with one nation, evidently meaning Japan.

We had to face an immigration question on the Pacific coast as well as on the Atlantic, and it is different on the Pacific from what it is on the Atlantic.

I agree in that.

The immigration differs at every point of the compass. It is necessary to adopt a restrictive policy on the Pacific coast.

You will see what restrictive policy they have adopted because I intend to charge that here again the government have not been guilty of honesty. I do not want to use any harsher term, but I say that the government have not been guilty of being candid either with the people of British Columbia or with the labour party of this country.

Different measures were suggested with regard to that restrictive policy, but it was thought well in the interests of the country, in the interests of the empire, that a conciliatory rather than an aggressive policy should be adopted in connection with one country at any rate.

Evidently meaning Japan.

In pursuance of that idea an amicable arrangement was arrived at with that country, and it is hoped that a similar arrangement can be arrived at with another that is in a somewhat similar position in regard to immigration. But an agreement with Japan as to the restrictions on immigrants from Japan to Canada or an agreement with the government of India as to the restriction of immigrants from India to Canada was of no value without the provision we asked this House to pass the other night. It was absolutely of no effect.

Mark you, they could not work out their policy with Japan or with India unless they got this legislation. I want to say, not only has the government added additional shackles to Canada in the matter of immigration by the Act they passed the other day, but at the present moment Canada, by reason of the treaty, by reason of negotiations of the Minister of Labour, and by reason of the final crystallization into law of that whole matter, stands in the most humiliating and degrading and despicable position of any nominally free nation in the world.

I want to say to the people of British Columbia, I want to say to the labour people of Canada and to all the people of Canada, that we are tied hand and foot as regards the question of immigration, by reason of the treaty with Japan, the treaty being, as the right hon. gentleman said the other day, above the law with regard to immigration which we put on our statute-book. My right hon. friend shakes his head. I do not go by a shake of the head ; I go by the records of this House, and I refer to what was said the other day when we were debating this matter, and when the right hon. gentleman said that as between the statute we were passing and the treaty, the treaty should prevail over the statute; and so it does as a matter of fact, whether the right hon. gentleman had said it or not. Now, what have we done? As the Minister of the Interior said, we had to pass this law. There were negotiations, and we had to satisfy Japan. The right hon. gentleman said: Japan is a sensitive nation; it is willing to be treated on the same basis as other nations, but is not willing to be discriminated against. The right hon. gentleman has made it clear that we are in this position, that whatever restrictive laws Japan may have as regards emigration from its shores, Canada is not allowed by Japan to enact any legislation which will conflict with Japan unless Canada enacts similar legislation with regard to every other country in the world, including Great Britain itself. A sensitive nation, the right hon. gentleman says. Yes; yet in 1905, when the treaty between Great Britain and Japan was in force, Australia demanded free action as regards immigration, and Australia got that concession from Japan. A sensitive nation! Yes, sensitive when Canada has only a population of six millions, but not sensitive towards the United States when the United States has a population of eighty millions: and in 1904, the same year in which the treaty with Great Britain was consummated, Japan conceded to the United States the right which we should have safeguarded in our treaty with Japan. Sensitive? Is no one to be sensitive in Canada? Are we to have no national pride? Are we to surrender the right of making our own laws, and submit to the indignity of having our laws in regard to immigration made at Tokio, as in fact they are at the present time? Just follow out this legislation. Before the other day we had this provision:

The Governor in Council may, by proclamation or order, whenever he considers it necessary or expedient, prohibit the landing in Canada of any specified class of immigrants, of which due notice shall be given to the transportation conpanies.

The hon. Minister of the Interior says that means a certain class as regards occupation, not as regards a country, and I think he is right as to that. Then the government the other day introduced an Act which was intended to get over difficulties—which was intended to prevent Japanese coming to Canada, which was intended to keep the Hindus out of British Columbia, and it was proclaimed to the people of British Columbia as having that effect. It has not that effect, and the right hon. gentleman and the Minister of the Interior well know it. Here is the form in which the Act was introduced:

The Governor in Council may, by proclamation or order, whenever he considers it necessary or expedient, prohibit the landing in Canada of any specified class of immigrants—

That was in the old Act, and in the new we read:

—or of any immigrants who, being natives or citizens of any specified country, have come to Canada otherwise than by continuous journey from that country on through tickets purchased there.

That was the Act as it was introduced. But when it came to be considered by this House, that would not do. That gave us too much liberty. That enabled us to specify Japan; it enabled us to say that if the labour market was congested, the Governor in Council could make an order that Japanese artisans or mechanics or labourers should not come in. But we dare not do that, because the right hon. leader of this House says that Japan is a sensitive nation, and is only willing that we should legislate in the same way in regard to Japan that we do in regard to other countries. And so what we must do in order not to offend Japan is to surrender our rights. We have, as he told the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), the right to shut out British subjects if we like; we can shut them out with reason or without reason. But, the right hon. gentleman says by his action and the action of his ministers, we cannot do that with regard to Japan. The Minister of the Interior says this parliament is supreme, but in the same breath he asks us to mutilate the statute which he brought in, and it was passed in this form:

—or any immigrants who have come to Canada otherwise than by continuous journey from the country of which they are natives or citizens and upon through tickets purchased in such country.

What is the meaning of that ? The difference is this: that we had the right to specify any country under the Act as it was introduced. But Japan would not stand that; we dare not do it. And now by the change made the only order in council that can be passed is an order which excludes everybody—which puts Australia and every other British possession, which puts Great Britain itself, on the same line of exclusion that we adopt in reference to Japan. That is the position we are in. We are bonusing immigrants; it is the boast of this government that we are endeavouring to get British immigration into this country. British immigrants come to Canada, remain for a year, and then go to the United States. British immigrants go to the United States, remain there a year or two, and want to come to Canada. An order in council has to be passed. That order in council confronts them at the border, and it is said to them: You are British subjects; you have never foresworn your allegiance to the British Crown; you are of us, but you cannot come in. That is what the law does. We are endeavouring to get immigrants from Holland; the Hollander must come by direct course or he cannot come at all. We are endeavouring to get the citizens of France; they must come direct from France or they cannot come at all--why? Because Japan says so. Take every country from which we are seeking immigration, and we are confronted with the mandate of Japan. It is by the mandate of Japan that we have had to pass this law, which will exclude British subjects unless they come direct, which will exclude the people of the best nations of Europe unless they come direct, which will exclude the citizens of the United States unless they came direct, which will exclude everybody unless he comes direct, or else we have to leave that law a dead letter. Is the hon. gentleman going to enforce that law? No. He says to the labour people of British Columbia: I have passed a law which will be your protection. I say to the Minister of the Interior that no more humiliating condition ever existed in Canada or in any other country than that which exists by reason of the attitude of this government in regard to that treaty with Japan. Although I desire that we should have friendly relations with that nation, yet rather than feel that we in this free country have surrendered our rights as a sovereign people to make our own laws with regard to immigration and have consented to have our laws made at Tokio, I for one would be prepared at any moment to denounce the treaty we have with Japan at the present time.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (East Assiniboia). The resolution which my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has presented is one of vast importance to every portion of the Dominion. It is of special importance to the western country, and that must be my excuse for my taking up a short time of the House to-night. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lennox) passed a few compliments to the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith). He said that the hon. member for Nanaimo was now opposed to the labour party. Well, I would venture the statement that the labour party in Canada have not in the whole Dominion a better or a truer friend than my hon. friend from Nanaimo. He has given evidence of his devotion to the labour party time and again and he has, as a big broad-minded man, done more for the labour interests in Canada than any other man in public life. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) argued that because my hon. friend from Nanaimo supported this government he was therefore opposed to the labour party. But that does not follow by any means. No one who is not a blind partisan will deny that no government in Canada has ever done so much for the labour interests as the present administration. I would venture the statement that the labour party themselves acknowledge this. I do not say that every individual does, but the labour interests as a whole are convinced that this government has done more for them than any previous administration.

Then we had the hon. gentleman arguing that the government are discriminating in their immigration policy against the province of Quebec and the other eastern provinces. Well, would he advocate that this government should spend money to take thousands of people from Quebec or Ontario up to Manitoba or Saskatchewan or Alberta or British Columbia? I venture to say that any hon. gentleman who would move a resolution to that effect would be laughed out of court. It is not the duty of this or any government to remove population from one part of the Dominion to the other. Is not a good citizen in Quebec or Ontario worth as much to the Dominion, earning his living there, industrious and contented, as he would be if we were to remove him to the west ? As representing a western constituency, I should certainly not be inclined to support any such proposition any more than I would be disposed to support a proposal that the government should pay out money for the purpose of taking settlers from Saskatchewan or Alberta and bringing them down here. The policy is so absurd that one wonders how any reasonable man could think of suggesting it.

The hon. gentleman also claims that the policy of this government on immigration is not in favour of the farming community. That statement rather surprised me, because if there is any part of the community which benefits by that policy it is our farming population. What are the classes of people on whom this government pays a bonus for bringing them out? They are first of all the farmers and farm labourers, then female domestic servants and under certain circumstances railway navvies. Those are the only classes on whom we are paying a bonus, and even with the payment of this bonus we have not been able, although we have been giving special consideration to the agricultural class, to secure sufficient labour. My hon. friend suggests that it is not farmers, but farm labourers to which the government should specially devote its attention. Would any sensible man prefer, as a settler, a farm labourer to a farmer who would own and work his own farm ? I do not think that the class of farm labourers, those who would be content to always remain farm labourers, is the most desirable class and the one we most require. What we specially want are men who will, if you like, work as labourers for a year or two and then take up farms of their own, or who will, if they have the means, take up a farm at once. I think, therefore, that the government is doing what is the very best in the interest of the farming community.

The hon. gentleman tried to create the impression that the west is receiving the greatest benefit from the policy of this government. Let me tell him that the province from which he comes is that which gets by far the largest number of immigrants. Ontario gets far more immigrants than Manitoba or Saskatchewan or Alberta or British Columbia or any other province. I have here a statement of the number of immigrants who have gone into each province every year. Take the last three years for instance. Ontario got in 1906 52,000 ; in 1907, 32,000, and in 1908, 70,000.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman must be wrong because we are only beginning 1908.

Mr. TURRIFF. I mean the nine months of the fiscal year 1907-8. Quebec received 25,000 in 1906, 18,000 in 1907 and 40,000 in the nine months of 1907-8. Manitoba received 35,000 in 1906, 20,000 in 1907 and 36,000 in the nine months of 1907-8. Taking the totals from 1901 to the present time we find the immigrants were divided as follows :

Ontario..	243,417
Quebec..	164,371
Manitoba..	230,946
Saskatchewan and Alberta..	299,949

So, it will be seen that if this is a western policy it is also a Dominion policy, it builds up the east as well as the west, the immigrants being sent largely where they want to go. Of course, you cannot make people go to the maritime provinces if they wish to go to the prairies; you cannot make them go to Ontario if they prefer to go to Quebec. But the government gives information and what guidance it may and does not interfere with their going to one province or the other. The immigrants have distributed themselves and the province of Ontario, from which the hon. gentleman comes, has received far more immigrants than any other province of the Dominion.

The hon. member also stated that it would be but a short time before they would be on this side of the House, and they would find a remedy. I can only say to the hon. member again that he and his friends were on this side for eighteen long years. And, by the way, the hon. gentleman spoke this afternoon about prize-packages, saying they were not necessary in order to secure the occupation of our western lands. But, if is is so easy to settle up these lands now why did not his friends do something during the eighteen years they were on this side of the House ? They had time enough to experiment; but what they succeeded in doing was not in bringing a million immigrants into Canada but in sending a million emigrants from Canada into the United States. That is the difference between the policy of the government under its successive Ministers of the Interior and that pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite. I doubt that the people of Canada, knowing what was done by hon. gentlemen opposite during their eighteen years of office to populate that western country as well as the rest of Canada, will give these hon. gentlemen the mandate to find a remedy for this policy, for there is no remedy needed. Things are going very well; the country is prospering——

Mr. TAYLOR. For a portion of the people.

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes, it is going very well for nine hundred and ninety-nine out of a thousand of the people. You can go to any part of the Dominion and you will not find very much grumbling. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) said that if the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) had stated that there were ten men out of employment now for one out of employment ten years ago, he would have been nearer the truth. I do not think the hon. member (Mr. Cockshutt) will find many to back him up in that statement. I remember very well, as I am sure most of us do, the condition of things ten years ago, and I doubt if any hon. gentleman except the member for Brantford will say that the conditions for employment of labour were as good then as they are now. And I venture to say that at this moment—and the same would be true of any time during the past six months—notwithstanding the talk about unemployed people in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and others of our larger cities, there has not been employment for every man in the Dominion who was willing to go to where the work was and to do the work when he got there. What is the reason that people are unemployed? Simply because they would not do the work offered them. Some, perhaps, were not suited to the work. A gentleman from Winnipeg who came down to-day told me that he had the greatest difficulty during the past few months in securing farm labourers. He offered $25 a month and board and could not get men to work. He hired a number who promised to go but afterwards would not go. Certain people will not live in the country; they congregate in the cities and complain if they do not get work there. I believe the statement cannot be refuted that at no time during the past five years has there been more labour in Canada than the demand for labour, except in a few places where there has been overcrowding because the people were not willing to go where they could get work. The hon. member also made the statement that the United States were getting a much better class of immigrants than Canada is getting. How any man can make a statement like that is more than I can understand. As stated several times in this debate, the United States do not pay a bonus on immigrants, nor have they any immigration agents authorized to carry on work in European countries. Further than that, they put a head tax on immigrants for the purpose of keeping the people out. I believe that the mover of this resolution, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and almost every hon. member on that side who has spoken in this debate has advocated the adoption by Canada of the same measures as have been adopted in the United States. Well, if the result of adopting those measures should be the same as what we see in the United States, God forbid that we should adopt them. For, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) 65 per cent of the immigration going into the United States—and it is going in now at the rate of a million and a quarter people a year—comes from a portion of Europe that we look upon as undesirable, the southern countries, in which countries we do not carry on an immigration propaganda or from which we do not seek to induce immigrants to come to this country. On the other hand, not more than ten per cent of our immigrants come from these countries. In fact, if you exclude the Japanese and the Hindus you find that only six or seven per cent of the total immigration into Canada comes from such countries as southern Italy and other places in the south of Europe and in Asia that we do not look upon as desirable fields of immigration. I say we do not want to adopt the same methods as are adopted by the United States, if they are going to bring about the same results. I have no doubt that if we did adopt those methods the result would be exactly the same.

A good deal of objection has been taken during this debate by members on the other side of the House to the system of paying bonuses, and they claim that all the undesirables that come into Canada are brought in, practically, by the bonus system. Now I do not pretend that there are no undesirables coming into Canada. You cannot bring in a quarter of a million people per annum without having some of the lower classes among them. But the very fact that we pay a bonus enables us to select our people. The bonus, as has been pointed out, is not paid to the settler, and it is not paid to the booking agent primarily for the purpose of inducing him to secure immigrants for Canada. The object of the bonus that is paid to the booking agent is this : The booking agent gets a commission on the tickets that he sells. If he sells an expensive ticket his percentage is naturally a great deal more than if he sells a cheap ticket. A steerage passage ticket from Europe to Canada will cost about $25 or $27. The commission on that ticket does not amount to nearly as much as the commission on a ticket to the Argentine Republic, to Australia or New Zealand, or Brazil, or many of the other countries which are anxious to get immigrants. Naturally therefore the desire of the booking agent is to sell the ticket to wherever he can make the most money on it. So in order to offset the inducement they would have of advocating these other countries and directing settlers to go there, the government steps in and gives them a bonus on all the people of a certain class that the booking agent can direct to Canada. Now what is the result ? Suppose that five men of different occupations go to a booking agent in order to get information. They want to find out about Canada, about Australia, about New Zealand and about the Argentine Republic. If there is a farmer amongst them or a farm labourer, the booking agent naturally, for his own benefit, advises that farmer or that farm labourer to buy a ticket to Canada, because, although he gets a smaller percentage from the steamship company, he gets a bonus from Canada. But if among the five men there are three who do not belong to the classes on which we pay a bonus, the agent does not advise them to come to Canada. Why ? Because he gets no bonus on them, and if he sells them a ticket he makes a smaller commission. But if he can persuade that man to go to the Argentine Republic, or to New Zealand, or to Australia, he sells a much higher priced ticket and he gets a larger commission. So the result is that the payment of this bonus has exactly the opposite effect that speakers on the other side of the House have tried to make out all through this debate. It has the effect of bringing the right class of people to Canada, and it has the effect of keeping the class of people that we do not want out of Canada, and directing them to the other countries who do want them. Those are the facts of the case, and they cannot be controverted.

The hon. member was very anxious to know why the government had doubled the bonus. I will tell him why. It is because we want more settlers. We want more settlers in the western country. I do not know whether the people of Ontario and Quebec want more settlers to settle up their farm lands, because those provinces have millions of acres of good land yet to settle. When the government of Ontario a few years ago sent out men to inspect the north land, they found one stretch of 16,000,000 acres of good land. You have to think for a moment in order to realize what 16,000,000 acres of land means. It means as much land, I think, as is cultivated in the province of Ontario at the present time; at all events, it means about three times as much land as we have cultivated in the three western provinces on which we have raised in some years as much as 200,000,000 bushels of grain, besides all the cattle. There is any amount of land in Ontario being opened up at the present time by the Temiscaming and Northern Railway, and by the new Grand Trunk Pacific. The same remarks apply to the province of Quebec. In the hinterland of Quebec there are many millions of acres of good land. Does not the Dominion of Canada want to have these lands settled up? Does not Ontario want to have her lands settled up? Does not Quebec want to have her lands settled up? I do not think any one will say for a moment that these lands should not be settled up as quickly as possible. The bonus has been doubled in order to bring out more settlers, and because we are getting settlers of the right class. I know that in the western provinces, for which I can speak, we are getting the most satisfactory class of people.

Now almost every speaker on the other side of the House has reflected on the character of the immigrants that come from the continent of Europe. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have seen hundreds and thousands of those settlers in the northwestern provinces; I have driven through their settlements, I have stopped at their farms, I have entered their houses, and I want to say that you cannot go to any country in the world and find better settlers than the Icelanders, than the Germans, than the Swedes, than the Norwegians, than the Hungarians, than even the Galicians, who have been ridiculed so much by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. I want to say that the Galicians are a good class of people, they make good settlers for the western country. We have thousands of Galicians who have settled on lands that the ordinary English speaking settler from the old country, or from Canada or the United States, would not have settled on at all, for the present at all events, land that they would not take as a gift. But these Galicians have gone on those lands and have made good farms out of them and are becoming prosperous. I venture the assertion that within twenty-five years from this date the Galicians in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, will, as a class, be the wealthiest farmers in that country. Besides being able to make themselves comfortable, they are good settlers, because the first thing a Galician learns is to say, 'Me Canadian.' He wants to become a Canadian at once. He wants to forget his Austrian way of living, he wants to forget his Austrian way of farming. When you find a Galician settlement and an English speaking farmer in the near vicinity, you will find them going out three or four at a time and spending hours watching him doing his work. Inside of two or three years, drive up to a Galician house, or to his farmyard, and until you speak to him and find that he speaks broken English, you would not think, by looking at his place, that he was not a settler from the province of Ontario. If you wanted to teach them the Galician language in the schools they would not accept it. They say, no, I want my children to learn English, I want my child to be a Canadian; we can teach them the Galician language at home, but we want them to learn English in the schools. They have the right spirit all through, and are a clever people. They have been criticised simply because when they first came out after a months' travel on land and water, they are not as finely dressed as our settlers would be going up from this country. They have their Austrian style of wool or sheepskin coats which look a little incongruous perhaps, but, in a year or two, you do not know these people. They are just as fine a class of settlers as we have in Canada. I have none in my constituency, so I am not saying this for the sake of catching any Galician votes.

Mr. HENDERSON. We thought you were.

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes, but you are very often mistaken when you have thoughts like that; you are entitled to another think.

Mr. HENDERSON. You are helping your friends.

Mr. TURRIFF. Well any friends of mine who have Galicians in their constituencies do not need any help. Not only in this debate but out of the House and in different places we find hon. gentlemen opposite criticising the foreign immigrants who are coming into the country, but, taking them as a class, they are a good lot of settlers, and let any hon. gentleman go to any of the western provinces and he will find that the class of settlers we have there will compare well with the class of settlers that can be found in any other part of the country. The hon. member also had a good deal to say about the letter of an agent by the name of McLellan written to Mr. W. F. Cockshutt, the hon. member for Brantford. I remember some discussion of this at the time and if I am rightly informed the letter was not unsolicited as the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) states.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, it was.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The letter was entirely unsolicited.

Mr. TURRIFF. On your part.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Unsolicited by any one.

Mr. TURRIFF. Was it not in reply to a letter written by Mr. Cockshutt, who was then president of the Manufacturers' Association ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. No, it was not written by Mr. Cockshutt or any one else. The writer of the letter says that he had seen notices in the newspapers that the Manufacturers' Association wanted skilled labour.

Mr. TURRIFF. I was informed at the time—perhaps I am wrong and I accept the hon. gentleman's word as being correct as he ought to know the facts of the case —that the letter was not unsolicited. Apparently, the letter was in reply to notices that had been seen in the papers. At all events the member of the service who had departed from the line of his duty in so far as to write that letter was disciplined by the department. He had no authority or instructions to take part in any such correspondence or in any such immigration work.

I just wish to say another word or two in reference to why the bonus was doubled. I wonder if many of us really realize what we have to settle up in that western country. At the present time there are about 120,000,000 acres surveyed, roughly speaking, south of the North Saskatchewan river and extending from the eastern boundary of Manitoba to the Rocky Mountains. Of that area there are about eight and a half million acres under cultivation. There were five million acres in wheat in 1906 and from that five million acres there were one hundred million bushels of wheat threshed. There were also about one hundred million bushels of coarse grains. In addition there were cattle raised by hundreds of thousands. What I want to say is that if with the cultivation of eight and a half million acres there is a production of some two hundred million bushels of grain and hundreds of thousands of head of cattle, what are the possibilities of that country when, say, half of that area will be under cultivation ? In a very few years, not many years to come, within the lives of men who are now listening to me, we will be raising in these three provinces south of the Saskatchewan river, or in what we may call the settled portion of the Northwest, a billion bushels of wheat. What does that mean to the whole country ? Does it mean benefit only to the western portion of the country ? What does it mean to Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and the different manufacturing towns and villages throughout this eastern country ? It is acknowledged that the best customers of the manufacturer to-day is the farmer on the prairie because he is a large producer, he is a large buyer, he is able to pay for what he buys, he raises wheat and cattle, he sells these products for cash and he has cash to pay for his goods. If we can accomplish what we have done with eight and a half million acres under cultivation what will be the position a few years hence when we will have fifty million acres under cultivation ? With that prospect in view would we be justified, would this government be justified, would the Minister of the Interior be justified in sitting idle, doing nothing and letting the country go back to that state of stagnation it was in ten or twelve years ago when we only got 16,000 of a total immigration and when a very small proportion of the British emigration came to this country ? At that time I do not think we got over ten per cent of the people who left the British isles. What has been the result under the administration of this government ? At the present time we get more than half of the immigration that comes to the continent of America. We are getting thousands every year from the British isles, more than double the number that go to the United States, whereas, ten years ago, they were getting about ten times as many as we were. That is what we have to look forward to. By the peopling of that country the manufacturers, the merchants and the railways of the east, the railways of the west and everybody in Canada are going to reap the benefit, not only the people of the west but everybody in the whole Dominion. That is the reason why this government is justified in doubling the bonus ; they are doing it in order that we may double the immigration coming into this country. I believe that if we can double the immigration instead of having a quarter of a million people coming in yearly, inside of three years, we will be having had a million people annually coming to our shores. Not only have we that one hundred and twenty million acres to settle, but the people of Canada are now finding out, that, north of the Saskatchewan river, in that part of the country that a few years ago we did not look upon as being suitable for settlement, or only a small portion of which, between Edmonton and the Peace river, was regarded as being suitable for settlement, there are great possibilities. The more we learn about that country the better we find it to be, and for hundreds of miles north of Edmonton there is a country that men who have travelled through it and who are in a position to express an opinion about it say contains as much good land fit for settlement and possesses as good a climate as can be found south of the Saskatchewan river where, as I have said, there are one hundred and twenty million acres of land already surveyed. That being the case why would not this government double the bonus and bring in people, not a few thousands at a time as we had them coming some years ago, but by the quarter or the half million, and in a short time make every part of the Dominion prosperous? Some hon. gentlemen, especially the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), keep going over and over again the vast expenditure that this government are making every year upon immigration. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier referred to the fact that we are now spending a million dollars a year on immigration, and he also pointed out that since the government came into power they have expended $780,000 in bonuses. So they have, but, I hope, Mr. Speaker, that during the next ten years, instead of paying out $780,000, they may pay several millions of dollars in bonuses if by so doing they can bring in the same class of settlers that they have been securing in the past and thereby do good to the country.

Mr. J. D. REID. Doukhobors.

Mr. TURRIFF. There has been a great deal said about the Doukhobors, but out of 7,000 or 8,000 of them that have come to Canada all but the merest fraction are first-class settlers and are doing well and nothing can be said against them in any shape or form, and so far as their mode of living is concerned it may be said that they are more moral than we Canadians; a better class of people you cannot find anywhere.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would the hon. gentleman speak for himself?

Mr. TURRIFF. A great many hon. gentleman opposite have not been in the west and they do not know what they are talking about. When I was interrupted unnecessarily, I was going to say that while there are a few among the Doukhobors who are religiously crazy, I have seen English speaking people in the city of Ottawa whom I thought were religiously crazy, and just about as crazy as anybody could be.

Mr. J. D. REID. What part of the city of Ottawa was that in?

Mr. TURRIFF. Not far from here. You must not judge a whole community by the actions of a few. You might as well say that because a Canadian commits a murder that all Canadians are bad. Of course nobody approves of the actions of some of these Doukhobors and while we would not advocate bringing in any more of them at the present time, yet I do say that the great majority of them are very good settlers. Objection has been raised to the government spending $1,000,000 a year on immigration, but let me point out that during the last three or four years the value of the settlers' effects coming from the United States has amounted to over $50,000,000 a year in addition to the cash these settlers brought in.

Mr. BRODER. They were not bonused.

Mr. TURRIFF. A portion of them were bonused exactly the same as a portion of those coming from the British isles and from continental Europe were bonused. I am safe in saying that for the $1,000,000 a year we are spending on immigration, $100,000,000 a year is brought into the country. Now, is that good business or is it not?

Mr. SPROULE. It is not $100,000,000 a year.

Mr. TURRIFF. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. The Trade and Navigation returns do not give any such figures.

Mr. TURRIFF. I got the information from the superintendent of immigration as to the value of settlers effects, and I have estimated the amount of cash brought in.

Mr. SPROULE. The settlers' effects are given in the Trade and Navigation returns.

Mr. TURRIFF. Only with respect to the immigrants coming from the United States, but not with respect to those coming from the British isles or continental Europe.

Mr. SPROULE. But you spoke of those coming from the United States.

Mr. TURRIFF. The hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) argues that we should stop paying bonuses, and he said the best advertisement we could have is the contented settler in the west. I agree that the contented settler in the west is a very good assistance, but to say that we shall stop paying bonuses would be on a par with saying that the wholesale merchant who for years and years has built up a prosperous trade by judicious advertising and sending out travellers to sell his goods should cease advertising and should cease employing travellers. It is all very well to say that that wholesale merchant had contented customers in different parts of the country, but if he ceased his enterprise and if his rivals continued advertising their business and sending out travellers, the man who had decided to rest on his oars would very soon find himself without a business. There is no use making spasmodic efforts to attract immigrants; you must keep steadily at work and it has been the steady work of the Immigration Department during the last few years that has resulted in such great numbers of people coming to this country. Now, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier said:

So far as I have been able to find out, not only from the official reports of the United States, but from personal information sought by me in Montreal and the United States itself, their inspection laws at present are well nigh perfect.

Let us see how that is. The examination of immigrants conducted by the Canadian government is practically the same as that conducted by the American government. True, immigrants are excluded from the United States because of certain diseases and with respect to which in Canada they are put into hospitals, and if they recover they are allowed to remain here. On the other hand, there is a good deal of political influence in the United States bearing on those immigrants who should land and those who should be debarred, and happily we are free from that. The following statement will show the number of immigrants debarred in the years 1905, 1906, 1907, both in the United States and Canada:

UNITED STATES.

—	No. of Immigrants.	Released from Hospital.	Debarred.	Deported after being in Country.
1905....	1,026,499	7,776	11,879	845
1906....	1,100,735	9,300	12,432	676
1907....	1,285,349	11,528	13,064	995

CANADA.

1905....	146,266	1,948	611	86
1906....	189,064	3,046	524	137
1907,9m	124,667	3,103	440	201

In these three years there were 37,375 people debarred from entering the United States. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier argued that it was their perfect inspection laws that prevented these people coming in. Let us analyse that statement. The hon. gentleman all through his remarks was not as fair as he usually is. We on this side of the House have placed the hon. member for Jacques Cartier on a pretty high pedestal; but on this occasion, while I do not accuse him of being intentionally unfair, I can hardly think that he gave careful attention to the reports which he read, though he appeared to be so anxious to have his statement right that he did what is seldom done in this House, he read it. I do not wonder at his doing that because he was on very dangerous ground: he was advocating a policy which I venture to say he dare not advocate before his friends the Manufacturers' Association, the principal pet, the godchild of hon. gentlemen opposite. He dare not advocate before his political friends in the large transportation companies, nor before the large importers or business men, nor before the farmers of the country, what he advocates, not so much in the words of his resolution as in the speech he has made. But he makes his appeal practically altogether to the labour element in one part of the country. He says that the laws of the United States are almost perfect, and he gives the number of people who were debarred in those three years from going into the United States. But let us see why they were debarred. A man is debarred from going into the United States if he has made a contract to work for another man. We, on the contrary, look upon it as a great advantage if a man who comes to this country has his work secured. A great number of the men debarred from the United States were men who the authorities considered had not funds enough, and might become a charge on the people of the United States. The number debarred on the ground of having made contracts was 4,912; the number debarred on account of not having sufficient funds was 21,833. So that of the total number of 37,375 debarred in those three years, 26,745 were debarred for reasons that are not in existence at all in Canada, and they would not have been debarred at all from coming into the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. TAYLOR. What about our Alien Labour law?

Mr. TURRIFF. That does not apply to people coming in from Great Britain.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not from Great Britain, but from foreign countries.

Mr. TURRIFF. Nor does it apply to a farmer in Saskatchewan who hires a man in Dakota. It has never been so applied.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the reason? Because it is no good.

Mr. TURRIFF. So that the American law which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier finds almost perfect is administered under altogether different conditions to what we have in Canada, and the results are not as good. Now, let us carry this on to its conclusion. Deducting the 26,745 who were debarred by reason of contracts or not having sufficient funds, there were left 10,630 who were excluded during those three years as being morally and physically unfit, out of a total immigration of 3,412,583, or one person excluded out of over 321. In Canada in the same three fiscal years 1,575 persons were excluded out of a total immigration of 459,997, or one out of every 292. So that under the inspection by the Immigration Department of Canada we are in reality excluding between 9 and 10 per cent more than they are excluding at Ellis Island in New York. So that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, in setting up the laws of the United States as being much ahead of our laws, and recommending the Minister of the Interior to adopt the methods of the United States, either was trying to deceive this House, which I would not think of accusing him of doing, or he had not looked carefully into the reports or given to them thorough consideration, and therefore came to a wrong conclusion. It is well known that the steamship companies endeavour as far as they can to have the inspection of certain classes made easy and to have the inspection of any settlers going to the United States through Canada made difficult, in order as far as possible to have them booked by American lines to the city of New York instead of by Canadian lines to Montreal and St. John. Another statement made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was that the Department of the Interior, through the initiation of the American officers had arranged to have returns made of all the people that went into the United States through Canada, and he gives the credit for that to the American officers. That is very wide of the fact. That question was taken up in the year 1903, not by the American officers at all, but by the Department of Immigration here, and I will read the first correspondence in the matter. This is a letter dated Ottawa, May 30, 1903:

Dear Mr. Watchorn,—I beg to inclose you herewith a list of names of Galicians and Bukowinians sailing from Europe per Allan line steamers between the middle of June, 1902, to April, 1903, and also a list of the same nationalities sailing per Beaver line steamers, from the 1st of July, 1902, to 4th of March, 1903. Would you do me the favour of having one of your clerks go over these lists and mark opposite each name the date upon which they went to the United States. I have no doubt but what you have a full list of the names in your office. I would be exceedingly obliged if you could return me these lists at an early date.

Since that letter was written regular monthly reports have been received of the passengers going to the United States within one year after their arrival at Canada. I fail to see how the hon. member for Jacques Cartier could give the credit to the American officers when the whole matter was initiated by the department here. When the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was quoting from the report of the commissioner of the United States, he read only a part of the report, leaving out a part which was very material. The hon. member was endeavouring to make out that Canada had not been active in reporting undesirables. If he will look at page 59 of the report for the year ending June 30, 1904, he will find the following paragraph:

Not only has Canada deported large numbers of undesirables who sought to permanently settle in Canada, but of the 24,797 applicants for permission to pass through Canada those who were rejected by your officers as unfit persons under United States laws, because of being afflicted with loathsome contagious diseases, were deported to Europe by the Dominion immigration authorities, the steamship companies bringing them to Canada being compelled to return them and to assume all expenses incident thereto.

During that year, the total rejections at Canadian border stations numbered 2,022, as given in table 2, page 84, of the same report. The hon. gentleman tried to make out that a great many of these people were a poor class which came through Canada in order to reach the United States but were refused admission into the United States and remained in Canada. But of that 2,022 which were refused at the American ports of entry, 297 were Canadians, 342 were excluded under the contract labour law, and 864 for the stated reason that they were liable to become public charges or not possessed of sufficient money to pass through. So that out of the 24,797 who passed through Canada to the United States, only 579 were excluded because they were unfit mentally, morally or physically. The balance were excluded because they had not money enough or were going contrary to the contract labour law.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) took it for granted that all those who were refused admission into the United States had come through Canada, but the fact is that quite a number had originally come to the United States direct and then drifted to Canada, and when they wanted to return to the United States, were refused. But I have here a statement showing the number of immigrants who arrived at American ports, passed United States inspection, drifted into Canada, applied for and were refused admission to the United States again within one year of the date of their arrival from the North American Continent. In 1906 there were 191 and in 1907, 253. These were settlers who came to the United States by New York and then came to Canada and were refused permission to return. There are several other inaccuracies in his statement.

Mr. MONK. In that report these men are specially mentioned as having been booked to the United States through Canada and going to the United States within the year. How can the hon. gentleman say they went to the United States first and then came to Canada and wanted to return ?

Mr. TURRIFF. If my hon. friend will look at that report more carefully he will find that out of that number there was quite a large proportion who were refused admission at the American ports from Canada. The bulk of them were people who were shipped through Canada to the United States, but a certain number were people who had drifted into Canada through the United States and wanted to get back.

Mr. MONK. There is no trace of that in the report whatever.

Mr. TURRIFF. I have a table which gives the number each month.

Mr. MONK. I quoted from the report giving those who came to Canada first and then went to the United States. How can the hon. gentleman say they came to the United States first and then went to Canada and then returned to the United States? It is impossible. That is not in the report.

Mr. TURRIFF. My hon. friend may be very easily mistaken because he said a very large number were refused admission into the United States but did not give the reason why. He wished us to believe they were refused because they were unfit morally or physically.

Mr. MONK. I did not give the causes. I said they were refused. Some may have been refused because they violated the contract labour law and others for other reasons. I did not pretend to give the reasons but said they had been refused by the United States and remained with us.

Mr. TURRIFF. That is what I object to all through the hon. gentleman's speech. His speech would convey an impression altogether different from the facts The hon. gentleman was referring to the American laws as being much more strict than ours and was pointing out that 2,000 remained in Canada, who intended going to the United States, because they would not be allowed into the United States. And the impression he gave was that these people were refused entry into the United States because they were morally or physically unfit.

Mr. MONK. He will find that stated in the American reports for 1902-3 and 4, and the American authorities take credit for having improved our system.

Mr. TURRIFF. If the hon. gentleman will look through the report carefully, he will find that out of the 2,022, 297 were Canadians, 342 were excluded under the contract labour law, and 864 because they were likely to become public charges or had not sufficient money. So that out of the 24,797, 519 at the most come under the heading of being undesirables either physically, morally or mentally.

Mr. MONK. That is pretty good for one year.

Mr. TURRIFF. But instead of the number being 2,022 it was only 519, and some of those 519 were people who came to the United States via New York and then drifted into Canada and wanted to go back.

Mr. MONK. No.

Mr. TURRIFF. I think I am right.

Mr. MONK. There is no authority for that.

Mr. TURRIFF. Further on in his speech the hon. gentleman said:

> Of those arriving at Canadian ports with the avowed and declared intention of going to the United States there were in 1905 12,663, and 183 were debarred. What became of them when they were debarred at our Canadian ports I do not know. It is impossible to find any trace of their disposition.

Some hon. gentleman asked him if they were still in Canada and he said he supposed they were. I want to correct the impression that those undesirables were allowed to remain in Canada. Of the 183 who were debarred the hon. gentleman said it was impossible to find out any trace of their disposition. If he had looked carefully through the reports of the Interior Department, he would find that on page 123 of the annual report concerning immigration for the year ending June 30, 1905, there is a table VII which shows by nationalities the deportation of 139 immigrants of the 183 mentioned by him. The remaining 44 were either still in the hospital at the time of the report, or, after careful examination, had been considered suitable for Canada and allowed to remain. So that those who were debarred from going to the United States were not turned loose in the Dominion of Canada, as the hon. gentleman would have us believe, but 139 of them were deported. He will find that in the report. Further on in his address the hon. gentleman made this statement:

> It is impossible for me to think that a man having at heart the interests of the country, and totally dissociated from the interests to which I have referred—great, powerful and influential interests—could ever have believed that a scheme of paying so much a head per immigrant, was a suitable, feasible and wise method for a country to follow that was desirous of increasing the national family by the addition of good, suitable and carefully selected subjects.

Now, in connection with that, I want to read a letter which, I think, the hon. gentleman should regard as satisfactory:

> Dear Mr. Carling,—I beg to refer to your telegram of the 20th (?) March and the 23rd April, on the subject of the discontinuance on December 31 next of the payment of the $5 bonus to continental steamship agents, for adults whom they may book to Manitoba and the Northwest Territories. In accordance with your directions, I have arranged that the agents shall be notified in July next. After discussing the subject with Mr. Dyke I came to the conclusion that it would be unwise to send out the notice before that date, for the reason that it might imperil the success of this year's work.

I cannot, however, allow the opportunity to pass without placing on record an expression of my opinion that the measure will in all probability tend to retard the movement which after many years of labour and effort we have been able to set in motion in the direction of the Dominion. I certainly think the bonus system was the best and most economical that could possibly be adopted for obtaining continental immigrants, and for these reasons I regret its suspension. I believe there is no difference of opinion as to the value of these people as settlers, or as to the fact that we must look to a considerable extent to the continent in settling the vacant lands in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories.

It must be borne in mind also that the payment in question was not an indiscriminate expenditure of money, but simply a payment by result. The success, however, which has attended our efforts in this direction is abundantly proved by the statistics of the emigration that has taken place. I find that in 1885 the total number of bonus emigrants was 448; in 1886, 566; in 1887, 808; and in 1888, 1,430. In this connection it will be remembered that no payments have been made excepting in those cases in which the settlement of the people in Canada has been proved beyond question. From the information I have been able to gather, I fear it is a matter of some doubt whether the steamship agents on the continent will be licensed to distribute printed matter about Canada and endeavour to attract attention to the advantages which are offered by the different parts of the country with that eagerness they have hitherto shown if they have not some more inducement to do so than the steamship and railway commissions.

I would also call to your attention our past experience——

I wish to draw the hon. gentleman's attention particularly to this passage:

—in connection with the cessation of activity in emigration work. We may pursue a policy of comparative inactivity for two or three years, and in this way show some saving in the expenditure, but the time inevitably comes when a period of activity is again necessary, and in order to get the people then, a very much larger expenditure has to be incurred than would have been necessary had a steady and moderate policy been continued, devoted to keeping before the public in all countries wherever emigration has taken place, the advantages of Canada for purposes of settlement. I do not regard our expenditure in connection with emigration either continental or British on this side as having been at all of an extravagant nature. Indeed, it has been exceedingly moderate, and very much less than that which individual railway companies in the United States have devoted year by year to such purposes.

All that I have said on the subject of continental emigration applies with equal force to the importance of keeping the Dominion prominently before the British public. Immigration of certain classes is very essential to Canada, not only to populate the vacant lands, but for the purposes of developing its trade and commerce, and it seems to me that this is not sufficiently borne in mind when the question of the comparatively small expenditure that is necessary to attract it is under consideration in the press and other quarters.

I am, yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) CHARLES TUPPER.

This, it will be seen, was a letter written by Sir Charles Tupper, when High Commissioner to England, to Hon. Mr. (now Sir John) Carling, whose department had charge of immigration work for the Dominion of Canada. Thus it will be seen that the hon. gentleman's own friends took a very different view from that which he takes. And every word of this letter is applicable at the present time. And the letter shows how easily they were satisfied in those days, for it speaks with satisfaction of an increase from 500 or 600 to 1,400.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) has been reading from a carefully prepared document. Would he have any objection to laying it on the table of the House?

Mr. TURRIFF. This is information that I have gathered from the Department of the Interior and other sources and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) will find all that I have said in 'Hansard.'

Mr. MONK. I would like to see the document the hon. gentleman has been quoting from, if he will lay it on the table.

Mr. TURRIFF. It is a letter from Sir Charles Tupper to Hon. John Carling; and as I have spoken a good deal longer than I intended and as I do not wish to take up the time of the House in all the matters here prepared, I should be pleased to hand the matter I have prepared to my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) or to lay it on the table; there is nothing in it of a private nature, it is compiled mainly from the reports of the Department of the Interior.

Now, I think I have shown some reasons at all events why this government should continue the bonus system. I think I have shown that the bonus system is not responsible for any of the undesirables that come into Canada. No doubt we should get some undesirables—you cannot have a quarter of a million of people come into a country during a year without having some undesirables among them. But I venture to say that if we do away with the bonus system we do away with our right of selection and we throw our doors open indiscriminately to everybody who wants to come into the country. The result will be here as in the United States that, instead of getting ten per cent of our immigrants from countries of southern Europe that we look upon as not being the best, we shall get, as the United States are getting from sixty-seven per cent to seventy-five per cent of our people from these countries and only a small portion from the British islands and the northern countries of Europe. So, I think the government will do well not to pay any attention to the carpings of my hon. friends opposite and their desire to do away with spending money in populating the country, but will continue the good work.

Now, while hon. members opposite are decrying the class of people coming into this country—not only those from continental western Europe, but those from the United States and British isles as well—I should like to show what their friends in the west think of these classes of people. I have here the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of April 16 instant—and I think that nobody will accuse the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of being other than a very staunch and loyal supporter of the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite. Still, the Winnipeg 'Telegram' is published in Winnipeg, and it has something to say about the class of people who are going in and who are wanted in that western country. It would not agree with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that all efforts should be stopped, it wants to see that country filled up. I will read an extract or two from that paper, written by a man that was sent out by the paper to meet several trains of immigrants coming into the country. Here is what he says:

They were mostly British immigrants, here and there interspersed with a taciturn Scandinavian, who had crossed the Atlantic on the last trip of the 'Empress of Britain,' and were being borne in on the crest of the wave of the immigration of 1908. They were pouring into the country by hundreds, and every outgoing train from Winnipeg was carrying them, here, there and everywhere, distributing them wherever the trail-blazers had hewn the first notches of advancing settlement. Hard times in Great Britain, fulsome praises of Canada from relatives, and chances to do better here had turned their attention toward the great educational campaign that had been instituted across the waters, and the tons of literature that had been distributed advertising the last great west. Hence their wholesale migration. That was also the reason that 'The Telegram' delegated a special correspondent to meet train loads of the new settlers before they reached the western metropolis and to test their plans and see how they were likely to learn the discipline of a new life in the upbuilding of a new country.

Then he goes on to say:

One perceived that they were the prospective tillers of the soil, saw that they were men who were to know what is understood as settlement or home making in western Canada, enjoyed their exuberant optimism, tolerated at times their masterful airs, smiled at their ideas of western geography, and sympathized with them in their temporary dejection. Had I been master of this great country, endeavouring to procure great people to develop her great resources, I admit I would have been satisfied.

There is the verdict of a prominent Conservative newspaper in Winnipeg. The writer admits that he was satisfied. There is another long article here that is well worth reading, but I will not take up the time of the House by reading it. The writer gives the names of a number of men that he talked with, and says:

Andrew Tweedley, a Dumfrieshire Scotchman, was bringing his wife out to Canada and intended to locate somewhere. He had some money laid by to start on. By this time I knew that I had obtained a start. The train had just pulled into Keewatin.

'What I want,' declared William Dryden, a native of Dundee, 'is to have a look at the country. That Dublin exhibition was certainly a fine thing for Canada. If the west can produce what they exhibited there, why, I ought to be in the game to stay.'

Mr. HENDERSON. That is very important.

Mr. TURRIFF. It may not be important to the hon. member, but it is important to the people of Canada. He will find when he goes before the people of Canada that no other subject is as much discussed as the immigration policy of this government, because it is the immigration policy of the Dominion of Canada that has made the difference between 1896 and the present time. So if it is not important to the hon. gentleman——

Mr. HENDERSON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. What I said was that the article he was reading was very important.

Mr. TURRIFF. I misunderstood the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HENDERSON. I admit that I said it in sarcasm.

Mr. TURRIFF. Then I was right in the first place. He will find that the country believes that the government is right in carying out the policy they have adopted. While hon. members may decry the policy of the government for party purposes, their friends in the west will not deny it, because it is filling up the west, it is building up the west; and not only is it building up the west but it is building up the whole Dominion of Canada; because you cannot build up one part of the country and make it prosperous without helping all parts of the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I apologize for having taken up so much of the time of the House. But I regard this as a subject of special importance to Canada, and of special importance to the west, and I felt justified in trying to offset in some degree the very erronous impression sought to be made by hon. members on the other side of the House throughout this discussion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman need not offer any apology for speaking so long on so important a subject. But when he concludes that he has said very much in support of the bonusing system, one is tempted to believe that his mind has been affected by some of those peculiar religious exercises which he says he has witnessed in Ottawa. As a matter of fact, what he said with regard to the bonus system bears about the same proportion to the rest of his speech that Falstaff's pennyworth of bread bore to his gallons of sack. Let us look for a moment only at certain of his arguments, because I desire to be very brief. He endeavoured to criticise the argument of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) with regard to those who, having gone to the United States via Canada had been turned back by the United States authorities; and he said that of these, 183, or some such number, had drifted from the United States over to Canada and then had attempted to cross again to the United States and been turned back. I would like to ask any man of common sense what there is in that argument. These men were permitted to come into Canada and then they were not permitted to return to the United States. Does not the hon. gentleman's statement of that fact show that the regulations concerning the admission of immigrants into Canada are more lax than those of the United States on their side? One cannot understand what logical result the hon. gentleman was aiming at when he made that statement. Then he says that some 800 or more of these were turned back to the United States because they were public charges. Is he so absolutely ignorant of the immigration laws of this country as not to know that the fact that a man is liable to become a public charge is good ground for excluding him from Canada? What then is the result of his argument in that regard? Does he pretend that these men should have been admitted to Canada in violation of the law, although they were properly turned back to the United States in the proper enforcement of an exactly similar law? Therefore this very feeble attempt at criticism of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier amounts to nothing at all, because the hon. gentleman has not succeeded in making a single point.

Then he has spoken of the wonderful results of the efforts of this government in regard to immigration. Might I ask him why it was, if to this government is due all the credit of the great immigration of recent years, that it was six years in power before there was any very substantial increase of immigration? The great increase of immigration to this country came after the great crop in the west of 1901 or 1902. It was that which advertised Canada to the world, and it was then for the first time that immigration to this country reached the hundred thousand mark. Then he tells us in the most extraordinary statement of all that we are likely, by the abolition of the bonus system, to bring into this country immigration from certain undesirable countries that he mentions. He regards Italy and Russia as especially undesirable, and he declared to this House upon his standing and responsibility as a member, that he believed the abolition of the bonus would result in bringing in immigrants from Italy and Russia. Well, can any man of common sense in this House understand that argument?

Mr. TURRIFF. I did not mention Russia at all. I mentioned Italy and other southern European countries.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not care what country the hon. gentleman mentioned; the argument is precisely the same. How in the world will the abolition of bonuses bring us immigrants from Italy and other southern European countries that we are not now receiving from those countries? Did any one ever listen to such an argument out of the mouth of mortal man as that which was presented by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat? Further than that he told us that the effect of this bonus is to keep undesirable immigrants out of this country. I am quoting his words as exactly as I can from recollection. Well, Mr. Speaker, last year we received 235,000 immigrants. With respect to 20,000 of these bonus was paid, and with respect to 215,000 no bonus was paid. Does the hon. gentleman desire us to understand that the 20,000 alone were desirable immigrants and that the 215,000 were undesirable immigrants?—because that is precisely and exactly the logical effect of the argument which he has addressed to the House in that regard. I do not think I need say anything further; to state the argument is precisely to state its refutation.

Let me say one or two words in regard to certain statements which were made by hon. gentlemen who preceded the hon. member for East Assiniboia in the debate. The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. McIntyre), who, I regret to say, is not in his seat at the moment, made a very sensible speech and with a very great portion of it I thoroughly concur. But, it did not seem to me that in all respects it was up to the standard of fairness which we might expect from that hon. gentleman, because, while he criticised my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) very severely, although in very courteous terms, he endeavoured to lead the House and the country to believe that we were desiring to conceal from the people the fact that the bonus is paid on only a very small proportion of the immigrants. Why, Mr. Speaker, the question was put for the purpose of extracting that very information because the answer to that question is the best possible argument in favour of abolishing the bonus as I shall endeavour to point out further on. How could the hon. member for South

Perth say that there was any endeavour on the part of the opposition to conceal that information from the House and the country when the information was given to this House in response to a question addressed by the government by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) ? Well, he criticised my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier because of some statements appearing at the head of one of the tables. That table established exactly what my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier was demonstrating and any man looking at that table must be an obsolute idiot if he could be deceived for one minute as to what was intended. He commented on the speech of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier in other respects which I need not especially allude to and his remarks merit no further answer than to say that the statement of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier showed completely the facts as they were disclosed by the official records and no man who read that speech with any care or listened to it with any attention could be deceived by it in any way.

The hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) was good enough to devote some of his attention to myself and he did not seem inclined to accept the statement which I had made when in the west as to the speech which I had delivered at Valleyfield, I think it was. As soon as the report of that speech came to my attention I made the correction, and I would have thought that with the usual courtesy which is extended from one side of the House to the other, my hon. friend might have accepted my statement. However, if he does not see fit to accept it that is his own matter, and I do not know that I shall be greatly distressed on that account. The hon. gentleman showed himself to be the champion of the North Atlantic Trading Company. He portrayed to this House the advantages which resulted from the North Atlantic Trading Company. There is one thing that he forgot; he forgot to explain how it was that so valuable and beneficient a contract as that which existed between this government and the North Atlantic Trading Company was put an end to by the government. Why did not my hon. friend rise in his place in parliament when the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) announced the termination of the contract and protest against it if it were so valuable a contract as he has endeavoured to make it appear. If the hon. gentleman desires any statement with regard to the character of the Galician immigrants he had better not refer so much to my remarks as to those of the hon. Minister of the Interior. In 1901 I listened in this House to the remarks of the hon. Minister of the Interior with regard to these immigrants. Does my hon. friend from Strathcona concur in that gentleman's statement as to their character ? He has read it ; will he state now whether he approves of it or repudiates it ? My hon. friend seems to regard that as a conundrum which he is unable to answer. I listened to the diatribes of the Minister of the Interior. I was influenced to some extent by them. I went west next year myself, I came back from the west and in the year 1903 and again in 1904 I said to this House that I had been subject to some prejudice against these people principally on account of the remarks of the hon. Minister of the Interior, but that I had gone to the west and I had been agreeably disappointed, that I believed the Galicians would make good settlers and I repeat the statement now and state my belief that we would hardly be able to distinguish the second generation from the sons and daughters of Canadians in the west. Last year I repeated to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior his own remarks characterizing these people in the most scandalous terms and what answer did I get from the Minister of the Interior? I got from him the answer that his statements were facts. I have these words under my hand here and the Minister of the Interior will not see fit to deny them. Thus, if the hon. member for Strathcona wishes to learn the opinion of his leader, which he is not willing either to approve or repudiate, let him turn to the debates of 1901 and commit to memory some of the adjectives which were applied by his present leader to the Galicians. So much for that portion of the matter, except that I want to say one or two words about certain remarks of my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Smith). He has been answered on all points, I think, except one, and that is the one I desire to mention. He declared in this House and he gave me an evasive answer to what I thought was a courteous question that the motion of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier was designed to do away with all efforts to promote immigration to this country. There are no such words in the resolution. My hon. friend from Nanaimo knew that perfectly well when he made that statement. The motion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier simply declared that while it is desired to maintain the efforts to promote desirable and legitimate immigration the time to pay bonuses has ceased; that is all.

Let us look for one minute at the merits of the question itself because I desire to be very brief indeed. Before doing so, however, just let me make one remark. We have had speeches from three or four gentlemen from the west, but from not one of them have we had a single reference to the 200,000 lost immigrants who ought to be in the west but who are not there according to the census returns. Does the member for Strathcona know where they are. Have they been destroyed in some great catastrophe ; are they hidden in some remote corner of the Northwest, have they gone to the United States, or did they exist only for the purpose of paying bonuses to the North Atlantic Trading Company. In the old days the Minister of Customs made the welkin ring while discanting on these discrepancies between the immigration returns and the census returns, but now there is not one word from him or from his friends as to the whereabouts of these 200,000 lost souls who are supposed to be in the west if the immigration returns are to be believed.

The total immigration to this country, according to a government return, from 1896 to 1907-1908 (nine months) was 1,209,437 ; the bonused immigration was 250,259 and the non-bonused immigration 959,179. Less than one-fifth of the total immigration during that period was bonused. During the very last year the total immigration into Canada was 235,235, the bonused immigration 20,516, and the non-bonused immigration 215,000. Can any hon. member of this House tell me how many of these 20,000 bonused immigrants would not have come to Canada if there was no bonus paid. I am not one of those who believe in the glib story often repeated on the other side of the House about men going to booking agents to decide for them the country in which they shall make their future home. I am firmly of opinion that very few of these 20,000 bonused immigrants would have been lost to Canada if we had paid no bonus at all. We got 215,000 people to come to Canada last year on the merits of Canada and by properly advertising Canada, and on 20,000 immigrants only did we pay a bonus. And when we realize that a very great majority of these 20,000 would come to Canada in any case what man of common sense will say that the motion of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is not absolutely right, and that the time has come to cease giving a bonus for immigrants.

Let us see how these bonuses have been paid during past years. From 1898 to the present time we have paid in bonuses on British immigratns $252,230.89, on United States immigrants, $82,571.97, but on continental European immigrants we have paid no less than $445,811.16, making a total altogether of $781,613.96. I have already said in the House that bonusing might be justifiable under certain conditions and for the purpose of obtaining settlers of a specially excellent type; but I have never heard it claimed that the 20,000 immigrants that came last year under the bonus were of any better class than those who came without the payment of a bonus.

The hon. member for Perth (Mr. McIntyre) called attention to some remarks I made in the House last year when the hon. member for Montmagny moved a resolution in the exact words which the Minister of the Interior used before he took office. On that occasion I said:

I was impressed with the baldness of this resolution when my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) moved it. But its somewhat bald and abrupt wording was explained afterwards when it was shown to consist of two sentences taken from two speeches of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). It could not therefore be expected to be in precisely that form which would command the adhesion of a majority in this House.

Let us look at it for a few minutes and see what it involves. It declares that the payment of bonuses on immigrants has a tendency to bring a less desirable rather than a more desirable class of people into this country. That was the utterance of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) some few years ago before he was a minister of the Crown. I do not think that sentence expresses a principle in which I would be inclined to confer. It does not seem to me that the payment of bonuses in itself has any tendency to bring in a less rather than a more desirable class of people into this country. That would depend altogether on the way you work it out. If without the payment of bonuses you permit people to come in indiscriminately, if you use every possible means by advertising and otherwise in any particular country from which immigration is not very desirable, you might, without a system of bonusing at all, increase the tendency to bring in people who are not desirable. On the other hand, if you use the system of bonusing, you might attach to it such conditions as would not tend to bring in undesirable people.

I adhere to that statement to-night. I do not see one word in it that is at all inconsistent with the motion of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). The motion of my hon. friend from Montmagny last year with regard to which I spoke was this :

That the payment of bonuses on immigration has a tendency to bring in a less rather than a more desirable class of people, that it is a most unwise policy and expenditure and therefore should not be continued.

If the hon. member for Perth (Mr. McIntyre) were here, I would ask him if he is prepared to extend the same words of commendation to this language of the Minister of the Interior before he took office, as he did to the more recent utterances of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) in regard to this matter. At all events the words quoted in the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Lavergne) are entirely inconsistent with those the Minister of the Interior has since uttered.

Reference has been made to the settlers from the United States who are going into the Canadian west. Having seen something of these settlers during the past year, I am prepared to say that I do not believe there is a better class of settlers in the western provinces than those which have come from the United States. I have seen them in Alberta and Saskatchewan especially. I have found them imbued with the spirit of our institutions, understanding the principles of responsible government and immediately upon their arrival in this country prepared to take an interest in our public affairs and to assume the full duties of citizenship. I do not think we have anything to fear from settlers of that kind. My hon. friend from Perth alluded to what he termed the spirit of sentiment of Canadian citizenship and the impossibility of our obtaining at the present juncture people from all countries in the world who fully comprehend the spirit of responsible government. I do not doubt at all that men who come from continental European countries which enjoy in some measure at least responsible government will make thoroughly good citizens, but at the same time I believe it to be most desirable so far as possible to bring into Canada and especially into the great west, only those who are already acquainted by active participation, with the duties and the responsibilities and the privileges of that same responsible government which we enjoy in Canada. Let us not forget that criticism has been made upon the English speaking nations of the world—that, the principles of democratic government are only in an experimental stage, and that the day may come when there will be some reversion from the system which we now enjoy, and more absolute system will take its place, for the very reason that men engaged in the haste and pressure of the affairs of every day life are not inclined to give to the service of the state that proportion of their time and energy which is necessary if we are to attain the highest standards of democratic responsible government. If there be anything in that criticism—and perhaps it would not be well to minimize it too greatly—it is certainly desirable that we should get in this country as far s possible men of the type I have described; and therefore, while for the most part, I concur in that regard in what my hon. friend from South Perth has said, I still insist that a great deal of care should be taken in the line of what I have just now suggested.

Of the character of the immigration that is coming into this country, I do not propose to speak by way of distinguishing one nationality from another. I propose to speak of it by way of distinguishing those of any particular nation who are fit from those of that same nation who are not fit to become citizens of Canada. We have gathered some rather important information on this point reported to us from the events of the past year and of the past six months, and I propose to refer for a few moments to a very notable speech—which unfortunately has not been very fully reported—delivered by the hon. Provincial Secretary of Ontario not very long ago. The fullest report of that speech that I have been able to obtain uses the following language:

During 1907 there were 1,163 admitted to asylums of the province, of whom 346 were foreign born.

Mr. Hanna was evidently using the expression 'foreign-born' to indicate those born out of this country.

During the past five years the perecentage of foreigners admitted to these institutions had increased from twenty to thirty per cent, while Canadian born patients had decreased from eighty to seventy per cent. In the same period, from 1903 to 1907, the cost of maintenance of foreign born patients had increased from $24,613.20 to $51,744.30. While the foreign born of the entire adult population were only twenty per cent, the total admissions to asylums from that class was thirty per cent. The figures showed the necessity of effective methods to prevent the dumping of undesirables by friends and others aided by charitable associations with no other object than to get rid of the responsibility of providing for them. Taking into consideration the probable length of life of these patients, the cost of maintaining those admitted in 1907 alone would amount to $1,487,038.80, without including any proportion for capital expenditure.

That statement attracted my attention to such an extent that I sent to Mr. Hanna and asked him for particulars of it, and I have here the particulars which I will take the liberty of bringing to the attention of the House. The statement on which he bases it is this:

For future maintenance we find that the expectation of life (Carlisle) at age 37 (the average of foreign born patients) is 29·64 years; and assuming that the cost of maintenance is $145 per patient per annum (which is a low estimate) the total future cost to the province for maintenance of the foreign born patients admitted during 1907, spread over the years they will be on our hands, will amount to the sum of $1,487,038.80 without taking into account the compounding of interest, cost of buildings and many other items of expense which are sure to arise in the future.

Then he proceeds as follows:

Of the estimated total population of the province over sixteen years of age, 1,209,308 were Canadians and 291,675 foreigners, or twenty per cent of the whole. At the same time, of the commitments to jail thirty-eight per cent were of foreign birth and the cost of providing for them amounted to $21,724.65.

The difference in percentage is rather striking. The percentage of persons born outside of Canada committed to jail should be 20 per cent. Instead of that it is 38 per cent, or nearly double. That seems to me to indicate a rather serious condition of affairs. He goes on to say:

Toronto asylum gave a practical illustration of the position. Of 262 persons admitted less than half were Canadians.

I have obtained the exact figures. They are 134 born outside of Canada and 128 born in Canada, and among those 134 born outside of Canada, 77 were recent arrivals. Mr. Hanna continues :

Of course, many of the foreign born had been resident in Canada for some years, but no less than seventy-seven were recent arrivals, who should have been deported if a satisfactory law had been in force. The majority of these people should not have been allowed to enter Canada. Owing to technicalities, only twenty-four came within the requirements of the Deportation Act, and therefore Ontario had to assume the cost of maintaining forty-three. That meant that the province would have to expend $224,000 for the support of people who had not the slightest claim for their consideration. No matter how it was regarded, the picture was one that could not be contemplated with equanimity. The figures, he claimed, showed that the proportion of insane among arrivals was twenty-six times greater than it should be, and there was a strong suspicion that many were deliberatetly sent out from Great Britain to be got rid of. An analysis showed that whole families of degenerates were included among arrivals, and weaklings of all objectionable types were represented, as well as many with criminal records.

In a communication to me, Mr. Hanna says :

An analysis of their characteristics is an interesting study in degeneracy of a type we rarely see in Canada. Sexual perverts of the most revolting kind, the criminal insane, slum degenerates, general paretics, in fact weaklings of all objectionable types are represented. Whole families of degenerates have been found.

Under these circumstances, I do not think it can be contended that our inspection of these people is what it ought to be. Does the hon. Minister of the Interior or the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) realize the care that is taken in this regard in the Uuited States ? In that country they have created an expert department for the purpose of detecting mental infirmities. While I have several extracts on this subject, I will read only one. Dr. Salmon says :

At first thought it would seem a hopeless task to attempt to pick insane and mentally defective immigrants from the unending lines of humanity which file through Ellis Island, but a systematic plan of inspection has been devised which results in the dectection of many. Officers of the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service, who have had special training in institutions for the insane, are assigned to this duty, and the other medical officers unite with them in searching for immigrants who seem a typical or who present signs even remotely suggesting mental disease.

Then he goes on to enumerate various other precautions taken for the purpose of detecting any mental infirmity.

I would like to make this one suggestion before I close. It does seem to me that we should have some regard to the fact that we have in Canada surely as good a country for the immigrant, under present conditions, as can be found on the face of the globe. I have only to remind my hon. friends opposite, who want to discuss this question in a dispassionate manner and with the view of doing what is best in the interests of the country and of assuring ourselves that future generations will have nothing on account of which to reproach us in connection with our policy, that we have in the Northwest and the eastern provinces as well as lands to offer to the best races of the world which ought to induce the very best elements of their populations to come to this country. Look at the United States to-day. Let me quote the words of Mr. James J. Hill showing how little is left in the United States for the emigrating races of Europe. In an address delivered on 'The Nation's Future' at St. Paul, Minn. on the 3rd September, 1906, Mr. Hill spoke as follows :

The United States has been able easily to take care of the great increase of population in the past because it had a vast area of unoccupied land. This was the main asset in its natural inheritance. Within practically the last half of the last century the whole country from the Mississippi river to the Rocky mountains was occupied. No pressure of population could make itself severely felt when it might be turned loose in such an empire. In those fifty years there were added 547,640,932 acres to the agricultural area, an increase of nearly 200 per cent and the increase in the actually improved acreage was nearly 300 per cent. This is cut off from the list of resources. Within the last six years there have been transferred from public to private ownership more than 100,000,000 acres of government land, an area twice the size of the state of Minnesota. The entire area of surveyed and unappropriated land within the United States is only 2½ times that amount.

At the present rate therefore every acre of public land would disappear within the next fifteen years. But as a large percentage of the lands included in this estimate are wholly or partially unfit for tillage, it is literally true to say that our arable public lands have almost disappeared. And where are our children to find standing room and the tens of millions of the future a place for wholesome industry? This is an intensely practical question. It is immediate. For within twenty years we must house and employ in some fashion 50,000,000 of additional population; and by the middle of this century, at a time when the child now born will be in the prime of life, there will be approximately 2½ times as many people in the United States as there are to-day.

With such a prospect of access of population to this great continent of which Canada forms a part, ought we to be in a hurry to bring into this country any except those who are the most desirable ? Therefore I repeat once more that it is a question of quality and not of quantity to which the immigration policy of the government should in the future be directed. I do not minimize the necessity of the west for population—the immediate necessity of the west—but with 215,000 people coming in without any bonus at all, surely we may say that the day of the bonus has gone by, and surely, with the reports of the asylums of Ontario before us, we ought to exercise a little more discretion regarding the fitness of these people than we have seen fit to use in the past. The strain of the blood of the people of Canada is a good one. It is one we are proud of. And it is no harm to say so because that man is not worth very much who is not proud of the race from which he has sprung and the blood which runs in his veins. The men who first came to this country, its pioneers, came from the shores of France, and the best blood of France from the peasant to the noble, was represented in that population which came to hew out homes for themselves in the wilderness three hundred years ago. After that we had the great trek of the Loyalists from the United States, at the time of the revolution, into Ontario and the maritime provinces and I believe also into the Eastern Townships. And when my hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. G. H. McIntyre) said no doubt inadvertently, that all our ancestors had come to this country for the purpose of bettering their condition, I would desire to take issue with him as regards that particular class. These men sacrificed home and property and prospects, everything almost that men hold dear, in order that they might remain under that flag which floats to-day over Canada and proclaims Canada to be part of the British empire. And later on those who came from Scotland, Ireland, England and Germany as well—the pioneers of Ontario and Quebec and the maritime provinces—these people were surely of the best strain that the countries from which they came could give. They came to the wilderness and hewed out homes for themselves. They converted that which was a wilderness a hundred years ago into a garden. They were the makers of Canada, not only in the material but in every sense, and the history of these people, their energy, their courage, their devotion, their faith in the future of this country, should remain an imperishable memory in the hearts of every true Canadian. Therefore surely the parliament of this country should especially look to it to see that this strain of blood in every province shall be maintained without taint and without loss of the strength, vigour and vitality which we have maintained in Canada up to the present. I have detained the House longer than I intended, and shall only say in conclusion that I shall vote for the amendment of my hon. friend.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Although this debate has been protracted to a very great length, I am sure the time of the House has been very well occupied. In fact I do not believe it has been so well occupied during the whole of this session. The subject brought to our attention is a very important one, and therefore it is important that it should be discussed in all its aspects and phases. If I may be permitted to express my own opinion, I think the debate has been maintained on a very high plane and does credit to the House. As regards the speech of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I am bound to say that he put his views in a very able and on the whole a very moderate manner. But with all due deference to those views, he has failed, in my conception at all events, to appreciate the true point of view—the only point of view from which this question can be approached and solved. The position taken by my hon. friend is that we should put an end to the policy of immigration we have been carrying out for many years. No doubt he will take issue with me on that point and say it is not his intention to put an end to the whole system; but although he does not say so in so many words, he wants to put an end to the salient feature of that system, without which it would be ineffective. He wants to put an end, I say, to that system of immigration, which, at last, has brought under cultivation those fertile lands of the west long dormant, long useless, but now, perhaps, the most important part of our national development. His opinion is that we should let nature unaided produce such results as it may; that we should, in a happy-go-lucky spirit, await and accept such results as chance may bring forth. The motive which has inspired him, so far as I have been able to appreciate it—for, I believe, on this point my hon. friend has not been as clear as in some other parts of his speech—is the fear that the present system which we have followed and are now following exposes us to the danger of having our population contaminated by certain undesirable elements. Well, Sir, the position I intend to take upon this question, the position to which I desire to draw the attention of the House, is that the primary and dominant consideration which should influence every gentleman in this House and this country is to retain and maintain upon the soil of Canada every man who is born in Canada. And, Sir, it is a strange fact, it is a fact that it has only been by the impetus given to our national life through our policy of immigration that we have put an end to the scourge of emigration which, for years, was a running sore in the very vitals of our country. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has spoken eloquently and well of the devotion of those who, in the last years of the eighteenth century sacrificed everything that they might remain subjects of the British Crown, who left everything they had in the American colonies and came here to make new homes for themselves in what was then a wilderness. The praise he gave to these people could not be too high. There never was, perhaps, in any part of the world, a greater example of devotion to conviction. But, Sir, it is a fact that the descendants of those men, and the descendants also of the early French pioneers who likewise came here from very similar motives to hew out for themselves homes in the forests of Canada—the descendants of these people at a certain time could not find a living in their own country, but went away by thousands and hundreds of thousands to seek homes in a foreign land no better endowed by nature than their own. Must I remind my hon. friends opposite that in the closing thirty years of the last century, up to the taking of the last census, the population of Canada did not increase. Decade followed decade, census followed census, but every census had the same story to tell, that Canada hardly retained even its own native population. During all these years mothers brought forth children, but when the time came to enumerate them they were not to be found in the land. Our census showed that in 1891 the population of Canada was 4,883,239, the increase during the preceding decade having been only 5·9 per cent. At the end of the following decade in 1901, the population was 5,371,315, and during that decade the population had increased barely 11 per cent. And how was that 11 per cent made up? British Columbia had increased 81 per cent. —foreign population; Manitoba had increased 67 per cent—foreign population; the Northwest Territories had increased 113 per cent—foreign population. And what were the increases in the older provinces? In New Brunswick, barely 3 per cent; in Nova Scotia, barely 2 per cent; in Ontario, 3 per cent; in Prince Edward Island less than 1 per cent; in Quebec, 10 per cent. The same story had been told by the preceding census. During that decade, ending 1891, New Brunswick showed no increase; Nova Scotia, 2 per cent; Ontario, 9 per cent; Prince Edward Island less than 1 per cent; Quebec, 9 per cent. These figures show the condition of affairs down to 1901. Sir, it is written in the Book that the Angel of Death visited the land of the Egyptians and smote the first born. If any one, not knowing our history had taken the record of these two censuses, he would have believed that even a worse visitation had come upon us, that the Angel of Death had passed through our land and smitten not only the first born but the whole offspring of the nation. These were not dead, but they were lost to us. They had gone, as I have said, from their own country to benefit and favour another with their presence and their labour.

Sir, in the history of the nineteenth century, there is perhaps no page more notable than that on which is recorded the extraordinary development of the United States which brought its population from only two and a half millions, as it was at the time the constitution was adopted in 1789, to no less than 80,000,000 as it is to-day. What is the cause of this wonderful increase? Undoubtedly, the first had been the glamour under which the new nation sprang into life. The appearance of this new democratic community amongst the monarchies of the world was an event that claimed the attention of the people of every country who had their own aspirations to freedom and who, not satisfied with their own laws, sought refuge in the new land. But it would be a fallacy to suppose that this first cause of immigration to the United States was not favoured and helped by the Americans themselves. My hon. friend the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) stated a few days ago in proposing his motion that the Americans had made no effort to bring immigration into their midst. If he meant that the federal government had done nothing of that kind, he was right. But what was not done by the federal authority was done by the state government. I have only to quote to my hon. friend a book which is in the hands of everybody, the last edition of the 'Encyclopedia Americana.' In that work he will find the following:

> The first legislation in the United States on the subject of immigration was of March 2, 1819, and merely provided that a record should be kept of the number of passengers arriving in each customs district, with their sex, age, occupation and country of birth. For many years there was no thought of anything but exultation in the number of arrivals, as increasing the wealth of the country and providing an asylum for the poor and oppressed. Even the Know-Nothink agitation of the fifties, prompted by political reasons, led to no restrictive legislation. In 1864 the first Immigration Act was passed by Congress, and was to promote and not restrain it; this was repealed 1868. Several states established immigration bureaus to encourage it and draw it their way.

Not only was there this action on the part of several states of the union, but the railway companies likewise established bureaus in Europe to bring immigration their way in order to sell their lands and to create traffic for their systems. Navigation companies did likewise. There was a continuous procession of immigrants from all the countries of Europe into the United States. In that long procession the country which led the way was Ireland. For this immigration from Ireland there was not only the same cause which affected the rest of Europe, but, as we all know, the bad and vicious legislation of years was followed in Ireland by famine. One-half the population of Ireland passed over from that country to the United States. Next after Ireland, the country which stands second in the long procession, in proportion to the number of its population, is Canada. In 1901, as I have just said, the population of Canada was 5,371,315. Of this number 4,671,815 were born in Canada, the rest were born elsewhere. But in that same year the American census showed that of the American population 1,183,255 had been born in Canada. Therefore, we had at that moment of people born in Canada, and living either in Canada or in the United States, 5,855,070. Of this number every one in five had gone to the United States. What was the cause? The cause is not difficult to find. The newcomers in the United States had to be fed and clothed and shod. They had to be supplied with tools, instruments, furniture, with all the requirements of modern civilization. A tremendous impetus was thus given to American industries. The labour market of the United States was a great attraction to our hardy population, who went to find in the United States the employment which their own country could not give them, and there, Sir, you have the explanation of the calamitous exodus which for so many years was a sore upon our country. Under these circumstances what was to be done? Were we to remain idle and make no effort to arrest this current of emigration? No, our policy was to tear a leaf out of the book of the Americans, and we not only tore a leaf out of the book of the Americans, but we went them one better. What the federal authorities at Washington left to the state governments, we did ourselves, and the results have been what we know them to be to-day, that immigration which had been coming in a thin and narrow stream, came at last in a copious flood, and not only was emigration from Canada to the United States stopped, but we now have an immigration from the United States to Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do not the American returns show that there were 19,918 emigrants from Canada to the United States last year?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Pardon me, the records of the United States do not show anything of the kind; they show that out of the immigration which came to Canada last year 19,000 immigrants percolated from Canada into the United States. But the records, so far as I have seen them, do not show that 19,000 native Canadians went to the United States. But, Sir, I do not care so much for statistics in this matter as I do for the horse sense of the people. Does not everybody know to-day that there is practically no emigration from Canada to the United States? Does not everybody now say that there is a stream of immigration from the United States to Canada? Why, Sir, in the olden times when these gentlemen were in office, they used to pile up statistics mountains high to prove to us that the country was prosperous, but when the people put their hands into their pockets they could not find prosperity there. At the present time those hon. gentlemen are piling up figures mountains high to show that there is no prosperity in this country, but when the people put their hands into their pockets they find it there. It is no use for my hon. friend to quote statistics to prove that there is still a current of emigration from Canada to the United States, because it does not exist, and everybody knows it.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you deny the correctness of the American statistics?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend is quoting American authorities. I will also quote from an American newspaper, the New York 'Sun,' which a few days ago published this article:

News comes from Winnipeg that the spring tide of emigration from our Western states to Canada has already set in and gives promise of reaching at least high water mark. This is a serious loss to the United States. Accepting, as we may, the Canadian statistics of immigration, it appears that since the opening of the century about 300,000 people have moved across the line to make homes in Canada. Probably a few have returned, but most have stayed and are content to stay.

These people do not go to Canada because they are not doing well in the United States, but because they hope to do better in the new land. Many of them are of the class which has made our great west. They or their fathers obtained lands in the west either by homesteading or by purchase for a small sum an acre. They can now sell their holdings for many times the original cost and take their money, their experience and their equipment into a new country, and there buy land for a few dollars an acre and see its value increase as did the value of their farms in this country.

Speaking in the Canadian House of Commons a few days ago, the Hon. Clifford Sifton said of these people:

I desire to say that I do not think any country could possibly get a better class of settlers than the western Americans who have come into our western provinces. They are vigorous, resourceful, law abiding; they become citizens the day they arrive in the country, and at the earliest possible moment they become producers.

I am glad to see that this testimony of my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) is verified by the testimony of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. This article goes on to say:

In point of numbers this exodus from our west to the Canadian west is in part offset by arrivals in our eastern states from eastern Canada, but Canada gets much the better end of the bargain in the exchange of population in both quality and quantity. Comparatively few Canadians now come to this country either for temporary work or for permanent residence, and many who came in earlier years have gone back, some to their former homes and many to new homes in the Northwest.

Many of these Canadian transients and many of the American emigrants take money with them. A considerable cash capital is not at all infrequent.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was a bonus paid on them ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, I would like to know what my hon. friend wants to make out of that question. If he knows himself he will tell us ; for my part I do not understand him. Now, this is the result of our policy. I say, subject to contradiction, and I do not think I can be successfully contradicted, that our policy has put an end to the scourge of emigration. But now the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) comes forward and says, Halt, stop all this, reverse your policy. I answer the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, if we halt, if we reverse our policy, and revert to the old conditions which existed before this policy was adopted, what would be the result? Let me say here that this policy was not our own creation, it was not our own invention, it was the invention of hon. gentlemen of the Conservative party. They do not seem to be at all proud of it now, but it is their misfortune. Because it is successful now they do not want it, and they did want it when it was not successful. Why was it not successful? Because they never carried it out with a stout heart. They always administered it in a feeble manner, in such a feeble manner that at one time they thought seriously of putting an end to it. But there was at that time a man of resolute opinion, a man of strong courage, if there ever was a man who had courage, and the name of that man was Sir Charles Tupper. Sir Charles Tupper wishes the Canadian government of to-day to maintain this policy, and he has reason for it. I will not quote the letter which he sent to Mr. Carling, it has already been quoted by my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff).

Now, I shall give the House the opinion of a noted French economist as to what would be the effect of a cessation of immigration to this country. Mr. Anatole Le Roy-Beaulieu is one of the leading French economists of the present day. He wrote an article to apply not to this country but to the United States, but I quote it, as the condition is absolutely similar in Canada, to show what would be the consequences of what is suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite. Mr. Le Roy-Beaulieu contributes an article to 'La Revue Hedomadaire' of January 4, 1908, upon American immigration, and this is what he says :

With a large number of Americans there exists, at present, an inclination, if not to prohibit, at least, to restrict immigration. Their present laws have already set an obstacle in its way; all who desire to land there may not do so. There are certain categories of people excluded—those stricken with contagious diseases, idiots, anarchists, the indigent and those who threaten to become a menace or a burden for the commonwealth. Every immigrant should be possessed of ten dollars. This amount might be slightly raised; entrance might be made more difficult; but it is not apparent that this would be a benefit to the United States. To diminish immigration would be to check the development of the population in the United States, and thereby shackle its economic impetus—for, it must not be lost sight of that, if the United States has had such a wonderful expansion in the world, it is due above all to immigration. It has been proven that families, which have been American for four or five generations, are less prolific than are the families of immigrants. Consequently, it might well occur that, with the checking of immigration, the population might become stationary.

Who would benefit thereby? In the first place, Canada; possibly also Europe. But they who would above all benefit thereby are the Latin American states. They will possess vast expanses of territory calculated to form two or three republics such as the United States. It would greatly benefit Mexico, Brazil, the Argentine Republic, the Latin section and Latin civilization—all of which need scarcely more than a strong current of immigration to equal the United States in development. It may possibly happen that when the United States has two or three hundred millions of inhabitants, there may no longer exist there any interest in securing emigrants from Europe. Moreover, it is questionable whether in fifty years, or in one hundred years, the European population will continue to increase as it does to-day and have as large a number of emigrants to forward to the shores of the other continent.

Be the future what it may, it now seems that, from both the standpoints of population and of industrial activity, the United States has every interest in not closing its doors against the newcomers from Europe.

Up to the present, it is true, not only has the United States freely received emigrants, but has quickly naturalized them. Frequently they have been accorded the rights of American citizenship before they were able to exercise them. Therein lie abuses and mistakes from which the United States, from which at times the European peoples, might have to suffer: but the remedy is easy. All that is required would be to exact a longer sojourn on the part of the emigrants before granting them the rights of citizenship. For exemple, they might be accorded after a residence of twenty years; a knowledge of the English language might be required of them. In a word, it would be easy to raise a barrier in the pathway of those strangers who unduly lay claim to such rights. To this I can see no serious objection. The Americans would gain thereby; equally so would the European countries; possibly even the emigrants themselves, for when they secure their rights of citizenship too easily they become the prey of politicians who dragoon them, who, for party and not for national interests, drive them to vote. Consequently, a title to American citizenship not being so freely granted, benefits would arise for all—save the adventurers and political agitators.

This reservation as to the obtaining of political franchise being excepted. I believe that the United States would commit a grave error in opposing any legal barriers to the emigrants from Europe. The United States has every interest, political and economic, in remaining, as heretofore, open to all white men who are sufficiently enterprising to brave the Atlantic. In the past century this has been one of the sources of American greatness, it is still so for the present, and will long remain so in the future.

This is intended for the American people but does not every word of it apply also to Canada? If we check immigration to this country we thereby check our prosperity and we expose ourselves to the danger of reverting to the position in which we were ten years ago. Now, what is the objection to this policy? The objection which has been raised is not against the policy itself so much as against the possible consequences of the policy. It is that, possibly, if we maintain that system of encouraging immigration, we may bring in a certain number of undesirables and degenerates. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) insisted upon that at great length and he made some statements which rather gave me a shock. He stated that our surveillance was not as effective as that of the Americans, and that we accepted degenerates and undesirables. Our immigration laws are almost word for word in that respect the same as the American laws. But, the statement of my hon. friend, or the impression that he gave was that the surveillance of the Americans was much more severe and exacting than ours and that ours was very lax. He also made the statement that we allowed in certain parties who, upon seeking admission to the United States, were rejected as undesirables. My hon. friend, as I said a moment ago, made certain statements that gave me a shock and I thought I would investigate the matter for myself I will give the result of my investigation, but perhaps I cannot do better than give the very words of my hon. friend in order that I may not misquote him or be unfair to him. This is what he said on that question on the occasion to which I have reference:

Of those arriving at Canadian ports with the avowed and declared intention of going to the United States there were 12,663 and 183 were debarred. What became of them when they were debarred at our Canadian ports I do not know, it is impossible to find any trace of their disposition. Were they sent back to Europe in the vessels in which they came to Canada? I doubt it very much. If, on the contrary they did not land and proceeded without examination to one of the examining stations on the Canadian frontier and were there debarred, I doubt very much if they were deported back to Europe.

The second class are those destined to Canada and who have gone to the United States within a year after their arrival in this country. They have to submit to examination at one of the numerous examining stations which the United States government have established along the border, on the ground that we admitted a great many undesirables who found their way into the United States. After having made representations to the Canadian government on that subject which to a large extent the American commissioners admit have been carried out, still they have found it necessary to establish these posts of examination. In the second class of immigrants we find 8,517 and 589 were debarred. I shall not go into the details of the causes of their exclusion from the United States, many were refused admission for those causes which were causes of exclusion from Canada and how they succeeded in entering Canada I do not know. Nor do I know what became of them when they were refused admission to the United States. It is impossible to trace the matter any further, but my own view is that they remained in Canada, and that we have to-day in Canada these immigrants who were deemed undesirables under the American law for pronounced and stated causes.

Nothing can be clearer than that my hon. friend conveyed the impression that while the Canadian authorities at Quebec had allowed a certain number to come in of an undesirable character these parties, upon seeking admission to the United States, were turned back and they had remained in our midst ever since. My hon. friend professed to be very much aggrieved by that state of affairs. My hon. friend and I are old friends and I would not leave him in an agony of doubt. My hon. friend is pained and chagrined to believe that there are hundreds and perhaps thousands of degenerates who have sought admission to the United States but who were kept in this country. But if the hon. gentleman had looked further into the report of the American commissioner from which he quoted he would have been relieved of his pain; he would have found there that according to the report of the American agent these degenerates have been sent back to Europe by the Canadian authorities. This is what I find in the report of the American commissioner, and if my hon. friend had examined it more carefully it is there for him to also find it.

Notwithstanding the fact that the bureau of immigration was duly represented at all the Atlantic ocean ports of the Dominion of Canada by a commissioner and a full corps of inspectors as early as 1893, no deportations whatever are recorded prior to the above mentioned date, (September 1, 1901) so that the whole value of accomplished results up to that time was lost, firstly for want of a sufficient border force, and secondly because the Dominion of Canada made no scrutiny of its immigrants, and consequently had not made arrangements, at least in practice, for deporting undesirables.

Now, however, a change has been effected, a most salutory one, in both instances, the United States has strongly guarded the border at all its vulnerable points, and the Dominion government finding the unwelcome stream successfully dammed and flowing back on itself, has made very rapid strides towards adopting a policy, in the main similar to the bureau's policy.

As an evidence of this change, it should be stated that the Canadian immigration department has deported a large number of applicants for admission to Canada on the ground that they were unfit to mingle with the citizens of Canada in the pursuit of that life and pleasure which they came here to find.

Not only has Canada deported large numbers of undesirables, who sought to permanently settle in Canada, but of the 24,797 applicants for permission to pass through Canada to the United States, those who were rejected by your officers as unfit persons under United States laws, because of being afflicted with loathsome contagious diseases, were deported to Europe by the Dominion immigration authorities, the steamship companies bringing them to Canada being compelled to return them and to assume all expenses incident thereto.

Mr. MONK. This surely could not apply to the immigrants who have come from Europe and who have been admitted to Canada by our own authorities and who within a year or after a year at one of the border stations tried to get into the United States and are refused. We could not deal with them because we have admitted them into this country.

Mr. TALBOT. How do you know ?

Mr. MONK. I know because there is no doubt about it. What the right hon. gentleman has said may perhaps apply to the immigrant when he arrives in Halifax or at the first port of landing in America, but it cannot apply to the other two classes I refer to, namely, the immigrant who is admitted to Canada by our own authorities and who is refused at Niagara or some other border station within a year or after a year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In the observation of my hon. friend there is both an admission and a negation and I will deal with the admission first. He may have said to-day that this report of the American agent applies, as it does apply, to those who land in Quebec intending to go to the United States, but what my hon. friend did say the other day was :

Of those arriving at Canadian ports with the avowed and declared intention of going to the United States there were 12,663 and 183 were debarred. What became of them when they were debarred at our Canadian ports I do not know, it is impossible to find any trace of their disposition. Were they sent back to Europe in the vessels in which they came to Canada? I doubt it very much.

The hon. gentleman doubted it a few days ago but he does not doubt it now.

Mr. MONK. There is no proof of it in our own reports on immigration.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is a proof of it in the report of the American commissioner from which my hon. friend was quoting. I shall read the words again.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What page ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Page 79.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What report ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The report of 1904 which was quoted by my hon. friend (Mr. Monk). There is there a statement that those who are undesirable under American laws and landed at Quebec were sent back to Europe. This is what the American commissioner says :

Not only has Canada deported large numbers of undesirables, who sought to permanently settle in Canada, but of the 24,797 applicants for permission to pass through Canada to the United States, those who were rejected by your officers as unfit persons under United States laws, because of being afflicted with loathsome contagious diseases, were deported to Europe by the Dominion immigration authorities, the steamship companies bringing them to Canada being compelled to return them and to assume all expenses incident thereto.

Nothing could be plainer than this. Even on the admission of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) this applies to those who landed in Quebec with the intention of going to the United States. The hon. gentleman asks : What becomes of those who resided in Canada for some time and then sought admission to the United States? Well, as I understand this report—but as to this I do not speak with the same certainty as with regard to the other question—as I understand this report those people were also examined at the border station and sent back because the American agent here speaks of 24,797 applicants for permission to pass through Canada to the United States and at page 87 of the report I find :

——	No. manifested.	No. admitted.	No. rejected.
Examined at ocean ports of arrival..	15,399	15,097	262
Examined by border boards of special inquiry..	9,438	8,771	667

—and it gives the total manifested at 24,797 which is the same number mentioned by the commissioner in his report when he says :

But of the 24,797 applicants for permission to pass through Canada to the United States, those who were rejected by your officers as unfit persons under United States laws, because of being afflicted with loathsome contagious diseases were deported to Europe by the Dominion immigration authorities, the steamship companies bringing them to Canada being compelled to return them and to assume all expenses incident thereto.

Therefore it shows as I understand it, that although they came later on they were examined at the border stations and rejected and sent back to Europe. If that be so it is a complete answer to my hon. friend. But even if it were not so, are we to reject a system of this kind because there may be abuses under it. If my hon. friend were logical his conclusion would be that if the Americans have a superior system of examination we should adopt their system of examination but not reject their policy. Now, to deal with the remarks of the leader of the opposition ; he stated and stated correctly that many degenerates from England have been brought into Canada. But, Sir, far from that being a part of our system of immigration it is absolutely against our system, and we are doing our best to prevent these degenerates from landing in Canada. We know that charitable institutions are disposed to send such people out here, but we have protested against it and the Minister of the Interior in order to prevent a practice has issued an order in these words :

The minister, therefore, recommends that an order in council be passed prohibiting from and after the fifteenth day of April, 1908, the landing in Canada of any person whose passage has been paid, wholly or in part, by any charitable organization or out of public moneys unless it is shown that the authority in writing of the assistant superintendent of emigration for Canada in London, has been obtained for the emigration of such person, and that such authority has been acted upon within a period of sixty days.

This regulation will it is expected absolutely do away with the practice which has prevailed in this respect. There is another feature of this question as to which I shall say a word. My hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) and my hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Robitaille) have complained that we have no emigration system in France. But before I refer to that let me say to my hon. friend from Montmagny that he made a statement in his speech which on reflection he seriously should regret, because it is absolutely unfair to a gentleman who is not in this House to defend himself, and for whose alleged action my hon. friend has sought to make the Canadian government responsible.

My hon. friend in his speech the other day wanted to prove that Mr. Smart had intended to devise a system specially against French immigration, and he thought he would support his contention by an extract from a newspaper which he had quoted last year. The extract is as follows :

The 'Northern Express,' Liverpool, February 10, 1902.—British blood is needed.

The Hon. J. A. Smart, Deputy Minister of the Interior of Canada, and Mr. W. T. R. Preston, immigration agent general for the Dominion, arrived in Liverpool to-day from London and Glasgow to arrange a gigantic system of British immigration to Canada.

More British blood is also needed to be infused if the views of the Dominion of Canada is not to be Frenchified by the rapid growth of the French population.

Now, Sir, I ask my hon. friend, as a fair and candid man, where does he find that Mr. Smart used that language.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. It is a mistake in 'Hansard'; the last words are the words used by Mr. Smart.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have looked at my hon. friend's language in 'Hansard' of last year, and it is exactly the same.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Yes, because I had the paragraph saying that Mr. Smart had said so and so, but I did not put in any notes. Only his words in 'Hansard' are copied exactly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have not the paper at hand. I can only tell my hon. friend that if this is all the authority he has for accusing Mr. Smart, he is guilty of a serious and unwarranted accusation against an honourable man. First of all, is it fair or right? This is said to be an act in 1903. Mr. Smart has not been in the service of the government for four years. The attention of the government was never called to anything of the kind.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I beg the right hon. gentleman's pardon. It was called to their attention by the ex-member for Labelle, Mr. Bourassa.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. When?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. At the time the statement was made, in 1902.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I never heard of it. I do not say that it was not done, but my attention was not called to it. If it had been, I would have thought it advisable to have called Mr. Smart's attention to it. But to say that we are responsible when Mr. Smart has not been in the employ of the government for four years is stretching our responsibility to an extreme point.

But now I come to the statement of my hon. friend from Montmagny that we have no system of immigration in France. I say at once that our system of immigration in France has been inadequate ; but we have had no better system there because we have had no direct line of communication between Canada and France. The government has made efforts for twenty years to establish such a line, not only for commercial purposes but for purposes of immigration. The moment we established a line of communication with France we attempted to establish a system of immigration in France, and at present we have four immigration agents in that country—Mr. Wiallard, Mr. Foursin, Mr. Geoffrion and Mr. Montpetit. In addition to these we have sent from time to time different agents. H. F. Morel was appointed as delegate to Belgium for four months from December 7, 1907. Mr. Morel already has had experience at this work, having been employed for six months by the department as special agent from December, 1905, to June, 1906. Paul Auve, Morinville, Alberta, has been offered a position as farmer delegate in France. The department is not yet advised of his acceptance. He is a practical farmer and has spent fifteen years in western Canada. J. E. Deslauriers has been appointed temporarily to do emigration work in France and Belgium. He would probably enter upon his work on or about the 1st instant. Edouard Parent, of St. Jean Baptiste, Manitoba, had been appointed as farmer delegate to France. The appointment is for three months from January 20, 1908. Mr. Parent is a qualified farmer and strongly recommended as a suitable man.

Now that we have a line of communication with France, we will pursue the work with all possible diligence, because we realize—and in this I am sure I voice the sentiments of everybody in this House and out of it—that we cannot have a more valuable class of immigrants than the French peasants and the Belgian peasants. Every one acknowledges that they possess thrift, morality and all the qualities that go to make good citizens. For these reasons I think my hon. friend will exempt us from the blame he has attempted to fasten upon us.

Now, I have only one word more to say. Everybody admits that one of the sources of wealth of any nation is its immigration. All economists agree that the immigrant brings with him a source of wealth, not only in the cash which he possesses but in the labour he brings to the country of his adoption. The value of the wealth which an immigrant brings to a country has been variously estimated; it is impossible to give an exact figure in that respect. Some have estimated the value at $1,000; but this is not very satisfactory. I find in an American work on immigration by Prescott F. Hall, a paragraph which sems to give a fairly satisfactory basis of estimating the value of an immigrant. Mr. Hall says :

> It is difficult, therefore, to say precisely what the money value of the immigrant is. The remote as well as the immediate effects of his coming must be considered, and also the state of employment and the rate of wages at the time of his arrival. A thoroughly conservative estimate is probably that of Mr. John B. Webber, formerly Commissioner of Immigration at the port of New York. He assumes that there were 10,000,000 foreign born at the date of the eleventh census and that 2,000,000 of these were working at an average of $1 per day; and he points out that these persons added $600,000,000 a year to the earnings of the country.

Now, Sir, last year we received over 200,000 immigrants. If we take the estimate of Mr. Hall that twenty per cent of these were earning $1 a day, these immigrants added to the wealth of the country no less than $12,000,000. We know for a fact that the American immigrants brought into the country, in money and goods equivalent to money, in one year $49,000,000 and in another year over $50,000,000. Does anybody think under such circumstances that we should deprive ourselves of the valuable addition to our wealth which our policy of immigration has brought to this country ? Sir, if we were to do that, we would revert to the condition of ten years ago when we were losing our population. I do not claim that the policy we have at the present time is to be permanent ; it is only a temporary policy ; it cannot last for ever ; but under the existing circumstances, with a powerful neighbour to the south, having a population of 80,000,000, while our population is only 6,000,000, the time has not yet some for departing from that policy, and I would therefore invite the House to reject the motion of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Monk.

Amendment, Mr. Monk, negatived.

Motion agreed to and House went into Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I beg to give notice of the following motion. I propose to move in amendment to the motion to go into Supply when next made :

This House regrets that the sums spent by the country to pay bonuses on immigration have not been employed in bringing back to our country the Canadians who have emigrated to the United States.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.45 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 24, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

LANDS IN SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved that the House go into committee on Monday next to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, that the Minister of Finance may, under the authority of the Governor in Council, pay to the proper authorities of each of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, out of the Assurance Fund formed under the Territories Real Property Act, chapter 26, of the statutes of 1886, and continued under the Land Titles Act, 1894, chapter 28, of the statutes of the year, so much thereof as has arisen from transactions relating to lands now within such province.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

SALVATION ARMY IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I wish to rise to a question of privilege relating to a letter written by Dr. Nadeau, medical officer of the immigration branch at Quebec, which I will read before the House because he apparently so desires. Dr. Nadeau is under the impression that in the remarks which I offered the other day upon the question of immigration I did cast insinuations upon the integrity of the medical men of Quebec who are immigration officers. Here is what he writes to me:

Quebec, April 21, 1908.

My dear Lavergne,—My attention has just been called to a report which 'L'Action Sociale' of the 18th instant has given of a speech purpoted to have been lately delivered by you in the House upon the question of immigration.

Following is the report of 'L'Action Sociale:'

THE SALVATION ARMY.

I challenge the minister, said Mr. Lavergne, to have an inquiry made into the Salvation Army and the immigrants it has brought into Quebec, and to ask the doctors at Quebec to give their evidence; but I hope this time the government will not stop the mouths of the witnesses who give evidence. There has been collusion between the officers at Quebec and the Salvation Army and I have it from officers who receive the immigrants at Quebec that before they pass the medical examination these immigrants go to the barracks and get the password of the Salvation Army at Quebec, and then go back and answer the doctor. The minister cannot contradict that, if he looks at the correspondence produced.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member is making a great many statements which he puts forward as statements of fact. The statement that immigrants coming out under the auspices of the Salvation Army are treated any different from any other immigrants who come out, so far as my knowledge goes, is absolutely incorrect; and if he can by any means demonstrate that it is the fact we will have a change in the immigration service at Quebec immediately.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. All last summer the immigrants brought out by the Salvation Army were sent to the barracks and there they got the password from the Salvation Army officers to answer the doctors of the Immigration Department. Not only was a complaint laid before the Interior Department here, but Mr. Doyle and the immigration doctors at Quebec, I think Dr. Nadeau and Dr. Potvin were advised, that if there were one hundred Salvation Army immigrants, they would pass before the doctor first, but if less, they would go to the barracks first. That is the statement I have to make and on it I would like the department to throw more light.

Dr. Nadeau adds:

So then, the Salvation Army of England, exclusively, devotes its attention in the recruiting of immigrants, without trying to locate them, relying as to that upon its representatives at Quebec, whose business office is under the same roof as the office of the government agent himself, where all examinations are passed, medical and civil.

As a rule, those representatives keep a list of employment offers to several mechanics or to farmers far in excess of the number of arrivals. Thus they are able to direct systematically and more safely these people to their destination.

The immigrants who do not come under the auspices of the Salvation Army are supposed to have received at the time of their departure from Europe the necessary directions that will enable them to reach their destination; at least, that is mentioned on their tickets. So that they can go directly from the medical inspectors to the civil inspectors, who require them to say what trade or calling they follow, and where they are going.

At first, immigrants coming out under the auspices of the Salvation Army, having passed the medicad examination, had to go to the barracks to learn what their destination was and then came back to comply with all the requirements of the civil examination.

That system gave rise to many inconveniencies, above all it greatly delayed the inspection. It was then decided that the immigrants would go to the barracks first in order to learn what their destination is and should afterwards pass the medical examination, so as to be able to give all the necessary information, when passing the civil examination.

This rule was to apply only if there were less than one hundred Salvation Army immigrants. Otherwise, the Salvation Army officers, for convenience sake, volunteered to attend at the arrival of the steamer at Rimouski, in order to acquaint all the passengers with their destination, so that everything should be ready when they landed at Quebec.

Neither Mr. Doyle or the doctors did ever receive from Ottawa any directions as to that; but the representative of the Salvation Army the immigration agent and the doctors came to an understanding. Besides, all those particulars of the administration are settled in the same way. Our instructions concerning the medical examination of the immigrants admit of no relaxation in favour of anybody, neither for the Salvation Army people nor for any other immigrants. Moreover, I am at a loss to understand what password could be given to the diseased immigrants, so as to conceal their shortcomings, when they come to pass the medical examination.

Dr. Nadeau's letter shows that what I stated the other day is entirely true, namely, that the immigrants who come out under the auspices of the Salvation Army are treated differently from other immigrants. The officers of the Interior Department at Quebec confer with the representatives of the Salvation Army. I said nothing else. I never intended to cast any reflection upon the integrity of the medical officers at the port of Quebec. I am satisfied that they all discharge their duty. This I did say and I say again: the immigrants that come out under the auspices of the Salvation Army receive a different treatment; the officers of the Army that take care of those immigrants are located in the same building as the immigration agency. When they come out, they do not know where to go, having all been inscribed by their officers as farm labourers; then the representatives of the Army direct them where to go, and as the majority of them are mechanics they do not go out and work upon farms, notwithstanding the policy of the government, as laid down by the minister.

THE NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—MAJOR HODGINS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I have received from Mr. Parent, the Chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commission, the following papers, which I desire to lay before the House :

The Commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway, Ottawa.

Office of the Chairman,
April 23, 1908.

Memorandum to the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Prime Minister.

A letter from Major Hodgins, lately our district engineer, at Kenora, Ontario, has been given wide publicity in the press, namely by the Manitoba 'Free Press' and the Ottawa 'Morning Citizen,' where it was commented upon.

There are insinuations and statements in it that should not be allowed to pass unanswered.

Without laying any specific charges, Mr. Hodgins makes vague, general accusations that are absolutely groundless. It is plain that the object in view is to cause us annoyance, without any regard to truth or public interest.

If Major Hodgins has had in his possession any evidence of irregularities or wrong-doing, he should have submitted such to the commissioners. As a corporate body, and being the first concerned, it would have been our duty to investigate the matter promptly. If he had done so, and the commissioners had refused to look into his charges, then he might have been justified in issuing statements to the public. There is nothing in Major Hodgins' allegations to indicate that he is even now in possession of any such evidence.

Taking up seriatim the allegations in Major Hodgins' letter as printed in the papers:

1. That the government is paying padded accounts for the work done, and that the Grand Trunk Pacific people are making no objection because they merely have to pay the added interest.

This statement is without any fondation. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company make objections when they see fit, and these are looked into at once with due care.

2. They (the commissioners) wanted to change my ideas, based on a good many years experience, on the construction to the classification that is allowed to contractors in Quebec.

This statement is also without foundation. The commissioners never, at any time, requested Major Hodgins to adopt in his district any classification not in accordance with the contract and specifications. As to the classification in Quebec, it was looked over and found to be agreeing with these and therefore perfectly regular.

3. If Mr. Poulin, the engineer appointed by Mr. Parent to replace me on the western district, has allowed the introduction of a classification similar to that allowed in Quebec, this will account for the increase in the estimatetd cost of the line. If this increase amounts to $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 it is time the public demanded some explanation.

Such hypothetical statements of course amount to nothing at all. In the first place, Mr. Poulin was not appointed by Mr. Parent, the chairman, who did not even suggest it, but by the board, on the recommendation of the chief engineer, because he was considered to be the best man for the position and to take hold of the work of organizing the district, which had been left in such a bad shape by Major Hodgins. At this point it may be well to remark that classification comes from the chief engineer and not the chairman or the commissioners as Major Hodgins puts it.

Since leaving our employment, Major Hodgins has talked a good deal openly, in fact much more than professional dignity and the sense of justice would seem usually to permit. It is time, we feel, in justice to ourselves and to the public, before whom there is an evident desire to misrepresent the facts, to call a halt and make it necessary for the accuser to bring facts to substantiate his charges.

You will find, attached, newspaper clippings in reference to Major Hodgins' letter, and all correspondence relating to the circumstances of his dismissal; also a letter from our chief engineer, Mr. Lumsden, on the same subject.

In conclusion the commissioners would respectfully request, as they do not wish to remain under the aspersion which such reports cast on them, that the whole matter be referred to and looked into by a committee of the House, and that Major Hodgins be assigned to appear before the same to repeat his charges in a specific manner in order to substantiate them if he can. Then an opportunity will be given right minded people to see where the truth is and if public interest would have been better served by keeping an engineer who ignored the specifications or by replacing him, as was done, by one who will follow them.

The commissioners trust their request will receive early attention.

S. N. PARENT,
Chairman.

The communication of the chief engineer referred to in this letter is as follows :

Ottawa, April 23, 1908.

Sirs,—In regard to the article which appeared in the Manitoba 'Free Press' of the 18th instant and the editorial in the 'Morning Citizen' of the 22nd instant referring to a letter from Major E. A. Hodgins, now of Victoria, B.C., I beg to state that as far as I know no estimates or accounts for work done have been padded. The Grand Trunk Pacific have made from time to time some general objections as to classifications in district 'F,' but until after the dates above referred to no details giving actual points where such over-classification was claimed were submitted to me. As you are aware I on the 14th and 30th January, issued special circulars to the district engineers, giving my interpretation of clauses 34, 35 and 36 of our general specifications accompanied by a diagram explanatory of same, and I have letters from the district engineers in districts A, B, and F, where actual grading was being proceeded with, stating that my interpretation had been and is being adhered to. My letter of the 19th of September last to the chairman, gives my reasons for suggesting a change in district engineers in district F.

Your obedient servant,
HUGH LUMSDEN.

The Commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway,
Ottawa, Ont.

In view of the request contained in this letter, I beg to inform my hon. friend and the House that on Monday next I will move that the matter be referred to a special committee for investigation.

ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES AT SOREL.

Mr. BERGERON. I beg to renew my question of yesterday as to whether a report has been made by Mr. Gaudet who has conducted the Sorel investigation and to ask the minister to bring the report down to the House if it is ready ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Gaudet came to Ottawa the other day to complete the investigation. I hope the report will be ready for Monday.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Finance Minister any information to give us with respect to the Insurance Bill which was brought down some weeks ago ? It was the subject of more or less investigation in the Banking and Commerce Committee, but since that time little has been heard of it.

Mr. FIELDING. In view of the very extended hearing which took place before the Committee on Banking and Commerce and the numerous statements made, I desired that some time should elapse before proceeding with the Bill, in order that the officials of the Insurance Department might have an opportunity of studying all that was said. We hope at an early date to make a further move in the matter.

QUEBEC BRIDGE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the Minister of Railways any further information in regard to the printing of the report of the Quebec Bridge Commission ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I made inquiry concerning that report, and I believe that the report proper with the appendices will be printed in a very short time. The drawings and the other parts of the report will be a little later.

I might say in this connection that I propose to move at the proper time that more than the ordinary number of copies shall be printed on account of the very many inquiries we have had for the report. We have had several cables from Europe, and the High Commissioner has informed us that he has had a great many inquiries. In order to supply that demand which I think we should do for the general information of the public, we will have to send quite a large number there. It strikes me that it would be very proper that at least one or two copies of the report should be placed in each public library and that every university library ought to have two or three copies for general information. With this in view I propose at the proper time to move that we have a larger number printed than the regular number.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—HILLSBOROUGH BRIDGE—THE HANEY CLAIM.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). I desire to ask whether or not the claim for extras made by Mr. Haney in connection with the construction of the Hillsborough bridge a few years ago has been allowed, or what progress has been made ?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The claim made by Mr. Haney was not all for extras. The claim would have been disposed of had it not been for a change in chief engineer of the department which rendered it undesirable for the present chief engineer of railways and canals to deal with the accounts, they having already been dealt with by him as chief engineer of Mr. Haney, as he was at that time. The matter was referred to Mr. Schreiber who had been chief engineer, his powers being extended so that he could deal with the question of equity as well as those directly coming under his charge as chief engineer. Mr. Schreiber made an award, the amount of which, I fancy, will have to be placed in the supplementary estimates and can then be fully discussed. The papers in the case were brought down some time ago.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Can the minister tell us the amount of the award and the amount of the claims of Mr. Haney which are not for extras ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The documents containing all this information have been on the table of the House for some time, or if not, they will be presented to the House. Speaking in round figures and from memory only, I believe Mr. Haney's claim was for $390,000, and the arbitrator awarded him $164,000.

SUPPLY—TIMBER LIMITS—DREDGING.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to say on two or three subjects. I understood last night that the order of business to-day would be Supply, the estimates of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) being taken up. I see that hon. gentleman is not in his place; and, as in a few minutes, I wish to address a few remarks to him, I will thank the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he will ask the Minister of Public Works to be in his seat. Meantime, I will occupy a few minutes with another matter.

I am not at all surprised that the government, after having a number of scandals exposed during the present session in connection with timber limits, mining leases, civil service administration, dredging contracts and numerous other matters, have sent the rank and file of their supporters hunting through the files of the departments covering the term of the Conservative administration for material to offset these scandals, if possible. We have many instances here in recent discussions of hon. gentlemen referring to matters which they could only find in the files of the departments. It is evident that a horde has been sent hunting through the files containing the records under the Conservative government to see if something could not be raked up reflecting upon the action of Conservative members of this House. A few days ago, an hon. gentleman was put up to make charges against myself. This hon. gentleman said:

I also find another member of this parliament who is known to most of you, Geo. Taylor M.P., who made application for friends for townships 39, 40 and 41, ranges 18, 19 and 20 west meridian, not a very small application; he did not go in for small things.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. I immediately rose in my place and said:

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will allow me—he has been perusing the records, I presume, of the Department of the Interior, where he gets his information. I challenge him to produce an application signed by me on behalf of anybody. Mr. Walter Beaty made an application in his own behalf, and I forwarded his letter. The hon. gentleman cannot find anything else in the department, no application that I ever made, either on my own behalf or on behalf of anybody else. He has made a statement. I challenge him either to produce the proof or to withdraw the statement.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. The hon. gentleman is like the rest, he says he made an application, and gives the name of one.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I did not make an application; I inclosed his letter in one I wrote to the minister.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. That is just as good.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is that a crime? It is simply disgraceful for a member to get up in his place and make a charge against a member of parliament, and then either refuse to take it back or to produce the document.

And further on:

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman said that the applications are on file; are they in the department or in the library?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I said the records were in the library.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. In the 'Hansard.'

Mr. TAYLOR. In the speech made by the late Ananias Cameron?

Mr. SPROULE. And John Charlton.

Mr. TAYLOR. They made statements, as the hon. gentleman is making them, without any authority.

I repeat that challenge to-day—let the government search every file during the administration of the late Conservative government, and they will not find an application made by me, either on my own behalf or on behalf of anybody else for any timber limit. I happened to be in the Public Accounts Committee and was looking over one of the files that had been brought to the committee in charge of an officer of one of the departments—for members of the opposition have no rights, we are told, and a government officer was in charge of the file. I looked over it and made a précis of what the file contained. Here is a portion of it:

Letter dated September 2, 1903, from Latchford, McDougall & Daly, applying on behalf of Colin & Campbell, of Edmonton, to have department advertise a timber berth in the district of Alberta, 8 miles by 3½ miles on each side of McLeod river. Berth was numbered 1096.

September 10, 1903. Letter from P. G. Keyes to Latchford, McDougall & Daly, informing them that berth 1096 should be shortly advertised.

Letter dated September 10, P. G. Keyes to Crown timber agent of Edmonton, informing him to the same effect.

September 10, letter from P. G. Keyes to E. Stewart, Department of Forestry, Ottawa, inclosing copy of advertisement for berth 1096 in district of Alberta.

There are a lot of other letters on file that do not amount to much, but after a while we come down to a letter dated Ottawa, November 11, 1903, as follows:

I hereby offer a bonus of $1,000 for timber berth No. 1096 containing square miles, situated for which public competition is being invited, and I inclose an accepted cheque on Traders' Bank for $1,000, being amount of said bonus.

(Sgd.) JOHN GENTLES,
Kincardine,
Per J. T.

On the margin is marked 'received cheque $1,000, 11-11-03.'

(Sgd.) P. R. for accountant.

This letter is marked as having been received, stamped with the Department of the Interior, Wednesday, 18th November, 1903, Timber and Mines Branch.

On the bottom of the letter is written in red ink to address letter to Hon. John Tolmie, Kincardine, Ontario.

This tender was received in an envelope bearing no post-mark, the address printed thereon being 'Timber and Mines Branch, Department of the Interior, Ottawa.'

There is no stamp on envelope as to when it was received.

Memo. attached: John Gentles, care of Hon. John Tolmie, Kincardine, Ontario.

Cash $1,000 bonus for license to cut timber on limit 1096.

And here is copy of a receipt dated November 11, Department of the Interior, Timber and Mines Branch :

Received from John Gentles, care of Hon. John Tolmie, Kincardine, Ontario, the sum of one thousand dollars in payment of bonus for a license to cut timber on limit No. 1096.

(Sgd.) G. U. RYLEY,
Chief Clerk,
Per Fans Loyer, book-keeper.

Then there is more correspondence involving a good deal of dickering, but I need not quote any of it until we come to a letter dated Kincardine, 11th February, 1904, and addressed to P. G. Keyes, secretary :

My Dear Sir,—Inclosed please find license duly signed by Mr. Gentles and returned by myself. There is something I do not fully understand, and that is that while the license states the lease is from December 11, 1903, to April 30, 1904, the receipt for moneys paid states from December 11, 1903, to December 11, 1904. Kindly explain this.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) JOHN TOLMIE.

Then there is correspondence showing that the ground rent had not been paid. Mr. Keyes writes to Mr. Tolmie stating that amounts owing on berths 1092, 1095 and 1096 had been called to his attention on 28th September, and if they were not paid within thirty days steps would be taken to have berths cancelled, and he now begs to state that the amount involved had not been paid, and that Mr. Gentles' right to cut timber on these berths was withdrawn from the records of the department. Mr. Tolmie wrote back immediately under date of November 20, 1905, as follows :—

Hon. Frank Oliver,
Minister of the Interior.

Dear Mr. Oliver,—I inclose you a letter from the secretary of your department which explains itself. My partner, Mr. John Gentles, in this deal——

Mr. Gentles was his partner in this deal. It looks as if he had had a good many other deals.

My partner, Mr. John Gentles, in this deal was inclined to throw up and hence the delay in paying the ground rent. Kindly send me statement of account due with interest to date and we will send it to you on receipt of the statement.

Kindest regards from yours truly,
JOHN TOLMIE.

Mr. Tolmie was a member then, because there were several letters addressed to him in the House of Commons when the correspondence was going on. I need not read all the letters, but there is another one here dated 16th June, 1906.

W. W. Cory,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

Dear Mr. Cory,—As I told you the other day by phone we sold the limits owned by Mr. Gentles and myself, 1092, 1095 and 1096, on the McLeod river, Alberta. The ground rent has been paid by us until either the 1st of May or 1st of June, 1906. The parties purchasing the same assume the payment of the rent for 1906-7. The assignment from Mr. Gentles, signed by him, has been mailed to you, and I trust the non-payment of rent by us for 1906-7 will not be a bar in the way of closing the assignment as we have lost enough. The party purchasing them has inspected the limits and are satisfied, and I trust you will complete your part with us with as much despatch as possible.

Then comes the assignment of these limits to Mr. Gentles at $4,000. These are copies of the original documents on file, showing that a member of this House, while he was a member, made application with his partner Mr. Gentles, and got a limit from this government and sold the same for $4,000. Yet in the face of facts such as these, hon. gentlemen in the back benches will get up and accuse hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who never had anything to do with limits, in order to throw out to the country that we were as bad or worse when the Conservatives were in power. That is all I propose saying on that matter.

Now I have another matter with regard to which I wish to say a few words with regard to the Minister of Public Works. Two days ago when my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) moved the adjournment of the House in order to discuss an important matter—and it has turned out to be important, because since that discussion the Minister of Public Works has cancelled the order in council that he had passed renewing certain dredging contracts. When the matter was up I undertook to discuss a question relating to the Quebec harbour improvement in which there was some dredging, and the Minister of Public Works raised a point of order that I could not discuss that matter because the motion only referred to dredging contracts in the neighbourhood of Midland. But in reading the resolution, you, Mr. Speaker, said it read 'there and at other points' and you authorized me to speak on dredging elsewhere. Then I referred to a contract that was given by this government and notified the Minister of Public Works not to renew it again. It was given in 1903 for the Quebec harbour improvements, in which there was a large amount of dredging done, but with the dredging there were certain goods supplied. That contract has been extended from year to year up to last year. There was paid on the first contract, No. 4613, $183,000. Then it was extended by order in council and a new contract, No. 5111, was made, on which $224,000 was paid. That was renewed by another order in council, and on the new contract, No. 5693, $107,000 were paid. Then it was renewed again by another order in council, a new contract was made, No. 5888, on which there were paid $98,000. A total of $614,000 was paid in four years for the harbour improvements in Quebec. A contract was given to a firm by the name of Dussault and Lemieux. I presume they may have had it extended, I do not know whether there has been an order in council extending it to this year or not. But I drew the attention of the House to the fact that according to my information, which I believe is correct, a contract for dredging was given at 75 cents a yard, and the gentleman who got this contract had neither dredge nor anything else to do the work with, and they farmed it out for 15 cents a yard to other contractors, and pocketed 60 cents clear for themselves on this job. More than that, they had clearing work to do. This dredge that was getting 75 cents a yard dumped the material over into the dock and then got 32 cents a yard for the filling. This is my information, and I believe it is correct.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman tell me to whom they farmed it out?

Mr. TAYLOR. We will likely have an inquiry, and we will get the particulars, but I am anxious that another order in council should not be passed extending the time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would it not be more convenient to discuss it when we have the inquiry?

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend might pass an order in council extending the contract, and rob the country for another year. It is to prevent that taking place that I bring up this discussion now, and to notify him that this contract must not be extended another year. Now among the items charged for there are drift bolts, iron, 105,600 pounds at 7 cents a pound. Any person who has ever built a dock knows that drift bolts are simply a bar of iron cut in lengths of 10, 16, 18 or 24 inches long, pointed or sharpened, and anybody knows that you can buy iron at $1.60 or $1.75 per 100 pounds. Yet these gentlemen have been paying from year to year 7 cents a pound for these drift bolts. I took the trouble to write to a party to know what he would furnish them for, and this is what he answered:

I have your favour of the 19th and am much obliged. Bolts such as you ask about including drift bolts pointed at one end are worth about 3 cents per pound. It would depend altogether upon the nature of the specification and how badly we wanted the order, but you could figure two and three-quarter cents per pound as a minimum and about 3½ cents per pound as maximum. This would be f.o.b. factory.

Having a nut on one end would not affect the price hardly at all, as these large nuts are sold almost at the same price as bolts.

They get 8 cents a pound for screw bolts, iron. A screw bolt is simply a steel plate with a hole punched in it, and anybody can buy them for 2 cents a pound. Then we find stone ballast in cribs, 10,500 cubic yards at $1.25. Dredging foundation, 18,000 cubic yards at 75 cents a yard. This is being farmed out at 15 cents a yard. Then stone and gravel foundation, 4,490 cubic yards, at $2.50. Earth filling, 60,400 cubic yards at 32 cents. This was lifted up by the dredge at 75 cents and dumped in at 32 cents more.

Mr. JACOB T. SCHELL (Glengarry). The hon. gentleman characterizes the price as extremely high for the drift bolts. Would he be surprised to know that Mackenzie and Mann are paying me to-day 7 cents a pound for drift bolts. and the prices are put down by themselves in cases where I had no special price mentioned and the quantities are much larger than he has quoted.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman wants to make a good profit, I will supply them at 2¾ cents and ship them from the factory.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. I can buy just as cheaply as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR. My word is as good as the hon. gentleman's. I will supply the bolts at 2¾ cents. I will get a man who will take the contract for supplying the bolts to Mackenzie and Mann at 2¾ cents.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. Does he mean the bolts with the nuts on?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes. They say they make no difference between the drift bolts pointed without the nuts and with the nuts on.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. I will take a contract at that rate.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then I will give it to you.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. Nothing smaller than three-quarters of an inch.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will discuss that afterwards. Any statement I make here, I am prepared to carry out. The hon. Minister of Public Works attempted to bluff——

Mr. PUGSLEY. To what? Do I hear the hon. gentleman right?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes. You undertook to bluff me the other day. If that expression is not parliamentary, Mr. Speaker, I am willing to withdraw it, but I want the minister to understand that as regards being conversant with the practice of this parliament, he is a mere fledgeling and is losing his time when he attempts to practice on old parliamentarians what perhaps he had the privilege of doing in New Brunswick.

Mr. BENNETT. Do not stir up his feelings.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have always thought, and the people have a perfect right to think, that when an hon. minister makes a statement in parliament, that statement should be true as the gospel. But when he makes a statement that is not in accord with the facts, how much confidence can the people place in him? Here is the statement I made the other day:

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works, if he has yet completed the return in reference to Petit Rocher?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On making inquiry of my deputy, I find that the answer given contained exactly the information which was asked for, that is, matters detailed on a certain page of the Auditor General's report. If any hon. friend desires further information and will be good enough to put another question, I shall be glad to give him the further information.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was not a question at all but a motion for a return.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was for a return as to matters detailed on a certain page of the Auditor General's Report, and that return has been made and is complete.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is the minister's reply.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. And he puts the onus on his deputy. I am acquainted with his deputy, and I am satisfied that his deputy would not put in anybody's mouth a statement not in accord with the facts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. That statement must have come directly from the minister. Now what are the facts ? Here is the motion I made for that return, and in that motion there is not a word making any reference at all to the Auditor General's Report. Yet the minister says that my motion had reference to matter contained in that report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman kindly read it?

Mr. TAYLOR. I read it before and the minister went away and came back and tried to bluff me the second time. I shall read it now and ask the hon. gentleman to make an apology:

Return to an address of the House of Commons, dated the 15th January, 1908, for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, orders in council, contracts and tenders, with the names and amount of each, in possession of the government or any member or official thereof, respecting the construction of a breakwater at Petit Rocher, on the southwestern side of Baie des Chaleurs, as detailed on page 74 of the report of the Minister of Public Works, for the year ended 31st March, 1907.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Quite so.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is there anything in that about the Auditor General's Report? That refers to page 74 of the minister's own report. Yet he comes here and will not give me the answer but tells me something that is possibly untrue. Here is the report. What does it say?

Petit Rocher is a farming, fishing and lumbering settlement on the southwestern side of Baie des Chaleurs, twelve miles north of Bathurst.

To afford protection to the fishing boats and vessels trading in Baie des Chaleurs, for which there is no natural shelter in the vicinity, and to facilitate the shipment of lumber, a contract was entered into May 31, 1904, with Simon McGregor, for the construction of a breakwater, consisting of a main work, 209 feet long on the outer face, and a wing or 'L,' placed at an angle of 74 degrees 30 minutes with the main part, 160 feet long on the outer face. The width on top will be 30 feet. At its inner end the breakwater will be 480 feet from the shore. The depth along the inner face varies from 11 to 18½ feet at low water.

In 1904-5, a right of way, 860 feet long, from the public road to the shore was opened up, graded and fenced.

The contract work was begun on March 18, 1905, and by the end of 1904-5 two cribs, 96½ and 41 feet long respectively, had been built and sunk in place.

A crib to form the remainder of the work was started on February 19, 1906, but on March 11, when it had reached a height of about six tiers, it was carried away by the ice. It was, however, recovered on May 14. The outer section, which was intended to complete the main part of the breakwater was found to be intact and work on it was resumed. By the end of the fiscal year this crib had been built to a height of nineteen tiers and the two cribs sunk in 1905 had been filled with ballast and built up to half tide level, and the upper ballast floors were laid.

During the fiscal year 1906-7, the crib forming the remainder of the main work was sunk in place and a crib to complete the 'L' was begun and placed in position. The building of the superstructure was continued on the main part up to about high water level, when two storms, on November 12 and 16 carried away nearly the whole top, the break being about 9 feet in extreme depth.

Work was resumed on March 7, and by the close of the fiscal year the remains of three damaged tiers of face timbers had been removed, and a part of the wrecked superstructure near the southern end rebuilt, the interior being filled with ballast.

The expenditure for the fiscal year 1906-7 was $5,029.60.

That is what I wanted the information for.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It seems a pity to take up the time of the House discussing whether or not a certain return is according to the motion calling for it. My hon. friend says he has the most perfect confidence in my deputy. I may repeat to him that the instructions sent to my deputy were to furnish a complete answer to the motion made by my hon. friend, and the return laid on the table was made by the deputy. If the hon. gentleman doubts my statement, he is at perfect liberty to communicate himself, either in writing or verbally, with the deputy, and my deputy will confirm what I have said. If there be any omission, it rests with the deputy, and the deputy informed me that he had made a complete return as required by the motion.

Mr. TAYLOR. After my having read the motion for the return and pointing out that the return simply comes down to 1905 and does not refer to the carrying away of the piers, as detailed in page 74 of the minister's report, referred to in the motion for the return, or the expenditure since, or who the contractor was or how the contract was let, the hon. gentleman still insists that it is a complete return. But is it not evident that the return is not complete, and that the minister's statement the other day was not in accord with the facts?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I called the attention of the deputy to the page to which my hon. friend refers, and the deputy still asserted that he had sent a complete return of all the correspondence which there had been upon the subject as detailed upon that page of the report. It was the report of the Minister of Public Works. It is a misquotation when the Auditor General's Report is mentioned. It was the report mentioned in the motion of my hon. friend which was referred to the deputy and his return is based upon that. When I called his attention to it he assured me that he had sent a complete return of everything in the department on the subject.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the minister had better go back to the department and give his deputy a lecture for putting in his mouth a statement which is not correct When I brought it up upon the first occasion I got the same answer. I brought it up again and I was put down; I could not proceed to discuss it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I must take the statement of my deputy.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have not received the information as yet, and I want the return completed. The return brought down only goes to 1905 and the expenditure is in 1906-7.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman will put the matter in the form of a question I will see that he will get a complete answer.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will put no more questions until the return is completed or until the minister complies with the order of the House. The minister must obey that order and complete that return.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All I can say to my hon. friend is that I can do no more than I have done.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the minister had better resign his position.

Mr. PUGSLEY. One moment——

Mr. TAYLOR. I am making my speech, and when I get through the minister may get up and answer me. All he can do is to come here and tell us that the deputy has told him he has complied with the return, that he can do no more when, on the face of it, he must know and admit before the House that the return is not complete and that he made a statement the other day which is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know it, I do not admit it, and I shall believe my deputy until I learn the contrary.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would believe the deputy, too, much sooner than I would believe the minister in view of the statement which he made in the House the other day I have as much confidence in the deputy as the hon. gentleman has, because I knew him long before the minister did. I can tell the hon. gentleman that hon. members on this side of the House are not going to be bluffed down by him saying that is the only return, or that is all you can get unless you put another motion or ask another question. I am not going to put another motion and I am not going to ask another question ; I am going to ask the minister to comply with the order of the House and complete that return.

Mr. TURGEON. I might give an explanation to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor), who has just taken his seat, in reference to a portion of the work at Petit Rocher. The contractor is the master of his own work, and if, through inexperience, he makes mistakes he is responsible for them and has to account to the department for them. A portion of this work, in the spring of 1906, was carried away by the ice. The tide is very strong in that locality and the ice carried away the work. He was responsible for it and had to pay for it. He had to do his work over again, and naturally nothing would appear in the accounts of the engineer or of the department. The contractor had to make good the loss and that should explain the lack in the report of the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turgeon) admits that the return which has been brought down is not complete?

Mr. TURGEON. It is complete in so far as the department is concerned. The contractor paid $4,000 or $5,000 twice, but that was his own loss and the department has not lost one dollar by it.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Public Works—chargeable to income—Nova Scotia—Antigonish, public building, $7,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This amount is required to complete the new building which is in course of construction at Antigonish.

Mr. BERGERON. What kind of a building is it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A public building, brick with stone foundation, 33 x 35, 2½ storeys high.

Mr. BERGERON. What is it to be used for ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Post office, customs house and office of the resident engineer of the Public Works Department.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there much business done at that point?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is quite a thriving town.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it a port of entry?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. How much will the building cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $28,700, which will include the cost of the building, heating, plumbing, wiring, fixtures, furniture, &c.

Mr. BERGERON. How much did the land cost and from whom was it purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the memorandum here ; the cost of the site is not given.

Mr. BERGERON. When was that building commenced?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was begun in 1905.

Mr. BERGERON. Whom was the site bought from and how much did it cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I find that the site was owned by the Crown, so that we had nothing to pay for it.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who is the architect?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Ewart, the Chief Architect of the department. The plans were prepared in the department under the direction of the Chief Architect.

Mr. BERGERON. Shall we have any more to vote after this, or is this the end of it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, nothing more to vote; this is the end of it.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was there any outside architect employed to make these plans?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No outside architect.

Mr. J. D. REID. I think the hon. minister stated that the plans for public buildings were mostly all made in the department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, plans for post offices, custom houses and buildings of that kind are in the great majority of cases made in the department.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there a superintendent of the work during construction?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, there is a clerk of works.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is he, and what is his salary?

Mr. PUGSLEY. His name is Mr. McGillivray, and he received $3 per day.

Mr. BLAIN. What was the total payment to the clerk of works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot at this moment tell my hon. friend, but he received $3 per day.

Mr. FOWLER. For the four years during which the buildings has been under construction?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Simply while the work of construction has been going on.

Mr. FOWLER. Has not this building been under construction for many years? I remember that the first vote for it was taken when the gentleman who is now a member of the Transcontinental Railway Commission was a member of this House for the county of Antigonish.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract was let in 1905. That would be something over two years.

Mr. FOWLER. Was the clerk of the works paid for all that time?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume he would be paid for the time he attended the work.

Mr. FOWLER. Why would this building require three years to complete?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is quite an expensive building—a $28,000 building.

Mr. FOWLER. It should be built in four or five months.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that the contractors are very excellent people—Rhodes, Curry & Co.—and would not take longer than was necessary.

Mr. FOWLER. Would the hon. minister say that a building that would cost $28,000 would not be unduly delayed if it took two years to complete it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would not necessarily follow that it was unduly delayed. The contract was not let until the summer of 1905, and it would not be many months until the winter was on, when building operations would cease.

Mr. FOWLER. At what time was the contract let?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not until June.

Mr. FOWLER. There would be ample time, then, to have the outside walls erected before the winter. I have done a considerable amount of building myself, and have built up to Christmas in the climate of New Brunswick, which is not very much less severe than that of Nova Scotia, and I do not think there would be any difficulty at all about completing the outside walls of this building by the time building operations would have to cease for the winter. The inside work would certainly be done in the winter time. Have you no memorandum of what the inspection of this building cost? —because sometimes the cost of inspection bears a very large proportion to the cost of the work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to my hon. friend that the expenditure under the head of incidental expenses was $1,938, which would include the salary of the clerk of works, and I presume also advertising, printing, and the like of that. If my hon. friend wants to know exactly what was paid to the clerk of works, I can get it.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes. What is Mr. McGillivray's occupation?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not his occupation. His name is A. McGillivray.

Mr. FOWLER. It would not follow that he would be a builder at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should be glad to get the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. FOWLER. He might be a tailor, you know.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Sometimes tailors are men of very good judgment.

Mr. FOWLER. Very good judgment indeed, in the cut of a suit of clothes, but not necessarily in the quality of work on a building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know that my hon. friend would think, although he is a lawyer, that he knows a good deal about building.

Mr. FOWLER. Because I have built a good many buildings.

Mr. BERGERON. Was the work let by tender and given to the lowest tenderer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let by tender. Three tenders were received in answer to public advertisement, and Rhodes, Curry & Co. were the lowest and received the contract.

Mr. FOWLER. What was the amount of the tenders?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They ranged from $14,990 to $19,898.

Mr. FOWLER. What did these tenders cover?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will tell my hon. friend what they did not cover—the heating, the wiring, the town clock, the fittings.

Mr. FOWLER. How much would it cost for the heating?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $1,095.

Mr. FOWLER. Who had that contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Rhodes, Curry & Co.

Mr. FOWLER. What was the cost of the wiring?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $650.

Mr. FOWLER. Do I understand the minister to say that it cost $650 to wire the building for electric lights?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not only to put the wiring in, but also for the fittings and electroliers.

Mr. BERGERON. Did Rhodes, Curry & Co. get the contract at that tender of $14,990?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. How much have they received altogether?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not tell my hon. friend what has been paid to Rhodes, Curry & Co., but the total amount paid to the 31st of October, 1907, was $21,323.

Mr. BERGERON. Did the contractors do the work for the price tendered or were they paid extras ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They did not receive any extras. They were paid $14,990, the amount of the contract.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. minister has already paid out $21,000 and is asking for more. He cites one contract for $14,990. Will he give the other contracts for the extra expenditure ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Printing and advertising, clerk of the works salary, &c., $2,024.90.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to have the separate items.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should be very glad indeed to get them for my hon. friend but I cannot have them this afternoon.

Mr. FOWLER. Better let that item stand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend not think he should allow that to pass, on the understanding that I will furnish the information on some other item ?

Mr. FOWLER. The trouble is you never furnish it but always forget.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will undertake to furnish it.

Mr. FOWLER. Go on and give the items.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Printing and advertising and clerk of the works salary, &c., $2,024.90 ; paid to the contractor up to 31st of October, 1907, $14,990. That is the price of the contract. For a boiler, $229.80.

Mr. FOWLER. From whom was that bought ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know, the price is not very high.

Mr. FOWLER. It depends on the kind of boiler.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tower clock $1,140.

Mr. BERGERON. From whom was that bought ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From R. D. Kirk. There were tenders called for.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it the custom of the department to put up clocks on all the buildings ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not in all of them, but in towns of some considerable importance the department has very frequently put up clocks in the towers. Sometimes the tower is built suitable for a clock. Some twenty years ago a building was erected by the government and the holes were made in the tower for a clock. A few weeks ago I had a delegation urging most strongly that I should supply the clock which should have been supplied twenty years ago.

Mr. BERGERON. I hope you will do it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I intend to.

Mr. BERGERON. Are you going to put up a clock in the Valleyfield post office ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will make representations on the subject, I will consider the matter.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, I make the application now.

Mr. FOWLER. How about the post office at Sussex ? Is there a clock there ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is there a tower provided for the clock ?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, there is an opportunity to put a clock there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If there is any provision made for a clock, I will consider the matter. That building was erected fifteen years ago, did the hon. gentleman ever urge very strongly that a clock should be put there ?

Mr. FOWLER. I did not suppose it was the policy of the government to distribute these clocks. But now that the government are so generous, I thought it would be quite in accord with the policy of the minister and his love for that constituency which he used to represent, that he would undertake to do something for it. It is certainly as important as Antigonish.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I hope the hon. gentleman will not try to prevent this being done for Antigonish.

Mr. FOWLER. It is done already so that I could not prevent it even if I wanted to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tower clock, $1,140 ; sidewalk, &c., $735.30.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that sidewalk just in from off the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is the paving all around the public building.

Mr. FOWLER. What material ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume granolithic.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many square feet ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The size of the lot is 240 square yards and my hon. friend can figure that out for himself.

Mr. TAYLOR. You cannot figure from that. I do not know how wide the sidewalk is and how many square feet in it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a corner lot.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many square feet around the lot? Is the sidewalk three feet or six feet wide ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not that information, I am sorry to say.

Mr. FOWLER. Is the sidewalk on four streets or on two streets ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On two streets.

Mr. FOWLER. That is a pretty good price.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that a granolithic, fairly wide sidewalk would probably cost that much.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the size of the building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Thirty-three feet by fifty-five with an annex twelve by thirty-three.

Mr. FOWLER. The annex would not be on both streets. There would be no sidewalk for the annex.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The sidewalk would be on both streets.

Mr. FOWLER. You can only figure 33 feet one way and 55 the other ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I take it for granted the government would build a sidewalk around the whole lot.

Mr. FOWLER. They would go to the line of their lot. Is the lot 55 feet each way ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The only information I have here with regard to the lot is that it contains 240 square yards.

Mr. FOWLER. At $700 you would be paying two prices, but that is not sufficiently unusual to be remarkable.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I forgive my hon. friend that statement because if he did not make it, he would not be acting in accordance with his usual practice. He often indulges in these statements but perhaps thoughtlessly.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister knows me better than that.

Mr. STANFIELD. Is it not usual for the town or city to pay some proportion of the cost of the sidewalk or does the government put a sidewalk all around the lot?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect informs me that where the government erects a building and a sidewalk has to be built, the government usually pays the whole cost.

Mr. STANFIELD. The sidewalk around the post office in the town of Truro is in very bad condition. I would like the government to put that sidewalk in good order, if it is their business to do that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would be repairing the sidewalk. No doubt if the town made representations to the department, they would be received with a desire to contribute something, probably pay half the cost.

Mr. FOWLER. At the public building in Sussex there is no sidewalk laid down by the government at all. I would suggest that the government put a sidewalk there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is there a sidewalk on each side of the building ?

Mr. FOWLER. There is a street but no granolithic sidewalk.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In cases where the town has built a granolithic sidewalk along a public building——

Mr. FOWLER. But the town has not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume that the sidewalk in front of the public building in Sussex is the same as the sidewalk on the street above and below. It would be somewhat anomalous to have a different sidewalk in front of one building from that in front of the buildings on either side.

Mr. FOWLER. Not necessarily?

Mr. TAYLOR. If your lot is 60 feet front by 120 feet deep. which is a large sized lot for a town, as in most towns they are 40 feet front by 80 feet, and supposing the sidewalk is six feet wide——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am told that it is 12 feet wide.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, I will double it. On the basis on which I have started—a sidewalk 6 feet wide, you would have a total of 1,080 square feet. At 16 cents a square foot, that would amount to $172.80. Or double it, and you have 2,160 square feet costing $345.60.

Mr. FOWLER. That is what I say—we have paid about double.

Mr. TAYLOR. And my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Henderson) says that in his town they get this work done for 12 cents. I paid 16 cents for a sidewalk in front of my own house last year.

Mr. FOWLER. Did the minister say there were 240 square yards in the lot?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. The other expenditures are wiring and fixtures, $660; furniture and letter boxes, &c., $1,343.09; total expenditure up to October 31, 1907, $21,323.

Mr. BLAIN. Were tenders asked for the boxes?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to get at the size of this lot.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I told the hon. gentleman I could not give the frontage and depth but the area is 240 square yards.

Mr. FOWLER. That is an exceedingly small lot. To pay $200 for a sidewalk on two sides of such a lot would be an enormous price.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) is astray in his arithmetic.

Mr. FOWLER. If the lot were 12 yards one way by 20 yards the other way, that would make an area of 240 yards. Reduced to feet, such a lot would be 36 feet front by 60 feet deep. Or, for two sides of the lot 96 running feet. If you make a sidewalk 12 feet wide you would have 1,152 square feet which at 16 cents would be $184.32. I think that arithmetic is pretty nearly according to Sangster.

Mr. BERGERON. How much was paid for the sidewalk?

Mr. FOWLER. $750. When I said the hon. gentleman paid about double, I was figuring on the size of the lot he first gave. But it appears now that, instead of paying double, he has paid over four times.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) speaking of the cost of granolithic pavement from any experience?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, I have built many square feet of it at my own expense around my properties in Sussex.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What does it cost?

Mr. FOWLER. Sixteen cents.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the depth of the granolithic material?

Mr. FOWLER. You measure by surface measure.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But I suppose something would depend upon the location—whether the lot was high and dry or whether you had to go deeper for a foundation.

Mr. FOWLER. Something would depend upon whether you had to build up or not. But the building up is done with gravel which is very cheap material in most places. You do not build up with cement from the bottom. But you would need to build up with gold dust to justify such a price as this.

Mr. TAYLOR. Our town let a contract at 16 cents to lay granolithic sidewalk on several streets, and some of them had to be raised three or four feet. And my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) says that 12 cents was the ruling price there—16 cents is an outside price.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Something would depend on the cost of cement and the description of the land.

Mr. FOWLER. But why should cement be dearer in Antigonish than in other places? In fact, it ought to be less; for. I understand there are cement works in Sydney. There certainly is not enough to account for the difference between 12 cents or 16 cents and the 70 cents that the minister has been paying. It is no wonder that this building, which was to have cost $15,000 or $16,000 has already cost $28,000, if everything else is paid for on the same basis as this sidewalk:

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have the chief architect produce a plan of the lot and building.

Mr. FOWLER. Better let the item stand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that the sidewalk cost a certain sum per foot, and his opinion was that the price was reasonable. I do not profess to know the cost of granolithic sidewalk, because this material is not much used in the part of the province from which I come.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the architect say that 70 cents is a reasonable price?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He says that the sidewalk was constructed at a reasonable price, but he did not state at how much per yard. But I will get the plan.

Mr. BERGERON. When a building such as this is finished, who receives it for the government and passes the work as having been carried out properly?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The clerk of works would certify to the erection of the building, then the chief architect would send a man from his department to see if it was built according to the plans and specifications.

Mr. FOWLER. Who had the contract for the sidewalk ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot say from this memorandum. But it was let by contract at so much per foot, the total cost being $735. It says, 'Sidewalk, &c.' showing there was something in addition.

Mr. CROCKET. Is it the custom of the department to bear the whole cost of the construction of a new sidewalk built in front of a public building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The architect tells me that where the work is entirely a new one the department has been in the habit of paying the whole cost.

Mr. CROCKET. What about repairs to that sidewalk ? Does the department pay for keeping the sidewalk in repair ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. After the department has constructed the sidewalk the practice is to keep it in repair.

Mr. CROCKET. I would call the minister's attention to the sidewalk in Fredericton which extends a whole block on Queen street. The government owns all the property on the eastern side of Queen street from Carleton to Regent street. On this property are the post office building and the officers' barracks, and that sidewalk has been in very bad condition for several years past and is in great need of repairs. It is an asphalt sidewalk.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be glad to give it consideration.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you a vault in that building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that is the contract. The vault door is supplied by the contractor.

Mr. FOWLER. You had better let this item stand until we get the particulars.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Very well.

Mr. BERGERON. I did not quite understand the answer of the minister as to the procedure after public buildings are finished.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The clerk of works certifies to the department that the building has been completed, and then the chief architect sends an architect from the department to examine the building and see whether it has been completed according to the plans and specifications, and he informs the chief architect of the fact.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that satisfactory to the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that is the only way in which it can be done.

Mr. BERGERON. That explains why so many works turn out to have been badly constructed. They are not finished properly, they are made by people who do not care what happens to them after they are finished, but who construct them according to their own notions. There is no supervision. I remember a case where a public work was built by men who did not care whether it was well done or not. They have a clerk of works who is generally a political appointment. He is paid $3 a day, and sometimes does not know anything about the work he is supposed to supervise. He makes a report that the building is finished properly, and it is accepted. When I was in the west last summer I heard of a breakwater built by the government at Nanaimo, at a cost of $10,000. As soon as it was built a freshet came and carried it away, and it is now lying somewhere in the sea.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Does the hon. gentleman say a breakwater was built at Nanaimo ?

Mr. BERGERON. At a place called Nanaimo, anyway it was in the district of Nanaimo.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Nanaimo is in my constituency, and there is no wharf built by the government there.

Mr. BERGERON. It was in the district of Nanaimo. A day or two ago I heard of a lighthouse built by the Department of Marine and Fisheries that has been carried away, a very expensive work. I mention these things to show that the government should pay more attention to these works and see that they are properly inspected before they are accepted.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is exactly what we are doing. Before a building is accepted the chief architect sends an expert, an experienced man from the department, who makes a thorough examination, and he does not accept the building unless it is built according to the plans and specifications.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman's criticisms may be correct with respect to some other cases of which I have no knowlege, but they are not correct with respect to this building in Antigonish. He says that these works are often built by people who have no concern but to get them up and get away. This building was erected by Rhodes & Curry, one of the most reputable firms in the lower provinces, and I am sure these gentlemen have sufficient pride in their work not to build it as the hon. gentleman says. There may be some cases that justify his criticism, but as to any work constructed by Rhodes & Curry, who are contractors of the highest standing, there is no ground for criticism.

Mr. BERGERON. I was speaking in a general way, and criticising the government for receiving these public works without paying sufficient attention to the way they have been built. It may be that in this case the clerk of the works is a good man. But we all know from what takes place in the Public Accounts Committee that in many cases these clerks of works do not even go near the work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What has taken place in respect of this building is an index of what takes place in respect of all buildings, as I am informed by the chief architect. In the first place there is a clerk of works appointed. Inquiry is made as to his ability, his judgment and integrity before he is appointed.

Mr. BERGERON. And his politics.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of course we would not like to appoint a man who would endeavour to have a building badly constructed in order to discredit the government. We try to get a man who will be fair at all events, and see that the work is constructed so as to reflect credit upon the government. Then the department sends an expert from time to time to see that everything is being done properly. When the building is finished the clerk of the works makes his certificate, but the chief architect does not act finally upon that, because he sends an expert from the department specially to examine the building carefully, to look it all over, and see if it has been constructed according to the plans and specifications. He makes his report in writing, and upon his report, when favourable, the building is taken over.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this architect who is sent to make progress inspection, in all cases an official of the department, or do you employ outside architects ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. An officer of the department is always sent.

Mr. FOWLER. How about the progress inspections ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. An architect is also sent to see to the progress inspections.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you employ outside architects in your department and if so for what purpose ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Sometimes we do, but comparatively few. Sometimes an architect may be employed as an inspector on a building. In the case of large buildings there is sometimes a clerk of works and also an architect.

Mr. FOWLER. On what buildings were they employed last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the case of a building at Halifax a Mr. Bush was employed as architect. He acted as clerk of works and architect.

Mr. BENNETT. How much did you pay last year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not say that is the only case. The chief architect cannot now say how much was paid, without referring to the notes.

Mr. FOWLER. As great a sum as $10,000 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He thinks not.

Mr. FOWLER. Less than that ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister states that about $10,000 was paid last year for outside architectural services. I have run over some of the payments and I find the following amounts were paid by the Department of Public Works to outside architects and engineers in the last nine months:

Name.	Work.	Amount.
		$ cts.
H. C. Ewart, Architect.	Royal Mint.....	950 00
Darling & Pearson, Architects.	Winnipeg Post Office.	27,671 00
Architectural and Engineering Co.	Edmonton Gaol...	4,320 00
Vaudelet, Engineer..	St. Andrews Dam.	15,000 00
" " ..	Quebec Harbour Shed.	12,250 00
M. Perrault, Architect.	Montreal Post Office.	7,875 00
" " ..	Postal Station, St. Catharines.	2,302 00
Architectural and Engineering Co.	Belleville Armory.	1,775 00
G. O. Tanguay, Architect.	Three Rivers Drill Hall.	1,150 00
F. M. Talbot, Architect.	Quebec Immigration Hospital.	911 00
H. C. McBride, Architect.	London Post Office	2,358 90
" " .	Stratford Armory.	711 00
" " ..	Woodstock Armory.	2,004 00
Band, Murray & Meredith.	Dominion Archives Building.	4,006 00
T. A. Ewart, Architect.	Royal Mint.....	1,381 00
Investigating Power, collapse.	... .	1,783 00
Maxwell Bros., Architects.	First Prize Dept. plans.	8,000 00
Darling & Pearson...	Second Prize Dept. plans.	4,000 00

Altogether about $100,000 in 1907-08 for nine months was paid out by the Department of Public Works for outside architectural fees. You had better hire 20 good men at $5,000 each.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I hope the hon. gentleman does not think that by quoting these figures he shows that the chief architect was in error in regard to the amount paid for services of architects last year for purely architectural services. In the items he has read he includes engineering work. Vautelet is an engineer and his work in connection with the St. Andrews lock and at Quebec was engineering work.

Mr. BENNETT. At Quebec he was putting up a building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But that is not under Mr. Ewart at all. The hon. gentleman has included the amounts paid for prizes for the plans for the large departmental building which it is proposed to construct on Sussex street. I had not in mind the inclusion of these amounts as that is not architects' work in the ordinary sense.

Mr. FOWLER. Would not the man who got first prize be the man whose plans were adopted ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it does not follow at all.

Mr. FOWLER. Then did you get nothing except plans that you would not use, in return for the money paid out ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A board of judges was appointed to ask for and consider the plans and to determine as to which were entitled to the prizes, but the department expressly reserved the right to exercise its own judgment as to adopting any of the plans. The department is not bound to take any one.

Mr. FOWLER. Did you start a competition among architects for plans for a departmental building and offer prizes to a considerable amount and not propose necessarily to take any of the plans ?

Mr. BERGERON. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. You offered premiums for the making of plans suitable for a departmental building and gave the prizes although the department did not consider one of the plans suitable for erection purposes? That seems to me a funny proceeding. I would think that you would try to get plans as nearly perfect as possible and if an architect could not draw a plan suitable for that building he certainly did not deserve a prize. It is the most surprising statement I ever heard.

Mr. BENNETT. Deducting $15,000 for St. Andrews and $12,000 for the plans that still leaves $75,000 for outside architects. I am not blaming the minister, it is simply that he does not get proper information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The payment to Darling and Pearson was for services extending over some years, not for last year.

Mr. FOWLER. The question was what was paid last year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The question was put generally one afternoon when we were discussing estimates and the chief engineer said he did not think it would exceed $10,000 a year, taking the average. A number of the other gentlemen who were mentioned by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) supervised the erection of buildings, acting as clerks of works as well as inspectors. As to the plans for the departmental buildings, these buildings will be very costly and it is desirable that they should be built upon the very best design possible. No one would regard it as unreasonable that prizes should be offered to architects for the submission of plans. Even although the plans received may be departed from in many respects, yet they afford most valuable information to the chief architect and I presume he may take ideas from all of them. What I meant to say was that the department did not bind itself absolutely to adopt any one of these plans ; it reserved a certain freedom which I think it was desirable to reserve.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you have the right to use the plans ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, yes, I can use any part of them, we can take any part of them we choose.

Mr. BERGERON. Were the prizes paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, we paid prizes of $8,000, $4,000, $2,000 and $1,000 ; that is $15,000 in all.

Mr. BERGERON. The answer of the minister seems to be very reasonable when he says that the chief architect will have to go through all these different plans. When the Langevin block was built—and it is looked upon as one of the finest buildings in Ottawa, the chief architect at that time, who, I am sure, was not the superior of the present architect, made the plans without consulting anybody. It did not cost the government one cent for making the plans of that beautiful building. To show the difference between the course pursued by the two governments, I might refer to the estimaters who were appointed to value the properties on Sussex street which have been purchased by the government for the site of this new building. I think there were three or four sets of estimaters.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is the Langevin block the building in connection with which the roof was omitted from the contract ?

Mr. BENNETT. Oh, no.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know, I am talking about the plans of the buildings. Three or four sets of estimaters were appointed to value the property on Sussex street. One set of men made an estimate and they were paid and very well paid. Another set of men made a second estimate and they were paid, and then Mr. Riopel was appointed to make a new estimate. He was paid a part of his account for services and now he is claiming a very large sum of money. My hon. friend from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) need not be surprised if money is spent in this way. It all goes to party friends right and left. It is part of the combination.

Mr. FOWLER. Notwithstanding the explanation of the minister, which my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) sarcastically has said was a reasonable answer, and I am sure my hon. friend was sarcastic——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the hon. gentleman's statement was sincere.

Mr. BERGERON. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. I had supposed that my hon. friend was speaking sarcastically.

Mr. BERGERON. No, I referred to the hon. minister's answer.

Mr. FOWLER. Surely my hon. friend is not sincere in saying that the payment of $15,000 to assist the chief architect in drawing up these plans is reasonable ?

Mr. BERGERON. I thought that that was a good answer compared with the other things they were doing a little lower down.

Mr. FOWLER. I knew my hon. friend was sarcastic. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works is so accustomed to giving soft-soapy answers that he always assumes that every thing is all right. Is it not absurd on the face of it ? We pay a chief architect a salary for doing what ?—surely for designing these public buildings that are to be erected. Surely the chief architect has assistants—how many ?—by the score ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A great many.

Mr. FOWLER. How many ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Twelve who may be called architects and draughtsmen.

Mr. FOWLER. The chief architect has twelve assistants outside of those gentlemen who were called in and with all that it was necessary to pay $15,000 in order that the chief architect might get some valuable hints from the brains of those architects who competed for these very handsome prizes. It seems to me that this is a very expensive way of supplying brains to the chief architect. If you do not pay enough salary to get a good man who is able to do this work you ought to increase the salary. I do not know that architects get such tremendous salaries that you could not get a good man for $5,000 or $6,000 a year to take the position of chief architect and do the work, including the chief designing. My hon. friend from Beauharnois has referred to the Langevin block, admittedly one of the finest public buildings in Canada, whatever my hon. friend the minister may say about the absence of a roof. I think it has a pretty good roof on it ; at any rate, the roof did not cost anything like what it cost to put the roof on the post office here under one of the predecessors of the Minister of Public Works, and it did not collapse like the Laurier tower, nor fall into the water like the Quebec bridge. It is a solid, substantial building, it is splendid in its proportions, a fine example of architecture and it was designed by the then chief architect without the assistance of any outside architects but with such assistance as he got from his own staff.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Dominion was not so big then as it is now.

Mr. FOWLER. The building is the same whether the country was as big or not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I mean that the work of the architect's office was not nearly so great then as it is now.

Mr. BERGERON. The men were bigger than they are now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They were very good men.

Mr. FOWLER. I cannot conceive of a greater waste of public money than the payment of $15,000 to these outside architects.

Mr. BERGERON. Was the competition open to the world or only to Canadians ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only to Canadians.

Mr. BERGERON. Would my hon. friend give the names of those who made plans and those who got the prizes ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not give all the names. Twenty-nine different architects submitted plans.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there a committee appointed to examine the plans ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, a committee consisting of the president of the Ontario Association of Architects, the president of the Quebec Association of Architects, and Mr. Ewart, the chief architect of the department.

Mr. FOWLER. These were the committee ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, they were the board of judges.

Mr. BERGERON. Were they paid ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They were paid.

Mr. BERGERON. Did they compete ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. How much did they get ? I do not think there is any limit to what may be done by this government in the line of wrong-doing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I knew my hon. friend would say that.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to compliment the Minister of Public Works by saying that of all the ministers he is prepared to go to the greatest length in the waste of public money, and I will guarantee, from what I know of the hon. gentleman and his former career, that he will outstrip them all. He will leave them a long way in the distance. I want to know how much this committee was paid.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This committee was paid $4,500.

Mr. BERGERON. Besides the $15,000 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, they were paid $1,500 each.

Mr. BERGERON. So that the whole cost about $20,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $20,000—$19,500.

Mr. FOWLER. How much money do you propose to expend on this building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $4,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT. We will be in that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am surprised at the hon. member for Kings and Albert indulging in talk such as he has in regard to the plans. I am sure that my hon. friend, in his moments of sincerity and soberness. and he is always sober and not always insincere, will realize that when the government were undertaking the erection of these very important and costly buildings to accommodate the various departments, and including a palace of justice, it was not an unreasonable expenditure of money to invite from the architects of Canada designs for those buildings. I think also that any one would say that in not binding ourselves to accept any one of those plans, but giving the chief architect of the department the right to avail himself of any ideas which were unfolded by them, the department was acting wisely. With regard to myself, I am always thankful for any attention that my hon. friend gives me. Even though my hon. friend has at times in the past criticised me and gentlemen with whom I have been associated, I have seen the day when he was the warmest in our praise. Therefore I do not take the criticisms of the hon. gentleman upon myself too seriously. But I think it might be advisable for him to wait until he sees how I administer the department over which I preside before he gives the assurance to this House that I shall not manage it economically and well. Thus far my hon. friend cannot point to anything in my administration of the department which invites his criticism, or even the criticism of those who would look at the matter from a non-partisan standpoint.

Mr. FOWLER. Since my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has read me this lecture, I will devote a few minutes to a reply. In the first place, he makes the challenge that I have been unable to point to any particular thing in which he has shown extravagance as Minister of Public Works. Sir, that was a safe challenge for the hon. minister to throw down. He knows perfectly well that I have had no opportunity yet to know what he has done in his department. He knows perfectly well that until the accounts for the year are produced it will be impossible for us to know just how extravagantly he has conducted the affairs of his department. But I will refer the hon. gentleman to some of the things which have already occurred, which will bear out the general statement I made to the effect, that whatever extravagance there might be in the various departments of this government, the Department of Public Works, under the superintendence of the present minister, would far outstrip all those other departments in wanton, wilful waste and extravagance; and, Sir, you will find when the next session comes, and when we have an opportunity to disclose to the public just what the hon. gentleman has done in his department, that the words I have uttered will be verified and more than verified. We had an order in council passed by the government at the request of the hon. gentleman; and we had in this House the other day the humiliating spectacle of the hon. gentleman being compelled to stand up in his place and admit that owing to what had been brought out here by the opposition, his colleagues had taken him by the neck, as it were, and had rescinded that order in council which he had defended upon the floor of parliament. No greater humiliation was ever offered——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not wish unduly to interrupt my hon. friend, but I can assure him that he is now making a statement which is wholly unwarranted. Whatever was done in passing the order in council, and whatever was done in rescinding it, was done wholly on my initiation and at my recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. A. Johnston). I would suggest that we have departed sufficiently from the item before the committee.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand, then, that the chairman feels that his minister is getting rather the worst of this, and that although he invited it by making an attack upon me, the Chairman proposes to exercise his right and refuse to allow me the opportunity of answering him. I have much more to say about the hon. Minister of Public Works, and I would like to have an opportunity now of saying it.

The CHAIRMAN. I think I have allowed the hon. gentleman to proceed far enough. I realized a little while ago that the discussion was out of order.

Mr. FOWLER. You should have stopped your minister, not me.

The CHAIRMAN. I propose to ask the committee to come back to the immediate item which is before the committee. I suggest that for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend desires, we will let this item stand, and take up the next.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to finish what I have to say in answer to the hon. gentleman first. Surely the Chairman does not want me to do the hon. gentleman the discourtesy of not replying to the statement he made.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman forgets that I was replying to him.

Mr. FOWLER. Not at all. The hon. gentleman was making a statement entirely contrary to the fact, and I was pointing out to him his duty under the circumstances. When the government of which he is a member humiliated him by rescinding an order in council passed at his desire, it seems to me that there was only one course open to him as a man of honour, and that was to lay down his portfolio and resign from the government. Surely no other course was open to the hon. gentleman; but, as some of my hon. friends suggest, he certainly would not do that. The hon. gentleman has waded through too much in order to get this portfolio. He refers to a time when I spoke well of him. There was a time when I perhaps did speak well of the hon. gentleman and of the views which he entertained upon the political questions of the day; but that time was when he was sailing under a different flag from the one he sails under to-day, not the skull and cross-bones. That was when he was sailing under the Conservative flag and was as strong a Conservative as could be found in this country. As an individual he is a very nice, courteous gentleman; but the manner in which you speak of the hon. gentleman's politics depends on the period of the hon. gentleman's career to which you are referring. If you are referring to the period from 1873 to 1878, if you happen to be a Liberal, you will commend most strongly his attitude then on the political questions of the day, because there was at that time, no stronger Liberal or supporter of the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie from the Atlantic to the Pacific than the hon. gentleman. But, Sir, there came a change in the year 1878; there was a Dominion election on. The hon. gentleman had not at that time changed his political attitude.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is this modern or ancient history?

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman is not so old that the history of his political career would necessarily be ancient history.

The hon. gentleman is grey, but he is not really an old man except in sin—political sin. I make the distinction. Now, there was a general election on, and any person walking along the streets of the city of St. John and looking at the bill boards might have seen a notice to the effect that there would be a rally of the Liberal party to be held in the hall in the parish of St. Martins, and that rally was to be addressed by the Hon. William Pugsley and other leaders of the Liberal party. This was the notice that appeared on Monday. But on Tuesday any person passing through the streets and observing the bill boards would see pasted over this notice a placard bearing these words : 'Great Conservative Rally ; a meeting in the interests of the Liberal-Conservative party to be held in the hall of ——— on such a day ; the chair to be taken at 8 o'clock, and the meeting will be addressed by the Hon. William Pugsley and other Conservative leaders.' Talk about the conversion of St. Paul. It was not a circumstance to that of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman's was quite as rapid.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But not so thorough.

Mr. FOWLER. Not so thorough, as my hon. leader says, because the hon. gentleman was yet to undergo another change, a change equally wonderful, and accompanied by another change of government of course. No government could change more quickly than could the hon. gentleman. Time passed. The hon. gentleman was a strong Conservative, and in 1895—not very ancient history—he had aspirations towards Ottawa. He wanted to be a representative of his native county and he was nominated the Conservative candidate. I had the pleasure of moving his nomination and I had the pleasure on several occasions—and I suppose that is what the hon. gentleman refers to—of accompanying him in his canvass throughout the county and of speaking from different platforms with him. I cannot recall now that I was particularly eulogistic of the hon. gentleman personally, but I certainly was of the policy of the party of which the hon. gentleman then was a strong exponent, as I have always been all my life. So that when he says there was a time when I was somewhat vehement in my praise of his political associates, I admit the fact. But that time was when the hon. gentleman was an associate of mine politically and a leader in that party to which all my life I have belonged.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That does not happen to be what I was referring to.

Mr. FOWLER. Then I cannot understand what the hon. gentleman was referring to and would like him to state what it was.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not know. But there came a change. The hon. gentleman found that his political course had been so tortuous that the good people of the county of Kings—the Conservative people of the county of Kings—were not satisfied with him as a candidate, and he discovered that if he were to continue a candidate he would be very apt to lose the election. So he wrote a letter to the president of the association in which he resigned the nomination and gave his reasons for resigning.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We had all this four months ago.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman has brought it on himself and he may have it several times before this parliament is through.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What about the suffering country?

Mr. FOWLER. It is a good thing and will bear repetition. The hon. gentleman wrote a letter to the president of the association in which he resigned the nomination and gave his reasons, and his principal reason was that he did not wish to be the means of sowing discord and dissension in the ranks of the grand old Conservative party of which he was such a lover—that party which had done everything that had been done for the upbuilding of Canada. And he went to St. John, and there he ran as a strong opponent of both the government and the opposition. He ran as an independent. Why, he had no confidence, Sir, in you as the leader of the opposition, as the leader of the Liberal party at that time. No man on the government side was one-half so strong in denunciation of you, Sir, and your political ideals as was the hon. minister who is now such a subservient follower of yours.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Stronger than yours ?

Mr. FOWLER. Very much stronger. Why there was not a political sin he did not accuse you of. He called you a traitor to your country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not interrupt my hon. friend when he goes to such extremes if he were saying what he really believed to be true, but he is simply indulging in flights of imagination and stating what he must know, if he knows at all what I said, to be without foundation.

Mr. FOWLER. I can well understand how this bites, but the hon. gentleman has been forgiven, he has made his peace, he has wiped the feet of the First Minister with his tears of repentance, he has had the benediction of the First Minister laid upon his bowed head and has received the injunction : Rise, son, thy sins are forgiven thee, go and sin no more. This was in the days when the hon. gentleman was in the transition period of his political life. It was in that transition period when he was changing from the caterpillar to the butterfly and when he was still in the chrysalis as a member of the Conservative party. But during that election campaign of 1896 the process of change and disintegration had begun, and when, on the night of June 23, 1896, the news came flashing over the wires that the Liberal party had won, just as quickly as the news came, the hon. gentleman cast aside his caterpillar shell and emerged into the splendor of a new day, a gaudy, glittering butterfly. He has been a Liberal ever since. Yes, he has since in the twelve years during which he has been basking in the sunshine that radiates from you, right hon. Sir, as the head of the Liberal party——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Address the Chair.

Mr. FOWLER. I am addressing the chair, Sir, through you. Ever since that day he has been a strong, active working Liberal. I want to say, however, to the right hon. the First Minister that I do not think the hon. gentleman has brought very great strength to the Liberal cause in the province from which he comes. I think, Sir, that the defeat, the disastrous defeat which has befallen the Liberal party in the province of New Brunswick, is to some considerable extent due to the dissatisfaction felt by the people of that province in the political principles and methods of the hon. gentleman whom you have taken into your cabinet as Minister of Public Works. I have no doubt that this had largely to do with it. And that disastrous defeat which has overtaken your party in that province, although it was in the matter of local politics, is yet a true index of what will happen in federal politics this autumn, if you decide to go to the country then. Mr. Chairman, I would advise the Prime Minister to cast about him for a man from the province of New Brunswick in whom the people of that province would have more confidence. I am perfectly disinterested in giving this advice, for, from the party standpoint, there is no one who could probably make it easier for us of the opposition to win in that province than the hon. gentleman. But you had, sitting behind him in the back benches, one man who was able to carry a constituency which he represented here; and it seems to me that if you are looking for political success in the province of New Brunswick, you had better change your Minister of Public Works. For, not only will he be a weakness to you in New Brunswick, but you will find that he will continue in his conduct of his present office the methods which he followed in his own province and which brought his party their to disastrous rout. It does seem to me that the condition of your party, owing to the misconduct of the heads of departments, is already deplorable enough without making it worse by giving a free hand to your Minister of Public Works. This advice I give gratuitously to the Prime Minister ; I give it from the patriotic standpoint, not from the party standpoint.

Mr. SPROULE. It is all the more valuable.

Mr. FOWLER. It is all the more valuable, for it is all perfectly disinterested. I hope the Prime Minister will profit by it and that he will relegate the hon. gentleman to the background and bring in a new Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I feel that I should really apologize to the House for taking up any time in replying to the observations of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) for they are not at all relevant to the matter before the committee. But I wish to say one word in answer to the speech which the hon. gentleman has just made. This is the same speech that was reported in the newspapers some months ago as having been made by the hon. gentleman in St. John before the election was called to fill the vacancy caused by the death of my late friend, Dr. Stockton. On that occasion, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) came to St. John and addressed a large public meeting, making the same speech as he has made today. He spoke of my political career, covering some thirty years, and begged the Conservative party to put up some person in opposition to me. But the electors of the city of St. John, Liberals and Conservatives, who know the hon. gentleman and know me, who know the course I have pursued in that city since I went there to make my home among them a good many years ago, gave the hon. gentleman his answer by returning me by acclamation.

Mr. FOWLER. In the first place the statement the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) has made about the speech is absolutely foundationless. I did address a public meeting in St. John, and I did advise the electors to oppose the present Minister of Public Works, even though he had held out as a bribe to the people of St. John what he could do for them if he were returned as Minister of Public Works. And the hon. gentleman plumes himself upon his election by acclamation. I was opposed to his election by acclamation, notwithstanding all the pledges and promises he made to the people. But, if the hon. gentleman had asked the people to elect him without his portfolio, he would have been beaten by more than five hundred votes. It was not the person of the hon. gentleman that was elected in the city of St. John, it was the office. And is that a thing for the hon. gentleman to plume himself upon? Is that a thing for him to boast about? For my part, I should much prefer to be elected on my personality. Why, the hon. gentleman, never once, during his long political career has appeared before the public and asked for their suffrages as a representative of a party in opposition—Oh, yes; I am mistaken. He did, once. On one occasion he appeared, not exactly as an opposition but as an independent candidate. What happened when he dared thus to face the electors of any constituency in Canada on his own personality as a man? Why he lost his deposit—that is what happened. This is the hon. gentleman who is trying to make the people think that so magnificent is his personality, so much are the people of St. John in love with him, that they fall over themselves to elect him by acclamation. Yet, as I have said, the only time that the hon. gentleman ever faced the electors in opposition to any government was when he ran in 1896 as an independent, and was so disastrously beaten that he lost his deposit. Yes, and even if he had got a thousand votes more than he did, he would still have lost his deposit. And that is what the people think of the hon. gentleman's personality in the city in which he lives. But, Sir, here was a government in power: here was a city that had made tremendous sacrifices in order to provide terminal transportation facilities: and here, they felt, was an opportunity to get some assistance in the establishment of further facilities which were required at that port; and so they elected the office of Minister of Public Works, and, unfortunately, they had to take with it the personality of the hon. gentleman who had been selected by the Prime Minister to fill that office. It was a handicap that the office was filled by the hon. gentleman—almost anybody else would have had a better chance than he. I do not think he will refer to this matter again.

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. FOWLER. This item stands, does it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is carried.

Mr. FOWLER. No, it is not carried; and I do not propose that it shall be carried now. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) promised certain information with regard to it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, let it stand then.

Bridgewater, public building, $22,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What is this one to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman will see that this is a revote of $5,000. This is to make provision for the construction of a public building in the town of Bridgewater. The total cost will be $39,500, including the site, heating, electric wiring, fixtures, furniture, &c. This is a new building. Bridgewater is in the county of Lunenburg.

Mr. FOWLER. How much did the land cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $5,500. The lot is 110 feet on King street, and 130 feet on Dominion street.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the population of Bridgewater ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By the census of 1901 the population was 2,900, including Bridgewater North and South. The post office receipts for 1907 were $1,362 ; customs receipts, $4,871 ; money orders issued, $42,449 ; money orders paid, $32,000. It has a large bank, a printing office, four gang sawmills, grist mills, and so forth, and does a large trade in lumber.

Mr. BERGERON. Who was the site bought from ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From H. and A. Davidson.

Mr. FOWLER. Was that a vacant lot ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume so.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. It is perhaps fair to say that the price is large ; I suppose judged by the land values in most Nova Scotia towns it would appear to be large. But there were few available places on which this building could be erected, and it appeared desirable to have it built on the principal business street which is somewhat congested owing to physical conditions, and consequently the values on this street are higher than in most Nova Scotia towns. This vacant lot cost the owners practically the amount it was sold for. I had considerable to do in advising the department concerning the purchase of the lot. The owners, in making up the price, took into consideration the original cost, and interest at 4 per cent.

Mr. BERGERON. Who did the Davidsons buy the property from ?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. A corporation known as the Academy of Music Company, Limited, I think were the previous owners. There was an opera house upon the site at one time and it was burned.

Mr. CROCKET. Who selected the site ?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I recommended the site to the department. It appeared on the whole to be the best site in the town, and no other site could be purchased at a lower price.

Mr. BERGERON. Did the Davidsons buy the property on purpose to sell it to the government ?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. No, I may say that the Davidsons sold this land at a lower price to the department than they would have sold to any other purchaser.

Mr. BERGERON. How long had the opera house been burnt before this property was sold to the government ?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. About seven or eight years.

Mr. FOWLER. What lawyer put the title through ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think that is mentioned.

Mr. DANIEL. I suppose this building is being erected by tender ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, tenders were received in answer to public advertisements. The tenders were $23,500 and $24,000, the lowest being accepted. The tenderers were A. D. Falconer, of Sydney, and W. R. Macdonald, of Kentville.

Mr. FOWLER. How much was paid for legal services for getting the title ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total amount paid for legal expenses and advertising, printing, survey of site, &c., of every kind were $216.81.

Mr. BLAIN. Who was the clerk of works, and what was his salary ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The clerk of works is Mr. Lamb, and his salary is $3.50 a day.

Mr. BLAIN. On whose recommendation was he appointed, and what are his special qualifications for that work ?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I may inform the hon. gentleman that I had the pleasure of recommending the appointment. He is a carpenter, and very competent.

Mr. FOWLER. This is certainly a departure from the usual rule, actually appointing as clerk of works a man whose occupation would fit him for that position.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that the policy of the department is to ask the member for the county to recommend a site for public buildings, and also to recommend the clerk of works ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As I understand the practice of the department, when a man is required to supervise the erection of a public building, the member of the county is supposed to know the men best qualified for that purpose, and he is consulted. If he makes a recommendation the head of the department makes inquiry as to the man's capability, his occupation and generally as to his qualifications for performing the duties.

Mr. BLAIN. Does it make any difference on which side of the House the sitting member is ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would think so, yes, that is a time-honoured custom.

Mr. DANIEL. I might remind the minister that I made a recommendation for the enlargement of the St. John post office, which has not been acted upon. I offer the suggestion to the Minister of Public Works to bear it in mind.

Mr. FIELDING. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he should not press that because we are told these things are bribes to the citizens of St. John and it would be highly improper to bribe them.

Mr. DANIEL. The people of St. John could accept an enlarged post office which is very much needed even although the Minister of Finance may possibly consider that it was being used as a bribe. As the west is absorbing some of our immigrants, so we may be able to absorb an enlarged post office without any injury to the political atmosphere of the city.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The improvement of the accommodation of the St. John post office came under consideration some little time ago, and the Postmaster General decided that increased accommodation is to be given and that is to be attended to. By making certain changes in the interior of the building it is supposed the accommodation can be so improved that it will do for a number of years to come, without going to the heavy expense of erecting a new post office.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it the policy of the minister to purchase sites and to appoint clerks of works solely on the recommendation of the sitting member ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought I had made it clear that the policy of the department, certainly my policy, is to make inquiries after the recommendation is made. We would not act on the recommendation of a member without making inquiry as to the suitability of a site. While ordinarily we feel that we may rely on the recommendations of our friends, in this case we would think it well to go further and make inquiry as to the site for the building and as to the qualification of the clerk of works.

Mr. CROCKET. What would the minister think of the selection of a medical practitioner to superintend the erection of a lighthouse ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Everything would depend on his general qualification, but if he had had experience in that kind of work and knew how to handle men he might be a very good man.

Mr. FOWLER. Would it make any difference if he were a defeated candidate ? Would that make his qualifications any stronger ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I suppose not.

Mr. CROCKET. In Sunbury a medical man who has been a candidate in the last two elections was appointed to superintend the erection of a lighthouse.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not in my department.

Mr. FOWLER. Or wharfs?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Wharfs but not lighthouses. If the hon. gentleman says I appointed a medical gentleman to inspect a wharf he is misinformed.

Mr. FOWLER. No one said you appointed him in any case, but a medical gentleman was appointed to inspect the erection of a lighthouse and also of a wharf.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What wharf ?

Mr. FOWLER. I fancy the Oromocto wharf.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I fancy the hon. gentleman is in error.

Mr. FOWLER. Dr. Peake who was the defeated candidate in the last election and also in the election previous was appointed inspector of the lighthouse and a wharf.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The wharf at Oromocto?

Mr. FOWLER. I do not say the wharf at Oromocto but a wharf.

Glace Bay, public building, $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What would be the total cost and is the contract let ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total estimated cost is $57,767 exclusive of site. The amount of the contract is $34,500.

Mr. BENNETT. Who are the contractors ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Messrs. Rhodes and Curry.

Mr. BENNETT. The work is under way ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract was taken December 19, 1907, and the work is now under way.

Mr. BLAIN. From whom was the site purchased and at what price ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. One lot was purchased from M. Nolan. Another property, known as the Ferguson property, was also purchased.

Mr. BLAIN. Had Dr. Sullivan something to do with one of those sites ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know as to that.

Mr. BLAIN. I see an item :

Dr. Sullivan, purchase price of site, $4,509.

Mr. FIELDING. The property known as the Ferguson property was owned by Dr. Sullivan. Ferguson is an old name attached to it.

Mr. BENNETT. I see that last year $200 was paid to Whitten, is he the clerk of works ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a case where an outside architect prepared plans and is the supervising architect. He would be the one the hon. gentleman refers to.

Mr. TAYLOR. If I understood the minister correctly the cost of the post office at Bridgewater was $39,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, including the site, fittings and everything.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is there not a mistake? I heard a discussion going on close about me that there must certainly be a mistake of $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, the total estimated cost is $39,500.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand that Bridgewater has a population of less than 3,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I stated it as 2,900.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, less than 3,000. When the Conservative party were in power our town, which has about 4,000 population and which has a very much larger postal revenue, had to give a free site and got a building costing between $8,000 and $10,000. I think it is an outrage to put a $39,000 building in a little village of 2,900 people.

Mr. TALBOT. That was to make up for the Laprairie post office.

Halifax Dominion buildings—improvements, repairs, &c., $15,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Is that to be done by contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is to make provision towards remodelling the interior of the Halifax Dominion building which is to be used for post office purposes.

Mr. BLAIN. Has that anything to do with the customs house?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, the customs examining warehouse and the offices of the Inland Revenue Department have been removed to the new customs house building and now we want to make some improvements to the post office building.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the work be done by tender or day's labour?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We called for tenders for this building, but no contracts have been let yet. The matter is under consideration.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the work be done by contract or day's labour?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are endeavouring to get it done by contract, but I am not in a position to say whether it may not be for the best under the circumstances, which perhaps it may not be necessary for me to state to the committee, to get the work done by day's labour. It may be more economical to get it done by day's work.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the nature of the work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Remodelling the inside of the building.

Mr. FOWLER. Changing partitions?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, changing partitions and all that sort of work which is rendered necessary by reason of the building being required for post office purposes.

Mr. FOWLER. Are you taking in any additional offices?

Mr. FIELDING. The post office, customs house and a number of other offices were all in this old building. It was a building constructed before confederation. Now that the new customs house has been built, the customs staff has been moved over to the new building and the old building is being entirely remodelled for the accommodation of the post office and also some other departments ; for instance, the Finance Department, which has an office in a private building in the city, is to be moved into this building and in so far as possible all the offices which have been distributed throughout the city will be consolidated in these two buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is entirely a revote.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES.

On the order,

House in Committee on Bill No. 51, an Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company (reported without amendment). —Mr. Crawford.

Mr. GRAHAM. Stand.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the objection to going on is that the promoter is not here, I waive that objection.

Mr. GRAHAM. I want it to stand. There are questions arising on this that I want to look into.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister is aware that I gave notice of an amendment, which will be found in the Votes and Proceedings of the 21st inst. It is somewhat to the same effect as the provision which we incorporated in the statute of 1904 when we were granting additional privileges to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, that we could on certain terms take over certain branches; so that the government, when they resumed possession of the eastern division, if they should resume possession, at the end of fifty years, would have the right to take over such branches as are built in connection with the eastern division. I would be glad if the minister would consider it in the meantime.

Progress reported.

RELIEF OF EDITH MAUD ROSARIO GAMMELL.

House in committee on Bill (No. 139), for the relief of Edith Maud Rosario Gammell.—Mr. Galliher.

Mr. LENNOX. I suppose that the committee to whom was referred this case have taken into consideration the evidence perhaps more fully than the Senate Committee did. I called attention the other night to the fact that the evidence that was presented to us from the Senate did not appear to be very satisfactory, and that view was concurred in by some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who are not present to-night. I do not belong to that committee and do not know what their procedure is; but as the matter was before the Senate Committee, there were to my mind two serious defects in the case. One was that there was no proper identification of the husband. Taking it as clearly established that improper relations were shown to have existed between a certain man and a lady, it was not definitely shown that the man referred to was the husband of this Mrs. Gammell, although she speaks of him as her husband. Aside from that, the evidence produced was to my mind of the most unsatisfactory kind. It was the evidence of a constable and some one who accompanied him, and it was not explained how they were able to proceed to the point they spoke of without being detected by the other party. I would not believe their evidence for the purpose of determining the ownership of a barrel of apples. It is possible that the members of the House of Commons Committee have satisfied themselves by further investigation; but if they have not, I venture to say that this thing is going through on very unsatisfactory and inconclusive evidence.

Mr. GALLIHER. This Bill is in my name. I may say that I do not know very much about the facts and nothing about the people. I happened to be on the Private Bills Committee when it went through there, and I have also read the evidence. There is something in what my hon. friend opposite says. Still, after all, I think the fact is pretty clearly established that the man with whom the lady was found was certainly not her husband, whoever her husband may have been. With regard to how the people got there without being seen, that would probably depend a good deal on the preoccupation of the individuals themselves as they took their evening stroll. For my part, although the evidence is not as direct as possible, it leaves no doubt in my mind that the woman is entitled to the relief she claims. I may say that there was no further evidence adduced before the committee.

Mr. LENNOX. I submit to my hon. friend's superior judgment in the matter.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 124) for the relief of Andrew Walker.—(Mr. Guthrie).

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Halifax immigration building—renewals and repairs in connection with heating, plumbing, &c., $1,800.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for certain repairs to the heating apparatus. The total cost is $4,800 and there has been expended, under a previous vote, $3,000. We are asking for a revote of $1,800 to complete.

Halifax immigrant detention building, $7,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is required to complete the building under construction. It is for the treatment of immigrants suffering from trachoma and other kindred diseases. It was put under contract October, 1905. The dimensions are 115 by 51. Total probable cost, $72,106.91. It has been all paid for with the exception of this $7,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought that we deported the diseased immigrants.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They have to be detained until they can be deported and there must be a place in which to treat them. They have to be treated in a humane manner. In some cases they might be detained until they recover.

Halifax military buildings, Wellington barracks—re-construction of married men's quarters, $45,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This amount was voted last session but no part of it has been used so that this is a revote. This work is urgently requested by the Department of Militia.

Mr. BLAIN. Will tenders be called ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. There cannot be very much urgency when the whole amount voted last year remains unexpended. Why was this work held over ? Is there any special object in keeping it on hand until this year ? This money should have been spent when parliament ordered it. We are not supposed to vote money for the mere pleasure of voting it. Why has the minister allowed this work to stand over ? If it was so urgently required, why was it not done last year ? Is the money to be spent this year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We intend spending the money this year. It does not always follow that when parliament votes money for a specific purpose, it is absolutely essential that the money should be spent. In view of the financial conditions the world over last year, one can well understand that we should incur only such expenditure as was absolutely necessary.

Mr. HENDERSON. Suppose there should be no elections this year, will the money be spent just the same ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The question of an election has never been thought of in this connection.

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. ALCORN. Is there a larger garrison at Halifax now than when the imperial authorities had charge ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would have to refer my hon. friend to the Minister of Militia for that information.

Mr. ALCORN. It is difficult to understand why this expenditure should be necessary now when the accommodation was sufficient for the imperial troops ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is not for a new building but for a reconstruction of the old one.

Mr. HENDERSON. Were the barracks burnt down ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, but they had become very dilapidated.

Halifax—new public building, custom-house, $12,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As hon. gentlemen will see, this is a revote of $12,000, to make provision for the amount estimated to be spent during the fiscal year in the erection of a public building in Halifax for the purposes of the customs. I need not go into a description, but may say generally, that it is a large and fine building.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Including electric wiring, heating, elevator, furniture, &c., the cost will be $325,015.25.

Mr. BLAIN. Who is the contractor?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Keefe, of Halifax.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the contractor done his work satisfactorily to the architect?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not entirely so. Some objections have been raised. At my request the chief architect has sent a member of his staff to make a thorough investigation, and, in the meantime, an amount is held back.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the trouble ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I suppose the hon. gentleman would not wish me to go into the details. A number of objections are made, none of great magnitude. For instance, there is an objection to the way the windows are hung and a number of matters of that kind.

Mr. HENDERSON. What was the estimated cost of this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My deputy informs me that it was $300,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. And this has already been exceeded by $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, the estimate of $300,000 was for the bare building, whereas the figure I have given of the building complete includes electric wiring, fittings, furniture, elevator, heating, and so on.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would draw the minister's attention to a point that has frequently been discussed in this House in past years in connection with the construction of buildings of this kind. I, for one, and others also, have insisted, when a vote is to be taken for a public building, that the minister in charge shall give an estimate of the total cost, not merely for the construction of the building, but covering also the heating apparatus and fittings, and so on, so that we may know exactly what we are doing, and keep a proper check upon the expenditure of the minister. From the little information I have, this seems to be one of the cases where the amount necessary to complete the building will far exceed the original estimates. Already more than $25,000 over the estimate has been spent, and now we are asked for another vote of $12,000. Next year, possibly, we may be called upon for a further vote for furniture, and for extras possibly. I presume the minister was not personally responsible for the expenditure on this work, but, of course, he has to assume responsibility for the acts of his predecessors. I wish to make our position clear in this matter. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is very fond of charging hon. members on this side with objecting to public works, especially public works in the province of Nova Scotia. I want the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) to distinguish between objection and criticism. We do not object to the construction of useful public works, for we recognize that expenditure on this service is necessary and will be necessary in time to come. We approve the construction of public works that are essential for the purposes of the country. But we are ready to enter our very strong protest against any extravagance or waste, or, if the minister will pardon me, graft, in connection with the construction of these buildings. This is the reason why we want to have a careful estimate made before any money is voted for the construction of a new building. We find it necessary, owing to the largely increasing expenditure, to put checks upon it. What we object to is not expenditure that is called for by the needs of the country, but careless and extravagant expenditure. As the items of supply are discussed from time to time, the hon. minister will understand why it is that we hold him strictly to account for any over-stepping of the estimate of the cost of a public building. There is no reason why an architect should not estimate almost to a nicety, the cost of a building such as this. A few years ago, we endeavoured to get the Minister of Public Works to erect in small country towns for post office purposes buildings that, probably, would not cost more than $8,000 or $10,000. Hon. Mr. Tarte, when Minister of Public Works, declared his intention of providing such buildings. He made an attempt, commencing, I believe, in West Huron, with the town of Clinton. He proposed to erect there a building on the principle I had suggested, being not only a building for the post office, but a residence for the postmaster, thereby saving the expense of a caretaker. But I understand that when the matter went to the architect he refused to draw the plans and said they were not in the habit of drawing plans and specifications for buildings of less than $10,000. Were I Minister of Public Works—which I do not expect ever to be—I would ask the architect, in such a case, to step out, and would put another man in his place, for I think the minister is the man to be responsible for the expenditure and not the architect. Of course, I find no fault with the officer who is here to advise the minister to-night. Probably that may be the custom. But it is a custom we must try to get over. The architect must be ready to lay before the committee a careful and correct estimate of the total expenditure of the building, and then it will be the duty of this committee, year after year, as we are voting money, to see to it that the expenditure is kept within that line. If this is done, I think the Minister of Finance will not encounter the difficulty in furnishing the money for these public works which he has indicated. I was a little surprised when the minister made this confession a few moments ago that the reason why an item of $45,000 was not expended was that the Minister of Finance realized that, owing to danger of money stringency, it was better to allow the work to remain unfinished than to undertake the expenditure. I had an idea that this country was big enough and rich enough to carry through any proposition approved by parliament, and I think so yet. When matters of this character come up again, especially on a first vote, the minister will hear from me on the subject.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the hon. gentleman, while well intentioned, is too exacting when he insists that there should be at the beginning a very full estimate as to the cost of the work. There should be a general estimate undoubtedly at the time these estimates are prepared. Even in the case of the public work now under notice, detailed plans could not be prepared; it would not be the part of wisdom to prepare detailed plans before the appropriation was made. Therefore, the first estimate must necessarily be a preliminary estimate. It need not necessarily on that ground be far from the facts, for it should take into account of course lighting, heating and other items of expenditure. But where you prepare detailed plans later, it is possible that you will find the original estimate is somewhat exceeded, and if the amounts are not too large, I do not think would be any ground for criticism. With regard to the more general question of expenditures, it may happen that after we have appropriated the money there are seasons when things are running smoothly and when the Minister of Finance would have no reason to forbid the various spending departments to use the moneys which have been appropriated for the public service. But if it should appear that the expenditure was running high and the revenue was running lower than usual, it would be the part of wisdom in the Minister of Finance to say to his colleagues: Well, although this appropriation is supposed to be at your disposal to deal with in any way you like, you had better hold part of it up until the following year. I think that would be a wise course to pursue under such circumstances.

Mr. HENDERSON. In this case no part of the appropriation has been expended, no effort was made to go on with the work. With reference to what the Finance Minister has said about the impossibility of estimating exactly what a building will cost, my plan would be that the minister should say to the architect: We propose to erect a public building in the city of Halifax, or wherever it is to be erected. for a specific purpose; it may be a custom house, it may be an armoury, it may be a post office. We propose to spend on that building the sum of $100,000, and that sum must complete the building in its entirety. It must furnish the site, it must put up the building, it must furnish the heating, lighting, fittings and everything else required. He says to his architect: I want you to draw a plan and prepare specifications for a building that will cost $100,000 and not one dollar more. If the architect finds, after working out his details, that the building is going to cost a little more than that, then it will be his duty to shave it down, to revise his calculations, and come within the limit of the amount the minister has directed him to expend on that building. I remember years ago when Hon. Mr. Sutherland was Minister of Public Works drawing his attention to this matter in a case that occurred in the city of London, where an estimate for an armoury had been exceeded, if I remember rightly, some $75,000 or $80,000 over the appropriation voted by parliament. I laid down this very principle, and Mr. Sutherland heartily endorsed it. I have no doubt that the Minister of Public Works to-day, if he thinks the matter over, will see a great deal of wisdom in it, and I think he will find less trouble in the erection of these buildings and keeping them within the estimated cost if he adopts some arbitrary plan like that. At the same time, I think he will get over the difficulty that the Minister of Finance has pointed out, about a building costing a little more than was originally intended. Let the architect make some allowance for such extras as might reasonably be expected, and hold him responsible for keeping within the amount that is to be expended on that building.

Mr. BARKER. I cannot help expressing my extreme surprise at the remarkable statement made by the Minister of Finance. We are now told plainly that when this government comes down with a proposition to parliament to build certain works, no matter what we are told as to the estimated cost, we are not to rely upon that, it doesn't amount to a row of pins. You do not expect your officers to know what to think or to estimate. Just give parliament something to go upon and we will start out. I say that such preaching from the Finance Minister can have no other result than the waste, plunder and extravagance that we have seen for years under this government. The officers of the Department of Public Works are present and are listening to the Finance Minister. The architect hears the Finance Minister of this country standing up and giving him practically authority just to shuffle off the figures. No matter whether we are right or wrong, just give us something to throw out to the House and we will go on with the work. Now, that is so extravagant a proposition that I wonder the Minister of Finance is not ashamed to stand up and make it. Why, such a proposition would disgrace any municipal council. The idea of a municipality going to work to build a municipal structure, and without ascertaining what that structure was going to cost, committing the municipality to the work, going on and putting $10,000, $20,000 or $30,000 upon it. Now, you have begun it you must go on with it, though it cost you $100,000. I hope the hon. gentleman spoke without any consideration and simply to get the Minister of Public Works out of a possible hole he was in, because I think the hon. gentleman knows a great deal more about business than one would imagine from that statement. Surely there cannot be anything plainer than that before a minister controlling a department would recommend his colleagues to construct a particular public work, he would take the utmost care with his officers to find out what it would cost before he dared to come before his colleagues in council to get their approval. He should be able to tell them what it would cost; he might not be able to guarantee the expenditure to a dollar. But what do public companies, what do municipalities, what do governments do who have any care for their reputation? They get from their engineer a carefully prepared estimate of the cost of the construction in detail; they add a percentage to that to cover all possible contingencies, say ten or fifteen per cent. The engineer or architect who would lead his company into expenditures that would ultimately upset all their calculations would get his walking ticket very quickly. But this government could not dismiss an architect no matter how far he might be out, because the Finance Minister says: Oh, we do not expect him to be correct; we simply get something to go upon, to start with. They would rather he did not estimate too closely because as it is they can come session after session and say: We only got $50,000 from you and now we want $100,000 more. I think it is an outrage upon the House that we should be asked to vote money on an estimate which according to the words of the minister of the department goes for nothing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Who said that?

Mr. BARKER. Because the Finance Minister says that we must not pay attention to that estimate, we cannot be accurate so we need not pay attention to the estimate, but simply vote what is asked for. Over and over again we have been asked to vote fifty per cent, sixty per cent or 100 per cent more than we have been told the work would require, only to be told afterwards that it was simply a rough estimate to start with, and that it could not be expected that the officers would know from the beginning the probable cost. That is just what the architect is for. Here is an architect who is building a post office. He has probably had 20 samples of that very building all through the country and should not have the slightest excuse for not coming very close to the proper figures in his estimate; but if he is told, as the Minister of Finance says, to go ahead, he will not take the trouble to be accurate, he will simply put in any sum, it would be quite superfluous for him to make an accurate estimate as he can have all he wants added to his original estimate. The Minister of Public Works says that there was an estimate for this building, but they did not put in the wiring. He might just as well say that they did not put in the gas pipes, or the cement that was provided long before the completion of the building. The wiring forsooth. I venture to say that we will probably have this up next year with a request for several thousands more to put in the patent steel desks. The argument of the Minister of Finance will be quite as effectual next year or five years hence, we will have something in addition to the original estimates under the name of furniture. This year it is wiring; I suppose the next time it will be door knobs, window panes or something of that kind.

Mr. FIELDING. What the Minister of Finance thinks will be judged from what he said and what is in 'Hansard' and not from the extraordinary distortion of his words we have heard from the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker).

Mr. BARKER. I am pretty accurate.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member is not accurate, and if any one takes the trouble to consult 'Hansard' and to read the extraordinary statement the hon. gentleman has made, he will see that the hon. gentleman was not accurate. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) to whom I was replying, said that the Minister of Public Works in asking a vote for a public building such as the one now asked for at Halifax, should lay before the House full and detailed plans and estimates of the building, and condemned the minister for not producing such plans. I stated that my hon. friend had a purpose in that which was legitimate and commendable, but it was not well to push that contention too far. I said it was not the practice and it had never been the practice of any government, when a first vote is taken for a public building, to come forward with all the detailed plans. It would not be the part of wisdom to undertake the detailed plans of a public building before parliament had made an appropriation.

Mr. BARKER. Why not?

Mr. FIELDING. It has never been done, I do not think it is possible.

Mr. BARKER. It should be done.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not agree. If we could all be as wise as the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) it would perhaps be better but that is impossible.

Mr. BARKER. How is he to get tenders for the building if he has not plans?

Mr. FIELDING. At the time you are asking for an appropriation you are not asking for tenders. I am not speaking of the time when you ask for tenders, but of the time when you take the first vote in parliament, months before tenders are asked for. Of course when tenders are asked you must have detailed plans down to the finest point. But when application is made to parliament for the construction of a building of a certain character in a certain place, I do not think it is reasonable to ask a department to have detailed plans for presentation. It has never been done and I do not think that any sensible man would ask it. When you come to call for tenders that is the proper time to have detailed plans and specifications made. If it turns out that the original preliminary and general estimate, which should include wiring and all these things, turns out to be less than is required, it does not prove that the architect is incompetent or that the minister neglected his work.

Mr. BLAIN. I see at V—36 an item:

Department of Customs, duty on bronze coat-of-arms, $435.

Would the minister explain that?

Mr. FIELDING. I remember that a coat-of-arms was included in the plans for the building, and the contractor suggested that he should be allowed to bring it in free of duty. I know my own view was that as he had tendered to put in a coat-of-arms, therefore he should pay duty. I thought the Department of Customs should make him pay that and I think they did.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The item, as it is worded, shows that the duty was paid.

Mr. BLAIN. By whom ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By the contractor.

Mr. FIELDING. It would be paid I take it for granted, to the contractor, as a part of the general cost, but he would have to pay the duty to the customs.

Mr. FOWLER. Would that be charged against him ?

Mr. FIELDING. It should be and I suppose it was.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would probably be paid by the Department of Public Works and charged to the contractor.

Mr. BLAIN. I cannot understand why it should be in this book any more than 100 kegs of nails supplied to the contractor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My deputy tells me that the duty was paid by the department. The department at the time insisted that the contractor should pay it. There was a long argument and finally it was decided that under the circumstances the department should bear the duty. It was not paid by the contractor.

Mr. FIELDING. If that statement is correct I must withdraw what I said. I know the contractor mentioned the matter to me and I told him that he would have to pay the duty. I never heard of the matter since. I supposed that he had paid it.

Mr. BLAIN. The contractor tenders for the coat of arms upon the building and he decides to purchase this coat of arms in New York. May I ask the minister how much the coat of arms cost or how much the contractor's tender was ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My deputy says that the ground upon which the contractor made the claim that he should not pay the duty was that formerly goods for the government came in free.

Mr. FIELDING. It was so formerly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contractor urged that he did not suppose there would be any duty upon the coat of arms.

Mr. BLAIN. How much did it cost when the duty was $435 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman would know pretty nearly as well as I would.

Mr. TAYLOR. About $1,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably, or perhaps more than that.

Mr. FIELDING

Mr. BLAIN. At what rate of duty would this be admitted?

Mr. FIELDING. It would be 20 to 25 per cent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At all events he did not suppose the government would exact the duty. That is the argument he made and the minister at that time yielded to the argument and allowed the duty.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid that I misled the committee, because I supposed that he would be required to pay the duty. That was the impression I had and I did not know that he had persuaded the department to adopt his view until the statement was made by my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAIN. Why did he not purchase this coat of arms in Canada?

Mr. FIELDING. Are these goods made in Canada?

Mr. BLAIN. I think they are.

Mr. FIELDING. I think not.

Mr. BLAIN. With all due respect to the hon. the Minister of Finance I am sure they are.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman say where they are made in Canada?

Mr. BLAIN. In Toronto. I had something to do with the purchasing of one myself although not so extensive as this.

Mr. FIELDING. Would it be suitable for a large building?

Mr. BLAIN. For the court house in my own town.

Mr. FOWLER. St. John, New Brunswick, is another place where they make them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that it could not be got in Canada at that time.

Mr. BLAIN. If it could not be got in Canada the architect should have changed the plan so that it should be manufactured in Canada.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am quite sure that it would have been obtained in Canada if it had been possible because the artist who made the model was a Canadian. He obtained it from the United States.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice that a clock was purchased at a cost of $2,080. It was also brought in from the United States for this building. May I ask the minister if the duty was paid on this clock by the government or the contractor?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that the duty on the clock was paid by the contractor and he also tells me that there was no clock of that description manufactured at that time in Canada.

Mr. TAYLOR. What about the British preference ?

Mr. BERGERON. Who was the contractor of the building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. M. E. Keefe.

Mr. BERGERON. How much has he received ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contractor has received $251,928. While I am upon my feet I may say that I am sure that if my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) had wished to make any argument in regard to the chief architect's estimates being exceeded he certainly was very unfortunate in taking the case of this particular building, because it happened in this case that the chief architect made his estimate before calling for tenders and after he had prepared his plans and his estimate was $300,000 exclusive of the site. As a matter of fact the building will be completed with the additional $12,000 which we are asking for and the total cost of the building will only be $325.000, which includes site, inspection and everything, showing that the chief architect was only $1,000 out of the way.

Mr. FOWLER. That is not an answer at all to the remarks made by my hon. friend from Hamilton and which were replied to with so much heat by the hon. the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding). I do not know why the hon. the Minister of Finance found it necessary to work himself into such a passion, such a rage. Whether it was actual rage that he felt or only simulated passion that he exhibited I do not know. Certainly my hon. friend from Hamilton did not distort the early statement that was made by the hon. the Finance Minister. It was a very unfortunate statement in view of the fact that the chief architect was here listening to him because it seemed as if it were a warrant to him to pursue the ordinary slipshod methods which have been hitherto pursued with respect to estimates for public buildings. Why there should be a different mode of procedure adopted for the conduct of a work by the government from that which would be adopted by a corporation or municipality with respect to the construction of public works is something I fail to understand, and I do not think the Minister of Finance, in his violent philippic, made it at all clear why there should be this difference. Why should it not be possible for the chief architect, who has a large staff regularly employed in his department, besides the outside staff that he employs, including several persons of his own name—I do not know whether they are his own relatives or not, before coming to this House to ask for an appropriation, to make a closer estimate of the actual cost ? Instead of that we find in every one of these public works that the cost is far in excess of the original estimate. I remember a somewhat famous case of a public work in the province of Quebec, a work known as the wharf at Grande Vallée ; the first estimate we had was the exceedingly moderate sum of $5,000, and yet we paid out about $75,000 before we got through with that work. Now, I understood that this $75,000 of work at Grande Vallée has been carried away and is not in existence. However, the purpose for which that wharf was built having been served, I suppose the government did not care what became of the wharf.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Who told the hon. gentleman that yarn that it has all been carried away ?

Mr. FOWLER. I have the statement of my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does he say that the Grande Vallée wharf has been carried away ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Part of it fell into the river and a great deal of expenditure was necessary to replace it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member for Kings and Albert said just now that it had been carried away.

Mr. FOWLER. The Minister of Public Works does not think anything about a portion of this work falling into the river because they are so accustomed to their works dropping into the river that it does not excite comment.

Mr. BERGERON. The object was attained ; the limits were sold.

Mr. FOWLER. It was necessary to carry a certain county in Quebec and there was only one man who could carry it for the Liberal party. So, an arrangement was made whereby this gentleman was to have a wharf built at Grande Vallée in order that he might dispose of certain limits which he had purchased and which though valueless without this wharf, might be given value and might be disposed of. The bargain was carried out ; the county was carried ; the wharf was built. Now it does not make any difference whether it drops into the river or not, because the limits were sold after the wharf was built.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is my hon. friend aware that the Deseronto people are carrying on large lumbering operations there ?

Mr. FOWLER. I do not know ; I think not. But it does seem to me that the minister has not done himself proud by the stand he has taken on this question. He has had to change his position in regard to this coat of arms, and he will find it necessary to change his position with respect to the duty on the clock, because I take it that was paid by the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know.

Mr. FOWLER. At any rate, the duty on the coat of arms was paid by the government, and the Minister of Finance said he thought improperly so.

Mr. BERGERON. At page V—36 of the Auditor General's Report there is this item: 'Schulze, C. G. & Co., Est. 1 to February 16, on $2,080 contract for clock and $268.80 duty.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. That does not show that the government paid the duty.

Mr. FOWLER. If would look as if the duty was paid by the government and was charged against the contractor ; but as far as the coat of arms is concerned, the duty was paid, and the Minister of Finance says it should not have been paid.

Mr. FIELDING. Generally speaking, I think the admission of various articles for the government free of duty has been a source of much embarrassment, and in the tariff as it now stands we have insisted that everything shall pay duty, even when a department imports the goods. I recollect the contractor saying that he thought this coat of arms ought to be free of duty. I said that I thought it should pay the duty. He evidently went to the department and was able to satisfy the department on the general principle that goods for the government ought to be admitted free of duty.

Mr. FOWLER. The other people who tendered would naturally expect to pay duty, and therefore this contractor was given that advantage over them. It does seem a funny thing that you had to go to the United States to get the coat of arms of the country cast in bronze. Surely there are brass founders in this country who can cast a coat of arms.

Mr. BLAIN. I have some information about the manner in which this work was done, and I want to read a paragraph :

The floors of the building——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman tell me from what he is reading ?

Mr. BLAIN. From private information which I have, that is good information, I may say.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman kindly let me know from whom the information proceeds ? It would be valuable to me. I am very desirous of getting information of that kind.

Mr. BLAIN. I am equally anxious to communicate the information to the minister. The only question in which my hon. friend and I are interested is whether these statements are correct or not. The hon. gentleman has already opened the door by saying that the department is not satisfied with the work done by Mr. Keefe. Was the contractor paid any extras on this work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has not been paid any extras on this work.

Mr. BLAIN. Will he be paid any ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has a claim against the department which has not been recognized so far.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it decided that his claim will not be paid ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have asked the chief architect to send one of his staff to Halifax to examine the building, and into the complaints that have been made. The matter of the balance of the contract is under consideration, and his claim is also under consideration.

Mr. BERGERON. It is not settled one way or the other ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the amount of the claim for extras ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not remember at this moment.

Mr. FOWLER. The item on page V—36 of the Auditor General's Report says that $268.80 of duty was paid, and $1,560.80 was paid on account.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It seems from this account very clear that the contractor paid the duty, and he received an estimate on both. The duty is added to the cost of the clock.

Mr. FOWLER. Why would the duty be mentioned there at all ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is there because it shows the payment made to the contractor, who is paid on progress estimates. The duty is added to the contract price.

Mr. FOWLER. If you add the duty to the contract price, would not that be making the government pay it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all. What apparently took place was this. The contract price was $2,080. Adding the duty, $268.80, would make about $2,340, and upon that the Public Works Department made a payment of $1,560, leaving a balance due the contractor of about $800.

Mr. FOWLER. Why should the duty appear in the public accounts at all if it was not paid by the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not my hon. friend understand that if the contractor agreed to furnish the clock for $2,300 including the duty, the department would pay him the amount required for the duty ? No doubt, in making this contract, he would take the duty into consideration and regulate his price accordingly.

Mr. FOWLER. Why should the word 'duty' be there at all if the duty was paid by the contractor ? Surely you have some information as to what the price of the clock was. What was the contract price ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have said that the furnishing of the clock was not included in the contract for the building but there was a separate contract. The Schultze Company agreed to furnish the clock at a certain price with the duty added, and the amount of the duty would be added to the contract price of the clock.

Mr. FOWLER. Is the government not paying for it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it is paying the duty in the price of the clock.

Mr. FOWLER. In what respect does this differ from the coat of arms?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The coat of arms was in the original contract. That is the difference. Suppose the coat of arms had been ordered separately and Mr. Keefe had said he would take $500 for it and the duty, if the duty were $100, that would have to be added to the contract price. In one sense the government would be paying the duty but the duty would be added to the contract price. If the government buys the article, it pays the duty because the duty is added to the price. A merchant always adds the duty to the price when selling his goods.

Mr. FOWLER. When this contract was made, there would be no question at all about the duty because the contractor would buy the clock in Canada.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No such clocks are made in Canada. It had to be imported and the duty paid on it.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the minister say that the contract price was so much and the contractor was to add the duty and would be paid the duty ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell at the moment.

Mr. FOWLER. We should have that information. The chief architect does not appear to know much about it. It is rather strange that these clocks could not be made in Canada.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the meaning of the words 'less draw-back $8.80' ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell my hon. friends what they mean, but I suppose the meaning is this. The amount of the contract was $2,080 and the amount of duty $268.80 or about $2,300 altogether and the amount paid on account was $1,568.80. Then the department always keeps back a certain percentage as an additional security for the completion of the contract, and that $8.80 would be the amount kept back.

Mr. FOWLER. If your chief architect cannot invent a better explanation than that, he is not very expert.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is not the chief architect's statement but my own supposition.

Mr. FOWLER. I am sorry you cannot do better than that. Just imagine $8.80 kept back as security for the carrying out of the contract. Well, we will let it go at that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a certain percentage kept back, and the $8.80 may have been required to complete the percentage.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the percentage ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Usually 10 per cent.

Mr. FOWLER. 10 per cent on what amount ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This $8.80 may have been required to make up the 10 per cent. Will my hon. friend make a better excuse ?

Mr. FOWLER. I would suggest that this was 10 per cent kept back on the price of the pendulum.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it a new building entirely ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. You have bought a great deal of furniture from Brander, Morris & Company. How many employees are there in that building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know, but in a city like Halifax there is a large business done in the customs.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this used for the customs ?

Mr. FIELDING. Chiefly but there are other offices as well.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The exports were $7,000,000 last year and the imports $6,500,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Where was the customs done before?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the building now to be used for a post office.

Mr. BERGERON. What has become of the furniture in the old building? This is all new.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry to say I cannot tell my hon. friend.

Mr. BERGERON. We are buying new furniture all the time and do not know what becomes of the old furniture.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume it would remain in the old post office building.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister deserves a good deal of sympathethic treatment. He is new to his position and evidently does not know much about this, and he is not getting any assistance from his officers who are here. I do not know whether it is because these gentlemen are equally ignorant. What the minister had better do is ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, in order that he may obtain some information which he can then give to the House. Here is this matter of the clock. They do not seem to know the contract price or whether the government paid the duty or where the clock was purchased. Then the minister cannot explain what this drawback of $8.80 means. I think the deputy minister might hunt up this information and be in a position to give it to the minister who could then inform the House when we meet again.

Mr. BLAIN. Having made the statement that the contractor did not do the work satisfactorily to the department, I want to draw the attention of the minister to this letter which I have received:

The floors of the building sagged shortly after its construction owing to the beams not being set well into the wall. One floor, through which an elevator has to pass, projects over three feet into the space which should be left open to accommodate the elevator. As this projection is three feet beyond the lower floor, it would require a corkscrew elevator to reach the top floor of the building.

Do any of the complaints which the department has against the contractor refer to any of the items I have read or is it another matter that the department objected to?

Mr. PUGSLEY. After reading the report of the expert sent to Halifax to examine the building, I should think that the gentleman who wrote that letter had been making himself familiar with the corkscrew, for it is a most exaggerated and unfair statement. The report of the architect does not bear out the statements made.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister has said that the contractor did not do his work satisfactorily to the department. As a proof of that, we have the fact that the department held back some of the money. This article goes on to say:

The woodwork in the office desks has come to pieces in parts of the building. The roof was badly constructed, and Keefe charged for extras in the work which should have been included in the original contract. I think there is no place made for connection with the water mains.

It says also:

The people in the city of Halifax are generally disturbed about the manner in which the contractor has carried on his work.

I would like to know from the minister how much money has been kept back? Also, does the department intend to allow extras to this contractor who has done his work in such an unsatisfactory manner?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have already stated that an expert has been sent from the department to Halifax to examine the building. His report has been received, and, while it shows that in quite a number of particulars the contractor has not carried out the specifications, yet the defects are not of the exaggerated kind that the statement given by my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) would lead the committee to believe.

Mr. FOWLER. Was there a clerk of works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Did he report that the work was not right?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. Who was he?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Bush.

Mr. FOWLER. What is his business?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is an architect.

Mr. FOWLER. What salary did he receive for this work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was to receive 1½ per cent on the cost of the building. There is quite an amount held back pending the consideration of the report. We have refused to consider the claim for extras in the meantime.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this inspector still employed in the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. He is dismissed? Has he been paid his 1½ per cent on the cost of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not in full.

Mr. FOWLER. How much is left?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not say at the moment just how much, but it is a substantial amount.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman will look it up?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will write my hon. friend a letter, giving the facts.

Mr. BERGERON. I would call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the following item on page V—36 of the Auditor General's Report:

Robertson, Wm., & Son: steel beams, &c., 1,805 pounds at 7½ cents; ladders, $20, $155.38.

How could you put steel beams in a building when the contract has been given for the whole building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have it looked up.

Mr. FOWLER. Who is the contractor?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Keefe, of Halifax.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that the local member?

Mr. FIELDING. He was years ago, but is not now.

Mr. STANFIELD. I would call attention to an item on the same page, V—36, covering a charge for hot water heating apparatus complete, $4,798; another charge for four hot water boilers at $375; headers complete two at $128 and valves $180, then additional heating apparatus as per tender, and also alterations in heating apparatus. I do not pretend to be an architect, but I believe there is no reason for making such changes in heating apparatus as these, or for having additional tenders for heating apparatus for a building of this size. I would like the minister to ask his architect for an explanation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am informed that the post office authorities decided to occupy the basement for the purposes of the post office, which necessitated a change in the heating apparatus. The building is a very large one, and, for such a building, the total cost of heating equipment is not at all excessive. The building is four storeys in height and fronts on three streets, with a frontage of 106 feet on one, 86 feet on another and 107 feet on another.

Mr. BERGERON. Did the lot belong to the government or was it bought?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was bought for $24,000.

Mr. BERGERON. From whom?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From Mr. Corbett, of Halifax. This is known as the old city market site.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister has stated that the inspector did not direct the attention of the department to the fact that the contractor was not doing his work according to the specifications. Who did direct the attention of the department to this point?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In addition to the gentleman who specially represented the government on this work, we have a resident engineer at Halifax, who, in the discharge of his duty, gave some information with regard to the building which, we thought, necessitated a very complete examination, and so we sent an architect to make that examination.

Mr. FOWLER. I see that the sum of $3,900 has been paid for wiring. Is that the wiring alone, or does that include fixtures?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That includes fixtures.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the minister the contract there to show what it required?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will get my hon. friend the contract. The contractors in this case were Messrs. J. A. Dunn & Company, of Halifax.

Mr. HENDERSON. A few moments ago the minister stated that I had made a mistake in selecting the present item as one upon which to apply the plan I suggested with regard to estimating for public buildings. If I was at all in error in selecting this item, the minister himself is responsible, he not having given the full information to which we are entitled. This shows the necessity of having much more explicit information than is given in these discussions. The minister should familiarize himself thoroughly with all these items so as to be able to give the fullest information. I am glad to know that the minister is able to construct this building within the limits of the estimate. But unfortunately the building is not yet completed, and if there are to be a few more clocks and other extras, possibly he may find his estimate exceeded.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not find any fault with my hon. friend. I intended in this matter, as in respect to all other items, to be as explicit as possible. But the hon. gentleman must remember that I have not been many months in the department. There must be at least a thousand works going on under the control of my department from one end of the country to the other, and it is impossible for me to have everything at my fingers' ends.

Mr. FOWLER. On page 4, part 3, of the Public Works report, it says: 'C. E. W. Dodwell, resident engineer and superintendent of public buildings, supervised this work.' Is that the gentleman who called attention to misdoings on the part of the contractor?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. The resident architect, Mr. Bush, has he done other work for the department besides this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think this is the first time he has been employed by the department, in recent years at all events.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not find any payment to this architect, Mr. Bush. How much has been paid him on account?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Bush's services extended over some three or four years, and he has been paid between $3,000 and $4,000 on account.

Mr. BENNETT. There is no part of it charged up in this year's Auditor General's report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was paid in previous years. I may say that Mr. Bush has been making a claim upon me for the remainder of his commission, and I have deferred payment until the matter was looked into.

Mr. CROCKET. How long was the work in course of construction?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract was made on April 16, 1902, to be completed on September 15, 1904. There was a good deal of delay.

Mr. CROCKET. Was there any penalty for failure to complete the contract within the time ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think not.

Mr. CROCKET. Is it not usual for contracts to contain a penalty clause ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not usual. Security is taken, of course.

Mr. BERGERON : What was the cause of the difficulty with Mr. Bush ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I felt that Mr. Bush was not as attentive to his duties as he ought to be, he did not give as close inspection to the building as I thought he ought to hav. iven. That is the objection I am making to the payment of the balance of his account. He is claiming somewhere in the vicinity of $1,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Was Mr. Bush appointed engineer on the recommendation of the local members, as the minister stated this afternoon was the custom of the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know.

Mr. CROCKET. Is it not possible to get that information ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think not. The minister must take the responsibility of the appointment.

Mr. ALCORN. Were there any defects in the building alleged to Mr. Bush as the reason why he should not be paid in full, and what were the defects ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell at this moment.

Mr. ALCORN. An hon. gentleman has stated that some defects were pointed out to Mr. Bush, what were the others ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman read what purported to be a letter, but I do not know whether the letter was intended as a joke or as an extravagant representation of the actual condition of affairs.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me this matter ought to be allowed to stand, because the minister has not the necessary information. It seems there has been a great fraud perpetrated upon the public with respect to the building of this custom house in Halifax, and it is a matter of considerable importance.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All I ask is a revote of $12,000.

Mr. FOWLER. The whole thing involved very much more, $300,000. Although the contractor was not erecting the building according to the contract, he has been paid all except $12,000. The minister must have the certified cheque still in his possession and should penalize the contractor. We would like to see all the correspondence between the department and Bush who has so grossly failed in his duty as inspector. If the employment of architects results in this way perhaps it would be as well to continue the old practice of employing tailors and shoemakers as inspectors. It would look almost as if there were collusion between Bush and the contractor. Although you have a resident engineer and a resident architect and presumably sent an architect from the department to inspect for progress estimates, still the work has been so improperly performed that even the department has been forced to take notice of it. I think the item should stand until we have full information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the hon. gentleman's request is unreasonable. We are asking for a revote of $12,000. Since I became minister the contractor has not received one dollar nor has Mr. Bush. I started investigating immediately the matter was brought to my attention. I sent down a first-class architect from the department who has made a thorough examination. His report does not corroborate the previous reports I have received ; it is to the effect that while there are certain not very serious defects in connection with the roof, the hanging of some of the windows, the flooring in one of the rooms and the cuttings for the elevators, these are so far as I now remember, substantially the only objections he makes. I am taking the matter up, I am responsible in connection with the chief architect for fully protecting the public and surely nothing would be gained by postponing the passing of this vote. This committee could not give the proper time to the correspondence and therefore it must be left to the minister, and I hope my hon. friend will recognize that it is desirable to get along with public business and to proceed reasonably with the estimates.

Mr. FOWLER. Could any one imagine a responsible minister advancing such a reason as that. Even if this committee could not take the time, what is the Public Accounts Committee for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is quite open to the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. FOWLER. Yet we would not have had any information that there was anything wrong if it had not been for a letter received by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). The minister should at least have brought the two reports he has received from the architects. It would take a much shorter time to discuss it if the minister had been completely frank with the committee. As I understand, it is notorious in Halifax that the building is being badly built and that Bush is in collusion with the contractor to represent everything as all right when it is all wrong. The opposition have a duty to perform in this House; they should not allow money to be voted unless they are satisfied it is being properly expended.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think my hon. friend will see that the proper place to take this up is in the Public Accounts Committee. If that committee feel disposed to take it up, I shall see that all the papers are sent there; but what cause is there to leave this over?

Mr. FOWLER. If it comes before the Public Accounts Committee this session I will be satisfied.

Mr. BERGERON. You will have to move to get it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It can easily be got at because there were payments made in 1905-6 and 1906-7 and these are before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. BLAIN. The department has withheld $12,000. May I ask if that is $12,000 on the original contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think I said $12,000; I said I was not sure of the amount.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that part of the money of the original contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. What proportion of it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell my hon. friend the exact amount to-night.

Mr. BLAIN. This is a very large contract and the committee would like to know how much the department has withheld of the original contract. The total amount of the contract is over $300,000. Was there more than one contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was a contract for fittings also.

Mr. BLAIN. Did Mr. Keefe have that as well?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Has Mr. Keefe any other contract with the government in Halifax?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the name of the architect that the department sent down to make this report?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. W. H. Wright, assistant chief architect.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the report of your own architect state what amount would be required to make good these defects that the minister has referred to?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The report will speak for itself; I cannot recall now whether it states any definite amount or not.

Mr. CROCKET. Is this $12,000 which is being asked for to pay the balance under the contract for that building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have to pay for putting in the elevator yet.

Mr. CROCKET. Is not that included in the original contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Is Mr. Wright the second officer who was sent from the department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is the second one and he only went a few days ago.

Mr. BERGERON. Who was the first gentleman to make the report?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Dodwell, of Halifax. I may say that Mr. Dodwell sent me a confidential report. He has not had special charge of the building. Special charge of it was given to Mr. Bush. Mr. Dodwell, as resident engineer, has a general supervision of the building. He has made a confidential report on the subject. Then, I sent for Mr. Keefe and talked matters over with him after which I decided to send Mr. Wright down to make a thorough examination of the building.

Mr. CROCKET. The minister ought to be able to state what portion of this sum is to be devoted to the original contract. Under the minister's statement with regard to the report there is no liability on the part of the government to pay the contactor a further sum. He has failed to complete his contract and there are these serious defects which he has spoken of and which will require a considerable amount, I should think, to make them good. I think the minister ought to be able to state what portion of this sum is to be paid to the contractor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am unable to state what will be the result of the consideration of the report or of the negotiations, but we certainly must have some more money at once to complete the work that is absolutely essential in the building. We have to instal an elevator and that will cost several thousand dollars.

Mr. CROCKET. How much will the elevator cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Several thousand dollars.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the contractor must have got all his money.

Mr. ALCORN. It is apparent the government has a good deal to conceal in this matter. I understood the minister to say that this building was to have been completed four years ago. That four years, I assume, have been occupied in correspondence between the government and the architect, or the person to whom the contract was first given. I asked the question a short time ago what were the defects in construction pointed out by the government to the architect as the reason why the balance of the contract price was withheld. The minister did not answer that question but contented himself with making some remarks upon the statement of my hon. friend from Peel. I would like an answer to that question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The report which I have just received is a confidential report from Mr. Dodwell. That being a confidential report I could not give the details of it to the contractor, but I told him that I had been informed that there were a number of important defects in the construction of the building.

Mr. ALCORN. What were these defects?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I told him they were important defets. I did not enter into the details, but I said that I would send an arctitect from the department down to Halifax and would give him an opportunity of going over the building with the architect so that he would have the most complete fair play as I did not want to do the contractor any injustice. It is just a few days ago that the report was presented to me. Now, my intention is to have a copy of the report sent to the contractor and also to Mr. Bush. I would be very glad indeed if the Public Accounts Committee would find it convenient to take up these matters. That is the place where they should be inquired into. All the correspondence would be submitted to the committee. That would be much more convenient than attempting to consider the correspondence before a committee of the House.

Mr. ALCORN. The minister says there has been a report?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. ALCORN. It is a report in regard to the public business and I fail to see how that would be confidential as regards this House. I think we have a right to know what the report contains. The minister says that he is about to send a copy of the report to the contractor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am speaking of Mr. Wright's report; it is not confidential.

Mr. ALCORN. In what sense could a report on a public work be confidential? I think this committee has the right to know the contents of that report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That will be a matter in the judgment of the Public Accounts Committee. I am rather inclined to think that the Committee on Public Accounts would say that if an official of the department who was not specially charged with the supervision of this building wrote a confidential report, it should not be produced. Personally I have no objection, but we must respect the confidence of this gentleman. I have, myself, the utmost confidence in the report of Mr. Wright, and I think that the committee, having regard to his high standing as an architect, would also have confidence in his report. That report would be submitted to the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. BERGERON. I am sure that my hon. friend has every possible confidence in Mr. Dodwell, and if it had not been for that gentleman, it is probable that we might never have heard anything about that building, and we would have paid the full amount the contract calls for. It is difficult to know whether this report should be disclosed if it is confidential. The public owe a great deal to Mr. Dodwell for having first found out these conditions and having been the cause of saving the money of the country. But, there is a great deal of difference between the report of Mr. Dodwell, who is not interested, and who has had no communication with the contractor, and the report of Mr. Wright, who may be a first-class architect, but who goes down there, meets the contractor, and we can see immediately the work of the contractor, because the report of Mr. Wright does not deal at all with the information given by Mr. Dodwell. It is a question whether it would not be a good thing to have the report of Mr. Dodwell, so that we could compare the two reports.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no justifiable reason why it should be private. It deals with the expenditure of public money, and therefore this House is entitled to it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was not at my suggestion that it was marked confidential. I received this communication from Mr. Dodwell, who I presume felt it to be his duty, as an official of the government, though not specially charged with looking after this building, to give me certain information, and it is for the Public Accounts Committee to say whether that should be produced.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the minister should have said that as this was a public work, the report had no right to be marked confidential, and this House is entitled to see that or any other report made in connection with it.

Mr. ALCORN. This committee is now asked to vote this large sum to complete this building, and it appears that two reports have been made on certain defects in the building. I am quite unable to see in what sense, as regards this committee or parliament, either of these reports can be said to be confidential. It is a new doctrine to me that parliament can be denied information simply because some outside party chooses to mark a paper as confidential. It is for the minister to say whether information so conveyed to him is confidential as between him and parliament. Was this report so marked paid for ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. ALCORN. The other report was paid for, I presume ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was made by an official of the department, whose expenses of course were paid, but there was no other charge.

Mr. ALCORN. That report ought to be here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It seems to me that the proper course would be, if it is thought desirable in the public interest that the matter should be investigated, for the Public Accounts Committee to take it up. That committee would have power to summon Mr. Dodwell and Mr. Bush to give evidence under oath, which of course could not be presented to this committee.

Mr. BERGERON. Suppose the majority of the committee refused to subpœna Mr. Dodwell.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot conceive such a thing possible. I am sure the committee would be most willing to investigate this matter, as I have noticed every desire on its part to investigate every public matter.

Mr. SPROULE. The item then should be allowed to stand until it is investigated ; because after the money is voted, the government need not care.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The purpose of this vote will be to pay for the electric elevator and certain blinds and fittings which are necessary to put the building in shape so that it can be used by the customs authorities. I may say that there will be no money paid either to Mr. Keefe or Mr. Bush until the Committee on Public Accounts have a reasonable time to take the matter up; but we want to complete the furnishing and pay for the elevator.

Mr. ALCORN. The hon. minister admits that this item, at all events a part of it, is necessary for examination by the Public Accounts Committee. In that state of affairs it seems highly improper to pass the item here.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the minister is to spend all of this $12,000, $7,000 for an elevator and the rest for furnishings, what money is due to the contractor ? He must have got all his money. Does the minister hold the contractor's cheque which is put up with his tender ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. There is security, but I do not know just the amount of it. The hon. gentleman must have misunderstood me, as it was several thousands, not $7.000, that I said were required for the elevator. There will be still quite a balance of the $12,000 which we are asking for.

Mr. BLAIN. Mr. Keefe has two contracts with the government—the original contract and a further contract for fittings. Surely the minister can state how much is due on each of these contracts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The fittings have been paid for in full, $7,400. There is no fault to find with them. The balance is in respect of the main contract.

Mr. BLAIN. Was the contract for the fittings entirely satisfactory to the department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. The minister states that Mr. Dodwell was not charged with any duties in connection with this building. Is that correct ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Dodwell is a resident engineer ; he looks principally after the construction of wharfs and works of that kind coming under the engineering department. But in the performance of his duty he is supposed to keep a general oversight of the erection of buildings as well. In this particular case there having been a resident architect employed as inspector, he did not feel it his duty to personally supervise the erection of the building.

Mr. CROCKET. But as a matter of fact, the report which the minister received from this gentleman came in the ordinary course of his duty as resident engineer at Halifax. Under these circumstances it seems to me that there can be nothing whatever in the claim that this report is confidential. As one member of this committee, I think we are entitled to have that report before this item is passed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it would be very much preferable for the Committee on Public Accounts to take it up, if it desired to do so, and subpœna both Mr. Wright and Mr. Dodwell, and then Mr. Dodwell could give under oath his view of the building and any defects which he found in it.

Mr. BLAIN. The contracts for the fittings having been fully paid for, does the minister say there is no truth whatever in this statement that the wood work in the office desks is going to pieces in parts of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not heard of that at all.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the clerk of the works or the architect not reported on defects in the fittings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. SPROULE. If the minister undertakes that all these papers will be sent to the Public Accounts Committee and the committee be authorized to go into the whole subject we might allow the item to pass on that distinct understanding.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will send before the Public Accounts Committee all the contracts and progress reports from time to time and the correspondence in the department relating to the building, the report of Mr. Wright, and then, of course, I would suggest that the committee should subpœna Mr. Wright and Mr. Dodwell.

Mr. SPROULE. We could only go into what appears in the Auditor General's Report, but this comes up to a later date. If a motion be made that this committee be instructed to take this up, they can take it up to any date we may order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Even without a motion there will be no objection to investigate right up to date.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the legal firm of Quirk, Gammon and Snap in the committee?

Mr. FIELDING. They are on the other side of the House.

Mr. CROCKET. Will the hon. minister bring down the contractor's claim for extras ?

Mr. ALCORN. Will he undertake that there will be no obstruction to go into the whole matter fully ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There will be none on my part, and I do not think there will be any on the part of any member of the committee.

Mr. ALCORN. There will be none on this side of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nor on this side.

Mr. ALCORN. Will the minister bring down the confidential report?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think the committee should ask me to promise this. It would be better to subpœna Mr. Dodwell. His testimony under oath would be better than his report.

Mr. ALCORN. The committee should have his report in order to know the particulars on which to examine Mr. Dodwell.

Halifax—quarantine station on Lawlor's island—winter hospital, electric plant repairs, &c., $16,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. $10,000 of this is a revote. I could give the particulars if desired.

Mr. BERGERON. I see that the same firms who were engaged in furnishing the government in the other buildings in Halifax are still employed here. There is not much use asking for tenders. The same contractors usually do the work. We have the firms of Rhodes, Curry & Co., Longard Bros., Frank Reardon all through the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Four tenders were received in reply to public advertisements. I do not wonder at Rhodes, Curry & Co. getting many contracts, because they are the largest building contractors we have in the lower provinces. I am not quite sure that they are not the largest in Canada. They have large works at Amherst where they employ over 1,500 men, and I can well understand that they can do work cheaply. They are very large builders of cars as well. Not long ago they erected a great many buildings at Sydney. Longard Bros. are a very reputable firm also. At all events the lowest tenders were accepted.

Inverness public building, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is only a revote of $10,000 to complete this building. It was placed under contract July 26, 1906. It is a building of 2½ storeys high with an annex. It is built of brick on stone foundation with stone trimmings. It is required for post office and customs purposes.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the contract price ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $14,559.

Mr. BENNETT. Does that include heating?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, the total probable cost, including heating, boilers, electric wiring, fittings, furniture, &c., exclusive of the site, is $22,950.

Mr. CROCKET. Who is the clerk of works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. McIsaac. He gets $3 per day.

Mr. BERGERON. How much does he get altogether?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The date of the contract was 20th July, 1906, and the date of completion was 1st November last year.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the building ocmpleted now ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Pretty nearly.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the meaning of the drawback of $896.27 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the percentage retained until the work is completed. Suppose that under the estimate there will be $20,000 to the contractor, 10 per cent is kept back as a further guarantee for the completion of the work.

Mr. CROCKET. Is Mr. McIsaac, the clerk of the works, a mason or a carpenter?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not sure which, but I understand he is a practical man.

Mr. McLENNAN. He is a carpenter.

Shelburne public building, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will it cost to complete this building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Including heating, electric wiring, fixtures, &c., $35,686.

Mr. BERGERON. Will this vote finish it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The work is just beginning. So far, $1,790 has been spent. The site cost $1,500, and other expenses, such as printing, advertising, legal services, survey of site, &c., cost $290.

Mr. BERGERON. Who was the legal adviser ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are appointed in the Justice Department and I have not the names at hand.

Mr. STANFIELD. The legal expenses seem to be very high.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This $290 covers other expenses as well as the legal services.

Mr. STANFIELD. But at page V—37 of the Auditor General's Report, I find a charge for legal services, R. T. MacIlreith, Halifax, $76.85.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There would be the search of title, and there might be other things which would easily run up a bill of $76. I hardly think that such a bill would be out of the way.

Mr. FIELDING. The $1,500 purchases the corner lot on which the building is to stand. But there is a lot adjoining which is required in order to give it a decent size, and that is being expropriated.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The legal bills are always carefully taxed by the officials of the Justice Department. That is something my department has nothing to do with.

Mr. STANFIELD. What is the size of the lot bought from Mr. King?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is 73 feet by 31 feet.

Mr. STANFIELD. Is it vacant or is there a building on it ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is a very old house on it, which will have to be removed.

Mr. CROCKET. The statement is made that the bills for legal services are strictly taxed by the Justice Department, but I am in a position to state that the opposite is the case. I had occasion to examine some bills presented to the Railway Department by Mr. MacIlreith for the examination of titles in connection with acquiring a property at Halifax. He examined 35 or 40 titles and presented a separate bill for each title. I found, on examination, that he charged the Department of Railways more than once for the same day's search. In one case, he charged the same day no less than six times. There were over twenty days that he charged twice, a number he charged three times, others he charged four times and one he actually charged six times, at $15.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not informed as to the case to which the hon. gentleman refers, but I have here a complaint of one of the agents of the Minister of Justice about the very close way his bill has been taxed by the department.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this building for a post office ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Custom house and post office.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the population of Shelburne ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is under 2,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is it necessary to make a search of title in Nova Scotia ? Is it different from Ontario, where you can go to the Registry Office and the registrar will make an abstract of title ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it is different. In some of the counties of Ontario, they have adopted what is called the Torrens system, and under that system it is not necessary to search titles as is done in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. In these provinces it is necessary to search back to the original title.

Mr. TAYLOR. In Ontario the registrar does that where the Torrens system is not in vogue. I have had a great deal to do with the examination of titles. I send to the registrar for an abstract of title which will cost $2, $3 or $4. The lawyer looks that over and for that and comparing the deed $10 is an outside price—it costs only $5 in many cases. I am agent for one of the largest loan companies in the country and have paid $10 for this service in connection with many mortgages—never more than $20. Yet here is $79 paid to a lawyer to go into a registry office, pass a title and draw a deed. This is simply throwing away the people's money for the benefit of political favourites.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick no prudent man will buy a property or take a mortgage without having a solicitor examine the title. I certainly should feel that the government had been derelict in its duty if it did not employ a solicitor to make a thorough and careful search of title.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the registrar furnishes the abstract, and he is responsible if he makes a mistake.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not the law with us.

Mr. CROCKET. With regard to the sums paid to Mr. MacIlreith, I have now in my hand an abstract of Mr. MacIlreith's accounts for the services for which he charged the Railway Department in connection with the taking over of the land at Halifax for the roundhouse. He charged for no less than 182¾ days' searching in connection with these titles, most of them at $15 and some of them at $10, billing the department for no less than $2,842 for searching alone. I find there are 106 days on which a day or a part of a day's searching is charged. In case of 55 of these more than one day's time is charged. In one case the same day is charged no less than six times ; one day charged 5½ times : one day five times, one day 4½ times, two are charged 4 times, eight 3 times, four, 2¾ times, four 2½ times, one 2¼ times and 23 days are charged twice. In three other cases he managed to get in 1¾ days' time in one day. and in five others 1½ days' time. I think that will give the committee some idea of the care that the minister states was exercised by the Department of Justice in taxing the bills of Mr. R. T. MacIlreith. These bills, I may explain, were presented separately, and that is the way in which he managed to multiply and duplicate these charges for the same day. Instead of showing the bills as presented separately, I have made up a bill showing the various services for which Mr. MacIlreith charged the Railway Department on one day, the 30th of August. This is the way his bill would read for one sample day, taking these items out of the separate accounts and putting them into one account for one day's service:

August 30, 1905—

To search at office of registrar of deeds, Mary Graves property, all day..	$10 00
To search at office of registrar of deeds, heirs W. J. Robertson property, all day..	15 00
To search at office of registrar of deeds, Thomas Spry property, all day..	15 00
To search at office of registrar of deeds, Ritchie & Manger property, all day..	10 00
To search at office of registrar of deeds, Thomas Ritchie property, all day..	10 00
To search at office of registrar of deeds, estate W. J. Ritchie property, 3 hours..	7 50
To search at prothonotary's office, Thomas Spry property..	5 00
To search at probate office, Thomas Spry property..	5 00
To search at probate office, Mary Graves property..	7 50

All on the same day. He charged on August 30 against the Railway Department no less than six day's searches at the office of the registrar of deeds, besides charging for searches at the prothonotary's office and the probate office, amounting to $85. But he seems to have had an opportunity during that day of performing some other duties, and on the same day he makes these additional charges:

To letter to W. K. Thompson, James Graham property..	$0 50
To letter to W. B. McKenzie, James Graham property..	0 50
To attendance on J. K. Hubley.. ..	2 50
To interview with agent of Mrs. Katherine Kennedy..	2 50
To interview with Mrs. Mason as to acceptance of Crown office..	2 50
To interview with Mr. O'Sullivan when asked for increase..	2 00
To letter to W. B. McKenzie re estate W. J. Ritchie property.. ..	0 50
To preparing abstract of title, estate W. J. Ritchie property..	2 50
To drawing deed W. J. Ritchie property..	5 00
To letter to A. J. Rothwell..	0 50
To letter to W. B. McKenzie..	0 50
To attendance on J. A. McDonald re C. H. Wallace property..	2 50
To letter to Miss West..	0 50
To letter to W. B. McKenzie re Miss West property..	0 50

Making a total in connection with these properties on that day, of $105.50. But in addition to that he managed to appear in the police court on the same day and make the additional charges which we have here.

To prosecuting defendant Wm. Overy in King vs. Overy, for trespassing on Intercolonial Railway at North Street station..	20 00
To prosecuting defendant McPhee, in King vs. McPhee, for trespassing on Intercolonial Railway at North Street station..	20 00

Making his total bill for that day's service no less than $145.50. Now Mr. MacIlreith, I may say, is a lawyer who has but one partner, the firm name, I think, is MacIlreith & Tremaine. In the Public Accounts Committee it transpired that his office staff consisted entirely of himself, his partner, an office boy and a girl typewriter. That will give the House some idea of the care that is exercised by the Justice Department in taxing solicitors' bills, which has so impressed the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. MICHAUD. This question was discussed in the Public Accounts Committee, and it transpired that this gentleman employed outside lawyers to assist him.

Mr. CROCKET. The hon. gentleman's statement is entirely unwarranted, no such statement was made in the committee. It is true that Mr. MacIlreith was examined as a witness, but he professed to know nothing of this matter. He said the business was all done by his partner, and he suggested that on some occasions he might have employed another solicitor. But when he was asked if it was possible for his firm to have had six different solicitors working in the registry office on the same day searching titles to adjoining properties, he was compelled to admit that there must have been some mistake. After the examination which took place in the Public Accounts Committee, a trial took place in the city of Halifax in a suit brought by Mr. MacIlreith against the Halifax 'Herald,' and in the course of this trial this question of searching titles was fully gone into. Mr. Treamine was examined, and the evidence which he there gave bore out the statement which I now make that Mr. MacIlreith duplicated and multiplied these charges against the department without any justification whatever.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me unreasonable that the country's money should go this way without the slightest effort on the part of the government to get return for it. It is an absolute fraud on the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was in the Department of Railways, there is no suggestion that it was in the Public Works Department.

Mr. CROCKET. But it is the same gentleman who, I see, received in connection with the transfer of this property in the Finance Minister's constituency, $76.85 for searching titles last year.

Mr. SPROULE. Titles that probably cost about $2. I have been engaged in real estate for twenty-five or thirty years, and I have not employed a lawyer twice to examine titles. I can get an abstract of a title from any registry office, and it won't cost above $2.

Mr. CARVELL. You are a fortunate man.

Mr. SPROULE. A single abstract of title for a single property will only cost 25 cents. If there are several of them it goes up, but I could get half a dozen of them for less than $2.

Mr. CARVELL. I wish we had some system like that in New Brunswick. I can assure my hon. friend that when he goes to the maritime provinces, he will not get any title searched for $2 ; I advise him not to ask a registrar down there to give him an abstract of title, or at least not to purchase on such an abstract. In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, titles will run back 100 years ; the original grant may have been divided and subdivided a hundred times, and there may have been a dozen conveyances. There is no such thing as a Torrens system in the maritime provinces.

Mr. ALCORN. There is a statute of limitations and there is no necessity to go back 100 years.

Mr. CARVELL. You might have to go back 40 years or even 60. As to getting an abstract of title from the registrar it is not his business to prepare an abstract and he may not know if it is a correct one or not. It is his business to register the deeds, &c., and he might not know if the copy of an abstract was correct. What would the hon. member think of a minister who would take a conveyance with an imperfect title ? My hon. friend would be the first man to find fault. If it were simply the searching of an ordinary title, if there were no complications and there was a continuous chain from the Crown to the present owner, probably $76 would be a good fee, but I have no doubt there are complications, the property may have been sold and resold, and I am sure there is not a lawyer in this House who would not say it would be unwise for any person to buy a property without a thorough search of the title. In my own experience recently I found a mortgage 20 years old that was undischarged and the parties concerned dead, so that I had to get administration to have the thing cleared up. I will not state that I would charge $76 to search a title, but this charge is not stated to be for the searching of a title ; it is for legal services ; that includes many things besides searching titles. If this government do not squander any money in worse extravagance than this, there will not be much complaint.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know the system in Nova Scotia.

Mr. CARVELL. That is the trouble ; he does not know ; there are a few things the hon. gentleman does not know.

Mr. SPROULE. With us a company like the Canada Permanent will mortgage a piece of property of 12 or 14 lots, they will examine the titles, make searches and everything else and draw all the writings, paying all expenses, for about $25.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have never paid more than $20.

Mr. SPROULE. I have had it done as low as $9, and never paid more than $30, although there were as many as 12 pieces of property in the same mortgage.

Mr. CARVELL. You cannot do that in the maritime provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. It is regarded as a fair charge with us ; these are the Toronto lawyers' charges, and if the maritime provinces are worse, God help the country.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not like to see the lawyers run down too much. Making money seems to be a disease with them in the maritime provinces. We had Lodge buying land for $5,000 and selling it to the government for $13,000, and Pearson buying it for $16,000 and selling it to the government for $45,000. The head of a department should have his eyes open when he has to do with any one down there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think the gentlemen down below are very much worse than those up above. I would trust the people of the maritime provinces as much as any one in Canada. I think human nature is about the same in all parts of the country. I did not know that doctors were so jealous of lawyers and I am surprised to hear my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) talking in this way.

Westville public building, $13,125.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for a public building there. It is to be a nice building 61 by 30·6.

Mr. BERGERON. Are these buildings all alike ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, there are changes in the design depending on the location and the size of the place.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the population of Westville ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was 2,300 at the last census. It is probably over 3,000 now.

Mr. FIELDING. While the census should be right this is a large mining town, and I should say its population is considerably above that. It is the centre of a large coal mining region in Pictou county.

Mr. BERGERON. All that has been done is to purchase a site.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the buying of a site up to November 14, 1907.

Mr. BERGERON. Bought from whom ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Acadia Coal Company.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $25,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Does that include fittings ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That includes every thing.

Mr. STANFIELD. Are the plans completed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and the contract is let.

Mr. STANFIELD. Who has the contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Munroe, of New Glasgow.

Mr. STANFIELD. What does the contract consist of ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract is for $12,995. That does not include heating and boilers, electric wiring, fixtures, fittings, lock boxes, sidewalks or fencing.

Mr. STANFIELD. Does that include painting ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. STANFIELD. $25,000 will complete it in its entirety ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is expected that that amount will complete it.

Mr. BENNETT. Exclusive of site ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Including the site.

Mr. CROCKET. What rental is paid for the present post office in that town ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We pay $120 a year for the post office. This is intended for other purposes as well, I think. The revenue for nine months of last year from the post office at this place was $2,264 ; money orders, $24,277.15 ; money orders paid $10,359.

Yarmouth public building—improvement, $4,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is required for the erection of a clock tower and the purchase of a clock in connection with this public building and also a number of alterations and improvements.

Allow me to go back to the Antigonish public building. The hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) was desirous of getting the details of the expenditure of $2,224.90 which was the amount paid for printing and advertising and the salary of the clerk of the works. The details are as follows :

A. McGillivray, clerk of works, services.

The sum of $2,224 paid for printing, advertising and clerk of works services, covers the following items taken from the Auditor General's Report for the fiscal years 1904-05-06-07, and from the accountant's books for 1907-08:

Auditor General's Report for 1904-05—page 46—V.
Clerk of works—A. McGillivray—services, June 16-30, 15 days at $3..	$ 45 00
Advertising..	110 95
King's Printer's account.. ..	47 02
		$ 202 17
Auditor General's Report for 1905-06—page 43—V.
Clerk of works—A. McGillivray—services, July 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, 365 days at $3..	$1,095 00

		$1,105 32
Auditor General's Report, 1906-07—page 34—V.
Clerk of works—A. McGillivray—services, July 1, 1906, to March 31, 1907, 274 days at $3..	$ 822 00
Payments under $50: Smith's work, $29.28; coal, $5.33; photographic work, $3.. ..	37 61
		$ 859 61
Chief accountant's books.
Expenditure for sundry services up to October 31, 1907....	57 00
Total..		$2,224 90

Mr. SPROULE. What were the dates in the second year mentioned ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From July 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, $1,095.

Mr. SPROULE. For services ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For services.

Mr. SPROULE. That would be paying him $3 a day including Sundays and all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that is true.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you pay your employees in that way ?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, why not ? He probably did as much instructing on Sunday as on any other day.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is paid by the month.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the rule to pay for Sundays ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The rule is to pay him at the rate of $3 per day for the whole year.

Mr. FOWLER. Then you had better change that rule.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think it is the rule generally. I have known of such cases but I never know of them having been paid for Sundays. They are paying inspectors $3 a day but they are only paid for six days in the week.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. Is a clerk of works the same as an inspector under the department of Public Works ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. Do you pay your inspectors in Ontario, when you hire them by the day, for Sundays ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not tell at this moment.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. You can go through the Auditor General's Report from one end to the other and you will not find one inspector getting paid for Sundays. If an inspector in the province of Nova Scotia is to get pay for Sunday work we have many people in Ontario who are not getting all out of this government that they could get. I think it is unfair for an inspector, paid by the day, to receive pay for Sundays. It is bad enough to pay him when he is not working half the week, but if you are paying inspectors in Nova Scotia for every day in the week, Sunday included, there are some inspectors employed by the Department of Public Works in Ontario who do not receive that.

Mr. SPROULE. In this case there is not a holiday omitted. It is unlikely that this work was going on during holidays or even in the winter, much less that the work was continued on Sunday. When I was recommending people for these positions I know that they were paid $3 a day but I never knew that they were paid for Sundays or holidays. This is a fraudulent method of taking money out of the country. It is not likely that this inspector worked on New Years day or Dominion day. It is reasonable to suppose that he went to church on Sunday. If that is the system which is carried out it is well that the Christian people of this country should know to what extent Sunday observance takes place under this government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have just asked the chief architect and he says that sometimes they are paid for the whole month and sometimes they are not. I notice also a difference in the wages paid—in some cases they are $3.50 a day, and in some cases $3. It may be that in the case of the man paid $3.50 a deduction is made for Sundays. I say frankly that in my judgment they ought not to be paid for Sundays.

Mr. CROCKET. When the allowance is on a monthly basis, what is the usual allowance ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It varies so as to give from $3 to $3.50 a day. In the western country I think the payment is somewhat larger. I am inclined to think that it would be better to pay them simply for the working days.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend has no rule. If he looks at page V—37 of the Auditor's General Report he will see that the inspector of works at Lunenburg, D. J. Mullarkey, has been paid $4 a day for 31 days, Sunday and every other day. At Sydney the clerk of works, D. A. Gillis, is paid 3 per cent on the amount of the contract. So it all depends on the value politically of the clerk of works. If he is worth $3 a day to the party he will get it ; if he is worth $4 a day, he will get that ; if he is worth more he will get a percentage.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Mullarkey is a special inspector. His headquarters are in Ottawa and he is directed to go to different parts of the country on special work. I am inclined to think that it would be better to pay these inspectors for the actual working days.

Mr. SPROULE. Are we to understand that the minister will establish that practice in his department in future ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I can say that that will be the practice in the future. At all events, in the case of any new inspectors appointed that will be the case.

Mr. FOWLER. I think the government should not violate the Act passed a year or so ago in respect to Sabbath observance as they are doing by paying men for Sunday work.

Georgetown, Prince Edward Island, public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Has any contract been let ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for purchasing a building. We can purchase a lot of land and a building upon it for the sum of $2,500. It is a very excellent bargain. The building is well situated for post office and customs purposes, and we purpose making certain improvements in it so that the total cost will not exceed $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. This afternoon my hon. friend from Kings (Mr. Fowler) gave the minister a reputation for being very profligate in the dissipation of public moneys, and I am afraid that as a result there may be inordinate demands on the hon. gentleman by our hon. friends opposite. There has lately been published the report of the Civil Service Commission, and I would like to direct the minister's attention to a passage which he will find in that report on page 43 :

> The commissioners of 1892 drew attention to the practice of building custom houses, &c., in small towns. With regard to this the Deputy Postmaster General at that time stated that not only did it tend to increase the charge to the department, for the reason that by moving to a public building, the postmaster had to give up his own business, but in other ways by the employment of caretakers, &c., &c., it largely added to the cost of the service. Your commissioners think it desirable again to bring under notice the observations made in 1892.

That is a question that has been discussed in this House for a great many years—the erection of public buildings in small towns. Hon. gentlemen opposite, when in opposition took strong ground on that score. By reason of the fact that small places are mentioned in these estimates for the erection of public buildings, the hon. minister will be no doubt assailed by his supporters for further amounts to be brought down in the supplementary estimates, though I have been successful, if I can congratulate myself, in staying the minister's hand to some extent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to recall any instance.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, he rather came down on those dredging contracts lately.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not in consequence of anything the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman came down anyway. I want to direct the attention of the minister to what has been going on in the past twelve years in regard to the construction of public buildings in small places. The minister will not be assailed as past ministers have been by his colleagues in the ministry importuning him to erect buildings in their riding, as they have already been very successful in that respect. The Minister of Agriculture has a very respectable public building erected in the town of Knowlton in his riding ; the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has succeeded in having one erected in his constituency ; the Postmaster General has succeeded in having one in his riding ; while the Minister of Finance has been doubly lucky in having two in the constituency he represents, and the Minister of Militia has one in his riding also. These buildings have all been erected in comparatively small places. What is the result ? The rank and file say : If the ministers have been so successful in their demands, what is there left for us? Now, I am going to read a list of some of these comparatively small places in which public buildings have been erected, with their population and the amount paid formerly for rent, fuel, light and attendance in premises used for postal and other government business :

	Population.	Paid formerly for rent, fuel, &c.
Markham	967	$ 90
Glencoe	1,034	90
Parkhill	1,430	90
Whitby	2,110	135
Leamington	2,451	150
Kincardine	2,885	150
Simcoe	2,627	210
Renfrew	3,153	195
Alexandria	1,911	120
Bowmanville	2,731	180
Knowlton	760	60
Cookshire	2,400	75
Farnham	3,099	....
Plessisville	1,586	75
Marieville	1,306	45
Nicolet	1,318	75
Acton Vale	1,175	20
Shelburne, N.S.	1,445	45
Westville	2,274	90
Kentville	1,731	....
Liverpool	1,937	60
Inverness	1,890	60
Antigonish	1,838	60

Here is a list of about twenty places at each of which a public building has been erected, and the aggregate cost of all these buildings is in the neighbourhood of $600,000 to $650,000. What is the result ? All the wants of the public were formerly met in these places out of an annual expenditure of $1,578, whereas now we have to pay some $42,000 a year. Take the expenses of these public buildings. Each one must have a caretaker at about $400 per annum ; fuel, $150 ; light, $200 ; and interest on the capital invested, $1,200. It will cost over $2,000 yearly to maintain each of these buildings. And the minister will be importuned to construct a large number, more especially when we find ministers of the Crown deeming it their duty to ask that such large expenditure be made in their ridings. These things do not appeal to the public. I see the Minister of Railways present and that recalls to my recollection the fact that in the last election held in Centre York, there was a meeting in the village of Markham at which the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) showed the plans and specifications of a new building which the government were going to put up there. But in spite of this appeal of the ministers, the people there actually went back on the government by some thirty votes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That shows how self-sacrificing we are to give these public buildings where they do not affect the vote.

Mr. BENNETT. But the ministers are not self-sacrificing at their own expense. This is done for the purpose of parading the public money before the people and geting them to vote for the government because of the local expenditure in these places.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does the hon. gentleman say that the plans were exhibited at that meeting ?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BENNETT. I can get the report in the newspapers of that meeting. Senator Campbell was present and announced that he had the plans and that the building would be a magnificent one, and he gave that as an earnest of what they could do.

Mr. MILLER. Does my hon. friend say that the cost of maintaining each of these buildings is $2,500 per year ?

Mr. BENNETT. I find it would run to about $2,000 a year. Some of them run to more than that. The building at Bridgewater cost some $40,000. It is time that these huge expenditures should be stopped. If the same amount of money had been invested a few years ago in transportation, the country would have had some benefit. There is a list that will startle the average man throughout the Dominion. All that money is sacrificed simply out of a desire to gain political advantage. What necessity is there in a village like Markham with some 967 people, for a public building where formerly they had good post office accommodation at a total cost of $90 per year. But the country has to launch into a large public building, to maintain which it will cost $2,000 per year. It is high time that a protest should be made against spending money in this ridiculous way in these small places.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think we ought now to rise.

Mr. FIELDING. At the rate we are going, it will take a good many days yet to go through the estimates.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is not our fault.

Mr. FIELDING. It is your side who are taking up the time.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will look into the matter, he will find that more time has been taken up by members supporting the government.

Mr. FIELDING. Not on the estimates.

Mr. TAYLOR. It has been taken up by the ministers and their supporters more than by the opposition.

Mr. FIELDING. Has not three-fourths of the speaking to-day been on the side of my hon. friend ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister occupied fully one-half the time himself.

Mr. FIELDING. He has to answer questions.

St. John, New Brunswick, Dominion buildings—improvements, repairs, &c., $4,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for repairs to the custom house, post office, &c.

Mr. CROCKET. Is that done by day's labour or by contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The amounts are all small ones and the work is done by day's labour.

Mr. CROCKET. Is there an inspector on works of that kind ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have the superintendent of buildings there.

St. John military building—addition to stores building and wagon and gun shed, $6,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What is this estimated to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The estimate is $33,044.93.

Mr. BENNETT. Was there a contract in this case?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, after public advertisement.

Mr. FOWLER. How much more will be required to complete it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $19,875.

St. John quarantine station, Partridge island—to complete water service, &c., $2,500.

Mr. FOWLER. How much has been paid on account of that water service? It seems to me we have had a vote for that every year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This $2,500 is to complete the work. I made a statement concerning it on a former occasion. The total probable cost is $54,988.91.

Mr. FOWLER. Are you boring?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. There is a water pipe laid from the mainland. A trench had to be excavated and the pipe laid. There was an accident to the pipe which added to the expense. The hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. Daniel) is familiar with the case.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this under contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is done under the direction of the resident engineer. It is to give a fresh-water supply to Partridge Island.

Mr. CROCKET. How long has the work been going on?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Since 1904.

Mr. FOWLER. Did they try boring an artesian well?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and struck salt water at a great depth.

St. John quarantine station, Partridge island—site for steam sterilizer; dwelling for boatman; improvement and repair to existing buildings, &c., $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to provide a steam sterilizer and also a cottage for the orderly. This is asked for by the director general of public health, Dr. Montizambert.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the government own Partridge Island? Why then do they need to procure a site for the steam sterilizer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is needed merely to provide the site—to build up the walls to make a level site for the building. This is a rocky island and the site for the building must be prepared.

Tracadie lazaretto—laundry and sanitary works, $6,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the lazaretto where lepers are taken care of. It is in Gloucester county. This money is to provide a laundry and septic tank.

Mr. FOWLER. How many lepers are there now?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I believe there are thirteen. This is a wonderfully well conducted institution, and deserving of being very carefully looked after.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the minister know if the lepers are decreasing or not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Turgeon) could probably tell the committee better than I.

Mr. TURGEON. The number is decreasing so far as the locality is concerned. But Dr. Smith, the surgeon of the hospital, was sent to the west a month or so ago to bring in another case.

Mr. FOWLER. Are these all the items for New Brunswick?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the hon. minister intend to have an item for a public building at Hillsborough in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it is decided to erect a public building at Hillsborough to which I have been urged very strongly by Hon. Mr. Osman more especially, as well as by some other residents there, of course, it will appear in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. FOWLER. As a representative of the district, I have for a number of years urged the erection of a public building there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not heard from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) on the subject.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) has not been Minister of Public Works all the time.

Mr. CARVELL. What is the population of Hillsborough?

Mr. FOWLER. Greater than that of most of the places where these buildings have been provided. This building would serve between 3,000 and 4,000 people.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A very prominent and influential citizen (Hon. Mr. Osman), called upon me in addition to corresponding upon the subject, and said that if the government would erect a building there, the company with which he was connected would give the site free. He urged very strongly favourable consideration of the matter. I have said that, as minister, I was disposed to take a very favourable view of the case, recognizing that it was desirable to give to the people the necessary accommodation. For I do not take the view taken by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) on this subject. Judging from the complacency with which my hon. friend from King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) listened to that hon. gentleman, I thought that he coincided with his views. It came to me as a matter of surprise that my hon. friend should urge the providing of a building for Hillsboro. Another reason for my surprise was that, though I have been minister since August last, I have not had the pleasure of receiving any communication, written or verbal, from the hon. gentleman on the subject.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. minister speaks of the complacency with which I regarded the remarks of the hon. member for East Simcoe. I was merely copying the complacency of the hon. minister himself, and surely he does not object to hon. members modelling themselves on his pattern. I have urged the construction of a public building at Hillsborough every session since I first had the honour of representing the county of Albert. With respect to providing buildings in these small towns, it seems to be a principle adopted by this government. That being the case, I fail to see why a place of the importance of Hillsborough should not be recognized, since it is far more important than the great majority of the places that have already received public buildings. There is a considerable revenue in Hillsborough, there is a custom house, it is a customs sub-port, and a post office would accommodate a very large number of people, both in the village and in the surrounding country. Among all the places that have been favoured this year there is not a solitary place with better claims for a public building than Hillsborough. I do not know what the minister's reason was for trying to make out that I had not been doing my duty by making a request for the erection of this building. If it was with the desire to injure me with my constituents his policy will entirely fail, because my constituents in that portion of the district I represent are fully aware of the fact that I have repeatedly urged upon the government the erection of this building. I think the Finance Minister at one time was acting Minister of Public Works, and he as good as promised me that this town would receive proper consideration. I am glad that his promise is likely to be carried out.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not remember the promise, but on general principles I am in favour of erecting these buildings. I only make this request, that when the speech of the hon. member for East Simcoe about the terrible expense of these buildings, is distributed, as I have no doubt it will be widely distributed, I think the hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) ought to arrange that his very effective reply should go with it.

Mr. BENNETT. My hon. friend from King's and Albert takes this ground, and I take the same ground, that if the government is going to throw thousands of money away indiscriminately, then the most deserving places should be first regarded.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a change of ground. My hon. friend stated solemnly that it is time this expenditure was stopped ; that is a solemn duty he imposes upon us. I do not agree with him. He warns us that we must not do it any longer ; then the hon. member for Kings and Albert gets up and says, don't mind my hon. friend from Simcoe but give us a building in Hillsborough.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will be a good idea for the hon. member for Simcoe to pick out all these places like Hillsborough, Markham, Pictou, Actonvale, and a number of other small towns in Ontario and Quebec, and move a resolution that it is against public policy and against public interest that public buildings should be erected in these places. That would be a courageous and manly course to take. Let him try that and see where he will be.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Public Works was not in the House a few years ago when we spent a whole night discussing an appropriation for the little town of Dunnville. The opposition then declared that no public buildings should be erected in small places unless they were justified by the population and the post office revenue.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the limit of population ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I think 3,000 was the suggested limit. But here is a public building costing $25,000 in a small village of 900 or 1,000 of a population, and very little revenue ; while other towns with 3,000 or 4,000 and over are left out. There should be some system adopted. The revenue should amount to so much and the population should be so much before the government expends public money there. That was the policy adopted by the opposition.

Mr. FIELDING. And I think my hon. friend voted against the very thing he now proposes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend has been in parliament a good while. Now let me call his attention to what I think is just about as laudable a thing as the Conservative government ever did, and that was the erection of a public building in the thriving town of Sussex when the population I am sure was not over 800.

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, yes, the population then would be about 1,600.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Even so that would be about 1,400 less than the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) says it should be.

Mr. CARVELL. Does the hon. gentleman think there are 1,500 people in Sussex now.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, 2,500.

Mr. CARVELL. It has grown a great deal in the last year, then.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) says that the erection of public buildings, such as custom houses, post offices and so forth, should be dependent upon the revenue derived therefrom. I may say to him that in 1896 when the Liberal party came into power, for three years I had been applying to the Minister of Railways and Canals to have a station in my village, St. Michel de Bellechasse. In election after election we had been promised this station, but as the parish judged it proper to give a majority against the government then we did not get the station. Finally I came to the Minister of Railways and Canals and told him that I would like to have a station in my village.

Well, he said, there is no revenue, the revenue last year was only $350. I pledged myself that if a station costing $1,200 or $1,500 was built, within a year the revenue would amount to over $2,000. The station was built, and in my parish where there was then a revenue of $280, we have this year a revenue of $7,000, owing to the existence of this station.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Minister of Public Works to say that he could not subscribe to the principle that had been in vogue heretofore with regard to the erection of public buildings. I think it would be well for him to lay down what he regards as the proper principle. I have held the view for many years, while our friends were in power as well as during the last 12 years, that wherever a convenient and suitable public building can be rented at a much less amount than it would cost to pay the interest on maintenance charges for a public building, that, in the interest of the country, it is desirable that a public building should not be erected in such a place. I do not care whether the place is large or small. I would make no difference in that regard. It is not a good principle and is no evidence of economy or desire to economize when public money is spent on the erection of a public building in a small village or town of 1,000 or 15,000 inhabitants. We would have to pay for the building say $10,000; on that the interest would be about $450 per annum, the care of the building about $400, heating about $100, lighting about $75, insurance about $25, and repairs about $50 a year. That is an annual expenditure of about $1,000, when in many cases a good and suitable building can be rented for not more than $100 to $125 a year. To that you would have to add probably $50 or $60 for fuel and light, and the people would have as good service as with a public building for which you would have to pay out $1,000 a year. Take Owen Sound for instance. A post office building is now being erected there for the first time. It is a county town of over 10,000 inhabitants, but has never had a public building up to the present time. The people asked for one occasionally but were not pushing for it, because a good building could be rented for very much less. In the adjoining town of Meaford, of about 3,000 inhabitants, they have never had a public building erected for post office, custom house or inland revenue, but have rented a building at a very moderate price. In Markdale, the village in which I live, with about 1,200 inhabitants, the rent paid for a very good post office is, I think, $125 with $60 for heating and lighting. Durham with over 3,000 has no public building. The minister is coming in as a new member of the cabinet. He is at the head of a very important spending department, and he should take this into his consideration and lay down some principle, letting the House and the country know that he has made a departure upon good, safe business lines and desires to save the money of the people while giving them all the convenience they require in the matter of public buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think one could properly lay down a fixed rule that there should be no public building erected in a town unless it has a population of 3,000 or more.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not go that far because there are places where you cannot get buildings ; but I say you should rent where you can procure a suitable building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I spoke of the public building erected in the very enterprising town of Sussex, because knowledge of it came to me as I was brought up in that locality. That building was regarded by the people as a very great improvement. It created a local pride among the people who saw this not expensive but nice building erected by the government. The county in which it is erected has not received any federal expenditure for wharfs, dredging, etc., as it is entirely inland. With an inland town where no money is expended for any purpose except the postal service, if you have a thriving town of only 3,000 or even 2,000, and the people feel that they would like to have a public building or some little expenditure, I do not think it is improper that their wishes should be met in that particular. Suppose we were to limit the erection of post offices and other public buildings to the larger towns the result would be very discouraging to the people who are living in smaller towns. They would see money being spent for dredging and the building of wharfs in other places and it would be discouraging to them. If money was being expended in the county for wharfs, &c., you might well say to them that for the present they should wait a little before asking for a public building. Therefore, I think it is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule. Take the west where towns are springing up rapidly, where a town with a population of only 1,000 to-day may be full of hope and full of possibilities and the people ask a public building, is it not a reasonable encouragement to the people that a public building should be erected for post office and customs purposes ? Many applications have been made to me from the people of different towns urging that public buildings should be erected. While I would not erect buildings in towns of very small population, yet I would be very reluctant indeed to say that no public building should be erected in a place which has not more than 3,000 population or even 2,000. Take the town of Hillsborough ; the hon. member for Kings and Albert said that if the rule were fixed at 3,000 or even at 2,000, a public building could not be erected.

Mr. TAYLOR. Revenue should count as well as population.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If we were to be governed entirely by revenue what would we have to do ? Take the case of Montreal ; we are asked to erect a post office building there. It is going to be very costly, it will cost nearly half a million dollars in addition to the site. A plain building, absolutely without ornamentation, a building which might suit the purpose, I suppose, might be erected for half that money. What are we expending in these cities large sums of money for ?—for the purpose of erecting buildings which are beautiful, and to which people will look with pride and pleasure. It is because we take a pride in the community and seek to move along with it and gratify the feeling of the people that this money is spent. Money which is spent for the purpose of beautifying a building, making it more comfortable and convenient for the people to transact their business in may be regarded by some people as money wasted. Yet, it is not wasted. When the government, in a small and thriving town, where the people have no other expenditure of public money, erects a small building which is a good specimen of architecture and in which the people take pride it is doing something to help them in their efforts to advance the community residing in that locality. I am not prepared to say that it is a waste of money, or that it is something to be condemned. I am a great believer in doing what is reasonable in the various sections of the country to encourage the people living in the smaller towns to take a pride in the places in which they live, and I would not say that there should be a fixed rule as to the population of the places in which we could erect buildings or that the question of revenue should be the sole consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not mention either of the rules that the minister talks about. He has been talking round the question for a quarter of an hour. The minister argued that it is a matter of pride with various communities that they should have public buildings in their midst. Let us apply that to domestic life. Suppose that the hon. Minister's wife has a pride and an ambition which prompts her to want a bonnet costing $100 and the minister's finances will not justify him in making the expenditure ; would he apply that principle to the expenditure of his own money ? Would he spend his own money in the same lavish way that he spends the country's money ? If he is not prepared to do with the country's money as he would do with his own he is not following the best and safest guide. Another argument is that many of these places, being inland places do not get much expenditure and that they are entitled to public buildings. I presume that the expenditure of money in these places helps to carry elections. If that be a sound principle then I say let us divide the money up equitably among all these places.

Mr. FIELDING. That is socialism.

Mr. SPROULE. No, it is not socialistic at all. The Minister of Finance is just a little too previous.

If it is fair and proper that because these constituencies have no general expenditure within their bounds they should have public buildings, then I say they are entitled to their full share just as well as others. They have a perfect right to claim it and it is due to them that they should get it. If the minister follows out that principle I do not see how he can refuse it to all. He says we cannot follow any hard and fast rule. I did not ask that any hard and fast rule be followed. He says that we cannot regard a mere fixed population. I did not ask that a mere fixed population be regarded, whether it is 3.000, 4,000 5,000 or 10,000. I pointed to a town of 12,000 where there is no post office yet and another of 3,000 and smaller places along the line. I did not name a fixed population but I did lay down this rule that whether a place is large or small, if a public building can be secured in a central locality for the needs of the people at a smaller amount of money than that which would be required to pay the interest on the money that would be put into the erection of a public building, caretaking, heating, and maintenance, I did not see any justification for spending more money to supply the needs of the people in any place when we could supply the needs of the people for less money.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You put it down to the bare question of dollars and cents ?

Mr. SPROULE. I put it down to the principle of saving the peoples' money. If you can give the people the conveniences that they require for less money by renting a building than erecting a building. then I would rent a building. There are some places where you cannot rent a building. I can understand that in many places in the west you could not rent a building and under those circumstances the government would be justified in erecting a building. When you cannot rent and provide the people with the conveniences they require go on and build, but if you can rent a suitable building for less money than it costs to erect a building I do not understand by what principle of economy you would be justified in expending a larger amount.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up on Monday ?

Mr. FIELDING. We will proceed with Supply and take up the estimates of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.10 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 27, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

MEAFORD HARBOUR.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 158) respecting Meaford Harbour. He said : The object of the Bill is to legalize a situation which has existed for some years and has created some disturbance. The township of St. Vincent was at first the authority which had the power to deal with this harbour which is on Georgian bay. Later on, in 1874, if I remember well, the town of Meaford was incorporated with the harbour within its territorial limits. The municipal authorities of the town assumed that the fact that the harbour was within the boundaries of the town gave them sufficient authority to deal with the harbour, to make necessary improvements and to levy taxes. I understand that some work had been carried out by the municipality on this assumption that they were acting within their right. As some doubt has been raised as to their right to carry out these works and levy taxes, they have approached the department and asked that legislation be introduced to legalize what has been done and to declare that for the future, the harbour shall be vested in the town of Meaford.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DREDGING AT MIDLAND, TIFFIN AND VICTORIA HARBOUR.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) if tenders have yet been advertised for in connection with the dredging anticipated to be done during the coming season at Midland, Tiffin and Victoria Harbour.

Mr. SPROULE.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I can only say that I have given the necessary directions for the calling for tenders, and I assume that the advertisements are out. If not issued, they are in course of being issued.

QUESTIONS.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—CLAIMS SETTLED.

Mr. DANIEL asked :

How many claims for damages to property, or personal injury or loss or damage on the Intercolonial Railway have been settled since January 1, 1908, what is the nature of the claims so settled, the amount of damages claimed in each case, the settlements arrived at, and the names of the persons settled with?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The answer to this question is sufficiently large to make quite a bulky return. If my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) will allow me to lay it on the table, I will do so, instead of spending the rest of the afternoon in reading it.

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

PROPOSED JAPANESE COLONY IN THE WEST.

Mr. RALPH SMITH asked :

Referring to page 6650 of unrevised 'Hansard' of April 8, 1908, wherein the Hon. Mr. Lemieux made the following statement:

Mr. LEMIEUX. Since the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) has referred again to the number of Japanese who wish to settle near Calgary as agriculturists, I may say, in order to show that the Japanese authorities are living up to their agreement with Canada, that a few days ago the Canadian Pacific Railway Company applied to the Dominion government in order to ascertain if something like 300 Japanese would be allowed to enter the Dominion and take up land in the Northwest. The Canadian Pacific Railway authorities pointed out that the Japanese government would not object to issuing passports to the intending Japanese immigrants; but the Japanese government had stated that they could not issue passports unless the Dominion government would agree to it. That shows plainly that the Japanese authorities are living up to the agreement arrived at during the month of December last.

1. What was the date of the Canadian Pacific Railway's application to bring in Japanese immigrants?
2. By whom was the application made?
3. What were the exact terms of the application?
4. What was the complete answer of the government to such application?
5. Have any other applications been made by the same company, or any other company, for such a privilege?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Minister of Labour) :

1, 2 and 3. The following letter was received :

(At Ottawa), March 25, 1908.

Hon. Frank Oliver, M.P.,
Minister of the Interior, Ottawa.

My Dear Sir,—A Japanese gentleman contracted with us last autumn for the purchase of a considerable area of land in the irrigation block with a view to cutting it up into small farms for Japanese settlers. He now cables from the Philippines that he has made arrangements for the emigration of two hundred Japanese farmers this year, but that the Japanese government is not disposed to grant passports unless Dominion government approves of the settlement of these people in Alberta.

Will you kindly inform me what view the government take of this proposition? Our correspondent asks for cable reply, and I shall be glad if the matter can receive early consideration.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) C. DRINKWATER.

4. The government replied as follows :

Ottawa, March 30, 1908.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter of March 25 regarding approval by the government of the settlement of a number of Japanese on irrigation lands near Calgary, I beg to say that if the arrangement to which you allude is in the nature of a contract for the furnishing of labour this government cannot approve of it, and therefore cannot ask the Japanese government to grant the necessary passports.

As announced in parliament, however, you are no doubt aware that a certain number of Japanese domestic servants and farm labourers may be given passports for Canada. Within the number agreed upon of these classes the Dominion government has no objection to offer to the Japanese authorities issuing the necessary passports.

I notice that you speak of your correspondent cabling from the Philippines that he has made arrangements for the emigration of two hundred Japanese farmers this year. If by this it is meant that these are Japanese coming from the Philippines, I beg to point out if they are Japanese citizens that the order in council of March 28 would in any case prohibit their landing in Canada.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) FRANK OLIVER.

C. Drinkwater, Esq.,
Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Ottawa.

5. This is the only application made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or any other.

DEFALCATION IN MONTREAL POST OFFICE.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

1. Was a defalcation discovered in the Montreal Post Office lately? If so, what was the amount stolen?

2. In which department of the Montreal Post Office did the offence occur?

3. Was an investigation held, and what was the report?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. Yes. A young man employed in the Montreal post office was arrested for having stolen $202.42, who, when brought before the judge, pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to a period of four years in the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary.

2. The offence occurred in connection with the amounts collected at the Montreal post office from newspapers for postage.

3. An investigation has been ordered, but up to date no report has been received.

TUG BOAT 'LORD KITCHENER'

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. In what service does the Department of Public Works or the Department of Marine employ the tug boat 'Lord Kitchener'?

2. At what rate per day or hour is the remuneration paid?

3. What amount has been paid by each department for the tug boat during the calendar years 1906, 1907 and 1908 to date?

4. Who is the owner of this boat?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minster of Public Works) :

1, 2 and 3. The tug 'Lord Kitchener' was employed by this department as follows : in April, 1906, the tugs 'Lord Kitchner' and 'Lord Roberts' were employed together to tow the dredge 'New Dominion' and scows from St. John to St. Andrews, N.B. The payment for the joint service was $150, lump sum. The tug has been employed towing scows of dredge 'W. S. Fielding' from Lunenburg, N.S., to St. John N.B., at the rate of $125 a day ; reached destination Friday (24th).

4. John E. Moore.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Marine and Fisheries Department employed boat in Bay of Fundy lighthouse and buoy service.

2. Under charter party dated April 11, 1907, rate paid was $125 per day, all found. Under second charter party dated November 11, 1907, rate was $85 per day, including captain and first engineer, the department finding remainder of crew, fuel and stores.

3. 1906.

1907	$21,762.19
1908	14,053.49
	$35,815.68

4. John E. Moore.

DREDGE 'FIELDING.'

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What is the date on which the dredge 'Fielding' arrived in St. John?
2. How many days' work has been done by this dredge since that date, and at what points?
3. What other dredging work is being carried on by the government in St. John harbour or vicinity, by what parties, and has such work been let after public tender?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. 25th February, 1908.
2. (a) 25.
(b) Superintendent of dredging reports that dredge removed a shoal patch of about three hundred feet in length inside the bell-buoy from fifteen feet to a depth of twenty-one feet low water. Then commenced about seven hundred feet outside bell buoy west of centre line of channel at thirty feet at low water and laid moorings and worked in about five hundred feet two hundred feet wide west of centre line, now continuing inward.
3. (a) Dredging at Sand Point and Rodney slips.
(b) G. S. Mayes and Dominion Dredging Company.
(c) Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. From the 25th to what date ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. To Saturday, I presume.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS —CONTRACT FOR CEMENT.

Mr. J. D. REID—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Has the Montreal Harbour Commissioners lately given a contract for cement?
2. If so, was the quantity 30,000 barrels? If not, how many barrels were contracted for?
3. To whom was the contract given?
3. Is it a fact that this order is to be imported from Belgium ?
5. Is the government aware that there are cement manufacturing industries in Canada, making first class cement?

Hon. L P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). There is no information in the department in regard to this matter. We have written to the board in Montreal to supply us with information, and when it is received I will be glad to answer the question.

POSTMASTER AT MATTAWA, ONT.

Mr. WHITE—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Who is the postmaster at Mattawa, Ont.?
2. When was he appointed and what salary does he receive?
3. Does he give personal supervision to the duties of his office?
4. Where does he reside?

Mr. BRODEUR.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. Noah A. Timmons.
2. Appointed 1st March, 1902. Salary and allowances, $1,305.
3 and 4. The work of the office is efficiently performed by the postmaster's three assistants, but the postmaster, who is at present living at Haileybury, does not personally supervise it.

DREDGING IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Are there still any claims pending in connection with the dredging done in the province of Quebec during the season of 1907?
2. If so, who are the claimants and what is the total amount of said claims?
3. Is there a claim in said connection by Henry W. Prendergast or the St. Lawrence and Great Lakes Dredging Company? If so, what is the amount, and why has it not been paid?
4. Is there a claim regarding said dredging in the province of Quebec in 1907 by E. A. D. Morgan or the General Construction Company? If so, what is the amount, what is it for and why has it not been paid?
5. Is there a claim in said connection by L. Cohen & Son? If so, what is the amount of said claim, and what is it for?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. Yes.
2. St. Lawrence and Great Lakes Dredging Co.. ..$9,888.33
L. Cohen & Son.... .. .. 806.40
$10,694.73
3. Yes ; $9,888.33 as above.
Payment delayed owing to complications between contractor and certain creditors in whose favour powers of attorney to receive moneys had been filed.
4. No.
5. Yes. $806.40 for dredging at Port St. Francis in November, 1907.

FAIR WAGES SCHEDULE ON DREDGING.

Mr. VERVILLE—by Mr. Calvert—asked :

1 Is there a fair wages schedule attached to all contracts on dredging?
2. If not, is it the intention of the government to attach one in future contracts?
3. Is the government aware that it is stated men working on dredges last season were not paid their wages?
4. Is it the intention of the government to take measures so as to guarantee such payment in future?

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1 and 2. No wage schedule is attached to dredging contracts, but a proviso inserted to the effect that the contractor agrees and binds himself to pay to the workmen engaged in the said work, such wages as are generally accepted as current in each trade, for competent workmen in the district where the works are to be carried out.

3. No information in the department.

4. Should representations regarding specific cases be made, the department would take matter up with a view to assisting the employee.

RAILWAY FROM NORTH SYDNEY TO SYDNEY MINES.

Mr. STANFIELD asked :

1. What is the length of the branch railway from North Sydney to Sydney Mines?
2. What is the total cost to date?
3. What was the cost of the right of way?
4. What amount was paid for land damages?
5. Are there any claims outstanding unpaid? If so, what is the total amount?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. 2·7 miles.
2. $136,479.02.
3. $24,442.69.
4. $4,238.
5. Yes ; $7,015. Now in process of settlement.

CUSTOMS EMPLOYEE AT WINDSOR.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked :

1. Is one Michael Dillon employed at Windsor, Ontario, by the Customs Department?
2. If so, when was he appointed, and what is his salary and duties?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). Michael Dillon is not employed at Windsor by the Customs Department.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The name in this question should be Michael J. Walsh instead of Michael Dillon.

Mr. PATERSON. That is the difficulty. Bring up the question again with the right name, and I will make inquiry.

LAND SITE FOR SANDWICH POST OFFICE.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked :

From whom was purchased the land site of the Sandwich post office, and what price was paid for it by the government?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). From A. T. Healy for $1,700.

CUSTOMS OFFICER AT WINDSOR.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked :

1. Is one J. A. Pepin connected with the customs at Windsor?
2. If so, when was he appointed, what was his age at the time of appointment, what is his salary, and what are his present duties?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs) :

1. Mr. J. A. Pepin is not connected with the customs at Windsor. Mr. Joseph N. Pepin is an officer of customs at that port.
2. First employed in June, 1907, appointed by order in council from 1st January, 1908 ; age 64 years ; salary $700 a year. His duties are those of a preventive officer of customs.

WHARF AT SCOTCH TOWN, NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. WILMOT—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Has application been made to the Department of Public Works for the construction of a wharf at Scotch Town, Queen's County, New Brunswick?
2. If so, has the department ordered a survey of site and specification for building a wharf at this locality? If so, what is the nature of such report?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. Yes.
2. (a) Yes. (b) For a wharf, 470 feet long to 7 feet depth of water, the cost will be $4,900.

FRITZ CIRKEL, MINING ENGINEER.

Mr. LENNOX asked :

1. Is Fritz Cirkel, of Montreal, in the employ of the government of Canada?
2. Has the attention of the government been called to a recent advertisement about the 26th of February last, in the Montreal 'Herald,' which quotes a report of this gentleman and describes him as follows:—

Fritz Cirkel, Esq., of Montreal, consulting mining engineer and mining expert to the Dominion government, who lately made an inspection of the said property, concluded his report as follows:—

3. Is this gentleman mining expert to the Dominion government, as represented in this advertisement?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue) :

1. Fritz Cirkel has for four years been temporarily employed by the Mines branch.
2. No, but the director of mines had his attention called to an advertisement in the 'Bulletin' issued by the Canadian Mining Institute, in which Mr. Cirkel is represented as 'mining expert to the Dominion government.' The director has already called the attention of parties concerned to the advertisement and requested that it be withdrawn.
3. Mr. Cirkel has for four years been employed temporarily as outside expert doing special work. He is the author of the following reports for the government : 'Mica, its occurrence, exploitation and uses,' 'Asbestos, its occurrence, exploitation and uses,' 'Graphite, its properties, occurrence, refining and uses,' 'Iron ore deposits of the Ottawa Valley, Quebec side,'* 'Chrome iron ore deposits of eastern townships.'*

*The last two reports are not yet ready for distribution.

MAIL CONTRACT, DIGBY TO WESTPORT.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked :

1. What is the name and residence of the person carrying the mail between Digby, Nova Scotia, and Westport, Digby County, Nova Scotia?

2. Is said carrier under contract to carry the mail? If so, when were tenders called for, and at what date do they expire?

3. If the present contract expires June the 30th, does the government intend to give the customary three months' notice to people wishing to tender?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. Estate of the late W. H. Eldridge of Sandy Cove, Digby county, Nova Scotia.

2. (a) Yes. (b) In June 1900. The contract was renewed in 1904 and expires 30th June, 1908.

3. A renewal of the contract has been offered to the widow of the late contractor, who is now performing the service.

DREDGING AT CHICOUTIMI.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

1. Was any dredging done at Chicoutimi last season? If so, who were the contractors, and were tenders invited for the work?

2. How many tenders were received, and who were the different parties tendering therfor?

3. What was the rate paid per yard, what was the nature of material dredged, and to what depth was dredging done?

4. Who was the local inspector of the work?

5. How much was the total sum paid to the contractor for work so done, and was such amount in full of all work? If not, what balance is due to the contractor for said work?

Hon. W. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. (a) Yes. (b) General Construction Company. (c) Yes.

2. (a) Three. (b) General Construction Company, M. Connolly, Dominion Dredging Company.

NEW BARRACKS AT TORONTO.

Mr. MACDONELL asked :

1. Has the Militia Department approved of the plans, &c., for the new barracks at Toronto? If so, when and what is the cause of the delay in the Public Works Department?

2. How many officers, non-commissioned officers and men, respectively, are being provided with living accommodation outside of the barracks, and for what reason?

3. What has been the total annual expenditure for such purposes for the last three fiscal years, including the present year?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. Plans of eleven of the buildings required for the new barracks at Toronto were forwarded on March 7, last, by the Department of Public Works to the Department of Militia and Defence for final approval. These plans are now being considered, and will be returned to the Department of Public Works in a few days.

2. Officers and warrant officers, 16 ; non-commissioned officers and men, 74. These are compelled to live out of barracks as there is no accommodation for them inside, pending the erection of new barracks.

3. Annual expenditure for allowances to officers and men in lieu of quarters : Fiscal year—

July 1, 1905 to June 30, 1906..	$10,535 20

No payments have as yet been made for the current fiscal year.

TRAP-NET LICENSES.

Mr. STANFIELD asked :

1. How many trap-net licenses in the district of John A. Weber, Chester, Nova Scotia, have been taken out in the year 1906?

2. How many trap-net licenses in the district of John A. Webber, Chester, Nova Scotia, have been taken out in the year 1907?

3. What are the names of those who paid for these licenses?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. No trap-net licenses were issued in this district in 1906.

When the decision of the Imperial Privy Council on the Fisheries Reference secured to the provincial governments the property interests in the fisheries, which involved the issue of leases and licenses for fishing privileges, it declared the clause empowering the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to issue licenses, to be ultra vires, where the right already existed by law.

The department, however, by tacit admission and tentative arrangement with the local government continued to issue licenses as formerly, pending final settlement of the question.

A gradual disposition grew up among the fishermen in this district to interpret the law for themselves and to fish trap-nets without licenses, and eventually a decision was rendered in the county court denying the right of this department to issue such licenses, which strengthened the hands of the fishermen in their contentions.

The department held, however, that subsection 7 of section 47 of the Fisheries Act, chapter 45 of the revised statutes, was to be interpreted as a prohibition of a method of fishing, not necessarily involving the abstract question of proprietary rights; but merely giving the minister authority under certain conditions to legalize the operation of a trap-net, which was prohibited by the Act without his permission, whereas section 8 authorizing the minister to grant licenses as such, essayed to take power of a proprietary character.

Hence while he may not grant a license in the proprietary sense of the word, he could by special license or permission authorize a trap-net license, which trap could not be legally operated without his authority.

In 1906 the fishermen did not take out licenses, and early in 1907 the officer asked what course he was to follow for that year, and he was instructed to compel the fishermen to take out licenses, or remove their trap-nets with the assistance of one of the fishery protection cruisers.

2. Eighty-four trap-net licenses were issued in the year 1907.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY STATION AT TRURO.

Mr. STANFIELD asked:

1. Does the government consider the sanitary conditions of the railway station at Truro suitable for the employees to work in, and are the same conditions suitable for the public?

2. Is it the intention of the department to commence the erection of a new station suitable for this important junction this year?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The department is aware of the fact that the station buildings at Truro are old, but is not advised of any danger to the public health in consequence thereof.

2. The matter is being considered. Large expenditures have to be made in connection with the new freight yard, &c., at that place.

6. No.

7. $317,732.85 (inclusive of site, $24,000). I take it for granted that my hon. friend did not intend to ask what would be the total cost when the work is finally completed, but what is the total cost to date, and the answer is framed accordingly.

8. (a) W. J. Busch, architect, (b) $4,130.95.

DREDGING AT MOUTH OF BECANCOUR RIVER.

Mr. BERGERON asked:

1. When were the dredging works at the mouth of the Bécancour river, in the county of Nicolet, done in 1907, commenced?

2. How many cubic yards were dredged?

3. At how much per yard?

4. How many days was the tug 'Alpha' employed in such dredging?

5. What sum per day was paid for the use of that vessel by the company to the government?

6. From whom did the 'Alpha' receive instructions or authorization to do its part of that work?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. June 8.
2. 101,962 cubic yards.
3. Sixteen cents.
4. From July 27, to September 3, 1907.
5. The company obtained the use of the boat on trial under offer of sale on condition that all expenses including wages, fuel board and supplies were paid during the period the boat was in their possession.
6. No special instructions were given other than as mentioned in the answer to No. 5.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—MAJOR HODGINS' CHARGES.

Rt. hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved:

That the memorandum of the Chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners to the Prime Minister, of date the 23rd April, and laid on the table of this House on the 24th instant, and the papers accompanying the same, be referred to a special committee of five members, with instructions to investigate the matters and charges therein mentioned, and that the said committee be composed of Messrs: Carvell, Macdonald (Pictou), Geoffrion, Barker and Lennox, and that the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There should also be power given to the committee to examine witnesses on oath or affirmation as otherwise the committee would have no power to do so. I would suggest further if it is the intention to deal with all the matters and charges which have been put forward in the statements purporting to emanate from Major Hodgins which have appeared in the public press, that it should be so stated in the resolution. I observe that the memo. which has been placed upon the table of the House from the chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commission refers to an article contained in the Manitoba 'Free Press' and a similar article in the Ottawa 'Citizen.' In the press of British Columbia the statements of Major Hodgins were set out at very considerable length and in very considerable detail, so much so that the observations of the chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commission as to their vague and indefinite character would not seem to apply, because I observe that the Vancouver 'World,' after referring to the great weight which the words of Major Hodgins would carry in the province of British Columbia, uses this language:

We do not know that more serious charges of robbery of the public treasury have ever been brought before the public of Canada. There are no general statements made on hearsay, but specific allegations which can be proved or disproved, put forward by a man thoroughly familiar with the circumstances.

I would suggest therefore to the right hon. gentleman that there should be added to the resolution after the words 'therein mentioned' on the last line of the resolution as it appears on page 10 of the Order Paper, these words:

Or set forth in the statements purporting to emanate from Major A. E. Hodgins which have appeared in the public press.

These should be added so that we may be sure, in sending the matter to the committee that we are dealing with all the charges and matters which have been alleged by this gentleman who has occasioned the action which the Prime Minister has taken.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that I would be justified at this moment in enlarging the motion which I have just brought to the attention of the House. The action which I have taken was upon the suggestion of my hon. friend who drew my attention to this matter, and we took action upon the reports which were available at that time. If there is any thing more it ought to be a matter for further consideration. I have never even seen the newspapers to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not asking for any thing more to be introduced. In bringing the matter to the attention of the Prime Minister I referred to statements made in newspapers in eastern Canada, which as I understand summarized the statements made by Major Hodgins and which had appeared at greater length and in greater detail in the press of British Columbia. All that I am now suggesting is that the motion should be so framed as to include all the matters and charges which were actually mentioned or made and which were referred to but not set out in the press of eastern Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly, any statement that has been made though not actually stated in detail ought to be taken in, and as I understand it myself at all events, it is being included in the resolution.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. All I am in doubt about is whether or not the newspaper clippings attached to the communication from Mr. Parent contain the actual statements and charges put forward by Major Hodgins in British Columbia. In order to make that perfectly sure I was suggesting an amendment, not with the idea of adding any thing further but merely with a desire of including all the charges and statements that were actually made before I brought the matter to the attention of the government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The intention of the motion is certainly to deal with all the charges of Major Hodgins.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the Prime Minister be good enough to look at the motion and see whether he is quite sure of that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not having seen the paper I am sorry that I cannot express any opinion at the moment. Perhaps I had better allow the matter to stand until to-morrow.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I can furnish to the Prime Minister some British Columbia papers which contain the statement as originally made; he could look over these and see whether all these matters are covered.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion stands.

MEAT AND CANNED FOODS ACT.—AMENDMENT.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) moved third reading of Bill (No. 149) to amend the Meat and Canned Foods Act.

Mr. DAVID MARSHALL (East Elgin). I would like to ask the minister if he intends by this Bill to do away with the name of the packer on the label. I understand that is the intention of the Bill.

Mr. FISHER. I think the hon. gentleman's way of putting it is far too sweeping. It does not necessarily do away with the name of the packer, but it does permit the first purchaser from the packer to put his name on the label instead of the packer.

Mr. MARSHALL. Then I may tell the minister that is the greatest mistake he ever made.

Mr. FISHER. I did not make it. It was an amendment moved in committee, not by me, and adopted by the House.

Mr. MARSHALL. It seems a pity to put laws on this statute-book one year and change them the next year, when they are proper laws. The canning industry in this country is a large industry and is likely to increase. It seems to me there would be no object in improving the quality of the goods unless the name of the packer is on the label, and it certainly protects the consumer. I have some special labels here which I will send over to the minister so that he may see them. We do not object to a special label but I believe the name of the packer should be on the label in every case. Some times these goods are sent out and they change hands two or three times and if the name of the packer is not on it is a very easy thing for the man behind the counter to say even unintentionally they were packed by a certain firm when such might not be the case. In the interest of the business I would regret very much to see this change take place for I believe it would be a setback to the trade. I hope the minister will consider that well. We have no objection to the wholesale trade using special labels but we think the name of the packer is the best protection to the consumer. The Act of last year which provided that the name of the packer should be on the label was a good Act, and I was in sympathy with it and I regret now that it is proposed to change it. Speaking on behalf of the Canadian canners I may tell you that we are not sending 1,000 cases to the old country to-day except those which contain our own label and I say that is the best advertisement that the canned goods of this country can have. I again urge that the law should provide that the name of the packer should be on the label, if only for the purpose of protecting the consumer.

Mr. A. ZIMMERMAN (Hamilton). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Marshall) has not advanced one argument why the respectable and responsible Canadian wholesale dealers who have advertised and established the reputation of their labels for the past thirty years should not be allowed to use them as in the past. I can readily understand that the Canadian canners which the hon. gentleman represents would derive very great advantage from a law which provided that the name of the canner should be on the label. Now, the first object and design of this law is to protect the public. That is the object of the Act. The wholesale dealers always had canneries of their own until of late years when they have sold them out to the Canadian canners who have some thirty-five or forty canneries under their company at the present time. Two or three of these canneries have worked up great names for themselves in the past, but the public have no guarantee that they are getting the goods of these particular canneries even when they ask for them; the Canadian canners can take the canned goods of any of their canneries and place on them the name of the favourite cannery.

As to the question of responsibility, we know that the wholesale grocers are among the most substantial business concerns in Canada, much more responsible than many of the small packers. If the wholesale grocers are compelled to put the name of the canners on the goods, the effect would be to practically wipe out the whole business of the small canner as it would not pay the wholesale dealer to have his labels printed except in large quantity, and if the name of the cannery must be put on, then the wholesaler would practically be compelled to purchase his goods from the Canadian canners. In the past the wholesale grocers have bought their canned goods from perhaps a dozen different canneries under their own special supervision. They are bound to have their goods of the very highest quality, and when the wholesale grocers put their own names on the cans it is a guarantee to the public that they are getting first class goods.

Mr. MARSHALL. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong when he says——

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not a question, that is the statement of fact.

Mr. MARSHALL. Does the hon. member know of his own knowledge that these special brands have been in use for 20 or 30 years?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I do.

Mr. MARSHALL. Name the label?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I am not prepared to name the label.

Mr. MARSHALL. I thought you were not.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. But I know and you know that such firms as Balfour & Company, James Turner & Company, of Hamilton, have used their labels for many years.

Mr. MARSHALL. I do not know that and I am correct when I say that these special labels have not been used longer than seven years. I have the dates when their use was commenced, I know what I am talking about. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Zimmerman) does not really understand it; they have not been using these labels for twenty or thirty years. I am speaking of fruit and vegetable labels.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Marshall) should not interrupt another member who has the floor except with his consent. That is the rule.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The system of labels that have been used by the wholesale grocers——

Mr. MARSHALL. I would like to ask another question. In which way would the public be most protected, by having the name of the canner, the man who packs the goods, or the name of the wholesale dealer on the packages?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Unquestionably by having the name of the wholesale dealer. The wholesale trade have established a large business all over the country in their special brands or labels and the system has worked well. They have spent large sums of money on these labels and to require that the name of the packer should be placed on the can practically means confiscation of one of the most valuable assets of the wholesale grocer.

Mr. MARSHALL. Is the hon. gentleman aware that the canners allow the cost of these labels when they put them on? The wholesale man is not at the loss of the labels.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I am aware that they allow a certain percentage. That is not the point.

Mr. MARSHALL. I understood his argument to be there was a great loss on the labels.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. No, I say the loss would be in the confiscation of a valuable advertised asset, an asset on which the wholesale grocer has worked up a large business during many years. That business has been established on a particular label, the trade have been well satisfied with the goods they have received, and now if you compel the name of the canner to go on these packed goods, it simply means confiscation of the wholesale grocers' most valuable asset.

Mr. SPROULE. Does it make any serious difference if you place on the label: Canned by so and so for such a wholesale firm?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Certainly, as practically every wholesale grocer would have to go to the Canadian canners to get his goods and they would be practically selling the same goods.

Mr. MARSHALL. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken; they would not have to go to the Canadian canners, for there are more goods packed outside of Canadian canners than they are packing. Why do they want these special labels put on certain packages? Because these goods have been before the public and have a reputation. When they send in their orders to the Canadian canners, they say: We want them labelled as packed at Aylmer—or some other point where the goods have a reputation.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. They certainly do it in their own interest, if they ask to have the name of the canner on, and in the future if the wholesalers want the name of the canner on, there is nothing to prevent it going on; but in the meantime the wholesale people have a large interest in their special labels, and it would be a very great injustice if they were compelled to put any other name on than their own. They are just as responsible if not more responsible than any canners in this country. This would simply mean that a great number of smaller canners would have to close down, the wholesale grocers could not go to the small canners and have their goods packed because they would have to sell on the packer's name and the small packer is not known in the country.

Mr. MARSHALL. Then why does the new packer always want to use his own label ? Is it not because he wishes to get established, to get his goods out ? It is the new packer who wants to use his own label.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. All I can say is that the present system has been very satisfactory so far as concerns getting goods put up by the wholesale grocers under their own private labels. It has worked well, the public have been protected, the policy has been successful and under it a large special business has been worked up. It has also enabled the small packers to establish a successful business. If you insist on the packer's name going on all these goods, it is no more protection to the consumer than having the name of the wholesale grocer on them, and it means confiscation of one of the most valuable assets of the wholesale grocer in his special label.

Mr. MARSHALL. The hon. gentleman is mistaken entirely.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has exercised his right to speak on this motion.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I have had the floor——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman has also exercised his right.

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON (Vancouver City). It seems to me that the hon. member for East Elgin, for whose opinion in this matter I have every possible regard, is unnecessarily alarmed over this suggested amendment. The section provides that these articles shall be marked with :

(a) The initials of the Christian names, the full surname, and the address, or, in the case of a firm or corporation, the firm or corporate name and address, of the packer.

and the amendment comes in here :

Or of the first dealer obtaining it direct from the packer who sells or offers the same for sale. Such dealer shall, upon request of the inspector, disclose the name of the packer of such article.

Let me tell my hon. friend (Mr. Marshall) the reason for this amendment. I received from the Wholesale Grocers' Guild of the province of British Columbia a resolution passed at the last meeting, pointing out that the majority of them had been operating on specific labels more particularly for canned salmon. For a number of years, it has been the custom for the wholesaler to go to a small packer of salmon and purchase his output. The packer does not label the goods, but they are labelled by the wholesaler with his own brand, and the wholesaler assumes full responsibilty for the purity of the article, and is held responsible under this amendment. Without this amendment, the packer would be obliged to put his name on the can. Now, John Jones may have been the packer last year——

Mr. MARSHALL.

Mr. MARSHALL. I think canned fish does not come under the operation of this section.

Mr. FISHER. Fish is subject to the provisions of the law under section 12.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I was pointing out that the wholesale dealer puts his label on the can. For instance, a man deals in what he calls the 'Sunset' brand of canned salmon, using that brand for years and buying his canned salmon, possibly, from four or five different canners. This is necessary for the reason that a good run of salmon in a certain river one year may mean a poor run next year, making it necessary for the wholesaler to go to a different part of British Columbia for his canned salmon next year.

Mr. MARSHALL. I understand you to say that he would not be able to use the same packer, and so his labels would be a loss. But you could overcome that by putting on a narrow strip 'packed by so and so' upon the label.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend and I are working on the same lines ; we want somebody held responsible for the quality of the goods. But this is not a question of changing a label, but it is a question of maintaining a dealer's right in his own brand. A man may have built up a reputation for a certain brand of canned salmon. Under the present Act, he cannot operate in that way. Last year, for instance, the salmon was packed by John Jones ; this year it is packed by Smith and Brown. Cans thus differently marked might be put upon the same shelf, and my hon. friend will understand that this is a position that the wholesale grocers of British Columbia desire to escape. And I think that their position in the matter is very laudable and very fair.

Mr. MARSHALL. Are all the wholesale people in British Columbia in sympathy with this ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. MARSHALL. Are you not mistaken in that ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I have received a letter from the Wholesale Grocers' Guild of British Columbia on the subject. I am sorry I have not that letter with me——

Mr. MARSHALL. The reason I ask is that one wholesale house in Vancouver particularly did not want this.

Mr. MACPHERSON. There may be one firm. But I have had several letters on the subject, including the one of which I speak, from the Secretary of the Wholesale Grocers' Guild which comprises practically all the wholesale dealers in British Columbia. Of course, my hon. friend wil understand that I am not working for any particular grocer. I know that the wholesale grocers will be placed at a disadvantage or compelled to operate under the present section 12 of the Act.

Mr. MARSHALL. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question: If you were buying a case of Cross & Blackwell's goods, or of Heinz's or of Snider's ketchup, would not you want to see their names on the goods?

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind hon. members in speaking, they must address the chair.

Mr. MARSHALL. I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but it is hard for me, apparently, to make myself clear, and this is a very important question.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend (Mr. Marshall) is right. If I asked for Crosse & Blackwell's goods, I would want to get what I asked for. Why? Because, in the course of a long period of years, they have built up a reputation for their goods.

Mr. MARSHALL. Well, here is a company that has been packing for twenty-four or twenty-five years. We have a reputation for our goods and do not want to give it away. Our position is just the same as that of Crosse & Blackwell.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I appreciate that. You put your label on the goods. You do not send out your goods under——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Macpherson) is doing exactly what I objected to a moment ago.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I beg pardon of the House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Marshall) does simply what the wholesale grocers of British Columbia are doing. If I know anything of the canning industry of Canada, I know that the people who have established a reputation for their labels desire to have their brands maintained. My hon. friend suggested that if I ask for Crosse & Blackwell's goods I want them. Yes, and if I ask for the Clover Leaf brand of salmon, I want it, irrespective of the identity of the actual packer. It does not matter that it has been packed by one firm and labelled by another. The firm that labels the goods is as desirous of keeping its business intact and not letting anybody else know where they get this canned salmon as Crosse & Blackwell are to keep people from infringing on their label. But my hon. friend will see that the present Act makes that impossible. I cannot see how any harm could accrue to the man who buys or to the canner, through this amendment relating to the 'first dealer.'

Mr. MARSHALL. But the harm is to the consumer, and it is the consumer we want to protect.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I took the stand last year that there should be the name of some responsible party upon the canned salmon. Until last year there was no responsible name upon the canned salmon, because, in many instances, the goods were packed, labelled and sent out without any individual name on the can.

Mr. ALCORN. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macpherson) reads the amendment, is it clear that the canner's label may be on the can or that of the first purchaser?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. ALCORN. Would the first purchaser be authorized to tear off the label of the packer and put on his own?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I fancy that he would come under the operation of the criminal code if he attempted to do that. Of course, I am not a lawyer.

Mr. ALCORN. This would seem to authorize it.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I do not think so. But the point I am trying to bring out—and I am sorry that this is not in committee, for I would like my hon. friend from Elgin to have the fullest opportunity for discussing it——

Mr. FISHER. Section 18 provides against the difficulty suggested by the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn).

Mr. MACPHERSON. Section 18 says:

> Every person who, not being an inspector, wilfully alters, effaces, or obliterates, or causes to be altered, effaced or obliterated, wholly or partially, any mark on any article which has undergone inspection shall incur a penalty of one hundred dollars.

That, I fancy, would cover. But what I am trying to point out is that the man who has established a reputation for a brand of canned salmon finds that brand practically wiped out under this law unless he can go into the canning business himself. If he is not in a position to do so, but goes into the open market, buys a pack of canned salmon, has it inspected and has his label put on it, that is a guarantee that the article is sound and fit for food.

Mr. SPROULE. As I understand it, there may be a failure of the catch, so that the dealer is not able to procure his supply from the same packer as in a former year, and may even be compelled to buy from two or three packers. What guarantee is there to the public that these different packs of salmon are equally good when they are packed without the direct supervision of the wholesale men?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Of course, the wholesale man comes under the operation of this Act. The wholesale purchaser is going to be very careful, because he has established a reputation for his goods. He will see that nothing but the very best goods go out under his name. The hon. gentleman will understand that a man who has been putting up a particular kind of goods under a patent name, if he puts out an inferior article for only one year, it will injure the reputation of his goods for all time.

Mr. SPROULE. How do you determine that they are up to the standard?

Mr. MACPHERSON. There is a physical way of doing so. All canned salmon are inspected by a provincial officer in British Columbia. I went with him last year through some of the canneries, and saw some of the salmon condemned. The man who purchases has no trouble at all in ascertaining the character of the salmon by opening a can. The operation of canning salmon is down to such a perfect science that it is almost impossible for bad salmon to be put up—except possibly in a very bad year.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the hon. gentleman not think that the packer would be in a better position than the grocer to say as to the quality of the contents of the package?

Mr. MACPHERSON. They are all subject to inspection under this Act.

Mr. SPROULE. If they all come up to the one standard why should one be better than another?

Mr. MACPHERSON. The idea is this: If you are a wholesale grocer operating in British Columbia and you have established a reputation for a certain brand of goods, and are using your own label, naturally you will be obliged to keep your goods up to the highest possible standard. But under the present operation of the Act, you could not go to three or four different canneries and buy your whole output for that year, because in one case you would possibly buy the pack of Jones and Brown, and in another case the pack of Smith and Robinson, all carrying a certain class of brand.

Mr. MARSHALL. Does the hon. gentleman not think that the packer would be more particular if his own name were on the package than if he sent it out without his name?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I agree that the packer is going to be very particular. But we have many small packers who don't go into the market with their canned goods; they depend entirely upon the wholesale grocer for the sale of their goods. The hon. gentleman will understand that if the wholesale grocer is obliged to go to three or four different canners, under the present operation of this Act he is obliged to buy goods that are labelled by three or four different men, and if he put his own label on all those goods and sent them to eastern Canada he would soon receive a black eye.

Mr. FOSTER. They would have a double guarantee.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Possibly, and you cannot have the food you eat too well guaranteed. But the people have the guarantee of the responsible wholesale firm that these goods are pure, and they are also inspected by the government. They operate under this label and they are responsible for the goods.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the public not have the same guarantee from the manufacturer himself under the present Bill?

Mr. MACPHERSON. The question of vested rights comes in. These people have operated under this label for years. but under the strict operation of this Act they cannot operate under that label any more. Everybody has been protected under this Act, the wholesaler, the canner and the user himself. I think my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Marshall) is unnecessarily alarmed. I agree that we should have every possible guarantee, but there can be no better guarantee than is here provided. There are many reputable wholesale grocery firms in this country whose names are synonymous for purity of goods and for fair dealing. They have operated in British Columbia for thirty or forty years under one specific label, but buying from several different factories. How unfair it would be if the vested rights of these men in their labels were wiped out, and only the packer's name should be allowed to go on the label.

Mr. MARSHALL. How long has the canning business been in operation in this country?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I know they have been canning fish for thirty-three years, I withdraw the words forty years. In 1877 salmon were first canned in the Fraser river. It is a question of the vested rights that a wholesale grocer has in his patent label. He has been protected by this law, and the wholesale packer is not being at all molested.

Mr. MARSHALL. Who has the most money invested in this business, is it the man who supplies the label, or the man who builds a plant to put up the goods? We do not object to special labels, but we want the packer's name to be on the label. We will put on any label they require. but we say that in the interest of the builder, and to protect the consumer, the name of the packer should be on.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend has got the wrong side of my argument. It is not a question of a label, the printing of a label does not amount to much money; but it is a question of the vested rights of a man in goods that he has packed and sold for years. The person whose name is on the label is the man who is responsible under present conditions.

Mr. ALCORN. British Columbia methods in the canning business must differ from those obtaining in Ontario. The business in Ontario has not been in operation for thirty or forty years, and it is impossible for the wholesale men to have acquired any such vested rights as the hon. gentleman has referred to. In Ontario the canned goods business has only been in operation for about twenty years. When the packer of the goods has placed his own label on a package, in the lapse of years that label has acquired a large money value, and it appears to me that the effort now being made to place somebody else's label on the goods ought not to succeed. It would deprive the packers of this country of the large value that they have acquired in their labels. The hon member for Hamilton speaks of the responsibility of firms. This matter of labels being placed by wholesale firms on packers' goods, is a matter of recent years. The person responsible for the contents of the can is surely the packer who has placed his label on those goods. The hon. gentleman says that the label is for the protection of the public. Well, he argues in a circle. Ever since the business has been in existence the canner has placed his label upon the goods. The public have learned to value the goods by their acquaintance with these labels placed upon them by the canners. The labels put on by the wholesale men are a matter of recent years, and their value cannot be as great. The hon. gentleman evidently sees the force of that statement, and knows that the facts are as I have stated, because he adds that the wholesale dealers have in some instances established a canning business and have built it up, and says the public will be protected in getting the particular goods of these firms. That is precisely the case as I have put it. But the canners are the people who have the original vested rights. If there is any question of vested rights involved in this matter, it is the rights of the canner who, by lapse of time, has acquired a priority in such rights. They made the business. There was a time when there was no canning business in this country. The canners are the people who have made the business, spent the money, established the plants, gained a reputation for the goods they manufacture and established the value of their labels by trading with the public. Now, the wholesale dealers are endeavouring to take away that value which has been built up by long years of effort.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. It is just the reverse.

Mr. ALCORN. The hon. gentleman speaks of the wholesalers being the people who are responsible for the quality of the goods. How can they possibly give any guarantee of the quality of goods bought from a dozen different sources?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. They have all to be subject to the same inspection.

Mr. ALCORN. But there was a time when there was no inspection and when they bought the goods absolutely on the reputation of the packer. That is the reputation that the public desire to rely upon. They have learned to know these labels, they have learned to know the relative value of the goods, and they will be unfamiliar with the new labels put on by the wholesale men. The member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) says that it is a question of vested rights. I say: Yes, the vested rights of the packer. Surely the packers are the people who were on the scene first, they are the people who originated the business, and this is an attempt of the wholesaler to come in and take the benefit of the packers' years of work. I would certainly oppose in the strongest possible manner any amendment to the Act or any legislation which would have the effect of depriving the packer of the right to the full use of his labels and of his name for the purpose of placing his goods before the public. The public are entitled to the labels, they are acquainted with the reputation of the packer, these labels have a high money value to the packer and that money value ought not to be disturbed.

Mr. BLAIN. I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Wm. Jackson):

That Bill No. 149 be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for further consideration.

I suppose there will be no objection to allowing this Bill to go back to Committee of the Whole. There must be a considerable difference of opinion as to whether the Bill is a correct one or not, and I think it is a matter that the minister will consent to at once.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think this Bill ought to go back to Committee of the Whole. If any hon. members do not approve of any portion of the Bill they may move to strike out that clause.

Mr. SPROULE. No, this is the third reading.

Mr. SPEAKER. The only recourse is to move to refer it back.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. member wishes to refer it back for a particular purpose I would not object at all.

Mr. SPROULE. It is for a particular purpose.

Mr. FISHER. But that is not mentioned in the motion; the motion is simply that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPEAKER. For further consideration.

Mr. FISHER. It means that the whole Bill shall be referred back for consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. There is only one clause of the Bill that there is any difference of opinion on.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman wishes to move that this Bill be referred back for the purpose of striking out this particular amendment I have no objection, but if it is proposed to refer the whole Bill back for further consideration I would object.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. For the purpose of considering the amendment. It may not be desired to strike it out altogether, but to modify it in some way.

Mr. FISHER. That particular amendment?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, that is the only one we are discussing; refer it back for the purpose of further considering that clause, whatever it is.

Mr. MACPHERSON. It is an amendment to clause 12.

Mr. FISHER. Do you object to that?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I do not object to it. I am willing that the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Marshall) shall have every possible chance to express his views; still, I think he is entirely mistaken.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion, as I understand it, is:

That Bill No. 149 be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the amendment to clause 12.

Motion agreed to, and House went again into committee on the Bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 12 of the Act provides that:

All articles prepared for food in any establishment and packed in cans or similar receptacles, or in any package whatever, shall be subject to inspection during the whole course of preparation and packing; and all such packages shall be marked with—

(a) the initials of the Christian names, the full surname and the address, or, in the case of a firm or corporation, the firm or corporate name and address of the packer.

And the amendment proposed is as follows:

Or of the first dealer obtaining it direct from the packer who sells or offers the same for sale. Such dealer shall, upon request of the inspector, disclose the name of the packer of such article.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, this is the clause striking the name of the packer from the label. I am anxious to have the name of the packer put on the label. I want to say a few words about the label. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Zimmerman) said that some of these labels had been used for a number of years. I have the dates here showing the periods for which some of them have been used. The 'Triangle' commenced to be used three years ago. The 'Tartan' brand is the oldest in use, this label having been originated seven years ago. I am speaking only of fruit and vegetable labels.

Mr. BLAIN. Are those a manufacturer's label or a wholesaler's label?

Mr. MARSHALL. These are what we call special labels. Every one of these labels has the name of the packer. I do not think that the Canadian canners are going to pack all these goods. They could not do it. I am speaking in the interest of the business. I am interested largely in the canned goods business, and I am anxious to work up the quality of our goods. There is no reason why we should not be packing all the vegetables and catsups consumed in this country. There is nothing, to my mind, that will improve the quality of these goods more than putting our labels on them.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The wholesale grocers do not object to the canners' name going on the goods. The packer is not compelled to sell to the wholesale grocer who insists that the name of the packer shall not be on the label.

Mr. MARSHALL. I quite understand that, but the wholesale man will come to us and say: If you do not use our special label we will not buy your goods.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. You are not compelled to sell to them?

Mr. MARSHALL. Not at all, but what we want to do is to improve the quality of the goods. The hon. member for Hamilton knows very well that when he was in the clothing business he had a reputation for clothes. I used to buy clothes from him myself, I wanted to see his name on the goods, and it was on them. He knows as well as he is sitting here that that is the proper course to take. But, some of the wholesale men are behind him; I do not know whether it is votes he is looking after or not; but he has taken a different attitude from that which he took last year.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. No, I have always taken the same stand on this question. It is a matter of great moment to the wholesale dealer, and I will tell the hon. gentleman that when a man has worked up a large business under a specific label or trade mark it would be an outrage to take it away from him.

Mr. MARSHALL. It is impossible to work up a very large business in three years.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The hon. gentleman is most unfair. He knows that there are lots of labels that have been used in this country.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mention them.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I am not in a position to mention them, but the wholesale grocers from one end of the Dominion to the other are opposed to the Bill as it stands, and they have besieged members of this House with letters appealing to them to protect their vested interests in these labels. I think it is most unfair for the hon. gentleman to take advantage of his position in this House to represent his own business while the wholesale grocers, not being members of the House, are not here to defend themselves. I do trust that the hon. gentleman will not press this matter any further because the amendment is not interfering with him.

Mr. BLAIN. The objection I see to the proposed amendment is that it creates a monopoly on the part of the wholesale dealer.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Not at all; it is the other way on.

Mr. BLAIN. That may be my hon. friend's opinion.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. It is the other way on.

Mr. BLAIN. I have a label here which reads as follows: 'Triangle, James Turner & Co., Hamilton; put up expressly for us by the Canadian Canners', Limited.' If the amendment becomes law, James Turner & Co. will have the right to go to six different canning establishments in Canada and make an agreement for the 'Triangle' brand to go on each package.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. What would be the objection?

Mr. BLAIN. They would not be a uniform quality of goods because they were put up by six different canneries.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. But he is responsible.

Mr. BLAIN. The impression left on the consumer would be that all these goods were canned in the one establishment, when as a matter of fact they would be canned in six different establishments.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. And the Canadian canners to-day will put up the same brand in different factories.

Mr. BLAIN. But the canner's name would be on the label. Under the proposed legislation the wholesale man can arrange with the manufacturer, and the manufacturer's name would not go on the goods, and yet he would be responsible for the contents of the can.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The wholesale grocer is responsible.

Mr. BLAIN. The canner who puts up the goods is in a far better position to guarantee the contents than the wholesale dealer who never sees them.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. They are all subject to the same inspection.

Mr. LOGGIE. I appreciate what the hon. member (Mr. Marshall) says, but we must not forget that it is the practice all over the world for large wholesale houses to have private brands. If that be the practice in England, in Germany, in France and in the United States, there is good reason for favourably considering that we should follow it in this young country. One reason why the wholesale grocer wants his private brand is that when the brand is established he has control of his trade. Under other conditions a competitor may come in and quote the same brand, if it is not a special brand, at 2½ cents a dozen less, and the impression is given that all the other goods sold by that man are sold at a lesser rate than the competitor sells them at. That may be unfair competition. It is most important in the interest of the large packers generally that their brands should go to the public and that a demand should be created for them because of their quality. But it seems to me that no great wrong can accrue to the consuming public if a wholesale house of high standing undertakes to buy these goods from the packer and put his own name on them and become responsible. He will make sure that he buys from a responsible packer.

Mr. MARSHALL. If these goods turn out bad who is to pay for them?

Mr. LOGGIE. As a rule the wholesale grocer must make good to the retail grocer, the retail grocer must make good to the consumer, and the packer is supposed to guarantee his goods for six months.

Mr. MARSHALL. You are perfectly right, but suppose the wholesale man uses a special label on three or four different packs how can you adjust the claims if the name of the packer is not on the label?

Mr. LOGGIE. Every packer has a box mark and every package of goods is identified by the case.

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes, but some retail men take the goods out of the different cases as soon as they receive them, put them on the shelves and sell or destroy the case.

Mr. LOGGIE. That may be true, and it is not an exceptional way of doing business. We have not, however, had such a stringent law as is now proposed except during the past year, and I think we can fairly well take the risk we have taken for so many years. I realize it is important to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Marshall) that his goods should go to the consuming public under his own name, but is that any reason why some other packer who may not be as able as he is to do that should not be allowed to make a bargain with some large distributing house to put on their own label and be responsible to the consuming public?

Mr. BLAIN. Would it not be fairer for that other packer to put his own brand on his own goods ?

Mr. LOGGIE. There is nothing to prevent him from doing so.

Mr. BLAIN. But it allows the wholesaler who is not a packer to use a label which would lead the public to believe that he put up the goods.

Mr. LOGGIE. That is quite true, but all the same he has worked up a trade under that special brand and one reason for the special brand is that it prevents competition from another wholesale grocer.

Mr. ALCORN. Upon what principle of right or equity should a wholesale dealer be allowed to build up a value out of the goods of a canner who has created the value by his label being on these goods ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. He may not have created the value at all. It may be that it is the facilities which the wholesale man has for distributing the goods that creates the value.

Mr. ALCORN. The canners of Ontario are not depending on the wholesale trade for a market for their goods. There is one very large cannery in my county which deals with no wholesaler, keeps no travellers upon the road, sells their whole pack annually to one or two dealers in the larger centres and could sell them five times the amount if they had them.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I can quite believe that. This is not a question of canners and canners so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ALCORN. That is what it seems to be developing into.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend is making it that. The canner has every right to place his name on the can, but the small canner who does not put his label on the goods has only the wholesale firms to look to for distributing them. The small man is protected in his interest. The hon. member says that some canners will never go to the wholesale house. The same thing occurs in the fish business, a certain brand of salmon that I have in mind will sell anywhere.

Mr. ALCORN. I cited that to show the value of the brand of that company. Those goods are sold upon that brand and upon nothing else.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Exactly and that is the reason I desire to have an amendment providing that the man who has established a brand but who is not a packer shall not have his label wiped out.

Mr. ALCORN. What about the canner who has used his brand for a number of years ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. This does not interfere with him. If I pack fish and desire to put my name on, this does not prevent me.

Mr. BARR. Suppose the wholesale man covers the packer's name with his label.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Then he comes under the criminal code and goes to jail, which is the proper place for him.

Mr. MARSHALL. The hon. gentleman seems to think I am speaking entirely for the company in which I am interested.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I do not think so.

Mr. MARSHALL. I am interested in the canned goods business, I am anxious to improve the quality ; I know what that means; immediately we get our standard up we can sell our goods. I want to stop American goods coming in. There is no reason why they should come in. Some of them are of better quality than ours, but to my mind nothing will stop their importation so quickly as putting the name of the packer on the goods. It must be remembered that there are some 40 packers outside the company in which I am interested. I am not speaking for my own company, I am speaking for the interest of the business. As a matter of fact the wholesale men have nothing invested in this business. You speak of their having so much invested, but that is not the case. This adoption of the special label is not desired by all the wholesale houses themselves ; we have letters from some of them asking me to oppose it. If you want to improve the quality of your goods be sure to have your name on. The Bill that passed last year, with some amendments, is a good Bill and I would be sorry to see it interfered with because to my mind as it stands it is a move in the right direction. This proposed new measure would be setting this business back ten or fifteen years.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Oh no.

Mr. MARSHALL. I am speaking as a practical man; I have been in the business 25 years and my whole aim has been to improve the quality of the goods. The goods I have been manufacturing for years have gone into the hon. gentleman's city and I know he has asked for that particular brand. Why? Because he knew the goods were right. That applies to all goods properly labelled. There is nothing that will improve the quality so quickly as placing the name of the packer on the goods. I am not talking in the interest of my company at all. I am talking in the interest of the whole canned goods business because I think it is in its infancy in this country. When the great Northwest fills up, where to-day we have 80 canneries, we will then have 180. I am sincere in what I say and I hope this Act will not be meddled with at all. I cannot speak too strongly on this question as I realize its importance.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I accept fully my hon. friend's statements, that he is not speaking for his canneries. I would not for a moment accuse him of that, his standing in this country is too high. But I know he is unnecessarily alarmed. I know a little about canned goods myself. I cannot speak from the practical standpoint of my hon. friend, but I know that there is no better canned fruit on the continent of America to-day than the Canadian. I was in the Santa Clara valley three years ago and met the canners there one afternoon. The statement was made there that the Santa Clara people did not put up some varieties of fruit and vegetables equal to those put up in the province of Ontario by the Canadian canners. I thought that was a very high tribute to Canadian canning. They did not speak of all classes of goods, but spoke especially of the very high class of our peas, peaches, and one or two other varieties. British Columbia possibly consumes more per capita of canned goods than any other part of Canada and there the Canadian packers have worked up a trade into which the Americans cannot cut. They are not getting in to-day excepting where the Canadians cannot supply the goods, as my hon. friend from Elgin knows. In the Dawson country, where so much canned goods are used, that applies fully; you cannot sell American goods if they can get Canadian. My hon. friend evaded the point I tried to make, I would have him understand that this amendment is as much in the interest of the small salmon packer as of the wholesaler. The small canner does not put his label on his goods, possibly he does not want to, and nine times out of ten he does not. The large canner does because he has his market, but the small canner depends on the wholesale man who has perhaps handled his output for years.

Mr. MARSHALL. Is the hon. member speaking of fruit and vegetables or fish?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Fish entirely.

Mr. MARSHALL. That is not the case in Ontario.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I appreciate that, the trouble is that Canada is a large country. The canners of British Columbia and of Ontario are in the same position of desiring to see good goods on the market, but what may apply to British Columbia may not apply to Ontario. That is the point I tried to make in regard to the operation of this clause on the canners of British Columbia. It will not hurt the canners so much although it will to some extent. I am trying to protect the man who has a reputation established but who is not a canner.

Mr. BLAIN. Does not my hon. friend think that the effect of this will be to increase the importation of American canned goods?

Mr. MACPHERSON. The United States cannot get a market in the District of Columbia when the Canadian canner can supply the goods. The hon. member for Elgin knows that.

Mr. MARSHALL. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. If he goes to Bate's he will find American corn retailing at 25 cents a can. Why is that? It is packed by Warner & Company, of Maine, and is extra fine corn. He is entirely mistaken in saying that American goods are not consumed here.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I know they are.

Mr. MARSHALL. And they are sold at high prices. Our corn retails at 15 cents or two for a quarter, but Bate & Company are retailing American corn of the same size at 25 cents a tin.

Mr. MACPHERSON. But our corn comes into competition, it is selling at two for a quarter. The statement I make is that there are no better goods than ours manufactured on the continent. Take Alaska salmon and Rivers Inlet salmon. The Alaska salmon is cheaper to the merchant than the Rivers Inlet but he does not buy it because he knows that the Rivers Inlet salmon is a good, sound salmon; he is not afraid to stake his reputation on it and he cannot afford to take seconds and place his label on them. We have to compete against canned goods from the American side but in the West where the consumption of canned goods is greatest, where they come in competition, the Canadian goods have shut them out of the market. They are put up in a northern climate and are generally a better class of goods, and are possibly as well tinned as the American, because the canneries are very up-to-date. I do not think there is any danger under the present Act or this amendment of any influx of American goods.

Mr. BLAIN. This amendment, I understand, is introduced at the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson).

Mr. MACPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. My information from the west is that the chief thought of the western dealers who are in favour of this amendment is that it will give them a better opportunity to import goods from the United States.

Mr. MACPHERSON. That is a side light I have never received and that is not an argument they advanced to me. I do not think it is so, as they are obliged to meet the Canadian tariff. And this clause does not make it any easier to get the goods in.

Mr. BLAIN. Does not my hon. friend think that will be the result if the amendment is passed ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I really do not. This Act has been in operation for a year. The wholesale grocers say that section 12 has worked a hardship, and, in view of that fact, I desire to make this amendment to help them out. This Act respecting meat and canned foods is a splendid law. It was necessary in the best interest of the canner.

Mr. MARSHALL. Do you really mean that now ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I have always been looked upon as being fairly frank in my statements. And I must tell my hon. friend that I mean every word I have said. I may be entirely mistaken, of course. I always give credit to my hon. friend (Mr. Marshall) for sincerity, and I think he should mete out to me the same measure of charity.

Mr. MARSHALL. I did not put it the right way. I think I know the mind of the hon. member (Mr. Macpherson) and that if he would tell the House just what he thinks about it, he would say that the label should be on. He is a practical man and knows that that is the only way to meet the case.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I agree about the placing of the label. That is the proper thing, an excellent thing ; it should be done, and will be done in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand. Possibly, after this law has been in operation for a few years, the men who are using the special labels will be eliminated. But this House has no desire, nor has my hon. friend (Mr. Marshall), to work a hardship on a man who has established a reputation for his label after years and years of labour.

Mr. MACPHERSON.

Take, for instance, Todd & Company, large operators on the Fraser river. Suppose that the Fraser river is a failure one year. Todd & Company have entered into a contract for so many thousand cases of canned salmon for the old country market. They are so many hundreds of cases short. They buy what they need from a small cannery. They are practical men, and, of course, they see to it that the goods are right. Every can of these goods is marketed on Todd & Company's label. The present operation of the law has the effect of wiping that out. Does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Marshall) see the force of that statement ?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The same thing applies to other canners. The canners may go to a small independent canner and buy his output and put on it their own label and their own brand.

Mr. MARSHALL. That is true. We do that. But what does the small packer say? He may be only a beginner and trying to establish his own label. And he objects.

Mr. MACPHERSON. This does not prevent him from putting on his own label.

Mr. MARSHALL. I am not speaking of the case referred to by the hon. member (Mr. Macpherson) of which I know nothing. I know that it is the case here that we buy small packs. But we examine the goods.

Mr. MACPHERSON. That is what I say.

Mr. MARSHALL. And our name is on the goods—the name of some packer appears on the label. It does not matter who packs the goods ; I want to see the name on the label.

Mr. BARR. This is a question of great importance. It affects three classes of people—the canner, the wholesale grocer and the public. The law that was passed last year was a step in advance. We know that the public are very skeptical about canned goods and this has affected the business, and we believe that the law passed last year will improve the business. But, if we adopt this amendment, we help to create a monopoly by giving the wholesale merchant an advantage. If the small canners wish to protect their goods by putting on their name, they should be allowed to do so. Not only that, but, under this amendment, the wholesale merchant is likely to go to the small canner and say : We want to purchase your goods, but we will not do so unless you allow us to put on our label. Why should the small canner be forced to allow the wholesaler to use his own label and thus destroy the advantage of the canner ? We know that some canners do not produce as good goods as others. My hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) suggested that Ontario produced the best, that British Columbia did not produce always as good quality as other parts of the country.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I never said so.

Mr. BARR. The hon. gentleman said that Ontario produced the best goods. That being the case, if you facilitate the putting on of the wholesale grocer's label instead of that of the packer, the purchaser does not know who puts up the goods or where they come from. This tends to the putting up of goods of inferior quality, for the man who puts up the best quality is deprived of the advantage which he ought to have. The present law has not had time to work out its results, and we should be careful how we make changes. Certainly, changes should not be made at the instance of the wholesalers and at the expense of the canner and the consumer. It is very likely that the canners would not be so careful if they sold to the wholesaler as they would if they had to send their goods out to the world bearing their own name. And, just as soon as we find our own goods going down in quality, we find increased danger of importation from the United States and other countries. Therefore, it seems to me that the amendment, while it may be to the advantage of the wholesale grocers, is not in the interest of the canners or the public.

Mr. LOGGIE. The hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Marshall) says he buys goods from the small canner. Does he put on the small canners' labels, or the label of the canners' association ?

Mr. BARR. If there are two or three canners under the control of one concern, that concern might put its own label on the goods. But all are equally responsible, for their interests are identical and that interest is to build up their own brand. Though doing business in three places, perhaps, they are practically one.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. Since the interest of the wholesale grocer and the canner seem to be in conflict, would it not be well for the government to consider the idea of making a provision that the wholesale grocer may put on his own label, but at the bottom of the label there must be a line stating the name of the packer? Some of my relatives are interested in the canning industry, and they realize that when wholesale grocers have worked up a trade and use a trade mark they naturally want to keep it. It would not be right for parliament to take away from them the trade which they have worked up in fifteen or twenty years, and made profitable by advertising and using a certain brand. On the other hand, the canner always likes to bring his name before the public on the goods that he puts up. If he puts up a good quality of goods his name becomes an advertisement for them. Now, could we not devise some amendment under which the wholesale grocer could still put his name upon the can as well as the packer? Then in addition to the name of the wholesale grocer, these words could be put 'Packed by so and so.' We have seen that done already. I have myself packed maple syrup for different firms in Ontario, and along with the general label which those firms use I have added the words at the bottom 'Packed by so and so.' I think the wholesale grocers would accept an amendment of that kind. It would be an additional guarantee to the consumer. To-day the dealers are too eager to buy, and they buy from Tom, Dick and Harry as long as they can purchase at a profitable figure. In many cases people who have been putting up a high quality of goods for years cannot compete with certain people who come in to the business and undersell them. We have seen many wholesale firms who, by reason of their ignorance of the process of manufacturing, are imposed upon, and are not in a position to discern between inferior and superior qualities. Naturally they look to the quotations offered them by the manufacturer, and look no further. It often happens therefore that jobbers gather up an inferior article and dump it upon the public. I think it would be an additional guarantee to the consumer if the name of the packer were placed on the label, and that would do no injury to the wholesale grocer who has been using a registered trade mark for years. Many times the label is not a guarantee of quality because, as I have already said, the wholesale grocers are not always in a position to discern the inferior from superior article, because they are only purveyors or jobbers of goods made by the packer.

Mr. SPROULE. I still think it would be reasonable to add an amendment providing that the name of the packer should be put on the can, as well as the name of the wholesale firm that handles the product if he so desires it. That is often done. Then we would preserve the value of the name or reputation which the wholesale firm had built up during perhaps a long number of years, as well as the good name of the canner. Machine companies do that with reference to binder twine. The binder twine which is sold in the United States by the McCormick Company, much of it is manufactured by the Binder Twine manufacturers in Canada. They send a man especially to supervise the operation when the article is being manufactured, and it is made of a superior quality. The wholesale firm may have acquired a reputation for sending out a good quality, but I do not see why the manufacturers who produce that good quality should not share in some of the benefits as well as the seller.

Mr. MARSHALL. If the packer's name is not on the can he is not known to the trade. The packer has his money invested in the plant, and it would not be fair to the man who has built the factory and put in the machinery if he were not allowed to put his name on the package. If we get the benefit of publicity in putting out high class goods, we will be able to keep our plant in better condition and to put up still better goods.

Mr. LOGGIE. The hon. gentleman said a little while ago that he bought the entire pack of small canneries; did he put the labels on each one of those canneries on the aggregate pack, or did he put his own label?

Mr. MARSHALL. We put our own label on.

Mr. LOGGIE. Then what is the difference between his relation to these purchased goods, and the relation of the wholesale grocer who puts his label on them?

Mr. MARSHALL. We are packers. We only buy from other canners when we are short. We do not buy these goods to speculate on, but only when we are short in filling orders and have to look outside. But we examine the goods thoroughly before we put our label on.

Mr. FISHER. I must say that I cannot see the value that is attached to the Shibboleth of a packer. The wholesaler is just as well able to judge of the quality of the goods that he did not pack as the packer himself.

Mr. MARSHALL. We send a practical man to examine the goods before we buy them, a man who thoroughly understands canned goods.

Mr. FISHER. The wholesale grocer is also able to send a practical man.

Mr. MARSHALL. It is only practical men who are capable of judging of these goods.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Marshall) knows of cases where goods were sent out from the canneries to the wholesale grocers, and were returned as not being up to the mark.

Mr. MARSHALL. The party who buys from the original canner is responsible. We would not be responsible for the party selling, but if we get a poor quality of goods we come back upon the original packer. We are responsible because we know the brand.

Mr. BLAIN. I think this is a matter that should receive the special attention of the Minister of Agriculture. He introduced a Bill in 1907, it has only been on the statute-book for twelve months. A very important alteration is proposed to be made in the Bill. The minister will not father the change. He has already stated that the amendment was not proposed by himself, rather shirking the responsibility for the change, and yet I suppose he has consented that the change shall be made. I would like to direct my hon. friend's attention to the fact that whatever responsibility there is for this change will rest upon the minister himself. I do not think he is doing justice to the people of Canada by consenting that legislation of this kind shall take place. If this legislation is passed it will be practically impossible to follow the goods back to the door of the manufacturer. For example, James Turner & Co. buy a thousand boxes of canned goods from six different firms, and, with the view of perpetuating their own name, they put their own labels upon them. Some of these goods are sent to one province, some to another and some are exported out of the country altogether. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if it would be possible for his department to trace these goods to the manufacturer when there is no manufacturer's label upon the goods? Neither the wholesaler nor the department would be able to trace these goods.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Why not?

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. gentleman state how?

Mr. MACPHERSON. The amendment provides that:

> Such dealer shall, upon request of the inspector, disclose the name of the packer of such article.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend states that, but, at the same time, the special guarantor is the wholesale dealer. He is allowing the wholesale dealer to take the place of the manufacturer and I think this is dangerous legislation.

Mr. ALCORN. In reference to the purchase of the pack of a small packer that arises in this way: Those who start canning factories in a small way are not usually people of capital. A number of those wishing to engage in the business come together and the first thing they do is to sell their pack. They must realize money on their first year's operations. They go to some large packer and make an arrangement with him by which he takes all their pack for that year Until they do that the bank will not advance one dollar to establish their business. Under the 12th section of the Act packages are required to be marked with the name of the packer and it is desired here to add:

> Or of the first dealer obtaining it direct from the packer who sells or offers the same for sale.

I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who has proposed this amendment, how he thinks it is going to work out practically. How is it going to operate in the ordinary course of trade? I think I can tell him how it will operate. The wholesaler will say to the packer : I will take your pack for this season, or some specified part of it, but I will insist upon putting my name upon the label. The packer naturally does not desire it. He has worked up a large value in his label during the course of many years' business. That is the proposition which is made to him by the wholesaler and the wholesalers combine to enforce that condition in all their purchases. They will all insist upon putting their own label on the goods and not the label of the packer.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) said, in answer to my question as to how it was possible to trace the goods back to the manufacturer, that the packer would be compelled to put his name on the goods.

Mr. MACPHERSON. No, I did not say that.

Mr. ALCORN. The Act as it now stands says that :

All articles prepared for food in any establishment and packed in cans or similar receptacles, or in any package whatever, shall be subject to inspection during the whole course of preparation and packing ; and all such packages shall be marked with—

(a) the initials or the Christian names, the full surname, and the address, or, in the case of a firm or corporation, the firm or corporate name and address, of the packer.

And the amendment proposes to add :

Or of the first dealer obtaining it direct from the packer——

Mr. MACPHERSON. Read on further.

Mr. ALCORN——

—who sells or offers the same for sale.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Then go on.

Mr. ALCORN. The question then was as to how the packer could be traced and in answer to that the hon. member for Vancouver cited this part :

Such dealer shall, upon request of the inspector, disclose the name of the packer of such article.

But the packer's name need not be on the package at all.

Mr. MACPHERSON. That is quite true.

Mr. ALCORN. In the course of commercial dealing what will result from such legislation as this ? The result of this legislation will be to enable the wholesaler to put such pressure upon the packer as will compel the packer to allow his goods to go out altogether under the name of the wholesaler and thus entirely destroy the value of the label which the packer has established. The wholesaler can say : If you will not sell to me, or if your whole district will not sell to me, I will get some one else to put up a factory ; a few of us will combine together, put up a factory and wipe you out of the business altogether.

Mr. MACPHERSON. For twenty years or over we have been operating in this way proposed by this amendment.

Mr. ALCORN. You are talking altogether of fish and we are talking altogether of fruit and vegetables.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend cannot see anything outside of fruit and vegetables. But, my particular point is that we have been operating in this particular way for years. The hon. gentleman suggests as a reason why I bring in this amendment that the wholesalers would have the privilege of combining and forcing down prices. The reason is not that, and no argument that I have used can be construed by any hon gentleman to mean that. The hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Marshall) knows that I do not mean that and I take it that he is an authority upon these matters

Mr ALCORN Will the hon gentleman restrict his amendment to fish and fish products?

Mr. MACPHERSON. There is no reason in the world why there should be any specific line of demarcation between these two classes of goods that I can see. I do not know but that there are many wholesalers operating in connection with fruit and vegetables as well ; I cannot say that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would it answer the purpose if you changed the amendment in such a way as to provide that after the word 'packer' the following words be added: 'And any subsequent dealer who sells or offers the same for sale must add thereto his own brand or mark' ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. No, that would be making my amendment nugatory.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would not make it nugatory. The strongest point of the observations which have been made seems to be that if any good will had been created in the trade mark of a wholesale dealer or exporter it would be desirable, if possible, to preserve that and, at the same time, pre serve the general principle of the Act by keeping the name of the packer upon the can. There are some cases in which the name of the man, who is not, strictly speaking, the packer, may properly be upon the can. I know that in Nova Scotia, for example, a man who deals in lobsters, sometimes has not his own factory at all. He has lobsters packed according to a certain specification which is carefully written out and embodied in the terms of a contract. He has the canning of these lobsters inspected by men appointed by himself, so that, in effect, they are really canned under his own supervision although not canned actually in his own factory. Then his own label is supplied to the persons whom he so employs and it is put upon the goods. But, the amendment which is suggested does not apply to that case at all. It is the case in which a wholesale dealer buys up a pack which perhaps he has not examined at all. I think it is highly desirable to preserve the principle of the Act and have the packer's name on the can, and at the same time preserve the good will which has inured in that way to a wholesaler by having his name on the package as well. It seems to me that the two ideas could be worked out together.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I really cannot follow my hon. frend through that because that would result in the goods of a man who had made his label well known being obliged to carry two different names. I do not think that would be fair. My hon. friend makes a mistake in saying that the wholesaler does not inspect his fish.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I gathered that sometimes he did not inspect.

Mr. MACPHERSON. He would not jeopardize the good name of his firm by putting his label on a poor pack.

Mr. BLAIN. How is it possible to trace the goods to the canner?

Mr. MACPHERSON. My amendment says :

Such dealer shall, upon the request of an inspector appointed under this Act, disclose the name of the packer of such goods.

Mr. BLAIN. Suppose James Turner & Co., of Hamilton, buy 1,000 boxes from six different canning companies and they are all labelled under the name of James Turner & Co., how would it be possible to trace the packer after the goods are distributed throughout Canada?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I should not think there would be any difficulty. James Turner & Co.'s name is on the tin and the inpector would go to that firm and ask from whom they bought.

Mr. BLAIN. How would they know which of the six different establishments that tin came from?

Mr. MACPHERSON. He will be obliged under this Act to keep track.

Mr. BLAIN. What objection can there be to compelling the canner as well as the wholesaler to put his name on the label?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The wholesaler as a rule will buy the output of a factory, and it is the easiest thing in the world to keep track.

Mr. MARSHALL. But suppose James Turner & Co. buy part of their stock from the Canadian canners and part from the Homestead and the goods are distributed and three months afterwards claims are made, how can a distinction be drawn between the goods?

Mr. MACPHERSON. James Turner & Co. will be held responsible.

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes, but the claims all come back to the canner, and it is impossible to tell which canner the claim should come to unless his name is on the label. If a firm bought from one company it could be done, but where they buy from different companies it cannot be done.

Mr. ALCORN. To show the outrageous character of this proposition, it is merely sufficient to mention that the responsibility for making good faulty goods is on the packer ; he is the man who is to be made to pay in case anything goes wrong, but the proposition is to give the whole value in the label to the wholesale dealer. The packer's label is wiped out, but the packer must pay all the losses in the end.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like the minister to answer the question as to whether under this proposal it would be possible for the consumer of the article to trace the manufacturer of the article?

Mr. FISHER. That is a matter of opinion. I gather from what my hon. friend from Elgin said that in the past they have been able to do that when the packer's name was not on the label, and if that be so they ought to be able to do it in the future. I say that if they were able to trace the packers in the past before this Act came into force, they ought to be able to do it in the future. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) spoke about my duty in the matter. My duty is to try and see that this Act safeguards the public interest, and I thought it did so, but when I examined the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) I thought it provided a sufficient guarantee for the public interest and having that belief, although I did not propose the amendment, I did not see any objection to its adoption if the committee wished to adopt it. It was not in the original Act, and were it not for the representations of the wholesale trade generally of Canada—I think I may say from the Atlantic to the Pacific—I would not have known there was any objection to the original Act. It seems to me that there is a perfect safeguard for the public whether the amedment is passed or not, and that being so it does not matter to me very much personally whether the amendment passes or does not pass. The other night the committee approved of the amendment.

I said then, as may be found in 'Hansard,' that I did not see any objection to it in the public interest, and as the committee has adopted it I would prefer it to remain and shall vote, if it comes to a vote, to sustain the opinion of the committee. I wish to say a word to my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Marshall). He has stated that the Canadian canners purchased canned goods from other canners and put their label on them, and in my opinion that gives away his case. He may not agree with me in that, but that is my view of it. It does not seem to me to make a bit of difference whether it is a canner or a wholesaler who puts his name on goods he does not himself pack. I grant that if the Canadian canners pack the goods themselves their names might be an additional guarantee over and above what the wholesaler who does not himself pack the goods could give. But if the Canadian canner buy from another canner goods which they themselves do not pack and put their mark on these goods they are doing the same as the wholesale grocer does when he buys his goods from another canner and puts his mark on them. I cannot see any difference. My hon. friend says that they are practical canners and would inspect the goods. The wholesaler is just as well able to employ a practical canner to inspect the goods he buys as are the canners and is just as likely to do so. My hon. friend (Mr. Alcorn) said the difficulty was that the man who established a new cannery would be at the mercy of the wholesale trade. He said the new cannery could not sell its own goods because it was not known, and I understood him to mention that it would then sell to another cannery or packing house. I cannot see that that differs in any way from selling to a wholesaler, and I do not think that they are any more in the power of the wholesaler than of the old established cannery.

Mr. ALCORN. I gave that as the method by which these purchases are made, the trade reasons that arise why these goods are bought in that way. It is not an ordinary transaction.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think it makes any difference whether the wholesale or another packing house buys from the small cannery. In both cases they are goods produced in the new cannery by beginners and the wholesaler puts on them his guarantee that he will be responsible for the quality of the goods. In another case an old established cannery puts its mark on. It seems to me that the guarantee of the wholesale house of the quality of the goods is no better and no worse than the guarantee of another canning house. The hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) asked the hon. member for Hamilton about Crosse & Blackwell. He knows perfectly well that Crosse & Blackwell do not themselves pack one-hundredth part or a one-thousandth part of the goods on which they put their name. They buy goods put up in Canada, have them sent to England and put the Crosse & Blackwell mark on them, and the Crosse & Blackwell mark carries them all over the world. Crosse & Blackwell are in England, a packing house, but as far as the trade of the world is concerned, they are a wholesale house and not a packing house. They buy fruits from British Columbia, California, Ontario, and Nova Scotia, vegetables from Ontario, they send them to England and put the Crosse & Blackwell mark on them and that mark carries them all over the world, just as a wholesale house in Hamilton, Montreal or Toronto might buy goods in different parts of Canada, put their name upon them, and in that way guarantee the quality of the goods. My hon. friend's reference to Crosse & Blackwell was rather unfortunate for his argument.

I am not going to argue one way or the other. I did not introduce this amendment because I did not know it was necessary. When it was brought forward by my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) and shown to be necessary in the interest of a very large class of the community, I examined it to see whether it was going in any way to injure the public interest. I found that to my mind it would not and therefore accepted it and agreed to it. Having accepted it, and agreed to it, and the committee having accepted and agreed to it, I confess that no argument has been advanced why it should not be accepted and if it comes to a vote I shall have to vote for the retention of the amendment.

Mr. MARSHALL. When the Bill was first introduced was its object not to improve the quality of the canned goods of the country ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. MARSHALL. To my mind you have taken the back-bone out of your Act.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot see that. If I thought that I would not support it.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I desire to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) a question. Section 12 provides that articles prepared for food and packed shall be marked in certain ways. Subsection (b) provides that such goods shall be marked with

(b) a true and correct description of the contents of the package:

Provided, however, that if it be established to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that such marking would hinder the sale of any said articles in the British or foreign markets he may exempt such articles from the provisions of this section.

Have any regulations been made with respect to canned lobsters or other fish under subsection b of section 12?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I would like to explain that, in the maritime provinces, and especially in the province of Prince Edward Island there are several men who buy canned lobsters from the packers. They instruct the packers how to put up these lobsters, the work being done according to formulae furnished by the buyers in Europe, especially in France. The goods are labelled with the brand of the man who buys from the packer. I do not think it would be advisable to change that method of doing business.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question. Do I understand him to say that in England they require that the cans shall be sent there without labels?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I do not know that. But I know that the practice in the maritime provinces and especially in Prince Edward Island is as I have described it. And these men who buy from the packers have established a trade. The goods are put up under the inspection of these men. I think it would be unfair to change their methods of business. I would agree with the hon. member for Vancouver city (Mr. Macpherson) so far as the packing of fish is concerned. It may be that a different method should be followed with respect to fruits. But I have some knowledge of the fish packing business, and, so far as that is concerned, I would agree with the amendment proposed.

Mr. J. D. REID. I was not here during the earlier part of this discussion. But, as I understand, the amendment makes it unnecessary to have the name of the original packer on the can.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The packer or the first dealer.

Mr. J. D. REID. Under this amendment the wholesaler can write to the packer telling him to put up so many cans and label them, 'Packed for such a wholesale firm.' And the name of the original packer does not appear. But, is the wholesale man held entirely responsible for the quality of the goods? Would he be liable to prosecution if the goods were not as required by law?

Mr. MACPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. With the additional safeguard that, if required, the wholesaler must disclose the name of the packer.

Mr. J. D. REID. But whom would you prosecute in a case of that kind? There was a case in Montreal last year where some 50,000 cans, of salmon I think it was, led to a good deal of trouble. I think some people were poisoned, or at least made ill, by eating the stuff. In that case they could not find out——

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. There was no name on those packages at all.

Mr. J. D. REID. I did not understand that. But, under this amendment, as I understand it, it would be impossible to put out canned goods without the name of some responsible party on the packages.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Absolutely.

Mr. ALCORN. It appears to me that we are attempting to legislate in the same terms on two very different subjects. It is apparent from what has been said by the hon. member from Vancouver City and by the hon. members from the maritime provinces that the course of business with regard to the sale of fish and fish products differs materially from that followed in Ontario with regard to vegetables and fruit. I do not think it possible to frame a section which will be satisfactorily applicable to both these kinds of business. Therefore, I move, seconded by Mr. Marshall, that the amendment be amended by inserting after the word 'or' the words '(in the case of fish and fish products).'

Mr. FISHER. I think the position is not quite understood. The change made at the instance of the hon. member for Vancouver City (Mr. Macpherson) is not an amendment, but is a part of the Bill. Therefore, this is not an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand that the Bill is referred back for the purpose of considering an amendment.

Mr. FISHER. But the clause moved as an amendment is part of the Bill as printed. It was adopted in committee and is a part of the Bill as it stood for third reading.

Mr. SPROULE. But the fact that we are considering that clause is proof that it was not passed. The order was to go back into committee to consider that clause.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, clause, but not amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. But it is not finally decided until the clause is passed.

Mr. OWEN. The government is doing the packer a great injustice. These men have been building up a trade and a reputation for years, and now they are denied the privilege of placing their own name upon their goods.

Mr. FISHER. Not at all.

Mr. OWEN. If the wholesale man refuses to buy these goods with the packer's name on them, it virtually amounts to the same thing. When people go to buy those goods and ask for a certain man's brand of canned goods, they have got to take the dealer's word for it.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The hon. gentleman has not read the Bill.

Mr. J. D. REID. Canadian canners are willing to put up their goods with the wholesale grocer's name on them, but they also want to put their own name on them. According to this Bill any wholesale manufacturer, or some men that are not particular as to the quality of goods, will put up inferior goods, though they may possibly pass the law; yet they put on the wholesale grocer's name, and the goods can be sold to the injury of the reputation of Canadian goods as a whole. I can't see any reason why the law should not allow the actual packer's name to be placed on the goods so that they can be followed up to their origin. If you went into a retail store and purchased canned goods with simply the wholesale dealer's name on them, you do not know who put up the goods.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The hon. gentleman has not read the Bill, or he would not make a statement like that.

Mr. J. D. REID. In the 'Globe' of April 8, I find an item which bears out my contention. It reads as follows:

Winnipeg, April 7.

The health authorities have seized 330 cases, each containing six one-gallon cans of apples, and they are on the watch for six more cases in the same consignment, of which there is at present no trace. The goods are declared by the health officers to be absolutely unfit for food. All bore the label of an Oshawa Canning Company. Prosecution will follow.

In that case you can trace the name of the manufacturer, and you are able to prosecute him, and you are able to show the public the company that is not putting up a good article.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The hon. gentleman as a business man will understand this proposition. A wholesale firm has been purchasing the output of a canning factory, they have established a reputation and have a label for a certain class of canned salmon. No other names ever appear on these cans except the name of that firm. The wholesale firm may have bought this salmon from a different factory every year, for the reason that one factory or another may have met with a failure. Wholesale traders in British Columbia who went out and bought 4,000 or 5,000 cases of salmon and put their own label on it and sent it to the markets of the world, obliged to buy from two or three different factories, have found themselves in the position of putting up this year canned salmon with John Jones' name on it; next year James Smith's name would be on it, and in a very short time the reputation of their goods would be gone. People will say, this is not the same thing, because this label never carried these goods before. The merchants in British Columbia have found themselves badly handicapped by the operation of the present Act. My good friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) brings in the question of fish. Now we have small canneries who put up both fruit and fish. I do not know whether they are putting labels on their cans or not, but the wholesale houses are buying them. This amendment protects the public, and it does not place the wholesale merchants or canners in any worse position than they have been in for many years.

Mr. J. D. REID. Take the case of fish. They might put up a can of fish that was taken from different parts of the country, and all might not be of the same quality. The effect of the wholesale man putting his name on it would be a guarantee to the public, because the public would know who produced those goods and where they were produced. The particular locality the fish comes from is what the public would like to know. I really think that the wholesale man should not object to the manufacturer's name going on so that he can show the public where these goods are made, and in case they are not good you can go on and prosecute the manufacturer. The very fact of the name of the manufacturer and the words 'made in Canada' being on these labels is evidence to the public that the goods are of the proper quality. I could mention cases where the dealer goes to some other country and gets goods put up simply because they are a little cheaper although they are not of the same quality as our own canned goods. It should be the duty of the government to protect our own manufacturers and wholesale men and no wholesale man in Canada to-day will, if he has the interest of the country at heart, object to the name of any Canadian manufacturer being placed on these labels. I quite understand, as the hon. member for Vancouver has said, that in British Columbia the wholesale men are using these special labels. One wholesale man will get a name for his goods, another will get another name for his goods and yet they are all manufactured in the same factory. In a case such as the hon. member mentions, where it is absolutely necessary the public should be protected, I cannot see why they should object to the name of the manufacturer being on the label as has been the practice in times past.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for Leeds has classed the wholesale Grocers' Association of Canada as being composed of people who do not care for the interests of the trade in Canada.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not think so.

Mr. FISHER. That is what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. J. D. REID. I did not know that I did.

Mr. FISHER. No, the hon. gentleman did not know, but he spoke of the people asking for this amendment in that way and the people who are asking for this amendment are the wholesale trade of the country.

Mr. AVERY. I think that both sides of the House want to arrive at some result beneficial to the manufacturers and consumers. If goods are manufactured by so and so for so and so and if you find that these goods are wrong how are you going to trace them up and find out where the trouble is ? We have heard of several cases of goods being sent out which have poisoned people and if the name of the manufacturer is not on the goods how are you going to trace them back ?

Mr. FISHER. Has my hon. friend read the Act ?

Mr. AVERY. Part of it.

Mr. FISHER. Well, let him read the whole of it and perhaps he will not say that.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the minister states the wholesale men are the ones which are making application for this change then I say they are looking after their own interests more than they are looking after the interests of the people as a whole. Suppose some irresponsible person goes to a manufacturer and asks him to put up 500 cases of an inferior quality of goods and this person, after disposing of these goods leaves the country, there is no way of prosecuting because there is no person to hold responsible. If the manufacturer's name is on the goods you can prosecute him but you cannot hold accountable an irresponsible commission man.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Would it not be as possible for a canner who had no more appreciation of his duties then a commission man to do the same thing ? The fact of the matter is that wholesale firms have been operating for years with these special labels ; under the present Act the canners have to have their names on the packages. The wholesale men are to all intents and purposes the manufacturers. They go to the factory and say : I am prepared to buy 5,000 cases of salmon but I want them to be put under my brand. That brand protects the wholesaler in the market.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. J. D. REID. How would the hon. gentleman do in the case that I have mentioned ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. I would put the man in jail, of course.

Mr. J. D. REID. But you could not get him.

Mr. MACPHERSON. You cannot save people from being bad.

Mr. J. D. REID. Could you not if the manufacturer's name was on the label ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. No, you could not any more than you could in the other case. If my hon. friend's imagination shows him how wicked a commission merchant might be he can also imagine how wicked the small canner might be. I know of a small canner who packed Cohoes fish that were too long out of the water and he could not get anybody to take them off his hands.

Mr. BERGERON. I feel very much disposed to vote against all these amendments. I think there is too much law, a great deal too much law and while I am not so dense, and while I have been listening to this discussion the whole afternoon, I think I know less about it now than I did when it commenced. I have no doubt that it will appeal to the public in the same way. There is too much law on the statute-book and there is not enough to carry out the purpose that the framer of the law has had in his mind. We have heard about the rotten fish that was offered for sale last year in Montreal and although the sale of that fish did a lot of harm nothing could be done. There was no law to deal with the case. Although we have the statute-books filled up with laws we have not enough law to provide for a case of that kind. The consumer has been entirely forgotten in this discussion. It is a mere fight between the packers and the jobbers and the whole of the time has been taken for the last four or five hours in an effort to see who can make the most out of it—the packers or the jobbers. That is not the object that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) had in his mind, I am sure, when he undertook, in the first instance, to protect the public against the adulteration of food. The hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) has nothing else in his mind or in view but fish. The object of his amendment is entirely different from the purpose of my hon. friends behind me who are interested in the packing of tomatoes, peas and other vegetables. I understand the position of my hon. friend from Vancouver, but, of course, we cannot legislate only for him or for those engaged in the fish trade. The position taken by my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. A. A. Mc-Lean) is the same as that of the hon. member for Vancouver. In their case the commercial men take the fish of certain packers. The packers are the secondary persons, they do not conduct the trade, but they are the employees of the men who do carry on the trade in fish. The merchants engage five or ten packers to pack fish for them and they require them to pack fish in different ways to suit different markets. A lobster dealer will go to a packer and say : I want you to pack lobsters in such and such a way for the German market and he will say to another packer : I want you to pack fish in such and such a way for the French trade. In that case the packer disappears completely. The commercial men are the ones who look after this trade. Those are the men that my hon. friend had in his eye when he moved this amendment. But, the position taken by my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Marshall) is entirely different. He and other packers have created something. They can peas or tomatoes and they want to do it in such a perfect way that they will drive from the Canadian market all foreign produce of that kind. It was stated in a very open way that Americans come here and sell an article for 25 cents a package when our friends can put up two packages of the same kind of goods for a quarter. Still the American article takes the lead because of the name or for some other reason. The two interests represented are entirely different and we have lost the whole afternoon in a fight between the packers and jobbers. I appeal again to the Minister of Agriculture. We want to keep the consumer in our eye. He is the one that we are legislating for. We do not want to harm the packers or the jobbers, but they can take care of themselves. It is the consumer we have to take care of. The Minister of Agriculture should insert a clause providing that an inspector could enter a cannery and ascertain whether the goods were in proper condition or not. For my part I would like to see a government stamp on all these canned goods so that the consumer would have ample security that he is protected. After all it is the interests of the consumer that we should look after primarily in this matter.

Mr. OWEN. I cannot understand why the minister compels shippers to put their name on the fruit which is the raw material of these canneries, and deny to the manufacturer the privilege of putting his name on the manufactured article. The Minister of Agriculture compels the shipper of apples to place his name on every barrel that leaves this country so that if there is any fraud in the packing the shipper may be traced, but at the same time the minister takes away from the public the privilege of buying any brand of canned goods they desire to buy from the retailers.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Where does the hon. gentleman get that in the Act ?

Mr. OWEN. There is nothing on the label to show who manufactured the goods.

Mr. ALCORN. The hon. member for Vancouver has been arguing all afternoon with regard to the trade of his province in fish and the amendment prepared by me gives him all he asks for, but yet he is not disposed to accept it. That is evidence to my mind of what I suspected all along, that this is a determined effort on the part of the wholesalers to compel the canners to sell to them and give them control of the trade.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. If the government would accept fish from the provisions of this Act, that is all the fish packers of the maritime provinces and British Columbia have asked, and if the minister gives an undertaking that that will be bone, these useless amendments might be dropped.

Mr. MACPHERSON. There is nothing useless about the amendment because the wholesale grocers have been operating under it for the last eight months, and I think the trade have a pretty fair appreciation of what they want.

Mr. OWEN. If this Act passes in its present shape the public will certainly not be able to tell who packs the goods.

Mr. J. D. REID. It would appear that the wholesale grocers are the only ones interested in this Bill. It seems that this Bill is not in the interests of the canners or the public and that it is passed only to please the wholesale grocers.

Mr. BLAIN. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture, if this Bill passes, can a wholesale merchant in Toronto import from the United States canned goods which have not the name of the packer, and by putting his own name on them sell them to the people of Canada ?

Mr. FISHER. The Bill applies to all goods sold in Canada and the importer would be responsible for the quality of the goods. Under the Act of last session the packer in the United States would be responsible for the quality of the goods and nobody in Canada would be responsible. The amendment proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) does not prevent any packer insisting that his name should be on the package ; that is a trade arrangement between him and the wholesaler. This Bill simply provides that the first dealer purchasing from the packer may put his label on instead of that of the original packer, but if an inspector desires it he must divulge the name of the original packer. If I thought this amendment lessened the protection for the public in any way I would not have accepted it the other night, and believing that the public is amply protected I am not prepared to-day to vote down what the House agreed to the other day. It appears to be largely a quarrel between the packers on the one hand and the wholesalers on the other and I am not prepared to judge between them.

Mr. MARSHALL. It is not a quarrel between the canner and the wholesaler at all.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot see that the guarantee of one is not just as good as the guarantee of the other.

Mr. MARSHALL. It is not as good a guarantee to the consumer. My object is to protect the interests of the consumer. I believe that a packer who does not put his name on the label would not be so careful as he would if he knew the goods were going out under his name. These special labels which state that the goods are put up by so and so for the wholesale buyer have been used for some time and I do not see why you want to change that.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the wholesaler says to the packer: I will only buy your goods on condition that you do not put on your name, then the packer has to comply with that or lose the trade An American citizen can send in here an inferior quality of canned goods, distribute them under the name of some person in Canada which may be fictitious and if anything is found wrong he can move across the other side of the line. The minister has been met by a deputation of wholesale grocers and he seems to have nothing else in his mind but to protect their interests. The very fact that there were 50,000 cases of canned fish in the city of Montreal poisoning the people last fall should be sufficient to convince the Minister of Agriculture that the consumers of Canada need protection. I would suggest that the minister take this matter into further consideration and hear representations from manufacturers. the wholesale men, and some one on behalf of the public. He should prepare a Bill that would protect all and be in the interests of Canada as a whole. The Senate will not meet for two or three weeks; he has plenty of time and there is no object in putting the Bill through to-night. For that reason I ask that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BLAIN. I cannot understand why the minister is so anxious, in the case of the Fruit Marks Act for instance, the person who packs apples must put his stamp on the package, while he does not insist on that in this case. As has been pointed out, this is only class legislation in the interest of the wholesale dealer.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. BLAIN. I agree that neither the manufacturer nor the consumer has been considered. Surely the consumer, if he finds goods he has purchased are defective, should be able to trace them back to the man who put them up. The minister pointed out last year that the change would place the responsibility on the wholesale man. In order that his memory may be refreshed, I shall read what he then said at page 6773 of 'Hansard:'

> I think all necessary safeguards can be thrown about the Bill with this additional amendment; and, as I have wished all through to interfere as little as possible with the course of trade, I have asked the House to add these words, which would enable the dealer, or the packer who was having goods packed for him outside of his own packing house, to put his name upon them and be responsible for them instead of the actual packer.

There is no doubt that this is class legislation for some particular purpose which I cannot understand. In my opinion this will permit the dealers in western Canada to import canned goods from the United States without a name upon them, place their own names on and sell them. I believe it will interfere with Canadian packers and divert a considerable portion of our trade from Canada to the United States. The hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) shakes his head. It may be all right from his standpoint, but I wonder that the minister who ought to be responsible for this legislation permits it. We have too much tinkering with our legislation. This Act was passed only last session and almost before the ink is dry the minister allows a member of the west for some special reason to move an amendment that will defeat its very object. The minister will be held responsible for this by the people of Canada.

Motion, Mr. J. D. Reid, negatived, yeas, 26; nays, 44.

Amendment to the amendment, negatived.

Mr. BLAIN. Will any provision be made for those having goods on hand?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think the amendment will affect them at all.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose by that it has no value?

Mr. FISHER. Not at all; it provides that in the future a thing can be done which up to this time cannot be done.

Mr. BERGERON. Under this could there be any prosecution of the men who brought the 50,000 cans of rotten fish into Montreal ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know anything about the details of that.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the minister mean to say he does not know anything about it ?

Mr. FISHER. No, I did not say so. The hon. member has no right to put words in my mouth which I did not use. I said I did not know anything about the details of that transaction and consequently I could not say what should be done.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do you not think the minister should know ?

Mr. FISHER. No, I do not.

Mr. J. D. REID. He is in charge of this law, yet he says he does not know anything about the details of that affair in Montreal. 50,000 people were liable to be poisoned.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. J. D. REID. They were by that 50,000 cans, and yet the minister does not think it worth while to get any details. If that is the position of the minister, I think the lives of the poeple will be in danger when this Bill goes through.

Section as amended, agreed to, on division.

Bill as amended, reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—POSTAL SERVICES.

Mr. FISHER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). On December 10, last, a return was ordered:

Showing what complaints respecting the inadequacy of postal service or delays therein, or respecting lack of or defects in postal facilities or means of communications, have been received by the Post Office Department since the 1st day of January, 1907, and the general nature of such complaints.

I thought that was a reasonable request to make of the Postmaster General, but it is now nearly five months since the order for that return was passed. I was assured some months ago that the Postmaster General was preparing the return, but that it took a good deal of time and care. Consequently, they were not able to bring it down any sooner. However, I cannot but think that, if that is the case, the Post Office Department is not in a very flourishing condition and is not the model department, one would suppose it to be, from the remarks we have heard made concerning it. I can only say that I have received a number of most damaging communications in referrence to the affairs of that department and the irregularities therein. I am anxious to get the information that will come down in the return, that I may see whether these matters have been straightened out to the satisfaction of the public.

Another matter I would like the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) to consider is with regard to the weekly papers. On several occasions I have called his attention to the serious position of the weekly papers in Canada. I understand that the Postmaster General has placed a man in the United States to take charge of papers addressed to people in the United States and distribute them. The publishers are at the expense, inconvenience and delay of that system. The Postmaster General, in reply to questions I asked him in regard to these matters, made the following statement on April 9 :

I received this morning a communication from the Weekly Section of the Canadian Press Association, and they are perfectly satisfied with the answer given.

Well, Sir, I have here communications from a large number of the weekly papers in different parts of Canada, not one in favour of the arrangement that the Postmaster General has now made for handling these papers, but every one condemning in the strongest language this action of the government, not only with regard to weekly papers, but with regard to the daily papers also. Now, the Postmaster General must admit that on the 8th of May last, when he brought in this regulation dealing with the daily and weekly papers, he was placing those papers in a very unfair position. He has been forced to back down from the position he took last May and to restore the daily papers to the position in which they were previous to that time. He has also been compelled to pay tens of thousands of dollars of the people's money out of the public chest to satisfy them in a reasonable way for the loss they have suffered. I would like the Postmaster General to explain the difference in the position of the country to-day as compared with that in which it was in May last in regard to these papers. He will tell us, perhaps, as he has told us on previous occasions, that he has been able to stop at the border all the literature that is of a character that we should not like to have enter our country. If that is the case, what legislation has he placed on the statute-book or why has he gone back on the position with regard to the daily papers which he occupied previous to last year? There is no doubt that the Postmaster General had as good a right then to stop daily or weekly papers of an undesirable character from coming into the country as he has now. There can be no doubt that if he will appoint censors to deal with these papers, he has power to stop objectionable matter from coming into Canada. At page 3266 of 'Hansard' of this year it will be seen that he said :

So, we are perfectly free to accept or to reject any periodicals, but the House and the country may feel assured that we shall accept only the good periodicals.

He has had to back down from his position in regard to the daily papers, and he is gradually backing down in regard to the weekly papers. What I would like him to do is to come out boldly and manfully and say that he has made a blunder and is willing to take it back; that he is willing to remedy the existing state of affairs and give the newspapers reasonable compensation for the loss they have suffered.

Now, will the Postmaster General please answer me with regard to another matter —and I will ask him to take note of these points and reply to them as best he thinks. I notice that in reply to some questions I asked during the present session in connection with the purchase of a steamer in Great Britain by the Post Office Department, it appeared that the government had seen fit to pay $60,000 for the steamer and $3,500 for bringing her over.

Mr. BENNETT. What is she employed for ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Carrying the mail from the Transatlantic steamers at Rimouski. The steamer carries twenty-two men. So besides the cost of the steamer and of bringing her to this side, it will cost in the neighbourhood of $20,000 or $30,000 a year to run her. And the business that she is to do was being carried out under contract with a private firm for about $4,000 per annum. Will the minister explain in what way this is good business? I understand on very good authority that the new boat is so large and cumbersome that the large liners have expressed a wish that she should not be sent out during rough weather to take the mails, but that the smaller tender be sent out during storms. I might also say that reports are current that when the boat came over in May last——

Mr. BENNETT. What is the name of the boat?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The 'Lady Evelyn.' It is stated that though she came in May last she was not used for carrying the mails until the 20th of August and she made twenty-four round trips. But during this time the contract under which this work was to be done for $4,000 a year was still in force. The minister might explain this. Another thing is this : It is reported that the minister and quite a gathering of friends went for a trip in this boat and spent a good deal of time and a great deal of the people's money in cruising about. I cannot say that I have any definite knowledge of that matter, but these are the reports that come in and I think it but right that the minister should have an opportunity of explaining them away.

There is still another question I would like the minister to deal with. According to his own reports, last year he paid the railways in the neighbourhood of $1,600,000. I have no definite knowledge about the manner in which that money is expended. We know that in the United States the mail is weighed. We know also that a representative in the United States legislature made the statement in his place that over $70,000,000 of the people's money had been wasted owing to the false weighing of the mails by the railways. The minister in reply to a question I asked stated, as I understood him, that the mails in Canada were not weighed, but that they were paid for according to some arrangement with the railways. I think it would be interesting to the country to know just in what manner the mails are carried so far as the railways are concerned.

Another matter with respect to which I would like information is the one-cent drop letter that he promised the people in the cities some months ago, possibly a year ago. People are anxiously waiting for him to reply as to the position he is going to take. I would like him to tell the House in what position he is going to place the smaller towns and rural districts in regard to a cheaper mail service, and what advantage he is going to give them as an offset to the advantages he is giving the cities. The cities are receiving important benefits at the present time in the way of mail delivery, and a great deal of money is being expended upon them, and we who live in rural districts naturally feel that sufficient attention is not being given to us in the way of affording corresponding better mail facilities. The minister says that he is only giving free delivery to towns with a population of 12,000 and a revenue of $20,000. But if he will look across the line into the United States he will see that free delivery is given to cities with 10,000 inhabitants and a revenue of $10,000. The minister seems to be surprised at that, but if he will look into the matter he will find that is the case. He will also find that the Postmaster General of the United States has made several successful experiments in giving free delivery to towns with a population as low as 2,500. I think the minister should be able to give us a better explanation than he did to-day when, in reply to a question of one of the Toronto members, he told us that the matter was under consideration. The minister has, I think, a surplus of a million and a half dollars this year. What is he going to do with it? Is he going to let it pass into other departments to be squandered in the same way as they have been squandering the people's money the last few years ? Is it unreasonable for the rural districts to ask for a better mail service? If you look around this House you will find that out of 214 members there are possibly 14 representing purely city constituencies, while the other 200 represent, either entirely rural districts or districts partially rural and partially urban. The minister is now considering a proposition to grant to cities a one-cent drop letter system; let him at the same time consider some way of improving the mail service in the rural districts.

I would like him also to give the House some definite statement of his intention with regard to free rural mail delivery. He may think that is a matter of trifling importance, but if he will look around this country he will find that it is a question of vital importance to large numbers of people. Last year he told us that this proposition was a luxury, it could only be looked upon as an ideal, and he said that we might have to wait till this country had a population of 20,000,000. For my part I think the time is already ripe for the Postmaster General to put into effect this important legislation. I will not go into the question fully to-night, because I have already dealt with it at an earlier period of the session. But the more I investigate the matter the more convinced I feel that this is a reform that should be adopted at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. MILLER. The hon. gentleman advocates rural free mail delivery. I would like to know whether he advocates such delivery over the whole of Canada, or only a part, and if only a part, what part.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. gentleman has asked a question that he would not have asked if he had investigated this subject thoroughly. I have never advocated the establishment of rural free mail delivery over the whole of Canada. I have explained clearly that wherever this system has been established, whether in the United States, or England, or Germany, or Switzerland, or France, it has been established under strict regulations that are found to be satisfactory. In the United States the president has established a commission of three men to deal with this question, not more than two of whom must be of the same political party. On that commission there are two Republicans, and one of the most prominent Democrats in the United States, Mr. Black. These men have full power to deal with this question, and when they appoint officials in any branch of the service, party politics are completely ignored by them. One of the regulations in the United States is that the route must be 24 miles long, and there must be 100 families living on that route, out of whom 85 at least must be prepared to place a box at their gate where the mail can be deposited. That rule is strictly enforced. If the route is short and the expense of carriage is less, the number of families to be served may be less.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. The hon. gentleman stated that the selection of routes was left entirely to an independent commission. Is he aware that in a periodical known as the 'Postmaster's Journal,' printed in the United States, the November number of last year states explicitly that the mail routes are made up largely for the benefit of the representatives, and not for the benefit of the people?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not believe that the hon. gentleman can furnish any facts whatever that would bear out his statement.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I can furnish the hon. gentleman with the statement in this journal.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. gentleman will not find on investigation that politics enter into the administration of this service at all. The most enthusiastic advocate of the reform is the president himself. The editor of the 'Canadian Dairyman' has been over to the United States and made a thorough investigation, and in his paper for the last two weeks he has stated that there is no such thing as politics in the management of the rural free mail delivery system in the United States. I have been over there myself and investigated the question.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. The hon. gentleman must admit that he can get only a superficial knowledge of the influence of politics in the administration of that system, by merely going over to the United States and visiting the departmental buildings.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have been in the habit of visiting the United States more or less for the last fifteen years or twenty years, and my investigations have convinced me that what the hon. gentleman says is an error. Now, I do not wish to deal any further with this than to say that five-sixths of the territory of the United States is practically covered to-day and that 20,000,000 people in the rural districts enjoy the privilege of rural free mail delivery. While, in 1897, when rural free mail delivery was first established, the deficit in the United States postal department was over $11,000,000, when the expenditure for rural free mail delivery was $14,000, last year, while the expenditure was in the neighbourhood of $30,000,000, the deficit was only a little over $6,000,000 and the Postmaster General himself has distinctly stated that for the first four months of this year there was no deficit at all and that as far as the rural free mail delivery end of it is concerned instead of it being a deficit producer it is a revenue producer. I am satisfied that the Postmaster General will not get up to-night and make the statements in regard to the expenditures and deficits that he made last year and that the Minister of Agriculture will not repeat the words that he used in Quebec when he told the people how this question staggered him and how he did not even advise the discussion of it in the House. These are the questions that I want to put before the Postmaster General. I did not know of any other way of bringing them to the attention of the House and the country and I am sure the Postmaster General will be good enough to reply to me.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) has called the attention of the House to some matters concerning the Post Office Department. The department is so well administered apparently that I have not heard much criticism about it for a few weeks, although my hon. friend is the official critic of that department. I will be pleased to answer the questions which have been so graciously put by my hon. friend to-night on the different subjects which, he says, have attracted his attention for the last few months. First of all he is anxious to obtain information as regards the return concerning the irregularities reported in the Post Office Department during the last year. This return was moved for by the hon. gentleman during my absence in Japan at the beginning of the session. I have, on two occasions, informed my hon. friend that the officers of the department were anxious to prepare the return as soon as possible ; in fact out of ten or twelve returns which were moved for by hon. members on the other side of the House this year in the Post Office Department all have been laid on the table of the House with the solitary exception of my hon. friend's return. But, my hon. friend will admit that this return entails a good deal of work and, while there are very few irregularities, the officers have to look into every pigeon hole of the department to ascertain what few irregularities were reported during the year and as my hon. friend knows this takes a good deal of time and involves a good deal of work. I am as anxious to lay on the table of the House a list of these irregularities as my hon. friend is to have it. He will see, in looking over the return, when it is laid on the table, that with the millions of letters, packages and parcel packages passing through His Majesty's mails in Canada there are very few irregularities and the department is very soon informed of any such irregularities that occur in any section of the country. My hon. friend is entitled to the return and I can assure him that he will get it as soon as possible. The officers of the department, notwithstanding that they are overtaxed during the session, are only too willing to gratify the demand made by the hon. member.

My hon. friend has called my attention to the weekly papers. I need not repeat what I have already stated to the House on a former occasion. I know that there is some agitation in some parts of the country concerning weekly papers. You are aware, Mr. Speaker, that last year, on account of circumstances which I have fully explained, we had to amend our postal convention with the Washington authorities. That amendment was directed wholly against certain classes of periodicals published in the United States and Canada up to that date obliged both countries to carry according to their respective domestic rates, periodicals and newspapers coming under what, in the postal service, is called second class matter. I have explained on many occasions to the House where the difficulty was as it affected Canada. With the increase in the number of periodicals published in the United States and with the enormons increase in the number of purely advertising sheets published on the other side of the line we had to put our whole mail service at the disposal of United States publishers. Besides, we had received for years, complaints from clergymen of the different denominations, against certain undesirable papers which were circulated through our mails in Canada. We thought that we should revise our postal convention with the United States, so as to protect not only ourselves but even the United States, as we were told by the American postal authorities last year. To clear ourselves of that class of literature, the postal rate on second class matter was raised from one to four cents a pound; that is to say, papers mailed in Canada for the United States have to pay at the rate of 4 cents per pound. It is the same with papers posted in the United States. My hon. friend was asking a minute ago what legislation had been introduced to purge our mails from undesirable literature. Let me tell my hon. friend at once that I claim —and I claim the credit not only for myself but for the officers of the department— that we have nearly purged the Canadian mails of undesirable literature and I am sure that is a fact which will be welcomed by both sides of the House.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the minister be good enough to tell us just what he did that made such a radical change ; what legislation or regulation did he introduce ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Nothing appears on the statute-book because we have a postal convention with the United States. It is in that convention and not in the statute-book that my hon. friend will find the remedy. Under that convention, undesirable periodicals coming from the United States have to pay not one but four cents a pound. There is nothing as effective as a high postal rate to check the importation of undesirable literature.

Mr. BENNETT. What about the great family journal, the Calgary 'Eye-Opener'— ever see that ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not read undesirable literature; my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett), perhaps, does. If he does I am sorry and I hope he will not do it again.

Mr. BENNETT. It is your loss.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. As far as daily papers are concerned they are placed back just where they were, as I understand it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, I will answer my hon. friend.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. And as far as weeklies are concerned——

Mr. LEMIEUX. I was just coming to them, if my hon. friend will allow me. I understand what he wants to know. We have purged the mails of undesirable literature coming from the United States and besides, we have protected our commercial interests by preventing these purely advertising sheets from being dumped in our mail system. The hon. gentleman asks how it is we have rescinded the arrangement made last year with the Washington authorities as regards newspapers. Well, I had to take a radical step to begin with, but I did not intend to maintain that attitude towards the dailies. The hon. gentleman is a reader of the American press as I am, and he will agree with me that as a rule the American daily papers subscribed for by Canadians are respectable journals. Our rule was directed more against American dime novels and other unsavory periodicals. I maintained the rule against such objectionable periodicals and I gave the dailies a rate of one cent a pound. The editors of the weekly press, a very representative body, waited on me on the 9th April with the object of obtaining the same postal rate as the daily newspapers. I must say that the weekly press is favoured in some respects as compared with the daily press. A section of our postal guide reads :

A further exception is made in favour of newspapers or periodicals published not more frequently than once a week which may be sent free to regular subscribers in Canada residing within a circular area of 40 miles in diameter, the centre of which must either be the place of publication or some point not more than 20 miles distant therefrom according to the choice of the publishers. Such papers may also be delivered free to subscribers at the office at which they have been posted, except in cities where the letter carrier system is established. In the latter case ordinary transient newspaper rates are charged.

It will therefore be seen that the weekly press has some privileges? At the request of the weekly newspaper publishers we have given them a substantial reduction. If the hon. gentleman compares the Canadian postal rates with those of Europe or America he will find that we lead these countries in the cheapness of rates. I believe that soon I will be able to grant the weekly press what its representatives asked for when they met me recently; that is to say, the weeklies can be sent to a post office on the border and thence distributed in the mails in the United States without paying any additional postage, thus the rate instead of being four cents a pound will be something like two cents a pound or only one cent more than is now paid by the daily press. The question is now engaging the attention of the post office departments at Washington and Ottawa and I expect to be able to make an early announcement with regard to it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the minister had appointed a board of censors for papers coming into this country would he not have reached the same end without putting the Canadian press to all this expense and trouble ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We give respectable American papers the remailing privilege by which they can be mailed to a Canadian post office and thence sent broadcast through the Canadian mails. The undesirable periodicals do not come within our classification. As to the appointment of a board of censors, the burden of the office of Postmaster General is already very great without undertaking the censorship of thousands and thousands of American periodicals. Such American periodicals as Colliers, McClures, and others have applied for and obtained the remailing privilege and are practically obtained by Canadian subscribers at the old rate they paid before the regulations were amended last year.

Mr. CHRISTIE. Do the American agricultural papers come under that privilege ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. As to that, I have been deluged with letters asking to admit a Philadelphia paper which is called, I think the 'Farm.' We have established our rule for second-class matter, and papers coming within that class are described as follows in our postal guide :

Any Canadian newspaper or periodical which claims to be entitled to a statutory privilege must conform to the following statutory conditions namely:

(a) It must be known as a newspaper or periodical in the generally received sense of the word and consist wholly or in great part of political or other news, or of articles relating thereto, or to other current topics, and be published regularly at intervals of not more than one month.

(b) The full title, place and date of publication, and the distinguishing number of the issue must be printed on the top of the first and every subsequent page, and also on any paper, print, lithograph or engraving purporting to be a supplement to it, and sent with it.

(c) It must be addressed to a bona fide subscriber or known newsdealer in Canada.

(d) It must be delivered into the post office under such regulations as the Postmaster

General may from time to time make for the purpose.

In order to illustrate how some very enterprising American publishing firms are acting, let me point out that as I have just stated, I have been deluged, of late, with letters purporting to be from subscribers to a paper published in Philadelphia, called the 'Farm.'

Mr. CHRISTIE. I would mention the case of the 'Breeders' Gazette,' of Chicago, which is valued very highly by the farmers and agriculturists of Canada. It is a paper that is thought a great deal of by the farmers.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If that paper comes within the definition which I just read to the House, it will certainly receive the privilege granted to the other periodicals. However, this 'Farm,' of Philadelphia, is offered to Canadian subscribers at the rate of 85 cents for five years, published weekly. It almost comes within the definition I have just read. True it is a newspaper, it has a title, it is recognized as a newspaper in the United States, it consists wholly or in great part of articles relating to agriculture or other current topics; it has a few political opinions, but about three-quarters of the paper is used for advertising purposes. We are told: Oh, the Post Office Department is refusing the 'Farm' the privilege of the mails. It is not a farmers' advocate at all; it has a few articles bearing on agriculture or agricultural topics, but the balance of the paper, the enormous weight of the paper, is made up of advertisements of American firms, American pills, American patent medicines. Papers of that quality, under these circumstances, cannot come within the definition which is to be found in our postal guide. Every sensible member of the House will understand why we must resist in some degree the invasion of our Canadian territory by bogus newspapers.

My hon. friend wishes to know how our mails are handled on our railway systems. I regret that he did not give me notice of this question this morning, so that I could speak more definitely and precisely on this technical question; when my estimates come up I will be able to give my hon. friend figures, and, I think, gratify his curiosity. The subsidy which we pay to the various railway systems for the carriage of our mails is based on the mileage. In the United States it is based partly on the poundage, the weight of the mails, and partly on the space which the mail occupies in the postal cars. There is the radical difference between the American and the Canadian railway mail service. It is admitted by experts that the Canadian system is far superior, so much so that I may later furnish to my hon. friend a report which was prepared for the Postmaster General of the United States not long ago, showing the enormous amount of money paid to the railways of the United States which was admittedly wasted money. I am assured by my expert officials who are quite an authority on this question, that before long the United States will adopt our system of subsidies based on the mileage. I may say that our great trunk systems, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway and to some extent the Canadian Northern, are complaining that they are not sufficiently paid. On two or three different occasions, independent commissions, composed of experts, were appointed to readjust the payment of the subsidies, and I wish to inform the hon. gentleman that only a few days ago, at the urgent request of my late lamented friend, Mr. Drinkwater, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Mr. Wainwright, of the Grand Trunk, and the representatives of the Canadian Northern, I signed an order in council asking for the appointment of a commission of experts in order to readjust the payment of the subsidies to our Canadian system. I do not know if that commission will report in favour of an increased subsidy or a reduced one, but it is the custom every fifteen or twenty years, to readjust the subsidy for our railway mail service. It will be admitted that distances in our country are very great and settlement is sparse, mails have increased, and conditions may call for a readjustment.

My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) also referred to the 1-cent drop letter system. I have stated on different occasions that this question is under consideration. If I may speak personally, I may say that my sympathies are in favour of the 1-cent drop letter. It may be said at once that I am doing something for the cities to which the rural parts of the country are also entitled. There is some truth in that apparently, but when you come to sift the question to the very bottom and see the enormous amount of money which the Post Office Department is losing every day in all the large cities by the establishment and operation of the messenger services, it is quite easy for the postal authorities to realize on the other hand that if we did establish that 1-cent rate for the drop letter in cities and towns, we would at once cause a large increase in our revenue which would enable the department to give to the rural section of the community greater frequency of service than it now has, and more post offices. I may say to my hon. friend, and I state it before the House and the country, that my policy as Postmaster General is to bear in mind my position as trustee on behalf of the people of Canada for the very buoyant revenue of the Post Office Department. I am trustee for that surplus, just as I am a trustee for the moneys of the public which come into the Post Office Savings Department, and it is my duty to be more careful of that money than I am supposed to be of my own money. Therefore, I must not waste that money. But with our boyant revenue; I feel that I am in a position to give the country an expansion of the service; where we have a weekly or a bi-weekly service, I think I am quite justified in giving a tri-weekly or a daily service. I believe that I should give the public in the thickly peopled portions of the country the service to which they are entitled. I am giving according to circumstances, a daily service, or a semi-daily service. As regards post offices, a few years ago the general policy of the department was to establish at a distance of five or six miles. I have reduced that distance so that, when an application is made to the department, whether made from this side of the House or from the other side, when circumstances justify it, new post offices are granted at a distance of two miles. I intend to continue that policy, and I hope that in doing so, I shall receive the support of the House.

My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) mentioned the fact that the department had thought it advisable last year to purchase a mail tender for the transatlantic mails. I do not care to eulogize myself, but I may be allowed to say that, if in anything I am entitled to praise by the maritime and commercial interests of the country, it is because I have authorized the purchase of a new steamer for our mail service at Rimouski and Sydney. Those who travel to Europe, and as good Canadians and good patriots return to Canada via the St. Lawrence route, have been simply shamed by the mail service as it existed at Rimouski. The first thing sighted by the newcomers or passengers returning to this country was something like a tug coming out to meet the steamer, with hardly any accommodation for passengers, with no place for the mails; and sometimes this tug could not come to meet the steamer on time and so mails were missed, passengers were incommoded and the reputation of Canada suffered. The first delegation to meet me after I was appointed Postmaster General was a delegation of the Board of Trade and shipping federation asking me to establish a mail service at Rimouski that would be a credit to the country. I said that I had just been sworn in and did not understand the conditions of the case, but that I would call at Rimouski and see what could be done. I went to Rimouski, and, Mr. Speaker, if you were to return there to-day, you would see what creditable changes have taken place. First, I asked the Public Works Department to give us a wharf worthy of the name, to give us electric light and to give us sheds for the passenger and freight —there were no sheds before. Also, you will see there to-day, one of the finest steamers in the government fleet, the 'Lady Evelyn.' That steamer was purchased not by myself—I am not an expert on steamers or on what pertains to steamers ; but, last year, after asking a vote from parliament for that specific object, and having received it without opposition from either side of the House, I sent to England one of the most trusted officers of the Post Office Department, Mr. Laschinger, the assistant deputy minister. Mr. Laschinger is not an expert either, but he is a very safe and trusted employee. Under my instructions, he went straight to the Canadian High Commissioner, Lord Strathcona, by whom he was referred to the British admiralty, and, under the guidance of the Admiralty officers, he bought the 'Lady Evelyn,' paying $60,000 or thereabouts. As to the value of the steamer, I can say to my hon. friend that not once, not twice, but ten times or more, I have been told by members of the Shipping Federation of Montreal that I could sell the 'Lady Evelyn' at about one-third more than it cost the department to obtain her. My hon. friend is misinformed when he says that this boat has missed the mails. On the contrary, the 'Lady Evelyn' was performing—under another name, I must say—in England, the same service that she is performing at Rimouski, except that the distance she covered on her route in England was longer. She has a fine deck for the mails and splendid accommodation for passengers. I was much pleased last year at the first trip of the 'Lady Evelyn,' when she met the 'Empress of Britain' at Rimouski. The first man that I sighted on the deck of the 'Empress of Britain' was the Principal of McGill, who usually goes to England once a year. He said : 'At last you have done away with our national shame, the 'Rhoda,' and I am proud today to come into Canadian waters and find decent accommodation for passengers.' The hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) says that the 'Lady Evelyn' has a crew of from 20 to 25 men. Yes ; the vessel is manned and equipped as an ocean mail tender for Canada ought to be. I keep the men the whole year round, for the service is intended not only for Rimouski but also for Sydney. Could I find and equip a suitable crew for every trip? The vessel may be at Sydney now, but in a few weeks she will be back at Rimouski. Am I to change the crew at every trip ? Could I hope in such a way to secure a well-trained, suitably-dressed crew of men, doing their duty faithfully at very reasonable cost ? I heard some derisive 'Hear, hear,' from my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). Does he suspect that there is something nasty about the 'Lady Evelyn ?' I would like the hon. gentleman to look over the blue-book, to move for any returns or reports he pleases ; I invite him to come with me and pay a visit to the 'Lady Evelyn.' I have been in New York and Liverpool, and I can tell the hon. gentleman that he will see, not merely the best mail tender in Canada, but the best on this continent.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) a question? Could he give us the yearly cost of this tender? The boat she replaced cost only $4,000 a year.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, we had a contract with the Captain of the 'Rhoda,' a contract for five years at $4,000 a year. What does that represent as interest? It represents the interest at 6 per cent on about $70,000. Now, this boat cost about $60,000. This represents an interest charge of about $3,600 a year. So, we have saved money on that account. Besides it is right that this mail tender should be the property of the Post Office Department, so that she may be under our orders. And my hon. friend may rest assured that, as regards this steamer, there will be no scandal. The officers of the department here in Ottawa are looking carefully into the accounts for every purchase made in connection with the vessel. My hon. friend may rest assured that they will make it a point to see that the ship is well manned, well equipped and well run—and without scandal.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I was merely asking for information. I wished to learn, if I could, what was the yearly expenditure of this boat.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think that, the other day, there was a question on the Order Paper on that very subject. In reply to that question, I gave the figures for last year. I have forgotten those figures at present. The expenditure for the present year is just beginning. But if later on when the estimates come up my hon. friend will put the same question, he will have the figures, and he will learn that the amount spent on that steamer is very moderate. Now the hon. gentleman says: Why is it that the 'Lady Evelyn' arrived last year in the month of May and was put on the route only late in August? The answer is very easy. The wharf at Rimouski is a very long one, yet I regret to say that there was not at the extremity of the wharf a sufficient depth of water for that steamer. We had to do some dredging in the channel and as soon as the dredging was completed the boat was put on the route. Now the hon. gentleman says: 'I am told that during the time this steamer was performing her usual service the minister used her for himself and his friends.' My hon. friend is misinformed. I may, however, make a confession. I used the steamer twice. First, when the Prime Minister arrived from Europe. I was asked by the members of the press, and by several of my colleagues in the House, members on this side and I think there were two or three on the other side—to meet the Prime Minister near Berthier in the county of Bellechasse. The run lasted three or four hours, and the dinner offered to the party was at the expense of the Postmaster General. So there was not much expense, the steamer had to be under steam in any case, because she was expected to be called to Rimouski at any day. On one other occasion I used the steamer with the deputy Postmaster General, Mr. Coulter, and my secretary, because I was anxious to establish a winter mail service between the island of Anticosti and the mainland. We left on a Monday afternoon, and on Wednesday morning we were back at Rimouski wharf. But this was an official visit made in the interest of the department and of the service; and when the minister uses the steamer on occasions like this, I do not think the hon. gentleman should begrudge him the honour of travelling on the 'Lady Evelyn.' I do not suppose my hon. friend meant to impute to me any thing unworthy in that regard.

Now about free rural mail delivery, I do not know that I should be called upon this evening to speak at length on this question. I would prefer to speak on it later on when the estimates are taken up. However, as the hon. gentleman has spoken on this question during my absence, he is entitled to a statement from me. On one or two different occasions I think he has spoken on this subject during this session. I read the speech delivered by the hon. gentleman in the debate on the address. His plea on that occasion was, in my opinion, a plea in favour of the United States. I sincerely hope that before long when the country is well settled, when immigrants are not prevented from coming to this country—we will have, as the United States have to-day, the luxury of free rural mail delivery. I agree with the hon. gentleman that the United States today are probably acting wisely in establishing free rural mail delivery. But how have they been able to obtain that luxury ff not by their accumulated wealth, by their large population, and by the large revenue yielded by the post office service? Mr. Speaker, I think the question can be solved in a very few minutes. I need not go to Washington, as my hon. friend says he did. True, my officials went to Washington, but they did not go for the only purpose of obtaining from the United States officials the statement that the system was a success. They went there to investigate. Their minds were unbiased on the subject, they did not come back with the same report as the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman went to Washington for the purpose of convincing himself that it was a good thing for Canada to have free rural mail delivery. My officials went to Washington with an unbiased mind in order to investigate, and see for themselves if the conditions prevailing in the two countries were sufficiently alike to allow of the same system being established in Canada, and if it could be worked out as well here as across the frontier.

Sir, the population of the United States, in round numbers, is 80,000,000 ; the postal revenue of the United States is $183,000,000. In Canada we have not yet a population of 7,000,000. Our limited revenue—I say limited advisedly, although we have a fair surplus—our total gross revenue amounts to $9,000,000. Thus the United States have a population fourteen times ours, with a revenue twenty times as great. Can they not therefore afford themselves the luxury of free rural mail delivery ? Sir, it is with such facts in our minds that this question must be faced. Besides, we have about the same area as the United States. My hon. friend is advocating free rural mail delivery, which I myself would like to see under certain conditions, which conditions I hope will materialize before long. But will my hon. friend say this evening before the province of Ontario and the provinces further west, that he is prepared to discriminate in this matter ? Will he say before the representatives of the western provinces, where the distances are long, the area large and the population sparse—will he say : You shall not have free rural mail delivery, but we will give it to Ontario and to Quebec where the country is more thickly settled ? Why, Sir, my hon. friend could not live twenty-four hours in the Post Office Department if he were to propound such a policy as that regarding the west.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What better position will the people be in ? Will we not have scattered districts a hundred years hence, or fifty years hence, just similar to those we have to-day ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is my hon. friend serious ? Does he propose to check immigration ? Does he think this country will not become settled ? Will he pretend, having read the history of Canada, that a hundred years ago the country was as thickly settled as it is to-day ? Is it not a fact that a hundred years ago in the province of Ontario not far from this city of Ottawa, there were no inhabitants ? Ottawa itself, though now thickly settled, was but a solitude seventy or eighty years ago. My hon. friend surely does not expect that the aggressive provinces of the west will remain unsettled. On the contrary, I think they are God's heritage, and it is predicted that before long the balance of power will pass from the east to the west. Then my hon. friend will, if he lives in that golden age, realize that the west was entitled to the same treatment as the east.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister give me some reason why the thickly settled portions of eastern Canada should not be taken into consideration, and the thickly settled portions of the west as well ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Because a farmer from Scandinavia or Germany happens to settle near Edmonton, or near that ambitious city of Strathcona, should he receive more consideration from the Post Office Department than the brave settler who goes upon the distant prairie and settles boldly alone ? I say that the same treatment must be given to the isolated farmer as to the farmer residing near the city or town.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why is it, when advantages are given to the cities, that the rural districts are not taken into consideration at the present moment.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No intelligent resident of, say Buckingham, would claim that he is entitled, as regards letter carrier service, to the same service as a resident of Ottawa gets. The parallel should not be established in that sense, but I say that as regards free rural mail delivery—I am not speaking of city delivery—the same treatment should be given to the sparsely populated section of the country as to the thickly settled section of the country. Mark well, I am speaking of the farming community. My hon friend asks : Why do you not imitate the United States in this matter ? My hon. friend should not ignore the fact that the system of free rural mail delivery existed before the United States adopted it. The United States adopted free rural mail delivery, when? When they had 6,000,000 people? Not at all. They did not adopt rural free mail delivery with 15,000,000, nor with 20,000,000 nor with 60,000,000 people. They never dreamed of it in those days; not even when the population reached 70,000,000, but the United States started free rural mail delivery when the population reached the high watermark of 80,000,000 and when their revenue had increased from a few million dollars to $175,000,000. This system is not an American discovery. My hon. friend should not lose sight of the fact that free rural mail delivery has existed for years and years in Europe. In Great Britain, for instance, where from Liverpool to London, it is practically one row of houses on both sides of the railway systems. It exists in France and in Belgium. But what is Belgium compared with Saskatchewan, with Manitoba, or even with Prince Edward Island ? We could put three Belgiums, and even more, in one of the smaller provinces of the Dominion. Therefore we must, before thinking of establishing that costly system in Canada, realize that we have an area as vast as that of the United States of America, that on the other hand we have only 7,000,000 of a population as against 85,000,000 in the United States, and that we have only a gross postal revenue of $9,000,000 as against one in the United States of $183,000,000. Further than that we have not the same climatic conditions. That fact must be taken into consideration also.

Whilst in the United States, generally speaking, they have a fair climate all the year round and good roads, we must admit that in certain sections of the country, during even the month of April and during several months of the year, our roads are practically impassable. All these facts must be taken into consideration before advocating the establishment of such a luxury. Let me draw a parallel. Here is an individual with a revenue of $50,000 a year ; my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), for instance, whom I see in his seat, has, I presume, at least a revenue of $50,000 a year. My hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), less fortunate, has only a revenue of $5,000 a year. Both are well off according to their relative condition of life. Surely my hon. friend from St. Antoine could buy an automobile and every morning he could be conveyed from his private house or country residence to his office, whilst the hon. member from Lambton would be satisfied to take, as I do myself, the tramway, or his bicycle or the ordinary train. He would see my hon. friend from St. Antoine passing in his automobile, whirling about in the streets of Montreal or suburbs, thus attracting his attention. Suppose the hon. member for St. Antoine would remonstrate with him and say: Why do you not get an automobile? You will get a drive through the fresh air ; your health will be better and besides it lends more dignity and charm to life to drive in an automobile? Would not my hon. friend from Lambton at once answer : 'It is a question of revenue ; you have $50,000, you reside in the country, so do I, but I have only $5,000, I have a large family and I must be satisfied with the tramway.' So it is with free rural mail delivery. We have the United States on one side, same area as Canada, but with a revenue of $182,000,000. Here is Canada on the other, same area as the United States, but with only a postal revenue of $9,000,000 a year. Can we indulge a drive in the automobile of free rural mail delivery ? Evidently not, Mr. Speaker, we must be satisfied to live within our means. We must be as wise, as prudent as my hon. friend from Lambton would be if his revenue were what I have just mentioned as a comparison. Now, the United States are spending an enormous amount on this free rural mail delivery system. Last year, according to the figures which we have in the department, the postal authorities spent $26,000,000; that is to say, one-seventh of their income. But this is, Mr. Speaker, and my hon. friend should realize it, three times the total gross revenue of the Canadian Post Office Department. If Canada ceased to spend one red cent on its railway mail service, ceased to pay the postmasters—and what a noise there would be in the country if we did—if we ceased to pay for the conveyance of the mails and if we used the total gross revenue of the Post Office Department for three years it would barely pay what the United States spent last year on free rural mail delivery. My hon. friend says that it is a revenue producer. Most of the revenue in the Post Office Department is derived from the sale of stamps for letters. Newspapers are carried at a loss by the department. We do it to accommodate the public, but they are carried at a loss. If I had more time I would give figures to the House. We get our revenue from the sale of the little postage stamp, but in order to have buoyancy we must have large centres of population as they have in the United States, large cities—Chicago, New York, Philadelphia and San Francisco—where millions of people are living and then we shall get revenue. We get a limited revenue. Therefore, we can spend only a limited amount of money. Now, does this free rural mail delivery increase the revenue? Has it increased the revenue of the United States Post Office Department? We made an investigation. I do not know if my hon. friend challenges the investigation made by the officers of the Canadian Post Office Department.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I certainly do.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We sent to Washington trusted officials of the department, men like Mr. Ross, of Toronto, nearly 35 years in the service, taking more interest in his public duties than he would take in his own private business, being at present broken in health, because he has travelled during 35 years from one end of the country to the other to see that the Post Office Department was run economically and at the same time in the interest of the public. He went to Washington with Mr. Smith, and not relying alone on what they might hear from politicians who benefited politically by the system, they remained in Washington for several weeks and made a thorough investigation and report. They reported that on 81 routes selected by the United States postal authorities for their examination, the revenue has increased during the six months by $50 ; on 51 other routes there had been no increase in revenue, and on 132 routes there had been a diminution of $225. This is not a flight of the imagination, these are cold facts, and before telling the good people of Ontario that there should be rural free delivery it is well that the facts should be presented. Now, the people of Quebec would be quite willing to have rural free delivery too. Even on the distant shores of Gaspé where they have received so many good things from the government since 1896, the hardy fishermen there would be quite willing to have free rural mail delivery. What my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) claims for Ontario I would be disposed to claim for Quebec, but to be fair and just to the other provinces of the Dominion I would think that British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, are just as much entitled to that luxury as the two large provinces.

Mr. MORIN. And the Yukon.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, if we had gathered from the Yukon the crop of gold which the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said were there when he combated that famous railway project, we might have been able to stand the expense of free rural mail delivery, but we did not get the gold and so we must be satisfied with our gross postal revenue of $9,000,000 a year. There is no evidence that in the United States, free rural mail delivery has materially increased the revenue. According to the report of our officials to which I have referred, during a period of six months in 1903, on 132 routes 3,638,000 pieces were delivered, and in 1904, during the same period, 3,662,899, showing an increase of 2,651 pieces or seven-hundredths of one per cent. And this was on 132 routes which were pointed out by the United States postal authorities as being the best routes in the whole Union. My hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) should know that the free rural delivery in the United States which was initiated at an expense of a few thousand dollars, cost the country last year the fabulous sum of $37,000,000. When the hon. gentleman goes before the electors of Lambton with his pleasant smile and condemns this government for refusing them that luxury of rural free delivery which the people across the border enjoy; when he tells them that the Canadian Post Office Department has no care for the welfare of the farmers of Lambton, I wish he would also tell them that the rural free delivery in the United States cost last year $37,000,000. If the hon. gentleman would invite me to his county I would like to discuss that matter with his friends, and I am sure they would give me a cordial reception when I disclosed to them these cold facts.

Until 1904, the United States published figures as to the cost of the routes and the amount of revenue derived therefrom. Since that date no official figures have been published. In 1904, the result of rural free delivery for the whole of the United States, setting forth the total number of letters, post cards, papers, circulars, packages, collected from all the routes and the total amount of stamps cancelled on all the routes and the revenue collected from rural free delivery, shows, there was collected one hundred and thirty-three odd million pieces at a cost of $12,681,876, and yielding a revenue of $2.601,815, thus giving a deficit, so far as rural free delivery is concerned, in that year of $10,080,061. The United States since that date have published no statistics until the present year when they have published a statement in their annual report of the results, not of the whole service but of twenty-seven of the best and most favourable routes in the United States. But the report states that the statement is for the purpose of giving some indication (mark you) of the possibilities of rural free delivery in the more densely populated localities served, both suburban and rural. The hon. gentleman complained in the debate on the address that I had stated the United States deficit on this service to be about $20,000,000. I do not remember having made that statement, but I may point out to the hon. gentleman that at a recent congress of the postmasters of the United States, attended by 1,500 postmasters, matters concerning the postal service in the United States were discussed and amongst others the possibility of developing the rural free delivery system by extending parcel post delivery on the routes, and the statement was then made and it has not been contradicted so far as I know, that the rural free delivery service cost $35,000,000 a year and only yielded a revenue of $5,000,000, thus leaving an annual deficit of $30,000,000, which is $10,000,000 more than the amount I am alleged to have stated. The hour is late and I shall conclude by thanking my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) for his courteous treatment of the department. We may differ, but I must admit that when he discussed questions in connection with the Post Office Department he is always very fair indeed. I am glad he has brought these several matters to my notice this evening and when the estimates are being considered we may discuss the question again. I am sincere in telling my hon. friend that I am as anxious as he can be to give the people of Canada an improved postal service, although I must say that we have on the whole a most creditable system in the urban and suburban districts. Above all, we must not exceed our revenue. I am as anxious as he is to give the farmers of Canada a free rural mail delivery, but my hon. friend will never convince a farmer of the west that he should pay for a luxury to be given only to the farmers of the east. He will never convince a man with a head on his shoulders and with common sense in the head that we are in a position to spend as much money with our limited revenue and our small population as the United States with their enormous revenue and their large population.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say just a word in reply.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has no right to reply. The only motion before the House is to go into Supply.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am sorry I have not the opportunity of making just a few remarks.

ANTI-CIGARETTE LEGISLATION.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). I wish to ask the Minister of Finance a question. I shall first read the following resolution which was sent to me to-day:

The Women's Christian Temperance Union of Brampton passed the following resolution:

Whereas we understand that a Bill is being prepared for the House of Commons of the Dominion of Canada to prohibit the manufacture and sale of cigarettes;

Resolved, that, for the sake of the youth of our country, we sincerely hope and pray that such a measure may receive the most hearty support both of the Commons and of the Senate of Canada, and soon become law in our Dominion.

I would ask the Finance Minister if a Bill is being prepared by the government to be introduced during this session respecting cigarettes?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I must admit that I am unable to give my hon. friend any definite information. The whole question has been engaging the attention of the ministers as well as of other hon. members of the House, and it may be that before the close of the session some legislation, perhaps not altogether as broad as my hon. friend suggests, but approaching the same lines, will be introduced. I am not in a position to make a more definite statement at present.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Chicoutimi post office, $7,500.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). This is a revote to make provision for the completion of a public building now under erection at Chicoutimi.

Mr. FOWLER. How much has been spent?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Up to November 15, $28,728.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the contract price?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $22,472, not including electric wiring, heating, interior fittings or clock.

Mr. FOWLER. How about the duty on that clock?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no information as to that. In the case of the clock of which we spoke the other day, I find there were several tenders for the clock and the tenderer to whom the tender was awarded tendered for a certain amount, duty not included. Therefore, of course, the duty had to be added to his contract price.

Mr. FOWLER. And that was expressly stated in the tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. I feel that I should inform the committee that my deputy was mistaken in regard to the security for the Halifax custom house. He told me that the security was still held by the department, but on inquiry he finds that he was mistaken in regard to that. The security was paid over before I became minister and also before he became acting deputy minister. We have held back some $3,000 or $4,000 of the main bill.

Mr. FOWLER. By whose authority was the security paid over?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The certificate the department had at that time was that the building was substantially completed, and it was felt that it was not necessary to retain the security longer. It was paid over in the early part of 1907.

Mr. FOWLER. Referring to the confidential report of Mr. Dodwell on the Halifax building and the subsequent report of Mr. Wright, to what extent do they agree?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In a general way the report of Mr. Wright does not go to the same extent as the report of Mr. Dodwell.

Mr. FOWLER. Under the circumstances do you not think the reports should be produced ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not produce a confidential report without the consent of the writer.

Mr. FOWLER. Was it expressely understood between you and Mr. Dodwell that the report should be confidential.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Dodwell desired that it should be confidential.

Mr. FOWLER. Had the minister not a right to direct the making of that report? Mr. Dodwell is an officer of the department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought he would write more freely if the report was confidential. He has general supervision over all matters in that section of the country, but he was not in direct charge of this building and, therefore, the report was made confidential.

Mr. FOWLER. He has general supervision over all matters in that section of the country, and I cannot see why Mr. Bush did not report to him and why Dodwell found it necessary to have verbal communication with the minister. I do not understand the supervision exercised by Mr. Dodwell. The minister had a right to command him to make a report. I cannot say that the minister has acted quite properly with regard to this matter. He does not seem to entertain the right idea with regard to the duties of the officers of his department.

Mr. BLAIN. Was the statement correct that was made the other evening, that the government had paid duty of over $400 on the coat of arms supplied for the Halifax building which should have been paid by the contractor under the contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The statement made has been verified with regard to the duty upon the coat of arms.

Cookshire public building, $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister promised to bring some information with regard to the granolithic sidewalk before the Antigonish building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have the information. The sidewalk cost 26 cents per square foot, which included the levelling. Mr. Ewart, the chief architect, says that that was the cheapest price at which he could get it done in that locality.

Mr. FOWLER. Let us have the dimensions. For, I must say, I have not the confidence in the chief architect's figures I would like to have. If the lot was of the dimensions stated by the minister and the sidewalk was of reasonable width, it would be impossible to make up the amount of money paid in this case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A portion of the sidewalk was 21 feet. The architect says that the price of granolithic pavement in Ottawa is 18 cents. In some places it is more, in some less.

Mr. SPROULE. Not long ago in our section of country this kind of work was done at 9 cents in one case and at 11 cents in another.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect says that he has had this work done at as low as 11 cents, but 26 cents was the lowest price he could get in Antigonish.

Mr. FOWLER. But I would like the dimensions.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect brought the plan over before, but he has not it with him this evening. He will bring it.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, with the plan before us, we can discuss the matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This vote of $5,000 is for a public building in Cookshire. The site has been given free at the cost of the municipal council.

Mr. FOWLER. What did the site at Chicoutimi cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $2,400.

Mr. BLAIN. At whose suggestion was this vote for the Cookshire building put in the estimates ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The people of Cookshire asked for the building and the municipal council passed a resolution to furnish the site free to the Crown.

Mr. SPROULE. Has tne building been commenced ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. SPROULE. What is it to cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is expected to cost in the neighbourhood of $19,000 or $20,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the size of Cookshire ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About 2,000 population, I am informed. It is a growing town, I believe—a nice town.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister did not answer my question. I asked at whose request this item of $5,000 was put in the estimates ? He says that the municipal council gave the site and the people of the town asked for the building. In what way did they ask—by petition ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A resolution passed by the council was sent to the Minister of Public Works in the ordinary way.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister a copy ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not it with me.

Mr. BLAIN. And as to the town generally ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A petition was sent in by the residents and ratepayers of the town, which was transmitted by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Hunt), on December 6, 1907.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister a copy of the petition ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. It would make a bulky assortment of papers if I should bring the petitions for all these public buildings.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not ask for all, but only for one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But I did not know which one the hon. gentleman would ask for.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The census of 1901 gives Cookshire a population of about 800.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has grown a good deal since. Then, I understand, this post office will serve a thickly settled community besides that included within the municipal limits of the town.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the revenue ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For the nine months, 1906-7, the revenue was $2,128.44 ; money orders issued $12,902 ; money orders paid, $8,411. Then, to give an idea of the business of the place, the exports were $297,079 in the nine months of the last fiscal period ; imports $65,047. Of course, this building is for a custom house as well.

Mr. FOWLER. It is not a sub-port, is it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It must be, because the customs duties collected at the post office amount to about $2,000.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not finding fault with this public building for Cookshire, which is a nice, thriving little town. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has taken it under his paternal wing and given it a post office, and we are wicked enough to suspect that he has an ulterior motive.

Mr. FISHER. You must not impute motives.

Mr. FOWLER. I say we 'suspect.' If the people of Cookshire get the advantage of this building, so much the better for them. But I wish to press upon the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) the fact that if he contends that Cookshire is entitled to a post office by reason of its importance, the amount of its revenue and the business done, he has double reason for giving a post office to the town of Hillsborough, in the county of Albert.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am glad that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) approves of this.

Mr. FOWLER. My attitude is merely negative—I do not disapprove.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would refer to the census of 1901, page 362. I am not objecting to the post office for Cookshire, but I wish to show that the population must have increased rapidly if it has 2,000 now. According to the census of 1902 there were 322 English, 80 Irish, 49 Scotch, 1 of other nationality, 338 French—total population 801.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is within the municipal limit. But I am told that there is an important community besides to be served.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How far does the minister go in order to find his population of 2,000 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not understand whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) is opposed to this or in favour of it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am not speaking to oppose this vote. I am only saying that if the minister proposes to give a twenty thousand dollar post office to every town of 801 population, we would like to know it, that is all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My opinion is that a good deal depends on the importance of the place and on the business.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister tell us what the present post office costs the country for rent and light, and if there is any other government building there ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not sure whether there is an inland revenue office there, but there is a custom house. This building will be also used for customs. The rent paid last year was $190 for the post office and customs office.

Mr. SPROULE. We proposed to put up a building costing $19,000, that will cost us about $1,100 a year, I presume, after it is built.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The intention of the town council is to rent a portion of the building for a registry office; that will give a little income.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think that is a proper thing to do. It seems to me it is a great mistake for this government, to put up a building for federal purposes and rent a portion of it to a municipality. Let the municipality build its own registry office.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not considered undesirable for municipalities to rent portions of public buildings which are not required for municipal offices. That was a proposition which the municipal council made, and rent might be got from that. I do not see any objection to it at the present time.

Mr. BLAIN. Could the minister give the date of the resolution of the municipal council ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was forwarded on December 6, 1907.

Mr. BLAIN. When was this $5,000 first placed in the estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Last year.

Mr. FISHER. This is a full customs port. Mr. Ross is collector there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The amount received from customs was $3,186.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it the policy of the department to appropriate public money for the construction of registry offices for municipalities ? Surely that is a new departure on the part of the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought I made myself clear that it had not yet been decided whether to rent a portion of the building as a registry office. But the town council urged that, as it was a very convenient site for that purpose, when the building was erected there might be made in it a room which could be used for the registry office, and for which of course, the council would pay rent.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you got the request there ? I would like to see it.

Mr. TAYLOR. The town council has nothing to do with the registry office, it is the county council.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The information I have is that the resolution was passed by the municipal council of the town of Cookshire. They made a gift of the site, and they have also urged that in the erection of the building, as this is a very convenient site and in a public park, it would be desirable that provision should be made for a registry office, for which they would pay rental.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister has gone further than that, he has intimated that in his opinion that is all right. The minister might just as well provide at the expense of the federal government, a court house and jail as to provide a registry office. I venture to say there is not another instance like it in Canada. I protest strongly against any such departure from the rule. Does the Minister of Agriculture, for instance, think that is a proper thing ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. All we are asking for now, is a vote for the building ; the question of the registry office is one that we will have to consider.

Mr. FOWLER. Who will consider it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The minister.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister has already decided.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I said where a town council is willing to give a convenient site in a square, as apparently this is, and if they request that in erecting the building there should be one room made suitable for a registry office for which they are willing to pay an adequate rent, there may be cases that would be entirely justifiable. Whether it will be done in this instance, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. BLAIN. Was that the condition on which the site was granted ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was no condition.

Mr. FOWLER. I think the minister ought to bring down that resolution of the town council to which he pays so much attention.

Mr. BLAIN. I think we should have that resolution. The minister has pointed out that this building was put up at the request of the municipal council, and by a petition of the residents. He says he sees no objection to using a portion of this building for a registry office.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Provided they pay for it.

Mr. BLAIN. Provided they pay for it. In other parts of Canada, particularly in Ontario, no such thing would be tolerated for a moment. Every county council must provide a suitable registry office for the requirements of the country. It would not be suggested for a moment that the government should provide such a building; in fact, a building of this kind would be of no value unless the building were constructed especially for that purpose. It is rather unfair for the minister to come down and ask for an appropriation without having under his hand the request that was made by the municipal council and the petition by the residents of the town.

Mr. SPROULE. We are embarking on a new principle, a principle that, I think, will be admitted by most people, is a bad one. If a place does not require as large a building it is an easy matter to reduce the amount that is proposed to be voted for that purpose. But, when we have supplied a place with a custom house, an inland revenue office and a post office, I think we have gone as far as we can reasonably expect to go.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister supply, at a future date, the petition and resolution passed by the municipal council?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. BLAIN. And would the minister say whether any part of the building will be constructed for a registry office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will look at the resolution and I have no objection at all to stating my views later on.

Mr. FOWLER. Then we will have an opportunity of discussing this item again?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not this item, but you can discuss the principle on some other item.

Mr. BERGERON. When will that building be commenced?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We hope just as soon as the plans and specifications can be prepared and tenders called for.

Dominion public buildings—renewals, improvements, repairs, &c., $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This vote of $20,000 is to be applied in carrying out renewals, repairs and work of that kind generally to public buildings in Quebec for which special appropriations have not been made. This is the ordinary maintenance vote which is passed every year.

Mr. FOWLER. At what places is it expected to do this work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. At some twenty or thirty different places and the repairs range from $4 up to $2,000.

Dundee custom house—renewals and repairs, $1,800.

Mr. BERGERON. When was that building erected?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was built 58 years ago, and these repairs are absolutely necessary.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. What repairs are being made?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is to be a new stone foundation, the building is to be raised three and a half feet, there will be 175 running feet of concrete and some excavating.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. Does the minister know that this is a very old house that this $1,800 is being spent on, and that he could erect a new building for that sum of money?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know it is an old house, but with these repairs it may last some time yet.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. But with the $1,800 which is being spent upon it now you can put up a new building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not like to try to put up a new building with $1,800.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. You could add a little to it and make a good building.

Mr. BERGERON. I see this is a revote.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a revote.

Mr. BERGERON. If the money was voted last year and not spent there is no very great need for it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract has now been let.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. Who has the contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. J. Fraser.

Mr. BERGERON. Were tenders called for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is going to cost altogether $3,300.

Mr. BERGERON. How many tenders were there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think Mr. Fraser was asked to tender; there was no public call by advertisement for tenders.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. Do I understand the minister to say that it is going to cost $3,300?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. Why are you asking for only $1,800?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are asking simply for $1,800 because there was $1,800 granted last year. The repairs have not been started. This is a revote, but it is not unlikely that I may ask for $1,500 more in the supply estimates so as to get sufficient to do the work this year.

Farnham post office—alterations, including rearrangement of fittings, $5,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote to make provision for alterations, including a rearrangement of the interior fittings. This has been requested by the Post Office Department.

Mr. CROCKET. When was the Farnham office built?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1893.

Mr. FOWLER. What are the alterations?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is proposed to make a larger lobby for the accommodation of the public and to change the interior fittings.

Mr. TAYLOR. The usual way is for the minister to state how much is to be expended on each item of the repairs, what is to be done with the money, so much for this alteration and so much for that. The minister is not following the usual custom of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This memorandum has been prepared by the same gentleman who has for twenty or thirty years been preparing these statements.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have been here for twenty years and I have always heard the minister get up and read off in detail an estimate of all the different items, it is placed on 'Hansard' and we can read it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is done in some cases where it is asked for.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is always done. When we ask what he is going to do with this money he tells us in detail. This explanation which consists in stating that a room is to be enlarged is no explanation at all.

Mr. BERGERON. What will be the whole amount of expenditure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $5,500.

Mr. BERGERON. And it is a revote?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Will these repairs be made by contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They will probably be made by contract.

Mr. CROCKET. Are they all interior repairs?

Mr. BERGERON. What kind of repairs are they?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There has been some question as to what should be the extent of the repairs and the details have not yet been determined on by the chief architect.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the estimate appears to be submitted to parliament on guess work, and it is not a businesslike thing to do.

Mr. PUGSLEY. More extensive repairs have been urged than are contemplated by the chief architect, and if we make very extensive repairs it would raise a question whether it would not be better to erect a new building.

Mr. BERGERON. What did the building cost in the first place?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has cost altogether for construction and repairs $11,400.

Mr. J. D. REID. What is the revenue?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Postal revenue (nine months), $2,867 ; money orders issued, $20,000 ; money orders paid, $17,000 ; population, 3,114.

Grosse Isle quarantine station—improvement and repairs to building, $12,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. These repairs and improvements have been requested by the medical attendant at the station.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is responsible for the carrying out of these works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have an agent there, Mr. Beland.

Mr. J. D. REID. Any relation of the member?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am told not.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you an inspector of works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Beland.

Mr. BERGERON. Every year since I have been in this House we have been expending money on this quarantine station. I have been on the island and everything appears to be in good order and repair, but still we have to spend money every year as if we were compelled to whether it was wanted or not.

Mr. J. D. REID. Last year there was $12,520 expended. What was that for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was for lumber, plumbing, paint, cement, hardware, wages, sundries, &c.

Mr. BLAIN. Was the cement purchased by public tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot say now, but the quantity purchased was very small.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the policy of the department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The policy is to call for tenders for cement and we are frequently doing so.

Mr. BLAIN. I see six rugs were purchased from T. Beland & Co., at over $20 each. What were they for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume they were for the house of the resident physician.

Mr. BLAIN. Was the cement bought by public tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was before my advent to the department and I cannot say just now, but the policy of the department will be to purchase as far as possible all the articles that are required for public buildings by tender. Occasionally there may be small quantities which it would not be convenient to purchase in that way, but as a rule competitive prices will be obtained.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will this money be expended by contract or by day's work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. While some of it may be done by contract it is probable that the bulk of it would be more economically and perhaps better done by day's work.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who is the foreman?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Beland, the representative of the Public Works Department at Quebec, is supposed to do that.

Mr. J. D. REID. He lives at Quebec?

Mr. PUGSLEY. When repairs are being made to any extent I understand he remains at Grosse Isle.

Mr. J. D. REID. During the whole progress of the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. So I understand.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is that the real fact?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand so. He is supposed to be there sufficiently to have an oversight of the work.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was he there long last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am told he has been twenty years in that employment.

Grosse Isle quarantine station—disinfecting apparatus, including building, $3,500.

Mr. BENNETT. Will that complete the work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect says so. There was an expenditure up to November 30 last year of $4,121.

Mr. BENNETT. What is this for ?

Mr. FISHER. Additional sulphur apparatus is needed there.

Mr. DANIEL. How much is for disinfecting apparatus and how much for the building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The building will cost $4,689, and the balance will be used for the other purpose.

Knowlton public building, $4,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote of $4,500 to make provision towards the erection of a public building in Knowlton.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the population ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 800.

Mr. BENNETT. What would be the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract has not yet been let, but I suppose that including heating and everything it will be somewhere in the vicinity of $15,000, possibly more.

Mr. BERGERON. This money was voted last year. If it was very much needed, you would suppose it would have been commenced. It looks like holding this money out before the community.

Mr. FISHER. There was difficulty in procuring a site. The site owned by the municipal council and their authority for the sale had to be obtained. The site is about 115 feet by 90 feet, and it cost about $350.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you agreed to build a registry office?

Mr. FISHER. No, but there is to be an armoury in conjunction with the post office building.

Mr. BENNETT. To what amount will the minister bind himself as the outside cost of this building? If you start to erect buildings in every town or village of 800 the country will be bankrupt.

Mr. FISHER. Knowlton is the county town, there is no public building in the county, and gentlemen opposite recommended me strongly last year, to get a building put there for that reason.

Mr. BERGERON. When we remember all the noise and trouble that was raised about the La Prairie post office, by the hon. gentlemen, when in opposition, and then have them vote money for a building of this kind, in a place of the size of Knowlton. it is not extraordinary that the public lose confidence in public men.

Mr. FISHER. It is generally conceded that a county town can very fairly lay claim to a public building and such buildings have been erected in most cases. This is the only public building in the county and the post office accommodation is quite inadequate.

Mr. BERGERON. The county town is generally not the largest but the most central town in the county. Is the largest place in Brome only about 800?

Mr. FISHER. We do not spread our villages over half creation. The village itself has a population of 800, but the post office will serve a community of at least 2,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is paid for the present office?

Mr. FISHER. Eighty dollars a year.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the revenue?

Mr. BENNETT. The revenue was $1,557, and the rent paid is $60. That is according to the report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is for nine months.

Mr. CROCKET. How many are employed on the post office staff at present?

Mr. FISHER. The post office postmaster himself. But I think he employs two people in the office.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. J. D. REID. What has the Finance Minister to say about these expenditures? Does he allows every place that asks for it to have a public building? If so, it is no wonder that our expenditure is so high.

Mr. FIELDING. Not every place. But I am afraid I am responsible for the doctrine the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has advanced. I think we can justify the construction of a public building—not necessarily an expensive building—in the county town of every county in which there is no other Dominion public building. I ventured to lay that rule down some years ago, and the more I think of it the more reasonable it seems to me. I think the government owes something to the people of the country in the matter of public buildings. Knowlton is a small town, but, if there is no other public building in the county, I think the government does no wrong in putting up a modest public building in this county town. It is a good example, and while it will cost a little, it does not mean that we are to put a public building in every town—for, I take it, there are other communities in Brome that might put forward a claim. But, if you confine it to the county town of a small county, or, in a larger county extends the rule to two or three communities, I think it is a good rule.

Mr. CROCKET. I am sorry, in view of the statement we have just heard, that the hon. member for Sunbury & Queens (Mr. Wilmot) is not in his place at the moment, for neither Sunbury nor Queens has a Dominion building. In view of the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) a claim might very properly be put in for a public building for Oromocto in Sunbury county and for Gagetown in Queens. It is a new doctrine to me that the government will build public buildings in the county town of every county that has no other government building.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not gone so far as to say that these buildings must all be put up at once. I am not familiar with Oromocto, but I know Gagetown and I think that if there is not a public building in that county a fair claim could be made. And, if hon. gentlemen will be patient, no doubt it will be carried out. But all this will not be done in a day.

Mr. HERRON. What procedure should one take in order to get one of these buildings in his constituency?

Mr. FIELDING. Patience is a good policy.

Mr. HERRON. I have seven or eight towns of from 1,200 to 1,800 people without a public building of any description. I have not made any particular request for one. But if the government is willing to build on such easy conditions, I think my constituency would have a claim.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Which town would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Herron) suggest ?

Mr. HERRON. Well, for instance, Macleod. The post office there is unfit for a postal service. And it is a very important town.

Mr. TALBOT. What is the population ?

Mr. HERRON. About 1,800 or 2,000.

Mr. TALBOT. The size of one of our villages.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Herron) must have patience. It is twenty-six years since I commenced to represent Brome and the county is only now getting its first public building.

Mr. FIELDING. Is the hon. gentleman right in saying that there is no public building in Macleod. I have understood that there is a very considerable building there.

Mr. HERRON. The constituency is about 40,000 square miles.

Mr. FIELDING. But I am speaking of the principle of making some public expenditure within a county.

Mr. BENNETT. The Minister of Public Works has not said that he will bind himself that this building shall not exceed in cost any particular sum.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I can say probably it will not be more than $20,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was there a petition for this building ?

Mr. FISHER. No, I asked for it. And the hon. member's (Mr. Reid) desk-mate (Mr. Fowler) also asked for it.

Lachute public building, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote.

An hon. MEMBER. In what county is Lachute ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In Argenteuil. The site has been bought and some work has been done. The total expenditure up to November 30, 1907, was $1,645.68.

Mr. BERGERON. From whom was the site bought ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From Mr. H. M. Gall, for $1,200. It has a frontage of 44 feet on Main street.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has the contract been let?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, to Messrs. Lafleur & Son, of Lachute.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the total estimated cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $27,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the population of Lachute ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By the census of 1901, it was 2,022.

Lake Megantic public building, $2,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for the purchase of a site. The total cost is $4,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. How large a place is it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1901, it had a population of 1,883.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is an awful price for the lot in a town of that size.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a very valuable lot with a frontage of 64 feet on Main street, and a depth of 132 feet to a lane. It was considered a most desirable lot and the owners were not anxious to sell.

Mr. FOWLER. Why so big a lot ? In Lachute you have a lot of only 44 feet frontage ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We could not very well have the lot split up, as the owners would not sell in that way. The land was owned by the Presbyterian church, and, of course, they would not want to sell part of the lot.

Lévis public building, $10,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there not already a post office at Lévis ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for a new building. The total probable cost is $49,713.44.

Mr. BERGERON. When was it commenced ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1905.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it not finished yet?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The architect tells me it is finished and occupied.

Mr. BERGERON. Then, what is the money for ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total expenditure to 31st October last was $35,274.44. Amount due on the contract, $6,262 ; wiring, $750 ; amount due on lock boxes, sidewalk, fencing, &c., $500 ; contingencies, superintendence, $3,163. The first contract was for $22,000. The $49,000 includes many things which are not in the contract.

Mr. J. D. REID. How does it come to pass that there are $27,000 for extras ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. After the contract was let the site was changed, and that caused a great deal of extra work.

Mr. J. D. REID. There was a contract let for a certain sized building. Now it was changed from one site to another. Why did the change of site necessitate so great an additional cost ? If a contract was given for $22,000 and then you turn around and ask for $37,000 for extras, there must be something wrong. I have no doubt that there is some robbery going on in that case. There is public robbery, I do not hesitate to say it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can now give the House some details of the extra cost. What the chief architect tells me is that after the contract was let it was decided to change the site. Where it was decided to erect the building was upon a place where there was an old wharf. That wharf had all to be cut out and a new foundation built of concrete. There was the extra work of excavating on account of the change of site, which amounted to $552. The concrete work, the brick, and so forth, cost $4,261. Then there was further excavation and concrete, and additional stone, $4,275. Then taking something off the foundation and replacing it, 212 yards, $2,106. There is a little over $11,000. I will give the reason why the site was changed. After the contract was let it became necessary, by reason of the Intercolonial improvements at Lévis, to widen the street, and that necessitated putting the post office in a different position by some 50 feet. There was a new station and yard room required. The contract was let in 1905 to Mr. Joseph Couture.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What was the original cost of the site ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site was given by the Intercolonial authorities ; the town and railway together owned the land. The government did not pay anything for either the first site or the second site.

Mr. MORIN. The minister said he had to build a post office 50 feet from the first site, but that ought not to change the cost of the site. The government bought some ground there to enlarge the street. I do not see how the minister can claim there was any additional cost for the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Suppose the place where the building was to be first erected was solid ground, and suppose that the new site necessitated building part of the foundation where there was an old wharf. That old wharf had to be cut away and a concrete foundation made. Surely that would change the cost.

Mr. MORIN. I do not ask any one to tell me the location of that post office. He says there was a wharf there. I have my doubts whether there ever was a wharf there. I went into that very place sixty years ago and there was no wharf. Afterwards a wharf was built, but outside the place where the post office is now. But where the post office stands there never was a chance to build a wharf because there was no water. At low tide the water is probably twenty feet from where the post office stands now, and when the tide comes in there is a little water, but not much. There is water at high tide in the month of May. Now will this $2,000 finish that post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will complete it.

Mr. MORIN. Are you sure of that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. One cannot be sure of anything in this world.

Mr. MORIN. That post office was built on poor ground. There was a post office building bought at St. Thomas, Montmagny, and it went down two years after it was bought. The government paid $7,794.50 for it. I do not intend to blame the minister for that because he was not in the government at the time. But, when they commenced to erect this building at Lévis they built it on a poor foundation, the foundation gave away, another man took the job of fixing it up, it gave way again and they again fixed it up. Now, if you go there and take a sight you see that the first story on the north side of the building caves in about four inches, and the second story leans out about four inches. The building warps and wobbles. The first story leans south and the second leans north. That is why I ask the minister if he knows what it will cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I wish to thank my hon. friend for assisting me in giving information to the committee as to the very great difficulties that have been met with in the construction of this building. What my hon. friend has stated accounts very largely for the large amount of extras which were necessary in the construction of the building. But, every effort, so the chief architect tells me, was made to secure a solid foundation. The building rests upon a concrete foundation that is deemed to be perfect, and there is every reason to believe that the foundation will stand.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the minister any personal knowledge of the locality?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only in a general way.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not think the minister is doing himself credit. He knows a great deal about Lévis. We remember that a few years ago there was a long discussion about a question as to the acquisition of land in Lévis for the purpose of the Intercolonial Railway. Some parties who owned the land there had met in the department with the statement of an engineer that the land was only worth $1 a foot.

Mr. TALBOT. Was that during the construction of the St. Charles branch?

Mr. BENNETT. It was while Mr. Blair was minister. Was that the time?

Mr. TALBOT. No, prior to that.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Blair happened to be the minister at that time and these parties found an adverse report in the department that the land was only worth $1 a foot. By an inspiration they became possessed of the idea that it would be advisable to secure a magic wand to wave over the head of the minister or some other important gentleman, and these parties hied themselves down to the city of St. John and secured the services of one Wm. Pugsley. May I ask the minister if he is the gentleman who made representations to the minister of that day as to the value of the land?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not remember. I know Lévis just as a traveller would know it, passing through.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman knew it better than that. I think he knew it as a very fair fee getter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not remember. I have no doubt that if I did the work I charged well for it.

Mr. BENNETT. I thought, from the pretty close knowledge the minister had of the locality, as stated in his letter at the time, that he would be able to give us some personal recollections of the locality. I must compliment the minister upon the fact that the land suddenly rose in value from $1 to $2 a foot, and judging from the increase in the price one would naturally conclude that his fee must have been a very fair one. I will refresh the memory of the minister with regard to the matter at some future time. It is on 'Hansard.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. How many years ago was that?

Mr. BENNETT. Probably seven or eight years ago.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Many things have happened since then. I do not remember these things for so long a time.

Mr. BENNETT. It is a very odd thing that a local solicitor was not called in to make representations to the minister as to the value of this land.

Mr. BERGERON. How much money did Mr. Couture receive ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Up to the first of November the contractor received $26,270. That includes the contract and extras.

Mr. BERGERON. Has he a claim now?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, there is $6,266 still owing.

Mr. BERGERON. I see in the Auditor General's Report of last year that he received $25,365, and also $3,830; that would be over $29,000 that he has already received.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, he had the contract for heating apparatus as well and the contract for fittings. The contract for fittings amounted to $3,500 and for heating apparatus to $2,178.50.

Mr. BERGERON. Did he get all these by tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I see there was an accepted tender dated July 10, 1906.

Mr. BERGERON. Who was the clerk of the works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Auger.

Mr. BERGERON. What was his salary ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $3 a day.

Mr. FOWLER. Did he get paid for Sundays?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am informed by the chief architect that he was paid for Sundays.

Mr. BERGERON. What reason was there for him travelling? I see that he received $62 for travelling.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that he summoned him to Ottawa in regard to the foundations.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there not another clerk of the works at this time?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think not.

Mr. BERGERON. Was not Mr. Mullarkey also clerk of works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, Mr. Mullarkey was attached to the staff at headquarters.

Mr. FOWLER. Why was his pay charged up against that work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. His pay and expenses are charged against the work he inspects.

Mr. BERGERON. He is down as having received $4 a day.

Mr. PUGSLEY. During what period?

Mr. BERGERON. For 61 days.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We paid his board while he was at Lévis. Mr. Mullarkey, I am informed, is an expert on concrete work.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He is the gentleman who supervised the concrete work for the piers of the interprovincial bridge across the Ottawa river.

Mr. BERGERON. Then why did he go to Lévis as clerk of works ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He goes out to places where important work is going on because of his special knowledge of concrete work and his wages are charged to the particular work under construction.

Mr. BERGERON. I see that the government has paid his board besides $4 a day.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When he is away from Ottawa, of course his board is paid. He is an expert in concrete work and he is a man whom the chief architect would be justified in sending to Lévis if the foundations were as the hon. member who has assisted me in giving information as to the building has stated they were.

Mr. FOWLER. Why was it necessary to bring Auger up to Ottawa? What good would he do? If there was anything wrong why not send a man down from the architect's department? He could see with his own eyes what was the matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not being an architect and not being in charge of the work, I would not deem myself competent to criticise the judgment the chief architect exercised.

Mr. FOWLER. Would it not be much better judgment to send an architect at first hand to see what was the matter?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that it became necessary to make an arangement with the contractor for the extra work and the clerk of works, Mr. Auger, and the contractor came to Ottawa in order to settle what allowances should be made the contractor.

Mr. MORIN. I would say to the minister as a friend that somebody ought to be watched whether it is the architect or the overseers.

Mr. BENNETT. Or the minister.

Mr. MORIN. No, I won't blame him, because he is a new man in the business. All your architect amounts to is just the name; he tells them what to do and how to do it, and as soon as his back is turned the work is neglected. The investigation into the fall of the tower here proved that the man did not attend to his business at all. Some of these days I will show you a place where some of your men were sent to build a wharf——

Mr. BERGERON. Was there any water?

Mr. MORIN. Yes, too much of it. The wharf was built and not a stone was put into the wall, and when the ice moved out in the spring away went the wharf, and it will cost $10,000 to replace it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Where was that?

Mr. MORIN. I will let you know when the time comes.

Mr. BERGERON. As I understand it, while the business portion of Lévis is down near the river side where the post office is situated, the greater part of the town is up the hill. Was it at the suggestion of the municipal authorities that the post office was erected on this site?

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, and the Board of Trade.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister has accounted for $11,000 in his own peculiar way, but we want to know something about the remaining $16,000 for extras.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Heating $2,178, tower clock $1,500, fittings $3,500, printing, advertising, clerk of the works, travelling expenses $4,213, boilers, etc., $196, electric wire $400.

Mr. FOWLER. Give the details for each of these items for printing and travelling expenses and advertising.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the details.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much has the contractor been paid, and how much is due?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has been paid altogether $26,270, and $6,226 is still due. The total expenditure to October 31 has been $35,274.44.

Mr. BERGERON. Has that been paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. The total is $49,-715.44.

Mr. FOWLER. We are to understand then that this building cost $49,000; the contract for which was $22,000 of which sum $7,000 was paid for the clerk of works or one-seventh of the whole amount.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There were two clerks.

Mr. FOWLER. Even so.

Mr. BERGERON. There must be a mistake somewhere, because it would appear that most of the accounts mentioned by the minister have been already paid according to the Auditor General's report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What does the hon. gentleman say has been paid?

Mr. BERGERON. Couture has been paid $30,000 already; Auger has been paid, Mullarkey has been paid. The boilers have been paid for, the heaters have been paid for, the King's Printer has been paid.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Have these items been paid, the $6,226 which I say is due?

Mr. BERGERON. No, I do not find that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The wiring.

Mr. BERGERON. There is some wiring.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, $400, but there is still $750 due.

Mr. BERGERON. Here is a payment to L. F. Butcher, on account of wiring, as per tender, that was a contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The wiring and fixtures were not in the contract. Is the $500 for the tower clock paid?

Mr. BERGERON. No.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The $3,500 for fittings ?

Mr. BERGERON. No.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The lock boxes, sidewalk and fencing and the balance for contingencies and superintendence, $2,163, making up the total of $49,713.34.

Mr. FOWLER. Who was the architect ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The plans were drawn in the department.

Mr. FOWLER. Was there a time limit on the contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The date of the contract is January 31, 1905, and the date named for completion October 30, 1906.

Mr. FOWLER. Was it completed then ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, owing to the change in site.

Mr. FOWLER. Was there a new contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, but an arrangement was come to with the contractor as to what he should receive for the extras necessitated by the change.

Mr. FOWLER. When was the arrangement made ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect says before the changes were made this arrangement was come to as to what he should charge.

Mr. FOWLER. Before he did anything, under the changed arrangement the price was agreed on ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was by schedule price, so much per cubic yard of concrete and masonry, &c.

Mr. FOWLER. Did the change make any difference in the contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, all this very great extra work was by reason of the changed foundation.

Mr. FOWLER. Was that the result of the change in the position.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes; by putting it back by reason of the widening of the street.

Mr. FOWLER. That made a difference of how many thousands ?

Mr. TALBOT. There is about 75 feet of land between high water mark and the cliff 120 feet high ; that is all the land there is there.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is the building with respect to the street that crosses the railway ?

Mr. TALBOT. South east of the railway station.

Mr. MORIN. 60 feet from the railway.

Mr. J. D. REID. Auger was employed at $3 a day. What was his occupation previously ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was an architect.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it the custom to pay for Sunday on all this work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We had a discussion on this on Friday. It has been a pretty general custom. I do not know over how many years the custom has extended, but it has been the general custom to pay inspectors for Sundays.

Mr. FOWLER. Did he reside in Quebec?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I think he resided in Lévis.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did he give his whole time to this building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I take it for granted he did.

Mr. J. D. REID. We would like to know. If he is a professional architect and will accept $3 a day and has the ability he should have, I think you should bring him to the department instead of paying architects $50 or $100 a day.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the building finished ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Everything is finished.

Mr. BERGERON. From what the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Morin) says it is very serious. It seems the building is shaky.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The member was indulging in figures of speech.

Mr. MORIN. I did not mean that, you say ? I do not blame the present minister but I do blame the government in connection with this matter. They have been 3½ years putting up the building, working for a while and then stopping, and if you paid your architect $3 a day for all the time it is no wonder the building is costing money. Any man can put up a building like that for $10,000 or $12,000. There is no fine work in the building, it is a brick building with stone trimmings around the doors and windows, two storeys high, with a kind of garret and a little tower, probably 50 feet high. I saw them putting in every stone and brick and all the work. The minister said that the wall was resting on concrete but will he state what the concrete rests upon ? He will find out some day that the concrete is not resting on anything solid.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to know if the statement of the hon. gentleman is true that the building——

Mr. MORIN. It is so or I would never say so. If I said it I will stick to it, because I know it to be correct. I will not take back a word of that.

Mr. J. D. REID. If that statement is true it is very serious. Has the department received any word from Quebec that that is the condition of affairs ? Who has taken the building over ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought my genial friend was joking about the building.

Mr. MORIN. No, I do not joke at all, it is not the place to joke.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect says he has inspected the building, that it is a good building, that the foundation rests on rock, so it is a solid foundation and the building will last.

Mr. BLAIN. Only last year the Minister of Agriculture stated to the House that the total cost would be $42,000. An item of $8,000 for Lévis public building was under discussion and he stated that $42,000 would finish the work. Now he states it will cost $49,000.

Mr. FOWLER. An hon. member from the province of Quebec has stated here to-night that this building rests upon a poor foundation, so poor that the building is already out of plumb at least four inches ; that it shifts with the tide or for some other reason ; that, to use the hon. member for Dorchester's (Mr. Morin) own words, it 'wobbles and warps.' Here is a building on which the government has spent $49,000, including some $7,000 for inspection alone. The government have paid two clerks of work, Mr. Mullarkey and Mr. Auger, one of whom is said to be an architect, paid them for week days and Sundays for about three years to inspect this work. And the chief architect says that he has examined this work and taken it over as all right. Well, here is a great variance of statement. An hon. member from the province of Quebec says he was present when a great deal of the work was done——

Mr. TALBOT. Has seen every brick put in.

Mr. MORIN. Even if I did, don't poke your nose in.

Mr. FOWLER. We hardly hold the hon. member for Dorchester to such exactness of statement as to cover every brick. But he has seen a good deal of the work going on. He lives near there and often sees this building, and taking an interest in public affairs, as we know he does, he naturally tries to learn what is being done. He makes this statement that this building is not founded on rock——

Mr. MORIN. No, I cannot say that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOWLER. I am glad to see hon. gentlemen opposite so jubilant. It is so seldom that they get a chance to jubilate nowadays that we naturally like to see them happy. The hon. gentleman stated that it was on a poor foundation. I took it for granted that that meant it was not upon a rock foundation, as the Minister of Public Works alleged it to be, and I think that that was a fair deduction for me to make from the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Morin's) statement. At any rate, he said—and I think he will stand by that—that it is a poor foundation.

Mr. MORIN. I do not know that anybody knows whether the foundation is good or bad, to come right down to the point.

Mr. FOWLER. There is certainly a variation as between the statement of the hon. member for Dorchester and that which the minister reports as the statement of the chief architect.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think not.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. member for Dorchester says the building is out of plumb, while the minister says it is well built. From the fact that so many public buildings put up by this government have fallen, we are naturally suspicious. These buildings collapse mysteriously. As the member for Dorchester has pointed out, even a building on a solid foundation and wedged in between two other parts of a building fell down, though one would naturally have said that such a thing would be impossible. It is no wonder that we incline to take the statements of the chief architect with a grain of salt.

Mr. MORIN. Last summer this building was supposed to be ready to move into. But they were repairing it and they were afraid of it falling down. They only moved in about six weeks ago. I know that perfectly well, because I was in the post office. I wanted to buy a stamp and the postmaster allowed me in, though he said they had not opened yet, but were only moving in that day.

Longueuil public building, $500.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is past one o'clock, and I would ask the leader of the House (Mr. Fielding) if he does not think it time to quit.

Mr. FIELDING. I have counted up the sums voted and the total is under $100,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) and the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) have taken up a great part of the evening——

Mr. FOWLER. Let us sit here as long as they wish.

Mr. FISHER. Sit a reasonable time. We will not stay late. Give us a fair show.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This $500 is to provide for the construction of a retaining wall in the rear of this building. It is 20 feet long, 8 feet high and 3 feet thick.

Mr. BERGERON. This is a new building, is it not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was built in 1904.

Mr. FOWLER. What do you want with a retaining wall? Is it to keep the building from falling down?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. What do you want with a retaining wall if it is not to retain something ?

Mr. GEOFFRION. It is necessary to build a wall at the rear of the grounds—it is far from the building and is not to sustain the building which is perfectly new, well built and a credit to the city and the government.

Mr. FOWLER. Then, it is a fence ?

Mr. GEOFFRION. Call it a fence, if you like.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister comes down and asks for a vote for a new public building, and now the representative of the county tells us it is a wharf——

Mr. GEOFFRION. No, a wall.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, wharf or wall, it is clearly not a public building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is in connection with a public building. The improvement of the grounds of a public building would come within these votes. As my hon. friend (Mr. Geoffrion) has explained, it is necessary to build a retaining wall to prevent the earth from falling out.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, the item should be amended to provide for building a wall and not a public building.

Mr. FOWLER. What will happen if you do not build the wall ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The earth on the lot will fall away.

Mr. GEOFFRION. There is a little rivulet passes there. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Léonard) know the place very well. It is necessary to build a wall to keep the ground even. It is not a wharf, nor a fence, but a wall.

Mr. LEONARD. Who owns the adjoining property ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know.

Mr. BERGERON. How much did the building cost in the first place ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no memo. of that.

Mr. FOWLER. Were tenders called for this work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, Mr. Baker was the tenderer and the tender was for $950.

Mr. FOWLER. I thought this wall was not to cost more than $500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was an appropriation in 1907-8 for $1,700, which included also a clock and room for the same.

Mr. BERGERON. That is paid for.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and there were other items making a total of $1,475. Prior to March 31, the expenditure was $975, leaving $500, for which a vote is now asked.

Mr. FOWLER. Did you have a clerk of works ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. Who inspected the job ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. One of the resident clerks of works in Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the work finished ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a little something still to be done.

Magog public building, $13,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote. The appropriation last year was $13,000, of which nothing has been expended. The site has been chosen, we paid for it $4,100, to Messrs. H. N. Rivard and A. Tourigny. The original lot was 100 feet by 8 feet, for which we paid $3,200. Later on there was purchased another strip from the town of Magog to round out the first lot. For the second strip we paid $900.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the total cost of the building when completed, including furnishings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The estimated cost is $22,000 ; this is to include everything outside the lot.

Marieville public building, $7,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is in the county of Rouville. The population of Marieville, including Ste. Marie de Monnoir, is 2,360. The contract has not yet been let. The building will serve for a post office and custom house. The postal revenue for the last nine months was $1,020, and the customs duties $10,939.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. Supply, at the point where we leave it to-night.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.30 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 28, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

DOMINION NOTES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 159) respecting a certain issue of Dominion notes. He said: This is a Bill to legalize and confirm the proceedings which were taken, and were fully explained in the Budget Speech, in connection with advances for moving western grain. The matter was fully stated in the Budget Speech. This Bill only legalizes and confirms the arrangement so made.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FIELDING moved leave to introduce a Bill (No. 160) to amend the Bank Act. He said: This Bill I may say, is also for the purpose of carrying out an arrangement which was explained in the Budget Speech. It is proposed that the banks, during a certain period of the year, may issue additional circulation limited to fifteen per cent of their combined paid up capital and rest or reserve. The only new feature in the Bill is that special provision is made as respects the Bank of British North America, because there is a special provision for that in the Bank Act, differing somewhat in a matter of detail from the other banks, and corresponding provisions are inserted in this Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask the minister if there is any correspondence on which the introduction of this Bill is based, and if there is, will he be kind enough to bring it down before he goes on?

Mr. FIELDING. There is no correspondence. The Bill is the result of consideration in the department and of discussion with distinguished bankers; but there is no correspondence on the subject.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE—AMENDMENT.

Mr. A. M. BEAUPARLANT (St. Hyacinthe) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 161) to amend the Criminal Code. He said:

(Translation). Mr. Speaker, I beg to submit the following amendment to the Criminal Code, chap. 146, revised statutes, 1906, section 322.

Mr. FIELDING.

Section 322a.—Notwithstanding clauses 165 and 607 of this chapter and all laws, jurisprudence, authorities, courts rulings, order or decree of the court, of a judge, or judges, no one commits an offence by publishing in good faith, outside of the court either by writing, printing or words, an exact or lawful report of the arguments before a court of justice, exercising judicial authority in a preliminary or definite manner, ordinary or summarized, of the decisions of a judge or judges, neither in publishing honest or loval comamnds of these arguments or proceedings.

322b.—No one commits an offence by publishing in writing, printing or words, outside of courts when accused of contempt of court without having an ordinary trial by a jury, if the accused party asks himself or by a counsel for it, and this privilege must be proposed to the accused party by the court or by the judge.

The object of the legislation which I submit to-day to this House is to explain in a clearer and more definite manner than they seem to be presently, the rights of the press in connection with the courts.

The words 'hors de cour' show clearly that there is no intention of intervening in the procedures before the courts of justice, which will continue to have the exclusive control of them and to possess all the necessary powers to exercise their duties that are not only useful and necessary but that cannot be done away with. And in this case, the standing of the courts is clearly established by definite enactments, which are in no way affected by the proposed legislation, for instance:

Section 908, of the Criminal Code, of 1892-1900, which is contained in section 607, chap. 146, revised statutes, 1896, Taschereau, under the heading 'arrest without warrant for contempt of court,' page 623, of his Criminal Code of 1893, and whose able commentaries are generally considered as lost.

Crankshaw in his 'Practical Guide to Magistrates' on page 36, under the heading: 'Powers to maintain and to commit for contempt' goes further in admitting without any hesitation the principal, always doubtful, that party cannot be at the same time judge, when he says: 'there are cases in which circumstances of such a character arise that it becomes the unfortunate duty of the Court to act as both party and judge.' The whole being supported by numerous precedents.

Section 2452 of the revised statutes of Quebec, section 18 of our 'Code de procédure civile, applying generally in reference to general legislation have connection with section 908 of the Criminal Code, and also the corresponding legislation of the other provinces to which section 908 of the Criminal Code also applies.

I point principally in these quotations to the legislations of 2892 and 1900, and to the corresponding precedent legislation; because it is under this legislation that has been framed the jurisprudence which I wish to summarize and that in this case is not amended.

Therefore, the present proposed legislation will in no way change the existing laws on these points, and will give to every court the necessary power for the accomplishment of their duties without any other control than the control of the legislatures under whose jurisdiction they are.

The question is to regulate what you might call outside relation in a clear and equivocal manner between the press and the courts.

A judge is on the bench or in chamber, the tribunal is complete or has the necessary quorum and has full liberty without any other control than Parliament to decide what they think proper, but I believe that the absoluteness of that power should end at the door of the court, and then the citizen and the journalists would have the right to say in the press and on the public platform what they know and what they think of the decisions of the court, without any other limit than the truth.

Judiciary decisions belong just as much to public opinion as legislated and administrated enactments in a country where not only in theory but in practice, the people have a right to know what is being done.

This is a principle which I think it is desirable to establish in Canada, and would very well suit our society already, under so many aspects, guided by liberal principles.

Then what is the legislation regulating presently these relations between the press and the judges ?

Clause 290, of the Criminal Code, of 1892-1900, given in the Revised Statutes of 1906, in chapter 146, reads thus:

> 390. No one commits an offence by publishing in good faith for the information of the public a fair report of the proceedings of the Senate or House of Commons or any committee thereof, or of any counsel or assembly aforesaid, or any committee thereof, or of the public proceedings preliminary or final heard before any court exercising judicial authority, nor by publishing in good faith, any fair comment upon any such proceeding.

This section would be satisfactory, and if it were not lacking an indispensable thing, that is the way of proceeding and regulating its application, and if, on account of that, the legislator added to it something intolerable, jurisprudence inacceptable to seciety, democratic society like ours.

These remarks which might at first seem strange, will become very clear if I prove in a moment, and I bind myself to do it, that under this legislation apparently liberal, the courts have ordered the imprisonment of journalists, not in a preventive manner, but by final judgment, and when these journalists have never had the advantage of a regular trial.

The object of the two amendments which I propose is to restrain, limit this jurisprudence and prevent the courts from substituting their own will to that of parliament representing the people, and also, if there has been really abuses, such as those which I mentioned, I hope that a legislation whose object is to prevent them, will be favourably considered by parliament composed in majority of Liberal members.

The decisions which I will quote have all been given after the adoption of the laws concerning libel, which legislation undoubtedly applies to courts as to other institutions and individuals, and though this legislation has somewhat varied in its form, to render it more explicit, there has not been any substantial change in its essence, so that these decisions might just as well come under the present law as under the original law under which the truthfulness of the facts published for the information of the public was accepted as a ground for defence. But though admitting this principle of the right of defence based upon the truthfulness of the facts, some judges have rendered the judgments which will be quoted hereafter.

Our law confirm this principle by clauses 5, 6 and 7 of chapter 38 of the statute of 1874, by clause 4 of chapter 163 of the Revised Statutes of 1886. I prefer to give the calendar year rather than the year of the reign, because it is clear—and finally by the clause more explicit of the Criminal Code of 1892, 1900 under number 290 and re-enacted as I have said, at chapter 146 of the Revised Statutes of 1906. And on the 25th of February, 1888, consequently under this legislation of 1874 and 1886, Judge Allen, chief justice of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, from what we read at page 394 of the 28th volume of the reports of the court, admitted this same principle in the case of Hawke, when saying :

> It was contended by Mr. Hawke that he, as a public journalist, had right to comment upon the acts and decisions of this court or of any judge of it. I do not dispute that.

Nevertheless this decision was not in conformity with the accepted principle.

At page 399 of the same report, and in this same case of Hawke, we notice that Judge Palmer, a colleague of Judge Allen, said :

> On the contrary, I think that any man has a perfect right to criticise and discuss the administration of justice as evidenced by the proceedings before him.

But indirect ways are resorted to; an act which is considered to be within the liberty of the press is condemned. But the condition of the condemned party is not benefited by the only fact of changing the label of the sentence. The duty of the court is to apply the laws, not to make them.

Thus, when the courts make these laws delusive, parliaments under whose authority they come have the right to intervene by enacting a clear legislation and this is what I propose now.

Finally Judge Cockburn having very liberal views on this question makes in his comuments upon the Imperial Statute of 1908, which is yet more restrictive than ours, the very appropriate following remarks :

Our law of libel has, in many respects, only gradually developed itself into anything like a satisfactory and settled form. The full liberty of public writers to comment on the conduct and motives of public men has only in very recent times been recognized. Comments on government, on ministers and officers of state, on members of both Houses of Parliament, on judges and other public functionaries are now made every day, which half a century ago would have been the subject of actions or ex-officio informations, and would have brought down fine and imprisonment on publishers and authors.

In conclusion judge Cockburn says :

The nation profits by public opinion being thus freely brought to bear on the discharge of public duties.

Thus, we have, it seems to me, a legislation as clearly admitted as it is surely in existence.

I pointed out, on beginning my remarks, that the law was silent upon the mode of procedure for applying this legislation. In fact, we have only clause 4 of chap. 174, of the Revised Statutes of 1886 forbidding any court, except a Superior Court having a criminal jurisdiction, to enquire into a case of libel. I could add that as far as 1783, in England, the case of Saint Asalph for libel was tried under the jury, and that Fox's Libel Act, which became law nine years later, enacted clearly that all cases for libel would be tried by a jury.

It should be astonishing that after a period of more than 100 years, during which we must have progressed, as says Judge Cockburn, we are yet obliged to let a case of libel being disposed of, even when it relates to judicial authority, without the always prudent safeguard of a jury.

I could even quote the federal law of the United States which is in the lines of my resolution, but as this is only the first reading, I will limit myself in quoting two sections of the American law which support almost verbally my theory, that is to say, clause 143, 7th paragraph of the criminal law of the state of New York, which says:

But no person can be punished as provided in this section for publishing a true, full and fair report of a trial, argument, decision, or other proceedings had in court.

Next, the following, of the state of Pennsylvania, which we find at page 302 of the 12th edition of the Brighty's Purdon Digest, vol. 1, verbo contempt :

No publication, out of court, respecting the conduct of the judges, officers of the court, jurors, witnesses, parties, or any of them, of, in or concerning any cause depending in such court, shall be construed into a contempt of the said court, so as to render the author, printer, publisher, or either of them, liable to attachment and summary punishment for the same.

If any such publication shall improperly tend to bias the minds of the public, or of the court, the officers, jurors, witnesses, or any of them, on a question depending before the court, it shall be lawful for any person who shall feel himself aggrieved thereby, to proceed against the author, printer and publisher thereof, or either of them, by indictment, or he may bring an action at law against them, or either of them, and recover such damages as a jury may think fit to award.

Well, notwithstanding this legislation and the precedents, what has happened in Canada since twenty-five years ?

On the 25th of February, 1888, Mr. J. T. Hawke, editor and proprietor of the 'Daily Transcript' of Moncton, was, not after a trial before a jury, but under a simple ruling of the court, condemned to be imprisoned for having published his opinion upon Judge Fraser of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, as it can be seen at pages 391 and the following of the 28th volume of the reports of that court.

I have been, Mr. Speaker, greatly mistaken upon the meaning of the word 'democracy' if such a decision of the court is in keeping with democratic ideas and with justice.

On the 11th of June, 1889, without any form of trial and under a simple ruling of the court, Mr. John V. Ellis, publisher and editor of the 'St. John Globe,' was also condemned to imprisonment for having published in his paper what he thought of Judge Tuck, of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, on the ground of a contempt of court, by the colleagues of Judge Tuck, as can be seen at page 497 of the same volume. The fact that Mr. John V. Ellis was a most respectable citizen who, some time afterwards was called to the Higher Chamber of Canada, did not entitle him to more respect than another citizen, every citizen being equal before the law. But when the law strikes a respectable citizen every one is naturally inclined to look more precisely into the causes of disgrace or into the justice of the penalty.

A fact worth noticing in the case of Hawke is that Judge Tuck concurred in the judgment of his colleague Judge Fraser, and that in the case of Ellis, Judge Fraser concurred in the judgment avenging his colleague Judge Tuck.

There is no doubt that the judges in these cases have vindicated themselves, but can we say that the ordinary citizen has had justice? And that is a very important fact to know, because citizens are more numerous than judges.

Where then was the authorization for such imprisonment, without any consultation of the juries or of the fellowmen of the accused party? The best answer I can give lies in the remarks of one of the judges coprating in the judgment, judge King's remarks which we find at page 530 of the same report :

> We are not to look for analogies in other proceedings because in cases of contempt, the court may act of its own mere motion ; and if it acts upon a formal motion made by another it is none the less the action of the court. In such case the court may be considered as adopting the motion so made. Unless proceedings are regulated by statute or unless clear, well settled practice has made a certain procedure essential to the proper entertaining of a matter, the true course is to disregard technicalities and to come at close quarters with the real facts.

Well, I think that proposed legislation is clear enough to prevent the repetition of arbitrary acts such as those which I just mentioned. We may also remark, without taking any concern as to the truthfulness or untruthfulness of the facts, that the following theory has been sanctioned in this case of Hawke :

> It is a contempt of course to publish that the decision of the court in a case pending before it is judicial outrage and a most disgraceful judicial scandal.

Then in the case of Ellis the following principle was professed:

> 1. It is not necessary, to constitute a contempt of court, that the contempt should be made in court, or that it should be a contempt of a judge sitting in court.
> 2. That while the proceedings relating to the prohibition were pending it was a contempt of court to publish anything tending to prejudice the court by which the matter was to be determined against the party who had applied for the prohibition.

Well, I protest specifically and principally against the first of these two principles. I propose then that it be necessary that the contempt should be made in court, to constitute a contempt, and that the judges should be no longer authorized to condemn for any writing or words published out of court, and must content themselves with the ordinary laws as other citizens, political men included.

Well, even since the very liberal clause 290 of the law, 1892-1900, a judge of the King's Bench in Montreal ordered the arrestation of a journalist in his office and in about three-quarters of an hour's time, the journalist was imprisoned. During the same period the judge of a rural district of the province of Quebec threatened of a similar punishment a citizen, lawyer, member of parliament, who has since been appointed judge, and who was at that time a member of a board of trade, who was indisputably interested in the administration of the law, because this citizen had thought proper to discuss before this deliberating body, the manner in which the judge of this rural district was interpreting his commission and performing his duties as a judge

Judges Bossy and Blanchet have also, I understand, during the famous trial of 1892, threatened to imprison the journalists taking sides for the defence.

A similar conflict happened in Halifax last week. A lawyer was fined $50 and obliged to apologize, or if not, to be imprisoned. But as I have not an authentic report of the facts, and have not been able to verify as to whether the incriminated action has been accomplished in the court or outside of the court, I will not make any comments.

Finally, honourable Judge Lemieux, of Quebec, has just issued against le 'Soleil' an order which has created a great deal of sensation in the judiciary and journalistic circles. I have for Honourable Judge Lemieux the greatest esteem. I have always admired him in his career as a lawyer, as a public man, and as a judge. I cannot, however, approve of his attitude towards the 'Soleil,' but I will render him the justice of saying that, to my mind, his decision was authorized by preceding judiciary decisions which ought to be modified in the sense of the proposed amendments. I cannot also fail to praise the energetic stand taken by the 'Soleil' in face of this judiciary threatening. And we would in vain search in this rather expeditive proceeding half a minute given to discussing the truthfulness of the accusation.

It is not now necessary to examine the merits of these conflicts arising between judicial authorities and those who, outside of court, take the liberty to comment upon them. The question for the moment is to know if the way of settling these conflicts will always be arbitrary and if, out of court, the press will be on an equal footing with the courts, and to these two questions I will answer: yes.

We justly praise the democratic and liberal institutions that we enjoy in Canada. The old rigorous and puritan laws of Europe, France or England, have taken more root in certain parts of the United States than in Canada, but we must admit that our neighbours are more opposed than we are to perpetuating the power titles, coat of arms which notwithstanding the storms, always tend to revive. Our sparsely settled population does not tend neither to tighten the meshes of our legislation, so that to-day, with the exception of the fact that we are still a colony, although a self-governing colony, and having the advantage of a most liberal constitution, we may truthfully say that Canada is one of the countries and perhaps the only country in the world where the citizen enjoys the fullest measure of liberty, and that, in the midst of a society as fully organized as possible to protect what deserves to be protected.

We must not allow this beneficent state of things which is the result of long and ardous work, political and legislative, to be marred by arbitrary acts and abuses of authority creeping by stealth in our legislative and judiciary proceedings.

The tendency of powers is always to grow stronger, even to exceed the necessary limits for their efficacy which should be their sole justification. Experience shows, and it is in the human nature, that if a cast is allowed to take privileges, it will take more than its share. But a people, taking care of its legitimate liberties, must, through its representatives, not allow that this should be lost sight of, that is to say, that the judiciary or other institutions, paid and well paid by the people, do exist only for the needs of the people and not for the satisfaction of what might be called everywhere else individual caprices, a thing which is opposed to all public interest.

The House has undoubtedly noticed that the doctrine sanctioned by the precedents I have quoted, applies as well to the verbal comments of a legislative assembly, on the hustings and even in the ordinary conversation, as to the comments of newspapers, so that in presence of this jurisprudence, which no late legislation has yet changed, I contend that a judge may, proprio motu, order the arrestation of a mayor or alderman or a member of a board of trade, or a warden of a county and principally of a newspaper publisher or any other citizen, by whom he would justly or wrongly claim to have been insulted outside of court, and put him into jail by his authority.

I assert here that, previously to the late incidents which have occurred at Quebec and Halifax, 99 per 100 of the population of Canada did not realize that our laws still contained enactments authorizing such things. If my interpretation of this jurisprudence is right, and I would be glad to hear that I am mistaken, I hope that my proposal of applying a remedy will be favourably considered by a Liberal government.

I am not afraid of the answer which will be made, that is to say, that the courts being the guardians of the individual rights should have all the possible latitude, or other arguments of the same kind. First, besides the extraordinary powers, which I say they do not possess, the courts have all the necessary liberty of attaining their legitimate end, and we must not forget that an absolue and arbitrary power is always claimed to have the greatest solicitude for public liberties in order to more surely substitute itself to the laws, to constitutional and democratic authority, to which the people who loves at the same time order and liberty, will only bow.

It is more by the article itself than by the label that it is possible to judge of its real value. The authority which imprisons cannot at the first sight, be looked upon as protecting liberty, and it is only after we have been able to test the ordinary elements and guarantees of justice that we can come to this conclusion, I therefore ask that the party who comments a judicial decision should not be in a worse position than the one who criticizes any action of the government or parliament. Arbitrary power has no more right to be in the midst than at the head of society. The autocracy of a person who, by his talents or through circumstances, becomes a constituted authority, is not any more tolerable than the hereditary autocracy.

The head of a constitutional government administers practically the country under the most direct and vigilant control of the press, and I do not see why the magistrate would not perform, under the same conditions, the judiciary functions which are assigned to him.

There were judges before any printing establishments ever existed. I know that the press is younger than the bench and older than parliaments, but nevertheless we see parliaments controlling now, if not in reality, at least in theory, the courts of which they have come to be the creators and masters. For these matters as for others, the supremacy must be decided more by the nature of their functions than by their age, and the press which has opened the ways to democratic governments now the creators and masters of the courts, should be at least on equal footing with the courts.

I therefore ask for the journalist, who may have his wrongs and may make errors —and I know something about it, but we have all the necessary laws to repress that —for the journalist, I repeat, who fulfils an undisputable, useful and courageous mission, the same privilege that is given in this very old law, to an accused party, of being tried by a jury of his fellowmen.

When an unknown individual, who has however equal rights with other citizens, an immigrant or a vagrant isaccused of a crime, the law orders, and it is a just and prudent law, to try him only with a jury of twelve citizens unprejudiced and having no interest or relation whatever with him. Then why should we leave the right of rendering judgment to a man who has been, or claims to have been insulted by another, a journalist, for instance, who is obliged by clauses 2924 and the following ones of the Quebec statutes and of corresponding legislation in other provinces to give his address to the courts and in some way keep them acquainted with his business and profession ? I say it is an anomaly which, after the incidents that have occurred in Quebec and Halifax, will not fail to call the attention of the democratic governor whom we have at the head of the country, and whose desire is not only to have in his programme the words 'justice and liberty' which sound well to the ears of the people, but something that will represent really the treatment of the people.

The liberty of the press is the exact thermometer of the liberty of the nation. It is by the book, by the pamphlet, by printed matter, and finally by the press that the absolutism of the past has been destroyed, and that constitutional and democratic governments have been established in this modern society, and it is also by the press that they will be maintained there. It is not only a question of gratefulness and justice towards the press, but a question of safeguard for these popular institutions which modern nations do not seem to depart from. A former Minister of Public Works, (Mr. Tarte), who had a great knowledge of our Canadian constitution, and has applied it at times in a happy manner, never feared to say that the press was just as solid an institution as the bench.

By his broad views, by his examples of tolerance and equal justice to all, the government of the day seemed to have inspired the same sentiments to our magistrates, who, up to the last conflicts at Quebec and Halifax, have shown themselves more tolerant than arbitrary, but it seems as though it were not to be always so. Those of our colleagues who have kept the memory of the incidents of 1892, and they are numerous, will do me the justice of saying that I am right.

The prime minister of a province had just been dismissed by an authority—not the authority of the people—but an authority acting in connection with a libellous campaign, the parallel of which has never been met with in this country. Those who have maintained against him their undaunted hostility, have persisted in denying to him the credit that he had deserved; but the public opinion, having returned to a sober sense of the circumstances, has emphatically admitted his great administrative capacity, his intense care for substantial and moral progress of the people, his great patriotic motives, his disinterestedness, his high citizenship, and his unrivalled generosity. Nothing was proved against him. He suffered the punishment of the vanquished, and bore the rancors of the winning party. The leader who seems to have survived this coup d'état, only to remain a living example of frailty of politics, had destroyed a public man; the ministers he had chosen, and who, shortly after, incurred the same fate, undertook to ruin this man in his private life, he was dragged before the courts and accused of malfesance in office. A judge in whose impartiality the public opinion, in its state of temporarily excitement, did not even place full confidence, was called to preside at the trial, and nobody could expect but a complete dishonour for the fallen statesman.

His opponents held the majority in the Senate, where the movement had originated. They also were the majority in the House of Commons, in the legislative council, in the legislative assembly, amongst the magistrates, and also amongst the public officials who, through sympathy or tactics, had joined the accusers, and this man who previously was endowed with an unlimited power, found himself surrounded by a mere handful of individual sympathizers, unable to put himself in touch with the people otherwise than by the medium of the public press.

In spite of the doubtful protection afforded by the existing legislation, the press manfully fulfilled its duty. The aforesaid judge rose from the bench; another one against whose public feeling was not aroused to the same extent, took up his place, and, notwithstanding the existing agitation, a unanimous verdict of acquittal was rendered. It behooves the liberal party to restore in behalf of the accused, whatsoever may be his social standing, or his political condition, the liberty of the press, as a guarantee of justice, in public as well as in private matters.

If good treatment received can repay for some slight injure, I have nothing, so far as the press or the courts are concerned, to thank or to grudge for.

The press has sometimes acted too generously towards me; sometimes also too unjustly. I have good friends among the newspaper men, and also more enemies than on the bench. Outside of the judicial decisions, which are not now under discussion, I have faced kind judges, and also some others not acting with an equal kindness. Those who would not be disposed to agree with me on this point, will readily admit that in this contest my personal interest would rather prompt me to side with the bench, which can reach me as a politician and as a lawyer, than with the press whose influence is purely political.

From my seat here I could easily and safely denounce the miserable individual who in a certain newspaper, acting as the mere tool of another individual well known for long to be my personal enemy. That stand I refuse to take.

I will also give the judges the credit that they have a very difficult task to perform, and also, that as a whole, they are generally men of talent, learning and good will, but I am not speaking at present for my own concern. I am a Liberal, I have been elected as a Liberal. I believe the said legislation to be based on Liberal and public motives. Such were the grounds upon which I introduced this Bill, which. I am afraid, will not reach an issue during the present session, on account of the advanced stage already attained in our work, but, I confidently believe it to be my duty, to call the attention of Parliament and government, on the state of affairs arising from the recent incidents in Ottawa and in Quebec, for the citizens of the province of Quebec and of Canada as a whole. Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the first reading of this Bill.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny.) (Translation). Mr. Speaker, it is not customary to discuss a Bill on its first reading, but, as the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Beauparlant) has just stated it, the session is now so far advanced that it is not probable that such question could be threshed before the end of our work. Such being the case, I consider it my duty to say a few words now.

I was very happy to hear my hon. friend discuss that question of relations between the press and the bench. I imagined for a time that I was listening to the attenuated echo of the voices from the old Liberals of St. Hyacinthe. unheard for so long a time.

The Bill introduced by the hon. member appears to me, to effectively inscribe in our code the old custom granting the unlucky pleader twenty-four hours to curse his judge. This Bill seems to me to be admittedly inspired by recent events. It leads to prevent a judge from calling before the court a journalist having taken upon himself to criticize the court incidents, or the decisions of the judge.

In principle, I agree with him, but, a special clause of the criminal code, and of the revised statutes, allows the newspapers to impartially report the proceedings before the courts, to give what is called a fair comment. Such newspaper articles of comment are privileged, and the writers and publishers of the same are not amenable, and the judge cannot assign them before the court.

But, if the Bill goes further, and permits during the trial to comment on what is passing on, I disagree. The existing law tends to protect not only the judge, but also the accused. For instance, not very long ago, a newspaper man had been dragged before the jury, and on this occasion, we have seen a certain press through fiery writings, try to raise public opinion during the trial, so as to influence the jury before rendering its verdict. At the time of the famous suit Prévost-Asselin, we have seen le "Soleil" inflaming the public opinion against the accused, Asselin.

If the Bill introduced to-day tends to permit the publication in a newspaper of such articles, apt to injure the defence of the accused, and to stir up the public opinion against him, I cannot support it.

As the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe has said, this Bill was suggested by recent events. Have we not seen, among other newspapers, the 'Soleil,' which is to-day complaining of Judge Lemieux—because it is assigned for contempt of court—comment disparagingly on the speech of this same judge, which, judicially acting, had pressed the bar of Quebec to insist on the nomination of a prothonotary to the seat vacant for the last twelve months ? If it is right to have the public respected, it is equally right to defend the bench against such attacks.

Moreover, I believe that it should be allowed to comment the judgments rendered, provided public opinion is interested in the same and the writer is a disinterested person. But my opinion is that in such cases, the writer should shoulder the responsibility of his opinion. For my part, I have commented in the newspaper some judgments, for instance in the case of Judge Cimon, whom I have accused of having condemned a newspaper man, without having heard the evidence of the defence. In so doing, I know the whole import of my act, and I was ready then, as I am to-day, to assume the whole responsibility incurred. According to my mind, the Bill introduced by the member for St. Hyacinthe, should be amended in such a way as to prevent a newspaper man to make any comments during the course of a trial, on the outcome of the case, before the same is adjudged. I consider that we should maintain in our laws, the right granted to the judge, to call before the court, any newspaper man violating this provision. But, after the trial, he should not be called before the court, except according to the ordinary course of law. On general principle, I agree with the present Bill, and I hope that some day it will become law.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—MAJOR HODGINS' CHARGES.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, I renew the motion which I made yesterday and I renew it with the amendment suggested by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). The amendment is quite proper as it introduces and refers to the committee the letters themselves of Major Hodgins and not extracts only of those letters. Therefore I move :

That the memorandum of the chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners to the Prime Minister, of date the 23rd April, and laid on the table of this House on the 24th instant, and the papers accompanying the same together with the letter of Major Hodgins to the public press, therein referred to, be referred to a special committee of five members, with instructions to investigate the matters and charges therein mentioned, and that the said committee be composed of Messrs. Carvel, Macdonald (Pictou), Geoffrion, Barker and Lennox, and that the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records and to examine persons on oath or affirmation and to report from time to time.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—MR. JUSTICE CASSELS.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, might I inquire of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when it is expected that the proposed inquiry before Mr. Justice Cassels will be commenced, whether it will be proceeded with without delay, or is some adjournment contemplated and is the inquiry to be conducted as a public inquiry, or is it to be an inquiry in camera?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I am informed that it is going to begin on Friday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it to be continued ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Whether it is going to be in public or not I do not know.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it to be continued?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know. I know it is going to begin on Friday. I heard that it was going to sit on Friday and Saturday. That is all the information I have.

Mr. BERGERON. Who suggested that lawyers should be appointed to carry on the investigation? Did the suggestion come from Judge Cassels or anybody else?

Mr. BRODEUR. In an interview which I had with the judge he thought it would be desirable that some lawyers should be employed for the purpose of assisting him in the investigation.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister inform the House as to the ground upon which the two lawyers who have been selected have been selected?

Mr. BRODEUR. If there are any special grounds?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, not that I know of. They are men of repute and that is the only reason why they have been selected.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Mr. Speaker, I desire to rise to a question of privilege. I notice that the other day I was credited with a remark concerning a comparison between Doukhobors and some religious order in Ottawa. It is bad enough for me to be responsible for all I really do say, but on that occasion I happened to be some hundreds of miles or more away when the remarks were uttered and I do not desire to be associated with them.

Mr. T. BEATTIE (London). Mr. Speaker, some ten or twelve days ago, at Wolseley barracks in the city of London, a foul murder was committed. Private Moir shot down a colour-sergeant without cause or reason in cold blood.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is not the proper time to enter upon a discussion. The motion to go into Supply will be reached shortly and then the hon. gentleman may bring the matter up.

Mr. BEATTIE. I only want to ask if the government had heard of it. However, I will bring it up later.

SUPPLY—MURDER AT WOLSELEY BARRACKS, LONDON.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BEATTIE. After committing the murder Private Moir obtained two revolvers and a rifle and a large quantity of ammunition and he disappeared from the barracks and has not been heard of since. The police of London have done their best to discover and apprehend the man, but he has got away into the country and the county constables are somewhat indifferent about attempting to arrest a man who is heavily armed in the manner in which this man is, and I do not think that they have given the matter the attention that they should have. I think that if some moderate reward were offered for the capture of this man he would very likely be obtained. The gentleman whom he murdered was not a member of his corps at all. He was a colour-sergeant named Lloyd belonging to the 20th battalion of Stratford and he was only there taking a course of instruction in order to pass an examination which would qualify him to occupy a position in his regiment—a young man of twenty-two years. It is a very serious case and I think that something should be done by the government in the way of offering a moderate reward for his capture.

Mr. BERGERON. What kind of a rifle has he to defend himself with?.

Mr. BEATTIE. That I do not know.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—MR. JUSTICE CASSELS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer briefly to a matter which I mentioned a moment ago—the inquiry to be conducted by Mr. Justice Cassels and the manner in which that inquiry is to be carried out. We all realize that the inquiry is a very restricted one inasmuch as it relates to a portion of the administration and to only one of the departments involved in the report of the Civil Service Commission. It touches only a single paragraph of the report of the commissioners in respect to that department. I have already pointed out to the House that it would have seemed a natural thing to have endeavoured, in the first place, to obtain from the commissioners who had made that report the information which is sought by the inquiry before Mr. Justice Cassels. The commissioners who have made a somewhat exhaustive inquiry, although they say it is incomplete even in the case of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, would seem to be the best men from whom an explanation of the language contained in the paragraph referred to might be sought. As far as the House is aware the government have not sought from these commissioners any explanation of their language, nor have the government invoked the aid of these commissioners for the purpose of obtaining the information which naturally they might be expected to supply. The government have not admitted at all the expediency of sending back the report to the same commissioners for the purpose of reporting at greater length upon a subject to which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) called attention on the day the report was presented. The government have not even seen fit to propose an inquiry under the first part of the statutes relating to public inquiries. They have proposed a very limited inquiry into the second part of the statute which relates to such subjects. Since the inquiry has been ordered it is proposed that Mr. G. H. Watson, of Toronto, and Mr. Perron, of Montreal, two members of the bar of their respective provinces, shall be assigned for the purpose of assisting Mr. Justice Cassels in the very limited inquiry which he is to carry out. I asked the government whether or not the commissioners, whose report is, to a certain extent at least, under review in these proceedings, were to have any status before that commission, whether they were to be represented by counsel or whether their aid was to be invoked in the matter. Up to the present time no information has been vouchsafed in reply to that question. My hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) inquired of the government whether or not the people of Canada were to be represented by counsel. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), in reply to that question, stated that the matter would be taken into consideration. Up to the present time we have no reply from the government on that point.

It seems quite clear from this reply of the Prime Minister that he very properly regards the gentlemen who have been appointed as not representing the people of Canada, and the situation seems to be very much like this: The Department of Marine and Fisheries is on trial in respect to its administration of public affairs within the jurisdiction of that department; the government on well known constitutional principles is also on trial because its fate is to a greater or lesser extent involved in the result of the investigation, and two gentlemen both of whom are very prominent Liberals have been appointed to assist Mr. Justice Cassels in that investigation. Now, if I remember rightly, in 1891 when an investigation was carried on in respect of the Department of Public Works the government of Canada employed Mr. B. B. Osler, who was affiliated with the Liberal party and not with the Conservative party, as one of the counsel to investigate that matter and to probe it to the bottom.

Mr. BERGERON. And Mr. Geoffrion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) reminds me of what I was not aware that Mr. Geoffrion, of Montreal, who was also prominently associated with the Liberal party and who afterwards became a member of this government, was also appointed a counsel on that occasion. There is another somewhat remarkable circumstance in connection with this matter and it is this: We have had from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on more than one occasion, the suggestion, or the excuse or the apology put forward that certain matters which had received criticism in connection with the administration of his department were matters for which he was not individually or personally responsible according to his view, because they had been initiated or consummated as the case may be under the administration of his immediate predecessor. And it appears that one of the gentlemen who has been appointed as counsel in this connection to assist Mr. Justice Cassels was for many years a partner in the practice of the law with the immediate predecessor of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. One can hardly appreciate or understand the reasons which have impelled the government to make selections of that character. One would suppose that if the aid of the first commissioners, Messrs. Courtney, Fyshe and Bazin was invoked they at least would have been called upon to make a statement before Mr. Justice Cassels, and that counsel would have been supplied to be nominated by these commissioners to whom they could have given the information and whom they could have instructed as to the matters which they had reported on. One would suppose further, that if that very reasonable course were not adopted the government would at least have endeavoured to appoint men who had not been very actively associated with the Liberal party, who were not very closely in touch with the organization of the Liberal party; in short they would not have selected two men, one of whom Mr. Watson was I understand not very long ago chairman of the Liberal organization for the province of Ontario, and the other of whom, Mr. Perron was during the lifetime of the predecessor of the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries the partner of that gentleman in the practice of the law. Under these circumstances it is no more than right to bring the matter to the attention of the government and ask whether or not these commissioners are to be represented by counsel, whether or not the people of Canada are to be represented by counsel; and why it is that so extraordinary a choice of gentlemen to assist Mr. Justice Cassels has been made.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I may say at once that so far as the government is concerned nothing will be done to prevent this investigation being as thorough and as extended as possible. As head of that department I have every interest to see that the investigation shall be as complete as it can be. In the very brief interview I had with Judge Cassels the other day I told him that my aim was that officers of the department who had been derelict in their duty should not be spared, and that the cloud on those officers who were not guilty should be removed as speedily as possible. I may say—perhaps my hon. friend will not believe me—but the fact is that I am thoroughly in earnest about this investigation. I want to see the investigation made in such a way that no blame shall be attached to the government or to myself as head of the department as to its precedure. I want to see this investigation conducted in such a way that the people of Canada may be satisfied that the intention of the government and of the department is to make the investigation absolutely right in all respects. I repeat it —I am perhaps more in earnest than he is in wishing that this investigation shall be as thorough as possible. Now, the hon. gentleman finds fault that the investigation is to be held under the second part of chapter 104, but I think there was no discretion for us in the matter. The first part of the statute deals with investigations as to certain public affairs generally, such as the investigation held by the Civil Service Commission, but when we came to a departmental inquiry the statute says it is to be made under the second part of that statute. Whether the investigation is held under the first part or under the second part it can be conducted in absolutely the same way ; it can be as thorough in one case as in the other. It appears to be plain that when the investigation is into a matter of general public interest it comes under the first part of the statute and when it is a departmental investigation it is brought under the second part.

Mr. SPROULE. That would imply there is no public interest in this investigation.

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, no. The statute determines the class of investigation that shall be held under each part. An inquiry affecting our commerce, or our transportation, or as to combines, would be under the first part of the statute, but a departmental investigation is to be made under the second part of the statute, and after all it really does not make very much difference.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the minister to say that if it related to a matter which concerned the public it should be made under the first part of the statute, and if it were a matter that only concerned the department it was to be made under the second part of the statute. Therefore it occurred to me that if it were made under the second part it implied that the public had no interest in it.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no doubt the public is interested, but I am not the author of the law, and the statute makes this distinction, and under the advice of the Minister of Justice this is the part of the statute under which the investigation should be held. The investigation will however be held just in the same way no matter which it comes under ; witnesses will be examined under oath and the procedure will be the same. My hon. friend says no effort has been made to try to ascertain the opinion of the commission. Well, I suppose that would be a matter for the commissioners themselves to dispose of. It is not for us to suggest to the judge the way in which he should proceed. I want to leave him absolutely free to act as he lkes in this investigation. I would not wish to make any suggestion to him which might be interpreted as restricting him in the exercise of his powers. I repeat that we want this investigation to be thorough ; and if I were to make any suggestion to the judge as to the way in which he should conduct the investigation, I might be reproached by the House with interfering with something that I should not interfere with. The commission gives to the judge the right to investigate this matter, and he is absolutely free, so far as the government or the department are concerned, to act in the way he likes ; and that is the position I will take all through this investigation. My hon. friend says that in several instances I have tried to shield myself behind my predecessor. I can assure my hon. friend that there is no intention of that kind on my part. I have never so far done anything, and never will do anything, to shield myself from any responsibility which attaches to me as Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I am manly enough to act as a man should act in such circumstances, and the responsibility I incur for the acts of my predecessor, I will never try to shield myself from that responsibility by going behind a corpse or a coffin. There are perhaps men in this House or outside of it who cannot understand a man taking that position. It has been stated that one of the persons selected as a counsel in this investigation has been for some time a partner of my predecessor in office. It is true, before Mr. Préfontaine was a minister, when he was first elected mayor of Montreal, he dissolved partnership with Mr. Perron, and that fact was publicly announced. Do I understand that my hon. friend wants now to attack the character of Mr. Préfontaine? I think it was the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) who said a short time ago that Mr. Préfontaine was an honest man and that there was nothing against him. Do I understand that the hon. member for Grenville is now standing by his words ?

Mr. J. D. REID. I said that if you or any other man on that side of the House was afraid to stand up and defend him, I was prepared to do it. But every one on that side was afraid to do it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand that my hon. friend from Grenville said that there was nothing against Mr. Préfontaine ? If that is the case. why does the hon. leader of the opposition say that we want to prevent the truth coming out so far as Mr. Préfontaine is concerned ? No ; there is nothing that the government want to conceal in this matter. We want the truth and the whole truth to come out, and perhaps we shall find some truth that will surprise somebody.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Mr. Speaker, if we were looking for a party success I believe we should refrain from criticising the position taken by the government, because to my mind they have put themselves in the worst possible position. What are the facts? The government appointed a commission composed of three men in whom they must have had confidence—honest, honourable men. The chairman of that commission was in the Finance Department for over thirty years, enjoying the respect and esteem of both sides of this House ; Mr. Fyshe, of Montreal, well known in commercial circles, and Mr. Bazin, of Quebec. That commission went to work and made a report. That report was entirely against the present administration. With regard to two departments which they investigated, the Marine and Fisheries and the Militia, their report could not have been more severe. They declared that they had not time to investigate the other departments, but from what they heard, if they had had time to investigate them, they would probably have had the same report to make with regard to them all. That is the report. What does the government do ? The government, to place themselves in a good position before the public, should have acted on that report. The man on the street. who is not prejudiced, would have expected the government to act on that report immediately. The man on the street would have expected the government to say to the commission : We want you to continue and go through all the departments ; we want to show the public that we are in earnest, and that if there is anything wrong in any of the departments, we want to put an end to it. But the government of Canada did not do that. They seemed to be disappointed with the report of the commission ; they seemed to think the commission should not have made a report of that kind, and they appointed another commission to investigate the first commission ; that is what it means. It means that the government are under the impression that a new commission will attenuate the report of the first commission. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has said so. He says, we want the employees who are guilty punished and the employees who are not guilty vindicated. That could all be done by the report of the present commission. We do not want another commission for that purpose.

Mr. BRODEUR. There are no names given in the report of the present commission.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend knows very well what it means, however. I am sure he knows.

Mr. COMMEE. What does it mean ?

Mr. BERGERON. I am not appointed as a new commission to make a report. Personally I think the government could not be in a worse position than they are. I think this new commission is entirely useless. We are told that Judge Cassels is an honourable man. I believe that, but what I am surprised at, and I do not see any reason for it, is the idea of appointing lawyers. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries says that it was at the suggestion of the judge that these lawyers were appointed. Of course, I take for granted that what he says is true ; but I am astonished that Judge Cassels should have asked for anything of the kind. And who are the lawyers appointed ? My hon. leader has said that when an investigation took place into the Department of Public Works under a Conservative administration, lawyers were appointed at the demand of the Liberal party, then in opposition, to go through the books and other documents in the Public Works offices at that time. The Conservative administration, though having a very large majority, granted that demand. And who were the lawyers appointed ? The government might have appointed some Conservative lawyers ; but instead of that, they appointed two Liberal lawyers at the suggestion of the then opposition. How different that is from the present case. I am told that one of the gentlemen appointed to-day. Mr. Watson, is or has been at the head of the Liberal organization in the province of Ontario. He may again be president, a strong party man, a strong friend of the present administration. The other one, Mr. Perron, is as strong a partisan as could be found in the whole Dominion of Canada; he has been engaged in nearly every contested election trial that has taken place in Montreal, he is looked upon as the staunchest friend of hon. gentlemen opposite. All his life since he became a lawyer he has been a partner of Mr. Préfontaine. My hon. friend said that Mr. Préfontaine had resigned from that firm. We all know what that means; Mr. Préfontaine was a member of the firm until he died. His name did not appear, but he was a member of the firm of Archer, Perron & Taschereau. And Mr. Perron is called in as a lawyer in this investigation. I would not say a word against his personality, but we all know how far a man can go for party purposes, and I would say, if it was not so serious, what a farce it would be to have a report from Mr. Cassels assisted by Mr. Perron and Mr. Watson against the report of a commission appointed by this government less than a year ago. The government could not be in a worse position. The appointment of Mr. Perron may satisfy the Liberals of Montreal, staunch Liberals who expect something from the government —because those are the only ones to-day who stand by them—but the independent elector, the man who is looking for an honest report, will certainly blame the administration and will have no confidence in the report that Judge Cassels will make. This is another way of spending money, this is another part of the combine. Judge Cassels, I understand, will not be paid any extra fee, he is paid as judge of the Exchequer Court about $8,000 a year. But how will the two lawyers be paid? I believe they will be paid $100 a day each. I do not believe that Mr. Perron would work for less than $100 a day, and he would be very foolish to do so, because if he asks that amount he will get it. How long will the inquiry last? I repeat that the man on the street, the public, will be disgusted with the lavish way in which this government is spending the public money. I am sorry for the good of Canada that the commission which made the first report has not been called upon to go through every department in Ottawa. The government should be interested in having such an investigation. When I look at the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance I have no doubt they are interested in seeing whether proper investigation is made into every department at Ottawa. We will not have such an investigation, as that branch of the inquiry is finished; this will be an investigation of the investigation. It will be something done to try and whitewash what has been said in condemnation of the two departments in which the investigation has been going on.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman sees that the commissioners in their report say there is a lack of conscience on the part of some officers of the department. At the same time no names are mentioned, no persons are singled out. Does he think I should continue to administer the department with the same staff without taking the proper steps to investigate and find out who are the guilty parties?

Mr. BERGERON. I want to say that my hon. friend could have done all that if he wanted to, without having a new commission.

Mr. BRODEUR. How would you do it?

Mr. BERGERON. I am not going to tell my hon. friend and the House. I will tell my hon. friend privately, it could be done in two hours. When the commission makes a report that in his department money is lavished, that it is the most extravagant department at Ottawa, that it is squandering money, that it has no conscience, that there is only one aim, to spend money, that no discount is obtained as in ordinary trade, it is clear as day to me. The money is not used for religious purposes, it has gone somewhere. Why the hon. member does not need to appoint another commission; in two hours he could find a remedy and could save the money of the country.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I think the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and the leader of the opposition also, have an entirely erroneous impression of the nature of the inquiry on which Judge Cassels is about to enter. They have assumed that the inquiry of Mr. Justice Cassels is a review of the work of the commission whose report has already been presented to the House. Nothing could be more erroneous than that conception of Judge Cassels' duty.

Mr. BERGERON. What is it then?

Mr. FIELDING. Judge Cassels' duty is to inquire into certain matters as to which the commission seemed to have failed to prosecute their investigation to the end. The commissioners' report may be deemed to be divided into two parts. One part of it relates to the ordinary questions of the civil service, such as the conditions of admission, examinations, promotions, salaries, &c., questions of a broad and important class. In addition to that there is another branch and that probably is the branch which has received the most attention and consideration by the public, that is the accusation made in somewhat general terms, of not mismanagement, but much worse. It is practically stated in the report of two of the commissioners, Messrs. Fyshe and Bazin, that there has been corruption in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The word is not used but my hon. friend says he knows what the report means.

Mr. BERGERON. So do you.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I will be frank and say I do not know what it means. I know in a general way, but I certainly think, with all deference to the gentlemen composing the commission, for whom I have the greatest respect, that on that particular point it is a fair criticism to say that the commission has said either too much or too little. If they wished to go into that branch of the question—and I do not say they should not have done so—as to whether or not the officials in the service were corrupt, then they were bound in justice to themselves, to the House, and the individuals concerned, to go further, and say in some detail who was corrupt and wherein the corruption lay. That is the only criticism I offer on the report of the commission. As to its general recommendations, I do not call them in question. We will have to deal with them later. My hon. friend says: Why not deal with them? Whether or not we will deal with them has to be considered. If we fail to deal with them at all, we shall be no worse than hon. gentlemen opposite who had a similar report in 1892, kept it for four years and did nothing.

Mr. BERGERON. It was not complete.

Mr. FIELDING. The report was most complete, and if my hon. friend does not want to take the trouble to read it, he may have seen in the Ottawa Conservative paper in the last week, three or four letters from a civil service official, calling attention to the fact that years ago, in 1892, four years before the Conservative government left office, a report was made by a civil service commission dealing with practically the same classes of questions as are referred to in this report, the question of the political influence exercised in relation to patronage, the inequality of salaries, the purchase of supplies—all these questions were reported on by that commission, which included one of the gentlemen who sat on the recent commission. The hon. gentlemen opposite remained in power for four years from the date of that report without attempting any remedy whatever. So, if it should be the policy of this government, and I hope it will not, to pay no attention whatever to the report of the commission, if we should be simply content to receive it, pigeon-hole it and forget it, we would be on even terms with my hon. friends opposite, because that was precisely their course with regard to the report of the commission of 1892 as will be explained later on if necessary.

Mr. BERGERON. The report of the commission of 1892 and the report of the last commission are not at all alike.

Mr. FIELDING. Let me mention some respects in which they are alike. They are alike in the allegation that political patronage enters largely into appointments.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes. That is not a crime.

Mr. FIELDING. That is not a crime, but the commissioners said that was a great evil. They said that in 1892 and it is said by the present commissioners. But while in 1892, that evil, so far as it is an evil, was pictured by that commission in their report just as it is pictured to-day, the Conservative government of that day pigeon-holed the report and took no notice of it.

Mr. BERGERON. And the same thing may happen in this case, so far as that point is concerned.

Mr. FIELDING. If it should happen, then my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) will be in a position to assail us; but the time has not come yet.

Mr. BERGERON. I say it is not a crime. It is something that takes time and is very hard to do. But when the commission said that stealing goes on, that robbery goes on, that corruption exists, it is a very different thing.

Mr. FIELDING. But I want to come to some other things in the commission of 1892. That commission reported on the question of supplies. We had a debate here, not many days ago, on that question. Whatever evils there may be in regard to the patronage element in the purchase of supplies existed in 1892; it was reported on in 1892; it was fully exposed to the Conservative government of that day,—and they took no notice of it. In that respect, the report of 1892 and the report of the present day are substantially alike. My hon. friend says there is corruption, there is dishonesty——

Mr. BERGERON. 'Lack of conscience.'

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, 'lack of conscience'. Now, my hon. friend says he knows what that means. I wish to be candid and to say that, as respects any officer of the Marine and Fisheries Department, I do not know what it means. I know what it means generally; I know what thieving, robbery means. But surely my hon. friend would not have this government, on the strength of that report—which, on that branch of the subject, I say is incomplete,—he would not have the Minister of Marine and Fisheries dismiss men now in the service on the ground of dishonesty. Would he have these men, some of them employed for many years in the public service, branded with the charge of dishonesty and dismissed? Surely he would not. He may suggest that now, but if he had that sense of responsibility which men in public office ought to have, he would say that such a course would be utterly unfair and unjust.

Mr. BERGERON. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) allow me? That is what is going to happen if what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries says is carried out. He says that he wants a commission to find out and punish the men——

Mr. FIELDING. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) says he knows who these men are.

Mr. BERGERON. It is clear, for instance, that they are not the officers of the Department of Finance. They are employees of this department which has been reported upon.

Mr. FIELDING. But the hon. gentleman will see that 'employees of the Marine and Fisheries Department' is a broad and general expression. The misfortune is that the commission,—unintentionally ; they are not lawyers, but good business men—have generalized in such a way as to leave the whole department under a cloud as respects dishonesty.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Will the minister (Mr. Fielding) allow me a question ? Why did not the government refer this back to the commissioners to find out who these men are ?

Mr. FIELDING. The commission, in the first place, had unlimited power. They had the right to report as they have done, of course. They were free to take their own course. They took all the time they wanted. And they reported to the best of their judgment. Unfortunately, they left this particular branch of the business in an unfinished state ; and it is the unfinished business as respects the reflections upon the integrity of the Department of Marine and Fisheries that Mr. Justice Cassels has been asked to inquire into. Not the integrity of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ; that is not called into question. Let there be no misunderstanding on that point. We know the doctrine of constitutional responsibility and we accept it. If an official of my department in Victoria, B.C., should betray his trust and steal the public money, there is a constitutional sense in which I should be responsible, and so should my right hon. friend the Prime Minister and all my colleagues. We know, I say, what constitutional responsibility is, and we are prepared to accept that without the slightest hesitation. But there is more than the mere question of constitutional responsibility in this matter. So far as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is concerned, let it be stated clearly and beyond all question that there is not a a line in the report of the Civil Service Commission which, even in the most shadowy way, reflects upon the integrity, the honour or the independence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur). It is not pretended that there is any responsibility upon the minister other than that constitutional responsibility which we are ready to accept. But there is not only the constitutional responsibility which I have described, there is the individual responsibility for acts of dishonesty. Now the commission have given it to be understood that there have been acts of dishonesty on the part of officials of the Marine and Fisheries Department. It is not fair to leave these officials, many of them old employees in the public service, under that imputation. And so, with a view to prosecuting the inquiry further, this reference is made to Mr. Justice Cassels. There can be no question as to the propriety of that course. While, in the case of questions of classification of officials, salaries of officials and matters of that character, the opinion of any good business man may be valuable, yet, when you come to make an inquiry that will affect a man's honour, his character, his repputation his standing in life, who so well qualified to conduct that investigation, as a judge of one of the higher courts? Surely, if we were to have a further inquiry into that branch of the question, it was eminently fitting that the inquiry should be conducted by a gentleman holding the high position of Judge Cassels.

With regard to the selection of the legal gentleman, I think there is an important difference between the situation in 1891 and the situation of to-day. In the proceedings in 1891, accusations were made against members of this House—accusations, I might almost say, against ministers, because they involved ministers in the end. But that is not the situation to-day. There is no accusation here against any minister ; there is nothing alleged in the report of the Civil Service Commission which, even if proved to the last point, would call for the retirement of any hon. member of this House. There is no allegation of wrong as affecting any minister or member of this House. The allegation is of lack of conscience, in fact, of dishonesty, on the part of some of these officials. Now, it so happens that most of the officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, especially the older officials and those holding more responsible positions, were appointed in years gone by by the Conservative government. What would have been said if the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to-day, acting upon that vague and indefinite report—for, upon that branch of the subject, it is vague and indefinite—had proceeded to dismiss officials appointed years ago by the Conservative party, with no better grounds than the indefinite statements of that report ? What would have been said by gentlemen opposite ? They would have been the first to attack the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. They would have said : You had not any evidence ; you had only vague and general charges ; but you seized upon these and made them the excuse for dismissing old officials appointed by the Conservative government. We were not prepared to give occasion for an accusation of that character. I trust that, no matter who might be the officials concerned, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would not be willing to take that course. But, when we remembered that a charge of that kind would affect the chief officials, when we remembered that these were gentlemen who have occupied positions in the civil service for many years and who had received their appointments from the preceding government, I think that every consideration of right and fairness and justice would lead us to say that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries took the right course when he declared that he would not dismiss men on the strength of this report, but inasmuch as their honour, their conscience has been called in question, has declared that he will carry on a further inquiry on that particular branch of the subject—not reviewing the report of the commission, but taking up the case where the commission left it off —and, in the light of such a full and fair investigation as shall take place, then let justice be done.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). The defence which has been put up by the two hon. gentlemen who have spoken has shot wide entirely of the mark, so far as it attempted to answer the very temperate observations which were made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries thought that all he had to do to answer that was, in the first place, to make repeated and strong asseverations of his own honour and integrity and his complete desire to see the public service purged, and then he wound up with an ill-concealed threat that before he got through with the investigation we on this side of the House would find out something that we did not know before. The threat was a very plain one; he has used it so often that the moment the hon. gentleman frames his lips we know exactly what is coming. The threat concealed in part, but still open enough, is : We will have our vengeance out of you anyway, because we will punish some of the old officials belonging to the Marine Department. Now, that was not very dignified, not very satisfactory, nor was it politically a very astute defence for the hon. gentleman to make in reference to matters in his department. He has been very anxious indeed to separate himself absolutely from the department. His colleagues are equally anxious, because they know as well as he does that it is impossible constitutionally or practically to separate the head of the department from misdoings of the department itself. They are all very anxious to make it clear if they can to the public, if they cannot make it so to this House, that it does not matter at all to the heads of departments into what depths of inefficiency, or confusion, or blundering, or waste, or extravagance, or worse, the department under their charge may fall. They have no responsibility in the matter, the Finance Minister, in fact, stated it in so many words. He said : There is nothing that reflects upon the head of the department, there is no responsibility attached to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for this matter. Those are about the plain assertions that are made. You can carry on no government in modern times under an assumption of that kind. We know that it is the very essence of the strength and efficiency of a government under our forms to hold the minister to his responsibilities as the executive head of the department over which he presides, and no asseverations of my hon. friend can divorce him from that position and from that constitutional responsibility.

Now, the Minister of Finance, thinking perhaps that his colleague had not been very brilliant in his defence, takes another tack, and he makes a defence something on this line : Attack the other fellow. There was in 1892 a Civil Service Commission, and it reported to you, and you gentlemen on the other side pigeon-holed that report for four years. Let me ask my hon. friend a question. Is he not able to get beyond the idea that these are simply party matters? Does he not know that they are matters that belong to the state? If a Royal Commission in 1892 made a report on the civil service, it was a report to the state, to Canada, and not simply to the party who happened to appoint the Royal Commission. He concludes that we were derelict, and that he has done sufficient to make his own case good when he says: You pigeonholed that report four years. Did he not see that in making that very statement he was also stating that he and his government pigeon-holed that report for twelve years succeeding the four years? It was a Royal Commission report on the state of the service that these gentlemen in 1896 had before them; they were responsible for the service; they had facts reported by the commission, and if the facts were as stated by my hon. friend, grave facts that ought to have resulted in action, he and his party are absolutely responsible for the inaction from 1896 up to the present time, as we were, in his estimation, for the inaction from 1892 to 1896. But after all, what stock does the country take in that simple statement that you did not do as you should have done in the four years you had that report before you, and therefore our skirts are clear ?

Now, there are some things that are peculiar with reference to this matter. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries came into the department succeeding his immediate predecessor, the Hon. Mr. Prefontaine. He has been in that department for two years. Presumably he has done as a minister should have done, and proceeded to make himself acquainted with that department, with its methods of work, with the duties it had to perform, with all the general direction of the affairs which came under that department, and for the direction of which he as a minister was absolutely responsible. They were all before him, he had the files of the department and the reports of his own officers. If he had used reasonable diligence, if he had walked through one of those outside agencies, if he had asked half a dozen questions of the men therein employed, if he had looked into the reports which lay in his department and came in from month to month, he would have understood in what a loose manner, in what an inefficient, confused and blundering manner, to say no worse, that department was being carried on. Has he done so ? If he has not, he is responsible for not doing so. It is impossibe for him to say: All I have to do is to draw my salary as minister and look after the appointment of the party officials and the like of that. He is appointed at his salary to take charge of the department, and it is his duty as a minister to master that department, and every minister who is doing his duty to himself and his country does so. Take the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture did not sit down and justify himself and satisfy himself by simply handing out a slip of paper or giving instructions to the deputy minister of his department. When he came into his department he knew nothing about it ; so with every other minister. The man who knows what his duty is goes into his department and masters its details so far as he possibly can, in so far at least as is necessary to give him an adequate idea of how the business is going on. My hon. friend did not do that. What is the glaring instance that shows he did not? Take the Falconer case. One day he met a man by the name of Falconer on the wharf, or somewhere else in Montreal.

He did not know anything about him, did not know what staff he had, did not know where his offices were, did not know what work he was doing and did not know how he was doing his work. He had a conference—may be another. What then does he do? Without questioning him, without getting a schedule of prices, without informing himself as to the time it would take to do this work, without limiting this man as to the number of men he was to employ, or as to the amount that he was to pay them, he gave him carte blanche to go on, go through the department and run up a bill of $50,000. And, the work is not half done. That bill of $50,000 was run up before the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was in possession of the scale of prices that Falconer was going to charge him. Until the day when we brought him on the witness stand in the Public Accounts Committee he did not know that there was such a firm as Gunn, Richards & Co. of New York, which had really been doing the work and that this man Falconer was merely a touter for work, being paid a liberal salary and commission on all the work he got for the New York firm. He handed over a simple letter to his deputy head. There is no instance in which a minister has ever made so difficult a problem for his officers as this hon. gentleman did when he handed over that memorandum or letter, signed by himself, without one single instruction, without one single line as to the schedule of prices, without any intimation at all to his responsible officers and then holds them responsible for what he himself failed to do. No minister who initiates business in that way can clear himself of the responsibility. And what an example to set to his department! Does the minister think that he has no responsibility in the matter? I doubt if to this day he has seen that schedule of prices upon which he made that hard and fast agreement by word of mouth, or simply by a letter bearing his own initials. Does he think that he can escape from all blame for initiating business in that way? What word of reproof can he give to his subordinates when he initiates business in that way? Talk about confusion, no head, no direction, no conscience! What direction, what head, what system, what conscience was shown by an arrangement such as that which was made by the minister in the Falconer case?

Well this investigation went on by the Civil Service Commission. Let it be noted by this House and the country that the hon. gentlemen who appointed that commission never expected a report on these lines. They did not ask for it, they did not want it. They got more than they wanted when they got it, and they showed their testiness the very moment that the report came down. The very first thing that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries did was to get up and attack his own commission for going beyond their bounds. What next developed in the country? The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) got up in his own constituency and attacked the commissioners for going beyond their powers and making a report upon what had not been entrusted to them. Here are two ministers; these two ministers' utterances show that these hon. gentlemen got more than they bargained for. They cannot very well get up and express their dissatisfaction with reference to what their commissioners report and criticise them for it without laying themselves open to the charge that they did not expect a report upon these matters by these gentlemen. They appointed them as to the question of salaries, the cost of living and the classification of the service without expecting any more than a report upon these matters.

Now, Sir, what happens next? That report came in on the 17th of last month.

More than a month has passed and the report, as incisive, full and particular as it is, lies there to this day without another move. They have spoken of the commission that they themselves appointed and in reference to its constituents they have given it the highest praise; yet the report declares that there is a department without a head and without a conscience. A month has passed and what has been done? Hon. gentlemen say, and this order in council says, to put it in plain English, that inasmuch as certain general accusations or inferences have been made in the report, that there has not been strict business honesty in carrying on the affairs of the department, we will have a commission which will examine really into what?—to find out whether anybody has taken bribes or has been guilty of personal dishonesty as regards the carrying out of the transactions of the department as employees of the same. That is all. Judge Cassels is not to touch upon the weightiest of all matters, the utter disorganization, inefficiency and lack of business method in the department. These gentlemen say: We want to find out the truth; we do not want these general accusations to lie against any members of our staff and consequently we will appoint Judge Cassels to look into it. But, before Judge Cassels is appointed and before he does a stroke of work the minister himself undertakes to do what they say they want a commission to do, and he has suspended, one, two, or three of his officers and is conducting a departmental inquiry of his own. Why, what he wanted Judge Cassels appointed for was to do that very thing, and it seems to me that the hon. gentleman who presides over that department ought not for a single instance to have undertaken any inquiry into these matters himself when they were relegated to the commissioner who was appointed for that purpose and who was appointed because of these very reasons and these only.

The hon. Minister of Justice was good enough to say, in his speech in his own constituency, that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was carrying on an investigation in his own department, that he was weeding out the Tory goats from the Liberal sheep, I suppose, and further it was asserted by the Minister of Justice, who had appointed a commission to find out something which he did not know, and which the government wanted to know, that the Tory goats should be well punished by dismissal for their wrong-doings in the matter of their departmental work. What a spectacle it is to have a government, which wants to know something and cannot make a decision until it finds it out and has Judge Cassels appointed to investigate; pronouncing judgment themselves as individual members of the cabinet! The Minister of Marine and Fisheries did so and the Minister of Justice, of all men in the world, did so in his speech in his own constituency the other night. That is British justice. That is one way of doing things, but it does not seem to me to be the best way. Ah, but the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was wonderfully anxious to find out just who had been doing these things. There had been different accusations, if you call them such, but which I would rather call inferences, by Messrs. Courtney, Fyshe and Bazin. What would be simpler than to say to these gentlemen: We want you to give us the facts from which you drew these inferences. These gentlemen are responsible men; they have the Prime Minister's and the government's own endorsement of their character and ability.

They went into it themselves, they investigated it, they made their report and the inferences or accusations are a part of that report. If the government wanted to know exactly who they were, what more simple than to ask these gentlemen to further amend the report by giving the special instances. That would have been an easy thing to do. Why, if the government wanted the information did they not take that short business cut and get the information that the commissioners have on their note books or within their minds, because it is they who made the report in which these accusations or inferences are brought out which are referred to Judge Cassels. What happens now ? The Minister of Marine and Fisheries says he is intensely desirous that the whole truth shall be brought out and what does he do ? He appoints a commission to investigate himself under the idea that he is not investigating himself but certain officials in his department. It is a commission appointed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries himself as the order in council goes, differently worded from a general commission. And then the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who is the person responsible, who is the person implicated and the person whom the public will hold responsible ; he appoints his own counsel to carry on the prosecution in the case, absolutely appoints his own counsel. He is being tried, his efficiency or inefficiency is to be shown in this investigation. Talk as you like, if this gentleman who is at the head of the department has guided for two years a department with that sort of thing going on and has not found it out and has not reformed it and has not put it in good directive condition, the minister himself must have the responsibility. He is the man who is really on trial and yet he appoints a commissioner who is for all we know to carry on the investigation in camera, and then he appoints two red hot partisans in order to shield himself and his department. There cannot be any other inference. Hon. gentlemen may say what they please. They may try to make themselves believe what they please but the country at large will not be satisfied with that kind of dealing. The country will say:

These gentlemen want to mitigate the force of a report which has struck them hard and they try to mitigate it by appointing an in camera investigation and then by putting their own hard and fast partisans on to carry out the investigation. But, you say, Judge Cassels will carry on the investigation. Yes, but these are the counsel through whom he is to carry it on. They are the men that are to advise what witnesses should be brought and what cases should be taken up. They are the men who are to steer the whole investigation. Judge Cassels, cannot do it, it is not his position, he is in the way of a judge, an inquiring judge of course. But the cases have to be brought and the witnesses have to be brought, and who shall be shielded and who shall not be shielded, that is the part of Mr. Perron and of Mr. Watson and they are being paid their fees in order to do that part. Now, will the country stand for that sort of thing ? I ask my right hon. friend if he thinks the country will. If he is imagining such a vain thing as that he will wake up some day and find he is mistaken in his imaginings. The least the government can do is to make the investigation openly. If they want some of their own partisans to defend themselves let them get them and pay the country's money for that if necessary; but let them put some one there who has at heart the State's interest and no other interest than the State's interest, as a prosecutor to bring evidence and to bring up the cases. For instance, what is one of the glaring cases. It is with reference to your Commissioner of Lights. Now, Sir, we have been told by the Minister of Justice that these were Tory goats who had got the Minister of Marine and Fisheries into all this trouble. Was the Commissioner of Lights a Tory goat ? Will you take his appointment and his salary when these gentlemen came into power in 1896 ; will you take his specific appointments since and his increases of salary from time to time, and the responsibilities that have been put upon him ; will you put all this together and say that it was simply a Tory goat that was working all this time, and that it was the purpose of the minister to weed him out from the Liberal sheep in that department. This is a gentleman who was appointed by the minister, who was chosen by the minister, who was given almost absolute power by the minister, who went into the business of the buoys and fog signals as though, to look at the commissioner's report, he were the paid employee of these two great concerns interested chiefly in finding out how much he could buy from them and where he could find a place to store the goods before they were wanted for actual use. The minister cannot escape from the responsibility in that case. Was it a Tory goat who made the arrangement with Falconer, an arrangement which on the face of it is so child-like and so unbusinesslike that you would think no sane man, mature and grown up man would be guilty of. None of these things were committed by these Tory goats. Now I ask the minister if he proposes to go into that transaction of his Commissioner of Lights, who, to the extent of $1,600,000 worth of new apparatus within two years patronized one single concern and caused the commission to say, as they went through the astounding history, that it looked as if that body had their own servant at work in the department. Will the minister have Judge Cassels root that out from the bottom ? Is that a portion of Judge Cassel's work ? Will Mr. Watson, King's Councel, take it up and push it ? Will Mr. Perron go into that business ? Is that what is to be done, or, are these gentlemen simply in chamber to find out how little they can bring out, how much they can shield the government and how far they can go to keep the grand old party from getting what is rightly its due ? They have been 12 years in power, they have had their chosen men in that department and at the end of that time it is pictured to the public as a department without a head, without direction, and without conscience. The people of this country want a full investigation, they want it in the light of open day, they want it fair and not loaded, they want to see somebody who is not a paid and partisan friend of the minister, interested in bringing the evidence and in making there searches before Judge Cassels.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). The Minister of Finance seemed to take comfort to himself that there was no imputation against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the report of the Royal Commission. I take distinct issue with the hon. gentleman upon this point. What I complain of particularly in regard to the reference to Judge Cassels is that it is an isolated charge taken out of the body of the charges made by the commissioners, in which is included a charge and imputation against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as distinct a charge as could possibly be made. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that in the report, both before and after the statement which is referred to Judge Cassels, there are statements equally as damaging as the statement which is referred to the judge. And when the minister says in the order in council :

> The minister observes that some statements are made in that report which affect the honour and integrity of the officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

He fails to grasp the significance and meaning of the Royal Commission because that report, as I read it, is not directed to the officers of the department alone but to the head of the department as well. Let us see whether this is correct or not. They say on page 33 :

Your commissioners have spent a large amount of time trying to get an insight into the general administration of the government business, as shown in the management of this department. They found that to make any efficient inspection was a matter of enormous difficulty.

And they point out the reasons for that. They indicate that they have not made an exhaustive inquiry; but they leave it as a clear inference that, if the government desires to know the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, they are quite prepared to go on and investigate further. I want to call your attention to the fact that they are speaking, not of goats or of sheep, but of a department; and when they are speaking of a department, they are speaking of an hon. gentleman who is at the head of the department, and who said this afternoon that more than all he desired a complete and thorough and extensive investigation. On page 34 they say :

Are they pointing at the subordinates or at the head? I understand that the head is responsible for the organization, and if the head is not able to perform the duties of the organization for which he is responsible, he should resign. They go on to say :

It is practially impossible to fix responsibility on anybody.

Does that responsibility rest upon these unfortunate subordinates whom the minister has suspended, whom he tries himself and makes guilty by his own act before a proper investigation is had? The report continues :

The deputy is supposed to shoulder responsibility for everything, as his signature shows; but that means that he speaks for 'the department' and 'the department,' like the King, can do no wrong.

That we hardly believe.

Mr. FOSTER. Theoretically.

Mr. LENNOX. Theoretically only, of course. The commissioners go on to say:

There seems to be a huge redundancy of work, which proceeds in a lumbering haphazard way, giving rise to constant blundering and confusion.

Whose act is that? Is that the act of the deputy head? Is that the act of a chief clerk or of a second-class clerk, or is it the act of the responsible minister of the Crown, who is at the head of the Marine and Fisheries Department? I take it, that applies to the head of the department—that 'there seems to be a huge redundancy of work, which proceeds in a lumbering, haphazard way, giving rise to constant blundering and confusion.' Does the minister want to leave that on record? Is he satisfied that his department should be so characterized? Then they say :

There is no sign visible of a single directing head or an intelligent purpose, unless it be that of spending as much money as possible.

Who is the head of that department? Who should be the single directing head? Who should be the man of intelligent purpose to control the expenditure of the department, and to see that extravagance and dishonesty and graft do not prevail? Who but the minister, who says: Wait till we have an investigation, and we will show what will surprise some hon. gentlemen—meaning, with that cowardly threat, that Conservative members of his department will suffer. We have it so far pretty clear that these gentlemen are speaking, not of subordinates, but of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. What are they talking of? They are talking of paying two prices where we should only pay one; they are talking of paying dishonest prices when we should only pay honest prices; and does the minister want to escape on the plea that for two long years all this has been going on in his department and he has been absolutely ignorant of the fact that we have been paying for goods at these dishonest and extravagant prices? These gentlemen go on to say :

Zeal for economy and good management, or pride in the work, is not visible.

What are they speaking of? They are speaking, as the heading indicates, of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. No attack, says my hon. friend, upon the Minister of Marine and Fisheries; no imputation against him; and my hon. friend waxes eloquent on that point, and thinks he has settled the question. I want to say here and now that we have not all the people before the court in this inquiry before Judge Cassels; that when it is referred to Judge Cassels to try the officals of this department, the record is not complete; that if you are to have a fair trial, an honest trial, a thorough and efficient trial, which the minister says he desires, it would not be alone to find out whether certain officials of the department are guilty or not, but to find out where the minister stands in regard to this matter as well. They go on to say:

Perfunctory and mechanical discharge of duties is the rule, with apparently no perception of any need for improvement.

And I suppose that if there were any improvement inaugurated, it would naturally be by the head of the department. Then the report says :

The lack of organization and of organizing power in the department has recently been very conspicuously and painfully illustrated by the fact that the accountant's or bookkeeping branch had apparently fallen into such confusion that expert accountants had to be called in to put things to rights and create some intelligible system. After months of work by these highly paid experts, the result has been at least greatly improved books as far as mechanical form is concerned, but probably little else; and this achievement has been accomplished at an almost fabulous expense.

Then we come to the paragraph which my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has seen fit to refer to Judge Cassels; but, mark you, he did not see fit to refer the whole of it. He thought it desirable to leave out the first sentence, which shows the meaning of a great deal of what follows :

There is not only a lack of efficient organization and method in the department.

Then follows what my hon. friend refers to Judge Cassels :

There would also seem to be a lack of conscience.

A lack of conscience where, when you take the whole clause? A lack of conscience in the department, and so in the hon. minister himself. I need not follow with what is set out in the order in council, as my hon. friend has had it printed; but I may point out that this does not. even as printed here, mean that the commissioners thought the officials were responsible, but means that they were of opinion that the minister was responsible; and to show that I will read what is set out here. I will read just what is said following the words in reference to the department :

There would also seem to be a lack of conscience. In connection with the enormous expenditures which are deemed necessary, the word 'discount' never appears. It is tacitly assumed there is no such thing; but the whole commercial world knows otherwise. If no one gets any benefit from trade with the government except the trader, then it must be clear that in these great purchases made for the government, without discount, its officers must be assisting the trader to get better prices from the government than he can get anywhere else; for everywhere else he has to give a discount.

Down to that point there is nothing to indicate that it is the officials who are charged with dishonesty ; it is a general charge of dishonesty in the administration of the department at the expense of the country. What follows shows clearly that the commissioners had it in their minds that the officials are doing this either in ignorance or upon an intimation that the government wants it done in this way.

In other words, some of the government officials are serving two masters and apparently succeeding with both—scripture notwithstanding——

Whom do the commissioners mean by two masters ? They mean serving the seller and the buyer. The buyer is the minister ; they are serving two masters, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and at the same time the men who are selling to the department. Does anybody believe, with our experience of what has taken place in the last eleven or twelve years, that this thing is done for love or for any other purpose than to enable these men who sell to the government to have the means, if they see fit, to assist the government when a crisis comes and an election is coming on ? No other reasonable construction can be put upon this paragraph than that these officers have either acted ignorantly or are acting by connivance with the government in paying prices much too high. That is borne out more strongly still by the expression.

—and apparently succeeding with both.

If the commissioners had not in their minds that they were acting in concert with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, why should they use that phrase that they were apparently succeeding with both, scripture notwithstanding ? The minister is endeavouring to narrow this inquiry and secure an unfair advantage because if he had wanted to have the thorough, broad and complete investigation he says, why should he select this paragraph out of what I have read and what follows and refer that merely to the judge. He is not giving Judge Cassels a proper chance to try this case at all. If we are to believe what the minister says as to his desire for a full investigation, would he not have made the investigation as broad as I have suggested ? The minister seemed to have a doubt as to whether we could believe him. He said : I do not know whether hon. gentlemen will believe me or not but my object is to have a full and thorough investigation. Let me say to him now that if he had been desirous of convincing the members of the opposition or, what is far more important, the people of Canada, of his bona fides and honesty in this matter, he would have secured that end by referring to Judge Cassels, not an isolated sentence but the whole matter of his department, or else referring it back to the commissioners who had cast the aspersions upon him and his department.

The Minister of Finance also says that this is not a review. It is not a review, it is a good deal more than that, it is an attack upon the Royal Commission and as it stands to-day it is an appeal. The very day that this report was placed upon the table of the House the minister made an attack. He did not conceal his motive, he was clear and distinct. His statements are on 'Hansard'. He stated what he thought of this report and amongst other things claimed that the commissioners had gone beyond their duties and beyond the scope of what was referred to them. I care not whether they went beyond the scope of what was referred to them or not, they have found a certain amount of truth, they have laid it before the House and if the minister wanted to ascertain the names of the men referred to in the report it would have been an easy matter to consult the commissioners. But the minister made his attack and then he followed it up. And what is he doing now? He is putting these commissioners upon trial. The language he uses in his own order of reference, in the order in council, makes that perfectly plain.

The minister observes that some statements are made in the report which affect the honour and integrity of officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. On page 61 of the report the following paragraph appears.

Then he quotes the paragraph.

The minister further observes that it is assumed by that statement that commissions are received improperly, or enhanced prices paid through dishonesty on the part of officials of the Department of Militia and Defence.

I have already pointed out that it is not confined to the officials of the Marine and Fisheries Department. He says then, as the result of the whole matter:

The minister therefore recommends that he be authorized to appoint the Hon. Walter Cassels a commissioner under part 2 of chapter 104 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, to investigate and report upon the foregoing statements contained in the said report.

His department is on trial but he selects his own judge. No one will argue for one moment that in view of the language used by the hon. gentleman himself, this is not a clear and distinct appeal and an endeavour to reverse the statement of the commissioners in regard to the matter just quoted. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) asked the other day whether the government intended to appoint anybody to represent these commissioners. Their action has been called into question, their finding has been challenged, the matter is referred to Judge Cassels, with the hope evidently that the findings of this commission will be reversed. Under such circumstances would it not seem honest and fair, Mr. Speaker, that instead of the gentleman whose department is attacked first selecting his own judge, them proceeding to try some of the offenders himself before the investigation could come on and then selecting two eminent counsel who are clearly identified with his party and with this department, somebody should have been appointed to represent Canada and to represent these gentlemen who have had the bravery to make this report to the government. The minister has seen fit to take another course. I have not a word to say against Judge Cassels.

But I have this to say—and I think I shall be upheld in the country if not in this House—that this whole affair is inconclusive. I venture the prediction that this trial will result in the same kind of farce as did the West Elgin election trial some years ago, in which also Mr. Watson figured. I say that, not because I have no faith in Judge Cassels—I have every faith in him; I believe that if he were given a chance he would get at the bottom of this matter; but I have pointed out that he is not given a chance; he is bound by the terms of the order of reference in such a way that he cannot possibly investigate this matter as it ought to be investigated in the public interest. And this I say because the government has shown a desire to follow the methods of their friends in Ontario in the West Elgin case and their own methods in the insurance investigation of a more recent day. The minister says there must be a full and thorough investigation. But how is it to be accomplished? Behind closed doors. A full and thorough investigation was promised when the insurance commission was appointed. But what happened? The moment counsel appeared on behalf of parties interested, Judge MacTavish refused, at the instance of Mr. Shepley, to allow that counsel to ask a question. And the same method will be pursued in this investigation. Why should not counsel appear and have a status in this investigation? Why should the doors be closed? The officials of the department over which my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) presides, officials of whom he is the guardian in a sense, are attacked; they are on trial. Yet, I venture to say that, with all his boasted sense of justice and his boasted desire for a full and fair investigation, he would not allow the counsel of these gentlemen to appear in order that a fair investigation may be held. A cloud may rest upon the officials, or it may rest upon those who are higher than the officials. And, in that condition of things, is it fair—or is it not an outrage?—to commit the matter to two counsel, one being Mr. Watson, who has been all his life identified with the workings of the Ross administration, and the other, this gentleman from Quebec, who is identified clearly and completely with the department under investigation, and both selected by my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur)? So, I have no hesitation in saying that this investigation will be a farce in its progress and a farce in its results.

Let us see how these things are worked out. Mr. Watson will be the senior counsel in this matter. I have nothing to say against him personally. So far as a man can be said to be a good man who is of his political persuasion and has always been mixed up with the managing of the machine, he is a fairly good man. But I do not think that this kind of thing adds to a professional man's morality in the end. Mr. Watson is the gentleman who engineered the West Elgin election case, and he is the gentleman who will guide this proceeding. I do not think he will go as far as Mr. Shepley went in the insurance inquiry. Mr. Shepley was the counsel throughout the entire insurance investigation ; he guided and shaped the evidence, and every question by anybody else had to percolate through Mr. Shepley and he had to give his own interpretation to it in propounding it to the witness. And at the end, when all the evidence was in, you will say, Mr. Shepley, after addressing the commission, went about his business leaving them to decide. Nothing of the kind ; Mr. Shepley remained, as we have been told in this House to assist and direct the judges, before whom he had pleaded, in arriving at their conclusions. We shall have a better state of things, I believe, in this case, for the reason that I have faith in Judge Cassels and feel sure that he will not consent to anything of that kind. But, still, we shall have an investigation guided by Mr. Watson. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), in one breath told us that he had told Judge Cassels the other day that he was to have a full and thorough investgation——

Mr. FOSTER. That was gratuitous.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes. That he was to find out the guilty parties and spare them not. (But in the next breath, the minister tells us that it would be improper for him to instruct the judge as to what he should do. That is only in passing, however.) What I particularly want to point out is that the minister told us that Judge Cassels said he wished to have counsel to assist in this investigation. But he did not tell us—and so I assume it did not happen—that he asked Judge Cassels to name counsel that would suit him Oh, no ! that would not do. Counsel must be named by the very party that names the judge, the party that more than any other is interested in the final result of the investigation. In the West Elgin case, we have a confession signed by Donald McNish, and witnessed by A. B. Aylesworth, his counsel, of the state of things in that election. Subsequent to that, we had three judges appointed by the Ross administration to inquire into the manner of conducting that election, Judge Barron, Judge Morgan and Judge MacTavish—and the last named qualified, more or less, I imagine, in that case for his subsequent employment at the instance of the Crown. And when I tell you that these judges say that practically nothing was done wrong in the West Elgin election, and when I read you the confession of their own side you will be able to form an opinion as to that inquiry. That investigation was conducted and engineered by Mr. Watson. And the report, in concluding, compliments Mr. Watson upon the able and thorough manner in which he conducted the case on behalf of the Crown. I have here a speech made by Hon. Geo. W. Ross in which he refers to that trial and appears to think that Mr. Watson acted on behalf of the culprits, Pritchett and others, who were on trial. He said :

Mr. Watson had acted for the defence; he did so on his own responsibility.

But, to be perfectly fair, let me say that the hon. gentleman may have referred to the subsequent trial in which it happened that Mr. Watson, who had acted for the Crown in the first investigation, appeared for the defence. Either way is not satisfactory in some regards. However, Mr. Watson is complimented on the result of that investigation. Mr. Ross points out in a speech he made in Napanee on the eve of the last general elections, what a satisfactory result it was, and it was satisfactory in the face of what I am going to read to you, signed by Donald Macnish, the gentleman who produced and furnished unfair recommendations of the gentlemen to be deputy returniing officers, and that declaration was witnessed and concurred in by A. B. Aylesworth, as able counsel as could be found in Ontario. Here is the declaration :

1. That a large number of persons were especially sent into the constituency by men working on behalf of the Liberal party for the express purpose of taking part on Mr. Macnish's behalf in the election held January 12, 1899, and we believe that fraudulent and corrupt means were used by some of such persons to secure his election.

2. That some of the said persons illegally and without authority acted as deputy returning officers at the said election and in at least three cases so acted in the names of reputable local men, having, under assumed names, been introduced to the returning officer by local agents of Macnish.

3. That in many of the polling subdivisions of the riding there were grave irregularities connected with the return of the ballot boxes and their contents, the voting, and the counting of the ballots thereat.

4. That there were large numbers of persons brought into the riding for the express purpose of personating legitimate voters, and assisted by some of Macnish's local supporters such persons did personate qualified voters in voting for Mr. Macnish.

5. That the declared number of votes for Mr. Macnish largely exceeded the number of bona fide votes cast for him.

6. That a large number of ballots cast for Mr. McDiarmid were in some nefarious and corrupt manner manipulated, whereby the result of the election was rendered doubtful, and in this connection the voting at Shedden and Middlemarch and in several divisions of St. Thomas, where said strangers so acted as deputy returning officers, merits special mention.

7. That there are good reasons to believe that there are many specific and well authenticated cases where agents for Mr. Macnish concealed at their homes some of those strangers, who there paid large sums of money to electors to induce them to vote for him.

8. That Mr. Macnish will forthwith deliver to the Speaker of the legislative assembly his resignation as a member thereof for the said electoral district.

(Sgd.) A. B. Aylesworth.

I have only one word to say in addition. When that matter was subsequently referred to Judge Barron, Judge Morgan and Judge McTavish and they sat and examined 211 witnesses, as Mr. Ross here states in his speech at Napanee, and as the fact was, these gentlemen, under the able guidance of Mr. Watson, whom they complimented, were able so far to whitewash the illegality, rascality and criminality indulged in on that occasion, that they found practically that nothing wrong had been done in West Elgin.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I would not have risen to speak on this occasion were it not for some words that fell from the lips of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). It seems to me that the burden of what he said in regard to His Honour Judge Cassels, and the investigation before that commissioner, implies one of two things, either that he thinks the commissioner is dishonest or a fool. Whatever his opinion may be, I do not think that the members of this House imagine for a moment that His Honour Judge Cassels is either the one or the other. In fact, he was chosen by the government to carry on that investigation because we had absolute confidence in his integrity and his ability, and, therefore, we thought it better to leave the conduct of the investigation entirely in his hands. The commissioner asked for legal assistance and he has received it. He has not yet declared to us or to the country whether the investigation is to be an open one or in camera. I may say that the government assumed, and does still assume, that that investigation will be a public one, and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has absolutely no foundation whatever for his assumption that it is to be in camera; he has absolutely no foundation for the fabric of accusations he has raised against the action of the government on that supposition. I will not say any more in regard to that, because I believe that the matter is in the hands of an absolutely competent and honest judge, and having put it into his hands we think it best to let him deal with it in the way he sees fit.

Mr. FOSTER. Before my hon. friend spoke, had the government decided in their own minds that it would be a good thing to have the investigation public?

Mr. FISHER. The government has not given any dictation to the commissioner.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the Minister of Marine and Fisheries know as much about it as the Minister of Agriculture, and if he did, why didn't he answer the question that was put to him?

Mr. FISHER. All I say is that the matter has been left in the hands of the commission. We have assumed that the investigation will be public, but at the same time we have not undertaken to dictate whether it shall be or not. I do not think that in any way contradicts what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has said.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot come to that conclusion.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend may come to his own conclusions, but his own conclusions very often lead him stray, as they would lead the country astray if they were accepted. My hon. friend from North Toronto has talked about ministerial responsibility and about the responsibility of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has assumed his full ministerial responsibility so far as regards the efficiency of the department, the organization and work of the department. But the minister has not assumed the duties of a judge to investigate the integrity and honesty of his officials. I do not think that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is at all called upon to exercise that function, and if he had, on the report of the Civil Service Commission, undertaken to declare that so and so and so and so were dishonest and must be dealt with, hon. gentlemen opposite would have been the very first to raise a howl of partisanship and political persecution. It was because the Minister of Marine and Fisheries did not wish to assume the responsibility of prosecuting any of the gentlemen who were smirched by this report of the Civil Service Commission that the government appointed an independent judge who could do that in a judicial manner and without the slightest suspicion of partisanship.

The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been very busy, ever since the acceptance of the position of minister, investigating his department. He has been trying to use his ministerial responsibility to put that department on a firmer and more satisfactory footing. What has been the history of my hon. colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries since he has become minister? He took that office, I think, in February, 1906. He was in the midst of an arduous session, he carried through the work of that session, and the parliamentary duties of a minister absolutely precluded his making a thorough investigation into the details of the working of his department. Immediately after the session he satisfied himself that the book-keeping of the department was not all it ought to be, and he then employed Mr. Falconer to undertake a thorough investigation of the book-keeping of the department, not only to try to find out whether there was any absolute wrong-doing, but to find whether a better system of accounting could not be adopted and put into operation. The evidence of Mr. Falconer and the other accountants who came before the Committee on Public Accounts showed that it required time not only to investigate but to work out a system which they might substitue for the system which was in existence before they began their work. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine spent the summer going about the country examining and investigating the different offices of the department. He came back here in the fall to enter upon a long and arduous session during which it was impossible for him, with his parliamentary duties, to undertake a thorough investigation. At the close of the session of 1907 he was called upon by the Prime Minister, at the request of the imperial government, to go to England and take part in the colonial conference. While he was there he was asked by the Prime Minister to help my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) in the negotiation of the French treaty and he was away for six months. During that time he could not carry on any investigation or reorganization of the department. When he came back he asked for the report of Mr. Falconer and in a little while afterwards he had the report of the Civil Service Commission. But, before the report of the Civil Service Commission had come to him or to the government my hon. friend had commenced again, on his ministerial responsibility, an investigation into the organization of his department with the object of bringing about efficiency in the service and which it is his duty to carry on and which is not a matter at all for the investigation which Judge Cassels has been asked to undertake. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) spoke a few minutes ago as if the investigation which has now been entrusted to Judge Cassels ought to have been carried on by the Civil Service Commissioners. The Civil Service Commissioners, as a matter of fact, did not make any accusations against any individuals, although they did make general statements in regard to conditions in the department. I have not spoken to the commissioners about it, but from their report I should say that they did not consider that they were the proper persons to conduct a judicial investigation and take evidence in regard to the particular responsibility or honesty of any one member of the department. We have put it into the hands of a judge who is the right man to make a judicial investigation and give a judicial decision. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) spoke of the accusations in the Civil Service Commissioners report. If they had made any accusations surely they would not be the right people to investigate and give a decision on the question in regard to which they had made accusations. If Judge Cassels thinks it wise he can summon the Civil Service Commissioners before him to give any further information than that published in the report and we can get the advantage of that. I had not intended to dilate upon these matters. I am not going into details with regard to them at all. There will be occasions upon which they can be taken up and dealt with at greater length. I only want to show that the accusations which have been made against my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries are not well founded. Those against my hon. friend in regard to his shirking his ministerial responsibility are not justified or based upon facts, but, as a matter of fact, the action and the career of my hon. friend, since he has assumed that office, show that in every possible way he has been prepared to take the responsibility of his ministerial position although he is not prepared to take the judicial action of deciding whether an individual officer in his department is guilty of dishonesty or not. He leaves that to a gentleman whose reputation is such that hon. members on the other side of the House cannot, in so many words, attack it, although they may try to insinuate that he may be influenced unworthily.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. EDMUND BRISTOL (Centre Toronto). Mr. Speaker, with all deference to those who have spoken on the other side of the House, it seems to me that in this discussion they have strayed far from the questions which the leader of the opposition so courteously asked the First Minister this afternoon. There were two simple questions put to the right hon. gentleman. One was, why the inquiry in this case had been restricted and placed under the second part of the Act respecting public and departmental inquiries instead of under the first part of that Act; and the other inquiry was, whether, in addition to the two Liberal partisan counsel who would defend the government, it was the intention of the government to appoint other counsel who would act independently in the interests of the people of Canada at large. If I can understand the reasons given by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in relation to the first question put by the leader of the opposition, he takes the ground that he himself and the government had in no way been attacked by the report of this commission, that he and the government are held absolutely blameless and that therefore there is no necessity for any inquiry of a general character in the public interest. The Minister of Finance also seems to state that while there may be and no doubt is a constitutional responsibility there is no further or other responsibility falling upon the government which would involve inquiry into anything except the conduct of some officials whose names have not been mentioned in the report of the Civil Service Commission. That must indeed be a very comforting position for the government to take. They congratulate themselves that they are absolutely absolved and held guiltless, and they therefore decide they will have no tribunal to investigate themselves. but they will have an investigation of some of the departmental officials. Let me present to the government and its followers some few considerations which they may reasonably think on before they become steadfast in their conclusion as to their non-responsibility in this matter, and as to the interest of the public in a broad investigation instead of the restricted and narrow investigation which they offer. It is interesting to note that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries declares that he wants the fullest possible investigation and that while he holds up one hand for the fullest possible investigation he holds up the other hand for a narrow and restricted inquiry into the officials of his department only. That is a contrast which the people of this country are quite able to appreciate. The Minister of Finance told us that in 1892 Civil Service Commission made a report which to a large extent involved some of the various iniquities which the present civil service report has pointed out. If that be correct, then I do charge that the government of this country from 1896 to the present time have been going on in the full knowledge that these double prices were being paid and in the knowledge of the iniquities which have been proven by this new Civil Service Commission. Even if that were not so, I charge that the question of this department and all the mismanagement and all the extravagance of this department was brought up in this House two years ago by the leader of the opposition who on May 18, 1906, moved :

That all the words after the word 'that' in the proposed motion be omitted and the following substituted therefor:

A committee of seven members be appointed to inquire into and investigate the expenditure of public moneys in or by the Department of Marine and Fisheries from and after the 30th day of June, 1902, and to inquire whether any abuses, irregularities, improvidences or maladministrations have arisen or occurred in respect of such expenditures and whether any persons employed in or connected with the said department have profited thereby, and whether any additional safeguards should be provided in respect of the expenditure of public money in or by the said department and to report upon the matters aforesaid.

That the said committee have power to send for persons, papers and records and to examine witnesses under oath.

By means of this resolution and the speeches in support of it, the government had their attention brought in the most forceful manner to the absolute rottenness of the administration of this department, and it is idle for them now to say they have no responsibility. Two years ago when this resolution was moved, everybody who takes an intelligent interest in the public affairs of Canada was well aware of the rottenness of this department, and yet the government wilfully shut their eyes to it or were incompetent to apply a remedy. There was brought to the attention of the government at this time the scandal of the 'Arctic,' the scandal of the purchase of cutlery for the 'Montcalm' where the most extraordinary prices were paid for tableware for an ice-breaker, and above all there were the Merwin scandals. I emphasize this latter because in the Public Accounts Committee in 1906 it was proven that this man Merwin had sold to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, articles which that department and any business man in this country could have purchased direct from the wholesale merchants and manufacturers at from 100 to 187 per cent less than they paid Merwin. There was a Sturtevant engine which cost $262.50 and which was sold to the department by Merwin for $550; there was another engine of a similar character which cost $25 and was sold to the department for $550, and another similar engine which cost $335 and which was sold to the department for $960 or at a profit on the transaction of 187 per cent. The battle was fought in the Public Accounts Committee in respect to this man Merwin and it was only after the greatest possible effort and in face of obstruction on the part of members on the other side of the House that the facts in relation to this thing were brought out. Let me ask? Is there any sane business man on the opposite side or any sane business man in Canada, who, if he found a man charging him an exorbitant profit or from 100 per cent to 187 per cent for articles of ordinary commerce, would go on buying from that man without tender and without having his prices checked. But that state of affairs went on until October last, and goods were purchased from Merwin to the extent of considerably over a million dollars without tender. And yet the government say : We are a business administration and we have no responsibility in this matter. Why, Sir, if the board of directors of any company were to tell the shareholders that for three years they had gone on dealing with a man who had so grossly overcharged them for ordinary articles, the management of that company would not be permitted to continue for a moment. Surely, the administration of the public affairs of a country should certainly be on the same business basis as the administration of the affairs of a private commercial corporation. Nay more, I would put it on a higher plane, and I would say that a man of honour anxious to endeavour to live up to the fullest extent to the trust imposed in him, would be even more careful in the conduct of a great public department than in the ordinary affairs of business.

Here we have the spectacle of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, for over two years in this department, with statements brought constantly to his attention as to the rottenness of that department, saying and the government saying : We knew nothing of this matter ; we are not responsible ; the commissioners have found no fault with us, let us go after a few understrappers in the department. I think the people of this country will not be satisfied with such sophistry ; business men, who conduct their affairs honestly, will not be satisfied with such an absurd and unintelligible argument put forward by the apologists of this government. Mr. Speaker, I want to place on record the plain distinction between the two classes of investigation which are open to the administration. In the first place, they appointed a commission in May, 1907, not to investigate charges or abuses, irregularities, improvidence or mal-administration, but to look into the operation of the Civil Service Act and the services and compensation of the officials of the government ; and such inquiry was to include the following subjects :

1. General operation of the Civil Service Act.
2. Classification of the service.
3. Salaries.
4. Temporary employment.
5. Technical employees.
6. Promotions.
7. Discipline, hours of service, &c.
8. Efficiency and sufficiency of the departmental staffs.
9. Retiring allowances.
10. Any other matter relative to the service which in the opinion of the commissioners requires consideration.

It has been pointed out that two hon. ministers have attacked these commissioners for going outside of the terms of their commission ; and if it had not been for clause 10, it would no doubt have been possible legally to take that position ; but under clause 10 they had the right, and they exercised that right, of making a more general investigation. Now, the order in council authorizing that commission was passed under part 1 section 2 of an Act respecting public and departmental inquiries, being chapter 104 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. Subsection 2 is as follows:

The Governor in Council may, whenever he deems it expedient, cause inquiry to be made into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof.

The order in council appointing the Hon. Mr. Justice Cassels as commissioner is based on part 2, section 6, of the same Act, relating to departmental investigations, which read as follows:

The minister presiding over any department of the Civil Service of Canada may appoint at any time, under the authority of the Governor in Council, a commissioner or commissioners to investigate and report upon the state and management of the business or any part of the business of such department, either in the inside or outside service thereof, and the conduct of any person in such service, so far as the same relates to his official duties.

The part which the Hon. Mr. Justice Cassels has been asked to investigate is merely one statement in the report, which is as follows :

That immediate steps should be taken in order to determine what officials, if any, deserve condemnation, and to give to all an opportunity to meet the charges implied.

By the very terms of this last commission the minister and the government leave themselves out of the investigation. Suppose the investigation goes on. Certain officials of the department are charged with getting graft or commissions, and the question is naturally asked, what did the minister know of these transactions ? Did you tell him or give him information of the people from whom you were buying, or of the high prices you were paying ? Under this commission questions of this kind are completely shut out, because the conduct of the minister is in no way to be inquired into ; the inquiry is absolutely confined, under the order in council, to the acts of certain officials of the department. So that we have the administration calmly saying, in the light of the facts which are common knowledge to the people of this country ; although for years we have known of these charges of graft, and although within the last two years they have been brought repeatedly to our attention, we are absolutely without responsibility, we are innocent, there is no charge against us.

Now, I do not wish again to go over the very able argument which was made by my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) in regard to the responsibility of the minister ; but I do affirm that any unprejudiced person, reading that report, will say, quite apart from any observations that I have addressed to the House, that there is ample evidence on which any man wishing to protect his honour against aspersions, any government holding themselves high as the guardians and trustees of the people, would have demanded the fullest possible investigation and the fullest opportunity to free themselves of any suspicion of connection with or knowledge of the graft that is charged. And so I submit that when it is sought to narrow this investigation, it is an absolute and direct effort on the part of the administration to contract themselves out of the investigation and to say : We are innocent, we do not propose to have any inquiry made into our acts, but we propose to narrow the inquiry down to what a few officials in the department may or may not have done.

That leads up to the second point which is of great importance to the people of this country, and that is the method of conduct of this investigation. And here one is somewhat amused at the answers which have been made to-day ; because, instead of the ministers making a fair and proper answer to the questions of the hon. leader of the opposition and the arguments advanced, they put up straw men and at once knock them down. A very good example of that was the argument presented this afternoon by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), who tried to insinuate that some attack had been made by this side of the House upon the hon. Mr. Justice Cassels as the commissioner in this inquiry. I want to say, so far as I have the right to do so, that I have not heard any such attack, I do not believe that any such attack was directly or indirectly made, and I want to be allowed to say that I have known the Hon. Mr. Justice Cassels for many years, and I gladly say that he is universally regarded by the bar of Ontario as one of our ablest lawyers and one of our most high-minded and impartial men. I cannot pay too high a tribute to the great abilities of that hon. gentleman, and I do not think the government could have made a better choice for their commissioner than the hon. judge whom they have appointed, and that is the feeling, so far as I know it, on the Conservative side of this House. But that has nothing to do with the question. That was simply to draw a red herring across the trail. The hon. Minister of Finance attempted to make an excuse for the appointment of two partisan Liberal counsel to assist in this investigation ; and when it was pointed out to him that when a charge was made against a Conservative department, two of the ablest Liberal lawyers in Canada, one of English origin and one of French origin, were appointed to assist in the investigation, the Minister of Finance said, in that case it was a Tory minister who was involved, whereas in this case it was merely the officials of the department. It certainly is a new distinction to make that we should employ the most distinguished counsel to bring to earth a Conservative minister, while we should employ a partisan counsel to bring to justice, if justice it be, the members of a department who have been accused of wrong-doing.

That, of course, is an absolutely and utterly illogical position for the Minister of Finance or any one else to take. The whole point is : Do hon. gentlemen opposite really think they will have satisfied their own honour, will have satisfied their Liberal friends throughout the country, will have satisfied public opinion in Canada by appointing to assist in this matter two strongly biased Liberal lawyers It does not matter how able they are, the point that was made is simply that it would be common decency, at all events, if the government proposed to appoint two gentlemen of the same stripe of politics as the administration whose life, so to speak, is at stake in this matter, to have appointed independent counsel who were not strongly swayed by considerations of party politics.

I wish to emphasize, with all the force I can, what I believe to be the indecency, and impropriety of this administration in appointing these two gentlemen to act as counsel. It goes to show that the ingenuous and somewhat amusing, but I fancy hardly intentional statement of the Minister of Marine to-day that he did not want any blame to attach to himself or to the government in connection with this matter, was really to be worked out by the fact first that the new commission was so restricted that it was absolutely impossible under its terms to attack either the minister or the government, and secondly that counsel were being employed whose political proclivities were such that it might reasonably be anticipated that their bias would induce them to do every thing they could to protect the government by whom they were paid and whose life long supporters they were. So, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I wish to protest as strongly and as vigorously as I can against both the restricted nature of this commission and the appointment of partisan council in connection with the investigation of a matter of such great public importance.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, the subject under discussion may be, I suppose, compendiously stated as whether or not this government has done right in the course it has taken in this matter in authorizing the issue of a commission to Mr. Justice Cassels. To appreciate whether or not that action on the part of the government was the correct method of dealing with this subject, it seems to me we should remember exactly the position created by the circumstance of the report of the Civil Service Commission being made and laid on the table of this House. I do not, for the moment, speak of the circumstance that no sooner was that report presented, no sooner had it become the subject of any discussion in this House, than the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who to-day inveighs so emphatically against the course the government has taken in this matter, was himself the very first to suggest that it was incumbent on the government to deal with this question either by the appointment of a committee of this House or by the issue of some commission of inquiry. We have taken the better of these two alternatives. I do not suppose any hon. gentleman in this House would contend that any more impartial tribunal for the investigation of this question could by possibility have been selected than the one which has been named or that there would have been any greater propriety, even although there had been party advantage, in the appointment of a committee of this House to investigate this question. We have then accepted and acted on one of the two alternative suggestions made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), yet in doing that it seems we have, according to the views he has expressed to-day, most grievously erred. It is of course but another example of the facility with which hon. gentlemen who desire to criticise on all occasions the government of the day and who are determined, no matter what course that government may take, to condemn it off-hand, and to cry out against the course which it has adopted, will trim their sails according to the breeze and be prepared at any time and in any event and at all seasons to condemn whatever may be done by those who are opposed to them politically. The situation when this report from the commission of inquiry into the operation of the civil service was made was, it seems to me, a very simple and plain one. I have been accused to-day of having attacked this commission when speaking before my constituents on the subject some three or four weeks ago. I deny that statement ; I made no attack. If I had wanted to criticise, the material for criticism was ready to my hand. I did not even criticise, although the report of the commission itself certainly well invited criticism. I said on that occasion what I have no hesitation in saying again and what any hon. gentleman who reads the mandate to these commissioners can at once see for himself, namely, that they stepped altogether outside of that which was defined to them as their jurisdiction when they made a report at length as they have made with regard to the different departments of the governmental service. They were appointed to inquire into the operation of the Civil Service Act ; they were not appointed to inquire into the administration of the general departments of the government service. They were appointed with specific reference to many matters arising under the Civil Service Act. These particular matters were specified in the order in council appointing them, in the commission issued to them. They were to inquire generally into the operation of the statute, with special reference to the classification of the service, to the salaries of the service, to the matter of temporary employment, of technical employment, of promotions, of discipline, of the hours of service, of retiring allowances and then (in the only phrase that could possibly, by any stretch, be taken to cover the course which they followed in making the remarks they have seen fit to make on general administration) they were finally appointed to inquire into the efficiency and sufficiency of the departmental staffs. I am not here to criticise, much less to attack the course which the commissioners took. I am simply pointing out, not in any way of attack or even of criticism upon their work, that they did undoubtedly go beyond the commission of inquiry issued to them in what they have reported. But that I make no point of, that is in no degree an answer to what they have said, or in any way a circumstance which relieved the government from considering the report which they have seen fit to make. When that report comes to be presented not only does it deal with matters committed to them for inquiry, but it goes into the general question of the administration of the different departments of the government service, and they have reported to this House that in the Department of Marine and Fisheries there is this to be criticised, the system in vogue of distributing the daily correspondence of the department. They have taken the time to discuss at some length that method of distributing the correspondence and to suggest what they consider would be improvements in it. They next take up and discuss what they say is a lack of efficient organization in the staff of that department, and at considerable length again they discuss that feature of the administration of the department. Other similar matters are dealt with, with which the minister who is in charge of that department, himself can deal, and in regard to which he is himself engaged. But they have gone further and have not only stated these general things with regard to the administration, the organization and the system or method of doing the work of that department by the staff there employed, but have said that there seems also to be in that department a lack of conscience, and having made that statement they follow it up by saying that some government officials are serving two masters. That is a tolerably specific statement, if we can make that observation with regard to something that is absolutely and entirely general. I do not know, I have very considerable doubt in my own mind, whether the gentleman who penned that phrase had at the time or has now any certain, particular person in mind toward whom he aimed when he used the expression : There are some of the government officials who are serving two masters.

I incline to think, after giving it the best consideration I am able, that the gentleman who used these words himself would say—I did not mean any specific person; I meant merely, in arguing what I thought must be the condition of things, to say that, from what I had seen of the lack of organization—of the lack of efficient work, if you please, of the wrong system upon which things are done in that department—there must be somebody or other who was serving two masters. Now, whichever thing he meant—whether the man who wrote those words meant that there was some particular individual or set of individuals in the department who were lacking in conscience and who were trying to serve not merely their employers but some one else from whom they were receiving benefits for favours given, whichever meaning was attached, in the mind of the person who wrote these words, to the words he has used, it is a subject of inquiry. And I do not for a moment shirk the situation that, although this was something quite beyond what these commissioners were appointed to do, the fact that they have said it is, none the less, a reason why the thing which they have said must of necessity have, at the hands of the government, further investigation.

Now, it seems to me that the circumstance presented by the delivery of that report from any person entrusted by the Crown in any kind of inquiry into a matter affecting the public service was not unlike, in principle, what would be the case supposing some party of government surveyors or some set of men who might be in government employment and sent out on some prospecting investigation, came, if you like, by accident—or, if you like, by search—upon a dead body in the course of their work, and, looking at the circumstances, thought that this dead body might have been the result of foul play and, in the course of their report upon their work made the observation that they had, upon a certain day, come upon this corpse, and that there might have been foul play in connection with it. What then would be done? What would be the duty of those charged with the administration of justice, without regard to whether this body of men had been sent out for the purpose of searching for what they had found, or had come upon it, and had reported that they had come upon it, by accident? The course naturally taken would be the empanelling of a coroner's jury, and the investigation of this corpus delicti by the form of a coroner's inquest. That is exactly the course the government has taken in this matter. Hon. members in this House talk about somebody being on trial. The very men who use that expression over and over and over again must perfectly understand that this is no proceeding in the nature of a charge and trial, that it is nothing else than that to which I have likened it, an examination into circumstances—of, if you like, a suspicious character—in regard to which an investigation is directed precisely of the nature which is carried on by a coroner and coroner's jury in the case of inquest upon a body found. In these circumstances this is in no sense a prosecution or trial; it is an investigation to ascertain facts. This report gives no one any facts upon which he can act. Merely by way of illustration, I presume, two instances are given of what the commissioners say they found in the nature of impropriety or wrong-doing in the department; and, as I said before, if one wanted to go looking for opportunity of criticism, it would not be hard to find material ready to hand upon the face of this report itself. Because, it turns out, the moment they mention in detail two specific instances of what they thought was wrong-doing in the department, in each of the two cases it was they who were mistaken and the department was absolutely correct. They charge, in terms, that there had been an authorization by the department, that there had been an accepting by the minister, of a recommendation of one of his subordinates, to depart from a contract and to pay a higher price for a certain commodity than that which the seller had undertaken to receive. In that, they were entirely wrong. They fell into an error, not unnaturally, but an error which they would not have fallen into if any one had known that they were travelling outside the purpose for which they were appointed or were engaged in an investigation which they intended to make the foundation of a report of this character—which simply illustrates the danger of acting upon or accepting the conclusions of gentlemen who have gone about a work which they were not appointed to undertake, and a work which nobody was aware they were engaged in at all. If they had mentioned to anybody in the department, I suppose, that they thought there was in these circumstances of the coal purchase at Prescott something that called for explanation, any official of the department acquainted with the facts, or in possession of the files of the department, could at once have shown them that, in that particular instance at all events, there was nothing calling for comment, for the minister at the head of the department, immediately on the recommendation of his subordinate coming to his attention, refused to act upon it, directed that the contract should be acted upon and that that thing exactly should be done which the commissioners find fault with the department because they thought it was not done. In the other instance, they are equally at sea, and equally under a mistake, simply by reason of the circumstance that they were going on unguided, unassisted, and without reference to any person who was in a position to know the facts and drawing conclusions which the circumstances not only did not warrant, but, immediately on being known, demonstrated were entirely at variance with the truth.

Now, notwithstanding that these features of the report must necessarily lessen the weight which otherwise would be attached to it, we have the fact that two out of the three gentlemen for this purpose make these observations with regard to the personnel of the staff in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. What was the government to do ? I make no point of the fact that the third or chief commissioner did not concur in the remarks of his colleagues. It would have been exactly the same situation if but one of the three commissioners had said what the two have said here. If, instead of saying it in the report, they had said it by letter, or in any formal way had brought it to the attention of the government or of the minister, the situation would have been identically the same ; and therefore, I say, I make no point whatever of the fact that they have travelled afield and outside and beyond their jurisdiction ; I make no point whatever in derogation of the weight that should be attached to this report of the other circumstances I have adverted to. I come simply down to this situation, that gentlemen who were entrusted by the government with a certain investigation have seen things, in the course of that investigation which, they say, call for further inquiry, and that they considered themselves justified in summing up by the statement that somebody or other in the Department of Marine and Fisheries was without conscience and apparently serving two masters. That is the one thing in the report that calls for further action in the nature of inquiry. The other things in the report are matters of departmental administration with which the minister is in a position to deal. But that particular statement is a statement which cannot be ignored and a statement in regard to which no investigation the minister himself could make would satisfy hon. gentlemen who are so ready to criticise that nothing whatever which can be done will satisfy them. That statement appearing on the face of the report was something which, according to the gentleman who, for the time being, was leading the opposition, called for the issue of a further commission of inquiry, or the appointment of a committee of this House to investigate; and the government taking the view which he presented, has appointed a further commission of inquiry to do exactly the work which I have described as the work of a coroner and a coroner's jury in this matter.

Well, the next question I suppose is whether any exception can be taken to the gentleman who is chosen for the duty. Now I am not aware that any person in this House or out of it has taken the slightest exception to the gentleman who has been named to do this work. We have in the past not only, in this House but in other legislative assemblies in this country, seen the necessity arise for the appointment of commissions of inquiry of one character or another. We in the province of Ontario, within the last three years, have seen a good many instances of it, and we have seen commissions of inquiry appointed by a government supported by hon. gentlemen who sit opposite, a government that they laud to the skies and we have seen commission after commission issued by that government to political heelers of the very lowest description, selected for no other purpose than to do the duty of an executioner, and in whose hands the result of the commission was foreseen and expected. If this government had selected for the purpose of this inquiry a man as commissioner against whom one word of exception could be taken, then there might have been some foundation for the attacks that have been made today, and that have been made consistently since this commission was appointed ; as if there was in the appointment some intention to whitewash, some intention to prevent thoroughness, some intention to get over what is said to be the damaging effects of the commissioners' report. I say Sir, that the very fact that this gentleman has been chosen as commissioner is in itself a sufficient answer to charges of that character.

But criticism upon the course of the government does not stop there. Criticism follows the least action which is taken by the government, objection is sure to follow every step which the government may take, no matter what it may be. If the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, instead of making the appointment he has made, had chosen to investigate for himself and had made no appointment of a commissioner at all, it would at once have been said that he was standing behind his officials, that he was identifying himself with them, that if they were without conscience, as was charged by the commissioners, then he was equally to be condemned because he was making common cause with them. On the other hand, the moment that he appointed this commission of inquiry, at once the word went out from headquarters, at once the 'Mail' newspaper, which I suppose is the gospel of the hon. gentlemen from the province of Ontario who sit opposite, takes the position that the minister has determined to sacrifice his subordinates, that he is not manly enough to stand behind them, but that the fiat has gone forth that they must be beheaded. Well, everyone is prepared for either alternative, that is a beautiful example at all events of the fact that whatever course may be taken in this matter by the government, that course will necessarily be condemned, and that course is the one which will afford the best opportunity for criticism and attack.

Now, Sir, the commissioner having been selected, and being a gentleman not only above reproach, but actually above even attack by those who would attack every earthly thing that was done by this government, the next question was as to the manner in which that inquiry should be carried on. Now it has been said that the commissioner himself desired in this matter to have the assistance of council. I take no advantage of that position. I assume, as legal adviser if you please of the government in this matter, the fullest responsibility upon my own shoulders for the advice that this was an inquiry which ought not to be conducted without the assistance of counsel; and whether the commissioner desired council or not, I would certainly be unwilling that he should enter upon an inquiry of this character, one the result of which is so certain to be attacked, without the help of counsel to assist in the investigation, and relieve him from some portion of the laborious work which otherwise he would have to undertake personally. Somebody of necessity must investigate, case after case of individual character; somebody must pore through file after file, thousands upon thousands of pages in the Department of Marine and Fisheries; somebody must of necessity go up many a blind alley before he can possibly hit upon anything that would be productive of results, anything that could lead to a determination of any of the circumstances which the commissioner is appointed to investigate. It might be said: Let the commissioner himself do it. His time is no more valuable than that of anybody else; he is a public servant, and let him take the weeks or months that may be necessary to do that work of preliminary investigation. I submit that it would not be wise or prudent that the commissioner should do that work, and for the simple reason that the man, whoever he is, who does that work of investigation, whoever he is, whether counsel or commissioner, who does the work of questioning witnesses, must and will be undoubtedly represented as prosecuting counsel. This inquiry although it is in every sense as far removed from the trial of any accusation as any inquiry possibly could be, is already represented by nearly every speaker opposite who has addressed you to-day, as a trial of somebody or other, and just as it is so improperly represented, just as it is sought to be in the eyes of the people so distorted from its real character, so truly would the man who was conducting that inquiry, whether he were commissioner or counsel, be represented as nothing else but a prosecutor, or indeed a persecutor. The moment you put the commissioner into a position where it is possible to say that of him, you detract immeasurably from the weight which his report would have, and you at once bring him into the arena of a prosecuting counsel instead of leaving him where he ought to be, a judicial officer to determine. In these circumstances I certainly felt no hesitation whatever in advising that counsel should be engaged for the assistance of the commissioner. I take upon myself the fullest responsibility for the course the government has taken, and am willing to relieve the commissioner absolutely from the suspicion even of having suggested that anything of the kind should be done.

Then it having been decided that there should be counsel in this matter, the next question was who that counsel should be. It is perhaps not unnatural that, having the duty of recommending the person of the counsel, I should turn in my mind at once to the men of my own immediate acquaintance. I happen to be, from the circumstance that for nearly a generation I have practised law in the city of Toronto, better acquainted with the lawyers of Toronto than I am with the lawyers of any other part of this country, and it was, in these circumstances, not an unnatural thing that I should canvass in my own mind the men with whom I am best acquainted and of whose ability and standing I have the best knowledge when it was a question of who should be selected for this work. I take the full responsibility of having recommended the name of Mr. Watson for this position. I did that upon my knowledge of the man, and I have not heard as yet any criticism offered except the question which I see was propounded by the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) as to Mr. Watson's identity a few days ago, and the observation made this afternoon by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that he had been, or, I think, the statement was that he at the present time was in charge of the Liberal organization for the city of Toronto. Mr. Speaker, I am in a position to give an unqualified denial to the latter of these two statements. Mr. Watson is not, so far as I am aware, identified with any Liberal organization in Toronto or elsewhere in this country. He was at one time, I think, chairman or president—I really do not know what the title was—of some organization of that character in Toronto—I have no idea whether for a riding or for a ward or for the whole city. I am absolutely indifferent on that head. I know Mr. Watson to be a Liberal politically. He is a man who I know has confidence in me and perhaps it is not strange on that account that I should have confidence in him, and I do not hesitate in this House or anywhere in this country to justify before hon. members or before any body of men the selection of Mr. Watson for this work. He is a man of standing in his profession. I have known him personally for about 35 years, from the time when he was a struggling young barrister to the day when he stands amongst the foremost leaders of the bar in the province of Ontario, and hon. gentleman must recognize him not merely as a man of integrity and character, but as a man possessing legal attainments such as fit him for any brief or any work which may be entrusted to him by any client. In these circumstances I had no hesitation, on Mr. Watson occurring to my mind, to recommend him as a man who would conduct this inquiry properly, who would conduct it as it should be conducted, who would pursue the end towards which this investigation was directed and who would make the investigation of that thorough and complete character which was from the beginning intended. I cannot too highly emphasize the observation that was made this afternoon by my hon. colleague in charge of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, that the one intention and desire in the appointment of this commission was that this work should be thorough and the one piece of instruction which I have given in this matter to Mr. Watson in a personal interview and in writing was that this work was to be of a thorough character, that the thing that was expected of him was that he would spare no effort to make this investigation perfect and complete and that he would go into the department to the very bottom of things and satisfy this government and the country whether or no there was any foundation for the remarks which have been made by the commission as to the lack of personal honesty and integrity on the part of officials of the department, and if there is foundation for them to determine who the men are that they may be weeded out from among their fellows and that the truth in regard to them may become known. These are the instructions that Mr. Watson has, and I am well enough acquainted with him to know that these instructions will be carried out and that the work which he undertakes will be work that is thoroughly done. In these circumstances it is not a subject of criticism, it is not a matter in regard to which those who may wish to criticise have the slightest ground for the attacks they make; that counsel has been selected and that counsel has been the man of whom I have spoken.

Now, Sir, it has been asked here whether or not this gentleman is counsel for the minister or whether or not any counsel is to be engaged for the gentlemen who have prepared the report of the commission of inquiry into the civil service. Well, Sir, I scarcely know whether or not such a question is being propounded seriously. I suppose that the hon. gentleman who put such a question knows perfectly well the character of this investigation. If any hon. gentleman of the legal profession or acquainted with the ordinary course of legal proceedings puts such a question he must see at once that it carries with it its own answer. He knows—he must know that this investigation is in no sense, as I have already said, a question of trying anybody, but that it is simply an investigation of inquiry, and he might quite as well ask, to return again to the illustration which I have used before, whether or not counsel for somebody or other for some individual or witness, was going to appear before a coroner appointed to take evidence in an inquiry of this nature. It is no attack upon the commissioners, it is no trial of the commissioners, the commissioners are in no sense upon the defensive; it is supplementing and carrying forward the work which they, in the way in which I have described, have done. It is in no sense a review or a trial or any kind of imputation or charge against these commissioners. This, Sir, is simply a public inquiry and counsel who appear in this matter under the instructions of this government appear for the public, as occupying precisely the position that a county Crown attorney occupies at a coroner's inquest, inquiring for the whole country and engaged to probe the matter to its depths to ascertain what foundation there may be for a statement which appears in the report which is the basis of this inquiry. Mr. Watson is counsel for the people. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House amuse themselves by using that phrase of which they are so fond, and I wonder if it never occurs to them that they are, perhaps, unconsciously, or perhaps purposely, seeking to identify the sixty or seventy men who compose His Majesty's opposition with the people of this country. They seem to forget that the people are represented by their chosen representatives in this House of parliament, that the country is represented by this government and that it is the government and not the gentleman who sit on your left, Sir, who have the right to speak for the people in whom the people have time and time again already demonstrated, as time and time again they will in the future, demonstrate their confidence by their votes at the polls. Mr. Watson is the representative counsel in this inquiry for the people of this country. He is selected for that work by the government who have the confidence of this House and the confidence of the country, and it is of little moment for hon. gentlemen in whom so often the people of Canada have refused to repose confidence to speak here as though they were voicing the sentiments of the people of this country. I submit to you, Sir, under these circumstances that the appointment of Mr. Watson is one with which the people of Canada will be satisfied, and until some charge is brought against him other than that he belongs politically to the majority, his appointment is not open to criticism.

Now, I simply took the floor to speak as to the appointment of counsel. I regret that I am quite unable to answer observations that have been made in the course of this debate because I have had to depend entirely on what good friends who are able to hear have told me as to what has been said. Unfortunately for myself I am not physically in a position to engage in political controversy. I have risen simply to lay before the House the considerations which have moved the government to take the course it has taken in appointing for this important work the gentleman who has been selected as commissioner. I take great comfort to myself, as I am sure every one in this House ought to take comfort to himself, that the appointment of Mr. Justice Cassels has been so well received on all hands and that there has been no criticism applied to his appointment. Under these circumstances, whatever else may be said of this commission or of any person who may be engaged in it, I have the confident hope that the course which that commissioner may take will commend itself to every one in this House and in the country. He can certainly be relied upon to do his duty in the premises, without fear, favour, partiality, or affection. He is acting literally in judicial capacity; he is charged to report who the men are (if there be any) who are described in this portion of the report in question. No other duty is put upon him nor was there any intention to put any other duty upon him. He was appointed simply and solely for the purpose of pursuing to the end the question started by these commissioners: That there did seem to be somebody, or more than one, in the department in question who was not honest, who was not faithful to his trust, but who was worthy of punishment and dismissal. His duty is to try these men, whoever they may be, so far as there is trial, and to investigate and report what foundation there is for the existence of this suspicion which has led to the statement that forms the whole basis of the inquiry. I submit that the government has taken the only proper course in this matter, that it has adopted and acted upon the very suggestion that came from the leader of the opposition or the hon. member for North Toronto, and that acting on that suggestion it has appointed a man who is above question and above reproach, and that upon the result of the inquiry which may be conducted before him this House and the country may well depend for a certain knowledge of what, if any, foundation, exists for the charges and insinuations which have been so freely made.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). There is an old adage: that whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad, and I venture to say that when the history of this country comes to be written no more perfect illustration of this adage will be found than in the order in council that is being considered to-day. And, if by any possibility the perfection of that illustration could be improved upon I venture to say it would be in the counsel who have been named to assist the commissioner. And, if by any stretch of imagination we could imagine any further addition to the perfection of that illustration it would be the speech of the Minister of Justice to which we have now listened. To avoid any possible misunderstanding, let me say in the first place that no one in this House has spoken with greater respect or could with more sincerity speak with respect of the Hon. Mr. Justice Cassels, than I. It is a pleasure to me to speak of him in these terms. I believe that from one end of the country to the other no commissioner could possibly have been selected whose ability and integrity stand higher than the ability and integrity of the Hon. Mr. Justice Cassels. And, it is because I do so highly respect him and that I know he will do his duty in whatever sphere he is placed, that speaking for myself I regret that this additional stain has been cast on the dignity of the bench by his appointment to such a contemptible little commission as this. Sir, no one can really understand the question without considering the historical retrospect so as to know what has led to the unhappy position in which the government finds itself to-day placed. Although I need not go beyond the Civil Service Commission report itself to find that there are other departments equally open to criticism, I shall confine my remarks to the Department of Marine and Fisheries because it is that department we are specially dealing with now. I would remind the House that this department was so deplorably mismanaged and had run to such a scandalous state of chaos that not long ago the Prime Minister himself on the floor of parliament in the presence of dozens of hon. gentlemen admitted that the department had reached this sad state under the guardianship of the Hon. Mr. Préfontaine, predecessor of the present minister. And the right hon. gentleman said that he had put in office the present minister to bring order out of the chaos which then existed and because he thought he would be able to bring that department up to the standard which at one time it had attained. That was the description of this unhappy department, according, not to Conservative imagination, but according to the statement of the right hon. the Prime Minister made on the floor of parliament. And why did the right hon. gentleman say so? I suppose he was impelled by necessity to make that admission, humiliating though it must have been to the gentlemen behind him who sat there night after night deliberately voting that the voyage of the 'Arctic' was a most excellent undertaking on the grounds of economy; that Merwin was a philanthropic patriot and so self sacrificing as to give his goods and chattles for the benefit of the country, and that Strubbe was a man whose character and conduct were beyond description. It must have been galling for these hon. gentlemen who again and again voted that everything was right and proper and most delightful, to hear their right hon. leader admit that the department was in a state of disreputable chaos. It would be only fair to admit that while the present minister is constitutionally responsible for the acts of his predecessors and that having accepted the office he must bear the responsibility, yet, morally and politically and every way except constitutionally had he (to use a common expression) made good and had the department improved under his regime, it is only fair to admit that he might well come before parliament even in the face of this unhappy report and plead that he at all events was not one of the parties referred to in the strong denunciation of the commissioners. But has the present Minister of Marine in a single respect remedied the debauchery of the department that existed under his predecessor? I challenge any gentleman on the other side to point me to a single respect in which the improvement has come. We remember how scandalized the country was when we found that Merwin, partly under his own name and partly under the name of Brooks & Co. was selling half a million dollars worth of goods to the department year after year and raking off over fifty per cent profit.

I look into the Auditor General's Report which we are now investigating before the Public Accounts Committee, and I find that our old friend Merwin is carrying on business at the old stand, in the same old way, and it is reasonable to suppose with about the same profits; and yet the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who would wish to appear before this House and this country as an honest and capable administrator, knew two years ago exactly what Merwin was doing. Many hon. gentlemen will remember the case of Strubbe, of Montreal, who in the presence of a couple of friends, cashed a cheque here in Ottawa for about $4,700, sent $2,500 to his own bank, and put $2,200 into his pocket; and although he left Ottawa within an hour afterwards, he could not tell what he had done with the money. It was such a common circumstance to place $2,200 in his pocket in the presence of a couple of friends who came from the Department of Marine and Fisheries with him, that he could not recollect what he had done with it. And yet this same gentleman is carrying on business with the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the same way as before. Evidently these two gentlemen, in the estimation of the present minister, possess the necessary qualifications for doing business with the department, and are therefore still doing business with it.

The hon. Minister of Justice has referred to this commission as a coroner's inquest. I am not prepared to contradict him on that point. A coroner's inquest is generally a post-mortem ceremony, and I quite understand that after the death-blow given by the report of the Civil Service Commission, the hon. gentleman thinks it is very appropriate to have a post-mortem, to be followed by the funeral obsequies at a date to be named by the government either in next November or at some later date. I have referred to the state of the Department of Marine and Fisheries under the previous minister and under the present minister. We have found the Public Accounts Committee year after year dragging out scandal after scandal in that department; and yet to this day no one ever heard of any one being punished until the report of the Civil Service Commission came down; and then, Sir, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who stands before this House as so noble that he would scorn to judge one of his subordinates, has to call in a judge to pronounce the sentence. This minister, after beginning to suspend and decapitate his subordinates quite royally, when he thinks he can do it with safety, calls in a judge to pronounce the sentence of death on those whom it pleases His Royal Highness to have executed.

Now let us consider the exact condition of affairs. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Finance Minister speak of the report of the Commission as if there was really nothing in that report that in any way reflected upon the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I did not mind the Minister of Marine and Fisheries saying that as much as I did the Finance Minister, who has stood before this House and this country for integrity and honesty, and I was pained to hear him speak as he did this afternoon. Was a greater absurdity ever heard? On the one hand, they say, we have given you a commission because the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for North Toronto said: In view of such a report you must have either a parliamentary committee or a royal commission to investigate. Why, Sir, it reminds one of the evening when the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, having been taunted by the hon. member for Grenville, the hon. member for Leeds and myself, with one instance of corruption and extravagance after another in this very department, promised to give us an investigation by a parliamentary committee; and when he brought down the motion for the committee, there was such a puny reference to a few trifling charges, that we could not have had any investigation at all under the terms of the reference had not the whole department been so hopelessly extravagant and corrupt that we could touch nowhere without finding something. Yet the Minister of Finance dares to stand before this House and speak of the hon. leader of the opposition and the hon. member for North Toronto having asked for an investigation and therefore this commission was given, when all that anybody who knows his A B C's has to do is to read the report at page 44, where he will find charge after charge, made, not against officials——

Mr. FIELDING. It is not of much consequence, but I did not make any allusion to that at all, if that will make any difference.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I apologize to the hon. Minister of Finance. The statement was made by a minister, and I thought it was made by the Minister of Finance. When such extraordinary statements are made by ministers, it is not to be wondered at if one attributes to one minister a statement made by another. However, the statement was made from the ministerial benches, I believe by the Minister of Justice just before he resumed his seat, that the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for North Toronto had asked for an investigation by either a parliamentary committee or a commission, and therefore this commission to Mr. Justice Cassels was appointed. Consider the audacity of the man who would make such a statement before this House in view of the fact that the report of the Civil Service Commissioners says this :

> The lack of organization and of organizing power in the department has recently been very conspicuously and painfully illustrated by the fact that the accountant's or bookkeeping branch had apparently fallen into such confusion that expert accountants had to be called in to put things to rights and create some intelligible system.

Who called in these accountants ? Why, the minister. The Commission found that somebody was so much to blame that he had to call in outsiders to do the work which should have been done by his department ; and yet we are told that there is no reflection on the minister. Then the report says :

> There is not only a lack of efficient organization and method in the department. There would also seem to be a lack of conscience.

Not one word to say that that lack of conscience was only in subordinates ; the report applies this remark to the department. It is not for me, standing in this House, to say that the minister is devoid of conscience, but the report hits equally the minister and his officials, and the courageous way would have been to have a committee of this House to investigate the matter, and to say whether the head of the department was to blame or only some subordinate. I remember in the olden days that the Reform party laid down the principle in this House that investigations of this kind should be by this House, that it was the duty of the members of this House to investigate, and they deprecated the royal commissions. But notwithstanding the fact that half a dozen charges have been made against the department, we find the minister taking before the council a modest little order which he wants to have passed, limiting the inquiry, not merely to one single charge, but to one head of that charge. Let me remind the House again of the extent of this last commission, to show how contemptibly insignificant the reference is. On page 34 of the report the following paragraph occurs :

> There is not only a lack of efficient organization and method in the department. There would also seem to be a lack of conscience. In connection with the enormous expenditures which are deemed necessary, the word 'discount' never appears. It is tacitly assumed that there is no such thing; but the whole commercial world knows otherwise. If no one gets any benefit from trade with the government except the trader, then it must be clear that in these great purchases made for the government, without discount, its officers must be assisting the trader to get better prices from the government than he can get anywhere else; for everywhere else he has to give discount. In other words, some of the government's officers are serving two masters, and apparently succeeding with both—scripture notwithstanding.

So that is the whole reference to Mr. Justice Cassels. We have a judge brought down from the bench, we have two counsel appointed, and all under the sun they can investigate, of all the details given in this report, is whether or not there is a rake-off in the department by which certain officials in the department profit in the purchase of goods. An official who will order a million and a half dollars worth of goods in a year might be a secret partner in the firm from which he orders, but that could not be investigated ; he might order a million dollars worth of goods from a firm on condition that the firm would subscribe one hundred thousand or two hundred thousands dollars to an election fund, but you could not investigate that. He might be paid by the firm in any way you see fit, but as long as there is not a rake-off coming to him from the purchase of the goods, Mr. Justice Cassels has no more authority to investigate than has the Speaker of the House. Thus you see how contemptibly insignificant the investigation is. Every one knows, it has been common rumour on the streets of Ottawa for years, that in connection with some of these large firms, ministers and ex-ministers are partners. I am not in a position to know this, to assert it positively, but I know that it has been the common talk for years and that any proper investigation would allow that fact to be discovered. Why any minister in the cabinet to-day might be a partner in the Wilson Company, the Merwin Company, the Brooks Company or any other company and that fact might be known to the witness in the box and to counsel, yet under this order of reference it would be impossible to investigate that matter because that is not the subject referred. Can we imagine anything more absurd than that after all this cry in the country as the result of these charges, we have a paltry, puny, whittled down reference, only the single point whether the men who buy goods get a rake-off back from the purchaser.

If there could be anything more absurd than that it would be the appointment as first counsel of Mr. Watson. The minister of Justice grew very eloquent over his friend Mr. Watson. I have nothing to say against Mr. Watson, I think it would be cowardly, on the floor of this House, where he cannot defend himself, to say a word against him. I shall only state a couple of facts that cannot be gainsaid. An investigation was held in the county of Elgin some years ago on behalf of the Ontario government into charges of corruption in an election. A commission was appointed by the Ontario government and Mr. Geo. Watson was appointed counsel to elicit the evidence necessary and proper to be brought before the commission to enable them to make an intelligent report. Mr. Watson no doubt thought he was doing his duty because he drew his pay and I am sure he would not do that if he did not think he had done his duty. The commission solemnly sat, the evidence was produced and I have the report here. If we believe the report founded on the evidence brought forward by counsel on that occasion, there was never a purer election on earth than that election. The minister said he appointed Mr. Watson because he knows him. Of course he does, no one knows him better. He was the eminent counsel who secured the verdict of acquittal here. A short time afterwards a protest came up for trial. Mr. Wallace Nesbitt appeared for the Conservative and Mr. A. B. Aylesworth, who is now the Minister of Justice, appeared for the respondent. I shall not occupy the time of the House by reading the confession of Mr. Donald McNish, because every one in Canada knows that there is no offence forbidden by the election law which is not included in the solemn confession signed by Mr. McNish as having been committed in that election, and in order to prevent any possibility of his afterwards saying that he did not understand what he was signing, that although it was true that his signature was attached to the confession, he did not know that all these crimes were set forth in it, Mr. A. B. Aylesworth was compelled to sign as witness because Mr. Nesbitt knew that with the name of that eminent lawyer, who was at the head of his profession, attached as witness to the signature of his client, the client would not be able to say that he did not know what he had signed, because his professional honour and reputation would compel Mr. Aylesworth to drive the lie down his client's throat. So we find that the minister can well say that he knew Mr. Watson because they had met during an inquiry in West Elgin and, knowing Mr. Watson, he appointed him first counsel in this important investigation. Counsel might have been selected from any province in the Dominion. There is no particular reason why counsel should come from Ontario and Quebec; they might equally well have been selected from New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or British Columbia, and yet out of all the lawyers in Canada, he selected Mr. Watson. Without saying a word against Mr. Watson, if the minister were here he would bear me out when I say that I could name Reform lawyers in Toronto, just as able, in just as good standing in the profession as Mr. Watson whom he could have selected if he had chosen to do so. There is no gentleman in this House from any province in Canada on either side of the House, who would not be able to name a Reform counsel from his own province, eminently capable and able to conduct such a trifling investigation as this inquiry. But no, of all the lawyers in this country the first one to be selected was the gentleman who had made a record along the very line on which it would be in the interest of this government to have another record made in this case.

One would have supposed that one counsel would have been sufficient in a little investigation like this, but no, a second had to be appointed. Again the bar of the whole Dominion was at the service of the government and of all the men in Canada the only one they could choose as a fitting colleague for Mr. Watson was the partner of the late Mr. Prefontaine. The Minister of Marine made a certain statement in the House this afternoon which I cannot characterize as I would like on the floor of this House owing to the rules of parliament. But I will say as a fact, and my statement of fact can be contrasted with his, that when I asked in the House the other evening if Mr. Perron was a member of the firm of Prefontaine, Archer, Perron & Taschereau, of which the late Mr. Prefontaine was head, I was reading the name from the Montreal City Directory of the years 1903-1904, so that up to that date Mr. Perron was in the city directory of Montreal as a partner of Mr. Prefontaine. Does it not strike the ordinary man, I shall not speak of the politician, as rather extraordinary that when this judge was appointed to investigate the doings of the department of which the late Mr. Prefontaine was head for some time, being succeeded by the present minister who has been its head since, the only man to be selected as a colleague of the counsel who was not able to find anything wrong in the other case, was the gentleman who, above all others in this country, was interested in protecting the name and fame of his late partnr, Mr. Préfontaine ? Why was this ? I do not pretend to say. There are two possible explanations. One may have been an honest desire to see that justice was done to a colleague now unhappily removed, another may have been that in view of all the reflections that have been thrown on Mr. Prefontaine from the other side of the House, in view of the innumerable times that the present Minister of Marine has held up the shadow and the shade of Mr. Prefontaine between himself and attack, it may be that he felt some pressure from the province of Quebec which compelled him in his dying political moments to defend the memory of the late Mr. Prefontaine. Whatever the reason, the fact remains that the people of Canada are to be represented, if they are represented at all before this coroner's inquest, to use the words of the Minister of Justice, by one counsel who could not find anything wrong in West Elgin, where other counsel found so much, and by another who was the partner of the late Minister of Marine. Surely the people of this country must begin to have their own opinion of the conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite and perhaps most suspect them when they promise most fairly. The Minister of Justice was good enough to sneer at hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, because he said we claimed to represent the people of this country. Do not let us bandy words about claiming to represent the people. Let members on both sides for a moment lay aside all political bias and prejudices and consider what has happened on the floor of this House. Let us consider the fact that we come here at the beginning of a session and find that thousands of miles of timber limits belonging to the people the session before have now been granted to private individuals ; who inquires what has become of these lands, who inquires when the people are dispossessed of portions of the public domain? Never a gentleman on the government side of the House. Never will you find inquiry raised in that respect, except from the ranks of His Majesty's loyal opposition. Whether it be coal leases, or timber leases, or fishing leases—no matter what it is that the people have lost, so far as my experience goes in this House, I never heard an inquiry or a regret from the other side of the House, but I have heard many an inquiry and deep regret from hon. gentlemen on this side. So, I think, if we lay aside bias and prejudice and frankly consider the duties discharged by gentlemen in this House, it will be found that in any inquiry of interest to the people, of help to the people, it is the opposition that represents the people.

Mr. NORTHRUP.

But let us take the report of the commission which is before the House. It says that all sorts of extravagance, corruption, rascality—if I may use the term—exist in several departments. Has any single step been taken by any minister to see whether these charges are true or not? It is true a little inquiry is proposed into one corner of this great domain. But when such serious charges are made, is it not a shocking state of affairs that ministers who control this House and who are supposed to have the honour of the people in their charge, make no move to see whether the report brought down by the commissioners is true or not? Would it not strike any man of ordinary business capacity, any man accustomed to affairs, that when three commissioners bring down such a report as this, no doubt at serious expense to the country, it would be easy to ask them: 'To whom do you refer? Who are the people who are guilty of this wrong-doing?' When these men have done so much of the work why send new men to begin de novo. The first men have been working for weeks and months in the mine and have brought up good solid ore as the result of their workings. Only those who desire not to discover the truth would take such a course.

Now, I do not intend to discuss this question further, more than to say that when the matter comes to be laid calmly and dispassionately before the people of this country, when, laying aside political bias, if it be possible, we come to consider the case on its merits, what are the people to think of a commission appointed to investigate about one-twentieth of the charges that are made, and that one-twentieth so selected that by no possibility can a minister be hurt? What are the people to think when they see a minister sheltering himself behind a commission so that he should by any possibility be hurt and telling them: 'Go on, investigate among my subordinates?' And then, when he has so entrenched himself that not even a stray shot can possibly hit him, even then he is afraid to appoint counsel in the ordinary way to investigate the case, but selects, I venture to say—without casting any disparagement upon the integrity or ability of the gentlemen—the two counsel who of the whole bar of Canada are the least suitable for the particular duties which they are called upon to perform in connection with this commission. Then, Sir, when after such an attempt as that, first to shelter the minister and then to select counsel so as to secure him from any possibility of trouble, we find the government gravely telling the House and the people that they have given this commission because that is what the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for North Toronto have asked, can any one fail to be reminded of the well-known lines :

In short, I firmly do believe in humbug generally,
For it's a thing that I perceive
To have a solid vally;
This hath my faithful shepherd ben,
In pastures sweet heth led me,
An' this 'll keep the people green
To feed ez they have fed me.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou): The debate started by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) this afternoon has given some hon. gentlemen who sit behind him an opportunity to go over all the old stories that they have been revamping for the last two or three years. It is quite evident that most of the hon. gentlemen on that side who have spoken this afternoon have never read the Civil Service report at all.

Mr. OWEN. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) has read it, he can give us something new.

Mr. MACDONALD. It would not take much reading on my part to fit me to instruct the hon. gentleman who interrupts me. I say that the remarks of these hon. gentlemen and the reiteration of all these fables and old wives' stories that they have been retailing until they have begun actually to believe some of them themselves, indicate that these gentlemen have not read the report. It is true that my ingenious friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox)—whom I will not call an artful dodger, but would rather call an artful dissector—has treated the report in a way for which he can find no authority in his effort to find some references to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I submit that any gentleman who reads the report through will find that there is not the slightest intention on the part of these commissioners to refer to the minister in any manner, and the hon. gentleman who tries to argue to the contrary is simply torturing the language and attempting to put a construction upon it which it will not bear. And when the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), who has spoken with more than ordinary eloquence and fluency this evening, undertakes to say that there are charges of rascality against three or four departments contained in this report, he will not find any such charges in regard to any departments in this report; he simply cannot put his finger upon any such language. He will not find in this report in referring to officials of the department of this government anything that would demand an investigation more than these words that are contained in the report on which the order in council is based appointing Judge Cassels as commissioner in this matter. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen, taking inspiration from their party organs, to run away with the idea that this report has said something about somebody in particular. But let us calmly and deliberately look at this report and see what these commissioners have said. They have first dealt with the Department of Marine and Fisheries and have said a good deal in regard to the files and correspondence, the methods of dealing with these files and the difficulty of finding matters referred to in the files. Then they deal with the methods in regard to correspondence between those in the department itself and with parties outside. They go on and deal with the number of officials and state that there are enough officials in the department to do the work if they were trained and organized. They go on to discuss the question of putting responsibility upon particular officers for departmental acts. And when hon. gentlemen opposite attempt to argue that a phrase used in this report is intended to refer to the minister they refer to a portion of the report which clearly indicates the deputy and those responsible to him, the heads of the several branches and to them alone. Then they go on and deal with the lack of organization in the department. Then they come to the one and only specific statement contained in the whole report which makes an allegation of wrong-doing or 'lack of conscience,' to use their own term, the only charge which this House or the government could take cognizance of for further investigation. And as I intend to refer to that when I come to the order in council I shall not read it now. Then they go on and discuss the system of purchasing supplies in the Marine Department, and I want my hon. friends opposite who are endeavouring to make themselves believe that this system of purchasing grew up under this government to listen to this statement of the commissioners.

> Your commissioners are informed on the best authority that this state of things has been going on ever since pre-confederation days.

The hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Owen), if he will examine the report will find that the good old Conservative party he loves so much purchased supplies just in the same way in the Marine and Fisheries Department, and he will find the statement reiterated that so far as there is anything to be condemned in that respect in the Marine Department, the only trouble was that the officials went on purchasing supplies just as they did under the previous government. Then the commissioners go on and discuss the wisdom of the appointment of the lighthouse board, and they name the officials who compose that board, Colonel Gourdeau, Colonel Anderson, Commander Spain, J. F. Fraser, H. A. Allan and Captain J. W. Troupe. They condemn the proposition that the power of determining where lights should be placed in this country should remain under the control of that board. Having dealt with all these subjects, they come to the following conclusion:

Your commissioners regret that they have been unable to investigate the condition of things in some of the other departments. But to do the work with any pretensions to thoroughness would take much more time than would probably be agreeable to the government. They have been able to go over only a very small section of even the Marine and Fisheries Department. If they had had time it would have been most desirable to have inspected the work of the department at the agencies—Quebec, Sorel, Halifax, St. John and Prescott—particularly Quebec and Halifax.

Now we are told that there have been great abuses in the purchase of supplies, and we are reminded of the stores purchased for the 'Arctic' and the 'Montcalm'. Some of those hon. gentlemen who have never seen the ocean, know nothing of the way in which steamers are run in the St. Lawrence and on the Atlantic; if they did they would have saved themselves a great deal of the rhetoric with which they have flooded this House. The men who go down to the sea in ships require to be pretty well fed; and sailors who go on long voyages exposed to the perils of the Arctic navigation require to be well provided for. Hon. gentlemen seem to forget that their own friend, Mr. Gregory, a gentleman whom they appointed and who has been continued under this administration, was the man who certified to the accuracy of the quantities and the correctness of the prices of the supplies purchased, not only for the 'Arctic' and the 'Montcalm,' but in regard to every dollar's worth of supplies purchased in the city of Quebec, and he has been doing that inspection the last twenty years. The hon. gentleman who spoke last (Mr. Northrup) insinuated that the minister should be held responsible for any excessive price paid for supplies. Well, will he tell me how in the name of all that is reasonable could a minister in Ottawa be supposed to know whether this official away down in Quebec certified correctly to the purchase of a barrel of flour? Is the minister of a department continually to assume that the officer who has that duty in charge is deceiving the government, and wasting the public money by paying more for supplies than he ought to? If the ministers in all the departments were to assume dishonesty on the part of their officials, we would have a very peculiar state of affairs in this country. Then these gentlemen go on further to say:

Your commissioners have to confess that the general conclusions which they have formed regarding the administration of the department are most unfavourable. It seems to have few redeeming features. Although there are some, one of which is the presence in the department of some good men, chiefly, but not wholly, in the lower ranks. With a better organization and better methods, these might form the nucleus of a good staff. The trouble is not of recent origin, but has been long continued, and is the result of evil methods and practices persisted in for many years.

It has been the same under all administrations. This difficulty of administration, this trouble of which they complain, this lack of conscience which they say they have discovered in certain officials, all these things, they declare, are not of recent origin, but have been long continued, and are the result of evil methods and practices persisted in for many years under all administrations. Now I say that my hon. friends who have discussed this question, if they go to work and dissect this report, will be unable to find one single reference of a nature which calls for an investigation, either by the government or by this House, except, the subjects mentioned in this order in council. We are told that there have been difficulties in regard to methods of administration, abuses which have always existed, and the commissioners go on to discuss the question of salaries, and to discuss civil service reform, which they take to mean the absence of all political influences in the appointment of civil servants. The hon. member from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) talked glibly about this report, but he will not find anything in it calling for investigation with the exception of the subjects contained in the order in council appointing Justice Cassels as commissioner. That brings me to the question raised by the leader of the opposition as to whether this inquiry has been restricted. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) suggested that it was not necessary to have this commission at all. He seems to disagree with his leader. The hon. member for Hastings insinuated that because this government had appointed Mr. Justice Cassels and because they did not re-appoint the three commissioners, therefore they did not want to find out anything wrong. Now it won't do to laud Justice Cassels in one breath, and in the next breath to insinuate that it would be just as well to have no commissioner at all. Yet that is what the member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) said this afternoon. Now, is there any restriction of the inquiry? I have shown that a careful perusal of the report will lead any fair-minded man to the conclusion that the only words contained in the report respecting the Marine and Fisheries Department that the government could deal with, are these:

There would also seem to be a lack of confidence. In connection with the enormous expenditures which are deemed necessary, the word 'discount' never appears. It is tacitly assumed that there is no such thing; but the whole commercial world knows otherwise. If no one gets any benefit from trade with the government except the trader, then it must be clear that in these great purchases made for the government without discount, its officers must be assisting the trader to get better prices from the government than he can get anywhere else; for everywhere else he has to get discount. In other words, some of the government's officers are serving two masters, and apparently succeeding with both—scripture notwithstanding.

And the minister draws, in his report to council the inference that commissions are received improperly or that enhanced prices are paid through dishonesty on the part of officials in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The report continues:

But unfortunately the report does not mention any names which would enable him to take definite action concerning these officials. It is, however, in the interest of the Department of Marine and Fisheries and of the country that immediate steps should be taken in order to determine what officials, if any, deserve condemnation and to give to all an opportunity to meet the charges implied.

I submit that the statement is broad and generous. It draws the only inference that can be drawn. It is by way of reflection upon the officials of the department. I do not know whether my hon. friends, ingenious as they are in being able to manufacture imputations and suggest all kinds of wrong-doing without the slightest pretext can possibly infer more, from the language used, than what is indicated by the minister in his report. It seems to me that it gives full effect and to the utmost limit to which my hon. friends might go in that direction. What then does the minister do?

The minister therefore recommends that he be authorized to appoint the Hon. Walter Cassels a commissioner under part 2 of chapter 104 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, to investigate and report upon the foregoing statements contained in the said report of the Civil Service Commission reflecting upon the integrity of the officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, or any of them.

That is the reference. Now, what can the gentleman who was appointed commissioner do? He is appointed under a section of the statute which gives the minister authority to appoint.

A commissioner or commissioners to investigate and report upon the state and management of the business, or any part of the business, of such department, either in the inside or outside service thereof, and the conduct of any person in such service, so far as relates to his official duties.

That is what the minister has done. The broadest and most complete powers are conferred by this order in council and this statute upon Mr. Justice Cassels. If these gentlemen have anything to say about Merwin, if these hon. gentlemen have anything to say about the 'Arctic,' if these hon. gentlemen have anything to say about any of these stories that they have been circulating up and down this country, this gives to Mr. Justice Cassels full and complete authority to investigate and to put on record before this House and the country his findings and report so that this House and the people may deal, not with the insinuations and innuendoes that have been hurled up and down through the country by hon. gentlemen who have abandoned every shred of policy upon every question and who have got down to that one and only occupation as a political party, but with the report and findings of Mr. Justice Cassels. We will have an investigation upon all these insinuations under this statute and order in council which will enable us to have the findings and report so that we will understand the truth in regard to this matter. This inquiry is limited, is it?

The commissioner or commissioners may, for the purposes of the investigation, enter into and remain within any public office or institution, and shall have access to every part thereof, and may examine all papers, documents, vouchers, records and books of every kind belonging thereto, and may summon before him or them any person and require him to give evidence on oath, orally or in writing, or on solemn affirmation if he is entitled to affirm in civil matters; and any such commissioner may administer such oath or affirmation.

It gives him the fullest and most complete power in order that, if there has been wrongful dealing in regard to supplies, in order, if the officials of the department, not within the last year or two but at any time in the past, have been serving two masters he can find it out. So, it will be with reference to the whole catalogue and category of insinuations that we have heard upon this matter. This inquiry is not restricted. This inquiry goes to the very widest limit in order that there may be a most complete report in regard to anything that may be deemed to be wrong in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. So much for the question as to whether this inquiry is restricted. Some hon. gentlemen have suggested that if there were such and such a thing it would not be possible to investigate it. I am sure that my hon. friends who make this suggestion are dealing in casuistry. Does any one suppose that Mr. Justice Cassels, if he found, in any of these things, a suggestion of partnership on the part of any official or minister with anybody dealing with the department, disclosed upon any document which he has the right to scrutinize to the fullest possible extent and limit, would not report to this House and put on record before the House and the country what the facts may be in regard to the matter? I think it is not fair for hon. gentlemen to attempt to suggest that there is a restricted inquiry here. They feel their weakness on this subject because we have tacked on to this the weakest kind of an argument that could possibly be made in regard to a subject of this kind. Now, one hon. gentleman lauds Mr. Justice Cassels at one moment and another hon. gentleman suggests that if the government had chosen the old Civil Service Commissioners to conduct this investigation it would have been far better. If Mr. Justice Cassels is the good, the upright and the honourable judge, if he is half as worthy as hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House tell us he is he is surely qualified to make this investigation. But, these hon. gentlemen tell us in one breath that he is an upright and honourable judge and in the next breath they tell us that he is not the man for the place. But, if he is half as worthy as hon. gentlemen on the other side contend he is——

Mr. WARD. Who said he was not the man for the place?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ward) could not have been in the House or he would have heard the hon. member beside him (Mr. Northrup) suggesting that it was an indication that the government did not want to get at the truth because if they did they would have left the matter to the old commission.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I raised no point as to the integrity of Mr. Justice Cassels.

Mr. FIELDING. But you said he could not get at the truth.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I would point out that hon. gentlemen occupy a very peculiar position. My hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) of course praised Mr. Justice Cassels at one moment and the next moment he pointed out that this government were worthy of condemnation because they had appointed Mr. Justice Cassels, asserting that he would not get at the truth quite as well as if the old commissioners had been allowed to continue the work that they had been doing for a long time.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I criticised the government for appointing Mr. Justice Cassels to conduct such a limited inquiry.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend has been too long at the bar and has had too much experience not to know that if Mr. Justice Cassels is half as good a man as my hon. friend says he is he will, with the powers which he has under this statute and under this order in council, be able to investigate anything that my hon. friend has ever insinuated against the department during the past five or six years.

Mr. WARD. He will be hauled over the coals for going beyond his powers. The commissioners have been blamed for doing that.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Well, I can assure my hon. friend that there is not the slightest evidence of any restriction of the inquiry in this case. It is impossible for them to argue that there is. They have taken the position at one moment of saying that Mr. Cassels is a very able man and at the next moment declaring that this investigation would have been very much better conducted if it had been conducted by the Civil Service Commissioners. And then, as if they knew precisely the untenable position they were in they take the other course; they are driven to the weakest possible position. they turn around and abuse the counsel who have been called in by the government to take part in this investigation. At one moment they tell us that these gentlemen are able men, and as far as I have been acquainted with the jurisprudence of the great province of Ontario from reading its decisions in the courts, not merely in election proceedings, but in questions of great moment affecting all the great interests of the provinces and although I have not the pleasure of knowing the senior counsel in this matter personally and I only judge him as one lawyer would judge another in another province, yet I say that Mr. Watson enjoys a reputation not merely in Ontario but in all portions of this Dominion among lawyers as a man in the very front rank of his profession.

Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who are members of the bar know that there is no man at the bar of Ontario could reach the position Mr. Watson has attained, unless he was an honourable man and that coupled with his legal knowledge he possesses the integrity which every man in such a position must have. But because Mr. Watson is a Liberal we are told that this whole investigation is to fail. Mr. Perron also occupies a high position at the bar of Quebec and the same remarks apply to him. Of course the old game is to abuse the lawyer on the other side, and my hon. friends opposite have got themselves into the very weakest possible position when they say that though these are able men, yet they are Liberals and all kind of things must be suspected about them. I apprehend that the record of the Hon. Mr. Justice Cassels at the bar and the estimation in which he is held by all who know him must be known to these gentlemen opposite, and if Mr. Justice Cassels is to carry out his powers under the statute and under the order in council, it is a most unwarranted assumption that men of the standard of Mr. Watson and Mr. Perron would be found disregarding their oath not merely as barristers but as King's Counsellers, to endeavour to prevent Mr. Justice Cassels from conducting a proper investigation. I submit that when these gentlemen read the report of the Civil Service Commission they will find that the clause which is contained in this order in council is the only portion of the report which makes any imputation on that department in the sense in which an investigation should be held. I submit that the statute and the order in council give the fullest possible powers to deal with the question, and as to the rest of the arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite they are unwarranted and unfair, and such arguments would not be advanced if these gentlemen were at the bar discussing this question or anywhere else than in this House where they seem to constantly prostitute almost every public question for partisan ends.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel). We have had the pleasure of hearing the same stereotyped address from my hon. friend from Pictou when he rises so often in defence of everything wrong that is done by the present government of which he is such an ardent supporter. In the Public Accounts Committee when we endeavour to discover the wrong-doings of the government the hon. gentleman leads the forces in defence of every act of the government and we are therefore not surprised that to-night he should come to their rescue in this matter. Let me in the first place direct the attention of the Minister of Finance to a statement made by him this afternoon, that the Liberal Conservative party appointed a royal commission to investigate the civil service in 1891, and that when the report of that royal commission was presented to the House in 1892 the Liberal Conservative party pigeon-holed that report. I take up the 'Hansard' for 1893 and I find that the Liberal Conservative government introduced a Bill for the purpose of bettering the civil service and carrying out in some respects the recommendations of the royal commission. And Sir, we find the Reform party then in opposition condemning the Liberal Conservative government of the day for proposing to make changes in the Civil Service Act, and among the chief of those who objected was Mr. Laurier, now the Prime Minister of Canada. At page 2815 'Hansard' 1893. Mr. Laurier said :

> The hon. gentleman's demand is not logical. If I agree to the principle of the Bill, I would give every facility to perfect it, but we object to the Bill in toto and object that it should go any further.

In the discussion Mr. Laurier said :

> I look upon the Bill as a device to put pensioners upon the civil list, and there is no other reason for it. I therefore move that the Bill be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months.

Here we have it that when the Liberal Conservative government was making an effort to reform the civil service and carry out some of the provisions of the commissioners' report, Mr. Laurier moved the six months hoist. And in face of that the Minister of Finance stands up to-day and states that the Liberal Conservative party did nothing to carry out the recommendations.

Mr. FIELDING. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to show what important reform recommended by the commission was carried out ?

Mr. BARKER. That is not what you said.

Mr. FIELDING. I stated that for four years they had that report and no material part of it ever was adopted.

Mr. BLAIN. What the Minister of Finance said was that the Liberal Conservative party had pigeon-holed the report.

Mr. FIELDING. So they did.

Mr. BLAIN. Was that a fair statement of the efforts of the Conservative party to improve the civil service.

Mr. FIELDING. Show me what important feature of that report was adopted and carried out.

Mr. BLAIN. I am pointing out that the year after the report was presented a minister of the Liberal Conservative government introduced a Bill to make the conditions of the civil service better.

Mr. FIELDING. In what respect ?

Mr. BLAIN. And I am showing that the present Prime Minister moved that the Bill receive a six months hoist. The Minister of Finance cannot contradict that. The Minister of Finance asks what was made better by the Liberal Conservatives that the commission reported on. That is not the question.

Mr. FIELDING. I thought it was.

Mr. BLAIN. Whatever faults the Liberal Conservative party may have had in those days were dealt with in the general election of 1896.

Mr. FIELDING. And will be again.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Finance may have some different history from the eastern part of Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, and in the middle too.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, we have the Liberal party driven out of power in the province of Ontario for the next twenty-five years.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Huron for instance.

Mr. BEATTIE. What about Colchester?

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend need not worry about Huron.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It suits me first-rate.

Mr. BLAIN. It is strange these hon. gentlemen opposite are always referring to the Liberal-Conservative party. The government have appointed a commission to look into some of the departments ; this commission has made a report such as was never presented to any other government in the history of this country ; and we have now the spectacle of one minister after another condemning the three commissioners. What the Liberal-Conservative party say is that after the government have appointed three commissioners to investigate the civil service and the question of civil service reform, and after the commissioners have at considerable expense travelled to different parts of the country, taken many pages of evidence, given their best attention to the question, and made a report, if there are to be any further suggestions, they should come from these three gentlemen, instead of another man being appointed to look into the matter. As to whether or not Mr. Justice Cassels is the proper man to make the investigation I have nothing to say. In any city in Canada you can find men qualified for such a duty. I will wait until Mr. Justice Cassels brings in a report, and I will judge from that whether he is the proper man or not.

The Minister of Justice twitted the Liberal-Conservative party with the statement that the Ontario government had appointed commissioners to look into various matters in the province of Ontario, and I am sure that the hon. Minister of Justice did not do any credit to the position he holds in this government when he said that these commissioners were political heelers. Mr. Whitney's government did appoint some commissions, and the men who composed those commissions were respectable gentlemen, eminently qualified to discharge their duties, and they brought in some reports that were rather damaging to the Reform government in the province of Ontario and the Reform party in Canada. I may point out that one commission they appointed was the School book Commission. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways will know something about that, because he voted in the Ontario legislature that the school-books were supplied to the children of the province of Ontario at the proper price ; and when the Liberal-Conservative party introduced a resolution to the effect that the price was altogether too high, my hon. friend supported a motion that the prices were all right. When the Liberal-Conservative party came into power, Mr. Whitney's government did appoint a commission to inquire into the school-book question ; and what did that commission find ? They found that the children were paying twice as much for their school-books as they should, and reported accordingly. Here is an object lesson for my hon. friend, if he is seeking one. When that commission reported, Mr. Whitney set about to take some advantage of the report, with the result that to-day the children of the province of Ontario are paying for their school-books less than half of what they did when the Reform party was in power.

One would suppose from this discussion that there was nothing wrong in any department except the Department of Marine and Fisheries ; but all that one has to do is to turn up almost any page of the commission's report to learn the contrary. For instance, my hon. friend the Minister of Customs thinks his department is all right. Let me read a paragraph at page 29 of the report, which says :

> Every collector of customs has been appointed from the ranks of the party in power at the moment. Many of the inspectors are in a similar position, and, under a clause of the Civil Service Act waiving the examination of persons appointed to positions requiring special and technical qualifications, almost all the appraisers in the outside service of this department have been appointed without undergoing the Civil Service examination.

When we say anything about men appointed to positions in the Customs Department, the minister's answer always is that they must pass the civil service examination ; and yet the commission reports that a large number of the men appointed by my hon. friend have not passed any such examination. Then, we have a comparatively new minister in charge of the Post Office Department, and I would like to draw his attention to what is said at page 31 of the report :

> Your commissioners found that in all the post office branches officials were employed who had failed to pass the examination laid down by the Act.

These hon. gentlemen came into office with the promise to the people of Canada that they would purify the civil service ; and when we charged that they were appointing political supporters regardless of their qualifications, we were met with the statement that they would be required to pass the civil service examination, and yet we find these commissioners saying that in the Department of Customs and in the Post Office Department officials have been appointed who did not pass any civil service examination whatever. Then, we have a new condition of things. According to this report, not only do the politicians who support the present administration use their influence to have men appointed to office, but they use their influence to have the same men promoted. At page 27 of the report the commissioners say :

> As a rule your commissioners found in the outside service that politics enter into every appointment, and politicians on the spot interest themselves not only in the appointments but in subsequent promotions of officials.

I do not, Mr. Speaker, wish to detain the House longer. I wish only to say that in my humble opinion when an inquiry is commenced, and when men have been selected to make that inquiry, and they have done their duty up to a certain point, if there is a necessity for further investigation, it should be referred back to the same men to do that work ; and I am very much surprised that after the government appointed three gentlemen with special qualifications to deal with this matter, and after these gentlemen have brought in a report dealing with different departments of this government and stating that they have found some men making an attempt to serve two masters, we have the government appointing another commission to find out which of these masters these officials are serving.

Surely the men who are appointed to do that, who after examination found that such a condition of things existed, were better qualified than any other men to put their finger upon the men who are making an effort to serve two masters, which cannot be successfully done. I agree with the proposition of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that the people of this country will not be satisfied. I think the mutual praise policy on the part of the Minister of Justice about his old companions in his happy days, that have gone by, in the province of Ontario should cease. When he knew that these men had been engaged in politics and election trials in the past, he should have attached some dignity to his office, if he had no dignity to attach to himself and have said that when a grave question of this kind presents itself to the people of Canada, he would not leave himself open to the suspicion that he appointed a political supporter of his to defend the government. As the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) has pointed out, he could have found honourable men in the profession in any city in Canada, who had no political bias, and I am sure if such men had been found the appointments would not be open to the same objection, and would not receive the same criticism.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). Just a few words as my name has been mentioned. I did not intend to take any part in this discussion, but really I have been somewhat struck with the contradictory nature of the arguments, if you may call them so, of the hon. gentlemen opposite. I am trying to see where we are at in this matter. One fault that is found with the appointment of Mr. Justice Cassels is that it is an attempt to review the work of the commissioners, which they say is a highly reprehensible thing to do. Another hon. member says he has not been appointed to review the work of the commissioners at all, only to review one little thing in their report, which is so small that the hon. member for East Hastings wonders that the judge would so lower himself as to come down from the bench and deal with it.

Another thing that struck me as very remarkable is the attitude of gentlemen belonging to the legal profession. I am but a layman, and have been rather inclined on looking to them as a body of honourable men, men who, if they had a duty placed on them, would discharge it honestly. But if I am to take what I have heard from the member from Toronto, the member from Simcoe and the member from East Hastings, who belong to that great profession, their idea of the sense of honour that dwells in some of their number, is apparently such that one is tempted to ask if they could trust themselves in an investigation of this kind. Could my hon. friend have confidence in himself if he was appointed on a Whitney commission ? Surely he could, at least I think he could, although he has shaken my faith. The other gentlemen who have spoken, every one of them belonging to that profession, have taken the ground that men sworn to do their duty, sworn in a judicial investigation, will disregard their obligation. It is not my judgment.

The hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) tells us this is a little, trifling, contemptible task to ask the judge to descend from the bench and undertake. In the same breath he tells us that this judge is a noble man. He must be that, for he has always had the admiration of my hon. friend, and that would prove him to be a noble man. This noble man so misapprehends the nature of the duties he has been asked to perform that he is not able to see, what the profound brain of the hon. member for East Hastings could see, that the inquiry is a little, miserable, contemptible thing that he should not have taken hold of. He was not compelled to do so. The government recommended him for appointment and he accepted the appointment. Why on earth did he do it ? Why could he not have some conception of the dignity of his office equal to that of the member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup). Why could he not have asked him, why has the hon. member, who loves him so, allowed him to accept it ? Why did he not go to him with that lifelong friendship and admiration and say : Judge, you will never think of taking that, surely ? Why it is the meanest, smallest, most contemptible task ever given to a man ! He did not do it, he has let the poor judge get into that scrape. Think of it ! He assures us that he took care to laud the judge to the highest point. So do they all, the member for Toronto, the member for Simcoe, they all upheld him in that.

These hon. members have their own appreciation of what members of the profession, sworn to perform a judicial act, will do. How do they know what they will do ? Is it a common thing in the profession, has it been known in the profession that members act in that way ? If I should take that low estimate of these men, which I utterly repudiate, let us see how this admiration for the honour and ability of the hon. judge comes in. Surely, with his ability and his honour, if he found these gentlemen who are chosen to assist him in his duty, which is to arrive at facts, not to prosecute anybody, trying to hide the facts, trying to pervert the work they have undertaken to do, and if he allowed them to do so, he would not be of the character given him by the hon. members for East Simcoe, East Hastings and Toronto. They cannot take that position. You can see at once, Mr. Speaker, how bewildered I have been with the arguments of the hon. gentlemen opposite. Such a thing could not happen or Judge Cassels cannot be the man these gentlemen say he is. If he allowed that to take place he would lack either discernment, capacity or honesty, and they dare not charge him with such a lack. Is my argument good or not ?

He is appointed to do something which he does not consider beneath his dignity. It is true he is not asked to review the report of the commissioners. The government and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries are willing that this report of the commissioners shall go out, 10,000 copies of it, wherever the members choose to send it. They have the benefit of whatever weight it carries. We do not ask to have it reviewed, we do not ask to have the opinions in it qualified. We do not ask a commission to be appointed to see that if they cannot contradict what has already been reported. That is going out with all the condemnation that it will carry.

Mr. LENNOX. Ten thousand copies?

Mr. PATERSON. That is the number ordered to be printed, I think.

Mr. WARD. Two thousand copies.

Mr. PATERSON. It is immaterial. It is going out by thousands of copies. And this commission is not appointed to refute or contradict what they have said. But here is the statement of the commissioners that they believe that certain officials in that department are dishonest and corrupt. They do not give the names of these men, and this judicial inquiry is to ascertain whether there be such men in the service that they may be dealt with. And the investigator will report. We are asked : Why not have called upon the commissioners to do this? Well, I suppose the judge will be at perfect liberty—and for all I know he will do it—to ask the commission to give him the facts. He may say : Here is a charge you have made ; evidently you had reason to believe it is true ; would you please tell me the officers whom you suspect, or refer me to the files of the department that I may trace up the matter for myself? That is the point we wish to ascertain. Now, this is the one point in this report with which the minister could not deal. He wanted a judicial inquiry, and he is having it. The rest of the report, referring to the correspondence, the duplication of work, the lack of supervision and other weaknesses alleged are departmental in their nature and must be dealt with by the head of the department. And the minister is proceeding to deal with them—started long ago. He has examined into the working of his department, and he is examining into it to see where improvements can be made. The testimony of these commissioners themselves shows that. They say :

> There is not only a lack of efficient organization and method in the department. There would also seem to be a lack of conscience.

That is the subject of this investigation. But they say also :

> The lack of organization and of organizing power in the department has recently been very conspicuously and painfully illustrated by the fact that the accountant's or bookkeeping branch had apparently fallen into such confusion that expert accountants had to be called in to put things to rights and create some intelligible system. After months of work——

So the minister was at this months ago, according to these commissioners.

> After months of work by these highly paid experts the result has been at least greatly improved books as far as mechanical form is concerned, but probably little else; and this achievement has been accomplished at an almost fabulous expense.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PATERSON. That is in print and it is going out in these 7,000 or 10,000 copies. People will see, at any rate, that action was taken by the minister months before these gentlemen saw his department at all.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) allow me to ask a question? He has repeated his statement about ten thousand and seven thousand copies going out. Each member receives seven or eight copies, making two thousand in all. What becomes of the rest?

Mr. PATERSON. I am speaking merely from memory and am willing to be corrected if I am wrong. Tell me the number.

Mr. LENNOX. Two thousand.

Mr. LAKE. Can we have the ten thousand ?

Mr. PATERSON. I do not know anything about it; that is a matter for the Printing Committee. It is going out in thousands at any rate. There is no attempt to hide it, is there?

Mr. LENNOX. I don't know.

Mr. PATERSON. It has been in the papers. At any rate, it is shown that the minister, months before these men saw his department, had recognized the weakness of the system and had engaged professional and expert accountants to inaugurate a new system of bookkeeping by which he will be able to check purchases made through the outside agencies of the department. That system these commissioners report to be a great advantage mechanically, but probably little more. I will not stop to ask whether that was a well considered or a fair expression on the part of the commissioners, for I am not here to criticise them. But if one were criticising he might ask how these men could know that the system was of little use, for that was a matter to be determined in the future and by experience. The minister was carrying on his reorganization. What does these hon. gentlemen opposite want? I would like to ask the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), if he were in his place, or the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), they being the only two gentlemen who have had the responsibility of administering a department, what either of them would have done if he had been at the head of a department and a report of this kind had been made? To hear hon. gentlemen opposite talk one would suppose that it was the duty of these commissioners to go into the Department of Marine and Fisheries, turn the minister out of doors and reorganize the business themselves. They did their duty when they pointed out what seemed to them weakness in the department—just as they did in my department. I have no fault to find with them for pointing out these weaknesses, for if there is anyone interested in knowing the facts concerning the management of the department it is the minister in charge. A minister values his reputation as hon. gentlemen opposite value theirs. If he has any ability he wants to exercise it and wants to get due credit for exercising it and for doing the best he can. What could these commissioners do except to point out where they thought weaknesses existed? The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) will not object to that. He will look through their recommendations and if he agrees that there are weaknesses he will strengthen the department at those points. That is what I would do in my department.

They did not come into my department, the inside. They asked the commissioner if Mr. Bazin and Mr. Fyshe would be allowed to come in. Why, he said, most certainly. And so they would. I would be glad to have them go through, and if they found any weakness, if they could suggest any better way of managing anything in my department, and my judgment agreed with theirs, I would adopt it. I may be egotistical, but I believe that I can run my department better than they can. I am not going to say that I would neglect any good suggestions they might make to me. I would examine their suggestions. I would test them, but I would not adopt them if they did not commend themselves to my judgment—not if I were a free agent. Even though these gentlemen should go cursorily through my department and think they saw on the surface some weak point which they thought could be remedied, I would listen to their suggestions, and I would accept them if I thought they were an improvement. If they found that some of the work was being duplicated in the Marine Department, if they found that some of the officers had not carried out their instructions, why, I have no doubt that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) would see what he could do to improve matters. He started in to do this months ago, and he is at it now, and he will accomplish it. I say to hon. gentlemen opposite that in all fairness they had better wait and see in what shape he gets his department, wait and see what the report of Judge Cassels is. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) says he is going to wait, he is not going to pronounce judgment until he sees the report of Judge Cassels. He is a wiser and more prudent man that the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Northrup) and some other gentlemen who are willing to judge the minister before they see the report. It would not be the part of wisdom for the minister to sit in a judicial capacity on these men in his department who are charged with being corrupt and dishonest; he asks for the assistance of a judge to look into the facts, and he gets that assistance. When the report is made it will be his duty to examine it and see if there are any suggestions in it that will improve present conditions. and if he finds any that commend themselves to his judgment, I have no doubt that he will give effect to them. Hon. gentlemen opposite have taken two lines of argument. First they object to this commission because they say it is going to review the work of the previous commissioners and upset it. Nothing of the kind. There are two specific instances which the commissioners give as acts of maladministration, namely in the purchase of coal and in the purchase of flour, but they did not follow their inquiry far enough to learn the facts of the case. But they put these two charges in their report, and that report goes out wherever this volume goes. The commissioners also make a statement with reference to my department. I do not speak of this with any idea of weakening their statement, but only to point out that in the short time at their disposal they were not able to get at the real facts of the case and to explain the situation fully and fairly to the people. The hon. member for Peel read something that they said about my department in the outside service. He read this:

Many of the inspectors are in a similar position, and under a clause in the Civil Service Act waiving the examination of persons appointed to positions requiring special and technical qualifications, almost all the appraisers in the outside service of this department have been appointed without undergoing the civil service examination.

Yes, that is true I believe, in some cases it is, and I have never been able to see yet that a man passing the civil service examination was thereby a better appraiser than one who had not passed it.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman read the balance of that section ?

Mr. PATERSON. I am coming to that I think it was a collector of customs at Quebec that they were questioning, and I think he said that according to his recollection one man had been plucked because he did not know who the Druids were. He could not get through. Now I do not care whether an appraiser knows who the Druids were or not, but I want him to know whether goods are linen or cotton, or something else. In our department we need to appoint men who understand their business, and all the collegiate institutes or university training in the world will not make a man a good appraiser if he knows nothing about the quality of goods. But no man has been appointed appraiser without undergoing the technical examination which is prescribed in the Act and which is given him by a superior officer. If he passes that successively he is recommended to me by the commission.

Mr. BLAIN. Were there any cases of men who were plucked?

Mr. PATERSON. There may have been some cases where applicants to appraiserships were plucked because they were not sufficiently conversant with their business.

Mr. BLAIN. The commissioners complain that my hon. friend appoints appraisers who do not pass the civil service examination. My hon. friend says they do not require to pass it, but he has a special examination for them. Now when one of his supporters in the House recommends to him a man for an appraiser, has any one of these men been rejected because he could not pass the special examination he refers to ?

Mr. PATERSON. I cannot remember. But if none of them were rejected, it would show the discernment of our supporters in the House. But I only want to tell the hon. gentleman that he is not appointed on the recommendation of a member of the House unless he passes a practical examination. That is what we start with.

Mr. BLAIN. Although the commissioners condemn that policy of appointment without passing the civil service examination my hon. friend is not going to pay any attention to their recommendation ?

Mr. PATERSON. Their judgment and mine do not run in the same direction. Passing the civil service examination would not hurt a man. It is a literary examination. Who were the Druids ? What happened in King Charles time ? and so on. It would not hurt a man provided he had the technical knowledge as well, but to require a man to pass the civil service examination alone, which is purely literary and to accept him as an appraiser on that is not, I think my hon. friend will agree, the wisest thing to do.

Mr. BLAIN. What I say is that when we have the civil service examination my hon. friend should either apply it to the officers of his department or else abolish the examination altogether.

Mr. PATERSON. That is not necessary, because a part of the Civil Service Act expressly states that in the case of technical officers the civil service literary examination may be dispensed with.

Mr. BLAIN. Make it easy for political purposes.

Mr. PATERSON. No, no ; that is the Act. Now, the hon. gentleman asks me to read a little farther :

In the service of this department——

That is in reference to the Customs Department—

—there are many anomalies and incongruities. In order to avoid the necessity of an examination a new class has been created under the name of 'examining officers,' a class not found in the schedule to the Civil Service Act.

Is that the point that my hon. friend wanted me to read ?

Mr. BLAIN. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON. I am very glad he did. I ask the attention of the House to that especially as my hon. friend has called attention to it. It is a little valuable because it shows the care that was exercised by these gentlemen. There is a direct statement that :

In order to avoid the necessity of examinations a new class has been created under the name of 'examining officers,' a class not found in the schedule to the Civil Service Act.

Well let us see. Section 39 of the Civil Service Act reads as follows :

Notwithstanding anything in this Act a person who has served over three years as an officer or acting officer in the outside service of the customs may be appointed an examining officer in such service subject to such examination on the duties of office and other qualifications as is prescribed by the deputy head in a report to be concurred in by the head of the department.

There it is. This commission say it is not to be found in the schedule of the Act.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it found in the schedule to the Act ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, look at page 20, Schedule. First there are the 'higher classes,' next 'technical officers,' next 'other classes' such as 'examining officers (including lockers and landing waiters)' with salaries from $400 to $1,000. That is going out in all these thousands of copies all over the country. It is going out to say that in order to avoid examination I have created a new class under the name of examining officers.

Mr. LENNOX. That is your royal commission ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Appointed by the government.

Mr. PATERSON. I was not finding fault with it. I do wonder, however, that they should have overlooked the Act and not only overlooked the Act but should have put in the report a statement which, as you can see for yourself, is absolutely the reverse of what is in the Act. It is charged that I adopted this new class in order to avoid examination. You gentleman are guilty with me in this matter. A few years ago I was impressed with the fact that we had in the service scores and scores of men, some of whom had been appointed twenty-five years, some eighteen years, some fifteen years, some twelve years, and some later, under ourselves, although the great bulk of them had been appointed by my predecessors who were, to all intents and purposes, permanent officers. Year in and year out they were there. They were paid year after year, but they were not on the permanent staff, and, not being on the permanent staff, they were not entitled to their three weeks holidays a year and if, unfortunately, they became sick, the department had no power under the law to allow them their salary or to pay their wages ; whereas, if they had been on the permanent list they would have enjoyed the same treatment as that which those on the permanent list enjoy. Many and many—scores—I am not speaking extravagantly — of these men, faithful men, who had been there for years and years, and who were appointed in the days of my hon. friends opposite, were unable to pass the literary examination. I do not know whether I could pass it myself or not. I could have done so when I came out of school, no doubt. I question now whether it would not bother some of you to answer all the questions that are put. A number of these men who had been there for years and years could not hope to pass this examination. Men who had given faithful service for years and years, I thought, were entitled to fair treatment. I introduced into this House a Bill to amend the Civil Service Act in order to enable that to be done. These hon. gentlemen opposite as well as gentlemen on this side of the House endorsed that Bill. They were parties to it. I hold it was right. I glory that I did it. Many of these men, faithful servants, serving as faithfully as any man who had passed the civil service literary examination, which is all that is required under the Act, were in the position that I have described. Instead of, as the commissioners say, appointing that class with the view of avoiding examination it is provided that when they have been three years or more in the service you can prescribe a practical examination for them in the duties of the office they are discharging and if they pass that successfully—and what more do you want—then, on my recommendation, they are put on the permanent list, the men's hearts and the hearts of their wifes and families are made glad and justice is done to them and the country. Was it to avoid examination ? No, it was not that they could be put on as preventive officers without any examination at all, but it was because I wanted them to undergo an examination in the duties of their office. What surprises me is that it escaped the attention of the chairman of this commission when such a sentence as this was put in their report.

He was secretary of the treasury board for a considerable time after this was inaugurated and the way the special examinations take place is this : The officer applies for an examination, the commissioner prescribes the examination and I don't see it, it is sent to a superior officer who is generally the inspector of the division, the officer undergoes the examination and if he is successful the inspector reports to the commissioner and the commissioner reports to me and recommends that the appointment be conferred, and that report passes through the hands of the secretary of the treasury board, and a number of such reports must have passed through Mr. Courtney's hands. How such a sentence could be inserted there baffles me and leads me to think that some one who did not understand the thing is a party to it and not Mr. Courtney. Is my hon. friend from Peel satisfied I have read that now. Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that what the government have done in this matter will find justification in the country. While I recognize the right of the opposition to get all the advantage they possibly can in a fair and legitimate way, yet there is such a thing as pursuing certain tactics too far. I ask these gentlemen opposite : Have they in any degree whatever given fair play to that man who only came into his office two years ago and who of necessity has been absent from it for months and months together, and especially when that very report states that months and months ago he started to get the department into better shape. Appoint your commission again if you want it to go through my department. I will welcome it and so would the Minister of Marine and Fisheries welcome it, but we would like them to go to the bottom of things and when they do report to be sure that they report facts, especially when their report is to go broadcast over the country.

Mr. BLAIN. What objection can the hon. gentleman have to referring the report back to these three gentlemen.

Mr. PATERSON. They finished their work. The government did not call them off. It was their duty to do that work and if they felt unwilling or unable to do it surely that is enough. We accept their work except where they make that insinuation or implied charge against the honesty of the officials of that department and we inquire into that. No man is more interested in having his department right than the minister in charge. And when these gentlemen opposite say the people of Canada will not be satisfied with our action, the true fact is that what they want is that the people of the country should not be satisfied. Did not the member for Beauharnois tell us that it means party advantage and gain to them, and how dear that is to their souls, their speeches of this afternoon show when they did not hesitate to insinuate against the honour of men of their own profession, and against the character either because of weakness or incapacity of an honourable judge who stands amongst the highest in the community.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I shall not detain the House long, but it would not be right to allow some of the observations of the Minister of Customs to pass unchallenged. The hon. gentleman said that the hon. member for Hastings complained that Judge Cassels should undertake such a limited task, and yet in the same breath declared him to be an upright, capable and honourable judge. No one on this side of the House refutes that. We do not complain of the character of the man but we do complain that the order of reference is so circumscribed that Judge Cassels can only deal with a small fraction of what in the interests of the country he should deal with. Did not the Minister of Justice complain that the old commission went outside of their order of reform ? Did he not cite two instances to prove this and did he not state that the allegations they made were not founded on fact. Then the Minister of Marine and Fisheries states that with regard to certain things in his department the allegations in that report are absolutely incorrect. When the Minister of Marine and Fisheries presented that report to the House he stated that some of the allegations in the report were wrong, and the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Customs endorse that statement, and they say another commission must be appointed presumably for the purpose of determining whether the allegations made by the first commission are right or wrong. This shows, Sir, that it is the Civil Service Commission that is on trial and not the department, and that is one of the reasons why the government were afraid to reappoint the same commissioners and allow them to finish the work which they declared they had not time to finish. The Minister of Justice stated that the leader of the opposition asked the government to appoint a Committee of the House or an independent commission, and that in appointing Judge Cassels they had followed the advice of the leader of the opposition. That statement is not correct. What the leader of the opposition said was that because the old commission had not inquired into one quarter of the things it should in the interests of the country have inquired into, and had only dealt in a perfunctory way with one or two departments, the matter should be referred either to a Committee of the House or to an independent commission to go through all the departments and to finish the work which the commission had only commenced. Has the government appointed Judge Cassels to complete the work which the Civil Service Commission left off ? Not at all. They appointed a commissioner but they limited the work of that commissioner and restricted him to an inquiry into one allegation against the Marine Department. That is not what the leader of the opposition suggested. Was the hon. leader of the opposition justified in saying that we required another commission ? If you take up the report of the commissioners you cannot reach any other conclusion. What did that report say ?

> Large amounts have been spent at several places in the Dominion for supplies bought from those enjoying political patronage at what may be called retail rates. Heavy expenditures have been incurred without necessary consideration or supervision, and while no doubt the several officers have thought themselves justified, owing to the expansion of the revenues, yet such conduct is contrary to the public interests and, in the opinion of the commissioners, ought to be restrained.

That applies to any department, and therefore the leader of the opposition said that we wanted another commission to inquire into that subject. Then, the commissioners take up the question of certificates which are made to the effect that the goods were required for the public services and that the prices were reasonable and fair. On this point the commissioners say :

> In the first place there is the question of certificates. These certificates are in general terms, that the articles have been received, that the articles are necessary in the public interests, that the prices charged are according to contract, or that the prices are fair and just. In reference to the question of certificates, the Auditor General in his evidence pointed out that in one department he did not believe in the certificates received. This is a very serious affair.

The Auditor General did not regard the certificates as correct or reliable. Is this new commission to inquire into this subject? Not at all; it is not in the order of reference. Then the commissioners say in regard to the Department of Railways:

Your commissioners are of opinion that in many instances stores are ordered unnecessarily, and it may be doubtful that a good quality is always delivered. Mr. Pottinger states in his evidence that it is his opinion that the amount paid by the Intercolonial Railway for coal was higher than it ought to be. In instances which have been brought to the notice of the commissioners stores have been received which were not wanted and which it is difficult to get rid of. In fact, at different points stores have been shelved where in all probability they were unnecessary.

Will the new commission inquire into that or touch the Intercolonial Railway? Not at all. That is why we complain—because it has no power to inquire into these matters, which we think ought to be inquired into. I take another department, the Marine and Fisheries Department, as to which the commissioners report:

Your commissioners have spent a large amount of time in trying to get an insight into the general administration of the government business, as shown in the management of this department. They found that to make any efficient inspection was a matter of enormous difficulty.

Therefore they could not make the inspection they desired. Again they say:

There are officers enough in the department, both inside and outside, to do all the work efficiently, if they were properly trained and organized, but there is no efficient organization.

Who is responsible for the efficiency of the organization? Is it not the head of the department? Then the report goes on to say:

It is practically impossible to fix the responsibility on anybody. . . There is no sign visible of a single directing head, or an intelligent purpose, unless it be that of spending as much money as possible. . . The lack of organization and of organizing power in the department has recently been very conspicuously and painfully illustrated. . . . There is not only a lack of efficient organization and method in the department. There would also seem to be a lack of conscience.

This new commission is not empowered to make inquiries into the various ramifications of that department. It is empowered only to inquire into the allegations made in the order of reference, which applies only to a few sentences of the report. The commissioners say further:

The extracts from the 'challenged accounts' file show constant inquiries from the Auditor General as to prices, but there is always some more or less satisfactory explanation, ending with whatever certificates may be necessary, and further investigation baulked.

And yet this new commission is not to go into that inquiry. Are we not justified in saying that it ought to be given wider powers? We are not objecting to the commissioner who is appointed to do the work, if he is only given the power necessary to enable him to go over the whole field. The commissioners say further:

A new officer was appointed in connection with it called the commissioner of lights, whose whole time is now given to its management although it includes the management of a lighthouse depot established at Prescott, where a great variety of work is carried on connected with the lighthouse and buoy service. Your commissioners have to report that in their commission this new departure has been a most unfortunate one so far as the efficiency of the special work is concerned; and it certainly has not added to the general efficiency of the Marine and Fisheries Department.

They follow that up by saying:

There can be very little question that the Lighthouse Board has been the means of greatly increasing the expenditure of the department, and that much of the increase has been wasted.

Yet the new commissioner has no power to inquire into that. The commissioners follow that up by saying:

They have been able to go over only a very small section of even the Marine and Fisheries Department.

To do the work completely, that whole department should be gone over, and the new commissioner has no power to do that work.

Yet the head of that department is the one responsible for the organization; but the new commission has no power to inquire into that subject. It is because of this that we complain of the limited power given to Judge Cassels. The Minister of Justice argued that the other commissioners went outside of their order of reference; and if the new commissioner went outside of his order of reference a similar complaint would be made against him. If there is one thing more than another that a judge or a lawyer always keeps in view, it is that he must be guided by precedent, and all precedent seems to demand that a judge or a commission should keep within the order of reference; and if they travelled outside of that, the government would condemn them, as the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Customs have condemned the Civil Service Commissioners. And then they have made the order of reference so narrow that he can travel over no field. They have touched on only one or two of the departments. We have many spending departments, we have the Post Office Department, and the great spending Department of Public Works, some transactions of which have been laid bare to the light of day. Even the Marine Department has only been dealt with in a perfunctory way. There is the Interior Department, which administers the lands of the country, the timber limits and immigration. The Militia Department has been barely referred to, and it has been declared that a great deal might be said of it. Then we have the Departments of Agriculture, Customs and Inland Revenue, which are not dealt with in detail. This new commission cannot touch any of these departments except the Department of Marine, and that, only with regard to one or two particular items in the report. It is because of this that complaint is made, and not because of the man who is appointed to do the work. We say there is more to be done and the country will not be satisfied until a full and free inquiry is made in all departments and a report made to the House, so that we will know where it is necessary to make amendments or to reorganize departments in the interest of economy and of honesty. When that is done and not until then, the country will be satisfied that the government have done their full duty in connection with these commissions.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Montreal—barracks for permanent corps, $20,000.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). This is a revote to provide towards the erection of barracks for one unit of the permanent corps in Montreal. A request for this building was made by the Department of Militia and it has been urged upon the Public Works Department upon several different occasions. Application was made as early as 1902 and it has been repeated since and the department is strongly of the opinion that this work should be undertaken. The appropriation of 1907-8 was the first vote.

Mr. SPROULE. Why was it not commenced?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is some land to be acquired by the Militia Department. The department has made a sale of St. Helen's island to the city of Montreal, for the sum of $200,000 and it is intended by the Militia Department when this money is paid over to appropriate part of it for the purcahse of a site. My information is that Montreal is now about ready to pay over the money and in that case a special appropriation will be asked for in the supplementary estimates to buy the land.

Mr. AMES. Is this vote conditional on the payment of the $200,000 by the city of Montreal?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot say it is conditional. It is not likely that the erection of these barracks will be proceeded with until the money is paid over.

Mr. AMES. Is it decided where these barracks will be erected?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I cannot say where they will be.

Mr. AMES. That is the most important question. Montreal has asked for these barracks for a number of years and I understand the Militia Department have found it impossible to decide on the location. It makes a great difference to the city where it is located. The location may give universal satisfaction or cause general dissatisfaction.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give the information but my hon. friend will understand that as in the case of a post office an effort will be made to locate it so as to give general satisfaction. The total cost of the building is expected to be $126,000. It is intended to provide quarters for single and married officers, men's barracks, hospital, guard room and cells, recreation room and also fittings for the buildings.

Mr. AMES. How much is to be paid for the land?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not intended to pay for the land out of this, that will come out of the $200,000.

Mr. AMES. Is it intended to build the barracks in the Parc Lafontaine?

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is great objection to having it built in that park. It is one of the few breathing places we have in Montreal and the citizens will object very strongly to having the barracks there. It is hard for the minister to say where it will be. If it is mooted that the land will be purchased in some part of the city, then as my hon. friend who has been in the council and understands land speculation knows, the competition for the sale of land to the department by speculators will be very marked. I do not think it wise now to say where the location will be.

Mr. AMES. Is it intended to build in the Parc Lafontaine?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would be impossible to say that; I am not informed that the location has been decided on.

Mr. AMES. The minister has said it would increase the price of land, but the park is the property of the government and that argument would not apply. I know that many citizens object to having it in the park and that is why I want to know if that question has been decided.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought I was very frank, I said that I was not informed where the location will be.

Mr. LENNOX. With reference to what the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) has said as to keeping this matter secret lest publicity should enhance the price of the property, I think that, perhaps, this side of the House are getting a little tired of that excuse—for we regard it as little better than an excuse. We find it merely a means to facilitate the work of the middleman, who comes in and taxes the people an exorbitant price. Members of the House are aware, that we have expropriation laws which protect the government and the people. When owners demand an exorbitant price, the proper method for the government to follow is to take expropriation proceedings and secure the land at such value as men on their sworn testimony prove to be fair instead of repeating such experiences as we had in Halifax, through Mr. Lodge and others, of being salted for an enormous price for the benefit of a middleman. I for one, take no stock in this excuse that the government is afraid to say that they want a particular property because the price will be put up. We have honest men in the country who will swear to the true value, if the government will make an investigation under the Act and take the property. The person who asks an exorbitant price and does not get it has to pay the costs of the proceedings, and after a few people have had experience of that kind, we shall get land at reasonable prices. Our experience has been that, while the government keeps the information from the House, they give it to one of their friends, on which he goes and gets options and the end is that we pay to this middleman a most exorbitant price.

Mr. AMES. Can the minister tell us whether this building is to be used for artillery, cavalry or infantry, and what number of men it is expected to accommodate?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is for one unit of the permanent corps.

Mr. AMES. Which includes——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I regret that the minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) is not here. He would be able to give the information. But my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) will understand that it is rather outside my department.

Mr. AMES. Can the minister say whether this unit includes cavalry and artillery? That has an important bearing on the situation, because the choice of location should depend a good deal on the nature of the building and how it is to be occupied, If this means keeping a large number of horses in a building in a thickly-peopled part of Montreal, or in a public park, of course that would be a disadvantage. Unless such details are furnished us, we cannot know whether this money should be voted or not.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be wise to wait until the Minister of Militia is here?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is only a re-vote.

Mr. SPROULE. But the information may not have been out last year, and it is desirable to get it out now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the Minister of Militia is here and some other item is under discussion, if any hon. gentleman calls attention to this matter, there will be no objection to the Minister of Militia making an explanation as to the number of men to be accommodated.

Mr. AMES. With that understanding. it will be all right.

Montreal general post office—enlargement additions and alterations, including fittings, furniture, &c., $70,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote and it is required for the enlarging of the present quarters for the Montreal post office. As many hon. gentlemen are aware, there was an appropriation last session of $300,000. Out of that sum, a property which was owned by the proprietors of the Montreal 'Gazette' was purchased, and a contract was let for the erection of a building on this site, the contract being for $487,537. In addition to which, of course, there will be other expenditures for heating, fittings, &c.

Mr. SPROULE. What will be the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total estimated cost. including site is $762,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it in connection with the new post office that I saw that Mr. Wright had purchased an option?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, that was in connection with the new examining warehouse.

Mr. AMES. Who has the contract for building this addition to the post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Messrs. Peter Lyall & Son, Montreal. There were several tenders, of which Messrs. Lyall's was the lowest. A day or two ago, in answer to a question, I gave a statement as to the different tenders.

Mr. BLAIN. I noticed in the newspapers an account of a banquet in Montreal tendered to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) at which a Mr. Lyall was chairman; is this the same gentleman?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The very same gentleman—and a very excellent citizen of Montreal he is.

Mr. SPROULE. This would seem to be only an enlargement of the old post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is more than that. It is the building of an addition. The 'Gazette' property is on the opposite side of Fortification Lane from the post office, and is to be wholly occupied with the addition to the post office, connection to be made across Fortification Lane.

Mr. SPROULE. What area of land was purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the figures relating to the land before me, but it will explain the matter as well, perhaps. if I say that the addition is to extend from the present post office building along St. François Xavier street to Craig street, 126 feet, and along Craig street 96 feet.

Mr. KEMP. Then, this will be larger than the old building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think so.

Mr. KEMP. Does the government need as large a place as that?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh, yes. The present post office was built in 1874, and as my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) knows, is entirely inadequate for the postal service of Montreal. When the translantic mails arrive in Montreal, the condition of the post office is simply chaos. Even the offices of the postmaster and his assistants in Montreal are taken during the Christmas season for the foreign mail. Today we have no place for our employees, and it is a great relief to know that at last we are to have a decent building for our staff. The population is now nearly half a million. With the addition of the new suburbs Montreal is going far ahead of Toronto.

Mr. KEMP. But the revenue of the post office is not as great.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the statement I gave of the total cost I omitted the cost of acquiring in Montreal the right to utilize Fortification lane. The corporation require us to pay rent the same as they charge the Bank of Montreal. But they also agreed to commute that if we desired, and we decided to commute it into a capital payment I think of $11,000. That should be added to the total cost.

Mr. KEMP. I understood the government are spending some $762,000 in Montreal, and does he mean to say that the corporation are asking the government $11,000 for the right to cross Fortification lane?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The reason is that there is some law of general application, and the city requires us to pay the same as the Bank of Montreal. This building is to have a basement and a bridge 70 by 25 feet thrown over Fortification lane.

Mr. AMES. The Montreal public have, I think, been long suffering from lack of conveniences in the post office. They have pointed out many times to the Postmaster General that there was great congestion in the old building. I hope the Postmaster General realizes that when this new building is constructed it will be necessary also to reconstruct the entire postal staff as well as the building. I have in my hand a letter which was published in the 'Star' on the 8th April, signed by a well known lawyer, in which he draws attention to at least five cases where letters have been mailed and have never reached the parties to whom they were addressed. That I presume is largely due to the past state of affairs. We can only hope that when the new building is constructed there will be a complete remodeling, not only of the facilities, but also of the staff.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I must protest on behalf of the employees of the Montreal post office against a too severe criticism. There has been a wonderful improvement within a year or so. In the old days I know there were many complaints, due chiefly to the fact that the salaries were inadequate. I hope the new Civil Service Bill will provide better salaries for our employees. On the other hand, I am pleased to state that we have appointed as assistant postmaster in Montreal, Mr. Gaboury, who has given entire satisfaction to the citizens. The other day I was present at an interview with the members of the produce exchange and of the board of trade and they highly complimented Mr. Gaboury on the success of his new methods. I am aware of this letter published in the 'Star,' signed by my friend Mr. McCormick. When I heard of the complaints I ordered an investigation. I gather from reports I have that Mr. McCormick might perhaps publish another letter to say that the fault was not in the post office, but in his own office. However, the investigation will prove who was to blame. Within the last eighteen months we have reorganized the letter-carrier service and put it in a very satisfactory shape. I hope if the citizens will be patient a little longer they will have just as good a system of delivery as there is in other large centres. I admit that in the Montreal post office for some years past there has been at work some influence which prevented the staff from doing its duty towards the public. But since the appointment of Mr. Gaboury there has been a marked change for the better.

Mr. KEMP. What influence does the minister refer to?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The old officers had lost all control over the later appointments. We had men there who had been in the service for forty years, and they had no control at all over the employees, for reasons which I need not detail to the House. But since Mr. Gaboury's appointment there has been a great improvement.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to know why the people in the country districts should not be as well treated in regard to postal facilities as the people of cities. Why does the government build a post office in one place and refuse to build one in another equally deserving? I know of places with a population of 1,500 to 2,500 and the government will not build a shed for them. I will not speak of Dorchester county, for that has been on the blacklist for a long time. But take the county of Beauce. The towns of St. Mary, St. Joseph, St. François, St. George, Tring, St. Ephraim and like towns have two or three thousand of a population, and yet you will find the post office in a little room eight by ten feet, and a person who goes in before you has to come out before you can get in. There is no accommodation whatever. The government do not even pay rent to the people who keep the post office. Why cannot you do a little more for the rural districts and do a little less for the cities?

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) would not agree with that.

Mr. MORIN. I do not ask for a building in my own county. We have not one building erected by the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I like to hear my hon. friend talk. He is very sensible and I think his views are very worthy of consideration. His views and mine are alike; I am a very strong believer in giving accommodation to the public in the way of post office buildings in various sections of the country. Of course, as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said last evening, we must go slowly and people must be patient. We cannot erect these buildings all at once. We are doing the best we can, we are proceeding with reasonable expedition and as the business of the country will permit.

Mr. MORIN. Some people appear to be welcome and others are not.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say, in reference to the observation of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot), that the hon. member for East Grey does not agree exactly with him. What was the principle I laid down? That where the government could not rent a building at a reasonable price they should erect one.

Mr. TALBOT. That is just the reverse of the position taken by the hon. member for Dorchester. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) says that instead of building they should rent.

Mr. SPROULE. Whenever the government cannot rent a suitable building at a moderate figure they should erect one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You and the hon. member for Dorchester cannot agree.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Dorchester says that you do not even pay rent for these buildings.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The salary of the postmaster is based on the revenue and on the revenue also is based the rental allowance which is given to every postmaster. A post office which gives a revenue of $10 or $15 is not entitled to a large rental allowance.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no rental for a small post office.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. What rental is there for a post office which gives a revenue of $50?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I cannot give it offhand, but I know there is an allowance.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no rental at all. It is not always according to the revenue, because no matter what the revenue is the postmaster gets $50. That is according to the Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. $35 is the minimum. As to the rental allowance, I cannot give the graduation just now, but it is based on the revenue. I receive every day, letters from all parts of the country asking for increases and I spend my time signing letters explaining that the rental allowance is based on the revenue of the office.

Mr. MORIN. In the county of Montmagny there was a man who had a house. He could not sell it and he could not give it away. He is a gentleman in the Senate. We must not mention his name at all; his name is Mr. Choquette. Well, he got the Minister of Public Works to buy this building for $4,994.50. As I said last night, two years afterwards, the house fell down. What is the population of the town? 1,600. When that building went down, they said: We must build one or buy one. These people had to be accommodated because Mr. Choquette lives there sometimes. The county is a Liberal county and no matter what takes place they must be accommodated. Here is the town of Levis with a population of 7,783 and a $49,000 building is being erected. Is there any equality in the treatment of the people in that case? I will not say anything about Dorchester, but take the county of Beauce. Beauce has a population of 45,000 and there is not a post office in it belonging to the government. The government have done nothing for the county in that regard. If you do not want to treat Dorchester right you are welcome ; we can get along without you ; we do not ask any favours, but why should you not treat the country on an equality ? It looks—I have said it in the House already and I am going to repeat it, and if the chairman wants to call me to order he may do so—as if the government were in this case, the biggest bribers in the world. Have I not heard time and time again members of this House say : I am afraid that I will be defeated in my county in this campaign, I am going to get them a post office or a public building or a railway, and that will help me. Then, they brag that they have got a building, or a wharf or a pier built in their county, and they say that it will help them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman regard it as a bribe if we were to think it desirable in the public interest to erect a post office in his county ?

Mr. MORIN. Of course if we had to take your word we would do so, but you know very well you are not serious in what you say. If you are, I do not believe you. The government help these men to be elected in their counties. If a man has not the confidence of the people to be returned to this House, he should stay at home. Not very long ago, I heard a member boast that he had 65 miles of railway built in his county, and he would be elected for years to come, and another said his election was sure, because a wharf had been built in his county that cost $10,000 or $12,000. The government bribe people in that way, it may be indirect, but it is bribery all the same. In my county the government never spent a dollar, but we have to pay the bribes for other counties.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Morin) stated yesterday and he has repeated it to-night that Senator Choquette sold a building to the government for a post office and that after it was sold it fell down. Is the hon. member serious in making that statement ?

Mr. MORIN. I will tell you plainly, I don't want you to talk to me and I don't want to talk to you.

Mr. TALBOT. I shall not resent that impolite remark of the hon. gentleman but I thought he might address the chair. The statement made by the hon. member with regard to the post office is not correct. In the first place only part of the roof fell down and at the time it fell it was not occupied as a post office. It was only when the whole thing was put in proper shape that the post office was located there.

Mr. BLAIN. There was a total expenditure last year of $1,571 for a pneumatic tube system in Montreal which I understand has been abandoned. That requires some explanation. Then, the Postmaster General referred to the reorganization of the Montreal post office and he spoke of the deputy postmaster as carrying on this reorganization passing over the postmaster who is paid a large salary. Perhaps the postmaster was a political appointee and had no qualification for the office.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Harwood who was a respected member of this House for years was appointed postmaster at Montreal, but unfortunately he had to undergo a severe operation which was the occasion of his ill-health for a year and a half, and on account of which he could not give to his duties the attention which he otherwise would. Fortunately Mr. Harwood has now recovered and is able to discharge his duties in the Montreal post office. He is a very able man and is much respected in the office. When I spoke of the reorganization of the office I referred to Mr. Gaboury, because it is Mr. Gaboury who has special charge of the employees. Mr. Gaboury started from the lowest grade in the service and has attained to his present position through his own merits. Mr. Harwood and he are working hand in hand and I am sure the results of their labours will give satisfaction to the city. As to the pneumatic system, when Sir William Mulock was Postmaster General he intended to introduce that system in Montreal and Toronto. It has proved a success in large cities like London, Liverpool, Berlin, New York and Chicago. But in view of the climatic conditions in Montreal and the large expenditure its installation would entail it was thought that for the present the money had better be applied to other more immediate needs in the postal service. Some pipe was purchased for the tube system and that can be sold by the Department of Public Works at any time.

Mr. AMES. Was land purchased opposite the Bonaventure station for the pneumatic system and is that land still owned by the government.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think it has been exchanged with the Grand Trunk Railway Company for another lot.

Mr. AMES. Where is the lot that has been given the government to exchange for the lot opposite the station.

Mr. LEMIEUX. On Imperial avenue.

Mr. AMES. What use does the government intend to make of the lot on Imperial avenue ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The intention is to sell it at a convenient time unless it may be used possibly for a postal station. In the meantime we are storing the pipes there and saving rental for storage. If the land is not used for public purposes it will be disposed of at a convenient time.

Mr. FOWLER. Why did you not sell the original lot instead of trading it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was thought we made a good exchange.

Mr. AMES. Is this going to be a case of an exchange of a better for a worse article until finally the money is lost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think we made a very fair exchange.

Mr. AMES. I understand that an extensive set of plans, costing nearly $9,000, were prepared by Mr. Maurice Perreault. These plans, I understand, were paid for by the government. In whose possession are the plans to-day? The city of Montreal had an experience of a similar kind with this gentleman, and he undertook to hold the plans.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that the plans are in the department, the property of the department.

Mr. AMES. If the government decide to construct a system of this character, have they the full right to use these plans?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Certainly. They are the property of the department, and the department can use them at any time.

Mr. AMES. I understand that the materials purchased for this system are still in the hands of the department, and. will be sold as old junk for whatever they will bring.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have a certain quantity of pipes in Montreal and also a quantity in Toronto.

Mr. AMES. What is the value?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the particulars at this moment, as I did not expect this matter to come up under this item.

Mr. BLAIN. I think this is rather important. Here we have a government purchasing a large quantity of pipes, purchasing land, getting out plans and spending a large amount of money in connection with a system which they have abandoned altogether. Among the items we find that they are paying $75 a month to a political supporter in Montreal for the storage of the pipes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are not paying storage now. We are storing them on our own land.

Mr. AMES. When did the rental for the storage of pipes cease, and what property was being occupied before by the storage of those pipes?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The charge for storage ceased on the first of the present year, when the pipes were removed to a lot owned by the government, and were stored free of cost in a shed erected for that purpose.

Mr. FOWLER. What qualification had this gentleman for making these plans ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was an architect.

Mr. FOWLER. And he was paid the sum of $9,000 to do what the chief architect at Ottawa, with his twelve assistants, could not do. Is this a part of that $100,000 which was paid out so generously by this government to the architects of Canada, or is it in addition to that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no information that $100,000 was paid to architects.

Mr. FOWLER. It was pointed out the other day that the payments amounted to $100,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was the figure of the hon. member for East Simcoe, and I did not feel like taking the responsibility of the correctness of his figures.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the minister say that $100,000 was not paid out to architects?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do. The hon. gentleman knows that included in the amount were moneys paid to the engineer in connection with the works at St. Andrew's rapids for engineering work, and also the amounts paid as prizes for competitive plans.

Mr. FOWLER. The amount paid to the engineer was a very small proportion of the whole, and I fail to understand the distinction which the hon. gentleman draws with respect to the prizes, which were payments to architects for plans, whether competitive or otherwise. They were plans for a new building that was to be erected by the government, and it was felt that the chief architect was not equal to the job, and therefore prizes were offered to other architects. I think the sooner the minister remodels his architectural department the better it will be for the country. It is one of the most outrageous things the way that branch of the Public Works Department is managed.

Montreal military buildings--new stores building, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is in the same position as the item for the Montreal barracks. I am asking for a revote, and the purchase of the land will be made when the money is received from the city of Montreal. The contract has not been let, and will not be let until that arrangement is made.

Montreal new postal station B--site and building, St. Catherine street, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for the completion of postal station B.

Mr. KEMP. What does that building cost, including the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Including everything, the cost will be $126,636.25.

Mr. KEMP. Is it expected that this will finish the building, and when will it be occupied?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I visited it on Sunday last.

Mr. AMES. When will it be completed ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is completed ; the men are working in the office.

Montreal, new postal station, Pointe St. Charles, $21,875.

Mr. KEMP. What will the site cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has not been purchased, we expect to close for the site shortly.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you no idea of the probable cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote. There has been difficulty in getting a site and plans will not be prepared until the site is obtained.

Mr. AMES. What did Mr. Perrault receive on the buildings he constructed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 5 per cent.

Mr. AMES. On the extras too ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. What was it expected that this pneumatic system would cost ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think nearly half a million dollars ; we abandoned the scheme.

Mr. KEMP. To what account is the loss on that pneumatic tube system, which a merchant would call dead stock, charged ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the money is paid out so much is charged and when the land and the pipes are sold that will be credited.

Mr. FOWLER. Are you using the motor cars that were in use some time ago ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, we are not using motor cars although we may later on. They can only be used in the summer.

Mr. KEMP. In Toronto they were used all the year round.

Montreal, eastern postal station, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to purchase a site in St. James division of Montreal for the erection of a public building for a branch post office in the eastern part of the city. There has been a request by the Postmaster General for this as being very much needed for postal accommodation. This will be station 'C'.

Mr. FOSTER. What will it cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is in the same position as the other, no plans have been prepared.

Mr. FOWLER. Will it be better or worse than St. Charles ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Of course the people of the eastern portion of Montreal claim that they are as much entitled to a fine postal station as those of the west. My hon. friend (Mr. Ames) knows how important Ste. Catherine Street has become ; it is now so to speak the boulevard of Montreal. From a postal point of view, we thought we should divide Montreal into three stations, the central post office, section 'B' in the west and section 'C' in the east. That other station at St. Charles will serve some of the suburbs that have been annexed or will be shortly.

Mr. AMES. Does this come next to the Hochelaga district ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think the new postal station 'C' will be built on the confines of St. James and St. Maurice divisions. It will be quite a distance from Hochelaga.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What class of pipe is it that is stored on this lot which you purchased for the purpose ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We did not purchase a lot for it, it is the ordinary cast iron pipe, 10 inches in size.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The minister will agree that pipe deteriorates in value every day unless it is under thoroughly good cover and there must be a sufficiently good demand in Canada for pipe of that size for the government to dispose of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have been endeavouring to sell it and have received certain offers which we have not thought satisfactory. We are holding for a somewhat higher price.

Mr. CLEMENTS. How much did the lot cost on which this shed is put ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was bought some years ago, and I have not the figures in hand.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What did the shed cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A very small sum. We had the material on the lot and used that material. The cost was trifling.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The lot was not purchased for the purpose of storing the pipes. We purchased the lot near the Bonaventure station in order to have a station of our own near the railway. Before the new annex to the general post office was built, the newspaper part of the post office business took up too much space in the building. The bags containing the newspapers were sent to the central office, and there was always heaps of bags blocking the street and Fortification lane. We decided to have a special place of our own near Bonaventure station for our newspaper business. The different newspapers, the 'Star,' the 'Gazette,' 'La Patrie' and others would send their bags to the station and they would be taken by the railways just across the street.

Mr. AMES. Does the hon. minister say that this lot on Imperial avenue is to be used as the location of a station ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No. The lot near Bonaventure station was got for that purpose. When we got the addition to the post office, that station was no more needed. So, we were left with the original lot on our hands. The Grand Trunk wanted the lot for some railway purpose and we exchanged the lot for the present one which is used for the storage of pipe. I do not pretend to know the conditions of the exchange.

Mr. AMES. That is exactly the point I am trying to bring out. If we found the lot opposite Bonaventure station could not be used for the purpose originally intended, and the Grand Trunk wanted it, why did not the government sell the lot to the Grand Trunk for what they paid for it? Why did they exchange and get a lot on the side street, and now decide that they have no use for it and simply hold it ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend knows that if we get in exchange a value similar to that we should get in a sale, it is equivalent to a sale. The government has lost nothing.

Mr. AMES. Would the hon. minister (Mr. Lemieux) rather have a real estate in Montreal or money in the treasury ? Which is the more liquid asset of the two ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. With the boom there is in real estate in Montreal, land there is as good as hard cash.

Mr. AMES. I think the hon. minister will find it rather hard to dispose of the Imperial avenue property on the basis of value equal to that of the lot opposite Bonaventure station.

Mr. FOWLER. I am afraid the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) does not understand the business methods of this government. In this case, they have simply done what they have always done. They always do the wrong thing; never by any chance or accident do they do the right thing, the thing that any business man would do. The Grand Trunk wanted this lot opposite Bonaventure station—naturally they wanted it to enlarge their premises. Having a lot in an undesirable portion of the city from a business standpoint, and, desiring to get rid of it, they went to the government which is an easy mark—for its friends—and proposed an exchange, and, of course, the government got the worst of it. Probably the land they gave to the Grand Trunk was worth anywhere from three to five times that which the Grand Trunk gave to the government. That is the only way for this government to do business ; it is the way they have always done it. Instead of selling the lot as a business man would have done, they exchanged it for the property on a side street, which, I fancy, will be on their hands as long as they want a place to store pipes.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What is the approximate value of the pipe held in Montreal by the department ? Also, what did the government pay for the 10-inch pipe ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be glad to obtain that information for my hon. friend. He can understand that we are not dealing to-night with the question of the pneumatic system, a matter which was disposed of some time ago.

Mr. CLEMENTS. So long as the minister will bring down the information I am satisfied.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will get a complete statement of the cost and of the present situation.

Mr. CLEMENTS. And I would advise the government to dispose of that pipe for the best price they can get. The sooner they get out of it the better.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I agree that we should dispose of it, but at a fair price.

Mr. BLAIN. On page V—43 of the Auditor General's Report, I find an item in connection with the postal station on St. Catherine street :

Thomas Parent, clerk of works, 274 days at $3, $822.

What special qualification had this gentleman for this office ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was employed in 1906. I have no definite information on this point to-night, but I am told that he was an experienced builder.

Mr. FOWLER. Perhaps the minister could tell me what official in his department made the negotiations for the exchange with the Grand Trunk of these two lots that have been referred to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give that at once, because it was done quite a while ago and before I came into parliament.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the minister bring down that information ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. To verify the statement I made some time ago to the Postmaster General that in the smaller offices he does not give any rent allowance, I would refer him to appendix D of his report. He will find there such offices as Havelock, Hawk Lake, Hawley, Hawthorne, and so on, and in none of these is there any rent allowance.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is included in the salary.

Mr. SPROULE. But the salary in these cases is $18.75. How much would the hon. gentleman allow for rent ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is more than that for salary, surely.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, the hon. gentleman's report is no use.

Mr. LEMIEUX. These post offices may have been opened after part of the year had passed.

Mr. SPROULE. The report gives forwarding allowance, salary based on the revenue of the previous year, $18.75, in a number of these cases.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is for part of the year only. These post offices may have been opened late in the year. In the salary are included the rent allowance and the fuel allowance.

Montreal—new examining warehouse, $405,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for the balance due on the purchase price, which was $402,000. An agreement for the purchase of this property was arrived at some time ago for the sum of $402,000, but the payment is not to be made until the 1st of May. We expect probably that the time will be extended to 15th July. We agreed to pay $10,000 in cash, and the balance with 5 per cent interest. This amount will make 5 per cent interest up to 15th July next. The property was purchased upon the urgent representation of the collector of customs, Mr. White, at the port of Montreal, and Mr. McDougall, the Commissioner of Customs. Their opinion was that this was an ideal site for the customs building, and an opportunity arose to acquire the property. It consists of 67,800 square feet. It has a frontage of 495 feet on the north side of McGill street, and is substantially a lot of 400 feet by 140. There are a number of old buildings on it. The property is the old Grey Nunnery property, and is situated nearly opposite the new Grand Trunk offices. Mr. White's opinion was that the opportunity to purchase this land ought not to be allowed to pass. The question was forced to the front by reason of the fire which occurred when the examining warehouse was injured. It is supposed that this will be used for a custom house as well as an examining warehouse. We have not decided when we shall start to build.

Mr. SPROULE. $10,000, you say, was paid to secure the lot. Has the government become bankrupt that it had to pay in instalments?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This $10,000 was required to be paid by Governor General's warrant, and the collector of customs secured the lot by making this payment on the option.

Mr. KEMP. Is the property revenue producing at the present time?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are eight tenants on the property, paying a rental of about $4,800.

Mr. AMES. Can the minister give us an assurance that the work of erection will be undertaken at an early day? Since the fire in the Montreal custom house this work has become imperative, and we would be glad to know that the plans will be made and the work commenced soon.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give any assurance to-night. We are spending a good deal of money in the city of Montreal, and having acquired the land at a large expense, we think we have done pretty well. I am not able to say when the new building will be commenced.

Mr. AMES. When the government determine to build, will an opportunity be afforded to architects to submit plans?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot say.

Mr. FOWLER. I thought all these plans for public buildings were prepared in the department. We would like to have an assurance that in this case they will be prepared in the department.

Mr. FIELDING. One hon. gentleman wants competitive plans, and another wants them made at Ottawa.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give an assurance to both.

Mr. FOWLER. In the interest of the country I would like to have that assurance from the minister to-night. Will this expensive staff of his prepare these plans?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to the hon. gentleman that the practice of the department is to prepare the plans in the department, and I have no reason to suppose that that practice will be departed from in this case.

Mr. FOWLER. The practice is quite otherwise.

Mr. PUGSLEY. With some few exceptions.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That proves the rule.

Mr. FOWLER. It is delightful to have the minister with a wave of his hand say 'with some trifling exceptions,' when we are paying out $100,000 for architectural assistance. I hope the Minister of Public Works will insist that the Architectural Department shall be something more than an Architectural Department in name only and that it shall actually do some work for the country. It seems to be more ornamental than useful.

Mr. KEMP. I have totalled up the expenditure which it is contemplated to undertake in connection with new post office facilities in Montreal, including the addition to the post office, station B, station C and the Point St. Charles station, and it makes altogether $1,126,272. Adding to that the new examining warehouse site, which has cost $405,000, you have a total of $1,531,272.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Montreal has got to be a very important city. Last year the revenue from customs duties was $11,433,595, and from excise $4,496,431. The exports were $70,000,000 and the imports $73,000,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the minister mean by that that the city of Montreal did all this? How much of it was contributed by the country around ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Do you desire to vote against this item?

Mr. FOWLER. I think it is a poor piece of business to spend over $400,000 to buy a site you do not propose to use.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not say that.

Mr. FOWLER. You said that you did not propose to use it now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said I could not give any assurance when the work would begin.

Mr. FOWLER. You are not proposing to use it or you could give that assurance. You are renting it for $400 a year which does not represent one per cent upon the value. The taxation upon it will be heavy.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There does not happen to be any taxation.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, that is very fortunate. If there were it would absorb the whole amount of your revenue.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the government for some information in regard to the amount of $25,000 which was paid in connection with this new pneumatic tube system. An architect was employed to prepare plans for the building that it was intended to erect, and the government have paid that architect more than $7,000 for the preparation of plans that were of no value to the government or anybody else. The government have purchased tubes and have paid large amounts of money for them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How do you know they were purchased in the United States?

Mr. BLAIN. I think that Sir Wm. Mulock said in the House they were purchased in the United States or in the old country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information is that they were purchased in Glasgow.

Mr. BLAIN. Well, they were not made in Canada anyway. The department, after proposing to adopt a pneumatic tube system and after paying out a large amount of money, abandoned the whole scheme both in Montreal and Toronto. One would have supposed that when a new system was being adopted it would have been sufficient to have experimented with it in one city rather than in two.

Mr. LEMIEUX. But the old rivalry.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. Postmaster General has stated that the total expenditure in connection with this pneumatic tube system if completed would have been nearly half a million dollars.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am going to bring down a statement in regard to the pneumatic tube system showing what it cost and the quantity and value of the property on hand.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like my hon. friend to produce before the committee at some future date a statement of the total expenditure of money for every purpose by this government in connection with the adoption of the pneumatic tube system in Toronto and Montreal.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is what I promised to do.

Mr. BLAIN. At the same time showing what the government have on hand for the expenditure and what they propose to do with these tubes.

Mr. KEMP. I see by the Auditor General's Report, V—43, 'F. St. Germain, commission on valuation of property, $116.' I would like to inquire what property that was.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume that would be the lot of land that was purchased.

Mr. FOWLER. The Bonaventure station lot?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. KEMP. What would be the value of that property?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the vicinity of $25,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Who did the buying of this $405,000 property?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Wright.

Mr. FOWLER. What pay did he get?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was employed by the collector, not by my department.

Mr. FOWLER. Did the collector of customs in Montreal, on his own initiative without the instruction of the department buy this land ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The collector of customs being of opinion it was urgent this lot should be bought, communicated with the commissioner of customs and the commissioner of customs authorized him to get an option upon the property and he employed Mr. Wright to do so. My information is that there was no arrangement as to what commission Mr. Wright should get or as to whether he should get any commission. Mr. Wright has made a claim for commission which I have not recognized as yet.

Mr. FOWLER. How much ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it is in the vicinity of $2,000.

Mr. FOWLER. It is strange the collector of customs should take an option upon this lot on his own responsibility and pay $10,000 on the option.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not on his own responsibility. After he had made the preliminary arrangement the commissioner of customs came to me and requested me to approve of the option and I did.

Mr. FOWLER. And this $10,000 was paid by Mr. White, collector of customs, out of his own privy purse ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was paid by him, but I do not know out of what purse he paid it.

Mr. FOWLER. Was it paid by the minister ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A few days afterwards it was.

Mr. FOWLER. Never mind the number of days ; did Mr. White, collector of customs, pay this $10,000 out of his own pocket ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know that. I believe he paid it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. To the best of my recollection, Mr. White was authorized and he authorized a special agent. The object was not to let it be known who was to buy the property, because the moment it was known that the government was purchasing, the government would have gone up. Mr. White rendered service in that way and it was quite creditable on his part.

Mr. FOWLER. I have not as yet condemned the transaction, because I do not know what it is. It is laudable curiosity on my part, because it seems strange that a private individual should pay $10,000 to secure an option for the government. Did the collector provide the money himself.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All I know is that when the commissioner of customs told me that Mr. White desired to purchase the property, I told him I could not supply the money because there was no Governor General's warrant. The arrangement was authorized however, and Mr. Wright secured the option and a few days afterwards the Governor General's warrant was made out and the money transmitted to the Customs Department.

Mr. FOWLER. Was there need for great haste ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was.

Mr. FOWLER. Was the property in the market ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and others were after it.

Mr. FOWLER. The property had been offered for sale ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I believe not.

Nicolet public building, $10,000.

Mr. AMES. This Nicolet building has been in course of construction for the last two years. In 1907 $204 and in 1908 $136 or in all $340 was spent in advertising for tenders which is 2½ per cent of the total cost, or as much as the architect's fees.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is hard to please hon. gentlemen opposite ; if we don't advertise we are criticised, and if we do advertise we are criticised.

Mr. FOWLER. How much has the building cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total cost is a little over $26,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Who is the clerk of works ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Rivet.

Mr. FOWLER. What was his previous occupation ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was a practical builder, I understand.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you find that in your notes or are you making it up.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You should not suggest anything of that kind.

Mr. FOWLER. How many days did he work there ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot say.

Mr. FOWLER. How long did his job last ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract was let on June 26, 1906, and it was to be completed October 30, 1907.

Mr. FOWLER. It is quite a graft this inspector business.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Don't say anything nasty at this early hour of the morning.

Mr. FOWLER. That is not nasty.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When you mention graft it is very annoying.

Mr. FOWLER. I quite understand it is to the hon. gentleman. What do you pay this inspector a day ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Three dollars.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to direct the attention of the minister to the precaution Mr. Hyman took when he appointed these inspectors. Mr. Hyman wrote a letter to those who nominated the inspectors which will be found in 'Hansard' 1906, page 6730 :

In recommendations for inspectors, foremen or clerks of works, to have charge of the construction or authorized to oversee and inspect the erection or repairing of public works, it is imperative that the party recommended have a practical experience and be capable of thoroughly understanding plans and specifications and of seeing that they are properly and correctly carried out. Attention to this matter will obviate delays which have taken place through men being recommended who, on inquiry, were found not to be qualified for the work and, therefore, could not be employed.

The hon. minister at that time said :

A copy of that letter is sent in every case when recommendations are made.

Does the hon. minister carry out the policy laid down by Mr. Hyman ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. minister lay on the table the letter addressed to this gentleman and his reply at the next meeting of the committee ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. All I can do is to give the hon. gentleman the form, which is a printed form on which the blanks are filled in.

Mr. FOWLER. Not only is this a printed form, but it is a mere form. It has no practical effect, and is not intended to have any practical effect. The only object of having this form of letter is to bring it down to this committee when the matter is under discussion. It is sent out of course, but the man who receives it pays no attention to it, and probably throws it into the waste-paper basket. The hon. member for Peel must know that.

Mr. AMES. In making calculations for public buildings for the coming year, does the hon. minister calculate on the same length of working day as hitherto ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know of no difference.

Mr. AMES. Then, am I to understand that the Bill introduced by Mr. Verville for an eight-hour day will not be allowed by the government to pass?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would be a far-fetched conclusion.

Mr. AMES. The minister has just stated that the length of the working day would be the same as hitherto.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is the hon. gentleman in favour of an eight-hour day?

Mr. AMES. It is quite evident that the government is not in favour of it.

Plessisville—public building, $2,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote. There was an appropriation of $5,000 last year, of which $2,800 was paid for the site.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the size of the village?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Its population in 1901 was 1,500.

Mr. FOWLER. How large is the site ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a corner lot, 50 feet by 100 feet.

Mr. FOWLER. From whom was it bought?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From Mr. Beausoleil.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The plans are not yet prepared, but it is supposed that it will be about $25,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the postal revenue?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was $1,327.30 for the nine months.

Quebec citadel—drill shed for school of gunnery, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote. This drill shed has been urged by the Minister of Militia and Defence since June, 1905. He regards it as most important that the service should be provided with it. The minister states that there will be accommodation for at least one of every type of gun used in Canada for instructional purposes. He also says that in winter instruction cannot be given for artillery work unless all guns for instructional purposes are kept in premises which are heated. The minister has urged this very strongly, and it is proposed to proceed this year with the building.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $50,000.

Mr. BLAIN. As the Minister of Militia should be here to explain this item, I think that it had better stand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We had better finish Quebec.

Mr. MORIN. There should not be so much delay at the beginning of the session. From November 22 to December 17 we did not earn enough to feed a cat and here we are sitting at 1.30 in the morning and the minister is not satisfied with that.

Quebec citadel—Governor General's quarters, repairs, furniture, &c., $2,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for some renewals, repairs, &c., to the Governor General's quarters in the citadel. The chief item is painting, $1,020.

Mr. FOWLER. At whose request are they made ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A request is made to the Public Works Department by the controller for His Excellency stating what repairs and improvements are needed.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this on account of the festivities.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, some further expenditures will be required which will be provided for in the supplementaries.

Quebec drill hall—addition to building and levelling ground $9,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to raise the roof of the armouries and to extend the drill hall on some land which has been expropriated to afford much needed accommodation to the new corps to be formed, the present accommodation being entirely insufficient.

Mr. FOWLER. We want information about this. Some people think that we have a sufficient number of these corps in the country. Is this cavalry, infantry or artillery ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give the information.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am sure it is infantry.

Mr. SPROULE. We are dealing with so many armouries to-night that the Minister of Militia should be present to give information about them. We receive only partial information, valuable information is not furnished ; we are going it blind.

Mr. MORIN. Who was the owner of the land expropriated ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The name is not given in my note. The property is situated on Grande Allée.

Mr. FOWLER. Perhaps the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Morin) could supply the name ?

Mr. MORIN. I know the man's name very well. That is why I ask you. He made a good many thousand dollars in a few weeks. And he is not the member for Dorchester, you can bet on that.

Mr. BLAIN. If there are middlemen in this transaction, I think that should be explained.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are no middlemen.

Mr. FOWLER. What was the cost of the land ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was $20,220.64. The land expropriated was 9,240 square feet. There are to be two additions to the building, one on each end.

Mr. FOWLER. Did you buy land on both ends ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think not.

Mr. MORIN. Can the minister give us the name of the man who expropriated the land ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Three valuators were placed upon the property, but whether in connection with the expropriation or not I am not aware. They were Alex. Gauvreau, F. Turcott, and L. P. Sirois.

Mr. MORIN. Three Tories. The man who owned the property, to blindfold the government, got three Tories to put a value on it, so as to hide the thing a little bit.

Mr. FIELDING. These Tories are always getting us into trouble.

Mr. MORIN. It was a trick. He knew that if Grits did the trick they would be blamed, so he got three Tories to do that kind of work.

Mr. BLAIN. How much were they paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was four years ago, and I have not the figures at hand.

Mr. FOWLER. This was bought in 1904. At what time in 1904 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. December 6.

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, that was carrying out a pre-election pledge.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How was that ?

Mr. FOWLER. It was done just after election.

Mr. MORIN. That man did not need an election ; he is in the Senate.

Quebec examining warehouse—alterations, fittings, &c., $1,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to put in an electric lighting system in the examining warehouse, as requested by the Customs Department in 1907.

Mr. FOWLER. What does it cost to make the change ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $1,500.

Quebec immigrant buildings—additions, renewals, repairs, &c., $7,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for work to be undertaken during the fiscal year.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this let by contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it is a number of small amounts and done by day's work.

Quebec immigrant hospital for trachoma and kindred diseases in Savard park—reconstruction of building destroyed by fire, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total cost of this work is $90,000.

Mr. FOWLER. This is for the immigrants brought in by the government. The $5-a-head immigrants, I suppose. Is the contract let ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the building is finished.

Mr. FOWLER. Who had the contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Messrs. Jinchereau & Lamonde for $65,000.

Mr. FOWLER. How do you get it up to $90,000 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There were a number of items. That made the total expenditure up to November 30, of $71,790. Then there is an amount due on contract, $7,018; wiring, $777; call bells, $285; sidewalks, fencing and water service, $1,400; furniture, $1,000; contingencies and superintendence, $3,030.

Mr. FOWLER. I thought these people suffering from trachoma were sent back to the country from which they came.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They cannot be sent back immediately, and even when they are deported, we have to treat them like human beings while they are awaiting deportation.

Mr. FOWLER. Who was the clerk of works at the hospital?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. E. M. Talbot, the architect, was the clerk of works.

Mr. FOWLER. The Auditor General's Report differs from the statement of the minister. I find that not only was there an architect, Mr. Talbot, who got a commission of $911, but there was a clerk of works. Leo Vermette, and other clerk of works, D. J. Mullarkey.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Mullarkey was sent from the head office here.

Mr. FOWLER. We were told yesterday by the minister that this work was well inspected because Mr. Mullarkey was sent down as clerk of works. Now we have in this case an architect and we have two clerks of works. Mr. Mullarkey is paid $4 per day. So, the minister is badly informed. This only gives a partial account of the services of the clerk of works. The service is from July 1 to December 27. Let us see what further services were rendered by Mr. Vermette. Was there any further service?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not in my memorandum. You may have it in the Auditor General's Report. We have a resident agent at Quebec and I suppose he was employed by him.

Mr. FOWLER. Then who is Talbot ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. An architect.

Mr. FOWLER. Did he draw the plans ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. What did he do ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He superintended the construction of the work.

Mr. FOWLER. What did Mr. Vermette do ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was engaged at $2 per day. I presume he was under Mr. Talbot.

Mr. FOWLER. And what did Mr. Mullarkey do ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Mullarkey would be sent to make an inspection.

Mr. FOWLER. But it was all inspected.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Vermette appears to have been paid $2 per day. Mr. Mullarkey is employed in the department and he is an expert in concrete work although well qualified to inspect all buildings. He is sent out here and there by the chief architect to inspect work which is in progress of construction and that is the way he did in this particular case. I understood that when we were discussing some other items the department were commended for having an expert of this character to inspect works from time to time.

Mr. FOWLER. No, that is not what was referred to at the time when that was spoken of ; it was another matter altogether. It was not in connection with Mr. Mullarkey. The minister stated that before these progress estimates were paid a gentleman went down from the department to inspect as to the progress estimates and that was commended as being a proper thing to do. Here we have an architect employed in connection with this work. Did Talbot draw the plans ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They were drawn in the department.

Mr. FOWLER. All he did was to inspect ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Would the minister bring down information as to how much was paid to Mr. Talbot, Mr. Vermette and Mr. Mullarkey in connection with this detention hospital ?

Quebec military buildings—main store building at Dominion arsenal, $21,000.

Mr. AMES. This is an item in regard to which there is a wonderful lack of information. The minister who is supposed to give us information on military matters has not been here to-night, and it is unfortunate that when an item of $20,000 or $30,000 is called we cannot get the information which we require.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This item is to make provision for the construction of a main stores building at the Dominion arsenal. The land was purchased on the 6th of October, 1906. It is situated at the corner of Carleton and Arsenal streets.

Mr. AMES. Who was it purchased from and at what cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From A. Grenier at a cost of $3,000. The building will be three storeys, built on stone and cement foundations with a frontage of 91 feet on Carleton street and 53 feet on Arsenal street.

Mr. SPROULE. What is to be the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $50,587.82.

Mr. FOWLER. Where were the plans drawn ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The plans were prepared at Ottawa.

Mr. FOWLER. Who is the clerk of works ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The supervising architect is Rene Lemay.

Mr. FOWLER. And there is no clerk of works ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no memorandum of that here.

Mr. FOWLER. There is nothing there about Mr. Vermette ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. There is something about Mr. Vermette in the Auditor General's Report. His salary is $2 per day and there was $64 paid to him.

Mr. SPROULE. Was this work let by contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the amount of the contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $34,777.

Mr. FOWLER. And the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $50,587.82, but that includes the cost of the site, heating, electric wiring, fixtures, sidewalks, fences and elevator.

Mr. BLAIN. There is an item of $332 for advertising. Will the minister explain that ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would be advertising for tenders in the various newspapers.

Mr. AMES.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman give us a list of the papers in which the advertisement was inserted ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not this evening but I would be glad to do so if the hon. gentleman thinks it important.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the policy of the department in that regard ? Is all the advertising given to his political friends or is the advertisement inserted in the principal papers in the district ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The general rule is that we select a number of the leading newspapers in the district where the works are to be advertised. I think I am safe in saying that the newspapers selected are friendly to the government.

Mr. BLAIN. In every case ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not in every case, but in the great majority of cases. We are careful to see they are newspapers of large circulation, so as to give full publicity to the advertisement.

Mr. BLAIN. Then I am to understand that in no case is an advertisement inserted in a Conservative newspaper?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman desires. I will be very glad to bring down a list of the newspapers in which this advertisement was inserted.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the policy of the department in this respect?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The policy of the department is to advertise as widely as is thought necessary to give full publicity to the call for tenders.

Mr. BLAIN. If a work is being done in a town where the Conservative newspaper has the largest and widest circulation, is the advertisement inserted in that newspaper?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Such a case has not yet been brought to my notice in the short time I have been minister as a Tory newspaper having the largest circulation, but if such an unusual thing should occur I would consider the matter.

Mr. BLAIN. In my own town the Conservative newspaper has the largest circulation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the name of your town?

Mr. BLAIN. I do not propose to take these flippant jokes from the minister. It is all very well for him to joke over these large expenditures, but it is a serious matter. The Conservative paper has the largest circulation in my own town, it is so in the adjoining county and it is so in South Simcoe.

Mr. LENNOX. Two or three of them.

Mr. BLAIN. I could name them by the hundreds in the province of Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. You may mention Owen Sound, Meaford and Collingwood.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister has not been very much in Ontario.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. I hope to be more.

Mr. BLAIN. I hope so, and I hope the minister will treat these expenditures more seriously. Then we are to understand that the policy of the department is that these advertisements are not to be inserted in Conservative newspapers.

Mr. CARVELL. Cut it short.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman was cut short in the elections in his province the other day.

Mr. CARVELL. That is ancient history.

Mr. BLAIN. It is not, as the hon. gentleman will find when he goes back for election. Is it the policy of the Minister of Public Works to advertise for tenders in the largest newspapers regardless of their policy ?

Mr. FIELDING. That has always been the policy in the past ?

Mr. BLAIN. It has not been the policy of this government in the past.

Mr. FIELDING. Or the other governments.

Mr. GRAHAM. Is it the policy of the Ontario government ?

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman was a member of the Ontario government, and he ought to know.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am speaking of the Whitney government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would I offend the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) if I asked him whether he was in favour of this item or not ?

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Public Works might try by asking me the question. I hope he will not deal with these questions in such a flippant manner.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was curious to know if the hon. gentleman objected to the item.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to know if any of this $500 was paid to any Liberal-Conservative newspaper.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Not very likely.

Mr. BELAND. If that is for a public work in Quebec, I can say that it was advertised in the Quebec 'Morning Chronicle.'

Mr. JOHNSTON. We will have to see about that.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I hope it won't occur again.

Mr. BLAIN. I want the hon. gentleman to bring down a list of the newspapers in which this was advertised.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be pleased to.

Mr. BLAIN. And I shall also ask him to announce the policy of the department in this matter at a future sitting.

Mr. FIELDING. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) will, in the meantime, look into the policy of some few years ago, because it would strengthen his case very much if he could show that under the Conservative government any Liberal newspaper got an advertisement.

Mr. BLAIN. Whenever wrong-doing by this government is pointed out, the Finance Minister flies to a comparison with the old administration. He thinks it is right to advertise in party newspapers alone because the Liberal-Conservative government did it in days gone by. Surely that is not a sufficient answer. What I say is that where there is a Conservative newspaper which has the largest circulation in a town where work is going on, the department should advertise in that newspaper.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend really must not expect us to be too good. We are rising to great heights of virtue, but I am afraid we cannot get as much superior to the former government as the hon. gentleman wishes us to be.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. minister seems to think that there are no towns where Conservative papers have a larger circulation than Liberal papers. I could point to towns in the province from which he comes where that is the case. The Conservative newspapers in New Brunswick enjoy by far the largest circulation among the mass of newspapers in that province. Why was it found necessary to pay $332 for advertising for these military buildings when the advertising for the immigration building cost only $85 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell that. There may have been a wider circulation given.

Mr. CROCKET. Were the advertisements confined to the Quebec papers?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. They would take in the Montreal dailies, and possibly the Ottawa dailies, besides the weekly papers in the district.

Quebec east public building, $30,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What is this for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The post office at St. Roch's.

Mr. FOWLER. What did you pay for the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $23,400.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the total cost of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has not been erected yet.

Mr. FOWLER. How was the land purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By arbitration.

Mr. AMES. From whom was it bought?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From three different owners. As it was done very recently, I have not the names here.

Mr. AMES. Who were the arbitrators ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. McCarthy, the engineer at Quebec, was the one acting for the government.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the building expected to cost when completed?

Mr. LEMIEUX. About $50,000.

Mr. CROCKET. What was the price the owners asked for the land?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know what the owner asked, but he is dissatisfied with the award.

Sherbrooke drill hall, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for a drill hall at Sherbrooke on a site which has been already acquired. The contract has been let for the sum of $82,500.

Mr. STANFIELD. We have passed four or five items for militia buildings, and I think the Minister of Militia should be here to explain them. The Minister of Railways told me yesterday he did not think there would be enough money to put up a new station at Truro. I protest against these expenditures when there are other places where buildings are more urgently needed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The building is to be of brick with stone lintels, resting on a stone basement. The frontage is 157 feet on Bellevidere avenue.

Mr. BLAIN. When will this be completed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract is to be completed by November 7, 1909.

St. Henri post office—improvements, $1,200.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to provide for a fire-escape ladder and the construction of a granolithic sidewalk and also a basement.

Mr. STANFIELD. Does the government pay the whole cost of the sidewalk ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. STANFIELD. The minister said the other day that the rule was to pay only one-half.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think the rule can be uniform ; in some cases the town has the local improvement system and then they assess the owners of the property. The government, although not legally bound to do so, usually pays its share. The usual course is for the government to pay the whole cost of granolithic sidewalks around its own buildings.

St. Hyacinthe public building—improvement, repairs, &c., $2,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to provide for a number of repairs and improvements, including a fire escape.

Mr. FOWLER. Some friend of the government must be making fire escapes and selling them for these various public buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand that since that very deplorable accident in Montreal in which a number of lives were lost, a municipal by-law has been passed requiring fire escapes to be placed on all public buildings.

St. John's military buildings—stables for cavalry, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision towards the erection of stables for cavalry at the military buildings there. The work is under way, the contract has been let and the total probable cost is $37,188. The stables will accommodate some 85 horses.

Mr. KEMP. How many cavalry are there at present.

Mr. PUGSLEY. About 75.

Mr. SPROULE. I think we should have an understanding that, when we are dealing with so many buildings for the Militia Department, we shall expect the Minister of Militia to be here to give us information as to the needs which are said to justify these expenditures.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman got every information.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister gave us no information on that point. He simply told us that this building was to accommodate 85 horses. He has not told us anything of the strength of the force at this place or anything to show why the building is needed. Somebody must have asked for the building and must have asked for it on some data.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I gave the number of horses and men.

Mr. SPROULE. In a number of cases, my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) has asked questions, but got no information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I told the hon. gentleman this was for 85 horses and that the force there consisted of 75 men.

Mr. SPROULE. That was in this case, but in others in which the hon. gentleman

(Mr. Fowler) inquired, he got no information. We should have this information from the Militia Department. I do not know whether the minister (Mr. Pugsley) is sincere, or whether he is depending on jollying the House along. I think we should be treated more seriously, and I think we are entitled to all the information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What information would the hon. gentleman like with regard to this building ?

Mr. SPROULE. I am speaking of these items generally.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But take this item.

Mr. SPROULE. I will take what items I like. On this page that we have been going over, we have a vote for a quarantine station, and about that we got a little information. There is a vote for an immigration building, and we got very little information about that—the minister could hardly be expected to give it. There was a vote for the Montreal barracks, but no one representing the Militia Department gave us information about that. The Militia Department is spending very large sums of money and the country is beginning to get a little restless, regarding this expenditure as extravagant. On the vote for Montreal post office we got practically no information. Here was a vote for another militia building in Montreal and we got practically no information in regard to that. Then we took up the Quebec drill hall and got no information about that, then another military building in Quebec, about which we learned very little. There was a vote for the drill hall at Sherbrooke, and we were referred to the honourable member for the riding (Mr. Worthington), who happens not to be in his place and who, in any event, is not charged with responsibility of giving information to the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) says he gets very little information about these votes, but will he tell us what information he wants with regard to this vote.

Mr. SPROULE. I say that with regard to all these we are entitled to information from the Minister of Militia as well as from the Minister of Public Works, because the demand for these buildings comes from the Militia Department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman will tell me what information he wants——

Mr. SPROULE. I am talking about all these votes, and I am not going to be put off in that flippant way by the Minister of Public Works, and I want him to understand that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You don't want the information; you want an excuse for talking against it.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not talking against time or trying to kill time. The way the minister has acted for the last two or three hours would indicate that he is not sincerely endeavouring to do the duties devolving upon a minister in this House, and I think I have the right to speak about it. When we are voting $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 to be expended for militia purposes every year, we are entitled to know what the money is to be spent for. When it is proposed to spend $80,000 or $90,000 for the militia building, as in these cases, we want to know why the building is needed and how it is to be used. It may be said that the Minister of Public Works cannot be expected to give this information, I admit that. But for that very reason, the Minister of Militia should be here to give us the information we require. If a vote relating to the post office comes up, the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) is here to give us information. And, when we are voting money to put up these expensive buildings for the Militia Department, I think we shall expect and demand that the Minister of Militia be here to give us information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman want information about this building at St. Johns ?

Mr. SPROULE. How many men and horses compose the force there ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are seventy-five men and eighty-five horses.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is this building going to cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The estimate is $37,188.79.

Mr. SPROULE. The country should know that for eighty-five horses and seventy-five men it is going to cost about $40,000.

Mr. FOWLER. This is only for the horses, not for the men.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, the information given is not correct.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In what respect ? This building is for stables for the cavalry. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) asks how many horses are kept and how many men are in the force, and I tell him eighty-five horses and seventy-five men.

Mr. CROCKET. How long have the cavalry been stationed at St. John ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About three years.

Mr. J. DEMERS (St. John, P.Q.). Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I may say in connection with the item under discussion, that is the erection of stables for cavalry at the military school of St. John, that this school has 75 men in training, which involves the use of 85 horses. These stables were built for the reason that the Militia Department has none at all there.

There was formerly at St. John a school of infantry, but some three years ago the department decided to establish a school of cavalry at that place, and of course stables had to be provided. These are beautiful stables. I am astonished that only about $35,000 all told, will have been spent by the government on that contract. St. John's military school is an old institution dating as far back as 1876, and I believe these stables were absolutely necessary to maintain its efficiency.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to say something respecting the necessity of the Minister of Militia being here when these estimates are going through. We have in this list of Quebec buildings seven that belong to the Militia Department, and the Minister of Militia is not here to give us any information with respect to the necessity of these buildings. The Minister of Public Works cannot give us the information. He draws largely on his imagination, he looks at the paper and says the first thing that comes into his mind.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What does the hon. member want to know about this item?

Mr. FOWLER. I want to know what necessity exists for this building that requires such a great expense. I think that the present stables at St. John's are quite sufficient for these horses without spending nearly $20,000 for new stables.

Mr. KEMP. What is the total number of troops at this station.

Mr. PUGSLEY. About seventy-five.

Mr. CROCKET. What accommodation has been provided for these horses since the corps has been established at St. John's ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was an old drill shed which was converted into a temporary stable for the horses, pending the erection of new stables.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you a clerk of works there ?

Mr. DEMERS. Evariste Gagné is clerk of works, a carpenter?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is paid on the basis of $3 per day, and is employed for about nine months.

Mr. KEMP. Where are the stables located ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the east side of the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. KEMP. Are they located inside of the old breastworks that were blown up about a century ago, or are they between the barracks and the river ?

Mr. DEMERS.

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the ground of the fort.

Mr. FOWLER. Of these military grounds?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. The government own the site ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. How many acres of military grounds have you there?

Mr. DEMERS. 12 x 8 acres.

St. John's public buildings, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote. It is for the purpose of continuing work in connection with the erection of a new public building for post office purposes and, I presume, for customs purposes as well. It is a building 63 x 44 feet, two storeys, basement and mansard.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total estimated cost, including everything, is $43,910.

Mr. FOWLER. Who has the contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. J. J. Collins, the lowest tenderer.

Mr. FOWLER. Who drew the plans?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Benoit.

Mr. FOWLER. Outside of the department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. How did that happen ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to give the hon. gentleman an explanation just now.

Mr. FOWLER. What did he get ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Three per cent for drawing the plans and 2 per cent for supervising the work, or 5 per cent in all.

Mr. FOWLER. That would give him $2,100. Cannot the architect say how it was that he had no time, with his twelve assistants, to draw the plans?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He cannot remember the circumstances just now.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the minister kindly look this matter up and give us the information?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will try and have the chief architect rake up his memory.

Mr. BLAIN. There is an item $321.12 for advertising. Perhaps the minister can explain this. What papers were these advertisements put in?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There would be no objection in the world, if the hon. gentleman desires it, to bringing down a list of the newspapers containing this advertisement.

Mr. BLAIN. Then I do request that the list be brought down.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have it brought down.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. The motion for Supply will be renewed, and in Committee of Supply we will continue the estimates of the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 3.05 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 29, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—STATION-MASTER AT RIVIERE DU LOUP.

Mr. MORIN—by Mr. Blain—asked :

Is Mr. J. A. Pratte in the employ of the government at Rivière du Loup as express agent? If so, since when, and what is his salary?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Mr. Pratte, who has been stationmaster at Rivière du Loup since 1878, is also agent for the Canadian Express Company, and is paid by the company for that work.

FISHING LICENSES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—by Mr. Sproule—asked :

1. Have fishing licenses been granted at Nanaimo, or other British Columbia points to Japanese fishermen?
2. How many Canadian fishermen of the Caucasian race of British stock were refused licenses at the same time?
3. Was the reason the British fishermen were refused licenses because the Japanese had been there a longer period?
4. Is the government aware that certain Japanese become Canadian subjects, and upon concluding their business in Canada return home Japanese subjects?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Fishing licenses are granted only to British subjects.
2. None.
3. Answered by No. 2.
4. No.

FISHING RIGHTS IN MATANE RIVER.

Mr. SPROULE asked :

1. To whom belongs the right to control the fisheries and grant fishing rights or licenses, to fish in the Matane river, the provincial or federal authorities?
2. Have the riparian owners the right to catch and take fish at any time except during the close season?
3. How many, and to whom, have licenses been granted to fish in this river since 1895?
4. What are the terms of said licenses, the consideration paid for them, the length of time for which granted, and if renewable, for how long?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. The federal authorities possess no proprietary rights of fishery in the Matane river. These rights belong to either the provincial government or the seigniors or riparian owners, and at present it is understood the latter are protesting against the exercise of the right to lease the fishery by the provincial government.
2. The riparian owners or whoever else may have the fishing right under lease, or otherwise, must comply with all the fishery regulations fixing times, places or methods of fishing, &c., which it is the exclusive function of the federal government to enact or provide for the regulation and protection of the fisheries.
3. None by the federal government.
4. Answered by No. 3.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—SUPPLY OF ICE.

Mr. STANFIELD asked :

1. At what points on the Intercolonial Railway has J. A. McDonald, of Piedmont, supplied ice during the season of 1907-8?
2. What price has he received for supplying each place, respectively?
3. What is the freight rate per ton from Piedmont to each point, respectively?
4. What price is paid for storing ice at each point?
5. What price was paid for storing ice at Truro in 1906-7, and to whom was it paid?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. Truro, New Glasgow, Mulgrave, Point Tupper and Pictou.
2. Mr. McDonald's contract is for 39 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds delivered on cars at Piedmont.
3. Freight rate to Truro, $1.40 per ton of 2,000 pounds ; to New Glasgow, 80 cents per ton; to Mulgrave, $1.40; to Point Tupper, $1.40; and to Pictou, $1 carload rates.

4. At Truro, 17 cents per ton; at New Glasgow, 58 cents; at Mulgrave, 58 cents per ton; at Point Tupper, 58 cents; and at Pictou, 46 cents per ton.

5. $1.74 per ton of 2,000 pounds packed in icehouse. Little & Connolly, Truro.

ANGLO-AMERICAN TREATY.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether there is any further information as to when the treaty between Great Britain and the United States with respect to Canada will be laid upon the table of the House.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). These treaties have been received. We are in communication with the imperial authorities and as soon as we have received their assent they will be brought down.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. E. GUSS PORTER (West Hastings). I would like to inquire of the government once more—I think this is the fourth occasion that I have inquired about it—with regard to the return ordered on the 15th January with reference to royal commissions appointed by this government since 1896, their cost and the legislation arising out of the reports of these commissions. It seems to me that a long enough time has elapsed to enable the government to make that return.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will see about it immediately.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—EMPLOYEES KILLED ON CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to inquire from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) if he has any further information with respect to the large number of employees who have been killed on the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I have no more information as to the facts. I have been in communication with the chairman of the National Transcontinental Railway Commission who is taking the matter up with the contractors. I may have something to give to my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) in a few days about it. I called the attention of the chairman immediately to the discussion in the House, and he is I think discussing the matter with the contractors.

Mr. GRAHAM

SUPPLY—QUEBEC TERCENTENARY.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I have a matter that I wanted to bring up particularly with the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden). Is he here?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I have received some communications—I hold in my hand one which is a sample of others—from the Army and Navy Veterans Association and this letter which is from Toronto contains a request such as I think has been submitted to the Minister of Militia: That a representation of this association shall be sent to the Tercentenary celebration at Quebec. Attention is called to the fact that this association is made up of soldiers who have seen war and active service in almost every part of the globe; that they are, most of them, in possession of medals as rewards for special service and bravery; that so many of them as were in the vicinity of Toronto paraded at the time of the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and were particularly commended by him; that he spoke to some of them and expressed the desire that he might see them again when he came to Canada. One can easily see the motives which inspire a request of that kind, and if a representation of 28 or 30 of these men were sent to Quebec the cost would not be much, and it would be a very graceful recognition of men who have not done simply paper service, but who have upon them the scars of war and the merits of many campaigns. I urge upon the Minister of Militia that he should take that question into his consideration and if possible to favourably consider it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Do they belong to the active militia?

Mr. FOSTER. I imagine not. I think they are men who have been in the imperial service in different parts of the world and form an association by themselves.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman will understand the difficulty. The Minister of Militia is taking steps to have the militia of Canada represented on a large scale at the Tercentenary celebration and I believe every one agrees that is proper. If organizations outside the active militia are to be dealt with it would require a special appropriation by parliament. However, parliament has appropriated $300,000 towards the Tercentenary celebration and if this petition is sent to the minister I am quite sure he will call the attention of the commission to it. The commission has a large sum of money which they are at liberty to distribute as they decide best, and perhaps the object of this Veterans Association might commend itself to their judgment.

Mr. FOSTER. I will hand this letter to the Minister of Militia.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I understood that the commission was to report to parliament or to the government. When may we expect to get that report?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I suppose they will report when they have completed their proceedings for the year, or perhaps after the Tercentenary celebration has taken place.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I understood they would not spend any money until they reported.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The money has been placed in the hands of the commission for distribution according to its judgment. The appropriations are sent to us and approved by the Governor in Council.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the commission advise with the government as to how the $300,000 will be expended? I understand that they practically are to get the assent of the government.

Mr. FIELDING. They make recommendations for providing the money for certain services and they inform the government of their proposals in that respect, which are confirmed by order in council.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not insist very much upon it, but the government might consider as to whether they would place that before the House.

Mr. FIELDING. I think they have made appropriations to the extent of about two-thirds of the total sum approximately. I see no reason why the report should not be brought down.

THE WOOD PULP INDUSTRY—PRESERVATION OF RESOURCES OF THE FOREST.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron). I wish to trespass on the time of the House for a moment to impress upon the Prime Minister and the government the immediate necessity of some action being taken in reference to the appointment of a committee of members of this House to ascertain the official facts as regards the forest resources of Canada and the United States. I do so at this time because of articles which have appeared in the public press and because of the action taken by the United States House of Representatives, the Speaker of which has appointed a select committee to investigate into wood pulp and print paper, and which committee is already at work. I wish to impress upon the Prime Minister certain editorials which have appeared in the Canadian press in reference to this matter, particularly an editorial in the 'Globe' of April the 6th also editorial of 'Industrial Canada' for April, and an editorial in the Ottawa 'Free Press' of April the 27th, from which I quote:

The Pulp problem.

As the year advances it is quite apparent that the seriousness of the situation which confronts this country as to the future of its paper supply, and as to the absolute necessity of putting an end to the wastage of the timber resources of the two countries principally involved is more and more impressing itself upon the public mind.

But as we secure additional information upon the predations of the pulp and paper industry of the United States upon our pulp wood resources, and as we learn, as we do learn every day, that the situation in the United States is rapidly approaching the stage where they must procure their pulp from Canada, the question arises whether this issue has not approached the proportions of a national, and a vitally national, question. . . Why should Canada consent to allow these pulp areas to be depleted without adequate return to the workers of this country in the future as has been our policy in the past?

There is one way to get out of the difficulty, and one only. The federal government should appoint a commission which shall go into the whole question and investigate its true bearings from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Such a commission would be able to secure official information which would be invaluable in enabling the government to deal with the problem from a national standpoint. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has already hinted that he has some such an idea in his mind, and it is to be hoped that the session will not close without the idea coming to fruition. . . .

It would be a new departure in Canada and we are sure that such a legislative committee would prove of untold value in the solution of the problem.

I ask that the Prime Minister should grant a committee of the House for two reasons. First, a Royal Commission would make a cut and dried report, but the members of a committee of the House would be able to explain their report on the floor of parliament as is the practice in the United States. The second reason is that a committee of the House would not be as costly as a royal commission, because the members of that committee would be in receipt of their indemnity and would not receive anything further than their expenses. I would advise that a small committee of the House should be appointed to get the official facts, to sit during recess and report next session. This is not a new matter. So long ago as June the 7th, 1904, a prominent Canadian newspaper editor, Mr. John D. Grace, published in the 'Financial News' of London, England, an article with reference to this matter. That article was quoted by the great English statesman Mr. Joseph Chamberlain in his fiscal policy speech of 1905, and in that article, the statement is made that the United States is almost at the end of its forest resources and that Canada, Norway and Sweden are the only three countries which can export pulp. Mr. Grace wrote:

When European experts are saying that a timber famine is within sight, the forests of this country become a possession which cannot well be overvalued. Our timber will be as valuable as our grain.

I state that I believe Norway and Sweden are now at the end of their resources for export to any great extent and I ask the Prime Minister to question the geological surveyors of Canada as to whether there is an inexhaustible supply of timber in this country. For the last thirty years parties of from ten to thirty—this year I believe there are thirty parties—have been exploring this country from one end to the other, and they are able to give accurate information. I do not ask for any speedy legislation. This is a large matter; it is a serious matter. But I ask that the Prime Minister will take some immediate steps to organize a committee so that we can get exact information. Another reason for action is this, that the president of the United States has called a congress or convention of the governors of the different states of the Union to assemble during the coming month of May for the purpose of discussing this question. I have had communication on the subject with the United States Consul at Ottawa, and he informs me that he has no official information, but that he believes that the date set for the convention is May 13. I believe that it would be a very proper thing for Canada to be represented at that convention, where we could probably get invaluable information. The Owen Sound 'Times' of January 9, and of March 19, 1908, has excellent editorials on this same line. So also the Seaforth 'Expositor' of April 24, 1908. The 'Canadian Journal of Commerce' of March 20, 1908. If legislation is enacted, as I hope it will be, on this question, it could be so framed as not to interfere with the rights or the profits of any of the farmers of Canada, as some fear it would.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Before my hon. friend takes his seat, would he be kind enough to state to the House the points that he would desire to have investigated by this committee?

Mr. LEWIS. The committee should have power, in the first place, as now is the opportunity for doing so, of finding out what are the timber and pulpwood resources of the United States—both of supply and demand; also the resources of Canada, and as to whether the supply is inexhaustible, as has been stated for years; also the visible supply to-day in other countries; also what would be the possible result of an export duty or the adoption of some other means by which the manufacture of our crude product could be carried on in Canada also the best means to preserve our forests. A Royal Commission could be appointed, composed of members of parliament. They would be without pay except as regards their expenses. I contend that while we have only six or seven millions of people in Canada, the questions affecting this last great nation are just as great as they would be if we had eighty millions; and when we have only 214 representatives for this vast country, I contend that the full time of these men should be given to their legislative duties—not here, however; because I think the lengthening sessions are interfering with the business of the country. They interfere with the business of the departments while we are here. Shorter sessions would be better; but the whole time of a member of parliament should be given to the interests of this country. It takes very little to occupy one man's time; and if he devotes that time to one great question——

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member is rather wandering away from the question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, the question to which my hon. friend has called the attention of the House is one which at this moment is engrossing the attention not only of the people of this country, but also of the people of the United States, and which should, in my humble judgment, engross the attention of the whole civilized world. Nothing is more important, I believe, than the preservation of the forests; but unfortunately, we are all guilty, not in this country, but in all countries, with the exception of very few, of taking the forests too much as a negligible quantity. My hon. friend has stated that the opinion is entertained in this country that our timber resources are inexhaustible. If such be the opinion of some, it is certainly not my own opinion. On the contrary, I believe that our forest resources are very far from being inexhaustible, and if the present waste goes on, it is not difficult to foresee that before many years pass over Canada will be very much in want of timber and of wood generally. If the committee which my hon. friend wants had for its primary object the seeking of means and methods whereby the waste of forest lands could be prevented, I would be very much in sympathy with it. I think there is no more important problem at the present day than to find ways and means of preserving our forests. In one respect the great enemy of the forest is the railway; another enemy is the fire. Railways have to be built; but whenever a railway is brought into a forest it brings with it the danger of the destruction of the forest itself. I would not be adverse to the suggestion of my hon. friend to have either a committee or a commission appointed chiefly for the purpose of finding ways and means to prevent the waste which is taking place annually, not only in this country but all over this continent. The government will be happy, on the suggestion of my hon. friend, to take the matter into consideration, and I may be able to give an answer at an early date. I notice that my hon. friend has suggested that we should be represented at the convention which has been summoned by President Roosevelt, and which is to sit at Washington during the month of May. I may say to my hon. friend that if we were invited we would be only too glad to accept the invitation. But as I understand that it is purely a convention of governors and officials of the United States, I do not suppose that we would have any standing in it. If we had, I would advise the government to send a representative.

THE IMMIGRATION BONUS SYSTEM.

Mr. LORENZO ROBITAILLE (Quebec County). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I would like to draw the attention of the right hon. leader of the House to an article in the 'Canadian Gazette' of London, of February 6, 1908. The subject of the article is 'The Emigrant Bonus System,' and it states that application was made to Sir Marcus Samuel, judge of the Guildhall court, for the renewal of a license of an emigration agent and passenger broker. The judge was inclined to refuse the application, and Dr. Ginsburg, representative of the board of trade of London, appeared to oppose the application, and the Hon. Charles Russell represented the Dominion government and tried to induce the judge to grant the application for the license, which seemed to be in doubt. Hon. Charles Russell was about to address the court, when Dr. Ginsberg objected, saying that he failed to see his locus standi. The judge thought that the immigration agent caused certain advertisements to be published relative to the demand for immigrants in Canada, containing inaccurate representations. It was only by this action of the board of trade through Dr. Ginsburg that attention was called to the matter. It goes to prove that on the other side the system of bonuses incites the greed of graft and it is not to the benefit of Canada. This report continues :

Dr. Ginsburg. I say that the Dominion government have no more to do with it than any one in the street, and I protest against it.

The Hon. C. Russell. These proceedings are taken at the instance of the Board of Trade in the protection of intending emigrants.

Further on it says :

Sir Marcus Samuel. This case is assuming an aspect of the greatest gravity and importance. It is a most serious thing if the government of Canada have been paying a bonus of £1 a head on emigrants, and paying it to any person who can use every ruse they can devise to obtain emigrants.

Evidence having been given by Mr. C. A. Allen and Mr. Conrad Just, from the Immigration Department of the Canadian government, said he felt a great deal of difficulty in dealing with the case, for one was always reluctant to cause an injury to an individual, but it appeared to him that the whole system was at fault. The Board of Trade had very rightly interfered. It was a very strong inducement for persons to insert these advertisements when they knew they would get a capitation grant of £1 per head. He felt there was no very great difference between this system and that of the 'crimp' obtaining sailors for ships. He held that the advertisements continued after due warning had been given, and he hoped it would act as a warning in other cases.

I wish to ask certain questions relating to this matter. What sums were paid to Mrs. Kendall, the party in question ? How many emigrants did she book to Canada ? Has this case or any similar case been brought to the attention of the government by Mr. Jury, Mr. Walker, Mr. Just or any official of the Immigration Department in London ? Did the department try to obtain a refund of the bonuses paid upon inaccurate representations ? Is it the intention of the department to adopt the suggestion of the Liverpool 'Journal of Commerce,' which in commenting on this case says :

If the Canadian government offers bonuses in the way which seems to be indicated by the facts of this case, it would be worth their while to consider whether they could not make it a condition of their contract with the passenger agents whom they employ that all advertisements bearing on the subject of the prospects for workers in Canada should be submitted to them before insertion, and should be re-examined from time to time as conditions change.

I think this particular portion of the article is most important, and that the suggestion should be adopted if this policy is to be continued. It would be a guarantee to bona fide immigrants that they would actually know the conditions in Canada before starting from England instead of coming here and being forced upon the cities.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a special case and I am sorry my hon. friend has not given notice to the Minister of the Interior of his intention to ask these questions. I shall see that the minister gives my hon. friend the information desired.

Motion agreed to and House went into Committee of Supply.

Public Works, buildings—Ontario—Arnprior public building, $500.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). This is to complete the payments on a tower clock in the Arnprior building.

Belleville armoury, $75,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for continuing the work upon the Belleville armoury during the coming year. The total estimated cost will be $139,776

Mr. SPROULE. This again raises the question which I brought up last night, in the absence of the Minister of Militia during the discussion of votes for military buildings. If he is not present we are not able to secure the requisite information concerning the purpose and the necessity of these works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I mentioned my hon. friend's complaint to the Minister of Militia here this afternoon but he said he was sorry he could not be present as he had an engagement in Montreal and had to leave by the afternoon train. I am willing to allow the item in connection with military buildings to stand over if my hon. friend think it best to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that is the only proper thing under the circumstances.

Mr. PORTER. I understood the minister to say that this grant of $75,000 would bring the total cost of the building to $139,000? This work was let by contract for a certain sum.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract price is $87,777.

Mr. PORTER. Then, what is the explanation of this difference between $87,777 and $139,000 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The amount paid for site was $9.000; paid to the Architectural and Engineering Company for making plans, $1,755; surveying site, legal expenses, printing, advertising and clerk of works' salary, $1,555.31; paid the contractor on account to December 31, 1907. $28,750; making a total of $41,060.31. The amount due on the contract and for additional work is $73,350, making about $14,000 additional to the contractor. There is some additional work which increases the amount from $87,000 to $101,000. Then, there is heating, $5,000 ; electric wiring and fixtures, $2,500 ; fittings and furniture, $10,000 ; sidewalks and fencing, $1,000 ; contingencies and superintendence, $6,866, making a total estimated cost of $139,736.31.

Brantford public building—improvements, $500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This vote is to complete the improvements and alterations, fittings and general repairs in the post office at Brantford. The total cost of the improvements has been about $13,000, of which $12,510.75 has been spent, leaving $489.25 to complete—or, say $500.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The amount spent seems to be large considering the changes made and the work done. I do not see where they have put $13,000. However, this year the minister proposes to allow us $500. This seems a very large amount to give out of a total of appropriations of $119,000,000. Does the minister really feel that he can afford this $500 for Brantford? And on what ground has he made the calculation? On that point. I would like to inquire on what basis the distribution of public buildings is made. Has it any relation to the requirements of the people, the amount of business done or the revenue received? If these matters, which, as a business man, I think are very proper to take into consideration, are the basis on which the department proceeds in these cases, I submit that the amount the minister is placing in the estimates for Brantford is totally inadequate for the requirements of that city. I do not think the hon. minister (Mr. Pugsley) has ever visited Brantford, and of course, I cannot blame him for that, for he has not been very long in his present office. But I can tell him that this is not a new question in this House, for we have drawn attention, year after year, to this post office building. This building, it should be understood, houses not only the post office but the Custome Department and the Inland Revenue Department in a city of 20,000 people. Let me give the figures of the revenue collected in that building according to the latest statistics I have at hand. These, I believe, are the returns for 1907, but whether for the full year or for nine months I am not quite sure. The postal department yielded $37,328, besides over $700 for rents of boxes. In round figures, the postal revenue of Brantford is about $40,000. The custom house collected $308,000, and the inland revenue collected between $70,000 and $75,000—a total of something over $400,000 paid into the coffers of this government from the city of Brantford. In return for this vast amount paid in by the city of Brantford and surrounding district, we have the munificent sum of $500 placed in the estimates this year to be spent in that city. This building stands practically as it stood twenty-five years ago, when the city of Brantford was about one-third its present size and the revenue was not 25 per cent of what it is to-day. We have asked, time and again. for a new public building. And I might call the attention of the minister to the fact that this is almost the only way in which the Dominion government can spend money in the city of Brantford. We have no use for the breakwaters and wharfs that are built in some other places—we have some water there, but we do not feel that a breakwater would do much good. We do not ask for dredging as do some of the sea and lake ports. But, surely, when the government has only the two avenues through which it can spend money in a community such as Brantford—the armoury and the post office —we are not asking too much when we say that we should have a post office building commensurate with the business to be done and the revenue received. To properly house these three branches of the public service, we should have in that city a building worth from $125,000 to $150,000. There are places in many parts of Canada giving a much less revenue than Brantford in which public buildings are put up costing from $75,000 to $150,000. And still, we are using the building which we have used for twenty-five years, and which is totally inadequate. Our people must walk up a winding stair to pay their customs duties. If there were any competition, no one would do business with the government. But there is no one else besides the government taking customs duties. But our citizens must climb this winding stair as they have been doing for about twenty-five years to pay about $300,000 a year into the coffers of the Dominion treasury. And they must climb a winding stair to pay $75,000 to the Inland Revenue Department. We are not asking for anything extravagant or anything but what is required by the public service. But we think that, when it comes to a city like Brantford, with its revenues, we should have a building more commensurate with the business done than the one we have to-day. I would ask the Minister of Public Works if, in deciding with regard to the location of public buildings, he takes into consideration the amount of business done and the revenue received?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt) that in considering the desirability of erecting a public building in a city or town, the importance of the place, the business done and the public requirements are all taken into careful consideration. As to Brantford, I take it that my hon. friend would not suggest that we should ask the committee to vote a larger sum than is necessary to finish the improvements that have been undertaken. When only $500 is required, to vote more would be a mere waste of the public money. So far as the erection of a new building in Brantford is concerned, I have not had the pleasure of any communication from the hon. gentleman who represents the riding in which the city of Brantford is situated, urging that a new public building should be erected there. Although I have been for several months in the department, the hon. gentleman, as the one who is entitled to speak for the people of that district, has not made any communication to me in this direction, nor has any one else.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the request was made in the House at a former session.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That may be, if so I was not here to receive it. I recognize the importance of the town of Brantford, I recognize that a large business is done there and a large revenue is collected. I can say to my hon. friend that I shall have much pleasure during the recess in looking into the matter and seeing what the requirements are, and will give the suggestion of my hon. friend a very careful consideration.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The minister rather criticises me for having failed to wait upon him or write him in connection with this matter. I have taken this, the earliest opportunity when the matter was under discussion, to bring it to his attention. His predecessor was asked on more than one occasion on the floor of the House, and was personally interviewed by myself, and if there are no records in the department of that kind, it is of little use for us to make these requests from time to time. I have made these requests on the floor of the House, and also personally, and the minister apparently now hears of them for the first time. I waited upon Mr. Hyman myself, and I think other citizens of Stratford have waited on him and I think considerable correspondence has been held with the government about this very matter, namely, the inadequacy of the Brantford postal facilities and the inadequacy of the inland revenue facilities. It is not a new question, and if the minister has not searched his files, or if these requests have not been placed on file, that is not my fault. I have made the request from time to time, and at every opportunity during my term in this parliament. The buildings have been inadequate for some years, and when these votes were made of $10,000 or $12,000 for repairs, I pointed out to Mr. Hyman that it seemed to me a comparative waste of money to tinker up an old building that was never going to be satisfactory, and that it would be better to take the matter up in a broad sense, as it should be, in order to satisfy the requirements of the city, and give us a public building worthy of Brantford and commensurate with the very large business that is done there. We do not ask for a lavish expenditure, but we do say that any business house in the city of Brantford doing a large business, would have premises erected a great deal more up-to-date than these government buildings. It is only because there is no competition in the revenue or customs business that so large a business can be done in these old premises. I trust the minister will carry out the promise he has made on the floor of the house, and that he will visit the city of Brantford at an early date and see for himself the great commercial and industrial activity prevailing there, and will give us a building suitable to the requirements of the city. I thank the minister for his promise, and trust that he will not forget it.

Mr. BLAIN. I feel it my duty to endorse what my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) has said as to the necessity of an expenditure for public buildings in the city of Brantford. I am much surprised that the Minister of Customs has not communicated to the Minister of Public Works in reference to the needs of Brantford in this respect. May I ask the Postmaster General if any requests have been made to his department for better service in the city of Brantford, and a larger building.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I could not answer offhand, but I think we have received a petition to that effect.

Mr. BLAIN. If the Postmaster General has received a petition to that effect, I suppose he would communicate it to the Minister of Public Works. I should also suppose that my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, as an old resident of Brantford, and a representative of that constituency for many years, would have interested himself on its behalf. The hon. gentleman has been in this government since 1896. Now one of his colleagues says that no request has been made for a better service, and a larger post office building in the city of Brantford. Surely the Minister of Customs has not forgotten his old city that elected him to parliament for the first time. I would ask the hon. gentleman if any demands have been made upon the government for increased accommodation in the city of Brantford for the various services of the government, a city which is contributing so large a sum to the revenue. I certainly endorse what my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) has said. I have heard him myself several times on the floor of the House pressing the claims of his city upon the government for a more liberal expenditure, and suggesting that some of the money that is being wasted in other directions should be put to good use in the city of Brantford. On this side of the House we do not advocate a larger total expenditure by this government, but we desire to see the middleman dispensed with and the money wisely expended. A few years ago the government were proposing to inaugurate a pneumatic system of distributing the mails in Toronto and Montreal. Instead of wasting money on schemes like that, let some of it be expended in important centres like Brantford where there is so evident a public need of better facilities. I think the Minister of Public Works is not doing himself justice when he suggests that the member for Brantford has not directed his attention to the fact that a larger expenditure is necessary.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no suggestion about it ; it is a fact.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman has given that as a reason why larger appropriations were not made for the city of Brantford. I am sure that the people and his own friends in the city of Brantford will not appreciate that reference to my hon. friend who so ably represents them on the floor of this House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not intend to say anything which would reflect upon the hon. gentleman who represents the city of Brantford. All I desired to do was to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that, although I had been eight months, yesterday, in the department, I had not had the pleasure of having any communication from him upon the subject. Neither had I received any petition, or communication from anybody in Brantford urging that increased accommodation was necessary for post office and customs purposes. Now, the hon. gentleman makes the statement that he had, upon previous occasions, in this House, brought the matter to the attention of the then minister, and also that certain communications had been forwarded. I do not intend to reflect at all upon my hon. friend but only to state a fact which might, in some measure, at all events, explain why there is no provision being made at the present time for any new building for these purposes in the city of Brantford. As far as the present vote is concerned the improvements are quite considerable. We have provided for new fittings in the post office, new granite steps, new letter boxes and brass work, letter receiver, recutting of stone work, improved heating apparatus and an iron fence around the building. We have done electric wiring and improved the buildings by painting, graining and varnishing, we have made a number of repairs to the wood work, we have put in new furniture and we have done what seemed to be reasonable and necessary for the building.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was it done by contract or day's work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Part by tender and part by day's work. I think that the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) did not need the assistance of the gentleman who sits in front of him (Mr. Blain) because the hon. gentleman took my assurance in good faith and with apparent good feeling that I would be very happy to make inquiry into the necessities of the city of Brantford in this particular and give the matter my prompt consideration. I recognize just as well as the hon. gentleman who represents that important constituency does that it is my duty, administering the Department of Public Works, to pay attention to the necessities of all parts of this country and that it would not be proper that I should neglect or overlook the reasonable wants of a place so important as the city of Brantford.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I do not wish to have it understood that I felt in any way hurt at what the minister said, but I think that he was a little unfair in saying that I had not presented the claims of the city of Brantford because they had been forwarded to the department, and that the reason that I had not presented them again within the last few months was that I was awaiting the opportunity that arose to-day. If the minister carries out the promise that he has made it will be all right. The trouble is that this request has been made to the Minister of Public Works on two or three different occasions and unfortunately to two or three ministers. I think we began with the late Mr. Sutherland, we continued it with Mr. Hyman and now we are continuing it with the hon. gentleman who occupies the position to-day. The department changes its head so frequently that we are required to put in these applications a little too often. I think the records will show that the board of trade of the city of Brantford spent more than one evening discussing the inadequacy of the buildings in Brantford and that they placed their views on record and sent them down to this government. The hon. the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), who is an old resident of Brantford, certainly knows the inadequacy of these buildings. He knows the immense amount of revenue that his department and the Post Office Department are obtaining from the city of Brantford, and I think it is nothing but reasonable that the Minister of Customs should back me up when I make the reasonable request that I am making, and when I say that the city of Brantford should have a little of this vast expenditure that this government is making annually. We do not ask for any extravagance, but we do ask that legitimate business requirements may be provided for in the city of Brantford. Instead of this small vote the department should make one job of it and put up a new building. I admit, as the minister has said, that they have improved the inside of the building considerably, that they have given us modern fittings and a certain amount of that kind of expenditure is all right, but it is only a temporary arrangement because the building is inadequate and it cannot be increased to the size which is necessary. I should say in justice to the hon. the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) that I do not think anything has been actually placed before himself at all but he will see that the very same argument that has been made with respect to the Department of Public Works also applies to his department. This matter was taken up when Sir William Mulock was Postmaster General. I think the records in that department will show that petitions came down to the department some four or five years ago and I may say they were endorsed by the citizens generally. I remember that an inspector was sent up by the Post Office Department. I had the honour of being one of the committee that awaited upon him. We pointed out the inadequacy of the arrangements and we had a special committee that sat for weeks and months to endeavour to get the department to deal with this very matter. Although all of this had reference to the Post Office Department the hon. gentleman who occupies the position of Postmaster General is not responsible in that respect because the request was not made to him. We made it to his predecessors and we made it also to the predecessors of the Minister of Public Works. Now I renew it to-day to two of the ministers—to three of them for the matter of that, because the Minister of Customs should be included also. His department obtained $308,000 from the city of Brantford alone last year. The building is in the same condition, so far as I know, as it was twenty-five years ago. It was built in Sir John Macdonald's time, long before this government came into power, and we have had no addition to it from that time to this. There has been no change, I believe except some small changes in the interior fittings. The population of Brantford is three times what it was, the business is probably ten times what it was and the revenue is probably three or four times what it was when the building was put up. If business is business it is right that the large amount of business which is done in Brantford should be housed in proper quarters. I am not going to find fault with the promise of the minister, only I ask him not to take too long to carry it out because it has been before the House on several occasions. We have pressed it upon the attention of the government and practically nothing has resulted. I have just had placed in my hand the answer which was given by the Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, then Postmaster General, to a question which I put to him in the House on March 19, 1906, and which will be found at page 339 of Hansard of that year. I shall read the answer in order that the present Postmaster General may see what has been done in Brantford within the last few years. The Hon. A. B. Aylesworth made the following statement:

1. Revenue—

1900	$26,550 78
1901	28,796 67
1902	32,349 07
1903	33,748 43
1904	36,773 56
1905	42,921 10

2. Value of postal notes issued—

1900	$ 2,641 24
1901	2,999 19
1902	2,818 15
1903	3,920 38
1904	4,862 49
1905	6,903 85

3. Value of postal notes redeemed—

1900	$ 9,328 21
1901	10,093 10
1902	10,927 02
1903	11,032 88
1904	15,427 51
1905	16,061 53

Every single year during that whole term, each one of these sources of revenue from the city of Brantford steadily increased. The Postmaster General does $60,000 worth of business in the city of Brantford, not to speak of the returns from the customs and inland revenue and all this business is housed in the one inadequate building. I think the minister must recognize the necessity for increased accommodation at Brantford and I trust that year after year I will not be compelled to bring this matter to his attention. When Mr. Hyman was minister and when he heard the statement I made in the House he said to me privately, but I think I may mention it: Cockshutt you ought to have a building in Brantford costing not less than $125,000. Mr. Hyman practically gave us to understand that in the very near future this would be done, but to-day we have a paltry $500 in the estimates for Brantford.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville). I am surprised that the Minister of Customs sits silent without a word to say for the good old city of Brantford. When the Conservatives were in power, although he represented the constituency, they generously erected a building in Brantford which was sufficient for the business done at the time, but, the Liberals have studiously neglected that city. After hearing the statement of the hon. member (Mr. Cockshutt) I do not wonder that Brantford rejected the Minister of Customs because evidently since the Liberals came into power he has not been able to get the claims of that city recognized. To-day when the hon. member (Mr. Cockshutt) pleads for the assistance of the Minister of Customs the Minister of Customs has not a word to say. The minister owes it to the city of Brantford to state whether there will be sufficient accommodation afforded that city and whether he will use his influence in that direction. Now, this item like all others includes a charge for architect's fees although one would suppose that if the Public Works Department were run on business principles it would have a sufficient permanent staff of architects and engineers to do all this work. There is a general impression that the Public Works Department has been running wild; first one minister is brought in to improve it and then another until it is brought down to the present minister. I was much astonished the other day when I heard that contracts for dredging were to be given without tender.

Mr. COCKSHUTT.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why not discuss the item before the chair. As a matter of fact the contracts were not to be given without tender; it was only an extension of the time of the old contracts.

Mr. J. D. REID. I mentioned this to show that the Public Works Department wants reorganization worse than the Marine Department. Here, as was shown by the hon. gentleman from Simcoe (Mr. Bennet) the other day, the Public Works Department paid in nine months $27,500 to one outside architect, when one good permanent employee at a salary of $5,000 a year could have done all the work. Either the department has not competent men to do the work or else they are farming it out amongst friends of the government so that large profits may be made by them.

Mr. BENNETT. They are afraid of their own architects since the Laurier tower fell.

Mr. J. D. REID. That may be and probably they are afraid of their inspectors as well. It would be much better in every way to have a well paid and competent permanent official who would look after this architect work, and he would not be likely to be so susceptible to graft as the superintendents who are indiscriminately employed throughout the country. I believe that we should have a permanent officer of this kind and that he should be paid a sufficient salary. Take the case of the little armoury at Belleville and an Ottawa architect has to be called in and everybody knows he is the son of the chief architect. He may be as good a man as any other, but it strikes me that if the chief architect should have a man in his department who is qualified to make plans for a building such as this——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why discuss everything under the sun on this item?

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not think that I am out of order in giving this as an instance of what is being done in the department. I object in the strongest possible manner to the Public Works Department spending $100,000 to employ architects outside of the department. I claim that the minister should employ a sufficient number of men to do the work in the department and not farm it out in this way to the disadvantage of the public.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry that my hon. friend should think it necessary, on this small item of $500 to finish certain work on a public building at Brantford, to go over matters which have been already discussed again and again in this House. Let me say to my hon. friend, with all respect, that repetitions of this kind are actually costing this country more than would erect a new public building. With regard to Mr. Taylor, the gentleman who supervised this work, he was acting as the clerk of works. My hon. friend must know that there must be somebody on the spot to see that the work is well done; we cannot leave it to the different contractors without supervision; and the item to which my hon. friend makes great objection amounts to $195.42, as will be found at page V—48 of the Auditor General's report. Will any one say that this was an unreasonable sum for looking after a work costing upwards of $13,000?

Mr. TAYLOR. I find that a namesake of mine, L. H. Taylor—I do not think he is of the same politics, or he would not get it—was paid 2 per cent on $6,173.74 and 5 per cent on $1,014, and $10 for a special report, making $195.42; but I find that the Schultz Bros. Co. were paid for alterations in the post office $3,295, and for sundry repairs $433.12. The money spent does not represent the money on which the architect was paid the commission.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Part of the expenditure was made in previous years.

Mr. TAYLOR. If we look at V—60, we will find Mr. Taylor figuring again on the construction of armouries at Brantford, on which he was paid $504.86. When a minister comes here and makes a statement, we ought to be able to put it down as being as true as the gospel; but the hon. gentleman stated that there was only $10,000 paid to outside architects during the last year, whereas we find that Mr. Perrault alone, on the new postal station on St. Catherine Street in Montreal and on the plans for the general post office on St. James Street, drew nearly $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The question was put as to how much we paid out each year for architects, and the chief architect told me that he thought it would not exceed $10,000, taking one year with another.

Mr. TAYLOR. We find on almost every item we touch that fees are paid to outside architects. I venture to say that if you go through the Auditor General's report you will find that these payments will amount to several hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. PATERSON. In case I should be considered wanting in courtesy to the hon. gentleman who alluded to me, I wish to say that when I came in I did not know what this discussion was about. I understand that it is on an item for a further expenditure of $500 for some improvements in the existing building in Brantford, on which in the last two or three years there has been $13,000 expended. This expenditure manifests, I think, that the convenience of the people there is not being disregarded. Brantford is a city to which in the past I have owed a good deal; my home was there. Therefore, I would be very pleased to see a fair measure of justice done to it. I cannot myself see that injustice has been done to it. The member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid), speaking without full knowledge of the fact, alluded to the Conservative government having erected the present building, and suggested that it might have been partly the cause of my temporary defeat there, because I had not accomplished more with the Liberal government. He is a little wrong there, I was at that time a humble member of the House, and I believe that it was on my recommendation that the public building was given to Brantford. It was given before our Conservative friends came into power the last time, so if there be any credit for that, though I do not claim credit, as the place deserved the building, it was my representations that the building was put there. Subsequently a large armoury was put there in my time. That was under the Conservative government.

Mr. BERGERON. You were then in opposition?

Mr. PATERSON. I was in opposition as I was for eighteen years, which the hon. gentlemen will find to be a very long time. The old shed was dilapidated and had lost its roof, and on my representations the building was erected. The city of Brantford contributed one-half the cost, $10,000, doing more in that respect than other municipalities. Since this government came in the armouries have been greatly enlarged, $20,000 or $30,000 have been spent and they are now equal to any in the country. The hon. member for Brantford will admit that this government have not been disposed to slight Brantford simply because it was represented by an opposition member. It is a large and growing city, and we all know that the business has largely increased, possibly to such an extent that at times there may be a little inconvenience. As far as the custom house is concerned, we have room enough to do our business. Of course the climbing of the stairs to the customs house and inland revenue office, which, as so often happens, are situated above the post office, is inconvenient, and I think it is right that the government should ascertain whether the business of Brantford has so increased that the public interest would justify the erection of a new building, perhaps for the post office, giving the whole of the present building to customs and excise. I have no doubt that if representations are made to the minister, he will consider them. My hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) has been re-elected president of the Bell Memorial Fund, an honour which is only his due. That fund is national in one respect and therefore the government felt that they were justified in meeting the request of that committee and granted $10,000. I think my hon. friend will be generous enough to say that since he has represented the riding the government have not turned a deaf ear to requests by him to which they felt themselves able to accede.

Mr. BLAIN. Have any new public building been erected in Brantford since the present administration came into power?

Mr. PATERSON. I am not aware of new buildings but there have been great enlargements and improvements, notably in the armouries.

Mr. BLAIN. The revenue from custom duties in 1900 was $178,540.10, and by annual increases it grew to $225,662.86 in 1905, showing a large increase. The complaint is that there has been no corresponding expenditure to provide better accommodation for those paying the duty, and ciizens in general.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentlemen opposite do not want to have money expended simply because the revenue in a particular line has increased, if the existing accommodation will suffice. From the remarks of hon. gentlemen that is evident. My hon. friend has been in Brantford and I have no doubt that the citizens would show him the very handsome building erected by the Mackenzie government many years ago and improved by the present government.

Mr. J. D. REID. I think the minister did not understand me and did me an injustice. I was not complaining about Mr. Taylor. my objection was not to the payment of so much to one architect, but to the practice of having so much work done by outside architects that should be done by the architects of the department. I do not believe that the work is done as well in the public interest or as economically as it would be if we had well-qualified and properly paid officials in the department to do this work.

Dominion public buildings—renewals, improvements, repairs, &c., $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the usual vote, and about the same amount as usual. In 1906-7 the sum of $12,198.08 was expended. This includes some thirty different buildings. We are asking now to cover about fifty different buildings, the amount being $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT. On this item of repairs, improvements and so on, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that an enormous bill is creeping up for furniture and fittings for these several public buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think that this item includes the Ottawa public buildings.

Mr. PATERSON.

Mr. BENNETT. But the remarks I have to make relate to suplies for outside buildings as well. It would seem that it is becoming a serious question with the Department of Public Works and other departments to find places to stow away the articles that their friends provide at the public expense. Two returns have been made on this subject which I desire to place on 'Hansard.' I will first deal with the Eclipse Company. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) asked the following questions :

Mr. BLAIN. 1. How much money has been paid since 1896 to the Eclipse Manufacturing Company, of Ottawa?

2. How much each year?

3. What was the general character of the supplies furnished?

These questions were replied to as follows :

1. $215,468.06.

1896-7	$ 448 00
1897-8	339 65
1898-9	13,388 46
1899-1900	12,659 35
1900-1	19,915 25
1901-2	22,754 95
1902-3	4,299 78
1903-4	16,315 43
1904-5	24,098 63
1905-6	29,164 72
1906-7	30,294 12
1907-8	41,789 12

3. Steel cases and filing cabinets.

I moved for another return of the goods bought from the Office Specialty Company, and the figures of the purchases from that company are as follows :

1896-7	$ 70 00
1897-8	78 94
1898-9	4,797 86
1899-1900	2,903 44
1900-1	11,457 15
1901-2	19,269 79
1902-3	9,021 09
1903-4	26,530 58
1904-5	50,272 38
1905-6	66,505 75
1906-7	53,189 37
1907-8	78,714 61

Now, these figures show that these two companies alone have been paid for fittings and furniture of this kind the enormous total of $538,278. That is, in round figures, $70,000 a year has been spent in this way for a number of years past. And it is to be remembered that furniture is bought for the different public buildings from hundreds of other sources besides, but these two companies alone have succeeded in getting this colossal sum of $538,278 out of the people of Canada. The figures seem almost incredible. There is only one explanation, and it is to be had by referring to the records showing who was the Minister of Public Works at that time. Mr. Hyman made his appearance on the scene in 1902-3. And what was the result? The bills of this Office Specialty Company jumped at once from $9,000 to $26,000, and went on in succeeding years, $50,000, $66,000, $53,000 and last year $78,714. It is well to understand who comprise these companies. The head and front of the Office Specialty Company is Mr. G. M. Reid, of London. And who is he? He is one of the quartette who are to-day awaiting sentence for criminal participation in the London election frauds. It is no wonder that this man could come to Mr. Hyman and take him by the throat, having all the evidence that he must have had in his possession. When brought before a trial judge he was convicted, with three others, of complicity in these stupendous frauds which not only astonished the country, but brought Ontario into disgrace in the eyes of the Dominion and of the world. And let it be clearly understood—let there be no mistake about it—that Mr. Reid is not only one of the large stockholders of this concern, but is an influential member and one of the directors.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) says that Mr. Reid has a large interest in this concern. Will he state what it is?

Mr. BENNETT. I will gratify the curiosity of the minister—and of the deputy minister, for I saw him suggest the question—the amount is $12,000——

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the total capital ?

Mr. BENNETT. ——and there is a suspicion that some of the stockholders are there as representatives of others.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the total capital ?

Mr. BENNETT. I cannot tell the minister. Probably the deputy minister can tell him—for the deputy seems conversant with the whole thing. I notice that it is becoming a habit of deputies, when they attend the House, to intervene very much in matters when any political question is coming to the front. Well, take this Newmarket Company, with Mr. G. M. Reid, of London election fame, as one of the directors—how did they get these contracts ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) will allow me a moment, I may say that there is not a single item connected with the Office Specialty Company or the Eclipse Specialty Company in the item under discussion. This is simply the ordinary repairs for about seventy different public buildings all over Canada. I think that when a particular item is before the committee members should confine their remarks to the discussion of that item instead of being allowed to roam to other items in various parts of the estimates.

Mr. BENNETT. Reference to the Auditor General's Report will show that supplies are sold by this company for different buildings under this vote.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like your ruling, Mr. Chairman, on the point I have raised.

Mr. BENNETT. Surely the minister will not say that on a general item which covers the placing of letter boxes in post offices, &c., this discussion is not in order. If he will look at the Auditor General's Report he will see that he is mistaken. Now, let us take the composition of this other company, the Eclipse Company——

Mr. PUGSLEY. What do I understand your ruling to be, Mr. Chairman ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is a question of relevancy. This vote is for 'Dominion public buildings—renewals, improvements, repairs, &c.' I do not know what the '&c.' means. There is another item later in the estimates for the Ottawa public buildings. Another item is $131,000 for public buildings generally. Then there is one for repairs, furniture and heating for Ottawa buildings specially.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman really desires to discuss it upon this item, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. BENNETT. Now this Office Specialty Company sells under these circumstances. Some repairs had to be made in the Barrie post office and tenders were called for. One would have assumed that when tenders were called to furnish public buildings, other contractors would have been asked to tender on the whole thing, but they were not. This Office Specialty Company must have a part out of every appropriation made by this department of Public Works. I am not laying this at the charge of the present Minister of Public Works, because he is innocent as to past transactions, and these are past expenditures that I have referred to. But I want to warn the minister that these two companies are on his heels, and will be on the heels of every Minister of Public Works, because they have been strongly entrenched in the past. Take the Eclipse Company, that is another political company. It is common talk here, if you talk with any person conversant with these matters, that A. W. Fraser, barrister of this city, is one of the large stockholders in that company, and is one of the leading lights of the Liberal party. These two companies have been allowed in the past to secure a monopoly to the extent of selling, in about eight years, no less a grand total than $538,000 worth of furniture. Take some of these returns and look at them. One would imagine that if, for instance, away down in Nova Scotia, the public building at Antigonish wanted four desks, or four chairs, these could have been purchased from some local manufacturer. Surely the whole province of Nova Scotia can produce chairs, there are furniture dealers there. But under past Ministers of Public Works this furniture is all bought from this favoured company of Mr. Reid. Of course Mr. Reid was taking long chances to act as he did with the ex-Minister of Public Works. The evidence alone of this George W. Reid before the commission showed that he was the man who took thirteen men into the riding of West Elgin when the election atrocities were committed there, and among the thirteen men he took in there was Pritchard, the man who admitted on oath that he was concerned in the offending in that riding. Take another place in this return, Saskatoon, three desks, $150, nine chairs, $113.75. Surely furniture can be purchased at Saskatoon. There is another case at the Toronto post office. It is true they have a large office there where they seem to sell thousands of dollars worth. Then take another case, London.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think this company has agencies in various sections.

Mr. BENNETT. I should not think they would have an agency in Antigonish. But take the city of London. Apparently Mr. Hyman was in the grip of Mr. Reid, when they had to send down to this Office Specialty Company to buy a $7.50 table. It is not a question of the country really requiring this stuff, but this company has the stuff to sell, and the department has to take it from them. Now how did the department deal with these two favoured companies when it purchased over $538,000 worth? Under the Act the department is bound to call for tenders, and then there is a nice little game of love taps going on between the Eclipse Company and the Office Specialty Company which results in the Office Specialty Company getting one good job and the Eclipse Company getting another. The country is paying two prices for what it gets from these two companies. The minister has lying in his department an estimate from a firm in the United States for a certain lot of steel fittings to cost $17,000. They could be laid down in Canada for that, freight and customs paid, and actually they paid this Office Specialty Company $22,000 for the same articles.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That estimate was the cost at Washington, including transportation and duty.

Mr. BENNETT. Where the prices of labour and transportation are higher than they are in Canada. What was the result? These American people were not invited to tender at all, and the minister replies by saying, oh well, here are two concerns in Canada who tender.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to say, according to his memory, that the estimate given by the chief architect was not the cost at Washington, not of the goods laid down in Canada, but the cost at Washington with the duty and transportation added?

Mr. BENNETT. I admit that it was the cost at Washington, but if they can make and sell the goods for $17,000 at Washington, why can we not make them at Newmarket or Ottawa for the same money?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a very different thing. In a great country like the United States where they have hundreds of thousands of customers, we know that goods can be produced more cheaply than they can be produced in a country where the demand is comparatively small. Why do we find it necessary to protect our manufacturers? How is it, even with quite a high duty, that we are not able to protect them, and foreign goods do come in? It is because in the United States, in Great Britain and other countries, they are producing such enormous quantities and are selling such enormous quantities, that they can cut the price very much below the price at which goods can be sold in this country where the market is comparatively limited. That is the answer I make.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, a company that can sell in eight years $322,000 worth of goods to the government, besides the rest of the Dominion to supply, has not got a very limited market. But this is only on a par with the extravagance in every department of the government to-day, and it is only on a par with the same principle of benefiting party friends at the expense of the country generally, because there is practically no competition. These are startling figures to go out from this House to the country, that two favoured concerns have, in the past eight years, succeeded in depleting the coffers of this country of $538,278 worth of these supplies. And mark you, there are thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars paid out in addition to what is paid these two companies, because there are some members of parliament who, I assume, have stood on their rights and have told the Minister of Public Works that if he wanted to buy a chair or a table in their riding for a public building, the department was not to go to George W. Reid and Company to buy it, but they must patronize some local concern. Let any man go through these buildings at Ottawa within the past five or six years and he will understand what it means, they will see furniture thrown out on the snow in winter, splendid hardwood and pine, cupboards and cabinets that would suffice for every purpose of filing, but they have all got to be torn up and thrown out as waste, simply that Mr. Reid's company or Mr. Fraser's company may sell the departments at Ottawa hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of supplies. Now I hope that the minister, with this evidence before him, will call a halt on these two companies, and will allow the necessities of the case only to govern purchases in the future, and not buy great quantities of goods when really it is difficult to find a place in the departments to store them.

Glencoe public buildings, $3,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This vote is——

Mr. BENNETT. I want an answer from the minister as to these fittings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman has made his statement in committee.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, then, the minister will make a statement in reply or I will make another one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not necessarily. It is not necessary that I should answer every statement that is made. This item——

Mr. BENNETT. The minister will not get away in that way. The minister came to this House——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am addressing the chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The Minister of Public Works has the floor.

Mr. BENNETT. I am waiting for his reply to my question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This item of $3,500——

Mr. BENNETT. Answer the question I asked on the previous item.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That item is passed.

Mr. BENNETT. No, it is not passed. I was waiting for the courtesy of a reply from the minister and if the minister cannot give me a reply I will continue. I desire to protest——

Mr PUGSLEY. That item was passed.

Mr. BENNETT. No.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, as to whether that item was passed or not? The chairman decided that it was passed.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not think it was decided.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understood it to be passed when no member objected. If nobody says anything I conclude it is passed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think I am called upon to make any reply and I may say frankly to the hon. gentleman that it does not seem to me that, upon the discussion of this item for the ordinary repairs to the buildings throughout Canada, I am called upon to enter upon a general discussion of the goods which have been bought for other purposes.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman said that he withdrew his objection.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does not seem to be so.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman is the greatest withdrawer in public life today. He withdraws from everything.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What did I withdraw from now?

Mr. BENNETT. The minister proposed to give dredging contracts for the coming year at the same prices as were paid last year and he withdrew from that. The minister can sometimes be firm and sometimes very infirm. He was very infirm on that question. A few weeks ago Mr. Mackay, the leader of the opposition in Ontario, and some other political henchmen of the hon. gentleman were at the door of the department asking that these dredging contrastc should be extended for another year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I rise to a point of order. I do not think that the hon. gentleman is discussing the point under consideration. I appeal to the good sense of the hon. gentleman himself. I can assure him that the country is watching the discussions which are going on here.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And I am sure that the country expects us to discuss the items of Supply which are before the committee and not to seek to introduce a thousand other things which have nothing to do with what is before the committee.

Mr. BENNETT. If the question of whether $538,000 is paid out to the hon. gentleman's political friends is of no interest to the hon. gentleman, it is a matter of great importance to the country, and so long as I am a member of this House I am going to protest against Mr. G. M. Reid or any other political henchman, having the power to take the minister by the throat and force his goods on the country when the country does ont require them. Does any one think that Mr. Geo. Reid, if he did not know what he does in connection with elections in London, could have forced his wares on the country as he has? It was political leverage that enabled him to do so. When did Mr. Reid become a stockholder to the extent of $12,000 in this company? Probably the deputy could inform the minister. It is a very close corporation, and before Mr. Reid became a member of the company it was not vending any hundred thousand dollars worth of goods to the country. After Mr. Reid became a director the figures grew. Twenty-six thousand dollars in one year doubled into $50,000 in the next year. Next year it had risen to $66,000 and they made a grand finish last year with sales to the government amounting to $78,414. Has the minister a report from his architect pointing out any further points in or about any of the buildings at Ottawa or elsewhere where the wares of this company may be deposited in the coming year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are applications from various departments for these steel fittings which are considered to be very desirable. I do not know what the amount of these applications is, but it is very considerable.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the minister had better let us know in prospective what Mr. Reid is going to get out of this long suffering country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know Mr. Reid at all.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Reid and the Office Specialty Company are one and the same concern.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman said that he was a stockholder.

Mr. BENNETT. I said also that he was one of the directors of the company and the deputy and the officers of the department can probably verify that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman has a great fashion of picking out some one person who may have a small interest and calling the company by the name of that individual.

Mr. BENNETT. It is a new system in this country for people who are not in a particular style of business to be in touch with that business. The hon. gentleman should not run away with the idea that Mr. Reid always had $12,000 worth of stock in that company. He had not. Great oaks from little acorns grow. Whether it is Mr. Reid's money which is invested in that company I do not know and I care not, but I know that his holdings increased very largely in the company, and as his holdings increased so did his sales. A gentleman who has a prospect of going to Kingston for doing something on behalf of Mr. Hyman should be attended to by Mr. Hyman. A man who takes his life in his hand—I will not say his life, but his liberty to go and debauch the electorate, as he did and which Judge Winchester found he had been guilty of doing, is entitled to some consideration at the hands of the minister, and he got that consideration at the hands of Mr. Hyman. The minister must know what requests for steel fittings have been received for the coming year and whether they are to be purchased from this company or not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If we come to any item which involves steel fittings I shall be very happy to give the information. In the meantime I have not the information at hand in reference to steel fittings.

Mr. BLAIN. Before the Ontario items are taken up, I asked the minister for a statement of the papers in which advertisements calling for tenders for the erection of two buildings in the province of Quebec were published.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have the information which the hon. member desires. It was in regard to the newspapers in which the advertisement appeared for the post office in St. John, Quebec, and also for the Dominion arsenal at Quebec. The statement is as follows :—

Mr. STANFIELD. I did not hear the name of the Quebec 'Morning Chronicle.' Last evening, or early this morning, an hon. gentleman said that he had seen the advertisement in the Quebec 'Morning Chronicle.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. He must have been in error.

Mr. BLAIN. I may say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Beland) met me outside today and stated that he could not find the advertisement in the 'Chronicle.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. Sometimes newspapers publish these advertisements without being authorized. For instance they appear in the Montreal 'Star,' and I am not aware there is any authority to publish them. It may be that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Beland) saw the advertisement in the 'Chronicle' in that way.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I must come to the rescue of my hon. friend from Beauce. I myself have seen long advertisements of the Transcontinental Railway Commission in the Quebec 'Chronicle' which is a Conservative paper. There are no contracts in my department which necessitate calling for tenders by long advertisements in the newspapers, but I have asked that certain public works advertisements be published in 'Le Progrès du Golfe,' a Conservative newspaper.

Mr. BLAIN. I am glad the Postmaster General is broadening in his politics. I assume that 99 per cent of the papers in which this advertisement appeared were Liberal papers. Is that right?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume so.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the Minister of Public Works going to adopt the suggestion of the Postmaster General and insert the advertisements in the newspaper having the largest circulation in the district?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If there were two newspapers published in a city, one Conservative and one Liberal I would pursue the policy which has been pursued since confederation of giving it to the newspaper which is friendly to the administration. I say that frankly, but I may tell my hon. friend that in the case of a great public work like the Transcontinental Railway, when I was asked the names of different papers in the province of New Brunswick in which the advertisements should appear, I mentioned among others the St. John 'Daily Telegraph' and the St. John 'Times,' both of which were formerly Liberal papers, but which have been purchased by a strong Conservative and are now Conservative papers.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister has not answered my question. For instance, what is the policy of the government with respect to advertisements in newspapers in the province of Ontario?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no change. It is the same as for the last forty years.

Mr. BLAIN. Where there are two newspapers in a town having the same circulation and the newspaper supporting the government is selected I do not object, but where the Conservative newspaper has the largest circulation will the minister insert the advertisements in that paper?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Certainly not; not simply because it has a somewhat larger circulation.

Mr. BLAIN. Then it is the policy of the minister to advertise in the newspapers supporting the administration regardless of their circulation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not say that. I do say that if in order to give proper publicity it was necessary to avail myself of the columns of a Conservative newspaper I would not hesitate to do so.

Mr. BLAIN. That is a very nice story, but it does not answer my question. If the newspaper having the largest circulation in the vicinity where a public work is to be done is a Conservative paper, will the minister publish the advertisement in that paper?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I hope my hon. friend will not think me discourteous if I answer that when the contingency arises it will have consideration. That is as far as I can go.

Mr. BLAIN. Very well, I will probably renew the question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Next year.

Mr. BLAIN. Before that. Now, with regard to the Brampton post office; the Minister of Public Works told me last night he did not know where Brampton is, and I may inform him that it is in the county of Peel, province of Ontario, twenty miles west of Toronto, on the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And gives a good Tory majority.

Mr. BLAIN. Is any of this money we are now voting to be expended on the Brampton post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I find that at Brompton (it is probably a mistake in my notes for Brampton) there was an expenditure last year of $388, and I assume there will be an expenditure this year at Brampton.

Mr. BENNETT. Who looks after the framing of these advertisements? I see in that great family journal the Ottawa 'Free Press' a long advertisement calling for tenders for dredging at different points. There is a long list of places which I need not read. In another column of the same paper there is an advertisement calling for tenders for dredging to be done at Tiffin and at Victoria Harbour. I think it should not take a great stretch of imagination on the part of the clerk preparing these advertisements to see that he might have added to the former list Tiffin and Victoria harbour. What is the sense of having over a quarter of a column occupied with an advertisement inviting tenders for these two places when they might have been included in the list?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The work at Tiffin and at Victoria harbour is somewhat special in its charaacter. The department may recommend that the dredging shall go to a depth of 25 feet and that the channel for the Canadian Pacific Railway at Victoria harbour and the channel for the Grand Trunk at Tiffin shall be completed by the 1st of October. So that the advertisement required to be separate.

Mr. BENNETT. Perhaps that might very well have been added as an 'N.B.' to the other advertisement. But the hon. gentleman is perhaps a little tired of N.B. They are very cabalistic letters—they stand for New Brunswick.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Can the hon. minister state what part of this money is to be spent at Chatham?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to say. This is a vote which is taken every year. It is assumed that it takes from $15,000 to $20,000 to make these general repairs and whatever amount is needed for repairs at Chatham will be expended. The amount expended last year on the Chatham public buildings was $230.72.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the hon. minister insert advertisements calling for tenders in independent newspapers? If so, I would like to know why he singles out the Montreal 'Star' especially.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will tell my hon. friend very frankly. I have noticed from time to time that the Montreal 'Star' has published advertisements calling for tenders for various public buildings. As these advertisements have not been ordered by the department, I assume that they are published as news items.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Then why does the hon. minister leave out a good Grit journal like the Montreal 'Star?' It is as bad a Grit journal as the 'Herald.'

Mr. BLAIN. Are advertisements in the Montreal 'Star' referred to by my hon. friend paid for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think not.

Mr. BLAIN. Then they are unauthorized? We were dealing with the authorized advertisements.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have always looked on the Montreal 'Star' as an absolutely independent newspaper. We are to understand, then, that the 'Star' is not on the patronage list—is that the position?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I think not.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then what is the exact position as regards the Montreal 'Star' getting any advertisements?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware that since I have been a minister there has been any advertisements of my department published in the Montreal 'Star.' It is a good paper, but I have always looked upon it as a very strong Conservative paper.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask my hon. friend what is necessary for a newspaper to get on the patronage list?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not very different from what it was twelve or fifteen years ago.

Mr. BLAIN. I was not asking what was necessary twelve or fifteen years ago, but what is necessary now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A man must be thoroughly reliable in the article in which he deals; he must be honest; he must furnish a good article, and he must furnish it at a low price.

Mr. BLAIN. I am sure the committee are very much refreshed at that statement, if my hon. friend proposes to put it into operation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I propose to continue that in operation, and if it is not in operation in my department I propose to put it in operation.

Mr. BLAIN. An hon. friend suggests that one qualification is to be a good Grit, whatever that means.

Mr. FISHER. That would be prima facie evidence of honesty.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Agriculture is always ready to come to the rescue on a question of moral reform except when it refers to a definite important question. Will the minister say where in the province of Ontario the balance of this money is to be expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to tell my hon. friend in advance. For instance, last year repairs and improvements were made on 70 public buildings in Ontario, on which $15,559.53 was expended, running from 60 cents up to $1,115. The different superintendents of buildings make reports as to what is needed, and the repairs are made as they are required.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to state to my hon. friend that in the Brampton post office additional accommodation is required for the additional amount of business being done. There is plenty of space in the building, I think, if it were properly arranged. There is not sufficient room for people coming to get their mails. I think some rearrangement of the boxes and of the interior generally is necessary. May

I ask if some portion of this sum will be spent for that purpose?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be very happy to have the matter looked into.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the minister set apart any portion of this money for the purpose of reorganizing the postal service in the House of Commons, which at present is the same as it was in the days of Noah?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, there is nothing in this vote for that purpose.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does that come under the minister's direction or under the Speaker's?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it is under my direction.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I wish the minister would look into the matter and replace the present pigeon holes with drawers.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that the question of making improvements in the postal service of the House of Commons has been brought to my notice. Plans have been prepared and I have authorized the chief architect to have the improvements made. They could not be made very well during the session. They will be made during the recess.

Mr. BARR. In the Auditor General's Report at V—95 there is an item :

Orangeville, Ontario, by tender, Library Bureau of Canada, fittings, $1,950.

There is another item :

Office Specialty, Limited, boxes (a) 384 at $1.80; (b) 64 at $2.55; (c) 16 at $2.75; freight, $6.

This makes $825.39 for the lock boxes. I would ask the minister how many tenders were received for the fittings and I would like information as to the purchase of lock boxes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tenders were received for the fittings but I have not the number here.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is the president of the Library Bureau ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know.

Mr. BENNETT. I may inform the minister that one of the large stockholders is Senator Edwards.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A very good man.

Mr. BARR. I would be very glad to receive the information for which I have asked.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member must know that when I come to the House to ask for the passing of appropriations itemized in the estimates, I would not be supposed to have information with me about some other work done two or three years ago and not mentioned in these estimates. If my hon. friend will write a letter asking who tenderers were and the amounts of the tenders, I shall be most happy to give him the information.

Mr. BARR. This was not two or three years ago, this was in 1907.

Mr. BLAIN. Out of what vote was this money of which my friend from Dufferin (Mr. Barr) speaks, paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would be paid out of the vote for post office fittings and supplies.

Mr. BLAIN. A similar expenditure for this year would be paid out of the item now under discussion ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would be paid out of the same vote as last year.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister meet the wishes of the member for Dufferin and bring down the information ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be most happy.

Mr. BLAIN. And he will bring the information to the committee?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member, surely, does not want me to bring down information as to buildings completed years ago, and for which no vote is asked.

Mr. BLAIN. But the minister is so willing——

Mr. PUGSLEY. But the hon. gentleman should not ride a willing horse to death.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister told the hon. member for Dufferin (Mr. Barr) that there was no part of this vote for the post office at Orangeville. This is a general vote for the buildings in Ontario, maintenance, repairs, &c.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But the money paid for the post office at Orangeville was taken out of a different vote.

Mr. TAYLOR. This goes to prove that my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) is not well acquainted with his estimates. There is another vote for post office fittings and furniture——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know that, and the sum to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barr) referred was paid out of that.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. minister will look at the Auditor General's Report, page V—19, he will find that there was an expenditure for repairs to the Orangeville post office last year. Out of what was that paid ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Out of a vote similar to the one now before us.

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly. And with it there were other items—for instance, the pay of a caretaker.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) has not understood me. The amount referred to by the hon. member for Dufferin (Mr. Barr) was paid out of the vote for repairs.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the hon. minister said no part of this vote was to go to Orangeville and asked to have the item passed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No part of it for the purpose to which the hon. gentleman referred.

Mr. TAYLOR. But he has just stated that the money paid last year was paid out of this vote.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was paid out of the vote last year, but it does not follow that a dollar of this appropriation will be used for Orangeville.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was charged to Orangeville last year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $120.42.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, what was this $877.67 at page V—119 of the Auditor General's Report ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not out of this vote.

Mr. TAYLOR. One of these items is Robert Irvine & Son, repairs to post office as per tender $324. That is out of the vote of last year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has not the Auditor General's Report for 1907-8 yet.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am reading from the report for 1906-7, and that comes down to March 31, 1907.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But this $120.42 was expended during the fiscal year 1907-8.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is the latest Auditor General's Report we have, and the only thing that we can refer to for the discussion of items before us. Here was a total of $877.67 paid for repairs, &c., for Orangeville, and a portion of this vote will have to be for Orangeville this year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That will depend on whether repairs are required or not.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the hon. gentleman said emphatically that no portion of it was for Orangeville.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said no portion of it was to be taken out of this vote. It is to be taken out of the vote for fittings and furniture.

Mr. BARR. Whether it comes out of this vote or not, makes little difference, but the minister proposes a departure from the usual proceeding. When we call attention to an item in the Auditor General's Report, and ask questions concerning it, the minister says : Write me a letter and I will send you the information. But the information is wanted by the House and the country. My constituents ought to be allowed to know how many tenders were put in and where they came from.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The amounts to which the hon. gentleman refers were paid out of a vote for post office fittings and supplies. He will find, at page 53 of the Estimates a number of items under 'rents, repairs, furniture, heating, &c.' When we reach that vote, I will have at hand the information the hon. gentleman desires.

Mr. BENNETT. In bringing down that information, will the hon. minister be ready to tell us whether public tenders were called for, or whether there was merely an invitation to the Library Bureau to put in a tender ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will get that information.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Reverting to the House of Commons post office, we have been promised these changes every year and I would urge upon the minister the desirability of expedition in the matter. I hope that when these lock boxes are put in they will be of the most modern type, that there will be no job in connection with them and that the country, in one instance in the history of this administration, will get value for their money.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This matter will be attended to as early as possible.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the minister know of a man being killed by a fall of ice and snow off the public building in Barrie last winter and if so have steps been taken to prevent a recurrence of such an accident ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Precautions to prevent a recurrence were taken at once.

Mr. BENNETT. Has a claim been made by the relatives and if so who are the solicitors ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A claim has been made but I do not remember the name of the solicitors. A letter was received but I am not sure if it came from the firm of solicitors.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the claim been settled ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Has a fiat been granted?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think there is any fiat yet.

Mr. BENNETT. On page V—95, there is an item of expenditure for the Toronto post office, $595 to the Canadian Revolving Door Company, Limited, for a revolving door. Will the minister bring down the information as to that, please ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should be glad to do so.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who is Mr. D. J. Mullarkey, who does some inspecting for the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is a gentleman attached to the headquarters branch of the Public Works Department. Whenever there is inspecting to be done regarding which he has special knowledge—his specialty is concrete work—he is sent to make the inspection and report, and, sometimes, to remain on the spot and see that the work is done.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is he paid an annual salary ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is paid $4 a day and his expenses when on duty outside of Ottawa.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is he paid for Sundays as well as working days ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is in the permanent employ of the department, and his pay includes Sunday.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is he a permanent employee ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In that sense, he has been attached to the department for two or three years.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is he paid by the day or by the month ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My deputy advises me that he is paid by the month—$4 a day, including Sundays.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where did Mr. Mullarkey come from ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has lived in Ottawa for a number of years and he has worked himself up to his present position. He is a practical man in concrete and masonry.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Was he the man who mixed the concrete for the Laurier tower ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, he had nothing to do with the Laurier tower. The concrete work belonged to one of these important bridges that cross the river. He has had large experience, and is regarded by everybody as an expert.

Mr. J. D. REID. I see on V—69 that Patton & Crowe supplied 50 fire extinguishers at $15. Where were these placed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have that matter looked up and tell the hon. gentleman later.

Mr. J. D. REID. I see the Empire Electric and Manufacturing Company, of Ottawa, supplied one Westinghouse motor, 5 horse-power, where was that placed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are sent out to different buildings where they are required.

Glencoe public building, $3,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote towards the erection of a public building in the town of Glencoe. The site was purchased out of a previous appropriation of $5,000, and the amount paid for the site and the total expenditure up to the 31st of March, was $1,500 altogether, leaving a balance of $3,500 to be revoted. The site has been purchased, but the contract has not been let. The chief architect is preparing the plans.

Mr. BLAIN. Now we have here a case in point, where a public building is to be erected in the town of Glencoe, in the county of West Middlesex, which is represented by the chief whip of the government party (Mr. Calvert). The newspaper having the largest circulation in that western district, the London 'Free Press,' goes into almost every home. Now I want to ask the minister to insert his advertisement for this building in the London 'Free Press' when he asks for tenders.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is there no other paper in London ?

Mr. BLAIN. There is a paper called the London 'Advertiser.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. Has that got a good circulation ?

Mr. BLAIN. Considerable, but nothing approaching the circulation of the London 'Free Press.' Now in view of the fact that the London 'Free Press' is the leading newspaper in that district, may I ask my hon. friend, when he is calling for tenders for the erection of this building, if he will insert the advertisement in the London 'Free Press' ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If in my opinion it should be necessary in order to give proper information to intending contractors, I will do so. But that will be a matter for consideration.

Mr. BLAIN. What does my hon. friend consider proper information ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the circulation of the 'Advertiser' ?

Mr. GORDON. It has quite as large a circulation as the 'Free Press.'

Mr. BLAIN. Does the hon. gentleman really believe that the 'Advertiser' has as large a circulation as the 'Free Press' ?

Mr. GORDON. I think so.

Mr. BLAIN. Now we will watch with interest the policy pursued by the minister in respect to advertising for tenders.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They will be very widely advertised.

Mr. BLAIN. Who made the request for the expenditure ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This expenditure has been urged by petition from the town of Glencoe, also by copy of a resolution from the town council, and that petition and resolution have been very warmly endorsed by Mr. Calvert, member of parliament for the riding in which Glencoe is situated.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the population of Glencoe ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By the census of 1901, 1,034.

Mr. CLEMENTS. From whom was this site purchased ? and was there any middleman engaged in it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site was purchased from Mr. P. D. Keith. I do not think there is any middleman interested, not only in this case but in any of the properties required by the Public Works Department, I never heard of any. We endeavour to get land or supplies at the lowest possible price, after all reasonable effort is made for ascertaining those prices. The lot is a corner lot with a frontage of 100 feet on one street and 165 on another, and it cost $1,250.

Mr. CLEMENTS. As regards the intervention of middlemen in purchases made by the Public Works Department, I will give a case in regard to which I have correct information. It was not in the time of the present minister. The site for the Sandwich post office was bought from A. J. Healey. Mr. Healey is a young lawyer and prominent politician in that district, and is associated with the Liberal party. I understand he is connected with a dredging concern there.

Mr. BENNETT. Keep your eye on him.

Mr. CLEMENTS. He bought a lot having 208 feet frontage on one street and 52 feet on another, for $1,600. He sold one-half of the property to the government for $1,700, making exactly $1,500 on this lot. There was a house on the lot when he purchased it, and he realized $400 out of the house, besides the $1,500 profit he made out of the lot.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What was the size of the lot sold to the department?

Mr. CLEMENTS. One hundred and four feet fronage by fifty-two feet depth.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At what price?

Mr. CLEMENTS. Seventeen hundred dollars.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was that a high price?

Mr. CLEMENTS. Well, it was a high price; it was just twice the price that he purchased it for.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Do you say that it was an excessive price?

Mr. BLAIN. I say that it was in the town of Sandwich. This gentleman acted as a middleman and made $1,500 out of this government. Before the item passes, I want to draw the attention of the minister to a matter that I took up personally with the late minister, Mr. Hyman. I refer to the erection of a public building in the village of Tilbury. I see that Glencoe has a public building and I have nothing to say in opposition to it. I congratulate Glencoe upon getting this building, but I say that other districts should be similarly treated. Tilbury lies between the constituency of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) and my own constituency. I made representations to Mr. Hyman some time ago as I was requested to do by the residents of the district. Tilbury is a very thriving village, and I think it is deserving of a public building. It is one of the best villages in that district, and I trust that the minister will grant the application and see that provision is made for a building at that place.

Mr. PUGSLEY. An application has been received for the erection of a public building in the village of Tilbury. I recognize that it is quite a thriving place, and the matter will have very careful consideration. I am in hopes that before very long I shall be able to meet the wishes of the people of Tilbury in this respect.

Mr. BARR. I would like to know what the policy of the government is in connection with the erection of public buildings? Here we find a village, not a very thriving one, but a village having 934 inhabitants is to receive a post office. The village I live in has 1,200 or 1,300 people and we have the post office in a little room in connection with the town hall. Why does Glencoe get this favour? It is represented by the government whip in the House. That is an important consideration, but there is a much greater one why the hon. member who represents that riding ought to get something. It is not only represented by the whip, but it is represented by a would-be minister of the crown. That hon. gentleman claims that the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) has his position as Minister of Public Works. In order to soothe his injured feelings and to show his constituents that he is doing something for them it is necessary to erect a building in Glencoe. I would like to know why a little village like Glencoe should receive this consideration, when Shelburne, a flourishing and growing village, should not receive similar consideration. If it is the policy of the government to supply villages of 1,034 inhabitants with post offices, then, I submit that it is the duty of the government to supply a village of that size. It was contended some time ago that it was only towns that should get post offices. I know that Orangeville did not get a public building until it had reached the status of a town. We have two flourishing villages in my constituency, both of them larger than Glencoe, and I ask why it is that these villages are overlooked and that Glencoe is provided for. This is public money that we are using, we should lay down some rule and there should be some reason why two towns occupying the same position should be treated differently, why one should receive a public building and the other should not. We have no customs house at Shelburne. I have been unable to obtain anything along that line, but I think I should receive the same consideration as other places have received. We should have a policy announced. We should know that when we reach a certain position we shall be entitled to a public building not simply because some hon. gentleman has a pull with the government and therefore can obtain greater consideration than others, but because the conditions are such as to warrant the expenditure of the money. The present practice is not just or fair to the country. It is not using the public money to the best advantage, and therefore we should know what policy this government intends to pursue in the future.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the policy of the minister the same as the policy stated by the hon. Minister of Finance the other night that if it could be shown that no public money had ever been spent in a riding it was the duty of the government to place a public building there? Is he in accord with the sentiments or the views of the Minister of Finance?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance put the matter upon a very reasonable and very fair basis. I understood him to say that even in the case of small towns in a riding in which no public money was being expended; that is to say no money for public buildings, and more especially, if it were a county town—I think perhaps he limited it to that——

Mr. BENNETT. No, the Minister of Finance did not limit it to a county town.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think he said a county town. At all events he spoke of one town, and he said it was not unreasonable that a public building should be erected there. But, he further said at the same time that people must be patient, that these things could not all be done at once. While I am on my feet I may say to the hon. gentleman who represents the riding of Dufferin (Mr. Barr) that I am very much pleased to hear him speak so highly of the village in which he lives. I am glad to hear that it is a thriving village, but I may say to the hon. gentleman that if the village which he represents is entitled to a public building perhaps he is a little open to the criticism—I do not make it here as a criticism against him—of not having in any way directed my attention to the necessity which existed for a public building in that locality.

Mr. BARR. The hon. gentleman must remember that he has not occupied that position long. I can assure my hon. friend that I did bring it to the notice of his predecessor, and that he promised to give it careful consideration. I thought that consideration was being given to it. However, I will not fail to remind my hon. friend, the good-natured Minister of Public Works, that we are very anxious to have a post office in Shelburne and that we think we should have one.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I think that my hon. friend from Dufferin (Mr. Barr) was hardly to be blamed for not having brought this matter to the attention of the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not blame him very seriously.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I had not the opportunity of hearing the minister when he spoke in Montreal the other evening, but I have had the privilege of reading the account of his remarks as published in a newspaper, and I see that he laid down the principle that public buildings were erected for the education of the people, that the people required something in the nature of culture and education in some parts of the country. He declared that where ignorance, stupidity and bigotry reigned, it was necessary that public buildings should be erected. We will see at once why the hon. member for Shelburne had no opportunity of procuring a public building for his town, and why villages of 1,000 inhabitants do obtain them. Up to the time the minister made the explanation. no man in Canada could understand why there was not a public building in Shelburne.

Mr. FOWLER. The Minister of Public Works is reported in the press recently to have said that a member from his own province had made an onslaught on him. I do not know to whom the minister refers, whatever suspicion I may have. The minister also stated that the gentleman who made the onslaught on him was not often to be seen in the House. If I had my suspicion in the first instance as to whom the minister was referring that suspicion would be dissipated by this latter statement, because if he was referring to me in his first statement he certainly could not be referring to me in his last statement, because so far as attendance in the House is concerned I have been a more regular attendant than the minister himself. If his remarks with regard to public buildings are not more truthful than these other remarks of his, they are not worthy of much credence.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I represent a large and important constituency and I think I may say that there is not a single public building in that whole constituency.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the size of the largest town in my hon. friend's constituency?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. My own town is larger than Glencoe, where you are erecting a public building; it has 1,200 inhabitants. I do not object to the erection of a public building where it is necessary and where the expenditure is not too great, but I have already made representations in this regard with respect to my own constituency and I would like to know why Glencoe in Ontario with 1,030 people should pay $1,250 for a site for a public building when I will guarantee that I will get a site in my own town of 1,200 inhabitants for half that amount. It is about time that the town of Boissevain should have a post office. If I were speaking about the man who has charge of postal affairs in that town for the past five years I would have something to say, but that is not at present under discussion. I rose to make as strong a plea as I can to the Minister of Public Works to take active steps as early as possible to build a post office in the town of Boissevain, which is larger than the town of Glencoe.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend comes from a town which has a population of 1,200 and he urges very strongly that it would be a proper expenditure of public money to erect a public building in that town.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is entitled to speak for his constituency and if he makes a proper representation to me I will be very glad to consider it between this and next session.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. Let me tell the Minister of Public Works that for several years I have impressed on his department the necessity for erecting public buildings in the riding I represent. We have some large towns in that constituency, but yet there is not a public building within its borders. Delegations have come from one of these towns on different occasions asking that a public building be erected there, but no action has been taken and in the meantime little villages all over Canada, one-third the size of any one of three towns in my riding, and where there is no warrant, comparatively speaking, for the erection of a public building, have been favourably considered by the government. There is in my riding a town of 3,000 population, giving a postal revenue of $5,000 a year, and there are two others which give a slightly smaller revenue, and these towns deserve consideration from the government. I have urged the matter on the attention of the government and delegations have come here to support my representations, but yet there is no sign in the estimates that any provision is to be made. Is there any underlying principle which guides the department in this matter? They seem to follow a happy-go-lucky method by which little villages get consideration and large towns are neglected. It is time some principle should be laid down which would guide those who are administering public affairs in this matter. We have gone on too long on this principle of spending public money without any consideration as to the requirements of the case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the name of the town in which the hon. gentleman thinks a public building should be erected?

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. If you give me any encouragement to think that you will make use of the information to give the matter consideration I will name you three towns in my riding.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will consider it carefully.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. Bracebridge, Huntsville and Gravenhurst.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I came in as a new minister last summer and if I have not before heard from my hon. friend that there was necessity for a public building in any one of these places he can hardly blame me for not having provision made in the estimates. I have not hitherto, directly or indirectly, had any representation from my hon. friend that there should be a building erected in any of these towns. Of course, in considering whether we should at once erect public buildings in the riding the hon. gentleman represents, it must be remembered that there is a very urgent demand, which does not seem to be unreasonable, for the expenditure of money on public wharfs in that constituency, and it may be that the people of that riding have felt that it would be more desirable, at present at all events, to have money expended in affording facilities for transportation and trade rather than in erecting public buildings. That consideration may have had some influence. I may say that the question of giving increased wharf accommodation in the hon. gentleman's constituency is receiving my very earnest attention, and I hope I may be able to meet the very reasonable expectations of the people in that respect. With regard to public buildings, I will also say that I take the way in which my hon. friend has approached the question to-day as an expression of his desire that there should be more public buildings there, and I will give that matter my earnest attention.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. The minister lays down the rule that we must make our applications to every new minister. I understood that we made application to the department, and that that department had an official head and a deputy head, and that a record would be kept of the applications that were made. But if every time there is a change in the Minister of Public Works we have to renew our applications, it is as well that we should understand that. However, with regard to wharfs. I may say that there have been two or three built in my constituency since this government came into power, probably costing all told $20,000. As to that, I am not making any great complaint, as I have seen a deputation who waited on the minister a week or so ago, and they have stated that he distinctly pledged himself to put a sum in the estimates for a wharf at the town of Gravenhurst. I do not know whether that has been definitely decided upon, or has been merely taken into consideration.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nothing is definitely decided on until it appears before the House in the estimates.

Mr. MARSHALL. I do not know whether there has yet been a requisition for a post office in Aylmer, Ont.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. MARSHALL. I may tell the hon. minister that we have been promised a post office for the last fifteen years, and the promise generally comes just before a general election.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would take it back to about 1893.

Mr. MARSHALL. We had a promise of a post office from the old government, but did not get it. However, I am living in one of the nicest towns, as far as business is concerned, in Canada. I think the hon. Minister of Customs will bear me out in that; he has been in our town, and we are always pleased to have him. I have been living there about thirty years. I have no objection to any town getting a public building. Glencoe is a smart business town, but it does not compare with the town of Aylmer. The population of Aylmer is about 2,500. It is a manufacturing center. The post office is inappropriate to the town. We have also a custom house which is not in keeping with the character of the place. I would like to have a promise if I can get one from the minister to amend matters for us. We have not only a beautiful town, but a fine country. I do not think the hon. Minister of Public Works has ever been in that section. We would be glad to have him come, even at election time. We are always glad to see distinguished gentlemen come there, no matter what their politics are. During my campaign we were visited by five very prominent gentlemen who are sitting in this House the hon. Minister of Justice, the hon. Mr. Hyman, the hon. gentleman who has just left the chair, the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) and the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German), and you know the result—to me it was very satisfactory. North Bay is a town that does not compare with Aylmer, and you are spending $66,000 on a public building there. Welland has a population of 1,863, and is getting a new post office costing about $27,000. Leamington is another place which I understand is to get a post office building. It has about the same population as Aylmer, and is a very beautiful little town. I would be very glad to have the views of the minister as to giving Aylmer a post office building, which we have been promised for years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that considering what a very nice, progressive town Aylmer is, its population, and the energetic representative it has, I am certainly surprised that although I have been here for several months, I have never heard from the hon. gentleman that there was the slightest feeling among the people that there should be a public building at Aylmer. It may be that the people of Aylmer have heard so much talk on the part of the opposition about the great extravagance which has been shown in the erection of public buildings in various cities and towns, that they have been rather timid in making application for a public building. But, from the discussion which has taken place to-day, I am very glad to see that there is such a consensus of opinion in favour of going to a reasonable expenditure in giving to the people in thriving towns accommodation in the way of public buildings. My hon. friend must not expect us to attend to all the wants of the people at once. We have to proceed reasonably, in a way which may appear to some people to be somewhat too slow. I am sure the hon. gentleman will not expect us to rush at once into the construction of public buildings all over the country. We must look to the wants of the people, and as these wants are urged upon our attention, endeavour to supply the reasonable needs of the people. I shall be very glad if I can have the opportunity of visiting Aylmer and shall be only too happy to take into consideration the wants of the town.

Mr. BARR. I wish to correct a statement of a few moments ago, as to the revenue of Glencoe and Shelburne. The revenue of Glencoe is $2,150.80 and that of Shelburne, $2,670.21. The expenditures in Glencoe were $816.65 and in Shelburone $991.18. We are not complaining about the progress that is being made in the country in the building of post offices and public buildings, all we complain of is that they are not distributed properly and we say they should be placed where there is the largest population and where the largest revenue is brought into the treasury, not in accordance with some influence that may be brought to bear.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand you entirely approve of what we are doing but complain that we do not go far enough.

Mr. MARSHALL. I neglected to state that I have the honour to represent a riding having 22,000 population and we have not a government building in that riding.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I wish to urge a suggestion which I have made unsuccessfully to several Ministers of Public Works, that a regulation should be adopted that all public buildings should be isolated from other buildings, that some safe distance, possibly 100 feet, should be left between public buildings and other buildings. In this case, for instance. I am sure that for the money spent in Glencoe the minister could have procured a square in which the building could have been placed

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is very desirable undoubtedly, but in cities especially it would very greatly add to the cost. As to the cost of land in Glencoe this is a corner lot, 100 by 165 feet ; my information is that Glencoe is in the centre of a very rich and progressive agricultural district and is quite an important railway centre. The price is $1,250 and I think my hon. friend is entirely mistaken in saying that the cost is too high.

Mr. BENNETT. I think it only fair to place on 'Hansard' what the minister did say on the occasion referred to. He is reported in the Montreal 'Gazette' of last Monday as saying :

In fact he believed that any government would also be justified in spending a limited amount on public buildings in quarters where other expenditure was not large, so as to cultivate public taste, to stimulate citizens and make the people contented and proud of the locality in which they lived.

I would ask him what amount of lethargy, discontent and lack of pride must be manifested before the minister will give a locality a public building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The report from which the hon. gentleman has read, while it gives a portion of the remarks I had the honour to make on the occasion to which he refers, does not profess to be a verbatim report. Some of the observations I made which are not contained in it would somewhat qualify the remarks quoted making my statement more in accordance with what I have said here to-day.

Mr. BENNETT. If the minister was misreported, would he repeat what he did say ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not say that I was misreported, but some remarks were left out which would qualify those printed.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister might have answered that where the population of the district had shown discontent, lack of pride and lethargy by electing a Liberal representative, it would be necessary to give them a public building.

Mr. BLAIN. Again referring to the advertising, I stated that the newspaper having the largest circulation in the section of the country where the money we are now asked to vote is to be expended, is the London 'Free Press,' a morning newspaper. The London 'Free Press' had a circulation——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I suppose my hon. friend would not for a moment think that I would wish him to justify the waste of the time of the House and the country beyond the extent to which he has wasted it this afternoon, by asking him for information as to the circulation of the London 'Free Press.' Do not let him excuse himself by suggesting any such request by me.

Mr. BLAIN. I am not paying any serious attention to what my hon. friend stated. I asked him the policy of his department in respect of advertising for public buildings. He was unable to state the policy and said in reply that when he was considering the advertisements that were to be published in newspapers for this public building now under discussion he would consider it. The London 'Free Press' had a circulation of 20,012 on April 26, 1908. As to the London 'Advertiser,' although the figures are not published in the paper itself, I am informed on the very best authority that the circulation of that newspaper is less than 12,000 and it is an evening newspaper, the circulation being largely in the city of London, while the other circulates in every part of western Onario. The hon. gentleman is going to advertise for tenders for a building to be constructed at Glencoe. I am asking whether he will select the leading newspaper or will reject it for its politics. I do not expect an answer from him. Nor am I consulting the hon. gentleman particularly as to the waste of time he is causing this afternoon. I am directing his attention to facts which are worthy of his consideration, if he intends to spend the public money appropriated for advertising in that way to do the most good. But, if he proposes to spend it in the interests of his political party, as he has been doing, the information I have submitted will be of no value to him, and will not be taken note of. Now, I would like to ask out of what vote passed last year was $1,250 paid for this site ? Also has the site been paid for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site has been paid for, the money being taken out of an appropriation of $5,000 passed last year.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the cost of the building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Something about $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Including heating and everything ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. GANONG. Is this a customs port of entry ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, customs as well.

Mr. GANONG. Lest the minister should think me remiss, as he has suggested other gentlemen have been, I would call his attention to the fact that in the county I have the honour to represent there are three towns, more important, I believe, than Glencoe, and certainly more important than Knowlton with its 760 population which has been given a post office building. These towns are known to him, but not so well, probably as to me. St. Andrews, in the county of Charlotte, is one of the most important watering places on our Atlantic sea-board, and one of the oldest towns in eastern Canada.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is its population ?

Mr. GANONG. About 1,300 or 1,400. Then, there is Milltown, an important manufacturing place, with a cotton mill employing about 800 hands, and St. George with large industries. All these are incorporated towns. If it is necessary for us to repeat our applications to every new Minister of Public Works who comes into office, and if the changes are to be as frequent as they have been in the last ten years, I think an officer should be appointed and blank forms supplied so that these applications may be kept before the head of the department without undue labour. I observe that the minister has adroitly passed over the question suggested by the hon. member for Dufferin (Mr. Barr) and others as to the general policy of the government in regard to these buildings. I hope he will take note of the three towns to which I have called attention.

Mr. J. D. REID. In my county I have a town which I believe is more important than Glencoe, the town of Kemptville, which has a population of about 2,000, and a postal revenue of $2,600 or $2,700. But we have other places where public buildings are more necessary than in Glencoe, though I am not objecting to this Glencoe public building. Take, for instance, the town of Morrisburg on the St. Lawrence, a place of about 3,000 people and a fine town. In view of these cases, I think there should be some statement from the minister as to his policy.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is nearly six o'clock, but before the committee rises, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) whether he is opposing this vote for Glencoe or whether it is that he thinks that others ought to be included ?

Mr. J. D. REID. This appropriation for Glencoe has my approval, and would have my vote if necessary. But I say that there are other places requiring public buildings whose cases should be considered. There was a case mentioned a little while ago of a town in Quebec with about 700 population, which is given a post office. These cases indicate that some special influence must be brought to bear to direct the action of the government in these matters. For instance, in the case of Glencoe, probably the chief whip of the other side (Mr. Calvert) must have brought pressure to bear on the minister in favour of that place, for I do not think this post office is given to Glencoe because of the great interest the Minister of Public Works takes in that village.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) must not go out and say that the members of the opposition are pressing for increased expenditure. It is quite plain what my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) is asking for, and I want to put myself right—and I am sure I speak for others about me. The opposition say that the government spends enormous sums of the public money uselessly, and that the government has no policy except a political policy in the spending of this money. A village represented by a Reformer is given a post office, but an important town represented by a Liberal Conservative receives no appropriation for that purpose. That is what we object to. And we object to the increased expenditure of this country and say that it ought to be reduced.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would ask the minister if plans and specifications of this building in Glencoe have been prepared so as to show not only the cost of the building, but the cost of heating, fittings and furniture as well? The committee will then know exactly what this building is going to cost before we vote this money. The minister will remember that a few days ago I drew his attention to this point, that before any money should be voted for the erection of a public building the minister should state definitely the outside amount he proposed to expend so that the committee may know how the money of this country is going to be expended. I for one would object to this vote going through unless the minister is prepared to say that full specifications have been prepared, and that every dollar he intends to put into the building has been determined, and that it is the purpose of the government that this amount should not be exceeded. I hold that is the only way in which the expenditure can be controlled. If the minister is not prepared to say how much money he is going to expend on this building, I think he had better let the item stand until such time as he has arrived at a conclusion. I am not very particular as to the amount, but I want a definite promise from the minister so that those of us who may be here next year when another vote is asked for will know whether the government is prepared to abide by its estimates.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote. There was a vote of $5,000 last year. The site has been purchased, and the chief architect has been instructed to prepare the plans and to limit the total expenditure to $20,000, and he assures me that he will see the expenditure does not exceed that amount.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Is this vote agreed to ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. BLAIN. Before the House rises—I have here a copy of the Toronto 'Mail and Empire,' which says that a Liberal member of parliament, the hon. member for Kings county, P.E.I. (Mr. J. J. Hughes), is being sued for $12,000 for having furnished supplies to the government.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is not relative to the question before the House.

Mr. BLAIN. I will take another opportunity of bringing up the matter.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. SPROULE. What business does the government propose to take up to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Supply, in the same department.

At six o'clock House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 30, 1908.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION—CEMENT.

Mr. J. D. REID asked :

1. Has the Montreal Harbour Commissioners lately given a contract for cement?
2. If so, was the quantity 30,000 barrels? If not, how many barrels were contracted for?
3. To whom was the contract given?
4. Is it a fact that this order is to be imported from Belgium?
5. Is the government aware that there are cement manufacturing industries in Canada, making first-class cement?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The first four questions are answered on information received from the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

1. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON.

2. The quantity contracted for is 100,000 bags of 94 pounds each, the commissioners to have the option of reducing or increasing the quantity 25 per cent.
3. Dillon's Limited, Montreal.
4. Tenders for the cement were called for by advertisement. The lowest and most advantageous tender which complied with the specifications was accepted. The brand to be supplied is 'North's Condor' made in Belgium.
5. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. I omitted to ask the price paid for the cement. Will the minister get that information.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will inquire.

MICHAEL J. WALLACE.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked :

1. Is one Michael J. Wallace employed at Windsor, Ontario, by the Customs Department?
2. If so, when was he appointed, and what is his salary and duties?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs) :

1. Yes.
2. He has been employed since 19th of June, 1907. His salary is $90 a month, repayable by the contractors of the Detroit River tunnel, as special services. His duties are to keep a check of materials imported for the tunnel.

IMMIGRATION ACT.

Mr. LENNOX asked :

1. Has an order in council been passed pursuant to an Act of this session intituled 'An Act to amend the Immigration Act,' Bill No. 135?
2. If so, will the minister bring down and lay on the table this order in council?
3. If not yet passed, when does the government propose to take action, and what is the cause of this delay?
4. Will the minister bring down the order in council when passed?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). A memorandum to council is being prepared and will be brought down when passed.

DOKIS INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. PERLEY asked :

1. In what newspapers has a notice been published regarding the sale of the timber on the Dokis Indian reserve?
2. On what day was the first insertion of the notice printed in each of these newspapers?
3. What is the total number of insertions authorized by the government to be published in each of them up to the day of proposed sale?

4. Have the lines been run on the ground dividing the said reserve into the different timber berths which are advertised to be sold separately?

5. If so, when were these lines run, and where can a record of the same be seen?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1 and 2:

Paper authorized and date of authorization to King's Printer.

3. One insertion each week, between authorization and date of sale, 24th of June, 1908.

4. No, but a surveyor has been instructed to do the work, and it is expected that he will be on the ground this week.

5. After return of survey has been made, record thereof may be seen in the Department of Indian Affairs.

BRITISH PENSIONERS.

Mr. BLAIN asked:

1. Has there been issued to British pensioners residing in Canada a notice from or through the Department of Militia and Defence to the following purport:

'Acting under instructions from the Postmaster General in England, I have deducted from your pension the sum of ,' being 3 per cent, for the period May 1, 1906, to August 31, 1907; the 3 per cent tax to continue during residence in Canada.'

2. If so, under what authority and at whose instance was this notice issued, and when was it issued?

3. What is the object and upon what grounds is this deduction made from the income of these pensioners?

4. What are the circumstances attendant upon the action of the Department of Militia and Defence in this connection?

5. Is it intended to discourage the residence of these pensioners in Canada?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (for Minister of Militia and Defence). If any such notice was received by an imperial pensioner resident in Canada, it was sent by the army officer paying pensions acting under instructions from the imperial authorities, and for which neither the Canadian government nor the Militia Department is in any way responsible.

UNITED STATES WARSHIPS ON GREAT LAKES.

Mr. BLAIN asked:

1. Does the government propose to make any inquiry as to the armament and crew of the following United States training ships or war ships upon the great lakes: (a) 'Yantic,' (b) 'Hawk,' (c) 'Fern,' (d) 'Dorothea,' (e) 'San Juan,' (f) 'Essex,' (g) and 'Sandoval'?

2. Does the government propose making any inquiries as to the crew and armament of the 'Nashville,' a United States war ship or training ship which is to pass through the canals into the great lakes during the year 1908?

3. Does the government consider that the matter of the armament and crew of these vessels has any relation to the convention of 1818 with respect to naval forces upon the great lakes?

4. What are the terms of the convention or agreement of 1818 with respect to a naval force upon the great lakes?

Right hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for Minister of Militia and Defence):

1 and 2. The Department of Militia is obtaining information on this subject. (Note. 'San Juan' should read 'Don Juan.')

3. The government is not in a position to express an opinion at this moment.

4. In April, 1817, an agreement was entered into between Great Britain and the United States to the effect that the naval force of the respective countries, on the lakes, should be confined to the following vessels on each side, that is to say:

On Lake Ontario, to one vessel not exceeding 100 tons burden and armed with one 18-pound cannon;

On the Upper Lakes, to two vessels not exceeding like burden each and armed with like force;

On Lake Champlain, to one vessel not exceeding like burden and armed with like force;

No other vessel of war to be built or armed on the lakes.

The agreement is terminable by either party giving six months notice of its intention.

HARBOUR OF LOUISBURG, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens) asked :

1. Who was the harbour master at the Port of Louisburg, Nova Scotia, for the year 1906, and what remuneration did he receive for his services?
2. What was the amount of harbour dues collected at the port of Louisburg, Nova Scotia for the year 1906?
3. What amount of the harbour dues collected for or during 1906 has been forwarded to the department and at what date?
4. What remuneration did H. C. V. LaValle receive for his services as harbour master at the port of Louisburg, Nova Scotia, for the year 1907?
5. What amount of harbour dues collected during 1907 has been forwarded to the department?
6. Who is the deputy harbour master at the port of Louisburg, Nova Scotia, when was he appointed, and what remuneration?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. H. C. V. LeValle, $200.
2. $405.50.
3. $55.50 in March, 1907.
4. $200.
5. $128.50.
6. John Townsend, sr., appointed 1st May, 1899, $150 per annum from the fees collected.

SECTION 16, 15, 27, WEST 4TH MERIDIAN.

Mr. HERRON asked :

1. In respect of section 16, 15, 27, west 4th meridian, what is the history of this section?
2. Who were the original homesteaders, if any?
3. Have patents been issued? If so, to whom, and on what grounds?
4. If sold, what was the price per acre and what were the reasons for and condition of sale?
5. To whom does the section now belong?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Section 16, 15, 27, west 4th meridan, less area patented to the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company for right of way, was entered for as homesteads in April, 1903. On the 27th April, 1904, Mr. J. Bailey Powell was notified at Ottawa that the Northwest Ranching and Packing Company Limited, were permitted to purchase for the purpose of their business, at the current rate of $3 per acre, sections 9, 15, 17 and 21, in township 15, range 27, west 4th meridian, and to acquire from the homesteaders on section 16 their rights to that section. Terms of sale were that patent would be issued when payment was made in full, that $40,000 be expended in bona fide improvements and buildings within two years ; one-half the purchase money must be paid at once, and should the conditions not be fulfilled the lands should revert to the crown. The homesteaders on section 16 abandoned their entries and the lands were sold to the company at $3 per acre. Being unable to fulfil the conditions of the sale, owing to a difficulty with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under authority of an order in council dated 31st August, 1907, the amount paid by the Northwest Ranching and Packing Company, was applied in full payment for the N.½ of the N.½ of section 9, and the whole of section 16, less right of way, and the sale of the remainder of the lands was cancelled and patent for the said section 16 and N.½ of N.½ of section 9 was issued to the company on the 14th October, 1907.
2. N.E.¼, William Fisher ; N.W.¼, H. J. Parkhill ; S.E.¼, William J. Parkhill ; S.W. ¼, J. B. Powell.
3. Yes, to the Northwest Ranching and Packing Company, Limited. See answer to No. 1.
4. $3 per acre. Answered by No. 1.
5. The government is not in possession of any information as to the present owners.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. DANIEL asked :

1. How long has Mr. G. M. Ryan, late superintendent of Railway Mail Service, been dead?
2. Has any one been appointed to fill this position? If not, why not?
3. If no one has yet been appointed, who does the work, and under what conditions?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

Mr. Ryan died 28th June, 1907.
2. No. The question is under consideration.
3. The work is performed by Mr. C. A. Murray, a first-class clerk in the railway mail service at St. John, N.B.

THE WOOLLEN INDUSTRY.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL asked :

1. How many people were engaged in the woollen mills of Canada in the years 1897 and 1907, respectively?
2. How much capital was invested in the woollen mills of Canada in the years 1897 and 1907, respectively?
3. What was the value of the output of the woollen mills of Canada in the years 1897 and 1907, respectively?
4. How many woollen factories, both large and small, were in operation in Canada in the years 1897 and 1907, respectively?
5. What was the total value or amount of the wool and woollen manufactures imported into Canada during each year, from and including the year 1897 down to and including the fiscal year 1908?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). We have no statistics of the production of woollen materials for 1897 and 1907. The statistics for the years 1900 and 1905 as shown by the censuses of 1901 and 1906 are as follows, for works employing five hands and over :—

Classes.	No. of establishments.	Capital.	No. of employees.	Value of products.
Woollen goods, 1900	157	10,486,198	6,795	7,359,541
Woollen goods, 1905	103	6,808,233	4,587	5,717,735
Woollen yarns, 1900	6	57,400	68	86,350
Woollen yarns, 1905	3	163,177	80	154,000

Statement of the quantity and value of raw wool and the value of woollen manufactures imported into Canada during the fiscal years ended June 30, 1897-1906, and the fiscal years ended 31st March, 1907 and 1908 :

Year.	Wool, raw.		Woollen manufactures.
	Quantity.	Value.	Value.

1904	7,339,369	1,319,735	15,219,721
1905	7,617,211	1,553,431	15,607,010
1906	6,311,837	1,489,268	17,482,570
1907 (9 m.).	3,928,791	853,152	14,873,114
1908	6,129,216	1,407,274	21,213,234

The statement of imports is taken from the trade tables for the 11 fiscal years 1897 to 1907, as published in the tables, and for 1908, as procured from the Customs Department.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—MR. JUSTICE CASSELS.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the First Minister if the instructions which were issued to Messrs. Watson and Perron, and which were alluded to by the Minister of Justice in his speech the other evening, can be got and laid on the table of the House for the present discussion.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. So far as the instructions to Mr. Watson are concerned, there is no objection, and I will lay them on the table at any time. I had no communication with Mr. Perron except a short verbal interview.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask whether that verbal interview has been reduced to writing ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Not in any way.

Mr. FOSTER. It ought to be.

BOUNDARIES OF MANITOBA.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I would like to renew a question which I asked in the Prime Minister's absence prior to the Easter holidays, and to which the Finance Minister was unable to give me a definite reply, that is, when we may expect the Bill which was promised for this session, I believe, to extend the boundaries of the province of Manitoba. The session is wearing on, and this is a very important measure, and I would like to know if the government have considered such a Bill and if it is their intention to introduce it this session ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The government have considered the question and it is their intention to introduce a Bill this session.

WHARF ON RIVER THAMES.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I have information that the wharf at the mouth of the river Thames is in danger of being carried away. I called the attention of the minister to this some time ago and would again ask him to have it attended to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Where is the wharf ?

Mr. CLEMENTS. The river Thames wharf at the lighthouse at the mouth of the Thames river.

HOSPITAL LOT, BELLEVILLE.

Mr. PORTER. A return was ordered on the 18th March last regarding the purchase by the government of property in Belleville known as the hospital lot. I think it was purchased as a site for a drill shed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall have the matter looked into.

SUPPLY—CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT—Mr. JUSTICE CASSELS.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make some observations to the House with respect to the report of the Civil Service Commission. That report has naturally attracted a good deal of attention, not only in the House but throughout the country as well. I was somewhat misled when I first took up a copy of this report, because in glancing over it hurriedly I imagined for the moment that I had in my hands some of the campaingn literature issued by hon. gentlemen opposite in the good old days before they were elected to office. At page 37 of the report I observed the following remarks :

It is true that the salaries of most of the civil servants are not equal to what they were thirty or forty years ago, in consequence of the greatly increased cost of living, the obvious and logical result of our wasting, impoverishing and demoralizing system of protection.

That phrase has a singularly familiar sound. I commend it to my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) as the report of one of his own commissioners who seem to entertain a different view of the present tariff from that which the hon. gentleman is so ready to place before us. There is this difference however in the character of this utterance as compared with that of similar utterances which were made by hon. gentlemen opposite in the days gone by. The utterance of Mr. Fyshe—as any man who knows him will be willing to testify—is absolutely sincere and would be the rule of his conduct if he were in power to-morrow. But the similar pledges of these hon. gentlemen opposite, though made with all the vehemence of Mr. Fyshe, were utterly forgotten when they attained the power to fulfil them.

Coming to the report itself, it naturally deals with the subject of civil service reform. I do not intend to speak of legislative reform to-day at any great length because I do not desire to forestall my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who has had on the Order Paper a motion with regard to that particular subject which he intends bringing before the House, and which he dropped some time ago because the report we are now considering had not been printed. Civil Service reform had its commencement in England early in the last century. It had its origin then in an attempt to reform the Indian civil service. Some advance was made later on in 1832 ; and in 1854 or 1855, the government of Great Britain, being unable to obtain the assent of parliament, took the matter into their own hands and determined by executive action that appointments to the civil service should be made upon merit alone and from men selected after competitive examination. Parliament shortly afterwards fell into line, and to-day the civil service of Great Britain challenges and commands the admiration of the world. Not only in Great Britain has the work of civil service reform made itself manifest to the advantage of the country. Had not a similar service been accomplished in India, even before reform was brought about in England, we would in all likelihood see a very different condition of affairs in India to-day. Were it not for the reform of the civil service in India, I verily believe that the power of Great Britain in that country would probably have come to a termination before this, and the fact that that great country is to-day ruled—ruled well and wisely I believe—by the British Crown is due, as much as to anything else, to the education, the status and the character of the men who belong to the Indian civil service and who have given just and equitable government to the people of that country.

In the speech which I made in Halifax on the 20th August last, I said that the Conservative party favoured a thorough and complete reformation of the laws relating to the civil service so that future appointments shall be made by an independent commission acting on the report of examiners. Some of the government organs say the government propose to bring in a measure on that line. I for one would be prepared to assist them in every way if they did, and I believe that the result would be a more enduring monument to their memory than anything they have accomplished during the twelve years they have been in power.

Let us consider one difference between the system which prevails in Great Britain and that which prevails in this country. In Great Britain the policy of every department is dominated by a political head, and its administration by a permanent head. Upon a change of government, the affairs of every department go on as before without any change except that which may be brought about by a change of policy, instituted by the political head of the department. That is a system which has not been so much in force in this country. In this country the political head of the department takes a greater or smaller share in the administration of the department itself. I believe that the British system is on the whole the best, although I am not insensible to some advantages which may be claimed for our system in a new country such as Canada, where the political head of the department may be very thoroughly in touch with the particular needs and aspirations of some interests under his special jurisdiction.

But even under the English system, what is the constitutional rule as to political responsibility? That rule is well known. I have quoted it many times in this House. Let me repeat it once again because it is very short. The rule will be found in Todd at volume 1, page 628, as follows :

As a necessary consequence of the division of the civil service into political and non-political officers, and of the acknowledged supremacy of the members of the administration over all the subordinate employees, it is required by our parliamentary system that every branch of the public service should be represented, either directly or indirectly, in the houses of parliament. This duty is performed by the political heads, who are themselves solely responsible for every act of administration down to the minutest details of official routine. Having entire control over the public departments, they are bound to assume responsibility for every official act, and not to permit blame to be imputed to any subordinate for the manner in which the business of the country is transacted, except only in cases of personal misconduct, for which the political chiefs have the remedy in their own hands.

Surely no man can claim that in this country, where the political head takes a greater share in the administration than in Great Britain, there is any less responsibility upon the political head than in Great Britain.

I do not propose to deal at any length to-day with the subject of civil service reform by legislation. Let me, however, simply say that the requisites of civil service reform are that ability and industry must be recognized and must count, that there must be a sense of responsibility and that the civil service must not be a mere machine. Appointments upon merit and the recognition of merit in promotions must lead to a cultivation of individual initiative, which ought to tend very greatly towards raising the standard of the civil service in this country. This is recognized and expressed better than I have expressed it in the report itself, and I shall conclude my remarks upon this portion of the subject by expressing the hope that we shall bring about in Canada such legislative and administrative reform that Canada shall have not the worst, but the best system of civil service extant. Great corporations in Canada, dealing with this question upon common sense business lines and with honest and intelligent endeavour, have a splendid service where merit is recognized and receives promotion. If these great corporations can have such a service why cannot we have the same and why should we continue in the public service of Canada a system in which, according to this report, the evils of political patronage make themselves manifest at every step and upon every inspection?

Let us look for a moment at what the commissioners state in their report—and this is the report of gentlemen appointed by this government, gentlemen in whom they have confidence, and in whom they still say they have confidence—and see what these gentlemen say as to the working of the political pull, of the patronage system, under the present government. At page 13 of the report, from which I shall be obliged to quote very freely for the purpose of making my points, as I prefer to use its exact language instead of attempting to paraphrase it from memory, we read:

Your commissioners have so far dealt with the paragraph in the order of reference, stating that 'while the general principles of the Civil Service Act are regarded as satisfactory, &c., &c.' From the inquiries made by the commissioners and the evidence submitted to them they are constrained to declare that they are unable to agree with the expression of opinion contained in the order of reference, and they are of opinion that the repeal of the Act is really the best course to pursue in the public interest. What should be given in its place the commissioners will state when they come to that part of the report in which they make recommendations.

Let us now see some of the grounds at least upon which they put forward this statement respecting the present working of the Civil Service Act. On the same page they say:

The commissioners also find that in order to meet the pressure brought upon the several departments by influential politicians to take on assistants, officials who have not passed the examinations are employed temporarily and are called labourers. Patronage seems to run more or less through every department of the public service.

Again, on page 14, speaking of a particular branch of the post office, the commissioners state:

In that special branch of the public service politics was found, as a rule, to play an important part. The commissioners consider from the evidence submitted to them that on the part of responsible officials of the several departments, especially in the outside service, there is a dread of the politician, and every bit of strategy is resorted to to circumvent the carrying out of the patronage system.

On page 15 the commissioners say:

Your commissioners found in their rounds that a collector of customs, a city postmaster, a post office inspector and others were appointed politically. The recent appointment of a postmaster at Kingston was on the recommendation of the patronage committee; the last appointment to the postmastership at Montreal, the most important in the Dominion, was given to an aged member of parliament, 67 years old.

And further on:

It is the political element in the Act which, from time to time, has become more aggressive and which has steadily tended to deteriorate the public service. It would seem to the commissioners that the great prosperity of the country during the last fifteen years has been such that able men, who were formerly attracted to the service of the state have now ceased to look to the rewards of that service and have turned their attention to other avocations in which they see prospects of higher emoluments, with the result that inefficient and inferior men, unable to obtain better positions in the outside world, through political operations and other means, have been brought into the service; whatever the cause the tendency is more and more to lower the standard of the civil service with the consequent detriment to the business of the state.

Again, at page 19, we find further evidence with respect to this :

In other instances of temporary employment people who have failed to pass the necessary examination, through political pressure or otherwise, have been unloaded on the departments when help is necessary, and to overcome the provisions of the Act are graded as labourers or some such designation.

These are sweeping statements, and if they are true—and they have not been denied up to the present—they are statements that show that the system of patronage carried on openly and avowedly by this government has seriously deteriorated the public service of this country during the twelve years they have been in power. But this is not all. On the same page of their report I find :

Your commissioners consider that in many cases promotions have been forced on the several departments owing to political influence; that the officials promoted do the same work as they performed in the lower grade, and, as has been mentioned before, promotions have taken place as a rule for other causes than the necessities of the service.

Can anything be more damaging, can anything be more of a condemnation of the government than a statement such as that ? How is the power of appointment to public office, or the power of promotion in public office to be regarded ? Is it not to be regarded as a public trust ; is it not a trust as sacred as the duty of the government to deal fairly and honestly and wisely with the revenues of this country? When we find three men, political friends of this government, able men, representative men, men whose ability and wisdom and honesty have not been doubted, deliberately stating in this report as they have done, that not the interests of the service but political pull has dominated the appointments to and promotions in the public service, surely we would be justified in expecting that before this date—because this report has been before the House for more than a month—the government or some member of the government would have given some explanation or contradiction of the statement I have just read.

But that is not all. On page 27 of the report the commissioners state :

As a rule your commissioners found in the outside service that politics enter into every appointment, and politicians on the spot interest themselves not only in the appointments but in subsequent promotions of officers. While at Ottawa the departments generally are administered with a good consideration for the public interest, yet in the outside service the politics of the party is of greater importance in making appointments and promotions than the public interests of the Dominion.

I invite the attention of the right hon. gentleman and of every member of the government to this portion of the commissioners' report. The statement there made calls for observation from the government, and cannot fail, under present conditions, to arouse very great distrust among the people of this country. Again on page 28 :

In the outside service those who have the 'political pull' use it for all it is worth; they pass by their superior officers and bring pressure to procure anything that may prove to their advantage.

On page 29 reference is made to the Department of Customs :

The chief positions in the outside service of this department are political appointments. Every collector of customs has been appointed from the ranks of the party in power at the moment.

Then on the same page, speaking of the same department :

Curious facts were brought to light in the inquiries into the outside service. At Montreal, for instance, there were found two landing waiters, one appointed in 1871 and the other in 1891, the one doing duty at the Bonaventure station and the other at the Dalhousie square station, both equally good men. The officer appointed in 1871, according to the last Civil Service list, after 36 years of service, obtained a salary of $750. The officer appointed in 1891, with 20 years less service, obtained a salary of $1,000; and when inquiry was made the collector informed the commissioners that a most prominent influential citizen of Canada who could not be refused had been approached by the friends of the officer who was appointed in 1891, and having inquired into the matter, insisted that his protégé should have an increase in salary.

So that not only does appointment to public office depend upon political pull and upon patronage, not only does promotion in office depend upon political pull and patronage, but the very salaries paid out of the public exchequer of this country are doled out to one or other civil service employee according to the amount of political pull he can summon to his aid. But that is not all.

Mr. PATERSON. May I ask if that was not a circumstance that took place under the old government and not under this?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I always was under the impression that the hon. gentleman did not regard the old government as the exemplar of all the virtues; and I have always been under the impression that the hon. gentleman, when he paraded this country from 1878 to 1896, proclaimed loudly the reforms he would bring about. If the hon. gentleman, after a circumstance of that kind is brought to his attention, has no better answer to give than to say that the Conservative party which he condemned from one end of the country to the other, did the same thing, then I think he ought to resign his office and get out of public life.

Mr. PATERSON. I am making no defence for anything I have done, I am asking the hon. gentleman a question. He says the public service has deteriorated under this administration. he cites this Act where political pull was exercised and I ask him whether the case occurred under my administration of the Customs Department or under the previous administration. I made no comments, I simply asked a question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not making these comments myself, I am reading the report of the commissioners appointed by the Minister of Customs and his colleagues. In order to make it perfectly plain I will read it again to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PATERSON. No, read the evidence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Am I not entitled to read the report of the commission appointed by this government? I do not know whether the commissioners have been paid by this government, but they were appointed by this government, and I presume they were paid for their services. They made this report——

Mr. PATERSON. The report is supposed to be founded on evidence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman intimate that the report is untrue or incorrect?

Mr. PATERSON. As I read the report, I was under the impression that this particular case they refer to took place under the previous government. If I am wrong, I would like to be set right.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, in the name of all that is sensible what would the hon. gentleman argue if the evidence discloses that ?

Mr. PATERSON. I looked to see, and I think so, but I may be mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. You had better look again. You want to get your work done for you.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I will read another paragraph :

In Toronto your commissioners found that the senior officer in point of service who was appointed in 1896 was the fourth in point of seniority. The collector, surveyor and cashier were all his juniors, although drawing larger salaries than he receives. There is no question of the integrity and ability of the officer in question. The only suggestion which the commissioners can make in regard to the outside service of the customs is to have the department absolutely divorced from political influence, and have all the appointments put upon the basis of merit.

Further on, on page 30 :

Of course, in the Inland Revenue Department, political appointments, as in other branches of the public service, prevail.

Further, on page 31 :

Every postmaster is appointed politically, and the number of what are called city post offices is small. Hundreds of post offices are used for the benefit of politicians rather than the benefit of the state. Only recently has it been pointed out in the public papers that the postmastership at Kemptville has been vacant for six months, and your commissioners are of opinion that until the political system in use in the outside service is entirely abolished, notwithstanding all the business methods adopted by the department, efficiency will not follow.

On page 37, after referring to some of the evils which had been demonstrated in the administration of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, the commissioners use this language :

The political pull has much to do with this; and no radical improvement need ever be expected until the political pull is completely eliminated from all branches of the service.

On page 42, speaking of the public works service, they say:

In certain cases there may be over-payments of wages such as the notorious instance which was brought to light about a year ago, when a clerk of works appointed by political influences was found to have sublet his work to another person at a much lower rate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have read from the report of the commissioners enough to indicate, not only the evil of the political pull and patronage system, but the fact that it has been in continuous activity since this government has been in power, and that through the active operation of that system much of the inefficiency, much of the extravagance, and much of the waste found by these commissioners in the administration of the public departments, are due. They further declare that the Civil Service Act which leaves full sway to the patronage system has often been evaded. They point out on page 13 that it is continually evaded by parliamentary votes:

That for the year ending March 31, 1906, during the last session of parliament, over 50 votes were passed with the saving clause 'notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act.'

And they declare :

It is known to the commissioners that many of the votes, not having that clause attached to them now, have had it in previous years.

They declare further:

It is the belief of the commissioners that hardly a vote to pay the several classes of the public service has been passed, during one sesion or another, without adding the limitation already noted.

The opposition have called attention to this evil on many occasions during recent years, and they have pointed out the constitutional difficulty, which is not noticed by the commissioners. That is very obvious to any one who considers it for a moment. Both Houses have passed a Civil Service Act, and a repeal pro tanto of that Act is annexed every year by this House to the appropriation Bill which cannot be amended, but which can only be rejected as a whole by the upper House, and as a result the House of Commons repeals pro tanto an enactment made with the sanction of both branches of the legislature, and it does that against all constitutional usage and custom. Then they point out, at page 13 and again at page 31, that the Act is evaded by improper classification. They say:

It would seem that in the four post offices examined into by the commission, letter carriers were employed to do high grade duty and duties of clerks, that they are still designated on the pay-list as letter carriers; that in consequence of a desire on the part of the officials not to bring these letter carriers in their uniforms to the public notice, they to their loss have been deprived of their uniforms as well as their street car fares

On page 31 they allude to the same subject:

Your commissioners found that in all the post office branches, officials were employed who had failed to pass the examination laid down by the Act, and who were designated as labourers although in many instances doing clerks' work. If the Civil Service Act is to be of effect your commissioners are of opinion that this incongruous state of affairs should be brought to an end as quickly as possible.

Then they found a further evasion by means of what is called 'temporary employment,' and their remarks in regard to that are on pages 18 and 19:

So-called temporary clerks are constantly admitted to the service and remain in the service until their death. There are temporary employees at Ottawa who have been there for thirty or forty years. In other instances of temporary employment people who have failed to pass the necessary examination, through political pressure or otherwise, have been unloaded on the departments when help is necessary and to overcome the provisions of the Act are graded as labourers or some such designation.

It goes back thirty or forty years. It is obvious that some of these men must have been taken on by administrations which preceded the present one, but the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) will remember that we have brought this matter up over and over again in this House, particularly upon his estimates and upon the estimates of other ministers as well, and have urged that there was every reason in the public interest why these men, if they are to be retained indefinitely, should be put on the permanent staff and brought thoroughly within the provisions of the Civil Service Act. Then, it is pointed out, at pages 14 and 42 of the report, that a very large number in the employment of the government are not under the Civil Service Act at all. I will not read that portion of the report as hon. gentlemen can consult it for themselves.

The commissioners deal with the question of suitable remuneration, and I agree entirely that it is a question of the utmost possible importance. The recommendations of the commission should be taken into consideration by the government at the very earliest possible moment. Although I have not had the opportunities of studying it that are possessed by hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches, my own opinion of the civil service, as we see it at Ottawa at the present time, is that it is over-manned and underpaid. I believe that men have been introduced into the departments of the government by means of political patronage and political pull who are not wanted there, and that if the officers of the government, the heads of the different branches in these departments, were consulted and their evidence taken fully and frankly many of them would state that men have been brought into their departments whom they did not want, and whom they found to be absolutely useless. As far as many officials are concerned I believe they are underpaid and that men doing the same amount of work in the service of the great corporations and institutions of this country are better paid than the average civil servant is at the present time. This, however, is a subject that I do not intend to dwell upon. It will no doubt come to the attention of the House later on in the session.

The commissioners deal also with the necessity of a pension system, and their observations in that regard are worthy of being quoted. At page 21 they use this language:

At the outset your commissioners consider it a subject of regret that the Superannuation Act, which had been in force for over twenty-seven years, should have been repealed, and the present Retirement Act put in its place. To the commissioners the repeal seems most illogical; when it is found that within a few years after its repeal Pension Acts have been placed on the statute-book providing for pensions to the members of the Northwest Mounted Police; the staff of the Intercolonial Railway, the members of the Permanent Corps and Headquarters Staff, and other employees under the Militia Department, as well as to their widows and families, it would seem that the action in abolishing the Superannuation Act was not only illogical but hasty and inconsiderate.

So would think any person who has made a study at all of conditions as they prevail in this country at the present time. There is hardly a large corporation, such as a railway company or a banking company in Canada, that does not provide pensions for its employees after a certain age. Not only does it provide pensions for its employees, but it provides that there shall be an allowance under certain conditions to the widows and children of its officers after their death ; so that any man entering the service of one of these corporations has not only the assurance of a competence during his own old age, but he can feel absolutely certain that those who are dear to him and whom he may leave behind him will not suffer in want and poverty after he is gone. The government found a Superannuation Act upon the statute-book. No one pretends that it was perfect, but it might have been amended and brought up to the standard of the present day. Instead of moulding it in that way the government abolished it, and they provided a retiring allowance which these commissioners find to be absolutely inadequate and insufficient. They touch the subject further on in the report, at page 46. I will take the opportunity of quoting what they say there:

Your commissioners have in conclusion to point out that they are unanimously agreed that a comprehensive superannuation system should be placed on the statute-book; and that this system in the present state of the Dominion should include pensions to dependents of civil servants for there seems little doubt that with the exception of slight set backs the conditions of life in the Dominion are and are likely to be such that advances in prices of commodities will be the rule, and it will be almost impossible for the average civil servant to effect any savings from his salary. With that view your commissioners consider that the time has arrived when an efficient pension system should be put into force.

Now, I come, Mr. Speaker, to that portion of the report of the commissioners in regard to the administration of the different departments. Let me express my conviction that the government never intended that these commissioners should make any such examination of, or any such investigation into the several departments as that which they have attempted in the time at their disposal. In fact, we have heard rumours throughout the country, we have heard opinions freely expressed by certain stalwart Liberals, that the matter went wrong through the absence of the right hon. Prime Minister last May, and that if he had been here this order in council never would have passed in any such terms as would have permitted this investigation. But, if we had entertained any doubt as to the intentions of the government in that regard, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) with his accustomed candour, has made the matter perfectly clear. He has pointed out that the government, never, for one moment, dreamed of the slightest investigation into the administration of any of the departments.

Well, Sir, we know from their record in this parliament that that statement of the Minister of Justice is absolutely true. When did they ever grant an investigation into any department? Two years ago when I moved for an investigation into the Department of the Interior with regard to the disposal of public lands, the Prime Minister declared that no investigation would be permitted; that if charges were made, they would be investigated, but in the meantime they would deny us such investigation and access as would permit us to make charges even if these charges were well founded. What was the attitude of the right hon. gentleman with regard to the Department of Marine and Fisheries ? After he himself had stated in this House that that department was not being well administered, he followed it up by bringing down a motion not to investigate the department but to find out whether or not the steamship 'Arctic' was physically capable of holding the stores which were said to have been placed in her. And when I moved in amendment that the whole Department of Marine and Fisheries should be investigated, the Prime Minister said that our words and our proposals were simply froth and wild talk. Does he now think the report of this Civil Service Commission froth and wild talk ? I venture to say that if he had permitted that investigation into the Department of Marine which we asked for two years ago in this House, all that is in this report and a good deal more would have been made known to the people of Canada long ago.

Let me bring to the attention of the House the charmingly candid words in which the Minister of Justice has made it plain that the Civil Service Commission took the government by surprise. In his speech on the 28th of April the Minister of Justice said :

I said on that occasion what I have no hesitation in saying again and what any hon.gentleman who reads the mandate to these commissioners can at one see for himeslf, namely: that they stepped altogether outside of that which was defined to them as their jurisdiction when they made a report at length which they have made with regard to the different departments of the governmental service. They were appointed to inquire into the operation of the Civil Service Act; they were not appointed to inquire into the administration of the general departments of the government service.

Further on he said :

I am simply pointing out, not in any way of attack or even of criticism upon their work, that they did undoubtedly go beyond the commission of inquiry issued to them in what they have reported.

And further on :

They fell into an error, not unnaturally, but an error which they would not have fallen into if any one had known that they were travelling outside the purpose for which they were appointed or were engaged in an investigation which they intended to make the foundation of a report of this character—which simply illustrates the danger of acting upon or accepting the conclusions of gentlemen who have gone about a work which they were not appointed to undertake, and a work which nobody was aware they were engaged in at all.

Again he said :

And therefore, I say, I make no point whatever of the fact that they have travelled afield and outside and beyond their jurisdiction.

We are very much obliged to the Minister of Justice for making absolutely clear and beyond cavil that which every person must have believed, namely, that when the government appointed that commission they did not for one moment intend to permit the slightest investigation into any department of the government, even into this very Department of Marine which the Prime Minister himself was ready to admit had gone astray.

The Minister of Justice has used somewhat singular analogies with regard to the work of this commission. He has likened the commission especially in their work with regard to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, to a body of surveyors who by some accident have in the course of their journeyings come upon a corpse and suspect foul play. Then he proceeds to a further remarkable analogy by suggesting that the government, in the commission which they have issued to Mr. Justice Cassels are inviting him to play the part of a corner's jury. In some respects the analogy is not inappropriate. Let us look at the Department of Marine and Fisheries as it was in 1892. Mr. J. M. Courtney, a member of the present Civil Service Commission, was a member of the Civil Service Commission of 1892, and that commission made several comments upon the excellent condition, the efficiency and the economical management of the Department of Marine and Fisheries at that time. At page 27 they say:

Your commissioners observe that it has been found unnecessary to continue the division of the Department of Marine and Fisheries into two departments, and that it is thought the affairs of the department will be more economically administered by a single staff of officers, the minister and his deputy being assisted, in respect of those questions which relate more especially to the conservation of the valuable fisheries, by the study and experience of an expert.

At page 66 they say :

Ocean and river service, lighthouse and coast service, marine hospitals and steamboat inspection—

All under the control of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and involving an expenditure of $749,000. Your commissioners in looking over the outlay for some years back, are pleased to mention that they find a large measure of effectiveness has been introduced into these services, and expenditures that have been found of little advantage to the department have been dropped.

At page 68 :

SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS.

The outlay for these institutions covers the cost of meteorological service, including expenses for telegraphing weather warnings, for instruments, etc., and expenditure on account of the observations. The amount spent last year exceeded $60,000. The service is under the control of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and is well supervised.

At page 85 and 86 they report on important reforms made in the simplification of the accounts and book-keeping which were due to a particular officer mentioned, and they say :

This in an instance where it would be desirable to have such improvements made known and adopted by the departments generally.

At page 86 they say :

This department amongst other things has the charge of 710 lighthouses—more than there are on all the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland. We should judge that a very efficient outlook is kept on the very diversified service of this department and that supplies therefor are purchased with reference to economy.

That is the department as it was in 1892. I will contrast a little later on the department as it was found in 1907, and I think I may admit that the analogy of the Minister of Justice was a good one, and that the Civil Service Commissioners in 1907 found in that department the corpse of that honest, efficient, and economical administration which did prevail in 1892, but which has been assassinated and destroyed under this government. The Minister of Justice likens the functions of Mr. Justice Cassels to those of a corner, but in the present case the coroner has a very narrow scope of inquiry into matters which ought to be presented before him.

Coming to the report of the commissioners upon the several departments of the government, we find that it discloses deplorable extravagance, waste, inefficiency, confusion and lack of system in several of the departments which have been partially but only partially investigated by them. Let us look at some illustrations of this. On pages 23 and 24 of the report, the commissioners say :

Owing to the good times which have recently been prevalent and the large revenues received from customs, the old-fashioned notions of frugality and living within one's means have to some extent been departed from, and instances have been found of departments giving orders for stores and other services to be delivered within a year in excess of the vote granted by parliament. Large amounts have been spent at several places in the Dominion for supplies bought from those enjoying political patronage at what may be called retail rates. Heavy expenditures have been incurred without necessary consideration or supervision, and while no doubt the several officers have thought themselves justified, owing to the expansion of the revenues, yet such conduct is contrary to the public interests and, in the opinion of the commissioners, ought to be restrained.

And let me say, in justice to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that these observations are not confined to his department, but are general observations, apparently applying to every department of the government which has come under the notice of the commissioners, except where they have otherwise stated in their report. Let us look at pages 26 and 27 :

By the evidence of several officials who are concerned in the purchase of stores, it has been conclusively shown that large amounts of money are paid over each year to merchants whose names are on the patronage lists in the several localities. It has been pointed out in the most simple way that this practice has been followed by everybody and it could not be altered. Your commissioners, however, consider that while the practice was always bad, yet through the great development of the country the extent was not so great as to become serious until of recent years. When one witness stated that his expenditure has increased threefold recently, and it is a well-known fact that the public expenditure has increased in the last twelve years about fifty per cent or more, in the opinion of the commissioners the time has come when this practice of paying retail prices to a few favoured merchants in each locality should be discontinued. Before suggesting a remedy your commissioners wish to point out how these expenditures are managed. In the first place there is the question of certificates. These certificates are in general terms, that the articles have been received, that the articles are necessary in the public interest, that the prices charged are according to contract, or that the prices are fair and just. In reference to the question of certificates, the Auditor General in his evidence pointed out that in one department he did not believe in the certificates received. This is a very serious affair. Generally speaking the commissioners are of the opinion that the certificates should be given in the first place by the officer who really receives the goods, or, to quote a witness of the commission of 1892, 'who is responsible for and cognizant of the services performed.'

Further on, at page 27, they say :

Your commissioners are of opinion that in many instances stores are ordered unnecessarily, and it may be doubtful that a good quality is always delivered. Mr. Pottinger states in his evidence that it is his opinion that the amount paid by the Intercolonial Railway for coal was higher than it ought to be. In instances which have been brought to the notice of the commissioners stores have been received which were not wanted and which it is difficult to get rid of.

That is a reference perhaps to the celebrated purchase of files of which there were supplied to one of the departments more than would be required for the next 40 or 50 years. Further on they say, on the same page :

Your commissioners have come to the conclusion that the time has now arrived when it would be desirable in the public interests that purchasing agents, probably three, should be appointed at good salaries to make all purchases of goods required for the public service, and that all purchases required by the several departments should be procured by this means.

Exactly the proposition which was put forward by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in a resolution which was opposed by the government, and especially by the Minister of Finance, who moved an amendment thereto. On page 34 we find further testimony :

A list of prices paid in Quebec was, in February last, submitted to the manager of the shipyard at Sorel, for comparison with the prices which he was paying there; and in his reply he stated that the prices were generally about 50 per cent higher than the prices being paid at Sorel. One item objected to was the purchase of a certain brand of flour at $6.95 a barrel. When this was inquired into at the instance of the Auditor General, the agent replied: 'These are ———'s prices, and the same prices are charged by every flour dealer in Quebec for the same brand of flour. These brands cannot be bought for less here. If as good flour can be bought in Halifax for $5.20 per barrel, it would pay the department to import it from there. There are other brands of flour that can be bought in this market from ——— and others at $6 upwards, but not less than $6, suitable for our purposes. Our people generally choose the best, for the reason that it is subject to changes of temperatures which might cause it to harden or sour, as has often occurred with ordinary flour.' And he adds later on 'referring to the matter of flour, there is but one flour dealer on the patronage list.'

And the remedy which he proposes is remarkable in its simplicity :

I beg respectfully to suggest that you place one or two more on the list of such dealers.

How exceedingly effective that would be ! Then the commissioners add their own comment as follows :

Your commissioners took the trouble to inquire of the makers of the particular brand of flour in question what price they were selling it at in Quebec at the time of the purchase referred to, and were informed that the price was $4.50 per barrel, at which price they would only have been too glad to sell to the department. It should hardly be necessary to make any comment on this.

In other words, the government of this country, through this particular department, into which the Prime Minister refused any investigation two years ago, have been paying $6.95 a barrel year after year for flour which they could have bought in the very same city of Quebec for $4.50. Further on the commissioners say:

Your commissioners are informed on the best of authority that this state of things has been going on ever since pre-confederation times. As some evidence that the heads of the department have been quite aware of it, we find on one of the files a memorandum by one of the officers dated May 31, 1905, regarding expenditures in connection with lighthouses. 'I am of opinion that in the Quebec agency alone a saving of at least $25,000 per annum can be made by compelling the agent to obtain authority for his expenditures over ordinary supplies and maintenance. If this is not carried out, the department can look for an overdraft for the next fiscal year of from $50,000 to $100,000.'

The commissioners add a sarcastic comment on the extraordinary nature of the remedy proposed. The remedy would be, of course, either to purchase the goods by tender covering a certain length of time or to adopt the system of purchasing agents which has been advocated by my hon. friend from North Toronto. The commissioners add another memorandum from an officer of the Marine and Fisheries Department, in which he says:

I may also add that if you had a good storekeeper, articles which are often required could be purchased wholesale instead of retail, and thus a considerable saving could be effected—a saving of $8,000 or $10,000 a year could be made.

Further down on the same page the commissioners say:

These are comparatively small matters, but they are not small in the aggregate; and they are not small as symptoms of the disease the department is suffering from.

Dealing further with this diseased department, as the commissioners call it, on page 37 of their report, they say:

Money is wasted in small things as in great because no one seems to have any motive to do otherwise.

Then a little further on:

The political pull has much to do with this and no radical improvement need ever be expected until the political pull is completely eliminated from all branches of the service.

At the bottom of the same page, 37, dealing with the Department of Militia and Defence, the commissioners report as follows:

The expenditure in this department is going up by leaps and bounds. In 1903-4 the total expenditure, both in capital and consolidated fund was in the neighbourhood of three and a half million dollars. In the estimates lately submitted to parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1909, appropriations are asked for aggregating $6,500,000 That is to say, in four years and three-quarters the expenditure will have increased, if the supply asked for is granted, to the extent of $3,000,000.

At page 41, after referring to the lack of necessity for an officer such as the inspector general and to the high salaries paid to a number of the officers in the Department of Militia and Defence, they say:

Your commissioners have noticed that it has been held to be of serious importance that the expenditure of the militia in Canada should increase with the growth of the revenue and that when once the revenue has arrived at $100,000,000 a year the expenditure should be in the same proportion to $13,000,000, as $13,000,000 is to $1,000,000, that rate being paid for conditions at the time of confederation. It would follow therefore that with a revenue of $100,000,000 a year, the expenditure should be at the rate of $8,000,000. How can this be adjusted with the various retardations which must occasionally happen through a bad harvest, stringency of the money market and other causes, the commissioners cannot understand. It would seem that the militia expenditure would have to be cut down in proportion to the revenue. The better method in the opinion of the commissioners, is that the expenditures should be increased according to the growth of the population and be put on a per capita basis.

If there is any virtue at all in the report of the commissioners, these hon. gentlemen opposite, who protested so vigorously against militia expenditures in 1906, will see that some brake is put upon the expenditure in the Militia Department. When we look at the comparative statement of expenditure given in the report of the department for the year ending 31st March, 1907, we find some rather startling conditions. Take for example the pay of the Headquarters' District Staff:

1905-6	143,880

And the pay of the permanent force:

1898	$ 249,457
1906	1,099,420

I presume that a portion of that is accounted for by our taking over the defence of Halifax and Esquimalt, but I do not know exactly the amount. Then take the other items:

	1897-8.	1905-6.
Allowances for care of arms, &c.	$ 77,876	$ 122,897
Annual drill, including supplies and transport	299,628	809,924
Military properties, construction	66,453	254,427
Warlike and other stores	46,868	174,980
Clothing and necessaries	87,344	429,727

	1897-8.	1905-6.
Provisions and supplies for permanent force	119,911	463,668
Dominion arsenal..	72,832	290,037
Arms and ammunition ..	173,740	1,092,128

The total expenditure for 1897-98 was $1,688,213, and for 1905-06 $5,594,009. And the estimates for the present year, as pointed out by the commissioners aggregate no less a sum than $6,500,000, of which, however, it is only fair to say, $1,250,000, as estimated by the Minister of Militia, is to be accounted for by our taking over the defence of Halifax and Esquimalt.

My hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) has pointed out some rather significant considerations in connection with the expenditure upon militia and defence, as compared with our expenditure upon agriculture. He has shown the House that, after making fair deduction, there was expended in all about $500,000 in the interests of agriculture during the year ending 31st July, 1906, and that during the same year no less a sum than $5,594,009 was expended on our military force. Or, as he quaintly put it, for every $11 voted for war in Canada there is only $1 voted for peace. The question is whether or not for this enormous expenditure we have obtained any increased efficiency. As to that, I shall quote a little later on some remarks of the commissioners which seem to point to the conclusion that we have not got value in return. Our hon. friends opposite, including specially the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), tore their hair in 1896 in declaiming against the expenditure by the Conservative government of a sum of $1,000,000 for arms.

Mr. BERGERON. Three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It may have been $300,000 at first, but eventually it was $1,000,000. My hon. friends on the other side were amazed that any such expenditure should be undertaken by any government in this country, and my hon. friends from Quebec on this side tell me that in the campaign of 1896 that expenditure was made a chief cry against the government. Well, what do these gentlemen think of an expenditure of $6,500,000 as compared with an expenditure of $1,700,000 by the late government? We have had no expression of opinion from them, but we have had an opinion from the commissioners, and to that I shall draw the attention of the House later on.

So far I have spoken of extravagances and waste. Let me read some extracts from the report of the commission regarding the disorganization, inefficiency and confusion which they found in certain departments. At page 34 their most striking condemnation is made, and it is in respect of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I should say that the time of the commission was very largely devoted to the inspection and investigation of this department, because for some reason of which I am not aware, they considered that the affairs of that department especially invited their attention. They say that they did not attempt to inspect or deal with the Department of Railways because they thought there were other departments on which their attention might better be bestowed. I would have liked, had there been an opportunity, to suggest to the commissioners, having regard to the operations of the Eastern Supply Company, to the Moncton land deal and other land deals carried out in the Department of Railways, that they would have found in that department quite as abundant a harvest of mal-administration, extravagance, and inefficiency as that which they did find in the Department of Marine. Let us read the conclusions of the commissioners with regard to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

There are officers enough in the department, both inside and outside, to do all the work efficiently, if they were properly trained and organized: but there is no efficient organization.

Who was responsible for the organization? The government of this country, especially the Minister of Marine and Fisheries; but every man who sits on the treasury benches is politically responsible for that lack of organization.

The only attempt at it is the appointment of men whose titles would seem to indicate what their duties are; but those duties have never been specifically defined. There is no record of anything of the kind, and there are no written or printed rules and regulations known in the service, which the commissioners think is lamentable.

Suppose that an investigation were made into the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway and that conditions such as those described in this report as existing in the Department of Marine and Fisheries were found, would it be proper for Mr. Hays or Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, as the head of the company to say: Oh, the responsibility is altogether with my subordinate officers and I will immediately institute an inquiry and take steps to have them punished?

It is practically impossible to fix responsibility on anybody. The deputy is supposed to shoulder responsibility for everything as his signature shows; but that means that he speaks for 'the department,' and 'the department,' like the King, can do no wrong. There seems to be a huge redundancy of work which proceeds in a lumbering, haphazard way, giving rise to constant blundering and confusion. There is no sign visible of a single directing head, or an intelligent purpose, unless it be that of spending as much money as possible.

Who is responsible for the expenditure in that department? The government of this country are solely responsible and the minister at the head of that department is, of course, especially responsible.

Zeal for economy and good management or pride in the work, is not visible. Perfunctory and mechanical discharge of duties is the rule, with apparently no perception of any need for improvement.

How long has this department been in that state, and is it possible that those conditions can have prevailed in any department of the government without being brought to the attention of the head of the department and, indeed, to the attention of every member of the government?

The lack of organization and of organizing power in the department has recently been very conspicuously and painfully illustrated by the fact that the accountant's or bookkeeping branch had apparently fallen into such confusion that expert accountants had to be called in to put things to rights, and create some intelligible system. After months of work by these highly paid experts the result has been at least greatly improved books, as far as mechanical form is concerned, but probably little else; and this achievement has been accomplished at an almost fabulous expense.

There is not only a lack of efficient organization and method in the department. There would also seem to be a lack of conscience. In connection with the enormous expenditures which are deemed necessary the word 'discount' never appears. It is tacitly assumed that there is no such thing; but the whole commercial world knows otherwise. If no one gets any benefit from trade with the government except the trader, then it must be clear that in these great purchases made for the government, without discount, its officers must be assisting the trader to get better prices from the government than he can get anywhere else; for, everywhere else he has to give discount. In other words, some of the government's officers are serving two masters, and apparently succeeding with both—scripture notwithstanding.

The government of this country have taken that paragraph, minus the first sentence which deals with the inefficient organization, and have appointed Mr. Justice Cassels to act, as the Minister of Justice observes, as a coroner's jury with respect to the defunct body which is found in that portion of the report. Why did the government not add the following paragraph which I am about to read :

It seems amazing that this question has never been courageously faced and dealt with. There is evidently a power in the hands of responsible officers of some of the departments which they can exercise without the necessity of giving any account of it, and with the most demoralizing consequences all round. It is certain that under such a state of things it must be impossible to develop high character in the service, or rather to prevent the deterioration of what character there is.

These words are the words of independent men in respect of the utter lack of organization, the utter lack of system, the complete and thorough demoralization of one department of the government.

When that report comes down to parliament what takes place? The men who are responsible, the men who sit on the treasury benches and who therefore are responsible for this condition of affairs, calmly hand over to investigation by Mr. Justice Cassels, one paragraph, one small portion of this report and consider themselves before parliament and before the people of this country absolutely absolved from responsibility by taking that step.

Let us look at page 37 for further evidence :

Organization, discipline, zeal for the public service, and regard for economy are all conspicuous by their absence. Money is wasted in small things as in great because no one seems to have any motive to do otherwise. While there is no real punishment for the most outrageous blundering or the most incompetent service, there is at the same time absolutely no means for the discovery of merit and the promotion of talent.

Will my right hon. friend the Prime Minister and my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) declare in the face of this House and in the face of this country that they can successfully absolve themselves from the condition of affairs disclosed by these words:

On the same page the commissioners speak of the necessity of some effective means of inspection and continue as follows :

Your commissioners have to confess that the general conclusions which they have formed regarding the administration of the department are most unfavourable. It seems to have few redeeming features: although there are some, one of which is the presence in the department of some good men, chiefly, but not wholly, in the lower ranks. With a better organization and better methods these might form the nucleus of a good staff.

Mr. JOHNSTON. There is a very interesting sentence following that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to call attention to it when he speaks ? I have read every thing in this that is necessary. At page 42, in dealing with the efficiency of another department, the commissioners report as follows :

The number of militia trained in the annual camps is about 40,000 men; that according to the evidence of Major General Lake the men attached to the rural battalions have no drill except at the annual camps, and it is arguable whether the city corps are as efficient as they were some years ago, that while only 40,000 men come out for drill of ages from eighteen to fifty, yet compared with the population of over a million in Canada between the ages of twenty and forty, the proportion seems small.

Further on :

If, with all the consideration of the Public Accounts Committee and the War Office, the expenditure in Great Britain is such that the Public Accounts Committee consider it their duty to draw attention to expensive ideas, particularly amongst military men, and that grave irregularities are punished by reprimand, the system in Canada where the control is not as effective as in the mother land, would seem to be more disadvantageous to the Dominion.

In this the commissioners are dealing with the Department of Militia. Further on, dealing with Public Works:

Your commissioners are led to believe that in many cases works have been undertaken by the Department of Public Works at the instance of the municipalities or bodies of people locally interested, in which the opinion of the outside officers of the department as to the desirability of the proposed works was not asked for. The only information sought for related to the feasibility of the works in question.

Then on the same page, 43, they point out that at least three different departments of government are charged with duties of inspection of various characters, and they suggest that all these inspection duties, and all officers engaged in the duties of inspection, should be assembled under one minister, and that the system adopted by the board of trade in Great Britain should be adopted in the country.

Then on page 40, returning again to the Department of Militia, the commissioners point out that in 1892, a recommendation from the commissioners who reported in that year, led to the abolition of the system of paymasters, and add:

In consequence of this evidence the old system of paymasters was abolished, but again, with all its defects, the system is being reintroduced.

Further, on the same page, they allude to the fact that desertions during the year 1905 from the permanent force, amounted to about one in three, and in the following year the desertions in six months were about one in six. They declare that they have not seen any report since the 30th of June, 1906, and are unable to give subsequent figures. But taking the figures of that report they declare they show a grave state of affairs with such a large number of desertions, and they use this language :

Your commissioners have come to the conclusion that the large percentage of desertions is to a great extent caused by the want of sympathy between the officers of the permanent corps and the men.

If that statement is well founded, it is one which certainly invites the earnest and immediate consideration of the government. We are paying pretty heavily for this permanent force, and it is extremely undesirable that any such condition should exist for a moment. Our headquarters staff costs within about $25,000 as much as the headquarters staff in Switzerland. The difference between the military force of this country and that of Switzerland is that in Canada, with 3,000 or 4,000 men in the permanent force, we have 40,000 men drilled for a certain number of days; whereas in Switzerland there is a pretty thoroughly organized army, as I understand, of 250,000 fighting men of the first line, ready to take the field at any moment. The difference in the results of expenditure between this country and Switzerland seems to be very marked indeed.

Now, I am sorry to have worried the House by so many quotations, which have rendered my remarks more lengthy than I could desire. But I must next come to the point that this report upon its face declares that the inquiry was partial and incomplete. If hon. gentleman turn to page 7 of the report they will find there the order in council upon which the inquiry proceeded, one paragraph of which is in the following words:

That the commissioners be requested to proceed with the inquiry as rapidly as possible, with a view to the presentation of their report at the next session of parliament.

So apparently the commissioners considered it their duty to make some report at the present session, and therefore their inquiry was not as thorough as it otherwise would have been. At page 9, in commencing their report, the commissioners use the following language :

The commissioners report that in the short and possibly inadequate time at their disposal it has become very evident that in the present state of the development of Canada important changes are required to maintain the civil service as an efficient, contented and useful part of the machinery of administrative government.

On page 20, in dealing with the efficiency and sufficiency of the departmental staff, the commissioners use the following language:

In dealing with this subject, your commissioners have to submit that in the vast service such as exists at Ottawa, in the limited time at their disposal, it has been absolutely impossible for them to inquire fully into the efficiency of the officials in the several departments. There are probably including labourers, some 3,000 employees at Ottawa. In the Department of the Interior alone there are 500 employees.

And further on :

It would take many months to examine the work of the Department of the Interior alone, and when so many officials are engaged in these several branches it would be hard to gauge with accuracy the extent or character or style of the work turned out by each.

Further, on page 27, in dealing with the outside service, the commissioners use this language :

Acting on this suggestion, as previously stated, your commissioners visited three places, and they only regret that the time at their disposal prevented them from pursuing their inquiries at other points. The information procured was most interesting and instructive, and even the chairman, who had spent nearly forty years in the public service at Ottawa, had no idea of what constituted the outside service until he visited the several localities.

On page 32, referring to the Department of Railways and Canals, they say:

Your commissioners have not visited this department, believing that other departments required more immediate inspection.

And speaking of the Department of the Interior, on the same page, they say:

With its large staff of five hundred employees at Ottawa, it would require months to thoroughly inspect the work and see that the several officials are properly employed. The commissioners regret extremely that with the short time at their disposal they were unable to visit the Northwest, much as they desired to see how the land, and more especially, the timber sales are effected.

I am sure that all good Canadians who are interested in public affairs must sincerely regret also that the time at the disposal of the commissioners did not enable them to perform that good work. At page 37 I observe that the commissioners regret that they have been unable to investigate the condition of things in some of the other departments:

But to do the work with any pretensions to thoroughness would take much more time than would probably be agreeable to the government.

I do not think there can be a doubt in the minds of any hon. gentleman in this House as to the correctness of that surmise. This quotation continues as follows:

They have been able to go over only a very small section of even the Marine and Fisheries Department. If they had had time it would have been most desirable to have inspected the work of the department at the agencies—Quebec, Sorel, Halifax, St. John and Prescott—particularly Quebec and Halifax.

At page 42 they also declare that :

There is no means by which they could appreciate whether the amounts payable for sub-target guns or for Ross rifles are proper and just, but according to the evidence the contract for the Ross rifle was prepared by the counsel employed by the company, and no security was exacted.

Now, I do not think, after these extracts from the report of the commissioners, that there can be any doubt whatever in the mind of any hon. gentleman in this House that the inquiry was partial and incomplete, that the commissioners desired to make it much more thorough and absolutely complete, and that they did not find themselves at liberty to do so simply because they felt themselves constrained by the terms of the order in council and considered themselves obliged to make a report at the present session of parliament.

The government have, according to their own views, proceeded to supplement the inquiry of the commissioners by a further investigation before Mr. Justice Cassels. The proposed investigation relates to only one portion of the administration of one department, and the order in council cuts one of the paragraphs of this report in two, disregards all the inefficiency all the extravagance, all the waste and all the mal-administration outside of that particular paragraph, and asks Mr. Justice Cassels to consider the matters referred to in this paragraph and these matters alone. What about the next paragraph which I quoted a moment ago? My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) says that the functions of a corner's jury are to be exercised by Mr. Justice Cassels and he most stoutly defends the appointment of Mr. Watson and Mr. Perron as the gentlemen who are to assist Mr. Justice Cassels in that regard. Now, I have not one single word to say in criticism of the professional status of either of these gentlemen. As far as I understand, one of them was not long ago chairman of a Liberal organization in the province of Ontario. The other was in partnership with the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the management of the department under his administration will, no doubt, come under review by Mr. Justice Cassels. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice declares that he is absolutely satisfied with the appointment of Mr. Watson and Mr. Perron and I thoroughly believe it. I do not doubt it for one moment. But that is not the question. The question is whether or not the country will be satisfied, and I do not think the country will be satisfied. Mr. Watson's inquisitorial powers in the West Elgin commission did not seem to be very far-reaching or very effective. I am not going over the story again. Sufficient it is to say that what Mr. Watson could not discover Mr. Aylesworth forced his client to confess, and I suppose that he did not force his client to confess anything which was not absolutely correct and according to fact. We may have some good reason to believe that in so far as these two gentlemen are able to control and conduct the proceedings somewhat the same result might follow. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice has likened the function of Mr. Justice Cassels to that of a coroner's jury. Well, if you find the corpse of honest, efficient, economical administration in any of the departments of he government, would you consider that the coroner's jury should be guided by men in the pay and in the employment of the assassins? That is exactly the position which the Minister of Justice is so stoutly defending. The men on the treasury benches today are responsible for the slaying of efficient, economical and honest administration in the departments. The report of 1892 shows honest, efficient and economical administration at that time. When the coroner's jury is to sit upon that which was once living, but which is now a corpse, we are to have the confidential friends and agents of the assassins guiding the efforts to probe into and investigate the cause of the decease. I think the proposition need only be stated in order to convince every hon. member of this House that the course which should have been taken was to select independent men, to go outside of the ranks of the political party which is responsible for this condition of affairs and to pursue the course which was pursued by Sir John Macdonald and Sir John Thompson in 1891 when they selected Mr. B. B. Osler and Mr. C. A. Geoffrion to probe into the Department of Public Works.

Now, Mr. Speaker, under these circumstances I think it my duty to place on record the views of the opposition in regard to the report of this commission. Let it not be forgotten that although this report was presented to the department on the 17th March, 1908, up to the present time we have not had from the government any statement of their intention to redress any of the grievances or abuses disclosed by this report, except that which was vouchsafed by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) on the day when the report was presented to the House. Although entirely apart and outside of the particular paragraph to which he directed attention on that day, the most outrageous extravagance, waste, lack of economy and efficiency have been disclosed by this report, not one word has been proffered by the government to parliament or to the country in explanation or in promise of redress. I have omitted to metion one or two portions of the report which refer to waste. I have already referred at very great length to extravagance. At page 36 of the report I find this language :

Under these circumstances it is the duty of the opposition to place itself upon record as to the necessity of reform and redress, as to the necessity of further investigation. In the first place, the resolution which I am about to move declares that the proposed inquiry before Mr. Justice Cassels is absolutely too narrow and restricted in its character. Can there be any doubt about that when it picks out one paragraph of that portion of the report which relates to only one department and when it deals with only certain incidents in that administration and not with the whole administration which has been so vigorously attacked. The next point I desire to emphasize by the resolution is that the investigation conducted by the Civil Service Commission was confessedly partial and incomplete. There can be no doubt about that after the extracts which I have read from the report. The next point which is emphasized by the motion is : That this extravagance, waste, inefficiency, and maladministration are deplorable and that immediate steps should be taken to reform and redress the same. And these being the premises laid down in the resolution, the conclusion is : That the public interest imperatively demands the appointment of a commission with full powers to make a thorough and searching investigation which would carry on to a conclusion the work already accomplished by the Civil Service Commission. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move :

That all the words after the word 'that' be left out and the following substituted therefor:—

The investigation conducted by the Civil Service Commission was confessedly partial and incomplete.

That the proposed inquiry before Mr. Justice Cassels is unsatisfactory and insufficient inasmuch at is relates to only one paragraph of the report of that commission and touches but a portion of the administration of one department.

That this House regrets the deplorable, extravagance, waste, inefficiency and maladministration revealed by that report and declares that immediate steps should be taken to reform and redress the same.

That the public interest imperatively demands the appointment of an independent commission with full powers to make a thorough and searching investigation into the several departments of the public service.

I may add in conclusion, that I have not mentioned the commissioners who have already acted simply for the reason that I do not know whether or not they would be willing to act again. If I named these gentlemen I might be met by the statement from the government that they had declined to prosecute their inquiry further, that their health, or the time at their disposal would not permit them to conclude the work they had begun. I have therefore left the words of the resolution general in their character in that respect, but I have no hesitation in saying that so far as I am concerned and so far as gentlemen on this side of the House are concerned we have absolute confidence in the thoroughness, ability and integrity of these three gentlemen and we would be glad indeed to see them appointed to carry on to a conclusion the work in which they have been engaged.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I do not believe it will be difficult for the House, even after the very lengthy speech we have heard, to come to a conclusion as to how this motion should be disposed of and to decide that we should pass to the order of the day. I followed the observations of my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) with very keen interest for I was anxious to know what arguments he would present in support of this motion. The question is not new ; we have had it under debate three or four times already and I must say that I have not observed a very unanimous consensus of opinion amongst gentlemen on the other side as to how the question should be treated. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is of opinion that the inquiry with which we have entrusted Mr. Justice Cassels is too narrow and too limited in its scope and that it should be very much enlarged, while my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) is on the contrary of opinion that this investigation of Mr. Justice Cassels is altogether useless and that we have already enough information on which to come to a conclusion. I do not hope it will be possible for me to reconcile the different opinions of gentlemen on the other side. I am satisfied that whatever the government may do or not do it will not be possible for us to have their approbation. However that may be, we will be satisfied if we have the approbation of all conscientious men in this country who are honest and unbiased in their opinions. Let me call the attention of the House to the object of the motion presented by my hon. friend. He wants to have a commission with full powers to make a thorough and searching investigation into the several departments of the public service, and the reason upon which the hon. gentleman bases this new demand for investigation is stated in the first paragraph of the motion to be :

That the investigation conducted by the Civil Service Commission was confessedly partial and incomplete.

If by that word 'partial' my hon. friend means its ordinary acceptation and that the commission showed undue favour to somebody I do not know that the reproach should come from his side of the House, but the hon. gentleman went further and in his opening remarks he stated in so many words that when he opened the report of the commission he thought he was opening a campaign document. In view of the copious extracts he has read from this report I do not know how far it was proper for him to thus at the outset belittle the report of the commission, but that is a question on which I have no comment to make.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My right hon. friend evidently misunderstood me. I made that observation simply with regard to the extract I read from Mr. Fyshe's statement respecting protection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not fail to observe that, and neither did I fail to observe that the other commissioners rather have a slap at Mr. Fyshe and state they do not share his views. If we are to take the report of the majority and not of the minority I do not think the observations come at all under the description which my hon. friend gave them. But, Sir, this is of no consequence ; the commission was appointed in order to give information to the government upon the efficiency of the civil service and in the course of their investigation they found that in one department there had been not only inefficiency as they charged, but also something akin to dishonesty. That was no part of the investigation they had to make. Still, I find no fault with their findings. On the contrary, if they saw that the attention of the government should be called to a particular condition of things, it was most necessary that the government should be apprised of the fact, so that the proper course could be taken. Therefore, since we had the report of the commissioners charging something akin to dishonesty in a certain department, we thought it our duty not to let the matter rest where it was, but to have the investigation pressed, whatever the consequences, and the whole matter probed to the bottom; and this is the reason why we have appointed Mr. Justice Cassels to continue the investigation which has been left undone by the commissioners. It is to be observed on this point, as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance remarked on a former occasion, that the report of the commissioners states either too much or too little. It would have been better, if they found dishonesty, to have completed the investigation, and to have put their finger on the guilty parties, and reported them to the government so that the government could deal with them. They having failed to do so, we thought it our duty to complete the investigation, and, as I have said, we have entrusted the work to Mr. Justice Cassels. I am glad to say, so far as the selection of the commissioner is concerned, that no fault has been found with it. On the contrary, everybody agrees that no better selection could have been made than Mr. Justice Cassels. Everybody acknowledges his eminent judicial spirit, his honesty, and his impartiality. But, Sir, much fault has been found with the counsel who have been selected. It has been stated that the choice of the counsel was unfortunate, in this respect, that Mr. Watson was at one time the chairman of the Liberal organization in Ontario, and that Mr. Perron was at one time a partner of Mr. Préfontaine. So far as Mr. Watson is concerned, for my part I never knew that he had been so prominently associated with a political organization, though I knew that he generally voted the Liberal ticket. So far as Mr. Perron is concerned, I must admit in all candour that I had forgotten that at one time he had been associated with Mr. Préfontaine. Nor do I believe that this is a matter of much consequence. But, Sir, we have to view the matter in another light. Is it to be said on the floor of the Canadian parliament by gentlemen of the eminence of my hon. friend in the profession, or by other gentlemen who occupy very high rank in the profession, that when you select counsel you have to look to their political opinions? I belong to the legal profession, and I know something of its ethics; and I am sure I shall not be contradicted by the hon. leader of the opposition, nor by other hon. gentlemen eminent in the profession, when I say that it is not to be supposed that a man who is worthy of belonging to the bar ever carried his political opinions into court. It is the pride and the honour and a very elementary rule of the profession that the man who accepts a brief from anybody leaves his political opinions at the door of the court room. Who does not remember that in the many trials which George Brown had to undergo in his province, he was always defended by John Hilliard Cameron, who sat in this House opposed to him, and was one of the most eminent members of the Conservative party at that time? Did Mr. Cameron, though engaged in political trials and in defending the most eminent man in the party to which he was opposed, carry his political opinions into court? Or is it to be supposed that he did not do full justice to his client because he happened to be opposed to his political party? Nay, more, is it not within the knowledge of everybody that my hon. friend and colleague the Minister of Justice, when in active practice, was often retained in election trials on the Conservative side? And is it not a fact that he always did justice to his client, whether he was a Conservative or a Liberal, without any regard to the consequences? Sir, I would be ashamed of the profession if it were to be supposed that a man who had the honour of belonging to that profession would be influenced in the discharge of his duty by his political proclivities. If a man belonging to the bar thinks that he cannot do justice to his client or to the cause with which he is associated, it is his duty to refuse the brief; but the moment he has accepted a brief, it is his duty to be true to the cause which he has accepted without any regard to the consequences. Sir, this is the ethics and the pride of the profession. Will any man in this House who belongs to the bar of Ontario or to the bar of any other province in this country take any other position than this? Why, Sir, because Mr. Watson happens to be a Liberal, or because Mr. Perron happens to belong to the same political party, though I am not aware that Mr. Perron ever took a very active part in politics, is it to be supposed that these men will be recreant to their duty or untrue to the cause that they have to defend, because forsooth it might happen that the political party with which they have been associated would suffer? Why did we appoint this commission? We appointed this commission in order to have the truth and the whole truth brought out in this matter; that is the purpose Mr. Watson and Mr. Perron have to serve. The order in council providing for the commission says:

> The minister observes that some statements are made in that report which affect the honour and integrity of the officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.
> On page 61 of the report the following paragraph appears:
> There would also seem to be a lack of conscience. In connection with the enormous expenditures which are deemed necessary, the word 'discount' never appears. It is tacitly assumed there is no such thing; but the whole commercial world knows otherwise. If no one gets any benefit from trade with the government, except the trader, then it must be clear that in these great purchases made for the government, without discount, its officers must be assisting the trader to get better prices from the government than he can get anywhere else; for everywhere else he has to give a discount. In other words, some of the government officers are serving two masters and apparently succeeding with both—Scripture notwithstanding.
> The minister further observes that it is assumed by that statement that commissions are received improperly, or enhanced prices paid through dishonesty on the part of officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. But, unfortunately, the report does not mention any names which would enable him to take definite action concerning these officials. It is, however, in the interests of the Department of Marine and Fisheries and of the country that immediate steps should be taken in order to determine what officials (if any) deserve condemnation and to give to all an opportunity to meet the charges implied.
> The minister therefore recommends that he be authorized to appoint the Hon. Walter Cassels a commissioner under part 2, chapter 104 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, to investigate and report upon the foregoing statements contained in said report of the Civil Service Commission reflecting upon the integrity of the officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, or of any of them.

This is the task for which Messrs. Watson and Perron have been appointed—to assist Mr. Justice Cassels; and this is the task which, if they are true to the profession to which they belong, they will discharge faithfully, without fear or favour towards anybody. The strange suggestion has been made in the press that not only should Mr. Cassels be assisted with counsel but that counsel should be appointed to represent the Civil Service Commission. I have not heard that suggestion made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, but I have heard it made in this House and I have seen it in the press. Could anything be more preposterous ? The retiring commissioners are not on trial. Mr. Justice Cassels is not appointed to take issue with them, and there is nothing to indicate that his appointment is in any way contradictory to their report. On the contrary the object of his appointment is to continue and complete the investigation made by the commission, and therefore it is absurd to pretend that the commissioners should be represented by counsel.

The commissioners were appointed to inquire into the efficiency of the service and they have made a report. The gist of that report is that the service is inefficient and that its inefficiency is due to the fact that the service is recruited by political patronage. There is nothing very new in this. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition says we should have a third investigation. Why, this will be the fourth investigation. We had a commission appointed in 1881 which reported. We had a commission appointed in 1892 which reported also. We had one appointed in 1907, which has just submitted its report, and the hon. gentleman wants another appointed. Well, I have this to say that as regards the inefficiency of the service, it is the duty of the minister and the government to look into that matter and of no one else. We do not admit any necessity for an investigation into that subject. We are responsible to parliament, and if there be inefficiency it is for us to devise a remedy.

The charge made by the commissioners that the civil service is recruited upon political considerations and none other is not a new one. The same complaint was made in the report of 1892. My hon. friend, who has made copious quotations, did not quote this part of the commission report which will be found on page 15 :

> In the previous remarks your commissioners have pointed out that in their opinion the principles underlying the Civil Service Act are not in the public interest. In the report of the Royal Commission of 1892, the commissioners observe that: It is possible that public sentiment in Canada may not as yet be ripe for open competition generally, and it may not be possible as yet to eliminate altogether the power of politics in making appointments; but if the recommendations of your commissioners be accepted and strictly adhered to, the public service at Ottawa will, they are convinced, in the course of a few years be better for the change.
> The commissioners at that time only took into account the public service at Ottawa. They left in their draft Bill in the report the provisions of a former Act relating to the outside service. Your commissioners regret to state that in their opinion the hopes of the members of the former commission have not been realized. The provisions of the Civil Service Act and its amendment have not made the service any better. In fact the Act has been so amended, re-amended and whittled down that the public service, the commissioners believe, not only at Ottawa but elsewhere throughout the Dominion, has fallen back during the last fifteen years.

Well, if the service has fallen back during the last fifteen years, the party in office are not alone responsible because we have not been here all of these fifteen years. If the evil goes back so far, we all may be held to an equal share of the blame. If the service has been rendered inefficient by political patronage, who is it who will cast the first stone? Can it come from the other side? Why, the service to-day is these gentlemen's own service. It is their service very largely as regards the personnel, and it is altogether theirs as regards the law. We have inherited the condition of things which now prevails and it ill becomes hon. gentlemen opposite to say that we are to blame.

While I am disposed to take the report of the commissioners as a basis of action, I am not disposed to grant that everything in this report should be taken as incontrovertible. In their disposition to blame the system that prevails, they have gone very far to find fault with some of the appointments. They have criticised the appointment of Mr. Harwood as postmaster of the city of Montreal, on the ground that he was an old gentleman seventy years of age and had been in active politics. That is true. But it is also true that the post office at Montreal has never been as ably managed as it has been by Mr. Harwood. For the last six or seven years, during which it has been managed by him, its administration has been perfect. No complaints have come to us and the public appear thoroughly satisfied.

It must not be forgotten that there are several aspects to be looked at before coming to any kind of a conclusion. We appointed a commission because the public were of the opinion that the time had come to have civil service reform. And what could we do better than appoint a commission to investigate and report and lay down a basis of reform ? There are in the report some things in which I am not disposed to agree altogether. There are some statements which I regret exceedingly and which I do not think reflect any honour on the commissioners. What they have said with regard to the Militia Department seems to me altogether uncalled for. And I am not disposed to congratulate my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, on the remark he made a moment ago concerning the speech by the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) who, I regret, is not in his seat at present. Some time ago, in a speech to a meeting of farmers, the hon. member for Dundas said that the government spent $6,000,000 on militia and only half a million dollars on agriculture. Now, there is no man in this House for whom I have greater respect than my hon. friend from Dundas. He is a strong partisan, and for that I do not blame him because I am one myself. But though he is a strong partisan, he is generally very fair in discussion. When, however, before a meeting of farmers, he pointed out that the Canadian government was spending $6,000,000 on militia and only half a million dollars on agriculture, he was guilty of appealing to the worst prejudices that lie in the human heart.

I am sorry my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) should have been guilty of the same offence. Sir, the civilized nation does not live to-day that has not to spend more on militia than it can spend on agriculture and arts and many other useful things . That is our position. We are not in the condition yet, I am glad to say, and I hope we never shall be, of those nations of Europe, England, France, Germany, which spend no less than 50 per cent of their income upon war and preparations for war. But, Sir, we are in this position, though we are happily far from the condition of these nations, that we cannot ignore our duty to provide for the defence of this country. It is a part of the duty we owe to ourselves, it is a part of the duty we owe to our nation, and when an hon. gentleman in this House, like my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) stoops—stoops, I say, to try to create political capital out of such a question he plays a part, I believe, altogether unworthy of himself and unworthy of the position which he occupies in this House. We have to spend far more on militia than I would like; I wish we could spend far less, I wish we could spend $6,000,000 on agriculture and only half a million on militia, but unfortunately, if the time should come when my hon. friend occupies this seat to which he aspires, instead of heaping condemnation as he does to-day on our conduct, he will not be able to modify at all the policy which we have introduced. It is a part of our system of existence as a nation and cavilling against it is setting a bad example on the eve of what may turn out to be important events.

Mr. FOSTER. What does that mean, signs of war?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, I see signs of war. That is not only the petty war my friend is engaged in—if that was all I would not mind it—but Canada has a population of 6,000,000 of souls, it has a very large extent of territory, it faces on two oceans, and my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) himself remembers that when he was in office, he had to provide for the preparation of war, which I hope is very far distant, although it may come at any moment. It is not probable but, Sir, if my hon. friend is ready to say that, situated as we are, we had better disperse the militia and abandon the preparation we have made, I will be prepared to say we have made a mistake —but he never can say that.

Mr. FOSTER. No, he will leave that to the Minister of Marine.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Sir R. L. Borden) wants to have another investigation. I repeat what I said that so far as the charge of dishonesty in the service is concerned, we have committed that charge to the investigation of Mr. Justice Cassels. So far as the efficiency of the service is concerned, we can keep that in our own hands, it is for us to deal with that, it is for the minister to look into that and provide for a remedy. We have no intention of shirking our duty, we have no intention of placing in the hands of a commission the responsibility which rests upon us. It is for us to administer the affairs of the country. So long as we have the confidence of the people and responsibility to the people we have no intention of shirking our responsibility and placing in other hands the duty that properly rests on us. If the service has deteriorated, it is for us to put it in a better position; if it has to be improved, it is for us to do it. But how is that to be done? First, by amending the law. The commission tell us that the law is deficient. Look at the report of the commission and what is their very first conclusion? The law is deficient and you must change the law. They regret that this was not done before. They call attention to the fact that in 1892 a similar commission reported in exactly the same way and nothing had been done up to the present time. If nothing was done I am not disposed, for my part, to be very severe with the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who at that time was a prominent member of the administration, nor am I disposed to quarrel with the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Haggart) who was also a member of the government at that time; they had before them the report which advised them to reform the civil service, to change the law, I am not disposed to be very severe upon them, because the reform of the civil service is a very difficult task and I do not know whether at that time public opinion was prepared for it. But, Sir, we have come to the conclusion that the time has come to tackle this reform. This was why we appointed the commission. We have now the report of the commission which was placed in our hands on the 17th of March last. The first thing we did was to look at the report, to study it, to investigate it. The next thing was to appoint a commission which has been provided for by the appointment of Mr. Justice Cassels. The third thing was to commence the work of looking into the departments to see what improvements could be made, and the fourth thing was to prepare a Bill, which is now under consideration, to be brought before the House. When we lay that Bill before the House we may resume this discussion, but for the moment I have only to say that we do not intend to depart at all from the position we took at first. The duty is ours and we must face it. There is no reason to have another investigation. We have now had three investigations, one in 1881, one in 1892, one in 1908 and with these we have information enough to do our duty. At all events this is what we propose to do, and I have to say simply this in conclusion that with the responsibility which is upon us we have certain things to do and we intend to do them ourselves; they will be done not through a commission, not through others, but by the party now in office, the government responsible to the people. These are the observations I have to offer to the House on this occasion and I have to say that in my humble judgment, the best thing the House can do is to proceed with the orders of the day and to leave this matter in the hands of the government.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, whatever else the independent onlooker, if such there be, will have to remark with reference to the observations of my right hon. friend this afternoon in reply to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, I am quite sure he would come to the conclusion that the Prime Minister did not make an adequate answer to the case which was presented by the mover of the resolution. If he will permit a criticism from me I would say that his reply seemed to show, either a lack of appreciation of the condition of things as they now exist, or else so great an appreciation of them that he was not able to meet them, and so went off on what I consider to be simply a side issue. He undertook to divert the attention of the House by conjuring up a difference of opinion between the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, saying that the leader of the opposition wanted more investigation whilst the member for Beauharnois thought there was investigation enough, and quite as much information as was necessary. Well, this was an interesting piece of by-play; but I could not help thinking that my right hon. friend would have been better employed in addressing himself to meet the arguments in the case, rather than in giving us what was at best a figment of his own imagination.

I said that I did not think the right hon. gentleman showed an appreciation of the condition of things as they are to-day. I do not think I would be making too strong an observation if I said that of late years I know of nothing that has produced wider comment and aroused deeper interest than the report of the Civil Service Commission. I do not say that such a report coming simply by itself would have had such effect, but coming as it does at this particular time, it certainly had an effect upon the country at large which is remarkable. and, whether my right hon. friend thinks so or not, has taken a very deep hold of the people of Canada. It follows a number of other incidents and transactions which year by year, for the last five or six years, have been gradually unfolded, and of which the people have taken due cognizance. The right hon. gentleman does not seem to feel that owing to laches, sins of omission and sins of commission by himself and his party since 1896, he has already lost and is still losing in the respect and confidence of a great body of the electorate of Canada. After he came into power and for some years subsequently, he rejoiced in an almost complete adhesion of the provincial legislatures to his party and his cause. Year by year they have been slipping away from him, and have assumed a position of political antagonism. First he lost control by his party friends of the province of Manitoba; then he lost control by his party friends of the right arm of his party, the great province of Ontario; later still, he lost control, against a most determined campaign put up by himself and his colleagues and supporters, of the great province of British Columbia; later still the province of New Brunswick, which for eighteen years had stood behind him and his party, and during the last twelve years without shadow of question. the province of New Brunswick, although the fight on his behalf was engineered by his latest and one of his ablest ministers, has administered a well merited defeat to his Minister of Public Works, and to the federal party after all their intervention in that election. And only yesterday, in the good old city of Halifax, to which two of his party supporters left their places in this House and went down to conduct the fight on party lines for the Dominion and in view of the next federal contest, the city of Halifax has, by an overwhelming majority, changed its political belief as shown in a civic election, and has defeated the Liberal candidates and elected the Conservative candidates for civic office.

My right hon. friend thinks there is nothing in all these signs. He has a compact majority behind him, for various reasons; does he believe that the country is just as compact behind him? And now, after all these signs of the times, after all the work that has been done by His Majesty's loyal opposition against great odds and great difficulties, after all the glimpses which they have been able to let into the departmental work and the methods of the government of my right hon. friend, comes this Civil Service Commission report. A commission of his own friends, appointed by himself, after a more or less exhaustive examination, has given to the government a report which has aroused more interest than any document that has been presented to this House of Commons for many a long year. Yet my right hon. friend seems to think that all is at peace in Zion, that so long as he can turn around and get ready applause from a large proportion of this House that sit behind him and support him he is safe in vouchsafing no answer, safe in taking any trifling position that he pleases on what is really a very large and very important question.

Some one in the newspapers, probably in the independent press, has remarked as a singular thing that this session at least the Prime Minister, who had a reputation for being politically astute, has been so unfortunate as to take the wrong side on almost every important question that has come up. I believe that will be found to be true. From the fight for the original documents on which my right hon. friend took the wrong side, and from which he afterwards had to retreat, down through a series of positions which he had to face in this House, my right hon. friend has been, for some reason or other, I do not know what particularly, forced to take, or has chosen to take, the wrong, the unconstitutional and the unpopular side.

In the matter of the purchase of supplies for the different departments of this government the right hon. gentleman generally agreed with the principle of the resolution which I had the honour to introduce, but when it came to the practical part of it, in the end, he finished by what? Voting, himself and his whole party, for the continuance of the middleman's operations in the purchase of supplies. And so in reference to question after question. It has been remarked, and I think the observation is very true, that the right hon. gentleman appears to have been forced, for some reason or other, to take the wrong side on a great many of the important questions which have come before us. In the same manner I do not think he has appreciated the gravity of the question which is before the country to-day and I do not think, as I have said before, that he has appreciated the whole situation or met it adequately. In the first place my right hon. friend joins the procession of repudiators—shall I call them? These gentlemen selected their own commission—Mr. Courtney, Mr. Fyshe and Mr. Bazin. They were their own appointees. They declared them to be able men, they had their confidence, they set them to work, they gave them certain powers and these gentlemen acted under these powers and the spectacle is afforded to this House and the country of one minister after another, followed in the end by the right hon. gentleman himself, rising in his place in the House and repudiating his own commission. Why?—because it had a surprise for them. It often does happen that a man has a certain thing in his head and he thinks that is the only thing there is in the universe, but he is surprised some day to find out that there are other things. The main thing in the head of the Prime Minister and of the government was that the commission should simply confine itself to the dry bones of the Civil Service and nothing else. But these gentlemen had certain powers under which they conceived they acted. They acted under them and besides having something to do with the dry bones of the Civil Service system they went further and inquired into certain things with reference to the efficiency of the Civil Service and the methods by which the business of the government, by this Civil Service, was carried on. That is the thing that the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues did not expect would happen. And so, first, the Minister of Marine, secondly, the Minister of Finance, and, thirdly, the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), and, fourthly, but I am sure not lastly, the Prime Minister himself rise in their places in this House and confess to their annoyance. The right hon. gentleman joins in the caustic criticism of these gentlemen, sneers at them, in fact, for going beyond their duty. Why this surprise? Because it really happens to have operated as a flank movement which was not expected. The right hon. gentleman and his colleauges were devoting themselves to the frontal attack and as poor strategists they forgot that the rear and the flanks should also have been defended. Whilst they can, by their majority in the Public Accounts Committee, prevent investigation into public matters, whilst they can by their majority in this House, prevent information from coming down to members, whilst they can, by their majority in this House, deny any investigation and all investigation into alleged malpractices they forgot to fortify themselves upon the flank and the rear. And whilst they were successful by means of their majority in warding off frontal attack, their own friends, in the spirit of duty and of honesty and of thoroughness lifted the lid upon these governmental transactions and gave the people a glance at the inside. Hence this procession of caustic repudiators who, one after another, get up and flagellate the commission that they themselves appointed and sneer at the men that they themselves made their own Royal Commission. Well, we will let that go to the country. The exhibition is one of bad taste, it is one, I think, of very poor policy, the average man in the country will easily see through it and it will not count to the advantage of the government.

The right hon. First Minister said that it was the duty of this commission simply to inquire into the efficiency of the Civil Service Act and that it was no part of their duty to investigate into transactions. But they did investigate some transactions in one part of one department and they came upon appearances of dishonesty and now the second commission has been appointed, as the right hon. gentleman with an odd failure to appreciate the meaning of language, declared to continue and complete the work of the first commission. If Mr. Justice Cassels had been appointed to continue and complete the work of the first commission, as they themselves conceived their work was to be, this side of the House would have no objection to Mr. Justice Cassels being appointed to continue the work of the first commission, but let the right hon. gentleman as well as this House clearly see what this commission means and the purpose for which it has been appointed. It was not appointed for the purpose of continuing and completing the work of the first commission. What was the work of the first commission as under authority given to them and as understood by themselves ? It was to look into the Civil Service system certainly, to inquire as to its efficiency, and, as well, to make recommendations as to how it could be made more efficient, but when you come to No. 8 and No. 10 of the subjects mentioned in the order in council you see that there are other powers that are given them. No. 8 reads 'Efficiency and sufficiency of the departmental staffs.' How could that commission come to a conclusion as to the efficiency and sufficiency of the departmental staffs unless they followed the work of these departmental staffs and found out how it was done, not only if it was efficiently done. Is efficiently the only characteristic of the civil service ? It was also important to inquire whether it was honestly done because honesty must be a characteristic of the Civil Service ; whether it was done in a businesslike way, whether it was extravagantly done, whether it was wastefully done, in fine, whether it was properly or improperly done. How were the Civil Service Commission, as appointed, to come to a conclusion as to the efficiency and sufficiency of the departmental staffs unless they followed their business from A to Z ? And in following out that business what did they find ? They found what they have embodied in the report, that instead of there being efficiency there was inefficiency, instead of there being any sign of a directive head in the Department of Marine and Fisheries there was no sign of it, instead of there being any conscience in that department, not in the individuals in the department—that is not what the commission says—but in the department itself, they found that there was a lack of conscience, they found waste, they found extravagance, they found mal-administration. In the very duty that they had to carry out to determine whether the staffs were efficient and sufficient they were bound to go into that kind of an examination. They went into one-half of the Department of the Marine and Fisheries, namely, the Marine part of it, and they did not get half through with that, but they found what has angered the government, what has somewhat astonished the country and what has proved up to the hilt the charges that His Majesty's loyal opposition have been making for the last five years.

But, Sir, they had another power given to them. They were to look into 'any other matter relative to the service which in the opinion of the commissioners requires consideration, that was a wide power; that power led them into questions as to the purchases and as to whether retail or wholesale prices were paid, and as to whether there was prudence, economy or honesty or not in these purchases, and it led them to some most astonishing results and to some very cogent conclusions which to-day are reverberating through this country and having their influence on public opinion. I tell the right hon. gentleman that he must take back his words or else he must make Judge Cassels commission just as broad as was the commission of the three gentlemen who were first appointed. On 'Hansard' he will find his statement: that Judge Cassels has been appointed a commission to complete and continue the inquiry begun by the first commission—not to continue and complete the inquiry that the government supposed these commissioners were going to make but that they actually have been making for the last six months. But is Judge Cassels's commission as wide as has been stated ? Not at all. It is absolutely whittled down to the fine end of nothing in comparison. Judge Cassels is not to prosecute the inquiry which was committed to these gentlemen. These gentlemen if they had been given full time and full power would have lifted the lid from the Fisheries part of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and in lifting that lid I can imagine the caustic conclusions they would come to and the biting notes they would jot down on the margin, when they came to look for instance at the system of lighthouse and buoy service on the St. Lawrence and on the great lakes; and for instance the parcelling out of the great future fishing resources of this country at $10 a year to favourites and supporters and friends of the government, and the giving over to them for twenty-one years, the absolute exclusive right to fish commercially in the great fishing areas of the Northwest, and to sell the products.

Mr. SPROULE. And renewable for another term.

Mr. FOSTER. And renewable in some cases for another term. But, Sir, if this gentleman were to do what the other commissioners had sarted out to do and had partly done. Judge Cassels in continuing and completing that work would have knocked at the door of the Interior Department at which we have been knocking for four or five years and which we have had banged in our face; and if Judge Cassels had got entrance to that department as the first Civil Service Commission did to a portion of the Marine and Fisheries Department, I can imagine what would have been the caustic conclusions and the biting margin notes that would be penned. I can imagine what the conclusions would be with reference to the land deals, with reference to the timber leases, with reference to the giving away to favourites of vast tracts of grass and agricultural lands, of the letting down of the bars this day, the driving in of a number of favourites to-morrow, the putting up of the bars the next day thus giving to the half dozen that had been herded in twenty-one years' grazing lease, irrevocable, which they could sell in the markets of the world and make into fortunes for themselves. I could imagine with what caustic notes these gentlemen would have followed the case of the romantic Brown who was hunted for with such extreme diligence for three and a half years and who turned up at last in the pockets of Mr. Adamson, M.P., sitting behind the government and always supporting them. I imagine with what caustic notes they would have treated the giving over to Hitchcock and McGregor, two heelers and supporters of the Minister of the Interior, nearly 100,000 acres of irrevocable grazing leases with power to buy 9,500 acres selected out of the whole of it at a dollar an acre, which they did. and sold directly afterwards for $12 an acre. And, Sir, in connection with the Robbin's irrigation scheme what gems of thought would have been developed by Mr. Fyshe and by Mr. Courtney as they followed the still more romantic career of the young man Robbins, a penniless Englishman, without capital and without friends, cheeky to the point of stepping up to the Minister of the Interior and asking him to sell him 380,000 acres of land at $3 an acre with the proviso that $2 should be paid back to him when he should have irrigated one quarter of the land and a further proviso that no payments should be made until 1910. How beautifully they would have followed out the rippling course of that young man from England as he passed like a whirlwind through the Interior Department and in thirty days and less carried off his grant of 380,000 acres and deposited it in the lap of Hitchcock and McGregor, so that these two privileges put together could be marketed on the English market at a profit of $800,000 and over. Oh, how they would have lifted the lid on the fake homesteading in the Northwest; how they would have lifted the lid on the devious dealings of men in the employ and pay of this government in the Northwest who are lining their own pockets by carrying on land speculations and the sale of lands with the information they get from their governmental positions. Oh, with what caustic beauty—if such an expression may be allowed—Mr. Fyshe would have set out these things if he once got inside the Interior Department. And then Sir, what unheard stories he would have to tell if he gained entrance to the Department of Public Works, than which there is none other to be compared in its conscienceless system of dredging, in its equally conscienceless system of building public works without any regard to fitness or to the price or to the manner in which they are built; with its beautiful supervision of tailor clerks and absentee supervisors; men who take charge of scows and who never look at the scows and allow them to be loaded and the prices paid without check. All this, if followed out by the first commissioners—or by the second commissioners in the spirit of the first commissioners—would have made beautiful reading for the electorate of Canada. Now, my right hon. friend may I ask you: Is not that exactly what your first commission did in so far as it had time. It got at half of one department that of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and if it had had time and had been allowed to do so it would have gone to the inside of every one of these departments. That is what the first commission would have done. Now, I put it to my right hon. friend: Take back your words that the second commission is constiuted to continue and complete what the first commission was doing, or else come up in a manly way and tell the country just exactly why you appointed the second commission and what you propose to get by it. The right hon. gentleman will not answer, and therefore I will try to devise an answer for him. The second commission was appointed for several purposes. One was to absolve the minister put within the danger zone—to absolve him from any responsibility in connection with the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

I am old-fashioned enough to think that it is the duty of a minister, when he takes hold of a department, and takes his oath as an administrator, and accepts the salary, to make himself reasonably quickly and reasonably well-informed with reference to the business of the department over which he is to preside. My hon. friend does not lack in intelligence; he had two years in that department; he had years before that side by side with his colleague who preceded him in that department, and men in one department know a good deal of what goes on in another when they sit together in council and foregather as they do from day to day. My hon. friend visited the city of Quebec, visited Sorel, visited Montreal, visited Brockville, went to St. John, I believe, and to Halifax; and his own star witness, Mr. Richards, who had but casual acquaintance with these places, testified on oath before the Public Accounts Committee that any intelligent man could have walked into any of these places and seen exactly what he saw, though perhaps they could not state as well as he what would be the best way to go about a revision of the evils most quickly and most thoroughly. Now, what was my hon. friend doing during those two years? May I answer? He was too busy thinking of the party and of the political side of the administration; too busy parcelling out offices; too busy lying awake nights thinking what he would give here and what he would give there to strengthen his influence against his colleagues and to strengthen the influence of his party against the opposing party. That is what took up his time. But, Sir, he is guilty before this House and this country for allowing a state of things which was spread on the files of his office, and which he himself, by the merest walking through the domain of this department, could easily have known. He was guilty of allowing that department, which was pretty thoroughly demoralized by his predecessor, to sink lower and lower until it arrived at the stage where it had no directive power, no loyalty, no head directing it, and no conscience within.

Well, let us see about this doctrine of ministerial responsibility. There have been other days and other expounders of that doctrine. I believe the Hon. David Mills was a pretty thoroughly informed man on constitutional law; he prided himself on that; he was the champion of his party on that line when in opposition; he was made Minister of Justice; he was afterwards translated to the bench. He has all the qualifications which render an opinion valuable. Now, what did Mr. Mills say in 1893?

> We do not want to interpose between the responsibility of ministers to this House in the discharge of their duties as ministers, any one deputy or otherwise, who apparently limit the power that a minister should possess, but who really carry out the minister's behests. Why should we say that a deputy should make such a recommendation? It is the minister's business to know the work of the office. The minister, if he does his duty, knows as well as the deputy; it is impossible that it can be otherwise. The theory of our government is not that the deputy minister is responsible, but that the minister is responsible, and if the minister is responsible, we ought not to impose limitations upon the discretionary authority of the minister. Let the hon. gentleman look at the English organization as set out by Mr. Todd; does he find any such limitation there upon the authorities of ministers? There is but one limitation, and that it is with regard to appointments to office.

This expression from Mr. Mills is particular and definite, and besides, it is a true statement of the case. Well, one object of this commission was to contract the Minister of Marine and Fisheries out of his responsibility in that department. I put it to the Prime Minister whether I am within the facts of the case or not. All that Mr. Cassels is by that commission empowered to look into and report upon is as to whether certain subordinates of that department have dishonestly or inefficiently sacrificed the money of the country in the matter of supplies and of payments. It was stated by the commissioners that from the outlook of the business, as they had gone into it, it would seem that there were officers in the department who were making it easy for the trader to get more than he ought to get. Now, the officer of the department might have had a good reason for making it easy for the seller of goods to get more than he should have got, and for thinking that in doing so he was doing exactly what the minister would have liked him to do, or what the minister absolutely ordered him to do. Does my hon. friend deny that? One of the Tory 'goats,' as the elegant and somewhat imprudent Minister of Justice declared in his own county a few weeks ago—one of them is Mr. Gregory, it is said, of the city of Quebec. He was brought to book by the commission, and it is spread upon the report that Mr. Gregory paid more than was proper for certain things. Mr. Gregory was the agent of the government in the city of Quebec. Here is a letter on page 76, dated May 3rd, 1905:

> Dear Mr. Gregory,—Young Willie Walsh, who represents McColl Brothers & Company, Montreal agents for Vesta boiler compound, has asked me to say a good word to you for him; and if the material is as good as represented, I hope you will place some orders in his way.

That is fairly modest. That is signed by a minister of the cabinet.

> May 6, 1905.—Mr. Leo C. Walsh——

Not Willie Walsh this time, though it is the same man——

> Mr. Leo C. Walsh, representing McColl Brothers & Company, will call on you, probably Tuesday, in reference to some oil. If you can give him an order I will feel obliged. —R. P.

Which means Raymond Préfontaine. There is a minister of the department pratically odering his subordinate, who is supposed to be doing the government service but who, under the interpretation made by this government, is doing the party service —practically ordering his subordinate—for it amounts to that—to give Willie Walsh a good contract. if he wants to be grateful to his minister, R. P. That is one of the little things left on record ; but where that is left on record, how much is done by word of mouth, how much is done by letter, and the letters not kept on file. Let us go a little further. They raised Cain with Mr. Gregory because of certain fire extinguishers. But it afterwards comes out that the minister himself had ordered $9,000 worth of these extinguishers. It turns out that another man, who had some extinguishers and the proper influence, Mr. P. E. Perreault, 312 St. John street, Quebec, was advised to call upon Mr. Gregory, and sell him a lot of fire extinguishers. Mr. Perreault was afterwards an employee of the agency and he had a lot of fire extinguishers on hand which he would like to sell the department. So the department was advised of this, and in the end it was considered best to take them off the employee's hands, although the department had $9,000 of them bought just before, besides a large quantity in stock.

With reference to this oil called Kantslip, it turns out that they had more Kantslip down there than they knew what to do with. Mr. Gregory says :

An opportunity some time after occurred when I saw the late minister here and spoke to him, as it seemed to me that the firm had taken advantage of his kindness about the matter. He told me to keep the goods and try to get rid of them to the best advantage, which I did by distributing them around where I understood the Kanslip could be used on belts, &c. If any has been sent where it was not really required, I shall see that it is removed where it can be used to advantage.

Does that not abundantly carry out what I was explaning. that you may have men in the autocratic employ of ministers, who are interested in having their favourites given contracts, and who order their subordinates to give an advantage to their favourites under the penalty of disobedience to orders and thus displeasing their official head. So it may be that there are officials in that department who have really given a contractor a chance to make the most but have given it, not because they were personally dishonest, but because they felt the pressure from above and felt bound to see that the party friends got the best of the transaction.

So when Judge Cassels sits on the bench performing these coroner's duties, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) so expressively explained to the House last night, he will sit in the position—if I understand anything of the value of English words—where, the very moment any question comes up of connecting wrong business methods with the minister, he will be told by the counsel that this is outside of his commission and that he has no power at all. That is what I mean when I say that instead of appointing a royal commission to look into these matters in the public interest, the minister himself has appointed a commission to simply look into the deeds of subordinates and find out whether or not any of them have taken commissions or unduly obtained public money in the purchase of supplies or the payment therefor. That is the duty of Judge Cassels and his duty only ; but even that duty is circumscribed by the fact, according to the Minister of Justice that he is not expected to look into this whole matter himself. There are files to be gone through ad infinitum, years to be gone over, 1904, 5, 6, 7, 8—why it would take Judge Cassels years and years to make the whole investigation himself ; and that is why the Minister of Justice said he took the responsibility of appointing counsel. It is the counsel who are to look into these things. They will see what papers are to be scanned. They are to look over the files judicially and carefully. They are to designate the cases that are to be brought to light—and they alone. They are to steer the whole investigation, and they are to put the facts and cases before the judge who occupies a judicial position. So says the Minister of Justice. This commission is intended to have the effect of relieving the minister entirely of responsibility. And it is intended to have this other effect. Just as in the case of that deceptive and partial investigation into the transactions connected withe the 'Arctic', so in this case my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) stands before the people and exclaims : I have appointed a new commission to continue and complete the work which was begun by the first commission. That is a fine song for the people. That will make elegant headlines in the Toronto 'Globe', which is so zealous for the truth. That will be used ad infinitum by the party papers all through. See how our Premier meets the situation. When the first commission after seven months' examination made a partial report, our Premier appointed Judge Cassels to continue what the first commission had undertaken but had not finished. That goes to the people, that is read by the newspapers to the faithful, that is headlined and that is relied upon ; but when it comes down to the naked fact, he has estopped Judge Cassels from looking into a single transaction in any department outside of the Department of Marine and Fisheries and has estopped him from looking into any transaction there unless it involves the dishonesty of a subordinate in the Marine branch. That is what the commission does. If it were to continue and complete the work undertaken by the last commission, Judge Cassels, on Friday or whenever he starts in, would find every door of every department at Ottawa open to him to look into its transactions and judge by the results as to the efficiency and the sufficiency of the departmental staff; and any other subject that he thought was necessary to be inquired into for the same purpose. What this commission does, is simply setting aside by a rather bold but at the same time transparent fiction, the real issue, trying to blind the people's minds while at the same time giving a semblance of a commission to get out what my right hon. friend so valiantly declared over and over again, he wanted, the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. The last thing that my hon. friend wants in this matter is the whole truth. I am anxious that the country shall know exactly what this second commission is to do, what it can do and what it cannot do. What it does I have declared, what it does not do but what the first commission did is to enter any other department, to look into any single transaction anywhere, to look into any dishonesty of action anywhere except in the cases that are brought to its attention in that report as to one department. I ask my right hon. friend what the inferences are? Is it possible that the only lame duck you have in that government is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries? Can it be possible that such a state of thing exists in one department and nothing like it in any other department? Can it be that the people will not argue in that way? People will say: There sits Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. Fielding, Sir Richard Cartwright and Mr. Paterson, they are conducting this government, because they are the dominant members of the cabinet. In one branch of their work see what has happened—what in the world is taking place in the other branches? Will you open the lid and let the country see? No, Sir, you clamp it down and use Judge Cassels and a fiction commission in order to clamp it down and by making a show to the people that you are doing something to continue and complete the work done by the first commission.

My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) flies to the rescue of Judge Cassels. It is not necessary. Judge Cassels, by his reputation and his action in this matter, has pretty well taken care of himself. What a surprise it must have been to the Minister of Justice, lord of all the judges, as I believe he once described himself, to get a polite note from Judge Cassels saying: 'I had no intimation of my appointment until I read it in the newspapers.' These gentlemen have gone on so long that they think every judge is tarred with the same stick. Having had to do with Judge MacTavish and that ilk they think that Judge Cassels and the others are the same and so, without consultation, they appointed him to do the work and had already agreed on the sum in addition to his own salary which they would offer him for doing that extra work. They have found that Judge Cassels is made of different stuff from Judge MacTavish. He immediately administered a reproof to these gentlemen, saying: I think you might have consulted me before you asked me to leave my pressing duties in the Exchequer Court and undertake this investigation; I will not take any salary or emolument other than what I get as judge of the Exchequer Court and I want to be appointed by parliament and not by a simple minister. Certain of these things Judge Cassels has got; certain others he has not. But it was not necessary for my right hon. friend to fly to the defence of Judge Cassels who has shown that in these particulars he is well able to take care of himself. But the right hon. gentleman flew with terrible alacrity —with lightning wings he cleft the air in order to go to the rescue of those two bright particular stars, the counsel who have been appointed in the case. In that he was more ready than the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice talked for an hour or so, but in all his talk he never mentioned Mr. Perron once. Mr. Watson he knew, Mr. Watson he would vouch for, Mr. Watson was a crony of his own, Mr. Watson was a lawyer of the highest repute—I take the responsibility of his appointment. Thank you, Mr. Minister of Justice, but whether you take that responsibility or not does not make a bit of difference, it is the government that shoulders the responsibility for the appointment of counsel, the Minister of Justice is only the machine through which it is made, that is all. But was it not a little odd I ask you, Mr. Minister of Marine, that your own colleague, the Minister of Justice, never put in a single word for Mr. Perron who is the counsel appointed from the province of Quebec? Was it an oversight or was Mr. Perron not so much a crony of the Minister of Justice as was Mr. Watson? There it stands, but the right hon. gentleman came to the defence of both and what a model defence and what a novel defence it was! My right hon. friend in this year of his political life and after all his political and partisan acts in his government, assumes a face filled with indignation and overflowing with wisdom and enunciates the doctrine that it does not make to him a pin's difference what the political affiliations of a counsel are, these are never taken into consideration and should not be taken in consideration. Very good. Will my right hon. friend take his pencil and note down all the commissions he has appointed, all the special committees he had appointed. all the counsel he has appointed for grave and other matters of public necessity, and point out one single instance wherein he forgot what was the political affiliation of the counsel? But it just happened that in a moment of somnolence or of weakness, to quote a phrase sometimes quoted by my hon. friend, in a moment of weakness he appointed one Shepley to undertake a very important piece of work and utterly forgot at the time what his political affiliations were. He likewise appointed Judge McTavish as a high court, in a way, and utterly forgot that Judge McTavish had political proclivities and affiliations nearly allied to his own. He appointed Judge Britton, that grand old independent hero without any political affiliations. Whenever a departmental commission is to be appointed he forgets that there are any political affiliations, but he always wins out by having all Grits on that commission or a majority of Grits on any parliamentary committee so as to keep things taut. What a splendidly novel and bold defence that was that the Prime Minister made this afternoon. Certainly it must have its effect on the country.

But, says he, George Brown was defended by Hilliard Cameron; a lawyer's honour binds him to his client. So it does. Who is the client of these gentlemen? Who creates them? Who pays them? Who instructs them, verbally or otherwise? Somebody else who has no political affiliation at all. And here I want to protest once more against the action of the Minister of Justice in giving his verbal instructions to Mr. Perron and verbal instructions to Mr. Watson, though he said in his speech that they had been supplemented by written instructions in the case of Mr. Watson. Is the same old game to be played? Political cronies, vitally interested in the success of their party and government, of which one is a member and the other is a partisan supporter, sitting down together and talking over the whole situation, and one of these, the member of the government, giving his verbal instructions to the other! Will he follow them, as he followed the others, by written instructions designed to guide them, pointing out just the course they should take and the precise time when the bomb should be exploded? Did he, in this case as in the other? Never a more bigoted political partisan occupied the seat of the Minister of Justice than the man who occupies it to-day. What about Mr. Watson? A good lawyer. Who says he is not ? He would not have been chosen by this partisan government for this purpose unless he had been a good lawyer. Mr. Watson may not have the very strongest and best inquisitorial powers, but he has shown that he has great repressive powers. He showed these repressive powers in the West Elgin election. Older now, more experienced, growing somewhat heavier may be with age, who doubts that his repressive powers are stronger than ever they were ten years ago? And if they are brought to bear with equal success on the files of the department, on the cases to be tried, on the particular complexion of the officer who is to be remodelled, why it may have an effect similar to that it had in the West Elgin case. And how beautifully it fits in for the Minister of Justice, the unpartisan Minister of Justice, who appoints Judge Cassels to find out who is guilty, if anybody, of the subordinates, then to walk up into his own constituency and pass judgment on the delinquents before any inquiry was made by the judge, and declared them to be Tory officials. Here is what he said, I have it from the Globe:

> Mr. Brodeur was going to investigate for himself, the sheep will be weeded out from the goats.

He was not a gardener at that time, was not a shepherd either, but a sort of hybrid between a gardener and a shepherd, and so he got the metaphor somewhat mixed. However, what he meant is clear:

> The sheep will be weeded out from the goats, the Tory goats who deserve dismissal and they will have fit punishment meted out to them which they have gained for themselves.

There is your Minister of Justice, delightfully unpartisan. Will not the Prime Minister lecture him a little in the doctrine of non-political sentiments and feelings when he approaches a great state question? There is this gentleman who has prejudged the whole thing, creating counsel and sitting down and giving him verbal instructions. And yet we are asked to think that it will be carried out on the square? I do not believe it for a moment, neither will the country.

Now, I come to another branch of the subject. We are not alone at fault, said the First Minister, and he made a dramatic gesture, and asked some one to get up and throw a stone. Who will cast the first stone? says the Prime Minister. Well, that was statesmanlike, I must say. May I ask my right hon. friend where any reform in the wide world could ever take place if that answer was supposed to be sufficient? Here is a man who is brought up before a judge, accused of a crime, the evidence is getting pretty close and pretty hot, and he says: Your honour, John Smith did the same thing ten years ago and he was not punished. According to the doctrine of the Prime Minister, the judge will have to say: Go about your business and sin no more. Exactly on the same plane. What ineffable foolishness it is for the Prime Minister, of all men in the world, to meet a demand for revision and betterment in the great civil service of Canada, to say: We are not worse than you were; get up and cast the first stone if you can. It is not a question of casting a stone. People are getting wiser, systems are getting to be better understood, new ideas supervene, the experience of the world is constantly growing, and one age will endure what another age will not endure. So it is with reference to the civil service; and if my opinion is worth anything, Canada to-day is waking up to the importance of an improved civil service. Just here I beg to say that if my right hon. friend will bring in a Civil Service Act, prohibiting the features of influence, partisanship, and political appointments, he will have my most hearty support; and if he will press that to the very end of eliminating patronage from every purchase and every appointment by the government, he will have my support as well.

But my right hon. friend was not quite right. He says there was a commission in 1880. So there was, and after the commission of 1880 what was done? The Civil Service Act of 1882 was brought in and passed, and has been on the books ever since, adopting the principle of a civil service examining board, of a qualification and a promotion examination, and of a classification test. In 1892 another commission was appointed, I have the report of that commission in my desk. The report of that commission is worth studying by my right hon. friend, and especially by his Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance the other night tried to lead us to suppose that the report of the commission of 1892 was just as strong as the report of the commission of 1908. Any one who will read it will see the absolute difference. On the question of the operation of a civil service system, it was equally strong in 1892 as it is in 1908. In 1892 Mr. Barbeau and Mr. Hague, two members of that commission, went round the offices in Ottawa, looked them all through, made their comments on them, and with reference to this Department of Marine and Fisheries put in their report a statement which was read by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition to-day. That, Sir, was in 1891 and 1892. Then they said that with the exception of some obsolete methods of bookkeeping here and there through the departments, the departments were fairly well run, but in reference to that special department, they commended it because of its rigid oversight of its business and because of the fact that the supplies were economically bought. On that part of the report contrast 1892 with 1908 which has to do with the efficiency and sufficiency of the departmental staffs and methods of business; this commission's report is absolutely new and is absolutely clear on that point. In both you have the patronage system declared and execrated, but in this one it is ten, yes twenty times as strongly declared as it was in 1892.

But, may I call my right hon. friend's attention to one thing? He and the Finance Minister declared that nothing was done. Nothing done? In 1893 we introduced, on the top of that commission, three Bills. The commission reported in favour of a civil service board to consist of a permanent chairman and four deputy heads, appointment by competitive examination, clerks to be selected from the roster as established by competitive examination by the board, the superannuation system to be continued and an insurance system if it could be applied properly. In 1893 our government introduced an insurance Bill for the civil service, placed it on the statute-book and it remains there yet. We introduced a Bill strengthening the superannuation system by propounding and establishing fund No. 2 on a more equitable basis to the employees with six per cent interest allowed by the government and that was largely taken advantage of. And we introduced on February 3, 1893, a civil service Bill providing for a civil service board and for the strict supervision of the appointments to office and of the methods of conducting the business of the civil service in all the departments. Where was my right hon. friend? He rose and objected to it. Mr. Mills rose and objected to it. Both of them objected to it on principle and my right hon. friend moved the six months' hoist. Yet the Minister of Finance declared that we did nothing and my right hon. friend declared that we were quits as bad as they were. Well, we will see now what they do. I just leave that as a corrective of something which has been stated in the House and which is not quite correct.

One thing that amused me—and that expresses it exactly because it did not frighten me—was the forced denunciation of my hon. friend (Mr. Broder) by the First Minter. It was really a fine dramatic act. I and others sitting here and facing the chief actor could not help but admire the way in which enthusiasm and indignation were worked up and the splendid denunciatory tone in which the invective was launched against Andrew Broder. What was it that my right hon. friend found fault with Mr. Broder for? Mr. Broder, he said, went before a meeting of farmers—tinder, you know! Farmers and farming questions are something like tinder; you are apt to get a great, quick, and mighty prejudice aroused amongst a lot of farmers on a farming question! Mr. Broder actually went before the farmers and ventured to tell the farmers that the present government was extravagant in its expenditures for the militia and parsimonious in its expenditures for agriculture! That was the whole thing. He did it of course, by an object lesson—so many millions for the militia and only half a million for pure agriculture, so many dollars for war and so many dollars for peace. It was the object lesson method of presenting the fact to the irascible and excitable farming audience that he had before him and he actually worked upon their prejudice to the detriment of the defence of this country, and my right hon friend blossomed out into a full grown champion of war and all the trappings of war. Why ? The one distinction that crowns the brow of the First Minister in Europe as well as in America is that he is a peace-at-any-price man. He hates militarism. He has vehemently denounced the militarism of the old country and fought against its being introduced into this country. He swept aside all the inducements for the colonies and Great Britain to get closer together because the spectre of militarism was above him day and night and frightened him. To-day he rather insinuates that some big thing is going to burst upon us in the shape of an unknown and contingent war and that Mr. Broder has been exciting the prejudices of the farmers against the proper defence of Canada. But, oh, Mr. Speaker, I did believe that it was a very fine play when I saw a portion of the audience that listened to him, said portion being the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, for, in 1896, when I, as Minister of Finance proposed a vote of $1,000,000 in order to get some large artillery for this Dominion, absolutely defenceless, in so far as that arm was concerned at that time, the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries denounced the project in this House, went down to the province of Quebec, toured through that province, got together audiences of his fellow-countrymen, wept tears and made them weep tears as he portrayed to them the foul iniquity of the Tories at Ottawa in putting up a vote of a million dollars for war in this country, the ultimate result of which would be that the French woman's sons would be torn from their arms and sent out to defend distant portions of the empire. Did my right hon. friend administer any rebuke to his friend and supporter, the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries when he appealed to the prejudice of race against the defence of Canada and against proper arming as regards large artillery at some of the ports ? Not at all. He gloried in it and he thanked God for every vote he got by that kind of mechanism. Oh, these strange metamorphisms that at the last moment even gentlemen like my right hon. friend will be led to exhibit before the House and the country ! But my right hon. friend ended up by saying : We do not want any more investigations. That was one thing that I believed if I believed nothing else that he said during that speech. He and his party have shown that they do not want investigation. They have shown it in the Public Accounts Committee, shown it in this House, shown it in refusing us information before we voted supplies, shown it in refusing to us investigation as to how supplies were expended after they had been voted and, time after time, has called his followers here to stand up against any beginnings of an adequate investigation into any department. Two years ago my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) moved for an investigation into the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Then they all said : It is a pure and honest and efficient department, you shall not have any investigation. We trotted out the Merwins, we trotted in the Strubbes, we trotted in all the Brookes and the others, and we showed how they were fleecing right and left the Marine and Fisheries Department, and yet they would not allow us an investigation. My right hon. friend does not want any more investigations, but I venture to say that the people of this country do, and that they are bound to have more investigations. And so it is that the motion of the leader of the opposition, asking for what the Prime Minister says he has provided for, but which he has in reality estopped a continuation and completion of the work commenced by the first commission, is a motion which this side of the House can support and one which I believe he country will endorse. But, Sir, the man who wants the truth and the whole truth appoints a gentleman like Mr. Perron from the city of Montreal—I am saying nothing as to Mr. Perron's ability as a lawyer ; what I am saying is that for nine long years Mr. Perron was the partner of the minister whose subordinates are to be brought up before Judge Cassels in this investigation ; that he was not only a business-in-law partner with him but that he was a partner in Mr. Préfontaine's private and other concerns, and it is stated upon the streets of Montreal that he had a great many dealings with parties who had dealings with the minister and the departments. That is the kind of man —outside of his legal abilities entirely—a man who was the partner of the incriminated one for nine years, of the same political belief, engaged in the same schemes, profiting from the same enterprises ; that is the man that my right hon. friend has had the grace to interpose between truth and the public of this country in the investigation to be held by Judge Cassels. I miss my guess if the people of this country do not condemn that kind of thing. They like to see the game played fairly and they would have some idea that it was being played fairly if my right hon. friend had forgotten for a moment political bias and had placed a strong independent lawyer, or if he wanted two lawyers, a strong Conservative lawyer on that investigation and allowed the people some chance. The government by theory represents the people—this government by practice if not by theory represents its own selfish party interests and looks after those interests. And, to qualify these two gentlemen as being counsel for the people of Canada is a misnomer. They are created by and paid by and they will be rewarded by the party who has called them to thus interpose between a certain investigation and the people who demand it.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I rather regret and I am a litle surprised at the course of the speeches of the hon. leader of the opposition and the hon. member for North Toronto. I had supposed when we were going to have a discussion on the report of the Civil Service Commission that we would have a discussion on the best way to improve the civil service of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. We will have that later.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad to hear that. I remember that a little while ago the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) had a motion on the paper for that purpose. He dropped it.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman knows why I dropped it.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman might state that.

Mr. FISHER. I intend to. My hon. friend need not be so impatient.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to keep you from falling into difficulties.

Mr. FISHER. You need not be alarmed; it is not my habit.

Mr. FOSTER. What about that letter—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FISHER. Will my hon. friend have patience ?

Mr. FOSTER. What about that letter the hon. gentleman got from Japan that he never got, and that he told this House he had when he never had it ?

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend dropped that motion for the purpose of discussing civil service reform. I had hoped he was going to discuss that question to-night, but instead of following his better bent he has taken up the role of a partisan and indulged in one of his usual speeches of that character. The leader of the opposition in his opening remarks said that when he read the report of the Civil Service Commission he thought, from a certain phrase in it, that it was a campaign document.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of the Liberal party.

Mr. FISHER. Of the Liberal party. I suppose my hon. friend had his mind so occupied with the idea that he intended to make a campaign document of this for the Conservative party, that he thought it was intended for that purpose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It spoke for itself.

Mr. FISHER. It speaks for itself and if my hon. friend tries to he can find a great deal of good in it. But he prefers to try to make a campaign document of it and to turn it to his party political purposes rather than to draw from it anything for the benefit of the Civil Service of Canada. The hon. gentleman mentioned the fact that in a speech at Halifax last summer he laid down civil service reform as one of the planks of the Conservative platform. I believe he did on that occasion, but while I followed with some interest his tour throughout Canada I saw but little, after he left Halifax, of many things he had in the Halifax platform and I do not remember—subject to correction—that he dealt very insistently in other parts of the Dominion on that plank of his platform.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On 90 per cent at least of the occasions on which I spoke I addressed myself to that subject.

Mr. FISHER. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement, but judging from the press reports of his various speeches I fear that part of them did not make so great an impression on the public or on the newspaper reporters who heard him as other parts of his speeches did. At all events, to-day the hon. gentleman is attempting to make a campaign document out of the report of the Civil Service Commission. I regret that. I spoke from the heart when I said that I would have hoped that we might discuss civil service reform and not party politics. However, my hon. friend is free to take whatever course he pleases. Now, the civil service reports which have been before the public of Canada from that of 1881 to that of 1908, are all full of strictures upon the political aspects of the civil service and of remarks about the evil effects of politics upon the Civil Service of Canada. I have no doubt whatever—speaking for myself and I think speaking for the inmost thoughts of everybody in the sound of my voice—that political influences are a serious detriment to the civil service, and that the result of political influence in this country is the same as it has been in England and in the United States in years past before civil service reform had been forced upon the people.

My hon. friend quotes these strictures in the report of the commission of 1908 with the evident intent of trying to hurt the present government, as though those strictures were only and entirely levelled at the civil service under the administration of the present government. I have here the report of 1881, which says this:

While there exists in the public mind a very general belief that the civil service is defective and inefficient and that the true remedy is the abolition of political patronage and personal favouritism in making appointments to public offices, there is on the other hand an impression that it is difficult and almost impracticable to apply the remedy.

I find later on, under the subject of appointment to office, the following:

The present mode of nomination by political influence and appointment, without examination as to qualification, which prevails so very generally in the service, seems to us, and is frankly confessed by the majority of the witnesses we have examined, to be defective in the highest degree.

There are many other statements of the same character. But the report contains recommendations, which seem at that time to have fallen upon deaf ears. In reference to the Act of 1868, which was then in force, that the commission said this:

The Act contained certain provisions under which departure could be made from what appear to have been intended as the fixed rules of the statute; and thus departure became in time the rule rather than the exception, so much so that the means which the Act proposed to provide for the admission of properly qualified persons to the public service became practically obsolete. It also established a civil service board, to which certain duties were assigned, but owing to the absence of any power or authority therein to enforce the recommendations of the board this provision of the Act became inoperative.

In 1875 a Bill was introduced by the government which, however, did not become law.

In 1877 a committee of the House of Commons was appointed to inquire into the condition of the civil service. This committee examined many witnesses, and we desire to state our sense of the value of its proceedings and of the evidence taken which has been of considerable use to us in the course of our investigations. It presented a report containing various comments on the evidence and suggestions for the government of the departments. No legislation resulted, however, and the public service continued to be administered under the provisions of the Act of 1868, and such interpretation of those provisions as were made from time to time by orders in council and departmental regulations.

They go on to say:

We did not conceal from ourselves that there may be doubts as to whether the public opinion of the Dominion is even now fully alive to the importance of a thoroughly efficient civil service, or, on the other hand, has recognized rights on the part of the service, such as have long since been conceded in other countries.

Here is another extract:

Apart from any specific statements made in the evidence, we find in its general tenor and in what we have ourselves observed, abundant reasons for the conclusions that the service requires reform, and that it has not been sufficiently guarded against the evil effects of political patronage.

They wind up with this statement.

Political patronage is responsible for other evils, and we do not hesitate to express the conviction that many unnecessary civil offices have been retained, and that new places have been created, for no better purpose than to provide for the followers of influential politicians.

The recommendations in that report were directly in the line of competitive examinations under an independent civil service board. A law was passed in 1882, based largely on this report, but the essentials of the report were not carried out in that law, inasmuch as no independent board of civil service commissioners were appointed, and no competitive examinations were inaugurated. The result was that the civil service went on from 1881 very much in the same way as it did before. But we come to the report of 1892, made when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was a member of the government, and what do we find in that report? We find the same condition of affairs described exactly as it was in the report of 1881. Referring to the report of 1881, the report of 1892 says:

Following this report a new Civil Service Act was passed in 1882, which provided for examinations to test the qualifications of candidates for positions in the public service, and also for the examination of candidates for promotion. This Act, although not going so far in its provisions as was recommended by the commission, has been amended year by year, with one exception, from the time of its being first placed on the statute-book until the year 1889, and so far as the commissioners have been able to observe, the amendments in general have tended in the direction of the relaxation of the provisions of the original Act, and the consequent prevention of its intention from being carried out.

They say further:

The principal recommendations contained in the Bill are (1) the appointment of a Civil Service Commission, and (2) the adoption of the principle of appointment by open competition.

They wind up thus:

It is possible that public sentiment in Canada may not as yet be ripe for open competition generally, and it may not be possible as yet to eliminate altogether the power of politics in making appointments; but if the recommendations of your commissioners be accepted and strictly adhered to, the public service at Ottawa will, they are convinced, in the course of a few years, be better for the change. Intelligence and capacity will meet with their due reward, politics and favouritism will cease to dominate, the service will soon become attractive to many persons who now seek other avenues of employment, and in general the title of public servant will be an honour to be coveted. The doors to appointments and promotions in the service will open only to capacity and honesty, and no man or woman who aspires, as all have a right to aspire, to any such position, will have occasion to seek or use any influence less honourable than his or her own merit and fitness for office.

That was their recommendation. My hon. friend from North Toronto has stated to what extent his government carried out that recommendation. He says that they passed a Bill for insurance of civil servants. That was not a reform of the civil service; it did not embody in any way the removal of political patronage. On the contrary, it simply aided to a certain extent those civil servants who were already in office. He says that they approved of the Superannuation Act. I dare say that is true, but that does not in any sense imply a reform of the Civil Service Act or the carrying out of the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission regarding political influences. But my hon. friend says that they introduced a Bill and that the right hon. the First Minister moved the six months' hoist of that Bill. But why did he do so? Because the Bill was inadequate and inefficient, and did not carry out the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission. I have here the 'Hansard' of that day. Mr. Costigan, in moving the second reading, said that the Bill perhaps did not contain all they intended to put into it. Mr. Laurier then went on to say that the Bill had been introduced without a word of explanation, but we now had its provisions and he added:

If I understand the Bill rightly, what the hon. gentleman proposes, under the name of civil service board, is simply a detective agency to look after the civil service. Look at section 4 of the Bill, and see what are the duties it is proposed to place upon the supervisors of civil servants. . . . At all events his duty is to see whether or not the clerks are properly discharging their work. I submit, in all conscience, that the minister under whom the department may be, or the deputy minister, or the chief clerk of the department, are quite competent to do that.

That is the doctrine of the ministerial responsibility which this government have always advocated and endorsed, and it was because of that reason the leader of the opposition at that time moved the six months hoist. He said :

The Bill did not introduce an independent board of commissioners and did not carry out any of the recommendations of the commission of 1892.

Mr. Casey then made a speech. Mr. Casey was one of the first who advocated civil service reform in this parliament. In 1880 or 1881 he introduced a civil service Bill, and it was largely in consequence of the speech he made on that occasion that the government appointed the commission of 1881 and that the statute of 1882 was placed on our statute-book. In this debate Mr. Casey aslo spoke. He said :

As to the official proposed to be created, to be called the supervisor of the civil servants, my leader has apparently expressed all the objections to such an appointment, and I will not add anything to what he has said. As to the creation of a civil service board to examine candidates for admission, promotion and so on, so far I can go with the government. But I intend, at a later stage, to propose an amendment carrying out more efficiently what one would understand to be implied by the appointment of an impartial and non-partisan board to manage the affairs of the civil service. I believe that the conduct of the civil service should not be on partisan lines but that appointments and promotions and other proceedings should be dictated by a board appointed as judges are appointed and as the civil service board in England are appointed, during good behaviour, and not responsible to any political minister of the day. I believe the service should be conducted on business principles, that appointments, promotions and all other matters connected with the service should be carried on as in a bank or insurance company or any other institution of that kind.

The result was, not that a vote was taken and the Bill defeated, but that, after the discussion, Mr. Costigan said :

If the House will allow me. I will withdraw the motion for its second reading.

Mr. LAURIER. Certainly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I can move the second reading another time when the amendments are prepared.

Mr. LAURIER. When you choose to do so.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I move that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow.

Mr. CHARLTON. Will to-morrow ever come?

To-morrow never did come. The Bill died a natural death. It was an abortion when introduced, and it never came into being.

I wish to say a few words with regard to the report of 1892. I have alluded to some of the recommendations of the commission of that day and to some of their statements regarding what they found in the service. I find here an interesting letter from Mr. Le Sueur, one of the best known and oldest civil servants in Ottawa who has since left the service. In this these words he characterizes the service at that time :

Politics I need not define. We have it with us always, and we know what it means. The present question is, how does the intrusion of politics affect the public service? It affects it in many ways:

1. By crowding it with unnecessary hands.
2. By introducing into it, at times, inefficient or other unsuitable persons.
3. By interfering with the due course of promotion.
4. By interfering with the exercise of necessary discipline.

5. By interfering with the due course of departmental procedure.

These are the primar evils of some of them. The secondary (in the sense of derivative) evils are to be found in the moral effects upon the service at large of these attacks, if I may so call them, upon the integrity of its organization and methods. How can industry be enforced in an overcrowded office? How can a proper standard of work be maintained where some are markedly inefficient? How can the moral of the service be kept at a high point if justice is trifled with? How can an officer who is not supposed to be a political partisan enjoy the highest measure of self-respect if he is compelled, or thinks himself compelled, to act as a partisan?

That was dated January 2, 1892. Mr. Le Sueur was then secretary of the Post Office Department and well qualified by his experience and honesty to pronounce upon it.

My hon. friends have quoted a lot from the present civil service report. But there is a word or two in it which they were careful not to quote and to which I would refer them. Referring to the commission of 1892, the commissioners say:

Your commissioners regret to state that in their opinion the hopes of the members of the former commission have not been realized. The provisions of the Civil Service Act and its amendments have not made the service any better. In fact the Act has been so amended, re-amended and whittled down, that the public service, the commissioners believe, not only at Ottawa but elsewhere throughout the Dominion, has fallen back during the last fifteen years.

Fifteen years took them back to the report of 1892; and it is curious to relate that since 1896, when this government came into power, we have not made any amendments to the Civil Service Act. It is the same Act, whittled down and made so poor and useless by the party opposite that it was ineffective.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The expression 'whittled down' probably referred to the repeal, in individual cases, of the Act from session to session.

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so. Coming immediately after the quotation from the report of 1892, I took it to be an endorsement and corroboration of what was said in that report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was there any Act between 1892 and 1896 whittling or cutting down the Civil Service Act?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know that there was, but there was nothing to improve it, and the late government had the opportunity of improving it.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) and his colleague (Mr. Foster) talked a great deal about the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the strictures thereupon. I shall not go into that matter except to point out that in the report of 1892, while the language is not so extreme or violent, the same thing is actually referred to. In my opinion violence of words and extreme language do not add force to strictures or make them any more applicable or true. Tre report of 1892 contains this remark about the purchases:

This is fully treated of in the separate report on revenue and expenditure, but generally it may be stated that there has been a tendency in some cases to purchase in such a manner that the government pays retail prices for wholesale quantities.

In another part of the report it goes into that much more fully and deals with it almost as extensively as the report of 1908, but not in such extreme or violent language. I wish to deal with some of the things my hon. friend from North Toronto has said tonight. But first, let me say that I will try to keep to the question of the civil service and the Civil Service Commission. I do not think it is profitable in this or any other debate to drag in and dilate upon and picture in glowing words questions that have been discussed and threshed out and disposed of in this House years ago. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) talked about the Department of the Interior. He said that no doubt certain things would have been discovered if the commissioners had gone on and devoted their attention to that department. He instanced certain questions in regard to the disposal of public lands and timber limits in the Northwest. He knows, no one better, that these very questions have been discussed here one or two or three years ago, have been disposed of by votes of this House that all his accusations and insinuations and those of his colleagues in the opposition have been completely answered and disposed of, and that since that time, in by-election after by-election in the country, these same questions have been paraded before the electors; the electors have been appealed to on these questions to defeat the government candidate and the series of government victories has been almost unbroken. What is and what can be the object of the hon. gentleman bringing up and resuscitating these things? Is it simply to give himself the pleasure of the glowing word-painting he so often indulges in? Is it simply to give himself the pleasure of gloating over imaginary scandals which he thinks may affect the country and that by constant repetition he thinks these things will come to be believed and so affect public opinion? There is no fair or decent politics in such a course, but the hon. gentleman returns to these matters over and over again and deals with them in a way which I am disposed to characterize in words that would hardly be decent or proper to use in parliament.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It was properly characterized in the Public Accounts Committee and declared to be a lie.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for North Toronto reproached the First Minister because he had spoken briefly in answer to the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Borden). It is not always by any means the length of the speech that proves its effectiveness, in fact it may be said in general terms that the effectiveness of a speech is in inverse ratio to its length and that instead of quoting details of all kinds, instead of repeating over and over again, it is better to go to the heart of a question, to put the salient points before the House and the country and to deal with it on broad, statesmanlike lines, and I venture to think that the half hour of the right hon. the leader of the governmet (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was quite sufficient to reply and effectively reply to the two and a half hours of the leader of the opposition. I believe, too, that a reply can be as effectively made to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in a much less time than that hon. gentleman spoke. He said the leader of the government had been on the wrong side. We have heard that for 12 years, we heard it when we first came into power, it was blazoned by the Tory speakers in the House and in the country that the Liberals had not the instinct of government and that it was impossible for us to have more than one term in power. The results of 1900 clearly showed the error of that argument. We had the same thing for the succeeding four years from 1900 to 1904, and again we went before the people, and again these hon. gentleman's lucubrations, again their aspersions were declared to be absolutely without foundation. Since 1904 the same kind of thing has been going on and there is absolutely no indication that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has in any way lost his cunning, or lost that keen, comprehensive power of seizing the essentials in great public questions and being on the right side, the side which the people will endorse and support every time.

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) then began to criticise and discuss the remarks of my right hon. friend. He caught him up on the statement that Mr. Justice Cassels was appointed to complete the inquiry. He knows perfectly well, every one knows perfectly well that it was not the general inquiry that it was suggested Judge Cassels will complete ; it is simply the question of the dishonesty of officials in the Marine Department which he is to complete. The commissioners made their report in general terms, they did not even make a direct accusation, but they indicated and showed they believed there was dishonesty on the part of certain officials there. It was to complete that part of the investigation, to finish up that question of dishonesty, to either acquit these officers of the aspersions upon them or to prove that they were guilty and enable the government to punish them in accordance with their guilt. In that sense and in that way Judge Cassels is to complete and round out that portion of the work of the Civil Service Commission ; but upon the other question it is not intended and nobody suggests that he should supplement the other parts of the report either in regard to the investigations in the department or recommendations as to civil service reform. In respect to these matters the Civil Service Commissioners completed their report. The hon. member for North Toronto said that the appointment of Judge Cassels was for the purpose of contracting the Minister of Marine and Fisheries out of his responsibility. If Judge Cassels was to undertake to investigate the management and the efficiency of the organization of the Department of Marine and Fisheries it might be said that he was appointed for the purpose of contracting the minister out of his responsibility. But he was not so appointed and it is not his business to do any work at all in connection with that part of the administration of the Department of Marine. The Minister of Marine, assuming his full responsibility as a minister, is quite prepared to do that, is doing that and is quite competent and able to do that, and I have no doubt whatever that with the help of the information which may be supplied him in regard to the dishonesty of officials and with the details as to the organization of the department which have been to a certain extent supplied him by the report, the Minister of Marine will be the better able to carry out his reorganization of that department and will succeed in doing it at no distant time.

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) spoke of the government having discussed what we were to pay Judge Cassels for his work. I can say to the hon. member absolutely that there was no discussion as to what Mr. Cassels was to be paid or whether he should be paid at all. He was simply appointed because we believed him to be the proper and right kind of man to carry on the work for which he was appointed. It was not a question of payment. If he had wanted pay there is no doubt that the government would have been ready as the country would have been ready to pay him a fair amount for the work. He undertook to say he would not do it unless it was done without reward. All honour to him for that. All honour to him for it, I am glad he has done so. But the government have never proposed or suggested to Judge Cassels what reward he should get, or whether he should get any reward at all. Sir, in the appointment of Judge Cassels the government did not discuss the matter with him, because we did not wish him to think for a moment that we were making any bargain with him. Judge Cassels was selected by the government because he was thought to be a suitable man and competent for the work, and I have no doubt he will carry it out in the way intended by the government and the way it ought to be carried out. But the hon. member for North Toronto, without any evidence on which to base his opinion, without even having had the decency to ask the government a question on the subject, coolly jumps to the conclusion that the government have discussed and agreed upon the reward they should give Judge Cassels, when as a matter of fact nothing of the kind was discussed or even thought of. Sir, that is the way in which the hon. member for North Toronto builds up a fabric out of his own imagination, and by his word painting makes it seem almost real; then it goes out to the country, as it will be reported tomorrow, that the government have arranged to bribe Judge Cassels by appointing him to this work and giving him a large reward when, as a matter of fact, nothing of the kind was thought of. But it is the habit of the member for North Toronto, followed unfortunately by many hon. members opposite, to make baseless charges, and for the Conservative press to state them as facts, even though they are immediately denied afterwards.

Sir, the hon. member for North Toronto and the leader of the opposition have spoken of their desire to help us carry into effect amendments to the Civil Service Act. I am glad to hear it, I hope they will loyally fulfil their promise when the opportunity arises. But when they choose, in a discussion of so important a subject, to mix up the question of civil service reform, which ought to be discussed without partisanship, with a political attack upon the government in a formal motion of want of confidence, I can hardly believe in their sincerity or in their desire for civil service reform. I hope they are sincere, and when the government brings down a Bill to amend the Civil Service Act so as to make the service more efficient, I will be glad of the cooperation and endorsement of hon. gentlemen opposite. Sir, I do not intend to go into the question of civil service reform tonight beyond saying this, that I hope before the end of this session the government will be in a position to introduce a Bill to amend the Civil Service Act. I hope and trust that that Bill will make the Act more workable, and will improve the public service, and I believe that can be done on the lines of the reports and recommendations of the three Civil Service Commissions who have made reports to the government of Canada. I would be glad indeed if the present government were able to do what former governments did not do, although they had before them the reports and recommendations of commissions of their own appointing. But they never acted upon them, and the result is that today the civil service of Canada is no better than it was 25 or 30 years ago when the Act of 1868 was in force. I hope that before long this government will be able to carry out a great reform of this kind, and thus justify its name as a reform government.

Mr. A. BRODER (Dundas). I would not have risen to speak on this occasion were it not for some remarks that the leader of the House saw fit to direct against myself when I was unfortunately absent from the House. I have taken the trouble to find out what he said, and I desire to make some reply. He referred to me as having made certain statements before a farmers' meeting. I want to say to the right hon. gentleman that the statements he refers to I made, not before a farmers' meeting, but in this House, and in his own presence. I made those statements here, and I will take the liberty of repeating them again to-night, as I shall repeat them again in the country. I was very careful to quote the figures from the government blue books to prove my statement. I have yet to learn whether it is appealing to the lowest sentiments of any class of people when you ask them to compare the expenditure of one department of government with that of another department. That is the position I took, and if the right hon. gentleman sees fit to accuse me of using indiscreet language, perhaps I could remind him of an occasion, even in this parliament, when the most indiscreet language ever used in this parliament was used by the right hon. gentleman himself, and in my presence. If I may be allowed to refer to a past debate—the right hon. gentleman himself has referred to it—I allude to the statement he made in the discussion of the Japanese treaty, when he drew on his imagination to picture the combined fleets of England and Japan facing a common enemy in the Pacific ocean. Now, Sir, that speech was adversely criticised in the English press. Everybody knows that at that particular time there was a good deal of friction between the United States and Japan. If my statement was indiscreet, what are we to think of the statement of the right hon. gentleman who is at the head of the government, and with whom your humble servant cannot be compared? Now, when I referred to the expenditure in the Militia Department, I made no criticism whatever of that department further than to say that this government was spending $11 on that department to $1 that they were spending on the great avocation of agriculture. I say that is true, and I will give the figures. I quoted from the government blue books of 1906, because that was the last full year of which we had any record. Turning to page 34 of the Public Accounts, you will find this statement: Arts, Agriculture and Statistics, $603,500.34. Now, I have deducted from those figures the items which have no reference whatever to agriculture. For instance, Archives; would the right hon. gentleman tell me what these have to do with agriculture or produce of any kind that is raised on the farm ? The 'Patent Record'—what has that to do with the farming interests of the country? Census and Statistics—does that belong to the Agriculture Department any more than to any other? Criminal Statistics—does the hon. gentleman want to say that the criminal class are found among the farmers of this country? That is what his book says, the criminal statistics are charged up to the farmer. Here is the Year Book. I do not know that any man can say in whose interest that book is issued. It is not in the farmer's interest. For general statistics there was an expenditure of $14,-111.85. Is that in the interest of the farmer any more than in the interest of any other class of people? Then, we find 'historical data re Acadian families.' Is that in the interest of agriculture? 'Quinquennial census, Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan' called for an expenditure of $4,-980. Is that in the interest of agriculture? After deducting these items I find that we have spent, in 1906. $518,976.56 in the interest of agriculture. As against that you take Militia and Defence and you find that there was an expenditure for that service of $4,294,124.62 chargeable to income and of $1,299,875.65 chargeable to capital account. Taking these figures it is within a few cents of $11 for war to $1 for agriculture. I say that should not be so. The right hon. Prime Minister said that he hoped we would never have the conditions of Germany, France and other European countries which have such heavy expenditures for war. Well, let us see. I hope we will never be in that position and the fact that we are not in that position and are never going to be in that position is a justification for my statement. Now, we will take France and these other European countries which have to be on a war footing all the time. The peace of the world is in the balance and it would be jeopardized if these nations did not keep upon a war footing. Nothwithstanding that France is kept on a war footing, what is her expenditure for agriculture ? I am taking the figures which were given in a report to the president and Senate of the United States and which are thoroughly authenticated. Nothwithstanding the statement I make about these countries, France spends on agriculture yearly $9,200,000, as against an expenditure in Canada of $518,-000 ; Austria spends $9,270,000 ; Hungary, $9,400,000 and Russia, which has had a most strenuous war, spends $25,280,000. Russia is our future rival in the sale of agricultural products. Japan spends $3,-750,000 a year, the United States, $10,000,-000, and Canada. I repeat, $518,976.56. While the expenditure of other departments has been increased from one to threefold, the expenditure in the interest of agriculture has stood still. The commission, whose report is under discussion this afternoon, have criticised more severely than anything else the Department of Militia and Defence. What do they say ?

The expenditure in this department is going up by leaps and bounds.

I want to ask this House if the militia of this country is any more effective than it was ten years ago? You have machinery enough for an army of 125,000, but you have only 38,000 men. You say that this is the framework of an army but there is no permanency in the rank and file because you drill them once a year instead of for three years which is a mistake. You have done away with the three year rule.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, that has not been done. The term of service has never been changed from three years to one.

Mr. BRODER. I stand corrected. The commission proceed to say that :

In the estimates lately submitted to parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1909, appropriations are asked for aggregating $6,500,000.

Is there a justification for that? With an expenditure of $518,000 for agriculture I say that my criticism is a fair and just criticism and it is a criticism that ought to be made. So much for that.

I want to say before I sit down that I am pretty careful in the statements which I make and that I do not make statements without taking the trouble to verify them. I propose to give the expenditures for a few years in the Militia Department. I am quoting from the annual report of the Militia Council published last year and what do they say? If you take the men in the field, as detailed in this report for 1906, you will find a large preponderance of officers—an officer for every two and a half or three men. That is the bones of an army with a vengence. The statement of the expenditure by the Department of Militia and Defence since 1896, is as follows:

Year.	Expenditure.
1896-7	$2,413,651
1897-8	1,688,213
1898-9	2,500,635
1899-1900	3,624,654
1905-6	5,594,009

My figures are taken from the public documents and I am usually pretty careful to see that they are verified before I state them. The right hon. First Minister has expressed his regret that I should have stated these facts but all I can do is to tell the truth. I am not going to say anything I should not say even to please the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAIN. Will you speak before the farmers any more?

Mr. BRODER. I will if they want me. I never force myself on any meeting and I do not intend to. I wish to say that I am not going to be responsible for what the press say about me. I see that one paper says that I said there were less people in this country than there were in 1896. I am not accountable for that and I never made such a statement. I am simply accountable for what I say in this House and elsewhere. With regard to civil service reform, we hear a lot about the sinner who used to live in this country ten or fifteen years ago. It does not make any difference about who that sinner is or where that sinner is now. It is the sinners we have here that we have to deal with. That there are sinners the report of the commission has made plain. In 1891, when there was trouble in one of the departments, several civil servants were expelled, a minister of the Crown was sent into private life and some prominent party men were prosecuted in the court. Now, will these hon. gentlemen go that far and deal with those who are guilty? If they say they will we will see a very curious condition of things in this country. It will not strike one department only. Irregularities may grow up under any administration and with the large business of this country there may be an incentive to men to go wrong, but the men who are at the head of affairs are chargeable with the responsibility of keeping things right side up and if they do not do it they are guilty and not the other people. They are the men who are responsible. If everything were in a flourishing condition in these departments you would hear hon. gentlemen opposite taking a lot of credit to themselves. Now, since things have gone, these gentlemen say: These things do not belong to us; this is an heirloom that we got from the old Tory party; we have inherited this trouble. You have inherited it but the child has grown on your hands and when you talk about rascality—shall I use that word?—it is pretty severe—the Conservative party may have sinned, but, as compared with hon. gentlemen opposite, they were in the primer when these gentlemen were in the fifth book. That is the plain English of it. The interests of the country and the interests of public life demand that a thorough scrutiny and investigation should be held under the control of these gentlemen who have the right to see that the public departments are cleansed of what is not proper, and that the public service of the country should have that honest deal which it is entitled to from any government no matter what its party stripe may be. I have not criticised anybody very much in this House, and perhaps that is a good thing for myself as well as for the opposite side, but there may a time come when I shall consider it my duty to discuss certain men and certain measures, and then I shall say what I have to say fearlessly and above board. I have never yet taken undue advantage of my opponent no matter who he may be, and I shall not do so in future, but I am going to have fair-play even if I have to fight for it.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Before I discuss the motion before the House I should like to say a few words in reply to certain statements made by my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder). It has been stated in certain sections of the country that the expenditures on our military system are excessive, but if the hon. gentleman looks at the report of the last Imperial Conference of 1907, he will find that among the most important autonomous states forming the British Empire, Canada spends least for military purposes. The hon. gentleman will see in that report that England spends per head of its population for military purposes £1. 9 shillings 3 pence; that Australia spends per head of its population 5 shillings ; that New Zealand spends 5 shillings and a farthing ; that the Cape of Good Hope spends 5 shillings and a farthing ; and that Canada spends 4 shillings and 6½d. The hon. gentleman will therefore find, that instead of Canada being extravagant in its military expenditure, this report of the Imperial Conference proclaims that Canada is not doing as much as some other parts of the empire for its defence. I do not agree with the view of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Broder) in this respect and I may avail myself of this opportunity to state that the attack which has been directed against me to-night by the hon. member for North Toronto as to my having at one time made certain appeals with regard to the defence of Canada or of the empire, is entirely uncalled for. The hon. gentleman from North Toronto seems to have taken much delight in directing attacks against me for some time past. He has made insinuation after insinuation, but he has never dared to make any charge against me because he knows very well that I can repel any charge he can make either in this parliament or before the people of the country. If he thinks he has any case let him stand up in his place one of these days ; let him put his seat in jeopardy.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, he will never dare to do that. He will make insinuations but he will not have the courage to make charges and to expose himself to the consequences. Let him make charges against me; we will have an investigation and we will find out which of us shall retain his seat in parliament; we will find who will be branded as a slanderer, and who will stand before this country a man who did his duty.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Did or did not the hon. gentleman in 1896 pursue the same policy which I regret to-day is pursued by certain gentlemen now, of endeavouring to make capital out of the expenditures of the Militia Department? Did or did not he appeal to the fanaticism of the people of his province by stating that Canada was spending money for the purchase of arms for the defence of the empire?

Mr. BRODEUR. Let me at once say that when the hon. gentleman speaks of the fanaticism of the people of my province he speaks of something which does not exist. There is no fanaticism in my province, and I believe the hon. gentleman knows it. We are broadminded in the province of Quebec. We are not ruled by prejudice, we are working for our country and for the advancement of our country. We are glad to serve under the British Crown to which we are devoted. And, Sir, when at different times in our history British connection was in danger it was the French Canadian who were there to defend it. Who in 1775 stood up in defence of the British Crown if not the French Canadians? Who in 1812 fought the battle of Chateauguay and repulsed the American troops, if not the French Canadians? And, Sir, in 1849 when, because of the repeal of the corn laws in England certain Canadians signed a document in favour of annexation to the United States, who were the signers? Let the hon. member (Mr. Sam Hughes) look at the signatories to that document and he will not find five French Canadians among the number. I tell the hon. member that there is no fanaticism among the French Canadians. The French Canadians are devoted to their country. I resent the insult flung at them to-night by the member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) and I regret to say that such insults have become a habit with certain members on the opposite side.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the minister be good enough to answer my question, and I will substitute the word 'prejudices' for the word fanaticism. He has given us a nice little speech now, but let him answer the question.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have never appealed also to the prejudices of my countrymen. I know that my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) is probably living upon such appeals which he makes against the French Canadians. I know that he has been in the habit of insulting my fellow countrymen.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is that, again?

Mr. BRODEUR. I say that the hon. gentleman is in the habit of insulting my fellow countrymen.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman cannot show an instance in my whole history where I insulted the French Canadian people. However, I shall reply to the hon. gentleman later.

Mr. BRODEUR. Let me for a moment discuss the question before the chair.

Mr. LENNOX. That is a good idea.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is certainly a good idea, and had I not been interrupted, I would not have digressed. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the motion before the chair? Let us read the first paragraph of it, and we will see that hon. gentlemen opposite do not want an investigation made; they do not want that the truth should be known; they do not want that Judge Cassels should be called on to make an investigation. Here is the way the motion reads:

> That the investigation conducted by the Civil Service Commission was confessedly partial and incomplete.
> That the proposed inquiry before Mr. Justice Cassels is unsatisfactory and insufficient, inasmuch as it relates to only one paragraph of the report of that commission and touches but a portion of the administration of one department.

So I understand that hon. gentlemen opposite are going to record their votes in favour of the declaration that we should not investigate the charge that is made in the report of the Civil Service Commission that there are men who have no conscience in the Marine and Fisheries Department. Let them read this motion. They do not seem to have read it, because they are laughing now. What does the report of the Civil Service Commission state? It states that there is a lack of conscience amongst the officers of the Marine and Fisheries Department. I proposed to my colleagues to have an investigation made as to whether that statement was true or not, and I think it was the proper step to take; I think that the country will commend the action that we have taken. But now we find hon. gentlemen opposite saying: No, don't make an investigation; we do not want an investigation made. That is the position which they are going to take. Well, I expect that the House will not agree to such a motion; I expect that the House will stand by the government in declaring that an investigation must be made, and that we must find out whether there is a lack of conscience amongst the officers of the Marine and Fisheries Department or not.

But, Mr. Speaker, let us take from the Civil Service list the names of the officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries appointed by hon. friends opposite. Is it because they are appointments of the late government—recommended by some members who are now sitting in this House—that the hon. gentlemen do not want an investigation? I think so, Mr. Speaker. Let us take the names. The deputy minister was appointed in 1896 by hon. gentlemen opposite. Take the three chief clerks in the Marine Correspondence Branch; they were all appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite—one in 1879, one in 1873, the other in 1882. Take the Fisheries Correspondence Branch; the two principal officers there were appointed by the Conservative government—one in 1892, the other in 1869. Take the Accountant's Branch; the chief accountant was appointed in 1881, the next in 1879, and the assistant accountant was appointed in 1904 under this government. Take the Chief Engineer's Branch; Colonel Anderson, the head of this branch, was appointed on October 23, 1874, by a Liberal government, and he is a man against whom there is absolutely nothing in the report of this commission. Mr. B. H. Fraser was appointed in 1889, Mr. W. Bell Dawson in 1894. Take the Hydrographic Survey Branch; the chief was appointed in 1884. Take the Commissioner of Lights' Branch; the commissioner was appointed in 1893, the assistant in 1883. Take the agents, of whom we have five—one in St. John, one in Halifax, one in Charlottetown, one in Montreal, and one in British Columbia; of these five officers four have been appointed by the late government. Well, I am sure that our hon. friends opposite are not asked by the officers of the department, to oppose an investigation, as they do by their motion. No; they want the truth to be known; they are anxious that the truth be known, and it is only hon. gentlemen opposite who do not want the truth to be known. Are they afraid of something? But hon. gentlemen opposite say: Oh, but the minister is entirely responsible; if there has been some stealing in the department, the minister is responsible for it, whether it took place some time ago or many years ago. While the administration of the department may not have been all that it should have been, I repeat that the system in existence there is the system which has existed not only since the Liberals have been in power, but even when the Conservatives were in power, and I am going to prove it immediately.

The hon. leader of the opposition has quoted a great deal from the report of the Civil Service Commission, but he has failed to quote some paragraphs which are very interesting. He was very anxious to condemn me; he was very anxious to prove that the existing Minister of Marine and Fisheries was responsible for everything that was found in that department. He did not quote page 37—oh, yes, he made a quotation, but stopped short. I quote it again, and this time I will complete the sentence which the hon. leader of the opposition commenced but left uncompleted:

> Your commissioners have to confess that the general conclusions which they have formed regarding the administration of the department are most unfavourable. It seems to have a few redeeming features, although there are some, one of which is the presence in the department of some good men, chiefly but not wholly in the lower ranks. With a better organization and better methods these might form the nucleus of a good staff.

I think my hon. friend stopped there; but there is another phrase which it might be interesting to know, and here it is:

> The trouble is not of recent origin but has been long continued and is the result of evil methods and practices persisted in for many years.

Was the hon. leader of the opposition afraid to quote this part? The hon. member sitting beside him (Mr. Foster) has been Minister of Marine and Fisheries; he was perhaps one of those responsible for these evil practices; what did he do to stop them? I might quote something to my hon. friend on the subject of arrears of payment. I need not go very far; I will take the last report of the Auditor General during the time the Conservatives were in power, and what do I find there? I find that there have been in those last years some arrears of payments. But if hon. gentlemen opposite want to do me justice, let them read the evidence given by Colonel Gourdeau. If they will read that evidence, they will find that there has been a great change made in the administration of the department. Let them read at page 649 of the evidence, vol. 1, and they will find the following evidence given by Colonel Gourdeau, the deputy minister:

> Q. When you have a supply granted by parliament, do your officers try to live within that supply?—A. Yes, under the present minister. There is an order which has been adhered to. First of all, an account is received. That has to go to the clerk who looks after the estimates. If it corresponds with the estimates, he attaches his initials to it. Then it goes to the accountant who checks it. If it is an expenditure for a new boat or lighthouse, it has to stand until next year.
> Q. You are trying to keep within the estimates of the year?—A. Yes. The present minister said he would hold the accountant responsible if anything was paid for that was not estimated for, he would take strict measures to prevent recurrence of that.
> Q. The present minister has taken steps to keep the expenditure of the department within the appropriations?—A. Absolutely, and is particular in exacting a monthly statement showing how the appropriations stand.

I would like to know if the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) exacted that monthly statement when he saw how the affairs of the department were administered.

Q. There was a certain amount of laxity previous to his assumption of office?—A. It was a continuation of what had been the practice under every government. When they had to spend money, they spent it.

There is the best answer to the insinuations of hon. gentlemen opposite. Here is the evidence of a man who has been connected with the service under all the governments since 1867, and who states under oath that the present minister is the one who has made such an important change in the administration of the department. Even under the administration of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), this man says that the old system was existing and there were accounts which were not paid. But I have got here in the Auditor General's Report for 1895-6 letters showing that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster)—who, I regret, is not in his seat now—was in the habit of making payments for one appropriation out of another appropriation, without any legitimate excuse. Here is the correspondence interchanged between the department and the Auditor General. It will be found on page 115 Part T of the Auditor General's Report for 1895-6. Mr. McDougall called the attention of the department to the fact that they were taking money—were I to follow the example set by some hon. gentlemen opposite, I should use the word 'stealing'—from one vote and applying it to another. I shall not, however, use the word; I am not the kind of man to use expressions and insinuations absolutely uncalled for. But what are the facts? Here is Mr. McDougall complaining of the action of the department in taking money from one vote and applying it to another. And I may observe that these irregularities were sanctioned by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). Would any one believe it? It was this great administrator. It was not that crazy man, as he described me the other day. That is the language which the hon. gentleman uses with regard to myself, but here is what Mr. McDougall says. The deputy minister thought, of course, that when he could tell the Auditor General that it was the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), then Finance Minister, who had sanctioned these payments, no further difficulty would be made, but here is what the then Auditor General, Mr. McDougall, said:

Now if it were proper to charge these cheques to maintenance, it would have been equally so to charge them to any other vote covered by your credit; so that you see if such transactions are allowed to pass unnoticed, the subdivision of the annual supplies into separate and distinct appropriations would be a farce, and, so far as keeping expenditure under its proper vote is concerned, parliament might as well vote the whole supplies in one lump sum.

And the deputy minister replies by sending to the Auditor General a letter of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in which he said that this way of making payments was a proper thing to do. There is ample evidence to show that the practice of spending under one vote the moneys belonging to another vote was quite common under the administration of this paragon, the Ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster). Now, let me quote the evidence of another person. Let me quote the letter of Mr. Gregory, on page 78, in which, writing about the Auditor General's inquiry regarding prices, he says:

I beg respectfully to state that the prices charged by J. J. Murphy, Samson & Filion, Terreau & Racine, are all fixed and agreed upon in advance. If lower rates are expected, I have no idea how you can obtain them. There has been no other system in the service before or since confederation, and it remains with the department to establish means of effecting a change.

I am trying to make a change, and if my hon. friends who, since the two years I have been in that department, have kept on criticising it day in and day out and making insinuations, will give me enough time to make those changes, I will see that the mistakes of administration which were made, even when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, will be corrected. It appears that I am to be responsible for everything set down in this respect, even for things which happened when this government was not in power. And we are told that we should not have an investigation made by a judge but by an independent commission. Here are officers of the department, charged with being derelict in their duties, charged with having lack of conscience, and who are asking for an investigation. Well, we have appointed Judge Cassels to investigate. But hon. gentlemen do not want a judge to make the investigation. What is it they want? I know what it is. If they were in power they would probably do what they did in 1892, and perhaps my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, who was not then a member of this House, will find extraordinary the procedure which was then adopted by his political friends. Would he believe me when I say—but he would not, I will quote the order in council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I always believe you.

Mr. BRODEUR. Charges similar to these were made against officers of one of the departments in 1891 and what happened? Were they referred to an independent commission as this motion states ? Were they referred to a commission absolutely independent ? Yes. The independent commission was composed of, do you know whom ? It was composed of the minister whose officials had been found derelict in their duty, together with two other members of the government of that day. I am glad to say that my hon. friend the member for Lanark was one of those independent members called upon to investigate the actions of the Conservatives. Let us suppose for one moment that I had passed an order in council providing that I should myself make this investigation. You would see these hon. gentlemen rising in their seats and saying : Look at the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the guilty one, the culprit ! he is investigating his own actions ! Here is the order in council passed in 1893, appointing Mr. Dewdney, the minister whose officials were found stealing money. The member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) was also responsible as a Minister of the Crown for the actions of the officials, yet he assisted in investigating them ; and last but not least, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was also on that commission. Here is an independent commission ; that is doubtless the one quoted by the hon. the leader of the opposition in his motion when he speaks of independent commissions.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the minister tell us what the finding of the commission was ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, I shall read the order in council, although it was rather long.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the finding ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The point I wish to make is that the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has been complaining that the minister is responsible for the actions of his officers. The hon. member for Lanark claims that too, I suppose ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. BRODEUR. Then does the hon. gentleman think it was a fair thing for the men who were responsible for the actions of those officers to themselves investigate those actions ? Does he think it was a fair thing to do ?

Mr. HAGGART. It was our duty to investigate and we dismissed every one of them.

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, no, the hon. gentleman goes too far.

Mr. HAGGART. Every one against whom any charge was proved.

Mr. BRODEUR. He did not dismiss them all. I think it is not fair. The hon. the leader of the opposition claims that the minister is responsible. Then the hon. gentleman should have dismissed himself, he should have resigned. But no, they cut the heads off the others, the small fry, but they kept their seats in the cabinet. However, the people dismissed them at the next election.

I did not think it would be proper for a minister or members of the cabinet to investigate the actions of the officers. These officers were not appointed by us, none of those whose conduct will come before Mr. Justice Cassels were appointed by this government ; and I thought it was fair and just that the investigation should be carried on by an independent commission, not an independent commission such as my hon. friends opposite, but a judge, a commissioner in whom the country would have confidence in order that justice might be rendered to all parties. It is interesting thus to read what has been done in the past and then to see the indignation of my hon. friends opposite. We have seen something of this to-day. We know that the hon. gentlemen had before them the report of the other Civil Service Commission, urging the appointment of an independent Civil Service Commission. They have done nothing, but to-day they are urging strongly such a change in system. When they were in power they never found it advisable to make the change which was recommended in that report.

Much has been said with regard to the expenditure of the Department of Marine. It is true that our department has spent money and we have been obliged to spend money. Why ? Because when the hon. gentlemen were in power they did not do their duty to the country. Take the case of Aids to Navigation. Will anybody deny the importance of having aids to navigation in order to help our shipping, in order to improve our trade, in order to add to the wealth of our country. Will hon. gentlemen opposite deny that ? We must judge them by their policy in the past ; they were letting everything go to decay ; no aids to navigation were provided, no proper facilities were given and what was the result ? I shall quote some very eloquent figures which will show to this country that this government has done its duty with regard to transportation, with regard to aids to navigation, in such a way that we have reduced materially the rate of insurance on goods going to or from Canada. I have here the figures which will show the rates of insurance from Montreal direct to ports in the United Kingdom on provisions and merchandise and on grain, under the Conservative government and under this government :

Time.	Rate on Provisions and Merchandise. Cents.	Rate on Grain. Cents.
Under Conservative government.	84½	99
Under Liberal government, 1901	63½	78
Under Liberal government, 1902	55½	78
Under Liberal government, 1903	49	56
Under Liberal government, 1904	43	50
Under Liberal government, 1905	37	41
Under Liberal government, 1906	45	45

Thus there was a reduction on provisions and merchandise of 39½ and on grain of 54 cents. How much does that represent to the country? I contend that it represents to our consuming classes and our exporters millions of money each year; it represents more money than we have spent.

Perhaps it will not be sufficient for me just to state those figures, hon. gentlemen may say that they are not correct. I have in my hand resolutions passed by the Board of Trade of Montreal, the most important Board of Trade in Canada, approving of the action of the government, approving of my own actions with regard to aids to navigation. I shall read these resolutions and also the resolution of the shipping federation:

The Montreal Board of Trade,
Montreal, November 15, 1906.

Hon. Mr. Brodeur,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa.

Sir,—I have the honour to communicate the following resolution adopted yesterday by the council of this board after hearing the eulogistic reports of our president and the representative of the shipping interests upon the work of your department in improving the navigation of the St. Lawrence route,—

Resolved, that having received from the president and the representative of the shipping interests on the council their reports on the annual departmental inspection of the channel, which inspection, by the courtesy of the Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, they attended, the council of the Montreal Board of Trade hereby expresses its appreciation of the manner in which the Dominion Government has met the desire of the country that a generous expenditure should be made for the purpose of improving our national waterways from Montreal to the ocean, and the council further expresses its gratitude to the hon. the minister and to the engineers of his department for having so readily and promptly met the various specific requests for channel and lighting improvements made by this board and the shipping federation.

Here is also the resolution of the shipping federation:

Resolution unanimously adopted at a general meeting of the members of the Shipping Federation of Canada, held in their board room in the city of Montreal, on Wednesay, November 21, 1906, of which the following is a true copy of the entry duly minuted.

Be it resolved that the Shipping Federation of Canada, duly record a vote of thanks to the Hon. L. P. Brodeur, K.C., LLB, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, for the opportunity giving the members to inspect the St. Lawrence ship channel and the works connected with the aids to navigation.

That this federation is extremely gratified with the permanent and substantial manner in which the many undertakings are being carried through, and consider that great credit is due to the government and to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, for the way in which this national work is being done. The beneficial effects have already been felt in the lowering of insurance rates by the St. Lawrence route, which not alone benefits the ship but also the producer in the west.

That the members of this Federation are pleased to note the able manner in which the minister has mastered the many details in the short period which he has held office.

Similar resolutions were passed last year also. I appreciate highly what is contained in these resolutions of the Montreal Board of Trade and of the Shipping Federation, I care far more for them than I do for all the criticisms which hon. gentlemen opposite have directed against me. I will quote also the last report made by the president of the Shipping Federation, Mr. Hugh Allan, not a man who is connected with this party; he has never been a Liberal, he belongs to a Conservative family, and I think has always been a Conservative. Here is what he says:

The lighting of the river and gulf has not only been very much improved, but the attention to lights has left nothing to be desired. The attention of the department when a defect has been brought to its notice has been prompt and the service generally first class. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is to be congratulated on the vast improvements he has made in this department, which no doubt has been brought about largely by the formation of the lighthouse board.

I suppose there is not a man on the other side of the House who would dare to say that Mr. Hugh Allan is not qualified to speak on these questions with intelligence and impartiality. I think I am able to say that since I have been in this department I have done my best to remedy any evils which may have existed in it. I have done something since I have been there. When my hon. friends opposite were in power they had in charge the administration of the Montreal harbour, and what a condition it was in! Ask any man who was connected with the shipping interests in Montreal, and he will tell you that they could get nothing done by the government; the government would not move because the hon. member for North Toronto did not want any money to be expended. Well, Sir, we do not belong to that class of men.

We do want money to be expended, but expended only in such a way as will expand and develop the country, and make of Canada a great and magnificent nation. The hon. gentlemen say that I have done nothing for the Montreal harbour since I have been in office. Well, I had been there only a few months when I introduced a Bill changing the system under which the harbour works had got into a muddle. That new system has been in operation for about a year, and I am sure that every man in this House who is acquainted with the facts would be obliged to commend the work which has been done by the new board. This is something which I have done. What did my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) do when he was minister, for the purpose of improving the Montreal harbour? Absolutely nothing. It is this government who are building up the harbour of Montreal, and we intend to give to Montreal a harbour which will be a credit to this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I came into the department in the month of February, 1906, immediately after the opening of the session. Since that time I have been employed in that department at least fifteen hours a day. It seems to me that a minister who has devoted so much time to his department as that, should receive some commendation from the country, if not from the members of the opposition. I do not shrink from the labour. I have health and I have strength, and as long as I am at the head of this department I am willing to sacrifice my health and strength in order to make the department a credit to this country, and in order to remedy the evils and mistakes which were committed by hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in power. Eleven ministers have passed through that department, of these seven belonged to the Conservative party and four to the Liberal party. Is it right that the responsibility for all the mistakes which were made in that department during all those years should fall entirely upon the shoulders of the present minister? I do not seek to evade any responsibility for which I am chargeable, but I refuse to be responsible for any acts committed by my predecessors. I will not stand responsible for the mistakes made by hon. gentlemen opposite, the accumulated mistakes they made while in charge of that department. I am going to change all that, and I believe the work will be done in such a way as to satisfy the country.

Some reference has been made to several statements made in the report of the Civil Service Commission. The hon. member for North Toronto quoted their reference to flour, and I think the leader of the opposition also alluded to it. I think he also referred to the question of coal. We had a coal contract with a man in Prescott. That coal contract was given after public tenders had been caleld for. I gave it to the lowest tenderer as I usually do. I found out that when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power they did not always give contracts to the lowest tenderer. They had some particular friend and I am going to present a report to the House on this subject from which a good many illustrations of this fact will be derived. Hon. members of this House will be edified by the knowledge of how hon. gentlemen opposite were carrying on affairs of the country and by the evidence which will be afforded of the mistakes, extravagance and maladministration of hon. gentlemen opposite. That coal contract, as I have said, I gave to the lowest tenderer. The price quoted was a very low one at the time but the tenderer found it possible to quote the price. I gave him the contract and I took the precaution to state in the contract that we could extend it for two years if he so desired. It was a very hard clause but it was a clause which was put in the contract and when the year expired, although the coal was very cheap at the price, I thought of extending the contract for two years. The contractor came later on and asked to be relieved of that clause in the contract. An officer of the department in whom I had reason to have confidence and who was also appointed by the old government, made a report to the minister, or to the deputy minister, which was as follows :—

> Mr. James Buckley, of Prescott, who furnished anthracite coal to this department at $5.75 per ton, states that this coal was furnished at a considerable loss to him. The coal cost him $6.25 and he is now willing to continue the furnishing of the anthracite coal at cost price, viz., $6.25 per ton. I recommend that Mr. Buckley's offer be accepted; and as he has furnished coal at a loss in the past, that 5 per cent profit be allowed him for coal in the future. Anthracite coal in Ottawa costs from $7.25 to $7.75, and the regular price at Prescott is $7 per ton.
> (Sgd.) W. W. S.

That means W. W. Stumbles. Mr. Fyshe, in his report, quotes that memorandum and adds the following, which will be found at page 35 :—

> This was agreed to.

Meaning that the department, or the minister, had accepted the recommendation which was made to increase the price of the contract. I do not want to find fault with Mr. Fyshe, but I thought before charging the department or the minister with having agreed to that he should have taken the precaution to go and see the minister and ask him what had really taken place. I have never seen him to discuss this question with him, but if he had come to me I would have been very glad to have shown him that in spite of the recommendation which was made I wrote across the document, on the 17th March, 1907, the following: 'Carry out the contract. Sgd. L. P. Brodeur,' I cannot understand how Mr. Fyshe came to declare in his report that this was agreed to when the contrary had been done and when I had given instructions that the contract should be carried out. More than that, I have gone over all the payments which have been made before and since this document has been on file and Mr. Buckley has been obliged since that time to deliver the coal and was paid for it at the price formerly agreed to and consequently that part of the report which deals with this question is absolutely incorrect.

In another case which is quoted I find the same mistake. It will be found at page 34. The statement is somewhat long but I suppose it is better that all the facts should be known and therefore I am going to quote it all:

A list of prices paid in Quebec——

I call your attention to that expression.

—was, in February last, submitted to the manager of the shipyard at Sorel, for comparison with the prices which he was paying there; and in his reply he stated that the prices generally were about 50 per cent higher than the prices being paid at Sorel. One item objected to was the purchase of a certain brand of flour at $6.95 a barrel. When this was inquired into at the instance of the Auditor General the agent replied: 'These are ——'s prices, and the same prices are charged by every flour dealer in Quebec for the same brand of flour. These brands cannot be bought for less here. If as good flour can be bought in Halifax for $5.20 per barrel it would pay the department to import it from there. There are other brands of flour that can be bought in this market from —— and others at $6 upwards, but not less than $6, suitable for our purposes. Our people generally choose the best, for the reason that it is subject to changes of temperature which might cause it to harden or sour, as has often occurred with ordinary flour.' And he adds later on: 'Referring to the matter of flour, there is but one flour dealer on the patronage list. I beg respectfully to suggest that you place one or two more on the list of such dealers.'

The last part of this letter has been quoted by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. I will come to that in a minute. But the commissioners, in their report, state that the list of prices paid in Quebec was submitted to the manager of the shipyard at Sorel. I must take exception to that. It is true that an account certified to by Mr. Gregory was sent to the department and the department refused to pay that account; so, the account was not paid. Now, Mr. Fyshe goes on and states that this was inquired into at the instance of the Auditor General. I must take exception also to that; this account was never referred to the Auditor General. This account, as I have already explained, came to the department and was, under my instructions, sent to Mr. Desbarats, at Sorel, who knew exactly the price which should be paid and the Auditor General, up to the time that his report was brought before this House, did not know of this account and the account had not then been paid. I am sorry that these mistakes have happened. My hon. friends are going to take this document and spread it all over the country. I suppose they will not take the trouble to publish as extensively the remarks I am now making and they will no doubt go to the people of the country and say: Look at the Department of Marine and Fisheries, how corrupt it is; they paid $6.95 for a barrel of flour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the minister will tell us how much was paid.

Mr. BRODEUR. I could not say offhand how much was paid, but we did not pay that amount. I will, on a future day, give the information. Reference has been made also by the hon. leader of the opposition to the fact that there was only one person on the patronage list at Quebec from a statement made by Mr. Gregory. Mr. Gregory makes that statement, but if the hon. gentleman had read the whole letter of Mr. Gregory he would have found that Mr. Gregory states formally that he had gone over to see not only the Liberal flour dealers but the Conservative flour dealers of Quebec and that the price which he puts in his account and which he certifies was the price which was asked in all of the houses there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What page is that?

Mr. BRODEUR. Page 92. I quote from this letter:

Now before writing this answer to your letter, I beg to state that I have made inquiries among the dealers in flour, pork and all the other articles mentioned, not only among the friends of the administration but outsiders also, and the prices quoted are Quebec prices, and these prices, by tender as far as possible were obtained from dealers in Quebec, friends of the administration, and submitted for your approval by my letter of the 18th March, 1907.

I think that disposes of the charge made by the leader of the opposition that there was only one flour dealer on the patronage list and that the prices paid were so high on account of that. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has referred to Mr. Willie Walsh, and to Mr. W. Leo C. Walsh, who, he says is the same man. The hon. gentleman led us to believe that the agent at Quebec had received positive instructions from the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine), and from the then Minister of Justice, and that the agent had no discretion but to purchase from Mr. Walsh. But let us see what the evidence is. Mr. Gregory in a letter of March 16, 1905 (it should be 1906) is thus quoted in the report:

Gregory replies that stuff was purchased on direction of the Hon. R. P. on the wharf at Quebec who directed me then and there to give a good order to the agent of McColl Brothers & Company, Mr. Leo C. Walsh, who stood beside him at the time. That was over a year ago. I gave an order to Mr. Walsh as requested.

I may say that after coming to the department I ordered an inquiry into this matter and it is the reply of Mr. Gregory that is here referred to:

I gave an order to Mr. Walsh as requested, and when the goods arrived I was somewhat surprised at the size of the package, and I refused to take them and a lengthy correspondence took place between McColl Brothers & Company and myself on the subject—in fact I declined to give them any more orders. Subsequently I received a letter from the late minister as well as another from the Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick, copies of which I herewith inclose. An opportunity some time after occurred when I saw the late minister here and spoke to him as it seemed to me that that firm had taken advantage of his kindness about the matter. He told me to keep the goods and try to get rid of them to the best advantage, which I did by distributing them round where I understood the Kantslip could be used on belts, &c. If any has been sent where it was not really required I shall see that it is removed where it can be used to advantage.

In order to understand the sentence which follows, I may refer to what was done by me when I came into the department. There were constant statements that certain things had been ordered by the minister verbally and I gave positive instructions that in future no excuse should be offered that the minister had given instructions unless reports were made right away by the officer who was receiving the orders. I do not want to charge anybody particularly but I found there was a tendency to charge the minister with having given verbal instructions. In the letter above quoted the agent says it was done on the instructions of Mr. Préfontaine. But there is a letter of May 6, 1905, bearing on that, and which I may read:

Mr. W. Leo C. Walsh, representing McColl Brothers & Company, will call on you probably Tuesday in reference to some oil. If you can give him an order I will feel obliged —R. P.

It was, therefore, left absolutely in the discretion of the officer and he could give the order or not give it as he pleased. Now, the letter from the then Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Fitzpatrick) is quoted as follows:

May 3, 1905. Dear Mr. Gregory,—Young Willie Walsh, who represents McColl Brothers & Company, Montreal agents for Vesta boiler compound, has asked me to say a good word to you for him, and if the material is as good as represented, I hope you will place some orders in his way.—C. Fitzpatrick.

Now, what harm is there in those letters; what deduction can be drawn from them that they are not proper letters to write. Fortunately we have the correspondence bearing on this matter and we see from it that the officer was simply told that if he needed any oil he might purchase it from this young man. Mr. Gregory concludes his letter of March 6. 1905. by stating:

The new system now established of informing you immediately of any order I may receive from the minister or deputy minister verbally will avoid for the future any misunderstanding.

That is perfectly true. When I saw that representations were made that verbal orders had been given by the late minister, I ordered that in future the verbal orders of the minister would not be sufficient and that written orders would be required. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was Minister of Marine and Fisheries for many years and if he ever should become minister again this rule of mine will probably assist him so that he may not be responsible for acts which he never intended to commit. Now, there is another little thing in this report which though not very important in itself may be magnified in certain quarters, and I think perhaps I should avail myself of this first opportunity to make a reference to it. There is a rather peculiar insinuation to be found at page 226 of the report and a most uncalled for insinuation it is. The Department of Marine and Fisheries had for years been purchasing buoys from German firms. I may say en passant, and it may perhaps surprise the House to know, that when the hon. member for North Toronto was minister he also bought some buoys, but strange to say he paid a higher price for them than we are paying now. It will be a surprise to many gentlemen to know that the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries who is said to be so extravagant is paying less for these buoys than did the member for North Toronto when he was minister. Well, at page 226 an order in council with reference to the purchase of buoys is quoted as follows:

The undersigned observes that the Willson low pressure gas buoys are manufactured in Canada, while the welded compression buoys heretofore used were manufactured in foreign countries (G. B.?).

Now, it would seem that the comment 'G. B.' is an insinuation that I consider Great Britain to be a foreign country. Of course that is absurd, but I have a doubt that the hon. member for Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) in reading that over to his electors would take great unction from this insinuation made by Mr. Fyshe and say: Look at these French Canadians, look at this man referring to Great Britain as being a foreign country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If the hon. minister will permit me, I would not take him for a second to be typical of the honest French Canadian.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, Mr. Speaker, I may say that this remark—not the remark made by my hon. friend, but the remark at page 226—tending to show that I declared that Great Britain was a foreign country is absolutely incorrect; because we did not buy the buoys from Great Britain. We bought them from Germany, which certainly is a foreign country; and I think I was right in suggesting that it would be better for Canada to purchase her buoys in Canada than in Germany. I thought I should take this opportunity to put the facts of this matter before the country.

I have spoken longer than I had intended; but I thought it was my duty to say a few words to-night in regard to the insinuations which have been made for some time, not only against myself, but also against the Department of Marine and Fisheries. A few months after I took charge of the department, I saw that the system of accounting there was bad, and I thought that I should get somebody to make a thorough investigation, to find out whether the system of book-keeping we had there was good or not. Because I have done that; because I have tried to bring about some reform in my department; because I tried to provide the means of ascertaining every day what the expenditures in my department were, and of making comparisons every day and every hour to see whether the expenditures were too high or not, and whether they compared favourably or unfavourably with those of former years; because I took these means of saving thousands and thousands of dollars to the department, I stand charged before the country by hon. gentlemen opposite as having been extravagant in providing that system of accounting. No, Mr. Speaker; it is the best thing I have done, because now we can ascertain whether the affairs of the department are properly administered or not. During the time my hon. friend from North Toronto was Minister of Marine and Fisheries—a man of such great administrative ability that he declared the other day that the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries was a fool or something of the kind—he did not do himself the credit of establishing a system in the department by which the books would show every day a trial balance. I thought it was absolutely necessary in such a department to have books which would show every day how the affairs of the department were going. We have that reform, and I have hoped that it would bring other reforms. But I repeat what I stated a few minutes ago, that I have had no time since I have been in the department. As I have explained immediately after I came into the department, in February, 1906, the session came on. After the session I ordered the investigation, and left for the maritime provinces. I thought it was necessary for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to go and see those provinces. I have not yet had time to visit British Columbia, though it is important that a Minister of Marine and Fisheries should visit that fine section of our country. In November, 1907, this session began. I have attended all meetings of council; I have worked with my colleagues preparing for the work of the session. As I said a few minutes ago, I have worked not less than 15 hours a day in the administration of the department, devoting all the strength I have to placing it on a proper footing. In the month of February, 1907, I was called on by the Prime Minister to go to the Colonial Conference. In June, 1907, the Prime Minister asked me to accompany the Minister of Finance to Paris to negotiate the French treaty, a treaty which I claim is a credit to this country, but which meant for me a great deal of labour. But, Mr. Speaker, I came back here in the month of October last just before the session began, and this House has been in session almost ever since. And so, Mr. Speaker, since February, 1906, I have been engaged constantly in my parliamentary and departmental duties, and this session I have been spending a good deal of time in answering the base insinuations made by hon. gentlemen opposite. Mr. Speaker, I think I have done my duty; I think I have done my share of work; but I do not object to work, In spite of all the insinuations which have been made against me, I will continue to do for my country the work that may be expected of me, and I will continue to reform the department with the view of placing it on a proper basis.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Speaker, I will not attempt to follow the hon. gentleman in his peregrinations in regard to the administration of affairs in his office or in regard to the alleged insincerity of hon. gentlemen now in opposition with reference to their conduct when they were in power. His whole speech has very little relation to the motion made by the hon. leader of the opposition. I would not have spoken at all on this subject had the hon. minister not undertaken to read the member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) a lecture on his conduct in speaking in general terms on the expenditure in the Militia Department for political purposes. At the time it struck me as an apt illustration of the old adage about Satan reproving sin. When I asked the minister if he had not in 1896 used his position as a prominent member of his party, throughout the length and breadth of the province of Quebec, to appeal to the fanaticism—I use the term advisedly, for all people have more or less fanaticism—of his fellow countrymen in regard to the expenditure for the purchase of rifles for the volunteers of the Dominion of Canada, he played the old game and said that it was an insult to the people of Quebec. I want to tell him that the insult comes from himself when he so belittles the intelligence of the people of Quebec as to resort to such tactics. No man should ever remain in public life who would seek to mislead the people directely or indirectly. Let the hon. gentleman stand up and deny that on that occasion, as on others, he appealed to the prejudices of the people, even going so far as to appeal to the mothers: Are you going to vote for a Tory government in order that they may take your money to buy rifles with which to arm your sons and compel them to go and fight the battles of Britain the world over? That is the line of policy which was followed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and yet he has the nerve to get up and reprove the opposition for their strictures on the conduct of the government in connection with the civil service report commission.

If there is anything wrong in the expenditure of the Militia Department, the proper place to take that up is when the Militia estimates are before us. In the commission report there is no charge of improper expenditure against that department, but of extravaagnt expenditure, and when the estimates are under discussion, I shall be prepared to criticise them to the fullest extent. But, no doubt the newspapers supporting the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will be placarded to-morrow with big head lines describing the insult offered the people of the province of Quebec because I have pointed out the misconduct of the minister in following the line of policy he did when he attacked the late government for its purchase of rifles for our militia.

Mr. TALBOT. We do not give you so much notice as that in the province of Quebec.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman should confine himself to the study of entomology for that is his specialty. In the year 1885, when the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was appealing to the fanaticism of the people of Quebec and opposing law and order in the Dominion, I had the honour of endeavouring to assist in maintaining law and order and of defending my French Canadian fellow countrymen. I took the opportunity of defending the 65th French Canadian regiment in the Northwest and of pointing out the splendid service they had done, but the hon. minister was wasting all his sympathies on the rebels and condemning the government for calling on the French Canadian regiments to go to the front. I stood for law and order, regardless of race or nationality, and my sympathies were with all his felow countrymen who stood with me. I have faith in the progressive spirit, in the honour and in that love of liberty which is characteristic of the French race, and I believe that as soon as our French Canadian fellow countrymen learn—and they are learning rapidly—that many of their leaders on the other side have for years deliberately gone from hustings to hustings and misled them, and then have turned around in their clubs and association rooms afterwards and told stories about them and laughed at and mocked them, they will administer swift vengeance on those men who have so long deceived them. I would not at all regard the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as one of the class to which I have referred as honourable and progressive and lovers of freedom and of law and order. The hon. minister referred to the work done by the people of Quebec in 1775 and I am quite ready to commend them for what they did. But our good countrymen of that province at that time sold their wares to the United States troops as well as the British troops. In 1812 they did splendid service for the old flag of Britain, but their own writings at that time and their own appeals show it was rather the dread of being under the republic than love of Great Britain which caused them to do such splendid service. The reference of the hon. minister to the annexation manifesto is entirely erroneous.

Mr. TALBOT. I rise to a point of order. I would like to know what these references of the hon. gentleman have to do with the question before us.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. He is merely giving a personal explanation and must keep within reasonable limits, and is only giving that personal explanation in the course of his reply on the amendment before the chair.

Mr. TALBOT. If the hon. gentleman stands as an interrogation point, I can understand what he means.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The issue at that time was not Cobdenism but 'no pay to rebels.' That was the reason which brought about the annexation movement at that time. The hon. minister referred to the remark of the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) with regard to the expenditure on militia. Let me point out what the minister himself said on April 22, 1896. Speaking on the vote of $1,000,000 for arms and ammunition for our militia, he said :

There is one feature in connection with this which puzzles me. We have over and again been told that in the event of a war taking place in Canada, of Canada being invaded we could rely on Great Britain's protection, and that the only ground for not severing the colonial tie was that should international difficulties arise, we might rely on England's strong arm. Now, Sir, I am sorry to hear under the circumstances that the government, for the purpose of arming Canadian militia, have made their purchases not from private contractors but from the war office in Great Britain and that we are asked now to foot the bill. Is that the protection we have been promised by Great Britain? Is that the position in which we stand as a colony? I think we are entitled to an altogether different treatment at the hands of Great Britain. On the other hand, I do not think the war department is in such a hurry to get their money that we should be asked for a vote of money now.

Other members in sympathy with the minister took similar lines. I merely rose to make this explanation and to express my intention of supporting the resolution of my hon. leader. While with regard to some of the departments general criticisms are made by the Civil Service Commission, with regard to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, specific charges are preferred. Those charges should be probed to the bottom and a commission appointed to follow out in the other departments all those questions which have been raised.

Mr. BRODEUR. Reference has been made to the expenditure on the militia and it is charged that that expenditure is too large in comparison with the expenditure made on agriculture. Does the hon. gentleman agree in that?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have one rule in public life, quite unlike the practice and policy of the hon. minister and his administration of his department, and that is to let in the broad light of truth and justice. Let the broad light of truth be shed on every transaction and every department. But as regards military expenditure, I want to point out that the United States are expending between $5 and $6 a head this year on their army and navy and Canada is spending about 75 cents per head. Providing the money is properly expended and not too much goes in fuss and feathers, I shall not cavil at this expenditure, and I have no hesitation in saying that the militia expenditure of the Dominion is far below what it should be.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, I must first congratulate the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on his speech as to what he has done for the country and what he proposes to do. I have heard it so often this session that I have come to admire it more and more every time I hear it, and I have no doubt that, surfeited as the hon. gentlemen are with the laudations he showers on himself, some one will rise and say something on behalf of the minister, for God knows he needs it, as no one has said anything in his behalf this session. The minister is trying to attract the attention of every one in the country to himself and it has been on him every year since he came to this House.

He happened to be Speaker of this House and immortalized himself by being the most profligate spender of money ever in that office. He talks about juggling with accounts; the accounts of the Speaker for that year were so enormous that he had actually to juggle them to the amount of over $3,000 into the account of the Minister of Public Works.

Who is the minister and what has been his past conduct? He was Minister of Inland Revenue and was then transferred to the Department of Marine. He sat in this House and in committees and heard the Department of Marine assailed. He saw that in that garden of the grafter and that paradise of the plunderer they had been permitted to roam at large, that the department was approaching to the notoriety of the Public Works Department, he heard of its waste and saw it and on coming into power in that department he was the first man to extend the right hand of fellowship to the grafters who had been in that department for years before he entered it. He cannot deny that. Merwin and Brooks were the only men with whom he wanted to deal. These grafters who had pilfered, pillaged and plundered the money of the country were the first he dealt with. I do not wonder he does not wish their affairs to be inquired into. Does any same man believe that these grafters who plundered that department for years did not share up with somebody? And it was not with the subordinate understrappers of the department either that they were suspected of dividing up.

When he came in as a new minister to the department it was to be expected that he would have kept Brooks, Merwin and the rest of the grafters out of it, but they were the first men who introduced themselves to the minister. They knew, that of all the ministers they could best deal with him, and they have been doing very nicely too. Look at their accounts for a couple of years. In 1907, Merwin's account was over $50,000, and Brooks was over $60,000; actually when Merwin had not the money to float himself along the Minister of Marine and Fisheries took that grafter by the hand and helped him to the bank. One would imagine the minister would not dare to stand in the House and ask for consideration when the records of the grafters proved that again and again he took them in hand. A man who desired to have every stigma of disgrace removed from the department, would have told them to stand beyond its doors. But you do not get the Minister of Marine and Fisheries doing that. He knew, his deputy told him that a man in his employ named Roy had been padding the pay-lists. Did the minister at once dismiss Roy? Was he suspended? No, the minister gave him a better position, simply transferred him from the scene of one operation to another. Here is Roy actually charged by the minister himself with padding the lists to the tune of thousands of dollars, it is currently reported, and actually, instead of suspending him, the minister retains him in his office, he is in his employ to-day and the minister cannot deny it. The minister got on a virtuous spasm, and said: I will have this man's conduct inquired into—and two years ago a good political friend of his from Montreal, Mr. Gaudet, was appointed to investigate what he has not yet reported, and, as my friend behind me says: The minister will see he never does. It is current on the streets of Montreal and in Ottawa to-day that the stealings of Roy ran into thousands of dollars but the minister kept him in his employ.

The minister has been trying to mislead the House by mis-quoting from the report. Half a dozen times he has said that the report stated there would seem to be a lack of conscience in officers of the department and that that is what he wants to have an inquiry into. The minister was misreading it and knew it. There is not a word about lack of conscience in the officers in the department. At page 34 the report says:

There would also seem to be a lack of conscience.

Then there is a period, not a reference at all to the officers. Let us see what he does with men who are honest in that department. At page 80 we find a letter written by the accountant of the department:

(Memo. for deputy minister.)

I have an account of Samson & Filion, Quebec, for packing for the steamer 'Champlain,' amounting to the sum of $562.18. It appears to me that the quantity and the price charged for this packing is very excessive. There is a charge also for 50 pounds of tallow at 15 cents a pound. I just found out from Matthews & Company by telephone that they can supply any quantity of tallow at 9 cents a pound. In that case Messrs. Samson & Filion are making a good profit on the tallow. The prices charged and certified to by the agent, Quebec, are so excessive that I do not feel like issuing a cheque without receiving further instructions. This tallow is based on the price of beefsteak.

A. W. OWEN,
Accountant.

Ottawa, August 21, 1907.

What is the end of this? Why an honest man is turned out by this minister, but a thief, Roy, is kept on and promoted. Yet this minister talks about the way he is conducting that department. No one on that side of the House will take up the cudgels on his behalf. Let us see another case showing his treatment of men who are anxious to get honesty and decency in this department. At page 81, I find a memorandum for the deputy minister from A. W. Owen:

I attach an account received from the agent at Quebec, dated October 6, for five large Morris chairs covered in plush at $18 for the 'Montcalm.' I do not see any authority given to the agent for this order. I am to request you to be good enough to initial the account for payment, if correct.

When this unfortunate man tries to bring in a little honesty into the department he is kicked out, body and boots, by the minister, but his bosom friend Roy, who pads the list, and the investigation into whose conduct has been delayed by the minister for from 16 to 18 months, is still in the employ of the department. It is high time that the minister should stop prating about the honesty prevailing to-day in his department and making reflections on those who preceded him. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries sat in this House from 1891 to 1896; the Minister of Militia sat in this House prior to that, the Minister of Customs also, and I challenge either of those hon. gentlemen to show one single case under a Conservative Minister of the Marine Department where there was an allegation of thieving or wrong doing by an official. I challenge them to instance a case of graft in that department. They must sit quiet, because they cannot prove the contrary. I will refresh their memory however by one case that occurred in that department. There was a man employed in a menial position, a cook on one of the vessels of the government in Georgian bay, and he was approached by a store-keeper in the town of Parry Sound and asked to do his trading with that store, and in consideration of his dealing there the store-keeper paid this cook $40. That happened in 1892. As soon as the case was reported in the newspapers and a charge was made, Sir Hibbert Tupper caused an investigation to take place before the county judge of the county of Bruce, Judge Kingsmill, I think it was, and what was the result? The result was that the man was at once dismissed from the service. Hon. gentlemen cannot find during all the time that Sir Hibbert Tupper was the head of that department a single charge laid at his doors in reference to middlemen or any go-between.

Mr. DEVLIN. Was the minister held responsible?

Mr. BENNETT. No, because as soon as the matter came to the minister's notice he had it inquired into and dismissed the official. I will say something further that will be interesting to hon. gentlemen opposite. The store-keeper who prompted this unfortunate cook to fall was a man named Johnston, and to show the fitness of things, this same Johnston is to-day Mr. McKay's candidate in the provincial election, a proof of the old adage that birds of a feather flock together.

Mr. DEVLIN. Who was the judge appointed to investigate?

Mr. BENNETT. Judge Kingsmill of the county of Bruce, I think he was retired at that time. Now one would imagine that this department which is so far above reproach, would have some champion here on its behalf, but it appears on this occasion, as on every other occasion, that the minister himself has to come to its rescue, while the man who is to blame for the whole thing is the Premier. He knew the antecedents of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, knew of his expensive tastes as Speaker of the House, knew that he was not a business man, and for that reason, considering the position the department was in, some person should have been put up to defend it other than the minister. The hon. gentleman has demonstrated his utter unfitness, despite all his self laudation, to conduct that department, by the fact that although these men Merwin and Brooks, were proved in the committee to have been guilty of illegal and improper relations with that department, these were the very first men that the minister dealt with and is dealing with to-day in that department. The minister cannot deny it, he sits there and assents to it. He sat in that committee and heard of all this grafting carried on by these men, and as long as the hon. gentleman is the head of that department I will venture the prophecy that Merwin and Brooks and the rest of them will find no more congenial field to do business in than the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Now I think this department is getting a little too much attention paid to it, because after all, while I believe thousands and thousands of dollars have been dissipated there, it is a mere bagatelle, for the greatest thieving department in Canada to-day is the Department of Public Works, and has been for years. It is conceded to be the greatest thieving department, and I am not making any reflection on the present incumbent of the office, because he has only been there a short time. But here is a department that openly has as its chief officials men who have committed and admitted for theft of public funds. The minister knows it, and the Prime Minister knows it, and every member of the Cabinet knows it. They have heard the case of the secretary of that department discussed on this floor half a dozen times, the man who took by misrepresentation upwards of $300 of public money and to-day he stands right in that department as the second official, practically, in point of salary and responsibility. The Minister of Public Works cannot dispense with his services nor can any other minister, because he is the man through whose hands pass all the public tenders involving millions of dollars. Take another official that the hon. gentleman has under his control, take the case of one of his chief engineers, Mr. Louis Coste. Where does he stand to-day? Why he stands here self confessed in the committee room that he was in receipt of money, not only from the government, but also from a company for whom he was making a large valuation upon which depended a grant to them of over $300,000 by this government. And this Mr. Coste is still in the employ of the department, paid $3,000 a year as an engineer, a further sum of $1,500 being attached to his salary as waterways commissioner. How can people have confidence in the departments when officials of this stamp are at their very head, and who apparently hold the minister by the throat, because the minister cannot dispense with their services. The public know that when corporations and grafters move up on this department they can do what they like with it.

Yesterday I cited the case of the Reid Company who sell office supplies to this government ,selling over $350,000 worth in the past few years. Why, Sir, look at the record in reference to one matter alone. It was necessary, at least a request had been made, that certain files should be placed in the Post Office Department. The Department of Public Works secured an estimate from this Reid Company of the cost, and the Reid Company gave them an estimate that the cost would be $30,000. Actually a vote was taken in the estimates for $30,000. But on account of the opposition of the Eclipse Company, by reason of the fact that there was competition engendered between the two, the Office Specialty Company did the work for $10,000 that they had estimated would cost $30,000. Why, Sir, companies like this Reid Company think that they can actually go into the departments and give an estimate for $30,000 for certain work and be paid that amount. Fortunately for the country, by reason of the Eclipse Company, I assume getting wind of it and forcing the competition, the Specialty Company only got $10,000 out of the government instead of what they had figured on getting.

Now I do not propose to go at length into the subject of the greatest stealing that is going on to-day in Canada, and that is in reference to the matter of dredging. But I want to say that if Judge Cassels or any independent and honest man could only go into that matter, there would be a repetition of the scandal that occurred in the United States in the case of Gaynor and Greene who are in the state penitentiary for thieving in connection with dredging operations. Look at the whole matter as it stands to-day, look at the men dealing with this department. There was no sooner a change in the government than this Mr. Bowman, M.P.P., and Mr. James Conmee, M.P., at that time in the local legislature, bounded into the dredging business. Then we find Mr. MacKay, the present leader of the Ontario opposition, bounding into the dredging business; and not to be behind them, we find Mr. Horton, of Goderich, bounding into the dredging business. And who is

Mr. Horton ? Why, Sir, Mr. Horton is the man who stood convicted in the West Elgin trial of introducing innocent young men to Pritchard in order that he might teach them to become ballot thieves. This gentleman is one of their dredging contractors too. Then we have this Ottawa company blossoming out, having among its members the son of the senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Stewart). The people do not expect anything straight in connection with this dredging business and they have not been getting anything straight. Only the other day, after the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) was importuned and begged for three months to continue contracts of this kind, or a number of them at all events, the minister consented to do that. But, it took three months for the minister to get coaxed into it. I do not know what moved the minister in the meantime to come down. I do not know how the minister was coaxed and I do not know whether the minister was persuaded but, wonderful to relate, it took three months to persuade the minister to have an order in council passed. He got it passed at last but the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made him take it back again within a few days after he had heard the exposure in this House. The minister nods his head.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Shakes his head.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, shakes his head. As I said before the minister is the greatest withdrawer in this country. He was a well known bluffer in his own little province and he tried it on when he came here. He told us of all the charges he was going to make against the leader of the opposition and that he was going to drive him out of public life. Was he not going to do that? He never drove anybody out of public life.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I defy the hon. gentleman to show that anywhere or at any time I ever intimated that I was going to drive the leader of the opposition out of public life or that I have ever said that I was going to make any charges against the leader of the opposition.

Mr. LENNOX. What about it at the Opera House?

Mr. BENNETT I have not the words of the hon. gentleman under my hand at the present time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You canot find any such words or anything suggesting them.

Mr. BENNETT. However, I have only this to say that very little attention is paid to anything that the hon. gentleman does say.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There seems to be a good deal of attention paid to things that I do not say.

Mr. BENNETT. If, as I have read in the paper, the government of New Brunswick make an investigation into certain dealings of a certain member of the late government with a certain railway company I do not think we will have the hon. gentleman in this House very much longer. The Minister of Public Works was taken to task over this dredging matter by the other members of the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, Sir.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, then the minister did not back down of his own accord.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, Sir.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He did not back down at all. Whatever he did he did of his own accord.

Mr. BENNETT. That being the case it proves him to be a weak vessel because, the minister, after considering for three months and arriving at a decision, in a single night changes his opinion. The minister might tell us that and we may believe it or we may not believe it. But, if the searchlight was let into the Department of Public Works what a parade there would be. Talk of those who would flit, there is the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), whose bosom friends, Lott and Shibley, we found skiping to the United States. The departure and exodus of Lott and Shibley from Ontario, the Sabbath sojourning friends of the Minister of Railways and Canals would be nothing to some of these dredging contractors. The minister knows it, and he is afraid of it. Look at the Minister of Railways and Canals laugh. That is the way he laughs at his unfortunate friends. They got caught, and he is here. Well, every dog has his day. They may have the laugh later on. But the Minister of Public Works has been in the department a little while, and, as a shrewd man, he knows what has been going on during the past few years in that department. He cannot see those appalling rows of figures, up into the millions of dollars, without asking his engineers what there is to show for all this money, and his engineers can only tell him that there is very little or nothing to show for it with respect to these dredging operations because there is not. Any man knows that who looks at the matter for a moment. Supposing that Mr. Courtney, Mr. Fyshe and Mr. Bazin had gone into this department, and suposing that they had taken up these dredging operations, what a revelation there would have been. They would have found that these little paltry dredges that were for years paid by the government $70 or $80 per day were earning $250 and $300 per day, and that dredges that under ordinary circumstances should earn, if honestly operated, about $250 per day were earning $500 and $600 per day. The minister has been told by the officers in his department, I have no doubt, that there is something wrong about it, and as a consequence he is looking into the matter, and I think he should look into the matter. I am going to give a few figures to show how these dredging operations are carried on at the expense of the people of Canada. I am going to take a little dredge owned by the Penetanguishene Dredging Company, and I am going to take random months and weeks. According to the public accounts, at one time she is earning $137 per day, at another time $144, at another time $151, or running up over $150 per day.

An hon. MEMBER. Of how many hours?

Mr. BENNETT. That is a 12-hour day. If that same dredge had been working by the hour she would have earned $100 a day. Here we have a steal of $300 per week or $1,500 per month and, in the season, a clear steal of $10,000 by a dredging plant that would not sell in the open market for $5,000. The minister has got terrified since he came into the department by these dredging operations and he has told the inspector that no matter what he states he cannot take his word, but that the inspector must make a solemn declaration and he will hold that over his head, and threaten him, and if it is not true he will prosecute him for perjury. The minister has awakened, and I think that is one of the reasons why the government do not want to have an inquiry into that and other departments. In conclusion, I want to say that it is patent at the outset that the inquiry which we are going to have is going to be a farce. That goes without saying. That is making no insinuation whatever against the judge to whom the investigation has been entrusted. Mr. Justice Cassels is simply going to be powerless in the whole matter because the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) has told us that Mr. Watson and Mr. Perron have been secured, and Mr. Watson and Mr. Perron are simply to hand out the case to the commissioner for adjudication. Mr. Watson is fairly well known in Ontario, and the West Elgin horror is still fresh in the memory of every one. Mr. Watson actually fell foul of Judge Barron in that case as prosecuting attorney. The judge insisted that certain things should be inquired into, and Mr. Watson thought they should not be. This government do not want the whole facts to come out, and it is apparent that the whole thing is simply a farce. We have proven that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been dealing with these grafters who were in his department for years before he came in. There is no charge laid at the doors of the officials that there is a lack of conscience on their part. That charge is laid at the door of the minister himself, and the country will treat this whole inquiry with the contempt that it eminently and richly deserves because of the farcical aspect that it presents.

Mr. BENNETT.

It would be really in the interests of the country if the government could be constrained to accept the very reasonable proposition which I submit—let the opposition have the choice of one lawyer at this investigation. But, that is something that they do not propose to do. They are going to endeavour to whitewash the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and they are going to preclude any inquiry into the Department of Public Works. With the exodus of Lott and Shibley I suppose that they imagine that no other leading Liberals could be well spared from the country at the present time, and therefore the Department of Public Works is not going to be inquired into. I propose to vote for the motion presented to the House by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, believing as I do that the fair sense of the people of this country regards the disbursements of public money by this government as being improper in the highest degree. It is evident that there has been grafting and thieving going on in every department of the government, that the middlemen have been given a free hand and there is every reason to believe that wrong-doing will be laid at the doors of men whose names have not as yet been disclosed. There is no doubt in the world that if there were a full and searching and thorough inquiry before these three commissioners, or before Judge Cassels, if he were unfettered in his powers, there would be an exposure that would startle the people of the country, but which, no doubt, in the end would do good service to the Dominion as a whole, and to the honest administration of public affairs for all time to come.

Mr. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington). Personally, I do not like to take part in the debate at this late hour, nor do I like particularly following the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). However, while I do not desire to pay much attention to the hon. gentleman's remarks, there are among many of the harsh words which slipped so glibly from his tongue, one or two sentences which call for some reference It is now ten years since I first heard the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) make a speech, and his speech of to-night was very little different from the speech he then delivered in a by-election in South Ontario. Even in these early days of his political career the words : graft, grafters, ballot switching, pillaging, plunder, rolled just as glibly under his tongue as they do now.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman must confess that the overthrow of the Ross government amply justified my words on that occasion.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Benentt) has so accustomed himself to that language that I do not think it is possible for him to rid himself of the habit. But, not only in the eyes of members of this House, but in the eyes of the people of the country the hon. gentleman is regarded in the light of the small boy in Aesop's Fables who continually called wolf, wolf, until when the real wolf came no one would believe him. And so, if the hon. member should ever happen to come across a minister, or a member of parliament, or a civil servant, who is derelict in his duty not one man out of 100 men would believe the member for East Simcoe, if he said so.

Mr. BENNETT. I suppose probably the country would believe——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) allow an interruption.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BENNETT. All right then.

Mr. GUTHRIE. There was one remark made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) to which I shall refer. He said there was not a member on this side of the House prepared to get up and say a word in justification of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Well, while I am not a prominent member on this side of the House, I know full well I voice the feeling of every member here when I say that we have the most absolute respect for and the most absolute confidence in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and that we all recognize his ability, his integrity, and his desire and intention to do everything that is right and proper, and nothing that is wrong or censurable in the administration of his department. I may tell the hon. member for East Simcoe that it is not altogether courteous or chivalrous—I don't suppose he cares much about that for he does not accustom himself to the language of chivalry—I tell him it is neither courteous nor chivalrous nor fair to use such language as he has to-night used in reference to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. In the custom of chivalry when you cast down the gauntlet and asked some one to take it up, the challenge was made and answered. And to-night I would cast down the gauntlet to the member for East Simcoe and I offer him this challenge: If you can show that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been guilty of the slightest jot or title of dishonesty in connection with the administration of his department, I will take back all I have said in commendation of that hon. gentleman. And I say to the member for East Simcoe: If you do not accept that challenge then in the language of chivalry, if you lived in the old days, you would be spoken of as a coward, a poltroon, and a backbiter. I wish to draw the attention of the House also to another statement made by the hon. member for East Simcoe which I think was particularly unfair and misleading. He read from page 34 of the Civil Service Commission report the words: 'There would also seem to be lack of conscience,' and he said that contrary to the statement of the Minister of Marine, that reference was not made to officers of the department. Now, let me ask—not the member for East Simcoe—but let me ask any other member of this House to read the paragraph in which that sentence occurs and to see if it does not apply to the officers of the department, just as the minister has said. It is all in one paragraph and the paragraph goes on:

> If no one gets any benefit from trade with the government except the trader then it must be clear that in these great purchases made for the government, without discount, its officers must be assisting the trader to get better prices from the government than he can get anywhere else, for everywhere else he has to give discount. In other words, some of the government's officers are serving two masters, and apparently succeeding with both—scripture notwithstanding.

It will be seen therefore that in both instances, the reference is to the officers of the department and not to the department as a whole and not to the minister. I shall not take up any more time in discussing statements made by the member for East Simcoe, but I should like to refer to a few other things which have arisen in the course of the debate. It is perhaps my misfortune that whenever I have to make reference to the hon. the leader of the opposition and to the hon. member for North Toronto, I never have the pleasure of having them before me. However, I do not propose on account of their absence to hesitate saying that which I have to say with reference to their utterances of to-day. This motion, and the speech of the leader of the opposition were evidently launched for the purpose of circulating if possible more fully than it has been amongst the electors, the report of the Civil Service Commission, because fully 50 per cent of the speech of the leader of the opposition was made up of quotations from that report. The speech of the hon. member for North Toronto was his old pre-election harangue and if any one will take up the Toronto 'Mail and Empire' of about two weeks ago and read the speech then delivered by the hon. gentleman before his constituents he will find it is almost identical with the speech he delivered here to-night. I do not believe that either the hon. leader of the opposition or the hon. member for North Toronto seriously believe in the motion which they have placed in your hands, Mr. Speaker, on this occasion; but they are serious enough in their desire to spread broadcast throughout this country certain statements which may be taken from that report, isolated from the context, and which when so treated are positive slanders against the persons at whom they are aimed. The hon. member for North Toronto acquitted himself with that force which he usually exercises when he addresses this House; but I must tell him that much clapping and slapping of the hands, much pounding of his desk, much gesticulation, does not add emphasis to his remarks, in the opinion of members on this side of the House, although such actions on the part of the hon member may and so call for loud applause from a band of his admiring followers. Now, what did he bring up which the House was not already in possession of? He went over the old land-deal scandals, or so-called scandals, the charges of impropriety in connection with timber and irrigation companies, charges which have time after time been investigated in this House and disposed of, merely to give what in his opinion was justification for a more extended inquiry than is proposed to be had before Mr. Justice Cassels. But he seems to forget that which we all remember, namely, that there had been the fullest, freest and fairest investigation of all these matters, from the original documents, in the Public Accounts Committee and otherwise, and therefore there is not the slighest necessity for any further investigation or discovery. But the hon. member for North Toronto said that the government were inclined to repudiate the commission, to find fault with it, to sneer at it. Now, I do not find, in any statement which has been made to-day by any one on this side of the House any such insinuation either on the part of the government or on the part of any member supporting the government. On the contrary, the government realize that this is a report made by their own commission, and I am satisfied of one thing, though I do not know the minds of the government, that having received that report from a commission appointed by themselves, they are going to give its recommendations all the weight and authority that such recommendations coming from such men should have. They are not going to treat the report as such reports were treated by Conservative governments in the past. I have no doubt in my mind that if the administration of the various departments to-day is found wanting in any respect, though I do not admit that it is, the reason is that the Liberal party did not take such action as they would have been justified in taking in the year 1896 when they obtained power. The party which introduced into this country and into the civil service of this country that iniquitous system known as the spoils system was not the Liberal party. There was a civil service in this country before confederation. Under the Act of Union of 1841 we had a civil service, and it continued until the year 1867. In the year 1868 a new service had to be instituted;

there were new provinces, new requirements, and new services to be performed. So that in that year was passed the first Civil Service Act, and a very crude affair it was. In the following year was appointed the first Civil Service Commission. That commission was to find out what was requisite in the way of a civil service for the country. That commission made its report, and in pursuance of that report the first civil service was established under the coalition government, though the premier was the late Sir John Macdonald. The coalition system did not work very well and did not stand very long; and shortly after confederation, instead of carrying out the idea of the fathers of confederation in regard to the civil service or the Senate, the spoils system was introduced deliberately, and appointments were only made to the civil service or to the Senate of political partisans of the government of the day. That was the first real introduction of that system into this country, a system which has for its motto, 'to the victors belong the spoils.' That system was continued. I do not say that the Mackenzie administration did not continue it as well as other administrations; but I do say that after the year 1878, after the Mackenzie administration went out of power, the system received fresh vigour at the hands of the Conservative administration which came in for a second time. It is well known that many of the Liberal appointments made at the close of the Liberal administration were deliberately set aside by the government of Sir John Macdonald and the places filled by prominent Conservatives. That surely was the maintenance of the spoils system. There was much outcry and much comment at the time, and it was on account of that that the Civil Service Commission of 1880 was appointed. How did the Conservative government of that day treat that commission? They appointed it, I think I can safely say at this time, for the purpose of fooling or hoodwinking the public. They had no real intention of taking the civil service out of politics, but their commissioners had that intention, and the only real suggestion or recommendation which that commission made, the most pointed and most prominent, was that all civil service appointments should be open to free competition. In 1881 there was nothing done. In 1883 there was very little done. It is true that there was a Civil Service Act passed and a board of examiners appointed, but there was no board of civil service commissioners appointed, as the commission recommended. It is true, the examination were prescribed, but not those that the commission recommended. The system of examination was changed, and although hundreds passed the examinations, only Conservative candidates could obtain admission to the service. That Act was amended every year up to 1889 and every amendment made to it was for the purpose of doing away with or relaxing conditions which the Act imposed. I make that statement on the authority of the commission which discussed the matter in 1892. They say there that the Act was amended from year to year for the express purpose of giving greater latitude to the government or relaxing its restrictions or conditions.

How did the next commission come to be appointed? It was appointed because there was a greater outcry throughout Canada probably than ever before. In 1891 this whole country was shaken and its people humiliated by the disclosures which had taken place before the parliamentary commission of this House. There was an outcry from one end of the country to the other that something must be done, that some reform must take place, and in order to meet that cry—but without the slightest intention of doing anything, except hoodwinking the public—another commission was appointed in November, 1891. That commission reported in the spring of 1892. Quotations have been made from that report on many occasions to-day, but there are some things in it which have not been brought out properly in this debate. The original powers given the commission were these. They were entitled to investigate any subject connected with the civil service which, in their opinion, required consideration and readjustment in order to attain the greatest possible efficiency. Their powers were similar to the general powers given the recent commission. Those powers are included under ten headings, and, besides the matters specially designated, the commissioners are authorized to inquire into any other matter relative to the service which, in the opinion of the commissioners, requires consideration. The commissioners in 1892 were four in number. Mr. J. M. Courtney was commissioner then as well as in the commission of 1907-8. The commission of 1892 made some express findings, which it is well to note. They found that there was political interference in the civil service; that the examinations were a mere mockery and the promotion examinations in many cases evaded altogether. They found that the departments were overmanned and underpaid; that they were overmanned through political influence and favourtism and that the purchasing system was very widely astray. They did not use the term 'discount' or state that no discounts appeared, but the statement they did make in that respect is to be found page 58 of the report:

A still further subject your commissioners deem worthy of note, before treating of the expenditures themselves, is that relating to the purchase of supplies and the prices paid for articles purchased by the several departments. In his evidence before the commission, the Auditor General stated most distinctly that when goods were purchased without tenders, such as furniture and other supplies for the public buildings, as a rule, retail prices were paid for the same when wholesale prices should have prevailed.

Thus admitting that the same system was in vogue in those days as, it is charged, has been continued since. The attention of the late Conservative government was called to all these matters in that report. They knew that the departments were being overmanned through political influence. They knew that purchases were improperly made, and that retail prices were paid where wholesale prices should have prevailed. They knew that the examination system was a farce and that the spoil system was in full force. What did they do? 1892 passed and nothing done. So did 1893, 1894 and 1895 and nothing whatever accomplished. 1896 passed and with it the Conservative government, and then there began to be some shaking up of the dry bones in the various departments. It is perhaps not altogether accurate for me to say that in 1893 absolutely nothing was done. Among the recommendations of the commissioners was one with regard to superannuation, and there was a bill passed on that subject. But to the positive recommendation of the commissioners regarding appointments to the service, examinations, open competition and so forth, not the slightest attention was paid, so that I think the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was not quite fair when he said that the recommendations of that commission had been carried out by three separate Bills. The commissioners themselves drafted a Civil Service Bill, a most elaborate measure. Read it carefully because it would make the basis of a splendid civil service enactment. But it was disregarded almost in toto, and a Bill introduced by Mr. Costigan in 1893. You can search through the sections of that Bill—sixteen in number—and you will find them the most formal kinds of amendment to the original Act of 1882. One or two clauses of the draft Bill of the commission of 1892 were incorporated in the Bill No. 29 of 1893, but all the main recommendations of the commissioners, all the main clauses of their Bill were emasculated and deprived of any effect. Now these hon. gentlemen say that that Bill was not passed because of the stand taken by the right hon. gentleman who now leads the government. Nothing can be further from the fact. The Conservative government had then a majority of forty or fifty and they would have passed that Bill had they so desired; but what was objected to by the right hon. gentleman, then leader of the opposition, was that the government's Bill was merely intended to give the government the chance f maintaining the iniquitous spoils system which they had maintained from confederation down to 1893. The Bill in any event was dropped and nothing was done, and the Conservative government went out of power in 1896. What then happened? No sooner had the present government been sworn in than every Conservative newspaper in the land was crying out that the guillotine was at work and the Conservative heads of the various branches of the service were dropping into the basket. The late Mr. Tarte, then Minister of Public Works, did make some removals, and was caricatured throughout Canada with the guillotine beside him, as an unscrupulous tyrant. Sir William Mulock, then Postmaster General, made some removals, and he also was hounded and vilified. Certain removals were made in the Department of Agriculture, but strange to say the incoming government, having faith no doubt in the commissioners' report of 1893, as regards the Militia Department and the Department of Marine and Fisheries, made no removals that I know of, but continued on the same old Conservative staff in each department without a single exception. There is one distinction between the report of 1893 and the report recently presented, which I desire to point out. The report of 1892 made under a commission given general powers to investigate just as broad as those of the commission of 1907, contains this statement:

> The commissioners before entering into the consideration of the subjects laid down in the reference, desire to state, that it was not within the lines of their duty to follow up inquiries made by the Committee of the House of Commons in the session of 1891, which brought out certain irregularities, but rather to suggest such improvements in methods applicable to all departments as will tend to prevent irregularities in future.

They absolutely state they will not investigate these irregularities although their powers are almost identical with those of the commission of 1907. The commissioners at the very outset say they are not going to investigate irregularities which they considered were outside the scope of their commission. Certainly a certificate coming under such circumstances will have very little force, weight or effect throughout the country as there was no investigation into irregularities or anything of the kind, but the report of the commissioners states that they had visited the departments and that they found an extremely favourable condition of things in the Marine and Fisheries Department; they also make a complimentary reference to the Militia Department. Is it any wonder then that the incoming government should have made no removals in either of these departments? If they had in view, as I believe they have had for years, a new civil service system, whereby the spoils system will be absolutely abolished in this country; in 1896, they set out properly to initiate that system because the removals were few and under the circumstances should have been far more. How has it turned out? We had a commission appointed in 1907 and where is the fault found? Is there any fault found in that report with the Department of Agriculture, where derelict officials were removed? Hardly a word spoken of that department. Is any serious fault found with the Post Office Department, where objectionable Conservative officials were removed? There is hardly a criticism of the Post Office Department. Is any serious fault found with the Public Works Department where Mr. Tarte cleared the way? Hardly a word, they did not see fit even to investigate that department. But when you come to the Marine and Fisheries Department and the Militia Department where there was no guillotine, where old Conservative officials were trusted and continued, there your trouble arises.

The old system has been continued, until recently at all events, but I assume, although I do not know, that things could not have been going very well last spring. Some difficulty must have arisen and if any difficulty did arise, if there was cause for any suspicion, the government, I submit, did the proper thing under the circumstances in appointing a commission of three men in whom both the government and the public have absolute confidence, to inquire into the system. Why the government should now be condemned for that action I do not know. To my mind it was the only fair, honest, statesmanlike and businesslike course which the government could take. They themselves invited the investigation and they themselves, now that the report has been received, I think can be well trusted to remedy any defects which may have been reported in that system. I think, therefore, the motion which has been made on that subject by the leader of the opposition should fail. The investigation has been complete to an extreme, far more complete perhaps than any one anticipated, but it is well for the government and for the country that it has been so complete.

But there is a feeling in my mind and I think in the mind of any unprejudiced man, that the commission either did go too far or not far enough in some of their findings, and it is for that reason that a judge, highly respected by every one who knows him, has been asked to point out or to place his hand upon the real culprit or culprits, if there be more than one, in the Marine and Fisheries Department. I have no doubt, although I do not know the mind of the government, that they will take steps to remedy the defects that have been pointed out. I do not know just what lines of action they may see fit to take, but I am satisfied that when their measure does come down it will be found to remedy the defects and to satisfy the desires of every reasonable man in this country who wishes to see a better civil service system inaugurated and maintained.

The hon. member for North Toronto made what I would term a sort of wild election speech. He took his cue, no doubt, from certain remarks of his own leader when he spoke of the commission's report as being a sort of campaign document. It has been used as such a document by the Conservative party, there is no doubt about that. When the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) took the floor, he immediately reverted to what he called the revenge which the people had taken on the present government in New Brunswick. He spoke also of what had taken place in British Columbia and then he referred to some small municipal election in the city of Halifax, yesterday. I believe that in some of the wards some aldermen were elected. These are the indications which present themselves to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), and evidently convince him that there is a brighter day coming for the Conservative party than there has been for many years past. If he accepts these as positive or conclusive signs he is easily satisfied and we do not quarrel with him, but I think he went out of his way to say some unkind and very mean things in regard to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It was an unnecessary sneer for the hon. member to use in regard to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries when he said that the minister had gone down to the province of Quebec in 1896 to oppose military expenditures, in other words to raise a race and creed agitation in that province. I am satisfied that the statement of the minister in that regard is absolutely correct and the statement of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is absolutely unfounded. I cannot say that he made that statement knowing it to be false, but I can say that he made it in such utter, reckless disregard as to whether it were false or true that it should be condemned by every right-thinking man in this House.

There is another peculiar circumstance to which I wish to refer. The hon. member who leads the opposition, on the 20th day of August last, proceeded to Halifax, there to enunciate his political platform and to announce to the citizens of Halifax, the capital of Nova Scotia, that he had placed in it a plank in regard to civil service reform. Why he should have gone to Halifax to make that announcement for the first time, I do not know. Was it in the spirit of bravado that he went there? I think it would have been more fitting if he had gone to the county of Carleton to make that announcement than to the city of Halifax. The hon. member for North Toronto always reverts to conditions in New Brunswick; time and again he tells us what has happened, what is happening and what will happen in the province of New Brunswick. Why, Sir, the strangest thing of all is to see these two hon. members occupying the seats of the mighty in the opposition ranks of this House; the leader of the opposition himself, politically expatriated from his native province of Nova Scotia, driven to seek a seat amidst the preponderating Orange vote of the county of Carleton; the member for North Toronto, politically expatriated from his native province of New Brunswick, driven to seek a seat amidst the preponderating Orange Tory vote of the city of Toronto. And there they sit together, while Orangemen to the right of them, Orangemen to the left of them, and Orangemen behind them volley and thunder. I have no doubt, having regard to the constituencies which they represent in this House, that the hon. member for North Toronto finds it necessary occasionally to furnish some strong meat for his constituents, and he can best supply that by making sneers and jibes at something that transpired in the province of Quebec. The whole discussion of this question I think has gone rather far afield, having regard to the motion and the amendment which has been placed in your hands. However, at this late hour, I will not venture to trespass upon the time of the House by entering further upon the discussion.

House divided on amendment (Mr. R. L. Borden).

Amendment (Mr. R. L. Borden) negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

ADJOURNMENT.—DOUKHOBORS AT YORKTON.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I desire to read a telegram that I have received this evening from Yorkton, Saskatchewan, and which is as follows :

Yorkton, Saskatchewan, April 30, 1908.

R. L. Borden, M.P., Ottawa.

Fort William contingent of vagrants presumably insane Doukhobors shipped here in charge of an official of Ontario government still in coaches on track here. Induced to come to Yorkton under misrepresentation that they were going to a warmer climate. Doukhobors in villages refuse to acknowledge them. Citizens strongly protest against them being dumped here. Some twenty in a nude state indecently exposing themselves. Provincial government inform us matter being taken up with Immigration Department of Dominion government. Matter extremely urgent. Please urge immediate action.

G. P. BRADBROOK,
Secretary Board of Trade.
R. H. LOCK,
Secretary-Treasurer.

I do not know anything about this telegram, except that it came addressed to me this evening and as they desire that the matter should be urged upon the attention of the government, I have taken this opportunity of reading it in order that the Prime Minister may determine whether any action can properly be taken.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As my hon. friend knows if these people have violated the laws of the province of Saskatchewan they are under the jurisdiction of the provincial authorities.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business may we expect to-morrow ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The same supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1. 30 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, May 1, 1908.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, in compliance with a request made yesterday by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), I beg leave to lay on the table the letter of instructions to Mr. Watson in reference to the investigation before Judge Cassels, relating to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the resignation of the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries which was tendered some time ago, as we were informed, has been accepted or is still under consideration.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I could not say to my hon. friend. The minister is not here.

SUPPLY—WANDERING DOUKHOBORS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). Mr. Speaker, last night the hon. leader of the opposition called the attention of the government to a telegram which he had received shortly before from the town of Yorkton in the province of Saskatchewan, and which was as follows :

Yorkton, Saskatchewan, April 30, 1908.

R. L. Borden, M.P., Ottawa.

Fort William contingent of vagrants presumably insane Doukhobors shipped here in charge of an official of Ontario government still in coaches on track here. Induced to come to Yorkton under misrepresentation that they were going to warmer climate. Doukhobors in villages refuse to acknowledge them. Citizens strongly protest against them being dumped here. Please urge immediate action.

G. P. BRADBROOK,
Secretary Board of Trade.
R. H. LOCK,
Secretary-Treasurer.

The reply of the Prime Minister was as follows :

As my hon. friend knows if these people have violated the laws of the province of Saskatchewan they are under the jurisdiction of the provincial authorities.

I consider that a most unsatisfactory statement coming from the head of this government. Let me recall to your mind the facts of the case in regard to this special number of Doukhobors. They are well known to the public, having been freely discussed in the public press. In the early part of last summer a number of Doukhobors started eastward on a pilgrimage on foot. They went by easy stages and reached Fort William or Port Arthur at the beginning of the winter. They took a house and stayed at Fort William during the winter. While they were there they committed several offences against public decency, and finally on April 9, this spring, nineteen of them were committed to imprisonment in the central prison for a term of six months, I believe. While they were undergoing punishment and before they had been removed from Port Arthur, the Dominion government stepped in and ordered their release when they had been in prison only ten days. The Minister of Justice stated in answer to a question of mine the other day, that it had been represented to him that these Doukhobors had come from Saskatoon, and as there was no room for the prisoners in the prisons of the country, it would be advisable to pardon them, and, to use his own words, 'let them be removed to the part of the country from which they came.' On these representations he sent a telegram as follows :

April 14, 1908.

Mr. Police Magistrate Palling,
Fort William.

The Minister of Justice requests you will be good enough to send immediately report upon cases of ten male and nine female Doukhobors committed by you to Port Arthur jail.

A. POWER,
For Deputy Minister of Justice.

The report was received and submitted to His Excellency the administrator on the 18th of April, and the release of the prisoners was ordered. Thereupon the Doukhobors stepped out from jail defiant and triumphant at having successfully defied the laws of this country. According to the newspapers, another telegram was sent at the same time that the Minister of Justice was telegraphing to the magistrate at Fort William, and was received by that magistrate before he had time to answer the first telegram. That telegram was as follows :

Please report pardon for Doukhobors now in Port Arthur jail preparatory to their being shipped back to Saskatchewan, where they come from.

I do not know whom that telegram came from. At any rate, the Minister of Justice repudiates it. But the fact that the two telegrams were sent practically at the same time showed that the Minister of Justice must have been a party to the intention to ship these people west to the province of Saskatchewan. The Minister of Justice says that, as far as he was concerned, the Doukhobors were at liberty to come and go as they pleased like any other citizens and that he had no intention of sending them to the province of Saskatchewan. That is evidently a quibble. He knew all about it and was a party to the steps which were taken, and the Doukhobors were released in order to be sent back to that province. I consider that the government of the Dominion have a considerable amount of responsibility for the release of these prisoners. I made inquiry as to whether the government would accept responsibility for having released prisoners almost immediately after conviction and before they had been properly punished. The right hon. the First Minister rather smiled and said no, that the administration of justice was in the hands of the provincial authorities. I hold, however, that when the provincial authorities have done their duty and put these people in jail, the Dominion authorities assume a great deal of responsibility when they order them to be released. The Dominion government assume responsibility to see that these people do not offend the second time shortly after their release, and also to see that any expense incurred by another province, in case these people should again offend, should not fall on that province. Only the other day I saw a case reported in the newspapers in which the Minister of Justice had released a man convicted for stealing horses. The man was released before the expiry of the term, and shortly after he got out of jail he again committed a similar offence and put the provincial authorities to a great deal of trouble and expense. I am glad to say that the man was captured again and again committed for a long term, and I trust the Minister of Justice will not take it into his head to again release that man and start him on his career of horse stealing again.

The first thing that strikes me is that these Doukhobors were sent to Yorkton, instead of to Saskatoon if they came from there. On arrival at Yorkton it was found that some of them were travelling in a state of nudity and the people of Yorkton object to having these people turned out on their streets to parade in that condition. The people of the province of Saskatchewan are thus put to the expense of preventing these Doukhobors from committing any further offence against public decency. This whole business is a public scandal. These people, who were accustomed to parade in this condition in the town of Fort William are released from the just punishment for their offences, put on board the cars, sent to another province and allowed to get out and offend the people there. It is time the government took some steps to look after these wretched creatures. They were brought into this country in the year 1899. They were placed in the province of Saskatchewan without the permission of the people of that province having been particularly asked, and yet that province is held responsible. That province has had a great deal of trouble with these people. It has been found impossible to make them obey some of our laws. They were brought in by this government with a great deal of eclat. They were the first fruits of the 'splendid' policy of immigration introduced by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton). Liberal organizations all through the country made a great hurroo about them. Special receptions were organized, brass bands and all that sort of thing, and they were received in a way very liable to spoil them and cause them rather to look with disrespect on Canadians. The cost of bringing them out was pretty considerable because they received a bonus of one pound per head, although at that time immigrants from the British Isles were only receiving one-half that bonus. For the first year they cost the government in bonus and keep, $7.47 per head for every man, woman and child of them. Under the circumstances, I think this government are especially responsible, and should explain on what ground they were a party to shipping these people back to another province. These people remained there throughout the winter. In the early part of the winter we did not hear that they were acting in any very extraordinary way, but during the winter they apparently became demented. It is time for the government to take cognizance of this public scandal. The government are to be condemned for turning these people out naked into the streets of one of our Canadian cities.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). In the answer I gave to the question of my hon. friend last week, I stated as fully as possible exactly the circumstances. I stated that in this whole business this government recognizes and undertakes no responsibility whatever except for the recommendation to release these prisoners. For that recommendation I of course take the fullest responsibility. It was made by myself in the course of daily departmental business and was a proper recommendation under the circumstances. It was made, as I have already stated, upon the direct request and recommendation to me of the Attorney General of the province of Ontario, who is the proper official and the proper constitutional authority charged with the duty of administering justice within the province. And I may say that in the twenty-three months experience I have now had in the Department of Justice, in dealing with applications for the release of prisoners, it has been not infrequent that for some special reason the pardon or release upon ticket of leave of some particular prisoner has been suggested or recommended by the Attorney General of the province from which that prisoner came or in which the offence was committed, and I do not recall any instance in which such a recommendation has not been acted upon. Certainly, it is a recommendation of the greatest potency, and one which, in all ordinary circumstances, I would think, should at least be regarded, if not followed implicitly. In the case of these particular prisoners, there was an offence against good morals, an offence against society——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On what date was the answer given ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. On April 23, as found in unrevised 'Hansard, page 7210. In the case of these prisoners, I say, the offence was one against social order and one which had been dealt with by the local municipal authorities. The conviction had been made by the police magistrate of the city of Fort William, himself a provincial official. The application for the release of these prisoners was not merely supported by letter of the deputy Attorney General of the province in which their pardon was asked as something which he thought the best course to be taken in the circumstances, but the application was supported by the coming to Ottawa for that express purpose of two of the prison officials of the provincial government. These two gentlemen came bringing the letter I have referred to with them, and stating that the object of their application was in order that the whole of the colony of Doukhobors who had been living in Fort William for some months might return to the place from whence they came. It was stated to me that it was the wish of these people to rejoin their companions, their fellows, their family relations, I suppose, who remained in the province of Saskatchewan, and they were not willing to return if they were to be compelled to leave behind those of their unmber who had been imprisoned for the offence referred to. In the circumstances, I think, every hon. gentleman who hears me will concur in the feeling that the application came very strongly supported. I do not, at the moment, remember the length of the imprisonment to which these men and women had been sentenced, but I point out that, however much to be reprehended the offence is of which these people had been guilty, it is conceded on all hands that it was something which they had done contrary to good morals and social order, but in which there was, on their part, no intent to commit crime, in which there was on their part. it may be, conscientious action dependent upon motives of a religious character, and an offence which, at all events, was induced according to every account of it, which I have seen or which has been made to my knowledge, by a sort of religious mania or frenzy which possibly amounts, as the hon. gentleman has suggested, practically to a loss of reason or to insanity. Well, if people are in that condition, those who are best able to take care of their fellows whose reason has been affected or impared, upon whom the care of such poor people to be pitied, unoffending creatures, may most properly be cast, are the very family relations or companions to whom, as I was told, they were desirous of returning. The responsibility for the care of the insane, equally with that for the care of prisoners under shorter terms and for the less serious offences, is upon the provincial authorities. And, in these circumstances, it was simply a case where people in prison for a comparatively venial offence were, by the constituted authorities of the province, asked to be allowed to go in order that they might go with their fellows to their homes, to the place from which they came. Though it has been charged in the newspapers, and was in a sense endorsed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) who has just spoken, in the question which he put in the House, that the application to the convicting magistrate from the Department of Justice for a report in the case of these prisoners was immediately followed by a request, or direction, or suggestion, by telegram from the Department of Justice to the same magistrate that he should report favouring a pardon, I took occasion to deny that very unequivocally in the answer I made.

Mr. LAKE. I did not make the charge, but read the statement to that effect and asked if it was true.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Certainly, I acquit altogether my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) from any intention to make the charge. The language I have just used was that it was freely charged in the newspapers, and in a sense, endorsed by the hon. gentleman. I do not wish to be understood at all as saying anything to the contrary if the hon. gentleman wishes it to be understood that he did not at all share in the impression that this request for a report favouring a pardon had proceeded from the Department of Justice. As I have said, that was not the case at all, and I can only surmise from what source the telegram, which is quoted verbatim in the question I have referred to did proceed ; I supposed it must have come from the officials here in Ottawa at that time when they made the application for the release of these people and who were interested in getting them returned to the province of Saskatchewan. With anything that has taken place since the signing of the recommendation to His Excellency for the release of these prisoners, I have had nothing whatever to do, and I have no knowledge whatever beyond what has appeared in the newspapers, and from the reception yesterday of a telegram in identical words with the telegram read at the adjournment of the House by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). But whatever the situation in the province of Saskatchewan, or wherever these men may be, it is, I repeat, in my submission, a provincial matter, a matter in regard to which this government is under no resposibility whatever, and in regard to which any action that has been taken by the Department of Justice in this connection is not one that leaves the department itself in any way open to fair criticism. I have acted with regard to these prisoners exactly in the way in which I would have acted if the same men or women had been Canadian born, in the same way as if they had been of any other nationality whatever. The nationality of the people had not anything the slightest to do with the course taken with respect to them. And the number had nothing to do with it. It was simply a case with those convicted of this offence of going publicly without clothing, and an application on the part of the constituted authorities of the province in which that offence had been committed that these persons should be pardoned.

Once pardoned that person was absolutely free to go wheresoever he or she might see fit, and so long as no law of the country was broken, that person was not to be restrained of his or her personal liberty. That appears to be exactly what has taken place. These people have gone, it may be in charge of a provincial officer, from Fort William back to where they came from. The hon. gentleman representing a constituency in the province to which they have gone (Mr. Lake) thinks that it was wrong that they should have gone there. He speaks of the Dominion government having stepped in, as though the Dominion government had officiously, of its own motion, without having been asked to do so, interfered in this matter and done something to put these people off the province of Ontario and on to the province of Saskatchewan. I disclaim any such representation of what has taken place in regard to this matter. There has been so far as the Department of Justice is concerned—and that department alone of any in the government so far as I am aware has had anything to do with this transaction—no siding with one province or with another province. It is a matter of absolute indifference, so far as the Dominion authorities are concerned, in which province of this Dominion those people may be. But there has been a facilitating, if my hon. friend wishes to put it in that way, a facilitating of an intention expressed beforehand on the part of the officials of whom I have spoken, that these people should return to the place from which they came. It is in no other sense that there has been any sending of these men and women from one part of the country to another, and there is nothing in anything I have done in the matter which merits the application of the word 'quibble' which I understand my hon. friend has used in describing what has taken place. I have stated from the outset exactly what I knew of the matter. I was told beforehand that the object in asking that these imprisoned people should be set free was in order that with those of their companions who were at large they might go away all together, and because those who were at large declined to go leaving behind their companions in jail.

I cannot speak of the other case to which the hon. gentleman has alluded, because I do not identify it in any way. He complains that in some other instance, some man imprisoned for horse stealing was improperly released. Well, it only illustrates, and I ask any hon. gentleman who will be good enough to take the trouble to consider this, something of the difficulty of the position in which any man is who has to advise on many hundreds of applications of this character in the course of a twelvemonth. It is manifestly impossible to please everybody in such things. My hon. friend thinks it was very wrong to have released that prisoner. The hon. member for Durham not so very long ago with some other hon. gentlemen in this House thought it was very wrong that I should not release somebody else convicted from the same neighbourhood. I can only say that each one of these cases has to be dealt with, with all the care I am able to apply to it, upon its own individual circumstances. I am perfectly conscious, only too conscious and only too sorry, that in many cases mistakes are made. I am afraid that in some cases men who ought in all honesty and justice to be set at large are not set at large, and I am only too well aware that in too many cases men who ought not to be allowed to go have been, by some misunderstanding of the facts or by some reliance that has proved unfounded, upon too frail human nature, allowed to go free. These things will always occur and there may be plenty more cases besides the one to which my hon. friend has alluded in which the event has demonstrated that it would have been better had the prisoner not been the subject of clemency at the hands of the Crown.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont). Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Justice is not quite accurate in the reference he made to the case brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Durham. In that case the prisoner expressly disclaimed any desire to have a pardon. He declined to be pardoned, because he claimed strongly that he had never committed any crime. What he did desire was that he should be afforded a new trial in order to bring forward evidence which was not available at the time of his conviction. He also desired that he should be tried by a jury of his fellow countrymen.

So far as concerns the matter which has been immediately brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), the Minister of Justice disclaims all responsibility except the responsibility of acting upon the recommendation of the Attorney General for Ontario. No one can criticise the province of Ontario or any of the officials of that province for desiring to get rid of these people. It was a perfectly natural desire that these persons, having come from somewhere outside of the province and having conducted themselves in such a manner as to justify their incarceration either in prison or an asylum, should be taken out of the province as soon as possible. But when you come to the question of sending them back to the province of Saskatchewan, you must assume a condition on their part which certainly calls for action by some government and one would think it might merit the interference of this government which is responsible for bringing those people into the country. Those people, if they are in their right mind, have as good a right to reside in the province of Ontario or any other province of Canada as they have to reside in the province of Saskatchewan. Therefore, there was no possible warrant for sending them back to the province of Saskatchewan even if there were warrant for pardoning them of the effence for which they were convicted and setting them at liberty. It is perfectly clear that the pardon was granted with the idea that they would be sent back to the province of Saskatchewan. If these men are in such a condition that they are to be bandied about from one province to the other until friction arises between the various provinces, such as arises between the guardians of one poor district and those of another poor district in Great Britain, we shall have a very curious condition of affairs in this country. Suppose that the authorities of the province of Saskatchewan take proceedings against these people for that indecent exposure which is even now being committed by them in that province, suppose that they are again incarcerated, and that the Attorney General of Saskatchewan recommends to this government their discharge in order that they may be sent to a warmer climate in British Columbia, will the same play go on, will they be removed from the province of Saskatchewan to the province of British Columbia by means of the pardoning powers of this government, and then shall we have another performance of exactly the same character in the province of British Columbia? Persons who conduct themselves in this way are fit inmates for a prison or an asylum, and if they are mentally deranged, as the Minister of Justice suggested, then surely the government of the Dominion, responsible for bringing these people into the country, should co-operate in some way with the government of some province and see that the public decency of the country is not any longer violated by such performances as those which have been going on in recent months.

Why did not the government of this country before exercising its pardoning power, make some inquiry of the authorities of the province of Saskatchewan to ascertain the circumstances under which these people hal left that province and come to a conclusion as to what the conditions would be if these people were deported from Ontario to Saskatchewan? It appears, notwithstanding all that has been said by the hon. Minister of Justice respecting the restoration of these people to family relations, that there are no family relations to be restored because the sensible Doukhobors, the majority of those people who are living, as I believe, quiet, decent, peaceable and industrious lives, refuse altogether to recognize this small section of the community which is bringing discredit upon the name of Doukhobors throughout the country. Why was not some inquiry made as to that before they were sent back to Yorkton? Under the circumstances, it seems to me that the action of the government is not very intelligent and that the Department of Immigration, or some department of the government, should get at once into communication with the authorities of the province of Saskatchewan and see that such steps are taken as will prevent a recurrence of any such scenes as those which have been heralded throughout the press during the past three or four months in eastern Canada.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. Speaker, the Department of Immigration has now a somewhat wide spread responsibility, and as having charge of that department at the present time, I must really protest against the suggestion of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that, besides having the responsibility for all effort in regard to bringing people into Canada, it should be responsible for all people in Canada after they come here. I take it that we have a division of responsibility between the different branches of the one government and between the different governments of this country. A certain responsibility rests upon the Dominion government, a certain responsibility rests upon the provincial governments, and I do not think that there is any gain to be made by a provincial government assuming Dominion responsibilities nor by the Dominion government assuming provincial responsibilities. The Department of Immigration, to which my hon. friend has consigned these people, has to do with such effort as is sanctioned by parliament to bring to people outside of Canada the advantages of Canada with the view of securing their removal here, and two years ago it was clothed with the further power to remove out of Canada to the country from whence they came people who, within two years of their coming, had transgressed the laws or rendered themselves obnoxious or undesirable here. But, these Doukhobors in question are neither in one class nor the other. They have been residents of Canada for a matter of seven, eight, or nine years, and during these seven, eight or nine years, as far as I am aware, they have been not only ordinarily law-abiding but they have been extraordinarily law-abiding as far, at any rate, as coming in conflict with the administration of the law is concerned. I venture to say that there are no other 8,000 people of any class, country or condition, who have come to Canada, who, during the nine years of their residence in Canada, have come as little in contact with the officers charged with the administration of the laws as have the 8,000 Doukhobors now resident in Canada. Therefore, Canada has not, either in its provinces or in the Dominion as a whole, suffered from the presence of these people in so far as the administration of law is concerned, or in so far as they have been a burden upon the enforcement of law in this country. These people, it appears, saw fit, some time during last summer, to change their place of residence. Having resided in the province of Saskatchewan for a matter of seven, eight or nine years, they for reasons of their own, saw fit to change their place of residence and they exercised the right which is accorded to every person who is a resident of this country to remove from where he is to where he wants to be. They travelled through the settled portions of Manitoba, through its cities and villages and they were received with open arms wherever they went. The people supported them as they travelled along, gave them food, listened to their songs, admired their peculiarities, I presume, and sent them on their way rejoicing, until finally they arrived at Fort William. When they arrived there the people, or the authorities of Fort William, seemed to think that there was a possibility of occurrences that were not to their advantage. They communicated with the Dominion government here and asked the government to take some responsibility in regard to these people who had been residents of Canada for seven, eight or nine years, who had paid taxes and who were entitled to and had received the privileges and responsibilities of citizenship except the actual right to vote. Well, I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that the Immigration Department did not feel any responsibility and did not accept any, and I think the response which was sent to the inquiry from the authorities as to what the Department of Immigration was going to do with the Doukhobors was something in the nature of a general direction for them to go to work. The hint was taken, they went to work, they found employment and matters went on peaceably and quietly with them during the winter. But, it appears that as time went on, they saw fit to indulge in peculiarities which were in transgression of the law of Ontario. But, the authorities of Ontario did not take any notice of these acts. Whether they liked that kind of thing, or what their reasons were, I am not aware, but, at any rate, it was not until some time this spring that the authorities of the province of Ontario, charged with the maintenance of law and order in that province, took official cognizance of the actions of the Doukhobors, and when they did take notice of these actions and a proper penalty was placed upon them they at once appealed to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice for the release of these people who had transgressed their own law, who had offended against public decency in their own city and they asked that they be pardoned for the reason, as I am given to understand, that they simply wanted to be relieved from the burden of the cost of carrying out their own law—a law for the maintenance of public decency in the province of Ontario. Their request was acceded to and now these people are back in Saskatchewan. How they arrived there I have no knowledge. I want it to be distinctly understood that, in so far as the Immigration Department is concerned, it had no connection with the transport back to the province of Saskatchewan of these people, no interest in it and no knowledge of it.

If they went back as free agents and of their own accord I quite agree with the Minister of Justice that they had a perfect right to go back if they wanted to, and if they went back because of misrepresentation or by reason of undue force, then I presume that a criminal charge may be laid against those who kidnapped them. However, they are in the province of Saskatchewan now, the province in which they have resided—with the exception of their short excursion to Fort William—for the past eight or nine years. Whatever may be said as to the proper share of responsibility on the part of the province of Ontario for the conduct of these people I am at a loss to see what can be said by the people of the province of Saskatchewan. These people have been residents of that province, they have been subject to the responsibilities of residence in that province during all this period, and I submit it is the business of the province of Saskatchewan, when these people are in that province, to see that the laws of the province are maintained just as it was the business of the province of Ontario to see that the laws of that province were maintained when they resided there. The Dominion government has no responsibility with regard to these people in any way, shape, or manner. The responsibility falls upon the provincial authorities and I assume the provincial authorities will discharge their duty and will deal with these people as is proper under the laws of the province. I might say that before provincial organization was given to Alberta and Saskatchewan and when the enforcement of the law rested upon the Dominion government, if any of these people then transgressed the law, the law was enforced upon them by the Dominion authorities. But now that the provinces have been organized and the responsibility for the enforcement of the law transferred to them I assume that the province concerned will discharge its duty and that the Dominion government will not be called upon, as it certainly ought not to be called upon, to exercise authority which it does not possess, and which if it did exercise in any province of the Dominion except in regard to these particular people, would be held to be a gross infraction of provincial rights and would be resented. I understand that these people are in a condition of mind which does not render them amenable to ordinary considerations, and such being the case it is not possible for this government which has no authority over them to deal with them effectively. Under the present circumstances I do not think it would be sound public policy for this government to undertake to deal with these people on any principle that this government has the authority to exercise. As I understand, their condition of mind is such that they are only subject to coercive measures and it is only the provincial authorities who have the power to apply these measures. Therefore it is a matter entirely within the control of the province, it is entirely within the responsibility of the province and in my humble estimation sound public policy requires that the province should deal with the matter as it should be dealt with under the ordinary laws and administration of the province.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I thought as I listened to the speech of the Minister of the Interior what a wonderful revolution has taken place in his ideas with regard to those particular people. The time is not far distant when he himself referred in most uncomplimentary terms in this House to the Doukhobors, and not only did he do so from his place in the House but well do I remember reading the caustic articles of the Edmonton 'Bulletin,' of which he was proprietor, in which he scored this government for having in the first place brought those people to Canada, for having in the second place granted them special privileges, and for not having after their first pilgrimage dealt more strenuously with them. The Minister of Justice may have legal justification for what he has done, but still I do not believe that the sensible people of this country will justify his action in liberating those people and dumping them back on the province in which they are apparently unwelcome. He has stated that he has only complied with their own request that they should be returned to their friends in the province of Saskatchewan, but it appears since their return to the town of Yorkton, that they have no friends, that their fellow countrymen refuse to welcome them, and as a result we have had that telegram which was read last evening by the leader of the opposition. It is distinctly stated there that those people were induced to return by misrepresentation, it having been stated to them that they were being conducted to a warmer climate. The people of Yorkton justly protest against their being dumped on their town. I have no doubt that the representative of that constituency will, before this debate closes, rise in his place to uphold the citizens of his town as no doubt he received a telegram in common with others, requesting that immediate action should be urged upon the government to prevent the disreputable scenes that have already been witnessed in Yorkton. The Minister of the Interior has stated that those people are most law-abiding; that during their recent pilgrimage they were fed by the people of Winnipeg and of the various towns and villages along the route, and that they were well cared for in the town of Fort William. Well, the people of the west are noted for their hospitality and they certainly would not see those people die of starvation, and so their charitable organizations supplied them with food and clothing which unfortunately was soon discarded. The Minister of the Interior has also told us that those people 'indulged in their own peculiarities.' Well, if my information is correct, very strange peculiarities they are. A short time ago I met two prominent citizens of Fort William on the train and they informed me of some of the peculiarities of those people which are certainly calculated to shock the moral sense of the community. So strange are those peculiarities which the Minister of the Interior has spoken of, that the municipal authorities of Fort William had to board up the windows of the house in which those people lived so that the boys of the town might not have an opportunity of witnessing such peculiarities. And yet, those gentlemen from Fort William stated that the Minister of the Interior (to use their own expressive words) had the hardihood to rise in his place in parliament and to eulogize those people as being the most moral people in the world. If the hon. gentleman had witnessed some of their actions, as represented by some of the reputable citizens of Fort William, I am sure that he would not rise in his place to defend them and refer to them as moral people; because they conducted themselves in a manner to bring the blush of shame to people appearing on the streets of Fort William. I do not blame the people of Ontario for desiring to have those people removed beyond their borders. It is true, they came from the Northwest; but they were brought to this country by this government, and received special consideration, the government paying $5 a head for every man, woman and child. Had they been English, Irish or Scotch, they would have received only $1.75 a head, but being the peculiar pets of the government, they were given this special consideration. When they arrived at Halifax, they were met by immigration agents who were tumbling over each other to extend to them the glad hand of welcome, and to read addresses to them, eulogizing them as persecuted persons fleeing from the tyrannical wrath of Russia to seek homes in this new land of the west. They were conducted by those immigration agents on special trains to the west; and when they arrived in Winnipeg they were treated with special consideration by the municipal authorities and the charitable organizations there. They were given soup of a special variety, not made from animal food, lest it might not agree with their fastidious taste. Addresses were again presented to them and finally they were located on their lands in the west with the idea that they would settle down and become law-abiding citizens of this Dominion. From that time to this they have given constant trouble to the people of the localities in which they have been situated and to the people of the country wherever they appeared. Their first pilgrimage was to the town from which I come. They came there, not in dozens, but in hundreds. They were herded in the skating rink, and the people of the town had to provide for them until the immigration authorities appeared on the scene. When the immigration agent came, it was necessary to get a special train and put them on board by force and take them back to the town of Yorkton under guard of the mounted police, and return them to the lands on which they had been located. This would not satisfy them, and shortly afterwards another outbreak occurred, and from that time there have been repeated outbreaks of these fanatical people. Last fall they started out at great danger of losing their lives; men, women and delicate young children in inclement weather walking in a semi-nude condition, begging on the way to keep themselves alive, to the city of Winnipeg, where they stayed for a few weeks, and then on to Fort William, where they have been a burden to the town during the past winter. I remember the time when the Minister of the Interior spoke harshly of the Galicians and even more harshly of the Doukhobors, and I have here a clipping from the Edmonton 'Bulletin,' which gives in rather dramatic language the views held by the hon. gentleman in those days. This article, which appeared after the first pilgrimage, says:

The Doukhobor pilgrimage has ended without the tragedy that was confidently expected, and that would have occurred had it not been for the 'persecution' to which they were subjected by the authorities in being forcibly sent to their homes. What the next move will be remains to be seen. They may stay quietly at home and attend to business, or their 'religious' enthusiasm may take some other fantastic and possibly less harmless form. At any rate, the secret is out. They are not by any means the people they were represented to be. They cannot travel any longer on their reputation of being Russian Quakers, or of having been persecuted by an intolerant church and government for conscience' sake. They have shown themselves to be nuisances personally, socially and politically. Such people as this, this country has no room or use for. The difference between those who went on the insane pilgrimage and those who did not is only a difference of degree, not of kind. The pilgramage was the logical sequence of their beliefs. All believed, but the difference was that those who remained at home resembled many other people to the extent that they did not live up to their beliefs. How soon they will arrive at a sufficient exaltation of spirit depends merely on the effectiveness of the preaching of the next crank who strikes their settlements; and whose missionary efforts will be helped rather than hindered by their having come off their recent pilgrimage practically none the worse.

The question now is, shall such people be pandered to by the authorities in the future as they have been in the past? They have been dealt with and allowed to consider themselves, as a separate people. They have been aided financially as no other people have been or should be. Their disregard of law has been winked at.

Yet the Minister of the Interior states today that there could not be 8,000 more law-abiding people in the Dominion of Canada than these Doukhobors.

All no doubt with the best intentions. But only with the result that Canada has been put to serious cost and trouble and has been made a laughing stock by their antics.

This pilgrimage is the limit. It puts them outside of reason or excuse.

If that was the case at the time of their first pilgrimage, when they retained their clothing, what must have been the case at the time of their last pilgrimage when they walked through the streets of Fort William absolutely nude.

The authorities will not hereafter be justified in dealing with them otherwise than as ordinary citizens. The law of Canada exempts from military service all whose religious beliefs prevent their taking part in the defence of their country. The Doukhobors can claim that exemption with the Mennonites, Quakers, Dunkards and others. But beyond that not a step—not a line. Their peculiar ideas regarding marriage have so far been 'respected.' This is a reproach to our laws and a danger to our social system. For if a Doukhobor may defy the marriage laws, why may not any other persons? Their political beliefs are a combination of theocracy, socialism and anarchy. The fact that they wash themselves is a strong point in their favour. But the other fact that they do not believe in work beyond providing for present need and are liable at any time to turn into a horde of tramps and beggars, completely knocks out the argument of their industrial value, which at earlier stages of the game was supposed to make up for every disadvantage.

There is a general objection to the importation of people whose presence, aspirations and votes tend against the proper social, political and industrial development of the country. The bringing of these Doukhobors was a mistake, but to allow them to remain on any other terms than as ordinary citizens would be a crime. They have made several attempts to find other locations. The sooner they find them the better for Canada, as removing a problem that, if it remains a problem——

These were the expressions of the hon. gentleman a few years ago. To be sure, he was not a minister of the Crown at that time, and was not called upon to defend the actions of the government in having brought those people of Canada; but to-day he feels obliged to defend not only the action of his predecessor in bringing them here, but the action of the Minister of Justice in giving them liberation and dumping them on the province of Saskatchewan. But it was not the hon. gentleman alone who condemned those people in past times. The Bible of the Liberal party, the Toronto 'Globe,' also advocated the removal of those people from our midst. I shall read a very short excerpt from it:

The Czar of all the Russias has never had much experience in welcoming subjects returning from foreign countries, and Canada should give him an opportunity to appear graciously and gracefully before the world in a new role. A Doukhobor Old Boys' Society returning to visit the scenes of youthful experiences, to renew friendships and revive happy memories, would be a felicitous occasion, on which the Czar could play the gracious host, and the returning pilgrims could bear the honours of distant successes with becoming modesty. They could sit by their old hearths and tell of the ways of immigration agents in distant Canada, of the kindly curiosity of the natives and the easy indifference of official authority.

We must admit that they have had sufficient to stimulate their curiosity. Anybody who has seen them on a pilgrimage will acknowledge that:

And the very easy indifference of the official authorities.

That is rather strong language for the Toronto 'Globe.' It goes on:

The homeward pilgrimage of a Doukhobor Old Boys' Society would be a delightful reunion from all points of view, and should be encouraged. The Doukhobors could make modest disclaimers when old friends gave congratulations on the distinctions won abroad. They could protest that, although their names were on every tongue, and their portraits adorned the illustrated press, they had not set their hearts on the applause of the multitude. And when pressed to remain and once more make their homes amid the scenes of happier years, they could temporize, hesitate and at last reluctantly yield, returning again to the ways and associations of their former life.

This would be gratifying, says the 'Globe,' from the Canadian standpoint:

Taking up the white man's burden is all very well in its way, but carrying it home is a far different matter. It is a practical move to send the assistant secretary of a charity organization to investigate a case of distress, but a far different matter to bring that case of distress home, and establish it in comfortable quarters. If the Czar did not mind, we could send out a force sufficient to impose the blessings of civilization as they have it in England on all the Doukhobors in his dominions. That would be a practical and systematic way to take up the white man's burden. But bringing the Doukhobors here to civilize them on the spot is positively inconvenient. The white man's burden is of the many things to which distance lends enchantment. If the Doukhobors will only return to their own home we will never lose our kindly interest in them. We will send them all the moral and religious admonitions that the censor will pass. We will subscribe to prizes for their annual pedestrian contests, buy tickets for their Christmas tea-meetings, entertain their walking delegates, send tourists among them, and reach out to them (across the ocean) the glad hand of friendship. We will give them the civilizing influence of our example at a distance. The personal freedom of this country does not appear to suit our friends of the lofty ideal. A Czar who would arrange their domestic and personal habits, determine their interpretation of the Scriptures, set forth where they should live, and what they should work at, when they should travel and when they should stay at home, would fill a much felt want.

This is from the great government daily, the Toronto 'Globe,' about those people, those people of whom the Halifax 'Chronicle' has spoken in a similar strain. I do not know that it is necessary for me to take up any more time except to condemn, as a westerner though not a resident of the province of Saskatchewan, the action of this government. Evidently it is resented by the good people of Yorkton and by the people of Saskatchewan as a whole; and I very much doubt if this continual game of battledore and shuttlecock unloading responsibility from one government to another and carrying on conferences all the time this great exhibition is going on—while those people are kept in a car on a siding at Yorktown, guarded by mounted policemen to prevent their making exhibitions of themselves—is one which the people will stand much longer. Our people will show their resentment against the importation of that class of immigrants and the special treatment accorded to them. Those Doukhobors have refused time and again to obey our laws. Time and again they have protested to the government against having been brought here under misrepresentations, and because they have not been allowed to follow out their own views with regard to marriage laws, registrations, homestead entries and so forth. And while some of them have changed their ideas and become reputable citizens, there is a large element among them who cling to their peculiar views, only a portion of whom have been on the recent pilgrimage. Those people are liable to an outbreak of this kind every once in a while and to become a charge on the country. It was a huge mistake to bring them out in the first place and in the second place to give them special treatment.

Mr. SPROULE. I would suggest that the province to which these people belong and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) should join in making assignment of them to the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) in order that he might settle them on one of his numerous estates in the west and send for W. T. R. Preston to take care of them.

FIRE EXTINGUISHERS.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (Leeds). If there is no further discussion on this matter, I have one to which I wish to draw the attention of the House. I purpose dealing with it now in order that, when we get into Supply, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) may take cognizance of it. As the matter refers to two departments, and I know that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, (Mr. Marcil) would rule me out on an objection sure to be raised by the Minister of Public Works, I think it better to discuss it while you are in the chair, in order that when we are in Committee of Supply, the minister may perhaps give some explanation. My hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) asked the minister to give an account of what he had done with a number of the fire extinguishers which had been purchased. The minister replied that he would get the information and bring it down, and I presume he will have it when we get into Supply. On the 22nd January last I moved for a return showing how many fire extinguishers had been purchased by the government for the different departments since the 1st June, 1906, to the 1st January, 1908, from whom purchased, the prices paid, and the total amount paid. The Minister of Public Works brought down a return, and after seeing that return and finding a number of other fire extinguishers, not included in that return, charged here and there throughout the Auditor General's Report, I raised the point that the order for these had not been complied with. Then a further return was brought down from the Department of Marine and Fisheries. That return showed that since the 13th June, 1906, to January, 1908, 53 fire extinguishers had been purchased from Mr. P. E. Perreault, at $14 each, making a total of $742. This extravagant department which pays such extravagant prices paid in this instance less than the Department of Public Works. Mr. Perreault evidently worked on a similar commission, and Mr. Gregory got his goods cheaper than did the Department of Public Works. Here is the return of the Department of Public Works which the minister brought down. The total number of fire extinguishers purchased was 195. From Patton and Company 95 were purchased, and from Charles Patton of Montreal 100, at $15 each in both cases. The Minister of Public Works therefore paid $1 more for the extinguishers he got than did Mr. Gregory for those he bought at Quebec for the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and I shall show the reason why. Last evening we listened to the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) eulogizing himself for the course he has pursued since he became minister of that department. Let me draw attention to a letter which he wrote, following the lines on which his predecessor had worked. It will be found in the report of the commissioners on page 79. It was written by the minister to Mr. Gregory, at Quebec, and was dated July 27, 1906:

> I have to inform you that if you consider that chemical fire extinguishers are necessary on board the vessels of the Quebec agency you are to purchase them from P. E. Perreault. 312 St. John street, Quebec. Mr. Perreault has been advised to call upon you in connection with this matter.

If Mr. Gregory could get a letter that indicated more clearly to him that he should purchase a number of these fire extinguishers than that letter written by the minister on the 27th July, 1906, I do not know what better authority he could have. This is the letter from the minister saying that a friend of his will call on him, and if he wants any fire extinguishers to purchase them from him. And now what do we find?

> October 8, 1906.—Gregory writes about fire extinguishers bought from Perreault, who is now an employee of the agency——

Because the minister employed Perreault and put him in the agency.

Mr. BRODEUR. Where does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) find that I ever signed such a letter?

Mr. TAYLOR. If the minister will bring down the files, I will point out the letter. He found the letter on the file and quotes it.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) says he has seen the file and knows there is a letter written by me? Does he assert that I have signed it?

Mr. TAYLOR. The commissioners have gone through the files and have given the House their report stating what they found. They found this statement on the files.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no statement that I signed this letter.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the minister will produce the letter, no doubt his signature will be found at the bottom of it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does the hon. gentleman assert that I signed that letter?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am making no assertions. The hon. minister appointed a Royal Commission, and I am quoting what the Royal Commission said.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, that does not say that I signed the letter. Does the hon. gentleman say that I signed it?

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister will make his own speech. He made one last night—and of all the speeches I ever listened to since I came into this House over twenty years ago, that speech, as coming from a gentleman who ought to be a statesman, was the most extraordinary I ever heard.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has stated that I signed that letter.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not make the statement.

Mr. BRODEUR. I deny that I signed it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to make my speech. The minister is not going to put me down. I am reading from the report of the Royal Commission. And I will give him the page—page 79. And any gentleman who reads that will say that it comes from the department to the agents at Quebec, and from the head of the department.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman said I had signed the letter.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not. The hon. gentleman cannot find that in 'Hansard.'

Mr. BRODEUR. Then. that is all right.

Mr. TAYLOR. I say this is from the head of the department, from the minister, for further down there is one from the deputy, and they quote his name.

Mr. CROCKET. There is no directing head of the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. No. But here is an intimation to Gregory, as plain as can be, to buy some of these worthless fire extinguishers from Perreault. The report goes on:

October 8, 1906.—Gregory writes about fire extinguishers bought from Perreault who is now an employee of the agency and has a lot of fire extinguishers on hand which he would like to sell to the department. Under the circumstances, as he is a poor man with a family, and now unable to go out and solicit their sale. This was well understood by the late lamented minister, who was his friend, and fully recognized the worthiness of the said chemical fire extinguishers. I would recommend that the department take them off his hands, as we have several stations requiring such protection.

October 12, 1906.—Letter from deputy——

The first was from the minister, but this is from the deputy.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does the hon. gentleman assert that I signed it?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am making my speech and the assertions in it will be pretty clearly understood. When I am through, if the minister wishes, he can make his speech.

October 12, 1906.—Letter from deputy—With reference to fire extinguishers purchased by you from P. E. Perreault, I find no authority on file in the department for the purchase of these fire extinguishers, and I notice that within the last couple of years large purchases have been made from this gentleman. In this connection, I may say that in 1904-5 the late minister purchased from Mr. Charles Patton fire extinguishers to the sum of $9,000. Of this number, 142 were sent to Quebec for the use of your agency lighthouses and Dominion steamers. Besides that, a number were stored in Montreal and are there still.

That is. they were still in store in 1906, though they were purchased in 1904. That gives you an idea how the department is run:

If you had notified the department that fire extinguishers were absolutely necessary to put on board the Dominion steamers and to be used at lighthouses, the required number could have been sent from Montreal. Instead of this. it appears you made purchases from Mr. Perreault without any instructions or authority from the department. The minister would like to have an explanation in regard to this matter. He would also like to have a statement of how the fire extinguishers purchased in 1904-5 were distributed.

October 8, 1906.—Gregory writes to department in answer to their letter of October 4 and 5 returning P. E. Perreault's accounts for chemical fire extinguishers, and asking me to inform you upon what authority the purchases were made. He refers to a letter of July 27, 1906.

That is the letter I have already referred to that came to him and was his authority; he took that letter of July 27 as a hint to purchase these fire extinguishers, and he did purchase them, and here the deputy is holding him for his action. He goes on, in his letter of October 15, 1906:

I shall have a statement prepared by the inspector of lights as soon as possible, showing how the fire extinguishers purchased in 1904-5 were distributed, and forward the same to the department.

The statement is that 142 fire extinguishers were sent to Quebec for the use of the agency lighthouses and Dominion steamers, but Gregory contradicts that by his telegram which shows there were only fifty instead of 142.

I stated a little while ago that I would explain how it came that the Minister of Public Works paid $15 for these fire extinguishers, while the Department of Marine and fisheries paid only $14 at Quebec. Mr. Patton is a manufacturer at Montreal. He could not make so many sales up here at Ottawa as he wanted to. Mr. Grant, a lawyer in this city, suggested to Mr. Patton that they would form a partnership, and he would get an agent who had some influence with the government and would make some sales for him. So, there was a company formed at Ottawa. It was called Patton and Grant, because as I say, Mr. Grant is a lawyer here and he did not want to have his name appear as a selling agent for fire extinguishers. But they borrowed a name from a fellow by the name of Crowe. And the firm was called Patton and Crowe. But Grant did the business. He assumed the name of Crowe for himself. They sold to the government through the agency of Mr. Auguste Lemieux, who also is a lawyer in the city of Ottawa. He wanted a commission of $3 instead of $2, they had to raise the price to the government, and so the government paid $15 here while they paid $14 in Quebec. You will see how this was brought about. One hundred fire extinguishers were purchased from Patton in Montreal and 99 from Patton and Crowe in Ottawa. Patton and Crowe, of course, were Patton and Grant. Patton and Crowe put in an account to the Public Works Department and got the cheques which were made to Patton and Crowe. Grant handled the cheques. He himself personally paid Mr. Lemieux his commission to the amount of between $600 and $700 on the quantity he sold to the department here. Grant gave his own cheque to Lemieux, and marked on the cheque 'for commission.' These cheques were endorsed by Lemieux, put into the bank, and the money drawn, and the cheques were returned to Grant, and up to a certain time were in his office. But afterwards they were missing—they were stolen from his office for a purpose. A vacancy had loomed up in the representation for Ottawa——

Mr. PUGSLEY. How does that appear ?

Mr. TAYLOR. That is my information, and if there is anything incorrect about it——

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) will pardon me. I am asking the question because I am not informed what took place here a year or more ago. Is there any evidence of what my hon. friend is stating now before the Public Accounts Committee?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, it is not before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is it before any committee?

Mr. TAYLOR. We will be in public accounts in a little while from now and you can ask any of these questions you like.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman may say if it has been proved.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am giving the information I have. My information is that the proof is on hand. These cheques were taken from Mr. Grant's office and deposited in the safe of Mr. Lindsay. A vacancy was being created here in Ottawa by the transference of Mr. Belcourt to the Senate, and Mr. Lemieux, who sold these fire extinguishers, was an aspirant and thought that as his brother was the Postmaster General he had the pull, and should be the coming member to fill Mr. Belcourt's seat. Mr. Belcourt had his eye on another gentleman and had made a promise that when he vacated the seat that other gentleman would be the candidate. Mr. Lemieux had to be got out of the way. These cheques made by Grant payable to Lemieux, having been taken out of Grant's office, were missing. Mr. Belcourt was then down at Saranac Lake in the Adirondacks for his health. These cheques were sent down to Mr. Belcourt who would not trust the cheques across the ocean to the Prime Minister, but had them photographed and sent the photographs to the Prime Minister with an explanation. The Prime Minister wrote back: When I come home——

Mr. LENNOX. Why did he send them.

Mr. TAYLOR. To show that Lemieux had to be got out of the way. When the Prime Minister came back he said: There are the cheques already filled out for a commission to you, a lawyer selling goods to the government; you have to back out—and Lemieux quietly backed out and took no further part in the contest.

Mr. BENNETT. Would that not qualify him as a member?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know but there were two of them who wanted it, and Mr. Belcourt and the Prime Minister wanted one man, but Lemieux and the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) wanted another man. Cheques come in useful sometimes. I have heard a statement, I have never had it verified, but from the facts it appears there was some truth in it. We remember when the late Minister of Railways left his seat on account of the Transcontinental Railway proposition which was being introduced by the government, it was supposed that he was going to take the stump against the Prime Minister, and the information is that the Prime Minister called on the late Mr. Blair, and asked him his intentons, and that Mr. Blair said: I am going to go to the country in opposition to this scheme of building an opposition line to the Intercolonial and putting this country into $20,000,000 of debt. And the information is that the Prime Minister put his hand in his pocket and pulled out some cheques that a big contractor had made payable direct to Mr. Blair and with his name signed on the back of them.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In justice to the memory of Mr. Blair I must say that there is not a word of truth in that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am glad to hear it, I thought it was my duty to tell the hon. gentleman. But the facts were there, Mr. Blair did not take the stump, the cheque shut him up.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Blair is dead, he cannot reply of course.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the evidence is here in these two returns. Perreault sold the government these same fire extinguishers down at Quebec at $14, and Lemieux sells them to the Minister of Public Works at $15. There is a dollar of extra rake-off anyway, and Mr. Grant paid his cheque to Mr. Lemieux for the commission on them, gave his own personal cheque and a gentleman who informed me saw the cheques, made payable to the order of Lemieux, and marked on the face of them 'commission.' That is the information I have in reference to it. If my hon. friend wants any information, this gentleman came voluntarily into my office and said he saw the cheques and gave me the information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a great mistake to believe all you hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am stating this, and if the hon. gentleman appoints a committee he will find that I am correct, and that he and his people paid a dollar more than was paid at Quebec. Look at the thousands of dollars, $9,000 in one lot, and $2,000 or $3,000 by the minister himself, expended for what is practically no better than a bottle of vinegar for fire purposes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Vinegar will not do any good.

Mr. TAYLOR. Just as good as this, mixed with a little soda and water. Any way they were giving $15 for these, and the Department of Marine alongside was giving $14. If they had bought from the manufacturer they could have saved the $600 or $700 paid to Grant. I want the minister, before we go on with his supply, to bring down information as to where these were distributed, to bring down the reports of the different engineers as to their value and all correspondence in reference to them. I want to know why $15,000 to $20,000 of the people's money have been paid in the last five years for fire extinguishers. I think it necessary that this information should be given before we go into the minister's estimates, in order that he might be prepared to answer the questions. The officials of the Marine Department will also give some information of what was done with this large quantity down at Quebec. I want to know particularly why the Department of Public Works paid $15 for the same article that the Department of Marine bought at $14, as shown by the two returns which have been brought down. There may be other departments that have not yet reported. I do not know how many have been purchased by the Department of Agriculture and some other departments. We have only two returns down, and when I moved for this return, the Minister of Public Works brought down the information simply for his own department, although my motion asked for all departments. I have since got the return for the Marine and Fisheries Department. Were there any others to which Lemieux has sold these fire extinguishers? I do not know, but we know he has sold, and has got his commission from Mr. Grant for 105 of these machines.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot promise to have these returns to-day, but as soon as possible I will have all the information desired so that the matter may be considered when we are in Supply. I would like to say that so far as I am aware there have been very few of these extinguishers purchased since I became minister. Probably there have been some. I am not able to say why the price is $15. That appears to have been the price paid before I became minister. With regard to the usefulness of the article, I understood from the chief architect that they were considered valuable for the purpose of extinguishing fires.

Mr. FOSTER. Their name would indicate that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Things are not always just what they would appear to be from their names, but I am told they are a pretty good article for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the minister bring down the report of his engineer or officer upon which they were bought?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, if there is such a report.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose there would not be any bought unless there was a scientific report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was all before I went into the department.

Mr. FOSTER. They would not be bought without a report since you became minister?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am inclined to believe not.

TURTLE MOUNTAIN TIMBER RESERVE.

Mr. F. L. SCHAFFNER (Souris). Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer for a few moments to a matter which I have brought up two or three times before. It is the matter of the timber reserve on Turtle mountain. I believe that the idea of preserving these timber reserves is a very laudable one but I think there should be some exception made when the conditions warrant it. I think there should be some examination made as to whether these are actual timber reserves or not, and further, I would like to inquire of the Minister of the Interior if he has had any information of late in connection with the special reserve to which I have referred. In speaking the other day I tried to show the Minister of the Interior that it would be absolutely impossible ever to make this particular reserve of any importance. The minister, in answering what I said, seemed to be labouring under the impression that I thought there was no large timber there and he said that the idea was not to produce merchantable timber but rather to produce what might be called climatic conditions. That is all good in its way, if the idea can be successfully carried out. But it will be absolutely impossible to make anything out of part of the timber reserve on Turtle mountain in so far as climatic conditions are concerned. I have made a personal examination of this reserve and I think that all the timber that is there—and when I speak of timber I really mean brush—could be put into two or three sections and it is a matter that affects about 70,000 acres of land. There has been a very small growth, some of the trees being but three or four years old. But, the point I want to make is that even what timber there is on this so-called timber reserve is being absolutely neglected. We have had a gentleman there whom the Minister of the Interior knows very well and whom I know very well, and, while I do not wish to say anything offensive, yet I think that a duty devolves upon me at the present time in connection with this particular reserve. There seems to prevail here a condition that apparently exists all over that western country and that is that the men whom the government appoint as overseers, or timber guardians, or whatever name they may be designated by, are, if not political hacks, to say the least, political organizers and we find that the gentleman who is supposed to be looking after this Turtle mountain reserve absolutely spends his time endeavouring to get promises of votes for the Liberal party. He is a man who has made an absolute failure of life in every other condition and as a last resort, he has applied for this government position and the people in that country have to suffer because they have to satisfy the political aspirations of one man. During this spring a fire has gone over the entire district and, according to a letter which I received last night and to an item which I have taken from a paper issued in the town of Boissevain, some eight or ten miles from that reserve, a great deal of destruction has taken place. I call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the fact because he may not be cognizant of it. From the information which I have I believe that this district will never be made a successful timber reserve. There were a number of settlers in one township of this reserve and they were offered certain conditions if they would leave that place and go to a place which had been designated by the government. I understood the Minister of the Interior to say that no definite promise had been made to these men, but it does seem, from my conversation with a number of them when I was there only a few days ago, and from the letters which I have received and which are in my possession, not from my own supporters, but from men who vote against me that there is a great amount of dissatisfaction with the condition of affairs on that reserve. I think the dissatisfaction is universal amongst the settlers of that district, whether they be Liberals or Conservatives and I believe that, the Minister of the Interior not being conversant with this matter, it was my duty to call his attention to it. As I have said, it affects some 70,000 acres of land. If this will never make a timber reserve under any conditions is it not practical business, is it not necessary in the interests of the department and of the district concerned, that the matter should be looked into ? I do not ask you to take my word. I would like you to make an investigation. I claim that these settlers, even though they were going to have some parts of this as a timber reserve, were doing a great deal of good there. They were looking after their own sections and they were on the edge of the timber reserve and, being in that position, they were able to prevent fires. But, most of them have been sent away, some of them are there still, not very many, and the consequence has been that the timber has all been burned over. There is another grievance. During last spring the gentleman to whom I have referred and who is the timber agent there had a large number of men planting seed on this soil in order to produce trees. The Minister of the Interior knows just as well as I do that this is money wasted and thrown away. You cannot find a settler anywhere in that district but would tell the Minister of the Interior and this government that it is absolutely useless to plant seeds under these conditions. I will not call it graft, but it is simply a waste of money and I am positive that the Minister of the Interior is not familiar with the facts or he certainly would prevent that condition of affairs from existing any longer. The paper to which I have referred contains the following paragraph :

Several men are employed in the timber reserve planting tree seeds on the land that has been burnt off. It is very questionable if the seeds will grow, or, providing they do, whether they will not be destroyed by fire as the bush has been hitherto. It would be a great deal better if the Dominion government would open up this land for settlement instead of using it as an experimental ground.

I am in entire sympathy with that statement. I am also in entire sympathy with the reservation of timber areas when it is practicable, but in this case where it is absolutely impracticable I say that the area should be thrown open to settlers, that those who are there should be allowed to return to their homes and that those who are there should be allowed to remain. I also received a letter last night from a gentleman who is familiar with the conditions in that district. Amongst other things he says:

Another thing which is something of vital importance, what is the use of keeping a man here looking after our timber reserve as you call it ? Why, the fire has went over the whole thing in the last few days and killed every green tree in the bush. All the young stuff is killed.

Then, further down, he says :

Now, I hear is out sowing tree seeds and planting trees. What is the use of wasting the people's money in this way? The fire will kill everything again. If this land is given out to settlement it will be taken care of. Each settler will take care of his own. As it is nobody is looking after it. Hoping what I have written may set the ball rolling, I remain,

Yours truly,

I have only one object in calling the attention of the minister to this timber reserve and that is to express the hope that he will give it a little more attention than he seems to have given to it up to the present time.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. Speaker, I am rather sorry and somewhat surprised to hear the expression of my hon. friend (Mr. Schaffner) with regard to this particular reserve. Of course it is well that we arrive at a final knowledge or a final understanding of a certain condition. I hope my hon. friend does not wish to blame me for a misunderstanding in regard to this particular reserve because I would remind him that this reserve has been a reserve for many years. It was a reserve when my hon. friend was elected to represent the constituency in which it is situated. It was at first reserved by departmental order, then the Forest Reserve Act was introduced into this House and the provisions of that Act were approved of unanimously by the House. There was certain discussion as to the benefits that might accrue by that Act to the people who held timber limits within the reserves, but there was unanimity of opinion in regard to the general principle of making certain reserves and of preserving them by legislative enactment in the terms of the Bill then before the House. My hon. friend would have been protecting the interests which he now assumes to protect had he then given the House the information he has given it today. That would have been the proper time to tell us that this timber reserve was not necessary, that it was not a proper place in which to make a timber reserve, that the settlers who were then on it should have remained on it, but my hon. friend did not give that information and so he will have to assume at any rate joint responsibility with me for the legislation by which the responsibility was laid upon the Department of the Interior to see that those who were in residence upon the reserve were removed from it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I scarcely understand how the Minister of the Interior can hold me in the least responsible. He himself admits that this was a timber reserve before I came into the House.

Mr. OLIVER. It was previously a timber reserve by order in council, and when the legislation was before the House to make it a timber reserve by Act of parliament that would have been the time for my hon. friend to put in his protest.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If the hon. gentleman will refer to that occasion which is two years ago he will find that I certainly did put in my protest.

Mr. OLIVER. At the time the Act was passed ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Yes, and I referred to these settlers at the same time.

Mr. OLIVER. It is not in my memory that the hon. gentleman did so, and if he did he is now in line with his attitude of that time. But apparently he was not able to impress the House with his views. Be that as it may, it was the will of parliament that there should be a reserve there and that the reserve should be cleared of settlers, and efforts have been made since to carry out the will of parliament. I have already expressed my regret for the necessity of action being taken which in itself cannot be other wise than a hardship. But it was not my action, it was parliament caused it to be done. In accordance with the declaration of parliament we have secured the removal of several of these settlers, and if any promises have been made to them in order to secure their removal I can only say that my instructions are that every promise shall be fulfilled. If every promise has not been carried out it should be carried out, and I expect it will be. I appreciate quite as much as anybody else the difficulty of the situation of these people.

As to those settlers who are still on the reserve it is expected that they will remove possibly within the coming month and we are using all reasonable effort to facilitate their going and to make the conditions as little burdensome upon them as possible. Until parliament sees fit to rescind its action there is nothing left for the department but to endeavour to secure the removal of the settlers from the reserve.

I regret to hear that fire has swept the reserve. I suppose that having assumed the responsibility of taking care of the reserve we must assume some responsibility for fires that occur. But as we have only one man there to take care of the reserve which includes several townships, any of us who are familiar with conditions in the west will understand that there are times when an army would not be able to protect such an area from fire. It may have been our fault or it may have been the misfortune of circumstances.

In regard to the view of my hon. friend that it is wasting money and time and effort to plant tree seeds upon the ground recently traversed by fire, I can only say that my information is that in succeeding years after a burn has taken place a new growth comes up rapidly; and I assume there is no inherent reason why the same course of nature will not follow on the Turtle mountain reserve.

Mr. FOSTER. That growth comes up without any planting of seed.

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely.

Mr. FOSTER. Could the minister tell where it comes from ?

Mr. OLIVER. Unlike my hon. friend there are some things that I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. I don't know either and that is why I asked.

Mr. OLIVER. We agree for once.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the strangest thing in the world.

Mr. OLIVER. It is a fact that a new growth does come up after a fire, and I assume that our planting of seed on the burnt ground will not be frowned on by Providence or by nature any more than if we did not plant seed there at all.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. But let me remind the Minister of the Interior that they were planting these seeds there long before the fire. They were spending time and money planting seeds on that soil which will never produce trees of any description.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, if it will not produce trees it is not very valuable land for any other purpose; and the idea in setting it apart as a reserve that it was not valuable for agricultural purposes, is confirmed by the statement the hon. gentleman has made. At any rate, I assume that we are not to any serious degree hindering the settlement of the country by keeping in reserve a tract which is not capable of even growing trees. However, I have better hopes of the case than my hon. friend.

I have some belief that the withdrawal of the land in the first place was fairly well advised ; and, being on the summit of an elevated and broken piece of country, the source of certain water supply for the surrounding country, both on the surface and under the surface, it seems to me that the Turtle mountain is the place of all others in the west where there is warrant for a forest reserve, and where every effort should be made to preserve and to perpetuate and increase the sources of the water supply for the benefit of the surrounding country. Our efforts may be mistaken ; we may be under a misapprehension ; there are many things yet to be found in the secrets of nature ; but we are using reasonable and legitimate efforts to seek what it is desirable to seek.

In regard to the political action of our officer there, I can only say that I regret very much to hear the statement made. I can assure my hon. friend that any such action is entirely contrary to my views or wishes, and the matter will be taken up on the representations which he has made, and will be dealt with.

It is quite possible that the reserve having been created a number of years ago, there has not been the fullest care taken in defining the boundary; that is to say, we have taken in more land than is perhaps suitable for the purpose. We have not had until quite recently a scientific organization, as it might be called, that would warrant us in revising these limits ; but we have been successful during the past year in securing the assistance of some gentlemen of eminence in forestry matters, and we hope, by investigations on the ground during the present year, to be able to readjust the boundaries, if such readjustment is necessary, so that we shall not be preventing settlement by holding land unnecessarily, and shall be doing the best we can to aid the surrounding settlements by securing the preservation of the existing forests and the reforestation of the deforested part of what is now the Turtle mountain forest reserve.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (Kings, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) was not objecting to the principle of forest reserves. I think that in common with all the other members of this House who have any knowledge of timber matters, he highly approves of the idea of creating forest reserves. The only fault I have to find with the action of the government with respect to this matter is that they have not set apart enough of the timber wealth of the country for the future—not only to preserve it for a time when it will be infinitely more valuable, because of its scarcity, than it is at the present time, but also on account of the water supply. There is one matter which has come up in connection with this subject that I think is deserving of some consideration on the part of the department, and that is the question of fire guarding. I understand that there are about 70,000 acres in this particular forest reserve, and yet the minister says there is only one person to protect it from fire. It seems to me that it is very bad policy, after setting apart such a large tract of country as a forest reserve, to take such meagre precautions to preserve it from fire. There are only certain times of the year when there is danger from fire, that is, early in the spring and late in the summer ; and it seems to me that the proper course would be at those times to have an efficient force to protect this property. It would cost something, it is true ; but you have a very valuable asset there, which it is worth expending some money for the purpose of protecting. It is valuable in more ways than one. It is valuable on account of the actual money's worth that is there ready to be turned into money, and also because, if fire sweeps over it, if you are going to continue it as a timber reserve, you will have to begin again at the seed, and it will take nearly a century for the timber to grow again. Therefore I strongly urge the minister, whose timber policy in this respect I have commended, to largely increase his force of fire protectors, putting them on, not the year round, but during the particular seasons when it is absolutely necessary to protect the forest from fire. If he does this, he will be deserving of the thanks of the House and the country.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I would ask the Minister of the Interior if he has made up his mind yet when to throw open to homestead entry the lands that have been taken out of the reserves that have recently been formed. For instance, in the Riding mountain timber reserve, as the hon. gentleman is aware, there were certain townships over which fire swept, destroying the timber ; and an order in council was passed taking these out of the reserve and throwing them open to homestead entry. That occurred over a year and a half ago. Many settlers visited the land office with the idea of making entry, in accordance with the newspaper advertisement, stating that on a certain date those lands would be thrown open to homestead entry, only to be disappointed. I have the same complaint to make as the hon. member for Souris, when he states that the timber inspector having charge of these reserves——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member has exhausted his right to speak.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Then I ask the Minister of the Interior when it is intended to have those lands thrown open to homestead entry ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. minister can only speak with the permission of the House, as he has exhausted his right to speak.

Mr. OLIVER I only wish to answer the hon. gentleman's question, if the House is willing. The lands which have been cut out of these reserves were announced as being open to entry by an error. They have been held under reservation for the purpose of accommodating squatters but we are moving them out of the reserve, and as soon as we are able to get the squatters out of the reserve and adjust it we will open the balance of these lands which were cut out of it. I regret that the officer who has been in charge of the work has been ill some months and the work has not gone forward as rapidly as I hoped. However we have succeeded in getting a large number of the squatters out of the Riding mountain reserve and we have every prospect of getting them all out by the end of this month.

THE MOOSEJAW-LACOMBE EXTENSION CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (West Assiniboia). There is a matter which I think of sufficient importance to bring to the attention of the House, and that is the providing of transportation facilities for that part of my constituency which lies remote from railway accommodation. I know that it is no part of the duty of the government to provide transportation for new settlements, but I am satisfied that I shall convince the House that there are exceptional circumstances connected with the case I have to lay before you, Mr. Speaker, which justifies me in taking this unusual course. I refer to the construction of the Moosejaw-Lacombe branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway. A charter to build that branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway has held for some years. Two years ago they built fourteen miles from Moosejaw in a northerly and northwesterly direction, but they have not laid any steel since. Last summer they graded fifty miles more. From time to time they have announced that they would proceed with the construction of the railway, and relying upon those promises, settlers went into a district remote from transportation facilities, but although they have been there two or three years they still find themselves without these facilities. These settlers have been hanging on by their teeth, so to speak, throughout these years, and I do not think I need offer any apology to the House for taking the stand that a company such as the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has held this charter for years and which is building railways in other parts where competition is keener, should be brought to book for their neglect in this matter. I have been across the Saskatchewan river where this railway is supposed to run, and in that section there are many settlers from fifty to one hundred and fifty miles away from any railway. It is very inconvenient for them to get fuel. For a time they were able to obtain fuel from the small timber around their residences or in the valleys, in the creeks and rivers, but that is almost entirely consumed and there are to-day perhaps seven or eight thousand people who have gone in there relying on the promise of the Canadian Pacific Railway to construct this line. You will find there the finest farmers you will see anywhere, who have taken up the best lands you can find in the west. These lands are second to none in Canada. I have visited them myself and I have reports about them from very reliable sources, and I think that in a few years you will find my prediction verified that that land is going to be the most prosperous part of the Northwest Territory. I refer to that part lying near the elbow of the South Saskatchewan river, and north and west of that point. Last summer, in my capacity as representative of the district, I made an appointment with Mr. William White, and got from him the authority to announce that last year his company would construct a certain portion of the railway. Lest any one should take exception to my repeating the conversation, let me say that it was strictly in an official way. I met the vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway by appointment. He agreed to receive a deputation composed of my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. McCraney) and Mr. W. P. Sutherland, M.P.P., and myself. Through some misunderstanding I did not get word to my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. McCraney) so that Mr. Sutherland and myself only saw Mr. Whyte. He authorized us to say last year they would lay fifty miles more of steel and grade at least seventy more miles, but from that day to this they have not laid one foot of steel or done any more grading. But they let last fall a contract for seventy miles and gave the people to understand the road would be built at once, and the people accepted that promise in good faith. Throughout these years these people have been practising the strictest economy, but in the most cavalier fashion without giving any explanation the Canadian Pacific Railway have sent out the announcement that they have seen fit to cancel the contract which they had made with Mr. J. D. McArthur to build these seventy miles. Although I cannot expect the government to build this road or do anything very severe with the Canadian Pacific Railway I do think that this condition of affairs should be exposed and that the railway company should be censured for playing fast and loose with the settlers in that way. There are people out there who are being ruined financially—fine young homesteaders who cannot get their fuel in or their wheat out and who are in the impossibility of carrying on with any success their farming operations. That is a very serious condition of affairs, to which I call the attention of the House, and especially the attention of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham). I have in my hand a petition which is sixteen feet long by actual measurement. It is very closely signed and no doubt has about 1,000 names on it. I have another which, by actual count, contains over 300 names of people living in the vicinity of Tullisville near the elbow of the South Saskatchewan. I tried to present these petitions to the House, but as they ask for the building of a railway and therefore call upon the expenditure of public money they could not be received, anything connected with the expenditure of public money having to come direct from the government. The petition is as follows :

We, the undersigned settlers in and around the district of Tullisville, hereby petition the Dominion government to use their influence on behalf of our neighbourhood in securing a line of railway. In order to market any grain, we are obliged to draw it from 60 to 80 miles to town. Some of us have even greater distances than this to go. We also have the Saskatchewan river to cross which makes it very inconvenient, and being without railroad facilities we find little or no encouragement whatever in raising large quantities of grain until such times as we can get a closer market. If in the near future there are no signs of a railroad, the half of the neighbourhood threatens to pull out on obtaining their patent. This would mean a great loss to this district.

These people went in on the direct assurance of the Canadian Pacific Railway that they would construct the line. A railway company should not be allowed to give a pledge of this kind to the people and then place the people at a most serious disadvantage because of their non-fulfilment of the pledge. I have a letter here dated Fertile Valley, Saskatchewan, April 15th :

Could you let me have any definite information regarding the action of the Canadian Pacific Railway in abandoning construction work on the Moosejaw extension? Also if you think it possible that the government or the Railway Commission could take up the matter and secure the completion of the line to the crossing on the South Saskatchewan river in township 29, range 8, west third meridian, this season. It is needless to point out that it is impossible to continue under present conditions. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, will follow those who have already abandoned the country.

KENNETH DUNBAR,
Honorary Secretary Liberal Association.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Knowles) if he has ever brought this grievance of the people in that part of the country before the Railway Committee of this House. These railways are always asking this House and its railway committee for additional legislation. I think that when they do that their attention ought to be called to any breach of contract of this kind. And I hold further that no road should get further legislation or further concessions from the government if there is a breach of contract on their part such as this appears to be. It may be that there are financial reasons why the company cannot construct the road at the present time. As to that, I am not informed ; although I do know that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has been able to procure large sums of money in the English money market within a short time. I have a strong opinion that these railways which constantly appear before this House and the railway committee for additional privileges should be told and told perhaps by the government, that no further concessions in the way of franchises will be given them until they make a reasonable effort to complete the roads that they have already incorporated, certainly to build the roads that they have given a pledge to build. If that is done, some kind of control will be held over these roads, and they will be compelled to keep bargains made with the people. The railways always talk of their vested rights and on those rights they insist. But the public also has vested rights ; and when the railways give a pledge they should seek in every way to carry it out. The only excuse I can imagine for not building this railway which will accommodate so many people, is, probably, the condition of the money market. But, so far, I have not heard that urged in this case. I think, if the hon. member (Mr. Knowles) and his friends from that part of the country go to the Minister of Railways and insist on his using his influence with the Canadian Pacific Railway and with the government as a whole, to have the government tell the Canadian Pacific and other railways that they shall not have further concessions until they complete the obligations they have undertaken, it will have a beneficial effect.

Mr. KNOWLES. With the permission of the House I may say that I have not brought this matter before the railway committee because it does not afford publicity enough. My wish was, I will not say to expose, but to reveal the position of this railway, and the railway committee does not meet my purpose.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. But the Canadian Pacific Railway Company appears before the committee—has appeared this session —asking for these additional advantages, and that would be a good time to ventilate the matter.

Mr. KNOWLES. Again with the permission of the House, I would say, with regard to Mr. Whyte's promise, that he explained that he could not get ties.

Mr. G. E. McCRANEY (Saskatchewan). I desire to say a word in support of the position of my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles). I am familiar, to some degree, with the country through which he says this proposed railway would pass. The hon. gentleman and myself attended a picnic some forty or fifty miles west of the town of Hanley in the month of July last, and I must say that I never went through any portion of western Canada which appeared to be so fertile and so well suited to make the home of a prosperous people as that country is. There are many parts of the west in which our population is mostly foreign. But I was particularly struck with the fact that in this section it was almost entirely an Ontario population, and I found amongst the people there a number of persons whom I had known in Ontario. I think that if any hon. gentleman from Ontario had been there he would have felt himself, perhaps, more at home than in any other part of the west. They were all full of hope, but they were full also of requests that we should do what we could to influence the the Canadian Pacific Railway in the building of the road. I was to have accompanied my hon. friend (Mr. Knowles) to Winnipeg to interview Mr. Whyte, as my hon. friend has stated. The announcement which he was able to make after that interview was one very well received in that portion of the country. We found, on the trip to which I have referred, that there were two great needs. One was that of getting out the grain. The nearest market from the point we visited was Hanley. It is necessary to cross the south Saskatchewan river, and there is a journey of some fifty miles. The conditions make grain growing altogether unprofitable, but the people were in hopes that the railway might be put through in a very short time. There was also the other difficulty which my hon.

friend mentioned, one very apparent to us, and that is the necessity of making provision for fuel. I would point out to hon. members that, while we have heard nothing of the fuel question in the west during this session, we still stand in fear that, unless we get railway accommodation to some portions of the country which are almost wholly treeless, as is this part to which I have referred, we must look for a great deal of trouble in the future. The value which our land has is not derived from its grain growing qualities so much as from its proximity to transportation. What I have sometimes felt is that, in granting charters to railways, although there is no undertaking on the part of the railways to construct, we almost mislead people to go into a given portion of the country by the announcement that a railway may pass through. Unfortunately, our people seem to think that a charter is a railway. Of course, that is a great mistake. But when corporations like the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, with the credit it has, makes an announcement and gives a contract, it seems to me that the influence of this House and of this government should be made use of to compel, or, at least, to influence the railway to go on and construct. I feel that these people have a great grievance against a corporation which has received every consideration at the hands of this House, and I hope the Minister of Railways will use his good offices in having this contract completed.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). In reply to the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. McCraney), Of course, it is regrettable that thickly settled portions of any part of the country should be so remote from the market and have no connection by way of railways or other rapid transit. It is a well recognized fact that the time consumed in marketing a product has much to do with the price and with the profit made in raising it. I can readily understand the disappointment that would result from a promise made by representatives of a great railway not being implemented. People, as my hon. friend (Mr. McCraney) has said, would rush into that territory, believing they were shortly to have railway communication with one of the best centres of that country, the city of Moosejaw, only to find, after they had been there a few months that their hopes were not to be speedily realized.

I certainly appreciate the bringing of this question before the House. I am inclined to think, without wishing to be anything of a scold, that if we could devote more attention in the House to bringing these matters that are of direct interest to the people, before the country and before those interested, we would perhaps, accomplish more for the public than we do by some of the discussions we have. This is a question that directly affects a portion of the people of Canada, and what affects one part of the country affects us all. It is of the utmost importance, that just as rapidly as possible in all parts of the country the people should be brought into the quickest possible communication with the best market. That is the reason that parliament assists in the building of railways. It is not at all, to my mind, that they want to assist the companies, as some hon. gentlemen would think, but it is an effort on their part to encourage the companies or urge them on with greater speed to bring the people in closer communion with the outside world and thus make their living more comfortable and their occupations more profitable. It is on that ground that parliaments assist railways. When a railway is assisted by parliament, it must assume an obligation in return for that assistance and I have no hesitation in saying that it is the duty of these companies, as rapidly as they can, to extend the facility of railway communication to all the people they can. As I understand, the Canadian Pacific Railway have built a stretch of about fourteen miles, had let a contract for seventy miles more, and have constructed one hundred miles at the other end. The great disappointment has been caused by the fact that they cancelled the contract for the seventy miles.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole mileage is quite long.

Mr. KNOWLES. About five hundred miles in all.

Mr. GRAHAM. It would be quite an extensive road if constructed. I am not here to apologize for the railway, but I think it fair to say that the past year has been very discouraging to railway companies. The Railway Committee this session has been very lenient with companies asking extensions from the very fact that they find it difficult to finance their present undertakings; and I think I can say with some assurance that in undertaking to finance any line they have to give a pretty direct account of what they propose to do with the money they obtain, and so the lines that are going to be profitable the quickest are the ones to which they are trying to devote their efforts.

Mr. KNOWLES. Does not the minister think they will look rather to the lines where there is competition?

Mr. GRAHAM. That might be, but the men supplying the money may, to a certain extent, influence that too. The last year has been very discouraging to the railway companies in two ways. First it was very difficult to raise money, and second, the receipts from the railways during the past few months have fallen off very materially, and if my hon. friend will compare the receipts of the large railways during the past six months, with those of the corresponding six months of a year ago, he will see there has not been much recently to encourage them to extend their lines.

Another matter of which I think it is fair to speak is that a year ago or a little more, there was a great congestion of traffic in the Northwest. There was a cry, and a reasonable one too, all over the land that none of the railway companies provided a sufficient amount of rolling stock. The hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) took the position, and not unwisely, that the railways ought to be compelled to supply the present lines with complete railway stock before they were allowed to build another mile. That has been urged on the companies very strongly that they should increase their rolling stock, but recently that has not been pushed to any extent because there is not a railway on the continent but has many cars on sidings not being used at all. I am not saying this in apology for the railways, but am pointing out reasons that will be given by them. I think it wise to discuss these things before the House and give them the utmost publicity. I assure my hon. friends that I shall call the attention of the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway to this complaint and urge them, as far as practicable, to keep faith with the people of the Northwest wherever a charter has been given for the construction of a railway.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). While I did not hear the first part of the discussion and am not quite clear as to its purpose, it looks odd to me, that on Friday afternoon, when we generally expect to do a great deal of business, hon. members sitting behind the ministers should raise questions such as this and obstruct the Minister of Public Works in dealing with his estimates. It is apparently a concerted effort on the part of some of these gentlemen. The hon. member who first spoke (Mr. Knowles) a year or two ago opposed the renewal of the charter of this company.

Mr. KNOWLES. My hon. friend is all wrong, he is mistaken.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think I am very far mistaken, not over seventy miles. There was a strong movement by some members from the west to oppose the extension of the time for the construction of this road and now they come here and complain that it has not been constructed. Is it any wonder that the Canadian Pacific Railway would hesitate about going on, knowing the influence of those gentlemen with the government, and knowing that they might at any day cut their charter in two and hinder them from proceeding with the work. If I am making a statement that is not strictly correct, my information comes from a source which I think I can rely on, a gentleman equally interested with the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles). If he is serious in trying to get this road built, let him go to Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, to the Railway Commission or some one who has something to do with the building of the road and not come here. Governments do not build railways. It is true they are building the National Transcontinental, but they are not undertaking the construction of this road. I do not suppose they are granting an acre of land by way of subsidy or bonus or contributing a dollar towards it, and it is a matter of no moment to the government whether the road is built or not; that is to say they are not a party to it.

Mr. KNOWLES. I gave very distinctly my reasons for the special course I took and I think my hon. friend should at least be present to hear my statement before passing judgment on my conduct.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman should have given me an intimation before bringing it up. He cannot expect that we will be on hand at all times to discuss matters of this kind.

I think he should announce the day before at any rate and give hon. gentlemen notice that he is going to propose a great question, a question of prime importance to the west. I do not say but that it is a question of great importance to the west. I am not finding fault with the hon. gentleman in trying to get that road built because I think it is an important road. I understand it is constructed now from Moosejaw a certain distance, that it is constructed at the other end from Lacombe, and that there is a link in the middle which remains to be built. It is of great importance to the people in that country that the road should be built and I have no doubt that it will be built provided the hon. gentleman does not succeed in blocking a renewal of the charter. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman in his desire to have the road built, but I do protest against his wasting the time of the House in bringing a matter of this kind up when he knows perfectly well that the only thing that he could accomplish was to boom himself in West Assiniboia by making the people there believe that he is a great big man. I do not suppose that he had any other purpose. He knew perfectly well that it was no use. He could have gone to the Minister of Railways and Canals privately and asked him to assist him by urging upon the Canadian Pacific Railway to get that road built. He had the privilege of doing it because he is supporting the government and I will undertake to say that he would have got just as good a promise from the minister and one which would have carried just as much weight if he had gone to him privately instead of taking an hour or two of the valuable time of the Minister of Public Works and instead of blocking the Estimates and keeping us perhaps sitting here until twelve or one o'clock in the morning——

An hon. MEMBER. Until three o'clock.

Mr. HENDERSON. Or until three o'clock when we ought to be taking our rest. I hope the hon. Minister of Public Works, (Mr. Pugsley) when he does get into the Estimates, will not inflict a penalty on this House and keep us here until three o'clock in the morning, knowing as he does that his political friends have been the cause very largely of the waste of time that has been going on.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If we all hurry things along we may get through at two o'clock.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the hon. gentleman thinks he will get through at two o'clock I will tell him that, as far as I am concerned, I have an intense objection to sitting and talking Estimates after twelve o'clock. I do not think there is any need for it. I think we should get through with our business at twelve o'clock at any rate and if the minister gives direct answers to the questions which are submitted to him and does not ask us to vote money for unreasonable things I have no doubt he will get along sufficiently well to enable the government to adjourn the House at twelve and let us go home, take our rest and be able to come back in the beginning of the week refreshed. I think the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) expressed approval of what I am saying and I hope he will remind the Minister of Public Works that at any rate twelve o'clock is late enough to sit.

FIRE EXTINGUISHERS—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FOSTER. There is another obstructor coming.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will just take two minutes of the time of the House to make a personal explanation. At the beginning of the discussion of the motion which is now before the chair, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) quoted from the report of the Civil Service Commission, at page 79, the following letter :

I have to inform you that if you consider that chemical fire extinguishers are necessary on board the vessels of the Quebec agency you are to purchase them from P. E. Perreault, 312 St. John street, Quebec. Mr. P. has been advised to call upon you in connection with this matter.

The hon. gentleman stated that this letter had been signed by me. I was greatly surprised that he should make that statement.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) absolutely denied that. He said that he had never said that it was signed by the minister. He repeated that denial and, in the face of that, I do not think that the minister should repeat the statement.

Mr. BRODEUR. At first he said that I had signed this letter.

Mr. SPROULE. No, he stated that he had not.

Mr. BRODEUR. The record will show in regard to that.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, let the Minister of Public Works go on.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think it is only right that I should be permitted to give a personal explanation. There are so many things being said against me that I think the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) should be willing to give me two minutes to make this explanation.

Mr. FOSTER. No, I do not think you ought to.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understood the hon. member for Leeds to say that I had signed this letter. At all events I called his attention to that and I asked him where he had got his information that I had signed this letter. I sent over to the department for the file and I find that on the 20th July, 1906, Mr. Perrault applied to the department to sell some fire extinguishers, and on the 27th July, 1906, the letter which I have just quoted was written and was signed by the deputy minister.

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend read the letter ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. It is dated July 27, 1906.

Mr. FOSTER. No, Mr. Perreault's letter.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, it is dated the 20th July, 1906 :

Quebec, July 20, 1906.

Commander O. G. V. Spain, Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir,—The captain of the Canadian government steamer 'Minto' was speaking to me about putting some chemical fire extinguishers aboard his ship the same as I put aboard of all the ships at this agency. The 'Minto' has no chemical fire extinguishers whatever. You were present at a test I made on the King's wharf two years ago in competition with another make; mine proved itself far superior in every way. Inclosed please find cut giving information. The 'Minto' would require eight machines owing to the way she is divided up; ordinarily from four to six is all that is necessary. I would be pleased to receive an order for any other ships you would like to equip. Price, $14 each. Can place same on board on her return here. I am on the patronage list. Hoping to receive your esteemed orders, I remain,

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) P. E. PERREAULT,
312 St. John street,
Quebec.

I do not remember having had any knowledge of this letter before I read it the other day in the report of the Civil Service Commission, but I find on the file another letter dated the 27th October, 1906. That letter was sent to me by the party named to the effect that Mr. Perrault had on his hands a certain number of extinguishers and that he would like to sell these to the government.

Mr. FOSTER. Who sent that letter ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Lachance, M.P. Perhaps I had better give the letter :

Quebec, October 27, 1906.

Hon. L. P. Brodeur,
Minister of Marine, Ottawa.

Mr. Minister,—Mr. P. E. Perreault had on hand a certain number of fire extinguishers when he was appointed to the Department of Marine and Fisheries at Quebec. He was then engaged as an agent in this trade. He has a certain number remaining on hand.

Could you not authorize Mr. Gregory to purchase them for the service of the lighthouses as well as in the steamers. Their efficacy has been several times shown by various experiments made at Quebec and elsewhere.

Yours truly,
ARTHUR LACHANCE.

Then my answer follows which I will read in French and translate into English. It is dated November 6, 1906, and is as follows :—

My Dear Member,—I received your letter of the 27th of October last concerning the extinguishers that Mr. Perreault desires to sell to the department. I have had Mr. Gregory written to on the subject and when his reply reaches the department I will communicate my decision.

It appears that Mr. Perreault applied 'de novo' to the department, and he received this answer :

I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 6th instant with reference to fire extinguishers and have to advise you that none are required by the department.

That is the correspondence concerning that matter. I am exceedingly sorry that the member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has tried to make a case against me without reason. Had he been kind enough to notify me that he would bring up this question I would have had the files ready to answer the insinuations he has made. The hon. gentleman did not think it advisable to do so, but I am nevertheless glad to put before the House the facts in connection with it.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose the hon. gentleman would have no objection to lay the file on the table.

Mr. BRODEUR. No objection at all. But I may say that some years ago the department brought before the House an original document, namely, the lease to Mr. Markey, and it was handed to an opposition member of this House and it has never been returned to the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the hon. gentleman know it was handed to an opposition member ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, because it was read by him in the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Does he know that the opposition member did not return it ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There has been no trace of it in the department since.

Mr. FOSTER. It may have been lost there. There was such confusion in the department that it may have been lost.

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, not at all; if my hon. friend wants to see this file I have no objection.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister having quoted from it, I suppose there is no objection to laying it on the table of the House.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will of course put copies on the table.

Mr. BLAIN. That is not the point. The minister having sent to the department for the original file and having quoted it in the House, I suppose he will have no objection to lay it on the table.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have no objection to have all these documents copied and laid before the House.

Mr. BLAIN. That is not what I ask.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, if the hon. gentleman does not take my word for it, here is the file and let him consult it. I will send it over by a page, but I must thank him for the courtesy he has extended to me.

Mr. BLAIN. I expect to give fair-play to my hon. friends opposite and I would expect the same from them in return. I made no suggestion that the minister would not do as he stated. There was no such thought in my mind. I was pointing out that the minister having sent for the departmental file and having quoted from it, it was only fair that he should lay it on the table of the House.

An hon. MEMBER. Well, you have it now.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES.

House in committee on Bill (No. 151) respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company.—Mr. Crawford.

Mr. CRAWFORD moved that progress be reported.

Mr. LENNOX. This Bill has been several times before the committee and I do not propose to object, but I may say to my hon. friend that I wish to deal with the matter by way of amendment at some time, and as I have been here ready on several occasions I hope that the Minister of Railways and the promoter of the Bill will concur in letting it stand over if it should happen that I shall not be here when it is called again.

Mr. GRAHAM. We will keep it for you.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE, HALIFAX.

House in committee on Bill (No. 154) respecting the Board of the Presbyterian College, Halifax.—Mr. Sinclair.

On section 1,

Mr. HENDERSON. Is the promoter of this Bill present? I would like to have some explanation of it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not think there is anything in the Bill of a contentious nature, and unless my hon. friend from Halton has some special reason for desiring it to stand, I hope he will not press his objection.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will just say that this is a Bill which came before the Private Bills Committee. I had not an opportunity of being present, not being a member of that committee, and I know nothing about the Bill or the reason for it. I think we have been laying it down as a practice that a man is not expected to get his Bill through this committee unless he gives personal attention to it. I do not see why we should sit here promoting another man's legislation. If he does not see fit to come here and give reasons why the Bill should become law, I think we are perfectly justified in asking that it stand over. I would, therefore, enter my protest against further proceeding with this Bill. We have for some time laid it down as a distinct rule that a Bill should stand unless the promoter is present. I do ont see even the chairman of the Committee on Private Bills. We are legislating altogether in the dark, and I will ask the government to see that the rule, or at any rate the practice that we have adopted for some time back, is adhered to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not know that the hon. member for Guysborough, in whose name the Bill stands, is any more its promoter than any other hon. member of this House. This Bill came from the Senate in the regular order and was placed in the name of the hon. member for Guysborough, who is probably more familiar with the legislation than a good many others, but who is in no special sense the promoter of the Bill. I am quite sure that the Bill has received careful consideration at the hands of those to whom it was committed, and that there is nothing in it that should not receive the assent of the House.

Mr. FOWLER. I think it is immaterial whether the promoter of a Bill is present or not when it comes before the House, particularly when it is a Bill that comes from the Senate. The hon. member for Halton with the Bill before him is able to look at its provisions, and, with his keen, incisive mind, I am quite sure that he could understand it as well as the hon. gentleman in whose name it stands. I do not know of any rule that requires a member whose name is attached to a Bill to be present in the House when it is under consideration. If there is such a rule, it is more honoured in the breach than in the observance.

Mr. FISHER. There is no such rule, but there is no doubt that it is a satisfactory practice, unless there is somebody else who can give explanations which any member may desire to have. However, as the hon. member in whose name the Bill stands is now present, he will probably be able to give any explanations that are desired.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. member for Halton did not mention any point on which he desired information. If he had asked for information which no hon. member present could give him, there would be a reason for allowing the Bill to stand over.

Mr. HENDERSON. As the promoter of the Bill is now present, my objection of course falls to the ground, but I believe it is a good practice to insist that those in whose name any legislation stands should be present to answer for it. I admit that there is no rule, but I said that we had adopted a practice of that kind, and when the Minister of Finance was present I believe he endorsed it as a good practice. I think the promoter of the Bill might tell us in a few minutes what is the purpose of it.

Mr. SINCLAIR. This Bill was sent to me by the secretary of the Presbyterian Board at Halifax, and he informed me that all the clauses of it had been before the Synod of the Presbyterian church, and were quite acceptable to the parties in charge of the funds. This Bill is quite acceptable in every way to all parties concerned. I am not able to give the exact details but I understand that there are certain funds bequeathed to the different schemes of the church that are not supposed to be covered by the powers given the Presbyterian Board under former Acts. There are certain bequests which were made to the church in a general way, and it was held by some legal gentlemen that the board had not sufficient control over those bequests. I understand that the purpose is to make the Act so general that all bequests to the church can be dealt with by the board. I accepted the Bill on the recommendation of the secretary of the board, and I understand it was thoroughly threshed out by the members of the legal committee of the Synod of the Presbyterian church of the maritime provinces and is acceptable to them.

Mr. LENNOX. In what way does this differ from the clause we are appealing? We are appealing paragraph 'C' of section 3 of chapter 92 of the statutes of Canada, 1902. Is that a general or a special Act?

Mr. PRGSLEY. It was an Act to incorporate the board of the Presbyterian College of Halifax. The repealed section provided that the board should have power to receive, manage and administer property, real and personal, and titles and effects of every description then held or enjoyed by or under control of the board. The section was limited to what the board then had, and by this amendment the board has power to receive and administer property hereafter given to them as well. It applies not only to property they may now possess but which they may possess in the future.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BELLEVILLE-PRINCE EDWARD BRIDGE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 20) respecting the Belleville-Prince Edward Bridge Company.—Mr. Porter.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. member for Belleville (Mr. Porter), who is the promoter of the Bill, is not present, and he asked me to explain it in his absence. The Bill has been before the Private Bills Committee and has been amended in some particulars. It was perfectly satisfactory to that committee.

Mr. ALCORN. I have a copy of the Bill, as amended by the Private Bills Committee, and it is satisfactory.

On section 1—tolls.

Mr. GRAHAM. Why do you add that word 'driver' in connection with a vehicle?

Mr. ALCORN. Each person passing over the bridge is charged a separate fee and they might undertake to tax the driver.

Mr. GRAHAM. Suppose two people are in the rig.

Mr. ALCORN. There would be an extra fee for the extra person.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Are not the regulations of tolls on bridges in municipal rather than federal jurisdiction?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I think the worst specimen is in the municipality of the city of Montreal. The Victoria bridge has a list of tolls, sanctioned by parliament, which is the most exorbitant I know of. I was surprised, when parliament voted so much for that bridge, that the list of tolls was not greatly reduced. I hope that parliament will be more careful in sanctioning toll charges, especially when they are as exorbitant as they are on that jubilee bridge in Montreal. That bridge has a tariff of charges six or eight feet high printed in small letters. Every jackass that crosses is taxed to an exorbitant degree.

Mr. EMMERSON. You are not interested in that charge?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. My hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) is the patron of that class of quadruped. All I say is that these tolls ought to be carefully revised by parliament, and somebody ought to be responsible for them.

Mr. SPROULE. I am glad the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. F. Maclean) has reached that conclusion now. I know that when this Bill was amended I fought very hard against the tolls, but I had little support in this House. I remember distinctly, when this was passed, the contention was put up that it was very difficult to raise money to build a bridge, and that when it was built it would be very difficult to get means to keep it in repair, and these fees were agreed upon as reasonable at that time. I confess I looked with suspicion upon the proposal to increase that. In some instances they have been raised 100 per cent. Take, for instance, a bicycle and rider, ten cents. Ten cents for a bicycle and rider going across a bridge—that is exorbitant.

Mr. GALLIHER. It is only five cents.

Mr. SPROULE. They have increased it to ten cents. 'Bicycle and rider, 10 cents.'

Mr. GALLIHER. That is not as it was settled in committee. I was a member of the sub-committee on the revision of these tolls. The hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) was present, though I do not know whether he was a member of the committee. The representative of the township of Ameliasburg and also the representative of the board of trade and of the city council of Belleville were present, and the fees were practically agreed upon and a compromise made. I remember distinctly that the fee for bicycle and rider was fixed at five cents. Why it is given as ten cents in the Bill I do not know.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It was five cents and it is raised to ten cents in the Bill.

Mr. ALCORN. The tariff as submitted by the promoter of the Bill was: 'Bicycle 5 cents.' It was afterwards agreed to make it 'bicycle and rider 10 cents.'

Mr. GALLIHER. Notwithstanding that that is in the Bill, my distinct recollection is that it was settled otherwise in the committee. I remember mentioning that, in my opinion, a bicycle going over a bridge did not cause very much wear and tear on the bridge, and that if the bicycle was charged five cents and the bicycle was ridden there should be no extra fee for the rider. I do not think it should be ten cents, and I am positive that it was arranged otherwise in committee.

Mr. BARKER. The last clause provides that these tolls are to be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. These rates are maximum rates, and will not be reached if the Governor in Council does not approve.

Mr. LENNOX. In reference to the point raised by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), I think we may well ask what right we have to deal with such a Bill as this at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it was held that this was over navigable water.

Mr. EMMERSON. That does not make incorporation in this parliament necessary.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But this parliament did incorporate the company.

Mr. LENNOX. I quite recognize that this is an amendment to an Act we passed in 1899. But our attention was not at that time so particularly directed to the necessity of being careful about this matter as it is now. I do not know whether we can do anything in reference to that point now, but I would call the attention of the committee to the fact that, if this were a new matter, it is one that ought to be regarded as purely within the provincial jurisdiction, and, therefore, one that ought not to be dealt with in this parliament. I call attention to this because I wish to be consistent. Whenever I find an effort to incorporate here a company that ought to be incorporated by the provincial legislature, I endeavour to discourage it. This looks to me like a matter that would be within the jurisdiction of the local legislature.

Mr. EMMERSON. If this parliament acknowledges—and I think it should be acknowledged—that a mistake was made in incorporating the company in 1899, the most this parliament could do now is to have a provision that the provincial governent of Ontario should have the right to regulate the tolls. On that point this parliament should not invade the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature. I think that the company should have been incorporated by the provincial legislature. Then, as the bridge is over a navigable stream, the company could secure permission of the Department of Public Works for the construction of the bridge. That is the course pursued in all the provinces so far as my experience teaches me. But that course was not pursued in this case. It seems to me this parliament should not undertake to regulate the tolls, but should have a provision in the Bill referring that matter to the abitrament of the provincial legislature of Ontario, or providing for the approval of the Governor in Council of Ontario.

Mr. GRAHAM. This bridge has nothing to do with any international or interprovincial water. It is only to make a short way across from the county of Hastings to the county of Prince Edward in Ontario. This company was incorporated away back in 1899 and tolls were then established for the traffic over this bridge. The county of Prince Edward being one of the real beauty spots of the Dominion is attracting a large number of tourists who go into the county both by land and water. On that account and to that extent we, as well as the inhabitants of the district, have an interest in this matter. Of course, if my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) and the promoter of the Bill are perfectly satisfied, that must have great influence with the House, for they are the people most deeply interested. My only object is to get the Bill exactly as the committee want it. In the case of the bicycle there seems to be a little difference of opinion.

Mr. ALCORN. The Bill is now before this committee, I have no doubt, as it was passed by the subcommittee and the Committee on Private Bills. This matter of the toll on the bicycle was a matter of compromise.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is disputed.

Mr. ALCORN. I think that the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) is mistaken; I have no doubt in my own mind that he is. I remember his making the observation to which he refers, but the same item came up a number of times and was the subject of contention, and in conjunction with other items it was finally decided to leave it as it appears in the Bill.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I contend that no bicycle rider should be charged five cents for crossing this bridge. His bicycle weighs thirty pounds at the most. He crosses the bridge more rapidly by reason of that fact and wherever tolls are charged on roads they have not been imposed on a man because he happens to be on a bicycle. I think it would be a bad precedent to establish if parliament should double the toll on a man because he happens to be riding his bicycle. He goes faster, gets off the bridge in less time and so useful a mode of travel as the bicycle should not be discriminated against in this way.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not a man driving a light sulky, weighing about the same as a bicycle, have to pay as if he were in another vehicle? If you strike out the word 'bicycle' altogether, the bicycle would pay nothing because it is only the things mentioned here on which toll is paid.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. 'Or other vehicles' would cover that?

Mr. FOWLER. No.

Mr. GALLIHER. The more this is discussed the more positive I am that I am right. The very fact that we see the charge for each person passing over the bridge five cents and then lower down for each bicycle five cents, shows that for the two the charge is ten cents, and what would be the sense of saying 'bicycle with rider ten cents' because it would come to the same thing. I am positive that the arrangement in the special committee was that the bicycle, including its rider, was to pay only five cents, not ten cents. There is no doubt about that in my mind. I am sure the other members of the committee, if they were here would endorse my statement that we agreed to include the rider with the bicycle at five cents.

Mr. SPROULE. When the original Bill was passed the same question came up, does the charge for a vehicle include the driver?—and it was agreed it did. If you put the bicycle separate from the rider and then charge for each, you are changing the whole principle and raising the toll one hundred per cent.

Mr. GALLIHER. I say we do not, we leave it unchanged.

Mr. SPROULE. I say that if you agree to what we are told you agree, you do raise it. Who is the owner of the bridge now? It is claimed that this was a public convenience, that it was hard to get money to keep it up and that it was expedient there should be some toll but to make it as reasonable as possible so as not to prevent people from crossing the bridge or taking some other means of getting to their destination without crossing it. It was regarded as reasonable to charge the schedule brought down and agreed to, and I confess I do not see any ground for raising the charge. It may mean that some of those who desire to have it raised are the owners of the bridge. In the interest of the travelling public, I took the same ground with reference to the bridge at Montreal. I always think, in any of these bridges, you should make the lowest possible charge so that people may cross, may take produce and animals across with the least possible hinderance and not have the bridge holders make a big profit.

Mr. EMMERSON. The more one studies this tariff the more he will be convinced that this matter should be left to the approval of the Governor in Council of Ontario because for instance it will be seen that children under six years of age, accompanied by parent or guardian, are free, but by another clause a lady with a baby in a baby carriage would have to pay five cents additional.

Mr. FOWLER. That is struck out.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that every principle of sound legislation leads one to the conclusion that it should be left to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council of Ontario.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. They could change it at any time. If Belleville suddenly developed into a large city, there is no reason why the tolls should not be reduced. It should be flexible and the Dominion parliament has more important things to attend to than adjusting these toll rates from time to time.

Mr. EMMERSON. Conditions no doubt will change there. You are establishing a tariff of rates that will remain for all time unless that company chooses to come back to this parliament and have a reduced tariff substituted.

Mr. BARKER. No, look at the last clause.

Mr. FOWLER. It is to be approved by the Governor in Council.

Mr. EMMERSON. Of the Dominion. Why should the Governor in Council for this Dominion take charge of a matter that is purely provincial?

Mr. FOWLER. That is another argument.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is the argument I am making and my objection to this Bill is absolutely from that standpoint.

Mr. FOWLER. I interrupted the hon. gentleman because he said that would have to come to this parliament. It would be much more convenient to go to the Lieutenant Governor in Council than to the Governor in council.

Mr. EMMERSON. My observations have reference to the last clause. It seems to me to be self-evident that we were usurping the right of the province of Ontario with reference to the latter matter. It was done, no doubt, by mistake but having made the mistake I do not think that this parliament should ratify it. I think that this parliament should make an acknowledgment of the error and that a section stating that the tariff should be such a tariff as will be approved from time to time by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province should be inserted.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Make a motion to that effect and I will support it.

Mr. FOWLER. I will accept that.

Mr. LENNOX. As the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) says it is a matter which certainly comes within the provision of the British North America Act with respect to property and civil rights within the provinces and, therefore, if the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals would move an amendment of that kind in reference to the last clause, I think we ought to support it.

Mr. FOWLER. I quite agree with the position taken by the hon. member for Westmoreland that this is no doubt a provincial matter which has been made a federal matter by reason of the Act passed in 1899. I see no reason why the parties interested in the Bill should not accept an amendment of that kind providing that the tolls should be approved from time to time by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Mr. GRAHAM. The discussion has taken a somewhat wider range than might have been anticipated. The question of the rights of the provinces has been very well presented by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson). We ought to have the Bill reprinted with the amendments in them and allow it to stand until the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Porter), the promoter of the Bill, is here to take part in the discussion. I think it would hardly be fair to insert a clause in his Bill when he was absent.

Progress reported.

SASKATCHEWAN POWER COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 153) to incorporate the Saskatchewan Power Company.—Mr. McCraney.

On section 1,

Mr. PUGSLEY. I received a communication in regard to this Bill from the municipality of Saskatchewan. I would like to ask if the objection has been withdrawn before the committee ?

Mr. McCRANEY. As the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) explains, there were some objections made to the Bill in its original form by the corporation of Saskatoon. The objections have been withdrawn and I will read a letter that I have received from the clerk of the city in regard to the matter.

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, April 24, 1908.

Geo. E. McCraney, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,—Re Saskatchewan Power Company. I am in receipt of your letter, also your telegram April 15, and in reply would say that I have been instructed by the city council to write you thanking you for the interest which you have taken on the city's behalf in regard to the passing of the Saskatchewan Power Company's Bill.

The council are of the opinion that it would not necessitate the sending of a delegate to Ottawa on Wednesday the 29th instant, as clause 3 seems to be in keeping with the petition that we forwarded to you some time ago.

I am, yours truly,
(Sgd.) A. H. TRUESDALE,
City Clerk.

The objections which the municipal corporation made are met by clause 3 of this Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the promoter why he comes here to get this Bill crystallized into law instead of going to the legislature of Saskatchewan. From the slight information I have it seems to me that it is purely a local matter.

Mr. McCRANEY. I would be pleased to state to my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) the reason this company has come here for the incorporation for which it is asking. Under ordinary circumstances, in the province of Ontario, such a company would be incorporated and powers given to it by the local legislature, but hon. gentlemen will remember the question which arose in the discussion of the Saskatchewan Act and the fact that certain rights were reserved to the Dominion parliament in regard to the lands. I will quote section 21 of the Saskatchewan Act :

All Crown lands, mines and minerals and royalties incident thereto and the interest of the Crown in the waters within the province under the Northwest Irrigation Act, 1898, shall continue to be vested in the Crown and administered by the government of Canada for the purposes of Canada.

Then the Irrigation Act which is chapter 61 of the Revised Statutes of Canada provides as follows :

Section 6. The property in and the right to the use of all the water at any time in any river, stream, water course, lake, creek, ravine, canyon, lagoon, swamp, marsh or other body of water shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be vested in the Crown, unless and until and except only so far as some right therein, or to the use thereof, inconsistent with the right of the Crown, and which is not a public right or a right common to the public, is established.

Mr. LENNOX. That is the Irrigation Act?

Mr. McCRANEY. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. It says 'for the purposes of this Act'. That is for the purposes of irrigation, is it not?

Mr. McCRANEY. But, the reference to the Irrigation Act is continued in the Saskatchewan Act.

Mr. LENNOX. What I want to suggest to the hon. gentleman is this: The hon. gentleman reads from the Irrigation Act and it says that the things that are enumerated are, 'for the purposes of this Act' vested in the Dominion parliament. I would understand that to mean for the purposes of irrigation and matters incidental to it and not necessarily for the purposes of this Act which is an Act to incorporate a power company. Any thing that is referred to in the Acts which the hon. gentleman has quoted does not change the situation as far as I can see.

Mr. SPROULE. I have here a copy of a letter sent by the Saskatoon city council I do not know whether the hon. member (Mr. McCraney) has had a similar one and has dealt with it or not, but I notice that they oppose this Bill very strongly.

Mr. McCRANEY. I have had a copy of the letter probably to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) refers and the objections which are contained in that communication are, the council say, met by the provisions of clause 3 as amended in the Senate. I will send my hon. friend the letter which I have received from the city of Saskatoon.

Mr. SPROULE. In my letter from the council of Saskatoon the objection is practically to the whole Bill.

Mr. McCRANEY. The letter referred to by the hon. gentleman is with reference to the Draft Bill presented in the Senate and which was very considerably amended there so that we are considering it now.

Mr. SPROULE. The city of Saskatoon contends that there is a valuable water power there which they do not desire to get into the hands of a private corporation and which ought to be controlled by the city, and with regard to which they are making an application to the government. As I understand it this private company seeks by this Bill to get control of the water power and thus acquire the right to charge perhaps exorbitant prices for the supply of power and which would prevent the development of manufacturing industries. It is a very bad principle to pass these water powers into the hands of private corporations. In addition to that my contention is that unless this is a navigable stream the province and not the Dominion has control over it. It may be that the Irrigation Act which the hon. gentleman has referred to gives authority to this parliament to deal with the matter but otherwise the province should own and control these powers and derive what revenue it can from them.

Mr. LENNOX. It would be desirable that the hon. gentleman in charge of this Bill should continue his explanation of it.

Progress reported.

The hour for private Bills having expired the House resumed in Committee of Supply.

Public Works, Buildings—Ontario—Belleville armoury, $75,000.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). At the last sitting of the committee I gave a full explanation of this item. I do not know whether any other gentlemen would like to have an explanation from the Minister of Militia or not.

Guelph armoury, $20,000.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What is the expected cost of this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total probable cost of the armoury, with the heating, the electric wiring and fixtures, the fittings and furniture, including the site, is $114,537.30. We are now asking for $20,000, and will of course require a further amount later. In this cost is included the cost of a drill-hall which will be over the armoury. The building will be a very fine one.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. When will it be completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. During the present year.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will it be at the disposal of the live-stock fair that is held at Guelph?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know. I have had no application for the use of it.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to know the number of men the Belleville armoury is intended to accommodate. I would like also to know on what principle the size and cost of these armouries are determined; because they are becoming very costly. My desire was to have the Minister of Militia present, as he alone could give us that information.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The 15th regiment, composed of eight companies, is the principal military unit that will occupy that armoury. That is about 400 strong. In addition to that, one company of a rural battalion, the 49th regiment, consisting of between forty and fifty men, will have its headquarters in this armoury. In arranging for an armoury the Militia Department makes an estimate of what accommodation is required for the existing militia strength, and for some additional accommodation to provide for the natural growth of the place. I should say that Belleville has had for many years an armoury which was found to be insufficient, and it was torn down; so that this new armoury is really taking its place. This and other city regiments do not go into camp annually, but do their drill at headquarters in the evenings. In most of the cities it is impossible to obtain the consent of the employers of labour to give the men of these corps the time to attend to their drill in the day time; the consequence is that they do their annual drill, and give a great deal more of their time than the equivalent of twelve days, in the evenings; and these armouries are the homes of these regiments during the long winter and spring months. I think they are an absolute necessity, and have been the means of doing a great deal of good to the militia. In fact, we could not get on without them.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a rural battalion in that county in addition to the city one?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, the 49th regiment. It has eight companies, one of which is situated at Belleville and will use a part of the armoury for storage of arms.

Mr. SPROULE. How many companies are there outside?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Seven.

Mr. SPROULE. Where are they accommodated?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is a grant of money to each company of every rural battalion. The captain of the company receives this grant for the care of arms, and he keeps them in a building of his own or where he likes. That is not done in the cities to anything like the same extent, but there the money goes to pay a caretaker by the year for looking after the armoury and the stores.

Mr. SPROULE. What is to be the total cost of this building when completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $139,776.31.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the size of it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hall will be 175 feet by 80 with a range of armouries along the north side. The walls of brick on stone foundation. The centre portion three stories high.

Mr. CROCKET. I see that the specifications were prepared by the Architect Engineering Company at a cost of $1,755. Why were not the plans prepared by the architects of the Public Works Department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. At that time the staff was exceeding busy with other work.

Mr. ALCORN. What is the cost of the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $9,000.

Mr. ALCORN. Why was the old armoury replaced? It was a very commodious and convenient building, and I would have thought it would answer every purpose of the militia of Belleville and the vicinity for many years. Why was the site purchased so near the business centre? It is on a street next the main street, and land could have been obtained further away at very much less price. The old building was one street further away from the main street.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The site is not under my control but as to why a new building is required I remember distinctly that strong protests were made that the old building was not sufficient, and strong pressure brought to bear to get a new one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would call attention to the fact that the lot is a corner lot, 260 feet 6 inches on one street and 150 feet 6 inches on the other, and is quite close to the best business portion of the city.

Mr. ALCORN. From whom was it bought?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From Mrs. Yonker and Mr. Richard Harnett.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What is the annual cost of keeping up an armoury such as you are building?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The caretaker gets from $1 to $1.50 per day. Then there is the expense of fuel, which I do not think is very great because the whole building is not heated all the time. I should think the cost of keeping up the building, including heat, light and caretaker, would be from $1,200 to $1,500 per year.

Guelph armoury, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This building is to be built of brick with stone dressing on stone foundation. The portion fronting on Hassells street is 146 feet by 36, exclusive of projections. It is three stories high with a basement. In the rear there is to be an extension 80 feet wide and 190 feet deep, which will have two stories. The site cost $5,000, and the total cost will be $148,527.20, including the armoury and drill shed.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the strength of the force which will be provided for?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This armoury will accommodate two field batteries of artillery, the 11th and 16th, also one company of the 30th Regiment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where is the headquarters of the 30th ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is a Wellington county regiment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Guelph would be the headquarters ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It may be, but there is only one company resident there. The regimental headquarters will be there. Then there is a company of the Army Service Corps numbering 110, so that the number of men will be about 400, and these two batteries are among the most important in the country. There are six field guns in each battery. There will be accommodation there for these guns and harness and all the material connected with them. The same remark will apply to the Army Service Corps. There are wagons and a great deal of stores connected with a corps of that kind. Also, No. 1 company of the 30th Regiment keeps its stores and equipment in this armoury.

Mr. CROCKET. Were plans for this armoury prepared in the Public Works Department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and tenders were called for as usual, and the lowest tender accepted.

Mr. CROCKET. Are plans for these armouries usually prepared in the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. The hon. gentleman gave us to understand that the reason this was not done in the case of Belleville armoury was that the architects in the department were very busy. I think he said twelve architects were employed in the department. That would seem to me a very good staff.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a great deal of work and it is more pressing at some times than at others.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the hon. gentleman think that twelve architects are insufficient for carrying on the business of the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If I were to express an opinion, I would say they are not sufficient.

Mr. CROCKET. Twelve architects not sufficient to prepare the plans for the public buildings put up throughout Canada ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They do more than prepare plans—there is the preparation of the specifications, the making of progress estimates and looking after a large number of buildings.

Mr. SPROULE. When was the building commenced ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract was on June 1, 1906.

Mr. SPROULE. Then it has been going on ever since ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BARR. How long before it will be completed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We expect to finish it this year.

Mr. HENDERSON. Who are the contractors ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nagel & Mills, of Ingersoll.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there a clerk of works on it all this time ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is in charge of a supervising architect, who is paid a commission of two per cent.

Mr. ALCORN. How were these troops previously accommodated ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The batteries were accommodated in a building hired for the purpose. The company of the 30th Regiment, I suppose, had no special accommodation. I have explained that, in such cases, there is an allowance to the captain to provide accommodation such as he can. The Army Service Corps I think also was accommodated in a rented building, although it has not been very long organized and I could not be absolutely certain as to that.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the Minister of Militia himself decide, in cases of this kind, where new buildings should be erected?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As a rule, the military head of the district brings the matter to my attention, and I submit it to the proper officers of my department for a report. If that report is to the effect that the accommodation is needed, I asked for a statement as to exactly what is needed. When that information is procured, I forward the information to the Department of Public Works. Plans are prepared there, and, after they are prepared, they are returned to me. I go over them again with the assistance of the officers of the department, and, if they are satisfactory, they are sent back to the Department of Public Works initialled by myself.

Mr. ALCORN. The items we have had this evening are very large amounts. The minister has stated the routine by which it is decided whether new buildings are necessary and desirable. Will he state the reasons which led to the decision that this was necessary ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have not the correspondence before me.

Mr. ALCORN. Cannot the committee be informed what representations were made and by whom ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have a memo. here showing that this was strongly urged by the Department of Militia as early as January 15, 1903. The General Officer Commanding reported that it was absolutely necessary that the two field batteries, the city companies and the bands should be properly housed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think that was in Dundonald's time.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the estimated cost of this structure, completed in every respect ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The estimate is $148,537.

Mr. CROCKET. The contract was something over $80,000. How is the rest made up ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The amount paid for the site was $5,000—it was bought from the city council of Guelph, and formed part of the property known as the fair grounds. It is a corner lot. The survey of the site, printing, advertising, travelling expenses——

Mr. CROCKET. What is the amount of printing and advertising ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have it in a lump sum with other items which make a total of $3,139.21. Payment to the contractor up to 10th December, 1907, was $53,130, making the total expenditure to 10th December, $61,259.30. The amount due on the contract is $26,870, which makes the amount of the contract $80,000. Then, the amount due on the drill hall over the gun shed is $34,925.

Mr. CROCKET. Was there a contract for that ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. The same contractor ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. The amount for heating and boilers is $5,000, electric wiring and fixtures, $2,500, fittings and furniture $7,000, sidewalks $3,000 ; contingencies and superintendence $7,983—making a total of $148,537.30.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the government reconveyed a portion of this land to the city of Guelph or to the Guelph Fat Stock show people ? I understand a deputation came down for the purpose of asking a reconveyance. They wanted to purchase a portion of this land which was not required.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That has not been done, it is a large lot 178 by 467 feet.

Mr. ALCORN.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the size of the building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 146 feet on Huskisson street with a depth of 36 feet exclusive of projections and an extension of 88 feet in breadth by 190 feet deep. The building is of brick and stone with a stone foundation.

Mr. ALCORN. The former site of the Belleville building was on the next street. What became of the old site? Has it been sold by the government or what disposition has been made of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know, I shall make inquiry.

Mr. ALCORN. It is a very valuable site and I think abuts on the present site. I would like to know whether it has been retained and will be used with the new site for the new building or whether it has been disposed of.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When we are in supply on Monday or Tuesday, I shall give the information.

Mr. FOWLER. What accommodation was there formerly ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think two buildings were hired for the two batteries, but I am not sure. The batteries as my hon. friend knows require good accommodation and it is difficult to get such buildings. They were rented prior to the time of constructing this building.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me there is a very large expenditure in connection with these military buildings. I made a rough calculation and find that out of the 46 items for Ontario public buildings, 18 are for military buildings and out of the $727,000 for Ontario about $390,000 is for these buildings. But that is not all, these are only preliminary steps in connection with most of these buildings. Take this Guelph armoury, you are asking a vote of $20,000, but the total cost will be $148,000, over seven times the amount you are asking to-day. On the same basis the total for the province would amount to $2,500,000. That would be hardly fair, but it will cost $1,500,000 at least to complete the buildings asked for this purpose. I question whether such an expenditure can be justified under the circumstances, when so much money is required for purpose of greater importance than these drill halls and armouries. If Canada was amply supplied with transportation facilities and other facilities required for the business of the country it would perhaps then be quite proper to expend large amounts of money in erecting buildings for the accommodation of the troops. We seem to have got along very well in past times without all this tremendous expenditure, but it looks as though the Militia Department wants to level up its buildings in accordance with its staff. It is like the man who put a cupola on his house, then had to furnish accordingly and wound up by putting on a big mortgage. It looks as though the Militia Department, having established a very large and particularly extensive staff, would wish now to have al the buildings throughout the country in connection with the militia in proper proportion to the staff they have created. I must for my part, protest against such a large expenditure. I do not think it is required or necessary in any sense. I do not think you will be able to enlist men any more easily by reason of these expensive buildings than you would have been without them. Here is a building costing $150,000 to accommodate two batteries, and one company of infantry.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And an army service corps.

Mr. FOWLER. And you are spending $150,000 in buildings for them. It is not only the initial expenditure in connection with these, but the annual expenditure for repairs, caretakers, etc., which will be tremendous. I do not know what great influence the Minister of Militia must have in order to get these large votes passed through council. I wish to offer my protest against this tremendous expenditure, because I think it is entirely uncalled for and I do not believe it will increase in the slightest degree the efficiency of the militia of the country.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The whole question, of course, of the extent to which the government or parliament is justified in carrying the expenditure upon these buildings or upon the militia generally, is very important and interesting, but we can hardly take it up conveniently at this hour. I do not see much relevancy between the expenditure on the general staff and the expenditure upon these public buildings. I shall be prepared at the proper time to discuss the expenditure upon the staff and upon all branches of the militia and I am always anxious to hear fair criticism on these points.

I must differ from my hon. friend as to these expenditures in a general way. I am not prepared to say that the expenditure in some cases is not larger than is justified. I am rather inclined to agree that there have been cases in the past and in recent years and no doubt there will be cases in the future, where the same good results would be obtained with a smaller expenditure, but I believe in the principle of supplying the men who give their time and their money for the purpose of being prepared for the defence of the country with fair and reasonable accommodation, particularly in the large cities. Owing to the fact that employers of labour in those large centres absolutely refuse, in many cases, to allow their employees to attend their annual drill or to give their time during the day towards perfecting themselves in drill, it is absolutely necessary to provide suitable buildings for these men to drill in comfort in the evenings. Some of the most efficient regiments in Canada are to be found in the cities. I do not care to mention any particular regiment, but, take the regiments of Toronto and of Hamilton ; take the 13th regiment of Hamilton and the other regiment there—they are among the most creditable regiments in this country. No finer regiments are to be found anywhere. They could not have reached that pitch of perfection without reasonable accommodation and I do think that this country can well afford to give proper accommodation and that the country, when it understands the position of affairs, will be glad to give all reasonable accommodation to encourage these men to make themselves proficient in drill.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the cost of the Hamilton drill hall?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We are coming to that.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister has confirmed my argument, I think, because he has particularly mentioned the efficiency of the Hamilton regiment and they have arrived at that state of efficiency in a building very much inferior to the one which you propose to spend this money on. Do I understand that there is a vote for the Hamilton drill hall?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Hamilton has doubled and trebled its strength.

Mr. FOWLER. The expenditure of an additional $100,000 will not result in that regiment attaining a higher state of efficiency because the minister states that with inferior quarters they have reached a very high state of efficiency. Surely the efficiency of a regiment does not depend upon having a $150,000 or $200,000 building to drill in. Surely a building erected at a reasonable cost ought to do just as well. I quite understand that in cities it is necessary to have drill halls just for the reason that the minister has pointed out, that it is difficult for the employers of labour to allow their men to go out for the length of time necessary to attend annual drill, not that these employers of labour are not as much actuated by the patriotic spirit as other people, but because it is a serious detriment to their business and therefore it is necessary for the men to drill at night. At the same time I think we have gone mad on the cost and style of these buildings. A very much cheaper building would answer the purpose just as well and the government could save the country a large sum and employ it in purposes which would be more beneficial than in these expensive buildings.

Mr. ALCORN. I presume that the size of these buildings is to be accounted for by the fact that the space inclosed is used for the drill purposes?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. ALCORN. Does not the minister think that accuracy in ride practice is of more consequence than perfection in mere drill, and that the enormous sum, in the aggregate, expended on the large number of buildings which this government is now erecting would be better expended in the encouragement of rifle practice by some concrete scheme which would apply to the whole country. The constitutional objection which might be raised upon the ground that the subject of education is one coming within the purview of provincial authorities, could be overcome.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Rifle practice is carried on in all these buildings.

Mr. ALCORN. Not rifle practice with ordinary weapons?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, with a minature cartridge.

Mr. FOWLER. The sub-target gun?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, the sub-target gun is used in every armoury.

Mr. ALCORN. Would it not be possible to evolve some principle for teaching all young boys of a certain age to become experts in the handling of the rifle, and would it not be more useful than the effort to achieve perfection in the more costly and showy elements of drill?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not know.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence if he has had any demand or request from the citizens of Valleyfield to erect an armoury in that district. There are two companies there and I think they could form a good many more, in fact, a whole battalion if it were necessary. This place is very near the frontier and I would like to know if any demand has been made, how the minister would receive such a demand and what he would think about it?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There have been two deputations to wait upon me in connection with the matter. There has been some difficulty in connection with the old battalion at that point, part of which was recruited, I think, from Valleyfield, and which has been temporarily disbanded. The people of Valleyfield are very anxious to organize a city battalion, to begin with four companies, and, of course, in that connection they would expect an armoury to be constructed at that point. No decision has been reached. The matter is still under consideration.

Mr. BERGERON. There are already two companies. I think there were four before, and there may be four yet.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think there were eight companies altogether, but they were scattered all over that part of the country.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes. Referring to what my hon. friend said a moment ago, consideration must be given to the question of taking care of the arms, because the government would have to pay some person to take care of the arms and some place must be had for that purpose. It is a city of about 12,000 or 15,000 people and being near the frontier would it not be, in the opinion of the minister, a suitable place in which to establish an armoury? It could be done at a relatively small cost and it would be a very useful thing.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If my hon. friend will convince the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) as to the soundness of such a policy, personally, I should be very glad indeed to co-operate in having a suitable armoury constructed at such an important centre as Valleyfield.

Mr. BERGERON. I would rather try to convince my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence than my hon. friend from Kings and Albert, because I understand that my hon. friend has not consulted the hon. member for Kings and Albert as to the building of armouries. I would rather address myself straight to the minister.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) asked for an armoury at Valleyfield because that town is close to the frontier, but I would remind him that an armoury is not a fort. In Sussex, New Brunswick, where I live, we have an armoury there the contract price for which was $4,700 and that armoury suffices for storing the equipment of all the troops in the province.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Stores are kept in St. John and also in Fredericton.

Mr. FOWLER. The reserve stores are kept in St. John but the stores used by the militia of the province in camp are kept in this armoury the contract price for which was $4,700.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was the mere building without fittings.

Mr. FOWLER. You spent $2,000 on a clerk of works because the department engaged him and forgot to discharge him for two or three years. Then you had to add the heating, and the windows being left open the pipes froze and you had to heat the building again, all of which mismanagement increased the price to about $10,000. But the contract price of the Sussex armouries which serves the men in camp for the whole province would not build a porch for this armoury in the town of Guelph.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) wants to show his impartiality by criticising me as well as the government. I quite understand the difference between an armoury and a fortification, but knowing that it is the duty of the Minister of Militia to provide accommodation for the troops which most need it I brought before him the claims of Valleyfield.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the population of Valleyfield ?

Mr. BERGERON. Between 12,000 and 15,000. The volunteers in Valleyfield belong to the battalions which distinguished themselves on the frontier during the Fenian Raid in 1866 and 1870 and also at the battle of Chateauguay in 1812 which saved Canada for the British Crown. The men in those battalions to-day are descendants of the men who fought in 1812 and in 1866. These historic battalions have always been ready to march to the call of duty and they deserve special consideration from the government of Canada. Anyway, on the basis of the policy laid down by the Militia Department an armoury should be built in that city. The Minister of Militia has admitted that a petition has been received for the erection of an armoury at Valleyfield and I rose to endorse the prayer of that petition. I can tell the gallant member for Kings-Albert (Mr. Fowler) that there are no more historic battalions to be found in all Canada than are to be found in my constituency, and when he rises again to criticise the government I trust he will not turn his criticism on the member for Beauharnois who knows perfectly well the difference between an armoury and a fortification.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman first wanted an armoury at Valleyfield because it was near the frontier which would indicate that it was a fortification he was thinking of. Now he gives as a reason that these battalions are filled with veterans of the Fenian raid which took place 42 years ago.

Mr. BERGERON. They are the descendants of these men.

Mr. FOWLER. I understood my hon. friend to say that they were the descendants of the men who fought at Chateauguay. Now, if these men were 20 years of age 42 years ago at the time of the Fenian Raid they would be 62 years old now and it is a hospital they wanted instead of an armoury.

Mr. BERGERON. There are none so deaf as those who do not wish to hear. What I said was that these battalions fought at Chateauguay and during the Fenian Raid and I know that in England different regiments are proud of their history and of their brave deeds in years gone by.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not rising to ask the Minister of Public Works to erect a drill hall in any part of the county I have the honour to represent notwithstanding that we have in that county a battalion eight companies strong and numbering possibly 400 men. In that regiment, the Lorne Rifles, the 20th battalion, 400 men have to be provided for ; and if you took all the drill halls in the county, and put them up at auction or sold them at private sale, you would not realize more than $10,000 for them ; whereas in the adjoining county of Wellington, where 400 men are to be provided for, the Minister of Public Works at the request of the Minister of Militia is going to spend $148,000. Does the Minister of Militia not see that this is discriminating against the rural battalions? If he is going to maintain the force at full strength and give encouragement to the young men to connect themselves with the militia of the country, he should see that there is a more equal division of the expenditure. I am not going to complain of the amount that is being expended in Guelph, nor am I going to ask at the present time that any money be expended in my county, because the expenditure of this country has grown so enormously that practically we are not at liberty to ask that it be increased to any extent. We are getting on very well ; I see no signs of war in the near future ; our battalion is held together very well ; they go out to drill in good force and I dare say that if they were called out for any other purpose they would be equally at the command of the minister. But the minister is a little more particular about building up the city corps than the rural corps, and I am going to give him a concrete case. Some time ago a troop of cavalry called the Massassaga Horse was formed with headquarters in the city of Toronto. The minister permitted one squadron of that troop to be raised in the county of Halton, right at the corner of the county which was the headquarters of No. 1 company of the 20th battalion. What was the effect ? The captain of that company found that his men were being decoyed away, because they were more willing to join a cavalry troop. It was a little more pleasant, and when they went out to drill, each man received pay for his horse as well as himself, so that there was a little more money in it; and the captain of No. 1 company at Oakville found it a difficult matter to keep his men. I think an invasion of that kind should not have been allowed, as it may have the effect of injuring or wiping out that company. The minister may tell me that he had nothing to do with it, that somebody in Toronto controlled it. It is strange to me if the minister cannot dictate where a squadron shall have its headquarters, and prevent recruiting for one branch of the service where it will interfere with that of another. I shall be glad if the minister can tell me that he has taken steps to prevent that sort of thing in the future.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend is quite correct in supposing that I am not directly responsible. I am responsible, of course, for the administration of the Militia Department, but this particular case I never heard of before. The officer commanding western Ontario, General Otter, one of the ablest officers in Canada, had that matter under his control, and what he did he no doubt did with the best intentions, however it may have worked out. I would suggest to my hon. friend that very likely the individuals who are objecting are not the young men themselves who have had the privilege of joining this cavalry regiment, but the infantry officers who find it more difficult to get recruits.

Mr. HENDERSON. I grant that is the case.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am disposed to think that I shall favour the majority, and if the young men, who own their own horses and are ambitious to belong to a cavalry squadron, want to do so, and the officer commanding thought it was wise to meet their wishes, while I am sorry that the captain of the infantry company should be put to any inconvenience, the lesser must suffer for that which is of greater importance. I know that that difficulty does happen in my own county. I represent a purely rural constituency where we have an infantry regiment and I think two or three squadrons of cavalry, and the officers of the infantry regiment tell me that it is absolutely impossible for them to keep their regiment up to its strength because of the extension of the cavalry regiment. It is a question which is the better of the two. In my own county the farmers' sons are well to do and own their own horses, and there is no better place in the world in which to recruit cavalry regiments than in localities of that kind. My hon. friend from Kings (Mr. Fowler) knows that the same conditions exist in his county. Wherever there are districts in which the young men are ambitious to form cavalry regiments and where cavalry regiments are needed, I should be disposed to give every facility to their organization—I do not think it is necessary to put the rural militia in opposition, so to speak, to the city militia. I think it is quite possible to do full justice to both, and I do not think that because a city regiment, or two or three regiments, secure handsome drill halls or armouries, it necessarily follows that we should neglect the rural regiments. In my county there is a regiment of infantry with eight companies and a regiment of cavalry with, I think, three squadrons, and yet I can tell my hon. friend that during the whole time I have been Minister of Militia, not more than $1,200 has been spent in my county. In fact there is only one armoury there where all the arms are kept. It is an old armoury which was built fifty years ago, and two or three years ago I spent $1,200 on it to put it into proper shape. My hon. friend will see that I at any rate have not abused my position by spending large sums on my own regiment. This question has been discussed on many previous occasions and I would like to say this. I believe that we should gradually, but as rapidly as possible, supply armouries for all the different companies throughout the country. This can be done at a very reasonable cost. An armoury for one company, which would be a building with a good lecture room and accommodation to hold the stores, could be constructed for some $2,500, perhaps less. A larger building where there are two or three companies together, at a place where the commanding officer of the regiment lives, could be constructed for perhaps $4,000 or $5,000. During the last three or four years $50,000 to $75,000 has been voted each year. I regret that some of the armouries will cost more than we expected, but we have constructed a number in British Columbia and the Northwest, a few in Ontario, one or two in the province of Quebec and two or three in Nova Scotia. My intention is to continue constructing such armouries and to give them in order of merit to the different rural battalions throughout the country.

Hamilton drill hall—addition, $100,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There has been a drill hall in Hamilton for sime time which will continue to be occupied. The new building will be a very fine one. It will be built on a site with 100 feet frontage and 300 feet deep. The main drill hall will be 128 feet by 220. There was paid for the site $29,000, and this $100,000 is required to complete the building. The tota cost is estimated at $315,089.76, inclusive of the site. It will accommodate the 13th Regiment consisting of 600 men, the 91st Highlanders with 500 men, the 4th Field Battery with 115 men, the Army Service Corps, 106 men. The 7th company, 36 men, will occupy the old drill hall.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this under contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the size of the present building and how much did it cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The old building measures 250 feet long by 116 wide.

Mr. FOWLER. Of what material is it built ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Brick with stone dressings.

Mr. FOWLER. What about the new building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is to have a frontage of 367 feet by 300 feet in depth. Its main hall is to be 128 feet wide by 336 long.

Mr. FOWLER. Was the new building found too small ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, the strength of the militia in Hamilton has been doubled within the last four or five years, and they could not drill properly in the old hall.

Mr. FOWLER. The 13th Regiment has its headquarters there. And what are the others ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The 90th Regiment, the 44th Field Battery, with a strength of one hundred odd, and the 19th Army Service corps, with 110 and No. 12 Field Ambulance, and the band.

Mr. FOWLER. About one thousand men altogether.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. More, for these regiments are about 500 men each.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, say 1,200 men. None of these regiments or corps have been created within the last five years ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have not the record before me, but I think it was within the last five years there has been an increase in the numerical strength of both regiments, and I think the Field ambulance company has been started within that time.

Mr. FOWLER. As a matter of fact, these different corps do not have to drill on the same night ? The matter could be arranged so that one would use the drill hall one night and another the next night, and so on. In that case, there would be room enough in the old building. You are going to spend $315,000 additional for this building. The original building, I suppose, cost $200,000—that is, you will have spent over half a million to accommodate 1,200 men. It seems to me this is altogether unjustifiable. The minister should have resisted the pressure put upon him by the members from Hamilton or—if they were not together in this matter—from the member for Hamilton. The only real necessity for this great expenditure was the re-election of the ministerial member for Hamilton (Mr. Zimmerman). However useful a man that hon. gentleman may be—and I say nothing about that,—this is a very large price to pay for the pleasure of having him here. I protest most strongly against this expenditure as absolutely uncalled for—a waste of public money.

Mr. SPROULE. I am glad to hear a military man say that, for I have entertained much the same opinions for a length of time, but have usually concluded that my judgment would not carry much weight, as I take so little interest in military affairs. I have often wondered whether some of the money that we spend in these palatial buildings for military purposes could not be spent to much better purpose in some other line. I do not pretend to be competent to judge as to the efficiency of a militia force. But many years ago the force seemed to me much more active in our country than it is to-day—I mean in the case of the rural battalions. They have dwindled until now you can hardly get a company together. The last few days before they go to camp the officers are doing their best to get recruits, while a few years ago there was no trouble to keep the companies up to their full strength. There was comparatively little trouble to keep them for the full length of time, and now they go in for a year and then drop out—no one seems to have any interest in it. But while this retrograde process is going on, we seem to be enormously increasing the expenditure. I dislike to seem captious in regard to these expenditures, for I believe every country should make reasonable provision for its own defence, and to keep its citizens in military training. But it seems to me that we are not spending our money in the best way. Nor can I say that I am prepared to give suggestions as to how to spend it better, not being sufficiently informed in military affairs to outline a system. An hon. member made the remark the other night that we had one officer for every two and a half men on the average. That being the case, the force is evidently topheavy. It seems to me that not sufficient encouragement is given to the rural battalions. But our experience is the same as that of other countries, that, when it is necessary to put a force in the field for the defence of the country, the rural battalions are superior to those of the city. They have a better physique and are of a higher type of self-reliant manhood, making them a most valuable force in trying circumstances. Yet, these rural corps do not seem to be given due encouragement, but all the eclat of military life is afforded the towns and cities.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am glad the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has spoken as he has. I entirely agree that the rural battalions do not receive the consideration to which they are entitled. I repeat what I said before, that I am not going to advocate larger expenditures, but I do desire to emphasize the idea that there should be some equitable distribution of this money, less for the cities and more for the country. I believe that the bone and sinew of the militia of this country is in the rural districts. One of the best regiments that served in putting down the Northwest rebellion was the York Rangers made up practically altogether of farmers' sons, men capable of enduring greater hardship than those drawn from mercantile shops, banks and other business houses. In time of trouble I believe it would be found that the most reliable forces were the rural battalions. I am an advocate of reduced expenditure but I do contend there should be a more equitable distribution and that the rural battalions should receive something more than they have received, even if it is to be taken away from the city battalions.

Mr. FOWLER. I regret that it seems to be my fate to disagree with my colleagues as to military matters. I do not believe that the rural corps require any further consideration than they receive. I think the rural battalions are very well taken care of so far as expenditure is concerned and I do not think they require any more. I contend that altogether too much money is being spent on the city corps and that too much money is being expended on armouries and everything of that sort. One would think to listen to the hon. member (Mr. Henderson) that it was necessary to take a lump sum and spend it on the militia. I say that the expenditure on the militia is many times greater than it should be in this country. Years ago when less money was spent we had quite as efficient a militia force as we have to-day. If there is any trouble about enlisting men in the rural battalions it is due to the manner in which they are officered at the present time. In the olden time the officers were taken from the rural community itself and farmers sons were in command and the officers and the men were of the same social grade and they worked in harmony. But to-day the conditions are different and the reason is on account of the prohibitive expense of the outfit necessary for an officer. There is too much gold lace, too many frills, too many feathers ; the officers are drawn from the cities and there is no fellowship between them and the men. If the regiments to-day are not composed of the same class of men as formerly—and that is truer of the infantry than of the cavalry—it is due to the reason I have stated. I have before expressed these views in the House and the minister has agreed with me but nothing has been done. My contention is that we should have a system like the Boer system, an inexpensive system where the men would be taught fewer of the frills and more of how to shoot. There should be more money spent on teaching the men rifle practice than on teaching them how to march past with grace. You don't have much of that sort of things to do when you get into active service. At all events no war would come so rapidly, that after you have your enrolment you cannot give your men sufficient drill to fit them for active service. If you simplify the uniform of the officers so as to make it possible for men of small means to become officers you will have the officers drawn from the same community as the men and you will have a better class of men going into the ranks.

Hamilton post office—addition to buildings, $7,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the complete alterations to the rear of the Hamilton post office. The total estimated cost is $20,-053.37.

Mr. HENDERSON. This is another instance in which the money of this country is not equitably distributed. In the county of Halton which I represent there has not been one dollar expended in the way of furnishing post offices and yet in the adjoining counties, because they contain towns and cities of considerable dimensions, very large sums of money have been expended. In the city of Guelph something over $40,000 was spent in the improvement of the post office although it is a puzzle to the people of Guelph when they look at the building to know how they managed to put away all that money. The government, in these appropriations, should take the rural districts into consideration as well as the cities and larger towns. I am contending for a more equitable distributing of public money and even if a county has no towns and villages exceeding 1,500 or 2,000 population they should not be ignored whilst large expenditures go to the cities.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You and I agree exactly.

Mr. HENDERSON. Some years ago after making a very careful calculation in my own county I estimated that if $30,000 was set apart it would at that time have erected a building in each of five incorporated towns and villages at a cost of $6,000 in each place, and would have provided a good post office containing a residence for the postmaster. I do not say you could erect buildings now at the same cost, but I know that when I made my suggestion it was endorsed by Sir Louis Davis then a minister, who said the thing could be done for even less money. My plan was not accepted. It seemed that the government could not erect a building of such small dimensions as would call for an expenditure of $6,000. I made a calculation to show that there would be a saving to the government that the interest on the whole $30,000, provided the government borrowed the money at 3 per cent would be less than the rentals that were paid by the government for the various post offices. Then an advantage would be that in every case the post office in these five towns and villages would be in a brick building where a vault could be put in for the protection of the valuable letters passing through the mail, and exit as well as an entrance could be provided which would prevent the very congested condition that we find in a great many of our village post offices in the morning and evening just after the arrival of the mails. I am going to show you how we get post offices in Halton. I picked up a local newspaper and I found an item under the following heading :

New post office for Burlington.

Burlington is in the county of Halton. It is about seven miles from the city of Hamilton. It may be a surprise to the Postmaster General or the Minister of Public Works, to find that the village of Burlington is to have a new post office. It is provided in this way :

Burlington will have a new post office this summer. Mr. William Kerns has decided to build a substantial brick structure on the site occupied by the present post office. The figures are being obtained from local contractors, and the contract will be awarded in a few days. Mr. Kerns is to be congratulated upon his step to improve our beautiful village, and the change should be appreciated by the public generally.

I have no doubt it will be appreciated by the Postmaster General.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What is the population?

Mr. HENDERSON. 1,400 or 1,500. I know very well the building where the post office is now kept. It is a small place and, I think, belongs to the gentleman whose name is mentioned here.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is it a private residence ?

Mr. HENDERSON. No, the postmaster lives in his own home, but this gentleman who owns the present building, with that enterprise which characterizes him as a leading citizen of the town, proposes to remove this building and erect a substantial brick building and have it used as a post office. I have no doubt the Postmaster General will appreciate the change. It will not change the location of the post office. It is left exactly in the same place, but it will be a more substantial and a more commodious building. That is the way we get post offices in Halton. I regret however, that in all the towns and villages we have not men of the same enterprise and consequently we have in many cases very inferior buildings, crowded and congested in the morning and evening when the mails come in and not at all equal to the requirements of these places.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I will have to take a step up into your constituency.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would be delighted and you will see one of the most beautiful counties in western Ontario.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are many beautiful counties in western Ontario.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the hon. gentleman should come some time in the month of June we will regale him with the finest strawberries that you can find anywhere in the Dominion.

Mr. FOWLER. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman may say 'no.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not better than Sussex Bay ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I never heard of Sussex Bay. Oakville strawberries were known forty years ago throughout this country.

Mr. FOWLER. Sussex Bay strawberries were known a century ago.

Mr. HENDERSON. And you will find every kind of fruit almost—peaches, pears, plums, gooseberries——

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is enough ; I will come.

Mr. FISHER. He cannot go until the session is over.

Mr. HENDERSON. There will be lots of delicious fruit after the session closes. We have it the whole summer through and the hon. gentleman can come at any time. I hope his coming will be of some advantage and that it will result in the levelling up of these expenditures. I do not mean that you should increase the expenditure.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Just a readjustment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Just a readjustment. It will simply take a little from Hamilton, Guelph, Brampton and Toronto and give it to the county of Halton and other rural counties. I am satisfied that that is sound policy and that is a policy that will be appreciated by the rural sections of the country. That is all I have to say about the matter, and I hope I am not misunderstood.

Kincardine public building, $7,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total cost, including everything, is $29,000. The original contract was $17,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that building completed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No the contract was only let last fall.

Mr. SPROULE. You did not spend any money last year at all?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The town gave the site so that there was no site to buy, and there was no money expended last year.

Mr. FOWLER. How much have you paid to the contractor ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nothing has been paid yet.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you a clerk of works ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. Nothing has been done on the contract at all ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract was let last November.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the population ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1901 it was 2,077, and the population of the township was 2,855. Kincardine is in North Bruce.

Mr. FOWLER. $12,000 seems a large amount in addition to the contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In these days the cost of fitting up a public building is considerably greater than it formerly was. It has to be wired for electric light and electric fixtures and heating apparatus have to be provided.

Mr. FOWLER. What kind of heating apparatus ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hot water heating.

Mr. SPROULE. This is another illustration of the unwisdom of the course we are following. I notice that at Kincardine the revenue was $3,053 last year and that we paid an allowance towards rent and fuel of $150. That is practically the full cost.

Mr. PUGSLEY. $200.

Mr. SPROULE. It must have been changed since because the Postmaster General's Report for 1907 which I have before me gives the amount which I have stated.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is $200 for the Post Office, and $60 for the Customs, and this building will provide for the Customs, Post Office and Inland Revenue Departments.

Mr. SPROULE. Interest on the money for the erection of the building, the cost of caretaking, insurance, repairs and taxes, if there are any, will amount to somewhere about $1,600 or $1,700 a year, while we are getting the accommodation to-day for $150. If that is good business policy, I do not understand business.

Mr. ALCORN. This is for a post office and customs house I suppose ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Custom house and examining warehouse and inland revenue office.

Mr. ALCORN. Is the policy of the government in erecting these buildings the same as in former years ; are vaults erected in these buildings or does the government supply safes in the offices ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think there is usually a vault built in the building.

Mr. ALCORN. I asked that question with regard to a similar building in my own town and was told it was not the policy of the government to put such vaults in these buildings. They are used for post offices, customs and inland revenue purposes and it appears to me it would be a much better policy, considering the value of the government property contained in these buildings, to erect suitable vaults and not depend upon safes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I must correct my statement. I have been in some public buildings and have seen vaults, but the chief architect tells me that in the smaller buildings it is not the practice to build vaults but to furnish safes.

Mr. ALCORN. Would it not be much cheaper to have vaults ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would favour vaults myself.

Mr. FOWLER. The vault would be more expensive, but better, and the expense would really be slight. You could build one in one of these buildings for $300 or $400.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall discuss that with the chief architect. I would favour building vaults.

Kingston—new gun shed, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a revote to provide a new gun shed in the Artillery park, Kingston. It was requested by the Department of Militia in 1906 and they again urged it in 1907.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Owing to the unsanitary condition of the old buildings. The location is unsanitary.

Mr. FOWLER. How?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Because the drainage from the city sewer comes in at a point just at the barracks, and we have had a great deal of difficulty there from typhoid for years. We are considering the gradual abandonment of these barracks.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect has not the full particulars from the Militia Department but they state that that will be about the expense.

Mr. SPROULE. This was voted last year and not spent. Was it voted the year before ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think so.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There was no vote the year before.

Mr. ALCORN. Here are seven items of expenditure at one point, Kingston. Would the minister state the aggregate estimated cost of these seven works at Kingston ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am afraid I cannot give that at the moment because they are all revotes and the chief architect has not suffcient information to estimate with accuracy.

Mr. SPROULE. What forces will this accommodate ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is for the permanent force. There are probably between 200 and 300 in the permanent force there. Then we have the 4th Hussars headquarters, the 5th Battery Field Artillery, the 14th Regiment of Infantry, the 47th Regiment and No. 3 Ambulance. That is the strength of the garrison besides the permanent force.

Kingston Artillery Park—new guard house, including offices, &c., $8,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was requested by the Militia Department as early as October, 1906. It is to be a brick building on stone foundations, two and a half stories high, 80 feet by 32 feet. There is no contract let yet.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the estimated cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect has not yet made an estimate, but I should think that $8,000 would be sufficient to cover the cost of that building.

Mr. FOWLER. Why is it necessary?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Owing to the unsanitary state of the old barracks and the bad condition they are in generally.

Mr. CROCKET. Why have tenders not been called for if this vote was asked for as early as 1906?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We do not always yield to the requests of the Department of Militia. We try to hold them back as long as we can.

Mr. CROCKET. But you got a vote last year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. I cannot say just why the work was not proceeded with. It is possible that it was owing to there being no permanent minister.

Mr. FOWLER. I think I can supply a reason. I fancy that you were a little short in the matter of architects. Are the plans drawn yet?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No plans have been drawn. Some sketches have been submitted to the Militia Department by the chief architect, but they have not been returned yet.

Mr. CROCKET. Is it intended to call for tenders during the present year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that is the intention.

Mr. SPROULE. These buildings are either needed or not needed. If they are needed, they should be erected, and the votes not kept on the estimates year after year, because they may be at any time used as a temptation in the event of an election. If they are not needed, the money should not be voted.

Kingston—new hospital for A and B batteries, $10,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the matter with the old hospital?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The scheme is to put all these buildings on the Artillery park.

Mr. CROCKET. Has any contract been let yet?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. How about the expenditure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not had sufficient particulars from the Militia Department yet to enable us to say what it will be.

Mr. FOWLER. How can you have a vote unless you have an estimate of the cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman insists, we will let this item stand.

Item allowed to stand.

Kingston Royal Military College—new servants' quarters, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for the erection of new servants' quarters. They are called servants' quarters, but they are for the non-commissioned officers at the Royal Military College. These are to consist of two buildings, 167 feet long by 33 feet broad. They are to be placed on two opposite sides of a square, with yards in rear. Each building consists of eight dwellings two stories high, of brick with stone facings, and with stone basement. The contract is let for this work; the amount of the contract being $77,939. In addition, there is the heating and boilers, $6,000 ; the electric wiring and fixtures, $3,000 ; furniture, &c., $2,000 ; sidewalks and fences, $2,000 ; contingencies, $5,061 ; total cost, $96,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What are you doing with non-commissioned officers' quarters in the college except among the cadets?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They consist of sixteen different dwelling houses.

Mr. FOWLER. That is $6,000 to each house. I think it is a pretty good job to be a servant in the Royal Military College, to be housed in a $6,000 house with steam-heating, electric lighting and all the rest.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand that they are non-commissioned officers.

Mr. FOWLER. What are non-commissioned officers doing there?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They are teachers and instructors in connection with the college.

Mr. FOWLER. Where are they living now?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In rented houses.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to protest strongly against this expenditure. The greater part of the expenditure on this institution is money thrown away. From what we have seen in the public press and have heard elsewhere, the gentleman who is at the head of that institution is absolutely unfit to have charge of the instruction of young men. His habits, his methods of instruction, his ideas of proper conduct are entirely at variance with those ordinarily accepted; yet he continues to occupy the position of head of this school. We are now told that there are some sixteen non-commissioned officers, drill instructors, for this school. How many pupils are attending the school ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About 100.

Mr. FOWLER. It evidently is as much over-officered as the militia. There is about one instructor to every six cadets. The thing is absurd. We ought to have more information before we allow this item to pass. I do not know for whom these buildings are intended, but it is absolutely impossible that sixteen drill instructors should be required to instruct one hundred cadets.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the plans were submitted to me and I saw the class of buildings, and when I read the statement that they were for servants' quarters, it struck me that these buildings were altogether too expensive for persons occupying that position. I sent to the Militia Department, and either the deputy minister or Mr. Jarvis called upon me and informed me that these persons composed the subordinate staff of the institution and that this accommodation was absolutely required, and that this class of dwellings was not at all more than was reasonably required for the staff.

Mr. FOWLER. We have them now called the staff, a while ago they were servants, and then they were called drill instructors. Now it appears they are the staff. I have no doubt that the average dwelling of members of this House does not cost $6,000, and yet we are authorizing a vote for this amount to house non-commissioned officers. I do not think that they deserve better housing than we ourselves get, and I would ask the minister not to press this item until we have more explicit and more detailed information

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will bring a list showing exactly who these people are, and what are their duties.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the average salary and allowance which these drill instructors receive ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Perhaps I used the term drill instructors improperly. I know that one man teaches gymnastics and some of them take charge of the horses and are servants connected with the college generally. I do not say they are all teachers.

Mr. SPROULE. We ought to have full explanation from the Minister of Militia regarding what is done at that institution and the number of graduates turned out before we pass these items.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The best time to give that would be when the estimates for the Militia Department are up and when I shall make my statement and have all the papers necessary.

Mr. SPROULE. But should we then reach the conclusion that the military college should be done away with, we will have voted the money for these buildings. We ought to have a full explanation before we vote a dollar. We have heard of some very absurd things that have transpired in that institution. For instance a young man was asked if he had shaved off the down on his upper lip. If he had said he had not, no one would have been any the wiser because it was not visible, but he was manly enough to say he had done so, and he was put in close custody for four days. Did any one hear of anything so absurd ? Young men go their of the highest moral and religious type, and there they learn to play cards and gamble and smoke cigarettes and cigars and learn other vices of that kind. That is not the kind of training which parents desire their young men to have.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Many splendid men have come out of that institution.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, but sometimes the institutions degenerate. They are good or bad according to the class of men who control them and carry on the work of tuition.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I would like to ask the minister if he could not give us within $20,000 to $30,000 an estimate of the cost of those buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would not be fair to me nor to the committee if I should guess at the cost.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I want to enter my protest against expenditure of this kind. It ought to be an object lesson to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to see the paltry amount he gets for his department when so much is expended on the militia. The statement made by the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) is perfectly correct when we are asked to vote such sums as these for the militia compared with the votes for agriculture.

Mr. GANONG. The Minister of Militia says there are about 100 students in that institution. He should give us a statement showing the cost of graduating each of these students.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is if the total cost of the institution and the number of students be given, the average can be calculated.

Leamington public building, $7,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote, and the proposed building is for post office and customs purposes.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What is the estimated cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is $20,000, exclusive of site.

Mr. CLEMENTS. From whom was the site purchased ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are two lots, one at $2,000 from Mr. Enoch Windsor, and one at $500 from Mr. G. A. Brown.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Leamington is a thriving little town and deserving of a public building. If less money were spent on these items we have just left over and put into such buildings as this in Leamington, it would be better. When will the building be gone on with ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. During the year.

Mr. SPROULE. Why was it not gone on with last year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We had not the site.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Are plans out for this building yet ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Will they be got out by officers of the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. GANONG. This seems quite a justifiable expenditure, as the revenue of this town, both customs and post office, seem fairly large.

London military buildings—magazine, $3,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nothing has yet been done with regard to this. It is supposed that $3,000 will cover the cost.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is it to be placed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The location has not yet been fixed, nor the site procured.

London military buildings—new gymnasium, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote. This was requested by the Department of Militia and Defence in February last.

Mr. FOWLER. What will be the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the information from the Militia Department which will enable me to speak of that.

Mr. FOWLER. Better let that stand then.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Before we pass from that item, have any steps been taken for the capture of the man who murdered one of the officers who was taking a course of instruction in this school ? And how was it that nothing was done until next morning—as I understand to have been the case—by the 150 officers and men who were there? These seem to be the facts as published, and they are, as they stand, a reflection upon the force. Has the Minister of Militia, as the responsible head of that department, any explanation ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot give an answer. I will ask for the report in the morning and give it to the House or to my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler).

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand that the provincial authorities have been searching for this man.

Mr. FOWLER. It has always been the boast of our people that a murderer was hunted down, no expense necessary to that end being spared. There was a case in the Klondike where $30,000 was spent in order to trace and capture a murderer there. It was a splendid object lesson. But this seems to be an object lesson the other way. It is a very unfortunate thing that this man should be murdered in the city of London, and nothwithstanding that the country thereabouts is thickly settled the murderer——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) suggest that the provincial authorities have not done their duty ?

Mr. FOWLER. I suggest that all the authorities have not done their duty. As soon as the murder was known, every one of these men should have been turned out in search of the murderer and the search should not have been remitted until he was captured. A reward should have been offered and everything necessary done.

Mr. SPROULE. The authorities here have not even a report yet, for the minister (Sir Frederick Borden) has told us that he will ask for one to-morrow morning.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) knows that the administration of the criminal law is in the hands of the provincial authorities. The offering of a reward would be the proper duty of those authorities.

Mr. FOWLER. It is true that the enforcement of the criminal law is in the hands of the provincial authorities. It is true also that an officer attending a course of instruction in the military post at London was murdered by one of the members of the force, and yet no effort was made——

Mr. PUGSLEY. How does the hon. gentleman know ?

Mr. FOWLER. It is so stated in the newspapers and not denied. As a matter of fact, if they had turned out at once they could have caught him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does not follow.

Mr. FOWLER. It certainly does.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I did not say that I would ask for a report to-morrow morning. I have no doubt the report is in the department here, and I have promised to get it to-morrow morning—at least that is what I intended to say.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, I misunderstood the hon. minister.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. There is no doubt that this is a serious matter. It seems very strange that, with the number of soldiers about when this crime was committed, this man should have been allowed to get away. There seems to be a feeling abroad in this country in favour of shielding the criminal. I have heard several people, in conversation about this man, express the hope that he would get away. I do not think any such spirit should be encouraged in the country. Many people are in the habit of allowing these things to go along the lines of least resistance, as when in the old days, if train robbers entered a car every one would hold up his hands, until once in a while they would meet a man who would not and then everything was turned the other way. A few instances like that would have a good effect. I think it is the duty of the government to press on the people that they should not shield this man, because he must get food and shelter, and some steps should be taken to impress on the officers and non-commissioned officers at London that it was their duty to arrest that man, dead or alive, within 15 seconds. I see reports of jealousy between the London detectives and the rural police. A little instruction to the people of Canada in the treatment of criminals is required.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not be prepared to say that any person is in fault. I would rather assume that the officers do their duty. That is the experience I have had in the enforcement of the criminal law and I prefer to believe that until there is evidence to the contrary. The mere fact that the murderer is at large is not positive proof that the authorities are neglectful.

With regard to the London post office, we are asking a revote of $3,000, of which $1,475 is for vault fittings, and $500 for paving the streets.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. I do not see any item here for a drill shed for the 45th regiment at Lindsay.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, there is nothing here.

Mr. ALCORN. Did the minister say that part of this $3,000 for London is to be expended on pavements ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $500.

Mr. ALCORN. What rate per square foot will be paid ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect does not know but he tells me the prices run in different parts of the country from 11 cents to 26 cents. The average, I think, is somewhere in the neighbourhood of 16 cents. It is 18 cents a square foot in Ottawa.

Mr. ALCORN. A price of 26 cents was mentioned the other day.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was at Antigonish but that included some things unusual. The street was not level and had to be filled up to make it level.

Mr. ALCORN. I suppose that was the levelling that is done in every case. I may say that the town of Picton laid down several miles of cement walks and the average price has been 11 cents. Certain walks were laid about the public buildings side by side with this and the government walks cost 18 to 22 cents. What explanation can there be of that ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As a rule we make an arrangement with the municipality to lay them.

Mr. ALCORN. In this instance the same man laid both sidewalks, and there is that difference in price.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps he did better and more substantial work for the government.

Mr. SPROULE. You can get it in some parts of the country from 9 cents a foot. Take the cases of Flesherton and Dundalk.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have had it done for 11 cents.

Mr. SPROULE. Any one paying more than 12 cents a foot for granolithic sidewalks would be considered with us to be paying too much.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That depends on how accustomed to laying them the people are. I know in the village where I have a summer home, where we have no persons experienced in this class of work, I would have to pay a great deal more than I would in Ontario where a great deal of this work is done.

Markham public building, $4,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has this anything to do with the late election there ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to erect a building in the town of Markham on a site which was purchased at the corner of Main and St. Joseph streets.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. When was the lot purchased ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. July, 1907.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. For how much ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $1,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Markham is a much larger place than Glencoe ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Population does not always govern as to cost.

Mr. SPROULE. What will this building cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $14,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the minister know anything about promises that were made in the recent by-election in the village of Markham ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I am not aware of any having been made.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The money was voted a year ago and nothing was done. Then when the election came on in Centre York this was brought to the front again and the pledge was given that if the people there would do their duty and vote for the Liberal candidate the building would be proceeded with this year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. May I, without offence, ask the hon. gentleman if he is speaking from personal knowledge or from mere gossip?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am speaking from what appeared in the newspapers at the time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In regard to the necessity of the work, Markham is a thriving place and in 1901 the population was over 1,100.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is a fine town.

Mr. GANONG. Is this building going to be used for a post office and custom house?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is expected to give accommodation for both purposes.

Mr. GANONG. What are the customs receipts ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no collector of customs at that point yet.

Mr. GANONG. There never has been a custom office there ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister says that the building will cost $14,000 and the site $1,000. This makes $15,000 altogether. Interest, cost of caretaker, lighting, fuel, and taxes will make a permanent charge of $1,175 a year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that it is possible to allow the postmaster to be the caretaker of the building and an arrangement of that kind can very often be made.

Mr. SPROULE. That is merely a guess without knowledge.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the case in many instances.

Mr. SPROULE. We have no information that it is going to be the case here. There will, in all human probability, be a permanent charge of $1,175 a year and yet we have the accommodation there to-day for $92, including rent, fuel and light.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is $120.

Mr. SPROULE. I am taking the amount from the last report of the Postmaster General.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Are you not taking it for nine months ?

Mr. SPROULE. Well, if it is for nine months, it will be one quarter more. The town of Markdale, in which I live, has a revenue of $1,909 while Markham has a revenue for $1,929, or $20 more, but no person has ever asked for a post office in Markdale.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The information was that the post office in Markham was in a miserable condition and that there was very poor accommodation.

Mr. SPROULE. If it were impossible to get another building there would be a justification for erecting a new building, but when you can get a suitable building for $125 or $150 a year there is no justification for spending thousands of dollars to get that accommodation for the public.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will you say that it would not be a reasonable thing to erect a post office and custom building in your town?

Mr. SPROULE. It would not be reasonable because this accommodation is obtained for $100 a year with fuel and light. There is a fairly good post office and the accommodation is all right. It might be a little later but it is all right.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is different from Markham. They have wretched accommodation.

Mr. SPROULE. I would be ashamed to put the country to an expense of $15,000 to erect a post office when we could get suitable accommodation for $100.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think my hon. friend stands almost alone in that regard in the House.

Mr. SPROULE. No, I do not think it. I think that there are a great many more who will agree with me.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister has said that they are going to use this for customs purposes as well. Has he any authority directly or indirectly for making that statement? I do not believe he ever heard there was going to be a custom officer there. It is only a few miles out of Toronto and what is the use of the minister saying that? We will accept his honeyed smile and pleasant manner but let him not try to bluff us.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the memorandum submitted in behalf of those who urged the erection of that building it was very strongly put forward that an effort was being made to have a collector of customs appointed and they thought it would be used for that purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. There was even a more important reason for presenting that view and that is that there was an election coming on. Senator Campbell hawked around the country a number of blue prints and told the people that if they supported the Liberal candidate they were more likely to have a new building erected and it was important to leave the impression that there was going to be an outport of customs and an Inland Revenue office established at that place.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have been trying to obtain from the minister a return since the 5th of February in reference to the St. Joseph pier, the Grand Bend pier and the Bayfield pier.

Mr. PUGSLEY. These are in course of preparation, but they are much longer than I would have supposed, particularly one of them. But I expect that next week the returns will be brought down.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot help thinking that the minister has got it into his head that I am pretty easy. I asked for these returns on the 5th of February and I have asked a number of times across the floor of the House and he has given me a very polite reply, but I have not received the returns, perhaps the minister can tell us something about that to-night.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Better leave it until we come to wharfs and harbours.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the minister is determined we are not to have the returns in our hands before that time——

Mr. PUGSLEY. They will be down next week. We are badly off in our department for assistance. We could arrange for our staff to work after hours, but we feel it is not a good policy to make extra allowances to the staff and we have no room to bring in outsiders. You have no idea the large number of returns called for. I am informed that one of those returns would take one man a whole year to prepare. I have asked the hon. gentleman who moved for it to allow me to leave out a lot that has already been brought down. The returns moved for by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) are being prepared as rapidly as possible and next week will be submitted to the House.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Without any reflection on the staff, if the minister would see that they work as they ought to work for the salary they receive more work would be done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think they work pretty well.

Mr. CLEMENTS. That is not my judgment from some of them I have seen round the city.

North Bay public building, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The building is 55 feet 6 by 90 feet, two stories high over basement, built of brick, stone fittings and a stone foundation. It is intended for post office, customs and inland revenue. North Bay is an important and rapidly growing town.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. When the Canadian Pacific Railway runs to Sudbury instead of North Bay, North Bay will be merely a crossing on the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I doubt that; I think it will grow.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What is the total cost of the buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total cost of the buildings, including site, is $61,375.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the population of North Bay?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1901 it was 2,530, but I think it has grown considerably since that time.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the cost of the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would appear to be expensive, it cost $8,100.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. From whom was it purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From Mrs. William Doran. It is a valuable lot and is well situated on the corner of Main and Fraser streets; it is 66 feet on one street and 132 feet on the other.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is this building isolated?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot say.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister should consider the importance of having these buildings isolated.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a good idea.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I have had the pleasure of being in North Bay several times and I think it deserves a reasonable building, but to spend $67,000 in a town of 2,500 population and to spend nothing in other larger towns is not treating the latter fairly. I approve of public buildings in any town of reasonable size in the Dominion provided the money is properly spent, because it is important for strangers coming into a town to see ornamental buildings. But I will not approve of spending so much money in a small place and neglecting larger places. A $25,000 building in a town of that size would be sufficient.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not prepared to say that I would approve of erecting such an expensive building, but I presume the minister was impressed with the importance of North Bay and considered it was for customs purposes as well as for post offices.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is a distributing centre for all that country.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When was the site purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The 31st March, 1905.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Taking the cost of the lot at $8,000 and the total cost at $61,000, that would leave $53,000 for the building, which is $13.000 more than Mr. Hyman, when minister, said it would cost.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He probably did not include the fittings, which cost $6,000, and the heating and boilers.

Mr. ALCORN. $8,000 is an unconscionable price to pay for a lot 66 feet by 132 in a town like North Bay.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information is that the lot could be sold to-day for considerably more than the government paid for it. Everything depends on the location of a lot and the possibility of securing other suitable lots. Under the circumstances I think $8,100 was nothing excessive.

Mr. ALCORN. By what means, under what conditions, and from whom was the site purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was purchased from Mrs. Doran and I have nothing here to show that it was not a direct purchase.

Mr. ALCORN. Who recommended the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. An officer of the department was sent up to examine it.

Mr. ALCORN. Of course, that would be after the site was offered. Was it taken on the recommendation of a member?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know as to that; I have no information. I know that the minister interested himself very much in securing the erection of the building. There was a petition from the citizens of the town and also from the board of trade.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understand that the population of this town is about 2,000. and this is at the rate of about $45,000 an acre for the land, which seems to me to be a very unreasonable price for land in a little village.

Mr. PUGSLEY. North Bay is not a village.

Mr. ALCORN. The minister has not not yet given any information as to how the department came to purchase the site.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no information whether any other lots were offered or not, but the department sent up an expert on land values, and on his report they authorized the purchase.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the minister the name of that expert?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not this evening.

Mr. HENDERSON. I must say that the price of this lot is to my mind altogether out of keeping with the value of property in that section of the country. Land is not so scarce there. There is abundance of it; and as to location, I do not think it is absolutely necessary that the post office should be in the centre of the town. You may put it in the centre of the town to-day, and in five years it may be in the suburbs. If an expert was sent to value the lot, he must have been misled terribly by the people who were pressing the sale of this lot on the government. It is now ten minutes past twelve; we sat late last night, till about half-past two; the House is very thin, and I would recommend the minister to allow us to go home and get a rest. I promise the minister that between twelve o'clock and two, if he insists on our remaining here, he must not expect to get any estimates through. I do not think it is reasonable to ask us to sit after twelve o'clock on Friday night in a thin House. The business of the House will go on much better if the minister will give us time to rest.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Most of us have Saturday as a holiday and then Sunday. I really think we ought to get along with the business ; I think both sides of the House ought to bend their energies to that. We have had every opportunity for discussion. I do not want to keep the House unduly, but suppose we go on and pass a few more items.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister talks about bending our energies. The government have been holding back all the important measures. The Northwest Land Bill and the Election Bill are going to take up considerable time, and these estimates will be passed more quickly after we are apprised of those measures.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Land Bill has not anything to do with these estimates.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It has everything to do with them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would be sorry if our hon. friends were to give an intimation that they are really going to prevent the passing of estimates in the next hour or two. It would be unreasonable to do so.

Mr. LAKE. Surely it is unreasonable, after the late hour that we were here last night, to keep us here longer to-night.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think it would be unreasonable to pass a few more items.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We want the name of that expert before we let this item pass.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We will let this item stand until I get the name of the expert.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We were here yesterday morning till half-past two, the morning before that till three o'clock, and the morning before that till half-past one. We on this side of the House cannot help feeling that the government are trying to force us to remain here at unreasonable hours.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Surely my hon. friend will not suppose that the government could tire out the opposition. They look as fresh as anybody could wish. All I ask is that we shall be reasonable and show the country that we know how to work and are prepared to work in the public interest.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister talks about what is reasonable, but I say it is not reasonable to keep us here longer in view of the fact that we were here one night till half-past two and another night till three. I think there is a great deal of reason in the contention of the hon. member for Halton and other members who say that considering the lateness of the hour to which we sat in the last three or four nights, we should adjourn at this hour of the morning.

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. BARKER. Perhaps the hon. minister will allow me to point out a matter that has some bearing on the present situation. No doubt we did sit up until about two o'clock yesterday morning. I do not myself desire to see any obstruction to the passing of the estimates, but the four or five following items are of a very general character that will be discussed probably at length. The next item is that of public buildings for Ontario.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Small items only.

Mr. BARKER. Yes, but small items become in the main big items. There are four or five of them and these are the items probably the hon. gentleman wants to go on with. We have passed $200,000 or $300,000 to-night after a very long tedious sitting. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he should show a little good nature and that if he does it will perhaps bring to him a little indulgence and assistance later on. I have listened to the discussion and I am quite sure that, from the nature of the following items, they will take more time than he thinks.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Now that the minister has decided to adjourn, I would like to ask in what part of the public accounts we can find a vote for the monument on the battlefields and also a monument to Champlain. I am glad to see the Postmaster General present. He will remember a certain occasion on which a number of the gentlemen connected with the press gallery were sailing up the beautiful river and approaching the falls named after a distinguished French writer, and he will recollect the conversation and the proposal to erect a monument to the late Samuel de Champlain on that beautiful spot opposite the falls. I have looked in vain through the estimates for any vote for that monument.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This item for Ontario public buildings fire escapes we ought to pass.

Mr. HENDERSON. What about the North Bay vote ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That stands. But this item for the Ontario public buildings fire escapes, $5,000 we ought to pass. These public buildings are at Belleville, Goderich, Guelph, Hamilton, Orillia, Petrolia, Paris, Port Arthur, and a large number of others, and the items are all for fire escapes aggregating $5,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Now that the minister has given the names of these places, we will find them on 'Hansard' and tomorrow we shall be able to look into the matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. These cannot be at all controversial. Anything that is at all controversial I will let stand over.

Mr. HENDERSON. I trust the minister will regard these as controversial. I would supplement what was said by my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) a short time ago. I do think that all the sessions of parliament that I have attended, the government has this session shown the least disposition to go on with business.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yet when I am trying my level best, you will not let me get along.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman is very anxious to get his money, but there are measures on the Order Paper we never hear of and it seems to me he should advise his colleagues to bring some of those forward before he exhausts his estimates. To my mind there are important measures that ought to be dealt with before we deal with those estimates. I do not believe in leaving those to the end of the session when every one is anxious to get home and when proper consideration cannot be given them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There will be the fullest opportunity to consider them.

Mr. HENDERSON. Provided we remain here, but I do not think the government has shown a disposition to advance business this session as they have done in former years. I have no hesitation in appealing to the minister to adjourn the House now and let us go home. I do not consider that we are responsible if the estimates are not put through. The government have been delinquent and have allowed business to stand too long.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If you will consider the Ontario public buildings, I will pass over the military building and the Printing Bureau and the Ottawa departmental buildings and we will adjourn You are in such a pleasant mood that we might get through the items that are not controversial.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, suppose we allow the minister to escape on his fire escape, then we can go home and will come back here even in better humour than to-night—and I think we have been in pretty good humour.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, work a little longer; it is early.

Mr. HENDERSON. Early in the morning, but rather late too.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Carried.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, it is not carried. And I do not propose it shall be carried so soon as that. I do not know whether these fire escapes have been provided for the public buildings before or not. Where is it intended to purchase them ? Are they to be iron stairways outside the buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister cannot get an iron stairway for $120. It must be only an iron ladder.

Mr. GANONG. Have they a landing at each story ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. From whom are they purchased ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Very often they can be purchased in the town in which the building is situated. It is ordinary blacksmith work, you know.

Mr. GANONG. Very few can be got that way. These are made by people with special machinery for that purpose.

Mr. CROCKET. From whom has the department been purchasing the fire escapes which have been in use ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a firm in Ottawa named Smith which made quite a number and also a firm in Toronto.

Mr. CROCKET. How much was spent in fire escapes last year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the figures.

Mr. GANONG. Do I understand that this fire escape has a special name ? Is it a patent contrivance?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I speak of the Shipway Iron and Bell Co., of Toronto.

Mr. GANONG. This is not a contrivance controlled by anybody ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What did that firm receive from the department last year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was a vote of $3,000 last year, principally spent on fire escapes for the Printing Bureau.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the same firm supply them and put them up.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. What was the average cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From $150 to $175.

Mr. ALCORN. Have the government been in he habit of providing fire escapes for public buildings ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only in some cases. But on account of some of the dreadful accidents that have happened, there is a general disposition throughout the country to require that public buildings should be provided with fire escapes and by-laws have been passed in many places to that effect.

Mr. ALCORN. For instance, we have no fire escapes on this building in which we meet ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. ALCORN. Or on the other public buildings in Ottawa ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think not. We have started in by putting them on the printing building.

Mr. ALCORN. Did one firm supply all the fire escapes for the Printing Bureau ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. ALCORN. Is it intended to purchase fire escapes for other places from the same firm ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no intention one way or the other.

Mr. ALCORN. What change has necessitated this sudden determination to supply fire escapes where they were not supplied before ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I gave the explanation —the calamities that have happened in Canada and the United States in public buildings.

Mr. ALCORN. Not more in recent years than formerly ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, there was the dreadful fire in Montreal only last year. By-laws have been passed in a number of places, and the chief architect is of opinion that fire escapes should be placed upon public buildings.

Mr. ALCORN. He has come to that conclusion lately ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. In fact, requests have been made by various authorities.

Mr. ALCORN. Are tenders to be asked for the supply of these fire escapes ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, prices will be asked.

Mr. ALCORN. From specified firms?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If they can be got locally, they will be got in that way.

Mr. GANONG. I do not think that any one objects to the expenditure suggested by the minister. Personally, I think it most desirable. But the minister need not talk about securing these locally. I have had a little to do with fire escapes, and I have learned that you must get them from some one in that particular business. A local man would scarcely know how to measure a building to supply a fire escape. Who had the contract for putting fire escapes on the Printing Bureau building, and at what cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Ottawa Brass and Scale Company, at $4,200.

Mr. GANONG. Were tenders asked for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. ALCORN. How many tenders were received ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect does not remember.

Mr. GANONG. Does he know whether more than one was received ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is not able to say.

Mr. GANONG. Does he know whether tenders were really asked for publicly, or was notice sent out to those on the patronage list ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They were not advertised for.

Mr. GANONG. Notice simply sent out to friends of the government ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. To those engaged in the business.

Mr. GANONG. Especially friends of the government ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. SPROULE. I think we would be disposed to let this item pass, together with two more, Parkhill and Peterborough. It was suggested that we might take the Owen Sound buildings, but it would have to be opened up again and I think it better, instead of taking Owen Sound, to take Peterborough which is of much the same character and would not elicit much discussion.

Mr. CLEMENTS. On the item of fire escapes I would suggest that a great deal of money can be uselessly spent on fire escapes. On buildings like the Printing Bureau it is quite proper to have them, but I do not see why a small building should require a fire escape, for instance a post office. They are built practically fire proof and it is not necessary.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What would be the total cost of the Parkhill building, the cost of land and the amount necessary to complete the building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is on a site 50 by 150. We have been for a good while negotiating with regard to a lot and as a result of the negotiations, in which we were very materially assisted by Mr. Ratz, the member for Middlesex, the Grand Trunk gave the land free to the government. We have only succeeded in getting a title very recently. Therefore plans have not been prepared and no contract has yet been let. The population is about 1,750. The chief architect says the plans will be for a building to cost about $20,000.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FISHER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up on Monday ?

Mr. FISHER. We will go on with Supply.

Mr. SPROULE. The same branch ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.45 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY May 4, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). With your permission, Sir, I would take opportunity to refer to what my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) said Friday last in the course of the debate on the Estimates. Referring to my hon. colleague the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), he used these expressions :

> The hon. gentleman is very anxious to get his money, but there are measures on the Order Paper we never hear of and it seems to me he should advise his colleagues to bring some of those forward before he exhausts his estimates. To my mind there are important measures that ought to be dealt with before we deal with those estimates. I do not believe in leaving those to the end of the session when every one is anxious to get home and when proper consideration cannot be given them.

If this means anything, it means that in the mind of my hon. friend, and perhaps in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite, the impression prevails that if we get our Estimates through, we might abandon what remains on the Order Paper, notably the Election Bill. We have no such intention. We intend proceeding with that measure but we tried to get the Estimates through because we thought they were the most pressing. It is immaterial to us in what order we take up the government measures, but when we have moved the House into Supply we have made but little progress. To meet the views of my hon. friend, I now give notice that to-morrow we shall take up the Election Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will my right hon. friend state whether or not there are any other Bills to be brought down by the government this session ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, there is the Manitoba Boundary Bill and one or two others.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are the other measures ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot give an answer off-hand but will to-morrow.

OLD AGE PENSION BILL.

Mr. PRINGLE. I would like to ask my hon. friend, the Minister of Labour, when he intends proceeding with the Old Age Pension Bill which has been referred to a committee.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Minister of Labour). Not seeing the hon. gentleman here for a few days, I did not want to convene the committee in his absence. I intend calling it this week, and if suitable to my hon. friend will give notice for Thursday.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. ALEXANDER MARTIN (Queens, Prince Edward Island). An order of the House was passed on the 15th of January for a return of application for licenses respecting the granting of lobster fishing and packing licenses in Prince Edward Island from 1904 to 1908 ; also on March 23, for names of all persons in the province of Prince Edward Island to whom fishing bounties were paid between 1905 and 1908 ; also on April 6 for reports for Federal legislation to give sailing vessels equal rights in their proper loading turns at the coal ports in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, as demanded by the Charlottetown Board of Trade.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I will make inquiries. I was under the impression that the second one was brought down but may be mistaken.

SASKATCHEWAN POWER COMPANY.

House in committee to consider Bill (No. 153) to incorporate the Saskatchewan Power Company.—Mr. McCraney.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not desire to take any strong objection to this Bill, if it is the view of the committee that it should pass. But I would call attention to the fact that it is purely local in its character. It is a Bill to incorporate a company for the development of a water power on the Saskatchewan river, simply in one province. I would think myself that this is peculiarly an undertaking which ought to be under the control of the province, and that the company ought to be incorporated by the province. I do not know whether the committee to which the Bill was referred has given that matter consideration. My own view would be that progress should be reported, and that this point should be considered. If we keep on, we may before long be in conflict with the province of Saskatchewan, just as we are with the province of Ontario.

Mr. HAGGART. This Bill proposes to deal with a navigable stream. I do not think it would be under the jurisdiction of the province.

Mr. HENDERSON. I raised the same question on Friday last when this Bill was before the committee. I quite agree with what the Minister of Public Works has said. I think this is purely a provincial matter, but I may be mistaken. One of the members for Saskatchewan gave an explanation the other day, and perhaps he will repeat it to-day. To my mind, this is a provincial matter, and should not be dealt with here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If I may be allowed to give an illustration of the mode in which questions like this should be dealt with—in the province of New Brunswick we have frequently incorporated companies to construct works of this character, to establish booms and that sort of thing in navigable rivers, and then the company avails itself of the provision of the federal law which requires that before interfering with a navigable river there shall be an approval of the works by the Minister of Public Works for Canada. But the incorporation of the company, it seems to me, properly belongs to the provincial legislature, because by the terms of the British North America Act a provincial legislature is exclusively invested with power to incorporate companies for carrying on local undertakings with local objects.

Mr. McCRANEY. I understand the objection of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) is based on the ground that the incorporation of the gentlemen who are named here should be undertaken by the province, and that then permission should be obtained from the Dominion parliament for the use of those waters.

Mr. PUGSLEY. From the Minister of Public Works, under the revised statutes relating to navigable waters.

Mr. McCRANEY. By this Bill we are coming here for the authority of the Dominion parliament to use the waters of the South Saskatchewan river under terms which are set forth in the Bill. True, we could go to the provincial legislature and get incorporation, but that would involve a delay, which we desire to avoid. This Parliament could give the rights which we ask to individuals, who could assign those rights which they acquire to a company to be incorporated by the provincial legislature. I think, however, it is much better that we in this parliament who give the right to make use of the river, should also incorporate the persons to whom it is intended that these powers should be given as a corporate body, and that we should set forth the powers which are incidental to that incorporation. If the minister wishes to have it stand for further consideration, I can offer no objection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Stand.

Progress reported.

ANGLO-CANADIAN AND CONTINENTAL BANK.

House in committee on Bill (No. 141) to incorporate the Anglo-Canadian and Continental Bank.—Mr. Guthrie.

Mr. FOSTER. Has this Bill had the revision of the Finance Department? The Finance Minister does not appear to be here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This Bill comes from the Senate, where I think it was brought to the attention of the Finance Minister.

Mr. MILLER. It was carefully considered in the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and the Minister of Finance was present. There was some little objection made as to the financial standing of the incorporators. However it was thought that under this Bill capital would be brougth in from England and France, and the general opinion of the committee was that the Bill should pass.

Bill reported, read a third time and passed.

OCCIDENTAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 131) respecting Occidental Fire Insurance Company. —Mr. Duncan Ross.

On section 5,

Mr. HAGGART. I observe that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) who looks after these Bills is not here at the moment. As I understand, this insurance company operated under a provincial charter. There are contractual engagements, of course, which will be limited by the provincial law. But the effect of this Bill will be to leave them free of these and place them under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. MILLER. This Bill provides that all the liabilities of the old company shall remain as liabilities, notwithstanding that it comes under this proposed Dominion law. One clause of the Bill particularly discussed in the Banking and Commerce Committee was that providing that calls might be made on the stock to the extent of 25 per cent. The original Manitoba charter was consulted, and it was found that it provided that calls should be limited to 10 per cent. It was thought unfair to saddle the shareholders with larger calls than had been provided for under the original Act. And so the clause permitting the 25 per cent call was changed to 10 per cent in the present Bill.

Everything in the measure was carefully considered.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know what the insurance law of Manitoba provides, but I know that under the Ontario law an insurance company such as this is allowed to make only a certain contract with the insured party—it cannot contract itself out of certain liabilities. I do not know whether there is such a law in force in Manitoba. But the effect of this Bill would be to remove that safeguard, if it exists, from those who have insured with this company, by transferring the company to federal jurisdiction.

Mr. MILLER. Their longest contract of insurance would be for three years, and a large number of them would be for twelve months or less. So, this would not be so serious a matter as in the case of a life insurance company.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) proposed the amendment of section 5 of a corresponding Bill, the name of which I have forgotten, upon my bringing to his attention the possibility of certain difficulties arising under that section. It seems to me that section 5 of this Bill should be amended in that way. Has the attention of the government been directed to that point ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it would be better to have the Bill stand until the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is here, as he gave attention to a similar Bill and had some change made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, it would not be advisable to pass this Bill in one form when an exactly corresponding Bill has been passed in a different form.

Progress reported.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 126) to change the name and head office of the Anglo-Canadian Insurance Company.—Mr. Rivet.

Bill (No 156) respecting the Northern Bank and the Crown Bank of Canada.—Mr. Guthrie.

QUESTIONS.

YUKON GOLD COMPANY.

Mr. MACDONELL—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Has the attention of the government been drawn to an advertisement signed by one Thomas W. Lawson, of Boston, which appeared in several of the newspapers of Canada and the United States, of Friday, the 27th of March, 1908, with respect to placing on the market the shares of a company known as the Yukon Gold Company, and of which one Daniel Guggenheim is represented to be president, and Isaac Guggenheim is represented to be secretary?

2. Is it true that the Yukon Gold Company holds claims for the Dominion government in the Yukon Territory located on Bonanza, Eldorado, Bear and Hunker creeks, and which have a production record of approximately $100,000,000, as stated in the report dated New York, 6th of March, 1908, of Oscar B. Perry, a synopsis of which appears in said advertisement?

3. If so, what is the extent or area of the company's holdings, and upon what conditions are they held by the company?

4. Has absolute title been given to the company of any holdings on the aforesaid creeks, or are they to operate conditionally? If the latter, what are the conditions?

5. Is it true that the company, as stated in the said advertisement, has purchased sufficient creek claims and upper lever or bench deposits to control the mining situation in that portion of the Yukon Territory?

6. If so, from whom did the company purchase its creek claims—from the government, or the previous owners?

7. If from previous owners, have any assignments or transfers been recorded in the Department of the Interior? If so, from whom to whom?

8. Has the so-called Treadgold Concession been granted to the Yukon Gold Company? If so, upon what terms and conditions?

9. Has the Yukon Gold Company acquired the following low grade areas, as stated in said advertisement, to be profitably treated at a later stage, namely, Hunker creek bottom, with its tributaries, Last Chance creek, Gold Bottom creek, Hunker hills and Last Chance hills, Lower Bonanza hills, and Klondike valley below Bear creek? If so, what is the extent or area of such claims, and upon what conditions have they been granted to the Yukon Gold Company?

10. What are the total holdings of the Yukon Gold Company in the Yukon Territory, and what fees or royalties has the company to pay to the government in connection therewith?

11. If the statements, or any of them, appearing in the said advertisement are incorrect or misleading, what steps have the government taken to warn or protect the investing public?

12. Has the government, or any member thereof, any communications, written or oral, with the Thomas W. Lawson named in said advertisement, or with any member of the Guggenheim syndicate, with reference to the purchase or acquisition of the aforesaid mining claims, or any of them, or regarding the public flotation of 700,000 shares of the stock of the said company at $5 per share?

13. Is the government aware that the said Yukon Gold Company is capitalized at $17,500,000, and that the public has subscribed for shares therein on the faith and basis of the statements contained in the said advertisement, as to the absolute ownership by the Yukon Gold Company of the aforesaid claims?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. No.

2. The Yukon Gold Company hold placer mining claims in the Yukon Territory situated on Bonanza, Eldorado, Bear and Hunker creeks, but as no record of production by creeks has been kept, the government is not in a position to corroborate the approximate production record as stated.

3. Many of the claims held by the company have not been surveyed, and as they vary in size according to the regulations under which they were acquired, the total extent or area cannot be computed.

The claims are held under the conditions of the Yukon Placer Mining Act.

4. Title to the claims is conditional. Work to the value of $200 must be performed on a claim or in connection with it each year, and a renewal fee of $15 paid. The conditions are those set out in the Placer Mining Act.

5. The government has not sufficient information to make a definite statement.

6. From the previous owners.

7. Assignments in favour of the company of the claims which they have acquired are filed with the mining recorder in whose district the claims are situated, in accordance with the provisions of section 46 of the Yukon Placer Mining Act.

8. The question is not understood; but, if it has reference to a right at one time granted Messrs Ewing, Treadwell and Barwick to acquire certain reverted or abandoned claims, which right was subsequently rescinded, the answer is 'No.'

9. The Yukon Gold Company have acquired certain claims on the streams mentioned, the exact area of which is not known as all the claims have not been surveyed. These claims were granted under the provisions of the Placer Mining Regulations and Act.

10. The total number of claims acquired by the Yukon Gold Company appears to be 820. The fees and royalties paid by the company are those specified in the Placer Mining Act; that is, $15 for the annual renewal of each claim, and a royalty of 2½ per cent on the gold exported from the territory.

11. The government has no information as to the statements appearing in the advertisement.

12. No.

13. As the company appears to be operating under local ordinance, no doubt a statement as to the amount of capitalization was filed with the territorial government. The government, however, has no information.

DREDGING, &c., AT RIMOUSKI.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked:

What is the total amount of money spent by this government at Rimouski in building wharf, dredging, lighting, and all necessary work, in order that the steamer 'Lady Evelyn' could deliver passengers and mail?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). The question is a little difficult to answer because there has been an expenditure upon wharfs, but, according to my information, dredging is the only work which can properly be considered as having been done in order that the steamer 'Lady Evelyn' could deliver passengers and mail.

This improvement results also in advantage to other vessels entering and departing from Rimouski.

The cost of dredging was $11,077.97.

SOURIS WHARF.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN asked:

1. Is the government aware that during the past summer a wharf or block has been built on the southern side of the railway wharf at Souris, Prince Edward Island, opposite the Souris fish drier, and within five feet of the railway wharf?

2. Was permission given to any one to build such wharf or block at Souris? If so, to whom was such permission given?

3. Does the government claim any right or interest in this block?

4. Has the government paid Mr. E. A. Wallberg, or any one else, any money for the construction of this block?

5. Has the government any knowledge of this block being built by Mr. J. J. Hughes, or any one else?

6. Under the present law, is it permissible for private parties to build wharfs or blocks alongside of government wharfs and close up to them?

7. Does the government intend to allow the railway wharf to be used as an approach to this block?

8. Did any one besides Mr. Hughes during the last five years apply for permission to build a block at or near where Mr. Hughes is building his? If so, who applied, and why was he refused?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). There is no information in so far as this department is concerned, with reference to a wharf being built by Mr. J. J. Hughes, or any one else, further than that contained in the answer to the question asked in the House by Mr. A. A. McLean, to be found on page 2463 of the 'Hansard,' of the present session.

HOURS AND PAY OF LETTER CARRIERS.

Mr. MACDONELL—by Mr. Blain—asked:

Is it the intention of the government to bring the service of letter-carriers to an eight-hour-a-day service and to grant them an additional week's leave of absence, and also to adopt an increased schedule of salaries therefor, as recommended by the report of the Civil Service Commission, 1908?

Hon. R. LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

(a) Practically the letter-carriers have an eight hour a day service at the present time.

(b) Under the present law it is possible for the letter carriers to obtain a period of vacation greater than three weeks not allowed to other members of the service.

(c) Any increase in the salaries or vacation of letter carriers recommended by the Civil Service Commission, 1908, must receive the general consideration of the government, the same as every other branch of the service.

SOUTHERN ALBERTA LAND COMPANY.

Mr. HERRON—by Mr. Lake—asked:

1. Has the Southern Alberta Land Company, Limited, successors to the Robbins Irrigation Company, made application to the government to exchange a portion of the lands granted under their contract for other lands situated outside the original area?
2. If so, what quantity of land do they propose to re-lease, and what quantity do they ask in lieu thereof?
3. In what townships are the lands applied for in exchange located?
4. Is it a fact that the company claims that the success of their scheme from a financial point of view depends upon securing the new area applied for?
5. What are the intentions of the government in respect of said application?
6. In case of the government consenting to such exchange, will the contract be amended so as to contain a clause fixing the maximum selling price of lands without water privilege?

Hon. F. OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Yes.
2. (a) 186,000 acres, approximately; (b) 186,000 acres, approximately.
3. Township 13, range 6, townships 14 and 15, ranges 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10, west 4th meridian.
4. Yes.
5. The Commissioner of Irrigation has been directed to make a personal inspection of the company's scheme in connection with this application, and the application will not be dealt with until his report shall have been received.
6. No decision has been made. See answer to No. 5.

CHARTER OF CAPTAIN HACKETT'S TUG FOR PATROL WORK.

Mr. CLEMENTS—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Regarding the patrol work in which Captain Hackett had charge of up to last season for the government in the vicinity of Lime Kilm Crossing, Detroit river, did Captain Hackett resign his position, or was he discharged by the government?
2. What remuneration did Captain Hackett receive for the work?
3. What individual or company is doing the work now for the government and at what remuneration?
4. Were tenders asked for the work? If so, was the lowest tender accepted, and how many tenders were received?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Captain Hackett's tug was chartered by the government last season at $50 per day, with a double crew for night and day work, the $50 including everything; the charter was subject to withdrawal at 48 hours' notice; the patrol was discontinued at the end of the season of navigation.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. Captain F. Trotter, same remuneration.
4. No.

PURCHASE OF HACKETT DOCK, AMHERSTBURG, ONTARIO.

Mr. CLEMENTS—by Mr. Blain—asked:

Has the government any intention of purchasing the Hackett dock, in the vicinity of Amherstburg, Detroit river, for use as a government wharf?

Hon. W. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). The matter has not been considered by the government.

COLLECTION OF CUSTOMS AT BATHURST.

Mr. CROCKET asked:

1. Has the Minister of Customs received a reply to his letter to the collector of Customs at Bathurst, New Brunswick, in reference to the complaint that said collector engaged actively in the late provincial election in Gloucester, New Brunswick?
2. If so, does the collector deny that he addressed a number of political meetings in different parts of the county in the interest of the Liberal candidates, or that he engaged actively in said election, as alleged in the letter of complaint?
3. What action has the minister taken since communicating the matter of the above complaint to said collector, or what action does he propose to take in reference thereto?

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1. Yes.
2. I have a copy of his reply in my desk which if the hon. member desires, I can read, but as it is somewhat lengthy I might say that as I understand it, Mr. Venoit does not admit that he addressed a number of meetings in the interest of the Liberal candidates, but he admits that he spoke at some public meetings, defending himself against personal charges made against him.
3. In view of the explanation given by the collector. no further action has as yet been taken.

N. F. HARBOTTLE.

Mr. LAKE asked:

1. Was a person by the name of N. F. Harbottle employed in the excise office at Edmonton until recently?
2. Did the said party leave the service after having taken moneys belonging to the government? If so, what was the extent of his defalcation?
3. When was the said Harbottle appointed and upon whose recommendation?
4. What other employees of the government at Edmonton have, during the last three years, left the service under similar circumstances?

Hon. WILLIAM TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue):

1. Neville Harbottle was employed in the excise office at Edmonton.
2. Yes. $6,918.44.
3. August 1, 1903. Upon the recommendation of the Minister of Inland Revenue.
4. The Department of Inland Revenue has no knowledge of a similar case.

W. D. CURRIE OF SOURIS.

Mr. R. N. WALSH asked :

1. How much has been paid by the Department of Marine and Fisheries to W. D. Currie of Souris, Prince Edward Island since March 31, 1907?
2. What was the amount and date of each payment, and for what were said payments made?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. $218.81.
2. August 3, 1907, $187.71. Provisions, &c., for herring drifter 33. October 9, 1907, $20.87. Provisions, &c., for herring drifter 33. January 16, 1908, $2.95. Small supplies and cartage for Souris East light. February 6, 1908, $7.28. Small supplies and cartage for Souris East light. Total $218.81.

HALIFAX COUNTY MAILS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked :

1. Is Gordon Farnell a contractor for the carriage of the mails in Halifax county, Nova Scotia, or has he had such contract?
2. If so, during what periods and over what route?
3. What are the terms of his contract, and what amount has he received each year during the period of his contract?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. Yes.
2. Contract commenced April 1, 1906—due to expire March 31, 1910.
3. Service tri-weekly ; distance twenty-eight miles each way. Usual conditions of contract. $475.

STE. ANNE DE SOREL LIGHTHOUSE.

Mr. BERGERON asked:

1. Has the government taken any land from Martel Rajotte, of Ste. Anne de Sorel, for the building of a lighthouse in that locality? If so, by whom was the government authorized to do so?
2. Is it true that the government employees destroyed many trees planted by Rajotte on said land?
3. Is it true that the landslide occurred on account of the disappearance of those trees, causing great damages to Rajotte?
4. Is it the intention of the government to recompense Rajotte for such land and damages so caused? If so, has anything been done to that effect?

Mr. LAKE.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Yes. A plot of land 50 feet square with right of way from the public road 10 feet wide. The proprietor offered the property in question to the department for the sum of $100, which was reported a fair price by the agent of the department at Montreal. The right of way being for 1,350 feet long.
2, 3 and 4. No. The employees of the Department of Marine and Fisheries constructed a lighthouse foundation on this land and for that purpose had to clear away the natural growth of brush. There were no trees of any consequence on the site.

LATE HON. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE.

Mr. BOYCE asked :

1. On what date did the late Hon. Raymond Prefontaine leave for England previous to his death?
2. Who was acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries during his absence and until, and after his death?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. The late Hon. Raymond Préfontaine left Montreal on November 20, 1905, and sailed from New York either the night of the 21st or morning of November 22, 1905.
2. The Right Honourable the President of the Privy Council.

SUPPLY—SHIPPING AT COLLIERIES.

Hon. W. S. Fielding (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.). I desire to draw the attention of the government to a matter which is of great moment to the shipping interests of the maritime provinces. I refer to the system of loading vessels at the different collieries; the rule now in vogue being that steamships shall be loaded first. No matter how many sailing vessels may be waiting for loads, steamers that come in immediately receive their cargo, and this practice has become so much a nuisance that in the maritime provinces that sailing vessel owners are being compelled to withdraw their vessels from that trade and to leave it practically in the hands of steam vessels owned by Norwegians and other foreigners. In consequence of the present practice to which I have referred the rates on coal were increased last year and the price of coal in Prince Edward Island was advanced about 50 cents per ton. I have here a letter written by Mr. Alexander Weatherbee addressed to the editor of the Halifax 'Chronicle,' and as Mr. Weatherbee is a seafaring man resident in Nova Scotia he explains the situation perhaps clearer than I could.

To the Editor of the 'Chronicle.'

Sir,—Kindly allow me space in your valuable paper to express my views re the coasting trade and the Norwegian question or foreign shipping monopolizing our coasting trade. It is a difficult question to solve or bring to a satisfactory settlement and I believe if not settled it will lead to anarchy and rebellion in the end, as it is a terrible grievance for our vessels to lay at coal piers and steamers load and go away and return and load again and our vessels laying without cargoes or any recompense for their lost time as I have had the experience of it a number of times. Now I am aware that the companies have to have steamers to carry their coal. Also, do I know they have a right to charter wherever they can make the best bargain. I am opposed to unions and monopolies as they tend to coerce the freedom and rights of individual citizens, and my idea of bringing this vexed question to a satisfactory settlement is for the government to compel all coal companies to load all vessels in turn, no preference to steam over sailing tonnage, as all have equal rights. I have loaded coal a number of times for the last twenty years in American ports and never had to wait long for my cargo as everything was loaded in turn, steamer, barge or sailing vessel and no reasonable man will complain when he gets his turn or rights. This is my view for a satisfactory settlement of the trouble or grievance.

ALEX. WEATHERBEE.

Tatamagouche, Dec. 21, 1907.

You will observe in the recent issues of newspapers in the maritime provinces editorials and letters from correspondents calling attention to this matter. Sea captains and sailing vessel owners are to-day withdrawing their vessels from this trade because they cannot afford to continue in the trade as they cannot get compensation for the great loss of time which they are subjected at the collieries in loading. I hold in my hand a petition signed by the principal sailing vessel owners and captains in the province of Prince Edward Island, in reference to this matter, which reads as follows:

Whereas the system of coal mining companies in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton give a loading preference to steamers over sailing vessels at their respective piers and that said discrimination militates against the owners and charterers of sailing vessels;

And whereas the greater part of the coal imported to this province is freighted in sailing vessels, and owing to the condition of the harbours, must continue to be freighted by vessels of shallow draught;

And whereas such systems may compel sailing vessels to abandon the coal carrying trade, to the great detriment of this city and province;

Therefore resolved, that our representatives respectfully request the federal government to pass such legislation as will give to sailing vessels and steamers equal rights in their proper loading turns at the coal ports in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, steamers when taking in bunker coal to have preference only.

These are the signatures of practically all the owners and captains of sailing vessels in the province. But this matter affects not only the province of Prince Edward Island, but also the province of New Brunswick and the province of Nova Scotia, in which these companies are incorporated. It also applies to vessels from the province of Quebec. I do not know whether any vessels from the province of Ontario coal there or not. This matter was referred to the Legislative Assembly of the province of Prince Edward Island at its last sitting, and I received a few days ago a letter from the clerk of the Legislative Assembly to the following effect:

The Legislative Assembly of Prince Edward Island,
Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island,
March 27, 1908.

A. A. McLean, Esq.,
House of Commons.

Dear Sir,—Acting under instructions of the legislative assembly of this province, I beg to inclose a copy of a resolution unanimously adopted by this House, and am requested to ask that the matter referred to receive your most earnest and immediate attention.

Yours respectfully,
R. H. MONTGOMERY,
Clerk Legislative Assembly, Prince Edward Island.

The resolution referred to in that letter reads as follows:

Resolution passed unanimously by the legislative assembly, Prince Edward Island, March, 1908.

Resolved, that this legislature, recognizing the difficulties and loss entailed to the owners and charterers of sailing vessels, also to the consumers of coal in this province on account of the preference habitually given to steam tonnage as distinguished from sailing vessels, at the piers of the leading collieries in Nova Scotia, in the matter of loading coal cargoes, respectfully request the government of Nova Scotia to exercise such powers as may be within its rights to secure fair and equitable treatment for the sailing vessels at such piers, and if those powers be inadequate to the end proposed, recommend that said government shall have recourse to the federal authorities, with a view to securing the rights and privileges in question.

Further resolved, that this legislative assembly respectfully request the federal government to pass such legislation, if necessary, as will give to sailing and steam tonnage equal rights in their proper loading turns at the coal ports in Nova Scotia.

I understand that a copy of these resolutions has been sent to the government at Ottawa, and is now in the hands of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I understand that it is a moot question whether the federal authorities have power to deal with this matter or whether the power rests with the legislature of the province of Nova Scotia. But I think this matter is one which peculiarly lies within the powers of the parliament of Canada to deal with. This is not a matter of purely local importance, because vessels from various provinces of Canada habitually load at these piers. It is true, these companies, or most of them, are chartered by the legislature of the province of Nova Scotia; but notwithstanding that fact, I think this parliament has power to regulate the manner in which vessels shall be loaded and unloaded at these piers. Under the shipping laws of the Dominion of Canada all the regulations for the unloading of vessels are subject to the parliament of Canada. If this parliament has power to regulate the unloading of vessels, I do not see why it should not equally have power to regulate the loading of vessels. It has power under the federal shipping law to say what space shall be allotted for cattle on vessels, how many bushels of grain a vessel may carry, how much draft it may draw, etc. Why, then, should it not have power to regulate the manner in which vessels from Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec shall be loaded at these piers? It may be and probably will be said that these concerns are private concerns, and can make contracts to load as they please. Vessels from all parts of Canada come to these places for coal. Under the circumstances, this is a matter of federal importance which may come under the head of regulation of trade and commerce, subsection 2 of section 91 British North America Act. Why should not this parliament have the power, under that section, to regulate the manner in which vessels shall be loaded, the same as they regulate, under subsection 10, which deals with navigation and shipping, the manner in which vessels shall lie in the harbour or conduct themselves at a pier. Under these regulations, no vessel is permitted to carry any spars clear of her hull because that might interfere with other vessels coming in.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does my hon. friend think that if the coal dealers were refusing to sell their coal we would have the power to interfere, or would we have the power to interfere when coal dealers deliver at their own piers?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I suppose every one can refuse to sell his own goods, but when he does sell them and when he advertises that he has goods for sale, the parliament of Canada may pass regulations governing the conduct of his trade.

Mr. BRODEUR. Under what clause of the British North America Act?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Under clause 2 of section 91 dealing with the regulation of trade and commerce. Take, for instance, section 92 which defines what matters come within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature. Under that section, shop, saloon, tavern and auctioneer and other licenses, in order to the raising of revenue for provincial, local or municipal purposes come under the exclusive powers of the provincial legislature. Yet, notwithstanding that section, it has been held by the Privy Council that this parliament had power to pass the Canada Temperance Act and to decree that that Act could come into force in any district at the instance of its people and thus take away vested rights from men previously engaged in the liquor trade. That Act of this parliament was upheld by the Privy Council in the case of Russel vs. the Queen. What did the Privy Council say in that matter ?

Sir Montague E. Smith, in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, intimated that their Lordships—

Must not be understood as intimating any dissent from the opinion of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada and the other judges who held that the Act, as a general regulation of the traffic in intoxicating liquors throughout the Dominion, fell within the class of subjects, 'The regulation of Trade and Commerce' enumerated in that section and was on that ground a valid exercise of the legislative power of the parliament of Canada.

Our Supreme Court had decided that the federal parliament had power to legislate on that matter because it came within subsection 2 of section 91 of the British North America Act, covering the regulations of trade and commerce. That was the ground upon which the Supreme Court gave its decision, and the Privy Council said that they did not dissent from that opinion. Here, therefore, we have the decision of the highest court in the land that although the provincial legislatures have exclusive power over saloon and other licenses, still this parliament can step in and pass a Temperance Act and, as was argued before the Privy Council, take away the vested rights of liquor dealers. Then the judgment of the Privy Council proceeds :

The judgment of the Privy Council proceeds upon the grounds that the subject was not falling within any of the subsections of section 92 and was therefore within the power of the Dominion parliament as a matter pertaining to the peace, order and good government of Canada.

But if this matter of the regulation of coaling vessels would not come under the head of 'the regulation of trade and commerce' or 'navigation and shipping,' still it might come under the head of 'peace, order and good government.' Why not? Here is a conflict every day at these collieries between the company and the steamship owners and the sailing vessels, so that this government should have the power to make some kind of regulation that would do justice to the owners of the sailing vessels. The subject is, of course, a difficult one, but all these matters are difficult to deal with. Frequently in such matters we have the Supreme Court of Canada giving one opinion and the Privy Council another, but on the whole I think that our Supreme Court has passed upon them very fairly. If the government have any doubts, I would suggest that a test case be made and sent to the Supreme Court. The matter is one of great concern to a great number of people who have large sums invested in sailing vessels. It is of importance not only to these men, but to every man who consumes coal in Canada. To-day it is agitating the people in the maritime provinces. To-morrow it may become a live question in Saskatchewan or Alberta or British Columbia. I think, therefore, that the government should take it up at once and deal with it. Let them submit the question to the Supreme Court, if they have doubts of their jurisdiction, and if not satisfied with the decision of the Supreme Court let them appeal it to the Privy Council.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. What solution by way of legislation, provided this parliament has power, would the hon. gentleman suggest?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I understand from shipping men that in the coal ports of the United States there is a regulation providing that every vessel shall receive its cargo in turn.

Mr. BRODEUR. On private property?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Yes. There is one exception, and that is bunker coal for steamers which are leaving port—these steamers have the preference, and I believe they are the only vessels in American ports that have the preference.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). This is a difficulty which occasions great hardship in the maritime provinces. It was a special grievance last year. I asked a question about this in April and the minister told me that it was 'under consideration.' I hope this question is not to be kept under consideration indefinitely. I also asked for the correspondence, but the correspondence has not been brought down. Now, the session is drawing to a close, and this is a very important matter, and should be attended to. I called the attention of the government to a resolution of the Board of Trade of Charlottetown, which had been sent me. I also received a copy of a resolution from the legislature of Prince Edward Island. In view of these representations and of the very serious importance of the matter to the people of the maritime provinces of this question, I sincerely hope the government will find some way of overcoming the difficulty. I have here letters and petitions to show the very grave nature of this grievance to shipowners and masters and to the people generally. First, let me read a letter signed by Charles Reid:

Sir,—The system of loading vessels at coal piers is as tyrannical and out of date as the feudal system. Canadian vessels are not allowed coals as a rule, while a Norwegian steamer is at the same pier, and in many cases, coal is kept from Canadian vessels until the 'Norman' arrives.

Schooners sometimes have been known to wait until the Norwegian steamer has made two voyages to Montreal. Captain Fred. Peters, of Summerside, can testify, as he is one of the captains who has had this experience.

That is, the steamer loaded, went to Montreal, came back and got a second cargo before the sailing vessel could get a pound of coal:

Why should Canadians be driven from Canadian waters?——

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. At what colliery did that occur?

Mr. A. MARTIN. This is dated Brulé Shore, Tatamagouche, Colchester County, N.S., November 29, 1907.

Mr. JOHNSTON. What colliery?

Mr. A. MARTIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Johnston) will hunt up some information that will suit him and will help him to speak, as he is generally ready to do in season and out of season.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I will hunt up the facts.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Your facts are often very doubtful. The letter proceeds:

Are we an inferior race or are we not a law-abiding people? What is the cause of such treatment? During the days of wooden ships we had as fine a fleet and as brave and noble a class of seamen as ever ploughed a sea. Why should all this wealth have passed away? Is it merely because wooden ships are a thing of the past? Nay, but on account of our 'shipping laws.'

Again, are not our home vessels a benefit to Canadians generally? As soon as they all disappear, the consequences will be experienced. Notice the towns situated away from the coast pay a higher rate of freight than freight sent past that inland town to one on the coast. What is the cause? Because places situated on the coast have their own vessels and water competition. Why should we be deprived of our birthright for the benefit of a few moneyed people not resident in Canada? We Canadian seamen have no desire to leave our Canadian homes, although we would be welcomed and could hold property in the United States ships. But what we want is our rights, and not until then will we be a contented and happy people.

Mr. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.)

And here is a letter signed by fourteen captains at Port Hastings—I suppose the hon. gentleman is familiar with that place:

The following letter known as the 'captains' protest,' which might be regarded as the first gun in the campaign for the protection of Canadian shipping, like the shot 'at Lexington which was heard around the world,' was published in the Halifax 'Morning Chronicle,' Halifax 'Herald,' Lunenburg 'Daily News,' Sydney 'Post,' Sydney 'Record,' the 'Coast Guard' (edited by M. H. Nickerson, M.P.P.), and other maritime province and Quebec journals.

To the Editor—

Sir,—As your paper has always taken a deep interest in the shipping of our country, kindly publish this letter to show to the people of Canada how our coasting sailing vessels and owners are being ruined and our flag driven from our waters, and a foreign flag and shipping encouraged in our ports.

We, the undersigned captains of fourteen schooners have been at Port Hastings waiting for cargoes of coal. Some of us have waited for twelve days, and some were promised coal this week. Superintendent McGillivray, of the Inverness Railway and Coal Company, was at Port Hastings Thursday, the 19th instant. We waited on him, and all the satisfaction we got from him was that we would get no coal until navigation closed up the St. Lawrence. One captain wanted to buy a barrel of coal for his vessel's use, and was told by the superintendent that he would not get a barrel or pound of coal until the St. Lawrence was frozen up.

That must have been very cheering to the hon. member for Cape Breton, who champions this injustice. I think it is very cruel treatment that a sailing vessel cannot get a barrel of coal to keep the fire going in the forecastle. Letter goes on to say:

While we have been treated in this manner, a Norwegian steamer, manned by Norwegians, and flying the Norwegian flag, hauled into the dock, and was loaded with over 3,000 tons of coal, and left Tuesday evening, and another Norwegian steamer hauled into the dock the following day and is being loaded.

A good many of us are in the coal carrying trade, and some of us buy cargoes and have regular customers waiting for coal, and as we cannot afford to wait until the St. Lawrence freezes up, we are compelled to leave the port of Hastings to-day.

We trust that the members of the Dominion and local parliaments as well as the Halifax and other boards of trade and the newspapers, will come to our assistance.

On receiving such shabby treatment from the superintendent of the Inverness Railway and Coal Company, we wired to C. W. Spencer, general manager, Montreal, on the 19th instant.

Have booked here ten days for coal, wire it in ten load schooners or not. Have been promised coal Monday.

(Sgd.) L. GERRIOR,
and thirteen other schooner masters.

Not receiving any reply to this, we wired again to C. W. Spencer at Montreal, on the 20th instant, as follows:

Superintendent McGillivray advises no coal to schooners until St. Lawrence closes. Please answer yesterday's telegram. Must we apply Toronto office.

(Sgd.) L. GERRIOR,
and thirteen other schooner masters.

The above is signed by the following named captains: S. Boutillier, Jef. Forgeron, J. White, C. Chasson, A. Biott, C. S. Sangster, E. Sampson, B. Davis, L. Hubley, L. Rafuse, H. Deong, Mr. Boudrot, Mr. Landry, P. McCarthy. I think that letter from the owners and captains of vessels shows that they have suffered great hardship in the treatment they have received, and I think the government owes it to these people to provide some redress. It is not enough to say that the matter is under consideration. The minister asked my colleague what he was going to do about it. Now I have taken some pains to study this question, and I have consulted the Shipping Act in the revised statutes. I think that if the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not give the matter his attention, the Minister of Justice will acknowledge on reading this Shipping Act that there is a remedy, and that the remedy is in the hands of the government, whether they choose to exercise it or not. I have taken pains to prepare a summary of the provisions of the several sections of chapter 113 of the revised statutes known as the Shipping Act, which I will read:

Section 857. Harbour master appointed by Governor in Council.

Section 853. Governor in Council by regulation defines powers and duties of harbour master.

Section 854. Governor in Council may make regulations for government of any harbour (at ports of Quebec, Montreal, Three Rivers, Toronto, Halifax, Pictou and St. John, New Brunswick, application must be made by local authorities to Governor in Council for rules and regulations.)

I presume from reading this section that the government has the power to make regulations. Of course the application must be made.

Section 871. Governor in Council may determine at what ports wardens are required.

Section 875. Defines duties of port warden.

Section 900. Port warden should perform all duties assigned to him by Governor in Council.

Section 909. Defines duties of masters and port wardens.

There is nothing in the Shipping Act to regulate the rotation of loading or discharging of cargoes; but that comes under the rules and regulations made by the Governor in Council for the guidance of the port warden or harbour master, as the case may be, in each port. Consequently, in the case in point, the port warden is at fault if he has received regulations. He either violated the rules and regulations, in which case he is answerable to the Minister of Marine, or else the government failed to set down rules and regulations for his guidance. Now, I leave the minister on either horn of the dilemma. If he has not set down the rules, the department is to blame; if he has, the port warden or the harbour master has failed to carry out these regulations. This is a very important question, inasmuch as it has occasioned great loss to many people. The season is now far advanced, and if there is next season a recurrence of these tyrannical proceedings in those ports, there will be trouble. I think it devolves upon the government to solve the difficulty in order to prevent threatened trouble.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). This trouble of the detention of vessels at piers at the various mines is an old grievance in the coal trade. I remember some years ago when there were a good many sailing vessels in the business, that frequently at the larger coal piers and shipping points there was a detention to some sailing vessels sometimes of five or six weeks, occasioned by other sailing vessels and larger ships getting a preference in obtaining cargoes of coal for larger ports of consumption. At a certain time of the year large sailing ships took cargoes for the St. Lawrence, and as the period of navigation closed at a certain time, it was necessary to give them despatch in order that they might reach their destination on the St. Lawrence in time. Undoubtedly a grievance existed. In my opinion a remedy might be found in two ways.

Mr. A. MARTIN. What does the hon. gentleman make of this statement I have read?

Mr. WM. ROCHE. I will come to that in a moment. I am now speaking of the conditions which existed twenty or thirty years or more ago. There was also more or less detention at coal piers owing to the circumstances I have mentioned. The great grievance which existed then was that when steamers began to ply in the coal trade and came to a pier, the master of the pier, or dock master, prevented the sailing vessels which had taken part of a cargo from taking the rest of it. Frequently when a vessel was partially loaded, steamers came in and the vessel had to haul away from under the coal chute without obtaining her cargo. Now if a certain number of chutes at these larger piers were devoted to serving small vessels, a great part of the grievance would be removed.

Another regulation might be made that no steamer ought to return and take on a second cargo until the vessels which were present at the pier before she loaded are loaded. As has been observed by my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. A. A. McLean), it is a great vexation and annoyance to the masters of vessels lying at piers for them to observe one of these steamers being filled with a cargo, perhaps ten times as much as these vessels hold, take her cargo up the St. Lawrence and come back again before these vessels have been loaded. The advent of the big cargo steamers has made a great change in the coal trade. The requirements of the St. Lawrence, no doubt, demanded vessels of a larger size. Formerly the largest cargo was probably 1,000 tons, but to-day, there are these Norwegian steamers that carry 6,000 tons. Some of the mines have so arranged that they shall have a steamer under the chutes all the time and that means that vessels that intervene can get no loads, because, when one steamer is loaded and moves away, another one takes her place ; this goes on in rotation and the result is that these smaller vessels are not loaded. It is true that these vessels carrying large cargoes are under foreign flags, largely the Norwegian flag, but how this government is to intervene and prevent the owners of the mines from transporting their own products in their own way, I do not know. I do not know that the remedy is in the hands of the government. But, there is a question in regard to the supply of the St. Lawrence —the supply of Montreal and Quebec— and that is that these large centres require large quantities of coal and as a result a difficulty arises in connection with supplying the smaller ports in Nova Scotia. Before the period of navigation closes these large centres must obtain their coal and, notwithstanding that they have a large supply of tonnage, there are ports in the maritime provinces that receive no coal. Not only is there a grievance on the part of the owners of the small vessels but there is a grievance on the part of the smaller ports because the consumers of coal in these places do not receive the product that they require. They are practically the owners of the coal themselves as being resident in the province of Nova Scotia which is blessed by having a large supply and they naturally feel that they have a grievance because, as owners of the product under the ground, they are not in a position to receive the supply which they require and because they have to pay a larger price for that commodity. I do not intend to enter into the legal question or to discuss the point as to whether this government can provide a remedy for this grievance. The grievance undoubtedly does exist. It may partly remedy it to provide that no steamer shall receive her second cargo until the vessels that are at the piers at the time of her loading receive the quantity they require. Whether this government can enforce a regulation of that kind or whether it is the prerogative of the local government, I do not know. But, there is a very strong objection urged : Why should not the proprietor of the coal mine be able to sell and provide for the conveyance of the product to the place of destination ? Certainly the demands of the sellers of the product are first to be provided for. In olden times, when there was too great an accumulation of vessels at the mines, the mine owners themselves stopped the delivery to vessels going foreign. Newfoundland sealers and vessels that made sea voyages came over to North Sydney and no other vessels could obtain cargo. The owners of the mines intervened and saw to it that the smaller vessels accumulated around the piers should be loaded before the Newfoundlanders came upon the scene. Something of that kind could be done by the voluntary action of the mine owners provided the government made representations to them that the wants of the vessels in the country and the wants of the small places consuming coal should first be satisfied.

Mr. ANGUS McLENNAN (Inverness). Port Hastings, that very important coaling station, happening to be in the county I have the honour to represent, I wish to say a few words in connection with the complaint mentioned in the letters and other papers referred to by the hon. member for Queens, Prince Edward Island (Mr. A. A. McLean), It seemed to me as if these gentlemen had exhausted the grievances of Prince Edward Island and, like Alexander, had gone abroad for other worlds to conquer. It would seem to me also that a certain gentleman has called perhaps, undue attention to any trouble in regard to the shipping of coal at Port Hastings. There is one particular point in connection with the agitation which has been set on foot that I would like to mention. A Mr. Alexander G. Bailey has been very much in evidence in the press for a number of months past and I may say, in order that the House may understand the matter, that there is something back of Mr. Bailey's agitation and it is this : Mr. Bailey was sales agent for the Inverness Coal Company, and, for some reason, the Inverness Coal Company dispensed with the services of that gentleman. From that day on every thing has gone wrong at Port Hastings with the shipping pier of the Inverness Coal Company. Nothing, in fact, in the eyes of Mr. Bailey, has been right since then. But, it must be conceded that there are occasions when there is a considerable congestion of shipping at the various shipping piers of the coal companies, and I may say, in passing, that the shipping and selling of coal have always been held, and rightly so, to be a private enterprise. What the government of the province or of this Dominion can have to do with a private enterprise of that character I fail to see. If there were any means by which the Dominion government or any of the provincial governments could do anything to rectify any grievance that might exist in this connection no person would be better pleased than myself, but, like all other lines of business I think that this mining business will adjust itself. There are occasions, particularly in the fall of the year, when coal is very much in demand, and when there is, consequently, great congestion at the shipping piers. It is something like the shipping of wheat in the west. All the lines of railway are pressed into the service and while they are not equal to the task of shipping the grain out of that part of the country just as speedily as the producers would like them to do, no person would say that the railways are not doing the best they can. So are the coal mining companies. There is one feature in connection with the selling and shipping of coal and that is that there are two markets—the local market and the distant, or foreign market. There was hitherto considerable competition among the Nova Scotia coal companies for the St. Lawrence market but fortunately for the coal trade and for the owners of sailing vessels the growth and extent of the local market which is supplied by the sailing vessels, is convincing the coal producers that it is fast becoming a very valuable market and that it requires recognition from them. Only the other day I was speaking with Mr. D. D. Mann, of the Inverness Coal Company, and he assured me that so profitable was the local market becoming that his company had made up their mind that it would be a case of first come first served as regards sailing vessels or steamrs at their shipping ports. The Mabou mine, another valuable mine in Inverness county, has vigorously started out to produce coal, and they advertise that as between the sailing vessel and the steamer it will also be a case of first come first served. There is another feature in connection with this congestion of shipping at Port Hastings and other Inverness coal ports which I might call the attention of the House to, and that is the very great superiority of the coal produced there.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). This question has been frequently discussed in the press of the maritime provinces and in the legislatures as well. The hon. gentleman who brought the matter to the attention of the House has not seen fit to suggest to the minister—that is providing this parliament has any power to deal with the question—any remedy. It has been said that in the United States certain customs exist at the coal loading ports, but as to that we have no evidence, and it does seem as if, before the subject was brought forward as it has been, the hon. gentlemen from Prince Edward Island should have been able to suggest some remedy for the grievance. For various reasons, last year was a peculiar year in the coal trade of Nova Scotia. Owing to the lateness of the opening of navigation on the St. Lawrence the coal companies could not begin to fill their contracts until late in June, and as the trade with the St. Lawrence has been increasing greatly during the past ten years, and as there were very large orders last year, the time for the delivery of the coal was more limited than in previous years. Again, in the Springhill mines in Cumberland county, one of the largest coal producing mines in Nova Scotia outside of the island of Cape Breton, there was a strike, and in consequence there was a tremendous demand on the capacity of the mines in Pictou county, Inverness county, and Cape Breton county. While these gentlemen who have written in the press so vigorously had doubtless a grievance, yet it is only fair to remember the conditions under which the coal trade of the province was conducted last year. In conjunction with the causes I have mentioned, there is the further cause that the small consumers in the various provinces locally, did not attempt to get their supply of coal until late in the season, and having waited with their orders until the last minute there was more difficulty in supplying them. I do not think any one has the right to assume that the coal companies deliberately intend to discriminate in this matter. Under ordinary conditions and if the opportunities for shipping were normal in each year, there is no doubt that the coal companies would do all in their power to supply anybody and everybody who might come along. We have had a great development in the coal trade of Nova Scotia in recent years, a developuent which did not take place during the time our friends opposite were in power although they claimed to be the friends of the coal industry ; a development which awaited the coming into power of the present government. Then coal areas which for many years remained untouched were brought into operation, and as a consequence new companies were pressing for business and making contracts to sell coal here and there so as to dispose of the immensely increased production. I might point out that the complaints which my hon. friends have given vent to to-day have no bearing against the coal companies in the county I have the honour to represent, or in the county of Cape Breton, but were confined to the county of Inverness. In proof of the fact that there was some discrimination there a letter was produced from the manager of one of the mines to the effect that it was impossible for them to supply coal locally until the St. Lawrence was frozen over, which meant that this Inverness Coal and Railway Company had taken large contracts in Montreal which under the conditions of the shortened season of navigation it was encumbent on them to fill. Taking into account the abnormal season of last year and the deferring until the last minute of local coal orders, the natural result was that vessel owners might expect some difficulty in getting supplies. But they were not the only people who experienced this difficulty because those who got supplies by rail throughout the province met with the same experience. If there was any evidence of a determined discrimination on the part of the coal companies against the small dealers a remedy would have to be found in some way, but I do not think there is evidence of any such thing. As a matter of fact, I can tell my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island that I will undertake to be answerable for any coal companies in Pictou county, that they will supply all the schooners that can be sent over this summer.

Hon. R. LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). My constituents in the Magdalen Islands are making the same complaints that have been voiced here this afternoon, and I would like to ask my hon. friend (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) if he will give a guarantee that the people of the Magdalen Islands will be supplied with coal, just as he has promised that the people of Prince Edward Island will get a supply.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I have the greatest pleasure in assuring the Postmaster General that the only mistake his constituents have made in the past has been that they have not come to the right place for coal, and that if they come to the county of Pictou they will get their coal without any delay or difficulty. Complaints have been made in regard to Norwegian vessels engaging in this trade. I am sure that my hon. friend who mentioned these vessels failed to apprehend that there is not the slightest connection between the usual supply of coal to schooners and the participation of the Norwegian vessels in the St. Lawrence trade. Unfortunately we have not in the mercantile marine of the maritime provinces or of Canada to-day, one-fourth the number of vessels registered under the British flag that are necessary to carry the quantity of coal which we send up the St. Lawrence from the province of Nova Scotia every year, and perforce we have to go abroad in order to get the necessary vessels. We would of course prefer to get those sailing under the British flag, but our people have to get them wherever they can get them; and as we send up the St. Lawrence between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 tons of coal every year, and as this has to be moved within the space of three or four months, I would like to ask the hon. gentlemen who suggest too quick a method of removing from our Canadian waters the vessels sailing under a foreign flag which are engaged in this coal trade, to take into consideration the question where the vessels are going to come from to supply the deficiency, so as to make sure that that coal will be sent up the St. Lawrence every year; because that trade is absolutely essential to the development of the coal mining industry of Nova Scotia. The difficulty to which my hon. friend referred is one which has no relation to any other province, and it must be worked out with the greatest possible care, realizing that, until we have in Canada a sufficient supply of vessels for the purpose, it will be imperilling the coal industry of Nova Scotia to take too drastic measures with regard to the vessels at present engaged in that trade. I only rose, as representing a coal producing county, to point out to the House and the country generally, that, so far as the county that I have the honour to represent is concerned, there has always been fair treatment accorded to schooners carrying coal. I will not express any opinion as to the right of this parliament to deal with this question. It is a grave and somewhat unique question. It is a matter of uncertainty whether this parliament can deal with the rights of lessees in the province of Nova Scotia in regard to the disposition of their products in the ordinary way, because, after all, that is the problem. It seems to me, however, that this discussion must elicit the fact that the difficulty which occurred last year is not one that is general or is likely to continue, but has been due to the peculiar conditions of last year, which I hope will not be found to arise in this or in any future year.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, this is an important question, particularly to the maritime provinces, where it is a more live question than it is in other parts of the country. But the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) has been a little too serious in complaining that neither of our hon. friends from Prince Edward Island suggested a remedy, because it was not a remedy which these hon. gentlemen wanted.

Mr. A. MARTIN. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I suggested a remedy. I do not think the hon. gentleman has a right to attribute motives to me in taking up this question. If his motives are not correct, it is not for him to say that mine are not correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My hon. friend is quite astray; he has not suggested any remedy at all. If my hon. friend had desired a remedy, he would have moved in an altogether different channel. There are certain people who could have remedied this matter; there are people who as a matter of fact have remedied it as far as it can be remedied, but not as a result of any representation from Prince Edward Island.

Mr. A. MARTIN. If you have a remedy, tell us what it is.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I certainly have a remedy, and I will tell it to my hon. friend; but I shall disappoint him—I shall spoil his little game. Now, I understand that representations were made to my hon. friend in regard to this matter some time ago. Am I not correct ?

Mr. A. MARTIN. What representations do you refer to ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Were there no representations made to my hon. friend ?

Mr. A. MARTIN. If you know what the representations were, tell it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have an idea.

Mr. A. MARTIN. An idea ? You have no idea in your head.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It is getting a little too warm for my hon. friend ; but he must not complain if he is told the truth, occasionally.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. So far as I am concerned, I want to tell the hon. gentleman that no representations were made to me except those which come from the legislature of Prince Edward Island and from the captains whose petition I read to the House.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I can say the same thing, and I would like to know now what representations the hon. gentleman refers to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I understood that my hon. friends from Prince Edward Island were speaking this afternoon as a result of certain representations which had been made to them. If no representations have been made to them, I can quite understand their position. I take it, then, that the fact that no representations have been made to them accounts for the extraordinary position they take.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I do not want the hon. gentleman to put words into my mouth. I told him distinctly that no representations were made to me except what I referred to when I spoke.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Then I am to assume that representations were made to my hon. friend in regard to this matter. If representations had been made to my hon. friend, as I am bound to assume they were——

Mr. A. MARTIN. Your representations don't fit.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I was right, it is evident, when I assumed earlier that the facts were the last thing my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Martin) desired with regard to this question. It was not a remedy for this alleged grievance that my hon. friend desired.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. What representations does the hon. gentleman refer to ? I do not know what he means.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am satisfied now none were made to my hon. friend. Alter he had finished his operations a little while ago, I came to the conclusion that none had been made to him. His remarks showed such an absolute want of knowledge on the question, that I cannot imagine he had received any representations. As my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) has pointed out, the immediate question arose in connection with the difficulty at Port Hastings last fall. As my hon. friend has pointed out, the Dominion Coal Company have made special provisions for attending to the class of shipping referred to this afternoon. Some years ago a question arose of alleged discrimination against sailing vessels, but steps were taken by those interested to provide a remedy. Representations, for instance, had been made to myself, but when they were, I did not take the course followed by my hon. friend. I did not conceal the representations in my pocket, but went with them to the people who could remedy the grievance. I went to the operators of the mines in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, who are reasonable people ; and I may tell my hon. friend something perhaps he does not know, and that is that every coal operator in Nova Scotia is anxious to accommodate this particular trade of which he speaks. It is a profitable trade for them. There is not a coal operator who would not be pleased to be in a position to deal with it. I made representations some three or four years ago to the Dominion Coal Company, and that company took steps to provide specially for the accommodation of this particular class of traffic about which my hon. friend is so much concerned. I can tell him that the Dominion Coal Company all last year were advertising in the newspapers for schooners to come to the coal pier which the company had constructed specially for the accommodation of this class of shipping, and a large number of these schooners did come. The company were prepared to accommodate more than they were able to get. At the other piers of the company there were from time to time people who represented that they had not been properly treated. I made representations to the company, and they assured me that during the coming season they will, at least three days in the week, give preference to the particular class of craft referred to. If my hon. friend had been interested in this question in any other respect than as a grievance, he would have sought some information from the people engaged in the trade, and he would have found out that they are making provision to the best of their ability for the accommodation of this traffic. My hon. friend ought to know that the coal companies in Nova Scotia have, in order to keep their men about them, to go into the markets in advance and sell their coal. They go out months in advance in order to find a market and enter into contracts for the supply of coal. and if they fail to deliver according to contract they are under a forfeit. And it might well happen that when a schooner arrives on a certain day, there is no coal available on that particular day because the company has already sold that day's supply and is under contract to deliver it to a buyer who bought it perhaps months in advance. These are some of the difficulties. They were correctly outlined by my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Roche) a short time ago, when he pointed out that it is somewhat difficult to say to any company engaged in coal mining that it cannot make provision for the sale and transportation of its own coal. The coal companies charter their own fleets of steamers, sell their own coal, and carry it on those steamers. In no other way can they successfully conduct their operations. The St. Lawrence market is the one upon which, in the main, the collieries of Nova Scotia depend, and the main portion of the coal mined in Nova Scotia must be marketed in the St. Lawrence, and marketed not by the particular class of craft referred to, but by large steamers. So far as the grievances of the schooners are concerned, they have been removed as far as possible. I have consulted not alone the Dominion Coal Company but other proprietors in Nova Scotia, and they all assure me that they were willing to go to the extent to accommodate this particular class of vessels. During the coming season they are going to lay themselves out still further to meet the demands made upon them. I would say to my hon. friend, the Postmaster General, who wrote me a short time ago, that I have directed the attention of the Dominion Coal Company in my county to the representations made by him. The general sales agent of the company assured me not later than last night, that if schooners from the constituency of the Postmaster General were in need of coal, he would be prepared to accommodate them during the coming season. Any impartial observer who takes the trouble to ascertain the facts, must admit that reasonable efforts are being made by the coal companies to meet the demands upon them.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I do not wish to interfere in the debate except to say that a few days ago I received a letter from the local member for the Magdalen Islands complaining of the trouble experienced in the last few years in getting coal from the collieries in Cape Breton, and he wanted me to see my hon. friend who represents Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) and endeavour to have satisfactory provisions made for the future. After talking the matter over with my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) and my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), I was glad to learn that they will do their best with the collieries so as to have the people from Magdalen Island accommodated. I have the fullest confidence in my hon. friend's judgment and good intentions, and the electors of Magdalen Island will be glad to know that in the future they will get their coal at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Kings, P. E. I.). There is no doubt that the owners and masters of small sailing vessels who were detained for weeks last autumn at Port Hastings and some other places where they were accustomed to get coal, and finally had to leave without cargoes, while they saw steamers arriving long after they had arrived, get cargoes and leave—there is no doubt that these men were subjected to loss and hardship and annoyance. They lost a trip of their vessels; they had to disappoint the customers to whom they expected to supply coal; and they had the annoyance of waiting there for some weeks and leaving, in many cases, without coal. This is a somewhat difficult thing to remedy. It appears that the demand for coal last year, at some of the coal ports was unusually large. This is one of the signs of the 'growing time.' I suppose that, in a growing country like this, where the demand for coal is increasing rapidly every year, some inconvenience will be experienced, particularly when vessels leave it somewhat late in the year before applying for their usual coal supply. The masters of these vessels did a reasonable thing, a natural thing, in applying where they thought they might find a remedy, in making their grievances known, in applying to the legislatures, and to the members of parliament. And the knowledge obtained in that way has perhaps resulted, or will result, in bringing about a remedy. For my own part, I have received several representations from captains on this subject. I have also received a resolution passed by the legislature of Prince Edward Island, and a resolution passed by the Board of Trade of Charlottetown. I have brought these resolutions to the notice of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and to the notice of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), because he is one of the ministers from the maritime provinces. But it appears to me that there was great difficulty in the government interfering in private business of that kind, and saying when and how and to whom the coal mine owners should sell coal, and in what way they should sell it. I am not learned in the law, but still I could see a difficulty in any government interfering in private business. Of course, I can imagine a condition of things arising that would be so important to the country that the government would be obliged to interfere for the greatest good of the people. But that condition, I am satisfied, has not yet arisen.

Now, in order to arrive at something practical in the way of a settlement of this difficulty during the present year, I made it my business to meet some of the directers of the coal companies from which the people of Prince Edward Island get their supplies. Mr. McLean, a director of the Port Hood mines was one of the directors I met. I represented this matter to him, and found that he had been considering it himself and with his co-directors. He told me that he was very much impressed with the representations that I and others made on the subject. He said that he believed his company in the future, would pay more attention to the supply of domestic consumers. They were looking at it from a business standpoint, and realizing that the domestic consumption of coal was increasing every year and would continue to increase, and that it would be a permanent demand, whereas by industrial concerns consumption of coal at Montreal or some of the other great points might be large one year and might fall off another year for causes, perhaps, general in their operations, he considered that it would be better for his company, which was supplying a good quality of coal, to cater first to the local domestic consumption, and then give the surplus, whatever it might be, to the industrial corporations in the large centres. He told me that, so far as his company was concerned, he believed it would pursue that course next year, and probably in the years to come. I also had occasion to speak to Mr. Mann, of the firm of Mackenzie & Mann, the owners of the Inverness mines. The Inverness coal, I may say, has an excellent reputation as a coal for domestic consumption; the people like to get it wherever it is possible to do so. And this was the colliery that caused the greatest congestion of sailing vessels last year. I pointed out the case to Mr. Mann. He told me that the company had had large orders for coal from the great consuming centres, such as Montreal and others; but he, too, recognized the importance of the domestic demand, and informed me that his company were taking steps to meet this domestic demand during the coming season. He thought that all reasonable objections would be removed, and intimated that, as far as possible, the local men should apply for their coal as early as possible in the season. Now, I think this was a practical way of going to work and a practical way of finding a remedy. I do not, of course, object to hon. gentlemen bringing up the matter in their own way and taking up a good deal of the time of parliament, but I really think the good work was all done before this afternoon and before the matter was brought up in the House. I am convinced that the grievance—a real grievance —that we complained of last year will be largely removed this year by the action of the coalmine owners themselves. And, if that can be brought about, that is a practical way and the best way of doing it. If that cannot be brought about, and if there is great hardship inflicted upon the people for the want of coal, I presume that parliament would have to interfere. But I hope and trust—and I believe—that such a condition will not arise.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Lunenburg). I have heard complaints in my constituency similar to that made by the two hon. members for Prince Edward Island this afternoon. But, whatever be the justification for these complaints, I submit that it is not a fair matter for discussion in this House and I suspect very strongly that the hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken regarding the alleged discrimination, against sailing vessels are rather interested in votes than in coal. I cannot imagine what authority this parliament would have to deal with the subject. It is clearly a case which would come within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature. I assume that this might very easily be done by an amendment of the charter of the various coal companies operating in Nova Scotia.

Now, this matter was discussed in the Nova Scotia provincial assembly just a few weeks ago. One of the chief promoters of the agitation against certain of the collieries of Nova Scotia was Mr. Moses H. Nickerson, who moved a resolution asking the Nova Scotia legislature to inquire into this grievance and as to the facts alleged against the collieries. In moving his resolution, he expressly stated that, upon investigation, the charges related only to the Inverness Coal and Railway Company. That resolution was supported by the legislature of Nova Scotia unanimously. It was accepted by the premier of Nova Scotia. The resolution asked that the government take steps to ascertain the facts, and then, after learning all the facts, to deal with it if the facts seemed to justify intervention. The Premier of Nova Scotia, in closing his remarks, states :

> However the situation might be in that particular, he was personally only too pleased to endorse the resolution calling upon the government to take steps to ascertain the facts, and after they obtained the facts they could determine the remedy, if any there was, under the powers of the provincial government.

Now, I submit that it is the provincial government of Nova Scotia alone which can deal with an issue of this kind, and that seems to be the opinion of the members of the legislature of that province, on both sides. In looking at the discussion upon this question I was impressed with a statement made by the member for Inverness, who I think put the matter very well, and along the same lines as was done this afternoon by the member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan):

Hon. Mr. Macdonald said he was in full sympathy with the owners of schooners employed in carrying coal, and when this agitation was coming on he thought the coal companies were at fault, and in order to satisfy himself he made a private investigation into the matter. One thing he found was that owing to the lateness of the spring last year the coal companies—he referred particularly to the Inverness and Richmond Company—notified their customers in the maritime provinces that they were prepared to load any class of vessels with despatch in the month of May and up to the time that navigation opened in the St. Lawrence, but they met with no response. As a matter of fact, up to the middle of June, very little shipping was done. It must be remembered that in order to keep their mines in operation they had to make contracts for the delivery of coal up the St. Lawrence, as had all the companies in the island of Cape Breton, and they sent that notification out for the purpose of relieving the pressure when navigation opened in the St. Lawrence so that they would be that much ahead. But there was no response to the notice, and the schooners did not appear in any numbers, and as the result when the St. Lawrence cleared, they at once went to work filling there contracts for shipment up the St. Lawrence with as much despatch as possible. It must be remembered that as the result of the operation of these mines our people enjoyed good markets and steady employment, but the mines could not be operated if the company were prevented from filling their contracts.

Further on he says:

There had been accusations made against this particular company, but he maintained they were not well founded. He knew how this crusade started, and he could give some explanation of the motives behind it, but he would omit that for the present. Referring to the matter of the refusal of the company to supply a schooner with a barrel of coal——

Which alleged charge was referred to by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. A. Martin) this afternoon. The speaker said:

—he had investigated that, and the manager explained that he considered the request a joke. He was explaining the matter to the captains and trying to show them how impossible it was for him at that time to do any better than he was doing. He was up against a large contract that he was bound to fulfil or pay the penalty. If he had any choice in the matter he would prefer the market in the maritime provinces, for one reason because the prices were better and it was in the interests of the company to sell as much coal in the maritime provinces as possible, but the contracts for delivery up the St. Lawrence were necessary to keep the mine in operation and they had to be filled.

Now, I think that statement is a clear explanation on behalf of the Inverness Coal and Railway Company, which seems to have been the only colliery complained of during the last season. Since this matter has been brought to the attention of the Nova Scotia legislature, the only body authorized or competent to deal with it, I think we had better leave it with them, and because it is a matter with which this House has nothing to do either one way or the other.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). This question was brought some time ago to the attention of the department. I believe it was in the beginning of February that complaints reached the department to the effect that sailing vessels were discriminated against in loading coal at the collieries. At first we thought it was not possible for us to deal with this question except in cases where the wharfs or piers at which these vessels were loading, were under the control of the department. I caused some inquiries to be made from one of the complainants, who informed the department that the piers where they had been delayed belonged to the Dominion Coal Company, the Nova Scotia Steel Company, and also the Inverness Coal Company and the Acadian Coal Company at Pictou. He did not give, however, a statement of the dates when the delays occurred, he only mentioned those collieries as being those at which some delays occurred, without giving those other particulars. I thought it proper to communicate with our agent in Halifax, Mr. Parsons, in order to ascertain the nature of the complaints and whether it was possible to do anything in the matter. I received an answer from Mr. Parsons to the effect that these piers were all private property, that they were in no sense under the control of this government. If these piers at which sailing vessels were calling were government property, of course we might adopt some regulation that would meet the situation. But they all belong to the coal companies, and consequently the owners can do as they like. Now my hon. friend wants this government to regulate the way in which these mine owners shall sell and deliver their coal. That would be a very serious step to take; I do not know whether my hon. friend has given the matter all the consideration it deserves, I suppose he has done so. But once we undertake to interfere with the civil rights of any citizen in this country under the pretext of regulating trade, we enter upon a very serious undertaking. A citizen of the hon. gentleman's province is raising wheat, or oats, or potatoes, and he is certainly free to sell his produce in any way he likes; and what would my hon. friend think if this government were to frame a law by which a citizen of that province was obliged to deliver his grain or vegetables in such manner as this government thought best?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Does not this government undertake to regulate trade in canned meats, for instance hogs and pork?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is true that we are regulating the sale of these things, we are regulating what should constitute the weight of a bushel of corn, or a bushel of potatoes, and what shall constitute a ton of coal. But what would he think of a law by which farmers were obliged to deliver their oats or potatoes in the quantity or to the person designated by this government. I am afraid that would be a dangerous step to take.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Is it not a fact that at Fort William and Port Arthur where the Canadian Pacific Railway and other private companies have elevators, the steamers have the privilege of loading in their regular turn, under a regulation of this government?

Mr. BRODEUR. Those harbours are public property.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Are not the elevators public property?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, the elevators are not public property.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Has not the Governor in Council power to regulate the way in which business is done at these harbours?

Mr. BRODEUR. Where it is a public harbour or a public wharf well and good ; we have the right to interfere and to see that every one is treated in the same way, that vessels can load or unload in their turn, but where it is a private property, as is the case here, it is another matter.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Are the Canadian Pacific Railway elevators private elevators ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think so, but they are in a public harbour. Take the case of these private wharfs, my hon. friend wants to force these collieries by legislation, to deliver coal to anybody who will go to one of their wharfs.

Mr. A. MARTIN. In their turn.

Mr. BRODEUR. Not only in their turn, but absolutely. Suppose my hon. friend were the owner of a vessel there and they would not do any business with him, how could he force them to ?

Mr. A. MARTIN. They are there to do business with any person who pays the price of the coal. If he pays the price of the coal the government, as I read the Act, have the power to make regulations in regard to this as they have made them in regard to it at Montreal and some other points. If they have done it at these other points then I claim it is right they should do so here.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am only pointing out the difficulties that are in the way. Suppose my hon. friend is a farmer, and a merchant comes to him and says : I want to purchase five bushels of oats or potatoes. My hon. friend would say : No, I do not want to sell five bushels ; I want to sell a larger quantity.

Mr. A. MARTIN. It is not a case at all of refusing to sell. They advertise to sell and they are ready to sell, but they say : We are ready to sell to you but we will keep your vessels here until some other vessels which have come after you are loaded.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is not the point that I intended to make. Perhaps, when I have made it, the hon. gentleman will see the serious difficulties that are in the way. I do not say that I do not sympathize with the situation made to these smaller vessels, but I am trying to point out some of the difficulties. Returning to this illustration that I was going to give about the oats and potatoes, suppose that a merchant comes to my hon. friend and says : I want to purchase five bushels of potatoes, and my hon. friend says : No, I want to sell 100 bushels, or 200 bushels, or 1,000 bushels ; my hon. friend would be perfectly right in saying that. Potatoes and oats are just as much a necessity of life as coal is. Well then, my hon. friend sees the difficulties there are in the way of trying to force a private company to do business with a certain class of people in the way in which the government and parliament would like to have them do it. I am simply pointing out that difficulty. This is a question of property and civil rights. I think that the question has been dealt with in a proper manner by my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Maclean) and that, as he has pointed out, this is a question to be dealt with, not by this parliament, but by the province. The question is in the hands of the province. If it had been possible for us to have dealt with that question, if it had been a public wharf, I would have dealt with it immediately. When the correspondence is brought down my hon. friend will see that I took steps immediately to ascertain whether these were public wharfs or not. I wrote to the agent in Halifax in order to find out the situation and he says in his report that the situation which at present exists has existed for thirty years. Now, coming to the question which has been raised by the hon. member for Queen's, as to why we should not give the port wardens authority in the matter, I think that perhaps he has not given to that question the consideration which it deserves. Did I understand my hon. friend to say that we should pass regulations giving to the port wardens authority in the matter ?

Mr. A. MARTIN. I said that we have given authority to the port wardens at certain large ports, such as Quebec, Montreal, St. John and Halifax, and if we have done so at these ports I do not see why we should not give the same authority to the port wardens at other ports. The question I raised has not been answered by the minister because he refers to these as private wharves. I referred him to several private elevators where they are subjected to rules and regulations which compel them to permit the loading of vessels in turn and if such a regulation applies to elevators and if the Governor in Council has power to make such regulations I do not see why the government could not do the same with reference to vessels at these coal loading ports.

Mr. BRODEUR. As to this question of the port wardens, I see by section 875 of the Shipping Act, defining the duties and powers of port wardens, that the business which they have to perform does not at all relate to the point which my hon. friend wants to make:

> The port wardens shall, at the request of any person interested proceed in person on board of any vessel for the purpose of examining the condition and stowage of her cargo, and if there are any goods damaged on board of such vessel, he shall enquire, examine and ascertain the cause of such damage and make a memorandum thereof, and enter the same in full on the books of his office.

If my hon. friend reads the definition of the duties and powers of port wardens, in this Act, he will find that the duties of port wardens have absolutely nothing to do with the placing and loading of vessels in a harbour. All they have to do is to see that a vessel is properly loaded.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Does the minister pretend to tell me that the harbour master or port warden has not the power to say where a vessel shall lie in the harbour, what wharf she shall lie at or what position she shall take?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend was referring to the port wardens. I am trying to show him that the duties of the port warden, under the Act, do not cover the point which he was trying to make. His duties are absolutely different.

Mr. A. MARTIN. The minister is not answering my question.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am going to answer it. My hon. friend has been interrupting me and I am trying to make my points as quickly as possible, but, unfortunately, he goes faster than I do. He must see that the duties of the port warden have absolutely nothing to do with the question of whether we can force mine owners to load a sailing vessel or to discriminate between a sailing vessel and a steam vessel. As to the harbour masters, while they have the right to place vessels at public wharfs I do not think they have any jurisdiction over wharfs which are owned by private parties.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. They have the right to regulate any wharf whether it is public or private.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think my hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I am not mistaken because I have had experience with it as a lawyer and have had cases. They have the power to regulate a private wharf.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend says he has experience in the matter and I do not say he is wrong, but I always understood that it was only at public wharfs the harbour master has the right to determine the berthing of vessels. For instance, at Montreal harbour the harbour master there has a right to locate a vessel, but have we the right to say to the owner of a private wharf that a sailing vessel shall be loaded at such an hour and a steam vessel at such another hour? I do not think so.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. The hon. minister is begging the question. I never said that. I said that under the regulations passed by the Marine and Fisheries Department the harbour master had the power to regulate how a vessel shall conduct itself at any pier whether it is private or public.

Mr. BRODEUR. As to our constitutional right to deal with this question I fear it would be a serious step for us to undertake to regulate when and to whom a person shall sell his coal. I understand that the legislature of Nova Scotia is dealing with the question and I think it is much better to leave it in the hands of the provincial legislature than for this parliament to interfere, as it is a question of property and civil rights which falls under section 92 of the British North America Act rather than under section 91. I understand that some hon. members of the House have made representations to the coal companies about the matter and that is perhaps the proper way to deal with the question. In recent years there has been a great development of the coal trade. I remember that some years ago the industrial establishments of Montreal were using United States coal, but now I think that nearly all of it comes from Nova Scotia, and I should be sorry to see anything done which would restrict this trade and give opportunities to the Americans to take it up again. It is our duty to make every effort to encourage interprovincial trade and I am sure that the province of Prince Edward Island would be the first to manifest its desire in that direction. I have had the opportunity of discussing this matter with some of the coal mine owners and they have informed me that the conditions of the coal trade last year were exceptional and that there would be no grievance this year. In view of all this I think the complaint of the hon. gentleman is hardly a live grievance to-day.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.). The reply of the hon. minister is very unsatisfactory——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman having once spoken is out of order in rising to speak again.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens P.E.I.). I am not going to speak. I was about to say that the reply of the hon. minister——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is proceeding to make a speech.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.). I am not.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman says he is not, but he is proceeding to do so.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.). I desire to ask a question.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman desires to ask a question that is another matter.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.). I am going to ask the question if the minister thinks seriously that we should put these people in the hands of the coal owners who have dealt very tyrannically with them before. It may be something like the Japanese immigration ; you put yourselves in the hands of the Japanese——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman is proceeding to make a speech.

Mr. BLAIN. Before the House goes into Committee of Supply I have a matter to bring to the attention of the government, but it is now six o'clock.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

CUSTODY OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel). Mr. Speaker, on Friday last my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) directed the attention of the House to the fact that a large number of fire extinguishers had been purchased by this government during the past few years. Later on in the afternoon the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries took up the question in a personal explanation, and during the course of his remarks, which will be found on page 7901 of 'Hansard,' stated :

I sent over to the department for the file and I find that on July 20, 1906, Mr. Perreault applied to the depatment to sell some fire extinguishers, and on July 27, 1906, the letter which I have just quoted was written and signed by the deputy minister.

Further on in the discussion, after the hon. minister had quoted from the original file, Mr. Blain said :

I suppose the hon. gentleman would have no objection to lay the file on the table?

Some further discussion took place which ended in the hon. minister laying the file on the table of the House. Immediately the House adjourned for six o'clock, and I applied to the clerk for the file, which was courteously given to me, with the understanding that I would return it before the close of that evening's sitting, so that the clerk, having the custody of the file, could lock it up in his vault. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), on the following morning, Saturday morning, applied for the file. and was told that immediately after it had been returned to the clerk on Friday night, the minister had come for it and had taken it away. This morning I made application to the clerk for the file, and the clerk immediately corresponded with the minister, with the result that at three o'clock, when the House opened, the file was not here. It is only fair to say that the minister sent for me and said that he was quite willing to have the whole file copied and the copies laid on the table of the House. I said to my hon. friend that was not the point, but that the point was as to whether the hon. minister, having quoted extensively from an original file, and having laid that file upon the table of the House, and while it was in the custody of the clerk for the use of members, would have the right to make application to the clerk and take the file away, and refuse to return it to the custody of the clerk. If any minister of the Crown has the right to do that, it will be impossible for the members of this House on the opposition side to make any thorough examination of any file or of any great public question. The hon. minister had no right to take that file away otherwise than to use it as any other member of the House would use it, and with the distinct understanding that he would return it to the clerk so that other members of the House could have an opportunity to use it. I cannot understand why the hon. minister should not have been quite willing to leave the file with the clerk. Is there anything in it which the members of this House should not see? We have had a good deal of discussion recently in regard to original documents. We have been told that copies were as valuable for the discussion of public questions as originals; but we have found that that was not the case, because when the originals were brought down, after a contest in the House, they told a very different story from the copies. As to whether the originals will tell a different story from the copies in this case, I do not know, because I have had no opportunity as a private member to go fully over the file. I scanned it in the short time at my disposal. The file is a rather large one. The hon. minister has the original before him now. I take the ground that the minister has no more right to these public documents after they are placed on the table of the House and in the custody of the clerk than any other member of this House.

Mr. TALBOT. Will the hon. member allow me a question ? Suppose some business were to be transacted in the department in connection with some matters to which a part of this file referred, would not the minister be justified in calling that file back in order that he might transact that business?

Mr. BLAIN. I want to be courteous towards my hon. friend. There is a way of getting the file. There certainly is the way laid down by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior a few days ago in a discussion on this important question. In answer to my hon. friend I may say that if any great public investigation were going on, and the hon. minister required the original file, he could bring the matter up in the House, and I am sure that the House would unanimously say that the original documents should be used. But to say that after a document has been laid on the table of the House, any minister of the Crown has the right to go to the clerk and take it away, and to suggest that he would put a copy in place of it, is something which I am sure neither this House nor the people of Canada will tolerate. I have before me 'Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure,' which at page 461 says :

It has been laid down by the highest authorities that when a minister of the Crown quotes a public document in the House, and founds upon it an argument or an assertion, that document, if called for, ought to be produced. But it is allowable to repeat to the House information which is contained in a private communication. When such private papers are quoted in the House there is no rule requiring them to be laid on the table. The rule respecting the production of public papers, quoted by a minister of the Crown, is necessary to give the House the same information he possesses and enable it to come to a correct conclusion on a question.

That is the opinion of a gentleman whose authority of course is accepted by the right hon. the First Minister and every member of this House. I do not wish to detain the House at any length. This fire extinguisher question has created considerable excitement among the people. They are very much aroused at the idea that any man should sell fire extinguishers in so large a number to this government simply to be stored away in the city of Montreal. And, according to the correspondence, while they were stored away in Montreal, the department purchased other fire extinguishers. Mr. Charles Patton sold 600 at $15 each during 1903-4 and was paid $9,000. In 1907-8 he sold 100 more to this government at $15 each and received $1,500. And a new firm styled Patton & Crowe, sold 95 more at $15 a piece, and were paid $1,425. As to whether the Patton of Patton & Crowe is the original Charles Patton I do not know. I have had no opportunity of examining the file to ascertain if that be the case, but I presume that he is. However on that point I may be wrong. What explanation can the minister give why he should have stepped in and taken away the original documents, and then, in answer to myself, promise to bring down in a day or two, when the opportunity presented itself, copies of these original documents. I presume he will do so, but I repeat I am not aware that any minister of the Crown has the right, after having laid a file on the table and after having quoted extensively from it, to go to the clerk and take it away from him and say that he will replace it by copies. Let me just give one extract from the file, which will no doubt create some interest among members of this House and the people in general, as a sample of what the file held:

Ottawa, July 8, 1903.

Copy of an agreement.

For and in consideration of $1 and other good and valuable considerations, receipt acknowledged, the undersigned hereby agrees to and binds himself to pay C. S. Cameron the sum of $2,000 in the following manner: $1,000 on receipt of an order from the Department of Marine and Fisheries for 500 of my Star Glass-lined Chemical Fire Extinguishers, and a further $1,000 three months after date of the receipt of said order and pro rata thereof for any order.

CHARLES PATTON.

So we have reached the point in connection with these fire extinguishers when Mr. Patton is able, out of his payment of $15 for fire extinguishers to pay Mr. Cameron the handsome sum of $4 apiece for securing an order from the government.

Mr. TAYLOR. To whom does he agree to pay it?

Mr. BLAIN. To C. S. Cameron.

The above is a true copy of the agreement between Charles Patton and the undersigned.

C. S. CAMERON.

What happened ? Did Mr. Patton sell any fire extinguishers to the government ? Of course he did. An order was secured and $9,000 was paid. That is what the original document told us. I do not wish to take up the time of the House quoting any further extracts or copies from the letters on the file; but I say that, in fairness to the House and the country, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should place with the clerk the original file, so that every member of this House may have the opportunity of looking into it. It is no excuse for him to say he will give a copy. He might have had the right in the discussion to say that he would only lay on the table the letters he quoted—on which point I offer no opinion—but of his own free will he placed the whole file on the table and as I understood, put it in charge of the clerk of the House. Under the circumstances, I do not see that he has the right to take away again that file from the clerk. If after having laid the file on the table, he made application to the clerk before any other member had the opportunity of doing so, and carried away the file, he would thus deprive any other member of the right to look at it at all. After we have had so much discussion over the retention of public documents by this government, over their secrecy, and over their efforts to keep back original documents from the inspection of the House, and in view of the suspicions that have been aroused among hon. members on this side and the people owing to that secretive method, one would hardly expect that the hon. minister would think for a moment of keeping away this original file from inspection by the members of this House ; and I submit we have the right to expect that he will stand up in his place and agree to return the original file to the clerk, which he laid on the table in the discussion on Friday last.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I may say at the outset that I am extremely surprised at the unfairness which has just been exhibited by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain). I have never seen such an unfair presentation of a case. Let me state the facts and we shall then see whether my hon. friend was in the slightest degree justified in the statement he has just made and whether I have not shown, since this incident has occurred, the best good will possible to furnish to my hon. friend what information he wanted. What has occurred? Let me give you a sample of the manner in which my hon. friends opposite are disposed to carry out discussion in this House or outside, so far as the Department of Marine and Fisheries and myself are concerned. Insinuations—low, base insinuations——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The language is unparliamentary.

Mr. BRODEUR. I withdraw the word.

Mr. FOSTER. Two words.

Mr. BRODEUR. I withdraw the expression. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat knows very well that all my conduct with regard to this file has been most honourable. On Friday last the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), without having had the courtesy to give me notice, brought up this question of fire extinguishers which were bought from a Mr. Perreault, of Quebec, in 1906. He quoted from the report of the Civil Service Commission and the appendix to that report. And here is what he said:

Let me draw attention to a letter which he wrote——

He was speaking of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. But I might read the whole reference :

Last evening we listened to the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) eulogizing himself for the course he has pursued since he became minister of that department. Let me draw attention to a letter which he wrote, following the lines on which his predecessor had worked. It will be found in the report of the commissioners on page 79. It was written by the minister to Mr. Gregory at Quebec and was dated July 27, 1906:

So, you see, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Leeds stated that I had written the letter.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) read the whole of the letter ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, I shall be very glad to do so. The letter reads as follows :

I have to inform you that if you consider that chemical fire extinguishers are necessary on board the vessels of the Quebec agency you are to purchase them from P. E. Perreault, 312 St. John street, Quebec. Mr. Perreault has been advised to call upon you in connection with this matter.

And, later on, we have the following :

Mr. BRODEUR. Where does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) find that I ever signed such a letter?

Here is a man who had not the courtesy to tell me that he was going to bring up this question, and yet he took the opportunity to make the assertion that I had signed this letter.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) cannot find in 'Hansard' that I said he had signed it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly. Here it is.

Mr TAYLOR. Let him read it.

Mr. BRODEUR (reading) :

Last evening we listened to the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) eulogizing himself for the course he has pursued since he became minister of that department. Let me draw attention to a letter which he wrote. . . . It will be found in the report of the commssioners on page 79. It was written by the minister.

Here is a man who had not the courtesy to state that he was going to bring forward this subject, and then he makes a statement of that kind. But that isn't all. For later on we find the following :

Mr. BRODEUR. Where does the hon. gen. tleman (Mr. Taylor) find that I ever signed such a letter?

Mr. TAYLOR. If the minister will bring down the files, I will point out the letter.

He found the letter on the file and quotes it.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tavlor) says he has seen the file and knows there is a letter written by me? Does he assert that I have signed it?

Mr. TAYLOR. The commissioners have gone through the files and have given the House their report stating what they found. They found this statement on the files.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no statement that I signed this letter.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the minister will produce the letter, no doubt his signature will be found at the bottom of it.

So, the hon. gentleman's memory is bad.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, it is not.

Mr. BRODEUR (reading) :

Mr. BRODEUR. Does the hon. gentleman assert that I signed that letter?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am making no assertions. The hon. minister appointed a Royal Commission, and I am quoting what the Royal Commission said.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, that does not say that I signed the letter. Does the hon. gentleman say that I signed it?

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister will make his own speech. He made one last night—and of all the speeches I ever listened to since I came into this House over twenty years ago, that speech, as coming from a gentleman who ought to be a statesman, was the most extraordiary I ever heard.

That is a good answer.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has stated that I signed that letter.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not make the statement.

Mr. BRODEUR. I deny that I signed it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Go on.

Mr. BRODEUR. Something more ?

Mr. TAYLOR Yes.

Mr. BRODEUR (reading):

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to make my speech. The minister is not going to put me down. I am reading from the report of the Royal Commission. And I will give him the page —page 79. And any gentleman who reads that will say that it comes from the department to the agents at Quebec, and from the head of the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman said I signed the letter.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not. The hon. gentleman cannot find that.

Mr BRODEUR. I find it here in 'Hansard.'

Mr. TAYLOR. No, you do not. I stated that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) wrote the letter. There is nothing in what I said about him signing it. He may have authorized his deputy to sign it, no doubt he did. It would not emanate from the department, however, without his authority.

Mr. BRODEUR. What did the hon. gentleman (Mr Taylor) mean when he said that 'it was written by the minister to Mr. Gregory at Quebec' ?

Mr. TAYLOR. That does not say that the hon. gentleman signed it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Then, I am satisfied.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the minister for? His authority given to his deputy is the same as his own act.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am satisfied with the explanation of my hon. friend (Mr Taylor), that I did not sign the letter—he admits that now.

Mr. BARKER. Will the hon. minister allow me to ask a question ? Will he say that he personally signs one-tenth of the letters from his department that are issued by his authority ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, on the contrary, many letters are sent out that I never see and do not sign.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the minister is responsible all the same.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, let it go at that. Perhaps if the hon. gentleman had not intended to say more than that, he would not have put it as he did. Now, he was kind enough, after making that charge, to leave the House before I had an opportunity to answer.

Mr. TAYLOR. I never run away. I had to catch the train to get home.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, let me repeat for the benefit of the hon. gentleman what I said on this subject. Perhaps, the next time he opens his mouth to speak against me he will be a little more careful. The hon. gentleman states that this letter was sent by my instruction——

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend must not take everything said against his department as said personally against himself. I was speaking of the department, as the commissioners spoke of the department.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman said that the letter was written by me.

Mr. TAYLOR. I consider that you are the department.

Mr. BRODEUR. When I saw the statement the hon. gentleman made against me, I thought I would send to the department for the file. Perhaps I would have been able to asnwer him immediately if he had been kind enough to let me know that he was going to bring up this question. The letter is as follows :

The Department of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, July 27, 1906.

Sir,—I have to inform you that if you consider that chemical fire extinguishers are necessary on board the vessels of the Quebec agency, you are to purchase them from Mr. P. E. Perreault, of 312 St. John street, Quebec. Mr. Perreault has been advised to call upon you in connection with this matter.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
F. GOURDEAU,
Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

J. U. Gregory, Esq.,
Agent Marine and Fisheries,
Quebec, Quebec.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does the hon. minister mean that the deputy minister took the responsibility of writing such a letter without being advised by the head of the department ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am stating what happened. He seemed to be very much surprised at the reading of the letter, and seemed not to take my word, but wanted to have the file produced. I appreciate very much what these hon. gentlemen did, and I handed the file over that it might be seen by them. Now, my hon. friend states that the letter has been sent by my authority. I may say that he will find in the report of the Civil Service Commissioners, letters from the department stating that they did not give any such instructions to purchase these fire extinguishers. More than that, I quoted the other day a letter which was sent to me by the hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Lachance).

The letter was sent by Mr. Lachance on the 27th of October, 1906, of which the following is the translation:

Quebec, October 27, 1906.

Hon. L. P. Brodeur,
Minister of Marine, Ottawa.

Could you not authorize Mr. Gregory to purchase them for the service of the lighthouses as well as in the steamers. Their efficacy has been several times shown by various experiments made at Quebec and elsewhere.

Yours truly,
ARTHUR LACHANCE.

On the 6th March, 1907, he received this letter from me:

My Dear Member,—I received your letter of the 27th of October last concerning the extinguishers that Mr. Perreault desires to sell to the department. I have had Mr. Gregory written to on the subject and when his reply reaches the department I will communicate my decision.

I did not decide then, and there has never been any decision on my part to purchase fire extinguishers. What happened then ? Mr. Perreault applied de novo to sell fire extinguishers to the department and he received in reply this letter from the department:

I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 6th instant with reference to fire extinguishers and have to advise you that none are required by the department.

First, there was a letter in July, 1906, asking for some fire extinguishers; then the deputy minister writes to the agent in Quebec on the 6th of May that if he requires fire extinguishers to take them from Mr. Perreault.

Mr. SPROULE. That is hardly what the language would convey, 'I have to inform you.' Why do I have to inform you ? Presumably he was writing for somebody else.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, the deputy wrote, I have to inform you that if you require some fire extinguishers you may purchase them from Mr. So and So. Now that was in July. Some months later Mr. Lachance, the member for Quebec centre, writes to me and asks whether I would purchase fire extinguishers from Mr. Perreault. I said, I will write to the agent to find out what he says about it, and when I get his report I will communicate my decision to you. Later Mr. Perreault writes again, asking us to purchase fire extinguishers, and then he gets a letter from the department that we do not require any. That is the whole story, just as it happened. Now the hon. member for North Toronto and the hon. member for Peel did not seem to take my word when I read these letters, they wanted to see the originals.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the minister is quite right in saying that because we wanted to see the originals we did not take his word. If we could only ask for the originals when we had the word of a minister, we would be in a pretty pass.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well I accept the hon. gentleman's statement, but that is the meaning I took from his request to see the original file. When he wanted to see the original I deduced that he did not accept my word for what I read.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister show from the 'Hansard' during the discussion where I refused to accept his word ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I simply say that the hon. member for North Toronto and the hon. member for Peel wanted to see those originals, and I deduced from their request that they doubted my word. More than that, when I saw that my word was not accepted with regard to these copies——

Mr. BLAIN. Would my hon. friend state to the House now where I refused to accept his word in the discussion that took place last week ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I quoted from the file, I read the documents on file, and I offered to furnish the copies, because I know that a minister has no right to refer to any written document unless he produces the copy of that document before the House. But the member for North Toronto and the member for Peel were not satisfied with my offer and asked for the originals. That is what happened, and I deduced from it that they did not accept my word.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a mistake.

Mr. BRODEUR. Now the hon. gentleman says that he did accept my word, and I am satisfied. I do not know why he wanted to see the originals. At all events, I then stated that I did not like to part with the file for several reasons, and especially for this reason, that a document of great importance had some years ago been brought into the House from the department and handed over to an hon. member on the other side of the House, and was lost. It has never been returned to the department.

Mr. FOSTER. If I remember rightly, after my hon. friend had made that statement he laid this file on the table.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, I laid the file on the table to be inspected, but I did not wish to part with it.

Mr. FOSTER. But you did.

Mr. BRODEUR. I put it on the table there for the inspection of hon. gentlemen.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. BRODEUR. There was absolutely nothing to conceal. More than that, Mr. Speaker, I went with my hon. friend from Peel into the 'Hansard' room. I pointed out to him the documents which I had read in the House and I said: Here is a letter of the 20th of July, here is the answer and you see that it is signed by the deputy; here is a letter which was afterwards written by myself and here is the letter of Mr. Lachance, the member for Quebec centre. The hon. member for Peel was absolutely satisfied that what I had said was correct. These things did not happen in the House, but, as my conduct has been impugned to a certain extent and as I have been reproached with trying to prevent the House from knowing what is contained in this file, I think I am justified in reporting the conversation which we had.

Mr. BLAIN. I am quite willing that the hon. gentleman should state everything I said in the House or out of it in connection with the whole matter, and I will have the same right too when he is through.

Mr. BRODEUR. After the hon. member saw this file he said: Perhaps I will see it at eight o'clock again. At eight o'clock he got the file and he kept it the whole evening, or during the whole sitting of the House. At the end of the sitting I thought he would be through. He had not only read the documents which I had put before the House concerning these purchases from Mr. Perreault but he read others. The documents concerning the purchases from Mr. Perreault were the documents which were before the House, they were the documents which had been read and the documents which hon. gentlemen had the right to see. I do not want to say that the hon. gentleman's conduct was irregular, but when he is given a file bearing upon a certain point what he has to do is simply to examine the file in regard to that point alone.

Mr. BLAIN. That is another new doctrine.

Mr. BRODEUR. But, he wanted to see whether the file would be interesting perhaps.

Mr. HENDERSON. It would be interesting.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, it would be very interesting. We see that hon. gentlemen opposite are somewhat incensed by the fact that we have purchased fire extinguishers at a certain figure. I could quote a letter written in 1891, when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power—I do not think that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was Minister of Marine and Fisheries at that time—to show that these hon. gentlemen also purchased fire extinguishers. We paid $14 apiece for these fire extinguishers. It is an exorbitant price, said the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) the other day. What do I see? I find the following dated the 17th June, 1891:

I beg to inform you that I have two large sized Babcock fire extinguishers in perfect order originally costing $45 each which I am willing to dispose of to the department at $30 each.

The offer was accepted and they were purchased at $30 each. I see that an order was given for these fire extinguishers by the minister:

I recommend the purchase of two fire extinguishers at the price named, namely $30, and that they be placed in two of our principal stations now without them.

This is signed 'C. H. T.' That shows that hon. gentlemen opposite were paying $30 for an article for which we are paying $14.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, no.

Mr. BRODEUR. No? The fire extinguishers that we have been buying are just as good as those. The Babcock fire extinguishers are not better than the others.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, they are.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend cannot say that.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. And they were second hand at that.

Mr. BRODEUR. And they were second hand. Coming to what my hon. friend has stated, he thought that he was justified in going over all of the file to see what was in it and just to think that he has discovered a big scandal in the form of the document which was signed by Mr. Cameron which he has read. But, my hon. friend should have stated the whole thing in regard to that. Since he wanted to make out a new scandal against the Department of Marine and Fisheries I think he would have been justified in quoting the whole document. If he had quoted it he would have found that an order was given to Mr. Cameron on the 9th March by the department and that the minister, Mr. Prefontaine, hearing of it, gave instructions to cancel the order. So, the order, based upon the agreement which my hon. friend has read, was cancelled by the order of Mr. Prefontaine himself. That shows, Mr. Speaker, that, if my hon. friend wanted to give all the information with regard to the purchase of fire extinguishers he should have quoted the whole thing and stated that the department would not recognize that transfer, that it would not give an order and that it cancelled the order which had been given to that man Cameron. That man Cameron complained to the department and the department said that they would not recognize such a thing. That shows that they have not been able to substantiate one of the hundreds of scandals that they tried to unearth in the department.

The hon. gentleman says that it is very unfortunate that I did not leave this file in his possession on Saturday. Does he not know that this matter is being investigated now before Mr. Justice Cassels ? All the facts which are mentioned in the report of the Civil Service Commission are being inquired into and this question of fire extinguishers is a very important subject in the report of the Civil Service Commission. Yet, my hon. friend says that we should have kept that file here instead of placing it before the commission.

Mr. SPROULE. That commission is not sitting now.

Mr. BRODEUR. It was sitting on Saturday. My hon. friend was making a great scandal because I took that file in order to place it before the commission. The officers of the department are working at the present time in order to put before the commission next Monday every contract and everything connected with all the purchases that have been made there during the last few years, including these documents, and still hon. gentlemen say : No. Let us be fair for a moment to the officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Let us be fair for a moment to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, let us be fair to the men who are now brought before their judges on very serious charges. Let us give an opportunity to these men to defend themselves against these charges. That is what I am asking before the House. I am ready to have copies made in order to get all the documents before the House. We will copy all this file and, if you want it we will copy the previous file concerning fire extinguishers. We may go back still further probably and copy the file of the time when the Conservatives were in power and we will bring all these documents before the House, but we want to have these documents copied and we do not want these documents to remain here in order that we shall be deprived of the opportunity of putting them before Mr. Justice Cassels.

Mr. SPROULE. All the ministers need do is to have a motion made in the House at any time for their return and they would be returned.

Mr. BRODEUR. We need the papers just now, and if my hon. friend goes to the department to-night he will find the clerks working making copies of these contracts during the last four years in order to present them to the commission. The copies of the documents on this file have to be submitted to the commission also.

Mr. SPROULE. These documents were in possession of the House and it is only by motion that they can be disposed of. Were they required before the commission on Saturday or were they asked for by the solicitors or any one connected with the commission? The commission has adjourned until next Monday.

Mr. BRODEUR. The lawyers are working in the preparation of these documents and the clerks are busy copying them. I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) in all fairness if we should not have an opportunity to get them copied. I will have two copies made, one for the commission and one for the House, and I will bring the original afterwards if necessary.
