Mr. SPROULE. What I am concerned about is that the papers have been laid on the table of the House and are in the possession of the House, and it is only on motion that they can properly be given back. When we get the evidence in a divorce case and other documents from the Senate we do not return them except by motion, and properly speaking we can only dispose of papers in possession of the House in the same way. The minister himself took the liberty to demand these papers from the clerk of the House when other members could not pretend to exercise that authority.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman is mistaken ; these papers have not been laid before the House in the ordinary sense.

Mr. SPROULE. They were laid on the table.

Mr. BRODEUR. They were simply put there to be inspected.

Mr. BLAIN. You read them.

Mr. BRODEUR. They were to remain in my possession.

Mr. BLAIN. No. There is no use making that statement for the reason that when I applied for the original file which was laid on the table the clerk of the House said that I could have it on the distinct understanding that I would return it to him before the House closed in order that he would lock it up in his safe.

Mr. BRODEUR. There was no motion made and no order of the House granted for the bringing down of these papers and consequently they have never been formally in possession of the House, but were simply placed there for inspection. I have not seen the votes and proceedings but I think I am correct in saying that there was no entry with respect to these papers being brought down, and so they were not before the House in the legal sense of the word. I told the clerk of the House that I wanted to have these papers for the next sitting of the commission and he gave them to me, and I suppose all will admit that it is necessary to bring these papers before the royal commission. I know that my hon. friends opposite are going to state in their newspapers to-morrow that we are trying to hide every thing, but I can tell them that there is nothing to hide. I simply ask to have an opportunity of having copies made of the documents on this file. I do not want to have the file lost as was the Markey lease which was given to an hon. gentleman opposite and which has never since been returned.

Mr. BARKER. Does the minister state of his own knowledge or does he merely deduce it from certain circumstances ?

Mr. BRODEUR. That lease was brought down by the minister as was this document; it was laid on the table, it was taken by an hon. gentleman opposite and read by him in the House ; it was sent by him to the 'Hansard' reporters and the 'Hansard' reporters gave it back to him and it never since has come back to the department. Later on we were asked to produce that original document and of course we did not have it.

Mr. LAKE. It was probably lost in the hon. gentleman's department.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, it was last seen in the hands of a member of the opposition.

Mr. BARKER. The evidence so far is that only one copy of that lease existed and that that is in possession of Mr. Markey.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman is absolutely mistaken as to that.

Mr. BARKER. That is the evidence.

Mr. BRODEUR. No. I presume I may be pardoned for referring to what has taken place in the committee; if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) had followed the evidence he would have seen that one day Mr. Venning stated before the committee——

Mr. SPEAKER. The report of the commission has not yet been submitted to the House and until then no reference can be made to the proceedings in the committee.

Mr. BRODEUI. I was about to refer to it only by way of explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can only do so with the consent of the House.

Mr. BARKER. Let the hon. gentleman explain.

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Venning stated before the committee at the first sitting that the original lease was not on the file and that he had not seen it. Then, on making inquiry I found that in 1904 Mr. Préfontaine placed that document before the House as was stated in the 'Hansard' and the document was read in the House by Mr. Boyd, a member of the opposition, and was handed to the 'Hansard' reporters and according to the usual custom the reporters gave that document back to Mr. Boyd, and we have never seen that document since.

Mr. BARKER. It was proven before the Public Accounts Committee that the department had sent one copy to the lessee ; that they had no copy themselves, and the hon. gentleman did not attempt to state in the committee what he says to-day.

Mr. BRODEUR. Neither Mr. Venning nor myself knew any thing about it when the question first came up in the committee. Mr. Venning was simply speaking from the file he had before him and he said he did not find the lease on the file. Later on search was made and Mr. Venning came before the Public Accounts Committee again and stated exactly what I am saying now with regard to that document. We will have copies made of this entire file if that is what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) wants.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister having placed the original file on the table of the House, what I want the hon. gentleman to do is to put it back where it was.

Mr. BRODEUR. The file was never placed before the House on any order of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. That won't do.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is nothing before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the House had better not assume without consideration that the practice in the one case is the same as in the other. If a minister of the Crown quotes from a public document, and a demand is made it is necessary to produce it and lay it upon the table of the House for the purpose of inspection and for use in the debate which is then in progress. But, the House is not to assume that the rule in that case is the same as when a document is laid before the House by order of the House on motion. I am not now laying down any particular rule except to ask that the House may not assume that the rule is the same in the one case as in the other. In the ordinary course of laying documents upon the table of the House there must be some parliamentary authority for that purpose and that is expressly laid down in Bourinot's work—from which the hon. member for Peel has quoted—at page 357 :

No documents can be regularly laid before the House unless in pursuance of some parliamentary authority.

Hon. members can easily see what would happen if a different rule were to be assumed and followed. In the midst of a debate a minister might quote from a public document, and at the request of a member produce it and lay it on the table of the House, as he would be obliged to do, having quoted from it or having based an argument upon its contents. But without an order of the House it would not be regularly laid on the table of the House; and it would hardly be a regular proceeding to interrupt a debate for the purpose of moving that an order of the House be made to lay it on the table. Without desiring to lay down any hard and fast rule at the moment, but only gathering from the discussion as it has been going on that it was assumed that the proceeding would necessarily be the same in the one case as in the other, I thought I should call the attention of the House to this distinction. The chair would assume that in this instance the proceeding would be that the minister, when called on to produce the document, should produce it for the purpose of inspection, though it would not go formally into the possession of the House and become a part of its archives, as in the case of a document laid on the table, by motion; and that will appear from the fact that in the present instance there is no record in the Votes and Proceedings of the matter, as is customary in the case of documents laid on the table of the House by order of the House itself.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend expressed to me this afternoon his desire to see the whole file, and I have no objection to letting him see it. If he comes to my department I shall be glad to show it to him. and as soon as the copies are made—I am having it copied—if he wants a copy brought to the House, I will bring it. I shall be glad to have all the facts contained in this file made known; I have nothing to hide, and have no intention to hide anything. In conclusion, I think the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) will bear testimony to my strong desire to meet his wishes in every respect. He knows that I showed him all the papers in connection with this matter, and that he expressed to me his satisfaction that the documents had been signed as I stated. He found, however, that it would be advisable for him to go over the whole file and see if he could not discover something else. He seems to have discovered a document which shows that a man wanted to sell some fire extinguishers to the department and did not succeed. So that it is shown conclusively that there is absolutely nothing against the department, and I am sorry that we have lost so much time on this incident.

Mr. SAML. BARKER (East Hamilton). However much time has been occupied in the discussion of this question, I think it is so important that nobody will object to time being so occupied.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will permit me to interrupt him, I would like the minister to put this file on the table so that I may inspect it. He has been quoting from it and making his case anew.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will do so, subject to inspection.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman, starting out with what I suppose he thought was an answer to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), immediately began as a diversion with an attack on the hon. memmer for Leeds (Mr. Taylor). He sought to represent that the hon. member for Leeds had misstated the facts with regard to letters sent by the hon. gentleman's department, that is by the hon. gentleman, to persons having dealings with the department. Now, I have before me 'Hansard' unrevised of May 1, page 7877, and we will there see exactly what the hon. member for Leeds said, and precisely what line the hon. minister took in answer to him. The hon. member for Leeds said :

Let me draw attention to a letter which he (the minister) wrote, following the lines on which his predecessor had worked. It will be found in the report of the commissioners on page 79. It was written by the minister to Mr. Gregory at Quebec, and was dated July 27, 1906.

I do not propose to occupy the time of the House in entering into the question that was raised by that correspondence. The sole question here is, as to whether the member for Leeds quoted honestly and properly as a member of this House, and whether the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was correct in his repudiation of the letter, because it amounted to that. If he did not repudiate the letter or his responsibility for the letter, there was no need for his intervention. We all know in these days that a business man does not sign one letter out of twenty with his own hand, and yet they are all his letters. We all know that a business man writes hundreds of letters in a day; but he does not sign them all; he dictates them, and they are issued by his authority, and he is responsible for them. A lawyer will write hundreds of letters in the course of a day; he does not sign one of them, but they are all his letters. Above all the head of a department, with hundreds of letters going out every day, would never undertake to sign all the letters; he makes no pretension of doing so; and yet every letter is his letter, and he is responsible for it. Now, the hon. member for Leeds said that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries wrote a letter on a certain subject, and he went on to say :

If Mr. Gregory could get a letter that indicated more clearly to him that he should purchase a number of these fire extinguishers than that letter written by the minister on the 27th of July, 1906, I do not know what better authority he could have. This is the letter from the minister.

Then the hon. gentleman went on to quote the letter. Now, let us see how this ingenuous, straightforward minister dealt with that question:

Mr. BRODEUR. Where does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) find that I ever——

Did he say wrote ?

—signed such a letter?

Was that an equivocation ? I would say it was. Then the hon. member for Leeds went on:

Mr. TAYLOR. If the minister will bring down the files, I will point out the letter.
Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman says he has seen the file and knows there is a letter written by me. Does he assert that I have signed it?

Signed it. That is the point which this minister of the Crown is making—the minister of a great department, who knows that he seldom ever signs a letter unless it be one marked 'private and confidential.' What did the minister mean this House to understand by that? Did he mean that the House was to understand merely that it was signed by his authority but not by himself? No, it was intended to convey the idea that he repudiated the letter entirely; but he used the word 'signed' to convey the impression that he had not written the letter. The hon. member for Leeds went on to say :

The commissioners have gone through the file and have given the House their report stating what they found.

The minister then replied:

There is no statement that I signed the letter.

Note how he sticks to that word 'signed.' Did he not know the distinction between putting his own name with his own hand to a letter and the writing of a letter by his authority? Then the member for Leeds went on:

If the minister will produce the letter, no doubt his signature will be found at the bottom of it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Hear, hear. What does that mean?

Mr. BARKER. It did not mean that the signature was written by the hon. gentleman himself. The hon. minister is again resorting to a quibble.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know what a quibble is then.

Mr. BARKER. Let me tell him. Did any man ever find a business firm, a railway company, a large corporation, a law firm or anybody repudiating their letters because a member of the firm did not put his own signature to it? The letter was signed by the minister's authority and he knew it.

Mr. BRODEUR. But the hon. member for Leeds said that if I would produce the letter, no doubt my signature would be found at the bottom of it.

Mr. BARKER. It was signed by the minister's authority, just as 90 per cent of the letters to-day are written and signed. No honourable man, no honourable firm, no honourable corporation, repudiates its signature when put to a document by its authority. The hon. minister goes on. He sticks to his point. He knows the distinction between a letter written by authority and a letter signed by the minister himself, but he goes on and asks again:

Does the hon. gentleman assert that I signed that letter?

He sticks to that quibble carefully, absolutely, knowing the distinction. The hon. member for Leeds says :

I am making no assertion. The hon. minister appointed a royal commission, and I am quoting what the royal commission said.

The miniser then replies.

No, that does not say that I signed the letter. Does the hon. gentleman say that I signed it?

Again sticking to the quibble—a little trumpery distinction between the man writing his signature himself and that signature and letter being written by his authority. Then he says again :

The hon. member for Leeds has stated that I signed that letter.

The hon. member for Leeds replies:

I did not make that statement.

Then we have the minister again saying:

I deny that I signed it.

Now the hon. minister in a certain sense says truthfully that he himself did not sign that letter, but did the use he made of that word 'sign' from the beginning of this discussion to the end, convey the impression of truth? No honourable man in this Dominion will doubt that the hon. gentleman was seeking to convey a mis-statement to the country. He was trying to convey to the country the idea that he was not responsible for that letter by repeating that he never signed it, although it was signed by his authority. My hon. friend from Leeds went on to say:

I want to make my speech. I am reading from the report of the royal commission.

What does the minister repeat?

The hon. gentleman said I had signed the letter.

He was holding him to the word 'signed,' and he construed that word. The hon. member for Leeds repeated:

I say this is from the head of the department, from the minister, for further down there is one from the deputy and they quote his name.

The first, on page 78 and 79, he says was from the minister, but the second letter purported to come from the deputy. From whom did the first purport to come? From the hon. the minister, and it was signed by his authority; yet again, after all this was asserted and re-asserted before the House, the minister gets up again and asks: Does the hon. gentleman assert that I signed it? What a pitiful, wretched, miserable attempt at an explanation. Why, Mr. Speaker, such conduct is worthy alone of a political police court shyster. It was a mere sham, a pretense, and the hon. minister knew it—an absolute sham and pretense intended to convey to this country that that was an unauthorized letter and that the minister was not responsible, when the absolute contrary was the fact. I now come to the question raised by my hon. feirnd from Peel. He asked why he, a member of this House, had not every right which the minister had. Inside these four walls of this chamber what distinction is there, as a matter of right, between he member for Peel and the minister? Have the people of Britain been fighting for centuries for popular rights and are we now to be told that the Crown, through its minister, can claim rights the people do not enjoy? Is that to be the case to-day? Is it to be the case that a minister can take away from the clerk of the House of Commons certain public papers and that that clerk cannot give these papers to the humblest member of this House? Is that what we are to be told by a Liberal government under the ægis of the right hon. gentleman? Are we to be told that a member of this House cannot see an original paper, which is in the possession of the clerk of this House, but that a minister of the Crown—or in other words the Crown itself—can take that paper and say to the House: Oh, you can have a copy but you shall not see the original. Is that the position to-day? Will the hon. gentleman contend for a moment that a minister can take from the custody of the clerk of the House papers which that clerk has in his possession —original papers—and prevent other members having access to them? Has a minister the right to say to the members of this House: You shall no see the original paper, but if you like I will, by my grace and courtesy, give you a copy ? Has it come to that point in a British parliament that we are to be told that that is the sum of our rights—that an hon. gentleman, a minister, can stand up and say: Oh, there is a commission sitting, and I took these papers because that commission might want them. Why, the hon. minister does not dare tell the House that he took these papers for the commission. Did he give them to the commission? Did the commission ask for them? A member of the House wanted to see them, but the minister had taken them from the possession of the clerk. Why, we had a week's discussion not long since upon papers put into the possession of the House, and we were then told by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver)—and I think by the right hon. gentleman himself and other ministers—that they could not allow original papers to go into possession of the clerk because they oculd not be got back again by the department, for the use of the department, without an order of the House. When, however, it suits the minister, when it is convenient, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries can go to the clerk and take the papers out of his possession without our order. That is the point my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) has raised; and the hon. minister has not uttered one solitary excuse, not a word in answer to the charge made against him that he took papers out of the possession of the clerk of this House and thus prevented other members of this House having access to them.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). The hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) has seen fit to refer to a discussion which took place here on Friday night last and to repudiate altogether a certain letter that was written to Mr. Gregory, agent of the department at Quebec, on the 27th July, 1906. Let me quote that letter again. It is dated July 27th, 1906:

I have to inform you that if you consider that chemical fire extinguishers are necessary on board the vessels of the Quebec agency, you are to purchase them from P. E. Perreault, 312 St. John street, Quebec. Mr. Perreault has been advised to call upon you in connection with this matter.

That was a letter from the department of which the hon. minister is the head, authorizing Mr. Gregory, if he required any fire extinguishers, to purchase them from Mr. Perreault and stating that Mr. Perreault had been written to.

Then, he quotes here to-night a letter of his own, dated March 12, 1907, and saying that they did not want any fire extinguishers. But before this, the letter of July 27, 1906, had been acted upon and the department had been loaded up with these fire extinguishers. If the minister will turn to the Auditor General's Report, he will find a record, page P—19, showing that Mr. Perreault had sent in an account for eight of these fire extinguishers at $112. Then, at page P—23, 8; page P—36, 8; page P—57, 16; page P—100, 8; page P—104, 4—altogether 52 fire extinguishers bought on the strength of that letter of July 27, 1906, and before the minister wrote his further letter. Then, there was the letter written to Mr. Gregory to know by what authority he purchased these articles, and Mr. Gregory wrote back that he had purchased them 'by authority of your letter of July 27.' If the minister repudiated that letter of July 27, why did he pay the accounts? Why did he not repudiate the accounts also? But the accounts were certified correct, and the Auditor General paid the money. And now the minister gets up and tells us that when the matter came to his notice he wrote this letter of March 12, 1907. But was not this purchase authorized by him? When I speak of the minister, I speak of the department.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) is getting more cautious.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not getting more cautious. Has a Minister of the Crown no responsibility? Why, let the president of a bank say of any act of the bank: This was done by one of the clerks; let the president of any mercantile company say: I did not authorize this, it was the act of one of the clerks or superintendents, and what would be thought of him? Why, we might as well have a sack of wool in the minister's chair if that is all the responsibility he is going to assume. We might as well have a man of putty as a man if he is allowed to repudiate what his deputy does. He kept his deputy there even after this came to his knowledge. I am surprised at the minister saying that he did not write this letter of July 27, 1906. I am satisfied that there is not a deputy in any department who would take it upon himself to write such a letter, for it is a political letter. It simply says: If you consider that chemical fire extinguishers are necessary, you are to purchase them from my friend P. E. Perreault, who has been advised to call upon you. And, of course, the man thus instructed did buy them to the amount of $792. And the minister tells us in his speech that the late government purchased two Babcock engines. Why a Babcock is worth a dozen of these. Everybody knows what a Babcock is. But these little glass-lined things that were sold at $14 to the Department of Marine and $15 to the Department of Public Works are not in the same class at all. They were sold to the Public Works Department through my friend Lemieux, agent for the firm of Patton & Crowe, which was really the firm of Patton & Grant, with no Crowe in it at all. I know something about it, and I received a letter from my friend Lemieux, published in the 'Free Press,' saying that his 'honoured name' should not be dragged in. His 'honoured name!' I will not refer further to this matter, though, if he provokes me much more I will. And the idea of the minister saying that I ran away and was not here when he spoke in answer to me. I never ran away from anybody in this House. There is enough Irish in me that if I am knocked down I will get up and fight again. No minister can bluff me, as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries tries to do. And the minister pleads the baby act. He goes to the province of Quebec and says: It is because I am a Frenchman that they attack me.' No one but a baby would make such a plea. And hear him yelping here to-night, and read the speech he made on Friday night. I am surprised that any man professing to be a statesman should resort to such conduct in this House. I will say no more about this at present, but I wanted to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that the letter written on July 27, is borne out by the facts in the Auditor General's return, showing that the minister himself purchased 792 of these machines after he wrote that letter to Perreault, and before he wrote the other letter in March, 1907. I say he was responsible for the purchase. No matter who did it in his department or in his agency, it was done with his consent and his knowledge.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does the hon. member mean to say that this purchase was made on my authority and with my consent?

Mr. TAYLOR. I say that this letter was never written by the deputy without his having been authorized to do so by the minister. If a deputy of mine would do it, he would not write a second one. The facts are there. Gregory went on and bought these machines knowing that that letter was authorized by the minister. Besides, Gregory had a private letter, because this letter says, Gregory had been advised of the fact. There is no jury in the world who would acquit the minister and convict the deputy on a statement such as his.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). The matter that has occupied the time of the House to-night, and that some might say has been wasted, might well not have been wasted if the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had been a little more reasonable. He knows that the Prime Minister said that he was anxious to see the truth and the whole truth spread before the House. Why then should he object to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) and myself looking over that file? If there was nothing to conceal why did the minister take up the time of the House and cause all this hubbub by taking away the papers which the member for Peel thought he should not have done? Why could he not this morning have given this file to the member for Peel?—and I venture to say that in three or four hours the member for Peel would have got all he wanted out of them, and could have handed back the papers to the clerk, and nobody would have suffered from any delay. It seems to me to be childish for the minister to try to avoid showing these papers for a few hours on the pretext that the commission is sitting and his department is preparing papers. If we are to believe the minister that all the contracts are being prepared to go before this commission, does he mean to say that any great delay would have occurred, that anything would have been broken, if for a few hours to-day he had handed these papers over to my hon. friend from Peel and allowed him to look at them?

Mr. BRODEUR. At noon to-day while I was sitting in a committee of this House, I received a letter from the clerk asking me whether I had the file in my possession. I was busy until one o'clock or a quarter past one, in the committee, and as soon as I came into the House at three o'clock, I showed the file to my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. I came up about half-past eight or nine o'clock on Saturday morning and went to the clerk's office thinking I would find the file there, and if I could have seen it for an hour or two, I would have been satisfied. The minister could have avoided all this row if he had furnished us at the proper time the file for inspection. What is meant by inspection? It is sufficient when a minister quotes from a large file, that he shall lay it on the table and then take it off the next minute, or after five minutes, or after half an hour? Inspection means that the member who wishes to see it shall have reasonable time to look over it and familiarize himself with it. The minister comes to-day and makes the matter still worse by taking hold of that file and quoting from still other documents that are in it. For what purpose is the file requested to be placed on the table? That you may see some letter that he quotes? Of course not. What we are discussing is the question of fire extinguishers, this whole file refers to fire extinguishers, and you are not at all in possession of the information when you simply see one, or two, or three letters that the minister chooses to read. What you have a right to do is to look over the file to see whether there is anything that sheds light, and may be gives a contradiction to the gloss the minister himself puts upon it. Is it sufficient to take up a scientific work and read ten lines out of a book of two hundred pages, and then, when any one questions whether you have correctly stated the essence of the book, for you to hand it over to him and say, Well, you can read these ten lines; there they are. That does not satisfy the conditions at all. What he needs to do is to take the sense of the whole document, and to do so he must examine the whole file. After what the House has heard to night it has come to the conclusion that my hon. friend from Peel struck a mare's nest when he read something about an agreement between Mr. Cameron and Mr. Patton with reference to 600 fire extinguishers, and the minister thought he had set it all at rest by declaring that that order was cancelled. I think there is a little more history in this affair than the minister has shown us. I have only had three or four minutes to look over the file, but I find in it a little bit of history that will put a different gloss upon the matter. I find that on December 14, 1901, Mr. A. W. Fraser interests himself in this matter of fire extinguishers. Is there anything in which Mr. Fraser has not interested himself in connection with all these departments? Here we find him and there we find him. Here is what he says:

Hon. James Sutherland,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I am informed that many of the lighthouses under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries are not supplied with any appliances for extinguishing fire, should such occur, and that some of the officers have under consideration the fire extinguisher being sold by Mr. Patton of this city.

That is Ottawa.

As I mentioned to you the other day, Mr. Patton has been a very good friend of the Liberal party——

And here is where it comes in.

——and a liberal one.

Does that mean liberal in the way of political or party doctrine? I will read it again.

Mr. Patton has been a very good friend of the Liberal party and a liberal one.

I take it that that is to be interpreted not in the party sense but in the financial sense. Here is the old principle coming out again—you scratch my back and I will scratch yours; you put money into my pocket and I will give you a little money back for yourself; you give me patronage and I will whack up when it comes to the election.

Therefore I hope you will be able to give him an order——

Because he is a very good Liberal and a very liberal Liberal.

Therefore I hope you will be able to give him an order for at least 100 of these extinguishers. Mr. Patton is quite willing to wait for payment until after your estimates have been voted providing he receives an order, as he can arrange the matter in the meantime.

There is again the old virus. There is again the well known principle which actuates this government. It does not make any difference as to parliamentary appropriations. You give the order, sign the contract, make everything fast as far as the government is concerned, and by and by when you come to the House you will get your money because your men will stand behind you. Mr. Fraser knew that.

I have just learned also that some time ago he supplied some of these extinguishers to the Public Works department and that the order was given during the time Mr. Mulock was acting minister of the department. After you have looked into the matter will you kindly let me know what prospects there are of doing anything for him?

Yours sincerely,
A. W. FRASER.

So much for that, away back in 1901. And then it goes on until we come to the incident that was mentioned by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) in which it appears that Mr. Patton and Mr. Cameron joined forces. Mr. Cameron was to get an order for 500 or 600 extinguishers and he was to get $2,000 paid to him for getting the order. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is well to inquire who loses by the payment of that $2,000. We know who would pay the $2.000 for getting a proper person to sell to the department. We know who would make the loss. It is so much more that the country has to pay for this go-between. And, who was the go-between? So, that went on and an order was absolutely given to Mr. Cameron. Here it is :

March 9, 1904.

I am to inform you that the department has made a careful examination of the Patton fire extinguisher, and considers that it is suited for the lighthouse service of Canada inasmuch as it will not freeze and being glass lined will not corrode, the acid being hermetically sealed in a bulb.

The department will require six hundred of these extinguishers with materials sufficient to recharge twice, at a cost of $15 each which I am to request you to supply, it being understood that they are to be furnished ready to act and boxed as per sample. No payment to be made until after July 1.

I am sir, your obedient servant.
(Sgd.) F. GOURDEAU,
Deputy Minister Marine and Fisheries.

C. S. Cameron, Esq.,
Manager Patton Fire Extinguisher,
Ottawa.

Mr. FOSTER.

That was the letter issued by the department. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries says : Oh. that does not amount to anything, the minister never signed it. But, the department or the minister, who is the head of the department, is absolutely responsible for the order. Well, but the minister says, that order was caught up on the way. That is true ; it was caught up on the way. Shortly after that we have a letter from Charles Patton to one O. E. Culbert, solicitor for the Montreal Fire Extinguisher Company :

Dear Sir,—I hereby agree that in consideration of your organizing a company in the province of Quebec to manufacture and sell my machines to give to such company the right to manufacture and sell my machines and I appoint such company as my attorney and agent in that behalf.

Yours truly,
CHARLES PATTON.

That goes. Then we find on March 22, 1904, this very peculiar letter :

C. S. Cameron, Esq.,
54 Sparks street, Ottawa.

A departmental letter dated 9th March, instant, purporting to order from you some fire extinguishers which the department had decided to order from the Montreal Fire Extinguisher Company, on instructions received by me to that effect, through error, was addressed to you instead of Mr. O E. Culbert representing said company. As the error has come to my knowledge and might create some misunderstanding I hereby make you acquainted with the facts so that you may not consider said letter as an order.

Believe me, yours truly
(Sgd.) R. PREFONTAINE.

The deputy minister was instructed to send out that letter and he did send out that letter to Mr. Cameron. Shortly afterwards there is the following letter :

Ottawa, April 16, 1904.

The Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries,

Dear Sir,—I would like the order for fire extinguishers to be made out to Charles Patton and Mr. Cameron has agreed to this. As we are making our arrangements to-day I would be very greatly obliged if the order could issue this morning. With your permission I shall send a messenger for it.

Faithfuly yours,
O. E. CULBERT.

Then there is this other letter:

April 14 1904.

The Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of the letter from your department dated March 28, 1894, cancelling the order from said department for 600 Patton fire extinguishers dated March 9, 1904, and I agree to the cancellation of the said order. I am also willing that an order should be issued to O. E. Culbert for the said fire extinguishers he having entered into an agreement with me bearing even date herewith in regard to the same.

Yours truly,
C. S. CAMERON.

April 15, 1904.

To the Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I am willing that the order for fire extinguishers should be made out to Charles Patton or to O. E. Culbert, and as these gentlemen would rather have it issued to Mr. Patton I would make it out in his name he having signed the agreement to me with Mr. Culbert.

Yours truly,
C. S. CAMERON.

There is an agreement, first signed by Mr. Culbert, and second, signed by Mr. Patton with Mr. Culbert. Mr. Cameron says: I have made my agreement with these gentlemen and you may send the order to them if you please. The agreement made between these gentlemen, is, as far as I have seen, not on the file. What was that agreement? It is plain enough to me, I think it is plain enough to any one, that by the change Cameron's interest has not been sacrificed, and that, although he did not get the contract himself, there is every probability that his interest has not been sacrificed but that it has been taken care of by these other gentlemen getting it and that the country has paid the amount of the remuneration received by the go-betweens. Well that order was absolutely issued; it was not only issued but here is an acknowledgement of it.

F. Gourdeau, Esq., Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favour of the 20th instant ordering from me 600 fire extinguishers. I shall fill the order at the earliest date possible. Thanking you for the same, I remain yours,
CHARLES PATTON.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the date of that?

Mr. FOSTER. April 25, 1904. Then we find that Wm. Alexander Cameron and Robert George Cameron doing business under the name of Cameron & Company give a power of attorney to a certain bank and that the bank notifies the department of the power of attorney being given authorizing the payment to the bank of any moneys which are coming on this contract, and so it goes on and on. What else there is I do not know because I have not had time to look into it. Now, I say that puts a different face upon this transaction to what it carried when the Minister of Marine read the partial correspondence. I say that if this laying on the table a document from which you quote is going to be any thing but a farce, you must not only lay the simple quotation but you must lay the whole document upon the table and you must lay it sufficiently long for a person to look into it and become acquainted with all its contents. It looks to me as if this is absolutely as much a document as if it were all printed and put within covers and laid upon the table of this House and used by any man in the House. That it is in manuscript does not prevent its being considered one document for it is the whole history of the fire extinguisher business, and you have got to go into this case as far as 1901 and maybe further in order to show the beginnings which afterwards resulted in this 600 extinguisher order with this very large amount of bonus or of commission which was paid. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, while I quite agree that there is a difference between this and a document coming down by an order of the House, yet it is the property of the House the moment it is put here and no man can take it away and keep another member from having it for a reasonable time to satisfy his own curiosity or desire for information. It seems to me that if there is any virtue at all in the rule which makes a minister put upon the table of the House a document from which he quotes, the virtue must be in it for the reason that it gives the other person to the argument a chance to test the argument, and test the conclusion which was come to by the first gentleman who uses it—the minister in this case. If that had been done there need be no row about it at all. It could have been done if the minister had conceded this paper to my friend (Mr. Blain) and if he wanted to take it back when no one else was using it and use it in his department I think that would not be going much beyond what was right. When it was asked again for the very purpose for which it was in the first place put upon the table of the House I think it would have been well for the minister courteously to have conceded and said: Yes, Mr. Blain, look this over and send it back.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is what I have done. I told the hon. member for Peel that he could see the file as long as he liked.

Mr. FOSTER. Where could he see it?

Mr. BRODEUR. In my room this afternoon.

Mr. BLAIN. At three o'clock?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has no right to dictate where a man is going to peruse these papers. When a paper is laid upon the table of the House the member who wishes to use it uses it where he thinks proper, takes his notes, and when he has done with it he puts it back. If these papers are left on the table of the House my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) would be able to satisfy himself without any very great length of time, and if it were necessary to have them back in the Department of Marine he would be only too glad to let the minister have them when they were required. But it is pretty perilous to allow a minister any more than any other member to take a paper which was put upon the table of the House in accordance with the rules and allow the minister to come and take it away and refuse to give it back again. I think that is not courteous to the House and I do not believe it comes within the rule of the House which if it means anything must mean that it gives reasonable time for a member to look into a document from which quotations have been made. With reference to the letters; looking at page 79 of the report I would have done exactly as my hon. friend from Leeds did. There are five letters referred to on that page, the first one is :

July 27, 1906.

I have to inform you that if you consider that chemical fire extinguishers are necessary on board the vessels of the Quebec agency, you are to purchase them from P. E. Perreault, 312 St. John street, Quebec. Mr. P. has been advised to call upon you in connection with this matter.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is there a copy of that advice on the file.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I saw that letter on the file.

Mr. BRODEUR. You had better quote it because the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) does not believe it yet.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not an assertion which comes very gracefully from my hon. friend. I think he had better treat his fellow members a little differently.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) did not seem to believe it.

Mr. FOSTER. To-night I noticed that the minister referred to my hon. friend from Leeds as 'that man' and 'the man.' You might as well call him the hon. member for so and so.

Mr. PATERSON. Do you always remember these little courtesies ?

Mr. FOSTER. I am generally very courteous to the members of this House.

Mr. PATERSON. Sometimes.

Mr. FOSTER. I try to be. Then, under date October 8, 1906, Gregory writes about fire extinguishers bought from Perreault, and on October 12, there is another letter from the deputy. I would have done the same thing as my friend from Leeds did ; I would have thought that the first letter was a letter from the minister himself or written by the minister's authority and I could not have come to any other conclusion. The second letter shows it was from Gregory, the third letter shows it was a letter from the deputy, the next one shows it is a letter from Gregory and the next one is a quotation from Gregory's letter. Maybe the fault was that the commissioner was not explicit enough or he would have said that that first letter was a letter from the deputy but on the face of it it appears to be a letter from the minister himself or written by authority of the minister. Anyway the contention is absolutely good that where orders are made in a case of this kind if they are made by the deputy minister they are made with the authority of the minister.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I do not profess to be an authority on this matter, but I wish to say a word as to how it strikes me in view of what Mr. Speaker has laid down, not as a ruling but in a general way. It does seem to me that what he says must commend itself to the good sense of the House. Complaint was made that a document which had been laid on the table had been taken away by the hon. gentleman who had laid it on the table.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me just there. I do submit to him that that would have no force in the argument at all. You might have an original paper brought down by the order of the House, and it might be lost ; but that would be no argument that thereafter no original paper should be brought down. Now, this might be lost. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is a lawyer, and I will venture to say that if any advocate would endeavour to prove before a court of law on the evidence which he has adduced tonight, that an original paper in the Markey case was lost by a member of the opposition, no one would depreciate that argument more quickly than the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The evidence does not form a perfect chain. Has he proved that the 'Hansard' reporter put that original back again, after it was read by a member of the opposition, into the hands of the opposition ? He does not prove it ; he assumes that it was done. But I myself have lost documents between my handing them over to the 'Hansard' and their not getting them back to me. They are very careful, and in the main I get them all back ; but instance after instance has occurred of their having unaccountably gone astray.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is not the point of the objection. The point of the objection was that it was lost anyway, however it was lost.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose a dozen papers are lost, do you found on that fact an argument that thereafter neither the government nor a minister shall bring down original papers ?

Mr. PATERSON. The file from which quotations were made is in the custody of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries; it being in his custody, he is entitled to take care of it. The House has power to order that that file be produced, and if the House so orders, it comes down in obedience to that order, becomes a matter of record, and goes into the charge of Mr. Clark, who becomes responsible for it. Going into his possession in that formal, constitutional way, it would require an order of the House to release it. Has that file come into the possession of the member who has it now or of the hon. member for Peel in that constitutional way? They will not say that it has. It came into their possession for this reason, that the Minister of Marine had quoted from one or two documents in it. If I understand it, the hon. member for Peel or the hon. member for North Toronto might demand, and would be entitled under the rules of the House, that the Minister of Marine should take from that file the documents which he had quoted from and lay them on the table.

Mr. FOSTER. These are not documents upon documents; they are pages of one document.

Mr. PATERSON. Precisely; but the hon. gentleman will not say that because one letter has been used as an argument, in a file containing the papers of years, and because as a matter of courtesy, at the personal request of a member, the minister allows him to have the whole of the file to look at, there is any power that would compel him to do it? The fact that he handed that file as a matter of courtesy to a member did not impose upon the clerk of the House the necessity of guarding it, as would have been the case had it been brought down in response to a formal order of the House.

Mr. BLAIN. The clerk of the House understood it as such, because I was only able to obtain the document from him on the understanding that I would return it so that he might lock it up after the House adjourned.

Mr. PATERSON. I can understand that the clerk, finding a valuable file on the table, would be anxious that it should be taken care of. But the hon. member for Peel claims that the clerk was permitted to give that file back to the minister who laid it on the table only on a formal order of the House to do so. If that is so, it seems to me that it could only come into the constitutional possession of the clerk as the result of a formal motion to lay it on the table. Surely if the action of the House is requisite in the one case it is in the other. If the minister in an informal manner lays a document on the table, can he not in the same informal manner withdraw it?

Mr. BARKER. After quoting part of the papers?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes. I grant that he would be required to leave on the table the papers which he quoted from out of that file. That would not be a matter of courtesy, but a matter of right; but he would not be bound to lay the whole file on the table.

Mr. BLAIN. But he did lay it on the table.

Mr. PATERSON. He laid it on the table in an informal way, retaining his right of control over it. Is the Minister of Marine not at liberty to take that file away to-night?

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman want my answer? If I ask the minister, not as a matter of courtesy to me, but as a matter of right, after he has exercised his own right of quoting from that document and basing his argument upon it, to lay it on the table of the House, I have a perfect right to take the document and keep it for the reasonable time that is necessary for me to look up that which he quoted and everything cognate to it within the file.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not suppose that Mr. Speaker is to be asked for his decision on that point; but I would be pleased to know whether that is the rule or not. I admit that papers quoted from must go into the possession of the House as a matter of course; but the whole file, which was laid on the table in an informal way, and at the request of a member, must not go into the posession of the House unless with the consent of the hon. gentleman who places it before the House, and does so with the understanding that it is to be looked at, but is not to leave his possession. He certainly has a right to take it back, if he sees fit to do so.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). If the hon. minister's contention be correct, that all that is necessary to be laid on the table is the letter the minister quoted from, how would the House be informed of the fact that an order of the minister had been cancelled?

Mr. PATERSON. Is there any rule for more?

Mr. SPROULE. I think so.

Mr. PATERSON. Read it.

Mr. SPROULE. I was going to submit this. If the point made by the Minister of Customs be correct, suppose an order had been given and then cancelled, and afterwards renewed, the House would be then misled into the supposition that that order had never been given. In this instance, one portion of a state document said the order had been cancelled; but afterwards, as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has pointed out, that same order had been given to another individual, of the same interested parties. By not producing the whole file, the House would then be misled into the belief that the order had never been given. You see therefore, if you give only one letter and not all the documents, how inconvenient that would be and how the House might be deceived. Does the hon. minister not think that in pursuance of our undoubted practice—and that I regard as authority—when a minister quotes a document that document has to be laid on the table, and it has to be laid there for a purpose. What purpose ? It is not that every member shall have an opportunity of informing himself with regard to it, and does that not imply that a reasonable time must be allowed members to examine that paper ? Can that opportunity be given when the paper is laid on the table a few minutes and before the discussion is through it is taken away, or before those who desire to see it have an opportunity of doing so. Does not the rule imply that there shall be a reasonable time given to allow the whole House to examine the document ?

Mr. PATERSON. I think not.

Mr. SPROULE. If not, then I do not know what rights this parliament has.

Mr. PATERSON. I am not questioning the right of parliament to ask for public documents and to get them. If the hon member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was not satisfied, if he thought there were more papers on that file which he would like to see, he would move for them. I am simply speaking on the point of putting the documents in the possession of the House in the proper way.

Mr. SPROULE. The rule and the practice, as I take it, is that when public papers which are quoted by a minister of the Crown, are required to be produced for the information of the House—not the information of any individual member—in order to come to a correct conclusion upon the question, they must be laid on the table so that all can examine them.

Mr. PATERSON. Precisely.

Mr. SPROULE. And not one portion of the papers but the whole of them.

Mr. PATERSON. The document quoted from, which the minister has in his possession, has to be laid on the table, so that all the other members may have the same knowledge of it that the minister has. Might I ask the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) now? There were one or two letters quoted from a file the other day by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Suppose, instead of having the file before him, he had simply the two letters, could you require the whole file to be laid on the table or just the two letters?

Mr. FOSTER. The minister might read the two letters, but if any hon. member came to the conclusion that it would be well to know whether those were the only two letters with reference to the subject, he could put the question. And if the minister replied that there were other letters. any hon. member would have the right to insist on his bringing down the whole correspondence.

Mr. PATERSON. Would the minister have to lay the whole file on the table without a motion being made ordering it to be produced?

Mr. FOSTER. He could not lay anything on the table that he did not have in his immediate possession.

Mr. PATERSON. But would an individual member have a right, on his mere request, to have the original file laid on the table?

Mr. FOSTER. Under those circumstances?

Mr. PATERSON. Under any circumstances. If the minster had brought to the House simply the two letters from which he quoted, is there any rule which would compel him to lay on the table, not only those two letters, but any others? The letters he quoted, any hon. member might insist on his laying them on the table. But suppose the file were not here and a member would say there must be other letters which the minister has not read, would he not require to make a motion in order to have the file produced?

Mr. FOSTER. What I would do first would be to ask the minister to bring them down.

Mr. PATERSON. Would he be bound to bring them down?

Mr. FOSTER. Not unless he had an order of the House. But if he only read two letters out of the whole correspondence, any member could ask him to be kind enough to bring down the rest, and in nine cases out of ten the minister would consent. Of course he might refuse, and in that case I would make a motion.

Mr. PATERSON. The minister might do as an act of courtesy, just what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries did. The file was in his possession and could be taken away by him, with the exception of the documents he quoted from which must be laid on the table.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Customs has probably been as long here as any hon. member in this House. Under ordinary circumstances, I would be inclined to accept his opinion, but I am afraid I cannot do so in this instance. He does not seem to realize that once documents have been laid on the table of this House, they are in the possession of the House. Let me read what I understand is an authority on the matter we are discussing:

It has been laid down by the highest authority that when a minister of the Crown quotes a public document in the House and founds upon it an argument or assertion, that document, if called for, ought to be produced.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the document?

Mr. PATERSON. The document that is quoted.

Mr. HENDERSON. Suppose the Minister of Marine and Fisheries read half a letter, would he only be obliged to produce that half?

Mr. PATERSON. He would be obliged to produce that half certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. Nothing more. according to my hon. friend the Minister of Customs.

Mr. PATERSON. He would put the whole document from which he quoted.

Mr. HENDERSON. If my hon. friend is right, he would have the right to cut that document in two and just place one-half on the table. He must be consistent. Surely the meaning of the rule is that, in a case of this kind, the whole file must be produced from which the minister quoted, just as he would have to produce the whole of a letter, and not merely the portion he read.

Mr. BRODEUR. Even if the file should refer to a subject absolutely different from the one under discussion? The other night a document was quoted relating to the purchase of some fire extinguishers from Mr. Perreault. Because that document was quoted, was the minister obliged to bring down the whole file containing the dealings of the department with reference to fire extinguishers?

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any other correspondence on the file except that relating to the purchase and sale of fire extinguishers?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a file concerning fire extinguishers but the point brought up by the hon. member for Leeds was whether a certain letter had been signed by me or not, and that letter had to be produced.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think we have drifted entirely away from the question as to who signed the letter before the controversy came up about placing on the table the file in question. From my experience in this parliament, I would have no hesitation in saying that the ordinary rule is that when a file of papers is quoted from, even if only one letter in it be quoted, the whole file must be produced in order that the House may be able to judge whether there are any other letters to throw light on the subject. What is the object of placing a document on the table after it has been read? After an hon. member has heard a document read he knows all about that particular document. But he asks that the file be laid on the table in order that he may ascertain whether there is anything else in it bearing upon the question or not. That, to my mind, is what occurred in this instance.

Mr. PATERSON. But if the file was not in the House at all?

Mr. HENDERSON. But the hon. gentleman quoted from the file, and I maintain that the file itself is the 'document' referred to in the rule of Dr. Bourinot. Certainly, I cannot put any other construction upon it. I look upon it, as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has said, the same as if it were a bound volume. Suppose that these letters had been printed and bound in a book, and suppose the hon. gentleman had read from that book, would not he be obliged to lay the whole book on the table? And what is the difference, whether it is printed in a book and bound, or fastened together in the ordinary way of a file of letters in one of the departments? The minister asks: How if there are other subjects referred to in that file? But I understand that the practice in every department is to have a file for each subject. Certainly, that is what must be done if the business of the department is to be properly looked after; and that, I assume, is the case here. I understand that these letters refer to the one matter which we have been speaking about, and, if so, I can see no good reason for disconnecting one from the other. What right would even the minister have to open that file and take out a letter? I question very much the propriety of it. To my mind, a file is sacred, and, if this government went out of power today that file should be left in its entirety, no single document being taken from it. Therefore, it would be impossible for the minister to lay one letter on the table without laying the whole on the table. If we apply reason and common sense to this question, we shall come to a better conclusion than by treating it in a technical way—and the treatment suggested is very technical to my mind. I express my opinion candidly, and I am perfectly serious in this matter. I think that the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) was quite entitled to have possession of the file on Saturday morning, or at such time as he desired. I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries made a mistake in going to the clerk, and asking, or demanding that the file should be handed over to him.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am sure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) wishes to be fair to me. Therefore, will he permit me a word at this point? The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) had that file for the whole evening, and was asked if he would be through with it that evening, and he said he would.

Mr. BLAIN. No.

Mr. BRODEUR. I sent some one to him, and I certainly understood that he had said so.

Mr. BLAIN. No.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will the hon. gentleman state what he did say?

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. minister must not put words in my mouth. I asked the clerk for the file and it was given me with the understanding that I should return it to him before the close of the sitting, he saying that he must have it to lock it up in his safe.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will the hon. gentleman deny that he told me, in the 'Hansard' reporters' room, that he would probably need the file after eight o'clock, and would give it back to me. Does he deny that?

Mr. BLAIN. I am not here either to state or deny——

Mr. BRODEUR. Does the hon. gentleman deny it?

Mr. BLAIN. I do deny it emphatically; I never made such a statement. I never had such a thought in my mind, and the minister knows that very well.

Mr. BRODEUR. Let us make this clear: The hon. gentleman denies formally that, after six o'clock, in the 'Hansard' reporters' room, after I showed him the letters on the file, he said he would require it after eight o'clock, but he would give it to me after he was through.

Mr. BLAIN. That is an entirely different story. I told the clerk——

Mr. BRODEUR. No, I am speaking of what happened in the 'Hansard' reporters' room——

Mr. SPEAKER. It is impossible to allow the discussion to go on in this way. An hon. member has the floor and unless he gives way——

Mr. HENDERSON. I am perfectly willing to give way, Mr. Speaker; but I do not wish to be deprived of my right.

Mr. BLAIN. What I say is this: The minister laid the file upon the table at my request. When I applied to the clerk for the file, the clerk said I could have it with the distinct understanding that I was to return it to him so that he could lock it up in his safe, as it was in his custody—that was the understanding he had. I took the file and went over it for an hour or two and returned it with the expectation that I should have an opportunity to get it again on Monday morning. But when I applied to the clerk for it, he told me that the minister had taken it away. He kept it all the rest of Friday, Saturday and Sunday and had not returned it up to three o'clock to-day. I said to the clerk that I would expect him to get it back from the minister, as it was in the custody of the House, and he said he would communicate with the hon. gentleman. He tried to get the minister by telephone, but was unable to do so. He then wrote a letter, asking the minister to return the file, but the minister had not returned it up to three o'clock. I asked the clerk if the file had been placed on the table at three o'clock, and he told me it had not. A few minutes after, the minister sent for me to go to his room. He said, 'Here is the file; what do you want from it?' I said that I did not know exactly, but I wanted him to return it to the clerk——

Mr. BRODEUR. Is that all the hon. gentleman said?

Mr. BLAIN. I said to the minister then that if he would bring the original file back to the clerk, I would not mention it in the House. That was my position. I wished to deal fairly with the minister, which I have done. But I may say the minister has not dealt fairly with me, and I will take another opportunity to refer to the matter.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have very little more to add on this question. If any further evidence is required to show that the rule applies to the whole file and not to one particular letter that may happen to have been read, it is the fact brought out by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) that letter after letter, a continuation of letters, relating to this same matter is contained in the file. Surely, we cannot dissociate these other letters from the one read by the minister. They all go to constitute one document, and in no way can I understand the rule laid down by Bourinot unless it be applied as I have indicated.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask the indulgence of the House for a moment, to correct in the same 'Hansard' that it will appear in what appears to have been a mis-statement or not a full statement by the minister concerning these fire extinguishers bought in 1891. He stated that the old government, in 1891, bought two Babcock extinguishers at $30 each. He made other comments, that I will not allude to. What he did not state was this, that before these were bought, communication was had, both with Great Britain and the United States, and there is on file here a statement from F. A. Mahan, captain of engineers of the United States artillery, saying that they had called for competition and got the prices of some Babcock machines, and that as a result of the competition they had taken six machines at $31.40 each. The price paid by the Marine Department here for these, after that report of the engineer, was $25 each.

DOKIS INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. GEO. H. PERLEY (Argenteuil). Before you leave the chair I would like to say a few words with reference to an advertisement that has appeared lately with regard to a sale of the timber on a certain reserve on the French river known as the Dokis Indian reserve in the province of Ontario. I will read the first part of it :

There will be offered for sale by public auction, at an upset price, in the Russell House, in the city of Ottawa, on Wednesday, the 24th day of June, 1908, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon, timber berths numbered 1 to 8 inclusive, covering the pine timber of nine inches diameter and over at the stump, and no other, on the whole of the Dokis Indian reserve, situate on the French river in the province of Ontario.

Each limit will be offered separately at a bonus, ten per cent of which to be paid in cash on day of sale, and notes to be given for the remainder, payable in three, six and nine months, at the Bank of Montreal, in the city of Ottawa, with interest at six per cent.

And there are other conditions of sale. With regard to this matter I asked a question, which was answered in the House last Thursday, on page 7735 of the 'Hansard.' In this answer it is stated that the notice regarding this sale was sent out from the department to certain newspapers, beginning in the 9th of April, and the list of newspapers is given. I may say that although the notice was said to be inserted in the newspapers at that date, I received a notice from the deparment only on the 23rd of April. The list of newspapers is quite large ; of course they all appear to be Liberal newspapers. I do not know why this should be a matter of patronage to newspapers supporting the government, because it is a matter of business, and I fancy that every man in this House will agree that Conservatives are just as likely to buy these limits as Liberals. I think it would have been wiser for the government to advertise this sale in some Conservative newspapers, because some Conservatives do not take Liberal newspapers. I notice by this advertisement that the government propose to put an upset price on these limits. I desire to say that I think a reserve bid is much more effective in the selling of such a property than an upset price. Naturally many bidders, when they reach the upset price which has been made known before the sale, will not go any further ; whereas with a reserve bid, which is not made known to the bidders, there have been many instances in which limits have been sold for a great deal more money than the reserve bid. A reserve bid tends to bring a higher price from the bidders, because the limit purchasers naturally will be affected when they reach the upset price. With regard to the terms of payment, I find they have been made very easy in that only ten per cent of the bonus is to be paid in cash. This is a most unusual provision, because it is customary that from one-quarter to one-third of the bonus shall be paid in cash at the time of the sale, or within a few days afterwards. With regard to the notice of the sale of these limits, I may say frankly that at the proper season of the year the time allowed between the notice of sale and the auction would be sufficient, provided the lines between the different berths had been already surveyed. In the province of Ontario more notice is given than two months and a half. It is better to make the notice too long than too short. But this particular notice has been given at a most unfortunate time of the year. Frome the 9th of April when this notice was sent out, up to the present moment, it has been practically impossible for any person to go and examine that country. We all know that when spring comes on no one can get about in these woods, because there is still a good deal of snow on the land and ice on many of the lakes, and a person cannot go about either on snowshoes or by canoe. Therefore this notice is of no avail whatever up to the present time. The latter part of the month of May is usually a good time to travel in the country, but the Prime Minister will realize another objection when I say that there is no season of the year when there is as much danger of fire from prospectors as in the month of May. As soon as the snow is gone and the leaves get dry, there is more danger of fire than at any other season. For that reason also an unfortunate time has been selected for the sale of these limits. Then when the month of June comes on the flies get bad, and it is almost impossible for anybody to make a proper survey of the limit on account of the flies. Why the government should have chosen this particular time to give this notice I cannot understand, because it is the most unfortunate period in the whole year.

Now, the picking out of this time seems most peculiar for many reasons. I notice that the surrender by the Indians of their rights to this timber and the authorization of the notice of sale were dated January 7, 1908. The Minister of the Interior recommended to council on February 20, 1908, that this surrender should be accepted and that the limits should be sold. The copies which I have do not show whether the order in council passed at that time for that purpose. But, if the sale could have been advertised in February then the number of weeks' notice given would have been amply sufficient. This timber is most valuable. It has been talked about by all the lumbermen in this part of the country, to my certain knowledge for twenty five years. The old chief of these Indians who died, I think last year, always refused absolutely to agree to the sale of this timber, but, at certain times, the rumor would get about, that this timber was going to be sold. Therefore, it is not a new thing, it is something which has been in the eye of the lumbermen, at any rate, if not in the public eye, for twenty-five years at least. The Indians, having at last signed the surrender of their rights and having permitted the sale of this property, I submit that it is most extraordinary that after all these years of discussion, such a short notice should be given of the sale of this valuable property which, I am informed, will bring many hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. If they get the proper price.

Mr. PERLEY. If they give a proper chance to the people to examine it and bid upon it. On Thursday last I put a series of questions to the government and I desire particularly to call attention to No. 4 :

Have the lines been run on the ground dividing the said reserve into the different timber berths which are advertised to be sold separately?

There are eight different berths within this Dokis reserve. I think there are about fifty miles of country altogether and it is proposed by the government to divide it up into eight berths. The answer which I received is as follows :

No, but a surveyor has been instructed to do the work, and it is expected that he will be on the ground this week.

That is the part of this proposed sale to which I most strongly object and for which I think there is no justification whatever. The department sends out a blue print of this reserve showing it divided into eight berths which they propose to sell separately, but these lines have not been surveyed on the ground and any one knows that it is impossible for any cruiser or bush ranger to go there and make a proper estimate of each one of these berths unless there is a line for him to go by so that he may know what he is doing. In a property of this kind which is worth such a lot of money, a very small variation in these lines would make a very great difference in the value of berths as compared with what it might be before and after the lines were actually run. With reference to the manner in which the advertisement was sent out, this was what was sent out to me from the department—a little clipping from a newspaper and a blueprint. Nothing is said to show that these lines have not been run. I do not happen to be personally interested in this matter. I have no intention of bidding on or buying in this property, but a person who received this notice from the department would naturally take it for granted that these lines were run, he would send his men to examine that timber and if he did so they could not make a report on which he could bid for these different berths when they came up for sale.

Mr. McCOOL. Does not that blue-print state that it is a proposed sketch of the survey ?

Mr. PERLEY. It says 'sketch showing timber berths in the Dokis Indian reserve, French river, Ontario, scale 3 miles to the inch.' At the bottom it says 'approximate areas.' It says nothing as to whether the lines are run or not.

Mr. McCOOL. That would show that they are not surveyed.

Mr. PERLEY. The hon. member for Nipissing knows full well that no one selling a limit guarantees the areas. Here it says 'Approximate areas.' If the ordinary expression had been used, it would say 'more or less.'

Mr. McCOOL. Yes, but that is not the approximate area.

Mr. PERLEY. I submit that the words 'approximate area' and 'so many miles, more or less' mean the same thing. Under these conditions a man who did not know that these lines had not been run would send his men up there to examine this country and they would be unable to present such a report as would enable him to bid on these different berths. The government, in this matter, are trustees for the Indians ; they should give every opportunity for the proper examination of this country in order that it may bring all that it is worth and I submit that no person selling this property for himself would give a notice at this time of year and without having the lines run. The government themselves cannot put an upset price on these limits without having the lines run, but perhaps they can do that later on themselves if they get anybody who will undertake to do the work in the month of June and I presume that they cannot have it done before that.

In regard to the circumstances connected with the surrender of this reserve, which certainly, from the papers, seem to have been very peculiar, I do not propose to speak this evening, but probably they will be brought up later on in the session. I simply rose at this time, before it is too late, to call the attention of the government to this matter. I regret very much that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) is not here this evening. I gave him notice today that I was going to speak on this but I have been unable to get a chance until this late hour. I want to urge upon the government——

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) waited until nearly eleven o'clock when, thinking that it would not come up, he went home.

Mr. PERLEY. I quite understand, it is unfortunate, but I want to urge upon the Minister of the Interior and the government, before it is too late, to extend the time for this auction sale in order to give people who wish to bid a proper and reasonable chance to go and examine that country after the lines have been run on the field dividing these valuable berths one from the other. I thought that if it were brought to the attention of the government now they might act in the matter and as this property has been talked about and known for so many years, why should not the government be willing to wait a reasonable time before putting it up for auction sale and thus give every person, who might think that he would like to bid on these limits, a chance to know their full value in order that they may bring all that they are worth. In that conection I would like to ask that the copies of the balance of the file to this date be brought down. This is reference No. 233 and the papers were asked for by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). As the Minister of the Interior is not here I would like to ask that copies of the balance of the papers in connection with this matter may be brought down promptly in order that we may have a chance to discuss the question a little more fully at some other time.

Mr. C. A. McCOOL (Nipissing). I am rather surprised to hear the hon. member for Argenteuil, than whom there is probably no more practical lumberman in this country, take exception to the method of advertising this limit. I may say in the first place that the surrender was obtained from the Indians on the distinct understanding that they would not have to bear the fire risk during next season. That was the reason why a longer time was not given for the sale. However, there cannot possibly be any injury done to anybody, neither to the Indians nor to prospective buyers by reason of the length of time that will be available for exploring after the lines are run, because there are only altogether about 12 miles of line to run to divide the berths. Even from the blue print, anyone looking at No. 1 and No. 2 berths will see there is almost a natural line as there are two bays there one almost directly opposite the other. I think the line is only about a quarter of a mile across and it would only make a difference of a few trees anyway. I have been informed that a number of lumbermen are already on the ground. This reserve is well known and its value as a timber limit is well known also. The lumbermen have been trying to get a surrender from the late chief for years, but he always objected. There is not much wonder that he did object because he could look back at a time when an almost equally valuable timber limit was sold by our friends on the other side of the House for the sum of three hundred and some odd dollars, to prominent politicians in this city. The chief naturally feared that something similar would happen had he consented to surrender the timber on this reserve. The lines will be completed and there will still be six weeks time to travel that country. It is not 100 miles out from civilization; a man can leave here on the midnight train and be on the reserve the next evening. The Indians were given a positive pledge by the Indian agent who got the surrender, that they would not have to bear the fire risk this season.

Mr. PERLEY. There is nothing in the agreement with the Indians to that effect.

Mr. McCOOL. There was an understanding which is just as binding as an agreement. There was a pledge given and were it not that the Indians have confidence in the agent that surrender could not have been obtained. There have been deputations of lumbermen as well as officers sent by the department, both by this government and previous governments, to that reserve to try and get a surrender not only in the interests of the lumber trade but in the interests of the Indians themselves because of the danger of that country being swept by fire, but hitherto the Indians refused to sell. There is no question at all about it but that that country will bring a very large amount of money. I would not like to risk an opinion because I have not examined the timber and know nothing about it except from hearsay, but the general expectation is that it will realize something in the neighbourhood of $1,000,000. I believe that when the sale comes on the day mentioned, it will be found that no mistake has been made as to the time and the competition will prove whether people have had time to explore it or not. There is only about 43 miles in it altogether and about one-third of the whole territory in which the line is almost marked out now. This is an island and it narrows down by two bays opposite each other to about a quarter of a mile in width, so that there is no trouble in any bushman travelling that part of it even without a line. A man could not make a mistake of $500 worth in the difference between where the line will be and where he would plant it himself by looking at a blue print sketch.

Mr. PERLEY. What about the other six berths.

Mr. McCOOL. It means 10 or 12 miles of a line at the outside which would mean 10 or 12 days of a surveyor. The surveyor, who has been ordered to go there is well accustomed to that kind of work; he has been doing it all his lifetime and is a very capable man. He certainly will run all these lines in 12 days, so that there will be six weeks time to travel 43 miles.

Mr. PERLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. McCOOL. Oh, yes, and even if there was only one month it is ample time. Having regard to the pledge given the Indians there was no possibility of extending the time and keeping faith with them. I happen to know about that, because I was instrumental in getting the agent appointed as I had every confidence in him and one of the reasons why I wanted him appointed was in order to get the surrender of this and another reserve. I felt that it would be for the benefit of the Indians as well as for the benefit of the whole country, because the timber surrounding has been cut and the limit was in very great danger from fire and of course if it was burned it would be no good to the Indians or any one else. As to the terms, they are exactly the terms given by the Ontario government in all their large sales. That is, with the exception that the present Ontario government have lately been selling by the thousand feet instead of by the mile, and they take the risk of fire. The purchaser may leave that timber standing until a year before the term of the lease expires, and then he can go in and cut and in the meantime they put up a small deposit and the government takes all risk. There was the sale of a township at the head of Garden river a short time ago where $10.52 per 1,000 feet board measure was obtained for the limit and $2 dues making $12.52, and it was held up as being a tremendous sale. But you must take into consideration that the government carried the fire risk for 15 years, or rather for 14 years because the timber could be cut in the last year. In the present instance the intention is that the Indians will not have to take the fire risk but that the purchaser of the timber will. With regard to an upset price or a reserve bid, I do not know that there is very much difference between the two. I do not know that the up-set price means that the price is to be made public. I doubt very much if it is. It does not necessarily have to be told to the auctioneer until the sale is in progress. I do not quite understand why the hon. member (Mr. Perley) said the upset price was to be made public for I am quite sure such is not the intention of the Minister of Indian Affairs. If I understand it aright an upset price means the same thing as a reserve bid. You can rest satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that there is no such thing as the upset price being made public at all ; the upset price is to be made known to the auctioneer at the time of the sale and not before.

Mr. PERLEY. If the hon. gentleman bought the right from the Indians on the 7th of January, and would probably sell, would he have had those lines run before this time, or would he have waited to have them run within a month of the sale ?

Mr. McCOOL. Does the hon. gentleman sate that the government were in a position to advertise it in January ? My information is that they were not. My information is that there was not one minute lost from the time of the surrender until it was advertised. There were some conditions put in the surrender which were not satisfactory, and these were only arranged later. That is my information. I am quite sure that the government were not in a position to advertise the sale in January.

SPRING FLOODS.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Mr. Speaker, before we go into Supply, I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to a very serious matter. I have been notified this evening by telephone that a dam belonging to the government at Valleyfield has broken and the waters of Lake St. Francis are overflowing to such an extent that barns, stables and even dwellings are threatened to be carried away, and the people are fleeing from the place. I would ask the hon. Minister to send an engineer to-morrow morning to see what can be done. Lake St. Francis is a part of the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. R. N. WALSH (Huntingdon). Mr. Speaker, in this connection I would like to bring up the matter that I spoke of the other day, namely, the breaking away of a portion of the same embankment at Ste. Barbe in the county of Huntingdon. After the embankment broke this year I addressed a letter to the minister in regard to the matter. The land there is splendid farming land, and the people bought it and cultivated it believing that the government would protect the embankment. This break occurred at a time when the farmers were ready to put in their grain. I would urge the minister to get a report from his engineer in regard to making the embankment secure so that the people will not be drowned out every year.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The question raised by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) is a very serious one. The difficulty this year is that the water in the St. Lawrence is higher by several feet than it has been in the memory of the oldest residents along the river. We have been notified that thousands of dollars of damage has been done in the Thousand Islands owing to the water having risen above high-water mark. I will act on the suggestion of my hon. friend and send a man down to-morrow morning to see what can be done. With regard to the matter mentioned by the hon. member for Huntingdon, it is difficult to say what can be done in this exceptional year; but in an ordinary year protection ought to be afforded.

CUSTODY OF ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if after hearing the somewhat lengthy discussion on the fire extinguisher matter to-night, he will consult his Minister of Marine, and have all the original documents laid on the table, so that the members may examine them at a later day.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I thought that after all that had been said on the subject it had been exhausted, and that there was nothing more to be said.

THE NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, before we go into Supply, I beg to call attention to a dispatch which I find to-day in the Toronto 'World' and which is also published in the Toronto 'Mail.' It purports to come from Montreal and reads as follows:

Will the government come down to parliament and admit that a mistake has been made in the location of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway hundreds of miles north of the big cities, instead of starting from North Bay or thereabouts, thus easily tapping Montreal and Toronto?

This is a question a good many wise men are asking here to-day. One thing is certain, there is a big 'something' in the wind.

The Grand Trunk noon train to-day brought down Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. Sydney Fisher and Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, and it was soon evident that the mission was an important one.

Of course the matter of an interview with Premier Gouin was readily admitted, and as a matter of fact this interview took place, but the meeting between Mr. Hays and the Prime Minister was of another kind.

Those who are familiar with the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific officials declare that a grievous apprehension of coming difficulties has settled down upon both for some reason or other, and the statement is made that the trouble is all over what is said to have been the awful blunder made in the location of the transcontinental away from the freight and passenger producing centres of the country.

It has now become painfully evident to the ministers and company alike—so the story goes—that Fitzpatrick and Parent must have intentionally or no, pulled the wool over their colleagues' eyes, and to-day the latter are committed to what one man styled 'the most stupendous blunder ever perpetrated in this or any other country.'

A prominent railway man said to-day that he had never yet understood why Toronto and Montreal looked on with so much apathy and indifference while the matter was before parliament.

'But,' he said (and his name if divulged would carry tremendous weight, both in parliament and the country), 'even at this late hour Sir Wilfrid should face the situation, admit the error and put the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific right before the country and posterity.'

It is a well-known fact here that all concerned are greatly worried, and it only remains to be seen if the proper parties will have the courage to grapple with the question of the modified route in the way that it should be grappled with.

I have to say that whoever penned that paragraph for the press had not even a shadow of reason for so writing. That there has been any hesitation or doubt as to the proper location of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway has never come to my knowledge or even been hinted to me or expressed in any way. When it is said that 'all concerned are greatly worried,' I have to say that we are not worried at all, and that the matter referred to has not engaged the attention of any one so far as I know. The statement that I went to Montreal for the purpose of interviewing somebody in respect to this matter is also another fallacy. I do not know for what purpose this statement is published—evidently to create suspicion in the minds of somebody and to arouse Toronto and Montreal, which are not on the line of the railway. If that is not the object of the dispatch, I know not what the object is. But I have to repeat that there is not a shadow of foundation for the statements made.

CUSTODY OF ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS.

Mr. BLAIN. My right hon. friend has no doubt overlooked the question that I put to him in respect to the original documents.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, I have not overlooked it. I thought my hon. friend had exhausted all he had to say on the matter and that the House had also.

Mr. BLAIN. I asked the right hon. gentleman if after hearing this long discussion he would instruct the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to lay the original documents on the table of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that in accordance with your ruling the minister has laid the papers on the table of the House for the reasonable inspection of members, the same to be returned to him afterwards.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Public buildings, Ontario—North Bay public buildings, $17,500.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Petitions were received for the erection of this building from the municipal association, the board of trade, the mayor and some two hundred people. Upwards of a dozen properties were submitted to the government's agent, Mr. P. McCool. After examination, he secured options on eight. The department then sent an expert, Mr. Hewitt, to make an examination, and he selected four with the purpose of getting offers. The site finally approved of cost 92 cents per square foot. The next most eligible site was offered at $2.31 per foot. The other sites were low lying, required expensive draining and were not central. The agent reported the price of 62 cents per foot as fair and reasonable. My hon. friend from Nipissing (Mr. McCool) will corroborate my statement when I say that the property acquired by the department for $8,100 was valued by many people at as much as $10,000 and could have been sold afterwards for that sum. It was bought from Mr. William Doran. The site is 66 feet on Queen street and 132 feet on Fraser street.

Mr. FOWLER. Any buildings ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some old buildings.

Mr. FOWLER. It is a large price ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. North Bay is growing rapidly. The next eligible lot was offered at $11,000 or $2.31 per foot.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the population?

Mr. PUGSLEY. At present between 5,000 and 6,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this for post office and custom house?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and an armoury as well. All in one building.

Mr. BERGERON. What will be the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $61,373 including site, heating, electric wiring, fittings, &c.

Mr. FOWLER. Who has the contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. W. H. McGillivray and P. Lebel of Ottawa. The contract price is $33,879.

Mr. BERGERON. Were there many tenders?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nine, and the lowest was accepted.

Mr. FOWLER. How much has been done?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the 15th December, $33,511.03.

Mr. FOWLER. Who is the inspector?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The clerk of works is Mr. William Martin.

Mr. McCOOL. He is a builder and a practical man.

Mr. FOWLER. That is a departure from the ordinary rule.

Mr. McCOOL. When it was decided to erect a public building there I was asked with regard to the site. I went to North Bay and placed the selection in the hands of the mayor at that time, who is now custom house officer, Mr. William Mackenzie, and the president of the board of trade. The president of the board is a very prominent Conservative politician as well as one of the leading citizens of the place. I asked them to select a number of sites and mark them Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and so on, in order of preference, and I handed them over to a namesake and a cousin of mine in the real estate business. And if any one should inquire as to his fitness for that kind of work, he will find that it was given into proper hands. They handed a list of the sites to Mr. McCool who got options on them and sent them down to the department. The minister sent up a representative and he made a selection. I had nothing whatever to do with it and had no preference for one property over another. The site chosen is considered the most suitable. Mrs. Doran was offered $10,000 for the property for commercial purposes, but she had sufficient interest in the town to give her preference to the department. Her interest was perhaps not altogether unselfish because her son was running one of the large hotels at the time and this site was within reasonable distance of it, and no doubt it would add to the value of his business to have this public building in its immediate vicinity. Otherwise she would not have been justified in taking $1,500 less than other people offered her. $8,500 was the original price but there was a building on it which sold for $400, making the net price $8,100. At that price, the property was the best bargain in North Bay for years. The town is very prosperous. It has a population of not less than 6,000 people at present. When the census was taken, its population was only 2,500, but the country north has increased since the census from 1,300 to 40,000. When this question was up here Friday, I think some hon. member on the other side said that North Bay would not be much after the Toronto-Sudbury line was running. But North Bay will still be North Bay even after that line is built, because there is a tremendous country for which it is the distributing point.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understand the minister to say that the total contract for the building is $33,000. Does that include heating and lighting ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, that is for the building only.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. With $33,000 for the building and $8,000 for the site, how does the minister make up this $60,000 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site cost $8,100; survey of site, legal expenses and clerk of works' salary, 1901-3, paid the contractor to 15th December, 1907, $22,510 ; total payments, $32,511.03. Amount due on contract, $11,369 ; heating and boilers, $4,500 ; electric wiring and fixtures, $1,500 ; fittings, furniture and lock boxes, $6,000 ; sidewalks, and fencing, $500 ; contingencies and superintendence, $4,993—total, $61,373.03.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is the contractor to receive more than this $33,000 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There appear to be no extras.

Mr. FOWLER. Is the electric light to be put up by contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is not a contract, but an estimate.

Mr. McCOOL. I may state, for the information of the committee—and I am very sory to say it—that the contractor has lost money. The excavation was of very hard rock.

Mr. BERGERON. We ought to get his picture.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister is increasing the wages of the clerk of works to $4 a day. In the discussion we had last week, I did not notice any case in which the pay was over $3 a day.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The further we go west the higher wages we have to pay to gentlemen in these positions. In British Columbia we have to pay considerable more.

Mr. BERGERON. You only pay $4 a day in British Columbia, do you not ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, more. I am advised by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. McCool) that the services of a competent man for this work could not be had for less than $4 a day. In British Columbia we are paying $5.50 and even more.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you pay these men for Sundays ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume so. But I intend to try to make an arrangement in future under which they will not be paid for Sundays. Of course, if you figure it on a monthly basis, it will come to the same thing.

Mr. FOWLER. No, figuring by the day they will not claim wages for Sundays.

Mr. BLAIN. This clerk of works has already received over $600. What does the minister expect the total pay of the clerk of works to be ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am told that the building is about completed, with the exception of the fittings.

Mr. FOWLER. You do not need the services of a clerk of works for the fittings, do you ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think we would require somebody to see to it that the work is done according to the plans and specifications. At all events, we shall soon be able to dispense with his services.

Mr. BLAIN. Was he a contractor or builder ?

Mr. GRAHAM. A builder.

Mr. McCOOL. Yes, and he took contracts occasionally.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will ask to take up again some of these Kingston items. I would ask for a reconsideration of the item for a new gun-shed, with a view to striking it out. A new plan is under consideration by the Militia Department for the erection of a barracks. If that is carried out, the gun-shed would form part of the new building. I move the reconsideration and striking out of the following items :

Kingston—new gun shed, $10,000.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Now, I move the reconsideration and striking out of the following item :

Kingston Artillery park—new guard house, including offices, &c., $8,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the object of striking it out?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This would come into the scheme of the new barracks, for which the Department of Militia is going to ask an appropriation, which appropriation, perhaps, will appear in the supplementary estimates of this year.

Mr. FOWLER. I take this opportunity of congratulating the minister on his economy. It appears that the result is to be a very much larger expense.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I move the reconsideration and striking out of the following item:

Kingston—new hospital for 'A' and 'B' batteries, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Now, the following item was allowed to stand:

Kingston, Royal Military College—new servants' quarters, $10,000.

I have some information as to that. The information I have from the deputy minister is that these quarters are for the civil subordinates as well as for the riding school attachment. The building is for four non-commisioned officers and for 12 civil subordinates.

Mr. FOWLER. That doesn't explain anything.

Mr. PUGSLEY. These are for the married men's quarters.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It would be better to leave all the military buildings, because I have not got full information.

Leamington public building, $7,000.

Mr. MARSHALL. How much is going to be spent at Leamington?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is expected that the building will cost about $20,000. This estimate is to purchase land and make a commencement.

Mr. LALOR. Leamington is a small place in the county of Essex. What peculiar claims has the town of Leamington for a post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. To begin with, the census of 1901 shows a population of 2,451. Then the town of Leamington is second only to Windsor, in the county of Essex, in the extent of its population, and it stands next to Windsor and Walkerville in the amount of revenue derived from the post office, customs and inland revenue. These three services will be accommodated in the new building. In some years the inland revenue has amounted to $14,000. It has a number of factories, and does a large trade in lumber. It is being supplied with natural gas.

Mr. LALOR. I concede that Leamington is a thriving town, but I would like to know what rule is adopted by the department according to which post offices are supplied. It strikes me from the public buildings that I see being voted, that the chief qualification must be that the county shall be represented by a supporter of the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman had been here when we discussed this matter last, he would have heard that in Sherbrooke, London and Brantford, which places are represented by Conservatives, the government are putting up public buildings. I think the hon. gentleman will find evidence that we are endeavouring as far as possible to meet the requirements of the people in respect to public buildings, irrespective of political considerations. It is also just possible that our friends may be a little more insistent in asking for public buildings than our opponents.

Mr. LALOR. I have been begging for a long time for a drill hall for the town of Dunnville in which I live. We have a fine militia company there, and we cannot get accommodation for them. We are also in great need of a post office. I think there is no town in the province of Ontario that is worse off than we are, when the size of the place is considered. I think it is a far more important town than Leamington. I notice in the next county the town of Welland, which has not only a new drill hall but also a fine post office and customs house.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the population of your town?

Mr. LALOR. I think 2,800. We have no public building of any kind whatever, either drill hall or post office. I think in the disbursement of public money for these purposes some consideration should be given to other counties than those sending Liberals to this House. I hope the Minister of Public Works will give my county a little more consideration than it has received in the past.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall certainly give the matter careful consideration.

Mr. BLAIN. The present minister is new to his office, but if he will look up the records of his department he will find that one of his predecessors sent out a circular asking members and defeated candidates to send in requests for public buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have enough requests without sending out circulars inviting more.

Ottawa departmental buildings—renewal of skylights, $6,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is asked for by the chief architect for renewal of the present skylights in the new departmental buildings. It is for the purpose of providing metal skylights including flashings. There was an appropriation in 1907-8 which was not used. We are asking for a re-vote.

Mr. FOWLER. What departmental buildings are these—the eastern and western blocks ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that under contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not yet.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it going to be done by contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not understand how the work can be done for that amount ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it cannot be done we will do as much as we can.

Mr. FOWLER. That seems a large price for simply putting in these metal windows.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are skylights, and the work will be somewhat extensive.

Mr. J. D. REID. The department know exactly how many skylights have to be renewed and there should be no difficulty in asking for tenders.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have a carpentering and glazier's department in connection with the Public Works Department.

Mr. J. D. REID. If it is to be done by the regular officials of the department that is all right, but if outsiders are to be employed I think the department should advertise and get tenders.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it can be done by tender, I will certainly have it done in that way.

Ottawa Printing Bureau—electric motor machinery, $6,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a vote of $6,000 to provide for electric motors for the new machines that are being installed at the Printing Bureau The total probable cost is $20,504. There was a vote previously and we are asking now for $6,000. The assumed expenditure of $11,176 to the end of the fiscal year added to the $6,000 which we are now voting and $2,000 which was expended to December 31, 1907, makes a total of about $20,000.

Owen Sound public building, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a vote which is asked to make provision for completing, during the present fiscal year, the public building which is under contruction at Owen Sound.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total probable cost including site is $90,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Owen Sound is not a large town ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. This building is to be 82 by 52, with two storeys and basement.

Mr. FOWLER. Why do you provide such a large building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to be used for the post office, customs and inland revenue.

Mr. FOWLER. We have the same in my town and the building there only cost $14,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Your town, of course, is very much smaller than Owen Sound.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the population ?

Mr. MILLER. About 12,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1901 the population was 8,776. Owen Sound, I believe, is one of the best harbours if not the best natural harbour upon the Georgian bay.

Mr. FOWLER. What rent have you been paying for the post office and customs house ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The postal revenue is $16,865, customs duties, $45,000 ; excise, $40,000 ; money orders issued, $40,000 and money orders paid, $65,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What did the site cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give my hon. friend from Kings and Albert the rental that was paid. The site cost $10,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Pretty high, is it not ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a very finely situated lot with 70 feet frontage on Baker street and 95 on Scope street. My hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Telford) is not here.

Mr. BLAIN. He would be in favour of it.

Mr. FOWLER. Perhaps it may be the same with him as with the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Zimmerman) whose speech appeared in the Hamilton 'Herald' or 'Times' although that hon. gentleman was not here to deliver it.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I was not responsible for it.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not saying that the hon. gentleman was responsible, but it shows a strong imagination on the part of the reporter of the 'Times.'

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the newspaper should be excused. I made the statement just as the hon. member for Hamilton was going out that the item would be passed and by mistake, they have reported the speech as having been delivered by Mr. Zimmerman instead of Mr. Henderson.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the minister what newspapers the advertisement appeared, when tenders were asked for the Owen Sound building ? I notice that $353 was paid for advertising. Does not my hon. friend think that is a large amount ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would take in the Toronto daily papers and my deputy tells me that it was advertised in about thirty different papers.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend think any of these would be Liberal-Conservative papers ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would hardly suppose so, unless I had information to that effect.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend was, the other evening endeavouring to lay down the policy that there was no politics in advertising for tenders.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, what I told my hon. friend was that if I anticipated that the circumstances should arise that the advertising could not be widely circulated by the insertion of the advertisement in Liberal papers, I would not hesitate to avail myself of Conservative papers.

Mr. BLAIN. I may say that I think the newspaper having the largest circulation in the town is the Liberal-Conservative paper.

Mr. MILLER. Owen Sound is the county town of my county. It has a population of 12,000 and almost adjoining it is the village of Brook with a population of about 2,000. The nearest large towns to Owen Sound are Durham, 28 miles to the south, Meaford, 18 to 20 miles east, and Wiarton, 25 miles northwest, so that Owen Sound does business with a very large territory. It has one of the finest harbours on the lakes and during last winter there was tied up in that harbour a larger amount of shipping than in perhaps any other harbour in Ontario? The site chosen for the post office met with the approval of all the people of the town, and it is considered a very fine one. As to the circulation of the newspapers referred to by the hon. member for Peel, I do not know which of the three papers has the largest circulation but I should say it was between the Owen Sound 'Times' the Conservative paper, and the Owen Sound 'Sun' one of the Liberal papers. The Owen Sound 'Sun' is published twice a week and the Owen Sound 'Times' once a week.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister lay on the table a list of the papers in which this advertisement was published.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will be glad to.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. member for East Kent (Mr. Gordon) stated the other night that the 'London Advertiser' had about the same circulation as the London 'Free Press.' I have here a certified statement which gives the daily average circulation of the London 'Free Press' as 19,589 and the daily average circulation of the 'Advertiser' at 11,827. I again ask the minister if he will publish advertisement with reference to the Glencoe building in the London 'Free Press' which has the largest circulation in that section of the province.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot promise the hon. gentleman, but I should think that the 'Advertiser' with a circulation of 12,000 (if that figure is correct) would afford sufficient publicity. It must be remembered that the advertisement is published in several Toronto papers one of which is the 'Globe', and I think my hon. friend will admit that the Toronto 'Globe' has a much larger circulation in Ontario than any Conservative newspaper; its circulation is twice or three times as large.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend (Mr. Blain) would not suggest that there was any want of wide circulation for this advertisement seeing it was published in thirty different newspapers.

Mr. BLAIN. My point is that the minister is using this large amount of public money for political purposes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister will not say that any single one of these thirty newspapers was a Liberal-Conservative newspaper. If he will frankly admit that the policy of the department is to put these advertisements in Reform papers and refuse them to Liberal-Conservative papers I can understand him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I told my hon. friend that I would only avail myself of the columns of Conservative papers in cases where I felt it was necessary to give wider circulation by doing so. I may say to my hon. friend that we make out a list of newspapers in which advertisements for works in the district are to be inserted and every day we are refusing to give our friends advertisements. We feel that by advertising in newspapers in the district and surrounding cities where the works are to be carried out that we are giving ample publicity and we do not yield to the request of our friends to extend the patronage.

Mr. BLAIN. How will a Conservatitve contractor know about these works if he only takes a Conservative newspaper.

Mr. GRAHAM. He would not be so narrow as that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not found any difficulty in that direction. We find that Conservative contractors tender and they always get fair play.

Mr. FOWLER. Would it not be much cheaper and do just as well to advertise in the 'Canada Gazette.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think so.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that you are spending too much money on advertising, and that if these advertisements were published only in the 'Canada Gazette' they would reach contractors and builders all over the country because if such were known they would all take the 'Canada Gazette'. I do not find fault with the minister giving these advertisements to the Liberal newspapers.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You think I would be an anomalous sort of individual if I did otherwise.

Mr. FOWLER. If I were running a Liberal newspaper and you advertised in a Conservative organ and not in my paper I would feel dissatisfied. We do not run a political department the same as we run a Sunday school, and you are expected to give the patronage to your friends. That part of it is all right. But, if these advertisements were only published in the 'Canada Gazette' they would reach all the contractors who would be on the outlook for them. A contractor living in Ottawa might tender on a building in New Brunswick and as we know the Sussex building was erected by an Ottawa contractor. It might be a little tough on the newspapers to advertise only in the 'Gazette' but it would be satisfactory.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would be a great departure from the practice of the last forty years and I fear it would be said that I was not giving sufficient publicity.

Mr. FOWLER. It would be said that you were not giving sufficient pap to the newspapers that are supporting you. The hon. gentleman need not be afraid of a new departure because he is supposed to be a Liberal now and Liberals are always making departures.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have some sympathy with the suggestion made by the hon. member (Mr. Fowler). I have often thought it would be a good idea to have one standard publication in which these contracts would be advertised, and the contractors all over the country knowing of that would look out for these advertisements. With reference to the Owen Sound public building, I do not agree with the hon. member for South Grey that it is necessary to spend this large amount of money for a public building even in the thriving town of Owen Sound. It seems to me that for a great deal less, ample accommodation could be furnished for the Post Office, Customs and Inland Revenue Departments. To my mind, this would be an admirable case in which, if the government are determined to spend $90,000 in a county they could divide it up among the various towns in the county. I do not know that there is a public building in South Grey or in East Grey. We do not ask the government to increase the expenditure; I would be very sorry to do that; but by dividing the expenditure amongst the different towns and villages in a county, the minister could provide ample accommodation in the county town, and small public buildings in other towns and villages. I hope the minister will take this into consideration.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister seems to think that $90,000 is a very trifling sum for a custom house in the town of Owen Sound, with a population of 7,000 or 8,000 people.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Twelve thousand.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. member for South Grey has made a census of his own, and says 12,000; but he does not know any more about the population of Owen Sound than I do. I would remind the minister that in the city of Fredericton the parliament house, a very handsome and commodious building, was erected and completed at a cost of only $108,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When was that built?

Mr. FOWLER. About twenty-five years ago. It is a large and handsome building of stone, a credit to the province, and it cost only $18,000 more than you are going to spend on this custom house in the little town of Owen Sound.

Mr. LALOR. I think the minister told us that the postal revenue of Leamington was $14,000 and that of Owen Sound, $16,000. A $7,000 public building is good enough for Leamington, but $90,000 is to be spent on one in Owen Sound.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The excise revenue in Owen Sound was $40,000.

Mr. LALOR. I am speaking now of the postal revenue. I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Halton, that there should be some arrangement by which some of the public money would be spent on the smaller towns and villages. I think they are entitled to some consideration. It does seem to me that $90,000 for a public building in Owen Sound is excessive, and that there are many other places that are equally entitled to be provided for.

Mr. GRAHAM. Owen Sound is one of the towns I know something about. It is one of the principal gateways to eastern Canada from the Great Lakes and has perhaps the best natural harbour in the western part of this province. Along a stretch of fifteen miles, a disabled vessel can get in and be in perfect safety. Last year they did a large business. It has large elevators and handled some 6,000,000 bushels of grain and expects to handle more. I have a good deal of sympathy with the idea of the government spending money on good buildings wherever there are a revenue and population to justify it. I do not take the ground at all that we ought to be parsimonious although we ought not to be extravagant. This money is placed where necessity demands it and we should take into consideration the necessity for a building and not say promiscuously that we ought to spend so much in the country and so much in the town. That is not a business way of looking at it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why not? Is not the country entitled to public buildings as well as the town?

Mr. GRAHAM. I said where the business needs it. We ought not to say that we shall give so much to the country villages and so much to the towns without regard to the needs and interests of the different places. The Inland Revenue at Owen Sound is something like $40,000 last year. The postal revenue is about $16,000 and the customs about $45,000 or over $100,000 yearly revenue. In the smaller places, my hon. friend from Haldimand forgets that they just require post offices whereas here we have three services in the one building. The Dominion ought to take pride in having a good building where there is a large revenue and also out of regard for the safety of the service we ought to have a fireproof building. Owen Sound is one of most thriving places in the Dominion. It has the situation and the enterprise and to this day they have never had a government building there. For the present needs this building may be a little large, but it is wise economy to look to the future and I believe that no more justifiable expenditure could be made by any public department.

Mr. OWEN. I think the hon. minister must be mistaken when he said the revenue of the post office at Leamington was $14,000 and at Owen Sound $16,000.

Mr. LALOR. From the latest report, the town of Dunville in my constituency has a postal revenue of $4,437 and it has no post office.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not give the postal revenue at Leamington as $14,000. I said that the Inland Revenue was that amount and the postal revenue $3,375.

Mr. LOLOR. Dunnville has a postal revenue of $4,437 and Leamington $3,177. The money order revenue at Dunnville is $15,759, Glencoe $9,773 and Leamington $12,750. Much smaller places get magnificent buildings while Dunnville, which is much more important, cannot get them. The government should take into consideration the importance of the town and the public revenue collected there, and should not make it their first consideration that the town elects a supporter of the government. Towns of less importance should not be given public buildings while the more important ones are suffering.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to attract my hon. friend's attention to the large increase in expenditure over the Estimates first made when the votes are first asked for. For instance in 1906 the Estimates for the building at North Bay was given at $14,000 by the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman). Now my hon. friend says the total cost will be about $60,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably my predecessor did not include the site and fittings and furniture. The contract was for $33,000.

Mr. BLAIN. There may be something in that. The estimate for the Owen Sound public building, when the vote was first asked, was between $40,000 and $50,000. The ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) said it would depend on whether the building was to be of stone or brick. Now we have the minister saying that the cost will be $90,000, almost double. I hope my hon. friend will be more careful and see that his estimates are more in accord with the total expenditure. The opposition are always twitted with having consented to these expenditures, but after voting certain amounts, they are then asked to vote a great deal more than was estimated and when objection is raised they are asked if they are going to refuse money to complete the work after so much has been expended on it. As the minister is new to the department and is reforming it on every hand, I hope he will see that his department in future will give a correct statement of what these buildings will cost. I am quite sure that this is one of the ways in which the enormous expenditure of which the people of Canada are complaining is arising and taking possession of the government—and, I fear, is mastering some of the departments.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have been a good deal impressed by the arguments of some hon. gentlemen opposite—my hon. friend from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler), my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) and others—as to the reasonable demands of the people for erecting buildings in the smaller towns throughout the country. I entirely sympathize with that view. In towns where there is no other very considerable expenditure of public money, even though the population of such towns may not be very large, it is not unreasonable that they should have the accommodation afforded by a public building. They contribute to the revenue of the country proportionately to people living in larger cities and towns. But we must be patient; we cannot erect all these buildings at once, as some of our friends would like us to do. If I am to judge by some of the expressions of our friends opposite, instead of providing for a moderate number of buildings, such as I have provided for, they would like a public building for every town in the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not suggested anything of that kind.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, I hope our friends will be patient.

Mr. MARSHALL. When this matter was discussed a few days ago, I think I did not make myself clear. I stated the population of Leamington at 2,451. The population of Aylmer is about the same. Now, with regard to the town of Aylmer, I would like to call attention to the fact that the postal revenue of that town is $4,459; the amount of money orders issued about $20,000. I did not bring out these facts the other day when I was speaking about the matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Aylmer is a very nice town. I am going to try to go there. Will the hon. gentleman promise me, if I go, that he will not accuse me of trying to bribe the people?

Mr. MARSHALL. I will undertake to take the minister out and show him a good country. Let me add to what I already said that we have one of the largest canning factories in Canada, also a large condensed milk factory, large iron works and other manufactories. Aylmer is a very important town. As I understand it, the reason given for not building a post office in Aylmer before now is that we have not made claims. I intend to keep on making claims, and I hope to be successful.

Port Arthur public building—addition, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of this, $2,000 is a revote. It is for the erection of a one-storey brick addition on a stone foundation, in rear of the existing building, extending from the examining warehouse towards Court street. The new building will be 38 by 36 feet.

Mr. FOWLER. What will be the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract is for $7,475. It is estimated that heating and lighting will cost $1,000, fittings and furniture, &c., $2,000; contingencies and superintendence, $1,548. Tenders were called for by public advertisement and two tenders were received, one for $7,475 and the other for $10,000. The lowest was accepted.

Mr. FOWLER. I have had some experience in building, and I must say this seems an awful price for a building 38 by 36 feet. It is only a plain building, I understand—a sort of warehouse.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is an examining warehouse. It is very substantially built—very large girders carried on iron columns.

Renfrew public building, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This building is to be of stone on a concrete foundation. The main portion is to have a frontage of 50 feet, and 40 feet in depth, with two storeys, basement and attic; and addition in the rear 27 by 27 feet, and two storeys high.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is to be the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Including everything, $41,154.06. This is for both post office and customs house.

Mr. BLAIN. Are there to be any extras?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a contract for $24,500, and I think there is no estimate of extras.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the population of Renfrew, and what is its revenue?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1901, the population was 3,153; postal revenue, $5,212.79; customs revenue, $3,392.89; money orders issued, $26,681.89; money orders paid, $27,681. Renfrew has a fine water-power. There are there a foundry, tannery and woollen, saw, flour and planing mills.

Mr. FOWLER. This building is altogether too expensive; $20,000 would be enough.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would be glad to cut these buildings to $20,000, but it is pretty difficult.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is not difficult at all. Put your foot down and say that the building shall not cost more than a certain price, and tell your architect he must draw the plans accordingly. The public building in my town houses the post office and inland revenue, and is ample for the purpose, and it cost $14,000 equipped.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am going to see what I can do.

St. Mary's public building, $12,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for a public building in the town of St. Mary's, in South Perth. The total cost is estimated at $40,819.23.

Mr. FOWLER. An outrage again.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You can hardly call it an 'outrage,' though you might say we might erect a smaller and cheaper building That is possible. In future, I am going to try to cut the prices down.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What was the cost of the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was $2,300.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the population of St. Mary's?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Quite a large town—3,384.

Mr. LALOR. The total post office revenue is $5,740, and we are expending $40,000 upon the post office in a town with a revenue of a little over $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But you must remember that this building is for post office, customs and inland revenue purposes. The customs revenue alone is over $13,000.

Mr. LALOR. It strikes me that the expenditure is far in excess of the importance of a town of the size of St. Mary's. I urge again the same objection, that so large an amount of money is being expended in one town while another town is overlooked.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are endeavouring to cut down the cost below the sum asked for, and we are endeavouring to do the same with all these votes. The contract price of this building is $22,500. The town is in the county of South Perth.

Mr. LALOR. Why is it costing $40,000, when the contract price is only $22,500?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have to take into account the cost of the site, heating, fittings, furniture, and lock boxes, which alone cost $5,000 Inspection is included in the survey of the site. Contingencies and superintendence, $3,009. Survey of site, legal and travelling expenses, printing and advertising, salaries and superintendence, amount to a little over $5,000. The plans were prepared in the department.

Mr. FOWLER. How long will this contract last ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract was dated in September, 1906, and the building is to be completed by the 15th of December, 1907. There are the travelling expenses of the architect to and from Ottawa to examine the building from time to time. It may be that the $3,000 for contingencies will not be all used.

Mr. FOWLER. Who is the architect ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the name of the architect.

Mr LALOR. Was the inspector appointed by the patronage committee of the town?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know that there is any patronage committee.

Mr. LALOR. Was the inspector a local man, or was he sent by the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the name of the inspector.

Mr. BLAIN. His name is J. C. Wiederhold.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When we were discussing public buildings before I stated that in some cases the clerk of works got $3 a day, in other cases $3.50, and in some cases $4. That man, as my deputy tells me, is not paid for Sundays ; therefore he gets a little extra pay per day.

Mr. OWEN. I want to draw the minister's attention to the town of Campbellford on the Trent canal.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If we were to erect all the buildings we have in the estimates and all that are asked for by hon. gentlemen opposite we would exceed the revenue.

Mr. OWEN. The postal revenue of Campbellford is $3,500, money orders issued $15,000, and money orders paid $11,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the population?

Mr. OWEN. Three thousand. I have not a statement of the customs revenue, but it is in the neighbourhood of $12,000. The Trent Valley canal will be completed through that part of the country within three or four years and we expect then to bloom into a city. It would be a very deplorable thing if Campbellford should bloom into a city with such a progressive government as we have and we found we had no public building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman expects it will bloom into a city. How does the operation take place?

Mr. OWEN. When the Trent Valley canal is completed we expect to bloom into a city. We are developing in the neighbourhood of 25,000 and 30,000 horse-power.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Have you any flour mills there?

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. OWEN. Yes, and a large woollen mill, but, I regret to say, the woollen mill is running rather slack at present. We have a shoe factory, a sawmill, a planing mill and a sash factory. It is a very progressive town and a large amount of manufacturing is done there. At the present time we have to climb up a long stairs to the custom office and while the post office is moved to a more commodious building the accommodation is inadequate.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is the custom house a public building?

Mr OWEN. No, we have no public building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am very glad to hear as to Campbellford and if I have the opportunity of visiting that section of the country I will be very glad to look into the requirements of the place. It is not at all impossible that next session the wants of Campbellford may receive favourable consideration.

Mr. OWEN. If the minister comes to Campbellford I will guarantee that we will give him a splendid time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sure of that.

Mr. FOWLER. I was going to point out to my hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Owen) that he might save his breath in regard to asking the minister what he shall do next session, looking forward to the time when the blooming process shall take place in Campbellford, because by the time that Cambellford blooms forth as a city this present administration will be out of power, his friends will have the locating of post offices throughout the country and this town of Campbellford will be looked after.

Mr. LALOR. The minister said that if we only had patience for a short time all these things would come right; I suppose he had in view the change which is likely to take place in the administration.

Mr. MARSHALL. We have three customs ports in East Elgin and the revenue amounts to $108,000. Aylmer is the centre of East Elgin and it is a very important place.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are a great many important towns in Ontario.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot help thinking that the minister would expedite matters if he would just be honest with the opposition and tell us that he did not intend to give one hon. member on this side of the House a public building in his riding. I am satisfied that the minister has not taken into consideration the granting of any public buildings to the constituencies represented by members of the opposition.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not agree with that.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. He may have taken it into consideration, but he does not propose to do anything.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is doing me a wrong in that respect. Two or three days ago, when the hon. member for Kings and Albert rose and spoke of a public building at Hillsborough, I, while expressing my regret that the hon. gentleman had not approached me on the subject, told him that others had urged it very strongly and that I had the matter under favourable consideration. I may say to my hon. friend that there are quite a number of counties which are represented by our friends opposite in regard to which I recognize the claims which the people have for consideration in the way of public buildings, and I intend, if I remain Minister of Public Works, to take these claims into favourable consideration.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am very glad to hear the minister make the remark he has. I think from the manner in which he says it that he means what he says. If he takes it into consideration a town such as Campbellford and the one represented by my hon. friend from Haldimand with several thousand of a population and large revenues. I am sure that he cannot consistently refuse to consider their claims, although, when I remember that in some of the Quebec constituencies, towns and villages of 500 and 600 people are receiving $20,000 buildings I cannot help thinking that there is not likely to be a very great deal of expenditure in some of the Ontario towns.

Mr. BLAIN. I see that $262.78 was expended for advertising for tenders for this building at St. Mary's. Would the minister bring down the list of the papers and the amount paid to each?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Certainly.

Sarnia public building—alterations and additions, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for the completion of the construction of a brick addition 53 by 25 feet to the Sarnia public building alterations. The total estimated cost is $14.999.22.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What amount of money was expended previously?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The amount to the 24th of December, was $5,426.22.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What has been the total cost of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not that. I suppose the original building was constructed quite a number of years ago.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No. just two years ago.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is this the Sarnia post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is purely a post office.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, because the addition involves alterations to the roof of the examining warehouse.

Mr. HENDERSON. When originally constructed it was not intended for any other purpose than that of a post office.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is used as an examining warehouse. The cost to the 30th June, 1906, was $73,915.78.

Mr. HENDERSON. I remember being in that building once and I thought it was a miserable small place, altogether insufficient for the requirements of Sarnia.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is used for post office, custom house, inland revenue, examining warehouse and the Indian agent. It is 99 feet on one street and 73 feet on another.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then it must be altogether a different building from that I have in mind. I remember when Sir Wm. Mulock was Postmaster General discussing the matter and my remarks were endorsed by Dr. Johnston who then represented the constituency.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What will this extension to the building be used for.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will be used in connection with some of the various services accommodated there.

Simcoe public buildings, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is in the county of Norfolk. Now, here is a constituency represented by one of the hon. gentlemen opposite, which illustrates the fact that we are endeavouring to meet the wants of the public irrespective of the views of the representative.

Mr. HENDERSON. Carried.

Mr. BLAIN. Let those Toronto items stand, until the members for the city are present.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am quite willing to do so if the hon. gentleman desires. I move that the vote for the Toronto custom house be dropped.

Mr. BLAIN. Why?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is all paid for in the past year; the work is completed.

Welland public building, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The lot here is known as the market site and has a frontage of 58 feet on one street and 150 feet on another street.

Mr. FOWLER. What did you pay for the lot?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was owned by the corporation of the town of Welland and the price was $6,000. The town reserves at the rear of the town hall a strip of land for a driveway to be held in common with the town.

Mr. FOWLER. What was the total cost of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The plans have not yet been completed, but it is supposed it will cost about $30,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Why don't you keep it within $20,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the estimate of the chief architect. I will try to keep it down to $20,000 exclusive of the site, but it will be pretty difficult to do that. This is to be for customs as well.

Mr. FOWLER. Why don't you keep it down to $20,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I don't like to set up my judgment against that of the chief architect. Welland has a population of about 4,500 and within last year it has increased by between 1,500 and 2,000. It is moving ahead very rapidly. Last year the Plymouth Cordage Company which will employ 400 hands spent $300,000 there.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you allow the chief architect to say what shall be the cost of a public building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No; but I respect his judgment.

Mr. FOWLER. The chief architect may have judgment with respect to drawing plans, but with respect to the requirements of the different towns throughout the country I would not consider the chief architect's opinion was worth a cent. It is the minister who is responsible for that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect gets information as to what accommodation is required for the present and for the future.

Mr. HENDERSON. No doubt we will be told that the chief architect will take the $8,000 salary and the minister will take the chief arcnitect's salary. I was astounded to hear the minister say that he had to give attention to the chief architect as to what amount of money should be spent by the government in any particular place. Surely the minister spoke these words without consideration.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, that was said deliberately.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then I regret it very much. The minister should be responsible for the expenditure.

Mr. PUGSLEY. So he is.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not if he allows his chief architect to overrule him. The minister should be in a position to say to the chief architect: I want you to draw plans for a building costing so many thousand dollars, and all the architect should have to say about it is to draw the plans. If he did that, the chief architect would have obeyed his order, and the minister would be surprised, when the building was erected, what a beautiful building he would get for that amount of money. The country will be surprised when they read that the minister has acceded to the officers of his department the right to say how much the expenditure of this country is to be.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is delightful to see the serious countenance of my hon. friend when he knows that he is only joking.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, I am absolutely serious.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it would be absurd for me to say to the chief architect, they want a post office in Montreal and I want you to spend $50,000 on it, or they want a post office at Ottawa and I want you to spend $25,000 on it. What we do is this. The chief architect finds out what the requirements of a town are, considers what its present population is and whether it is a growing town or not, and is then able to judge what accommodation is required, and he makes his estimate accordingly. When it comes to my hands, I cut it down as much as possible. At the same time I want him to erect a building which will be a credit to the government and not a discredit to the town. I am quite ready to admit that I am advised by the chief architect and the chief engineer and the deputy, for whose judgments I have great respect.

Mr LALOR. The town of Welland I know very well ; the county of Welland adjoins my county, and I quite agree with the minister when he says that Welland is a growing and prosperous town. I do not know any town that is growing as fast. I think the expenditure of $20,000 in Welland is a necessary and very wise expenditure, very much more so than an expenditure of $40,000 in St. Mary's or $90,000 in Owen Sound.

Mr. FOWLER. We are not objecting to an expenditure of $20,000 in Welland ; but the point was that the building was to cost $30,000 instead of $20,000. I cannot agree with the views expressed by the minister in regard to how far he should be guided by his officers. Along certain lines that is correct. As he is not a draughtsman, he must be guided by the chief architect in the drawing of the plans ; but in regard to the requirements of a town the minister ought to know a great deal more than the chief architect. But according to the statement of the minister, the chief architect is the only one in the department who assumes any responsibility in regard to the erection of buildings. He makes inquiries as to the requirements of a town and its prospects of growth ; he makes his plans accordingly ; and estimates the cost after he draws the plans. That seems to be a very strange way of proceeding. The country will be surprised to learn that the chief architect is the master of the situation in the Department of Public Works. He may be a man of great ability along his particular line but the exhibition we have had in the last week or two in the estimates of the Department of Public Works that have been under discussion, have convinced me at any rate that the chief architect is a man upon whose judgment it is not safe to rely.

Mr. PUGSLEY I am afraid you are hard to convince.

Mr. FOWLER. Not at all. We have found that the chief architect has a staff of twelve architects besides himself, and that in addition over $100,000 was spent last year for architects.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. FOWLER. I say, oh, yes. This is the man who decides whether a public building shall be built in a certain town or not and what money shall be spent on it, and the minister meekly bows his head and confirms whatever statement he makes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not exactly what I said.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. minister left us to infer that, and knowing what a mild man he is, I am sure he bows his head with grace and meekness. I venture to say that even in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, the subordinates have not quite so great control over the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It strikes me that my hon. friend's remarks are not founded on reason. Surely if a wharf is to be constructed, it would be absurd for me to say to the chief engineer, I want you to see that a wharf is built that will cost $10,000. What I ask him to do is to examine the site, find out the depth of water, the size of the steamers which will use the wharf, what frontage is required and how far the wharf should extend into the water and then give an estimate of the cost. And if he should estimate that a wharf suitable to the requirements will cost $10,000, it would be absurd for me to limit the expenditure to $5,000. In the same way, when a public building is required, I have to get the chief architect to examine into the details and make his estimates according to the requirements. And if a public building requires a certain number of offices, it would be absurd for me to order one with insufficient accommodation. I have to be guided by the report of my chief architect.

Whitby public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The lot is 150 feet by 65. The estimated cost is something over $20,000. The building will accommodate both Whitby east and Whitby west. The total population is 4,060.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Pugsley, House adjourned at 1.30 a.m. Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May 5, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. HONORE GERVAIS (Montreal, St. James). I beg leave to move that the second report of the Debates Committee be concured in.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I wish the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gervais) would delay this motion until the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is in his seat. He will be here, I think, to-morrow or the day after.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I stated yesterday that I would give the House some idea of the measures which the government propose to introduce during the present session. These measures are not new; they have been more or less discussed already and the House is somewhat familiar with them. In the first place, there is the Civil Service Bill, which, I think, will be introduced early next week. There are also the Bill to provide for the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba, the amendment to the Manitoba Grain Inspection Act—to be introduced within a day or two—and the amendment to the Lands Bill These are the principal measures. But I must say that another important measure to be introduced is that respecting aid to railway construction, including the Hudson Bay Railway. There are some minor Bills of some importance, but, I think, not contentious. One relates to judicature, and another to Chinese immigration, and another is to make the Yukon Council absolutely elective, instead of partly elective and partly nominative as at present. There is also an amendment to the Customs Act. This is a fair list of the measures that we propose to introduce.

CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES BOUNDARIES TREATIES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I would ask the Prime Minister whether he has any news of the treaty, which, I observe, has been ratified by the Senate of the United States. It seems a little curious that we cannot get it here until it has been considered and ratified there.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There are two reasons for that. According to the constitution of the United States, as my hon. friend knows, treaties must be ratified by the Senate in executive session. They are not passed unless they have received the approval of the president and the sanction of the Senate. The second is that we could not have the correspondence and treaty laid before this house until we had the authority of the British Colonial Office. We have asked for that authority, and, no doubt, it will be given. I have the correspondence prepared, and, as soon as we have received the sanction of the Colonial Office, we will lay the two treaties—for there are two—before the House.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act. He said: When this Bill was introduced some two months ago, I gave an explanation, with considerable fulness of detail, of the various provisions therein proposed and the reasons which had led to these provisions being recommended for adoption by the House. In the two months which have passed since that time there has been, in the newspapers and otherwise in the country, considerable discussion with reference to the provisions of this measure. But that discussion seems, so far as I have seen it, to have limited itself very largely, if not practically altogether, to the first clause of the Bill. Perhaps in these circumstances, and subject to what hon. members wish to say with reference to other paragraphs of the Bill, I may, at this stage of its progress, limit myself to a discussion of the provisions of that section, leaving other clauses of the Bill to be discussed either upon this occasion or in Committee of the Whole. The first clause of this Bill deals with the question of voters' lists and the franchise in a very considerable portion of the Dominion. For the purpose of classifying the method of preparation of the voters' lists, one might divide the Dominion, with not unfair accuracy, by the boundary line between the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba. Speaking in the rough, the whole of Canada east of that line prepares its voters' lists with the assessment roll, or valuation roll, of the municipal locality as the basis of the list, while all of the Dominion to the west of that line pursues the opposite system and prepares its lists upon the system of registration and without reference to the assessment roll.

Now it will be no doubt in the memory of many hon. gentlemen, it is upon the pages of the 'Hansard' of ten years ago when our present Franchise Act was under discussion in this House, that that principle was laid down as being the rule in a general way, of application upon which the present Dominion system of voters' lists was based. Prior to that time, for thirteen years the Dominion, under the Franchise Act of 1885, had been controlling the preparation of its own voters' lists. In 1898 the present law was passed, the old Franchise Act of 1885 was repealed, and a system of adopting the voters' lists as prepared by the various provinces, substituted in its stead. Upon that occasion the opposition of that day put itself upon record in the form of a substantive motion against the second reading of the Bill, and in favour of the principle that the Dominion should absolutely control its own franchise, that this House should not under any circumstances part with the preparation of its own voters' lists, or hand that work over to the provincial legislatures in any case. But upon this side of the House, and in support of the proposition, it was contended by different hon. gentlemen that wherever you have voters' lists prepared by the municipalities upon the basis of the assessment roll you have in that circumstance a guaranty of substantiality and a guaranty of fairness. You have the various municipal councils consisting of four or five, or at most six or seven, members who are necesarily acquainted, possibly personally acquainted, with practically all the families in their district. You had the assessor, with certainly no inducement to omit from his roll which was to be the basis of taxation in the community, any landowner or any individual liable to tax, you had that guaranty that every man who ought to pay taxes would find his name placed upon the assessment roll in order that a levy might be made upon him, and you had a local body consisting, possibly and very probably, of men of opposite political feelings engaged in the work of revising that assessment roll, with naturally a personal acquaintance, probably, with the majority of the men whose names they were dealing with, and that roll as so settled by the municipal council to be the subsequent basis of the voters' lists for municipal, provincial and Dominion purposes. It was pointed out at that time, in answer to an observation by the present hon. leader of the opposition, that if, notwithstanding the fears which he then expressed, the time should come when any provincial government or provincial legislature should by its legislation, or by its administration of that legislation, so interfere with the course of the preparation of the voters' lists in that province, or if there was not an acceptable list, or there was ground for belief that the list so prepared was not of a fair and satisfactory nature, then this House always had it in its power, this parliament at any time could resume control over its own lists and over its own franchise, and prevent the apprehended evil from taking place.

Now that being an outline of the considerations which were urged on either side in

Now under the system of registration as distinct from the system of preparing voters' lists with the assessment roll as a basis, you have the voters' lists prepared for the various provincial constituencies divided, not into polling subdivisions, but into registration districts, and the registration districts do not necessarily correspond with the polling subdivisions. They may do so or they may not do so, but the group of voters brought together by the registration clerk upon the one sheet of paper and certified to be the list of qualified voters for a particular registration district consists, it may be, of men who vote in more than one polling subdivision. But more than that and worse than that for the difficulty I am about to present, these voters are not, in I think I may safely say, the majority of instances, designated by the ownership of a particular piece of property. In some cases, possibly in the greater number of cases, the voter's post office addres is given, but in a great many instances, in a very large percentage of the voters' lists throughout the province, not even a post office is given, but simply the name of the man entitled to vote. I have before me ordinary sample sheets of the lists which I shall be happy to lay upon the table and hon. gentlemen may see them for themselves. The lists that I have are taken entirely at random. These were, I may say, presented before the committee of this House which made some inquiry into this matter two years ago, and in that way came before my notice and have been in my possession since. The first of these two that are before me is, the list of voters of 1903, and I shall read the caption in order that you, Sir, may see exactly what the list as certified by the provincial authorities to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery contains, and what exactly is the information and the whole of the information which any one having such a document before him would possess in regard to the voters whose names appear on it. It is headed :

There is no reference to any poll, but simply registration district No. 1 and that is in the provincial electoral district of St. Boniface. This list contains 226 names. To show how these names are in most instances entered I shall read the first one :

Anderson, Eric, Louise Bridge, Mason.

That is the identification of the voter and that is the case in respect of most of the names throughout the list, the voters' name, his post office, and his occupation are given with no reference whatever to the property in respect of which he votes or to the exact place where he may live. On this list, as a matter of fact, all the names enumerated of the men entitled to vote in the electoral district of Selkirk, are now marked with a check. Those who are entitled to vote in the adjoining constituency of Provencher, as delimited for purposes of Dominion representation, are left without a mark. These 226 names are divided between the two constituencies of Selkirk and Provencher in the numbers of 140 in Selkirk and 86 in Provencher. Of course it will be seen at once that the post office address of the individual without knowledge of who the man himself is and where he lives is no guide. The post office might be upon the boundary line, and a man who voted in the constituency of Provencher might have his post office in Selkirk or vice versa. His post office he selects according to his own convenience, and the post office itself while, if it were far distant from the boundary, would be some guide, in a case where the boundary bisects the registration district, as in this case, affords little or no light.

The other list I have is similar.

List of voters, 1903, provincial electoral district of Morris, registration district No. 5.

There are 120 names on the list and of those 120 names 77 are in Provencher and 43 in Macdonald, as divided for Dominion purposes. If any one taking up this paper without local knowledge entered upon the effort to discriminate between the voters who were entitled to vote in Macdonald and those who were entitled to vote in Provencher, he would simply have to abandon the effort as absolutely impracticable, because in this case we have no post office whatever, we have in some instances, in most instances, a reference to the section upon which the voter, presumably, is to be found or which, at any rate, he may be supposed to own. But we have no other information given than that. These gentlemen whose names are here recorded are voters some of them as farmers' sons, others as farmers, others as blacksmiths ; their occupations are given throughout with simply a reference to some particular lot and nothing else.

Those are ordinary samples. In some instances the lot is given, in other instances no lot will appear from one end to the other of the list. It depended, I presume, on what was the habit of the registration clerk in taking the necessary information and recording the names in the first instance.

In that position of matters, I ask hon. gentlemen to reflect what was to be done by the men who received His Majesty's writs in the fall of 1904, requiring them to hold the ten elections in Manitoba for the purpose of representation in this House. Under the statute, they received from the proper officials at Ottawa printed copies of just such lists as I have been adverting to, which gave them the names by registration districts of hundreds upon hundreds of voters, thousands necessarily, in each constituency. If you take the case of a registration district as defined by the provincial law, which the returning officer, possessing local knowledge, may, of his own knowledge, be aware is in the centre of a Dominion constituency, is wholly within some particular Dominion constituency, the returning officer will certainly be aware that every man on the list for that particular registration district will be within his bailiwick. But in the cases in which there was not a coincidence in all the borders around the four sides of any constituency in Manitoba between the limits of the registration district and of the provincial constituency and the limits of the Dominion constituency, there was, of necessity there had to be, some division of the voters in order that those who voted under any particular returning officer should be known. Now that was a case absolutely unprovided for in our legislation. I suppose it had not been thought of in 1898 or at any subsequent session of parliament. Possibly it was thought of in 1898 but considered not of practical importance for this reason : In 1898 the voters' lists in the province of Manitoba were not revised annually or at fixed times, they were revised whenever the lieutenant Governor in council so directed.

Accordingly the legislation of this parliament as passed in 1898 provided that whenever that was the case with the voters lists of any particular province these voters lists should not necessarily be accepted for the purpose of elections to this House. Our statute at the present time continues to provide that where under the laws of any province the voters' lists for any particular electoral district or division are prepared not at regular intervals but at such times as are fixed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council or by some other provincial or local authority or only from time to time for the purpose of a general or other election in immediate contemplation, then the last preceding list shall be used if it is less than a year old, but only in that event. If it is more than a year old the Dominion prepares its own voters' lists in the manner at present prescribed by the Dominion Elections Act and which has been on the statute-book since 1898. So that in 1898 when this legislation was passed repealing the old Franchise Act of 1885, Manitoba was not having annual revision of its lists, and was not in that sense affected by the Dominion legislation. But the provision of 1898, in the condition of things which then existed in Manitoba, was that the provincial lists of that province should be used for Dominion purposes only if there came a Dominion election when such lists were less than twelve months old, and that if such lists were at that time over twelve months old then the Dominion would prepare its own lists. That possibly is the explanation of the circumstance that no special provision was made in 1898 for the case of such overlapping as I have been describing. Whatever explanation of it may be, the fact is as I have stated. Now, in the spring of 1904 the Manitoba legislature made a change in its law. The Manitoba legislature provided by the statute of 1904, (repealing the provisions as to voters' lists which had theretofore existed in that province) that their revision should take place annually. It is true it was a sort of peculiar revision, but it was what they called revision at all events. It was not registration preparing lists de novo by requiring each man who claimed the right to vote to appear before the official appointed for the purpose and state his claim, but it was the taking of the existing lists by the registration clerk and the adding to such lists or the revision of them on his part by making the changes which might appear to be necessary. Accordingly we have the legislature of Manitoba in the spring of 1904, by the enactment I have referred to, making their provincial voters' lists revisable at regular annual intervals and no longer at only such times as should be fixed by the government of the province. The effect was at once to make this provision of our Elections Act which authorized the Dominion authorities to prepare lists for a province no longer applicable to Manitoba, and to require the Dominion elections of 1904 which were then approaching to be carried on upon these Manitoba lists, samples of which I have placed before you a few minutes ago. These Manitoba lists of 1903 had been prepared for another purpose altogether; they had been prepared at a time when under the then existing Dominion legislation there was every prospect that they never would be needed for Dominion purposes; they had been prepared with a view solely and entirely to the provincial elections. At the time these lists were prepared in 1903 the Dominion legislation was of such a character that there could have been no expectation on the part of the officials who prepared these lists that they would ever be required for Dominion purposes unless the Dominion elections should follow within twelve months of their completion. Under these circumstances they were not prepared by the officials who were engaged in the work with any idea of their being used in Dominion elections; they were not prepared in any way with reference to Dominion constituencies or Dominion polling sub-divisions but with no other thought than the provincial limits I have mentioned. The consequence was the absolute inapplicability for the practical purpose of conducting an election of those lists which by the change of the provincial law in the spring of 1904 became under the terms of our legislation of 1898 the lists upon which the Dominion elections had to be carried on. Every returning officer in the ten constituencies of Manitoba found himself consequently face to face with the question of what he was to do about it. His duty was to send to his various deputy returning officers for use at the various polling places in his constituency, lists which should show just the names and only the names of the men entitled to vote at that poll.

Now, we who are better acquainted with the older settled portions of this country possibly do not always appreciate conditions as they exist in the larger west. I myself must frankly concede that it was with some astonishment I heard the testimony given before the committee I alluded to a little ago, with regard to the size of the constituencies in Manitoba. We were investigating specially at that time the conditions with regard to the three constituencies of Selkirk, Provencher, and Macdonald and the size of these constituencies was stated to be in round figures: Selkirk 100 miles wide by 210 miles in length, Provencher 50 miles by 115 miles and Macdonald 80 miles by 86. Now, I ask hon. gentlemen who like myself are more familiar with the geography of the province of Ontario: Suppose you had a constituency extending with regard to its width as far as from Toronto to Trenton, and so far as its length as far as from Toronto to Brockville, and you had a returning officer appointed for that whole territory 100 miles one way and 210 miles the other, and you placed in his hands a series of voters' lists amounting to perhaps 4,000 or 5,000 voters in all, scattered over that territory, and with no other guide than at most the number of the lot and very probably with no other guide than the post office or possibly not even a post office, to enable him to say whether or not a particular voter is within these boundaries; is it not manifestly impossible that any man, unless he has travelled from end to end of the province and from end to end of the constituency and unless he has a local knowledge greater far than the average citizen possesses, is it not manifestly impossible that he would be able to do anything more than make one may say a guess, or secure such information as he could with reference to an individual and endeavour to make in that way lists which should be appropriate and legal for the purposes required? The returning officer has no guide in the statute; he is not told what he is to do. He is under obligation to send to his deputies a proper list, and is given no kind of direction or information as to how he can prepare that list. If a returning officer, face to face with such a difficulty, had in the few weeks which remained before the polling day, set himself to obtain all the information he was able, and having so obtained it, had written down name after name upon sheets of foolscap, extracting them from the printed lists that had come to him from Ottawa, and had sent such certified lists of copied names to his different polling sub-divisions, I venture to say that no man could by any perversion or distortion of the statute assail that returning officer as having transgressed his statutory duty or as having committed any offence against the laws of the land. In this case the returning officers probably never thought of writing out the lists, possibly wished to avoid the manual labour that would involve, and instead of writing out the list for each separate poll, they went through those lists and endeavoured to mark those voters who did not belong to their respective constituencies by striking out the names. They used red ink for the purpose.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. And we have had from that day to this the changes rung upon every platform and in every newspaper in the country upon the convenient catch-phrase that somebody coined of the thin red line. The government of the province of Manitoba had had to do, in the rearrangement of its lists for the purpose of its elections, precisely the same kind of work. Their officials did it with black ink, and that is the only difference.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Will the Minister of Justice say who did it with black ink? What class of officials did this kind of work? Was it the Conservative organizer, like the Liberal organizer in the other case? As a matter of fact, it was done by the judges of the province.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I must ask my hon. friend from Marquette to acquit me of any intention of discourtesy if I do not answer or if I do not notice what he has said, because it is my misfortune to be quite unable to hear him.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You do not want to hear.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is quite an improper remark.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am not making the least attack, political or other, upon the officials of the legislature or government of Manitoba in what I have adverted to. I am saying that it was necessary; it was a thing which could not possibly be avoided. I certainly make no point on the colour of the ink. I should have been equally well pleased if instead of being black it had been in accordance with the political sympathies of the gentlemen and been intensest blue. My hon. friend who sits next to me calls my attention in this connection to a circumstance which I might with propriety have adverted to, but which escaped my memory at the moment, that the direction of the Manitoba Elections Act on the subject is the use of a black line or a red line for this very purpose. In section 5, subsection 6, of the Elections Act of Manitoba provision is made for the drawing of a line with black or red ink through the name of any person to be removed from the list of electors or from the list appearing in the register, but in such a manner that the name can be readily read and distinguished, and, of course, it is an important provision, that the name should not be erased so that it could not be distinguished, but that it remain legible, although indicated in some manner as not belonging to that particular voting place or that particular constituency. Now, the doing of this work of rearranging the names by some person was a necessity, as I think any fair consideration of the condition which the law was in at the time will at once demonstrate. There was no statutory authority for it in the Dominion Elections Act. No one, I think, pretends that the Dominion Elections Act ever contemplated the necessity for any such thing, or had provided authority for any official, judge or other, to take that course. But the necessity for it, the reasonableness of it, would, I think, apart from the heat of party conflict in this country, not be questioned by anybody. And let me say here—what will be I have no doubt in the memory of my hon. friend from East Hamilton (Mr. Barker), as a member of the committee to which I have already referred—that in the inquiry into this matter which was made during several weeks of the spring of 1906, we had before us as witnesses two gentlemen from the city of Winnipeg, who were legal men, and who had been by their experience in the courts familiar with this whole business, one on either side. Mr. Knott, who had been the solicitor for the prosecutions which were launched against the returning officers in connection with what I have described, and Mr. Howell, who had been counsel for the defendants in these proceedings. Each was examined, and Mr. Knott, after referring to the statute and detailing in the quiet of an examination before a small committee of this House exactly what had been complained of and pointing out, what was undoubtedly the fact, that there was no statutory authority on the face of the Dominion legislation authorizing this thing to be done, was asked by one of the members of the committee whether he could suggest anything unreasonable about it, or whether it was not the most reasonable thing in the world for these returning officers to have done.

And Mr. Knott, with all candour, said he considered it was perfectly reasonable, but the question was whether or no it was legal. The question was the legality of what was done, and the only thing in that connection I should have to complain of would be that there had been discussion in connection with this matter and an effort to make political capital out of it. There was necessity to do it, it was done, and the question now is whether or no this parliament, with the necessity for doing exactly the same thing, will or will not authorize its officers to do that which is necessary unless we are to throw overboard altogether the provincial lists and prepare our own lists, as we did under the Franchise Act of 1885. In the heated discussion on the conduct of the Manitoba officials, which I have mentioned, there was at all events a very great difference of views as to the number of men whose names were struck off and were not placed upon the lists in their own particular ridings, and in that way prevented from voting. In one sense, for my purpose here in advocating the passing of legislation to remedy the existing conditions, it is not very material how many or whether there were any voters who, as a consequence, lost their votes upon that occasion; but I wish to say a word or two upon that head. because it was a subject of long investigation and consideration before the committee two years ago of which I had the honour to be chairman. The whole matter was debated at very considerable length in this House in the session of 1905, and I have but to refer hon. gentlemen who may be interested to the 'Hansard' of May 30, 1905, when, upon motion to go into supply, the question was taken up and debated. Of the ten constituencies in Manitoba as represented in this House, we had on that occasion, I think, all their representatives taking part in that debate. We had the hon. member for Lisgar saying that in his constituency he had personally examined the lists and had found only nine errors—six names left off and three put on in the wrong polling division, and that of these nine, six were his own supporters. The hon. member for Souris addressed the House on that occasion but made no complaint about the lists in his constituency. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie said that, so far as he could ascertain, there had been but one left off the lists in his riding. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) though he spoke in general terms, made the charge, so far as anything specific was concerned, simply that ten names in one polling division had been put in the wrong township. The hon. members for Brandon, Winnipeg and Dauphin made no complaints whatever; and there could be no complaint in Winnipeg or Dauphin, because in Dauphin the election took place by acclamation and in Winnipeg there was no readjustment because the bounds were coterminous between the one constituency and the other. So that we have seven of the ten Manitoba constituencies accounted for at all events by their representatives in this House on the occasion to which I have referred. And the aggregate of the complaints from those seven constituencies was twenty votes—twenty men misplaced. not twenty disfranchised, but twenty put upon the lists in a wrong polling subdivision or a wrong township.

Mr. STAPLES. May I ask a question? The hon. Minister of Justice has been kind enough to mention all the members who spoke on that occasion with the exception of myself. If he will kindly refer to what I said as to the number who were struck off in Macdonald, that might interest the House.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am not going to omit my hon. friend's constituency by any means. I say that of the ten Manitoba constituencies, the seven I have spoken of were discussed in the debate by the representatives here. The remaining three, Macdonald, Provencher and Selkirk, were also discussed, and they are the three in respect of whose returning officers there were prosecutions in Manitoba. And those three constituencies were the only ones with regard to which witnesses were called before the committee of two years ago, to which I have referred. In these circumstances, I am not without justification if I come to the conclusion that it is in those three the principal grounds for complaint by our friends opposite exist, and that, to say the least, there is not the same reason for complaint in the other seven, in respect of which their representatives three years ago said that at the most twenty names had been misplaced. My hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) did not limit himself in his general observations, which were strong enough, to the specific statements to which I am about to refer; but so far as he specified any grounds of complaint, there were three polling places or registration districts—I do not know which they are—in his constituency in which he considered there was reason for complaint. These places were Miami, Treherne and Poplar Point. At Poplar Point he said there were fifteen. at Treherne two, and at Miami eleven names misplaced, so that there were twenty-eight voters in the whole constituency who had been disfranchised in this way. There was nothing, so far as I can recall, contradicting that statement in the testimony before the committee. There seemed to be a consensus of opinion that that was about the number of voters in the constituency of Macdonald concerning whom there was ground for complaint. The great complaint was with regard to Selkirk and Provencher, and especially the poll at Beausejour where, it was said, forty-two names had been struck out. We had before us a witness from that poll, the postmaster, I think, one of the men whose names had been struck off, and who was brought all the way from Manitoba to testify to his undoubted right to vote and to his having been deprived of his vote because his name was struck through by the red line at his own poll.

He was an ardent politician, as he candidly stated. He attended at the poll upon the occasion as the agent at the poll—the scrutineer—of the candidate of his choice. When he found that his name was not upon the list, or had been struck off the list, he protested. He claimed from the deputy returning officer, with whom he was perfectly acquainted, the right to vote. The deputy returning officer fully conceded it; he was given his ballot; he marked his ballot; he cast it and in fact, as he testified before the committee it was counted. He claimed that he had the legal right to vote, independent altogether of the certified list, in the circumstance that he was at the polling place as the accredited agent of one of the candidates. No one felt then disposed, and I have no doubt no one feels now disposed, to question for a moment the course which he took in insisting on casting his vote or the course which the deputy took in receiving that vote, even though the voter's name was not on the list certified to him as authentic. That man's right to a ballot was acknowledged just as effectively as though the 'thin red line' had not been drawn through his name. He travelled all the way from Winnipeg to Ottawa to testify as to these circumstances; and, if he can be taken as a sample of the 42 struck off at the Beausejour poll, one would say, certainly, there was no great grievance in it. But, of course, I do not pretend that the other 41, or, perhaps, any of the other 41, succeeded in voting in the Beausejour poll. None were called before us, and we were not in a position to come to a conclusion as to how that might be. But there is no kind of question that these men, or a majority of them, had voted—or had the right to vote—at the adjoining poll of Cromwell. I do not remember whether this was in the same constituency or not. But that was their proper poll, and the striking off was because the boundary line running through the polling subdivision found on either side of it a portion of the names recorded in the registration list as proper to a certain registration district. It appeared to be the fact that, either by design or inadvertence—which you will, according to your political sympathies—the name of a legal voter at Beausejour, the witness who was before us, had been struck off and that it ought not to have been struck off; but not the slightest evidence was given even hinting at it having been done by intent or otherwise than by inadvertence. Now, I do not make any kind of doubt—I am not pretending to argue otherwise before this House—that, throughout the whole province of Manitoba, there may have been many more names of honest voters who had the right to vote whose names were struck off in this necessary readjusting or redistributing of the voters' names that I have described. And I am not wishing for a moment to pretend that this readjusting or redividing and redistributing was limited to cases in which the boundary line between two constituencies ran through a registration district as it existed for provincial purposes. I do not wish in the least to be misunderstood, and I assure you I am not in any degree blinking the situation, nor am I unwilling to take the fullest responsibility for the measure of redress as I believe this to be, which I am presenting to the House in the Bill now under consideration. Not only were there, in many instances throughout Manitoba the redistribution of names I have pointed out as absolutely requisite under this system of registration by registration districts, of these districts not corresponding to the boundaries of any Dominion constituency, but there was also a similar redistributing of names in cases where that was made requisite because of the Dominion returning officers subdividing polling divisions as they had existed for provincial purposes. The statute under which the registration of voters took place in Manitoba provides for the delimitation throughout the province of registration districts or of polling subdivisions. That statute had been repealed, or these provisions of that statute had been repealed, by the legislative Act which I have already mentioned and which was passed by the Manitoba legislature in the spring of 1904. The authority for the existence of provincial polling subdivisions had been, by that repeal, swept away, and nothing substituted for it; and the result was, when you came to October and November, 1904, and the writs were issued for a Dominion election, there was impossibility on the part of the returning officers to comply with the provision of our Dominion statute which requires the adoption of provincial subdivisions for the purpose of Dominion elections. In many cases, the registration districts of the province, which were supposed to correspond with the polling divisions, and which, I presume, in the main did so correspond, and according to which the voters were grouped, consisted of territories so large as to be altogether unwieldy and in which it was impracticable, it was physically impossible, to poll the vote at one polling booth within the hours assigned for the voters. A case has been mentioned to me by one hon. gentleman from Manitoba as coming within his personal cognizance, where the registration district was over fifteen miles from end to end and where there were two settlements in the same registration district divided by an impassable swamp, a swamp that you had to go round, and which made the colony at one end, distant, for all practical purposes, from the poll, if it was at the other end, so many miles that it was a physical impossibility for the people there to record their votes. Now, this is not a matter of political difference; it is a matter of men entitled to vote being physically unable to record their votes between 9 and 5 o'clock on polling day, simply because they were too far distant from the poll to make the journey. In these circumstances, which existed, or with regard to which something similar existed, in many cases, wholly within some Dominion electoral constituency, the returning officers appointed two polls, giving one at each side of the swamp—to use the illustration to which I have adverted. Then it became necessary to divide, to distribute the names of the voters upon the voters' list in the registration district in precisely the same way. So, this redistribution of names, while it did not take place in every school section or in every community in the province, was scattered, and necessarily scattered, over the whole area of the province of Manitoba, and I am not pretending to the House that this redistribution was limited to cases where polling registration districts were subdivided by county or electoral district boundary lines. In the whole province, I suppose, there is a matter of 50,000 names to be handled upon the voters' list. I think if you have ten returning officers set down with 50,000 names, 5,000 on the average for each one to distribute according to their proper polling subdivisions, to do that work in the four weeks that pass between the receipt of the writ and of these lists, and the polling day, to get together the necessary information and do the best they can, no matter how honestly they may try, you will find a percentage of inadvertences or honest mistakes, and you will find some men who will be disfranchised. The great bulk of the men whose names were struck off the roll in the voting place to which they did not belong, were left on in the voting place where they did belong; and the great bulk of those who were so struck off, I will venture to say, voted at the election in 1904; they had an opportunity of doing so, at any rate. But if you find any voter whose name was struck off by design and if you find the statute law in such a condition that it is possible, either by inadvertence or by design, that that should take place, you have a condition of things which calls for a change, and calls for legislation in this parliament which would make it impossible, so far as human foresight can do so, that the same state of things should occur again; and that is the whole purpose of the legislation in question so far as this provision of it is concerned. Now I have tried to point out, having reference to the debate in this House, and having reference to the evidence that was given two years ago before the Elections Committee, some indication of how much at any rate was testified to, of how much was asserted by hon. members of this House in regard to the instances in which members' names were struck off and their votes thereby lost, I say as the result of the evidence which we listened to two years ago, equally as the result of the statements made in this House by the ten members from Manitoba in the debate to which I have referred, and especially upon the statements made by the three hon. members from Macdonald, Selkirk and Provencher, that the aggregate number throughout the whole province of Manitoba, of that whole 50,000 voters whose names had to be handled by the deputy returning officers, would not exceed 100; and if you have in 50,000 voters at the most 100 men whose names have been either by design or inadvertence struck off, it is a percentage, not of one in 100, but at most of one in 500 votes; it is a pretty small percentage. If the number had been even ten times as great, if it had been 1,000 and far more, if it had been 2,000 or 3,000, according to some wild flights of imagination I have seen, we might then find some evidence that there must have been intention, that it could not have been by accident, that there must have been design. But it is manifest that the whole contention that there was in what then took place an intention to do wrong, an intention to disfranchise qualified voters, rests absolutely upon the question of the number of men in regard to whom that thing was done. In that respect no evidence certainly was offered before the committee of two years ago; I have never heard any evidence offered other than the statements I have referred to; and I suppose that question of numbers is one which never can be decided. I make no point of it here, I say at once with all frankness that if there were even 100 in the province of Manitoba, it is ample to justify some measure of legislative change in that regard which will secure this necessary work to be done in such a manner that it will not, in human probability, go wrong.

Well, Sir, I need not detail what followed. I am only referring to it in order that I may answer a statement with regard to myself which I have seen rather freely made in the newspapers. The elections of 1904 having taken place in November, and the condition of things I have described as to the rearrangement of names having taken place, prosecutions were promptly instituted under the direction of the Attorney General for the province against the returning officers for, among other constituencies, the three especially I have referred to, Provencher, Selkirk and Macdonald. Originally some sixteen men, deputies and others, were attacked for participation in what was claimed to have been an indictable wrong; but in the result true bills were found against only one of the officials, the returning officer for Selkirk. That true bill or indictment coming up for consideration in the March assizes of 1905, was quashed by the court. Immediately new proceedings were instituted against Duggan, the returning officer for Selkirk, and the result of these new proceedings was that at the fall assizes of 1905 true bills were found against the returning officers for Provencher and Macdonald, against Duggan and one Leach, the Liberal organizer for the province, who was accused of having wilfully participated in what was called the mutilation of the lists. These four true bills were found by the grand jury at Winnipeg in November, 1905, and they stood for trial before a petty jury at that court. One of them was afterwards taken to trial to the extent of giving evidence. The presiding judge made a ruling which was reversed upon appeal, and the case sent back for a new trial. The case was sent back in the fall of 1906, and the course being clear in October, 1906, for a new trial of these four indictments, the case being clear according to the views of the prosecution we have already heard described, those four indictments against the three returning officers and against Leach stood for hearing at the fall assizes of 1906, and nothing was done. They stood for hearing at the spring assizes of 1907, and nothing was done. They were standing for trial at the fall assizes of 1907, and the defendants then, according to an account of the matter I have clipped from the Montreal 'Gazette' of that date, took the matter up and insisted that these charges should be disposed of. The Montreal 'Gazette' in its issue of 18th November last, gives an account of what took place at the calling of these indictments in Winnipeg on the previous day. It states that Mr. H. W. H. Knott, who appeared for the provincial government, speaking of these indictments and describing their position—and I may remark in passing that he is the same Mr. Knott who appeared before the committee, and who gave his testimony then as the representative of the Conservative party in the province of Manitoba, and who was personally acquainted with all the circumstances to which I have adverted. After describing, according to this newspaper report, what had taken place with reference to these prosecutions and the proceedings before a committee of this House, he takes occasion to say:

> That committee was presided over by Mr. Aylesworth. In the investigation the committee saw fit to probe into malpractices in connection with the elections held——

It is printed Alberta, but that is a manifest misprint, because we had nothing to do with Alberta; it should be:

> —in connection with elections held in Manitoba and under the order of that committee all documents in connection with these indictments, exhibits and papers in connection with the election, were transmitted to Ottawa for the purpose of examination by committee. The committee has not reported and parliament will not sit until the 28th.

He was speaking on the 17th of November.

> These documents are in the possession of the committee, and we shall have great difficulty in getting them unless the committee report to the House this session, which I understand they are going to do.

Accordingly, the absence of these precious documents was made the excuse to the judge, in November last, for the unwillingness of Mr. Knott, the representative of the Manitoba Attorney General, appearing for that government, to go on with those prosecutions. I read that statement in the Montreal 'Gazette' last November with some astonishment. I thought I had a reasonably accurate memory of what had taken place in connection with these documents before the committee in question. I was not then in this country, but on returning I looked among my papers and found my recollection entirely supported by some correspondence which passed between members of that committee in April and May of 1906. It was upon the request of the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Barker), as a member of that committee, that the papers in question were called for. Those papers were the papers connected with those elections which were properly in the custody of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery here. That gentleman had attended with them under subpoena on two different occasions at Winnipeg, travelling there first upon the occasion of the preliminary investigation and secondly when the case was before the Grand Jury or the Petit Jury. They were left in the custody of the court in Winnipeg. In the spring of 1906 it was thought that they might be needed for purposes of reference before the committee in question, and the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Barker) asked that they should be sent for. They were sent for, they came here, they were delivered to the clerk of the committee, and for anything that I know, the clerk of the committee has the original package to this day unopened. I do not remember that the package was ever opened before the committee, perhaps it was; my point is simply that this gentleman, Mr. Knott, himself a witness before the committee, himself counsel for the prosecution and having personal knowledge of exactly the situation in regard to the papers in question, in open court, according to this report in the Conservative newspaper of Montreal, alleged as his reason for not going on with this prosecution in November last, that the committee of which Mr. Aylesworth was chairman held these papers and that he could not get on without them. Not only that, but since then, on more than one Manitoba platform, more than one member of the provincial government has charged that I, personally, as Minister of Justice, have had these papers in my custody, have prevented their presentation to court, and that in the absence of these papers they were precluded by the conduct of the Minister of Justice from probing to its foundation this alleged scandal of which otherwise they were going to make such a manifest exhibition before the courts and before the people of this country. This prosecution, upon the excuse which I have stated, was directed by the presiding judge to stand over until the March assizes this year. On the 3rd day of March, last, these prosecutions were called in the city of Winnipeg and the Attorney General of the province of Manitoba voluntarily entered upon that occasion what lawyers call a nolle prosequi, a formal statement to the officer of the court that he was unwilling to proceed further with these prosecutions which he had launched more than three years before. In the meantime those charges had been canvassed broadcast through this country. I suppose that for the next three years, and possibly for three years beyond that, the same thing will continue, but I point you, Sir, to the circumstance that after three years of consideration and of preparation, if there had been any the least evidence upon which charges such as were so freely made of wrongdoing in connection with the voters' lists upon the occasion in question could have been substantiated by that prosecution, there was the fullest means to their hands to do it, and there was ample opportunity to have justified if they could, by evidence and by the result of that trial, whether or not those men had done anything for which they ought to be condemned. With these prosecutions against men to whom His Majesty's writs for the purposes of a Dominion election had been sent, so instituted by the constituted Crown authorities of the province in which those elections took place, I think, Sir, we should have had difficulty in finding any men willing, in case another election came to be necessary, to execute such writs of election if they were without statutory protection and statutory authority for doing things which are essential to be done if elections are to be carried on at all in the province of Manitoba. We find ourselves accordingly face to face with this situation, that if Dominion elections are to be held in Manitoba, if you are to have men with any stake in the country, men who are not willing to be subjected to legal prosecutions, acting as returning officers, you must point out to them by statute law what course they are to take in regard to distributing the names which they find on the provincial lists to the appropriate polling subdivisions at which these men are entitled to vote.

This Bill accordingly proposes that immediately upon the issue of a writ or, if circumstances render it proper, before a writ issues, men shall be appointed who will act, subject to the revision of the county judges, as a registration board, men who will be acting upon their responsibility as officers of the law and subject to an appeal to the county judges of the province, whose duty it will be to take the lists of voters and to distribute those voters according to the Dominion polls at which they are entitled to vote, and who, if they do that work conscientiously and honestly, will not be subject to subsequent attack in the courts, by reason of the fact that there has been legislative authority for the work they have been called upon to do. Such legislation is, under the circumstances I have tried to detail, in my submission a manifest necessity, and without such legislation it would be impossible that elections for Dominion purposes could hereafter be carried out in Manitoba.

There are other provisions in this Bill in regard to which I have a few words to say. Not only does clause 1—because I am limiting myself to that clause—deal with the necessity for the distribution of names to their appropriate polling subdivision, but it also provides for a measure of revision of the lists, and this feature of it seems particularly to have excited the indignation and the ire of many representatives of the opposite political party in the Manitoba legislature and the Manitoba government. In noticing the newspaper warfare in Winnipeg and elsewhere that has gone on in the last two months in respect to this provision of the Bill, I could not help being reminded of that to which I alluded briefly at the opening of my observations this afternoon. It was the settled policy of the Conservative party in this country when it was in power from 1885 to 1896, that the Dominion parliament should control its own franchise, that the voters' lists for Dominion purposes should be prepared by officials named by the government of the day, that the provincial lists should be altogether discarded; that no reference to them whatever should obtain in the preparation of the lists for Dominion purposes. Not only was that settled policy introduced and placed on the statute-book by the Franchise Act of 1885 which remained until it was repealed in 1898, but when its repeal was under consideration in 1898 a motion was made by the then member for Westmoreland:

> That no system of franchise would be satisfactory which did not preserve federal control over the voters' lists.

That resolution was pressed to vote by way of amendment to the second reading of our present Election Act and the division upon that resolution was an absolute party one. In these circumstances it does seem to me that the Conservative party in this country is certainly—unless it has abandoned the faith of its predecessors—is certainly wedded and wedded indissolubly to the principle of discarding the provincial lists. Speech after speech was made in the debate of 1898 by the leaders and by the prominent members of the Conservative party in this House advocating the retention by the Dominion authorities of absolute control over the preparation of voters' lists for Dominion purposes and arguing strenuously that it was utterly improper for this parliament to abdicate its functions or to entrust the preparation of these voters' lists to any provincial body. Nay more, when the House was in committee on that Bill in 1898, on the 1st of April of that year, (page 2991 'Hansard'), I find the present hon. leader of the opposition placing himself upon record and insisting that it was unwise on the part of this House to denude itself of control over its own electoral machinery; that it was one of the privileges most ancient and most important of this House that it should control its own elections and the preparation of its own voters' lists, and that it was a very unwise thing on the part of parliament to delegate that power to any provincial legislature or to any provincial authority. The opposite view was maintained by the Prime Minister and by the Solicitor General of that day, (Mr. Fitzpatrick), who contended that the proper authority for the preparation of the voters' lists was in origin the municipal authority, and that the proper basis was the assessment roll which contained that element of substantiality to which I have already referred.

In the province of Manitoba and equally in the province of British Columbia and in the unorganized portions of Ontario and Quebec we have under our present law a different system of the preparation of the voters' lists. We have also a totally different system in the new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta and in the Yukon territory, but legislation on our part is not requisite with regard to these new provinces or to the Yukon territory as such legislation already exists. Under our Election Act a special provision is made for Alberta, Saskatchewan and the Yukon, but the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia, with the unorganized portions of Ontario and Quebec remain the only portions of the Dominion in which the voters' lists are not in their origin and initiation prepared upon the footing of the assessment rolls and by the municipal authorities. Now, what has been the result? The system in the province of Manitoba—and the system is not different in principle in British Columbia—is registration before an official of the provincial government coupled with revision before some officer, either judge or barrister appointed for that purpose. In the province of British Columbia there seems to have been what I will call a less unsatisfactory administration of the law than has taken place in other parts of the Dominion. There is less complaint in regard to British Columbia but complaint is not absent there, and complaint is, I venture to say, inevitable as long as you have an effort to sandwich together the two systems each of different character, and unless they are to be worked by the same officials. In the province of Manitoba the registration on which the list as it now exists was made, took place at least as long ago as 1903. The lists used in November 1904 were those established in the year 1903, but those lists had been so prepared under the law of Manitoba as it stood in 1903. The legislature by its statute of 1904 provided there should be annually what they call a revision of these lists; not the preparation of new lists but the taking of the lists as they then stood and striking off the names of any persons disqualified or adding the names of any new persons who had become qualified. Since 1904 there has been in Manitoba an annual acting under his provision of the provincial law. I do not think I am doing any injustice to the proceeding which has been taken annually in that province under this provision of their law, if I speak of it as never having been of a very satisfactory character. I think I use a mild word when I say that, and I will explain exactly why. The times at which and within which the revising of the list, such as it is, shall take place are by the provincial statute to be fixed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Formerly the dates and places were fixed by the registration board consisting of the county judges but now they are fixed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Whatever the reason, the result has been that the time allowed for the revision in each year since then has been, according to the view at any rate of the one political party, entirely inadequate for the purpose. The statute requires notices of appeal from the registration clerk to be given within a certain number of days from the closing of the work of the registration clerk. The statute empowers the Lieutenant Governor in Council to fix the number of days upon which the revising officer, judge or barrister shall sit in his work, and when the day fixed by the proclamation for the concluding of that hearing of appeals or revising work is passed there is no power on the part of the officer to continue his work no matter how much may remain to be done and no matter how many appeals may remain unheard. When the hour comes which has been fixed beforehand as that at which his jurisdiction ceases there is an end of his right to continue further in his work, and his work, of necessity, comes to an end. Now, to say nothing more, that feature of the system has been highly unsatisfactory. It has been alleged, I do not know with what truth, that in some instances there have remained hundreds of men entitled to vote, or at all events, claiming the right to vote, with their appeals to get on the list standing regularly for hearing by the revising officer, and with the revising officer, judge or barrister, unable to hear those appeals or to dispose of them, simply because his time has expired. It is alleged that such men are of one political party, that their names are left off right and left by the registration clerks, that their only means of getting on the list and obtaining the right to exercise their franchise is by an appeal to the judge, and that the judge is given, it may be for a whole constituency, but one day between the hours of ten and five within which to do the work of days or weeks. As a necessary and inevitable consequence, if that state of things exists, there must be throughout the province men by the hundred who claim the right to vote, and whose claim it is impossible for them, in the system as it is administered, to get any adjudication of by the constituted authorities for that purpose.

Well, I do not know—I do not suppose anybody can know, without the taking of evidence—whether or not that state of things as so described does exist. I say simply that men assert that it exists, and I call attention in that connection to a contemporaneous article on the subject which appeared in the Manitoba 'Free Press' on the 26th of May, 1906. I refer to it for the reason that it is contemporaneous with the happening of the events which the writer is depicting. He says that in the constituencies of Kildonan and St. Andrews registration takes place on the same day as elsewhere, May 29 and 30, while revision takes place at Selkirk on June 6, exactly one week later than the last day of registration. Now, under the Manitoba statute, all protests must be in the hands of the revising officer five days before the sittings of his court of revision, and accordingly it follows, if the statement in that newspaper is correct as to the dates, that there was given only one week within which to revise after the close of the work of the registration clerk, and five days out of the seven in that week would have to run for the purposes of an appeal. In other words, the revising barrister or judge would have to be in possession of all appeals for those constituencies within one day after the close of the work of the registration clerk. When you remember that the registration clerk is appointed for a whole constituency, and that the constituency may be and frequently is 100 miles from side to side, you have some idea of the physical impossibility of conducting an appeal under a system administered as this provincial system is said to have been administered in Manitoba. I am not complaining of the system. The system is spread upon the statute-book. I think it might be improved. I think the system in Ontario to-day is much better. That is a matter of judgment; that is a matter in respect of which the views of the Manitoba legislature are no doubt different from the views I am expressing. They think, I presume, that their system is better than the system in the sister province of Ontario, as administered by the government of Ontario to-day. But without questioning what the merits or demerits of the provincial system may be, I say that it is manifest that any system, no matter how good, may be so administered that it will be oppressive and unjust, and that there is at any rate ground for complaint that the present system in Manitoba, as at present administered in the preparation of the voters' lists, is an engine of tyranny and oppression as against the party that is opposed to the provincial government.

We have, ever since 1898, retained in the hands of this parliament a power which was deliberately retained at that time, the retention of which was then urged by the present hon. leader of the opposition—the power to prepare our own lists in circumstances such as are described in the statute, circumstances which existed at that time in Manitoba, which continued to exist in that province for six years afterwards, but which were changed a few months before the elections of 1904. In the condition which now exists in Manitoba, with voters' lists which were prepared more than five years ago, with voters' lists that have never been since that time effectively revised, with voters' lists therefore that contain the names of hundreds of men who are either dead or departed from the province, we have lists that need revision. We have lists that ought to be submitted to the work of a revising officer, a county judge or a barrister according to the Manitoba system, with time given him within which he can effectively do that work of revision, within which he can effectively purge the lists of dead men and of absentees, the presence of whose names upon those lists is but an invitation and a temptation to personation. We have lists from which the names of hundreds of men in Manitoba are absent—hundreds of men who, whether rightly or wrongly, claim the right to be upon those lists, and the right to exercise their franchise; men who claim at any rate that they have been prevented from having their claims adjudicated by the insufficiency of the time allowed under the statute for the purposes of revision. When we have lists presenting features of that description, the question is simply what ought to be done in regard to them? Ought we to adopt the policy which for so many years was that upon which our opponents acted, when, carrying out their views, they had upon the statute-book the Dominion Franchise Act, and when voters' lists for Dominion purposes were prepared throughout the whole Dominion by officials appointed by the government of the day, and the work of the provincial authorities was altogether disregarded.

many features it might be improved, and apply it to the preparation of the Dominion lists ? We have preferred to adhere to the policy of retaining the provincial lists, and not to go to the length, to which the Conservative party went before 1898, of adopting in whole the principle of preparing our own lists altogether from the foundation. We prefer to adhere to the provincial lists, and accordingly, in the Bill I am submitting, the lists as established in the provinces, shall be taken in the preparation of the lists for Dominion purposes, and to them shall be added the names of any persons qualified to vote which are not on them and from them shall be struck the names of all those who are not qualified. The lists so prepared, subject to the revision of a county court judge, shall be allotted and distributed to the polling divisions to be used in the Dominion elections. That is in brief the outline of this clause. We propose to apply it to those parts of the Dominion not already provided for by our own legislation, in which municipal organization and assessment rolls as the basis for the voters' lists, are not to be found ; and with that provision we make the Dominion system consistent with the intention of this parliament, as expressed in 1898. We not only adopt the provincial lists in their entirety as the basis upon which revision and appeal takes place, but in addition we follow completely the provincial method of preparing and revising the lists, and the lists are made in accordance with whatever laws the provinces choose to enact for their own purposes, as was the intention when the statute of 1898 was passed. That is the outline of this first clause of the Bill. The other provisions of the Bill can be discussed in committee or at a later stage of this debate, more especially as I have already, in introducing this measure, explained their general outline with fullness of detail. I beg to move, therefore, the second reading of this Bill.

Mr. R L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). We have listened, Mr. Speaker, to rather a remarkable speech from my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, on the great question of the reform of the electoral laws of this country. That is the subject which it became his duty to present to us this afternoon, but two-thirds of his speech has been devoted to a consideration of how many voters were disfranchised by the thin red line of 1904, and a very large portion of the balance to more or less irrelevant details of the electoral methods in the province of Manitoba. I do not propose to follow my hon. friend into many of these subjects. I do not propose to waste the time of the House by discussing the number of voters disfranchised by the thin red line in 1904, because that has already been discussed in this House over and over again, and there are other matters of much more moment in which our time may be occupiel.

There can be no doubt that the election law of this country requires amendment. We have been urging its amendment for the last three or four years. In this connection, I very much regret that the government have not seen fit to bring down, at the same time as they brought down this measure, an additional Bill for the purpose of simplifying the Dominion Controverted Elections Act and doing away with some of those delays and useless proceedings which have rendered the administration of the law a by-word and a disgrace. The government have not seen fit to take that step and I am sorry for it.

My hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) has introduced a very elaborate Bill which contains many valuable provisions, and I regret that the Bill now submitted contains but very few of the valuable and useful provisions embodied in the Bill of my hon. friend. I do not say that the measure brought down is without merit in some respects. I approve entirely of sections 2 and 3, especially section 3, which supplies a want that has been long felt, namely, the obligation to furnish an address at which all legal processes, notices and other documents can be served on any man who becomes a candidate under the Dominion Elections Act. That will do away with a great many difficulties in regard to service which we have had in the past. It will do away with all those cases in which, by a judgment of a court of the province or a court of appeal, some hon. member of this House, against whom a petition may have been brought, may have escaped any inquiry whatever into his election simply by reason of some technical point raised in connection with the nature of the service. I approve also of section 19 of the Bill, which is a reform we have advocated ; and the object aimed at in sections 18 and 21 is no doubt a very good one, though I do not think these provisions are adequate to the purposes intended. Section 21 provides :

> Every person, including the candidate, and every partnership, association or company making, on behalf of a candidate at an election, any contribution otherwise than to or through the agent of such candidate, is guilty of an indictable offence.

That does not seem to me adequate because the expression 'on behalf of any candidate' would leave a very wide loophole whereby those who ought to be punished might escape.

Section 28 seems to me rather to lend itself to the making of political contributions by organizations formed for that purpose than to bring about any reform of the law such as has been attempted by my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn). However, as that and other sections come to the observation of the committee will later on, we can then discuss them more fully. For the moment I can only say that, for the purposes intended, section 28 seems to me absolutely inadequate.

So far as section 17 is concerned, it does away entirely with the secrecy of the ballot. And I, for one, am absolutely opposed to any such provision. The guiding principle of the Dominion Election Act has been the secrecy of the ballot, conveying the assurance to each voter that when he marks his ballot, either for one candidate or the other, his choice will remain a secret within his own knowledge and not to be disclosed. When we find the Minister of Justice proposing to amend the Dominion Election Act by adding thereto the following words :

Provided, however, that no ballot paper shall be rejected on account of any writing, number or mark placed thereon by any deputy returning officer.

—we are face to face with this situation: that if it is desired that the vote of any particular elector shall be known, and the manner in which he marks his ballot shall be known, any partisan deputy returning officer can mark upon it, 'This is John Smith's ballot.' and that will be an absolutely good ballot. I see no jurisdiction for any such amendment to the law as that. And I say it is far better to continue the system we have at present, a system which may bring about the voidance of elections now and then, but which will not do away with the secrecy of the ballot, which secrecy is the safeguard of the country and of the voter.

Now, I commend also the provisions of section 11 so far as they go. There has been an attempt there to provide that the forms of oath which ought to be administered in any case to any elector coming for ward to deposit his ballot shall be set forth in the instructions so clearly and unmistakably that no deputy returning officer, no scrutineer and no voter shall have any doubt upon the subject. I approve of the principle embodied in that section, but I say that the section is not sufficiently explicit, not sufficiently definite, and I shall. therefore, ask that it be amended when we get into committee.

I greatly regret that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice—and the government, for that matter—have not embodied in this Bill certain provisions contained in the Bill of my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn), some, but not all, of which I shall now enumerate. There is no provision in this Bill for the holding of by-elections within a reasonable time, nor is it provided that, where several by-elections are pending, they shall all be held upon the same day. There is no provision by which the respectable character of returning officers shall be assured, and we know from some experience in the past that this is an extremely important desideratum to the end that we shall have fair elections. There is no amendment doing away with the provision of the law by which certain elections in the province of British Columbia and the province of Manitoba shall be held at a time subsequent to the general election. The time has long gone by when these elections should be delayed. In the province of British Columbia, the provincial elections in every constituency are held on the same day. After examining into the matter very carefully, after going to all the sources of information available, I am thoroughly convinced that there is no reason for delaying these elections in British Columbia, or in any other province beyond the time at which the general election is held.

My hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) introduces very elaborate provisions respecting contributions by corporations and contractors, and I regret to see that the corresponding provisions contained in the Bill introduced by the government are not at all effective to my mind and require very important modifications before they can be said to fulfil in the slightest degree the purpose alleged to be aimed at. There is provision in the Bill of my hon. friend from Prince Edward with regard to civil servants taking part in elections. Its effect is simply to embody in the statute law a principle which has been accepted by the government and affirmed by unanimous vote of this House. I see no reason why it should not be placed on the statute-book that he who runs may read and that the civil servant may know that he must not take an active and offensive part in elections. Then, there is no provision in the Bill now before us against bribery by promise of expenditure of public money. or the withholding of that expenditure, according to the election or defeat of any particular candidate. The provisions in this Bill of the government with regard to compelling payments through official agents are not effective, while those in the Bill of the hon. member for Prince Edward are effective and valuable. The Bill introduced by the government omits the statutory declarations respecting expenditure which are required under the Bill of my hon. friend (Mr. Alcorn).

So much for the details of the Bill—and I pass over them very hurriedly for the reason that it will be our duty to go into them more thoroughly when the Bill is in a later stage. Let me pass now to one or two of the reasons given by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, and deal with the ostensible reason assigned by him to-day for clause 1 of this Bill which has undoubtedly provoked a great deal of discussion and a great deal of adverse comment throughout the country. Now my hon. friend either said too much to-day or he said altogether too little when he introduced this Bill. For, I have read most carefully his remarks on the occasion of the first reading, and I find that he did not allude by one single word in that speech to the preparation of new lists or the revision of any lists whatever in the province of Manitoba or the province of British Columbia. He brought this Bill before the House, and made a very innocent speech with regard to its provisions. We did not know at that time what its provisions were. The hon. gentleman simply pointed out the difficulties that had taken place in Manitoba in 1904 in cases where the boundary of a Dominion riding cut through some local polling division, and he pointed out the necessity of some provision by means of which the distribution of voters to one or another Dominion division could be made in accordance with the law by proper officers and so as not to create any suspicion of unfairness or injustice. But, as to the preparation of new lists in Manitoba or British Columbia, the Minister of Justice on that occasion said not one word in explanation of the Bill the second reading of which has been moved to-day. Well, we have more information on that subject to-day from the hon. gentleman.

I will pass very briefly over a few of the remarks by which he has endeavoured to sustain the recession of his government and his party from the position they took as far back as 1885, when the Dominion Franchise Act was under consideration in this House; which they reaffirmed in most emphatic words in 1893, when they laid down their platform here in Ottawa; and which they reiterated ad nauseam when they introduced and passed, in 1898, the Bill repealing the Dominion Franchise Act. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice declares that there is no provision in the Dominion Elections Act for the case of overlapping, as he termed it, the case where the boundary between two Dominion ridings cuts through a polling division as established under the provincial law. I may not have gathered the intent of the hon. gentleman's remarks in that respect, because, as he proceeded with his argument, he seemed to refer more or less to the registration districts in Manitoba, and to the cutting of these by the boundary between two Dominion ridings. I do not know what the consideration of registration districts has to do with his explanation of this Bill, because I do not find in this Bill the slightest reference to the overlapping of any registration district, but I do find a reference to the overlapping of polling divisions and to the consequent necessity of distributing the voters of any particular polling division to one riding or the other. Why then did the hon. gentleman spend twenty minutes of his time in discussing the cutting in two of registration districts in the province of Manitoba by the boundary between the two Dominion electoral divisions. I do not see the pertinences of the hon. gentleman's remarks. As concerns the cutting of a polling division in two, there is a provision in the Dominion Elections Act under which it was sought to justify, in the province of Manitoba. that which was done, not by the returning officers, but by Mr. Leach, the head of the Liberal provincial organization. I will quote from the Dominion Elections Act two sections :

24. The polling division shall except as herein otherwise provided, be there established by or under the laws of the province for the purposes of provincial elections within the territory comprised in the electoral district for which the election is held.

25. Where any provincial polling division, as constituted at the time of the receipt by the returning officer of the writ for an election, lies only partly within the electoral district for which such election is to be held, the part thereof within such electoral district shall, for the purpose of that election, form a separate polling division, or it may be attached by the returning officer to an adjoining polling division; and the returning officer shall, as soon as possible after the receipt of the writ, prepare from the existing voters' lists a separate voters' list containing the names of the persons entitled to have their names placed on the list for such part of such polling division.

That law can be carried out without any difficulty provided you have honest returning officers, provided you have officers disposed to do their duty, and who do not hand over their functions to be discharged by the Liberal organizer in any province, whoever he may happen to be. The Minister of Justice speaks of the province of Manitoba as if that were the only province in which this overlapping occurs. Does he not know that it occurs in other provinces as well? Does he not know that in the city of Toronto, as I am informed by memebrs of this House from that city, there is exactly the same overlapping? The boundaries of the Dominion divisions are not coterminous with the boundaries of the provincial divisions, and the result is that polling divisions established for provincial purposes are cut through over and over again by the boundaries established for the purpose of Dominion elections. It is not in Manitoba alone that this difficulty occurs, it may occur in any province, and whenever the legislature of any province sees fit to change the boundaries of the provincial riding this difficulty always occurs and probably always will occur, and that difficulty will have to be met in some way. How is it met in Manitoba to-day ? In 1906, when something of the same difficulty had arisen, it was met by legislation, and I will quote from the statutes of Manitoba for 1906, chapter 23, section 7.

In the event of territory comprised within or partly comprised within an electoral division being changed and included in another electoral division, or other electoral divisions whether newly created or not, a judge of one of the county court divisions of the province, to be nominated and appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, shall subdivide the names appearing on the list of electors, as so finally revised, according to the altered boundaries or limits, and make a complete list of electors for the electoral dvisions affected, as aforesaid, and appropriately divide the names of the electors and allot the territory between suitable polling subdivisions, as shall in the opinion of such judge, be just and equitable.

If any amendment is required it is sufficient to follow the lines of that Manitoba statute, and provide that where the boundary between two Dominion electoral divisions cuts through a provincial polling division in the province of Manitoba, then the voters in that polling division shall be alloted, by a county court judge, to that particular Dominion electoral division to which they properly belong, and according to the place where they reside. That is required, if anything is required, and nothing more. When the Minister of Justice in his observations to-day endeavoured to make the people believe that anything more was required by the exigency of the case, he attempted a task which I think even his great ability is unable to accomplish.

Now, the hon. gentleman made a very laboured argument—I do not exactly see the pertinence of it, but it was to this effect, that the two systems of preparing voters' lists which prevail in Canada to-day, had their division line in the boundary between Ontario and Manitoba; west of that boundary line there was a system of registration, east of that boundary line there was a system of municipal lists, of lists made up upon the assessment rolls. As I understand his argument, he appeared to draw the conclusion that because of this system of registration in the west, his proposal as embodied in section 1 of this Bill ought to be favourably entertained by this House. Let me point out to my hon. friend that in the province of Ontario to-day there is a population probably fifty per cent in excess of the population of Manitoba, 500,000 or 600,000 people, in respect of whom the voters' lists are made up, not upon assessment rolls, but by a system of registration. His argument either goes too far or not far enough. The city of Toronto, the city of Hamilton, the city of London, all the cities and towns of Ontario with a population of over 9,000, have, I understand, a system of registration and not a system of preparing voters' lists upon assessment rolls.

Mr. GREENWAY. The registration the hon. gentleman refers to as prevailing in cities is for the manhood suffrage vote, not for the entire registration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not very familiar with the law of Ontario, and I speak under correction. I understand the entire vote in the cities and towns of Ontario may be made up in that way.

Mr. GREENWAY. Only the manhood suffrage.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, the hon. gentleman is apparently right in that regard. But that does not alter for a moment the argument I was making, that the vote of 500,000 or 600,000 of the population of Ontario is derived from a system of registration, and is not made up on the basis of the assessment rolls.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) is not quite right in endeavouring to make the leader of the opposition believe that this registration in Ontario applies only to manhood franchise voters. It applies to any one who is not on the list and who has a right to be on. If he is a property owner he can register under that system. It would apply, for instance, to a property owner who has been skipped by the assessor.

Mr. GREENWAY. That does not affect what I say at all.

Mr. CONMEE. There is also a very large section for which there is no list, either registration or municipal. I refer to the unorganized section of Ontario, where you have the unorganized list. I wish the hon. member would make reference to that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does the hon. gentleman want me to explain ?

Mr. FOSTER. His unorganized argument.

Mr. CONMEE. I drew attention to the lists in Ontario in the unorganized sections. One of the hon. gentlemen opposite referred to the Ontario lists and I suggested that it would be well for the hon. gentleman to explain this.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me my hon. friend's remarks are a little disorganized and as the Minister of Justice did not see fit to put forward one single word in respect of his proposal so far as it affects the unorganized districts of Ontario and Quebec, it would be well if my hon. friend, when he comes to speak, to supply that omission and to do that which the Minister of Justice should have done if he had regard to his duty to this House.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman has the floor just now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And is likely to have it for some time, but my hon. friend does not seem to be aware of it.

Let us now discuss the observations of the Minister of Justice with regard to the real object of this Bill—and every one understands pretty well what the real object of this Bill is. It is exactly the same Bill that was prepared in 1904, which at that time they were afraid to bring down to the House. They have screwed their courage to the sticking point on this occasion and have brought it down, and, absolutely regardless of the pledges which they have made to the people of this country ever since 1885, they are prepared to take the position that, in these two provinces, Manitoba and British Columbia, where there has been no complaint, so far as I am aware, respecting the list, they wish to make the lists by means of their own officers and will not accept those provincial lists respecting which there has been no complaint. My hon. friend the Prime Minister asked in 1885 where were the petitions, where were the public meetings, where were the complaints in respect of the system of preparation of voters' lists which had existed up to that time. The Minister of Justice today said that if statements made to him were correct—a favourite form of expression with the Minister of Justice—there were hundreds of men in the province of Manitoba who had been disfranchised. Disfranchised how? Disfranchised under what circumstances? Disfranchised for what reason? If my memory does not mislead me, I recollect one occasion where the legislature of Manitoba passed a special Bill to put on the voters' lists some seven or eight men who complained that they had been improperly omitted. Where were these hundreds at that time? Why was their voices not raised then? The Minister of Justice used the expression 'if' and he bases the whole of this Bill in respect of this matter upon 'if, if, if,' with regard to certain statements he has made to this House. The province of Manitoba has a system of electoral lists which, in the first place, provides that every man in that province may go before a registration clerk and that registration clerk, as I understand the laws of Manitoba, for a period of two months or thereabouts, the months of May and June in each year, sits to receive applications.

Mr. GREENWAY. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the registration clerk sits two months?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is a period of two months during which these men can put in their applications.

Mr. GREENWAY. A period of two hours.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The proclamations are issued by the first of May and the courts of revision must be completed by the first of July.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman tell me what his view is of the time during which the registration clerks receive applications?

Mr. GREENWAY. I have told the hon. gentleman and this House before that some registration clerks sat two hours at a particular point to take applications.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as the Manitoba lists are concerned, I would like to quote the opinion of a journal in Manitoba which most strongly opposed the Roblin government at the last election, the Winnipeg 'Tribune.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did not that paper attack the Roblin government very severely at the last election?

Mr. GREENWAY. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And did it not take a stand against——

Mr. GREENWAY. No, not very severely.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I am mistaken.

Mr. GREENWAY. Mistaken in the language.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought the editor of that paper was a candidate in the Liberal interest in that provincial election. That paper made very strong attacks. However, I bow to the hon. gentleman's superior knowledge. He tells me I am mistaken. At all events that journal said this:

To be quite frank, it is our judgment that one of the bright spots in the administration of the Roblin government has been its preparation of the voters' lists. Under the system of registration followed by that government, all parties receive a square deal, and we do not think it has ever been successfully charged against the Roblin government that an injustice in this regard has been perpetrated. Indeed, the conduct of the Roblin government in the matter of the preparation of the voters' lists has been so much better than one might expect from a party government in these degenerate days, that it has always been a pleasure to the 'Tribune' to comment on the action of the government. The fact that an attempt is now being made by the Dominion government to single out this province and have lists of its own prepared, seems to us a sinister proceeding. It is difficult to understand what arguments have been produced to influence the government to depart from the general principle adopted after elections. One would think that the Dominion government had abandoned a sufficient number of its pledges and principles to influence it to at least stand by some one or two in order to save its face.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. What is the date of that article?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Winnipeg 'Tribune' of March 27, last.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. He has changed his politics again since then.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Justice made two rather remarkable statements in dealing with his proposal as contrasted with the operation of this Act in Manitoba. He said that the time allowed by the officials of the Manitoba government is altogether too short. He spoke of a period of two months in some connection and he tells us that although the provisions of the Manitoba Act are absolutely insufficient, although it is so worked out that men are left off those lists, yet in the preparation of the new lists by officials of this government, they are going to observe, absolutely and thoroughly, the provisions of that law which is so unfair. That is to say, in a period of about 30 days between the issue of the proclamation dissolving parliament and the time of the general election you are to appoint your officers, you are to give weeks during which the voters may register, and you are apparently according to his view—although I do not find it in his Bill—to have a revision by county court judges in the province of Manitoba, and then you are to print those lists and place them in the hands of the returning officers in time to be distributed to the deputy returning officers all over that province in order that they may perform their duty at the then ensuing election. Did any one ever listen to an absurdity more apparent? Why, the mere statement of it by the Minister of Justice is sufficient to indicate to the House and to the country the true nature of this Bill.

The Minister of Justice told us there have been hundreds of men disfranchised in the province of Manitoba. Has he with him to-day a declaration from a single one of these men to that effect? Has he the record of any public meeting, has he petitions from any of these hundreds of men declaring that they have been unable to get their names upon the lists in the province of Manitoba under the operation of the present law. The Minister of Justice has not pointed to the name of a single man who so complains. I venture to say that for every man in the province of Manitoba whom he can show to have been wronged in that regard I will bring two from the province of Nova Scotia which is not to be interfered with by this Bill. The Conservatives of the province of Nova Scotia would rejoice if they had the same opportunity for fair lists as that afforded by the Manitoba law. The Conservatives of Nova Scotia have been asking the Liberal government of that province for the last 15 years to permit them to appeal to the county court judges in respect to the revision of the lists and up to the present time that has not been allowed. The only appeal allowed in the province of Nova Scotia is an appeal from the revising board to the sheriff who is appointed by the provincial government and absolutely under their control. The appointment of these sheriffs has been placed absolutely in the hands of the provincial executive by a statute passed some years ago, although in the good old days the appointment of sheriffs was made by the judges in consultation with a representative of the executive government.

The Minister of Justice tells us in the first place that some provision must be made for allocating the voters in cases where the boundary between two federal electoral divisions cuts in two a local subdivision. I have pointed out there is already provision in section 25 of the statute for that purpose, and that such provision would be presumably sufficient if there were honest returning officers desiring to perform their duty according to the law. In case there might be any suspicion of wrong-doing, it would probably be a prudent course to provide that such revision should not be made by the returning officer himself but should be made by an independent authority—the county court judge—and I do not think any one in this country would object to a proposal of that kind.

The other part of the proposal of the Minister of Justice is that the provincial lists in Manitoba and British Columbia shall be disregarded although the provincial lists are observed and acted upon everywhere else in Canada. I use the word disregarded advisedly because although the Minister of Justice has some very plausible words in his Bill, nevertheless section 1 gives it absolutely into the power of this government to make new lists both in Manitoba and British Columbia. In order that there may be no doubt about it let me read the section:

> Notwithstanding anything to the contrary herein contained, voters' lists for the portions of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec which consist of territory not municipally organized and where there is no regular assessment or valuation roll upon which voters' lists are based and for the several electoral districts in the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia shall be prepared immediately after the issue of any writ for an election in any such electoral district or in any electoral district composed or partly composed of such territory, or at any time when the Governor in Council so directs; and for the purpose of preparing and giving effect to such voters' lists the Governor in Council may appoint all necessary officers and confer upon them all necessary powers.
> 2. In the preparation of such lists the provisions of the laws of the province regulating the preparation and manner of revising and bringing into force the provincial voters' list in the like cases shall as far as possible be observed and followed and no person whose name is not included in the voters' lists as prepared and revised shall be entitled to vote.
> 3. In the preparation of such lists the voters' lists which were prepared for the several polling divisions situate wholly or in part within the electoral district or wholly or in part within such unorganized territory as such polling divisions were established at the last preceding provincial election, and which under the laws of the province, are then or were last in force for the purposes of provincial elections, shall be taken, and the names of voters on such lists shall be distributed among the different polling divisions established for such Dominion election, so that each voter shall be assigned to his proper poll, and the names of all persons who are not qualified to vote in the said electoral district shall be struck off the said lists, and the names of all persons qualified to vote in the said electoral district and not already on the said lists shall be added to the said lists.

I need not read subsection 4 at present. Now there is nothing ambiguous about that. The provincial lists 'shall be taken' whatever that means and whatever legal significance can be given to that, but you are to add thereto, and strike therefrom, names as may be necessary, and that is neither more or less than the making of an absolutely new list in the case of these provinces and of the unorganized territories. For what reason is the government of Canada to adopt provincial lists in the five provinces of Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and to declare that the provincial lists which have been established, with an appeal to the judiciary, with proper provision for the preservation of the rights of voters, are to be discarded in these two provinces of Canada which happen at this moment to be under the control of Conservative administrations? Why is it that in these two provinces you are to pass by the provincial lists and to have lists made up by officers of the Dominion government? It has been argued in favour of the proposal, that in Manitoba and British Columbia these lists are made up by men appointed by the provincial administration, and that in the sense that the registration clerks who make them up are appointed by the provincial executive, they are partisan lists. As I understand the laws of Ontario the same thing is true with respect to the registration system there.

Mr. CLARKE. Not for Dominion elections.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Am I wrong in my statement?

Mr. CLARKE. The registrars are appointed by the Dominion for Dominion elections.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am speaking of the provincial registration which goes on in Toronto, Hamilton, London and other Ontario cities. The registration, I understand, stands good for a Dominion election if held within a certain period afterwards.

Mr. CLARKE. The Dominion has its own registration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then the hon. gentleman disagrees with me in that?

Mr. CLARKE. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOL. I would be glad if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) would in the course of the debate refer to the section of the Act where he finds that.

Mr. CLARKE. I refer to my own experience.

Mr. BRISTOL. I can assure the hon. gentleman that he is mistaken, under section 6 of the Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would not presume to contradict the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) in regard to the law of Ontario, because he is an old member of the bar of that province, of which I am only a young member. However, perhaps he will permit me to proceed with my argument on the assumption that I am correct in making that statement. I say that, as I understand the law of Ontario, the registration lists which are made up for provincial elections stand good for Dominion elections if held within a year afterwards, and therefore if there be good ground for interfering with lists that have been taken up by appointees of provincial governments, this Bill does not go far enough. It should include all those registration lists which are made up in the cities and towns of Ontario. For what reason is any discrimination made between the province of British Columbia and Manitoba on the one hand and the province of Ontario on the other hand. I do not understand it, unless there be some sinister motive for this Bill which was not disclosed in the speech of the Minister of Justice this afternoon. We adopted in 1898 a system which the Prime Minister had declared for as far back as 1885. I have looked over the debates of 1885. The right hon. gentleman then, and also in 1898, put his argument upon this ground. He said that the regulation of the franchise and the preparation of the voters' lists were absolutely a matter of civil rights and were therefore within provincial jurisdiction, with which it was improper for the parliament of Canada to interfere; when any province established its franchise and prepared its voters' lists, for the election of members to its legislature, that franchise and these voters' lists should stand good for the election, by the voters of that province, of members of this House of Commons. That was the argument of the right hon. gentleman, stated in a few words. He made another argument. He said: Here we were, seven diverse communities in Canada, and to each of these communities, having in a certain respect different ideals and different customs, we should give the right to establish its own franchise and to prepare its own voters' lists. And so, when the Franchise Bill was proposed in 1885, my right hon. friend moved this resolution:

In the opinion of this House it is preferable to continue the plan which has been adopted ever since confederation of utilizing for the elections of this House the provincial franchises and voters' lists.

In 1898 my right hon. friend was still more emphatic. I have a great many references to his remarks at that time, but I shall endeavour to make them as moderate as possible. I quote some of them for the reason that perhaps he has forgotten the length to which he went on that occasion in his statement of absolute adherence not only to provincial franchises but to provincial voters' lists. On page 2280 he said :

Our policy is that the franchise under which the members of this House should be elected is the franchise under which members of the local legislatures are elected. This is the position which we have taken from the beginning; this is the position we maintain at this moment.

On page 2281 he said :

I now come to this proposition, which I lay down as a principle of good government, that under a federative government such as our own it is better that there should be only one franchise as regards the provinces and the Dominion—the same franchise should serve to elect members of this House as to elect members of the local legislatures.

On page 2282 he said :

The regulation of the franchise is above all things, a domestic matter which concerns and ought to be regulated by the local legislatures and not by this parliament.

On page 2286 he said :

In a country like ours, under a federal system of government, the only proper solution of this question is to place the right of suffrage in the hands of the local legislature.

On page 2288, speaking of the Franchise Act of 1885, and referring to the effect of the provisions which had been made for adopting the assessment rolls and the provincial voters' lists as a basis, he said this :

It was far more logical, according to our views, having adopted the principle of the provincial franchise, to also accept the voters' lists so prepared under the authority of the provincial legislature.

On page 3967 he said:

There can be no doubt what the policy of the government is on this subject. We have introduced the principle and have fought for it for many years that the franchise ought to be regulated by the provincial legislatures, that it is for them to decide whether or not the Indians should be admitted to vote or not.

On page 3980 he said :

The hon. gentlemen opposite have taken the ground that this parliament should regulate the franchise, while we have taken the ground that the best method of dealing with it, in view of our complicated government under a federative system is to have one uniform franchise for each province and for the Dominion, that is to say, that the same authority which regulates the franchise for the local legislature should also regulate it for the Dominion parliament.

On page 4012 he said :

I mean to say that civil rights, under our constitution, come within the purview of the local legislature; the franchise being of the nature of a civil right, I say should be determined by the local legislature.

On page 4015 he said :

But I would not have hesitated to accept the franchise provided by a Conservative legislature in Quebec, because, though there were many things in that franchise, on the whole, to which I would have objected, still as it satisfied the province it would have satisfied me. It is in the same way as regards other provinces. It is possible that the control of the several provinces may pass into the hands of the Conservative party; still on a question of this kind I am quite disposed, for my part, to accept the franchise prepared by the legislature, whether Liberal or Conservative.

On page 4016 he said :

Would it not be far better, as a matter simply of good government, if the elections to this House could be conducted on the local lists, and that the members of this parliament and the members of the legislature who represent the same body of people, should be elected by the same electors? Is it not better that it should be so?

On page 4312—and I commend especially to the attention of my right hon. friend this statement—he said:

We do not submit such a proposition——

He had been referring to the possibility of this government appointing their own officers to revise the electoral lists for Canada :

We do not submit such a proposition; we do not want the lists prepared by our appointees. We are satisfied to have them prepared by either the provincial or the municipal authorities.

Then at page 5672 :

We have certainly power to take the provincial lists as they are made and to adopt them as our own; but I question very much whether we have the power to interfere in the preparation of the local lists and to impose conditions not imposed by local legislation as to the manner in which they are to be made.

On page 5674 :

Be that as it may, we have come to the conclusion that the best method we could adopt, as regards the preparation of voters' lists for the elections for this House, is the adoption of the local lists.

It seems to me that these are remarkably definite statements of principle by my right hon. friend who leads this government. Why then is it that, after the lapse of ten years and in respect of these two provinces where the local lists are made up under laws which are the subject of discussion in these provinces, which are authorized by the people of these provinces, and which permit an appeal to judicial authority, the right hon. gentleman should find it necessary to receded from every principle he has laid down in the quotations he has just read and ask parliament and the country to consent to the preparation of lists by this government, in absolute disregard of those prepared by the provincial authorities?

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to refer to the argument with regard to the boundaries of registration districts of Manitoba which are supposed to be not coterminous with the electoral divisions or with the polling divisions. I hold in my hand the Manitoba 'Gazette' of 25th April, 1908, in which appears an order in council passed by the Manitoba government shortly before, setting forth the names and post office addresses of the persons appointed to act as registration clerks for the several electoral divisions of the province. I observe that registration clerks are not appointed for registration districts, but for the electoral divisions. In certain of the electoral divisions only one registration clerk is appointed, in others two, in others three, and in others a larger number. The territorial limit of their jurisdiction in each case is that of the electoral division. I am also informed by my hon. friends from Manitoba on this side of the House that under this system which prevails in Manitoba the lists are made up for the several polling divisions as established under the provincial enactment. So the argument of the Minister of Justice seems to have been based upon a consideration of the enactments as they formerly were and not upon the enactments as they are to-day. His argument does not carry any force as it does not apply to present conditions.

If there is any difficulty about the overlapping of polling sections, to which I have already alluded, let it be borne in mind, in the first instance, that it is not confined to Manitoba and British Columbia. It should be borne in mind, in the second place, that any such difficulty can only be properly met by providing for the allocation of the electors by the county court judge upon such principle as that contained in the Manitoba Act to which I alluded to-day.

I would like to remark once more that no unfairness in making the lists for any province has been brought to the attention of the House except in the statement of the Minister of Justice based upon a hypothesis which he has not been able to prove. It has been stated to me that the Prime Minister of Manitoba has challenged, both inside and outside the legislature, his political opponents or any person within the province to bring to his attention the case of any man who has been unfairly deprived of his franchise in that province. Further than that, I am informed on the best possible authority that during the recent session of the legislature in Manitoba he asked his opponents whether they had any amendments to suggest to this Act and no amendments were suggested. One would suppose that, if the condition of affairs described by the Minister of Justice prevailed in Manitoba, the active, vigilant opposition in that province would have moved in the legislature for the amendment of the Act. I am not aware that any such amendment has been proposed, or that any reasonable amendment has been proposed which has not been accepted.

Further than that, if the government of the Dominion after having adopted, as they did in the most unequivocal way, the provincial lists, have come to the conclusion that the effect of the Manitoba enactments was not in the public interest and operated unfairly or to the disadvantage of persons in the province who were entitled to vote, or operated unfairly in another way by retaining on the list the names of persons not entitled to vote, such a government, desiring to adhere to the principles of 1885, or 1893 and of 1898 would have brought these matters to the attention of the Manitoba government and would have asked that government to propose to the legislature such amendments in the electoral law of Manitoba as would reform the evils alluded to. But I am not aware that such a proposition has been made, either by the government of Canada of by the Liberal opposition of the province of Manitoba.

Now, what objections can there be to the Manitoba lists and to the British Columbia lists? In the first place there can be no possible objection on the ground that the lists are not recent. In British Columbia they are revised every six months and in Manitoba yearly. I understand that, if an election were held this autumn, say in September or October, the Manitoba lists used would be those prepared this year, while in Ontario the lists used would be those prepared last year. So far as time is concerned, therefore, there can be no objection to the lists either in one province or in the other.

There can be no objection on the ground of want of appeal, for appeal to independent judicial authority is allowed in every province except Nova Scotia, to whose case I alluded this afternoon. Any one who has any knowledge of the way in which matters work out in practice is surely aware that the real contest in regard to adding names to the list or excluding names therefrom takes place before the final court of appeals. That is my own experience at least in the province of Nova Scotia, and I suppose it would work out in the same way in the province of Manitoba.

No petitions have been received by this House, no public meetings have been held in Manitoba to protest against the alleged iniquities. I do not know how many electors there are in Manitoba; I suppose from 50,000 to 75,000, assuming the population of that province to be about 400,000. Of the 50,000 or 75,000 electors in Manitoba not one has come to this House by way of petition asking for any redress at the hands of this parliament, and not one name has been given by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice this afternoon of any man in the province of Manitoba who has been unjustly deprived of his vote. I would like my hon. friend opposite to give any names, to adduce any instance in Manitoba or in British Columbia which would justify the interposition of this parliament. I can readily understand that under any system, whether a municipal system of preparing voters' lists based upon assessment, or a system of registration, you will undoubtedly now and then find that the names have been improperly omitted from the list or improperly added to it. I have run three elections in the county of Halifax where a municipal system prevails. At every one of those elections I met dozens of Conservatives whose names had been omitted from the list. I cannot give the names of all of them to-night, but I can assure the House that I am stating the fact. I can give the names of some men who were disfranchised at the last election in Halifax. In 1904, John W. Payment, a leading citizen, possessing large property interests in the city of Halifax and outside, found his name was not on the voters' list. Yet he was a very prominent man, president of the Bank of Nova Scotia, and a man actively associated with many business enterprises in the city. Fortunately he discovered that in a remote district, some distance away his name had been put on in another polling division, but in the division where he usually voted his name was omitted. Then there was Mr. George S. Campbell, one of the leading citizens of Halifax, a merchant possessed of a very large amount of property, who found in the last election that his name was not on the voters' list. Dozens of other illustrations could be given of men who, under that system, were deprived of their vote in that election. This does not necessarily prove that the Dominion parliament should intervene, after it has once adopted the system of relying upon provincial voters' lists. I do not care whether you have a municipal system or a system of registration, notices must be given, proceedings must be taken in order that justice may be done and that names may be struck off the list or added to it. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice has not given any names of persons deprived of their votes; I have, and I happened to remember just by chance this afternoon that some papers were sent to me a year ago from the province of Nova Scotia touching the default of a revising officer in not posting a list of names sent to him for the purpose of an application to strike them off, and another list of names sent to him for the purpose of having them added. By reason of the default of that revising officer, fifty-five names were left on the list which should have been struck off, and eighteen names remained off the list which should have been added. The case went before the revising officers for consideration and they decided that the fifty-five names should be struck off and that the eighteen names should be added. The case went upon appeal to the sheriff of the county, a gentleman appointed by the present government, and a strong partisan, and that official decided—I am not impugning his decision—that because the revising officer, without any default whatever on the part of the men who were seeking to make these changes in the list, happened to neglect his duty, the list could not be touched, and the fifty-five names of persons who should not be upon the list remained there, and the eighteen names of persons who should appear on the list disappeared therefrom. Instances of this kind will occur under any system. But I respectfully submit that even if such instances were brought to the attention of the House in respect to the list of Manitoba, there would be no more ground for interfering with the list of that province than there would be for interfering with the list of Nova Scotia under the conditions to which I have alluded.

My hon. friend the Minister of Justice says that if this Bill does not pass it will be impossible to procure returning officers who will undertake the duties of their office. Let me say to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and to the government, that any returning officer in this country who observes the provisions of the law need not have the slightest apprehension. It is only the man who surrenders his functions to the organizer of a party, and who may thereby be called to account in the criminal courts, that need have the slightest possible fear as to any consequences which will result to him by reason of his undertaking this responsible office. I might retort to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice that if this Bill does pass it will be impossible for the Conservative party to get candidates to remain in the field, or to enter the field, either in Manitoba or in British Columbia. What would they expect? They would expect that some gentleman such as Mr. Leach, or an organizer of that character, would. under the apparent sanction of the law, accomplish in 1908 or 1909 what was accomplished without the sanction of the law in 1904. Although I do not desire to take any but a reasonable attitude in regard to this Bill, I do submit to the Prime Minister and to this House that we are entitled to treat this Bill exactly as if it provided in terms, and not merely in intent, that no person other than a supporter of this government shall be elected either in Manitoba or in British Columbia. A very prominent member of the Liberal party in 1885, in debating whether the Dominion Franchise Act ought to pass, used this language :

> Give us the power of appointing the revising officers and we can determine beforehand who will command a majority in this House.

Now, if there were any cause shown, any reasonable cause shown to this House why we should interfere in Manitoba or British Columbia rather than in Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick, or Ontario or Quebec, there might be some ground for considering this Bill and treating it as a reasonable measure. But when we realize that it is precisely the same Bill as that which it was intended to introduce in 1904, and when we know that the proposed introduction of that Bill was the signal for the intimation to the Liberals of Manitoba in the spring of that year that they need not pay any attention to the lists because there would be lists prepared by Dominion officials for the election of that year; when we realize that the interference with the lists of the province of Manitoba and the province of British Columbia is altogether unauthorized and unjustifiable; and when we realize that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice put it very frankly this afternoon when he said that the lists prepared under the Manitoba statutes were not very acceptable to some members of the Liberal party in that province; when we realize all this, we cannot treat this measure otherwise than as an intensely partisan one. Show me, in the first place, the wrong that has taken place under the Manitoba Act; show me the wrong that has taken place under the statutes of British Columbia relating to the preparation of the lists; show me that you have brought those alleged wrongs to the attention of the governments in both provinces and that they have refused to redress them; show me that this government has made any representation whatever on this subject to the government of either British Columbia or Manitoba, do this, and you make the foundation at least for the consideration of some measure of amendment, some measure of reform. But until you have done that, until you have furnished to the House something more than the hypothetical statements of the Minister of Justice this afternoon, I venture to think that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) on reflection will come to the conclusion that this measure, so far as the particular section is concerned, ought not to be pressed.

Mr. Speaker, I apologize for having trespassed so long on the attention of the House. So far as the proposed Bill effects any reforms of the electoral law of this country, I am prepared to give to the government a hearty and earnest support in their endeavour to improve existing conditions. But so far as concerns those provisions of the Bill which take away the secrecy of the ballot and provide for an unjustifiable interference with the voters' lists in British Columbia and Manitoba, I for my part will give them as strong and vigorous resistance as my physical strength and energy will permit.

Mr. THOMAS GREENWAY (Lisgar). Mr. Speaker, I may be pardoned for taking the first opportunity that presents itself to offer a few remarks on the subject which is now before the House, because it was one of the first subjects upon which I had the pleasure of addressing the House when I came to this parliament. I pointed out then the difficulty under which we laboured in having no lists for the Dominion in the province of Manitoba, and I make that statement now. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is a lawyer and I am not, but I will take issue with him in saying that there is no provision in the law by which we may legally have a voters' list for the House of Commons in Manitoba. My hon. friend devoted a good deal of time to what the right hon. the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said years ago, that he was in favour of the provincial franchise. That may be right or it may be wrong, I have never had very strong convictions upon it either way, but I do know that the use of the provincial franchise places the electors sometimes in an anomalous position. I am going to suggest to the government now a matter to which I have given a good deal of consideration. I refer to the case of people from other parts of the Dominion, from Ontario for instance, moving to Manitoba, people who have lived all their lives in Ontario, people who have always been British subjects, and who have all the qualifications necessary to vote in Canada, but who, if they go to Manitoba, are immediately met by the Manitoba law which provides that they shall not be upon the list unless they have resided 12 months in that province.

Mr. BENNETT. The Act in Ontario was the same for years until this year.

Mr. GREENWAY. I cannot help that. I believe in some respects it works that way now, but I do say that there ought to be, if it can be worked out, some provision by which persons of that kind should be able to go and register their votes when the time comes. Whether that should be done by supplying them with a certificate from their previous place of residence, or by some other method, I leave to others to work out, but anything that places a man in that unjust position appears to me to be an unjust law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This Bill would not redress that?

Mr. GREENWAY. Not as far as it has gone, but I had hoped that something might be suggested.

Mr. BARR. Would my hon. friend suggest that foreigners and others coming in should have the right to vote immediately on arriving there?

Mr. GREENWAY. I was not talking about foreigners, I was talking about British subjects, about citizens of Ontario. I take the position, and I think I am correct in taking it, that we have no provision for making a list for the constituencies of the House of Commons in Manitoba, so that if I am correct and I think I am, my hon. friend will see upon reflection that there is not such a provision as he quoted this afternoon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is the same provision in Manitoba as elsewhere. The Franchise Act provides that the provincial lists in all the provinces shall be taken.

Mr. GREENWAY. If my hon. friend puts the construction he does upon the law he read to us this afternoon, and as a lawyer he ought to be capable of construing it, why was it that we had those prosecutions in the province of Manitoba?

Mr. PATERSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. GREENWAY. Why was it that the Attorney General of Manitoba prosecuted the returning officers for doing what they might have done, according to my hon. friend, under the law? It would be well for my hon. friend to answer that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would refer my hon. friend to the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Rex vs. Duggan, which set forth very distinctly what the difficulty was.

Mr. GREENWAY. I was very much pleased with my hon. friend in the first part of his remarks. It did me good to hear my hon. friend say: I do not propose to discuss the red line. That is a subject out of which my hon. friends since the year 1904, have tried to make more capital than anything else I know of, and for that reason, because my hon. friend would not discuss it, I propose to say something about it before I sit down.

I was referring to my hon. friend's speech in reference to the right hon. the leader of the government and other Liberals who took the ground in 1885 that it was proper to have the provincial franchise. I presume that my hon. friend believes that to-day, but he does not find the machinery by which he can do it. There is no machinery by which he can do it, and I defy my hon. friend or any one who supports him to take the lists we have in Manitoba and compile from them a correct list for any Dominion constituency. The voters upon the list are not sufficiently designated to enable that to be done. My hon. friend asked this afternoon with a good deal of gusto why were men disfranchised? I will tell my hon. friend why they were disfranchised. It is because they had no opportunity to get on the list. I have here the proclamation to which my hon. friend refers in which the government of Manitoba undertake to show they are going to deal very fairly with the people and to give them a little more time than formerly for registration. But what are the facts? Here it is under date April the 25th. They provide a registration booth for the class of people they don't want to give an opportunity to of getting registered, and if they do register they compel them to travel 100 miles. That is what my hon. friend calls a square deal.

Mr. STAPLES. Would the hon. gentleman say where, in this registration that is to take place in the near future, a man will have, in one instance at least, to travel 100 miles to register?

Mr. GREENWAY. In Selkirk, and my hon. friend who represents that constituency will verify what I say.

Mr. STAPLES. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong.

Mr. GREENWAY. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Staples) will continue asking questions; he asked me this afternoon about the registration clerk coming to a district and spending two hours for the purpose of revised the list. I knew what I was talking about, I lived in Crystal city where it was done. The Minister of Justice spoke about registration districts, but in those days there was nothing else although we were asked to make a voters' list upon the polling subdivisions which the government had made. I have the evidence of that right here too. Let us have another sample of the fair play of these gentlemen, and here it is on their own record. In the large local division of Springfield, situated in the constituency of Selkirk, they have a very large amount of business to do if they make a correct list because there are a large number of foreigners—to whom my hon. friend has referred—who are not on the list, and so far as the Manitoba government is concerned they are very anxious they should not be on the list. In this district of Springfield they have a number of places for the registration clerk to meet, and the last place he meets is at Springfield on the 6th day of June and the court of revision for the whole district—to be wholly completed in one afternoon—is held on the 12th of June. Let me say another word about a square deal. In the old days when we prepared a list we got it printed, we sent it to the school houses and the post offices and the other places designated in the Act, thus giving the people an opportunity to see whether some were omitted, or voters that should be on. We gave thirty days for that. But now we have a registration clerk, he goes to the office and he does his work there, he is supposed by law to make a list of what he has done, and when he goes outside the door he tacks the list on the door and that is all the notice you get. That is what the hon. gentleman calls a square deal. Then, if you are going to complain of any one who is on the list you are supposed to furnish the registration clerk with his name and post office address and that complaint is to be sent by registered letter to the person complained of. I have here a list of the local constituency of Mountain and upon that list there are 2,194 names and of that number 1,459 have no post office address. The gentleman who complains comes before the judge and he is asked: to what place was the notice sent containing the complaint; because the judges are very particular and some of us knew how difficult it is to take a name from the list unless we have conclusive evidence. He answers the judge: I gave the registration clerk notice that the complaint should be sent to such a post office, and I think that is the right address. Then he is asked if he knows it is right, and if he tells the truth the complainant has got to say that he does not know. My hon. friend was kind enough to remind me of something else and that is that although I have looked over a large number of the lists for the province of Manitoba there was only one so far found where the post offices are given. The hon. gentleman said that this Manitoba government which takes such care of the voters was good enough upon one occasion to solemnly pass an Act of parliament to place certain individuals upon the list in order that they might vote. Well, I have that Act here. An election was coming on and I suppose somebody suggested that perhaps they were going to be shy a few votes in that district, and they had better make a few. Now, this was a premeditated mode of doing business and I am going to show how they made the voters. I am told in reference to this, but I do not know as to the truth of it, that the registration clerk had omitted to put 25 names on the list, but there are not 25 mentioned in this Act of the legislature. The Act reads:

Now therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the legislative assembly of Manitoba, enacts as follows:

1. The names of Eugene Derby, Thomas Smolok, John Craigie, Hanson A. Larson, John George Thomas, Petro Kosar and Frederick Orvis are hereby added to the list of electors for said polling subdivision No. 13 of the electoral division of Kildonan and St. Andrews.

And the names were added with no address or designation of any kind, and somebody went to try and find them and they could not, and the only time they had ever been seen was upon polling day, so I am told. Will my hon. friend say that it is right to put names on the list without any designation whatever, as to where they are to be found, or where they can be complained of, or where they can be canvassed if somebody wanted to canvass them? That is what my hon. friends, I presume, would call a square deal.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman say that the names were not entitled to go on the list?

Mr. GREENWAY. I do not know. I am not going to give the hon. gentleman anything but what I can verify unless I qualify it with the statement I have made just now. I do not know that it is worth while dwelling upon the list, for, after all, that is not the question. If the list were what it ought to be or what it might have been, if these gentlemen had undertaken to do what they might have done, and that was to make the polling subdivisions coterminous with the boundaries of the electoral divisions for the House of Commons, there would be no need of this. But I say again, I defy any man to take the list and go over it, and from that list, with the information upon it, put the voter in his proper place. If you have to find out from other sources, you must have the means of taking evidence.

I will give my hon. friend another reason why people are disfranchised. The revising officers are by this proclamation and by the law designated for certain points. The longest they sit at any one point is from eleven o'clock to six. Where the hours are not specified, according to this proclamation they sit from one to six, for the revision of the list for a whole local constituency. During the time of the revision of 1904 one of the revisers came to a point where the country was divided, and it was represented to him that there were a number of voters at a certain point who ought to get the opportunity to go upon the list. He adjourned the court that day, and called it the next day at the point named, and there put 38 names upon the list. Then what happened? When the list came into the department, those hon. gentlemen who want to be so very fair tore the names out of the book. There was no red line nonsense about that.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Would the hon. member for Lisgar be fair enough to state that Judge Walker, the chairman of the registration board, reported to the government that this officer had held a court of revision illegally, after his certificate had expired.

Mr. GREENWAY. I am not talking about the legality of it; I am talking about what was done. If there was a law that would allow a man to commit an outrage like that, the law ought to be changed. Now, Sir, what about this list? The body of the list was made in 1903; it is a five-year-old list; and I am somewhat like my hon. friend the leader of the opposition —I do not know how he is going to weed it out. The little things that have occurred since then have been merely revisions, and notice is now given in this proclamation that it is not necessary for those on the list to appear at the court of registration. It is simply necessary to revise the list.

Now, I want to say a word about all this talk that has taken place with regard to the thin red line. My hon. friend, though he does not like to discuss it, does not let it come near him unless he has a slap at Mr. Leach. My hon. friend from North Toronto, who is not at present in his seat, shouted: A man appointed to distribute the seed grain in the west who disfranchised thousands upon thousands.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. STAPLES. What salary did he draw last year?

Mr. GREENWAY. I want to say this, that if my hon. friend knew Mr. Leach as well as I do——

An hon. MEMBER. Did you recommend him?

Mr. GREENWAY. No, I did not. He did not need any recommendation from me. He is a good, respectable citizen of Manitoba, who is incapable of doing the things they alleged, and what happened? In all their prosecution or persecution of him did they show that he disfranchised anybody?

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. They dropped him.

Mr. GREENWAY. Yes, they dropped him, because they did not have anything against him. Now, I think perhaps I have said enough about the list; the less said about it the better, so far as its character is concerned. As I said before, that is not the trouble. If we had the means of preparing a list for the constituencies of Manitoba from the local list, with the information which we have there, then I would say that the argument which my hon. friend has laboured so long at might have some force in it; but we have not, and we have to make some provision for it.

Mr. SPROULE. If that be correct, does it not indicate the need of a Dominion franchise and Dominion machinery to compile the list?

Mr. GREENWAY. I would hail it with pleasure, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SPROULE. Then why did they repeal the one we had?

Mr. GREENWAY. What has that to do with the subject we are discussing? If somebody believed something ten years ago and changed his mind, does that upset everything? My hon. friends opposite must have changed, because now they are arguing against what they argued for in 1885. So that we have all been changing, I hope for the better.

Now, Sir, we have had various exhibitions with regard to this thin-red-line business. We had a gentleman in the legislature of Manitoba saying this:

> Mr. Speaker, I say there is not a man, either in this House or outside of it, who would venture to undertake to defend the appalling, the outrageous conduct of the employees of the Dominion government with respect to the manner in which some 9,000 of the best citizens of this country were deprived of their liberty and franchise previous to the last general election.

I suppose I hardly need tell who it was said that. It was the great author of this scandal. 9,000 people were deprived of their franchise. He got down to particulars, and so, when Mr. Leach was appointed by this government to look after the distribution of seed grain, the Montreal 'Gazette,' a leading paper—a respectable but a misled paper, so far as that was concerned—came out with this comment. Here is a man, it said, appointed to distribute seed grain for the western provinces who disfranchised, because of their Conservative leanings, 1,131 in Lisgar, 1,395 in Portage la Prairie, and 1,406 in Selkirk. Well, I stand here in my place and say that there is not one word of truth in that statement. I have lived in Lisgar, formerly called Selkirk, for nearly thirty years. I know nearly every man in it, and when I heard of this having taken place during the election of 1904, I took care to find out exactly how many people had been left off the lists in my constituency. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) gave the number to the House this afternoon. There were six Liberals left off—by mistake, I presume—and there were three Conservatives who had been misplaced, and consequently had to go to another division to vote. That is the sum and substance of the whole thing, so far as Lisgar is concerned. Do you suppose that if there had been twenty men in Lisgar, prominent citizens, who ought to have their votes—because Lisgar is an old place, there are not many foreigners who go into it, and there is not much change in the people, so that the vote remains about the same—do you suppose that I would not have heard of it and found these men grumbling at being deprived of their vote? And yet we have this veracious newspaper saying that 1,131 had been disfranchised in Lisgar. In connection with this, my hon. friend, who is the chief exponent of this outrage, undertook to particularize.

An hon. MEMBER. Who made that statement in the House?

Mr. GREENWAY. I shall tell you in a few minutes. I want to keep you thinking awhile. I thought possibly some gentleman might have suggested the name, but this same gentleman, on another occasion, made a speech in which he undertook to particularize. I have got his name written on the top of this sheet in red ink. The first letter of his name is Rogers. He went to the constituency of my hon. friend who feels very nervous on this red line business, and he made a speech to explain how this disfranchisement had been done and how it had affected the different local constituencies—because it was a local matter—in that district. He selected Hamiota and he said, giving the numbers of polls from No. 1 to 9, that 777 voters had been disfranchised in Hamiota because they were Conservatives. Well, as a matter of fact, there never was polled in Hamiota any more than 740 altogether. He had disfranchised more Conservatives than were there, by 40 nearly. Let me say this to my hon. friends in all good spirit. I would like, as a sort of climax to this thing, if they would furnish me with the names of fifty people—my hon. friend said 100, and I think I said 100, when I first spoke on the subject, but I have reason to believe that is entirely too much—but I challenge my hon. friends to furnish me with the names of fifty people who were disfranchised in Manitoba by having their names dropped off the lists.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman give us the names of fifty who should be on the list and were not ?

Mr. GREENWAY. In my constituency?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In all Manitoba.

Mr. GREENWAY. I am asking my hon. friend who complained that names were struck off, to give me the names of fifty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am asking the hon. gentleman to give me the names of those who were left off the Manitoba lists who should be on. Does he say that any names were improperly left off?

Mr. GREENWAY. I do.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who are they?

Mr. GREENWAY. I say there are a good many. I say it is the most imperfect list we ever had for another reason, because there are many names on the list that ought to be off.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman give us the names?

Mr. GREENWAY. I can give the names right in my own neighbourhood. I can mark them right on this list which I have in my hand, and my hon. friend can see them if he wants to. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) said something this afternoon about the committee of which I had the honour of being a member and of which he was chairman. What was the sum and substance of the whole thing? Chief Justice Howell was on the one side and Mr. Knott on the other, and when we got through we discovered that two men had been left off the list. One was named Johnson; I forget the name of the other. I suppose we shall have to get the names, but they can be got from the evidence. One was left off because of some doubt about his residence, as to whether it was in Winnipeg or in the constituency of Macdonald. That was all the direct evidence we got. If there had been any considerable number disfranchised, why were not witnesses brought here to prove it? As the expenses of the witnesses were paid, it would have been easy to get them. I took occasion to say in this House in 1905, as I say now, that we had no Dominion lists. In order to show that we had none, I sent over to the King's Printer and asked him to send me the voters' lists for the constituency of Lisgar. What did I get? I got a list containing 7,334 names. There were over 4,000 belonging to Lisgar, and the balance of 3,000 had to be distributed between Provencher, Macdonald and Souris. Somebody had to do the distributing, and Mr. Knott told us, in his evidence, that he did not see any other way it could be done than the way it was. Now, I say that there is no local provision for doing this.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Apart from the question of distribution, was there anything wrong with the list?

Mr. GREENWAY. Not that I know of. I am not sure about that. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was kind enough last session to pay me a little attention. He said that I would not have been elected for Lisgar had it not been for the 'thin red line.' I took the trouble to look up the figures so as to make a comparison which would enable the House to judge how far the hon. gentleman was correct in saying that. Lisgar is a pretty well established place, and one in which there are not many changes. In the local election of 1907, when our friends of the provincial government had the compilation of lists in their own hands, doing it at their own sweet will—and some of us know what that means—there were something over 3,200 votes polled as against 3,134 for the Dominion in the election of 1904. Now, in that election and on that voters' list I had a majority of 180. But in the provincial election in which, as I have shown, there were about 100 more votes polled in what constitutes Lisgar, three out of the four local members who represent that district three were Liberals and the Liberal majority was 184. That shows that there was not very much the matter with Lisgar. Or, take another illustration: The vote polled in the whole province of Manitoba in the Dominion election of 1904—estimating Dauphin at what it had been before—was 51,988, and in the local election of 1903 it was 52,232, or a difference of 244. I am sure hon. members will understand that in a local contest where you have forty-two constituencies and eighty-four organizations you are likely to accomplish more in polling votes than when you have only twenty organizations. Or, let us come down to the election of last year. In the local election of last year the vote polled was 60,593. But the increase was all, or nearly all, attributable to Winnipeg, which, in 1903, had a polled vote of 9,630 and in 1907 of 17,324, an increase of 7,694. Deduct this increase in Winnipeg from the total vote polled in the province and you have left 52,899, as against 51,998 in the Dominion elections, a difference of only 911.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. In three years.

Mr. GREENWAY. And I say, in defence of my province, that Manitoba is not increasing very rapidly in population for the reason that a great many of our young men are going to our western provinces to get free land.

Mr. SPROULE. That would account for the small increase in the vote in that time.

Mr. GREENWAY. That is exactly what I say.

Mr. SPROULE. Take, for instance, the case of Ontario. The newspapers a few days ago said that over 5,000 residents of Ontario have left for the west. Our lists must be decreased in proportion as these who are leaving us are voters. If young men are leaving Manitoba for the west, it would be necessary to accept the same condition of things as in Ontario.

Mr. GREENWAY. I am pointing out that the great increase outside of Winnipeg is in the western provinces. Now, Winnipeg is going to be a very large city, for it is the distributing point not only for Manitoba, but for the western provinces as well. You can see what it did in the way of votes—17,000 as against 9,000 three years before. And then hon. gentlemen opposite will go out and we shall hear them expounding the iniquity of the 'thin red line.' But, Mr. Speaker, I am impressed with the idea that this is a sample of the political capital which these gentlemen try to make. But their percentage of accomplishment is small. What they have accomplished in their exposures is not at all alarming.

Now, I just want to say that I am in hearty sympathy with the proposition that we should have a fair list in the province of Manitoba, and if my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) can find any way in the law which governs the compilation of the lists by which he can increase the length of time necessary or make more registration places he should do so. I do not suppose we are confined to time—you can make the time longer in order to make it right. But I would like to see a law adopted to enable those authorized to deal with the matter to compile a fair list, and, to use the words of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), 'give everybody a square deal.'

Mr. GEO. O. ALCORN (Prince Edward). The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) has emulated the Minister of Justice this afternoon and has made a stump speech—the same stump speech that he gave us in 1905. I am a little curious to know upon what sections of the Bill we are supposed to be discussing the hon. gentleman thinks he has thrown any light. He did not through the entire length of his speech by one syllable refer to any section of this Bill. Probably the best answer which could be made to his speech would be to read to him and the House when the proper time comes the salient parts of the Manitoba Election Act of which he appears to be entirely ignorant. This same gentleman (Greenway) was for twelve years premier of the province of Manitoba. He attacks the Election Act of his province very viciously, without saying anything about the Bill now under consideration.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, if that Act is so very bad that it left the province over which he presided for twelve years in such a mixed condition as to its election law, he himself must be largely to blame. The hon. gentleman then spent a good deal of time in showing from various lists relating to his constituency how it was that he came to be elected to this House. No doubt that is a curious fact and one which requires some explanation. Reverting to the Bill now before the House, it appears to me that foremost amongst the matters of principle with which that Bill deals, and proposes to make law, are the following four. By section 1, the principle is introduced that in all cases of Dominion elections in unorganized Ontario and Quebec and in Manitoba and British Columbia there should be new Dominion voters' lists made up by new Dominion officials, after the issue of writs for an election, distinct from the provincial lists. That is the principle of the first section. Then by section 13 we have introduced the principle of numbered ballots, a principle which finds no place in the Act as it now stands. The introduction of that principle in the cases to which it applies will effect the destruction of the secrecy of the ballot, and in my opinion will open the door for a great deal of corruption. The third principle is introduced by section 17, and is one which we can easily understand. That section deals with the marks which may be placed upon ballots by deputy returning officers. I have simply to observe here that the principle sought to be introduced by that section is the absolute and total destruction of the secrecy of the ballot. Surely,

Mr. Speaker, it is an extraordinary spectacle to see the Minister of Justice of a Reform administration from his place in parliament proposing to cast aside that principle for which the Reform party in former years stood so firmly. Then we have the fourth principle introduced by section 28, which appears to me to be simply legalizing acts of corruption. I propose to say a few words regarding each one of these four points. The first matter to be considered by the House is whether it is necessary or excusable that new lists should be prepared, regard being had to the provincial and federal law as it now stands, or from any other than a mere party view. It seems to me that the best method to prevent all doubt and to enable the House to come to a definite conclusion is to examine the law that we now have on the statute-book. And first, with regard to the unorganized districts of Ontario; I will not speak of Quebec, because that province will be dealt with by other gentlemen. I refer the House to section 6 of the Dominion Elections Act, which treats of lists that are to be used for Dominion purposes.

For the purposes of any Dominion election held within the limits of a province, the voters' lists shall, except as herein otherwise provided, be those prepared for the several polling divisions established, and which, on the sixtieth day next preceding the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election, were in force, or were last in force, under the laws of that province, for the purposes of provincial elections.

Now, dealing with that part of this Act which refers to unorganized territory, we find the law is found in sections 7, 8 and 9. Section 7 reads :

Where, under the laws of a province, the voters' lists for any provincial electoral district or division, or any of them, are prepared, not at regular intervals, but at such times as are fixed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council or some other provincial or local authority, or only from time to time for the purpose of a general or other election in immediate contemplation, the last preceding voters' lists so prepared shall be used for the purpose of any Dominion election in the territory comprised in such provincial electoral district or division, or the parts thereof for use in which they were prepared, if such lists have been prepared not more than one year before the date of the writ for such Dominion election.

Under this and succeeding sections this government has already power to make a separate and distinct Dominion list in the unorganized district of any province, provided that the provincial lists prepared under the section I have just read are more than a year old ; where they are not more than a year old, the provincial lists are to be taken. Now, under the proposed Bill, in every case, without regard to the age of the provincial lists, and without regard to provincial lists at all, new Dominion lists will be made. I may say in passing that Ontario and Quebec are no doubt selected for the operations of this clause very largely in view of the fact that the National Transcontinental Railway will be and is now in course of construction through those two provinces, and that in the wilds of the north this government will find it no doubt very convenient to have lists prepared containing the names of the foreigners and transient workmen who will be engaged on that work, men who will disappear in a short time and can no longer be traced. No doubt full advantage will be taken of their presence and they will be put upon the lists. The lists in the unorganized territories of Ontario are made annually. Formerly they were not made at stated periods, and at one time they were made every two years. By the Act of last session lists are made annually, and, therefore, there is no excuse for this government taking into their hands the preparation of new lists, because they already have at hand the lists made annually, exactly the same as in organized Ontario. Now, let us see how these lists are made as prescribed by the revised statutes of Ontario, chapter 7, section 61 and succeeding sections. I think the House should have an idea of how those lists are made. Section 61 says :

Voters' lists for unorganized territory, where there are no assessment rolls, shall be prepared annually by the sheriff of the electoral district or such part thereof over which he has jurisdiction as sheriff.

62. In case there is no sheriff for the district, or in case there is a part over which a sheriff has no jurisdiction, the duties by this part assigned to a sheriff shall, as to such district or part, be performed by a police magistrate, having jurisdiction as such in some part of the electoral district, or by the senior police magistrate, if there are more police magistrates than one, in the electoral district.

63. So soon after the first day of June in each year as may be convenient, the officer whose duty it is to prepare a list of voters under this part shall cause to be posted in a conspicuous manner throughout those parts of the electoral districts which consist of unorganized territory where there are no assessment rolls, at every public and separate school house, and at every statutory polling place, and at every other place at which a poll was held at the last election to the legislative assembly, a copy of this part of this Act and one or more printed notices in accordance with form 23 appended to this Act; and the said officer shall attend at the time and place mentioned in the said notice.

That form 23 is to this effect :

Take notice that (here insert the name of the sheriff or police magistrate, as the case may be) will be in attendance at (here insert the place) from ten o'clock in the forenoon to four o'clock in the afternoon on the days of 18 , to enroll the names of all persons qualified to vote for members of the legislative assembly.

Appeals with respect to the omission of voters or the improper enrolment of any alleged voter, or as to any error made by the sheriff or police magistrate as to the place at which a voter may vote, may be made to (here insert the name of the stipendiary magistrate or district judge, as the case may be).

Signed by the sheriff or police magistrate.

So the public have express notice of the date at which that officer will be at a certain place and the hours during which he will be there to receive applications for the insertion of names on the list, and they also have notice of the time and place at which an appeal from that list may be heard.

Save as otherwise provided by this part, the sheriff or the police magistrate shall perform the duties assigned to the clerks of municipalities, the court of revision and the judge elsewhere in the province, and the forms and notices as well as other proceedings generally shall, unless otherwise provided by this part, be the same, as nearly as may be, and be taken at and within the same times and with the same effect as in the case of the voters' lists elsewhere in the province as aforesaid.

The effect of that is that every man who has a right to the franchise is dealt with either by way of application to be placed on the list or to strike his name from the list, and every man who is dissatisfied with the decision of the sheriff or police magistrate has a right to appeal to a judge to decide his particular case and to appear personally and be heard upon that application. Section 65 provides :

Not less than 30 days after the posting of such notices the sheriff or magistrate shall personally or by deputies appointed by himself, visit every part of the territory where there is by law required to be a polling place or where a poll was held by order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council at the next previous election to the legislative assembly and shall by all convenient means available endeavour to ascertain the names of all the persons who are entitled to have their names inserted in such lists.

So there are thirty days during which the lists shall be gathered and during which the public have the right to go forward and have their names placed upon that list. By section 66 :

The sheriff or magistrate shall assign to each polling place the voters for whom such polling place may appear to him to be most convenient.

Section 67 provides :

The sheriff or police magistrate . . . shall on the completion of the voters' lists . . . attach thereto an affidavit or solemn declaration to be taken or made before the district or county judge or stipendiary magistrate in the form following:

I (name and title) make oath and say that I have set down in the above voters' lists for the electoral district of according to the best of my information and judgment, the name of every person entitled to be entered thereon, and that I have not intentionally omitted from the said list the name of any person whom I knew or had good reason to believe was or is entitled to be entered thereon, and further say that I have to the best of my knowledge and belief discharged the duties required of me by the Ontario Voters' Lists Act.

So that here we have not only all the safeguards I have pointed out thrown around the right of every man to have his name on the list, but we have the list verified by the affidavit of the officer who made it.

Then comes the provision for an appeal :

There shall be an appeal to the stipendiary magistrate having jurisdiction in the locality to the district or county judge in the same manner as an appeal lies from the court of revision to the county judge elsewhere in the province, and the stipendiary magistrate or judge is to attend to hear any such appeals at such places in the electoral district as may be reasonably convenient for the parties concerned, and is to give due notice thereof as the case may require.

2. Any voter may appeal to a stipendiary magistrate or district or county court judge with respect to the polling place at which his name is entered as a voter as well as in regard to any other matter or thing for which appeals are allowed under this Act.

So that in making these lists for the unorganized territories there is this additional safeguard which is not allowed even in organized Ontario :

Appeals shall be heard by the stipendiary magistrate, district or county judge, as the case may be, at all places in the unorganized portion of the electoral district at which appeals are heard under the Electoral Franchise Act of the Dominion of Canada or at which sittings of the division court are held and at such other places as in the opinion of the stipendiary magistrate, district or county court judge, as the case may be, may be considered necessary. At least 30 days' notice for the hearing of such appeals shall be given by publication in any newspaper published in the district and by poster.

Thus hon. gentlemen will see that there is a delay of at least sixty days required by the section which I have read.

Proceedings upon and in respect to such appeals shall be, as nearly as may be, the same as upon appeals under part I of this Act.

That is in organized Ontario.

And the officer hearing the appeal shall have the same authority as a judge hearing an appeal under part one aforesaid.

Section 70 provides :

pared, or appeals heard and determined shall forthwith after the said period of 30 days or forthwith after the determination of such appeals, deposit in the offices of the sheriff, the stipendiary magistrate, the police magistrate and the clerk of the peace, respectively, a certified copy of such list.

So that there are four public offices in which this list is open and available to the public.

That is the procedure laid down by the statute with regard to the compilation and revision and bringing into force of lists in unorganized Ontario, and I would submit to the House whether they can see any flaw in those proceedings, whether they be not eminently fair, impartial and effective.

The first clause of the Bill before the House provides that separate lists shall be prepared after the issue of the writ for any election and that the Governor in Council shall also have the right to order such lists to be made at any time. Now would this be possible in the case of unorganized Ontario? The time required to post the notices would be say, ten days. The sheriff could not very well occupy less than ten days in driving all over one of these northern constituencies and putting up the notice at the various places indicated by the statutes. The notice to be given of making the lists is thirty days. The notice of appeal is also thirty days and the time occupied in hearing the appeal and correction and deposit of the list is five days, making a period of seventy-five days. By section 86 of the Dominion Act the returning officer is to post up his proclamation within eight days after it is received. It is to remain up eight days, and seven days after that the polling takes place, so it might be that an election might be called on within twenty-three days from the time the returning officer receives his writ. But here in unorganized Ontario we have a period of seventy-five days which, if this provincial Act is carried into effect, and observed, would be occupied in making the list alone. This government made a list in unorganized Ontario, I think, on one occasion only, in 1904. We have had that experience, and I think the House will be told how and in what manner that compilation and revision took place. It is perfectly evident from the figures I have given, that it is absolutely impossible to observe the provincial law in unorganized Ontario in the making of the list. There is no intention, I am convinced in my own mind, on the part of the government that the law shall be observed. It has not been in the past and would not be if this section was adopted. What we have had in the past is just what we may expect in the future with certainty under this Bill.

As to Manitoba I propose, as shortly as possible, to give the House an epitome of the Act, so that they may judge intelligently of its quality and whether it is such a very bad and ineffective Act as the hon. member who has just taken his seat would lead the House to believe. I have here a copy of the Act issued by the King's Printer of Manitoba, and embodying various amendments of the law, up to and including the year 1906. Any person may be registered who—

(a) Is of the male sex.
(b) Is of the full age of twenty-one years.
(c) Is a British subject by birth or naturalization; and
(e) Provided, however, that any person otherwise qualified who is at the said date a resident of and domiciled within said electoral division, and who has been a resident of and domiciled within the province for one year, immediately prior to said date, but who has not been a resident of and domiciled within said electoral division for three months immediately prior to said date, shall be entitled to be registered as an elector for the electoral division of and within which he was last a resident and domiciled for three months during the said period of one year.

That is a much more liberal provision than we have ever had in Ontario. In Ontario a man must be resident in Canada for a year and until the session of the legislature before the last, within Ontario for a year, and he must have been resident during the last preceding three months in the municipality in which he applies to be put on. In Manitoba, when a man has been resident for three months in any electoral district, and for a year in the province, he can get upon the list:

Any person, if otherwise qualified, becoming a natrualized British subject, or of the full age of twenty-one years, at any time up to and inclusive of the last day fixed in an electoral division for the revision of the lists of electors shall be entitled to be registered as an elector.

These are certainly very liberal provisions. Now in regard to the making of the lists, it has been questioned during this debate whether these lists were or were not made annually. The law distinctly provides they must be made annually:

Annually on or before the first day of May, the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall, by order in council authorize the issuing of a proclamation (form 1 in the schedule to this Act) setting forth:—
1. That it has been determined to add to, correct and revise the list of electors;
2. The names and post office addresses of the persons appointed by such order in council to act as registration clerks in the respective electoral divisions of the province, for such purposes;
3. The date or dates on, the place or places at and the hours between which applications for registration and the correction and striking off of names of electors will be received and shall be concluded in each electoral division;

4. The date or dates on, the place or places at, and the hours between which courts of revision will be held in the several electoral divisions of the province to consider and decide such applications, and to receive further applications of others to have their names added to the list of electors.

This again is a more liberal provision than we have in Ontario. The judge in Ontario upon revision is powerless to put the name of a single applicant upon the list unless it comes regularly by way of appeal; in the first place, he cannot proceed with an application in court as apparently can be done in Manitoba:

That only such persons as shall possess the qualifications to be registered electors under the provisions of this Act, and whose names do not appear on the list of electors, need attend and apply to be registered as electors at the registration sittings of courts of revision.

This provides that all those who are already on the list and who are not objected to shall remain upon the list, which is extremely liberal, and it compares very favourably in that respect with the making of the list in Ontario:

Provided that at least five days shall elapse between the last day fixed in each electoral division for the sittings of registration clerks and the fixed days of sittings of courts of revision in each electoral division.

23. It shall be the duty of the provincial secretary, forthwith after the issuing of the proclamation hereinbefore provided, to publish the same in the 'Manitoba Gazette' and to cause to be published a notice, containing the information contained in such proclamation, in a newspaper published in each of the several electoral divisions in the province, or, if there be no newspaper published in any of such electoral divisions, then in a newspaper which has a circulation in such electoral division; and to have printed in poster form a sufficient number of copies of such notice as shall be adequate, to post up one of such posters in a conspicuous place in each of the polling divisions established and maintained at the last previous election held in the respective electoral divisions and at the place or places named in the proclamation at which applications for the registration of electors and for the correction of names and for striking off of names of electors from the list of electors will be received.

So that there is the most ample provision made for giving the utmost publicity to every step in the compilation of those lists:

A registration clerk appointed under the provisions herein contained shall either be a qualified resident elector for the electoral division for which he has been appointed such registration clerk, or be possessed of the qualifications entitling him to be registered an elector of the electoral division for which he has been appointed registration clerk (form of commission of registration clerk, form No. 2 of said schedule).

Every registration clerk shall forthwith, after receiving notice of his appointment take and subscribe to the oath prescribed in form 3 of said schedule of this Act and shall with all convenient despatch thereafter post up or cause to be posted up in the electoral division to which his appointment is applicable, one copy of the poster notice hereinbefore referred to in the manner and at each of the places hereinbefore provided; and a copy of the list of electors for each polling subdivision shall be posted in the respective polling subdivisions, and a complete list of electors for the electoral division shall be posted at the office of the registration clerk.

A further section provides:

Every registration clerk appointed for an electoral division shall sit and attend in the said electoral division at the time or times, place or places and between the hours provided in the proclamation hereinbefore mentioned, and shall at such time or times, place or places and between the hours so fixed, receive the applications of all persons presenting themselves to be registered as electors of the electoral division for which he acts as registration clerk whose names do not appear on the list of electors for such electoral division, and also the applications of any person or persons who desire to have any name or names appearing on any such list struck off therefrom, on the ground that such name or names improperly or wrongfully appear thereupon according to the provisions of this Act relating to the qualification or disqualification of electors and the application of all others who desire corrections to be made in any name or names appearing on said list.

This disposes of a good deal which was said by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) with regard to the time these registration clerks are to sit. Here is a provision of law saying that the proclamation fixes that time and they are bound to sit during the time named in the proclamation:

Registration clerks shall receive all applications of electors applying in person to be registered electors by means of interrogatories and statutory declaration, as shown in form No. 4 of said schedule of this Act, and of persons unable to attend to make application to be registered, as aforesaid by reason of any of the causes hereinafter set forth in this Act, by means of interrogatories and statutory declaration, as shown in form No 5 of said schedule of this Act.

To any person not accustomed to this method of registration it is almost a curiosity. The statute provides in parallel columns a series of interrogatories which are to be answered in detail by every elector presenting himself for the privilege of registration. The registration clerk puts the interrogatory and the answer is written opposite the interrogatory in each instance. The full particulars with regard to every case are thus kept a strict record of and it is sworn to by the elector and signed by him:

In a book to be provided for the purpose, as hereinafter mentioned, which shall be called

'The Registration Register' and be as in form No 6 of said schedule of this Act, the registration clerk for the electoral division for which he acts or has been appointed, shall enter the names, residences, occupations and post office addresses of all persons applying to be registered as electors in or for such electoral division and the names, residences, occupations and post office addresses of all persons whose names and applications have been filed with him, as hereinafter provided, to have struck off the list of electors, and similar information as to all such applicants.

The registration clerk before registering the name of any applicant for registration in the registration register, shall fill up from the statements of the applicant the blanks contained in the form of interrogatories, and shall also fill up and administer to the applicant the form of statutory declaration at the foot thereof after the applicant has signed the same.

We have had instances cited here to-day, and the newspapers have been teeming with instances of want of observation of matters of form consequent upon which many electors have been disfranchised. As will subsequently appear both political parties and all applicants have the right to be present at these proceedings before the registration clerk to see that he performs the functions which are laid down in the Act. If that has not been done it is as much the fault of the political representative present for the purpose of seeing that the law was observed as of any one else. There is also the fullest opportunity given in the Act for those who are sick or absent to become registered voters.

Section 40 says:

Any qualified elector may, on his behalf or on behalf of any other person or persons, file with the registration clerk, an application or applications to strike off the name or names of any person or persons from the said list, for want of qualification, death or removal, or upon any ground as would disqualify such person or persons from having his or their names retained on such list.

So that every possible step is provided for in the fullest possible manner.

During or at the conclusion of the registration sittings, the registration clerk shall by registered letter, notify, or cause to be notified, each person against whom application has been made to strike off his name from the list of electors, stating the grounds of such application, and the date or dates on, the time or times when, and the place or places at which the court of revision for the electoral division to which the application relates or refers will sit.

Here we have personal notice given to every man whose name is to be dealt with at the court of revision, sent him through the post by registered letter. Here is a provision that is not contained in the law of Ontario.

Any person who shall have changed his residence from a place in one electoral division to a place in another electoral division, shall be entitled to make application to be registered an elector in and for the electoral division in which he resides, upon filing with the registration clerk a written request——

In the form which is given.

All such requests received by and filed with the registration clerk shall be transmitted to the revising officer, and it shall be the duty of the revising officer to strike off such names without investigation or inquiry.

In the event of any manifest clerical error being evident in the description of the boundaries of any registration district or polling sub-division, the revising officer may correct the same and apportion and divide the names of electors therein according to said corrected description.

This is in addition to the provision to which attention was called this afternoon, under which a judge has the right to make the allotment of names where there is a division of a provincial polling division. There is a further section to this effect:

The registration clerk shall receive all applications of electors for registration, striking off names of electors, and for the correction of names on the list, who are present for that purpose at the time fixed for the conclusion of the registration sittings, notwithstanding that such applications are, in point of fact, received by the registration clerk after the hour of closing the registration sittings aforesaid.

It has been said that these registration clerks are remiss in their duties, and that in consequence people have lost their franchise. Here is a provision which any person can set in motion by applying to the law officers:

Any registration clerk who shall wilfully refuse or neglect to make out any list of electors, or who shall wilfully neglect to insert in the registration register the application of any person who claims to be entitled to be an elector and shall have complied with all the provisions of this Act necessary to entitle the application of such person to be received and entered in the registration register, or who shall wilfully and without reasonable cause insert in any such registration register the name of any person not having applied for registration, or the name of any person against whom no application shall have been filed to strike off from the list, or the name of any person not having so applied, or who shall wilfully neglect to publish any notice, post any lists, or decline to give access to a copy of same to persons entitled thereto, or who shall wilfully refuse or neglect to make the return and deliver or transmit the books and documents to the revising officers, as required by this Act, or who is guilty of any other wilful misfeasance or malfeasance or wilful act of omission or commission in contravention of the duties of his office, shall for every such offence be liable, upon summary conviction before a police magistrate or two or more justices of the peace, to a penalty not exceeding two hundred dollars and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months.

Then, by section 48 it is provided:

The following persons shall be entitled to be present at sittings of the registration clerks: the candidate or candidates of the last election; any person who considers himself to be a prospective or probable candidate; any two qualified persons entitled to be registered electors representing any political organization; any person desirous of being present as a spectator; provided that no more than twelve persons, other than the persons before mentioned and officers in attendance, shall be entitled to be present at the same time.

The registration clerk shall strive as far as possible to allow the representation of all political parties in the place or places of registration to be fair and equal.

Then it is provided:

The King's Printer shall, free of cost, provide and furnish to registration clerks a sufficient number of copies of the last revised list of electors, duly certified by the clerk of the executive council.

With regard to the posting of lists we have this provision:

Within two days succeeding that on which applications for the registration and striking off names of electors from the list of electors shall have closed, each registration clerk shall prepare, in writing in duplicate, a full, complete and true list, duly certified to, of the names of all persons having applied for registration alphabetically arranged, and also a list of the names of all persons against whom applications have been filed to strike off their names from the list of electors, and he shall post one copy of both such lists in a conspicuous place and in a durable manner upon the main outside door of the place in which the registration sittings had been conducted. Certified copies of the lists shall be obtainable from the registration clerk at the rate of 40 cents for 100 names.

For the purpose of revising the list of electors in the manner hereinafter provided, the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall, either simultaneously with the issuing of the proclamation fixing the dates, places and sittings of the courts of revision, or in any event within at least ten days thereafter, authorize the issuing of a further proclamation constituting the several judges of the county courts in the province a board for the purposes hereinafter mentioned. Such board shall be designated or called 'The Board of Registration.'

Then follow the duties of that board. Then it is provided:

The board shall in the first instance be convened and hold their first sitting in the city of Winnipeg, and any subsequent sitting or sittings may be held either at the same place or at such other place or places as may be determined by the board.

On the next day succeeding the time allowed registration clerks for posting the list of applications or registrations and striking off names, each registration clerk shall transmit by registered package, or delivered to the proper revising officer appointed for the electoral division by the Board of Registration, as thereinafter provided, the registration register, all applications to strike off names of electors and to correct names incorrectly printed, all interrogatories and statutory declarations received, and all other books, papers or things in any way relating to the registration in the electoral division for or in which he has acted as registration clerk, accompanied by a certificate to the effect that the list of names of persons desirous of being added to, and of those persons whose names it is desired shall be struck off from the said list of electors, contained in the registration register, is true in substance and in fact, and contains all the names of such persons, and that the applications of persons to have names struck off the list, and of persons desiring to have names correctly inserted therein, comprise all such applications received by him.

So that the judge on revision has before him an absolutely complete return of everything that has taken place before the registration clerk; and the political agents of both parties, and a dozen spectators, if necessary, in sympathy with them, may be present to see that the registration clerk performs all his duties. With regard to revision it is provided:

The Board of Registration shall, within four days after the publication of the proclamation constituting the said board, designate or state who shall preside at the courts of revision and the persons so designated or assigned shall, in all cases, be either a member of the Board of Registration or a barrister of at least three years' standing.

It shall be the duty of the provincial secretary to notify or cause to be notified each person designated or assigned to act as revising officer the fact of his appointment, giving the name of the electoral division to which his appointment relates and the date or dates on, and the place or places, and the hours between, which the courts of revision shall sit in such electoral division, and he shall also, at the same time, forward to the revising officer a copy of the last revised list of electors relating to such electoral division, certified to by the clerk of the executive council.

And subsection 8 of section 63 provides:

Any person claiming to be entitled to be registered as elector in any electoral division may, notwithstanding the fact that he has neglected or omitted to apply for registration at any of the sittings of the registration clerk in the electoral division of which he so claims to be entitled to be registered an elector, or having applied was refused registration by the registration clerk, apply at any of the sittings of the revising officer for registration as an elector.

This is a provision not obtaining in Ontario.

No notices of application for the purposes of this subsection shall be required.

And section 72 provides:

The revising officer, at any court held by him for the revision and closing of list of electors under this Act, may, without previous notice of complaint having been given in that behalf, as hereinbefore provided, correct any mistake which shall have been proved to him to have been made by the registration clerk in the registration register in respect of name, residence, occupation or otherwise howsoever.

So that there appears to be practically no limit to the anxious care exercised to make the revision of the list absolutely perfect. Then as regards the closing of the lists, section 79 provides :

Immediately after the closing of the list, the revising judge or barrister shall:—

1. See that all names, decided by him to be struck off the said list, are in fact struck off and duly initialled by him in the manner hereinbefore provided;

2. Make a list of all names on and added by him to the list of electors, pursuant to applications made to the registration clerk, and under the provisions of this Act, appropriately divided in or between the polling subdivisions, as established in the electoral division at the last previous legislative election held in such electoral division, and shall append such list in a secure manner to the list of electors accompanied by a certificate;

3. Transmit the completed list of electors, as aforesaid, accompanied by all the lists, books, papers and documents referring to the revision, by registered package, addressed in a distinct and legible manner to the clerk of the executive council at Winnipeg.

Here is a provision cited this afternoon, to which I direct the particular attention of the House :

In the event of territory comprised within or partly comprised within an electoral division being changed and included in another electoral division, or other electoral divisions, whether newly created or not, a judge of one of the county court divisions of the province, to be nominated and appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, shall subdivide the names appearing on the list of electors, as so finally revised, according to the altered boundaries or limits, and make a complete list of electors for the electoral divisions affected, as aforesaid, and appropriately divide the names of electors and allot the territory between suitable polling subdivisions as shall in the opinion of such judge be just and equitable.

And section 81 provides :

Every list of electors revised and closed under the provisions of this Act shall be binding and conclusive and shall be subject to no appeal.

And section 82 :

All lists of electors revised and closed under the provisions of this Act shall be and shall constitute the lists of electors of the electoral divisions or division to which they refer until other lists of electors therefor shall be similarly revised and closed.

Section 83 provides :

Lists of electors shall, in any event and in all cases, be finally revised and concluded, as by this Act provided, annually, not later than the 1st day of July.

That is the Act which the hon. gentleman has designated as so faulty. It seems to me most complete and to provide for almost every conceivable contingency.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the Manitoba Act.

Mr. ALCORN. Yes. Nevertheless the Bill before the House provides that separate Dominion lists shall be prepared immediately after the issue of the writ for an election. That would eventuate in this way. Notice of registration must be posted ten days at least prior to the appointment of the registration sittings, and the period occupied by registration could not be less than six days. The interval between registration and court of revision would be six days. The time occupied by the court of revision—there are ten constituencies and six judges—would be twelve days. The printing of the lists would take six days and it would take much longer to have them printed in Ottawa. Then the lists must be printed and distributed before polling, which would take up an interval of ten days. This makes a total of fifty days, and an election might be called within twenty-three days from the time the returning officer received the writ. In Manitoba, therefore, it is obviously absolutely impossible that, if this Bill comes into force, the provincial law could be observed, because this period of delay must be consumed in compilation and revision of the lists. It appears to me that the Manitoba Act is as near perfection as any election Act could possibly be. Mr. Watson, M.P.P., has given some evidence on that point which I propose to read to the House. I take it from a report in the Winnipeg 'Free Press.' Speaking of this Manitoba Act, he said :

As first passed it was very fair, but it has been mangled out of all resemblance to the Act which Liberals in the legislature declared some years ago to be fair. . . . Even now it would not be a bad Act if it was fairly administered, but I could give you many other instances of the partisan way in which it is carried out.

That appears to be the whole of the difficulty. If the list is prepared by any set of officials not in accord with this government, it is a very bad Act and badly administered, but if the list is prepared. under the same Act, by this government's own officials, we are told the lists would be perfect. As has been observed on the other side, a great deal has been said in the press of late with regard to the first clause of the Bill now under consideration and with regard to the Manitoba Act ; and in straining after ground for finding fault with the provincial Act, we are told that in other provinces the lists are municipal. Perhaps I had better read an extract from the 'Free Press' of Winnipeg, on the Bill now submitted :

The critics of the measure cannot understand why provincial lists are good enough for the Dominion in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and other provinces but not good enough for Manitoba and British Columbia. The explanation is very simple. The Dominion accepts without question as suitable for Dominion elections provincial lists which are prepared by municipal councils; but where provincial lists are made by officials appointed by the provincial governments, the Dominion stipulates that they must be revised by a judge before being available for Dominion contest.

But it must be remarked that those lists are all revised by a judge before they become provincial lists. If, however, this government succeeds in passing its Bill and makes new Dominion lists, it will be absolutely impossible to procure a second revision. The 'Free Press' goes on to say:

Why does Mr. Aylesworth provide that, in the unorganized districts in Ontario, the provincial lists must be revised? Because in those districts there are no municipal councils and the lists are prepared by enumerators appointed by the Ontario government. One who reads the discussion in the House of Commons in 1898, when the Dominion Franchise Act was passed, will see that the Dominion government assumed that where there was a permanent provisional list it was municipally made. A permanent provincial list, made by party workers and subjected year by year to party manipulation, was unheard of at that time in Canada; but it has since made its appearance in Manitoba.

In deciding that this Manitoba list shall be subject to revision by a judge or revising barrister before being available for Dominion purposes Mr. Aylesworth has safeguarded the rights of the electors and the interests of the public.

We are told the lists produced by the provincial Act of Manitoba are faulty, imperfect and improper lists. We are told that proper lists can only be compiled from municipal sources. Now, what the government is proposing to do is to make their new Dominion lists under the Manitoba provincial law and not from municipal sources. In effect, we are told that a list compiled by their party and officials and under the provincial Act will be a good list, while that produced by officials of the Manitoba government is a bad list. Now, this matter of municipal origin was put forward to a considerable extent in this House in 1898 on the occasion of the repeal of the Franchise Act, and the same excuse was there put forward that only muicipal lists could be acceptable for the election of members to this House. Having had a fairly extensive experience of the compilation and revision of lists in Ontario, which lists are of municipal origin, I beg to say, and I am sure that hon. members in this House from that province who have had a like experience will bear me out in saying, that these lists, so far as they are municipal and are the work of the municipal clerk, are extremely faulty and inaccurate and wholly unreliable. The whole value of the Ontario lists in the work of revision by the judge is entirely independent of any muicipal control. Every page, and almost every line, as they leave the municipal clerk is full of errors of every description, and any hon. gentleman of Ontario undertaking to run an election on these lists unrevised would find that he was leaning on a broken reed. No person who has had experience would think of attempting to run an election on these lists without a revision by the judge. The lists prepared in Manitoba are an immense improvement on those municipally prepared in Ontario. As a matter of principle what difference can there be between the preparation of a list by officers appointed under an Act passed by the representatives of the people in their legislature for the making of a list for an assessment roll, as in Ontario and the preparation of a list by certain officers appointed by the executive also under an Act of the legislature as in Manitoba representing the people? They are both the Acts of representatives of the people. I have never heard that, so far as Manitoba is concerned, there were any complaints except from certain representatives of the Reform party who regret the fact that their party has not control of the making of the lists. A good deal has been said by Mr. Walton, the Reform organizer in Manitoba, in the 'Free Press,' by way of instances of people who have been disfranchised under the Manitoba Act. I have his complaint here, but I will not trouble the House with it. I find it relates simply to matters of procedure. He complains that, in certain instances, certificates were not attached to certain lists, that matters of formality had not been observed, but these are things such as might take place in the case of any list no matter how compiled. Unless the prescribed steps on the application and on the appeal had been observed, the judge could exercise no jurisdiction in any province. It has been referred to this evening before, but it will not be amiss to mention again that the government of Manitoba has evinced every anxiety to produce as perfect an Act as possible which should have the effect of placing on the list every man who ought to be there and leaving off every vote that ought not to be included. In one instance, so desirous were they to make the lists perfect that they passed a special Act to place upon the list seven men at Balsam Bay, who, by some accident, had been left off. Mr. Roblin, the premier of Manitoba, has in the legislature, on the platform, and in the press, continuously requested suggestions from any source which would aid to make the Manitoba Election Act more perfect and make it serve the people better. And the Act I have read is the result of the various amendments made from time to time up to 1906. Hon. Robert Rogers, also a member of the Manitoba government, has issued a challenge which has never been taken up, that, if in one authentic case it could be shown that even one man had lost the franchise through the wanton or wilful act of an officer of the government, every seat in the province would be allowed to go by acclamation to the Reform candidate in the next election. This was a perfectly safe challenge because it was known in the province that these lists were absolutely fair and impartial. In Ontario we have, as has been mentioned, a system of registration in our cities and towns of over 9,000 inhabitants. If the government desired to be consistent they would have to include in this Bill a provision for making new lists in each one of the many places in which the Ontario Registration Act applies. If their objection to the lists is based on the contention that those made by the registration are faulty, that would be the only consistent contention they could set up. Now with regard to British Columbia, I propose as shortly as possible to place the House in possession of the provisions of the Act in that province. Section 4 provides the qualification and says :

Every male of the full age of twenty-one years, not being disqualified by this Act or any other law in force in this province, being entitled within this province to the privileges of a natural born British subject, and being able to read this Act, or any portion thereof, to the satisfaction of the registrar, if required by such registrar so to do, having resided in this province for six months, and in the electoral district in which he claims to vote for one month of that period immediately previous to sending in his claim to vote as hereinafter mentioned, and being only registered as an elector under the provisions of this Act, shall be entitled to vote at any election.

Then with regard to the revision of the lists :

The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall appoint for each electoral district, or for any polling or polling divisions of an electoral district, a person to be registrar of voters, and the duties of such registrar shall be as follows:

(a) To furnish to any one applying for the same any of the first three forms in the schedule hereto, without charge.

This is the form of application to be placed upon the register:

I do hereby apply to have my name inserted in the register of voters for the electoral district, and I do hereby make oath and say (or solemnly affirm):

1. That I reside at in the electoral district, and my post office address is British Columbia.

2. That I am of the male sex, of the full age of 21 years, and a British subject.

3. That I have been for a period of six months immediately prior to the date of this application, a resident of and domiciled within the province of British Columbia, and that I have been for a period of one month immediately prior to said date a resident of and domiciled within the electoral district.

It is further their duty :

To receive from any person offering the same a sworn affidavit in writing in support of application to vote in the form A in the schedule hereto, and to insert the name of such person in a list of persons claiming to vote, which list shall be posted up in the office of such registrar, and a copy thereof shall be placed in some conspicuous place on the outside of the door of such office; and such list shall be according to form B in the schedule hereto. The registrar shall not insert the name of any person upon such list unless the said form A as furnished is in accordance with this Act, and shows such person to be entitled to be placed on the register of voters.

Said list of persons claiming to vote shall be suspended from and after the last Monday in March and September of each year, and all applications to vote received after the said last Monday in March and September shall be held over until after the courts of revision provided for in subsection (e) hereof respectively, when they shall be posted up as provided in subsection (b) hereof.

On the first Monday of May and November, in each and every year, the registrar shall hold a court of revision, of which two months notice shall be given by him; such notice to be published in the British Columbia 'Gazette,' and copies of such notice shall be posted in the office of such registrar, and on the door of the principal court house of the electoral district, and in not less than three conspicuous places within the district for which, or for the polling division whereof, he shall have been appointed.

That is, that all the names that are on it and not objected to shall stay there.

Upon the holding of such court, it shall be the duty of such registrar to hear and determine any or all objections against the retention of any name or names on the register of voters, as settled at the previous revision, and on the said list of persons claiming to vote, as provided for in subsection (b) hereof; provided notice of every objection, and the reason thereof which may be in the form B in the schedule hereto, shall have been given to the registrar by the person objecting fifteen clear days previously to the holding of such court, and that the registrar shall have forwarded, twelve clear days before the holding of such court, a notice through the post office, or in such manner as he may deen advisable, to the person objected to, stating the facts of such objection, the ground thereof, and that the same will be heard at the holding of such court.

Here again we have, as in the province of Manitoba, personal notices given to every man with regard to objections to putting him on or putting him off.

It shall also be the duty of such registrar to strike off the register of voters, and off the said list of persons claiming to vote, all names thereon of persons who shall be dead, or shall have ceased to reside in the province of British Columbia; before striking off the name of any person on account of his being dead, or of his having ceased to reside in the province of British Columbia.

The registrar shall certify to said register of voters, and it shall be the list used at any election which may take place before the next revision has been completed.

In the case of the first register of voters, the same as made up as above, shall be certified to by the registrar, and forwarded forthwith to the King's Printer, who shall print the same, and the said register of voters shall be the list used at any election which may take place before the next revision has been completed.

After the first register of voters for any electoral district has been made up, the registrar of voters, after the holding of each court of revision shall make up and certify a complete register of voters, which shall consist of the names on the last register of voters not removed therefrom, and all names that have been added thereto, and any other corrections made in such register, and shall forward the same forthwith to the King's Printer, who shall print the same.

Then it is provided that no fee shall be charged for putting names on the register of voters, section 12 provides:

The affidavit provided for in subsection (b) of section 10 hereof, may be sworn or affirmed before any justice of the peace, mayor, reeve, alderman, councillor, commissioner for taking affidavits in the Supreme Court, registrar of titles, notary public, registrar of voters, provincial constable, special provincial constable, government agent, government assessor, mining recorder, deputy mining recorder, judge of any court, stipendiary magistrate, municipal clerk, municipal assessor, postmaster, postmistress or Indian agent, and no fee shall be charged for taking such affidavit or affirmation.

13. The Lieutenant Governor in Council may appoint any person who is a British subject as a commissioner for taking affidavits in the Supreme Court for a limited period without payment of any fee, for the purpose of acting under this Act in the electoral district in which he resides.

14. The King's Printer shall furnish any person with a reasonable number of blank forms of said affidavit, without charge.

Then with regard to the transfer of names:

Upon the written request of any registered voter, in manner aforesaid, for the transfer of his name from any register of voters to any other register, it shall be the duty of the registrar forthwith to remove the name of such person from the register of voters, and to deliver or forward to such registered voter, a certificate that his name has been so removed from the said register, and the said voter may forward the said certificate to the registrar of the district in which he resides and desires to become a registered voter.

So there is the utmost ease provided for the elector who has changed his place of residence, to transfer his name.

Every registrar shall reject every claim or application to be registered as an elector unless the claim contains full particulars of the place of the claimants or applicant's residence, whereby such claimants' or applicants' whereabouts may be easily ascertained.

Where any impediment, misfeasance, or omission shall have happened in the preparation or transmission or printing or publication of any list or register of voters or other document, of what kind soever, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may take all such measures and make such regulations as may be necessary for removing such impediment or rectifying such misfeasance or supplying such omission.

Section 22:

All such regulations, on being published in one issue of the 'British Columbia Gazette,' shall have the full force of law as if hereby expressly enacted, and shall be laid before the legislature within fourteen days after such publication.

Then with regard to an appeal:

Any person dissatisfied with the decision of the registrar may have the same reviewed before any county court holden within the electoral district, or polling division thereof, for which such registrar shall have been appointed; or in case there shall be no county court holden within such electoral district or polling division, then to the county court holden nearest to such district or polling division thereof as aforesaid, by giving to the registrar a notice of review which may be in the form 'C' in the schedule hereto, within six days after such decision shall have been rendered. Such notice shall also be served, within such time, upon the elector objecting, or the person whose claim to vote shall have been allowed, as the case may be; and such notice shall be given ten days before the hearing of such review, or at such other time as the county court judge shall appoint, and the case shall be heard at one of the usual sittings of such county court, and the judge shall either affirm or dismiss such appeal, and make such order as to the costs thereof and generally as to the premises as he may deem just, and may enforce the same as and in the same way as a judgment of the court is usually enforced: provided always, that every such decision of any such county court judge may be appealed from to the Supreme Court of British Columbia; and all the proceedings concerning such appeal shall be conducted as nearly as may be according to the provisions of the County Courts Act, and rules of court made in pursuance thereof for the time being in force relating to and governing appeals. The registrar, on any such review, shall regard and be governed, as to placing, retaining or removing any name on or from the register of voters, by the decision of the county court judge, or if such decision shall be reversed by the Supreme Court, then by the decision of the Supreme Court: provided, however, that with respect to the electoral district of Cassiar, the provision hereinbefore mentioned, instead of being made to, taken, or held before a county court, shall be made to, taken or held before any two justices of the peace residing in such district, the registrar not being one of such justices.

27. The registers of voters, as made, scrutinized, settled and revised under and pursuant to the provisions of chapter 67 of the Revised Statutes, 1897, and amendments, and of the Redistribution Act, 1902, shall, subject to revision under this Act be, and continue to be the registers of voters in and for the several electoral districts constituted and defined by said Redistribution Act, 1902.

So that in this province we have not only an appeal to the county judge, but a further appeal to the supreme court of the province. The time within which such proceedings shall be had in British Columbia as shown by the sections of the Act to which I have called attention would be: Notice of the court of revision must be published for two months; the holding of the courts of revision would occupy ten days; notice of review of decision of the court is limited to six days; then there is notice of review before the review takes place; and not taking into account the time occupied by the review and correction of the lists there would necessarily be occupied in the compilation and revision of the lists two months and 26 days. Therefore, it is obviously impossible that the provincial law should be observed if the whole work has to be done, as proposed by section 1 after the issue of writs for an election.

Mr. Speaker, there have been absolutely no complaints against this Act by the people of British Columbia. They have chosen to make their lists in this way, and they are satisfied with them. I propose to lay before the House a letter from Mr. W. A. Macdonald, of Nelson, in which he says:

No Liberal papers in British Columbia have as yet been able to advance an argument in favour of the contemplated change.

That is section 1 of the Act.

You will have received copy of 'Daily News,' containing condemnation. Do not forget that Deane, proprietor and editor of paper, is an active Liberal politician. He represented Kamloops in the local House, and at the last Dominion election stumped Yale-Cariboo for Duncan Ross. He is now president of the Liberal Association of Nelson, and is in touch with compilation of voters' lists, elections thereunder and revisions.

The extract from the 'Daily News' to which he calls attention is in these words:

We do not know why Mr. Aylesworth should seek to have special Dominion lists in British Columbia and we have been waiting to learn what explanation he had to offer on the point. The provincial lists, under ordinary circumstances, are, or should be quite satisfactory. They were used in the last Dominion election and we heard no complaint of any injustice being done to any person properly entitled to vote. The system of registration in British Columbia is as near perfect as it is ever likely to be, and, in our opinion, is absolutely fair to all parties. There is practically manhood suffrage in British Columbia and if a man be not registered, who is entitled to have his name on the list, it is usually his own fault. So far as we have observed, no party has any special advantages over the other, as we utterly decline to accept the Tory theory that the collectors of votes and the revising officers are necessarily corrupt.

On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, this government goes upon the theory that because the lists in Manitoba and British Columbia are made under the authority of Conservative governments, therefore the officers who made them are corrupt and also the people are unreliable and corrupt and capable of being corrupted by those officers. I have quoted the evidence of Mr. Macdonald, a very prominent resident in that country, and of the editor and proprietor of that Grit paper.

I further propose to place upon record this extract:

The 'Telegram' has received the following letter from a British Columbia elector: 'I was in active politics in British Columbia for over ten years. I have seen the 'old timers' party in power under successively John Robson, Theodore Davie and J. H. Turner. In many respects these were bad governments. They were far from progressive. In 1898, the provincial party under Chas. Semlin, a staunch Conservative, took office. His government was succeeded for a brief but lurid interval by that of Hon. Joseph Martin. Then James Dunsmuir, a man of no politics, came into office. He was followed by Colonel E. G. Prior. After him, Mr. McBride was called in, and, going to the country on party lines, was returned and has retained office ever since. Through all those changes in all those years, the question of voters' lists was never raised by any person, Liberal, Conservative, Socialist or Mug-wump, black, white, yellow or mixed, except of course in the way of improving registration and purging old lists. Political feeling ran high, very high indeed, but any idea of fighting on an unfair list never occurred to one solitary human being. The lists might be imperfect, they were never unfair.

That is the evidence of a prominent resident of that province.

Mr. GALLIHER. Who is that, is that Mr. Boville ?

Mr. ALCORN. He is stated to be a prominent British Columbian writing to the Winnipeg 'Telegram.'

I would be glad if, at some convenient time during the debate, the government would state whether it is their hope or intention that any provision of the first clause or any other portion of the Act shall authorize returning officers to cut and carve constituencies, or alter the boundary of particular polling divisions. If so that would introduce an excessively contentious principle into this debate. There are certain portions of clause 1 which would indicate that to a certain extent and if the government will during the debate announce their intention in that respect it will facilitate matters to some extent.

With regard to section 13 of the Bill which I referred to some time ago, on the splitting of polling divisions I would suggest that each portion of a polling division which has been divided in that way should stand as a separate polling subdivision and should not be attached to any other polling division, the latter course would certainly lead to a good deal of trouble. The allotment of the names of the voters between the various portions of divisions so dealt with should be made by a judge as provided in the section of the Manitoba Act which I pointed out. I would also suggest that notice should in such cases be given to every elector who will vote in any portion of that polling subdivision as subdivided. I propose to read extracts from a number of letters that have been received from different persons in those two provinces with regard to this Bill.

Mr. J. D. Taylor of New Westminster, writes:

Apart from the political aspect of the matter with which it is not necessary for me to deal since you must fully appreciate the significance of this seizure of control of the lists, the objections most apparent are as follows:

Lines 12 and 13 provide for the making of the lists by Dominion authority immediately after the issue of the writs, but at last general election three contests in British Columbia were deferred because of the plea that there was not time to go through the necessary formalities on account of the great size of the constituencies. How, then would it be possible to prepare lists as well as fulfil the other requirements of the Act? Is this a scheme to make it necessary to defer all the elections in British Columbia until several weeks after the general elections. The saving clause, 'or at any time when the Governor in Council so directs,' would not be available in the case of the issue of writs immediately after the close of the present session.

Paragraph 2, read in this connection is senseless, in its first provision, because the law of British Columbia compels the provincial lists to be open for inspection for five weeks before confirmation by the court of revision, and this is not too long a time in order to permit any voter against whom an objection is recorded to be notified and make his reply, the mail service here being villainously slow. It would therefore be impossible to apply the laws of the province to any revision after the issue of the writs.

Mr. W. A. McDonald, K.C., Nelson, writes:

The more I think of this Act, the more it is quite apparent that it is nothing but an attempt to get control of the voters' lists so that some partisan officials may pad the lists to suit the Liberal party or cut off names of those likely to vote against them. There is no necessity whatever for the list being amended or interfered with after it leaves the hands of the registration clerk in May, when it will be revised. Our lists are fairly made up and no complaints whatever have ever taken place as to any partiality. I was pleased this morning to see that the 'News' which is our local Liberal newspaper was candid enough to admit that there was no necessity for any change. I do not see what members from British Columbia can suggest as a reason for the movement, and the copy of the paper which I inclose will afford good support to my statement above.

Hon. Hugh John Macdonald:

If the government were allowed to prepare the lists we might as well throw up our hands. The Thin Red Line at the last election was bad enough and shut us out of several seats which were fairly ours, but what is now proposed is ten times worse. One of the strong planks in the Reform platform when they were in opposition was the doing away with Dominion voters' lists and leaving all matters of this sort to the provinces, and this plank was the only one that they really carried out of those that put them into power. Now it seems that even this is broken and thrown on the pile for waste lumber.

Mr. G. H. Barnard, Victoria, B.C.:

With reference to the proposed changes in the Dominion Election Act as they affect this province. It would appear to us that this is a most unjustifiable proceeding on the part of the government and one that is calculated to place us at a great disadvantage during the election. We cannot see how there can possibly be any necessity for the proposed change so far as British Columbia is concerned. Under our Election Act any of the following officials are qualified to take applications from voters to have their names placed on the list: justice of the peace, mayor, reeve, alderman, councillor, commissioner for taking affidavits in the Supreme Court, registrar of titles, deputy registrar of titles, notary public, collector of votes, provincial constables, special provincial constables, government agent, government mining assessor, mining recorder, deputy mining recorder, judge of any court, stipendiary magistrate, municipal clerk, municipal assessor, postmaster, postmistress or Indian agent.

From this list you will see that there is no lack of opportunity offered to any person desiring to get on the list to have the necessary application sworn. Moreover the provincial government has been in the habit of accepting from the Liberal committee recommendations of persons they desire to have appointed as commissioners under the Election Act, and such appointments have always been made without any demur on the part of the government. The existing system has so far been found to work absolutely satisfactorily and without friction. We feel that if this Act is allowed to pass it is opening the door for corruption of the worst kind on the part of our opponents and that we look for a repetition of the 'Thin Red Line' affair. The only grain of comfort in the situation is that the proposed action is such an iniquitous one that it may re-act strongly upon its perpetrators. It is difficult to see why different treatment should be meted out to British Columbia and Manitoba from the rest of the provinces, unless for the reason that they are strongly Conservative in feeling.

Mr. W. J. Bowser, Attorney General of British Columbia:

There is absolutely no justification for the proposed amendment, as we have courts of revision here twice every year, viz., on the first Monday in May and the first Monday in November, and all persons wishing to get on the list for the May revision must put in their application before the last Monday in March and all persons expecting to get on the list at the November court of revision must apply before the last Monday in September.

At the present time both parties in this province are very active trying to get in their applications before next Monday so that all the applicants will be dealt with in the court of revision on the 4th of May, both sides , of course, feeling confident that this will be the last court of revision before the Dominion election, and every effort will be made to purge the list of dead men and absentees so as to have a clean election list. Now, if the Dominion government gives any 'carte blanche' powers to a nominee of theirs it may simply mean a repetition of the 'Thin Red Line' used in Manitoba, and I know that, so far as we are concerned here, there will be a big row over it, as both Liberals and Conservatives here have every confidence in our registrars of voters who are in nearly every case, government agents, men of high standing in their community.

At the last court of revision in Vancouver there were a great many names knocked off the list and a great many others added, and in no case was the slightest suggestion made that our registrar of voters had acted in any other but a proper manner.

There has been no suggestion that our Election Act is not working out perfectly, and in this last session of parliament there has not been a suggestion on the part of any member on either side of the House that it should be amended in any way. In 1908 it was amended so as to make it easier to knock names off the list than it was formerly. It has worked splendidly in our last election, and no suggestion was made that the election list was not an honest one. I may say that the applicant has only got to be six months in this province and one month in the constituency he applies in, and he must be able to read and write and sign an application and take an oath before commissioners under the Act. We appoint commissioners right along when suggested by any political party in the province. I may say besides that the affidavit can be taken before any justice of the peace, mayor, reeve, alderman, councillor, commissioner for taking affidavits in the Supreme Court, registrar of titles, deputy registrar of titles, notary public, registrar of voters, provincial constable, special constable, government agent, assessor, mining recorder, deputy mining recorder, judge of any court, stipendiary magistrate, municipal clerk, municipal assessor, postmaster, postmistress, Indian agent or any commission appointed by the government in council for taking affidavits under the Election Act. No fee is charged, so that any man in the most remote part of this province could have his application properly sworn to and filed with the registrar of voters, so that, as far as this province is concerned, there is absolutely no necessity for any list to be made up by a Dominion official, and if a man is not on the list now, he has only himself to blame.

These are simply selections from shoals of letters which have been deluging this side of the House ever since this Bill was presented to parliament, and they are all in the same direction. Every one knows that the Liberal party and its leaders both in the present and in the past have always proclaimed as a principle the adoption of the provincial lists for Dominion elections. I propose to read some extracts from the 'Hansard' of 1885 with a view of showing that fact. The Hon. Mr. Mills, speaking on the proposed Franchise Act of Sir John Macdonald, which appointed a revising officer in each electoral district, said:

These gentlemen sitting on the Treasury benches and their supporters have a very great interest, and so have we, as to who the revising officer shall be. I say they ought not to appoint him any more than we. Give us the power of appointing the revising officers and we can determine beforehand who will command a majority in this House; and when the hon. gentlemen have that power, we know what it means.

In the present Bill the government are proposing not only to appoint a revising officer, even if there is time for a revision, which I have shown there is not, but also every other officer who touches the lists.

We know it is a decision beforehand what the result of the election shall be. . . . . I say that these provisions of the Bill are pernicious; they are a violation of the first principles of natural justice; they propose to make one of the parties interested in the contest the judge of the matter, or to give him the power of appointing a man who is to determine who is and who is not an elector in this country. In my opinion, that is a principle which is so unjust, so unfair in itself, that this House ought not for a moment to entertain it; it is so atrocious that hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches ought not to have proposed it; it is so atrocious that no minister in England would dare to make such a proposition; no parliament in England is so servile as to support such a proposition Why, what would the hon. gentleman say if we on this side of the House were to claim the right to appoint the revising officers in all the constituencies that we represent? They would not for a moment accede to our proposition, and yet they propose to appoint them in all the constituencies' The proposition is a monstrous proposition, and one which the hon. gentlemen must expect will be very fully discussed when this Bill goes into committee.

This is the statement of the Hon. Mr. Mills, formerly Minister of Justice in this government, afterwards a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, one of the most prominent leaders in the Reform party in Canada. I will next call attention to a speech delivered by the right hon. gentleman himself. He said :

Yesterday the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Foster), speaking on this question said it was the duty of this House to regulate its own franchise, and not to leave it to the whim or fancy of this one or that one, but that we should by law enact who should be the electors to this House. Well, for my part, I have no objection that this should be done; perhaps it is well after all that the question should be settled once and for all, and that to-day this House should determine who should be the electors to this House. But if that is to be done, let it be done as it has been done in the United States, as it has been done in the Dominion since confederation, and let us determine that the electors to the House of Commons shall be the electors to the several local legislatures. Now again, the hon. gentleman, addressing himself to this question, said we should be independent of the local legislatures. Well, we are independent of the local legislatures in our own sphere, just as much as the local legislatures are independent of us in their spheres. But at the same time this House has no rights at all of its own; the only rights which it enjoys are those which are delegated to it by the people of the provinces, and it is not for this House to determine what people of the provinces shall delegate those powers to the House, or in what manner they shall be constituted for that purpose; it is the people themselves who should determine who shall be the constituents of the members of this House, according to the mode regulated by the constitution, speaking through the local legislatures.

I submit to the sense of the House that this measure is an invasion of popular rights. Hitherto the voters' lists have been prepared by the people themselves. The assessment rolls have been prepared by the people themselves through valuators appointed by the municipal councils. The lists have been prepared by the people themselves through the secretary-treasurer appointed by the municipal council. The lists have been revised by the people themselves through the municipal councils. This system, so far as I know, has worked satisfactorily and well. Now it is proposed that there shall be a change. What reason is given for that change? Why should this right be taken from the people?

That is a matter I adverted to some time ago, showing that the Act was the Act of the people in every case through their local legislature.

The present system forces them to give their attention to public business. Now that system is to be changed. The voters' lists are henceforth to be prepared, not by the people, but by lawyers appointed by the government, assisted by clerks and constables. What can be the result of that change?

Equally we might ask the same question to-day with regard to this Bill—why should lawyers be entrusted by the government with the making of the Dominion lists? The right hon. gentleman continues:

If the change is made as a consequence of the introduction of a Dominion franchise, this must be a bad measure indeed if to carry it out you are obliged to deprive the people of a portion of the rights they now exercise. The present system has so far worked satisfactorily.

I think I have shown that the system in the province of Manitoba that now obtains has worked satisfactorily in that province, and was placed on the statute-book by the people of that province.

I am not aware that there have been any serious complaints that the lists of voters have not been properly prepared and revised by those who have hitherto had the duty of preparing and revising them. Under the law, in the province of Quebec at all events, there is an appeal from the decisions of the municipal councils through the courts.

Further down he says:

The Bill is still liable to a graver objection: it is a direct invasion of the powers hitherto enjoyed by the people. So far the people themselves have had the preparation of these lists, but henceforward that power is to be taken out of their hands and what is the reason given for taking away from the people that duty of which they have had the enjoyment ever since confederation?

Under the Bill now before the House there is practically no change, except that the government by their officials wish to make similar lists to those now made in the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia by the officials of those provinces, and their only reason for making that change is to have the lists made by their officials, instead of by those of the local governments.

I use the word enjoyment advisedly, because the exercise of a duty so precious as this must be an enjoyment rather than an obligation. Yet this precious right is proposed to be taken away from the people; and I do not imagine that the sturdy yeomen of this country will submit to this for any length of time; I do not imagine that they will yield without a protest this right to henchmen of the government, to the innumerable army of parasites which feed on the government and whose sole object will be to do the bidding of the government.

I will apply that to the proposed change here:

In every conceivable point this measure is in my opinion a bad measure, one that will be denounced by all those who believe in popular rights, who believe in the sacredness of our constitution, as an invasion of popular rights, and as a step towards centralization; and in this view I beg to move the following resolution:

That all the words after 'that' be struck out and the following inserted: In the opinion of this House it is preferable to continue the plan which has been adopted ever since confederation of utilizing for the election of this House the provincial franchises and voters' lists.

On page 1187 Mr. Blake made a very long speech, from which I make a few extracts. He said:

Now, I want to know whether it is not of the last consequence to insure a true representation of the people, that we should have the lists as full as possible, and the people placed thereon with as little trouble and expense as possible, and as little doubt and uncertainty as possible, as to who have the right to be placed on the lists and who have the right to vote.

Let me point out that even if this new Dominion list is made, the provincial lists will go on as usual, so that there will be the double expense and double trouble of making both lists at the same time

I say that is a practical question of the greatest consequence to those who really value representative government. I say our first care ought to be to place as few obstacles and impediments as possible in the way of the honest man, who is entitled to the franchise, getting on the voters' list, and as few obstacles as possible in the way of his knowing what he is to do in order to get there; and I say that if you establish, as you inevitably will, by your law, one franchise for the local and another for the federal legislature—because you say you are going to establish one for all the provinces, and because we know that the conditions and the views in the provinces vary—you will then establish complications and trouble, a double trouble, a double registration, a double inquiry on the part of the voters and you will thus create, instead of removing, obstacles towards a full and fair representation of the people.

These observations apply with equal force to the present proposal of the government.

Great expense will be caused too. Why, I suppose everybody knows, who has directed any attention to this subject, that it is an expensive matter to keep the voters' list right, that it is an expensive matter to see that no improper votes are put on, on the one side, and that all proper votes are kept on, on the other side. It is often neglected now; it is often neglected by both parties, and, when an unexpected election takes place, you find sometimes that the real expression of the people's will is thwarted by the circumstance that the lists have not been revised and do not accurately represent their view.

In this way did the Hon. Mr. Blake speak of the municipal lists which this government says should be the foundation of all voters' lists. He said that they are extremely faulty and that no election could be run upon them without revision. He continued:

Are you going to double all that trouble? Are you going to have two sets of voters' lists to be looked after every year instead of one set? Do you think that is helping the elector on? Do you think that is making easy the path to a real and true representation of the people? It cannot be. It is impossible that those who argue for the Bill can contend for that result. Then there is the expense—the expense to the public in this double registration, the work that has to be done, the printing and revising of a separate set of lists. The local authority—in my province, at any rate; I know not whether in the others—provides you a list now; they provide you a printed list; they provide you a revision, a framing of it by the municipal officers elected by the people, a revision by the judicial officers you appoint yourselves; the judicial officers that you appoint here, the county court judges. They give you your list, complete, framed and revised, revised finally by judicial officers appointed by the authority of this legislature. There is the system. And you are going to take upon yourselves the public expense of framing lists and printing them yourselves, and you are going to impose the private expense on individuals which is involved in the carrying out of this double franchise.

All this equally applies to the double list which the government is now proposing to make.

I ask this House not to make this franchise more difficult than it now is, and I say you are making it more difficult, perhaps more than if you raised it, by the practical obstructions you are placing in the way by a double franchise. Make it easier if you can, and the easiest thing you can do is just to leave it alone.

On page 1192, Mr. Blake made certain other observations which I think are material. Speaking with regard to the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald, he said:

When he got back here in 1882, he took the electoral district and now he has taken the voters' lists. His efforts have been to secure and retain and increase a majority by the use of these powers, powers which ought not to be in the hands of government, in the great contest between the two political parties as to which has the majority of public opinion, powers which ought as far as possible, to be kept out of the hands of governments, which being human, are liable to misuse them. Well, the hon. gentleman may succeed in procuring the passage of this clause as to the appointment of revising officers, which he did not say anything about which he did not intimate might be considered an open question, so that any of his supporters he felt they could not conscientiously accept a revising officer of their own nomination might be free to vote against it. He did not make this an open question, and he has not defended it as yet. He may succeed in carrying it, but as he has from time to time found that many of his efforts to obtain control have failed, though many of them have succeeded, I hope and trust that this effort, even if successful here will be less successful elsewhere, that a spirit of fair play and justice will be dominant through the land, that the people at large will say that the hon. gentleman ought to deal as he would be dealt by, that they will say there ought to be a pure and equitable and honest system of making the lists, and that he will not derive, at any rate, all the advantage from this disposition which, in his secret heart, he hopes to obtain.

I might remark in this connection that at present throughout Manitoba indignation meetings are being held in which the action of the government is being denounced in no uncertain tone. I think the observations I have quoted are peculiarly applicable to this Bill, and the right hon. gentleman will find that this very high-handed proceeding will not redound to his credit even among his own friends. In the third volume of 'Hansard' of that year, I find further observations by Mr. Blake. Speaking on the Bill which had been introduced in 1870 by Sir John Thompson with regard to the making of lists, he said :

It contained the provision objectionable in the highest degree, that the Governor in Council should appoint the persons to make the lists.

Here the government is appointing their officers who will deal with those lists at every stage. On page 2175, speaking of the different plans of making voters' lists, Mr. Blake observes:

The worst plan of all is that which puts the making of lists in the hands of the government of the day.

On page 2176 he continues:

I am not inclined, I hope, to place on too low a position the political morality of our country, the political morality of countries, the standing of those who at one time or another may have the majority in this country, but I say that you have got to remember, whatever elevated view you may take with reference to our status, however far you may be disposed to go in the assertion that Canada will not depart from those principles of justice and fair play which must underlie parliamentary government and all other forms of government—and without it, your talk of self-government is a farce and your talk of parliamentary government is worse than a farce—however much you may be disposed to affirm that no party when in power will use its power to aggrandize itself to the prejudice of the minority, to perpetuate its own power by unfair means, we cannot contend that we are less liable to misuse our own strength, that we are less restrained by high considerations of the character to which I have referred, that we are less moved by those baser considerations to which I have referred than the English people, the English parties, the English government, and yet there no government was bold enough to propose to the free parliament that it should be entrusted with the nomination of the men to make or to revise the lists, no parliament has been base enough to surrender to the executive government, in which it confided, that power. They felt that it was a power which ought not to be asked, and they did not ask it. They proposed a different mode of appointment. Why ? Why is it that no English government proposed to an English parliament, and an English parliament accepted and recorded upon the statute-book, where it stands, amid all the vicissitudes of electoral laws, from that time to this, the proposition that the judges of the land should be the persons who should appoint the revising officers? It was because they felt that it was a power with which the government of the day ought not to ask that it should be entrusted. It was because they felt that the appointment coming from that source was coming from a suspected and tainted source in the eyes of the people, it was because they felt that those engaged in the discharge of this duty could not do it with a fair chance of being considered impartial between the two great parties, if they were the nominees of the government of the day, it was because they felt that the well working of the system depended upon the adoption of that special and peculiar provision which in this case, and for those purposes they used.

Yet in the face of that declaration of policy, the government is proposing to make new lists simply for the purpose of having them made by their own officials. He continues, at page 2177:

The evil is at the source, the taint is at the source, the difficulty is at the source. It is the suspected and improper authority who is to appoint the officer that makes the difficulty. Why, sir, to say that our present system involves occasionally some injustice in the making of the lists to the one party or the other, that occasionally an over-zealous and improper Conservative assessor or functionary, makes the lists wrongly, and occasionally an improper and over-zealous Reform assessor does the same thing and that that is a reason for this change—I do not say for a change, but for this change—is absurd; because this change is one which puts the dead weight of a revising officer all the time on one side——

And in this case the government is putting the dead weight of the revising officer always on their own side.

—which says it shall be the nominee of the government in all cases who shall make the list, and the other party, the party of the minority, shall have the function of appeal.

And at page 2346, Mr. Blake says:

I think it is highly important that there should be as few elections brought on, while yet it is uncertain what the voters' list is, as possible. I think we ought to do everything that we can in the way of legislation to minimize the temptation on the part of the party in power to bring on an election at that inconvenient season. . . . I hope that we are dealing with an entirely exceptional class of cases; I hope, for instance, that such a thing would not be thought of as, in a general election, the government which had control of the issue of the writs not having regard to the general condition of appeals from the voters' lists. I think it would be a very great abuse of power to cause a general election to be had when there was a very considerable number of the voters' lists under appeal pending before the judge, when consequently, in a considerable number of constituencies, it was uncertain who would have the right to vote.

It would be uncertain who would have the right to vote under this Bill, because the list will not be brought into existence until after the writ for the election is issued.

A debate took place in this House in 1898, and which has been referred to here to-day. I think some parts of that debate should be placed before the House. At page 308, the Solicitor General of that time, Mr. Fitzpatrick, in speaking of the Bill said:

The object of this Bill is to repeal the existing Franchise Act and to substitute therefor the laws of the different provinces as to the qualification of voters, polling divisions and preparation of lists.

Then, at page 2270, he further says:

The object of this Bill is to repeal the Franchise Act of 1885 and to revert for the franchise, for the polling divisions and also for the voters' lists to the condition of things existing previous to that time. The Bill is not a lengthy one. It provides, in the first instance, for the repeal of the Franchise Act; then it provides that the franchise shall be in each province the franchise existing under the provincial law for the purposes of the provincial election—the words 'provincial election' being defined in the Bill—and then it provides that the list of voters shall be the same as that in existence in the province. We then go on to provide that the polling divisions or subdivisions are to be the same as those that exist in the province.

Then, at page 2288, the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), speaking of an amendment which had been proposed to the Bill, said:

The blemish in the Act introduced by Sir John Thompson, and it is to me an absolute and irredeemable blemish, was that while he adopted the provincial franchise, yet he retained the revising officer and the preparation of the list by the revising officer. I say this is the blemish in the Act. Here is section 5: The Governor in Council may from time to time appoint a proper person to be called the revising officer.

Let me call attention to section 10.

Then he reads section 10 which has already been read here, and goes on:

These are the objections which we had at the time to the Bill of Sir John Thompson. It was far more logical, according to our view, having adopted the principle of the provincial franchise to also accept the voters' lists so prepared under the authority of the provincial legislature. On this side of the House we have an absolute hostility to the revising officer and the lists prepared by the revising officer.

And yet these hon. gentlemen to-day are appointing not merely a revising officer, but a full set of revising officers who shall make lists for two whole provinces. At page 2289, the right hon. gentleman says:

I propose that we shall revert to that system. If we apply the principle of the provincial franchise, why should we not take at the same time the means and methods by which the principle is applied?

Later in the same page, he says:

This very Franchise Act was an abuse of power whereby the revision of the lists was placed in the hands of henchmen of the administration.

Then, at page 3983, we find the hon. gentleman speaking as follows:

Let me recall to the hon. gentleman's mind, because he seems to forget these matters very readily, that for the first nineteen years of confederation, this parliament was elected on lists prepared by the local legislatures. Let me recall further that there were no complaints made at that time against that system. Let me recall again that under the system of the Dominion Franchise Act, passed in 1885, there was not a year but there were complaints, and grievous complaints, in regard to that matter. I ask my hon. friend this question: Is it not the fact that if this Franchise Act is not passed during this session we shall be obliged to have a revision of the Dominion lists? There is not an hon. member who would not look with absolute terror on the prospect that in July he would have to meet the worry and expense of a revision of the list.

But what shall be said of the terror of those members of the House who represent constituencies in unorganized territory in Ontario or Quebec or in the other provinces affected, if they have to go to the country and face the expense of two complete lists?

If hon. gentlemen opposite have a better system to propose, let them offer it; but as between a Dominion and provincial franchise, as between a Dominion list and provincial lists, there can be no hesitation, because we have had for nineteen years a provincial list and provincial franchise.

Then, at page 4013, the Prime Minister says:

We propose a system which has been in operation for nineteen years here. We propose a system that has been in operation in the United States ever since the establishment of the constitution. If there is anything better to be offered, I should like it now to be offered; but if we are only asked to adopt a system of registration——

And that is what the right hon. gentleman proposes to adopt now.

—it will not at all remedy the evil, it will not relieve the expenditure necessary to-day; but if the House adopt the principle of the Bill we propose, we shall have a list prepared without any trouble, without any expenditure, and we will have, I believe, the best system of franchise and preparation of lists the country has had so far.

And the right hon. gentleman knows that these provinces have made their lists and they are satisfied. Why should they be changed? And then at page 4014, we find the Prime Minister speaking as follows:

It is easy for hon. gentlemen opposite to pick flaws and create difficulties, but after all we must suppose there is some reason and conscience in them. Local legislatures are likely to represent the people of the province; they are elected to represent the same people we represent here, and no other people. It is supposed, and it is not a very violent supposition to make, they will exercise that power in the best interests of their constituents, according to their judgment and light. It is supposed they will adopt the best franchise to suit the province.

That is what has been done in these provinces, and the right hon. gentleman is not content to leave it alone, but insists upon having separate lists. He goes on:

It is because we believe and suppose that the local legislatures will act as they have been acting, in the best interests of their own constituents, that we are acting in this way. In 1885 the legislature of the Province of Quebec was in the hands of the Conservative party. It had been in the hands of the Conservative party ever since confederation, with the exception of two years. But I would not have hesitated to accept the franchise provided by a Conservative legislature in Quebec, because, though there were many things in that franchise, on the whole, to which I would have objected, still as it satisfied the province it would have satisfied me. It is in the same way as regards other provinces. It is possible that the control of the several provinces may pass into the hands of the Conservative party——

That is a catastrophe which has happened now.

—still on a question of this kind I am quite disposed for my part to accept the franchise prepared by the legislature, whether Liberal or Conservative.

On the next page he says:

Would it not be far better, as a matter simply of good government, if the elections for this House could be conducted on the local lists, and that the members of this parliament and the members of the legislature who represent the same body of people, should be elected by the same electors?

Then on page 4127 I find the then Minister of the Interior, the present member for Brandon, (Mr. Sifton) saying this:

And I have this to say further, that the Act which came into force in 1891, under which revising officers are appointed, as they are appointed under the Dominion Franchise Act—and who are sometimes judges and sometimes not—has worked satisfactorily. There has not been to my knowledge, and there never was while I sat in the legislature, any complaint made against the conduct of these revising officers. Not a single complaint was made during the five years that I was a member of the government of Manitoba, during which that Act was in force, against the conduct of any revising officer. Not only was no complaint ever proven, but none was ever made.

On page 4309 the right hon. gentleman said:

We are now upon subsection 'a' of section 5 of this Act, which reads as follows:—
The qualifications necessary to entitle any person to vote thereat shall be those established by the laws of that province as necessary to entitle such persons to vote in the same part of the province at a provincial election.

An amendment was moved to that, and to that amendment the right hon. gentleman addressed himself:

Now my right hon. friend wants me to supplement that language in the manner which I have already indicated. Well, it is a matter of record that there are no two provinces in which the franchise are absolutely alike. They are alike in all provinces in principle, they are alike mostly in the nature of the qualification of the electors, but they are not absolutely identical in their respective provisions. What does this prove? It proves the principle which my hon. friend has refused to admit up to this moment, that the local franchise is necessarily, from its very nature, a local question to be determined by the local circumstances of the community in each province.

That remark is very applicable to both provinces in question in this Bill. The people of those provinces speaking through their representatives have passed certain Acts which have established the character of their franchise. Why should this government now, for Dominion purposes, simply because those provinces have become Conservative, insist upon making separate lists by partisan officers of their own?

My hon. friend will at least have to recognize this. The amendment which we have now before us has been considerably changed from what it was the other day when it was first presented. When it was first presented it did not contain a provision that this should apply only to certain provinces; it was to apply to all the provinces in which there exists an appeal as well as to provinces in which an appeal does not exist. Since that time the amendment has been restricted only to apply to those provinces in which there is no judicial appeal. Take the case of each province. Take the case of the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec. They are provinces where an appeal lies to the judicial authority. In those provinces the lists are prepared by the municipal authorities. In the province of Ontario the lists are prepared by the municipal bodies, and in the province of Quebec the lists are prepared by the municipal bodies. If any elector is not satisfied with the lists so prepared, if he feels aggrieved, he has an appeal to the judicial authority. In the province of New Brunswick there is nothing of the kind, there is no appeal to a judicial authority. In the province of Nova Scotia there is no appeal either to the judicial authority. My hon. friend says: Why should there not be an appeal to the judicial authority? The reason is very obvious, it is that in those provinces no want is felt for such an appeal.

On page 5672 the right hon. gentleman says, speaking to an amendment which had been proposed with regard to the revision of the lists:

We have certainly power to take the provincial lists as they are made, and to adopt them as our own; but I question very much whether we have power to interfere in the preparation of the local lists and to impose conditions which are not imposed by local legislation as to the manner in which they are to be made. This is a question which, in my judgment, is one of great moment and of some difficulty. I do not press it strongly, however, because I apprehend that there may be perhaps a difference of opinion in this regard. But there can be no difference of opinion, at all events upon this point, that even if we had power to pass such an amendment, its adoption would create great confusion. You would have a set of lists prepared for local elections, and by this amendment you would introduce federal legislation to take effect at a certain time, which would take away the lists from the local jurisdiction and bring them under federal jurisdiction as to the method of their preparation.

Here the right hon. gentleman is in set terms condemning the precise thing which he now proposes to do by this Bill :

I submit to my hon. friend that this consideration alone shows that the amendment would undoubtedly and inevitably lead to very great confusion.

On the next page, 5673, he says :

I have no doubt that if the people of Nova Scotia——

All this is to show that the lists should be prepared by the people themselves, and that is what is being done in those two provinces.

——find the present system not satisfactory —the system which has given satisfaction hitherto—if they thought that the sheriff being appointed by the executive authority did not give them the same security as in former times when the sheriffs were appointed by the judicial authoriy, they will undoubtedly, in the exercise of their rights as citizens of a free province introduce legislation in amendment to that legislation. But it may be said that their efforts would be unavailing because the party suffering would not control the legislature. That may be so at the present time. But when any grievance exists in any legislature governed under British institutions, the minority is never slow to avail itself of any opportunity to offer amendments to remove it, although the minority may be sure that its efforts will not succeed, but be rejected.

That is what we are doing now with regard to this Bill.

A minority will never fail to bring grievances to the attention of a legislature, though they are satisfied their efforts will be prostrated, because the minority will do so simply for the purpose of affecting public opinion and affecting it in its own direction. I am therefore forced to the conclusion that as no efforts have been made either in the legislatures of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in the direction indicated by my hon. friend, the law has been found satisfactory to the people of those provinces.

On the same ground no change should be made in Manitoba or British Columbia. On the next page the right hon. gentleman continues :

Be that as it may, we have come to the conclusion that the best method we can adopt as regards the preparation of voters' lists for the elections for this House is the adoption of the local lists.

On page 7467, the then Solicitor General, speaking of the amendments which were sent down by the Senate, said :

Mr. ALCORN.

The second amendment provides that on page 2, line 5, paragraph 'c' be left out and in lieu thereof the paragraph 'c' framed by the Senate, be inserted. I would therefore beg to move:

That the amendments be disagreed to for the following reasons:—

Because the amendments made by the honourable the Senate to the Bill, excepting from its operation the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, and providing for a special revision of the voters' lists in those provinces for elections to this House, is inconsistent with and subversive of the general principle of the Bill.

There the hon. Solicitor General (Sir Charles Fitzpatrick) hit the nail precisely on the head, that is precisely what this government is proposing to do with Manitoba and British Columbia.

That the procedure proposed by the hon. the Senate for securing the revision of such lists, under the authority of this parliament, is wholly inadequate, and cannot be rendered effective without creating complicated and costly machinery incompatible with the object of the Bill.

At page 7543 the Solicitor General said:

The object of the amendment to which I will especially address myself is that which practically provides in effect that in so far as three of the provinces are concerned, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, there shall be for these provinces Dominion lists instead of provincial lists as exist elsewhere. . . . We are by this Bill adopting the principle that obtained in Canada from 1867 to 1885, during which period we had a provincial franchise and provincial lists for federal purposes.

On the next page he says:

Now not only had we those lists from 1867 to 1885 without a single word of protest from the Senate, and without a single word of protest from the Conservative party, but when, in 1885, the Dominion Franchise Act was introduced, a strong protest was made by the Liberal party against the introduction of the principle of having the federal lists under the control of federal officers, and, Sir, not only was there a protest made at that time by the Liberal party against the principle adopted, but in season and out of season since that time the voice of the Liberal party has been raised throughout the whole of the Dominion in protest against these federal franchise lists, and in favour of the principle we are now seeking to carry out by this Bill. Not only did we raise that protest in the course of the debate in 1885, but we protested in the election of 1887, the election of 1891,the election of 1896 and in those elections that was the chief plank in the Liberal platform, in addition to the platform laid down by the Liberal party at Ottawa in 1893.

Now we have the fact that these conditions existed from 1867 to 1885, we have the fact that in 1885 the Liberal party protested against the change, we have in addition the fact that in each recurring election the chief plank in the Liberal platform was a reversion to the condition of things existing before 1885, and we have also the fact that this policy was inserted in the Liberal platform at the Ottawa convention. The Liberal party came into power, therefore, with an express mandate from the people to repeal the Dominion Franchise law of 1885, and to refer to the provincial lists, and we find that at the very first working session after the change of government, the session of 1897, a Franchise Bill was introduced by us. Not only do we find that, but we find also that because we wanted the Bill to be thoroughly understood and that the public might know what our intentions were, that Bill was placed before the people for their consideration, and at this session, a Franchise Bill was the very first measure disposed of. Under these circumstances, is it possible to conceive for a moment that there can be any doubt that we, the majority in the House of Commons, as now constituted, the supporters of the present government came here with an imperative mandate from the people of the Dominion to rid them of the useless and expensive system known as the Dominion Franchise Act and to substitute this proposed law. Not only did we receive that mandate from the people of the Dominion, but, sir, when we introduced our legislation in this House, there was not a single voice within these walls raised in favour of the old Dominion Franchise Act, and it went down to its grave unwept, unhonoured and unsung. In view of the fact that our desire is to obey the imperative mandate of the people, in view of the fact that our desire is to rid the people of this country of this incubus in the form of the Dominion Franchise Act, an Act which has cost us in the years it was in operation over $2,000,000, an Act which has not been revised for the last four years and that hon. gentlemen opposite dare not revise, because of the expense incurred in that revision, in view of these facts, we are justified in carrying out our promise to the people and in endeavouring as far as possible to place the making of the lists under the control of the people themselves, thus proving that the Liberal party have and always had confidence in the people, as distinguished from hon. gentlemen opposite, who, because they did not trust the people wanted to keep the control of the lists in the hands of officials appointed by themselves.

That is peculiarly applicable at present. Not only have this government no confidence in the Conservative governments of Manitoba and British Columbia, but they have no confidence in the officials whom these governments will appoint and no confidence in the people of those provinces who, they say, may be interfered with, and improperly interfered with, by these provincial officials.

I need not observe that this present Bill absolutely departs from the principle laid down in the extracts I have read and does so because Manitoba and British Columbia are now Conservative. This government insists on having lists made, in the words of the premier, by their own henchmen and parasites who feed on this government. We know what kind of lists we will get if this is done. Mr. Mills' words will be peculiarly applicable.

Section 13 then introduces the principle of a numbered ballot which is a vicious principle and wholly unnecessary. If the object were a legitimate object it would be served by requiring the voter to produce to the deputy returning officer a certificate from the returning officer that the voter's name is on the general list and by mistake was not transferred to the separate list. There should also be a clause inserted in the oath to the same effect. The voter himself should swear that he was on the general list. I invite hon. gentlemen opposite to imagine the operation of clauses 1 and 13 along the line of the National Transcontinental Railway. Here you will find a horde of thousands of foreigners and other workmen, birds of passage, and their contractor will consider it his duty to the Construction Commission and the government who employ and pay him to place all those men upon the lists and to vote them. Being foreigners in great part they will be indistinguishable and it will be impossible to trace them out afterwards; their names will be unintelligible and they will be untraceable. A petition against a government supporter elected by that vote in such a constituency as I have suggested would be without hope. The witnesses whom the petitioner might wish to subpœna, the foreigners and other workmen along the line would be scattered, no one could tell where, and the cost of endeavouring to procure evidence would be absolutely prohibitive. Therefore I ask if it would not be much better to take the provincial lists as the province provides them and not place upon the country the expense of separate lists and open the door, as clause 13 will, to a great deal of corruption in making the lists and recording the vote.

Section 17, as hon. gentlemen are aware, absolutely destroys the secrecy of the ballot. At this late hour I shall not make any extended observations upon that, but will merely say that the Bill which I had the honour to present to this House contained a clause embodying the same principle, but in conversation with my colleagues in the House I find I have yet to meet a single gentleman who is in favour of that principle, and if my Bill was before the House I would drop that section.

I commend the language of section 28 to the consideration of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and other members. It appears to me that it directly authorizes and legalizes the commission by a corporation or association incorporated for political purposes alone, the doing of anything and everything that every person else is by the prohibition contained in the section forbidden to do, so that such corporation or association may collect and distribute in the most corrupt manner possible an election fund of any size.

Under these circumstances and subject to what the leader of the opposition (Mr.

R. L. Borden) may say, but voicing I believe the sentiment of every hon. gentleman on this side of the House, I will observe that if these sections to which I have directed attention, sections 1, 13, 17 and 28, be maintained, the opposition will exhaust their constitutional rights in opposing this Bill before this House.

On motion of Mr. D. W. Bole, the debate was adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT—THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the House adjourns, I direct the attention of the First Minister to the following statement of the Toronto 'Globe' of to-day :—

It is said here that when the Quebec bridge eventually spans the St. Lawrence it will not be from the points on either shore which it was intended the bridge should link, but at a site farther up the river near Batiscan, where it will not be necessary to erect an arch of such gigantic proportions as was proposed for the first structure. This change of site will necessitate a change in the surveyed route of the Grand Trunk Pacific between St. Maurice river and Quebec.

I would ask the Prime Minister if there is any foundation for this report.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is not the faintest foundation for it. So far as I know the width of the river at Batiscan must be twice the width of the river Cap Rouge.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I regret that I should have been so much misled by a leading Liberal organ.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The best men will fall sometimes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business tomorrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I suppose we will take up the same thing.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 6, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

POST OFFICE ACT—AMENDMENTS.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 162) to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. ALCORN.

He said : The first object of this Bill is to give a one cent drop letter to cities and towns where the free delivery system exists. The second amendment refers to the appointment of a post office superintendent. According to the Act as it now stands, he must have been ten years in the service ; I also wish to amend the Act and provide for the appointment of a financial superintendent who will supervise the books in all branches of the postal service. The work of auditing and inspecting post offices all over the Dominion was given to the inspectors, but it is found, particularly in the Northwest and in sparsely settled districts of the country, that the work of the inspectors is already too large to allow them to audit thoroughly the books in each post office, especially in the large cities. I have decided to appoint a financial superintendent whose duties will be similar to those of the post office superintendent. He will have the supervision and the auditing of the books from one end of the Dominion to the other. I will give further explanations on the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. When the hon. gentleman is fixing the rate on drop letters in cities at one cent, is it his intention under this Bill also to provide for a half cent rate on drop letters in towns, villages and rural districts ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. When the time comes to discuss this Bill more fully, I will explain to the hon. gentleman that this rate of one cent in cities where the free delivery system exists will help me to give more postal facilities to the rural sections of the country. At present the large cities of the Dominion are paying for the service in the rural portions. We are only giving the cities what already exists in other places where no letter carrier system exists. The one cent rate exists in other portions of the country, provided the letters are not sent outside the locality served by the post office.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When was the one cent rate changed ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The one cent drop letter rate was adopted in 1875, under the Mackenzie government, and it was abolished I think in 1889.

Mr. LENNOX. Does this provision for a one cent drop letter apply only to cities, or to all places where there are drop letters at present ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The one cent drop letter will apply only to those places where the letter carrier system exists.

Mr. LENNOX. We have in the town of Barrie a delivery system in what is called the old part of the town. A portion of the present town of Barrie was called at one time Allandale, and there is a post office there. It is now all one town, and I understand that if a letter is dropped somewhere midway between Barrie and Allandale, and it happens to be carried into Barrie, though it is directed to Allandale, then the drop letter rate won't apply, it will have to be paid for the same as if sent outside the town. I think that is hardly fair. Where the whole district is practically one town within a radius of a mile, there should be only one rate.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is there a free delivery system ?

Mr. LENNOX. There is in the old part of the town, and Allandale is in the same town.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Then the one cent rate will apply.

Mr. LENNOX. At present there is no delivery in the Allandale portion of the town of Barrie, what we call the sixth ward, because when the delivery was established in Barrie, Allandale was not then a portion of the town. The population of Barrie is about 7,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that the one cent system was abolished in 1879 ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am not very positive as to the date.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it was abolished when the new two cent rate came into operation, by Sir William Mulock in 1897. I think the one cent rate was abolished at the same time that the two cent rate was adopted for all letters.

Mr. PORTER. In preparing this Bill has the minister taken into consideration the condition that exists in the post office at Belleville, to which I have called his attention several times ? Within the corporation limits of Bellevile there are two post offices, the principal post office for the central and business portion of the town, and another post office situated near the Grand Trunk Railway. We have not free postal delivery there. Generally, persons depositing letters in the town office for delivery to persons residing near the station post office, put on a one cent stamp, thinking that is the proper postage. A great many advertisements, circulars and things of that sort are dropped in the main office at Belleville for delivery to people near the station.

When the people go to the station post office for their mail they are met with a demand for the payment of two cents postage on a letter posted at the down town office. They pay the two cents postage, the letter being sealed, they know nothing as to what its contents may be, and then they find that it is an advertisement for dry goods or a show or something that is of no interest to them. It has been considered a hardship that that should exist. I have taken occasion to call the minister's attention to the fact that the delivery of letters at the station post office does not incur any materially greater expense than does the delivery at the central post office. Mails are carried from the central office to the Grand Trunk station for distribution by the railway company and in passing to the railway and back to the post office they pass the other post office door and they could collect the mail there as well. No great expense would be incurred, a great saving to the people would be effected and it seems to me, if the minister has not considered this matter, it should be considered now that an amendment is being made to the Act and that situation should be relieved. I will ask him to give it his careful consideration.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

QUEBEC TERCENTENARY—LEGAL HOLIDAYS.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE asked :

Does the government purpose proclaiming one or more legal holidays during the coming celebration of the tercentenary?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The government does not think that it would be advisable to make one or more legal holidays during the coming celebration of the Tercentenary. We think it would be inconvenient to many people outside the city of Quebec, especially those who are at the celebration, but, if it is thought advisable for the city of Quebec to have a legal holiday this can be done by proclamation by the mayor.

QUEBEC TERCENTENARY—DESIGNS FOR POSTAGE STAMPS.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE asked :

1. Has the Postmaster General asked for tenders for the designs of the issue of the postage stamps for the third Centenary?
2. If so, from whom were they asked, and which was accepted?
3. If there were no tenders, has the Postmaster General conferred with certain artists on this subject? If so, with whom?
4. What price was asked by the artist or artists, and for how many designs?
5. Was this price accepted? If not, why not?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. and 2. No.

3. 4 and 5. The department has had no official communication with any artist on this subject.

QUEBEC TERCENTENARY—FRENCH AND ENGLISH ON SOUVENIR POSTAGE STAMPS.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE asked :

Has the Postmaster General reached a decision concerning the use of French and English on the souvenir postage stamps to be issued at the third Centenary?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). The matter is still under consideration.

MR. FRITZ CIRKEL, M.E.

Mr. GANONG asked :

1. What remuneration was paid to Fritz Cirkel, M.E., for preparing the report issued by the Geological Department on the graphite properties in Canada?
2. How many copies have been printed?
3. Is Fritz Cirkel, M.E., at present in the employ of the government? If so, at what salary?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Mines). Some of these questions were answered on March 16.

1. The report on Graphite was made to the Mines Branch of the Department of Mines; contract price for the Monograph complete with drawings and photographs, $1,300.
2. 3,000.
3. Mr. Cirkel is at present engaged in writing a monograph on chrome iron ore deposits of the eastern townships at a salary of $250 per month.

WHARF AT WELCHPOOL, NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. GANONG asked:

1. Has any estimate been made by the government engineer as to the cost of a public wharf at Welchpool, Charlotte county, New Brunswick? If so, what is the estimated cost of same?
2. Has the location been purchased by the government? If so, from whom and at what price?
3. Is it the intention of the government to include an amount in the supplementary estimates to build this wharf?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) Yes.
   (b) $10,500.
2. No.
3. Matter under consideration.

HON. ADELARD TURGEON.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE asked :

1. Is it true that the government intends to appoint to the next vacancy in the Senate the Hon. Adelard Turgeon, Minister of Crown Lands in the Quebec Cabinet?
2. If so, is the government aware that Mr. Turgeon is accused of graft in the administration of his department, an accusation of which he has not yet been exonerated?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. The government does not intend to appoint Mr. Turgeon or anybody to the next vacancy that may occur in the Senate. It is time to consider this question when vacancies arise.
2. I think this question is out of order and should not be put, but, on the other hand, I beg to say that the government has no such information.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—USE OF THE FRENCH LANGUAGE.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE asked :

1. Is the Minister of Railways and Canals informed that the notices for the arrival and delay of trains posted at the stations of the Intercolonial Railway, in the province of Quebec, more particularly at Lévis, are solely in English, contrary to the provisions of the Railway Act?
2. Is the minister aware that a great number of employees of the Intercoloniail Railway in the province of Quebec cannot speak French.
3. Is the minister aware that the French language is not employed concurrently with the English on the Intercolonial Railway in the province of Quebec?
4. What means does the minister propose to take to put an end to this injustice?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The department has not been so informed.
2. The department is not so aware.
3. The only railroad that prints its tickets and time cards in both languages, is the Intercolonial Railway.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—NATIONALITY OF CONTRACTORS.

Mr. WILMOT asked :

1. What is the nationality of Messrs. Foley, Welsh & Stewart, contractors on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway construction?
2. Does the government know that it is asserted that Canadian citizens competing for contracts under this firm are discriminated against in favour of foreigners?
3. Is duty collected on railway construction plant coming from the United States into Canada?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railway and Canals) :

1. The department has no information.
2. No.
3. The Customs Department states that duty is collected on all such importations.

THE STEAMER 'LADY EVELYN.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. What date did the steamer 'Lady Evelyn' leave Rimouski for winter quarters in Sydney?

2. What date did the steamer 'Lady Evelyn' return to Rimouski this year?

3. What use is made of the steamer 'Lady Evelyn' at Sydney during the winter months?

4. Has the Post Office Department a service with the island of Anticosti? If so, what is the nature of the service, the number of trips made by steamer, the estimated cost of service per annum, and the population on the island?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. and 3. The 'Lady Evelyn' did not winter at Sydney but at Quebec.

2. The steamer left Quebec for Rimouski on the 30th April last, and after landing the mails at that point on the incoming and outgoing mail steamers this week, leaves for Sydney to perform a like service at Sydney, in accordance with the terms of the transatlantic mail service contract.

4. Yes, between Quebec and Anticosti. The contract is with Messrs. Holliday Brothers—a distance of 410 miles—three trips per month, cost $1,050 per season. The population of Anticosti is estimated at 442.

WHARF AT CHASE'S POINT, NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. WILMOT asked:

1. Has the Minister of Public Works received a petition from the inhabitants of Chase's Point, on the St. John river, New Brunswick, asking for aid in the construction of a public wharf at that point? If so, how many names are on said petition?

2. Did said petition contain a clause pledging the petitioners in the case the prayer of the same were granted, to support the Liberal candidate in the next federal election?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) Yes. (b) Forty-three.

2. No.

SUPPLIES FOR STEAMER 'PETREL.'

Mr. T. CHISHOLM—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. What persons furnished supplies to the steamer 'Petrel' between March 31, 1907 and April 30, 1908?

2. What was the amount paid to each such person, and what was the date of each payment?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I would suggest that my hon. friend make a motion immediately for a return and then the papers can be brought down. The answer to this question is very lengthy.

Mr. BLAIN. Will it stand as an immediate notice of motion?

Mr. SPEAKER. It will stand as a notice of motion for a return.

Mr. BLAIN. I move for a return showing:

1. What persons furnished supplies to the steamer 'Petrel' between March 31, 1907 and April 30, 1908?

2. What was the amount paid to each such person, and what was the date of each payment?

Mr. SPEAKER. By leave of the House this motion is made. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

DEPUTY MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I inquire of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), as I have inquired on two or three previous occasions when he happened to be out of the House, whether or not the resignation of the deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been accepted or whether any action has been taken in regard to it?

Mr. BRODEUR. The deputy minister has not tendered his resignation but has asked for leave of absence and for superannuation. His request in regard to leave of absence has been granted and the other request is engaging the attention of the government.

ALLEGED PADDING OF PAY LISTS AT SOREL.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like also to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries if he has forgotten to bring down that report of Mr. Gaudet, of Sorel. He promised the other day that he would bring it down.

Mr. BRODEUR. I received the report two days ago and I will bring it down. I have not received the evidence yet, but I will bring it down as soon as I receive it.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—MR. JUSTICE CASSELS.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, if, on the 11th March, he was correctly reported in 'Hansard' as having said that Mr. Roy, who was employed at Sorel, had been padding the pay-lists and that the amount involved was considerable. I would further like to ask the minister if he does not consider that as a case where there has been, on the part of an employee of the department, a lack of conscience sufficient to place all the details before Mr. Watson commissioned by the government to inquire into matters appertaining to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and does not the minister think that in addition to other matters placed before Mr. Justice Cassels this matter should be entrusted to Mr. Watson to be speedily inquired into by Mr. Justice Cassels?

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand my hon. friend refers to the investigation which has taken place ?

Mr. BENNETT. Not to the investigation but to the circumstances of the case.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no objection to that. I shall put all the papers before Mr. Watson. The question has been inquired into by Mr. Gaudet and I shall bring down the report.

Mr. BENNETT. I am to understand that this case will be investigated by Mr. Justice Cassels ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know; it would be for the judge himself to decide whether it would be investigated or not. The papers will be brought before Mr. Watson.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Aylesworth for the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Mr. DAVID W. BOLE (Winnipeg). Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to attempt to controvert the speech delivered by the hon. member for Prince Edward county (Mr. Alcorn) last night. I sat attentively for two and a quarter hours, listening to the speech of the hon. gentleman, and I must state, without any intention of offence, that the speech did not contain very much that can be answered.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOLE. I find in 'Hansard' this morning that 40 pages are occupied by the hon. gentleman, 35 of these pages being quotations from the Election Acts of the Dominion, of Ontario, of Manitoba and of British Columbia and letters which have appeared and which a good many of us have read in the public press. But I think I am voicing the sentiments of a good many members when I state that the substance of the hon. gentleman's speech is contained in the last paragraph in which he says :

> Under these circumstances and subject to what the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) may say, but voicing I believe the sentiment of every hon. gentleman on this side of the House, I will observe that if these sections to which I have directed attention, sections 1, 13, 17 and 28, be maintained, the opposition will exhaust their constitutional rights in opposing this Bill before this House.

I have no doubt that an hon. gentleman is within his constitutional rights in spreading 35 pages of extracts upon 'Hansard,' but if you allow me to suggest I cannot see that it adds much to the dignity or the value of the debate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether it is not necessary to consider those Acts of British Columbia and Manitoba ?

Mr. FOSTER. Not for him.

Mr. BOLE. It may be, but all these Acts are in the statutes and can be hunted up and read without spreading them on 35 pages of 'Hansard.' Neither will I attempt to discuss the thin-red-line scandal which has been paraded not only before this House but up and down the country and spread on the newspapers of the country for the last four years. I think I am right when I state that the thin-red-line campaign has completly collapsed in this debate. It does appear to me to be very strange indeed that gentlemen occupying very important positions in connection with the Conservative party, after making such a campaign on this thin-red-line, should have utterly abandoned it in the speeches which were delivered by the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and the hon. member for Prince Edward county (Mr. Alcorn).

Neither will I make any serious attempt to show the necessity of clause 1 of the Bill, which is now before the House for consideration. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) performed tnat duty so successfully, so exhaustively and so completely, that it does appear to me that there is nothing left for either side of the House to state with respect to that clause. There is, however, one feature of the Bill which has not been brought to the attention of the House by the Minister of Justice, perhaps because he does not feel in respect to that feature as I do, and perhaps because I stand alone ; but my feeling has always been that in a growing country like the province of Manitoba there should be only one revision of the voters' lists and that immediately preceding an election. We have in the province of Manitoba and other western provinces a great many people coming from the province of Ontario, the maritime provinces and the province of Quebec, who are good citizens of the Dominion of Canada and who have a perfect right, in my judgment, to reflect their opinion on political matters when an election comes around. I think also that the one year provision with respect to residents should sufficiently qualify an Englishman, a British subject coming from England, to become an elector in the province of Manitoba. The naturalization laws are sufficient, I think, to protect the native-born people and the Canadian citizens from undue influence from alien quarters.

Another objection that we feel in the province of Manitoba with respect to these annual personal revisions of the lists and registration, is the tremendous expense involved. It is simply impossible for either party to secure a completed list in the province of British Columbia or Manitoba without of a very large annual expenditure, and I have thought that when all purposes will be properly served by a revision immediately before an election, this will be the best course.

The Minister of Justice stated yesterday that the province of Manitoba anticipated an election by certain legislation in 1906. He did not put it in that way but that is the meaning I got from it. It is not the only occasion on which the legislature of the province of Manitoba anticipated a Dominion election by legislation. Mr. Hugh John Macdonald, during the short period of his premiership of the province of Manitoba, I think in 1900, passed a Franchise Act in many respects containing a good deal of merit. It provided, among other things, an educational qualification. No man was allowed to vote under that Act unless he was able to read or write in one of five languages, English, French, German, Scandinavian, or Icelandic. Under that condition and under that clause of the Act, no matter how well a Galician was educated in his own language, it was impossible for him to vote. The result was that a Galician, no matter how well educated he was in his own language, was not able to qualify himself for the franchise unless he was able to establish that right in one of these five languages.

Mr. GREENWAY. Unless he has been seven years in the country.

Mr. BOLE. Yes, unless he has been seven years in the country.

Mr. WARD. Is that law in force now?

Mr. BOLE. No. In the Dominion Franchise Act, I understand, there is a provision that in the event of any legislature discriminating against any class, that class can vote under oath. It was the intention of the Liberal party—and I am one of the guilty parties—to vote the Galicians under that provision, but the legislature of the province of Manitoba, anticipating that Act, struck out the educational clause of the Hugh John Macdonald Election Act. But when they came to make provision for the registration of the Galicians, who were scattered here and there over the province in groups, they placed the registration booths at such a great distance from the Galician colonies, and kept them open so short a time, that these people were practically disfranchised.

Now, the hon. leader of the opposition in his speech yesterday made some statements which I am going to quote. On page 8119 of 'Hansard' I find the following:

I would like to remark once more that no unfairness in making the lists for any province has been brought to the attention of the House except in the statement of the Minister of Justice based upon a hypothesis which he has not been able to prove. It has been stated to me that the Prime Minister of Manitoba has challenged, both inside and outside the legislature, his political opponents or any person within the province to bring to his attention the case of any man who has been unfairly deprived of his franchise in that province.

On page 8121 I find the following from the same hon. gentleman:

I would like my hon. friends opposite to give some names, any instance in Manitoba or in British Columbia which would justify the interposition of this parliament.

On page 8123 I find the following:

Show me, in the first place, the wrong that has taken place under that Manitoba Act.

And then on page 8150, in the speech of the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn), I find the following:

And Hon. Robert Rogers, also a member of the Manitoba government has issued a challenge which has never been taken up, that, if in one authentic case it could be shown that even one man had lost the franchise through the wanton or wilful act of an officer of the government, every seat in the province would be allowed to go by acclamation to the Reform candidate in the next election.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it becomes my very unpleasant duty to lay before the House some evidence with respect to these things. The hon. gentlemen have issued a challenge and I am going to accept and respond to that challenge. I do so only with respect to my own constituency. I would very much prefer that some other member would perform this unpleasant duty, but as the incident which I am about to relate occurred in my own constituency, and the evidence respecting the same was submitted to me, it becomes my duty to present that evidence to the House, to show, not only that one man has been deprived of his right to vote under the Act of the province of Manitoba, but that no less than 450 good citizens in one provincial constituency, namely, about one-fortieth of the province, have had their votes nullified by 450 names being placed upon the voters' list by means of fraud, forgery, perjury and impersonation. I will now read some affidavits which have been made by people who are personally interested.

Mr. STAPLES. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman for Winnipeg the date of the affidavits which he is about to read.

Mr. BOLE. The date will be embraced in the affidavits themselves.

Province of Manitoba, to wit:

I, Theodore Rudneski, agent, make oath and say, as follows:

1. I am personally, intimately acquainted with W. H. Hastings, the organizer in the province of Manitoba for the Conservative party, and I have been acquainted with the said Hastings for upwards of two years.

2. About the middle of the month of January 1907, I pointed out to the said Hastings that a large number of foreigners, particularly of the class usually known as Galicians, were residing in various parts of the city of Winnipeg who were at that time entitled to take out naturalization papers in Canada, but who had not at that time done so and who were otherwise qualified to become electors in the elections then in contemplation in the province of Manitoba.

3. Shortly after the middle of January, 1907, the said W. H. Hastings, in my presence, made arrangements with a committee of six composed of Joseph Makarski, Thomas Snezek, Frank Szablewski, George Czornij, Michael Humilowicz, Thomas Jestremski, to proceed at once to make up a list of Conservative Galicians eligible for naturalization.

4. The said W. H. Hastings further arranged with me to personally superintend the work of the committee referred to in the preceding paragraph.

5. Prior to the third day of February, 1907, the committee aforesaid and other friends of the Conservative party made up a list of some 450, more or less, Galicians, Polanders, Germans, and other foreigners said to be at that time eligible for naturalization.

6. Prior to the said third day of February, 1907, the signatures of a few of the men on the list of 450 as aforesaid, were obtained by different parties to blank oaths of residence and oaths of allegiance on the forms in common use in connection with the naturalization of aliens, but the greater number on the list aforesaid had, prior to the third day of February, 1907, signed no papers whatever or taken no oaths or affidavit whatever with a view of complying with the requirements of the Naturalization Act.

7. On Sunday the third day of February, A.D. 1907, I, this deponent, and Thomas Snezek, Frank Szablewski, Thomas Jestremski, Billey Cichocki, Vladmir Rudko and Julian Nowacki went, at the request of the said W. H. Hastings, in the Maw block on Market square, in the city of Winnipeg, and set to work about two o'clock in the afternoon to prepare the naturalization papers for the parties on the list of 450, thereabouts, above referred to.

8. I, this deponent, and the other parties referred to in paragraph 7 hereof, continued the work of preparing the said naturalization papers on about 2 o'clock on Sunday the 3rd day of February, 1907, until about 3 o'clock in the morning of the 4th day of February, 1907, having taken a short intermission for supper about 6 o'clock on Sunday evening.

9. I was personally present at the time and place aforesaid and I saw the said Thomas Jestremski sign as commissioner, the various naturalization papers aforesaid and certify that the contents of the said papers were sworn to or affirmed by the respective parties mentioned therein, without any of such parties swearing or affirming or being present on the occasion in question.

10. The parties referred to in paragraph 7 hereof, in my presence wrote on such of the oaths of allegiance and oaths of residence as had not already been signed by the applicants for naturalization, the name of such applicants for naturalization in the absence of such applicants and without any authority whatsoever for the doing.

11. In the case of a number of naturalization papers previously filled in by some parties and signed by the applicant for naturalization, the papers had been improperly filled in and a number of the parties referred to paragraph 7 hereof, in my presence did destroy the papers so signed by applicants for naturalization and made out new ones in lieu thereof and signed the names of the applicants for naturalization to the oaths therein contained, and the said last-mentioned papers were then completed by the said Thomas Jestremski in the same manner as is set out in paragraph 9 hereof.

12. The only commissioner present at the time and place referred to in paragraph 7 hereof, was Thomas Jestremski, and it was necessary in order to complete the naturalization papers for the 450 applicants, more or less, above referred to, for the said Thomas Jestremski to sign his name some twelve or fifteen hundred times, more or less, and the said Thomas Jestremski complained from time to time towards the latter part of the session in question of fatigue and complained that he was too tired of writing to complete all the papers. To overcome this the said Jestremski told others of the parties referred to in paragraph 7 hereof, to sign the names of the said Jestremski to a number of the papers which were being made out as aforesaid, and the same were signed accordingly.

13. I am personally acquainted with Mr. Irving, an employee in the Department of the Attorney General for the province of Manitoba.

14. The naturalization papers for the 450 men, more or less, had, prior to the third day of February, 1907, on several occasions been the subject of conversation between Irving and me, this deponent. On the occasion of the conversations aforesaid between myself and the said Irving the said Irving had particularly impressed upon me the necessity of dating the said naturalization papers back to a date early in January, 1907, giving as his reason therefor, that the said papers were required by law to be on file in the county court of Winnipeg for at least three weeks prior to the fourth day of February, 1907, in order that the certificate of naturalization might on the last-mentioned date be issued to the said parties respectively, but stated that if the papers were regular on the face of them he could get them through in a few days without any notice.

15. On the occasion of my conversation with the said Irving the said Irving repeatedly told me that if the said naturalization papers were dated as aforesaid, he, the said Irving, was able to get the said papers through the county court of Winnipeg on four days notice.

16. Instructions were, to my personal knowledge, given to the effect that the 450 sets of naturalization papers above referred to should be delivered on the morning of Monday, February 4, to Mr. Irving of the Attorney General's Department in order that the said Irving might get the certificates of naturalization for the said parties through the county court of Winnipeg on the said February 4, 1907.

17. I personally counted the sets of naturalization papers so delivered to the said Irving and the same numbered 450, more or less, and were delivered along with 125, more or less, other sets of naturalization papers to the said Irving as I am informed and verily believe, on the said February 4, 1907.

18. Between February 4, 1907, and the 12th day of the same month the certificates of naturalization for the 450 men, more or less, above referred to, were delivered to me personally by the said Irving at the office of the Conservative club in the Maw block aforesaid, and I am personally aware that a greater number of the said 450 were subsequently registered as electors on the lists of the electors compiled in the various constituencies in the city of Winnipeg.

Sworn before me at the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, March 21, in the year of our Lord, 1907.

(Signed) R. T. HUGGARD,
A commissioner, &c., &c., in B.R.
(Signed) THEODORE RUDNESKI.

Province of Manitoba, to wit:

L. Joseph Szymanski of 177 Syndicate street of Winnipeg, carpenter, make oath and say as follows:

On the 30th and 31st days of January and the 1st and 2nd days of February, 1907, I was working for Joseph Makarski and T. Jestremski securing the names of parties who were not already naturalized. I was told by these men to simply get their names. I was to bring them to the Conservative club rooms in the Maw block in the city of Winnipeg. I secured 80 names and handed the same over to Theo. Rudneski in the said club rooms. I simply took the names and addresses on a sheet of paper.

Mr. Rudneski then informed me that in a few days he would give me the certificates of naturalization, and on Friday the 8th day of February, 1907, the said certificates of naturalization for the parties whose names I had handed in were handed to me by Mr. Rudneski.

I had these naturalization certificates with me on the days of registration, and after the parties had registered I handed them their certificates of naturalization.

I remember on the 7th day of March, the election day, and on the Sunday prior to the 7th day of March there were delivered to me at my house by Jos. Makarki and Theo. Jestremski three kegs of beer in a sleigh, and when they gave the same to me they told me to give this beer to parties who would vote for Mitchell. On Wednesday, March 6th, the same parties brought two more kegs of beer and told me to treat the parties who were voting for Mitchell.

I leave a clause out of this affidavit referring to the distribution which is not relevant to the case.

Mr. BERGERON. If the hon. gentleman does not read the whole thing, that part which is not ready cannot go upon 'Hansard' without the consent of the House.

Mr. BOLE. Then I will read the rest of it:—

I remember on the 7th day of March, the election day, and on Sunday prior to the 7th day of March there were delivered to me at my house by Jos. Makarski and Theo. Jestremski three kegs of beer in a sleigh, and when they gave the same to me they told me to give this beer to parties who would vote for Mitchell.

An hon. MEMBER. Who was Mitchell?

Mr. BOLE. He was the Conservative candidate in the north constituency in the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. BERGERON. Was he elected?

Mr. BOLE. He was elected by 400 majority.

On Wednesday, March 6, the same parties brought two more kegs of beer and tol me to treat the parties who wrere voting for Mitchell.

Before the election I saw an express rig deliver three kegs of beer at 180 St. Stephen street at the house of Joseph Makarski and and six kegs of beer at Jos. Makarski's house at 113 Lusted street.

At polling division No. 1 during election dav I know a number of people, at least ten voted on other people's names, Joseph Makarski being the party who induced them to do so.

One voted as Peter Bodner, one voted as Pete Meseak, one as William Szewezuk, one as John Osadezuk, and one as Simon Chrzanowski. Joseph Makarski told me on said 7th day of March, if I knew any people who were absent to get others to vote on their names and he would pay them money if necessary.

A. E. BOWLES,
A commissioner in B.R.

Another affidavit is as follows:

Province of Manitoba,
To wit.

Winnipeg, March 22nd, 1907.

I, William Cichoski, of 892 Pritchard avenue, of the city of Winnipeg, school tercher, make oath and say as follows:

During the months of January and Februarv 1907, I was working most of the time for the Conservative association of the city of Winnipeg, whose headquarters are in the Maw block, in the said city. My work consisted chiefly in procuring the naturalization of aliens ready for registration. I was engaged by Mr. Rudneski and Mr. Jastremski to do this work at the rate of $2 per day and $2.50 latetr on.

I know Mr. W. H. Hastings the Conservative organizer, and often saw him in said Conservative rooms directing affairs. Part of the time I was working I went through the city and had with me blank forms of application for naturalization, consisting of the forms of oath of allegiance and residence. I got sixty applications some of these papers I filled in at the time and had the parties sign them, but they were not then sworn to, others were simply signed by the applicant and were afterwards filled in and completed in the office of the said Conservative party by myself or some other person in said room.

I remember Sunday, February 3, 1907, and that day I went to said Conservative committee room and handed to Mr. Rudneski all the naturalization papers that I had taken. At that time there were working in said Conservative rooms, Mr. Rudneski, Jastremski, Szablewski, Snezek, Nowacki, Roudka and myself. Mr. Hastings was also present in the morning of said Sunday. We went there to work on the naturalization papers, and worked all day Sunday and until about 3 a.m., Monday morning, February 4. We were all working on these naturalization papers filling some out and signing same. About 450 sets of naturalization papers were completed on said Sunday, many of which were not signed at all by the applicant, but some of us employed signed for them or made their mark.

Mr. Jestremski was the only commissioner present and he signed as commissioner, although none of the parties who were making application were present.

The work was so tiresome for the commissioner, Mr. Jestremski, that he asked Mr. Szablewski to sign his name for him to a large number of them, which he did. When we started work in the forenoon of said Sunday, Mr. W. H. Hastings was present and knew the nature of the work that was being done. At the time these papers were made on the said Sunday, February 3, they were dated back to January 2, 5, 8, 9, 10 and 11, 1907.

Out of all the papers that were there completed on said Sunday not one of the parties thereto did appear before the commissioner and make affidavit to same.

On Friday, the 18th day of February, 1907, I was again in said Conservative committee rooms and there I saw a large number of certificates of naturalization corresponding with the papers that had been made out on February 3. Many of those papers were taken by Mr. Rudneski to the Conservative north end committee and were there handed by Mr. Rudneski to the workers of each polling subdivision to be by them handed to the parties for whom they were intended. Many of these papers had no street or number address and they were retained by Mr. Rudneski.

On February 12, registration day, two parties named David Knaur, 855 Aberdeen street, and Rinepart Knaur, 855 Aberdeen street, applied at registration district No. 16 where I was acting as interpreter for the government and mae application for registration to the clerk, and at said time they said they had only been two years in the country and had no naturalization papers, but would like to get on the list, and the clerk said: 'it is all right.' I will put yiur name down without making a declaration.

(Sgd.) WILLIAM CICHOSKI.

Sworn before me at the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, in the year of Our Lord, 1907.

R. T. HUGGARD.

Mr. WARD. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bole) allow me a question ?

Mr. BOLE. Yes.

Mr. WARD. Who is the clerk of the court in Winnipeg?

Mr. BOLE. I do not know. I have other affidavits here with respect to the same election, but as they are not pertinent to this case but apply only to cases of corruption I do not think it necessary that I should read them. I have other affidavits sent me from other constituencies which I have not now under my hand and which I have taken no pains to bring, as they do not pertain to the constituency I have the honour to represent. I am ashamed that there are people in that constituency who would lend themselves to this diabolical plot. These affidavits to which I have referred, I understand, will be used by others in this debate.

I regret exceedingly that I have had to inflict upon the House these affidavits, but, when challenged by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) to give instances and state names to prove that there was bad work in connection with the voters' list in the province of Manitoba, I felt it my duty to answer the challenge and submit the evidence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question before he takes his seat. Are not the proceedings that he has been detailing at great length to the House proceedings under the Naturalization Act enacted by this parliament?

Mr. BOLE. You say the Naturalization Act is legislation by this parliament ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These are proceedings under it.

Mr. BOLE. That doesn't make any difference. The challenge which you issued was this, that there was nothing wrong with the preparation of the list. My answer is that there are 400 men whose names were put on that list fraudulently.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In what way would the Bill now before the House redress that?

Mr. WM. J. ROCHE. Why didn't they protest ?

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman lay upon the table of the House the affidavit he has just read ?

Mr. TALBOT. It will be in the 'Hansard'.

Mr. HAGGART. I think he should lay it on the table, and I ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is often the case when an hon. member reads a document for him to lay it on the table when requested to do so. I am not at the moment prepared to say whether the rule goes the length of requiring it absolutely to be done by a private member. In the case of a minister who quotes from a public document, the rule requires him to produce it. I am not quite clear at the moment, that it is necessary for a private member to do so and I will have to consider the point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I entirely agree that it is a point proper to be taken into consideration by yourself. But where documents of this character are read before the House accusing persons not members of this House of crimes for which they might be punished under the law, I think, if there is no precedent for it, it is time that a precedent should be established that an hon. gentleman doing so should lay the document on the Table of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot rule on that point at this moment, I will have to reserve it for consideration. My present view is that in the case of private members quoting documents there is nothing absolutely requiring them to lay the documents on the table. It is frequently done, but I do not think there is any absolute rule. However, I am not prepared offhand to give an authoritative ruling on the question.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Bole) arose about an hour ago to debate the second reading of this Bill. Although I listened attentively to what he said, I was unable to see wherein his remarks threw any light upon the provisions of the Bill which the Minister of Justice introduced into this House yesterday. The hon. gentleman comes into this House very seldom, and if we are to believe the newspapers he has decided, or those who have been in times gone by his supporters, have decided that he will not be in this House any more. But the hon. gentleman comes into this House, and while complaining of the quotation made by my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) of the statutes bearing directly upon the clauses of this Bill, he has no compunction in taking up the time of the House for the better part of his speech in reading names from a document which he, or somebody else, has kept concealed, and of which he is the proper vehicle for producing in this House. Why, the affidavits the hon. gentleman has read, I venture to say, he does not believe himself. If he did believe them, is he not particeps criminis when he attempts to bring before the House affidavits over a year old containing allegations of crime, and then pretends to say when and under what circumstances that crime was committed ? Surely the hon. gentleman is not trying to perpetrate a joke upon this House, at the same time we cannot believe that he is serious.

Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has read these affidavits to show, as he says, that 450 names had been fraudulently placed on the voters' lists. It does seem to me an extraordinary circumstance that although the election in which these irregularities were committed took place on the 7th of March, 1907, and they were put in the form of an affidavit on the 8th of March, the election of the hon. member who took his seat was never challenged on that ground. His election was never protested. Challenges were thrown out in the province of Manitoba, the hon. gentleman heard them, that if the irregularities could be proven the seats in question would be allowed to go by acclamation in a new election. The election is more than a year old, and not one word has been said about it in Manitoba. But now that hon. gentleman comes down to Ottawa, 2,000 miles away, and flaunts his scandal, and I submit with all respect to this House that he is a fit vehicle for the slander which he has perpetrated. My hon friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) reminds me that there has been a session of the provincial legislature of Manitoba since these offences were committed. Can the hon. member for Winnipeg refer to one word that was said in that legislature with regard to these irregularities ? I invite him to reply. The hon. gentleman is silent ; then I say his slander is silenced. Not one of his party sitting in that legislature has been brave enough to read these affidavits there. The hon. gentleman is not going to seek re-election to this House, and I do not think that any other hon. gentleman in this House who has heard him speak, is surprised that he is not going to seek re-election. The hon. gentleman knows well that after the speech he has made in this House no respectable elector in any constituency in Canada would elect him. Now I do not intend to do more than comment upon the extraordinary manner in which this measure is being pressed upon this House, and the speech made by the hon. member for Winnipeg is a fitting accompaniment to such a measure as the government is now endeavouring to foist upon the people of Canada. The hon. gentleman's speech was absolutely irrelevant, absolutely slanderous, and containing matter which no reputable man——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman should not allude to the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) as slanderous.

Mr. BOYCE. I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker, I say that it contained matter which was absolutely slanderous, and it would be slanderous outside of this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BOYCE. It would have been slanderous had it been stated outside of this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member's indirect imputation of slander should be withdrawn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think you misunderstood what my hon. friend said. He did not say that the words of the hon. member for Winnipeg were slanderous, but that the matters contained in these affidavits were slanderous of the persons against whom they were made.

Mr. SPEAKER. That would be quite appropriate.

Mr. BOYCE. That is a sample of the methods by which this measure is to be supported. Well, Sir, during the last two sessions of parliament, in the speech from the Throne, we had been promised that the government would bring down a measure to provide for the suppression of electoral corruption, and the country, in view of the number of electoral scandals which have been aired in the courts, looked for a measure and looked for it eagerly. But the Canadian people were very much disappointed last year when the government did not see fit to comply with the promise made to the country and to bring down a law then. The reason for that is very patent. Certain matters which will be disclosed in this debate, were being considered and the expediency rather than the probity of the measure was the subject of consideration during that delay. as I understand. A measure is brought down now, and in the first clause it contains extraordinary provisions with respect to the making up of the lists. We were promised an Act to suppress electoral corruption. We have been given an Act the very first clause of which promotes electoral corruption and promotes the fraudulent making of voters' lists in the most outrageous and extensive degree possible by any party. I am not saying that extravagantly because I am speaking from experience of the working of the law under the very provision which is put forward now in the first section of this Bill. I am speaking from experience drawn from the northern constituencies of Ontario where, in the last general election, this provision contained in this measure was applied and as to the fairness of this section I will leave it to the House to judge, when I have stated the facts accompanied by sworn evidence with regard to how that law was applied. It is proposed by the Bill to amend the Dominion Elections Act by providing that:

9a. Notwithstanding anything to the contrary herein contained, voters' lists for the portions of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec which consist of territory not municipally organized and where there is no regular assessment or valuation roll upon which voters' lists are based and for the several electoral districts in the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia, shall be prepared immediately after the issue of any writ for an election in any such electoral district or in any electoral district composed or partly composed of such territory, or at any time when the Governor in Council so directs; and for the purpose of preparing and giving effect to such voters' lists the Governor in Council may appoint all necessary officers and confer upon them all necessary powers.

That section is very much the same as the old section 9 of the Franchise Act of Canada which was in force prior to the last general election and which reads as follows:

Where, under the laws of a province, the voters' lists for any provincial electoral district or division or any of them are prepared not at regular intervals, but at such times as are fixed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council or some other provincial or local authority, or only from time to time for the purpose of a general or other election in immediate contemplation, the last preceding voters' lists so prepared shall be used for the purpose of any Dominion election in the territory comprised in such provincial electoral district or division, or the parts thereof for use in which they were prepared, if such lists have been prepared not more than one year before the date of the writ for such Dominion election; otherwise, new voters' lists shall be prepared, and for the purpose of preparing and giving effect to such new voters' lists, the Governor in Council may appoint all necessary officers and confer upon them all necessary powers, and in the preparation and revision and bringing into force of such new voters' lists, the provisions of the laws of the province regulating the preparation and revision and bringing into force of the provincial voters' lists in such cases shall, as far as possible, be observed and followed.

I draw your attention particularly to the last paragraph of the section as it stood as section 9 of the electoral Franchise Act which was in force prior to the last general election.

For the purpose of preparing and giving effect to such voters list, etc.

These words remain in paragraph 2 of section 1 of this proposed Act:

2. In the preparation of such lists the provisions of the laws of the province regulating the preparation and manner of revising and bringing into force the provincial voters' lists in the like cases shall as far as possible be observed and followed and no person whose name is not included in the voters' lists so prepared and revised shall be entitled to vote.

There are two lines apparently having no peculiar significance, but to my mind they have a very great significance—that no person whose name is not included in the voters' lists so prepared and revised shall be entitled to vote. It is to paragraph 2 of section 1 that I particularly desire to refer because that deals with the method that was employed by this government by virtue of an order in council which was passed at the last general election to provide, in the unorganized districts of Ontario, for making up the voters' lists in such a way as to ensure for the government the carrying of six seats in New Ontario, let the opposition do what it might to overcome the difficulty. The provisions of that law would apply up to the present time to six ridings in Ontario and to six ridings only and to no other constituencies in Canada. It would, I believe, apply to Thunder Bay, Rainy River, West Algoma, East Algoma, Nipissing, Muskoka, and, I think, to some extent, to Parry Sound. Prior to the last general election the representation from these districts was in the ratio of two to one; that is Thunder Bay, Rainy River, West Algoma and East Algoma were all one constituency called Algoma, Muskoka and Parry Sound were one and Nipissing was one. So that, by the redistribution Bill six seats were made out of three and of these three, two were represented by government members and one by an opposition member. As it is now, in consequence of the Redistribution Act and of the very drastic remedy which the government sought to employ in carrying out this proposed legislation, or rather in experimenting with it in the northern part of Ontario, the government representation has been increased to four.

Four out of six of these seats are now held by government members. The provisions introduced for the carrying out of the law, the operation of which is extended to cover the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia and the unorganized districts of Quebec and Ontario, being exactly the same provisions as were in existence and in force prior to the last general election and which were used in the last general election, we may fairly assume that those provisions will be carried out exactly along the same lines as during the elections of 1904. That no other course than that which was pursued in 1904 is possible is apparent from the very wording of the Act itself, because it gives to the Governor in Council absolutely plenary powers with regard to the carrying out of that law. By orders in council the Governor General in Council at the last moment gives the most extraordinary directions with regard to the making up of these voters' lists, and it is unreasonable to contend that when it was done once with very great success the government will hesitate to do it again and will pass orders in council which will be any more strict than those then passed? I think the experience of the average member with this government is that on an occasion like that they would learn wherein there might be some little weakness in the carrying out of the order in council and strengthen its effect along the lines along which it was intended to operate, rather than attempt to secure the strict and more moral operation of the law. During the summer and fall of 1904 a Liberal government was trying to live in Ontario. It had reached about the end of a very dissipated career and it is to be observed how hand in hand this government went with that government with regard to the carrying into force of the provisions of its law. I say advisedly that this government or somebody in sympathy with this government procured the province of Ontario to pass orders in council on July 14 and July 23 opening and directing that polls be held for elections in places in the unorganized districts of West Algoma, where there was absolutely no right whatever and no justification whatever for holding such polls and that the effect, the unreasonableness, the illegality and the expense under the present Act of instituting polls in those places was made so apparent to the provincial government of Ontario by protests from myself and others that that government retracted part of that order in council and modified it to comply a little more with a resemblance to what would be reasonable.

The order in council of the Ontario government of July 14, 1904, reads:

> Upon the recommendation of the hon. the Attorney General, the committee of council advises that pursuant to the provisions of section 62, chap. 9, R.S.O., 1897, being an Act respecting the election of members of the legislative assembly, polls be opened and held at Searchmont, Wilds and Odigiki, in the unorganized territory in the electoral district of Sault Ste. Marie.

Those are stations along the line of the Algoma Central Railway. I presume that order in council was not supposed to be sufficient by the officers of this government who desire to see this law carried out. On July 23 another order in council was passed:

> Upon the recommendation of the hon. the Attorney General, the committee of council, advises that pursuant to the provisions of section 62, chap. 9, R.S.O., 1897, being an Act respecting the election of members of the legislative assembly, that polls be opened and held in the following townships and berths in the unorganized territory in the electoral district of Sault Ste. Marie:—Aweres, Gillmour, Hodgins, Anderson, Curtis, Deroche, Jarvis, Whitman, Hamilton.

Those are townships with names, and names only, unless it be timber and rock.

That order in council provided for the opening of 14 new polls in the unorganized territory supposed to be in the Algoma district of Sault Ste. Marie, under the provisions of an Ontario statute, citing the section, and when you turn to that section you find that it is not applicable to the district of Algoma at all, but applies solely and exclusively to the district of Nipissing.

However, when it was pointed out to the Ontario government that they were committing a most extraordinary act in passing these orders in council, that in many of these townships there was not one settler, not a road a mile long, and that all the land was held by the Crown subject to a timber license, with no other settlement in it than persons who were temporarily employed in transient timber operations and no buildings of any description except the shack of the lumbermen, in response to vigorous representations, the following order in council was passed on August 17, 1904:

Upon the recommendation of the hon. the Attorney General, the committee of council advises that the order in council of July 14, 1904, directing polls to be opened and held at Searchmont, Wilds and Odigiki, in the unorganized territory in the electoral district of Sault Ste. Marie, be amended by striking out the name 'Odigiki.'

The committee further advise that the order in council of 23rd July 1904, be amended by striking out the names 'Aseres,' 'Whitman,' 'Hodgins,' 'Deroche,' 'Hamilton,' 'berth 10, range 23,' 'berth 11, range 25,' 'berth 12, range 24,' 'berth 12, range 24,' and 'berth 11, range 25.'

And the committee further advise that polls be opened and held at 'Heyden station,' 'Wabos station,' and 'Mashkode station,' in the unorganized territory in the said electoral district of Sault Ste. Marie.

Thus two months after the passing of these orders in council by the government of Ontario at the solicitation of gentlemen in conference with this government, the Ontario government were compelled on the representations of an enraged electorate to retract the order in council and abolish the polls they had then provided for. That was the first step this government endeavoured to take in carrying out this law, which was then applicable only to the constituencies in Northern Ontario, but which is now sought to be made applicable to such an extended area of territory.

The next step was that this government, on the 25th of August, 1904, just seven days after the last order in council of the Ontario government cancelling these polling places, passed an order in council providing for the making up of voters' lists in the districts of Thunder Bay, Rainy River, West Algoma, East Algoma, Nipissing, Muskoka and Parry Sound. I will not weary the House by reading this very lengthy order in council, but I will just state the effect of it. The effect of it is that under the provisions of section 9 of the Franchise Act, and pursuant to the powers contained in the latter part of that section, which powers are exactly reproduced in subsection 2 of section 1 of this Bill, an order in council was passed appointing officers to make voters' lists, and providing that the lists to be prepared under this section should be completed not later than the 10th day of September following the order in council, the order in council being passed in Ottawa on the 25th day of August, 1904. The section under which this order in council was passed, and which is incorporated in this Bill, provides that in the making up and preparation of these lists, and in the giving effect to the lists to be made up, the provisions of the law of the province shall be observed as far as possible, that is, as far as the officers to be appointed by the government could comply with that law, having regard to the rights of the people. In short, the effect of that, as interpreted by the court, was that all that this government had power to do, in the absence of voters' lists made under the provincial law, was to appoint officers to carry out the machinery of the provincial law, but not to make any law for themselves by order in council. Under the provisions of the Ontario law applicable to the unorganized districts of the province, before the list is made up the sheriff must go round and post up his proclamation that he intends to be at such and such a place, at such and such a building, at such a day and such an hour, for the purpose of taking the names of persons entitled to be placed on the voters' list. Then, having made up that list on that day—and he is to be there from ten to four—he prints his list and posts it; and from the date of posting, and the date of mailing to persons entitled to receive copies in that way, under the Ontario Voters' List Act, a right of appeal to the district judge exists, and thirty days is allowed for the examination of the lists, and for the putting in of notices of appeal. As my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) pointed out, that allowed a period of sixty days, and then the judge appoints a court, which will probably take fifteen days longer. It will therefore be seen that the laws of the province provide that thirty days shall be allowed for the making up of the list. What does the order in council say? The order in council of this government, passed on the 25th of August, so far from following the provincial law as far as possible, immediately sets it aside by saying that 'the minister recommends that a sufficient number of enumerators be appointed to enable the work of enumerating the voters to be completed not later than the 10th day of Sepember next.' So that it dispensed altogether with the idea of a proclamation. Was that a reasonable step to take, when the government bear in mind the fact that they were proposing to make up voters' lists where there never had been a poll opened since the world was created? In practically unknown territory, they set at naught the provisions of the Ontario law, which required thirty days notice to be given to everybody, and said: No, you must have these lists made up so that they will be completed within ten or twelve days after the date we have given out. There is the initial step by which this provident and generous government proceeds to carry out the provincial law with regard to making up voters' lists. I am talking to the Bill now under consideration, which, by the very wording of subsection

2, it is proposed to repeat with regard to the province of Manitoba and the province of British Columbia and all the unorganized portions of Quebec and Ontario ; and I say that if the government were able to do that in the last election, what will they be able to do in the next election ? If they do these things in the green tree, what will they do in the dry ? What was the next step in chronological order? On August 25 they did not even send word by letter to anybody up there ; but the Secretary of State again, in what I consider to be a most undignified and frenzied manner, telegraphed all over the country to get somebody to make up these lists. He telegraphed to the sheriff to find out what lists were to be made up, and on the same day he got a telegram from the sheriff, advising him what lists were to be made up under the Ontario law. On the 25th of August, the very day the order in council was passed, the Secretary of State, on the nomination of the government candidate who opposed me at the last election, sent this telegram :

Jacob Stevenson, Sault Ste Marie, Ontario. You have been appointed to prepare lists for unorganized parts of West Algoma, with power to appoint sufficient number of enumerators to enable the work of enumerating voters to be completed not later than the 10th September.

Here is another frenzied effort on the 26th of August :

Jacob Stevenson, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario. So soon as a list for unorganized township or polling place is completed, have it printed and notice posted that appeals will be heard six days from date of posting.

I have said that under the Ontario law the good people in these scattered and sparsely-settled districts were allowed thirty days to inspect the list after it had once been printed, and thirty days' notice of it had to be given before it was made up. After it was made up, they had thirty days to inspect it and to appeal from it; and this government would be bound by the legislation in force to observe that provincial law as far as possible. How far did they observe it ? They were opening polls with the assistance of the provincial government at that time. They had nine polls established where polls had never been established before ; those polls were established at distant lumber townships in the fall of the year when travel was difficult and roads were well-nigh impassable. They were providing that the Ontario law first with regard to proclamation, as an initiatory step, should be set aside in toto and with regard to appeal the delay should be reduced from thirty to six days—the six days to be dated from the date of the posting of that notice in some distant lumber camp, probably twenty miles from a railway, over an impassable road, so that you would require some transmission of the news by brain wave to ascertain the date it was posted.

On the 3rd September there was another telegram from the Secretary of State to the sheriff :

Please afford all facilities to enumerators appointed by federal authorities to obtain copies of lists in unorganized districts that you have completed. Government here will pay cost of printing promptly. If printing cannot be done promptly there send lists to Ottawa and I will have them done here.

R. W. SCOTT.

Then comes the most extraordinary part. This order in council was passed August 25, 1904, and on the 3rd of September there is a telegram to the Hon. R. W. Scott from Sault Ste. Marie :

Have all lists about ready for printer. Answer who appeal is to be made to so as to put it in notice. I have been asked for copy or order in council by interested parties.

JACOB STEVENSON.

No provision of the law that the provincial law be observed as far as possible the same as it is proposed by subsection 2 of this Bill. The provincial law requires thirty days proclamation before the making up of the lists. The polls were opened, lists proposed to be made in scattered districts where voters' lists had never been made before, order in council passed the 25th August providing that these lists be made up, telegram 3rd September, 1904, from the enumerator that all the lists are ready. Well, Mr. Speaker, I can testify that they were ready. They were good and ready. They had nine lists duly sworn to before a gentleman, who has since been promoted to the position of Indian agent and who was the returning officer at one of the polls at Michipicoten at which all the voters on the celebrated 'Minnie M.' voted. All sworn to and some sworn to as early as the 2nd September.

Here is an example of an affidavit sworn to before this gentleman, William L. Nicolls, who since then has been promoted for his good work to the position of Indian agent there. He makes affidavit that he has set down, according to the best of his information and judgment—judgment is a good word—the name of every person entitled to be entered thereon and has not intentionally omitted the name of any person he knew or had good reason to believe was not entitled to be entered thereon. And further he swears that to the best of his knowledge and belief he discharged the duty allotted to him under the said Act.

Another provision of the provincial law requires that appeals should be made to a district judge. The senior district judge—who until the last general election was in the habit of hearing all appeals and was always thought competent to do so even by the Liberal government of Ontario, who has always, since his elevation to the bench, seventeen years ago, been revising the lists and who is a most capable man to discharge his duties seriously—was, for some reason or another, set aside and a change made with regard to Algoma. The senior district judge was not thought acceptable to this government for some reason or another. Judge Johnson was ready and willing to sit. There was nothing to prevent him sitting. There was nothing to disqualify him from performing those judicial functions which properly belong to his office, but he was not allowed to hear those appeals. Before I go further I would like to refer to the very extraordinary document which was sent to the enumerator appointed by this government. It emanated from the Department of the Secretary of State. It is headed 'Suggestion only'—Dominion revision of voters' lists in unorganized territory.' It first proceeds to recite the Act under which the lists are to be made up. Then it gives a number of suggestions which I shall read :

1. Polling divisions and polling places (stations).
2. Enumerator for each and probable or new polling place for fifty probable voters and not more than fifty.
3. Appointed direct by order in council on the recommendation of the candidate, care to be exercised in giving name in full, post office address and other necessary description.

Did I hear a quotation made last night in this House from so estimable an authority as the late Hon. David Mills, Minister of Justice, in which he said : Give me the appointment of the officers for making up the lists, and I will tell you how the election will go. But in this case it is the government candidate himself who appoints the officers to make up these lists, and the government is a mere machine in the hands of its candidate. This is the suggestion from the Secretary of State's Department.

12. Appeals to be heard by the district judge or stipendiary magistrate, corrected and certified to within ten days and sent through the clerk of the peace immediately to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, Ottawa.
16. The chief enumerator to perform the duties of clerks of organized municipalities as to get lists before the judge or revising official and also sent after corrections with clerks of the peace.

The Secretary of State's Department was somewhat mixed up between the clerk of the peace and the government candidate, because both parties happened to be the one and the same person. So that the lists which had to be filed with the clerk of the peace as an official of this government, were filed with the government candidate, and some delay occurred because when the Secretary of State telegraphed to the government candidate, in his capacity as clerk of the peace, he found that the clerk of the peace was out of his office canvassing the district in the interest of the government. There is another instance of the kind of machinery we may expect to be employed by this government in the carrying out of this splendid election Bill. Note the appointment of appeal judges : Nipissing. Judge Valin, Judge Leask and John Loughrin; East Algoma, Judge McCallum, Judge O'Connor; West Algoma, Judge Johnson ; Rainy River and Thunder Bay, Judge Chappell and Judge Fitzgerald ; Parry Sound, Judge McCurry, Donald Roderick McLean, barrister, Burk's Falls; Muskoka, Judge Mahaffy. Well, Judge Johnston did not hear these appeals, because there comes a telegram from the Secretary of State, addressed to the chief enumerator, as follows :

Ottawa, September 5, 1904.

Jacob Stevenson, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario.

See Judge O'Connor and Magistrate Quibell and on consultation with them fix places for hearing appeals.

Who is Magistrate Quibell? He is a gentleman who was prominently connected with politics both for this government and the provincial government, and who, for very extraordinary services rendered to the provincial government, was appointed stipendiary magistrate at Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. FOWLER. By the Ross government?

Mr. BOYCE. Yes. And he held office until the Ross government met its defeat on January 25, 1905, when, very much to his disappointment, he was immediately relieved of the duties of the office to which he had been appointed. But after he had performed the duties of appeal judge in conjunction with Judge O'Connor he was immediately made returning officer for the election. That is to say, after having acted in the revision of the lists he was made returning officer to carry out the election on that list. What a medley ! And what a contrast with the professions of these hon. gentlemen when in opposition, when they were in a high moral frame of mind and talked about the sacred rights of the franchise and of how iniquitous it would be for the government to interfere in any way with the making of the lists ! They declared that they would not make up the lists themselves—but now they decide that their candidates should name the men who were to make them up and they would appoint these men. Then they take the official by whom the lists are to be handled to be the government candidate. But even that is not all. They remove a judge from his seat in order that they may put a hireling of the provincial government in his place, a man signally useful to that government and promoted for party services, and they appoint that man in place of the judge who has held office and revised the lists for fifteen years. And after that substitute had revised these lists, after he had ruled, as he did, that the provisions of the Ontario Voters' Lists Act should not apply he was made returning officer at the election, to carry out the will of the people with regard to these voters' lists. I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he conscientiously, as a man—not as Prime Minister, but as a man—endorses acts of this kind?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why was the judge passed over?

Mr. BOYCE. The right hon. Prime Minister may be able to tell. I am informed on very good authority that Judge Johnson was not a favourite with the Liberal candidate, who was clerk of the peace, and with whom he had differed on occasion as to the way in which the administration of the law was carried on in the district of Algoma. And that was the reason why, at the nomination of the candidate, the judge should be deposed from these official functions of his office of revising the voters' lists. It is possible that these things are authorized and carried out by the same hon. gentlemen who declaimed against making lists by Dominion authority, who decried the principle of appointing judges as revising barristers to make up lists under the Franchise Act? Is it possible that this is the party, and that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is the leader of the party, that at one time declared that it was contrary to good principles that the Dominion government should interfere in the making up of lists?

Well, let me proceed with this history. The lists were made up. Nobody saw these lists until they were made up and sworn to. The provincial law provides that there should be a King's proclamation thirty days before the man starts to make them up, informing every man of the locality where the sheriff's officer is to be between certain hours, so that the voter may see to it that he has the right to vote, that his neighbour has the right to vote and that any trespasser or unqualified person is deprived of that right. Nobody saw the lists until they were printed. I, as a candidate, knew nothing whatever about them until I was confronted with nine lists aggregating 543 names all sworn to. That is the way the voters' lists were made up—all solemnly sworn to by men whose connection with the provincial election of 1903—made memorable by the 'Minnie M.' expedition—was altogether too clear to be questioned. And there was just six days' notice of appeal, dating from the time when the lists were posted up in some distant lumber camp, and this in the fall of the year when the roads were well-nigh impassable. A vigorous attempt was made in West Algoma to meet this outrage, and I am quite sure that the right hon. Prime Minister, in the inner chamber of his heart, concedes that it was an outrage. I do not know of any hon. gentleman who would have declaimed more loudly or more vigorously or more eloquently against it than he would have done if he had happened to be an opposition candidate for this House in that riding under such circumstances. But this matter was brought to the right hon. gentleman's attention two years ago, and still he sits there and says nothing. With all due deference, and with all the respect which I have for him as Prime Minister and as leader of this House, when such facts are called to his attention and he not only does not denounce the wrong, but gives his vigorous support to a clause in this Bill which will perpetuate the outrage, I can only say that I am astonished at the right hon. gentleman. And what about appeal? Surely it was only fair to allow the time for appeal which was allowed under the Ontario law—thirty days. It was little enough, as I can testify, for I have lived in that country for twenty-three years.

Little enough, and it has always been found that the time was short enough. But six days were allowed by this autocratic and tyrannical government within which people could appeal against 543 names, and the six days were to be reckoned from the time these lists were posted in that distant lumber camp. Well, we endeavoured to meet the situation as well as we could, and we met it in two ways. We appealed every one of the 543 names, and sent an army of men to the woods to try to find them. In the second place, we took prohibition proceedings against the officers of the government, the Secretary of State, the Minister of Justice, and the enumerators appointed by them, to test the validity of the proceedings which they were taking. I will not weary the House by telling how these men went through the woods to try to find the so-called electors, and found that many of them had gone long ago, and were not in existence in the district at the time they were put on the list and sworn to. I myself attended the hearing of every one of these appeals. I say there was not one, not ten, but a score of instances where it was shown that the enumerators had taken the names of men and put them on the list and swore to them, when these men, to their knowledge, had only been resident in the province of Ontario two days, in the lumber camp. There was at least one instance out of the 543 of a man who obeyed the subpœna. He was a Frenchman from France. I had taken the precaution of subpœnaing the enumerator and paying his expenses, to confront him with the man whom he had sworn was entitled to be on the list. In this instance this man said that the enumerator had come to him and said he was going to put his name on the list. The Frenchman said, I have no vote. Why? Because I have just come out from France,

I am not a citizen of this country. And the enumerator, Mr. Speaker, used a word that rhymes with lamb. He said it didn't matter a damn whether he was a citizen of Canada or not. And that man's name went on the list, was sworn to by the enumerator and he became a duly constituted voter. The people had only six days to appeal against his name, and had they had not appealed he would have been entitled to vote, according to the rulings of this government. Then prohibition proceedings were taken. I may say in passing that the Minister of Justice was ably defended, and the Secretary of State was ably defended; they were defended by separate counsel, and each counsel was a partner of the Minister of Justice. The firm of Aylesworth & Co. defended the Minister of Justice, and my hon. friend the Minister of Justice knows full well that one of his partners appeared for the Secretary of State, and all the bills were paid by this government.

Now I will refer to the result of that appeal. The appeals were directed against 543 names, and instead of having the senior judge of the district to perform his usual functions with regard to those appeals, we had a board of two. You see the sinister motive of that. Instead of having one judge whose duty had been for years to revise these lists, who knew the law, who knew what the qualifications were, who knew all the tricks of getting men on the list and making an improper list, who was the one man who was competent to sit on these lists, this government deposed him and got two. And why two? So that in case of a disagreement the names should stand on the list. That is the law. If Judge O'Connor differed with the police magistrate with regard to the right of John Jones to be on the list, and the judge said he had no right to be there, and the magistrate said he had a right to be there, he is there, and his name remains on the list. The appeal is against his being on the list, and if the judges disagree the appeal is dismissed and the name remains. Well, Sir, 543 names were appealed against, and I will just read the result. It was proven beyond peradventure that the names of those who were struck off were absolutely without qualification. Some of them had never been known or heard of. Take the list for the township of Jarvis. Ninety names were on the list as originally made up and sworn to, and seventeen were allowed by the judges on appeal—seventeen names out of ninety. Look at this list, Mr. Speaker. Talk about your Thin Red Line, and look at this. There is an instance of the working of subsection 2 of this Bill introduced by the Minister of Justice, and which is going to work such wonders with regard to electoral reform. It will work wonders for the government in electoral reform. I now refer to the list for Breckenridge, a well known camp in the township of Anderson. The list was made up by one James E. McClury. He was engaged with the Lake Superior Company, and was a very influential gentleman in the cruise of the famous 'Minnie M.' He swore to the list of thirty-four, and by the time this appeal board got through with it there were seven names left, and of those seven I doubt whether five of them were entitled to remain. Seven names remained out of thirty-four sworn to, and only six days allowed for appeal. Another instance of the way in which this Bill will be carried out when it is foisted upon the good people of British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. In the township of Mashkode, ninety names were on the list and only twenty-six remained. In the township of Gillmour thirty-seven were sworn to and eighteen allowed. Only thirteen voted. In the township of Curtis sixty-three were on the list and sworn to and twenty-six were allowed. At Wabose station ninety names were on the list and thirty-eight allowed. At Heyden station twenty-three were on the list and fifteen allowed. At Wilds twenty-five were on the list and nineteen allowed. At Searchmont ninety were on the list and forty-five allowed, the net result of the appeal being that out of a total of 543 names on the list made up and sworn to as being the list 332 were struck off and 211 remained, that they were allowed by a board on which sat one gentleman who certainly was not in a judicial frame of mind at the time these appeals were taken.

Mr. CONMEE. Before what judge or board and at what date were the lists revised to which the hon gentleman is referring? Would the hon gentleman kindly state who composed the board to which he has been referring?

Mr. BOYCE. I thought I had been very plain and had taken up a great deal of time in setting out what these were. My hon friend understood the manner in which the lists were made up. He nominated some of the enumerators in his riding, and I can tell you there were some beautiful lists made up in that constituency. The hon. gentleman knows better than any member in this House the splendid efficacy of those lists in electing supporters of this government.

Mr. CONMEE. That is not answering my question. I want to know what was the date of the lists and who revised them. Was it Judge Johnson, or who else constituted the board?

Mr. BOYCE. I did not catch the latter part of the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. CONMEE. I wish to know the date of the lists and who constituted the list of revisers? Was the revision before Judge Johnson or before whom?

Mr. BOYCE. No, it was not before Judge Johnson. Judge Johnson is the officer who ought to have revised these lists my hon. friend knows, but, on the recommendation, nay, upon the appeal of the government candidate, who was the clerk of the peace of the district, who did not like Judge Johnson and who had reason not to like him, Judge Johnson was debarred from performing the duties of his office. Does that satisfy my hon. friend ? I will tell my hon. friend who was appointed in his stead—a gentleman whom he knows very well, an officer of the Ross government, Mr. W. A. Quibell who was the returning officer in this district. My hon. friend wants the date of these lists and I will give it to him ; they are dated all the way from the 2nd to the 9th September, 1904, and they were appealed during the month of September.

As a sample of the political complexion of the remainder of the voters of these polls we find that the vote stood as follows :

	Government.	Opposition.
Mashkode..	11	7
Wabose..	23	9
Searchmont	30	2
Jarvis..	11	2
Heyden..	8	4
Wild..	13	3
Anderson..	5	3
Gillmour..	9	4
Curtis..	18	2
	128	36

There were 164 votes polled at these polls out of 211 left on the list and that left the unfortunate present member in a minority of 92. What would have been the result if the 543 names originally on the list, prima facie valid, sworn to and put in the hands of the clerk of the peace, had been allowed, and supposing that the strenuous efforts of the government to prevent an appeal had been successful and that the Conservative party in West Algoma had not used the vigilance that they did in order to overcome them. Again, I ask the right hon. First Minister whether he thinks that is fair play, whether that is the fair play that he contended for in opposition in this House, whether he considers that it is the fair play that should be meted out to this country in making up the voters' lists, or whether it is the fair play upon which, he as Prime Minister of this grand Dominion of Canada, can appeal to the people at the next general election. Will he have the heart or the courage to go before the people and attempt to defend an Act containing a provision, an experiment with which in my district and in five other districts in northern Ontario has demonstrated to his own satisfaction the enormity and iniquity of it in every one of its provisions ?

Now, let me say a word to the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth). He talks about the Thin Red Line in Manitoba. He said that the time for the making up of the lists in Manitoba and the time for appealing and for the completion of them was too short. Will he attempt to defend the iniquities I have spoken about in Algoma ? Manitoba is a well settled country ; there are railways, roads, settlements, buildings and it is a fairly well settled country. Will he attempt to defend the provisions of this order in council and the carrying out of this provision under which no time was allowed for the making up of the lists and but six days was allowed for appeal ? The hon. gentleman pays no attention and he has paid very little attention throughout this debate. This is the worst spectacle that this House has ever been called upon to witness. The Minister of Justice, after bringing into this House a Bill which revolutionizes the franchise of the people of Canada and imposes upon them iniquities so enormous as those which I have spoken of, iniquities that deprive the majority of the right of electing the candidate of their choice, and after delivering himself of an oration which would put Demosthenes in the shade, sits down and remains quiet, or leaves the House. But, when the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) comes into this House and reads a scandal more than a year old which no man in Manitoba dared to read before the Manitoba government, the hon. gentleman pricks up his ears and listens with the most rapt attention. The right hon. First Minister ought to give a hint to his Minister of Justice to show more respect for and more decency in this House than he is doing at the present time. If he expects to get this Bill through he will have to give more consideration to it himself and pay more attention to the criticism of the opposition than he has done. The trouble with the hon. gentleman is that he treats the opposition with contempt which he would like to regard as being supreme, but which is something very much the reverse. The hon. gentleman, in the course of a somewhat extraordinary speech, said that the ground of complaint against the present system of making up the voters' lists in Manitoba was that it had proved to be an engine of tyranny.

What does the right hon. the Prime Minister think about the engine of tyranny contained in and represented by the order in council passed upon his direction and instruction on August 25, 1904? Where is the engine of tyranny? Will the right hon. gentleman say that was not an engine of tyranny? I trow not. There is no man in this House more sensible of the fact that these proceedings were wholly illegal, wholly outrageous and in violation of every right principle of bestowing the right of franchise than the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). But the Minister of Justice gives us no answer. He referred to the fact that one salient provision of this Bill was that responsible officers of the Crown would make up these lists, men who would be answerable to the Crown for their appointment and who would faithfully discharge their duties. I suppose the hon. gentleman believed what he said or meant what he said, but if he will consult 'Hansard' to-morrow, and see the indisputable facts I have advanced, he will realize how abundantly the falsity of the presumption has been established by the experience that has been demonstrated when this experiment was tried, for that it was an experiment in 1904 I make no doubt whatever. In 1904, we heard something about a Siftonian Bill. But there were hon. gentlemen sitting on that side of the House then, one as Minister of Justice, who would not tolerate the iniquities of such a Bill. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) knows what I mean, he knows what was proposed in 1904, and he knows better than any one else what was the fate of that Bill and the reason for that fate. What was the result? After the election the then Minister of Justice stepped out of public life, and went to a seat on the Supreme Court bench, which he has since adorned with his signal abilities. In his place a gentleman is appointed more pliable, more complacent and more easily convinced of the necessity of regarding the political exigencies rather than the great good of the people of this country. Therefore when the Sifton attempt failed and was blocked, when it was still-born, an experiment was made. The Franchise Act was patched up. A patch was put on section 9, apparently harmless; it went through the House. But the order in council of August 25, 1904, was the experiment made to try how this thing would work in the territories where it was intended to operate. Experiment was made in only six constituencies, but it got four out of the six for the government and now, at the closing session of this parliament. the right hon. gentleman allows his Minister of Justice to bring down a measure which makes that applicable to all seats in British Columbia and in Manitoba, and in the unorganized portions of Quebec, besides the six to which he had already applied it in 1904. Does the right hon. gentleman think that is fair? Can he pledge himself to this House and this country that there will be any better carrying out of the procedure in making up lists in British Columbia, Manitoba and northern Quebec, than there was in northern Ontario? I fancy that experience is a great teacher and that no matter what my right hon. friend said and promised with regard to what would be done in the future to avoid the abuses and enormities that have taken place, the people of Canada will take it with a grain of salt, knowing the many promises he has made along this and other lines which have been broken. One of the remedies taken was for an action of prohibition to the Minister of Justice of Canada and to the chief enumerator and others who were engaged in the work. Notice of motion for the prohibition was dated September 12, 1904. The lists had been sworn to about September 3, and that was the first we heard of them. The notice was for :

An order that Jacob Stevenson be prohibited from taking any further proceedings in the preparation of voters' lists for the unorganized territory in the electoral district of Sault Ste. Marie, in the West Riding of Algoma, and His Honor Edward O'Connor, junior judge for the district of Algoma, and William A. Quibell, police magistrate for the district of Algoma, be prohibited from holding courts for the purpose of revising lists prepared by the said Jacob Stevenson, and from certifying to and confirming such lists or from otherwise acting in connection with the preparation or pretended preparation of lists for said unorganized territory, and that the said Jacob Stevenson and the said Edward O'Connor, junior judge of the district of Algoma, and William A. Quibell, be prohibited from proceeding with the preparation, revision and bringing into force of such voters' lists, otherwise than under the provisions of the laws of the province of Ontario regulating the preparation, revision, and bringing into force of the provincial voters' list in such cases, and for such further and other relief or order as to this honourable court may seem proper.

Upon that motion we had the pleasure of an examination of the enumerator, Mr. Stevenson. Mr. Stevenson is a gentleman who is entitled, so far as I know, to the respect of every one, and is not responsible, otherwise than as chief enumerator, for what took place; but therein lies the iniquity of the whole thing, that the chief enumerator could not himself supervise the making up of those lists, and that the order in council did not compel him to be responsible for that work. That was done by six hirelings, six ward politicians, six ward heelers, all belonging to the political party of the government, and their work was done when they brought their lists into town and swore to them. What could the enumerator do? He could not be on the ground, he was not required to be, the whole thing was left to a pack of party heelers. He was examined for discovery as follows :

Q. Mr. Stevenson, you purported to prepare voters' lists for use in the West Riding of the district of Algoma, as the same is constituted for Dominion purposes?—A. Yes.

Q. Under what authority did you pretend to act in the preparation of those lists?—A. The authority from R. W. Scott, Secretary of State.

Q. Produce the authority?—A. The telegrams are on file.

Absolutely nothing but the telegram was the authority for making up these lists.

4. Q. The original authority that you received were marked as exhibits to your affidavit?—A. Yes.

5. Q. And they consist of three telegrams?—A. Yes.

6. Q. Signed by R. W. Scott?—A. Yes.

7. Q. Did you get any other authority other than what was contained in these telegrams?—A. No.

8. Q. Did you get any other instructions to guide you in the preparation of these list?—A. I got some suggestions after the work started. I did not use them.

9. Q. Where did you get these suggestions?—A. They were handed to me by Mr. J. J. Kehoe.

10. Q. Mr. Kehoe is the crown attorney and clerk of the Peace for the district?—A. Yes.

11. Q. He is also the Liberal candidate for the approaching elections for the Dominion House?—A. It is said he is.

12. Q. You know that Mr. Kehoe has received the Liberal nomination for this riding?—A. Yes.

20. Q. Did you receive any letter enclosing these instructions?—A. It was handed to me by Mr. Kehoe.

21. Q. What instructions did you get when it was handed to you by Mr. Kehoe?—A. None.

22. Q. Anything said about why they were handed to you?—A. Said they might be useful to me, that is all.

32. Q. When did you learn that the appeals would not be before Judge Johnston as mentioned in exhibit 1 but before Judge O'Connor and W. A. Quibell?—A. When I got the last telegram. I wired for that purpose to find out for myself.

33. Q. On what date did you wire?—A. I wired on Saturday night and I got the answer on Monday.

34. Have you a copy of that message?—A. No.

35. Q. Do I understand you to say that it was until September 5 that you knew who would hear the appeals?—A. No, I didn't know except what I saw in that document.

36. Had you any reason to believe that exhibit was incorrect?

This is the document I read, with Judge Johnston's name as the appeal judge.

A. There was something said by Kehoe—I would not be sure what it was—something about Hamilton and some one else hearing the appeals. He said you had better wire and find out. That was the day I wired.

The man was handed a list with Judge Johnston's name, the senior judge of the district, the man who had heard appeals ever since he was judge, for seventeen years, and this man, the clerk of the peace and the government candidate, said: 'You had better wire to the Secretary of State and find out,' and he wired to the Secretary of State, who knew what the government candidate wanted, and he got a reply back on the same day saying that it was not Judge Johnston at all, but a Ross government official. Does the hon. gentleman think that was fair? Does he justify that or would he attempt to justify it?

43. Q. Now you simply adopted the lists prepared by the sheriff under the Ontario Act for all polls for which lists have been prepared?—A. Part of the lists I had prepared myself and knew they were correct. I spoke to Norris and the sheriff about the others.

44. Q. So you simply mean you inquired of the men that did the work—they had already sworn they were correct?—A. Yes.

45. Q. You took no means to satisfy yourself whether these lists were correct on the date you certified to them—whether some of the men had not left the place?—A. No.

46. Q. The polls that you prepared lists for personally were what?—A. Maskode, Waboose, Searchmont, Curtis, Wilde, Jarvis, Hayden, Anderson and Gilmore.

47. Q. No lists had ever before been prepared for these places?—A. Not as separate polls. Some names had been taken and put on the Boulais bay list in 1901—some of those around Searchmont on the Algoma Central Railway.

50. Q. With that exception no lists had ever been prepared for any of these nine polls before?—A. Not to my knowledge.

54. Where is the township of Gilmore?—A. Up the Echo river—about ten or fifteen miles from Alex. Findlay's, that is about seventeen miles from here to Findlay's and about fifteen miles from there as near as I know.

55. Q. From Findlay's up there would be a lumber road?—A. Part of the way. About six miles up there is a settlement. From there it is a lumber road.

56. Q. Do you know any of the people in the township?—A. No.

57. Q. You have never been there?—A. No.

58. Q. Are you personally acquainted with any of the voters?—A. There are three or four men whose names I know.

59. Q. What are they doing—the three or four that you know?—A. I can't tell you.

60. Q. Do you know what they went up there to do?—A. I know they were up there last winter for McFadden & Malloy.

61. Q. And on the whole list there are only some three or four men whose names you recognize?—A. That is all.

62. Q. And all the men in that list are working in McFadden & Malloy's camp?—A. Yes, supposed to be.

63. Q. And there is not a single farmer or settler or anything other than a lumberman whose name is on that list?—A. I understand not. If there is I do not know of them—do not show on the list?

64. Q. And there are none so far as you know?—A. So far as I know.

65. Q. Take the township of Anderson—for what territory was that list prepared?—A. For the township of Anderson.

66. Q. And in that list there is not a single farmer or settler put down?—A. Not so far as I know.

67. Q. And there are none such there that you know of?—A. There is no one there except men working in the lumber camps.

68. Q. Do you know these men?—A. In all these lists there are odd names that I know.

69. Q. Where is this township?—A. Back of Garden river. I am told sixteen or seventeen miles, but I can't say, I have never been there myself.

70. Q. Nothing but a wood road from Garden river?—A. That is all.

71. Q. And Garden river is twelve miles from Sault Ste. Marie?—A. Twelve miles by the road and nine miles by the railroad.

72. Q. No public buildings of any kind in that township?—A. Can't say myself—never was there.

73. Q. If the election was held to-morrow the only places where the polls could be held would be in the lumber camps?—A. So far as I know.

74. Q. Where is the county of Curtis?—A. North of Searchmont.

75. Q. How far from Sault Ste. Marie?—A. I don't know the distance from here to Searchmont—it is ten or twelve miles from Searchmont.

77. Q. In reaching the township of Curtis you go from here to Searchmont on the Algoma Central railway and then ten or twelve miles by road?—A. I believe that is the way—don't know myself.

78. Q. Do you know how many camps there are there?—A. I know of two but there may be three.

79. Q. Do you know how far these camps are apart?—A. I was told five to six miles.

80. There are just two trains per week on the Algoma Central railway?—A. So I understand.

81. Q. Whose camps are these in the township of Curtis?—A. Miller & McCool.

The member for Nipissing was in this thing.

82. Q. On the Curtis list there is not a single farmer or settler?—A. Not to my knowledge.

83. Q. There are no buildings so far as you know except camps?—A. That is what I was told.

114. Q. Take the list for Haydon station, township of Aweres—what territory is in that list?—A. Takes in township of Aweres.

114. Q. Where is that situated?—A. Up north a little piece.

115. Q. And under what authority did you prepare lists for the township of Aweres?—A. Well, the polling place is supposed to be held at Haydon station.

116. Q. You knew that a polling place had been established by order in council for the township of Aweres and was afterwards stricken out?—A. I did not know it was stricken out.

117. Q. Did you never see an order in council dated 17th August amending the previous order in council?

(Mr. Hearst shows witness a copy of the order.)

A. That is the first time I ever saw that.

That gentleman went to work and made up a polling list for a polling place which had been stricken out by order in council.

123. Q. Did you know that berth 10, range 3, had been cut out?—A No.

124. Q. Did you know berth 11, range 25, was cut out?—A. No.

125. Q. Berth 12, range 24?—A. No, did not know they were ever in.

126. Q. Did you know berth 11, range 25, was cut out?—A. No.

To get down to the basis upon which the enumerator made up the lists, I will read question 134:

134. Q. Now what law did you consider governed you in the preparation of these lists, Mr. Stevenson?—A. I followed the information contained in the telegram as near as I could.

That is the law that governed.

135. Q. The telegram gave you no information as to your mode of procedure?—A. No more than to have the enumerating done by a certain time, and I sent them out and had it done.

136. Q. But in the preparation of these lists did you consider yourself governed by any statute or any law of any kind?—A. As far as qualifications I followed the Ontario law. At least those were my instructions to the enumerators.

137. Q. What qualifications?—A. Qualifications in the Ontario statute with regard to residence in the province.

138. Q. What are they?—A. Nine months, I think.

139. Q. What would you consider the qualification for a voter in one of these lumber camps?—A. If he was nine months in the province.

140. Q. How long would he require, under your instructions to the enumerators, to be a resident in the electoral district of Algoma?—A. I cannot tell you now just what my instructions were—nine months in the province was the ground we worked on in the Ontario lists.

141. Q. You say in your affidavit you have many years' experience in preparing Ontario lists and you would be familiar with the qualifications?—A. Those are the qualifications.

142. Q. Have you not required any period of residence in the electoral district?—A. I can't tell you that offhand whether there is or not. I guess there is.

143. Q. Did you give these instructions to your enumerators?—A. I gave them the qualifications. I read them out to them from the statute.

144. Q. You know in the case of the man who spoke to you, he was not qualified?—A. I did not say he was on the list.

145. Q. What is his name and we can see?—A. I can't remember it now but I can get it.

146. Q. That was the only one you could give me any information on in the Maskode list?—A. Yes.

147. Q. You told me you followed the Ontario law with regard to the qualification, what law did you follow, if any, with regard to the preparation of your lists?—A. I did not post notices—just followed the instructions in the telegrams and sent out enumerators.

148. Q. You knew that under the Ontario law notices should be posted up for thirty days, setting forth the time and place at which the persons appointed for that purpose would make up the lists?—A. Yes, I know that.

149. Q. You did not give that notice?—A. No.

150. Q. You did not give any notice?—A. No.

151. Q. The enumerators did not stay at any particular place for the purpose of making up the lists?—A. No, that was my instructions.

152. Q. Your instructions to them were not to stop at any particular place?—A. To go around from man to man and enumerate the voters.

153. Q. In other words, you practically instructed your men to take a census?—A. Yes.

154. Q. That was directly opposite to the course pursued by yourself under the Ontario lists?—A. Yes.

155. Q. How many deputies did you appoint?—A. Arthur, Glandville, Coulter, Nichols, Roseborough and the two McLurg boys.

156. Q. That was contrary to the provisions of the Ontario Act—the Ontario Act would allow you but three?—A. Yes.

157. Q. The Ontario Act would also prohibit the appointment of any officer of the government in the preparation of the lists?—A. I can't tell you about that. I didn't know that was in the Act.

158. Q. At least one of the enumerators, W. L. Nichols, is an officer of the Dominion government?—A. Yes, he is the Indian agent.

As a matter of fact he was not then the Indian agent, but the acting agent.

159. Q. Where did you post up the lists that had been made?—A. Posted them up in three of the camps at Maskode, one at Waboose station, sent two with the mail carriers, posted one at Searchmont and sent two into the camps, posted one at Wilde station and sent two into the camps at Curtis, and I sent two copies to Jarvis, posted one at Hayden station myself and sent two to Anderson by mail.

160. Q. So that the only lists that were personally posted by you were on the line of the railway?—A. Yes.

161. Q. And except what you did yourself, you don't know whether they were posted or not?—A. No. Under the Ontario law I did not have to post them there at all.

162. Q. Why did you not post up proclamations in conformity with the Ontario law as to when these lists would be made up?—A. Had no time.

He had no time to give the people of Ontario an opportunity of coming forward and having their names put on the voters' lists. This gentleman, whose appointment is to be perpetuated under this Bill by this government, had no time to conform to the law of the province regulating the preparation and the putting into force of the voters' lists.

163. Q. Your suggestions instructed you to do so?—A. Did not have them at the start.

164. Q. So then you took upon yourself, without any instructions, not to give these notices?—A. Yes.

165. Q. Now, Mr. Stevenson, did you make any attempt to fulfill the law as laid down by the Ontario Act for the preparation of voters' lists in unorganized districts?—A. No, I did not follow the Ontario law.

166. Q. You did not follow the Ontario law either in reference to the notices of appeal to be given?—A. I did that in accordance with instructions.;

He did not follow the Ontario law because he was instructed not to follow it.

167. Q. But that is not in accordance with the Ontario law?—A. No.

168. Q. And under your instructions, as you interpreted them, you adopted practically a different method for making up the lists?—A. Yes, I did the best I could in the time I had to do it.

169. Q. The voters' lists were in course of preparation as rapidly as possible under the Ontario law?—A. Yes.

170. Q. And there was no default on the sheriff's part in the preparation of them?—A. Not that I know of.

183. Q. When did the enumerators start out on their work?—A. Tuesday the 27th August, and returned on the 30th.—I think those are the dates.

195. Q. You knew that Mr. Boyce said you did not give him any information as to the time and places where the lists were made up, and I understood you to say that you would not know yourself?—A. I told him they were starting out to go to each poll.

196. Q. But that was all the information you pretend you gave him—that a man for instance was starting for Waboose?—A. That was all I could tell him.

So much for the evidence of the enumerator. We shall see what a judge of the High Court of Justice says upon these provisions. This is not the first time I have read this complaint to the right hon. gentleman. I read it two years ago to him. It is on the records of this parliament in 'Hansard.' In the face of what the judge of the High Court said and in the face of the fact that one of His Majesty's judges placed upon the responsibility of this parliament the duty of remedying this evil, the right hon. gentleman and his Minister of Justice bring down a measure and attempt to force it upon the people, perpetuating the same thing. That is a sample of the 'square deal referred to by my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway). Again I put the question to the right hon. Prime Minister: Referring back to that time, bridging the last thirteen years and recalling him as leader of an opposition in this House clamouring for the rights of the people and demanding fair play for the minority, I ask him, does he think that now he is giving the people of Canada a square deal?

On October 1st, Mr. Justice Meredith, of the Court of Appeal, gave this judgment:

There are involved in this appeal two questions of considerable importance:

1. Whether the order in council in question is, or the proceedings of the respondent acting under it are, ultra vires, and if so

2. Whether this court has power to prohibit such proceedings.

One would have thought that, when the matter came up for consideration before this government upon the service of notice of motion of prohibition, the law officers of the Crown would have looked into the matter carefully to see what position to take. Mr. Barwick argued on the principle that there was no jurisdiction, and Mr. Moss argued also that there was no jurisdiction and, as far as possible within the judgment of the enumerators, the provisions of the Ontario law had been complied with, though the enumerator swore he had not complied with them and did not intend to.

2. Whether this court has power to prohibit such proceedings.

The more correct way of dealing with these questions is to consider the latter first, because, if this court has no jurisdiction, it is better to express no opinion on the merits of the application: If there has been bad faith or any sinister or improper conduct such as has been charged, in matters quite within the power of those whose conduct has been called in question, they are answerable, not to the court, but to parliament, and parliament to the people: And any alleged wrong doing may perhaps also be the subject of investigation and of some measure of relief if established in the federal election court.

Then is there jurisdiction in this court?

If the circumstances which warrant the governor in council in acting under section 9 of the Franchise Act, section 398, never existed, I would have little doubt of such jurisdiction. One of the foremost duties of this court is the prevention of the exercise of wrongful judicial power. It can hardly be doubted that if any one, without colour of right, should usurp the judicial functions pertaining to the preparation of voters' lists, the power and duty to prohibit must rest somewhere; and I know of no other court than this in which such power and duty rest in respect to such an usurpation within this province.

But it is said that in the North Perth case there was a decision of a divisional court to the contrary. With that statement I am unable to agree. The two cases are widely different. When that case was decided there existed officers and courts appointed and constituted under federal legislation for the very purpose of dealing with the whole subject of voters' lists for parliamentary elections: the whole of that legislation has been repealed: no such officers or courts now exist. The holding in the North Perth case was that this court could not interfere with such federal courts in respect of such voters' lists. In this case the main question is does any federal court exist? Have the respondents any authority whatever in law for the exercise of any judicial function in respect of such lists? If not, there must be power somewhere to prohibit, and that power can be found in this court only.

Whether the respondents have, or have not, any such power depends upon the proper interpretation of section 9 of the Franchise Act, 1898. That Act entirely repealed the Electoral Franchise Act under which the federal courts were constituted. It changed completely the whole law in regard to the preparation of the voters' lists, adopting the provincial lists instead of having parliamentary lists prepared as provided for in the repealed enactment. But, to provide against the possibility of there being no sufficient recent provincial lists in some of the electoral districts, the 9th section of the Act was passed:

This I have read to the House. The judgment proceeds:

Mr. BOYCE.

For the district in question there are in existence no lists prepared at any regular intervals, but there are lists in course of preparation under a provincial enactment which requires their preparation at regular intervals.

The purpose of the section is to insure reasonably recent lists for parliamentary elections: it can, therefore, hardly mean that when a provincial enactment requires the lists to be prepared at regular intervals those lists only shall be used, no matter how long it may be necessary to wait until they are prepared: it means rather that where such lists exist—'are prepared' in fact—they shall be used, but where they do not exist the mode of preparing them provided in the section may be adopted. It was, therefore, in the facts of this case, within the power of the Governor in council to appoint all necessary officers for the preparation of the lists this making them—

Mark you, Mr. Speaker——

—this making them officers of a federal court, just as the revising barristers were under the federal enactment; but they are expressly required by the enactment to observe and follow as far as possible the provisions of the laws of the province regulating the preparation and revision and bringing into force of the provincial lists.

But it is said that the order in council appointing the respondents presumes to give directions to them in conflict with the latter statutory requirement. The answer to that is if it be so, the order, to that extent, has no effect, the statute, not the order in council is to be obeyed.

That is, the provincial law must be obeyed, and this government cannot lay violent hands upon the rights of the people of the province of Ontario under their own law.

That it is urged that, assuming the appointment of the respondents to be valid, they are not proceeding in some respects in accordance with the statute, but are acting to some extent in contravention of it. The answer to that,—if it be so—is the answer which was given to the applicant in the North Perth case. The subject is one affecting matters peculiarly within the exclusive powers of parliament; they are answerable to parliament, not to this court, in such an application as that.

A point of some importance—not argued—is whether parliament has, in section 9, delegated to the Governor in Council the constitution of a federal court, and if so whether there was power to do so. The answer is there is no such delegation, that this enactment itself constitutes the court and prescribes its procedure, and that to the Governor in Council is committed nothing substantially but the appointment of the officers, the putting in motion of the provincial machinery operated by federal officers.

Now, the right hon. Prime Minister had that decision read to him two years ago and placed upon the records of parliament. Does he still insist in pressing upon this House section 2 of the Bill which provides identically the same machinery, the same way of making up the lists as that covered by this decision of the judge? If so, what may we not expect of him? What respect has he for his position? What respect has he for law, order and decency? He might have found shelter prior to the decision, behind a question of interpretation. But here is the judicial interpretation from which there has been no appeal, placing upon parliament the duty of remedying this wrong. And how does he remedy it? By bringing in a Bill which contains the very same provisions, which provisions he proposes to make law. The right hon. gentleman has seen what has been done, and how this clause has operated to the benefit of his party. It has been used, not only as an engine of tyranny, not only as an engine of oppression, but as an engine by which the people of Ontario have been deprived of their franchise. Take, for instance, the settled portion of the district of Algoma. There, rolls are made up upon which the voters' lists are prepared; but the hon. gentleman gives his orders, and away back in the bush where no one can get to them, he opens polls and makes a voters' list, and 500 voters are put illegally on that list. There were 343 struck off. Of what use are the votes of the fifty good men who have gone into that country, of what use is their franchise, when 343 names without the slightest qualification were put on the list to overbalance their bona fide votes ? I say that the right hon. gentleman has laid violent hands upon the franchise of the people, and the people resent it very much indeed.

To sum up. The provincial law is required to be observed as far as possible. Let us see how it was observed. It was ignored altogether. There was no sheriff appointed to make the lists, there was no proclamation or notice of any kind before making the lists. They were made up and sworn to, and the enumerator had to accept them prima facie as the lists of voters. No adequate provision was made for appeal. The time for appeal was cut down to six days, from thirty days which was the provincial requirement at the time, and they began to run from the date that the lists were posted up in a distant polling place. The reviser of the list under the provincial statute, the judge of the district, was deprived of his office by the interference of this government, he was deposed in favour of an appointee of this government, who was afterwards appointed returning officer, and who, for those services, has been made commissioner of police on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

Now the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues, when they were in opposition, took very high moral ground in favour of the observance of the sanctity of the ballot, of the sanctity of the franchise in this country. He spoke eloquently, his words sounded well, and they read well. The right hon. gentleman and his colleagues took the highest ground of public morality. He argued that the government should not interfere in the making up of voters' lists to which members of parliament owed their election ; that it should not be possible for any government to appoint an officer or henchman to make up these lists ; that it was contrary to parliamentary and constitutional doctrine, and would ensure the continuance of a government in power which had lost public confidence. The right hon. gentleman and his colleagues insisted on the right of the provinces to make up their lists, and that upon these lists members should be elected to the House of Commons. At that famous convention in 1893, when that magnificent Liberal platform was constructed, there was no more important plank in that platform than the repeal of the Franchise Act as it stood at that day. Those were the pretensions, that is what the right hon. gentleman theorized should be done, and which he promised would be done if he came into power. Well, he came into power, and that promise is the only one that the right hon. gentleman has kept to the people of this country up to the present time. One by one the planks of that platform have become separated from it, they have been cast into the drift on the turbulent sea of political expediency, they have been wrenched from their fastenings by the demands and exigencies of his political friends, by the necessity of continuing in power. Up to the time this Bill was introduced, the right hon. gentleman had just this one cord by which his political tabernacle was held down to the ground ; and now, by his insistence on this Bill, that cord is cut, and his political tent now flutters in the breeze. No longer can the right hon. gentleman say that at least he has observed one of the planks in that platform, and that he has repealed the Franchise Act. It is true that he repealed the Franchise Act, and he repealed it upon the promise that he would give the people a better system of franchise. But what did he do ? He brought down in 1904 a measure which provided for all the iniquities, all the enormities and all the atrocities I have detailed in my remarks. And now in 1908, in the closing session of this parliament, he has brought down and proposes to force through this House a measure which will perpetuate all these iniquities. Sir, I assert my right as an independent member of this House to object, and to continue objecting to the right hon. gentleman taking any such course as that. I will say in all solemnity, Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness, that had I known when my right hon. friend asked for a vote of one-twelfth of the Supply Bill, that he had behind it the intention of forcing upon this House a measure so iniquitous, one which so absolutely violates the rights of the people of this country, I certainly would have been here night and day to oppose that vote, and I would not have consented to its adoption. I do not consider that the right hon. first minister treated this House at all fairly in asking that vote. I may be wrong. I may be carried away by my earnestness at this moment, but I say that from the experience I have had, from the evidence which there lies and which cannot be controverted and from the working of the measure I am satisfied that it would be an enormity to perpetuate such legislation as that. I desire to refer to one more section. That is section 17:

Provided that no ballot paper shall be rejected on account of any writing, number or mark placed thereon by any deputy returning officer.

There was an agitation many years ago in this country, at the time of open voting, for a ballot, and that ballot having been accorded to the people it was urged that the secrecy of the ballot should be preserved at all costs. Tampering with the ballot, or the non-secrecy of the ballot, or the permitting of any mark upon the ballot by any person, puts a premium upon bribery and electoral debauchery. We have had that demonstrated before in this country. My hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) read some of the evidence in the London election case and the very thing which was done by Pritchett and O'Gorman in that case illegally this government propose to allow them to do under this section and to do it lawfully. It is proposed to allow a ballot to be counted if it has any mark upon it at all. As my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) said, it is possible for me to write on the back of the ballot, 'This is Boyce's ballot' and the ballot is counted good. Any writing, any number, or any mark on the ballot does not invalidate the ballot. Does the right hon. First Minister not see the extent to which that provision will be taken advantage of? Surely he can see what that means, surely he can see that it will mean that the man who is bribed, the man to whom it is said: You will get $10 if you write the number '2' or any other number on the back of your ballot, can in this way indicate the manner in which he has voted. Does he not see that this is assisting that kind of work? Does he not see that it is assisting the government contractor in coercing and intimidating all those whom he employs to go and vote for the government candidate? Does he not see—I venture to think that he sees it quite well—that all the employees of the Grand Trunk Pacific and all the employees on other great works will be kept in order and made to know that that mark which can be legally placed upon the ballot will serve as a sign of identification and will disclose whether they have voted right or wrong. What about the civil service? Are they going to be left free to vote as they like? According to all human nature the civil servant will know that if there can be placed a mark on the ballot somebody will know how somebody has voted and then there will be trouble for somebody. What about the homesteader in the Northwest, the man who perhaps has not performed all his settlement duties and is probably asking for an extension of time, or who has some application before the government inspector in regard to the inspection of his homestead? There is the gentleman who has got a larger quantity of seed grain than he should have received or who wants an extension of time in which to pay for it. That gentleman is asked: How are you going to vote? I want you to vote so-and-so. Very well; I want to tell you that I shall know how you have voted and whether you have voted for the government candidate or not. Do you understand that, Mr. Debtor? Do you think that is a method which should be employed throughout this country? The hon. Minister of Justice talks about an engine of tyranny. An engine of tyranny forsooth! What greater engine of tyranny could there be than this provision of the law? The people want a secret ballot. They demonstrated that by the popular vote in the province of Ontario. There was a ballot in Ontario that had a number upon it. It was defensible upon certain grounds and to a certain extent, but there is absolutely no justification for the iniquitous clause which the hon. Minister of Justice seeks to force upon this country now. If we are to have open voting let us have open, honest voting. Do not let us have a sinister, miserable attempt, the hypocritical profession of secrecy which is contained in this Bill under which we know there will be actual openness and a knowledge of how every vote is polled. The number on the ballot was bad enough, but this is ten times worse. It is an engine of oppression which permits certain cabalistic signs to be placed upon a ballot. If the law had permitted only a number to be used that might have been used or it might not have been used. It might have been used by those in power, by the government, but this can be used by government contractors, government servants, homesteaders and all the army of government agents who are active at the time of a Dominion election.

I might occupy the time of this House with other clauses of the Bill but other gentlemen will doubtless give them further consideration. I wish to say in conclusion, that it must appear to the House and to the country that when the right hon. gentleman delayed giving to this House a Bill for the suppression of electoral corruption last year he had some object in view in keeping that back. His Minister of Justice, the hon. gentleman who now occupies that position, was then but a short time in office and he had not got well seated in the saddle. He perhaps did not possess the amount of experience which the right hon. First Minister felt would be necessary before he could be entrusted with the preparation of just that kind of a Bill that the right hon. gentleman wanted for use at the next general election. We were, therefore told, notwithstanding the speech from the Throne last session, that we were not to have an election Bill last year. This year we were again told that we were going to have a Bill for the suppression of electoral corruption. Well, we have a Bill, but if any gentleman can say, after he reads the two clauses on which I have touched, that these are clauses which tend to suppress electoral irregularities and corruption, then, I say he is a very extraordinary man indeed. The right hon. gentleman has doubtless come to the conclusion that some drastic measure is necessary, some peculiarly strong engine is required in order to again sway the people of Canada in his favour the next time he appeals to them for a renewal of their confidence. At the last election it was the Grand Trunk Pacific and a number of other matters that swayed public opinion. At this coming election my right hon. friend must necessarily, he feels, owing to the weakening of public confidence, have something with which he can sway, aye, even force a majority of the votes in his favour.

How was he to get it ? There have been revelations here of graft, irregularities, departmental corruption and debauchery in government contracts, revelations of his own commissioners, a lifting of the lid which disclosed a most awful state of affairs in the Department of Marine and other departments, and he knows that public confidence in his government is waning and has been waning for some considerable time. In this House and during this parliament it has been demonstrated to the right hon. gentleman that he has graft to right of him, graft to left of him, graft behind him and that every one wonders. Every one wonders how he is to justify himself before the country, how he will appeal to them. I would quote to him some of the votes which he has given in this House, for instance where a public official had stolen money and was convicted and the right hon. gentleman voted to retain him as a public servant of this country. We wondered what he was going to do about that when he appealed to the country ; but he knew what he was going to do, he called his Minister of Justice, a gentleman whom he had put there for a purpose, to do that which Sir Charles Fitzpatrick would not do ; he calls in this Minister of Justice, this sapient, grave and reverend seigneur, this gentleman who would do no wrong, and the result is this mixed-up election Act which we have to-day. That is the measure by which the right hon. gentleman expects not only to appeal to this country but to coerce the people of this country to sustain him in power. Where is all his profession of high policy ? Farewell to those professions, farewell to all his high principles, farewell to his electoral promises, farewell to the pledges he gave to the people. He has abandoned them all, all the pledges he gave to the people of Canada in which they showed their confidence by placing him in power. He bids farewell to all, he casts them behind, grasping greedily at a Bill supplied by the hon. gentleman who sits behind him, put there for a purpose, supplied by that gentleman in the form of his election Bill which will be undoubtedly the means by which the right hon. gentleman will seek to retain power. The greed for power from which the right hon. gentleman has been suffering has carried him to great lengths, but I never thought it would carry him to this length, that it would carry him to the length of allowing violations of the constitution, the taking away of the franchise, the violation of the laws of the provinces. But he has used it, he has sacrificed his loftiest aims, his highest ideals and principles, for power. Power he wants, power he must have, power he will have. His high principles, his good name politically, his political kingdom, all he will give for a renewal of power.

Mr. JAMES CONMEE (Thunder Bay and Rainy River). Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend who has just sat down has made my task rather easy. If the hon. gentleman has proved anything. if his argument is sound, he has justified the passage of this Bill. I think I will be able to convince him of that in a very few minutes. Before taking that up I wish to correct a remark which he made. I asked him a question and in reply he stated that I had recommended certain of the enumerating officers in West Algoma, which constituency he has the honour to represent. In that he is entirely wrong. I never had anything to do with the recommendation of any of the officers in any manner whatever in connection with that election, in fact I never knew, until I heard from him, just who those officers were.

Mr. BOYCE. Does he suggest that I said or thought he had anything to do with the appointment of the officers in West Algoma ?

Mr. CONMEE. You did say so.

Mr. BOYCE. I had no intention of doing so. I meant his own riding. I beg his pardon if I conveyed the other impression to him.

Mr. CONMEE. I accept the explanation. I presumed at the time he did not mean what he said, but he gets a little excited once in a while and this is one of the occasions. The argument of my hon. friend, in my opinion, has justified the passage of the Bill. What are the conditions? He has pointed out that a condition of law exists which is very bad according to his story. I expect that this measure will remedy that condition. What occasioned the interference with the provincial law of which the hon. gentleman has made such strong complaint? I apprehend that it was the fact that the provincial lists were more than a year old in his riding. I represent a riding in northern Ontario. I think the hon. member gave the House to understand that the same condition that existed in Algoma existed elsewhere. That is not entirely correct, we did not have any revision of the lists in Rainy River district for the reason I have just stated, that the lists were not over a year old and therefore the provincial lists prevailed. If that is an evil, then it is an evil with which this parliament should deal.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. member say that the lists were not made up in his riding under the law at the last election?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, I have made the statement that there were no appeals.

Mr. BOYCE. I am very much surprised to hear it.

Mr. CONMEE. I was the candidate and I have no knowledge of any lists being made under Dominion officials, that is appeals taken.

Mr. BOYCE. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CONMEE. That is a matter of evidence. All I can say to my honoured friend is that there was no complaint about the lists and I am quite positive that I am right. I do not think the lists could be made up in that way without my having some knowledge of it. I refer to revisions. The evil the member complains of, if it is not remedied, will be repeated. It will altogether depend on when the provincial government makes its list or when this government may appeal to the country. It may be that in a great many constituencies we will have the application of the Act of which the hon. member has so strongly complained. Which position does he choose to take? Does he want a repetition of what happened in Algoma, or does he prefer that we should have a law, fairly well worked out, under which there will be proper machinery for the preparation of such lists. On his own argument he has made out a strong case in favour of the Bill. But that is not the only point on which the hon. member has rather assisted the argument of this side of the House. He criticised the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) for having made reference to conditions that existed in the province of Manitoba some four years ago, and the hon. member himself took up more than two hours of this House in telling us about his election that took place four years ago.

Mr. BOYCE. If my hon. friend will read 'Hansard,' he will see that several pages of the records of this House were devoted to this very matter three years ago.

Mr. CONMEE. That makes it all the worse. My hon. friend to-day went over what happened four years ago, doing what he found fault with another hon. member for doing in a less degree, and he has repeated what he said previously in this House. If he thinks that good judgment or an argument in favour of the defeat of this Bill, I shall have to leave him to his own opinion. All I can say is that it does not look very reasonable to me.

Now, I do not intend to discuss the Bill at any great length. I did not rise for that purpose. I merely rose to give reasons why I am prepared to support it. I am not going to say that the Bill is perfect as introduced. There may be improvements made. I have no doubt but that the hon. member who has introduced the Bill is quite willing to accept any fair suggestion that will improve the Bill. His closing words were these—that they wanted a square deal and an honest election. My hon. friend rather sneers at that. Let me tell my hon. friend and other hon. gentlemen opposite that if I chose to take up the time of this House in detailing the iniquities of the Conservative party with which I have had to deal in elections in my riding, I think I could make every honest man on that side of the House hang his head in shame. But I am not going to do that, because I do not think any good purpose could be served by so doing. As I understand the situation, the Liberal party is not committed entirely, without consideration of conditions, to the provincial lists. I quite agree with the previous history of the Liberal party in that respect. I quite agree with the statements made by my leader, not only in this House but throughout the country on that great question. But, Sir, this Bill does not propose to break the record; it does not propose to withdraw from the provincial lists. In the great majority of cases they are not interfered with; they are accepted. What are the cases in which they are not accepted? In the case to which this Bill applies, I think there is a justification for the course which has been adopted, and it is quite time that this parliament should deal with the question. At the time of the repeal of the Dominion Franchise Act, under which revising barristers appointed by the government in power made up the lists, not only in certain sections of the country where there were no municipal organizations or in provinces where the provincial lists were not considered to be fair and just, the position that was taken was well stated by the Minister of Justice yesterday, and I may be pardoned for referring to his words :

It was pointed out at that time, in answer to an observation by the present hon. leader of the opposition, that if, notwithstanding the fears which he then expressed, the time should come when any provincial government or provincial legislature should by its legislation, or by its administration of that legislation, so interfere with the course of the preparation of the voters' lists in that province, or if there was not an acceptable list, or there was ground for belief that the list so prepared was not of a fair and satisfactory nature, then this House always had it in its power, this parliament at any time could rescue control over its own lists and over its own franchise, and prevent the apprehended evil from taking place.

That was the position of the two parties at the time of the Dominion Franchise Act, or the Revising Barristers' Act, as it was generally called, was wiped off the statute-book ; and I submit that the time has now come and the conditions have now arisen, not only in Manitoba, but in other provinces, including the province of Ontario, when it is right and proper that this parliament should intervene in order that there should be a fair list that would be satisfactory, not only to one party, but to both political parties in this country. My hon. friend has made reference to the Ontario law. He has pointed out the machinery of that law, as applied to the unorganized territory, by which the enumerator posts up his list, and has to give a certain length of time for hearing the cases of any who have been wrongfully left off or wrongfully put on, as the case may be. When he prepares the list, he sends it to the clerk of the peace. It is then open to an appeal by any who may not be satisfied. After it is printed, it is posted for thirty days in order to give an opportunity to those who have been improperly left off to be put on and those who have been improperly put on to be struck off. The hon. gentleman said that thirty days was not too much. That law provides that the judge, after the list goes to him, shall give thirty days in which parties can appeal ; then he shall hold his court, and give notice of the time and place of holding it, in order that appeals may be heard. The hon. member protested strongly that thirty days was not too much and said he knew it very well from the experience he had had in the new section. If his argument be good—and I submit it is on that point—then I ask him to direct it against the provincial government of Ontario because they have violated every principle, they have set aside every protection that Act gives the people in those new districts, and they have brought in a measure, which is now in force, that robs the people of the rights they formerly possessed with regard to the preparation of the lists. To illustrate what I say, let me read an article from the Port Arthur 'Chronicle' of May 2 :

The conditions surrounding the preparation of the voters' lists in the unorganized districts are even worse than we stated yesterday.

The editor was there referring to a previous issue of his paper, in which he had pointed out that having regard to the time limit between the posting of the printed lists, the return of the lists to the clerk, and the posting of the notice previous to appeal, it would be physically impossible to hold the elections at any time in June, and that if the provincial government persisted in holding them at the date announced, those constituencies would be disfranchised.

It has been thought that fifteen days was allowed after lists had been prepared in which to make appeals, but this is not so.

I may say, with regard to the fifteen days, the statute provides for thirty days, but in its last few days of sittings, the Ontario legislature passed a new Act revising the law, by which they gave power to the Lieutenant Governor in Council to issue a proclamation reducing the time, and I believe it was reduced to fifteen days. Of that, however, I am not certain, but that is the statement made here.

According to the Act passed in the last hours of the legislature, it is provided that no appeals can be made after the 15th May. According to this paper, as the enumerator will not have his preliminary lists prepared in several cases, possibly a majority of cases, it will be seen that there is practically no appeal possible from the lists as prepared by the enumerator.

According to the new Election Act, certified copies of the voters' lists must be in the hands of the clerk of the peace before the date of the writ calling an election and there must be an interval of at least sixteen days, after the date of the writ, before nomination day. It is a physical impossibility that the law can be complied with in either this riding or the riding of Fort William, so that if the government persists in holding the elections on the 8th of June as announced, it must smash its own laws to smithereens and disfranchise practically the whole country.

I believe, from what little knowledge I have of the operation of the present preparation of the list in these ridings, that that statement is substantially correct, but I give it just as it appears here, and there may possibly be some difference. But even if the statement be not correct, even if a shorter time, even if ten days, nay if one day were given for the appeal, it would be physically impossible to have a properly prepared list by the 8th June. It would be impossible because the enumerators have not yet completed their lists. Here is a letter from a gentleman giving me the dates of the sittings of the enumerator for holding of their courts for the preparation of the lists. He gives a number of places, and I notice one sitting is at North Lake on the 29th May. It will be clearly understood that if the hearing is on the 29th May and the list is to be printed and has to go to the clerk of the peace and from him to the judge and the judge gives any appeal at all, that cannot be done before the 8th June, and the list cannot be in the hands of the returning officer before the day of nomination if the case is as stated. There can be no doubt about that. Some time ago I gave my opinion to certain members of the provincial legislature that there was no intention on the part of the Ontario government to hold the elections in the new ridings on the same date as they would be held throughout the province. Mr. Whitney was cornered by the leader of the opposition and he made the statement that the elections would be held on the same day. I ask hon. gentlemen to take note—I give my opinion for what it is worth—that the elections will not be held in the new ridings on that date, Mr. Whitney to the contrary notwithstanding that is upon a fair list. They will discover that irregularities exist, and that the lists are not prepared, and will find ways and means of holding these elections after the date fixed for the general elections. I have it from very good authority, from a gentleman I believe to be in the confidence of the Conservative party, that such was the intention, and I leave hon. gentlemen opposite to deal with their own friends in regard to that matter.

If that condition of things exists in all sections of New Ontario, involving seven or eight constituencies represented in this House, I want to ask fair-minded men if it is not a reasonable proposition which is contained in this Bill. Not that new lists be prepared, because that is not the purport of the Bill, when the election comes on if there is a reason for making an order for a revision, the provincial lists are taken as the basis for the Dominion list. The names on that list are still entitled to vote until it can be shown before a court of competent jurisdiction that they are not, and any names omitted on that list of men entitled to exercise the franchise can be put on. Why should they not? Will any hon. member opposite tell us that men who are entitled to the franchise should be disfranchised because there is not machinery provided by either provincial or Dominion parliament to prepare a proper list? The voter is not to blame for that. His inalienable right is to exercise the franchise, and it is the duty of parliament, whether Dominion or provincial, to see that every man has a fair opportunity to exercise that right.

My hon. friend laboured considerably to show that in this hurried way the list was prepared in his riding last time. Well, that was a peculiar circumstance which never occurred before in the history of this country and I do not think it ever will again. If I am not mistaken, the officers of this government learned only at a late date that the lists were beyond the date. There could be no legal election held upon these lists. If the elections in these ridings were to be held upon the same day, then the lists had to be prepared hurriedly, and it appears that the officers did their best. Now, I think that my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) did not do himself credit, I do not think he advanced his standing in this House or in the country, by the course which he pursued this afternoon in one particular. He repeatedly stated that the revising officer was a servant of the Ross government, an appointee of the Ross government. That is not correct. The revising officer was Judge O'Connor. Associated with him was Mr. Quibell, who was police magistrate at that time, if I am not mistaken. Why should that not be the case? It is the case in the revision of every list under the provincial law in the province. The judge is appointed, and side by side with him sits some other gentleman who may be named. I have been in Judge Johnston's court when he was conducting these hearings, and with him sat Mr. W. H. Hamilton, barrister, of the Sault. That is the position Mr. Quibell occupied, practically it may have been a silent one, speaking generally; the judge was the man who conducted the revision. And yet the hon. member misled this House in statement after statement that this revision was carried on by an official of the Ross government. I do not think that was fair criticism. My hon. friend spoke strongly; I have no doubt he felt moved. He thought that some injustice had been done him, perhaps, and on that score he may be excusable for remarks he made on this point.

Mr. Speaker I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business tomorrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Same thing.

At six o'clock the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, May 7, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

INSURANCE COMMISSION.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto). Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I beg to move:

That the clerk of the House be authorized to remove from the file of exhibits of the Royal Commission on Insurance, exhibits Nos. 381, 383 and 385, the same being Dr. Elliot's report, Mr. Pipe's report and Mr. C. W. Macdonald's report, and return the same to the owners of the said reports, the Commercial Travellers' Mutual Benefit Association; certified copies of the said exhibits 381, 383 and 385 to be filed in place of the said exhibits among the exhibits of the said commission.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Explain.

Mr. MACDONELL. These are three exhibits that were filed with the Royal Commission on Insurance in the city of Toronto. They are actuarial reports of the three persons mentioned in the motion. They were filed by the Commercial Travellers Mutual Benefit Association who own them. They now require these originals back in their possession and they ask the House to allow them to have these returned to them, they depositing certified copies in their place with the clerk of the House. The clerk of the House has now certified copies in his possession which he is willing to retain in lieu of the originals.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

PAYMENTS UNDER SUPERANNUATION AND RETIREMENT ACTS.

Mr. BLAIN—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

What amount was paid each year for the three years previous to the repeal of the Superannuation Act and the amount paid each year under the Retirement Act?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

The Act to provide for the abolition of the Civil Service Superannuation Act and for the retirement of members of the Civil Service (chapter 17 Statutes 1898) came into force on the 1st July, 1898.

The amount paid on account of superannuation each year for the three years previous to that date was:

1895-6	$311,231 79
1896-7	307,792 66
1897-8	340,185 67

The amount paid each year under the Retirement Act was:

1898-9	$ 6,434 88
1899-1900	1,755 69
1900-1	4,195 56
1901-2	2,750 02
1902-3	4,986 84
1903-4	8,837 24
1904-5	8,138 61
1905-6	11,260 76
1906-7	12,206 68
1907-8	15,178 21

EXPERIMENTAL FARMS.

Mr. LAPOINTE asked:

In which provinces are the new experimental farms for which an appropriation of $40,000 is placed in the estimates for 1908-9 to be established?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). The Department of Agriculture is now negotiating with the governments of the provinces of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia with regard to experimental farms, and it is also considering applications from various parts of the province of Quebec, the province of Saskatchewan, and the province of British Columbia. It is hoped that some or other of these establishments will be arranged for this coming season.

ST. PETER'S INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette) asked:

1. Has a petition been received by the government from the Indians of St. Peter's reserve, Manitoba, in reference to the holding of an election for chief and councillors?
2. Is it necessary to receive the consent of the government before such an election can take place?
3. What is the term of office they are elected for, and when does the term of the present chief and councillors expire?
4. Will the surrender of the St. Peter's reserve interfere with the holding of their election?
5. What reply, if any, has been made by the government to the petition?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Yes; a petition, dated 7th of January, 1908, has been received from the Indians of the St. Peter's reserve in reference to the holding of an election for chief and councillors.

2. It is considered necessary that the consent of the government should be received before such an election can take place, as the Indians of the St. Peter's band are not legally entitled to an election, the elective system, under section 93 of the Indian Act, not having yet been applied to that band by order in council.

3. Although, as stated in answer No. 2, the elective system has not been applied to the St. Peter's band, those Indians have been allowed to hold an election every three years. Consequently, the last election having been held on 4th of July, 1905, the present term would naturally expire on 4th of July of the present year (1908).

4. No; as the surrender has already been taken.

5. On the 16th of January, 1908, the Indian commissioner was reminded, with reference to the petition referred to, that the elective system under section 93 of the Indian Act not having been applied by order in council to any Indian band in Manitoba, the Indians of St. Peters have no legal right to that system, but that on the other hand, as they have for a long time been allowed the privilege of holding an election every three years, they might now consider that they have a moral claim to the privilege; but that, as it was then five or six months before the usual date of holding the election, there was time for further consideration of the matter.

QUEBEC BRIDGE COLLAPSE.

Mr. ROBITAILLE—by Mr. Armand Lavergne—asked:

1. What are the names of the parties who formed the coroner's jury investigating the Quebec bridge collapse?
2. How many and who of these gentlemen are shareholders of the Quebec bridge?
3. Upon what were the jurymen expected to report?
4. How many men were killed and injured?
5. What was the verdict of the coroner's jury?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The government has no information about this matter.

MR. PETER LYALL.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Daniel—asked:

1. Is the Peter Lyall, who presided at the banquet to Hon. Wm. Pugsley in Montreal, the same man whose firm some days later secured the contract for the erection of the National Transcontinental terminal at Winnipeg?
2. Is the said Peter Lyall the same man who locked out the workmen on Young Men's Christian Association building in Ottawa, for the erection of which he or his firm is the contractors?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The reply to this question scarcely comes within the purview of the government, and I submit that the source of information is as open to my hon. friend as it is to me.

DOMINION ARSENAL.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked:

1. Is the Dominion arsenal or cartridge factory, or any portion of the building or buildings, situated on any part of the land leased to the Ross Rifle Company at Quebec?
2. If so, has any correspondence or communications of any kind taken place between Sir Charles Ross or any official of the Ross Rifle Company and the government, or any member or official thereof, in regard to the same, and what was the nature of the correspondence?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. Yes, one small building, the Fulminate Factory, is situated on the land under lease to the Ross Rifle Company.

Mr. OLIVER.

2. There has been no correspondence other than that included in a return to an order of the House of January 23, 1907, for copies of all documents and correspondence concerning the erection of the Ross rifle factory on the Plains of Abraham, Quebec; which return was laid on the table of the House on Thursday, March 14, 1907.

QUEBEC TERCENTENARY.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked:

1. Have any regiments, city or rural, of the Canadian militia, intimated in any way to the government or Department of Militia and Defence their unwillingness to attend the Tercentenary celebration at Quebec, under the terms laid down in an order issued by the Department of Militia and Defence governing such celebration? If so, what has been the nature of the protests?
2. What regiments have signified their intention of not taking part in the celebration or protested against the terms of the order?
3. Has the government or the Department of Militia and Defence under consideration better terms of payment for troops taking part in the celebration?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). In view of the fact that nothing has yet been definitely settled as to what regiments will be mobilized at Quebec, at the time of the Tercentenary celebration, it is undesirable in the public interest that this question should be answered at present. Full information will be communicated to the House when arrangements have been completed.

BRITISH COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEAL.

On the order:

Resolved, that in the opinion of this House it is expedient to make provision for the payment of annual salaries to judges to be appointed to the Court of Appeal in the province of British Columbia, as follows:—

The Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal, $7,000.

Three Justices of Appeal, each $6,000.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I ask the permission of the House to withdraw this notice of motion with the intention of resuming it in a slightly different form

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE—'LE SOLEIL.'

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Before the orders of the day are called I rise to a question of privilege. In a paper published in Quebec, the 'Le Soleil,' which passes to be the organ of the government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Passes?

Mr. BERGERON. There is an article published in this paper which I looked upon as humorous but it might be taken seriously by the readers of that paper and to that article I want to call the attention of the House. It is a long article, but to save time I will translate a summary of its contents: It says that on the motion made by the leader of the opposition last Thursday which was directed against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries because he is a French Canadian, all the Conservative French Canadian members except one left the House so as not to vote, and it would imply that they left because they dissented from the motion of the leader of the opposition. The article also says that I spoke upon the question although I did not vote. I want to say that I did not vote because I was engaged outside of the House, but I was paired with my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) and if I had been here I would certainly have voted for the amendment of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I am glad the hon. gentleman from Beauharnois brought this matter to the attention of the House because I intended to do so myself when I had the article translated.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is the hon. gentleman rising to a question of privilege ?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Yes, the same question of privilege as that brought up by the hon. member for Beauharnois. The article says that I also shirked the vote because an attack was made on Mr. Brodeur as being a French Canadian and that therefore I did not want to vote. I have to say that I did not vote because I did not want to vote, but at the same time I want to say that I have no belief in the statement that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was attacked because he is a French Canadian. I certainly disapprove of the article in 'Le Soleil.' Here is a paper which is trying to raise a racial cry in the province of Quebec——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is proceeding to criticise the general course of a newspaper and that is hardly a proper subject for discussion on a question of privilege.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I have pointed to the allegation in the article and I desire to state my position.

Mr. SPEAKER. What is the question of privilege that the hon. gentleman desires to speak to.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. The question is that the article is false and I want to show it is.

Mr. SPEAKER. There must be something personal to the hon. member in his capacity as a member of the House to entitle him to speak to a question of privilege.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. My name is twice mentioned in the article and that makes it personal. I wish I had the article here so that I could read it to the House. I think I have the right to bring to the attention of the House any attack made by a newspaper or any campaign made by any newspaper in any part of the country. This newspaper has been trying to raise racial prejudices——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not taking the proper course to discuss a question of this kind. If there has been something said which the hon. member thinks reflects upon him and which he desires to explain or controvert or deny, he is quite within his rights in discussing that as a question of privilege, but he cannot in this way proceed to discuss the attitude of a newspaper on any question.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. member admits it.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I thought I could explain a newspaper article in which I was referred to by name.

Mr. SPEAKER. There seems to be at times quite a misapprehension in the House as to what a question of privilege is.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Therefore I do not know when I can bring the question before the House, if it is not a question reflecting on a member.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Going into Supply.

Mr. BUREAU. 'Le Soleil' accuses you of not voting and you admit it.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I said I did not vote.

Mr. BUREAU. It said you shirked the vote and you admit it.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I admitted that I did not vote.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. MONK.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Speaking on the question of privilege, I understand that I am mentioned in 'Le Soleil' in practically the same manner as my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). I do not often read 'Le Soleil' because I find it contains news generally three weeks old, but if I am so mentioned I desire to express my protest. I was paired that evening with my hon. friend from Hants (Mr. Black) and I do not take much stock, and I do not think any one in my province does, in this racial question or the racial character of the attack on the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, because it is too ridiculous.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. BOYCE.

Mr. BOYCE. I also wish to speak on a question of privilege and I am sure the House will agree that if I can deny successfully the statement made by the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Commee) I am justified in rising at this time. I am not objecting to any reasonable criticism of that hon. gentleman, but when he accuses me openly on the records of misleading the House, I think that is too serious to pass without comment. In his concluding words the hon. gentleman said :

Now, I think that my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) did not do himself credit, I do not think he advanced his standing in this House or in the country, by the course which he pursued this afternoon in one particular. He repeatedly stated that the revising officer was a servant of the Ross government, an appointee of the Ross government.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly object to that statement and in order to justify myself in the eyes of the House, the country and of my hon. friend from Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), who I am sure will be able to set the matter right, I shall read what I did say. At page 8209 of 'Hansard' I said :

Now I will refer to the result of that appeal. The appeals were directed against 513 names, and instead of having the senior judge of the district to perform his usual functions with regard to those appeals, we had a board of two. You see the sinister motive of that. Instead of having one judge whose duty had been for years to revise these lists, who knew the law, who knew what the qualifications were, who knew all the tricks of getting men on the list and making an improper list, who was the one man who was competent to sit on these lists, this government deposed him and got two. And why two? So that in case of a disagreement the names should stand on the list. That is the law. If Judge O'Connor differed with the police magistrate with regard to the right of John Jones to be on the list, and the judge said he had no right to be there, and the magistrate said he had a right to be there, he is there, and his name remains on the list.

I do not think I could have put the matter more fairly or more fully. I thought that I had occupied sufficient time to make myself plain, and I strongly protest against being accused, under those circumstances, of misleading the House in that particular.

RESIGNATION OF MR. GOURDEAU.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I beg to make an inquiry of the government respecting two statements which I cannot quite reconcile. On the 1st of April the Prime Minister, referring to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, made this statement :

It is only just to the deputy minister of that department that I should say in this connection that on two previous occasions he tendered his resignation to the minister and this morning again pressed his resignation, and that matter is in the hands of the minister for consideration.

I inquired twice in the House as to whether or not that resignation had been accepted. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was not present and by some strange fatality he seems to be absent to-day. Yesterday when I asked the question again the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries made this statement :

The deputy minister has not tendered his resignation but has asked for leave of absence and for superannuation. His request in regard to leave of absence has been granted and the other request is engaging the attention of the government.

Might I ask the Minister of Marine or, in his absence, the Prime Minister, which of these two statements we are to accept ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In the absence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries I can only say that I understood it to be the case that Mr. Gourdeau had tendered his resignation and had asked for superannuation. I have not seen the resignation myself, but I understood from conversation with my colleague, that he had tendered it asking at the same time for superannuation, and that while the minister had agreed to his resignation the matter of superannuation was under consideration. I understand also that he has in the meantime asked for leave of absence. But the information which I obtained was simply from conversation with my hon. friend the Minister of Marine. I cannot see at the moment if there is a real contradiction between the two statements. I will have to look at them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In one place it was stated that the resignation had been twice offered.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is what I understood.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister yesterday said the resignation had not been tendered.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If that be so I have been misinformed. I will have to inquire about it.

SPRING FLOODS.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the Minister of Marine sent an engineer, as he promised the other night, to examine the broken dam at Valleyfield, and if so, if a report has been received from that engineer ?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). An official of the Railways and Canals Department has visited the scene of the trouble to give instructions to make all repairs that could possibly be made under the circumstances.

POLICING GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC LINE.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I ask what policy is being pursued in the matter of appointing police magistrates or persons to carry out the law against the sale of liquors along the line of the eastern extension of the Grand Trunk Pacific ?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I am not sure whether that would come under my department or under the Justice Department.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I understand the inquiry to be what provisions have been made for the enforcement of the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquor along the line of the Transcontinental Railway. In reply I have to say that at some period—I am not certain as to the time, but more than twelve months ago—a proclamation was issued covering the strip of territory on either side of the line from Quebec to Winnipeg, through the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba. Mr. W. A. Quibell was appointed police magistrate for the portion of that territory extending from Winnipeg to the boundary between Ontario and Quebec. Mr. Lucien Pacaud was appointed police magistrate for the portion of that strip through the province of Quebec. Subsequently, upon the construction of the line between the Quebec bridge and Moncton being undertaken, a similar proclamation was issued constituting a belt of territory. I think ten miles in width, on either side of the line from the south shore of the St. Lawrence, to the city of Moncton, a territory within the provisions of the statute. The same gentleman, Mr. Pacaud, was appointed magistrate for so much of that belt as is within the province of Quebec. Recently the appointment has been made of a third police magistrate for the portion of that belt in the province of New Brunswick. The gentleman appointed is Mr. Farris, of White's Cove, New Brunswick.

Mr. SPROULE. Has that police magistrate the power to try any other cases except in connection with the sale or distribution of liquor?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I cannot reply categorically without referring to his commission. My impression is he has all the powers of two justices of the peace.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman to bring down the commission?

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister of Railways bring down one of these commissions? That will give us the power.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will bring down a copy.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do they sell liquor on the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Intercolonial Railway does not sell liquor. One of the difficulties, so other railway companies tell us, in managing the cafe department of the Intercolonial Railway, is that all others make a large profit out of that part of their business while the Intercolonial Railway does not sell liquor and is consequently deprived of that profit.

REPRESENTATION OF VETERANS AT TERCENTENARY.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Minister of Militia made any progress in connection with the request made to him by the Prime Minister and supported by myself in respect to the war veterans of Canada having representations at the Tercentenary celebration at Quebec?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am communicating, as was suggested by the First Minister, with the commission. In the meantime I would like to say that whatever is done in a military way at Quebec is proposed to be done out of the vote for the active militia for annual training. I do not see how it would be possible for the Militia Department to spend money in the particular way mentioned. I have read the letter which my hon. friend sent me from Mr. Collins, representing the veterans. I would like to say that although the veterans paraded most creditably at Toronto before the Prince of Wales, then Duke of York, it did so happen that that was done without any expense whatever, because it was only the veterans in the city of Toronto and vicinity who paraded. When I receive an answer from the commission I will communicate it to the House.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Aylesworth for the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Mr. JAMES CONMEE (Thunder Bay and Rainy River). At six o'clock yesterday I was making some remarks with respect to the Bill before the House, and I may refer for a moment to the remarks which have fallen from the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce). He thinks that in the remarks I passed upon him yesterday he was somewhat misrepresented. I desire to say that I had no intention of misrepresenting him, and I thought that I stated fairly his position, and it is within the judgment of the House as to whether the remarks I made were quite justified. The hon. gentleman throughout his speech referred to the revising officer as Mr. Quibell. He mentioned the name of the judge on two occasions—one when he read the order appointing the enumerator, and again when I asked him if Judge O'Connor was not one of the enumerators. Generally speaking the hon. gentleman, whether he noticed himself doing so or not, did refer to the revision being entirely in the hands of Mr. Quibell, and when an hon. gentleman opposite said: 'An official of the Ross government,' my hon. friend assented. Under those circumstances I do not think that the remarks I made were out of place. But I do not wish to tie the hon. gentleman down to that. I am quite willing to accept his explanation that such was not his intention.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. gentleman think that anything I said warranted his accusation that I had misled this House?

Mr. CONMEE. I think so. I am in the judgment of the House as to that. I do not say that my hon. friend did it intentionally, but that was the impression his remarks gave me, and if any one is responsible, it is my hon. friend. I wish to say that Judge O'Connor, who was appointed revising officer in my hon. friend's riding, is the junior judge of that district, and Mr. Quibell was associated with him in that revision. As these courts are so conducted throughout Ontario, both officers sit together at times. My hon. friend shakes his head. It is quite possible that in the hurry of the election to which he refers they divided the work. But I say that, generally speaking, they sit together.

Mr. BOYCE. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) allow me a moment? I can set him right, I think. It is under the manhood registration Act that there is a board of appeal judges, but under the Ontario Voters' List Act there is only one appeal judge, and that is the district judge.

Mr. CONMEE. Unless two are appointed.

Mr. BOYCE. They are appointed by statute, the district judge is persona designata under the statute.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) is speaking of the Ontario Act.

Mr. BOYCE. Of course, that is the Act I was speaking of.

Mr. CONMEE. But this was not under the Ontario Act, this was under the Dominion Act. I am not going to argue whether my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) is technically correct or not; I am dealing with the impression given me by the language of the hon. gentleman, and I am in the judgment of hon. members as to whether I understood his remarks or not. I do not think my hon. friend has any complaint to make with regard to Judge O'Connor. Judge O'Connor is a Conservative. I think he is a competent man to conduct such a revision. I think also that Mr. Quibell is a competent man to conduct such a revision. I do not think the hon. gentleman has made out a case against either of these officers. The hon. gentleman found fault on the ground that Judge Johnston had not been made a revising officer while Mr. Quibell was appointed to that duty; and he said that Mr. Quibell was an appointee of the Ross government, the inference suggested being that he was a partisan more or less. My answer is that, if the hon. gentleman will canvass his own town of Sault Ste. Marie, he will find that the majority will say that Mr. Quibell is less partisan than the hon. judge to whom he made reference. Mr. Quibell, who has been referred to, was not an official in the ordinary sense of the word. He was a police magistrate, and therefore quite a competent person to be appointed to the position of revising officer.

Now let me point out to my hon. friend the difference between the system followed by the Ross government, and the Liberal government, when in power, and that followed by the present government of Ontario. I made some complaints yesterday of the manner in which the voters' lists are now being prepared in the riding which I represent in this House. The course followed by the previous government was to appoint as enumerators in charge of making up the lists, certain officers,—the sheriffs were appointed, as far as I know, and they are responsible officers. But what do the hon. gentleman's friends in power in Ontario, do to-day? They do not appoint the sheriffs for this work, but they choose the strongest partisans. My hon. friend talks about 'ward heelers,' meaning thereby, I take it, the most extreme partisans. Well, the most extreme partisan in the town in which I live has been appointed the enumerator. And this gentleman is the agent of the Conservative candidate, so that the enumerator's office and the office of the Conservative candidate are the same. I have here a newspaper—to be fair I must say that it is a Liberal newspaper, but I give its statement to the House because I believe it to be true. I will not give the name, but it states, concerning this enumerator that he is well known to be very active in politics and is the agent of the Conservative candidate, that his office is the office of the Conservative candidate, that he will not deny that he is the employee or partner of the Conservative candidate and that he is actively advocating the interests of the candidate during the time he is acting as enumerator in the riding. Of course, I know, my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) is not responsible for all this, I merely point it out to show the spirit that exists. It is about time, I submit, that some law was passed to correct these evils, some system adopted better than the system we have. If the yesterday's argument of my hon. friend pointed to anything, it was to the fact that the existing Dominion law in regard to the preparation of these lists was defective. He made out a very strong complaint against it. But, if this is so, I would ask him why he is not prepared to join in improving the law by enacting desirable amendments ?

Mr. BOYCE. With the hon. gentleman's permission, I would like to ask a question, as I do not wish to misunderstand him. Do I understand him to say that the enumerator appointed by the Ontario government is an employee or partner of the government candidate there ?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes.

Mr. BOYCE. And does the hon. gentleman say this from his personal knowledge, or does he merely give what this newspaper says ?

Mr. CONMEE. I believe it to be the case.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman has not read the name. I happen to know the name of the gentleman appointed there ; it is Joseph G. Ashford.

Mr. CONMEE. That is right. I am glad the hon. gentleman mentioned it, for I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) all about it. Joseph G. Ashford was appointed enumerator, but never acted, never was called upon to act. And why ? Because he is an honest man ; he is a Conservative, but a straightforward, honest man. And I stated to some of my friends when Joseph G. Ashford was appointed, 'They will never let him act, for he is not the kind of man the machine can use.' And they never did let him act ; they held him back ; they never gave him instructions. One of the enumerators, Mr. Eool, completed his list, and yet Mr. Ashford never got instructions to go on. Later, Mr. Hogarth—I will give the name now—who is employed as book-keeper and office man of the gentleman who has been nominated by the Conservative party, whether he is in partnership with him or not I do not know, has been appointed the enumerator and another man with him, whose name I have not before me, but, in any case, it is not Mr. Ashford. Had Mr. Ashford carried out the work of making these lists, I venture to say there would be no complaint and no occasion for appeal, as he would have done what was fair. But what did they do at Fort William ? If my hon. friend wants to force me into a discussion of this question, I have no objection to discuss it, but I am sure that, when we are through, he will have a worse opinion of his friends in Toronto than he has now. I do not like to mention the names of men who are not here, so I will not give this gentleman's name.—The enumerator appointed at Fort William started out in his work. He was a man that did not have a wide acquaintance, he can hardly be spoken of as a well-known man. Well, the law says that the lists should be posted up at every schoolhouse and every separate schoolhouse, but, in this unorganized territory, there are no schoolhouses—or very few and at great distances apart. In any case the facts are, that this gentleman had posted up his lists, that thirty days had elapsed after he had posted them up and that he had gone out on his second round holding his courts, before any Liberal knew anything at all about it, or had any idea that any lists were being prepared. There were no advertisements in the papers, no notices that really conveyed the information. When the matter was inquired into it was found that this gentleman had posted up on the door of his residence a notice that he was posting up the lists. Well, nobody thought of going to this man's house to find out. Nobody knew that he was the enumerator. Nobody knew that he was doing anything, it was entirely in the dark. That list has been completed a considerable time ago, I have a copy of it. Yet Mr. Ashford never got instructions to go, and why, I leave it to my hon. friend to say. I gave an opinion last night that I did not believe there was an honest intention on the part of the powers that be at Toronto to hold elections in those ridings on the same day, and leave it to my hon. friend to judge what was meant by holding back Mr. Ashford and then supplanting him by another enumerator who was clerk and agent of the candidate. What I said yesterday I repeat, that in my opinion they cannot hold the elections on the 8th of June, if they have a proper list. The Liberals are up against this difficulty, that they have either got to accept the lists such as they are with out an appeal, or they have got to run the risk of having the elections thrown over and having by-elections, which always places the party in opposition at a disadvantage. I submit that is not fair, and I submit that that is a justification for this Bill we are considering. This Bill is brought forward in order that there may be proper machinery, that there may not be that haste my hon: friend complained of so bitterly yesterday. He says the Bill provides that the list is to be prepared just as the previous Act did. That is not quite correct. It does say that the preparation of the list may be made by order in council after the writs are issued, but it goes on to say that the order in council may be passed at any time. Now I submit that if the government are charged with the responsibility of preparing the lists, it is reasonable to assume that they will give proper time. The last time the proceeding was new. I was informed, I do not know how corectly, that they did not discover that it was necessary to make these lists, that it was not known that certain of the provincial lists would be more than a year old, early enough to afford more time and that it was advisable to have recently prepared lists in order that there might be a fair representation of the electors, and that those who were entitled to vote might have an opportunity of voting. Therefore there was perhaps some haste the last time. In the riding I represent, I stated yesterday, that I did not think any revision took place. I find on inquiry that I was mistaken ; there was a revision in the Thunder Bay district, but there was no revision, or no appeal at all events, in the Rainy River district. There appears to have been an appeal in the Thunder Bay district. Just why that was so I cannot now remember, but I have no doubt it was because our Conservative friends, knowing they had a judge who was a little extreme in his political leanings—I think the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) knows the gentleman to whom I refer—thought that it would be a good thing to have an appeal and a revision, and therefore they did so. I am not finding fault with that, I am only calling the attention to it of the hon. member for Algoma.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman says that under this Act that evil will be remedied. I say that under subsection 1, when the writ is issued the proclamation can go out for making the voters' lists. I would ask him to state how that would permit the Ontario law being complied with which requires sixty days to make up the list and allow appeals ?

Mr. CONMEE. If the hon. gentleman will read the law he will find it states that the revision may take place at or after the issue of the writ. He will find also that the Governor in Council may at any time issue a proclamation, may do it six months before the writs are issued, or whenever he pleases. Therefore I think the Act is wide enough to meet the objection which my hon. friend laboured so hard yesterday to set forth. I hope he is satisfied now. Now I want to make some reference to further remarks of the hon. gentleman. He took up considerable time in discussing what he had already discussed in this House on previous occasions, that is, the injunction which he took against the proceedings in regard to the making up of the voters' lists He did not take that on behalf of anybody, he took it as an elector of the riding. Now the hon. member referred in the course of his remarks to the finding of the judge. He cannot assume that Judge Meredith, in view of his general standing, would not be eminently fair to my hon. friend if there was a justification. The finding of the judge was that the proceedings instituted by the federal authorities were perfectly legal. Now what was the position of my hon. friend ? I think he made a mistake on that occasion, perhaps he does not realize it now, but I think he will realize it. What did he undertake to do ? He undertook to disfranchise a large number of voters, he undertook to prevent a preparation of new lists in order that lists more than a year old should be used at the elections, and that a large number of men who were entitled to vote should be deprived of their franchise. Well, I do not think that was a proper course for the hon. gentleman to take, but I suppose he used his own judgment in that regard. Now I just wish to read to the House some of the questions which the hon. gentleman read yesterday, and which he asked this enumerator. Before I do so, I may say that the impression the hon. gentleman left on my mind, and perhaps on the minds of other members was that he did not think that a lumber camp was the proper place to hold the polls, he did not think that a labourer in a lumber camp was entitled to vote. If he was a farmer or something of that kind, he might be put on the list. But holding a revision, sending out an enumerator in order to give the lumbermen a right to vote and holding a poll where they could cast their votes, why that was an enormous thing. If the hon. gentleman's argument had any point at all, that was the point to which it tended. Now here are his questions :

Do you know any people in the township?

Mr. BOYCE. That is in the examination which I quoted, I did not conduct that examination.

Mr. CONMEE. Then I will have to direct my remarks to the man who did. Somebody conducted this examination on behalf of my hon. friend. But my hon. friend fathered it ; he approved of it for he read it to us yesterday as a condemnation of the Bill. I do not see how he can escape. If he repudiates it now I will give him credit for having good common sense for once.

Q. Do you know any of the people in that township?—A. No.

Again :

You have never been there.

Again :

Are you personally acquainted with any of the voters?

Again :

What are they doing?

Again :

Do you know what they went up there to do?

Again :

And on the whole list there are only some three or four men whose names you recognize?

Again :

And all the men in that list are working in McFadden & Malloy's camp?

Again :

And there is not a single farmer or settler or anything other than a lumberman whose name is on that list?

Again :

And in that list there is not a single farmer or settler put down?

Again :

And there are none such there that you know of?

Again :

Nothing but a wood road from Garden river?

Continuing the same line of questions :

Q. Whose camps are those in the township of Curtis?—A. Miller & McCool.

Then my hon. friend directs his remarks particularly to my hon. friend from Nipissing (Mr. McCool). What are we to infer from these questions ?—that the gentlemen who were labouring in these camps were not entitled to the franchise, are not many of them farmers' sons very largely and the residents of towns and villages, some of the very best citizens of this country, men who compose largely our volunteers and who, if we were involved to-morrow, would perhaps be the first upon the firing line. Are they to be deprived of their votes, or are they to be belittled in the manner in which they are in these questions ? Does the hon. member want this House or the country to understand that because that kind of a man was trying to get his name on the list and was trying to poll his vote this government is to be condemned and this measure is to be defeated because they gave him the opportunity ? Well, I will leave that for my hon. friend to reflect upon.

Now, I wish to discuss for a moment another clause of the Bill. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) took strong exception to clause 17 on account of the words in the section that a ballot should not be rejected because of any writing, number or mark placed thereon by any deputy returning officer. The hon. member went on to make a strong statement and he said that :

—we are face to face with this situation; that when it is desired that the vote of any particular elector shall be known, and the manner in which he marks his ballot shall be known, the deputy returning officer can mark upon it, 'This is John Smith's ballot,' and that will be an absolutely good ballot.

I differ from my hon. friend in that regard. I can hardly believe that he was in earnest. Does he really believe that the returning officer can write such a declaration upon the ballot, that it would be permitted, that he could escape punishment and that the ballot would be held to be a good ballot ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What can he write upon it ?

Mr. CONMEE. He cannot write anything upon it. I do not think my hon. friend believes he can write anything upon it.

Mr. BOYCE. What does the Act say ?

Mr. CONMEE. The Act does not say so.

Mr. BOYCE. Does it not say any writing ?

Mr. CONMEE. It is not to be construed in that sense. It means any inadvertent word or mark.

Mr. BOYCE. If my hon. friend would read the Act——

Mr. CONMEE. I have read the Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not see that the word 'inadvertent' was used in the section.

Mr. CONMEE. I did not say that it is. but I say that any person reading it and exercising ordinary judgment, such as the hon. gentleman usually does, would read it in that way.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it means that would it not be better to say that ?

Mr. CONMEE. Well, if it meant that or if that was the intention, but I cannot argue it on that ground because I cannot assume that that was the intention. We are face to face with a difficulty as the hon. gentleman has stated. What is the difficulty ? The difficulty is to get a secret ballot. I claim that this is a secret ballot. I want to point out to my hon. friend that there is a very great evil existing. I do not think he is so innocent that he does not know of hundreds and thousands of ballots have been destroyed in this country because a mark was put on them. Now, is that right ? Is it right that the returning officer should have it in his power to make a mark upon his ballot and disfranchise my hon. friend. Suppose he went into a polling booth and a returning officer chose to put a mark on his ballot with the result that his ballot would be thrown out ? There is an abundance of evidence that this has been done, that it has been done to a very large extent and done by friends of the hon. gentlemen opposite. I think I can give him a little piece of evidence about that. If I am not mistaken there is a name, or two, here that some of my hon. friends will recognize as soon as it is mentioned. The manner of conducting elections heretofore under the Franchise Act, even at the time when the lists were prepared by the revising barristers when the party of the hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, was most unsatisfactory. A great many frauds were committed, thousands of ballots were destroyed and thousands of men were disfranchised because of the dishonesty or carelessness of the returning officers. The object of this section is to do away with that evil. If hon. gentlemen say that the remedy is worse than the evil that is a matter for discussion but it is not fair criticism to argue that any officer could deliberately make a mark by which any man's ballot could be identified. If that is not a criminal act at the present time, it would be our duty, in passing this Act, to make it so and put a stop to that kind of work in elections. I think that hon. gentlemen opposite will remember Mr. Freeborn who has a history in the province of Manitoba. He went to that province and gave certain instructions, and I shall not detain the House to narrate his exploits in the Manitoba elections, but they were aired in the court and this gentleman was punished for wrong-doing in the election in that province in regard to how ballots might be destroyed by a little lead pencil fastened under the finger nails with beeswax, how a mark upon the ballot made when the scrutineer's eyes were not on him would spoil a ballot, and how marked ballots for the Conservatives could be substituted for Liberal ballots when the boxes were taken home. Now, I might make a comparison between the number of spoiled ballots in the elections of 1896 and the number of spoiled ballots in the election of 1900, and it will be remembered that the election of 1896 was conducted under the Conservative government and the elections of 1900 under the Liberal government. Here are a few of the results as to spoiled ballots.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the hon. gentleman who spoiled all these ballots?

Mr. CONMEE. That is just what I am leading up to. I will tell my hon. friend who spoiled them. I will not say the deputy returning officer spoiled them all, but I ask my hon. friend if he believes that this number of ballots was spoiled by the electors.

Mr. BLAIN. I would suppose so.

Mr. CONMEE. Well, the hon. gentleman is more innocent than I thought he was. Perhaps he has not the experience in elections that I thought he had. I submit that the disparity in spoiled ballots between 1896 and 1900 is too great to lead to the assumption that these ballots were accidentally spoiled. I think any one will admit that. Now, there is a case in Wentworth I think, where for the want of the initials of the returning officer a member lost his seat in this House, a new election had to take place, the courts had to be appealed to, and all kinds of difficulty occurred in connection with the ballot papers. I have not studied very closely the Bill before the House, but I submit that the franchise law of this country should enable every man who wants to cast an honest vote to do so without it being in the power of any officer whether honest or dishonest to spoil his ballot and disfranchise him. I do not need to argue that evils exist in our elections. A man can draw upon his imagination, and he can assume that all kinds of trickery and—to borrow a word from my hon. friend from North Toronto—all kinds of deviltry may enter into these elections.

Mr. PATERSON. Did you say that?

Mr. FOSTER. It is an expressive word.

Mr. CONMEE. If I wished to take up the time of the House I could go on to show county after county where friends of the Conservatives have perpetrated irregularities and worse; and where the courts have pronounced in the most decisive manner against the acts done by them. Take the case of South Ontario where Mr. Smith admitted he had expended $1,200 for bribery and when his solicitor remarked to Mr. Justice Osler that Mr. Smith's evidence was candid, the reply of the judge was that it was brazen; and the judge condemned in the strongest manner Mr. Smith who was an ex-Conservative member of this House. I do not pretend to say that there have not been Liberals here and there who have misconducted themselves in elections, for we know that men will go to greater extremes in these times than under ordinary circumstances, but I do say that the records of our courts show that more Conservatives than Liberals have been unseated for corruption. So that our friends have not such great honour to take to themselves in that regard. I believe that a case for the passage of this Bill has been made out. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) has shown us that 400 men were disfranchised by the manipulation of the officials. I do not know just who is responsible for that but it seems to me that the responsibility rests largely on the administration of the province of Manitoba. We have seen from the records the very great evils that have grown out of the present system. There is the fact of the preparation of the lists at the present moment, in regard to the provincial elections, in the unorganized territories in Ontario. My hon. friend will hear more about that later on. There is the case as against the operation of the present law which was made out by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Boyce). He makes the strongest complaint against it, that the time was not sufficient, that there was not that responsibility which there should have been, and in other ways that great injustice might have been done on that occasion. I think the hon. member was fairly successful in showing that there was a delay, but he did not state to the House, whether he believes it or not, that the revising officers did not act fairly, that names were improperly inserted or that men were left on who should have been struck off.

I wish to say something about another election to which our hon. friends are fond of referring, that in West Elgin. It seems there was something wrong there. I am not condoning anything that was wrong in West Elgin or elsewhere, but let me say that there is a black page in our history and in the records of the courts in connection with the King's county election in Nova Scotia. That was the greatest piece of political wrong-doing to be found on our records. It will always be a black page in the history of the Conservative party because it was not the work of a few misguided individuals at the time of an election in a particular constituency ; it was the leaders of the Conservative party in this House who, by deliberate action, unseated the man who had a majority of 160 and for two sessions or more kept in the seat the candidate who had been defeated at the polls by that large majority. If the records of this country show anything, to use the words used yesterday, of such enormity as that, I have yet to learn of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I never heard of that in King's county, N.S.

Mr. CONMEE. I may have made a mistake, it should have been King's county, N.B. Perhaps the hon. member would like to make a little lawyer's quibble about the name of the place.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is everything in a name.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not blame him a bit for wanting to escape from it. I do not know whether he was responsible for it or not but if he was he is all the more to blame. I have here the record of that case.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. member must lay on the table of the House the document from which he is about to quote.

Mr. CONMEE. I have no objection to giving my hon. friend the document if he wishes to see it. It may do him good, he may have forgotten. Perhaps he would like to have this other document laid on the table as I am now referring to an election in Algoma between the Hon. William Macdonald and S. J. Dawson in 1892.

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, oh.

Mr. CONMEE. I notice the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) is amused. He thinks that is going back a long way. Perhaps it is, but we have to go back, our honoured friends have had no chance for this kind of rascality of late. They are just as willing, I believe, as they were then. I do not think my hon. friend has repented, if he has I would be glad to know it. I do not see any hon. gentlemen opposite sitting in sackcloth and ashes because of their sins of the past.

I shall repeat a statement I made in the legislature a good many years ago in regard to that election, that the conduct of that election was one of the greatest outrages that could be perpetrated upon the rights of the citizens of any electoral district. What was the condition ? The contractors had control of the trains between Winnipeg and Port Arthur. On the west end of the line there was a contracting firm, Manning, Macdonald & Company. On the east end, there was a company, Purcell, Ryan, Genty & Marks. The election came on and these contractors would not permit any scrutineers to go on the trains. There was no such thing as a list up there, that would have been too much trouble. The returning officers were taken up, the navvies were gathered up, and they polled them first at one polling booth and then at another, over and over again. One persistent man did turn up as a scrutineer at one of the polling booths and as he was asserting his rights and there was some difficulty in getting rid of him, they adopted another plan ; they picked up the poll books and the returning officer, they put the returning officer on the train, left the scrutineer at the booth alone and went to another camp and polled the votes up there. But that is not all, they resorted to the old practice of the Conservative party. At Rat Portage, now Kenora, they brought in about 300 men who formed a circle around the poll and unless the voter was going to vote Conservative, he did not get through the circle. The only way the Liberals got their vote in was by forming in bodies and forcing their way through That was under the auspices of Manning, Macdonald & Company. I think the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) could tell the House and the country who comprised that company, it was stated that he was a member of it. I do not, of course, pretend for a moment that he had anything to do with this affair at Rat Portage, in fact I know he had not and that he was not there; but the fact remains that these were the tactics used on that occasion. That is not, I admit, an argument much in favour of the passage of this Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CONMEE. Or against it. What I want to point out is that if my hon. friends wish to attack administrative action and wrong-doing of this kind in the past, they must remember that they are not invulnerable, they are living in a glass house. Just as much if not more scandal can be directed to my hon. friends than can be directed to this side of the House. I submit that sufficient grounds have been shown to warrant the passage of this Bill. There is a sufficiently strong manipulation of wrong conditions of affairs to warrant the passage of this Bill. In the western provinces there are no lists at all prepared, and nobody has so far contended that there should not be lists there. In Manitoba, the manipulation of the lists under the present local government justifies our interferences. In Ontario I submit the same condition exists. Then there is the desirability of recently prepared lists. Under these circumstances, therefore, the enactment is, in my humble judgment, perfectly justifiable. I do not say that the law as submitted is perfect; I have only glanced over it slightly, but I say that an enactment of that kind is timely and necessary, and when the measure comes before the committee, no doubt the minister who introduced it will be quite prepared to accept any reasonable amendment. I can only say that I hope hon. gentlemen will realize that the Bill is not intended to place power in the hands of any set of officials and enable them to do wrong. But of course if the returning officer is dishonest, if the scrutineers will violate their oaths of office, if the men appointed to conduct the poll will perjure themselves, no ballot system you can devise will be perfect. I do not know what machinery you can devise which will make men honest, and hon. gentlemen opposite assume that the officials appointed are bound to act dishonestly. I submit, however, that the record of the Reform party in Ontario has been such that as a whole the elections conducted under their administration have been honestly conducted—that they have been purer under Liberal than under Conservative administrations. And I have sufficient confidence in the present government to believe that if this Bill be passed and the machinery provided by it put in motion, we shall have much better opportunity for free voting than we would otherwise. I cannot conceive that any administration would fail to use every precaution to see that the Act is fairly administered and that above all things there is a fair and equitable arrangement for getting voters upon the lists and having the lists revised by independent officers, against whose conduct there can be no ground for fault-finding. That is the condition of things which we ought to have, and which I think we will have when this enactment comes in force.

Mr. CONMEE.

Mr. WILLIAM J. ROCHE (Marquette). I have followed with great interest the various speeches delivered on this Bill—presumably on this Bill—by the members on the government side and have listened in vain to find them point out any provision in the Bill before us which is going to remedy the grievances which they claim now exist in connection with the preparation of the lists, more especially in British Columbia and Manitoba. Thus far I have failed to find that any hon. gentleman on the government side has pointed to one expression in any section of the Bill now before us which will in any way remedy those grievances, and we must only conclude that they are largely the figments of their own imagination. I have failed either to find out myself within the four corners of that Bill any remedy for those so-called grievances. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Conmee) might himself have discussed that Bill with possibly some advantage to the House had he felt so inclined. Of course, he accused my hon. friend who preceded him (Mr. Boyce), and who had pointed out fraudulent practices in connection with the preparation of the lists in unorganized districts of Ontario, especially his own constituency, of having made statements which he could not back up with substantial proof. Surely, he asked, if all this crookedness had taken place I would have been aware of the same. Well, I am confident that the hon. gentleman is pretty well acquainted with anything of that character which has taken place, but there may possible have been on some occasions some things that may have escaped his observant eye.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken. The remark I made was that I was not aware of any wrong-doing with regard to the revision of the lists in my own riding.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Then the hon. gentleman was aware of the other wrong-doing referred to?

Mr. CONMEE. Not at all, I did not make any remark with regard to that. The hon. gentleman has quoted me wrongly.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). That was the impression he left on this side at any rate. Nor can I see any provision in this Bill to prevent any member of a local legislature resigning his seat, or at any rate handing in his resignation, for the purpose of contesting a Dominion election, and then after having been rejected by the people in that election returning to the local legislature, acting in collusion with the powers that be, and having his resignation not acted upon and being thus dispensed from submitting his candidature to the people again. That is a serious omission which I am sure the hon. gentleman regrets very much. Nor do I see any provision which will prevent a member slipping out of the House when question time comes on and embarrassing questions may be asked with reference to a certain guarantee in connection with the Soo district, out of which contractors are supposed to be paid.

Mr. CONMEE. I rise to a point of order. I think the hon. gentleman has referred to myself. If he has, his statement is untrue, and I want him to withdraw it.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I have not said anything about the hon. gentleman. I said that there was nothing in this Bill to prevent any member slipping in and out of the House to avoid embarrassing questions.

Mr. CONMEE. It is clear that the hon. gentleman was referring to myself, and I ask him to withdraw the statement.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). If the hon. gentleman desires to take it to himself, I cannot prevent him. He has seen fit to bring in the name of Mr. Freeborne who has visited Manitoba. I am not here to defend the character of that gentleman, but whatever his character may have been prior to his alliance with the Liberal party, it certainly did not improve afterwards. During the elections in 1896 in Manitoba, acting in concert with one of the deputy returning officers, a Mr. Saunders, he tried to levy blackmail on the Conservative party and failed. And when he was arrested, who was his bondsman? It was Mr. J. G. Rutherford, the Liberal candidate, who went bail for this person of such very low character as depicted by the hon. gentleman.

It is true, he was wise enough to withdraw his bond prior to the bringing of Mr. Freeborn to trial. This same gentleman who had been so closely connected with the Liberal party was accused in the city of Winnipeg of having surreptitiously taken certain articles to himself out of a wholesale drug firm, and was allowed to leave the country—in fact advised to leave the country—with the intimation that if he did so no proceedings would be taken against him by the government led by the present member for Lisgar. I think it comes with a very bad grace from a gentleman who has been supporting the Ross administration in the legislature of Ontario to bring up in this parliament anything about ballot-switching, pencil-lead-under-the-finger-nail and that kind of thing. It was these notorious practices in Ontario that turned the Ross government out of power. They actually had training schools of experts in ballot-switching, ballot-box stuffing, ballot manipulation of every kind; they had men whose duty it was, on the eve of a political contest, to move about from constituency to constituency to train the deputy returning officers in the very practices enumerated by the hon. gentleman. And it was because of these practices that the rightous indignation of the people of Ontario at last rose to flood light, straightforward Liberals joining with Conservatives, and swept that government from power. I am sorry to see the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) is not in his place. But it is a practice of that hon. gentleman, after relieving himself of a speech in the House, to immediately leave his seat and seldom appear for the next week for fear of being set face to face with his own assertions. He did that on the occasion when the voters list question was up in this House a few years ago. And he is doing the same thing now. I should be glad if he were in his place, because there are certain questions I would like to put to him. There are certain transactions of his own when he was leader of the government of Manitoba which I shall discuss whether he is present or absent. His speech on Tuesday was largely a series of reckless assertions, absolutely unfounded in fact. His daring was only surpassed by that of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) in accusing the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) of having filled pages of 'Hansard' with quotations and then himself going on with, not the same kind of quotations, but quotations bearing falsehood on their face, quotations that he should have been ashamed to read in this House—quotations that I mean to refer to before I take my seat.

Now, I would like to ask the government what particular reasons have thus far been assigned by either the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) or any of his colleagues why this Bill should become law? Why disturb the existing condition of affairs, especially in the province of Manitoba? What particular motive have they? What animates them in this driving at the province of Manitoba? It seems the same old practice of this government is to be repeated. Ever since this government came into power, the little province of Manitoba has been subjected to indignities; and, to cap the climax, they are bringing down this nefarious measure, which, I say, and have no hesitation in saying, meets with the condemnation of honest Liberals of that province, as well as of Conservatives. You will search in vain in the speech of the hon. Minister of Justice—who, more properly should be designated the Minister of Injustice—for anything to show the real object of this Bill. There was not a word about that. The hon. gentleman said it was introduced to prevent the recurrence of the 'Thin Red Line' transactions which took place in Manitoba in the elections of 1904. He said that there was overlapping of certain constituencies and that this Bill was designed to remedy the difficulty. But there is not a line in this first section which refers to the overlapping of constituencies; that is dealt with in an entirely different section. The Minister of Justice did not, by one sentence or one word, refer to the real aim and object of the Bill, namely to take the preparation of the lists entirely out of the hands of the provincial authorities and put it into the hands of their own partisans appointed after the issue of a writ. There is one reason that has been assigned—one of which not much is heard in this House, but which is more often discussed outside the House and by the Liberal party in their press in Manitoba. There are very few of the Liberal newspapers backing up this Bill. Of course, there is the 'Free Press,' the Siftonian organ, the organ of the gentleman whose fine Italian hand can be seen back of this Bill, and who endeavoured to foist on this parliament in 1904 a measure calculated to have the same effect. But we had then, I am glad to say, a Minister of Justice who had more regard for the dignity of his position and was too fair-minded to slaughter the Conservative party in Manitoba as that Bill was intended to do and objected to having such a measure brought before this parliament. And the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) must have acquiesced in the decision of his Minister of Justice of that time or the Bill would have been introduced. It is said that the lists in Manitoba are not up to date. But in that province we have, and have had for years, an annual revision. If the elections take place this autumn before November, what will happen ? As pointed out by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) the elections will be held, so far as Ontario is concerned, upon the lists of 1907 : but in the province of Manitoba we shall have lists prepared up to July, 1908. That punctures the argument with reference to having lists up to date. It has been said also that the lists are not made by municipal clerks, and this is given as a reason why the preparation of the lists should be taken in hand by the Dominion government. Does this Bill provide that the lists shall be prepared by the municipal clerks ? Is that grievance going to be remedied, if grievance it be ? Where is the section of this Bill that provides for the compilation of lists by municipal clerks ? I defy any one to point it out. Why, under this Bill, the lists are to be prepared in the same way as provided shorty after the Franchise Act was placed on the statute-book—not exactly the same, because the Greenway administration was in power at that time and provided the way in which the lists were not prepared. But the lists were not prepared by municipal clerks. Only in one election in Manitoba were the lists so prepared, and that was in a by-election, this method of preparing lists being directed by the Greenway government themselves as an experiment. In the Portage elections, the lists were prepared by the municipal clerks. And the provincial premier of that time, the present member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway), stated, both in the legislature and on the public platform that we never had as bad lists in Manitoba as those that were prepared by the municipal clerks. That is the testimony of the hon. member for Lisgar, and I am surprised—well, perhaps I had better put it that I am not surprised that the hon. gentleman did not defend that way of preparing the lists ; for he was manly enough to state that he desired to see the lists for the whole Dominion prepared under the direction of the Dominion authorities. We are not taking exception to this principle as laid down by the hon. member for Lisgar ; and it is useless for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) to quote what the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) said some years ago, when the present Franchise Act was adopted by this parliament, that we were in favour of having lists throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion prepared under Dominion supervision. So far as I am concerned, I do not think that the Conservative party has receded from that position. We believe that the Dominion lists should be prepared under Dominion authority in every province in the Dominion. But we do not believe in having ostensibly a system under which the lists are prepared by the provincial authorities and then singling out provinces where the Conservatives are in power, and in these provinces taking the lists under the purview of officers appointed by the Dominion government. It has been stated, stated outside this House, I understand, that some members of the government party are none too anxious to see this Bill pressed. They do not invite discussion, they see that they are placed in an awkward position, they object to hearing quotations from the speeches of their leaders, as my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) quoted the other day. These quotations are very embarrassing, they show what a volte face they are making in connection with the preparation of these lists ; and overtures, I understand, have been made that if we will only allow this Act to apply to the province of Manitoba, the provisions relating to British Columbia and the unorganized districts of Ontario and Quebec will be dropped. What then becomes of their argument about the lists being made by municipal clerks ? Are they made by municipal clerks in the province of British Columbia? Where they made by municipal clerks in 1898 in either of the provinces? It shows the animus, it shows the object, it shows who is behind the Bill, when they are not willing to drop the provisions in respect to Manitoba but are willing to drop them in reference to the other provinces.

It has been stated that we have not sufficient registration booths in the local ridings at the time of the revision of the lists. Let any person take up the Manitoba 'Gazette' of this year and he will see that they have splendid conveniences afforded. I will not say that in every local constituency there is a registration booth in every polling division, but in almost every polling division there are one or more places for registration in nearly every local constituency. There are from six to twenty places provided in each constituency throughout the province containing those forty constituencies. Some person, I think it was the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) stated, though he did not state it of his own knowledge, I think the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Jackson) stated, that people had to travel 100 miles for the purpose of registering. I challenge that statement. I have gone over the lists, I have taken the map, in company with my colleagues, and we have marked the places where there are registration booths enumerated in the Manitoba 'Gazette' of 1908, and we find there are registration booths situated as far north as the Berens river, within 30 miles of the northern boundary of the province, and north of which, according to the last census, there were only 10 people living in the province. Why, that place is splendidly provided with registration booths. But I will refer to this later on.

The hon. member for Lisgar stated that there were great difficulties in dividing the lists according to the various constituencies. Taking his own constituency of Mountain, he said that the post office addresses were not included there ; and the Minister of Justice also said there was no proper designation, that is, they were not enumerated as to where their residence was. I have before me the local electors' list for the constituency of Mountain. It is true that in many instances there are no post office addresses given, but the section, the township and the range of every man on that list are put down. What better designation would you have ? The section, the township, the range and the occupation. And the registration clerks are local men, not men such as were used in the West Elgin contest, bearing fictitious names, assumed names, going in there to act in a wrongful manner ; but they are local men, who are acquainted with local conditions, who know the people, who know their post office addresses in these local constituencies, and there is very little trouble either in notifying those who are on the list, or in dividing the list according to the constituencies as put down by section, township and range. For instance, here is James Armstrong, resident in section 21, township 1, range 11. John Jones, residence, Crystal City, occupation, blacksmith, post office, Crystal City. Robert Black residence, section 14, township 2, range 11. And so on, every name being designated on the list according to where he resides, his post office or section—in every instance the section, but not in every instance the post office. But even that has been remedied by the present Act, which provides that in every case in the future the post office shall be given. That was done last year. I have here the registration that took place last year in the various constituencies of the province. Here are the voters' lists, with the additions and subtractions last year. Every man on the last year's list, every man who is going on this year's list, it is provided in the Act must have his residence, his occupation and his post office address stated.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Does the hon. gentleman say that on last year's list the post office address of every man is given?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I have the list here, one after another.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. It is only those who are added.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Well, the revision took place last year.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Only those that were added, though.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). You do not want those given who were taken off, do you ? Look at the additions and the subtractions. We have now almost a complete list, a complete new list. The hon. member for Lisgar dwelt on that subject yesterday ; he said our list was so many years old. But looking at all the additions subtractions that have been made last year, the year before and this year again, we will have almost a complete new list.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Not one-tenth of them.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I do not think the hon. gentleman has examined the list very closely. Now the Minister of Justice has stated as a reason why this Bill should pass, that we have in Manitoba ten constituencies for the Dominion and forty constituencies for the provincial legislature, and that there must be of necessity overlapping. Did not this occur when the Franchise Act of 1898 was adopted, only more so ? Then we only had seven seats for the Dominion, but we had forty provincial constituencies all the same. Do not they have the same thing in British Columbia ? Do not they have the same thing in the province of Ontario ? You will find overlapping in the old province of Ontario, you will find it in the constituency of West Hastings, you will find it in the city of Toronto, you will find it in Hamilton. If you are going to use that as an argument for new lists, then you would have to apply it to almost every province in the Dominion. Why then do you single out Manitoba ?

The Minister of Justice stated that the trouble arose from the registration districts in the province of Manitoba, that these differ from the polling subdivisions, and that therefore there would of necessity have to be a dividing of the lists, and of necessity some errors would creep in. Even that which he claims to have existed formerly, and which he failed to say does not exist to-day, has been done away with. The registration districts, in almost every instance, admitted by the Minister of Justice, were coterminus with the polling subdivisions. To-day we have no registration districts as provided for originally, but the registration takes place according to the provincial polling subdivisions. So there can be no grievance whatever on that score, no excuse whatever for an Act of this character.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose for a few minutes to refer to the provisions of the Act as it was when the present government came into power in Manitoba, and compare it with the provisions of the Act as they exist to-day. How were the lists prepared in days gone by when the hon. member for Lisgar was premier of the province? In the first place, there were registration clerks, partisan appointees of the government, just as this government intends to provide partisan officials to revise the lists if this Bill becomes law. Who were those registration clerks? Were they the very best men that would be found in the various local subdivisions? Not at all. They were men selected because of their party services. They were selected because they were the political henchmen of the government and some of them had to fly the country for the country's good. That is the class of men they selected to act as registration clerks in the various subdivisions of that province in days gone by. They also took the power of appointing revising barristers who were members of the Liberal party sent out to the various constituencies and they did not even have to take an oath that they would discharge their duties faithfully and well, but they went out through the country and acted in the most arbitrary manner in many instances—I will not say in all because there were amongst them some straightforward men and they afforded some few exceptions to the general rule. But the government of the day had the lists prepared entirely by these registration clerks and revised by their own revising barristers. Now, the registration clerk of that day differed from the registration clerk of to-day in this way: The registration clerk then prepared or made up the lists. The registration clerk to-day does not do anything of the kind. I am going to prove that before I take my seat. The registration clerk, under the law as it formerly stood, had to take the last provincial list, the last Dominion list and the last municipal list and from these compile a new list. The power was given to him to compile a list but it was under a later provision in the law that he did his funny work and which enabled him to avail himself of 'such other information as he can secure.' He was to take these various lists and 'such other information as he could secure' to make up the new lists. How did that work out? He took the provincial list, he took the Dominion list and he took the municipal list, he put down the names of those whom he pleased and men who had been old residenters, men who had voted in municipal, provincial and Dominion elections for years were left off the lists by the various registration clerks in different constituencies. The registration clerk could not be punished for doing that. He did that and in my own constituency my experience was this: I handed in a statutory declaration stating that the names of certain qualified electors should be included in the list and notwithstanding the fact that these sworn declarations were put in in some instances the names were left off. The law provided that parties desiring to add new names to the lists could do so by submitting statutory declarations. How in practice, did it work out? A liberal could go and hand in a list of names as long as your arm without accompanying it by a single statutory declaration. I know that of my own personal knowledge. When these hon. gentlemen claim that we have not sufficient courts of revision, there being only one court of revision in each constituency, I may tell them that there was only one court of revision in my constituency in 1899 and that there were not as many registration booths as we have to-day under the Roblin Act. The registration clerks took the lists handed in by the Liberals and the Liberal candidates and they put the names on the voters' lists without asking for any sworn declaration whatever, but the name of no Conservative could be got on those lists without having it accompanied by a sworn declaration, and, in some instances, even then we could not have names put on. A revising barrister, a lawyer from the city of Winnipeg held the court of revision in my constituency and, having tried to have certain names put on and these names having been left off, I asked an explanation from the registration clerk. I said: Was it not your duty to take the last lists, to compile your lists from these and to take any statutory declarations that were handed in? Yes, he said, but the Act also told me that I was to secure any other information I could. I said: Where did you get this information? I pointed to the Liberal candidate and I added: There is the author of the information you got and you took this gentleman's word that the persons whose names we had tendered were not qualified electors before you would take a statutory declaration. The revising barrister had to condemn this proceeding in my presence and in the presence of the Liberal candidate and other members of the Liberal party. He could secure any other information! the Liberal candidate, or some of his friends, would tell the registration clerk that certain of these names should be left off and he left them off ignoring the statutory declaration. That is what we were up against in days gone by and still the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) rises in his place in this House and, in stentorian tones, condemns the administration of the present Act and condemns the Act almost in its entirety. The revising barristers of those days were, with a few exceptions, partisan officials, largely Liberal lawyers, sent out from the city of Winnipeg, or from some other portion of the province.

An hon. MEMBER. Was there no appeal ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). No, there was no appeal whatever, the revising barrister had the last say and once these names were on the list it was almost impossible to get them off, loaded up as the lists were with fictitious names and loaded up with names of men who were in many instances non-existent. Why, when you went up against the revising barrister what did he say ? Have you served notice on these men that you are appealing against ? —and if we could not prove that we had served notice on a man who did not live in the constituency at all, or on a man who was non-existent, if we could not prove that these people had received personal notification that an appeal had been taken against them, the revising barrister would not strike them off the list. So you see what a difficult proposition it was to get names struck off when once they were on the list. The elections of 1892, of 1896 and of 1899 held in the province of Manitoba were all on lists of that kind. No wonder that the Conservative party were in the minority on each occasion ! The Liberals of Manitoba carried those elections upon those three occasions with stuffed voters' lists and yet the hon. gentleman who was in power when this system was in operation comes here and condemns the present method which is as fair to the Liberals as to the Conservatives, a fact which will be testified to by the honest Liberals in the province of Manitoba. Why, Sir, in the province of Manitoba in the year 1899 what do you suppose it cost the Conservatives to purge the lists ? We set out with the idea that we would have clean lists in that province at all costs and thousands and thousands of dollars were spent by the Conservative party in order to purge the lists that were made by these registration clerks. One gentleman in public life in Manitoba has estimated that it cost the Conservative party, in 1899, $30,000, which appears a fabulous sum but I can readily understand why such an amount of money had to be spent in order to secure evidence to get the names of qualified electors on the lists and to secure the removal of names improperly on the lists. During that time how many names do you suppose were struck off by the Conservative party at the courts of revision notwithstanding the difficulties that we encountered ? No less than 5,446 names were struck off at the various courts of revision after the lists were made up by their registration clerks and they at the same time knocked off 1,925 names. What a wonderful difference that was ! No wonder that we were in opposition for so many years when voters' lists prepared in the manner I have described were used at the elections and when we did not conduct ourselves with so much energy at the courts of revision as we did upon that occasion. I will give an instance of how it resulted in one constituency. In the city of Winnipeg, the Liberal registration clerk was supposed to take the last lists and take the names of all those who were qualified electors in compiling the new list. It happened that in the employ of the Ogilvie Milling Company there were thirty-three men and that in compiling the new list the names of thirty of these employees were left off and the names of three employees were placed upon the list. The three were Grits and the thirty were Conservatives. The thirty Conservatives were left off out of thirty-three employees and when the registration clerk was taken to task and asked before the revising barrister for an explanation of how he got these three names and how he excluded the thirty he had to admit that he took an old scrutineer's book which had been marked in favour of the Liberal candidate at the previous election. That is the character of their Act. It permitted them to take not only the municipal, Dominion and provincial lists but also to take scrutineers' books as they had been marked in favour of a Liberal candidate and to use them in the preparation of the lists. I am going to read to you what took place in the constituency represented by the present member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows):

In that constituency there were I presume more flagrant practices than in almost any other constituency. The Conservatives brought the matter to court but the court decided it had no jurisdiction. On two occasions at least in that constituency they loaded up the voters' lists, and on one occasion they brought in railway navvies who were not competent to vote according to law, and it was impossible to get these names off. The Conservative organizer was sent out to examine into the condition of things that existed in that constituency and what did he find ? He was interviewed when he returned to the city of Winnipeg and I will read an extract from the 'Winnipeg Telegram,' of May 24, 1899 to show the practices in that constituency.

W. H. Hastings, the organizer of the Liberal-Conservative party, returned to the city last evening from Dauphin, where he had been called by the local leaders of the party to confer regarding the remarkable course taken by the registration clerk of that district in preparing the local voters' list. Mr. Hastings was seen by a representative of the 'Telegram' and asked for a statement regarding the causes that have led the Conservatives of that district to object to the action of the clerk, and in reply stated that he had gone to Dauphin at the express request of the party there to ascertain the exact state of affairs, and, he continued, 'while I expected to hear that the clerk had acted in partisan manner in the preparation of the lists, I did not expect to hear of such outrageous conduct upon the part of a public official, acting in direct contravention of the statutes under which he was appointed; the partisan conduct of this official was, judging from the reliable information I received, of such a nature that the Conservative party of that district will not rest until they have obtained or at least gone to the extreme limit in endeavouring to obtain, from the courts of the province, a decision which will place them in a position to get something like a fair and honest list for that district.

'Abundant evidence can be produced,' Mr. Hastings said, 'to show that the clerk when he first opened his office, made a start at making up a list, but after working on it, at short intervals, for a couple of days, he suddenly ceased working, and with the single exception of one day, when he added a few more names, the list remained in that unfinished, almost unstarted condition, at midnight on May 16, when he announced the list closed. Evidence can also be produced to prove that the clerk put in his time, during office hours, reading novels and absolutely refused to add names to his list, even when the sworn applications were handed him and requests made to place the names upon the list. It can also be shown that when parties called at his office and requested to have their names added to the list, he would ask the party if his name was on either the last local or the last municipal list, and if he received an affirmative answer he would say to the party "all right, your name will be on the list," but he did not upon such occasions, search such local or municipal lists to ascertain whether such name was on or not; he did not enter the name of such applicant upon the list, did not take applications from them, and made no notice or memorandum regarding such person's request.

'It can be proven that upon one occasion a qualified elector demanded that the clerk add his name to the list and upon the clerk refusing to do so, the elector intimated that he would stay until his name was added, to which the clerk replied "If it was four o'clock I would throw you out of this office." Another party, living in the town of Dauphin, made personal application to have his name added, and told the clerk he did not want any mistake made in regard to the matter, as he had been left off the list upon two previous occasions. In reply he was politely informed by the clerk that he was sure his name would be on all right, as Sandy McPherson was making up the town list and would, no doubt, put his name on; but the clerk made no entry, took no application, or gave the party any further satisfaction than "the town list was being made by Sandy McPherson." McPherson, by the way, was the registration clerk four years ago, and made himself famous at that time by spending the hours from 4 p.m. until midnight of the last day for receiving applications secreted in a hay-mow, in order, it is said, to avoid meeting Conservatives who might have some sworn applications to hand him.

Mr. Hastings stated several other questionable movements, one of which was that the clerk made no attempt during office hours to make up a list, except as previously mentioned, and he publicly stated that he would not make up a list until after May 16, and in the meantime all he would do was to receive applications from those who wished to file such with him. He kept all applications filed with him in a large tin box, and every night this tin box, or the contents thereof, were taken over to the office of the local member, Mr. Burrows, where the Grit committee met in nightly conference. Further that the Liberals put in no formal applications with the clerk during office hours from the time the office opened until three minutes to midnight on the last day, when a large bundle, alleged to have been a bundle of applications, were handed to the clerk. The Conservatives present demanded the right to inspect this bundle to ascertain if it contained applications or not, but the clerk refused this request and placed the whole bundle with the applications that had been previously filed by the Conservatives, and a very few that had at intervals been made out by the clerk. At 12 o'clock midnight he declared his list closed, when asked 'where is your list?' he replied placing his hand upon the bundle of alleged applications filed with him three minutes previously, and said 'this is my list.' On the 17th of May, Mr. Hastings said the clerk removed his office to another building and obtained the services of four well-known Grits and started to work making out a list and they are still employed upon that work. The clerk handed over each day's work to the printer, but the Conservatives are not allowed to inspect the work, nor do they know who is on or who will be left off. What he will attempt to impose upon the district of Dauphin as the printed copy of the list of electors, continued Mr. Hastings, is unknown. In fact, one of the men he has employed, when asked what they were doing, replied that they were making up the voters' list now, while the clerk himself has publicly stated he did not intend to make up his list until after May 16.

The action of the clerk in this district had been such that the Conservatives of Dauphin will not submit to it in silence, and Mr. Hastings intimates that an action will, without doubt, be taken by them to have the whole list set aside, and from the result of this action the public will be able to judge whether there is anything like fair play and justice to be had in the preparation of a voters' list under the Manitoba Election Act, which has been placed upon the statutes by the Greenway government, especially when a clerk makes up his mind, as the Dauphin clerk evidently did, that Conservatives or independent men should not be endowed with the privilege of exercising the franchise.

That is the manner in which these lists are made up during the time of the Greenway regime.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What year was that.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. In 1899.

Mr. BURROWS. Was not that list printed and published and was it not revised afterwards ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Certainly, and as I said a few minutes ago the lists were revised by Liberal revising barristers and the lists were so loaded up with fictitious names that it was impossible to get them off.

Mr. BURROWS. Was not the list published and a court of revision held ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I am not denying there was a court of revision held presided over by a Liberal partisan, but it was impossible to serve many of these men with these notices because they were non-existent and could not be found.

Mr. BURROWS. Was ever a complaint made by any citizen of Dauphin against that list as not being a fair list ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I am sorry I have not the list that was made out the next year because the House would see the vast difference between the two lists and the hundreds of names that were struck off that list to purge it and make it right.

Mr. BURROWS. When the election took place I had 103 majority in the town of Dauphin, and there was no complaint made about the list and there was no reason for any complaint.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. There was so much complaint that in 1899 the provincial legislature annulled that list, and there was a special revision in which there were hundreds of names stricken off that list. The hon. member for Lisgar stated yesterday that what he termed certain grievances which he enumerated should be wiped off the statutes, and I say that any law that would permit the kind of thing I have here referred to should be wiped off the statutes. Hugh John Macdonald pledged himself all through the province in 1899 that one of the first acts of his administration would be to wipe out the Franchise Act and Hugh John Macdonald, honourable man that he is, kept his word and did so the first session. This was not condemned by Conservatives alone. There was in the legislature at that time a gentleman named Fisher. Who was he? He was a gentleman who had contested South Perth, Ontario, on at least two occasions as the Liberal candidate, a gentleman who for a long time was president of the Provincial Liberal Association of Manitoba, a gentleman who broke away from his party in the legislature because of just such transactions as this. When this law was being placed on the statutes, he condemned it and termed it a monstrosity of monstrosities. That expression came not from the lips of a Conservative but from the lips of a friend of hon. gentlemen opposite. There is a plank in the platform of the Liberal party dealing with the franchise which I wish to place before the House. That plank, adopted in the year 1893, in convention assembled in the city of Ottawa, reads as follows :

Oppose the Dominion Franchise Act—favour the Provincial Franchise.

That the Franchise Act since its introduction has cost the Dominion treasury over a million of dollars, besides entailing a heavy expenditure to both political parties;

That each revision involves an additional expenditure of a further quarter of a million;

That this expenditure has prevented an annual revision, as originally intended, in the absence of which young voters entitled to the franchise have, in numerous instances, been prevented from exercising their natural rights;

That it has failed to secure uniformity, which was the principal reason assigned for its introduction;

That it has produced gross abuses by partisan revising barristers appointed by the government of the day;

That its provisions are less liberal than those already existing in many provinces of the Dominion, and that in the opinion of this convention the Act should be repealed, and we should revert to the Provincial Franchise.

I defy any hon. member of this House who has any regard for his word to go over, plank by plank, the platform adopted in 1893 and point to one single plank that has been implemented by way of legislation in which they have kept their faith with the people save and except the Franchise Act, and now they are going to break that, they are bringing in an Act to partially abolish it. Their supporters, especially from the west, were really astonished that they should have attempted to implement this one plank of their platform by legislation and to keep faith with the people even in one instance. I shall quote an expression of opinion from a leading public organ in regard to the Franchise Act of Manitoba of years ago. I quote from the 'Free Press' of Winnipeg before it came under the sinister influence of the ex-Minister of the Interior. In the issue of July 11, 1892, I find :

The registration clerk at Morris has compiled a fraudulent list in the interests of the government, most probably at the direct instance of the government, and doubtless in the expectation that his rascally work would be aided and abetted by the revising officers. The registration clerk in Beautiful Plains in suspicious harmony with the action of his Morris confrère has deliberately refused to enter a large number of names that have been lawfully tendered him. Names by the scores have been left off the lists of the three Winnipegs through the arbitrary action of the registration clerks, and others put on that it is alleged had no right to be registered. There have been frauds of a similar nature in other constituencies. It is expected that the opposition will quietly submit to the outrages. Is there any great sin in raising a clamour over the frauds themselves, or the men who are guilty of them?

These registration clerks, who are appointed to perform the necessary clerical labour in preparing the lists, are assuming the functions of revising officers and deciding for themselves what names shall go on. They are doing this, not because they believe they have the right of judgment in the matter, but because if they were not to do it, there would be no opportunity to play their tricks and bedevil the lists. They are forced to take upon themselves the authority of revising officers, in addition to their own, in order that they might decide against the reception of names now and again, in order to weaken the enemy. If the lists are to be stuffed and otherwise manipulated, it must be done in the preliminary stages of registration. Clerks who are up to what is expected of them must therefore, refuse applications, even if attested by affidavit, while there is absolutely no check whatever, except their own consciences, to the addition of improper names. Such work as this could not be left to the revising officers. The lists must be doctored before they reach the courts of revision, hence the necessity for unscrupulous clerks, who do not hesitate to usurp the functions of a court, supposed to be for the purpose of insuring honest lists.

The Act never contemplated that discretionary powers, such as have been exercised, should be given the registration clerks. Their duty is to enter all names known to themselves as duly qualified electors, and to receive and enter all applications supported by affidavit.

Should there be any errors in the preparation of the lists, the work of rectifying them belongs to the revising officers, who are appointed for that sole special purpose. This is the plain meaning of the Act, and it is impossible that registration clerks or any others can mistake it. The fact therefore, that clerks have gone out of their road to doctor the lists, is evident of fraudulent intent.

Let the opposition everywhere be vigilant against these frauds. It is an outrage they should thus be forced into the defence of their rights—rights that should never be assailed but so it is, and until better methods prevail, they must make the best of it. Should there be the least disposition on the part of the revising officers to refuse them the amplest justice then if they be men determined not to be trampled on, they will know how to protect themselves. Fraudulent lists must be purged. Let the cost be what it will.

This was the impression at that time of the 'Free Press,' then an independent paper, not the slavish organ it now is of the present party in power.

On June 13, 1892, that same paper published with big headlines the following warning:

ALARMING.

The number of electors left off the lists in the Winnipegs is simply alarming. Immediate attention is necessary if you wish to vote.

In the 'Free Press' issue of June 14 a list of electors left off in South Winnipeg, aggregating 500 names is published.

In the issue of June 15, Winnipeg Centre list is published showing 750 names left off the list.

In the issue of June 16, Winnipeg North lists are published, showing 500 names left off, or aggregating 1,700 names left off the lists of the issue of the three Winnipegs.

I have other extracts of a similar character did I wish to impose them upon the House, but I shall not do so. I have here, however, some of the results of the revisions that took place in 1892, 1896 and 1899 for each separate constituency. After the revision had been made in 1892 by registration clerks appointed by the Greenway government there were added at the Court of Revision 1,637 names and there were struck off 1,875.

In the revision prior to 1896 there were added at the court of revision after the returns had been completed, 2,008 names and there were struck off 1,180. In 1899, the year when I say it cost the Conservatives of the province such a great deal in order to purge the lists, there were struck off 5,446 names and added 1,195.

Take the small local constituency of Beautiful Plains and we find that between those added and those struck off there were 107 names. In Birtle, in my own constituency, in 1899 there were, between those added and those struck off, 196, and having got a clean list by the expenditure of a great deal of time, labour and money the Conservative party attained the position it should have reached seven years before if it had had similarly purged lists.

In Gladstone there was a difference of 223 names; in Kildonan, a difference of 135; in Killarney, a difference of 159 names; in Lansdowne, a difference of 210 names;

In Lorne	170
Minnedosa	126
Morgan	179
Morris	198
Mountain	170
Norfolk	171
Rhineland	139
Rockwood	185
Turtle Mountain	153
Virden	318
Winnipeg Centre	1,119
Winnipeg North	692
Winnipeg South	967
Woodlands	325

These are a few I have selected out of many to show the large amount of work required to be done in adding on names and striking them off at these courts of revision and checking the lists prepared at that date. In North Winnipeg, where there are 3,654 names on the list, attempts were made to put on 649 or one for every five. In South Winnipeg, where there were 3,636 on the list, attempts were made to add 505 bogus voters or one for every three and a fraction. In Winnipeg Centre there were 3,923 names on the list; 971 were struck off as fraudulent, or one bogus vote for every four and a fraction bona fide votes.

So you will see the character of the lists in force in all these districts when the present administration came into office. Let me compare the method of preparing the lists with the methods of to-day. When the new Act was adopted by the Conservative administration at the outset the government appointed the judges as a board of registration. There were five county judges appointed by this government. These judges formed the board of registration and they appointed all the registration clerks and all the revising barristers. The government had absolutely nothing to do with naming one registration clerk or revising barrister. That was the Act placed on the statutes immediately after the Conservative government took office. Whom did the judges appoint? I have here a list of the revising barristers they appointed, and I find that they appointed nineteen Conservatives and sixteen Liberals. Did you ever hear of a Liberal administration in that province appointing such a number of Conservatives as their revising barristers ? Did you ever hear of them appointing one Conservative as registration clerk? Why, the government placed the power entirely of preparing the lists in the hands of the judges and these judges appointed the registration clerks and revising barristers. They took five constituencies themselves, and for the other thirty-five they appointed nineteen Conservatives and sixteen Liberals. Let me give you some of the names. They appointed Mr. H. A. Robson, a man I am well acquainted with, a strong Liberal. They appointed T. L. Hartley, of Winnipeg, for the electoral division of Cypress. For Deloraine they appointed Mr. P. A. Macdonald, of Winnipeg. For Gilbert Plains they appointed Mr. D. A. Macdonald, of Portage la Prairie, now a judge on the bench of that province. For Hamiota they named Mr. S. E. Clement, of Brandon. For Kildonan and St. Andrew they named Mr. T. G. Mathers, of Winnipeg, now judge of the province. For Lakeside they named Mr. D. W. McKerchar, of Winnipeg. Manitou, Mr. W. F. Ellis ; Minnedosa, Mr. J. G. Harvey, of Dauphin ; Mr. Harvey was then an ardent supporter of the hon. member for Dauphin, but has seen the error of his ways and has gone back on him. For Norfolk they appointed Mr. J. H. Haverson, of Carmen ; St. Boniface, Mr. T. Seton Ewart, of Winnipeg ; South Brandon, H. H. Goulter, of Virden; Turtle Mountain, T. L. Metcalf, of Winnipeg ; Virden, E. Henderson, of Brandon; Winnipeg North, G. H. West, of Winnipeg. These are samples of the revising barristers appointed under that Act as administered by the Roblin administration. It has been said that there was no annual revision at the time the Franchise Act of 1898 was in vogue and the lists prepared in Manitoba. That is very true. The government of that province came to the conclusion that having once started out with a basis of a list compiled by honest officials, having divested themselves of every power and placed it in the hands of the judges and having once got a clean list —because no one could get on that list without taking the sworn declaration—they thought it would be a hardship to require these people afterwards to come up personally and be sworn again. The Act originally provided that these people who had been old residents and once registered should be compelled to come forward at the next election and register again. The government amended the Act so as to provide an annual revision and allow those once registered to remain on the list unless they became disqualified by removal or otherwise. No one could get his name on the list unless he made a sworn declaration. That is the law at present. You can find that in the 'Gazette.'

Mr. S. J. JACKSON (Selkirk). Give a list of the Liberals revising the lists at present.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). They are not appointed.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. They are in the 'Gazette.'

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). No, I have the 'Gazette' here.

Mr. E. J. JACKSON. I mean the registration clerks.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Notwithstanding the present Act provides that the revising barristers shall be the judges or shall be appointed by the judges, in practice the last two years the judges are doing the work entirely and did it last year. Here are the questions which have to be answered before a man gets his name on the provincial voters' list:

1. What is your Christian name, surname, place of residence, occupation, and post office address? (Street and number to be given if possible, if in a city, town or incorporated village. If in a rural locality, section, township and range, parish name and lot or other description to be given).

So that there is no trouble identifying an elector after he subscribes to a list of that character.

2. Are you of the full age of 21 years?
3. Are you a British subject by birth or naturalization, and which?
4. Have you resided in the province of Manitoba for one year prior to the date of this your application to be registered an elector within this electoral division?

5. Have you resided or had you your chief place of abode in this electoral division for a continuous period of three months prior to the date of this your application to be registered an elector within this electoral division?

6. Are you in any respect disqualified from being registered an elector in this electoral division under the Manitoba Election Act?

7. Do you now reside in the electoral division for which you apply to be registered an elector? On what premises do you reside?

8. Is your name at present on the list of electors for this electoral division?

9. Have you applied for and been registered an elector in any other electoral division in the province during the current period of registration?

10. Is your name on the list of electors for any electoral division in the province? If so, give the name.

I, , do solemnly declare that the foregoing answers in writing to the above interrogatories are true and correct in substance and in fact, and I make this declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

That is sworn to before the registration clerk and there are present in that registration office representatives of the Liberal party who inspect every one of those declarations and can have an appeal ready in case they do not consider the man is telling the truth. So that it is impossible for any one to get on the list at present without committing perjury.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the hon. gentleman say what becomes of the applications ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). These are sent to the revising barrister, to be passed upon. For, recollect, the duties of the registration clerk are purely clerical. He accepts the sworn declarations and transmits them to the judge, who is the revising barrister, and the revising barrister passes upon each and every one before the name can be placed on the list. If it is appealed against, the parties have to be notified in order to be present at the court of the revising barrister.

Mr. AMES. Is the sworn application taken in the office of the registration clerk?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Certainly, right in the presence of the representatives of both parties. And how does that work out ? Why, both parties are on an equality. What advantage has the Conservative party over the Liberal party in getting names on the list ? Every man must put in his sworn declaration, be he Conservative or Liberal. There have been no charges against the registration clerks since this Act was placed on the statute-book.

Mr. BURROWS. What about the three men at Morris put on without a declaration ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Burrows) has been drawing his inspiration from a very polluted source. He has been reading the editorial utterances of the Manitoba 'Free Press,' than which there is no more unreliable organ in the Dominion of Canada. Now, what is this case to which the hon. gentleman refers ? There is a provision in the Act—I cannot quote it as I have not it under my hand at the moment—that, in cases of unavoidable absence or illness, of a party a declaration may be made on his behalf by another——

Mr. BURROWS. It must be a sworn declaration.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Yes. A Mr. Parker handed in the names of three neighbours, bona fide electors, who were unable to be present—put in a sworn declaration—

Mr. BURROWS. No.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). He himself has shown, by letter that was published, that he filled out the wrong form. He is a farmer and not acquainted with the technicalities of the law. The registration clerk accepted the declaration. Of course, the names were not put on the list until after the judge passed upon them. They were transmitted to the judge. And what happened at the court of revision presided over by Judge Prudhomme ? The Liberal lawyer appeared there and took the ground that these men should not have their names on the list because the proper form had not been filled in.

Mr. BURROWS. There was no form at all.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Burrows) has not read all the correspondence. I have seen a letter written by Mr. Parker and published in the newspapers stating that he had put in an application, but it was on the wrong form. The judge asked the Liberal representative there, 'Are these men qualified electors ?' And the lawyer had to admit that they were.' The judge said, 'I will not allow any technicality to disfranchise them.' So, it was the judge who placed them on the list, and not the registration clerk ; for, as I have said, the duties of the registration clerk are merely clerical. These applications were handed in to the judge, who, when the evidence was adduced, declared that he would not allow a mere technicality to prevent the placing of the names on the list.

Now, let me draw attention for a few minutes to the provision of the law as to the parties who may be present at the registration. I do this to show that one party has equal facilities with the other. Here is the section :

Who entitled to be present at registration sittings.

28. The following persons shall be entitled to be present at sittings of the registration clerks for the purposes of this Act: (a) The candidate or candidates at the last election for the electoral division;

(b) Any person who considers himself to be a prospective or probable candidate at the next ensuing election to be held in the said electoral division;

It is pretty wide.

(c) Any person desirous of being present as a spectator; provided that no more than twelve persons, other than the persons mentioned and officers in attendance, shall be entitled to be present at the same time;

(d) The registration clerk shall strive as far as possible to allow the representation of all political parties in the place or places of registration to be fair and equal.

And that is exactly what is followed out in practice. One political party is exactly on an equality with the other ; there is no discrimination in favour of the Conservative as against the Liberal party. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) stated that, when the registration is over, the only notice given is that the registration clerk walks outside and tacks up the list at the door of the registration booth. But the hon. gentleman did not state the whole case. There are the representatives who look after their several parties and can notify any who are interested of alleged omissions from the list. In addition to that, certified copies are furnished to all people applying for the same by the registration clerk. These facts the hon. gentleman did not bring out. Moreover, a severe penalty is imposed on the registration clerk for any violation of the provisions of the statute. No fault has been found by the people of Manitoba, or by anybody except disgruntled politicians whose term of office is drawing to a close and who seek to rob the Conservative party of their franchise by enacting the unjust law here proposed. I say that no fault has ben found with the provisions of the law. During the last provincial campaign I had the privilege of speaking on platforms in four different constituencies in Manitoba, and I can say here, on my honour, that in not a single case did the speaker representing the Liberal party on any of these occasions make one complaint against the Manitoba Franchise Act. Do you suppose that this Act could be open to the objections which these hon. gentlemen try to persuade the Prime Minister and this parliament that it is open to without the Liberal party making the most of it in a provincial contest ? Why, their leader, Mr. Meikle, who is expected to oppose your humble servant at the next election, stated in his place in the legislature that he was willing to admit that the present lists, as prepared under our provincial law, were the cleanest lists we ever had in the province of Manitoba. Hon. gentlemen opposite cannot deny that. I am sorry the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is not in his seat, for I feel sure that, to use a colloquialism, he has allowed these gentlemen to stuff him with a lot of declarations that they cannot substantiate. Let him appeal to Mr. Meikle for his opinion. The only complaint that Mr. Meikle made was that, from a provincial standpoint, it was too expensive to have annual revisions. But the people of Manitoba are not complaining of the expense ; on the contrary they are satisfied with the law and with the government under which it was enacted. On the other hand, during my visit at Easter I did not find a single Liberal who upheld this Aylesworth Bill, which is introduced to perpetrate such great injustice.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). At six o'clock I was comparing the Franchise Act as it stood on the statute-book prior to the advent of the Conservative administration of Manitoba with the Act as it exists today, and I was also dealing with some objections offered by some of the Liberal members of this House to the provisions of the existing Franchise Act. I have to come all the way down to Ottawa, hundreds of miles from my adopted province, to learn of the serious drawbacks and serious objections that exist in the minds of some of these hon. gentlemen in reference to that Act. It seems very strange that, though session after session of the Manitoba legislature has been held since the adoption of the present Act, on no occasion have the Liberals of that body been noticeably active in offering a single amendment to that Act. Now, it is a poor tribute to the intelligence of the Liberals in the legislature of Manitoba that, if all these grievances and all these faults existed in this Franchise Act, the local members should not have bestirred themselves and have taken at least some action in order to remedy those grievances and those complaints which the Liberals of this House are now making in regard to that Act. On the contrary, the only objection that has been urged, the only fault that has been found so far, has been by a gentleman named Campbell, who represents the constituency that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) represents in this House, and he put his foot in it so badly that I do not think that he will try it the second time. He charged that certain names that were struck off at a court of revision were afterwards found on the list and he accused the government of being a party to this fraud. But when the original list was produced on the table of the local House it was found that his charge was absolutely without foundation; that the lists had been revised by Judge Ryan at Portage la Prairie, a gentleman who possesses the esteem and the respect of Liberals as well as Conservatives in that province; nobody could impeach that gentleman's honour, and Mr. Campbell had to retract his statement and apologize to the House.

Now, we are told by the hon. member for Lisgar that the time for making up these lists under the existing law is entirely too short, that there is not sufficient time allowed for registration and not sufficient time allowed for the court of revision. All proclamations, according to the present Act, have to be issued by the 1st of May in each year; these proclamations mention the dates and places where the registration is to be held. Ten days' notice at least must be given by the proclamation before the first court of Revision can sit. They sit for a number of days in each constituency, every facility is afforded at every registration booth, and then at least five days must elapse between the last day of the registration court and the sitting of the court of revision, that is the minimum time. Now, if the Liberals have any grievance whatever, they may select one or two isolated cases where there is a short time given between the last day of registration and the first day of the court of revision. But if you take the 'Gazette' as published on the 25th April, 1908, you will see that out of 37 rural constituencies in that province, but three provide for less than ten days. Moreover, it is not as essential that there should be so long a time between the courts of registration and revision under our laws as it was under the law which existed prior to 1900, because at that time, as I have pointed out, the registration clerks practically made the lists. Under the present law the registration clerks do merely clerical work, accept sworn declarations and pass them on in the presence of the Liberal representatives at the courts of registration, to be passed upon by the different judges at the courts of revision. Ten days, I say, must elapse before the first court of registration is held, and then after they are over, at least five days must elapse before the first court of revision is held. The hon. member for Lisgar selected an isolated case in the constituency of Springfield, within the Dominion constituency of Selkirk, and he said: Here is a large constituency, and there is only one court of revision provided and that court sits six days after the last registration sitting. He left the impression, or endeavoured to leave the impression, that that was the general rule, the general practice, that there were only six days in each constituency of that province, and that they only had that time to make an appeal. But I have here the Manitoba 'Gazette' of April 25, 1908, and it contains all the courts of revision and all the registration courts. I have looked through it and counted the number of days allowed for registration in each individual constituency and the time elapsing between the last day of registration and the first day of the court of revision, and I am going to read to you in each constituency the time elapsing between the two. In the constituency of Arthur there are 8 places for registration. Arthur is a small constituency. Many of those constituencies are small and compact and do not require many registration booths and do not require more than one court of revision. There are eight places to register in Arthur, and the interval between the last day of registration and the first day of revision is 24 days, not 6 days as the hon. member for Lisgar tried to make you believe. Then there is the electoral division of Assiniboia, with 10 places for registration, and 20 days of an interval within which they can get their appeals in. Then there is the constituency of Avondale a small constituency, with 6 places to register in and 24 days of an interval, not 6. Now, here is one where I am willing to admit there may be a grievance. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) may have a grievance, and it is in connection with his own local constituency. I will point out exactly what occurs there. In the constituency of Beautiful Plains there are 9 places to hold registration courts and there is only 3 days interval between the last day of registration and the first day of the court of revision. But, Mr. Speaker, in that constituency, in the principal town, Neepawa, with only about two thousand of a population, they have three days of registration given them. But the representatives of the Liberal party are present to see every application sworn to and handed in to the registration clerk. They can take the names that they object to and appeal them; they can object to none that are handed in unless they can prove that the party had perjured himself. There are only three days of an interval, but, as I have said, there is not the necessity for the same length of time for appeal. Now, Sir, I am willing to pledge my word as a member of this House, and I think my colleagues from Manitoba will assist me in saying that, feeling that is one instance in which there should be more time, we will do our best, acting in concert with our Liberal friends in the province of Manitoba, to have that time extended, and I am confident that oversight, for it is only an oversight, will be rectified. Hon. gentlemen on the other side, because they can show one or two isolated instances in which the time may be a little short for appeal, notwithstanding there is not the same necessity for appeal that there was in the days of the Greenway regime, hold that up as an example of a grievance, just as if one swallow made a summer.

In the constituency of Birtle, in my own constituency of Marquette, there are six places of registration and twenty-three days interval between the registration court and the court of revision. In Carillon there are eleven places of registration and nineteen days interval between the two courts. In the constituency of Cypress there are twelve places of registration, two courts of revision and there are intervals of nineteen and twenty days. In the electoral district of Dauphin there are fourteen places of registration and twelve days of an interval between the last day of registration and the date of the court of revision, and there are two days of registration in the town of Dauphin. In Deloraine there are ten places of registration and twelve days of an interval between the two courts. In Dufferin there are fourteen places of registration and thirteen days of an interval. In Emerson there are twelve places of registration and fourteen days of an interval. In Gilbert Plains there are no less than 21 places of registration. Why ? Because it is a very large constituency with outlying points though not thickly populated ?—and every opportunity is afforded the people to register. There are twenty-one places of registration and sixteen days of an interval before the meeting of the court of revision. In Gimli, in the constituency of Selkirk where there are a large number of those foreigners that the hon. member for Lisgar stated that we, on our part, were most anxious to disfranchise and to prevent from registering, there are no less than twenty registration courts open from May 18 to June 8 and two courts of revision. In this constituency in which so many foreigners are located whom we are so anxious to disfranchise, according to these hon. gentlemen, they have two courts of revision sitting on June 16 and June 23. In Gladstone there are twenty places in which the electors may register and they have eight days of an interval between the two courts ; Hamiota eight places to register and twenty-eight days interval ; Kildonan and St. Andrew's also in Selkirk thirteen places to register and an interval of fourteen days and the most northern court is in township 39 range 3 and there are only fourty-four townships in the whole province. This is within thirty miles of the extreme northerly bounds of the province. In Killarney there are seven places to register and fourteen days of an interval. In Lakeside there are nine places to register and eight days of an interval.

Mr. ALCORN. These registration courts are not all held on the one day ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Not at all. They are held on successive days from May 16 to the end of the month.

Mr. ALCORN. So that the people will have a much longer time in which to appeal than the actual interval between the meetings of the two courts.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The people have a chance of appealing for a week prior to these four, five, six or any other number of days as the case may be. In some instances they have upwards of a month in which they can get their appeals in. I am only quoting the minimum time from the last day of the sitting of the court of registration until the first day of the court of revision, but from the first day of the registration they have at least a week longer than the time I have given.

Mr. AMES. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if the order followed by the revision judge is the same as the order followed by the registration clerk ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I am not quite sure of that. One of the reasons why the interval in Beautiful Plains and one or two other constituencies may appear short is, that, as I understand, it is the intention to have county court judges to act as revising officers without calling in any lawyers whatever and they have found a little difficulty in making the dates to suit their own engagements and therefore there are one or two instances in which there is a shorter time than would otherwise be allowed. In Lansdowne there are twenty-one places of registration and twelve days of an interval between the last day of registration and the first day of the court of revision ; La Verandrye, nine places of registration and thirteen days of an interval ; Manitou, eleven places of registration and seventeen days of an interval ; Minnedosa, eleven places of registration and sixteen days of an interval ; Morden, ten places of registration and twenty-five days of an interval between the last day of registration and the first day of revision ; Morris, seven places of registration and twenty-five days of an interval. In Mountain, a local constituency within the district of Lisgar, there are eleven places of registration and two courts of revision. The hon. member for Lisgar was not fair enough to quote an instance in his own constituency, but he went to the constituency of the hon. member for Selkirk in order to get an extreme case to lend point to his argument. But, he did not take a case within his own riding in which there is a preponderating Liberal vote. There are two courts of revision and fourteen and twenty-one days respectively of an interval between the last day of registration and the first day of revision. In Norfolk, which is in the constituency of Portage la Prairie, there are nine places of registration and the hon. member cannot find fault in this case because there are twenty-eight days between the last day of registration and the first day of the court of revision. In Portage la Prairie, the town practically, there are three places of registration and fifteen days of an interval in which they can get their appeals in. In Rhineland there are five places of registration and thirty days of an interval; Rockwood, twelve places of registration and fourteen days of an interval. This is also in the constituency of Selkirk. In Russell there are fourteen places to register and seventeen days of an interval. In St. Boniface, represented by the hon. member for St. Boniface, in this House, (Mr. Cyr) there are ten places of registration and twenty-one days in which to get their appeals in. In South Brandon there are nine places of registration and twelve days of an interval. In Springfield, and this is a case quoted by the hon. member for Lisgar, there are eleven places of registration and six days between the last day of registration and the first day of the court of revision. They have in these eleven places of registration from May 21 until June 6. In Swan River there are eight places of registration and ten days of an interval; Turtle Mountain, ten places of registration and thirteen days of an interval; Virden, seven places of registration and sixteen days of an interval and these registration clerks sit in their offices from 9 o'clock in the morning until 12 o'clock at noon and from 1 o'clock until 6 p.m. and in the cities they sit after 8 o'clock in order to accommodate the workingmen who cannot lose the time to go and register during the day. So that, of these rural constituencies in only three of them is the interval below ten days as a minimum and it runs all the way from that to thirty days and upwards. I do not think that hon. gentlemen have very much to complain of in reference to the time in which they can get their appeals in.

Now, the hon. member for Lisgar has complained, and, I think unfairly complained about the action that was taken by the clerk of the executive council, I presume, who, with a revising barrister, in 1903, held an adjourned court of revision. The names were printed in order to allow the Liberals an opportunity of fighting or testing the case in the court if they desire to do so and because these names were not allowed to go on the corrected voters' lists he denounced the parties to that action. Let me explain what occurred on that occasion. The judges constituting the registration board appointed sixteen Liberals and nineteen Conservatives and they appointed a very strong and active partisan, Mr. Heap, of Selkirk, to revise the lists in this particular constituency. The commission issued to Mr. Heap limited his jurisdiction to a certain date.

He held his court of revision at the time and place stipulated in the proclamation; he completed his labours and he then took it upon himself illegally to adjourn the court of revision to another time and place, the time being beyond the date fixed in his commission. He had no authority to act as revising barrister after the date of his commission had expired and he was informed by Judge Walker, chairman of the registration board, that he was acting contrary to law, and Judge Walker notified the government that this court of revision was taking place illegally. Some twenty names were put on the list by Mr. Heap after his commission had expired but all of those were not the names of Liberals by any means. Mr. Heap held his court of revision contrary to the direction of the judge and the government had nothing whatever to do with it. I have already shown in this House that Judge Walker did not sign the same certificate for these illegal lists that he signed for every other revising court in the province. He did not certify as he did in the case of the others that the list of electors was legal and held under the authority and power of the statute, but he gave a certificate merely stating that these names were added at an adjourned court of revision. These names did not appear on the list on polling day and rightly so and if the Liberals thought they had a case they could have tested it in the courts, but none of them attempted to do so. Now, I regret to say that so many Liberals in this House are ignorant on the question of the Manitoba electoral lists and the reason is that they will not stay in their places in this chamber and listen to the truth. They have whispered into their ears by some of their friends from Manitoba, statements that cannot be substantiated. They have been told, as if it were a practice, that electors have been standing at the door of the court of revision and that when the hour for revision expired by law the revising barrister closed his court and allowed those men to be disfranchised. I challenge them to point to one single partisan act on the part of a single revising barrister. In the case of the court of revision presided over by Mr. Bonner, a lawyer of the city of Winnipeg, it was the judges and not the government who appointed Mr. Bonner. Only a very short time prior to that Mr. Bonner was an ardent Liberal. Mr. Bonner held his court and the law read that he should hold his court up to a certain hour and when the hour expired he took it upon himself to close the court although there were quite a few present, and mark you it is safe to say that there were not any more Liberals than Conservatives waiting. He did not discriminate against one party or the other and even the 'Winnipeg Free Press' has not had the hardihood to accuse Mr. Bonner of having acted in a partisan manner. But, the government of Manitoba have taken precautions that such a thing shall not occur again. The prme minister of Manitoba has time and again invited the Liberals to point out any defects in the law or to suggest any improvements and that he was ready to place on the statute-book any thing that would improve the election law or that would meet any contingency that could possibly arise. The government did not approve of Mr. Bonner's action in interpreting the law so strictly and at the very next session they brought down this amendment :

> The registration clerk shall receive all applications of electors for registration, the striking off of names of electors from the list and for the correction of names on the list, who are present for that purpose at the time fixed for the conclusion of the registration sittings, notwithstanding that such applications are in point of fact received by the registration clerk after the hour of closing the registration sittings aforesaid.

Therefore, if the time arrives for the closing by law of the registration court and there are any electors present the law compels him now to prolong his sittings until each and every one of those present has the privilege of registering, and a similar provision applies to the court of revision.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What statute is that ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I am not certain whether it is the amendment of 1904 or the amendment of 1903.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did the hon. gentleman complete the reading of that clause ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I read it to the end and I will read it again. This appeared in the 'Manitoba Gazette' of February the 20th, 1904.

Mr. BURROWS. Where do you find that provision with regard to the court of revision ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I have not the section at hand now but I will find it. I therefore say that if the Liberals had any grievance in reference to Judge Bonner's court of revision that grievance cannot occur again, and that was the only isolated case that occurred in connection with the revision of the lists throughout Manitoba. That was several years ago and no fault has been found with the annual revision since. I repeat, that last session the prime minister of Manitoba told his opponents that if they had any suggestions to make in reference to the perfection of the present law he would be only too willing to adopt such suggestions, and yet not an amendment was brought in by a single member of the Liberal party in Manitoba. I am afraid the Prime Minister is not being well informed by his supporters in this matter. Let him apply to Hon. Charles Mickle, leader of the opposition in the local legislature, who is on record as having stated that our present lists in Manitoba are the cleanest we ever had in that province.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. In what year did Mr. Mickle make that statement ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). About two or three years ago, and our law has been very much perfected since then. He was twitted with it in the legislature not later than last session and had nothing to retract, the only fault he found was the expenditure from a provincial point of view involved in the annual revision. But, as I said, the people of Manitoba do not begrudge a fair expenditure on their voters' lists, in order to have it purged from dead men, non-existant individuals and those not qualified to be on the list. Here is the section that I wish to quote to the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, section 11 of the Manitoba Elections Act, chapter 52 :

> The revising officer shall also receive and deal with the applications of all persons to be registered as electors who shall be present at the time fixed for the closing of the court of revision notwithstanding that the time so fixed shall have elapsed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Is that the statute of 1904 ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). This is the Manitoba Elections Act, chapter 52, with all amendments down to 1906. Hon. gentlemen opposite were trying to harp on the question of the hours during which the booths were open simply because there was an isolated case of trouble in connection with Mr. Bonnar's court of revision. There the hours are set and the appeals are necessarily few when every man who wrongfully gets his name on the list must commit perjury to do so. If the hours are not long enough they are extended by the statute I have just read. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) has stated that there are many names on the list that should not be there, and that many names that should be there were omitted, but he failed to mention any of these names. He was challenged to do so by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). He stated that he had been in that province for 30 years and knew almost every individual voter and yet he could not name a man who had been left off the list in his own constituency or one who had been improperly placed on it. He was going to do so but failed, and if he were here I would challenge him again to name one individual wrongfully left off or placed on the list. If he gives such a name we will find out whether or not he is correct.

The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) struck a mare's nest. He thought he had discovered three names that had been put on the wrong form and which the judge stated were names of qualified electors, adding that he was not going to allow any legal technicality to interfere with their franchise. He thought if he could only show that these three were put on wrongfully, his case had been proved.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The fact is that when these names were objected to the judge asked the Liberals if the men had been notified that they were to be objected to. On being answered in the negative, the judge said they were illegal, but that he could not strike them off without notice.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The judge asked the Liberal representative if they were qualified electors, if they were entitled to vote, and the Liberal representative had to admit that they were. Then said the judge, I am not going to see the men disfranchised, I waive all formalities. But who was to blame for putting them on the list ? The registration clerk did not put the names on the list, he took their declarations handed in by Mr. Parker, transferred them to the revising barrister and Judge Prudhomme put the names on the list. If anything is wrong they must blame the county court judge, the very men whom they want to revise the list under the present Bill. It seems very strange that names could be improperly placed on or omitted from the lists. Where were the Liberals ? They had the privilege of having representatives at the revision booths. Their representatives were there, every one who was put on had to hand in an affidavit. How did they come to allow these men to hand in false affidavits ? Why did they not appeal and have them struck off. The statements are ridiculous and the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) was indulging in generalities, he could not give a specific case.

But the hon. member for Lisgar excelled himself when he found fault with the qualifications under the present Franchise Act of Manitoba. He said : I take my stand as against insisting on 12 months' residence in Manitoba before allowing a man to vote. Consistency thou art a jewel ! Who placed the qualification upon the statute ? The Conservative government went out of power in 1888. Under them 6 months' residence in the province and one month in the local constituency was all that was required. The hon. member kept that on the statutes of the province until 1894. He assumed office in December, 1888, but maintained those qualifications up to the year 1894, and when I find in the statutes of Manitoba of that year, an Act to amend the Manitoba Elections Act, assented to March 2, 1894.

Section 12 of chapter 49 of the Revised Statutes of Manitoba, being the Manitoba Election Act, is hereby amended by striking out paragraph (d) thereof, and by substituting therefor the following:

(d) who is, at the date of the issue of the proclamation appointing the registration clerk and has been for three months——

Not one month——

Mr. W. J. ROCHE.

——immediately prior to the said date, a resident of and domiciled within the said electoral division and has been for one year immediately prior to said date a resident of and domiciled within the province.

Not six months as he found it when he came into power, and this is the statute that has been on the statute-book ever since, this is the law that exists to-day ; it has been perpetuated by his successor, and yet the hon. member, forgetful no doubt in his old age of what he did when he was Prime Minister of Manitoba, comes here and condemns the provision requiring 12 months' residence in the province.

The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) is also out of his seat. Well, he is seldom in his seat but when he does come I am very sorry he does not acquit himself a little more creditably than he did on the occasion of his last speech. He devoted a considerable portion of his time to quotations, reading some unpronounceable names and affidavits, which affidavits bear on their face the impress of untruth. I am surprised that the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) who has always been looked upon as a respected resident of that city, should come up here and read those affidavits. He even expressed regret that he was forced to do so by reason of the fact that he was a representative of the city. He gave that as an excuse for reading a lot of untrue and scurrilous evidence against residents of Winnipeg who are eminently respectable—evidence intended to smirch their character. By this evidence these men of high repute are accused of having been accomplices in fraudulently putting on names on the voters' lists or causing to be secured false naturalization papers and having them rushed through the county court for the purpose of naturalizing Galicians and other foreigners, not in the country long enough to take out their naturalization papers, thus implicating the clerk of the court in the fraud. While on the one hand he contends that these are the very people the Conservatives want to disfranchise, on the other he trots out those spurious affidavits in order to prove that the Conservatives were so anxious to get their names on the voters' lists that some of the Conservative officials even descended to making themselves accomplices in this wrong doing. I caught one name—the name of Rudneski. I had heard that name before. I had met the gentleman bearing that distinguished name. At one time he was associated with the Conservative party as a worker among his fellow countrymen. While with the Conservatives, I never heard that he had been guilty of any wrong doing. He was then engaged in legitimate work. But no sooner did he sell his services to our opponents than his descent began in the moral scale. What do we find ? I knew that he had been accused in Winnipeg by his fellow countrymen and in my own constituency of some very grievous wrong-doing. The story was circulated in Marquette when he went among his countrymen to help in the Conservative cause—the story was circulated by the Galicians who supported the Liberal candidate, that prior to coming to this country this man had been guilty of wife murder in his own country. I do not know whether there was any truth in that story or not, but that is what his own fellow countrymen said against him. I am not going to vouch for the accuracy of it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). But here is something that I will vouch for. I know, as a matter of fact, from reputable citizens of Winnipeg, that he has been guilty of crimes something like those for which Philip Wagner was convicted, that he has defaulted his countrymen right and left, that cases have proceeded against him, that he has been in jail accused even of forgery, and that to-day he is a criminal who has fled this country. In order to refresh my memory and have something to substantiate my statements, I telegraphed to Winnipeg to Mr. Rogers, who was acquainted with that gentleman.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. He is not a very good authority.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). He is just as good as the hon. gentleman. If the hon. gentleman, who makes sneering reflections upon him, bore as good a character himself, he would not be quite so ready to interrupt. It is not likely this telegram would be sent me by Mr. Rogers unless there was truth in it. I will read it for the edification of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues.

Winnipeg, May 7, 1908.

To W. J. Roche, M.P., Ottawa.

Rudneski served considerable time in the common jail here. Had to skip the country last year.

Is there anything in that which the hon. gentleman can contradict? If so I would like to hear it.

Rudneski made by himself and others eight affidavits and sold the same to George Walton, Liberal organizer, for $25. I hold the original cheque.

Does the hon. gentleman dispute that?—

I hold the original cheque given by Walton to Rudneski in payment of those affidavits. The same will be published in to-night's paper. The original cheque will be mailed you at Ottawa. Do not lose cheque as I want to get it cashed some day. Affidavits from all the parties named by Bole or Rudneski will appear in to-night's or to-morrow's paper to show that statements made by Bole or Rudneski are absolutely false. Insist on Bole reading the other five affidavits for which Rudneski was paid by Liberal organizer.

R. ROGERS.

These hon. gentlemen thought they had discovered something fine when they trotted out those affidavits made by those Galician residents of Manitoba. But anyone reading them would see that they bore on their face the impress of untruth. Here is something that will appear in the public press of Winnipeg to-morrow; and if Mr. Walton finds he has a libel action, he will have the opportunity to enter the courts against the author of that telegram or the authors of the affidavits published in the city of Winnipeg. This is the character of the evidence which has been read in this House in order to try and influence the Prime Minister and his associates and induce them to inflict upon us this Aylesworth Bill calculated to deprive the Conservatives of Manitoba of their franchise. Why the very thing incorporated in those affidavits, the charge of illegally naturalizing hundreds of foreigners who are not long enough in the country, is the very thing these hon. gentlemen themselves were guilty of at the last election. If my memory serves me correctly, we had some of those men in court for having got some of the poor deluded Galicians, who were not long enough in the country to understand our laws, our customs, our institutions, our language—for having got them naturalized and they had to answer for that in the court. When I was at home during the Easter holidays the very thing they accused us of having done in these by-gone days is what I heard they were doing very recently throughout the Galician colony. They were getting out naturalization papers, getting blanks signed in some cases, getting these foreigners to sign affidavits of the contents of which they were ignorant, so that the very thing they charge against the Conservatives in those spurious affidavits, they are doing themselves at present.

It seems to me very strange that this provincial law, which is held up to so much odium, is the law which the Minister of Justice says he follows out in its entirety in the revision of the lists as provided for in his own Bill. After denouncing the provincial law as unfair in every particular, they are going to follow it in its entirety. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) also referred to another matter, and I marvel at his ingratitude. He referred to the placing on the lists the names of some seven electors who had been left off the lists at one time. But before going further, I wish to say further in connection with the Rudneski affidavit.

It seems strange, as the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) stated, that this affidavit should be in possession of the hon. member (Mr. Bole) for twelve months and that he should wait until he got to Ottawa and read it in this House in order to prejudice members against the law existing in his own province. Mr. Walton, the Liberal organizer, the gentleman accused in this telegram of having bought these affidavits for $25 had not the manliness, or rather I should say he was too manly, to utilize them. And he is a member of the legislature and was there during the recent session, yet he did not mention or read these affidavits in the legislature where he could be met by the premier, and others who are in possession of information to controvert them. He could not do it; he was ashamed to. I have no doubt he felt that this was $25 wasted. But he transferred these affidavits to the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole), who is now a resident of Montreal, and is not to receive renomination in his present constituency, that that hon. gentleman might do work to which Mr. Walton would not stoop to do in connection with his legislative duties.

Now, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) spoke about the Balsam Bay electors. He said, referring to the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden):

1. The hon. gentleman said that this Manitoba government which takes such care of the voters was good enough upon one occasion to solemnly pass an Act of parliament to place certain individuals upon the list in order that they might vote. Well, I have that Act here. An election was coming on and I suppose somebody suggested that perhaps they were going to be shy a few votes in that county and they had better make a few.

That is, the Conservatives were going to be shy a few votes and they were going to make votes by legislation.

2. Now, this was a premeditated mode of doing business and I am going to show how they made the voters. I am told in reference to this, but I do not know as to the truth of it, that the registration clerk had omitted to put 25 names on the list, but there are not 25 mentioned in this Act of the legislature.

This he reads, and proceeds as follows:

3. And the names were added and somebody went to try and find them and they could not, and the only time they had ever been seen was upon polling day.

Now what is the history of that? There is a point called Balsam Bay, on the eastern shore of Lake Winnipeg. A court was held there for the registration of electors. Balsam Bay is an outside point and it was difficult to find a man competent to discharge the duties of registration clerk. A man whose name, if I remember well, is Gilbert Dennett, was selected. There were 26 who applied to have their names placed on the list, handing in the regular applications, and being personally present. For some reason or other, Mr. Dennett misinterpreted his duties under the law—not with any criminal intent, I believe—at any rate, he refused the applications and did not place on the register the names of these 26 men. In addition to this, there were seven others present who did not hand in any applications after these 26 had been refused. The Liberals heard about this, and they sent a man, a Mr. Campbell, to investigate the condition of affairs. He stated in a letter to the Manitoba 'Free Press' the facts as he had found them—that 26 names had been handed in, but the registration clerk had failed to put them on the register. When the court of revision was held, presided over by the judge, the Liberal-Conservative lawyer and the Liberal lawyer were there to represent their several parties. The formal applications of these 26 men were handed in. Not a man of them was present at the court of revision. Every man of them could have been legally kept off the list if Mr. Hastings, the Liberal-Conservative lawyer, had chosen to exercise his right of objecting. But he did not exercise that right. He knew that the registration clerk had not done his duty. And here is what took place, as I am told by the gentleman who appeared at the court:

I inclose you herewith a clipping from the Manitoba 'Free Press,' of June 16, 1906, in reference to the Balsam Bay poll of the Kildonan and St. Andrews district, in which Mr. A. C. Campbell, the commissioner who went out to Balsam Bay for the Liberal party to secure applications, makes a statement showing that by the action of Mr. Dennett, the registration clerk, seven names were left off that polling subdivision and he also makes the statement that these seven parties were all Liberals.

Not a Tory among them. But the Conservative government were not looking for a few votes; they did not need them.

This vertifies the statement made by Mr. Campbell, the attorney general, on the floor of the House the other day and also the statement of facts which I wrote you fully about and for this Act regarding the passing of the special Act in the session of 1907, to place the names of these seven men upon the voters' list for that electoral district. From my previous information to you I stated that there were some fourteen or fifteen applications made which I consented to allow their names to be placed upon the voters' list as aforesaid, but Mr. Campbell in his statement inclosed herewith says there were twenty-six such applications and I have no doubt Mr. Campbell is correct in that assertion and therefore the number of names I consented to let on the list at the court of revision that day, instead of being fourteen or fifteen was twenty-six.

The Liberal-Conservative representative raised no objection. He knew that the registration clerk should have placed these names on the list. And, though not a man of them was present as required by law, Mr. Hastings said, 'We do not want to disfranchise these men; put on their names.' And they were put on.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Does the law justify that ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). No, it does not justify that. But Mr. Dennett had exceeded his jurisdiction, and are you going to wipe off the statute-book every law merely because you find one man appointed under it who fails in his duty ? But Mr. Dennett met his punishment, for the provincial government refused to pay him a single cent for the work he had done at the registration court. They did not treat him as this government treated Leach, they did not give him a place worth $3,000 per annum. He had done wrong, and they refused to pay him a single cent, and he met with a very severe reprimand for having done an unwarranted thing. But the point is that not a man was disfranchised. The prime minister of that province, speaking on the public platform in my own town, declared that, notwithstanding that these men were not present at the court of revision, and notwithstanding that they had not made application, they should not suffer any injustice. Mr. Campbell, the Liberal commissioner, had reported these men were Liberals, that they were present at the registration court and had not applied because others were refused. It was for this reason, Mr. Roblin explained, that he had a statute passed, placing the names of these seven men on the list. Did you ever hear of Mr. Greenway, when prime minister of the province passing a special Act to do justice to an opponent ? On the contrary it would take a large volume to hold the names of those who were disfranchised by the operation of the law under Mr. Greenway as premier of that province.

And now, I come to a discussion of the 'thin-red-line.' We are not afraid to discuss this, as the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) seemed to think we should be. What does the 'thin-red-line' mean ? The voters' lists sent by the clerk of the Crown in Chancery to the various returning officers in Manitoba previous to the last Dominion election were mutilated, and mutilated illegally, and scores and hundreds —how many it is impossible to say—of Conservatives were disfranchised by Leach and his associates through the mutilation of these lists. Now what had they to do ? The Dominion Act provides that where there is an overlapping of constituencies the returning officers should have power to divide the lists, but only in those places, and in no places in the interior. That is the Dominion Act, section 25, and I will read it :

Where any provincial polling division, as constituted at the time of the receipt by the returning officer of the writ for an election lies only partly within the electoral district for which such election is to be held, the part thereof within such electoral district shall, for the purpose of that election, form a separate polling division, or it may be attached by the returning officer to an adjoining polling division, and the returning officer shall, as soon as possible after the receipt of the writ, prepare from the existing voters' lists a separate voters' list containing the names of the persons entitled to have their names placed on the list for such part of such polling division.

There was the statute under which the returning officers were supposed to act. But did the returning officers do this ? Where they did that, Mr. Speaker, there has been no complaint from the representatives of those constituencies. But whom did they transfer their lists to ? To the Liberal organizer. Does the statute say that the returning officer shall hand over his voters' lists to the organizer of a political party ? Not at all. And still we have this Minister of Injustice trying to make this House believe that it was perfectly justifiable on the part of the returning officer to divide and carve up the list among the constituencies and hand them to the Liberal organizer, who employed a staff in some rooms in the McIntyre Block in the city of Winnipeg, doing that work for weeks, mutilating the lists. He did not confine his operation to the border constituencies where there was an overlapping, but he went throughout the length and breadth of the province, disturbing many polling subdivisions in almost every local constituency. Why, I venture to say that in the polling divisions, two-thirds of them were not border divisions at all, were not in border constituencies at all. Let the Prime Minister or his Minister of Justice point to a single provision in the Act which will empower the returning officer to interfere in any way with polling subdivisions save those that are border subdivisions where there is overlapping. If the hon. gentleman can do that, then there will be some force for his contention, but it is impossible for him to do it. Now, let any person who has any reputation as a lawyer on that side of the House read from any statute of this parliament anything that will justify an interference with the lists in other portions of the constituency except those where there is overlapping.

Now, Mr. Leach was the Liberal organizer for the province. He had been a strong party man. He had a staff working for months prior to the election, giving out what he called canvassing books, sending out duplicates, carving out the province, getting reports from his agents throughout the province, and in accordance with these reports he set out certain polling divisions differing from those used for holding the provincial elections. When these lists were returned to the returning officer it was found that scores and hundreds of names were scored out by means of the thin red line, not, as I say, confined to border constituencies, but two-thirds of them were polling divisions within the limits of the local constituencies. We are told that it was a necessity to do this. Not a Liberal on that side of the House has tried to leave the impression upon this House and the country that the interference took place in connection with polling subdivisions in the interior of these local subdivisions. Their whole argument was to leave the impression that only because of overlapping was there any necessity for the thin red line, and that the thin red line was operated only in those particular instances. I challenge anybody to prove that it took place only in those border constituencies. In my own constituency there was very little overlapping, just a small portion of three municipalities, one of which is in the unorganized district. And still there was 1,900 names through which the red line operated. I am not going to say that those 1,900 names were absolutely disfranchised. It was impossible for me to tell. We did not have an investigation in the constituency of Marquette, and why? I knew the returning officer was an honourable man, he was a personal friend of my own, and he himself could not stoop to anything of this character. Where he erred was in transferring, by the direction of somebody, the voters' lists for the constituency to the Liberal organizer. The latter did the work, he did the disfranchising. I entered my objection to having that gentleman arrested with the other returning officers, because I knew that personally he was not responsible for the operation of this red line. Now we will take an illustration. Some of these gentlemen say, Oh, but there is no oomplaint from Brandon, the Minister of Justice says there is no complaint from Dauphin, no complaint from Portage la Prairie. The Minister of Justice stated why there was no complaint in Dauphin, because there was no election, it was acclamation. The member for Dauphin is very astute, he knew he had not the ghost of a show had his election come on on the regular election day; therefore he pulled the wires with his brother-in-law, the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) and got the cabinet to postpone that election a week. But I venture to say, and I think the future will show that my prophecy is correct, that the member for Dauphin will not be a candidate at the next election for Dauphin if it is held on the general election day. I say there is one abuse that is not provided for by this Act; all the elections should be held on the same day. There is no provision in this Act to prevent anything of the kind, and unless the member for Dauphin succeeds again in having his election postponed, and he pretends that the returning oofficer has not sufficient time to post up his proclamation, he will not be a candidate for that constituency.

Mr. BURROWS. Is it not a fact that part of the county of Dauphin never had an election that was not deferred until after the date of the general election?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The constituency of Dauphin is a pretty large constituency, and I am willing to admit that the present government postponed that election one week, following the precedent of their opponents. But I am not justifying that at all. Admitting for the sake of argument that in Dauphin you cannot get around in the one week to post up the proclamation, cannot that be remedied? Because the provincial government under Mr. Greenway or Mr. Roblin has postponed this election, is that any reason why we should do it? In 1896 when that whole constituency was in Marquette, when I was a candidate, the election was held the same day. Now the Minister of Justice said in reference to myself that all the complaint I had was about ten men in my constituency who had not been disfranchised, but who had been transferred to another list—as if that was all the fault I could find. Now here is what the Minister of Justice said:

> The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) though he spoke in general terms, made the charge, so far as anything specific was concerned, simply that ten names in one polling division had been put in the wrong township. The hon. members for Brandon, Winnipeg and Dauphin made no complaints whatever; and there could be no complaint in Winnipeg or Dauphin, because in Dauphin the election took place by acclamation and in Winnipeg there was no readjustment because the bounds were conterminous between the one constituency and the other.
> So that we have seven of the ten Manitoba constituencies accounted for at all events by their representatives in this House on the occasion to which I have referred. And the aggregate of the complaints from those seven constituencies was twenty votes—twenty men misplaced, not twenty disfranchised, but twenty put upon the lists in a wrong polling subdivision or a wrong township.

Now, the impression that the hon. Minister of Justice intended to convey by that was that that was the only grievance we had to complain of in the constituency of Marquette. Why did I take these ten names? He took that expression of mine from 'Hansard' of May 30, 1905, when I spoke as follows:

> In my own constituency, the returning officer is an honest, straightforward man, a fellow citizen of my own. He is above doing anything of a dishonest character. But he received instructions from some person. The law states that a returning officer shall prepare, or cause to be prepared, a list which he shall supply to the deputy returning officers and which he shall certify as correct. Did the returning officer for the constituency of Marquette do that? No. My agent waited upon him and saw the lists brought into his office and unpacked. He saw the red line scored through the names and asked the returning officer what explanation he could give of it. The returning officer admitted candidly that he did not do it. My agent asked where the lists were prepared in this way, and the returning officer answered that he presumed that they were erased in Winnipeg. My agent called his attention to eleven names in a certain district where the voters were wrongly described.

And this district was known to the returning officer because it was in the immediate neighbourhood of my own town. Scores and hundreds of names—1,900 names, as I said a few minutes ago—were erased by this thin-red-line operation, but in this particular district the returning officer knew each of these men and that is why his attention was called to it.

For instance, a man living in township 15, range 17, was given as township 16, range 17. And, because of that, red lines were scored through the names. Of eleven names thus wrongly described, ten were those of Conservatives, and all had been scored out. One was a Liberal, and there was no red line through that name——

Of the eleven names wrongly described ten were scored out and the ten were Conservatives. One was a Liberal and notwithstanding the fact that he was wrongly described he was permitted to vote under this description.

—although the description was wrong as in the other cases. My agent asked the returning officer: How can you certify these lists to be correct as required by law? And the returning officer answered: I will take good care not to do anything of the kind; I will write 'certified,' not 'certified correct.' And, if you will look at the Marquette list, which I moved to have laid on the table, you will find that that is the way it is certified. It was a quibble, I grant you; but the returning officer would not take the responsibility of certifying the lists to be correct, because he knew that they were not correct. These lists were scored before they came into his possession and scored in the office of the Liberal organizer in Winnipeg.

It was by that quotation that the Minister of Justice attempted to show that that was the whole source of complaint in the constituency of Marquette. It would be impossible, without getting all the voters' lists from the various deputy returning officers, to show to what extent the lists were tampered with. In the investigation which took place into the way in which the thin red line operated it was impossible in many instances to get the lists. They were destroyed. They were not returned. The deputies mutilated them and destroyed them. They did not return them to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. So, we were face to face with serious difficulties in endeavouring to prove our case by reason of not being furnished with the lists. But we did manage to get hold of the list in connection with the Beausejour poll. What took place at the Beausejour poll? This was not a border poll, so that the difficulty which hon. gentlemen opposite state existed in harmonizing the boundaries of provincial and Dominion constituencies did not exist. It was within the provincial constituency of Springfield and the provincial constituency of Springfield was entirely within the Dominion constituency of Selkirk. There was no justification for striking off the names. But, no less than forty-one names were scored out by red ink. Of those forty-one, twenty-three were not transferred to any other list.

Mr. BERGERON. They were disfranchised?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). They would have been if something had not taken place at court. They were not transferred to any list. They were scored out of the lists applicable to their home polling subdivisions where they had been accustomed to vote. They were old residents, and men who had been qualified to vote. Twenty-three out of the forty-one absolutely appeared on no list at that poll. We got the list for that poll and that is the reason that we were able to prove this case. The Minister of Justice rises up in his place in this House and tells us that it was merely transferring voters from one poll to another, but we proved that twenty-three out of forty-one were not transferred to any other poll. Of the twenty-three, eighteen were pronounced Conservatives. What happened? These men appeared at the poll to cast their votes. They were refused ballots. The deputy returning officer stated that his instructions were to give ballots only to those whose names were not scored out. These gentlemen had their names scored out. They hung around the polling subdivision and almost raised a riot. They kept their places all day until about four o'clock in the afternoon and then, becoming desperate, they tendered their ballots and insisted on the deputy receiving their ballots and it was only when he was threatened with the demolition of the polling booth that he consented to receive their ballots and he did receive them and put them in a separate envelope. These eighteen Conservatives, as I say, actually had to threaten the deputy returning officer with violence before he would accept their ballots. He accepted them and put them in a separate envelope and made a separate return. When these eighteen ballots were counted that evening sixteen of them were marked in favour of the Conservative candidate and one had to poll his vote as an agent on certificate. That is the case that the Minister of Justice referred to. He said that no harm was done, that this man had voted at his own poll and that the only difference was that he had to vote on certificate as an agent. Of the two voters who marked their ballots in favour of the Liberal candidate one afterwards admitted that he had marked his ballot in mistake for the Liberal candidate. The other ballot was marked by a gentleman from Toronto who came in at the last hour to cast his vote and had not time to go to a more distant poll. Of these eighteen ballots, sixteen were marked in favour of the Conservative candidate, one was inadvertently marked in favour of the Liberal candidate and one voter had to mark his ballot as an agent of the candidate. That would have been shown to have been prevalent at many polls if we had had the time and the opportunity to prove it, and if we had had the assistance from this government that we were entitled to have, they being responsible for the prosecution of these cases.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What reason or pretence of reason was assigned for interfering with the lists in polling divisions which were wholly within the boundaries of a federal electoral district ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). There was absolutely no reason or pretence whatever except that these gentlemen thought they had a perfect right to go on and mutilate the lists without warrant, and they had no warrant at all. The Dominion Election Act provides that they shall adopt the provincial polling subdivisions. I have here the Act. The Dominion Election Act, chapter 6, section 24 provides that :

> The polling divisions shall, except as herein otherwise provided for, be those established by or under the laws of the province for the purposes of provincial elections within the territory comprised in the electoral district for which the election is held.

So, in the face of the statute these returning officers, or at least, Mr. Leach, acting on behalf of the returning officer, mutilated, divided up, carved up the lists for the province of Manitoba notwithstanding that the provision of the statute is that they should adopt the provincial polling subdivisions. Had they adopted the provincial polling subdivisions there would have been no ground for complaint save in these border constituencies, and I have no doubt that matters could have been arranged to the satisfaction of everybody. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) says that there was no complaint in his riding. Why ? Because Mr. Leach did not mutilate the lists. He did not transfer the names ; they had a returning officer who did that work and if what the hon. gentleman states is correct, I presume he did it honourably. We are told there were no complaints in Brandon and elsewhere, and why ? Mr. Leach himself swore he did not touch either of these constituencies. It is only where the returning officers handed over their lists to the Liberal organizer, and this is significant and certainly not accidental—it is in these cases that the lists were worked to the destruction of the Conservative electors and to the disfranchisement of no doubt hundreds of voters in that province. No better argument could be used as to there being no necessity whatever for interference with the present provincial law than this very fact. Had the returning officers discharged their duties, as the hon. member for Portage la Prairie says his returning office did, there would have been no ground for complaint. If these polling subdivisions overlap they might have an opportunity there of getting in their funny work, but had the government itself in that instance followed out the law as it is in Manitoba to-day there need be no trouble in that respect.

Mr. ALCORN. Was not this matter of the cutting and carving of the lists in the polling subdivision passed on by the Court of Appeal in Manitoba?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Yes, I will deal with that in a moment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) whether or not any notice was given to the Conservative candidates or organizers when the lists were being mutilated in this way?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). No, absolutely no. And where Liberals were transferred they took mighty good care they sent out information to them in order that they might know where to vote, while the Conservatives were absolutely ignorant of the fact until election day, and even then they were unable to find out where they were transferred to. And while throughout Manitoba there were a large number—no doubt hundreds, but how many it is impossible to say—absolutely disfranchised by reason of being left off their lists and by reason of being taken off their own polling subdivision and not transferred to any other, still there were a greater number who were disfranchised by reason of their being transferred to other lists, 10 or 15 or 20 miles from their own home so that they did not know where to vote.

The Minister of Justice stated he was quite confident that there were not more than 100 disfrachised in the province of Manitoba. It is strange that we who reside in Manitoba have to come to Ottawa to learn that from the Minister of Justice. I certainly would not undertake to vouch for the number of electors that were disfrachised ; I do not think I could come within several hundreds of the number if I made a guess, but the Minister of Justice sitting down in Ottawa knows all about it and he can tell almost to a man the number who were disfranchised. How he can make such a statement as that is past my comprehension. No doubt he got his information from his supporters who know just as little about it as he does. I have here a facsimile map of the vote held at Beausejour at poll No. 9. This map is marked in sections and the 'X' on the section represents the names left on the list and the 'O' represents the names taken on. Mixed in one with another on the same section you will see six voters, and perhaps four of them will be taken off and two left on, and the four taken off were Conservatives. Does any one suppose that was accident? If they say it was by accident they may tell it to the marines. No intelligent man will believe it. There does not seem to be any particular method in striking off the names except the method of selecting the Tories and taking them off the list. I will pass this around for the inspection and information of hon. gentlemen, so that they may see that on one section of land there would be four residents, two of them Liberals and two of the Conservatives, two transferred, two not transferred—and those that were disfranchised were the two Conservatives. Can the Prime Minister uphold such a thing as that? I am sure his supporters have not told him one-half the nefarious transactions in the holding of that election. Well, these officials were arrested and after the preliminary investigation they were sent up for trial. At the first trial the judge threw out the charge on the technical ground that the words 'wilfully erased' were not inserted in the charge, and he stated that had to be proven, and so a different procedure had to be taken. It came before Judge Perdue and Judge Perdue after hearing counsel withdrew it from the jury again on technical grounds as to what constituted a voters' list. An appeal was taken from Judge Perdue's decision and it came before the full court consisting of Judge Richards and Judge Phippen. I told in my hand the judgment of the full court, and I will read it to the House. This is it:

When the returning officer appointed to hold a Dominion election for an electoral district in Manitoba, selects one of the copies of the lists of voters sent to him by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery pursuant to section 21 of the Dominion Elections Act 1900, as the one which he will certify and forward to the deputy returning officer as required by section 41 for use at one of the polling subdivisions, that copy so selected becomes a voters' list within the meaning of section 503 of the Criminal Code 1902, and it is an offence under that section for the returning officer wilfully to erase names of voters from it, either before or after he certifies it and forwards it to the deputy.

That was the point on which Judge Perdue withdrew the case from the jury.

Such returning officer has no authority under the Dominion Elections Act, 1900, to create a voters' list upon which the election is to be held, or, under sections 22 and 23 of the Elections Act to make a new division of a constituency into polling subdivisions and rearrange the names of the voters for each when there are in fact polling divisions already established and used at the last provincial election for the same territory, whether or not such polling divisions had been erected in strict accordance with the requirements of the provincial statutes. The returning officer who wilfully makes such erasures from the voters' lists cannot escape punishment on the ground that he had to make them in consequence of having made new polling subdivisions which he had no authority to make. The fact that the heading of the list of voters in question used the words 'registration district No. 3,' instead of 'polling division No. 3' did not justify the returning officer in believing, if he did believe, that there were no polling divisions, since the territory of No. 3 was correctly described in the same heading.

The court having held that the trial judge had erred in withdrawing the case from the jury and directing a verdict of not guilty, ordered a new trial.

There is the court of appeal distinctly pointing out that this returning officer had no business whatever to violate the Dominion Elections Act in the manner in which he did. If they had complied with the law there was no possible justification or excuse for adopting the method of dividing the list in order to conform to this new policy of subdivisions. I would read a few words from the argument that followed. Judge Richards stated:

The contention for the defendant is that, under section 22 of the Dominion Elections Act, a returning officer is required or permitted to fix the limits of polling divisions, and necessarily therefore to deal with the lists of voters sent him by the clerk of the crown in chancery by so altering them that they shall suit the limits of the divisions that he so fixed.

I find myself unable to accept that view. Section 22 only requires, I think, that returning officer to get the documents or papers (other than voters' lists) named in that section, for the purpose of ascertaining what the already established polling divisions are.

Further on, Judge Richards said:

It was admitted by defendant's counsel on the argument that the defendant did in fact, by his proclamation under section 16, alter the area of the polling division to which the list which he is charged with altering applied. He took off part of the area and added territory not previously in the division.

It was argued that, even if he had done that wrongly (as it seems to me that he did) it, nevertheless, became necessary as a result of that alteration that he should alter the list so as to make it correspond with the new limits, and that such latter alteration thereby became his duty and that as a result he could not be punishable for making it wilfully, but that his only liability, if any, would be for the alteration of the area of the division.

The contention, if sound, would imply that, because he committed a breach of the law, which he should have known would necessarily cause him to commit a further breach, he is not to be responsible for committing the second breach. If that were good law, then if statutes forbid changes in the divisions and also forbid changes in the lists, but provided penalties for the latter offence only, a returning officer who wished to alter the lists to favour a candidate could do so with impunity by first deliberately altering the divisions and then justifying under such last named alterations when charged with having changed the lists.

Where a man commits a breach of law knowing that it will necessarily involve his committing another breach, and he does also commit that other breach, it seems to me that to the extent to which the law provides penalties for such breaches he is liable to punishment for either, or for both of them.

In this he was supported by Judge Phippen in the following words :

It is now argued that the returning officer may disregard these conditions and of his own judgment, under section 23 of the Dominion Elections Act, declare 'that under the laws of the province there are no polling divisions for the purpose of provincial elections,' and then proceed to create divisions and prepare new lists.

I do not think the statute will bear any such construction. To my mind parliament never intended returning officers, appointed and acting in the heat of an election, to be the final court of appeal and to determine such delicate matters in the absence of the parties and with no provision for their being heard. Such questions can be settled only by the courts, then all parties will at least have an opportunity of being present. There were polling divisions in fact for the purpose of provincial elections, and beyond that the returning officer had no authority to inquire. It was not his business to reject that which in fact existed because of supposed illegality in its creation. I am, however, inclined to the opinion that these polling divisions were such in law as well as in fact.

I would therefore answer the questions stated in the case as follows: In my opinion the learned trial judge did not properly withdraw the case from the jury, nor did he properly direct a verdict of 'not guilty' to be entered.

There is the decision of the court of appeal and in the face of that the Minister of Justice declared that somebody had to do this dividing, that it was necessary that it should be done, and why then do we condemn them for the operation of the red line ? The provincial government used the black line. Who used the black line ? The judges of the province of Manitoba are commanded by law to make the division where there is overlapping or a new registration requiring the division of the lists. That work by the provincial law is to-day in the hands of the county court judges, any judge to be named by the Lieutenant Governor in Council and to that judge is assigned the duty of making a division. It is not left to any returning officer. Which is the fairest law, the present provincial law leaving this work to the judges or the proposed law which we are now discussing? In connection with this red line business Mr. E. L. Howell appeared to defend the culprits, R. E. A. Leach and his associates, and he stated that he appeared there on behalf of the Dominion government. Fancy these men, who had been guilty of this act as evidenced by the decision of the court of appeal, who had disfranchised the Conservative electors by the score and by the hundred, being defended by Mr. F. L. Howell, of Winnipeg, who stated that he was there at the instance of the Justice Department of this government. How different were their actions in 1896 when they caused the arrest of a number of innocent deputy returning officers in Macdonald, where there were supposed to be unwarrantable trafficking with the polls and disfranchisement of Liberal electors. Did the provincial government there, although a Liberal government, spend any of their money ? Not at all, they called on their friends here and this government spent nearly $10,000 without securing a verdict against any one of them, in hunting down the supposed criminals. But in this case they sent their legal representative in Winnipeg to defend the culprits who had been guilty of disfranchising their Conservative opponents.

I quoted a while ago the statement that under the provincial law the judges have to do the dividing of the territory and of the lists. Here is the statute for that :

In the event of territory comprised within or partly comprised within an electoral division being changed and included in another electoral division, or other electoral divisions, whether newly created or not, a judge of one of the county court divisions of the province, to be nominated and appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, shall subdivide the names appearing on the list of electors as so finally revised, according to the altered boundaries or limits, and make a complete list of electors for the electoral divisions affected, as aforesaid, and appropriately divide the names of electors and allot the territory between suitable polling subdivisions as shall in the opinion of such judge be just and equitable.

Is that not a fair provision to have the work done by the provincial judge of Manitoba, taking it out of the hands of the returning officers ? By this it is possible to judge which law is the more fair.

Some returning officers were arrested. One of them was named Duggan—and by the way I cannot congratulate the government on the superiority of the gentlemen whom they selected in some instances at any rate, to act as returning officers. This gentleman's training, however reputable he may be, has not been such as to win the confidence of the electors of that constituency. Mr. Duggan, some time before he was selected, was a clerk in a hotel kept by his brother in Selkirk.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. That is not correct.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). That is in the evidence, anyway.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. It is not.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I think it will be found that I am right. The hon. gentleman once before contradicted me. I referred to Mr. Duggan as a bartender at one time. He had been bartender, but some time prior to his appointment he was clerk in the hotel, and the hon. gentleman admitted that in a speech a few sessions ago.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. That statement is not correct.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). We will look up the evidence and see whose memory is the best. What was Mr. Duggan?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Go ahead and tell it.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). In what capacity was he acting prior to being appointed?

An hon. MEMBER. Was he a bartender?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. No, he was not.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Duggan gave some evidence. I have not got the evidence, but have a portion of it. He was the returning officer for Selkirk. It was he who took the proclamation to Mr. Leach; it was he who took the voters' lists to Mr. Leach to have them fixed in accordance with the new alterations, and he was brought before the court and gave a certain amount of evidence. We shall see the character of this evidence, as I propose to read some of it:

Q. Did you supply any one with a copy of the lists as altered?—A. No.

Q. Did you show anybody a copy of the lists as altered?—A. No.

Q. Did you know where the Liberal committee got their copies from?—A. I do not.

Q. Are you prepared to swear they did not get them from you?—A. They did not.

Q. You have told us that you did not look over those lists you received nor check them over in any way—

That is the lists he received from Mr. Leach.

Q. So you cannot swear whether a number of electors were not left off altogether?—A. I could not.

Q. There might have been for all you know?—A. There might have been.

Q. There might have been 100 struck off or 500 and not put on any other list and you would not know anything about it? Is not that the fact?—A. Yes, I did not check them up.

Here is a returning officer who certified to this list as being correct. In the face of the declaration of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), who states that there were not over 100 electors disfranchised in the whole province of Manitoba, here is a returning officer who swears that there might have been 500 names struck off that list and not put on any other and he did not know anything about it.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Why did the Attorney General of Manitoba enter a nolle prosequi in this particular case?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I am coming to that.

Q. And that is the conclusion to draw from the fact that you did not check them over. You cannot tell whether 500 were disfranchised or not owing to the alterations?—A. I could not swear.

Q. And yet you as returning officer certified to the correctness of the list you issued?—A. Yes.

That is the kind of returning officers this government appointed. Whether there were 100 or 500 disfranchised, they certified to the list without knowing about it, but the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) knows to a man almost how many were disfranchised in the whole province.

Mr. Leach was also sworn. He said at the investigation that he was the chief organizer of the Liberal party.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Give me the names of any men outside of the few who were disfranchised.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Give me the various voters' lists, some of which are here in the office of the clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and give me the lists that were destroyed by your deputies and I will show you.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. That is no answer to my question.

Mr. STAPLES. I can give the hon. gentleman twenty-eight of them.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I went to the clerk of the Crown in Chancery and asked to be allowed to peruse some of those lists, and he admitted that many had not been returned at all. Where are they? They were destroyed no doubt by the various deputies lest they might be incriminated, and now, four years afterwards, the hon. gentleman challenges us to give the names of the men who were disfranchised.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I am just following your leader's example. He is a great man for challenging to give names. I will give some to-morrow.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. During 1904 Mr. Leach was chief organizer for the Liberal party. In the summer of that year he had been doing organization work in connection with the voters' lists for the Manitoba constituency. He had been doing the work of preparing the lists for the committees, copying in the books the reports, preparing a different division of the polling districts from those mentioned in the registration papers. Some time before the election and before the writs were issued, he was making arrangements for having the lists in the elections different from those used in the Dominion elections. He was asked:

Q. What were the methods of arriving at the lists which were used?—A. After planning out what we thought would be suitable polling subdivisions, we prepared lists to conform with these divisions.

Q. Who were present while you were doing that work? I presume you were not personally doing the work yourself? Did you supervise the work?—A. I directed it.

Q. Who were the persons actually doing the work?—A. Mr. Neighorn was chiefly charged with the responsibility.

He goes on to say that he did not touch either the Brandon, Dauphin or Portage lists. That is the reason these gentlemen had no complaints coming in. Mr. Leach did not have the opportunity of disfranchising in connection with these lists. But with these exceptions, all the lists in the other constituencies were prepared under his supervision. On being asked regarding the secrecy of the operations, he gave evidence as follows :

Q. You carried out the work in the same way as the rest of the work in this office—in such a way that information as to what was being done did not go outside, as far as you know?—A. It did not get outside.

Q. Except to the Liberal organization and the persons you thought entitled to the information?—A. We did not take any pains to notify our opponents.

Q. But you took good care to keep your work from your opponents. You were doing your work as effectively as possible?—A. It turned out to be effective.

This is the Leach who flaunts the operation of the thin red line as having done its work very effectively in disfranchising the citizens of that province. The Liberal organs of Manitoba have been writing up articles to supply these gentlemen down here with material for this discussion. The authority is a very poor one, but let me give you the very best that the 'Free Press' can say—not that I agree with its conclusions, because I entirely disagree with them, but to show the very best face that can be put upon these proceedings :

Free Press, February 14, 1908.

On the whole the work was done in 1904, in view of the limitations of time, with creditable accuracy. In practically only three constituencies were there any real grounds of complaint. There were clean lists in Winnipeg, Souris, Dauphin, Marquette, Brandon and Lisgar.

I beg to differ. There were not clean lists in Marquette or one or two other of those constituencies, but where there were clean lists is where Mr. Leach did not have the opportunity of using the red line.

In the constituencies of Macdonald, Selkirk and Provencher there were, in some four or five polling divisions, undoubtedly irregularities.

What a mild term !

Whether these were wilfully done or not has never been established. The points at which names had either been carelessly transferred or unintentionally dropped——

As, for instance, where there were 41 names scored off the list 23 of which did not appear on any other list, of which 18 were the names of Conservatives—that was merely 'careless transferring.' Of course, it was quite unintentional—but it was significant just the same.

—were Beausejour, St. Boniface and Miami. There also appears to have been some trouble at Poplar Point, although no attempt has ever been made to state the facts as to these cases.

The article goes on :

It can, however, be said that at the outside not more than forty or fifty parties lost their votes——

This was stated by the hon. member for Lisgar and will be stated by other hon. members on that side. This is their authority for that statement.

—and that with the possible exception of Provencher, the results of the Dominion elections were in no wise affected by these mistakes.

Here is an acknowledgment that a gentleman sits on the Liberal side of this House representing a constituency—Provencher—that was stolen from the Liberal Conservative candidate. Here is the admission of the Liberal party organ that that constituency at least was stolen from the Conservatives. Their candidate had a majority of only 10, and in St. Boniface alone there were 25 Conservatives who were disfranchised, more than double enough to wipe out the Liberal majority. And this is the kind of argument that these hon. gentlemen put up to bolster up their case.

I am just reminded, in connection with the duplicate list, that Mr. Leach swore he was provided with only one copy of these lists by those whom he had in his employ. But he is distinctly contradicted by Neighorn who did the altering of the lists. Leach swore that he left it with Neighorn, and Neighorn swore that he made a duplicate list and handed both to Leach. And, no doubt, the duplicate was sent to his political friends to notify them where they were to go to poll their votes.

Now, I am asked by the hon. member for Pictou, 'Why were these cases dropped ?' What have we read in the Liberal press ever since this question arose in 1904 ? Persecution ! Persecution on the part of the provincial government of Manitoba against these poor officials who had done nothing wrong. So it has been stated, but I do not think they will state it again. We were told that these officials were being persecuted. They were taken from court to court until they were brought to the court of appeal. And there it was decided that they were wrong, that they had no right to make these new polling subdivisions, and no right to treat the lists as they did. What was the use of going on when there was a decision of that kind, in the face of which such actions cannot be repeated. Had we gone on, the charge of 'persecution' would have been hurled still more viciously against the Conservatives. But another reason why these cases were dropped was that the Dominion government had turned this into a political question by sending Mr. E. L. Howard to represent the party in these cases. Would it be possible to get a jury that would not be a political jury with the Dominion government defending the accused? I think this is a sufficient answer to the hon. member for Pictou. Had the cases gone on we should have heard much more from the Liberal representatives and the Liberal press the accusation that we were persecuting these returning officers. In fact the Minister of Justice admitted as much by stating that if the present law were left in force, it would be impossible to get men to act as returning officers in future. But, as the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) rightly stated, that any returning officer who discharged his duty faithfully and well in accordance with his sworn declaration need not fear the law,—if he does his duty he has nothing to fear. Now, why were the lists in the constituency of Selkirk handed to Leach? Mr. Duggan had been a resident of the constituency for fifteen years, and must have been much better acquainted with the constituency than Leach, in fact, Leach had no local knowledge of the constituency. Mr. Duggan, if he had an education and was a proper man to act in that capacity, having been a resident for so long, should have been able to do the work himself.

Now, what became of these gentlemen? In the first place, we have Leach appointed to a position by the Minister of the Interior—not the present Minister of Interior. Leach carried on this work for the election in December, 1904. He was in charge of the province of Manitoba as organizer. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) was Minister of the Interior at that time. Mr. Leach was a confidential friend of that hon. gentleman, and, after perpetrating these gross frauds he was rewarded by being appointed to a position under the Crown the salary of which was $3,000, if I mistake not. To-day he is on the pay-roll of this government, acting in the capacity of inspector of land offices. Mr. Neighorn, the chief man in charge, has also been rewarded by being made, I believe, private secretary to the chairman of the Transcontinental Commission. Mr. Ayotte, the returning officer for Provencher, has been rewarded with a place as immigration agent in the United States where he draws a salary the amount of which I have forgotten. He is pensioned upon the people of this country for his services to the Liberal party on that occasion, and McLeod was similarly rewarded with a government position. Each and every one of these men is to-day on the pay-roll of this country; instead of being punished for their nefarious transactions, they have been rewarded by this government in accordance with its well-established practice.

Now, this action of the government in trying to force this Election Act upon us is an evidence, a confession of the pitiable weakness of their position with the western people. As I have already said, the government fear a free and untrammelled verdict of the people. They have placed imposition after imposition upon the little province of Manitoba ever since they came into power. For reasons best known to themselves, they have been punishing that little province until now we have the crowning iniquity of endeavouring to throttle the franchise of that province. I can tell the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that he is not going to improve his reputation with right-thinking people, Liberals as well as Conservatives, by this measure, for it is resented by the people of the west, but especially of Manitoba, irrespective of party. This measure is an acknowledgment that the government cannot hope to carry Manitoba without resorting to loaded lists. Sir, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) when prime minister of the province, ran elections in 1892, 1896, 1899, and he never once ran an election without loaded lists. And to-day, because the lists in that province are absolutely as fair to one party as to the other, that hon. gentleman and his colleagues in this House—every one of whom has sat in the legislature behind him as premier—demand that the same handicap should be placed upon their opponents in Dominion elections.

Talk about the list being unfair. I picked up to-day the 'Winnipeg Telegram' and what do I find? You would not find this in any Liberal organ in any province of the Dominion of Canada, unless they were perfectly sure of their ground. This paper offers a bonus of $25 for every case that can be found of a man who has been improperly left off the list during this coming revision. The 'Telegram' offers a bonus of $25 to any man who can substantiate before an impartial judge that he has appeared before a registration clerk in the coming revision this month, or next month, who is qualified to get his name on the list, and who has been refused. And who do they select for the judge? The Hon. Charles Mickle, leader of the Liberal party in the local legislature of Manitoba. Here is the article in that paper:

There is not another province in Canada that can show such a record in the administration of its election law. There is no partiality in the administration of Manitoba's election law, for the simple reason that the system makes the elector independent of officials and renders partiality obsolutely impossible. The 'Telegram' is confident that the fairness and impartiality which have characterized previous registrations in the province of Manitoba will characterize the registration which is about to be held. It is so confident that the electors of the province, irrespective of party sympathies, will be dealt with fairly that it makes the following proposition:

The 'Telegram' will pay the sum of $25 to any elector in the province of Manitoba who is not already on the voters' lists who is refused registration if he applies in the regular manner and is legally qualified to vote under our law. Should any claim or claims be made under this offer each case to be referred to Hon. C. J. Mickle, leader of His Majesty's loyal opposition in the Manitoba legislature, from whose decision there shall be no appeal. Should any award be made, one half the amount is to be paid to the elector who has been refused registration and the other half to the Winnipeg General Hospital.

I ask the Prime Minister, is it reasonable to suppose that any person holding a responsible position would make an offer of that kind if he did not feel absolutely sure of his position, absolutely confident that no such case can be found? Under the existing law both parties will be at the court of revision, each party will have an equal chance with the other, and I say it is absurd to suppose that these charges of unfairness can be substantiated. But that is not all. Information came to me to-day that this offer is going to be followed up by another to the effect that if it can be shown that any elector was unjustifiably kept off the list at the last revision, having complied with the law in every respect, or if he was improperly left off the list, or if anybody was improperly struck off the list —and I desire to emphasize this, because no registration clerk in the province of Manitoba has power to strike a single man off the list the judge may do so, the revising barrister—I believe that to-morrow's 'Telegram' will say that if it can be shown that any one was disfranchised improperly last year, they will pay $25 for every such case, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself shall be the judge. Now I think our Liberal friends, instead of indulging in declamations and reckless assertions, should come down to hard facts, and give us specific cases if they are able to do so.

Now it has been stated that in 1904 Mr. Sifton endeavoured to pass an Act similar to this. So he did. The Prime Minister knows that. He knows that an Act was hatched, was printed in fact, but it never saw the light of day so far as this parliament is concerned, strangled almost before it was born, by reason of the fairness of the predecessor of the present Minister of Justice. The present Minister of Justice, though, will strike an opponent below the belt, he will stoop to do things of this kind that his predecessor in office would not resort to. He came into parliament with a great reputation as a legal authority; as a politician he has proved a huge failure, but as a partisan he has proved a splendid success. He is making for himself a reputation that certainly is not enviable west of the great lakes. In 1904, as I say, Mr. Sifton hatched an Act and told his friends never to mind a revision; I am going to introduce an Act, he told them, that will take the lists entirely away from the officials of the local legislature, and we will have our own officials prepare the lists. It was because of that that the Liberals in Manitoba did not become active in connection with the revision of 1904, and hence they had to resort to the thin red line, they had to make it up in some way, and they endeavoured to do it by that method. Now what does this Bill provide. There is a very significant clause here, subsection 2, which reads:

In the preparation of such lists the provisions of the laws of the province regulating the preparation and manner of revising and bringing into force the provincial voters' lists in the like cases shall as far as possible——

Very significant words in the light of past experience.

—be observed and followed and no person whose name is not included in the voters' lists so prepared and revised shall be entitled to vote.

What do I mean by saying, 'In the light of past experience?' We had a by-election in the constituency of Lisgar in 1901. The then representative, Mr. Richardson, was unseated, and a by-election was held in consequence. The provincial voters' lists were upwards of one year old. The Dominion law provides that when the lists are upwards of twelve months old, the Dominion officials shall make up lists of their own, a law with the identical words in it, following as far as possible the provisions of the provincial law. What did they do? At that time the judges constituted the board of registration as they do now, the five judges of the province of Manitoba. These five judges had the power to say where the registration booths should be placed, they had the naming of the registration clerks, they had the naming of the revising barristers, the government had not a single word to say in either of these respects, either in placing the registration booths in the different districts, or in appointing the registration clerks, or in naming the revising barristers. The government had not the slightest thing to do with all that. Did this government follow out the provision of that law? They could have done so, but they ignored it. What did the late Minister of the Interior do? He appointed a gentleman named, I think, Alexander McLeod, a strong Liberal partisan, and they constituted him a board of registration instead of the judges under the provincial law. Was that fair towards their opponents? They ignored the provincial law entirely. Now it was not impossible to have taken these judges as the provincial law required. But they appointed this Liberal lawyer and gave him all the power that the provincial law centred in the judges. He designated where the registration booths should be, and placed them in the most inconvenient places for the Conservatives in that constituency. He appointed the registration clerks every man of whom was a partisan Liberal, and he appointed the revising barristers, not one of whom was a Conservative. These gentlemen claim that under the present Act all the registration clerks are Conservatives. Does this Aylesworth Bill provide that there shall be a Tory appointed to revise the new lists? Do you suppose that it worked a hardship? Is it wrong to have a Tory appointed as a registration clerk and is it right to have a Liberal? Alex. McLeod appointed partisans as his officials. The Liberals appointed revising barristers of their own political faith, and they appointed registration clerks, partisans of their own. They ignored absolutely the provisions of the law. Hence, I say these words, 'as far as possible,' are utterly meaningless, and that with the provision of the present Act we would just see a repetition of what we did see in connection with the Lisgar election of 1901.

I wish to anticipate one or two things that no doubt will be said and to refer to one or two things which have been said by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford). He made a speech prior to the Christmas holidays in connection with the voters' lists and he made several accusations in connection with the revision of the lists that are absolutely foundationless, as I have already proved, in connection with the Balsam Bay revision where seven names were left off. At page 348 of 'Hansard' the hon. member for Portage la Prairie referred to the official voters' list of the district of Rockwood and he complained of the fact that 90 names had been struck from the voters' lists of polling subdivision No. 1 of that district and some 45 names left on. He made the bold statement that if the act had been done by a Grit he would have been put in the penitentiary, but as it was done under Tory instructors every man got scot-free. As a matter of fact the striking of those names off that polling subdivision was done by Judge Meyers, a gentleman who represented the Liberal cause in the constituency in which I have the honour to reside for many years and who was an ardent Liberal politician. He was the judge appointed. He did nothing illegal. Why? Because the district was divided by the redistribution and he had to divide the lists. Under the provincial law it was referred to a judge. Judge Meyers divided it and yet this hon. gentleman states it was done by a Tory and that if it had been done by a Grit he would have been placed in the penitentiary. Surely the hon. member for Portage la Prairie does not want to put Judge Meyers in the penitentiary for carrying out the provisions of the law. There was no more ardent admirer of his than the hon. member for Portage la Prairie in days gone by. He was appointed by this government. He did so under the powers given him by Act of parliament coupled with an order in council. The order in council is right here under my hand appointing Judge Meyers. I have a certified copy of that order in council in my possession. The Act which gave the judge authority to strike these names off the list is chapter 23 of the statutes of Manitoba, 1906, section 7 and subsection 4 coupled with an order in council, No. 11465. The changes in the voters' list for the electoral division above mentioned were occasioned by the fact that the boundaries of these electoral divisions were changed by chapter 11 of the statutes of Manitoba, 1907. And by a perusal of subsection 4, section 7, chapter 23, statutes of Manitoba, 1906, it will be seen that provision is made for changes in the revised voters' lists by a judge in the county court of the province to be nominated and appointed by an order in council whenever the territory comprised in an electoral division has been changed; so that, in making changes in these electorial divisions, Judge Meyers and Judge Ryan, in another district, were each acting within their jurisdiction and in accordance with the law.

At page 349 of 'Hansard' it will be seen that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie said, in reply to a question of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), as to whether these names had been struck off in open court 'no court, they simply did it on the side and it was all right.' I tell you that it was done in open court and that it was done by Judge Meyers acting within his jurisdiction according to chapter 23 of the statutes of Manitoba for 1906, to which I have already referred. Then, again, at page 349 of 'Hansard,' it will be seen that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie made this statement:

> They take from one electoral division and add to another, but they fail to make the necessary provision for the correction of the voters' lists.

This is as unfortunate as the statement that he made previously that these names were 'not struck off in open court but simply on the side and it was all right,' because provision had, as I have already pointed out, been made by subsection 4 of section 7, chapter 23, statutes of Manitoba, 1906, for dealing with the rearranging of the voters' lists in case territories are taken out of one electoral division and placed in another. I will read the subsection which is the authority under which Judge Meyers acted :

> In the event of territory comprised within or partly comprised within an electoral division being changed and included in another electoral division, or other electoral divisions, whether newly created or not, a judge of one of the county court divisions of the province to be nominated and appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, shall subdivide the names appearing on the list of electors, as so finally revised, according to the altered boundaries or limits, and make a complete list of electors for the electoral divisions affected, as aforesaid, and appropriately divide the names of electors and allot the territory between suitable polling subdivisions as shall, in the opinion of such judge, be just and equitable.

There was the justification for Judge Meyers' action.

In reference to the changes made in the boundaries of the electoral divisions of Kildonan and St. Andrew's, St. Boniface and Winnipeg North under the statutes, chapter 11, of 1907, Judge Meyers was appointed under order in council No. 11493, to arrange the lists under powers conferred by subsection 4 of section 7, chapter 23, of the statutes of 1906, and in striking off names from the voters' list of Kildonan and St. Andrew's and St. Boniface, all the names were struck off by Judge Meyers, and while they were not added to any other voters' lists, all these parties who were then qualified electors and whose names were struck from these voters' lists had an opportunity to become electors in the electoral division of Winnipeg North when the voters' lists of that electoral division were compiled and revised just prior to the general election of the province in March last, because they were then within Winnipeg North and no possible injustice was done to any bona fide voter by having his name struck off either of these lists as by the provision of chapter 11 of the statutes of 1907 they ceased to be electors of either Kildonan and St. Andrew's or St. Boniface and, by the operation of that Act, became entitled to be registered as electors of the electoral division of Winnipeg North.

There is another charge made by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, as reported on page 349 of 'Hansard,' in reference to an Act passed by the legislature of the province of Manitoba and known as chapter 13 of the statutes of 1907, whereby the names of seven persons were added to the voters' lists of that electoral division. That is the Balsam Bay division which I have already dealt with. At page 2128 of 'Hansard' the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) made the remark that the revisions that are taking place are only little things, that they do not amount to much. I have here the result of the last revision that took place and here is a book containing the revised list almost as large as the original list and yet the hon. member calls it a little revision. Hundreds of names have been added to the list. The hon. member made this statement :

> The little things that have occurred since then have been merely revisions, and notice is now given in this proclamation that it is not necessary for those on the list to appear at the court of registration. It is simply necessary to revise the list.

It was he and his own political friends in Manitoba who objected to the hardship of compelling the old residents of the province to come forward and register after they had once registered. They claimed that all that was necessary was that in case of death or removal their names should be struck off. These little revisions that he speaks of are the same kind of revisions which this Act is supposed to perpetuate. What are they going to do ?—take this very same list and in the province of Manitoba and revise it by their own Dominion officials. They are going to make a complete list, they are going to adopt the provincial lists, with what little revision they can do after the issue of the writ. But these are the very same methods that they condemn as being unwarranted. I tell the Prime Minister that there would not have been the slightest objection to the manner in which the last elections in Manitoba were conducted had the law been observed. I tell the Prime Minister candidly that if he wants to prevent a recurrence of the carelessness of transferring names, and if he wants to prevent the disfranchisement of electors by means of transferring where there is overlapping, the only thing he has to do is to adopt the provision of the provincial Act and employ a county court judge to do that dividing. That will get over every complaint that has been made and it will obviate the necessity of the thin red line. Let the county court judge do the transferring where there is overlapping, let him appoint each one of these separated places as a separate polling division in each Dominion constituency, let the judge name a separate polling division as the provincial Act enacts, let him do the dividing of the lists and there will not be a single complaint from Grit or Tory in the province of Manitoba.

Mr. BERGERON. And they are all Liberal judges.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The government need have no fear of the judges because they are all appointees of the Dominion government. If the Prime Minister acts on my suggestion which is a fair one, it will do away with the necessity of introducing such a Bill as this which perpetrates a rank injustice on the people of the west.

Mr. ALCORN. And the voters could be notified of where they are to vote.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Yes, and at the same time the people could be notified and know at what poll they should vote. The Minister of Justice told us the other day :

> We are not only adopting the provincial lists in their entirety as the basis upon which revision and appeal takes place but in addition we follow completely the provincial method of preparing and revising the lists.

But this method has been condemned by the hon. gentlemen opposite and yet the Minister of Justice says they are going to follow completely the provisions of the provincial law and to adopt the provincial lists in their entirety.

> And the lists are made in accordance with whatever laws the provinces choose to enact for their own purpose, as was the intention when the statute of 1908 was passed. That is an outline of the first clause of this Bill.

And yet hon. gentlemen opposite get up and denounce the present method of compiling the present lists in Manitoba, and their own minister says he will adopt these lists in their entirety in order to have a revision. But the whole object and the whole motive behind the Bill is to have the preparation of the lists pass into the hands of partisan officials of this government. That is the whole secret of the Bill and from our experience of the past we know just exactly how much fairness we can expect from those gentlemen in the preparation and revision of the lists.

I shall not discuss the provisions of the Bill as it affects other provinces, but as was justly pointed out so far as it relates to the unorganized districts of Ontario and Quebec it would work out in practice that all the navvies working on the Grand Trunk Pacific, who are under the influence of the contractors who are in turn under the influence of the government, would be placed upon the list and would be polled holus bolus in favour of the Liberal candidates. At any rate that is the object and intention of the Bill. The hon. member of Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) stated that there was an educational test in Manitoba which necessitated the voter being able to read the Manitoba Act in one of several languages, and he told us that was designed to disfranchise certain foreigners. But, at the same time he told us there was a clause in the Dominion Act by which they were going to vote the Galicians and, he said : I am going to poll the Gallician vote. He spoke about them as if he was herding a lot of cattle ; he told us that he was going to poll the Galician vote. Yes, that is the way they did it in my own constituency. They had their homestead inspector, they had their interpreters, they had a Mounted Policeman all the way from Regina standing at the door with his side arms, and we know what influence that had on Galicians who were practically serfs in their native country. We had them standing there threatening them that they would have to serve in the army if they voted Conservative and that they would have their homesteads taken from them. The Galician interpreter was arrested with $600 in $2 bills in his pockets starting out to influence the voters on Sunday morning and he and the $600 were tied up during election week. The member for Winnipeg told us that he was going to poll the Galicians, they are not going to have much to say in it themselves, but he is going to vote them just like so many cattle. Now, this provision for voting the employees on the Transcontinental railroad is quite apparent, and although it is only a blind to put it in this Bill I am glad in one way it is associated with this outrage on the province of Manitoba. We have had an overture made to drop the unorganized territories in Ontario and Quebec and to drop British Columbia from the Bill, but the object is to get at Manitoba. They simply associate the other provinces with us in the Bill so as not to make it appear so transparent, but the overture made shows exactly the animus by which they are influenced.

I throw out a warning to the Prime Minister. I tell him that he has no idea of the feeling that has been raised in the west by the introduction of this Bill. I was surprised on a recent visit to my province to find no Liberals justifying the Bill, while every Conservative condemned it. The fair minded Liberals will not stand for it, and I tell the Prime Minister he is being misled. if he believes what his supporters have told him that there is any outcry in Manitoba against the method of preparing the provincial lists under the present provincial law, he will find many honest Liberals in that province to tell him otherwise. Why was it that the Liberal candidates throughout the last provincial campaign had scarcely a word said as to the method of preparing the voters' lists ? I never heard the thing discussed in the four constituencies I had the privilege of speaking in. The Prime Minister has no idea of the bitter feeling that has been engendered in Manitoba by this Bill, and it will not redound to his reputation for fairness as a statesman to force upon an unwilling province an Act of this most objectionable character. At the worst it will invite retaliation. I am not going to say that the provincial government will retaliate, but I do know that when the provincial government came into power and when Hugh John Macdonald wiped out that Greenway Election Act which was described by Mr. James Fisher, an independent Liberal, as a monstrosity of monstrosities, there were a great many in the province of Manitoba who thought it was a mistake to repeal the Greenway law for they claimed it should be retained so as to give the Liberals a dose of their own medicine and let them know what it was to run an election under such an Act. If this Bill is forced upon an unwilling opposition in this House there may be a temptation to retaliate, and if so the last state of the Liberals in that province will be worse than the first, for to-day they are disunited, disintegrated, unable, to secure a seat for their outside leader, and with their inside leader endorsing the voters' lists as at present prepared in the province of Manitoba.

Without any investigation this Act has been introduced. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has made a challenge. I would like to see that challenge accepted. If they are going to force on Manitoba the making of voters' lists by Dominion officials, why should that not be done in other provinces if it can be established that other provinces have voters' lists and Franchise Acts far more unfair to political opponents than those in Manitoba? We have never had any investigation into this question, and the leader of the opposition has stated that if an opportunity is afforded he will bring forward two voters disfranchised in Nova Scotia by means of the operation of the Franchise Act there to one in Manitoba. This being the case, why should we be forced to accept such a Bill as this without any investigation? It is unjust and unfair and as a Manitoban I protest. I go still further. I do not wish to use words that may be interpreted as a threat, I do not desire them to be interpreted in that way, but I say, as has been said by other hon. members, that the opposition would be justified in refusing a dollar of supplies to carry on this government until that obnoxious measure is withdrawn. The First Minister knows the constitutional privileges which an opposition may utilize to fight for what they consider their rights. He has occupied that position in days gone by. He objected to the Franchise Act of 1885 with all the resources on which he could call, and I say it is impossible for an opposition here to calmly submit. There is a limit to the forbearance and we would be justified in refusing supplies until that Bill is modified to the extent of having the obnoxious provision relating to Manitoba and British Columbia withdrawn. There has been no complaint by any members from British Columbia as to the voters' lists there. The clauses which relate to the unorganized districts of Ontario and Quebec fall within the same category. I, therefore, feel in duty bound to move the following amendment:

Mr. W. J. ROCHE.

That all the words after the word 'that' in the proposed motion be omitted, and the following substituted instead thereof:

This House affirms that the Dominion Elections Act should be effectively amended during the present session in order to prevent corrupt practices and ensure honest elections, but that the discrimination against the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia created by the first section of the proposed Bill is not founded upon any inquiry, evidence, report or sufficient information, is a radical departure from the principle of acceptance of provincial voters' lists and is invidious and unjustifiable.

Mr. JOHN CRAWFORD (Portage la Prairie). Mr. Speaker, the closing remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat are almost sufficient, without any other reason, to make every honest Liberal and possibly every honest citizen of this country seriously consider the situation. The closing remarks of the hon. gentleman's speech were practically a hold-up for this House and a challenge for the Liberals of this country. In fact, his entire speech was along the line of trying to prove that the Conservatives were more honest than the Liberals; that idea underlay his whole argument. I shall not follow his remarks in detail, but I would say to the Prime Minister that he need not be the least alarmed as to the feeling in Manitoba towards this legislation. I can assure the Prime Minister that this legislation has the warmest kind of support from the majority of the people of Manitoba.

I shall refer to some of the opening remarks of my hon. friend and leave it to the House to judge whether we may accept any part of them as being in keeping with the facts. He referred to certain work that was being done in connection with registration in Manitoba at the present time; he tried to make out that fair and liberal treatment was meted out to the people there with the exception of one or two cases. But in reading the order in council in regard to the situation and the time given for work in connection with the revision of the list, he did not keep in touch with the facts. In speaking of Beautiful Plains he tried to read from this order in council that there were four clear days between the closing of the registration and the revision, while there were only three. In the Gladstone division he claimed there were twelve clear days, while there were only eight. If the rest of his statements are no nearer the truth than that, the House will not put very much credence in what he says.

Mr. STAPLES. Will you be satisfied that your grievance is remedied if the time is extended in the particular places you have in mind?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I shall be better satisfied than I am to-day but not completely satisfied, because I am convinced that if this agitation were not on here to-day, if this legislation were not before the House, I would not be getting a promise of that kind.

Mr. STAPLES. Will the hon. gentleman allow me? Who fixes the dates for the courts of revision?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Lieutenant Governor in Council—the political machine of the province of Manitoba. It is not the judges, as our Tory friends throughout the country would lead the people to believe. The judges have no control over the courts of revision as to fixing dates.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The hon. member for Marquette said it was the judges.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There were only eight clear days in Gladstone and three in Beautiful Plains.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The last date for the court of registration in Gladstone is May 28, and the court of revision 9th June. Can you make eight days out of that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will read it and show the hon. gentleman he is not correct.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I am quoting from the 'Gazette.'

Mr. CRAWFORD. June 1, for the court of revision in the electoral division of Gladstone; in the town hall of Gladstone on June 9. In all eight clear days. The hon. gentleman said to-night there were twelve days.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). In justice to myself let me point out that the latest court of registration is usually that at the foot of the list. The last notice of the registration clerk at the foot of the list is usually the last court of revision, and in this case it was set at the 28th May. But I notice that above there was a court of revision advertised for June 1, which I overlooked. I took the notice at the foot of the list as being the last court.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. You will have to revise the rest of your speech.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In connection with the proposed legislation I do not think there is any better evidence this House can have for the securing of something along this line than the fact that throughout the country, for the last four years, there have been hurled at the Liberal party statements of the most extravagant kind imaginable as to what they did in the elections of 1904. The discussion here up to the present has gone to prove that we have an undesirable condition of affairs in connection with the conduct of the elections in Manitoba and that there is need for some remedy. I have spoken on this question every session since the election of 1904 and have taken the position that the conditions surrounding the running of elections in the province of Manitoba are such that we ought not to tolerate. A great part of the long speech we have just heard was spent on a comparison between the Greenway legislation and that of the Roblin government, trying to prove that the latter was better than the former. But so far as we on this side are concerned, that is not an issue because in this Bill we adopt the legislation of Manitoba. And while I do not approve of the Manitoba law in its entirety and propose to show where I take exception to it, the greatest trouble we have in that province lies in the administration of the law. The provincial government have taken full control of the administration of the law. No official or judge has anything to say as to how that law shall be administered. The full control is taken by the executive council.

Mr. LANCASTER. Do not the judges revise the lists?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Only on the direction of the executive council and only during the hours fixed by the executive council. Let me give you an idea how that works out. In the Beautiful Plains division where I live, the necessary time is not provided to make a proper revision of the list. The time allowed by the executive council of Manitoba to revise the list is five hours in a day from 1 to 6 o'clock p.m. Only during those hours can the judge act in connection with the revision of the lists. Is that fair? The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) complained bitterly of the conditions under the Greenway Act and he referred to Beautiful Plains, where he said the list was stuffed to the extent of 107 names. But what was the condition last year? There were almost 600 names to be adjusted in connection with that list in that same division last year. We succeeded in striking off 319 names and adding 184. How does that compare as against a list stuffed with 107 names? And how did we get this adjustment? Was it by law? Not at all. We had to meet our Tory opposition independent of the courts, and only at the will of our opposition friends did we succeed in getting any of those names off. If we had gone into the courts and argued, we would not have got 10 off. And after getting those few adjusted in that amicable way, there were 75 or 100 more that should have gone off but on which we could not agree. That is the kind of administration we are getting in Manitoba. The condition is not endurable and does not compare in any way with the conditions under the Greenway legislation of some years ago which is so condemned by our Tory friends.

In connection with this whole matter, I am satisfied that the people are tired of the situation. I am satisfied that the people, particularly in the province of Manitoba, are tired of hearing about those 9,000 names which were disfranchised by the red line. They are tired of hearing about what was done, or supposed to be done, in the way of irregularities in 1904. I know that the Liberals of Manitoba are convinced that the law for running Dominion elections is bad and they want to have better arrangements. I am satisfied that our Tory friends came to the conclusion that the situation is not right, as proven by the fact that, for three or four years, they have had charges standing against Dominion officials and they have spent thousands and thousands of dollars of our money trying to secure convictions and finally quit the job without succeeding. They must have come to the conclusion that the situation is bad and that there should be some remedy for it. I think that is the conviction of the honest-minded people of this country generally. Now, if the law is in such a shape that wrongs of that kind can be committed, I think it is up to this government to provide such legislation as will prevent such wrongs in the future. On the other hand, there should be some law that would provide for the protection of these officers. If these acts were legal acts, acts that it was proper for these officials to do, I think this country should give them protection ; something should be done for these people who have been persecuted and hounded for the last four or five years. I take the position that no wrongs were done, but that, in adjusting the lists, of 1904 as they did, the returning officers did what they had a right to do. And what I take exception to here as mentioned by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) that when some of our Tory friends did the same things of which complaint is made against Liberals, they were not prosecuted by the authorities of the province ; they were allowed to go scot free while the Liberals were hounded. I think we want to get something that will get us away from this whole trouble and agitation.

Mr. LANCASTER. Before the hon. gentleman leaves that point, will he allow me to ask him a question ? He belongs to Manitoba, and I want to understand the situation as a citizen of the Dominion. I think he said there was a hardship in these judges not having time to revise the lists. Will he tell me of any case in which a judge refused to adjourn a court to another day when he was not through with this work ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I can tell him that Mr. Heap——

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not want to know about him.

Mr. CRAWFORD. He was sitting as a judge and had the powers of a judge so far as his work was concerned——

Mr. CRAWFORD.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not care about Leach. There are judges in Manitoba, and the hon. gentleman knows what a judge is. And these judges are reputable men.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am speaking of Mr. Heap.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like the hon. gentleman, if he will, to answer my question. I am talking about the judges of the province of Manitoba. He said that there is not time for them to do their work. I ask him, can he give an occasion where any of these judges who did the revising refused to adjourn a court when he was not through with the work of revising ? If he cannot tell me that, I would like him to say so.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The order in council is imperative, and where a judge adjourns his court for the purpose of placing men on the list who were not on, the attorney general of the province took the position that it was an illegal act and he took those names off the list—at least approved of the taking the names off.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the hon. gentleman kindly tell me what was the name of the judge when it did happen ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Heap was the revising officer. Now, in connection with the working out of the situation in Manitoba in the last election, I take the position that the returning officers did their work and did it as they had a right to do. But, at the same time, I must say that they were put in a position which they should not be asked to occupy. Section 24 of the Dominion Elections Act provides :

> The polling divisions shall, except as herein otherwise provided, be those established by or under the laws of the province for the purpose of provincial elections within the territory comprised in the electoral district for which the election is held.

Now, in the situation as it existed in 1904, in Manitoba, there were no polling divisions established by law.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The judge in the court of appeals said there were.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I challenge any hon. gentlemen opposite to show and define any polling division established in the province of Manitoba by law.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would accept the challenge and say I defeat the hon. gentleman by quoting the fact that the court of appeal of the province of Manitoba said that there were—and that is pretty good authority.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Chief Justice Howell, of the court of appeal of Manitoba, before the special committee two years ago, made the statement made by the hon. member of Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford).

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). And he was overruled by his colleagues.

Mr. LANCASTER. His judgment was appealed from and overruled, and he——

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. He was not overruled at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. He was overruled by the full court, and my hon. and learned friend (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) ought to know that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I make that statement and I have yet to find out that any poll was so established. I have read the evidence taken before the committee, and even if you take the statement made by the hon. member for Marquette, you will see that they do not say there was a poll established.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Certainly they do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No, they say that if it did exist the officer had a right to do so and so.

Mr. LANCASTER. They said it did not exist.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No, they did not. The position in which the returning officers were placed when they were called on to carry out the election in the province of Manitoba was this: I have here before me the lists of Manitoba, nearly all of them, and you can go over these lists from one end to the other and there is not a polling division mentioned throughout the lot—they are all registration divisions, and there is no evidence anywhere that the returning officer could show in any shape or form that there existed a polling division anywhere in the province of Manitoba. That being the case, I take the position that the returning officer did perfectly right in creating his own polls as he saw fit. And that was done. Some of these lists were less suitable for polling divisions than others. Let me cite a case from my own division in which there was no formal allegation that there was any disfranchising by the 'Thin Red Line' notwithstanding Hon. Robert Rogers, who has been quoted here to-night, said that there were 1,395. I will cite one instance in my own experience. I have possibly one of the most favourable divisions for establishing polling places in the province of Manitoba. Here are two townships and a half in the provincial constituency. At one end there is a town largely Grit, at the other end there is a town that is largely Tory. These are all put into one poll, and the Grits are forced to go from their town twelve miles to the other town to vote. I think the returning officer under those conditions would have the right to divide that poll and make it convenient for the voters. I think the poll is numbered 44. Under such conditions I think the returning officer was justified in doing everything he did do, and he should not have been subjected to prosecution. The hon. member for Marquette said to-night that no one had been prosecuted for making a division where there was an overlapping of polls. Now, I have here a map showing a case where there is an overlapping of one polling division into the counties of Lisgar, Macdonald and Souris. I have here the federal electoral list. The division is called the provincial electoral district of Mountain, registration district No. 5; 41 names apply to Souris, 6 to Lisgar and the balance to Macdonald. Yesterday with the clerk of the Crown in Chancery I checked over this list with the lists that were used at the election by the deputy returning officers in those three polls, and I find that every name was on these lists that were used in that election. But what happened? The returning officer was arrested and prosecuted for dividing that list to suit the circumstances of the case. Mr. Leach, the organizer, was also arrested in connection with the same matter. I am satisfied that so far as the polling divisions are concerned the returning officers were justified in what they did. I have here the lists that are supplied to the returning officers for the electoral division of Portage la Prairie. On those lists there are about 13,000 names, and of those 13,000 names, 4,244 do not belong to the division of Portage la Prairie, and these of course can be put to one side. Then we have in round figures 7,000 names that belong wholly within the territory of the division. Then we have of those that lie partly within the division and partly outside the division names to the number of 1,494, of which 556 are within the bounds of the federal division of Portage la Prairie and 938 outside. Now, here is where the trouble comes in. There are 11 polls that overlap, as shown on a map that I will lay on the table of the House. In poll No. 8 in Beautiful Plains there are 49 names that belong to Dauphin and 145 that belong to Portage la Prairie. In the Gladstone district there are two polls overlapping, in one of which 21 belong to Dauphin and 21 to Portage la Prairie; in the other poll, 15 belong to Dauphin and 38 to Portage la Prairie. In Lakeside there are 90 votes in Macdonald, in poll No. 4, and only 1 in Portage la Prairie. To get a man on list No. 4 for that district you would have either to strike off 90 names and leave the one on, or attach it to some other poll. In poll 3 there are 112 names in Portage la Prairie and 123 in Macdonald. In the original division of Portage la Prairie that overlaps, there are 93 votes in Portage la Prairie and 63 in Macdonald. In Cypress there is a poll overlapping which has 46 names in Portage la Prairie and 164 outside. In South Brandon there are two polls that overlap. In one poll there are 63 in Brandon and 3 in Portage la Prairie; in the other there are 34 in Brandon and 56 in Portage la Prairie. In Norfolk there are two polls that overlap. In one there are 86 in Brandon and 17 in Portage la Prairie; in the other poll there are 111 in Brandon and 24 in Portage la Prairie. Out of 556 names there are 123 on these lists in polls that overlap of persons who have not fixed residence, and you cannot tell whether they belong to Portage la Prairie or to Dauphin by looking at the lists.

There is no judge or returning officer who can in any way locate and distribute these names unless he goes to the place and takes evidence. I am surprised that in so far as this particular division is concerned we got off with as little trouble as we had in that election and the reason that things worked out as smoothly in regard to the matter as they did was that all those who were on these lists that had not the proper qualification were left in Portage la Prairie whether they belonged there or not. In regard to the situation and how it works out you will find that in the division of Portage la Prairie there are parts of seven local provincial constituencies and not one whole one. If you want to see a gerrymander, or see a division made to suit political purposes, just look at the constituencies which form part of my division. They run in all kinds of shapes. In every one of them there is more or less trouble in adjusting matters. I took the trouble to go into the situation in so far as the polling subdivisions were concerned, and the working out of things by the returning officer in the Portage la Prairie federal division in the last election. I found that in some of the polling subdivisions for provincial purposes there was only an average of 100·5, but, as arranged for federal purposes there were 114 people to each poll, and it was a much more convenient arrangement. Everybody was conveniently provided for and nobody had more than six or eight miles to travel to cast his ballot. In connection with the working out of the election law in the province of Manitoba, let me say that our political opponents take the position that at no time has there been any particular exception taken to the preparation and revision of the voters' lists. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) is pleased to quote as frequently as possible the position which the Hon. Mr. Meikle took with regard to this election law that we have in Manitoba. The way that the hon. gentleman makes the statement misrepresents the facts and misleads the House from the fact that the law that Mr. Meikle referred to has no more semblance to the law that is in existence to-day than a black cat has to a white one. The law that Mr. Meikle referred to was the first law passed by the present government when it came into office in 1900 or 1901. That law Mr. Meikle, I think, approved of, and I am prepared to-night to say that the provisions of that law met my views more completely than any other law that I know of with reference to the preparation of the voters' lists. It was practically independent of any political or partisan manipulation; it was free from it altogether. But, that did not suit our Tory friends. They only had one registration under it, that registration was practically fair to all parties, but they could not stand for it and at the very next sitting of the legislature they wiped the whole thing off the statute-book. From section 21 to section 99 of the Act was repealed, entirely doing away with the situation which then existed and placing the preparation of the voters' lists completely in the hands of the executive council of the province, making it purely political and purely under the manipulation of the political machine in power, which was a much worse condition than existed under the legislation of the Greenway government which they declared to be so iniquitous. What is the difference between the two laws? We find that in regard to the preparation of the lists, as provided for by the Greenway legislation, in so far as the appointing of registration clerks is concerned, the two laws were practically the same. The executive had authority to name the registration clerks and provide for the working out of the registration. There was ample time given, fixed by statute, far more than was given by the present order in council, for the registering of the votes by the registration clerk. Then after the registration clerk did his work the statute fixed a time for the court of revision, not a time for the sitting of the court of revision, but a time in which the court of revision could not sit. The Act provided that when the work of the registration clerk was finished the court of revision could not take place within six weeks. Six weeks had to elapse from the compilation of the list by the registration clerk before the court of revision could be held. Then, what followed? As soon as the registration clerk had finished his work he had to get a complete list of the electors printed as prepared by him. Then, before the court of revision could be held these lists had to be posted up in many places throughout the country, in the school-houses and post offices and they also had to be sent to many officials. Section 22 of the Election Act of 1891 provided that a copy of the list had to be posted up in the following places in the electoral division:

(a) Every county court office;
(b) Every post office;
(c) Every public school house;
(d) Every municipal hall or office;

And shall mail to the following persons each fifteen copies thereof:

(a) The member for the legislative assembly for the electoral division last elected;

(b) The defeated candidate for the electoral division at the last election;

And one copy to each mayor, reeve, councillor and alderman in the electoral division.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. That was before the revision.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That was before the revision. In connection with that law the people had ample time to examine the lists to see whether their names were on, or what names were left off and then there was a reasonable time allowed to appeal, a sufficient time granted to give the people every opportunity to have a complete and fair list. But, what are the conditions of this legislation that hon. gentlemen say is all right and should not be interfered with at the present time? There is no time fixed by statute as to how long a time shall intervene between the registration and the sitting of the court of revision. This whole power is vested in the executive council and they can manipulate it according to their own sweet will. Here to-day in my own district, at my own home, where I live, in Beautiful Plains, the full time allowed for compiling and revising the whole list, where there are hundreds of names changed, is only sixteen days. In Gladstone, which is 100 miles long, the time allowed is only seventeen days. There is no comparison at all as to how the system is worked out under the Acts of Greenway and Roblin and his associates. We have in this proposed legislation practically decided to accept the situation so far as the law of the province is concerned and we can give sufficient and reasonable time for that work. I would say, however, that it would please me much if we could adopt the Act of 1902 of the Roblin government which places in the hands of the judges complete control of making the voters' lists, including the appointment of registration clerks. That is the kind of legislation I would like to see so far as the preparation of the voters' lists is concerned

Mr. LANCASTER. That is not the legislation before the House.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are you voting for or against the legislation before the House?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The legislation of 1902, to which I have referred, would please me much better than any other proposed. We have got to have something of this kind and the present Bill will meet the requirements if we cannot get anything better.

I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier the House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, May 8, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

REPORTS PRESENTED.

Report of the Board of Civil Service Examiners for year ending 31st December, 1907.—Hon. Mr. Fisher.

List of shareholders of chartered banks of the Dominion of Canada as of December 31, 1907.—Hon. Mr. Fisher.

SCHOOL LANDS.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 163) to authorize the exchange of certain school lands for other Dominion lands.

Mr. FOSTER. What does this Bill propose to do?

Mr. OLIVER. In one case it proposes to exchange a section of school lands to complete the area which was agreed upon in connection with an irrigation proposition, the irrigation works having been completed and it being desirable that they should go into operation.

In the other case the Bill provides to satisfy the claim of a settler who has been on the land for about eighteen years.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SS. 'MONTCALM' IN COLLISION.

Mr. J. D. REID. Before the orders of the day are called, I direct the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the following item which appears in the Montreal 'Gazette':—

> Rammed the 'Montcalm'—Steamship Milwaukee' punched a hole in the side of the ice-breaker.

Quebec, May 7.—(Special).—A collision occurred in the harbour to-night, shortly before 10 o'clock, between the Canadian Pacific Railway steamer 'Milwaukee' and the government steamer 'Montcalm,' and, as a result, the latter is badly damaged on the starboard side in line with the foremast. The 'Milwaukee' is apparently undamaged and proceeded to Montreal. The rent in the 'Montcalm's' side is about eight feet wide at the top and the vessel is making water.

Both steamers came into port together, and while the 'Milwaukee' slowed up to change pilots, the 'Montcalm' passed up and turned about a mile up the river, so as to go into Allan's wharf, as the 'Aranmore' was at the King's wharf. As she was reaching that wharf the 'Milwaukee' came along, and the skipper of the 'Montcalm' gave three signals for full speed astern, which was responded to by the 'Milwaukee,' but the latter struck the 'Montcalm' almost immediately.

The 'Montcalm' was on her first trip after spending the winter in dry dock, where she was required, and will have to be docked again. She is now moored in Customs House pond.

I have since heard that the 'Montcalm' has sunk. In what position is the matter?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I have not seen the statement which my hon. friend has read and I am unable to say whether everything contained in it is accurate. A report reached the department this morning that there was a collision between the 'Milwaukee' and the 'Montcalm,' and so far it has not been ascertained which was in fault. When the report reached the department I gave instructions that a preliminary inquiry should be held to-night or to-morrow morning by the wreck commissioner, and if he deemed it necesary to hold a formal investigation that it should be held immediately.

Mr. J. D. REID. Have you heard that the 'Montcalm' has sunk?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not received that information.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister did not say whether the damage was serious or not.

Mr. BRODEUR. The damage seems to be rather serious because the statement read by my hon. friend says that the rent in the 'Montcalm's' side is eight feet, and that apparently is corroborated by the statement which has reached the department.

STANSTEAD ELECTION PAPERS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). Has the government any information as to the destruction of the papers connected with the Stanstead by-election of January, 1908. I have a telegram informing me that when the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was summoned to produce the election papers in order to prove the holding of the election and the status of the petitioners, he declared on oath that the papers in the box labelled 'By-election of Stanstead, January 19, 1908,' were the papers of the general election of 1904, and that apparently the papers of the by-election had been destroyed. Has the government information on the subject?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes. This matter was called to my attention a week ago last Friday by Mr. Foley, the present Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Mr. Lamothe, the former Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, died at the end of March and Mr. Foley, the assistant clerk, was appointed to the vacancy about the 20th of April. About a week afterwards he came to my office and informed me that he had been summoned as a witness to appear in the Stanstead election case at Sherbrooke and that he could not find the papers connected with the election. He was accompanied by Mr. Chadwick, a clerk in the Privy Council, who had been transferred and had been acting as assistant to Mr. Lamonthe in his office. I may say that the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is in this building and Mr. Foley was nominally assistant clerk of the Crown in Chancery, but he had his office in the Privy Council Department and acted only when the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was absent. We appointed Mr. Foley to the office in accordance with the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, which I think will commend itself to the judgment of the House and which certainly commended itself to our judgment. We transferred the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery from the Privy Council to the staff of the House of Commons. When Mr. Foley informed me he could not find the papers I told him the only thing to do was to make further search and if he could not find them to attend the court and state the particulars. I advised him at the same time to report to Mr. Speaker the fact that he could not find these papers. I may say, in justice to Mr. Lamothe, that all those who knew him in his lifetime will bear testimony that he was a most honourable, conscientious and painstaking officer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I entirely concur in what the Prime Minister has said about Mr. Lamothe.

THE DEPUTY MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to repeat the question which I asked yesterday respecting the resignation or the supposed resignation of the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR. The best way to answer the question which my hon. friend put yesterday is to read a letter from Colonel Gourdeau, which is as follows:

Department of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, Canada, March 31, 1908.

Dear Mr. Brodeur,—I have worried every moment since the publication of the Civil Service Commissioners' Report containing accusations against the officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, which I feel are both unjust and untrue. I am convinced that a full and complete investigation will establish this and will clear the public mind of all the insinuations and reflections that have been made against them. As my presence in the department as deputy head might in some quarters be considered as prejudicial to the fullest inquiry, I beg to renew for the third time, my application for six months' leave of absence preparatory to superannuation and which you have so loyally hitherto refused to entertain under similar circumstances. I court the most rigid examination of all the department's transactions so far as I am concerned and by placing myself in your hands I hope to assist you in that regard. Again thanking you for the many kindnesses which you have shown me as Minister of Marine and Fisheries,

Believe me, yours very faithfully,
(Sgd.) F. GOURDEAU.

Hon. L. P. Brodeur,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

The letter explains itself.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—HON. W. S. FIELDING.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING. My attention has been called to a news report in the 'Citizen' of this morning under this heading: 'Want Route Changed for Financial Reasons'—'Toronto World' says Hon. W. S. Fielding called to New York to Discuss Obstacles in Selling of Bonds.' I do not know whether the House will regard the matter as of sufficient gravity to require formal notice to be taken of it. However, to prevent misunderstanding, let me say that the report has not a shadow of foundation. I went to New York on purely personal business, and had no negotiations with reference to the bonds of the Transcontinental Railway or any other financial matter whatever. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has called my attention to another point. Partly associated with this is a question regarding a change of route.

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose this is with the leave of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. With the leave of the House. I may say that there have been no negotiations with the government respecting any change of route, and no negotiations of any kind as to the matters referred to in this report.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Aylesworth for the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act and the proposed amendment of Mr. Roche (Marquette) thereto.

Mr. JOHN CRAWFORD (Portage la Prairie). Mr. Speaker, when I moved the adjournment of the debate last night, I was referring to the election law which was formerly in operation in the province of Manitoba. I stated that it was nearer to my idea of what an election law should be than possibly any other law that had ever before been on the statute-books of this country. I made that statement because the law at that time was entirely free from partisan control or manipulation. That is the law that was in operation when the lists were revised in 1903, and that was the law that our friends opposite, particularly those from the province of Manitoba, paraded before this House and this country as being a good and proper law. Under that law certain Liberal officials were appointed in connection with the preparation of the voters' lists. The law to-day is entirely different. Our Conservative friends who are in control of affairs in the province of Manitoba were not prepared to stand by that fair and honest and non-partisan preparation of the voters' lists. They only stood for it in one revision; that was for the list referred to by the Hon. Mr. Mickle as the cleanest list ever made in the province of Manitoba. The preparation of that list was entirely under the judges. and was free from any manipulationn by political partisans. I will read from the official 'Gazette' of the province of Manitoba a notice to show that the board of judges had entire control of the situation:

> Public notice is hereby given that the board of registration constituted to make and revise a new list of electors for the several electoral divisions of the province, has selected D. M. Walker, county court judge as chairman, and for the purposes of registration of electors, divided the several electoral divisions into registration districts, naming a registration clerk for each district. Following are the boundaries and limits of the several registration districts, with the name and post office address of the registration clerk.

That is followed by a proclamation in which practically the same words are used:

> Notice is hereby given that the board of registration constituted to make and revise a uew list of electors for the several electoral divisions of the province have made the following additions, alterations and corrections in the boundaries and limits of certain of the registration districts and in the list of registration clerks.

Further on, there is this notice with regard to the appointment of revising barristers to revise the list:

> Whereas, it has been determined to make and revise a new list of electors in and for the several electoral divisions of the province pursuant to the provisions of 'The Manitoba Elections Act.'
> And, whereas, pursuant to the provisions of sections 70 and 71 of the said Act, the chairman of the board of registration has intimated to the provincial secretary the appointment of revising officers for the several electoral divisions.

That is the law about which our hon. friends are pleased to talk and say it is so fair and just. They have tried to mislead the people by these statements, have tried to make them believe that that law is under operation to-day and that the judges still have full control over the preparation and revision of the lists.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. No one ever tried to do any such thing as that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I beg your pardon, I have seen it in print and I have heard it repeated, not by my hon. friend it is true, but he is not the only man in this country and has not control of everything. What was done in regard to the preparation of voters' lists, what treatment was meted out to the people of Manitoba at that time by the judges who had control of the situation? I shall refer only to a couple of constituencies with which I am personally acquainted. I find that the judges then gave ample time for registration and revision. In the local division from which I come they established sixteen registration places appointing a registration clerk for each of these sixteen registration places. These registration clerks had to receive applications there for one whole week, from Monday morning May 25, until Saturday night May 30, and the hours were from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m., giving ample time for the people to register. They were not confined to a couple of hours, as has been the case in the last few years, or to half a day, but they were allowed six days and sixteen registration places in my constituency. Contrast this with the one day afforded by the political partisans who now control the lists in Manitoba.

In Gladstone under the management of the judges there were fifteen registration places which were kept open for one full week from 9 a.m. till 10 p.m., daily. Only one day was appointed for the sitting of the court of revision, but there was no limit on the duration of the sittings by the order in council. It is true the judges did not confine themselves to any particular hour or hours, the time for registration was not limited by them and they could sit from day to day notwithstanding the fact that the attorney general took the position that they had no right to adjourn the court from day to day. The matter later came up in Winnipeg before the late Judge Killam, who decided that the judges had the right to adjourn their courts from time to time until they had finished their work. But the attorney general of the province took the position that they had not and disfranchised a number of people on that account, tearing from the votters' lists a certain number of electors who had registered that year.

I wish to make a comparison between the time allowed under the present law and under the previous law. Whereas in Gladstone in 1893, under the old arrangement we had sixteen registration places and six days for registration in 1893, in 1905, under political manipulation, we had only one day, one place and one registration clerk—and that clerk was only occupied in connection with the registration of voters for the whole territory from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., from 2.30 p.m. to 6 p.m., and from 7.30 p.m. to 9.30 p.m. Then the court of revision that was held following that registration allowed only five hours, from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., for revision. For the registration and the revision, the entire time allowed in connection with the compilation of the lists in that year was only twenty-two days. Under the law put in force by the Greenway government, which has been referred to in this House as an iniquitous law, it was provided that not less than seventy days should be allowed in connection with the registration and revision of the lists. Contrast that with the present system by which only twenty-two days are allowed. This year there was even a shorter time than that. In the division from which I come, the whole time allowed for registration and revision is sixteen days. The law now in force in Manitoba is entirely under the control of the executive council of that province, the judges have nothing to say in connection with the preparation of the lists, they have nothing to do except to take evidence as to whether or not a man is entitled to be on the list. This is entirely different from the idea of the election law which hon. gentlemen opposite seek to convey.

I might put this concisely in the form of question and answer. Who limits the time for registration? The executive council of Manitoba. Who decides that there should be, but one registration clerk and one booth in each constituency? The executive council of Manitoba. Who fixes the places for registration booths and the hours during which they are to be open? The executive council of Manitoba, the political machine. Who appoints the registration clerks who have very considerable discretionary powers The executive council of Manitoba. Who fixes the courts of revision allowing but for a single day or a part of a day or a number of days? Who fixes the time for the sittings of the court of revision and the duration of those sittings, who limits the hours during which the courts of revision can sit? The government of the province of Manitoba have full control over the courts of revision and everything else, in so far as registration and the revision of the voters' lists in the province of Manitoba are concerned. In fact the executive council of that province, the political machine, practically does everything in this matter and I do not hesitate to say that they manipulate and direct things to their own advantage. I have no hesitation in saying that because of the agitation that has been raised, because of the statements that are made in the press, because of the threatened hold-up of this government in this House the whole thing is done for one purpose and one only; they wish to continue every possible manipulation in connection with the preparation of the voters' lists in Manitoba. The government of Manitoba is not prepared to give to the people of that province the protection they are entitled to. We have not been getting that protection, and we are not getting it now. If they had wished to live up to the pledges they made before coming into power, they would have left on the statute book the law of 1903 when the clean voters' list was prepared. In this connection, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) was pleased to refer last night to the Hon. Charles Mickle and to a statement attributed to that gentleman that these were clean voters' lists. I wired to Mr. Mickle asking him what he had to say about the election law and the administering of the same, and this is his answer :

The Act better in 1903. New amendments have largely destroyed best features. Grievous complaints of unfair administration by government in many parts.

(Sgd.) C. J. MICKLE.

This is an entirely different showing of Hon. Mr. Mickle's opinion from that given by the hon. member for Marquette, last night. That hon. gentleman tried to lead the House and the country to believe that Mr. Mickle had a high opinion of the present law and its administration. The very contrary is the fact. What Mr. Mickle was talking about, when he said the list was a clean list and the best list ever prepared in Manitoba, was the list proposed in 1903 when everything was under the control and management of the judges and entirely free from party manipulation.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Mr. Mickle has been in the legislature since 1903. Has he ever made any complaint in that House of the present law ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have given Mr. Mickle's reply, and I think that is sufficient for the present. For the last few years we have had an agitation over the franchise and the compiling of the voters' lists in the province of Manitoba because the law and the administration of the law have not been what it ought to be. If there is one thing more than another that we should sacredly guard it is the citizens' right to vote. I am sure that my hon. friends opposite are honest enough to admit, in their quiet moments that it is up to us all to stand strongly against any manipulation of the people's franchise. But, owing to the fact that party lines are strictly drawn, party prejudices strong and the desire for party advantage great, many are prepared to do what they themselves cannot justify. We should take a broader view and try to make a law that will be just and fair to all.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Does this Bill do that ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. We have not in Manitoba to-day the conditions which, as I have just said, we ought to have, but we expect, if this Bill is passed, to have the privilege of creating these conditions. We have heard a great deal about the large number of people disfranchised in Manitoba in the last Dominion election. We had an exhibition here last night by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) that that hon. gentleman should be ashamed of—or, if not ashamed of his statements of last night, he should be ashamed of his position on the third of August, 1906. On that day, the hon. gentleman attended a banquet in his own district at which Hon. Robert Rogers made the statement that the Liberals had disfranchised 1,395 of the honest electors of Portage la Prairie. The hon. gentleman (Mr. W. J. Roche) sat there and allowed these statements to go unchallenged, to be published broadcast in the press, and last night we had his own statement that, so far as he knew everything was done right in Portage la Prairie. And it was. I defy him or any other man to show that even one man was disfranchised in Portage la Prairie.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Did Leach manipulate your lists as he did those of Provencher ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not saying anything about Leach ; I am talking about yourself. I cannot understand an hon. member of this House who takes the position now taken by the hon. gentleman for Marquette, sitting at a banquet in his own division and allowing such statements as I have quoted to go uncontradicted.

No, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) referred to statements made by the Montreal 'Gazette,' and there are one or two statements that I wish to quote from that newspaper myself. I must say I am disappointed in the 'Gazette.' I had looked upon it as being the most honest Conservative newspaper in Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is not saying very much.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, be that as it may, I can only say I am surprised that any newspaper of such standing would allow itself to be led into making statements that are not supported by any credible evidence. I have always felt that I could believe most of the statements in the columns of the Montreal 'Gazette,' but I find reiterated in those columns the same kind of statements as are published in far less reputable journals. I think the time has arrived when the minds of the people of Canada should be disabused of opinions which some people have sought to cultivate in them concerning the thin red line. I am satisfied that the people of this country have no idea of what the thin red line really meant. They do not know that instead of 9,399 of the honest electors of Manitoba being disfranchised, as stated by Hon. Robert Rogers, and repeated again and again in this country, there were not even 99—to say nothing about the odd 9,300. I cannot understand hon. gentlemen, members of any party, allowing their co-workers in that party to continue reiterating such statements, knowing all the time that they are false in every particular. The Montreal 'Gazette' repeats what many others repeated, and as it refers to my own division, I certainly think that the representative of the Montreal 'Gazette' here to-day should ask that paper to take back statements made in their editorial of a short time ago on that subject. I think it is only justice to themselves and justice to the people that they should do so. I find the 'Mail and Empire' practically in the same position, and I think they should do likewise. They pretend to be fair and honest, and to give honest expressions of opinion, they pretend to do it.

Mr. TALBOT. But they don't

Mr CRAWFORD. Well, if they don't, then I take it all back, and there is no use suggesting to them to act fairly. However, I hope there are some Tories in this country that are fair and reasonable people, but possibly we don't meet them, particularly amongst those who are engaged in active politics. Now to disabuse the minds of the people of a false impression, it might be well to repeat some facts in connection with the election of 1904, and I hope those papers that I have a little respect for will publish the figures that I am going to quote. The Hon. Robert Rogers, who is the mouthpiece of the Tory party in the province of Manitoba, said that the provincial constituency of Hamiota, in the Dominion constituency of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) said there were 777 Conservatives disfranchised by the red line. Now how does this figure out? In 1903 the judges controlled the lists, an election was run on that list, and 740 votes were polled for the Conservative party in that election. In 1907 the total vote polled for the Conservative candidate was 737, and he won. But the Hon. Robert Rogers makes a statement that in 1904 there were 777 Conservatives disfranchised by the red line in Hamiota, and the highest number they can count for themselves, either in the election of 1903 or in that of 1907, was 740. So we must have found by the red line a few more votes than they did. I think these figures should disabuse the minds of those who are inclined to be fair, of the impression sought to be conveyed by the Hon. Robert Rogers, the Minister of Public Works in the province of Manitoba. I think such exaggerated statements as he makes here should discredit him in the minds of the people of the whole country. Now take the provincial electoral division of Minnedosa, which is also in the constituency of Marquette. In the provincial election of 1903 the total Tory vote polled was 504; in the Dominion election there was polled for my hon. friend 521 votes, in the same territory. In the provincial election of 1907 there were polled 502. Still the Hon. Robert Rogers says that in 1904 we disfranchised 200 Conservative votes. But even with these 200 disfranchised, there were 521 polled, or 17 more than were ever polled before. I think this proves conclusively that the statements of the Hon. Robert Rogers are not in keeping with the facts. Now take the town of Hamiota. In 1903 there were 317 Conservative votes cast, and in 1904 there were 314 cast, only 3 less than in 1903. Now in 1907, you would think that on account of the Tory candidate having won, and on account of the increase in population, there would be many more votes polled, and we find the Conservative candidate winning in 1907. Everything was then under the control of the powers that be in Manitoba, and the hon. gentleman who so severely criticised the red line, only polled 317 votes. just 3 more than were polled by the Conservatives in 1904. Still the Hon. Robert Rogers makes the statement that in the town of Hamiota there were 147 Conservatives disfranchised. Now take the Crandall poll. In 1903, 199 votes were polled; in 1904, 203, 4 more Conservative votes polled at the Crandall poll when this red line was used, than there were in the previous year when no red line was used. Still the Hon. Robert Rogers makes the statement that there were 172 Conservative voters disfranchised at that time Take the district of Marquette. In 1903 there were 4,526 Conservative votes polled, and in the next year there were polled for the hon. member for Marquette 5,115, or 489 more Tory votes polled in 1904 than in 1903; notwithstanding the statement of the Hon. Robert Rogers that in that territory there were, 1,919 Conservative voters disfranchised. I think these figures prove conclusively that the statements of the Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works for the province of Manitoba, cannot be relied upon in any shape or form. I think the people of Canada who have been more or less disturbed in connection with this red line, feeling that wrong has been done, will hereafter discredit the statements of the Hon. Robert Rogers and will come to the conclusion that the Liberals are at least as honset, and perhaps a little more so, than our Conservative friends.

Now what do we find further? I have here a document prepared by our Conservative friends opposite in which they make use of the same startling statements. In this document they talk about the red line as one of the scandals that will be referred to in the coming Dominion elections. The heading is Between 9,000 and 10,000. Additional light is thrown upon this steal by the statement of the Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works, who has made an examination of the red line list, and declared that 9,399 electors were disfranchised by this process

He declares that 9,399 electors were disfranchised by this process. Well, the following is the record by constituencies. Marquette, 1,919. I think I have proved by the votes cast in Marquette at that time that statement is entirely false and untrue. Provencher, 568; Portage la Prairie, 1,395. There is positive evidence, admitted by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), that there was no truth in any shape, so far as Portage la Prairie is concerned, in that statement; and that being the case, every statement with regard to the red line by the politicians of Manitoba, backed up by Messrs. Roblin, Rogers and Campbell, fall to the ground entirely.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Will the hon. gentleman read that article all through? We would like to hear it all.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it would not be any harm. I will read a portion anyway. It is just a sample of the campaign stuff which our Conservative friends are distributing throughout the country, and I would like to warn the people of Canada of the nature of the statements being put out at this time to discredit the Liberals of this country—statements entirely false and untrue.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Would the hon. gentleman kindly read that portion of my speech, as contained in 'Hansard,' in which I sad that in Portage la Prairie there was no fraud in connection with the lists?

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the hon. gentleman likes he may read it himself.

Mr. W. J ROCHE I did not say that at all and I challenge the hon. gentleman to point that out in my speech.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In connection with this red line business and the possibility of the people continuing under the present situation, I may say that we have to get away from anything which will keep us in that condition of strife and discussion and of unfair dealings in connection with the preparation of the lists.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Show where it is unfair.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Where what is unfair?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The way we make up our voters' lists.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have shown that, under the present administration in Manitoba things are manipulated purely for political advantage, and that is what we want to get away from.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You make that assertion.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. But you have not proved it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have proved it to the satisfaction of myself and I think of many more in this country. To show that even at present we cannot afford to go on in the present situation, I have the voters' lists prepared last year and revised, and what is the situation with regard to one poll? Poll No. 13 in the local constituency of South Brandon, part of which is in the constituency of Brandon and part in the federal division of Brandon—in that poll there is a list of electors, and we have in the 1904 election 63 votes in the lists supplied the returning officer on the Brandon side and 3 on the Portage la Prairie side. In the lists prepared in 1907, we find in that poll 58 names only, one of which belonged to the division of Portage la Prairie and 57 to the division of Brandon.

The next matter I shall deal with in connection with the red line will be with regard to the committee which was appointed by this House and the statements made before that committee by Mr. Knott, who acted on behalf of the province of Manitoba in connection with the prosecutions. Mr. Knott gave evidence before that committee, and you will find, on examining his evidence, that the conclusions he came to were these. Mr. Knott stated positively that, in so far as the adjusting of constituencies and the polling divisions in the province of Manitoba by the returning officers was concerned, they did the only thing they could do. It was the only reasonable way of doing it. That is Mr. Knott's statement under oath before the committee at that time. You will find on page 51 of the evidence that he was asked the question:

> Can you tell me any way how he can get a list except in the way in which it has been suggested, as you say, he did here by a red line throughout, as the Manitoba Act says he should do with names that are to be struck off.

I might repeat what was said the other day by the Minister of Justice, namely, that the Manitoba Act provides that when names are being erased or struck off in any way, the means used shall be either a red or a black line. In this case the returning officer used a red line.

> Q. He did here by a red line throughout, as the Manitoba Act says he should do, with names that are to be struck off?—A. Under what circumstances?
> Q. In the case of overlapping?—A. I have stated my opinion very fairly, I think, what in that case his duty should be.
> Q. His duty would be to do what he did here?—A. There is no doubt about that; of course he might do something else, but I think that would be a reasonable thing to do.

That is Mr. Knott's statement before the committee in connection with this red line situation. And, as I have said before, Mr. Knott was the prosecuting attorney in those cases in Manitoba and appeared before the committee on behalf of the red line situation and the local government, and he made the positive statement that the right thing to do was to do just what was done, and that was draw a red line through the names. Further on Mr. Knott repeats this. The question was asked:

How is he to get, except in the way he did—I am simply speaking about the matter of striking out the names, of using the red lines—how else was he to get a proper list for the polling division of the federal constituency out of the local registration lists. Can you tell me how else he can do that?—A. I said at first, I think the reasonable thing would be to do what was done. I think I stated that two or three times before.

Those are the words of Mr. Knott.

He goes on to say, referring to the overlapping, that if he had the legal right to do it there was no other way of doing it than the way he did it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Did he say he had the legal right?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes, in connection with the overlapping.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Did he say that Mr. Leach had the legal right to draw the red line?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not talking about Mr. Leach now. Further on he says that he could see no objection to doing it. Mr. Knott repeats practically the same statement and arrives at the same conclusion throughout his whole evidence. Mr. Howell, who is now chief justice of the Appeal Court in Manitoba, took the same position and therefore, so far as the red line situation is concerned, there can be no question, and there should be no question, in the minds of the people of this country that the only thing that could be done under the circumstances was done. I do not like to repeat what I have already said, but it is very important that the people of Canada should understand the red line situation, and, therefore, I shall have to refer to what I said last night. I have here the list of polling division No. 5 in the electoral division of Mountain, the returning officer of which was arrested and put in jail for using the red line in connection with the list. I checked the lists over in the office of the clerk of the Crown in Chancery the day before yesterday, and I can say that on the lists that were used by the deputy returning officers at the polls on that occasion there was not a man disfranchised in the 1904 election, notwithstanding that the returning officer was arrested and put in jail for doing the very thing Mr. Knott said he had a right to do and that it was the only thing he could do. I would point out that it is hardly fair that our officials should be prosecuted and hounded and persecuted for doing just the same thing that Tory friends allow their officials to go scot-free for doing. I think I will be able to prove that the law in the province of Manitoba under the present management is not fairly administered. I have here a letter which was published in the 'Free Press' on the 19th of February, 1908, re the changing of polling divisions in the 1903 provincial election, and it is signed by Mr. James Hooper, who, I think, is the King's Printer in the province of Manitoba. There was a criticism in the 'Free Press' in regard to the changing of these polling divisions and Mr. Hooper admits in his letter that some twelve returning officers in the provincial election of 1903 changed the polling constituencies. This is the letter:

Election irregularities in 1903.

To the Editor of the 'Free Press'—

Sir,—In your editorial on Friday, under the caption of 'last words on an old subject,' you give currency to a statement which reflects on the honour and integrity of officials of the government of Manitoba. You say:

Then it recites the statement in the 'Free Press,' but I need not read that.

Mr. STAPLES. You had better read it all:

Mr. CRAWFORD. All right:

The Dominion returning officers, the attorney general claims, were not, however, justified in subdividing provincial polling divisions which were entirely within the limits of Dominion constituencies. It is to be borne in mind that at the provincial elections in 1903, there were subdivisions of polling divisions in undoubted contravention of the law, in no less than 17 of the local constituencies. It is an open secret that these subdivisions were made, not by the returning officers but by officials of the government in the legislative buildings on Kennedy street working under the direction of the government.

Then Mr. Hooper says:

Evidently your assertion is made on the same authority as similar statements were given to a committee of the House of Commons in 1906, &c.

Your editorial, if allowed to pass unanswered, would emphasize the impression then attempted to be left on the public mind—that the civil servants of Manitoba are lacking in spirit of honesty and integrity—therefore, I hope you will give space to the following letters received from the returning officers in the provincial elections of 1903.

Now, this is what I want to call particular attention to. This is Mr. Hooper's statement in regard to different returning officers in different electoral districts in the province of Manitoba dividing the polling divisions:

As far as I know these are the only returning officers who created new polling divisions that year.

Then he gives the names of these officers as follows: H. Archibald, Melita; W. G. Hetherington, Souris; S. T. Parr, Neepawa;

N. O. Carey, Saint Piere; Thomas Coulter, Dominion City ; John Sigvaldason, Icelandic River; Thomas Partington, Selkirk; W. J. Helliwell, Oak Lake; James Fargey, Manitou; T. J. Long, Stonewall; C. Marion, St. Boniface ; O. B. Harvey, Plympton. He gives these men as the only ones in connection with the dividing of the polling divisions contrary to the law in Manitoba, and he says that so far as the officials of the parliament buildings in Winnipeg are concerned they are not to blame, and he throws the onus on these returning officers. Well, if it was wrong to do anything of that kind in the federal elections—and I claim it was not wrong; it was what was done by our returning officers—it was worse still to do it in the provincial elections where the elections were held directly under the control of the province. But our officers were put in jail and the provincial officers were allowed to go scot-free for doing the same thing. I have here another document to which I have made reference on two or three previous occasions, but which I think is worth referring to again; it has reference to the disfranchising of certain electors in the province of Manitoba. I hope that the challenge or bluff that was put up by the 'Telegram,' and that was read to this House last night, will be extended back for a few years at least. The hon. leader of the opposition has said that if we can show that the people anywhere in the province of Manitoba have not had fair treatment in the matter of the franchise, he will assist in passing legislation that will improve the conditions. The hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn), I think, made the same statement.

Now, it is not denied that, with the approval of the Attorney General of Manitoba and of the hon. member for Marquette, 38 electors were disfranchised in the federal district of Selkirk in 1903. If our hon. friends are so anxious to see every elector entitled to vote in the province of Manitoba granted the franchise, why did they not allow those 38 men to remain on the list of voters ? They were properly put on the list, and they were certified to by Judge Walker in these words :

I, David Marr Walker, chairman of the board of registration, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the names, residence and occupation of the persons appearing on registration register of registration district No. 2 of the electoral division of Springfield, added at the adjourned meeting of the court of revision, held at Lac du Bonnet on the 24th day of June, 1903.

Some exception has been taken to that form of certificate; but there was no evidence, in any shape or form, that those 38 names were not just as much entitled to be on the list as any other 38 names in the province of Manitoba; yet the Attorney General of Manitoba approved of tearing out of the list the sheet containing those names, and depriving those 38 people of their franchise in that year. Yet the certified list sent to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in Ottawa contained practically all those names—a patched-up list which I am sure the members of the opposition would be astonished at. Those 38 names that were torn off the list with the approval of the Attorney General of Manitoba were sent to Ottawa and were certified to by the clerk of the province of Manitoba as being qualified electors, and they used their franchise in the election of 1904.

I have documents in my possession, which I have had for a considerable length of time, showing that in the year 1905, when election matters were wholly under the control of the executive of Manitoba, numbers of people were prevented from having the use of their franchise by manipulation in connection with the registration and revision of the lists, some 8,000 in all, and I will give you some information along that line. I will read only short sketches from different constituencies at Emerson :

Sixty of the Liberals came on an average of twenty-five miles and others drove from fifteen to twenty miles, that only being one way. A number of Galicians walked in twenty miles and one over thirty miles.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would the hon. gentleman mind telling us what document he is reading from ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Manitoba 'Free Press' of June 3, 1905.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are the names of the parties who were disfranchised given there?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will give you some names later on.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are they given in the document ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not in this particular item that I am reading ; but the hon. gentleman might just take a look at these 38 names for a while. Here is what took place at Alexander :

About 150 qualified voters are yet unregistered owing to the busy season and the distance they have to travel. The Liberals were refused a copy of the names registered and also of the protests filed, no doubt on account of the inability of the clerk to comply with the Act, as he had no idea, when ten o'clock came, how many names were registered, and refused to open up the list of applications.

At Virden :

Several went away without registering because they had to get home and could not get their names on the list.

At Neepawa :

There were no developments of unusual character at the registration of electors yesterday, nor was the clerk kept very busy. In all, 125 names were registered, but there were probably as many more qualified who could not present themselves.

It is not possible for every person to get to the registration district in one day, under the regulations provided by the order in council issued by the Manitoba government. Here is what took place at Brandon:

At 10 o'clock the doors were closed and all those inside at that time qualified to register were allowed to do so, fully sixty being registered after 10 o'clock.

I think there was a wrong impression created last night when the hon. member for Marquette stattetd that all present were allowed to register at the hour fixed for the closing. In connection with that statement I want to disabuse the minds of the members of this House by saying that that practically meant nothing, for the Act provides that during the sittings of the registration clerk, there can only be twelve in the room at a time.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Twelve beyond all the officers.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This is the condition surrounding the registration:

48. The following persons shall be entitled to be present at sittings of the registration clerks for the purposes of this Act:
(a) The candidate or candidates at the last election for the electoral division;
(b) Any person who considers himself to be a prospective or probable candidate as a member to represent the electoral division in the legislative assembly at the then next ensuing election therefor to be held in such electoral division;
(c) Any two qualified persons entitled to be registered electors within the electoral division and representing any political organization, duly authenticated to the satisfaction of the registration clerk;
(d) Any person desirous of being present as a spectator: provided that no more than twelve persons, other than the persons before mentioned and officers in attendance, shall be entitled to be present at the same time.
(e) The registration clerk shall strive as far as possible to allow the representation of all political parties in the place or places of registration to be fair and equal.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That might be 20 people.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There cannot possibly be any larger number of people present when that registration booth closes. That is quite different from the impression left on the House by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) last evening. He practically gave the members to understand that all who might be within almost any distance of the polls so long as they were in touch with it, would be allowed to register. But that is not the fact. For instance in Brandon the registration clerk locked the door and only those who were inside at the time were allowed to register, even if there had been a thousand or twenty outside they would not be allowed the privilege of getting on the list.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the hon. member give examples of men who were left off.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes, hundreds of them.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is no answer.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am going to give them; just wait:

In Brandon at 10 o'clock the doors were closed and all who were inside at the time who were qualified to register were allowed to do so, fully 60 being registered after 10 o'clock. The total number placed on the list in this division was 603, which made a heavy day's work. Great interest was taken in the registration by the citizens and the large number placed on the list shows the growth of the city in the past year.

Mr. LANCASTER. There were none outside waiting?

Mr. CRAWFORD (reading):

Russell, Manitoba, June 1.—At the sitting of the registration clerk held here to-day for the electoral division of Russell 115 names were added to the list, a majority of them probably Conservative It is safe to say that there are 150 more entitled to be on, largely Liberal. One man from Roblin told me there were ninety in his vicinity who could qualify if they had an opportunity. The feature of the day was the comparatively large number of absentees and sick men put on.

In connection with the sick men I know of some cases where many were put on as being sick and I have my doubts as to their being very sick.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. They took the declaration, did they not?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No, it was the other man who took it, the political operator. I now propose to read the opinion of an hon. gentleman to whom hon. friends opposite will not take exception. The Hon. James Johnson.

Mr. SCHAFFENR. A fine man.

Mr. CRAWFORD (reading):

Hon. James Johnson, who was in attendance all day, stated this afternoon that there should have been at least four places in the constituency for registration for the convenience of everybody.

I have here a report from Portage la Prairie:

206 new names were added to the list, about 45 more than were added in the 6 days of registration last year. In addition 300 applications were received to strike off voters' names from the lists. Both parties had done quite a lot of committee work regarding the lists and so as much as possible was done in adding and striking off names, but quite a lot more voters would have been added had the time been longer. The matter of registering would have been greatly facilitated if there had been more than one clerk. Some went to register several times and after losing a good deal of time from their work went away without registering. In Lakeside, voters had to go all the way from Clandeboye, Poplar Point, High Bluff and other places to Macdonald to register, so that the clerk was not rushed, only 57 registering out of about 200.

The paper says that the Roblin government should feel very proud of themselves over the successful result of their plot to disfranchise hundreds and even thousands of Manitoba voters.

I might give many further illustrations. I have, for instance, the names in my district. There were 170 in the district of Beautiful Plains who did not register.

In Gladstone, only 45 registered. The paper says :

Mr. Jamieson instances the case of a man who had to assist his neighbour on that day and therefore on account of the one day registration could not register.

S. B. Olsen, who keeps the post office at Marshland, says of his locality a number of names were left off: also up the Narrows, among the quarries, there are not a few. He places the matter thus: 'It is beyond all reason to expect men working for $1.50 a day to stop work, sail down to Westbourne, the nearest point (if weather was favourable this trip would take three days), thence by train to Gladstone and with this return trip a whole week would elapse, and the expense incurred and loss of time would run up to $25 or more.'

Barney Mathews was in town to-day from up the lake and reports the same grievance at Siglunes post office as other places. Had there been a registration booth near, four brothers, John, Joe., George and William Bowen, would have been registered, but on account of the great expense are deprived of their votes. At the same place Alex. Monkman and M. J. Mathews did not register for similar reasons.

If these cases occur in one or two remote places, sparsely populated, what must be the ratio in more thickly settled districts?

In this constituency it has been looked upon as a big joke and even the man who first brought the member, Mr. Wilson, before the public eye says that although written to by his party leaders to look after matters, the trouble of getting them on, six or seven legal voters he knows of in the north part of the constituency are going to be allowed to go unregistered because of the difficulty of rounding them up. So the reports come in from all points.

I have here a letter from a friend of mine in regard to the same matter :

I might say that so far as the Glenboro strike off some 189 electors that were wrongfully on the list at the last election. I have not got the full information at hand, but I think that the total number of applications to strike off was 250. The registration is a complete farce, but of course we cannot give a full statement until after the court of revision.

From the Glenboro district there were only some five or six that applied to have their names added to the list and they had to travel about 35 miles to add their names at a great expense to themselves.

I might say that so far as the Glenboro district is concerned that we have a very large number of names to add and it all depends on what facilities are given us at the court as to whether we will get the names added or not.

Here is another report from Roblin and the complaint is made that owing to the large distance they have to travel and the expense, it is impossible for them to register.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. In what year was that ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That was on June 8, 1905. Here is the summing up of the whole situation :

It is probably well within the mark to say that as the result of the Roblin government's one day, one place, one clerk registration scheme, at least 8,000 electors of Manitoba, eligible to be enrolled, were deprived on June 1 of an opportunity of registering.

This looks like a stupendous total; but when the figures come to be looked into it is seen to be a very moderate estimate.

Pretty close calculations have been made in some of the country constituencies, and these give a basis for an estimate embracing the whole province. Thus in Norfolk there are 160 names not registered, in Beautiful Plains, 300; in Gilbert Plains, 300; in Emerson, 250; in Dufferin, 150; in Rockwood, 200; in Gladstone, 200; in Dauphin, 150; in Deloraine, 70; in Virden, 150. This is an average of nearly 200 disfranchised electors for each constituency; and the same proportion is likely to apply throughout the province.

This all goes to show that under political manipulation and under the management of the government of Manitoba the electors are not safe to-day. Our people expect to get and have not been getting fair treatment in regard to the registration of electors in that province. There is not sufficient time given for that purpose. To prove this we need not do more than take the proclamation issued a few days ago in that regard. The very idea of compiling a list for a constituency 150 miles long, without railway communication, in 16 days ! It is an outrage on the people of the district, it is something that cannot properly be done.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the whole electorate is to be registered?

Mr. CRAWFORD. One man is as much entitled to his franchise as a hundred are to theirs. And a man is entitled to his franchise whether he lives a hundred miles away or fifty miles away.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Quite right; but only the additional ones who have become qualified since last year are registered.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is just one of the abuses that, I am satisfied, hon. gentlemen opposite want to continue in the province of Manitoba. The fact is, we have a stuffed list, a list not compiled according to the law of the province; and yet, without the consent of the opposite party, we cannot get any names off that list. It is because it is a stuffed list that they have continued it for five years. In my own division we have a list on which are six or seven hundred names of Conservatives that should not be there, but, without some arrangement made between the political parties, we can no more get those names off than we can fly to the moon. We have a list stuffed in favour of the Conservatives, and that is why they are fighting this Bill so hard to-day. In summing up my own division I have no hesitation in saying that there are from ten to fifteen Conservatives to be struck off that list for every Liberal, while the proportion to be put on is the other way. I have here a map of the district of Gladstone. This riding covers a great deal of territory; it is about a hundred miles long, and there is no railway communication except through one corner of it. And yet all the time that was allowed to make up and revise the list for that district was seventeen days. For the district of Beautiful Plains, the time was provided by order in council. and under it the preparation of the lists was to take just sixteen days. It was simply impossible for the people in these districts to go to the place of registration and the court of revision within the time allowed. Then, see what we are up against as compared with what used to be in the old days. Nobody knows who is on the list. We tried in the city of Winnipeg to buy from the government some voters' lists to check up the names. But we could not get a list; the provincial authorities have not got them or won't supply them. That is the situation we are up against in Manitoba to-day; and we want to get away from that, and we have got to get away from it. In the division of Gladstone, between the registration and the sittings of the court of revision there were only eight days. And there was no list, but the people who wished to examine the list had to go to the door of the registration booth and read what the registration clerk had posted up there.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) is wrong. The registration clerk is compelled, by law, to furnish lists on application.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If you go to him and he has time to give them.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) think that the clerk should be compelled to come to him?

Mr. CRAWFORD. You may have to chase him all over the country. For, if you read that order in council, you will see that he is not required to stay at one place, but is to spend an evening at one place, an afternoon at another, and so on, and so it is pretty hard to tell where to find him. He has no fixed residence.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. There are just three days of registration when the clerk does not sit the full number of hours.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, here is the proclamation, and you can read it for yourself. For a man to get on the list in Gladstone he will have to travel two hundred miles coming and going. To be registered in Russell, he will have to travel 156 miles; in Emerson, 216 miles; in Selkirk, 200 miles; in La Verandrye, 240 miles.

Some reference has been made to a few names put on the voters' list by special Act of parliament last year. I think I made reference to that myself in speaking on a previous occasion. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) also mentioned it in his speech a day or two ago. As to that situation, I have here an article published in Winnipeg a few days ago which I think it would be well to read:

What about the seven put on the Balsam Bay lists by special Act the following season for which Mr. Roblin claimed so much credit? Were they the remaining men?

Now, the hon. member for Marquette would have had this House believe that in this case those whose names had not been put on the list by the registration clerk or at the court of revision were put on by special Act of parliament. This article says that that is not the case——

Not at all, that matter has been misrepresented.

The Liberals went up and chased over the country to find the men, and the men applied but the registration clerk refused. The Liberals heard about it, and they had to go out into the country to look up these matters. It cost them quite a sum of money to get the particulars of the case.

The fact is, that a number of people were actually disfranchised who applied. We could not get them all in time and the government never did anything to remedy the injustice.

This is the point that I wish to get this House to understand—that the government of Manitoba did not do anything more than pass this special Act; they did not try to hunt up these people.

The case of the seven you refer to is quite a different matter. These were men who had had their applications accepted by the registration clerk and had signed the interrogatories, but the clerk through ignorance or neglect had never filled in the questions.

But the only thing that the government did was to pass an Act of the legislature to place these men on the list.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) to say that these men applied to get on the list?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes, they applied.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. And their application was not received?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It was received, but the interrogatories were not filled in.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The hon. gentleman is wrong. That is true of the twenty-one, but for the seven, no applications were received.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, I read the statement I have here. It was our friends who chased this thing up and finished it. These are the men who had their applications accepted by the registration clerk, and signed the interrogatories of the clerk through ignorance, and the clerk had never filled in the question. So it was not a proper application.

There was no evidence that they had ever answered the interrogatories or had been sworn, and the judge could do nothing, but presumably, as the clerk had accepted them they were all Conservatives. To save their franchise the government had to pass a special Act, and the opposition naturally made no objection to this passing.

Q. Of course in this case the registration clerk was prosecuted by the government?—A. No, the attorney general was too busy inventing thin red line charges which he never intended to press seriously.

Q. What do you think about the Manitoba Election Act?—A. As first passed it was very fair, but it has been mangled out of all resemblance to the Act which Liberals in the legislature declared some years ago to be fair.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Can you state how many applied to the registration clerk whom the registration clerk refused to accept on the day of registration ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have heard the statement made that there were somewhere about 35.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I think 21 is the right number.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand that the registration clerk made use of these words, he said they were all Grits and he would be darned if he would let them on. So they did not get on the list.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The seven Grits that the special Act was made for.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. My information is that every man was a Tory.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The point is as to how the preparation of the voters' list was done in the province of Manitoba. Now here is the list as prepared and sent out by the Manitoba government, just as it appears in the statute, placing those men on the list. Those men have no post office address given, no occupation, no residence, just the name, and everything else blank.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Who are those ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is the voters' list prepared by the Manitoba government, printed by the King's Printer, and distributed throughout the province. The list in no way complies with the conditions surrounding the registration of voters. That is just one more sample of what we are up against in connection with the lists in Manitoba to-day. In my division at the present time there are nearly 3,000 electors, out of 8,000, that have no post office address given. Unless we can notify those electors and prove to the court that we have notified them in some reasonable manner, we cannot get them off the list. I am sure that we have in my own division a stuffed list to the extent of 600 Conservative votes, and I can see no way how we can get these off the list unless we get the consent of our Conservative friends in that division.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). What is the court of revision for ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Why, we could spend all the time we are allowed over one elector, with only fifteen hours for a court of revision. The hon. member can take up that much time himself on one case. The idea of striking off, as we did last year, some 300 votes in Beautiful Plains, and adding 184. And we could not have done that much except by the mutual consent and arrangement between both parties. Here is another glaring case :

In the case of forty names struck off at Alexder, continued Mr. Walton, the protests were handed in to Kemnay and not to Griswold, as the 'Free Press' stated, and the number of names affected was forty, not forty-four. The registration clerk did not sit at Alexander but at Kemnay and Griswold. Mr. Hastings tries to make it clear that there was something irregular in the application.

I understand Mr. Hastings is an employee of the government of Manitoba drawing pay from that government, while he is the political organizer of the Conservative party in Manitoba. This man is drawing from the people about $3,000 a year, and still he is the recognized organizer for the Conservative party in the province of Manitoba, and has been for some time.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him how it is that the Conservatives managed to get Liberals who were not qualified off the list ? Do they get them off ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. A lot of them never got on.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The hon. gentleman was referring a while ago to the names improperly on the list. If he would explain how the Liberals were struck off, he might have a little force in his argument.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, a lot of them did not have to come off. In the last election when the provincial government manipulated everything, the Liberals polled a little over 49 per cent of the total vote of the province. So I think there are a few left yet, even though the Conservatives had full control. Now I am going to read a letter that was addressed to the Conservative party in Manitoba by their organizer, Mr. Hastings, and this organizer is a paid official of the government of Manitoba. The letter is as follows :—

Dear Sir,—You will no doubt have noticed from the public press and particularly from the address delivered by the Hon. Robert Rogers on the evening of the 21st instant, before the French Conservative club of this city, that the Minister of Justice has introduced a Bill in the Dominion parliament to amend the Dominion Elections Act and make provisions for the making up of entirely new lists for Manitoba and British Columbia for Dominion elections. It is unnecessary for me to go into details regarding the proposed amendment further than to say that if that Act becomes law the Liberals will be able to fix the lists in such a shape as will make it impossible for the Conservatives to carry a single seat in this province in the next Dominion election.

Now they must have a fine idea of the working of the voters' lists. I fancy their great trouble is that they know how to do it, and they are afraid they are going to lose it. We know how they have done it.

Our friends at Ottawa will make a determined stand on this Bill, and will if necessary keep the House of Commons in session until it is withdrawn or so amended as to give the electors of this province something like fair-play in the way of an honest voters' list.

Evidently we have not got honest voters' lists now.

In the meantime the work of revising the provincial lists will be proceeded with by the local government the same as has been done in previous years and I write you on behalf of the party——

On behalf of the party—paid out of the funds of the province of Manitoba; drawing money out of the treasury of our country and still working for the party. If we were to do that down at Ottawa, if the government at Ottawa were to act in that manner, we would not hear the end of it for months.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Does the hon. gentleman not know that his party have homesteaders and bush rangers and others doing that kind of work all the time?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The writer of this letter goes on to say :

—and I ask you to urge on our friends all through your electoral division the great necessity of revising the provincial lists this year——

The government are going to look after the revision of the lists. They will do the Conservative end of the campaign. That is what Mr. Hastings says, and he ought to know, because he is employed by the Manitoba government and is working for the party.

I ask you to urge on our friends all through your electoral division the great necessity of looking after the revision of the local lists this year in anticipation of the general Dominion election being held on the local lists as they are revised this year. The dates and places of sittings of the registration clerk and the revising officer for your district will be made public in the very near future and we should all work upon the revision of the list with just as much ardour as we would do if no amendment had been introduced in the Dominion House. The Liberals of your district will probably endeavour to convey the impression to the people generally that the lists will be useful when they are revised and for that reason no attention will be paid to the revision, but don't let any such report or statement cause our friends to relax in the slightest degree in getting a fair, full, complete and honest voters' list in your district, a list that will give every man, Conservative and Liberal alike, the right to vote if he possesses the necessary qualifications.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Hear, hear. I commend that paragraph to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. (reading).

A list so revised and corrected as will be a credit to the province and will meet with the approval of all honest men irrespective of party. With such a list prepared and revised, and ready for use by the Dominion authorities, we as a party in this province will feel and know no matter what legislation they may eventually pass at Ottawa——

They are going to have things so fixed that they need not fear any legislation we may pass. Things will be all right anyway.

We have done our duty and succeeded in preparing honest lists in Manitoba and that the Liberal government endeavoured to pass legislation allowing them to make up special lists because they were afraid of the honest verdict of the newly qualified electors of this province.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. A very good letter.

Mr. CRAWFORD (reading) :

I am writing this letter to you with the sanction and approval of the leaders of our party and I trust you will personally see or write to every worker of the party in your district, asking them under the circumstances to pay more than usual attention to the coming revision of the provincial lists, and that you will see that the lists, so far as your district is concerned, is properly and correctly revised. I will be pleased to furnish you with all necessary forms and to give you all information regarding the law governing the revision of the lists if you drop me a line telling me what you require.

Mr. PATERSON. Is that the same letter that you have got, Doctor?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I may have got that. It is a good letter. I would not be ashamed of it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On April 2 our Conservative paper in the town from which I come——

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Would the hon. gentleman kindly inform the House what appointment Mr. Hastings holds under the provincial government and whether he is paid by salary or in what way?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In discussing the Bill now before the House, this is the conclusion arrived at by this Conservative paper which is, I am quite satisfied, under the control of the Minister of Railways and Canals for Manitoba :

That the Dominion government should revise the lists up to date within reasonable time before the federal election is quite just in view of the fact that provincial revision is done only once a year, no objection would be made if the revision were in the hands of the judges for final completion.

That is all we are asking, and there is at least one Conservative paper in the province of Manitoba which agrees that that it is right and proper to have a revision of the lists for federal purposes in the province of Manitoba.

In connection with those voters in the particular case I was going to refer to in Lansdowne last year, here is where an abuse crept in to the extent of 40 voters, owing to the fact that the registration clerk failed to do his duty. Applications were made to strike 40 names off the lists, but when the case came before the judge, owing to the fact that the registration clerk had failed to notify the electors whose names were protested, the judge would not deal with it at all, and those men were allowed to remain on the lists. That is one sample of how things are done in Manitoba. There is just about one more item which I will take up of wrong-doing. It has been referred to before by some of the previous speakers and that is with regard to three names added in the electoral division of Morris last year, and it shows how an important Act improperly carried out affects the election of a candidate. The attorney general of Manitoba only secured a seat in the legislature by the consent and good will of the returning officer. There were three votes allowed to go on the list of men who did not appear and personally register, nor did anybody appear on their behalf and make the necessary sworn declaration. If the law of the province had been followed out to the letter, they would not have been on the lists, and the attorney general of Manitoba would not be holding his seat in the government of Manitoba as he is doing to-day.

That is just a sample of how these things are worked out. As this question no doubt will be discussed in committee, I shall not detain the House further. But there is just one matter I am not satisfied with in regard to the adoption of the provincial franchises. The hon. member for Lisgar talked about it the other day. I refer to residence qualification. A Canadian citizen who has lived in this country and helped to build it up simply because he steps over the boundary line from one province to another should not be deprived of his vote for 12 months. I think three months is long enough, if not too long.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Please tell me who passed the law making twelve months residence necessary for qualification.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It was passed by parliament.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Under the Conservative regime the residence qualification was six months, but the Liberal parliament of which I think my friend was a member made it twelve months.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I don't care who made the law I want the grievance redressed. Now, Mr. Speaker, this Bill which we are now considering will enable us to get away from the defects which at present exist in our election law, and it will give us in Manitoba a fair and honest preparation of the voters' lists. It will ensure that instead of a court of revision sitting for five hours it will sit the same as any other court as long as there is any work to do.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. At what hours of the day does the court of revision sit?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In Beautiful Plains it sits from one o'clock to six o'clock.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. There are just six places out of forty-one where that is the rule.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not care how many places there are, it is a grievance and we want a reasonable time to properly register the electors and we want it done without too much expense which this Bill will give us. Under the Greenway Act which is said to be iniquitous by the Tories the registration clerk cannot close his list within twenty-eight days from the time he receives his instructions, he must keep his registration book open for thirty days after the list is closed and forty-two days must elapse before the court of revision can be held, and the lists are printed during that time and distributed to the leading officials and to the school-houses and post offices all over the country. That is a proper condition and I hope we will get back to it. That is what we are striving for and what I hope we will get. We have heard a good deal about the marked ballot and it seems that there is an attempt to send out the impression that the marked ballot applies to all electors; but the marked ballot only applies to any person who for some reason or other has his name left off the list and who wishes to cast his vote.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What clause is that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Clause 13, and it reads :

150a. Where any separate voters' list has been prepared by the returning officer under section 25 of this Act and any person applies to vote whose name appears on the general list from which such separate list has been prepared but whose name has been omitted from the separate list, the deputy returning officer, in addition to placing his initials on the back of the ballot paper as provided by this Act, shall also place on the back thereof a number corresponding to a number placed opposite such person's name in the poll book, and such person, having taken the oath in the form X 1 and, if required, the oaths prescribed by this Act, shall thereupon be entitled to receive such numbered ballot paper and to vote.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Will the hon. gentleman read clause 17 which provides no writing or figuring can be made on the ballot.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is a different point; you might please wait until I finish the point I am dealing with. Now, I want the true information with regard to this to go out to the country and I hope the press will do the fair thing by us in that regard. It has been represented in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' and other papers that there is going to be a marked ballot and that we are going to know how every man votes. That is not the case. It simply applies to any person whose name has been left off the list and who gets a ballot from the returning officer and the returning officer marks it so that it may be discovered afterwards if there is any fraud. This is important for we might have a case like that of the Attorney General of Manitoba who was elected by the vote of the returning officer. If the vote of that man can be traced back it will be known whether he was properly qualified to vote or not, and that is a reasonable and proper precaution to ensure fair-play at the election. I know of elections that have been voided in the west, because of the neglect, wilful or otherwise, of the returning officers in putting illegal marks on the ballot, or not initialing, and I think that the will of the people should be given expression to without the restriction of any technicalities. Now, Mr. Speaker, I approve of this legislation along the lines of the present Bill and I will do all I can to see that it is passed. No matter how our friends opposite may threaten it will make no difference in my stand, and I am afraid that the style of operating which they have adopted will only tend to keep us further apart and to prevent us getting together and deciding on what should be the proper form of this legislation.

Mr. CRAWFORD.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, I have followed with a great deal of interest the discussion which has taken place upon the second reading of this Bill. Indeed, I think that no subject-matter which has come before the House during the present session has been as interesting as the one now under discussion. For my own part, I say frankly and sincerely that the Bill seemed harmless when I first read it; but after having listened to this discussion, I look upon it as one of the most pernicious, most mischievous and most wicked pieces of legislation that has come under my notice since I have had the honour of a seat in this House. It is so qualified by me unreservedly because its object is to depart in a clandestine manner from the principle which this House adopted in 1898, so far as may be necessary to control the results of the election which is about to take place. This is something new to me at any rate. We have had election frauds of a very grave and serious character—far more serious within the last few years than formerly. Under the old forms of influence the elector at least had knowledge of the manner in which his vote was disposed of through direct means of corruption. But we have had another stage which consisted in influencing an election by spoiling, stealing and switching ballots. I say this because there has been abundant proof of it, irrespective entirely of what side has been guilty. There has been that form of undue influence over the free expression of the will of the people; and we have here a third form, which is perhaps more serious than any of the others, inasmuch as it cannot be guarded against. Without any regard to the will of those who are really the electors of a constituency, it will permit a government which is waning, which is moribund, which is failing, to influence the free expression of the will of a constituency. That is the way in which I understand this legislation, and I am quite open to conviction if my judgment in that regard is too severe. But taking that view of it, the House will understand that I look on it as an extremely serious measure which deserves our careful attention.

We in this country are continually comparing our institutions to those of England, saying that we live under the same regime and that the principles that obtain in England obtain here. That statement is only partially true. If you compare the manner in which subjects of this kind are treated in the mother of parliaments with the manner in which they are treated here, you will find that there are profound differences, which are to our dishonour and disfavour to such an extent that travellers from the old country who visit Canada constantly remark upon them to our detriment. Take the subject of the preparation of the electoral lists. We all know that in England that subject is always amicably discussed and arranged between the parties before the law relating to it is enacted. The parties confer and something which is fair, reasonable and just is determined upon, and that becomes the matter of legislation. You will not find in England, during the past century or very nearly so, such a discussion as the one we are having here to-day. The distribution of seats is another matter which is arranged amicably between the parties, the discussion between them leading to something which incorporates British fair-play, and that becomes a matter of statute. Let me go a little further in order to speak of a matter which is uppermost in my mind, and which has been so for several weeks past. Take the question of the audit of the public accounts. Could there be anything more absolutely different in the two countries? Could there be anything more grotesque, more absurd, more unjust, than our way of proceeding with that audit, as compared with what obtains in England?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. I hear somebody say 'hear, hear,' on the other side of the House, and that is just the hon. gentleman who has contributed perhaps more than anybody else to accentuate those differences which are altogether to our discredit.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My hon. friend did not contribute very much one way or the other.

Mr. MONK. Well, my hon. friend has evoked from me an admission which is this. When I have been at the Public Accounts Committee, and have seen there my colleagues, to whom I cannot give too much praise, busying themselves with what in England is uncontradicted, untrammelled, unobstructed, and have seen the hon. gentleman and some of his colleagues doing what they were doing, courage has failed me, and I have preferred to give up the job. We all know that in England the public accounts are audited by a small committee of ten or twelve members, to which some others may perhaps be added.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It would be interesting to ascertain from our hon. friend how often he has attended the Public Accounts Committee before he gives any instructions with regard to it.

Mr. MONK. Let me ask my hon. friend what business he had there at all, because a man who has no subject-matter to be investigated in the Public Accounts Committee in England never thinks of setting his foot there to obstruct those who have. I am speaking of constitutional usage and I say, without fear of contradiction that a member of parliament in England who would go to a committee having any such matter as this before it, in order to object to the questions of others would arouse such public indignation that within 24 hours he would be compelled to resign.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Has my hon. friend tendered his resignation? Because I have seen him often asking questions in matters in which he had no special interest or which he did not bring before the committee himself.

Mr. MONK. I may have done so in trying to help the investigator, but I think that any sensible man will admit that is a very different thing from sitting there as a counsel, as a lawyer, fed, engaged, paid, one would say—I do not say that was the case, but I say bore the appearance of a court and we were there in the presence of people who were obstructing the investigation.

I do not wish to prolong discussion with my hon. friend upon that subject, but I say it is another example of the difference which we find between British parliamentary institutions and our interpretation of them here. There the chairman of such a committee is always a member of the opposition, the investigation we know covers the administration, so to speak, of the British empire, compared with which our own investigation must necessarily appear extremely small and puny. Where do you find the difficulty in England? These 10 or 15 men go through the accounts, every opportunity is given for the fullest investigation, there is no question of proof or the nature of evidence, there are no men there occupying the singular and contradictory position of, being members themselves, having found nothing whatever to investigate and being there for the sole purpose of blocking the investigations of others. Could one imagine anything more abusive than our usage in this respect of what we call the British constitution and British practice? But let us go a step further. When in England, Sir, as happens at least every ten years—and I think it should happen every ten years here, because I am a great admirer of the political institutions of the mother country—a government feels itself falling, as the present imperial government feels itself falling to a certain extent even at this moment, the cabinet, in a quiet and dignified manner, accepts the situation and awaits patiently and calmly the verdict of the people. But in Canada, almost invariably—and here is a flagrant instance of it—there is an endeavour made, by some crooked wicked mischievous legislation, to prevent the result, to thwart the will of the people, to prevent that free expression of popular will by some hook or crook, as we will see it is intended by this section, and thus to delay the fatal hour. That is the conclusion at which I have arrived in respect of the purpose of this legislation. But I have not by any means lost confidence in my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). He did not prepare this legislation, it is not he who drafted this Act. I have noticed with what care he has attended to and taken notes of the discussion which has taken place. I do not think the Minister of Justice himself, personally, of his own hand, has drafted that disposition. It comes from that part of the country which it is especially designed to affect and although it may have gone through the hands of the Minister of Justice, I say that he was not the inspirer of it; I know the hon. gentleman and that is my belief. I have confidence in my right hon. friend, I have known him for a long time. We were trained under the same legal master.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. And my right hon. friend will admit that I am right when I say that no man had a keener sense of what is just and what is right, no man was more generous, than that master under whom we both served.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. There is one thing which I found absolutely astonishing, because I do not know, as well as others, the circumstances in Manitoba. I am perfectly within the truth when I say that every one was deeply surprised in this House at the spectacle of last night. Here was my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) who, in a very able speech, giving chapter and verse, and fact and circumstance, denounced and brought to the knowledge of this House what I cannot help calling, because I am one of those good men who live in the east one of the most abominable frauds that could possibly be perpetrated in regard to an election. He did that fully, giving facts, and most of the gentlemen who come from that province were at that time in the House, but there was no sign whatever of indignation on their part. I think some differences arose as to whether Douglas was a bartender or a hotel clerk, it was not decided, I believe, but the balance of testimony was that he was a bartender. Then there was some question with regard to a man with an unpronounceable Polish name, whose defence was assumed, I think by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, but evidence was immediately produced that he had been sent to gaol or had left the country. Barring those two signs of contradiction and indignation, the whole sad, melancholy story told by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) seemed to go without any protest, without any of those visible signs of indignation which I can say to my hon. friend would have been shown by every member from Quebec had he said such things in regard to that province.

The hon. member for Portage la Prairie certainly spoke at length, there is no doubt as to that, but, Sir, I fail to find, I am bound to say frankly and with all due respect, although I do not know all the circumstances of the many facts he gave to this House, I fail to find in his speech two things, an indignant categorical and determined denial of the story told us by the hon. member for Marquette, in respect to the thin red line, the frauds which had been committed and the secret manner in which those names had been taken from the list by the Liberal organizer or under his direction. Of the results of this I know something because one of my old time friends, Mr. La Rivière, who sat for Provencher, was undoubtedly deprived of his seat by means of those practices. There was no denial of those facts, there was not that categorical statement traversing the statement of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) which I tell you frankly I would have been glad to hear, because I think it is a disgraceful thing that such occurrences as those should happen in this country.

I listened attentively to my hon. friend in the hope of finding some explanation of another point, and that was in regard to the electoral law respecting the lists as it exists in Manitoba. I do not find anything in the long statement made here by my hon. friend to show me that, under that law, there was any colour of injustice or that things happened under that law that do not happen anywhere else. For you may make an election law as perfect as you like, but there will always be some abuse, there will always be somebody who will ill-use that law. In fact, my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) began by saying that he did not complain so much of that law in general, nor of the judges who sat under that law, but he complained that the administration of the law was left to the executive and that there was abuse in that respect. It seems to me that the answer to that was given by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) when he stated here in the House—and this, like all his other serious statements, has gone uncontradicted—that no complaint in the local House in the province itself has been made in regard to the law. I say frankly that all I gathered from the speech of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie was that there was a certain Mr. Rogers there of whom he spoke very often and whom he represented as a very bad man, and there were other bad men in the west. But there was nothing to traverse the statements in regard to the scandal attending the 'thin red line,' and nothing whatever to show to us in what respect the law was defective. Now, allow me to call your attention—for I do not wish to wander from the subject—to the amendment which has been proposed by my hon. friend from Marquette. I will not read that amendment, but, summed up, it says this: There has been discrimination against Manitoba and British Columbia, and the object of this Bill is a departure from the principle of the acceptance of provincial voters' lists and the measure is invidious and unjustifiable.

My hon. friend from Marquette stated to us last evening that the province of Quebec was mentioned in that law for the sole purpose of a blind, and I think the province of Ontario too, but I am not quite sure of that. If the province of Quebec is brought in as a blind, that will make this measure particularly detestable. It is an insidious enactment. Now, let us look at the Bill so far as it relates to the province of Quebec, and let us see if there is the same truth in that statement of my hon. friend from Marquette as there is, I am sure, in everything else that he told us last evening. The Bill provides:

9a. Notwithstanding anything to the contrary herein contained, voters' lists for the portions of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec which consist of territory not municipally organized and where there is no regular assessment or valuation roll——

—shall be prepared, as further stated, by officers specially named by the Governor in Council. Now, is there in the province of Quebec any territory not organized municipally? For, if there is not, then the statement contained in that enactment is not true, and a great semblance of reason, it seems to me, is given to the statement made here by my hon. friend from Marquette. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has practised law for a long time in a part of the country where municipal cases were frequent. He knows perfectly well that there is not one inch of the province of Quebec that is not organized municipally—not one inch. He shakes his head; he has doubts on that point. I will, therefore, endeavour to convince him. You know that we have in the province of Quebec cities and towns and villages especially organized—that is, covered by special statutes of the local legislature. Will my right hon. friend say that these particular places are not municipally organized?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. MONK. Very well, I have his assent to the proposition that these are municipally organized. Now the rest of the province, the whole of the rest of the province, is covered by our municipal code, article 1 of which says:

The Municipal Code applies to all the territory of the province of Quebec except the cities and towns incorporated by special statute.

So we start from this principle that, except the cities and towns incorporated by special statutes, the province of Quebec is covered entirely by the municipal code. That territory, as my right hon. friend knows, is divided into local municipalities. My right hon. friend will not deny that where there are local municipalities the territory is organized municipally. Where there are no local municipalities—and there are such places in large numbers—article 28 applies, which says:

Every territory not erected into a local municipality or every territory of which the council is not organized, is, until it be annexed to an adjoining local municipality or until the council thereof be organized, administered and regulated by the county council and its officers, under their usual names and with the same privileges, rights and obligations, as if such council and officers were the local council and officers of such territory.

So that upon that point there is no doubt whatever—the whole of the province of Quebec is municipally organized. Cities and towns especially incorporated are, of course, so organized. The municipal code applies to all the rest of the province under article 1, and where there is no local municipality—that is, with councillors, &c.—you have article 28 applying which says that the county council and its secretary-treasurer are the officers administering that municipality.

So that there is not, in the province of Quebec, a single inch of unorganized territory. But my right hon. friend may say that there are parts of the province not included in any county—for, as regards territory included within any county it seems to me my argument cannot be controverted. But there are no such places. If we look at our last revised statutes of the province of Quebec giving the division of the counties, we find that the division of the counties covers the whole province without excepting even a single inch. It goes to the limits of the province, to the American line in the south and to the utmost bounds of the province in the north. So if you take an extreme point, for instance, away back of the city of Three Rivers, some point where there is not an inhabitant within a hundred miles, that spot is within the limits of a county and that county with its councillors and secretary-treasurer is the administration of that particular place and of anybody residing there. So it is quite a mistake to say that there is any part of the province of Quebec that is not municipally organized.

To such an extent—because I am making this argument in order to come to a further point—that if you wished to prepare an electoral list and a man was a resident far back of any habitation whatever—take the county of Labelle, take the county of Montcalm, any of those counties running back from the St. Lawrence river north to the extreme limits of the province—and that man wanted to know if his name was on the electoral list, and I wanted to know if he had a right to be on it, I could go to the secretary treasurer of the municipality and say, 'have you accomplished your duty, have you made an electoral list and placed upon it this man who resides beyond the limits of any local municipality? There is no doubt whatever as to that. So that part of the allegation is not true, and there is no ground for any enactment in regard to Quebec so far as its unorganized territory is concerned, because there is no unorganized municipal territory in the province of Quebec. Now let me as briefly as possible point out what obtains in our province as regards the electoral lists. I am quoting from the Quebec Elections Act of 1885, and pointing out how our lists are prepared. From the 1st to the 15th of every month of September, under article 19 of that Act, the secretary treasurer prepares his electoral lists, and gives notice of its publication. If the secretary treasurer fails to prepare the electoral lists within that delay he may be ordered to do so by a judge, or a judge may order another person to do so in his place. After the lists is prepared there are 15 days given for complaints to be made. The secretary treasurer has made his list, he has posted it up and given public notice, and 15 days are given for complaints in writing. Then the complaints are taken up with the electoral lists at a special meeting of the council. The council hears these complaints, revises the list and finally decrees that the list is in force. Then you still have thirty days in which to appeal from the decision of council to a judge of the Superior Court. That is briefly the routine followed in our province. Since I have been in this House I have heard a great deal about electoral lists, the manner of making them, and the procedure, and I doubt if there is a simpler or better way of preparing lists than that. Nobody knows better than a municipal councillor the qualifications of a man to be an elector. As a rule, the councillors are not of the same political colour. Their decisions are sometimes unfair, and appeals are taken; but there is always the appeal from a judge to a judge, and that appeal is generally satisfactory. If there is no organized municipality in any territory, it would be undoubtedly the duty of the secretary treasurer of the county council, which has jurisdiction in that case, to prepare a list and to go through exactly the same formality. He would have to post it up, it would come up for review before the county council this time, not before the local council, and there would be an appeal to a judge. I think that confirms what my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) stated, that the province of Quebec was brought in here as a pretext, because there is no need of this provision in Quebec.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not by way of controverting what my hon. friend has said, because I think that on the whole he has been measurably correct, but by way of getting information from him—he says that in the county of Montcalm for instance, or Labelle, or any territory which is not organized, the warden of the county and the secretary of the county have municipal jurisdiction over that territory. So far so good. But does he believe that there is machinery provided to make electoral lists? Under our system the assessment roll is the basis of our electoral lists.

Mr. MONK. I would not have expected that from my right hon. friend, but I think he has been inspired by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot), and badly inspired. The assessment roll is not alone the guide of the secretary treasurer, that has often been decided in our courts. Let me read the article :

> The secretary treasurer of each municipality shall between the first and fifteenth day of the month of March, in each year, make in duplicate subdivided for each polling subdivision, a list in alphabetical order, of all persons, who according to the valuation roll then in force in the municipality for municipal purposes, appear to be electors by reason of the real estate possessed or occupied by them in any manner within the municipality, or by reason of being otherwise qualified as set forth in article 9.

The valuation roll is the principal guide which is used in the local municipalities, but in the case mentioned by my right hon. friend, the latter part of that article applies 'or by reason of being otherwise qualified as set forth in article 9.' It has been decided by our courts that the valuation roll is to a certain extent the guide as to the qualification of the voter, but it is not the only one. A man may be put on the electoral lists who is not on the valuation roll at all. For instance, a man who earns $300 a year in our province is not on the valuation roll, yet he has the right to be on the voters' list, because in our province any man who earns $300 a year, is a British subject, and of the proper age, has the right to be on the voters' list. Now, there is no doubt whatever that we have no unorganized municipal territory within our province. My hon. friend from Bellechasse would perhaps be surprised if I told him that, although I have written to a number of people asking for information in regard to this Bill, people residing very far from each other within the limits of my province, and people conversant with the electoral law, they all answer in exactly the same way, and I will place these letters at any time at the disposal of my right hon. friend. The object of this Bill is unfairly to obtain the right of franchise for men engaged on government works; that is the answer which I received from every one of these people.

The object is to use that part of the Act in order to have special officers named and have them make special electoral lists which will enable people, working within the limits of a province, upon the Transcontinental or other public work, to obtain the franchise for the purposes of the next general election. There is no doubt that is the object, and I consider that the opposition are right in refusing to allow the passage of such a measure. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) is quite justified in saying that the province of Quebec is brought into this enactment under a false pretense. There is no unorganized territory there.

Mr. D. ROSS. Does my hon. friend know as a matter of fact that the county treasurer does prepare the lists for those unorganized territories even if they are within his county ?

Mr. MONK. I do not. My hon. friend will understand that there are very few people residing out of the purview of a local municipality.

Mr. D. ROSS. If he does not do it, does my hon. friend argue that these people are not entitled to their franchise?

Mr. MONK. They are undoubtedly, but there are very few, if any, who exist. If there are any, they have their recourse. The treasurer should perform his duty as regards those electors. If he does not, the machinery is there and can be brought into requisition in five minutes. The secretary-treasurer may be required to make an electoral list for those voters. That list will be subject to revision before a county council and there may be an appeal to a judge, but that is a very different thing from coming in on the eve of an election with a returning officer, who may not be very scrupulous—and while there are very honest returning officers there may be some who are not—and going through those outside localities and placing 300 or 400 men on the list, without giving any chance of revision, without notice, without any recourse of appeal to the county council or the judge. That is the opinion entertained in the province of Quebec by everybody, Liberal as well as Conservative, who takes the trouble of looking over that enactment and has any knowledge of the working of our electoral law.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES.

House in committee on Bill (No. 151) respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company.—Mr. Crawford.

Mr. LENNOX. I have an amendment to offer and I would like it to be distinctly understood that it does not touch in any way the construction of the western division. I realize the importance of not hampering the railway company in any way as regards the western portion of that line and I realize also that inasmuch as the railway company is to a large extent building that portion of the line with their own money, the necessity for my motion does not arise in connection with the western division. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the western members and with the western people who desire to facilitate in every way not only the construction of the western division but the construction of the branches and feeders of that division. On the other hand I feel that inasmuch as the country is furnishing the money for the construction of the eastern division, and as it is quite a possibility that at the end of the fifty years period we may resume the operation of that road, it is of importance that the country should now take a position which will enable it at the end of the fifty year period to have not only control of the main line of the eastern division of the Grand Trunk Pacific, but control also of the feeders of that eastern division which are absolutely essential to it. When in 1904 we were considering the supplemental agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company we incorporated a provision in the agreement enabling us under certain terms to get control of certain of the branch lines, but I intend to show that the provision which we were then able to get from the government was not such a provision as we should have in the interests of the people of Canada. While I have endeavoured as far as possible to work along the lines of least resistance, yet I felt I would not be doing my duty unless I endeavoured to frame a provision which is more in harmony than that is, with the interests of the people who are building the eastern division. We are building this road and letting it to the Grand Trunk Pacific upon easy terms for a period of fifty years, and I contend that should we resume possession we should be in a position to take over upon equitable terms all the branch lines which have been constructed. The enormous importance and extent of these branch lines will be appreciated when we note that the capitalization of this company is $50,000,000 and that it was remarked in 1906 that the aggregate of these branch lines exceeded either of the total length of the Transcontinental Railway or the total length of the eastern or western division ; which it was, I cannot positively say. I propose for the protection of the people of Canada to add the following section to the Bill now before the House :

2. In case the government as defined in the schedule to the National Transcontinental Railway Act, 1903, in pursuance of the terms of the said schedule shall at any time determine to undertake the operation of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway, the government shall thereupon and thereafter have the right to take over all or any of such of the lines of railway authorized by chapter 99 of the Acts of this parliament of 1906 as are connected with or running from a point or points in the said eastern division, at such value as may be agreed upon between the government and the company; and in case they cannot agree the amount to be paid by the government to the company the amount shall be determined by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, from whose decision either party shall have the right, without leave, to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. If any such line of railway, so to be taken over, shall have received any grant or grants under the provisions of any Act of the parliament of Canada, the amount of such grant or grants, without interest, shall be deducted from such value, and the difference only shall be payable by the government upon the taking over of the line. Provided, however, that nothing in this Act contained shall authorize the government to take over the said lines of railway or any of them without the consent of parliament, previously obtained, to the exercise of such right of taking over as aforesaid.

This amendment differs in some degree from the provision in the Act of 1904 contained in the agreement form in the schedule to the Act, chapter 24, statutes of Canada, 1904, section 11. That section provides that we shall only take over such lines as the railway company elects not to retain. My amendment provides practically in the same wording as section 11 of 1904 for the taking over of all these lines. There is this difference, and in this I think I shall have the concurrence of the Minister of Finance, namely, that I have added on the words :

Provided, however, that nothing in this Act contained shall authorize the government to take over the said lines of railway or any of them without the consent of parliament, previously obtained, to the exercise of such right of taking over as aforesaid.

That proviso is contained in the statute respecting the Quebec Bridge and, we adopted it in another statute passed this session. I am not satisfied altogether with this amendment because I would like to have it go so far as to provide that in the event of our taking over these railways and there having been a grant by parliament to them, the amount of that grant together with the interest should be deducted, whereas my amendment provides only that the amount of such grant without interest shall be deducted. However, I am trying to work along the lines of least resistance. To show that if this amendment has a fault, it is that of not going far enough, I would refer to a clause set out in a contract between the Post office Department in Great Britain and the city of Glasgow, which is quoted in a very concise and valuable little work by a gentleman whom we used to have in the gallery of the House of Commons, Mr. William Richmond Smith, at page 41. I may say that substantially it is a clause which is known generally as embodying the tramway terms, and its provisions are such that there is no possibility of the government having to pay any fancy price. I would much prefer such a provision to the amendment I propose ; but we shall probably have to work up gradually to that. I will venture, however, to read it, so that we shall have it available in 'Hansard,' and I hope it will not be many years before, in those matters which so intimately affect the public, as railways, the granting of rights in navigable rivers, and so on, we can have easy terms on which to take over the properties in the interest of the public. Hon. gentlemen, I hope, will bear in mind, in considering this question, that it is an entirely different proposition from the ordinary proposition of taking over a railway. It is a case in which we are building a railway, the essential feeders to which are under consideration, and the railway company constructing them is coming here for an extension of time ; and this company, although coming under a different name, is to all intents and purposes the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. Let me point out the necessity for this provision. We have, in section 11 of the agreement which forms the schedule to the statute of 1904, a provision enabling us to take over such branches of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company as they may determine not to retain ; but we have no provision which will cover the case of a company which has a distinct organization, although identical in interest, that is, the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company ; and therefore it is important that wet should have in this Act, now that we are granting to this company a blanket charter over a vast territory which is essential as a feeding ground for our own public highway, the eastern division of the Transcontinental Railway, a provision which will enable us to deal with it in case it should come into the government's hands at the end of the fifty-year period.

Mr. KNOWLES. In what way can we be sure that the interests of these two companies will be the same ? Might not a capitalist invest a large sum of money in the Transcontinental Railway, and nothing in this, or vice versa ?

Mr. LENNOX. I am not at all sure that tinue to be the same ; but I am clear that the interests of Canada will continue to be the same to the end of the fifty-year period. We are incorporating this company and giving it large powers of extending railways through a territory which must be the feeding ground of the railway we are constructing ; and whether this railway will be separate in interest from the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, which is very unlikely, or not, it is essential to us that we should now see to it that we annex such conditions that, whether it does or does not pass into other hands, we shall have control of the situation. I will read the provision in regard to the taking over of the Glasgow telephone system by the Post Office Department in England :

On, or as soon as may be after the 31st of December, 1913, the Postmaster General shall buy and the local authority shall sell and convey all such plant as is, at the date aforesaid in use by the local authority for the purpose of supplying the means of telephonic communication under these presents, and as is suitable for the actual requirements, at the date aforesaid, of the telephone service of the post office within the licensed area. No plant shall in any case, be considered suitable for the requirements of the telephonic service of the post office, which has been brought into use without the sanction in writing of the Postmaster General, but as aforesaid, if any question arises as to the suitability of any of the plant of the local authority for the requirements of the telephonic service of the post office within the licensed area, such subject shall, in case of difference, be decided by arbitration. The value of all plant purchased by the Postmaster General under the foregoing articles shall be deemed to be its fair market value at the time of purchase, due regard being had to the nature, and the then condition of such plant and to the state of repair thereof and to the circumstance that it is in such a position as to be ready for immediate working and to its suitability for the purposes of a telephonic service and no addition shall be made to such value in respect of compulsory purchase, or of good will, or of any profits which might have been or be made by the local authority from the use of such plant. In the case of difference, such value as aforesaid shall be determined by arbitration. All matters which in pursuance of the conditions herein contained, are to be determined by arbitration, shall be referred to an arbiter to be mutually agreed upon by the Postmaster General and the local authority and failing such agreement, to be appointed on application of either of them, by the board of trade.

Here is a specific provision, that there shall be no fancy price paid, but only the actual value, without anything for good will or franchise or anything of that kind—only for such things as are absolutetly suitable; and no plant which shall not have the sanction of the Post Office Department before it is used shall be taken into consideration when the purchase is made—a provision which seems eminently reasonable under the circumstances, and would be conspicuously reasonable in regard to a proposition such as we are now dealing with. However, I have not asked to have so far-reaching a provision incorporated in the amendment I propose. I ask only a provision along the lines we adopted in 1904, but differing essentially from the provisions of the Act of 1904 in this respect, that it provides for what I think Canada should certainly have the right to—not the refuse of the lines which the Grand Trunk Pacific Company or the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company may desire not to retain, but the absolute right when we assume possession and control of this public undertaking, to take with it all those portions of railway which are essential parts of it, namely, the feeders constructed by this subsidiary company connected with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It occurs to me that this amendment is not in order. Under the British North America Act it is provided that:

It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or Bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue or of any tax or impost to any purpose that is not recommended to that House by message of the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or Bill is passed.

I take it that the real meaning and construction of these words is that no charge shall be imposed on the public revenue without a Bill or resolution for the purpose being first recommended by His Excellency the Governor General. By this Bill it is declared, in the first place, that the Governor General in Council shall have the power to take over all the branch lines of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. I think there can be no question that if the resolution stopped there it would be clearly out of order, because that would enable the Governor in Council to take over these roads, no matter what they might cost, and, of course, appropriate the moneys of the country for that purpose. It is very clear that a Bill of that kind could not be proposed to parliament except upon the recommendation of the Governor General in Council. Then it is also provided by the first part of the resolution that the government shall have power to proceed to a valuation of the company's property, take all necessary steps for that purpose, and, therefore necessarily incur any expense which might be necessary for the purpose of having an arbitration. That clearly would be also a charge upon the revenue. The amount, therefore, which, if this amendment passed the country would have to pay for these branch lines, would be fixed and determined by arbitration in the manner which this amendment suggests. There you have by the first part of the amendment authority given to the Governor General in Council to take over all these branches and also provision to take the necessary steps for arbitration and necessarily incident to that power, to incur whatever expenses would be necessary in order to take those proceedings. You have also a provision as to the mode in which the valuation shall be arrived at, that is to say from the valuation shall be deducted any subsidies which may have been paid. The only question to my mind is whether the proviso at the close prevents the principle which I am invoking from applying. The proviso is :

That nothing in this Act contained shall authorize the government to take over the said lines of railway or any of them without the consent of parliament, previously obtained, to the exercise of the said right of taking over as aforesaid.

It might be said that perhaps when the time arrived when the government would be in a position to exercise the powers conferred by this Act the government would still have to go to parliament and get its authority, but it seems to me that does not remove the objection because, by the previous provisions of the Act, the government would be powerless, it would have to take over the lines upon the valuation fixed under the provisions of the previous part of the section or not take them at all. Therefore, this seems to me to be an amendment which would be clearly within the prohibition of section 54 of the British North America Act, and which could only be brought before parliament by a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister has become very astute as to the manner in which we can vote supplies ; no doubt he has reason for that. But let me remind him that we have a very distinguished precedent for this, not yet four weeks old, in the case of the Shuswap and Thompson River Boom Company. In that case two amendments were moved, one by myself and another by a gentleman opposite. The Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Finance were present on that occasion and the House then incorporated in that Act this provision that we should not take the company's works over without the consent of parliament being first obtained. That was done not on the ground that it was necessary that the matter should be submitted to the Governor in Council for his sanction as being an appropriation of money, but on the ground that it would not be proper that we should impliedly authorize the Governor in Council or the government to take over a large undertaking without first submitting it to parliament. No such question as has been suggested arises. There is here no such thing as an appropriation of money. I realize as fully as the hon. gentleman the difficulty that any gentleman on this side of the House would have in bringing forward a measure of this kind.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How would you pay for the railroads unless you pay for them?

Mr. LENNOX. We will not pay for them until we take them, and we will not take them until parliament votes that we shall do so ; parliament will not so vote until the proposition is submitted to parliament, and it will not be submitted until the proper steps are taken by the government in power and the matter has been submitted to His Excellency. If my hon. friend looks at the supplementary agreement of the National Transcontinental Railway, 1904, he will probably not find that any sanction was obtained from His Excellency the Governor General on that occasion. The principle is the same, we get the option to take over the works, but whether we shall exercise that option or not is for us to determine when the 50 year period has expired. We are not committing ourselves by securing this option in the interest of the people to the extent of one cent. I am not asking the appropriation of one cent in this matter. I am asking parliament and the government, who should be the guardians of the people, to avail themselves of the opportunity they now have of securing the necessary condition to the granting of this extension of time, a condition which costs this parliament and the people of Canada not one cent, which appropriates not one cent out of the revenues, but which secures for the people something they ought to have. the possibility of not only obtaining these branch lines but of obtaining them on something like reasonable terms when the time arrives. I would like to ask the members of the government: when that provision was inserted in the Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Bill, a provision similar to the one we have here—not worded in the same way, but providing that parliament may take over that work—did we get the sanction of His Excellency the Governor General on that occasion ? No ; we did not think of such a thing. And that emanated from the government themselves, it was a provision introduced by the Minister of Railways and Canals, as I assume. It is perfectly idle, I submit, to raise this objection. I am surprised that my distinguished and learned friend the Minister of Public Works, astute lawyer and able counsel as he is, should suggest for a moment that this is a question of the appropriation of money. You have only to read the statute on one hand and the provision of this amendment on the other to see instantly that this is not a question of appropriating money. But, granted that he is right in saying that before we can complete this option we should obtain the sanction of His Excellency the Governor General, still, as a first step, it would be submittetd to parliament, and it would be so submittted only after His Excellency had given his approval for the taking over of the lines. I submit that this is only an option at the most ; there is no pretense of appropriating one dollar of the revenues of Canada by reason of the condition which, I submit, should be annexed to the granting of this extension of time to this railway company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If no other gentleman wishes to speak, I desire to say just a word. Before dealing with the question itself, I may perhaps not improperly remark that I think it is a pity that my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox), called upon as he was simply to discuss a constitutional question, should have thought it worth while to go far out of his way to suggest that there was some impropriety in the fact of my taking this objection. I exercised my right as a member of the committee to raise what seemed to me a good and substantial point of order.

Now, with regard to the original agreement between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific, the hon. gentleman suggests that he doubts whether that agreement was submitted to parliament with the approval of His Excellency. I cannot imagine that he is correct in that. I take it for granted that the agreement had received the consent of His Excellency and was so submitted to parliament. I have no doubt whatever that that was the case and I think anybody would say that it was necessary before parliament could properly consider it.

Now, I do not know that the case of the Shuswap Boom Company could be any precedent for action by you on this occasion because the provision in that Bill was altogether different from the provision here. This Bill proposes that the government shall take certain steps before coming to parliament, that it shall proceed to value all these properties, that it shall incur the obligation of having an arbitration and with power to appeal, and that all that shall be done——

Mr. FOSTER. Not necessarily.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, before coming to parliament. And then, if the consent of parliament was given, it would go through. But all these things have to be done before coming to parliament; and I submit that this imposes a money obligation on the country which can only be imposed by parliament upon the initiation of the government and the consent of the Governor General.

Mr. BARKER. I wish only to say a few words——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry—if I had known the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) was going to speak, I would not have closed——

Mr. LENNOX. We are in committee and can speak as often as we like.

Mr. BARKER. In 1904, parliament, in its wisdom, thought of protecting the future interests of the people of Canada by reserving certain rights in branch lines which might be built by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. After full consideration, that protection was passed by this parliament under the guidance of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and his ministers. We have now a palpable attempt to evade the protection that was then given to the people of this country and to enable the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to get rid of the right then reserved to the people by putting up a mere fiction company belonging to themselves—virtually the same company —which will build the branches and set the people of Canada at defiance. And this is being done with the knowledge of the right hon. gentleman and his cabinet. There is no concealing the fact; the truth is apparent on the face of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I rise to a point of order. It seems to me that it is very irregular for an hon. gentleman, in discussing a point of order, to travel outside and to attribute motives.

Mr. BARKER. We are discussing the amendment.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, a point of order has been raised.

Mr. BARKER. Unless the clause is passed, I will discuss the point itself.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The point of order has not been ruled upon.

Mr. FOSTER I can hardly yet think that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) can be serious in raising this as a point of order——

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is, very serious.

Mr. FOSTER. It certainly was surprising to me to hear the hon. gentleman. I have had quite a long experience in this House, and it surprises me to hear it argued that we cannot give advice and embody that advice, in a resolution or even in an Act, with reference to precautions that should be taken to safeguard the public interest. This is what is authorized: 'The Governor shall thereupon and thereafter have the right to take over——.' That is all that this amendment proposes to ask. Then, at the last, we have the words:

> Provided that nothing in this Act contained shall authorize the government to take over the said lines of railway or any of them without the consent of parliament, previously obtained.

Consent obtained for what? To the exercise of such rights. But before doing that we should get the authority of parliament to exercise that right. So I take it they will have no authority at all, even on that point. You go to work and make valuations, spend money, do anything at all until you have asked parliament and until parliament has exercised that right.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then what is the object?

Mr. FOSTER. The object is to preserve the right of the people to do that if they please, and so to preserve the public interest.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Parliament can do that at any time.

Mr. FOSTER. But parliament, sitting now and giving this extension to this peculiar company, thinks it is better, and having a perfect right to think so, to put that proviso in and so safeguard what they consider to be in the public interest.

Mr. LENNOX. I think it is my duty to endeavour to get the leader of the government to take some definite attitude with reference to this matter. I would like to see the government realize what their duty is, and I would like to see the right hon. gentleman realize his duty, because he is more than anybody else responsible for what we should now do. He is an old parliamentarian; he realizes the gravity of a proposition of this kind. Because a private member of this House wants to submit something that he believes is in the public interest, something which will never cost the country a dollar unless parliament sees fit to exercise the rights and privileges there secured, to say that a private member in the discharge of his duty cannot bring in a constitutional amendment to safeguard the rights of the people, because if that right is exercised by the government, it will cost money; to say that no private member has a right to submit an amendment which will give the country the right to acquire the property if parliament says so at the end of fifty years—I say that is a startling proposition. I appeal with confidence to the right hon. gentleman on account of his great experience. I always feel that I can with a good deal more confidence appeal to him than I can to some other members of the cabinet. I am sorry that the Minister of Public Works thinks I said something that was not complimentary.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think you were not discussing the constitutional point.

Mr. LENNOX. I will admit that. But I doubt whether my hon. friend relied much on the objection he takes. Astute lawyer as he is, always actuated by honest motives as lawyers are, I feel that he put it forward for what it was worth, and realized at the time that it wasn't worth very much. Now, in order to impress this matter upon the leader of the government, I wish to refer to the Act from which I take this clause.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Let us dispose of the point of order. I intend to refer the matter to the Speaker in consequence of its importance. If there was no proviso I would declare the point of order well taken.

Progress reported.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have had the opportunity of listening to the discussion and am inclined to rule that the point is not well taken. The amendment proceeds in the first place to state :

> In case the government, as defined in the schedule to the National Transcontinental Railway Act, 1903, in pursuance of the terms of the said schedule, shall at any time determine to undertake the operation of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway, the government shall thereupon and thereafter have the right to take over——

And so on. The amendment down to the word 'provided' is unquestionably within the rule, and the point would be well taken. But the words following the word 'provided' :

> That nothing in this Act contained shall authorize the government to take over the said lines of railway or any of them without the consent of parliament, previously obtained.

Modify the earlier portion and would preclude, as I view it, the possibility of the expenditure of any money for the purpose without the consent of parliament being first obtained, and then would be the time to procure the consent of the Governor General and submit the matter by resolution to the House.

Mr. BARKER. I regret that I was interrupted in the few remarks I was about to make by the astute Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). Having heard so much about his astuteness, I would be almost inclined to think he had directed that astuteness to-night to raising a point of order in order that it might prevent the completion of the discussion before nine o'clock. I suppose that the Bill, under the order of the House, will now have to stand over; but being so very astute, it may be difficult to know in what particular direction he was displaying that astuteness. I was saying that in the Act of 1904, this government, at the instance of hon. members on this side, had made provision to protect the interests of the people in years to come. When the provinces were so progressing that no man could at that time foresee what might be the general public interest in the future, we thought it absolutely essential, looking forward to that future to provide that, should the leased property be surrendered, we should have the right to take over branches that might be absolutely essential to the main property. In all fairness, honesty and statesmanlike prevision, we consider that we were entitled to provide proper protection. Therefore we did provide that, in certain eventuality, we should have the right to take over certain branches, if parliament saw fit. Now, what is being done, palpably done, to evade that provision and done—if the right hon. gentleman and his cabinet did not see it, they know it now—with the apparent and almost positive intention of evading the condition parliament imposed in 1904? We have the right by act of parliament to take over certain branch lines, should it be in the interests of the country to take them over. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) asked how do we know that the people then interested in these branch lines companies will be the same as the Grand Trunk Pacific to-day? What a wonderfully shrewd motion that is. We know who are interested in that company to-day. We know that the effect of the Acts they are trying to get through this House will be to evade a condition imposed upon the Grand Trunk Pacific in the public interest. And if they bring in a Bill here, under their own auspices, a Bill in which, beyond all doubt or question, nobody else to-day is interested —if they bring in a Bill to enable them to take out of that contract what may be most valuable property, why should we not put on record in the Acts of parliament that the company they form are bound by the original contract, so that those who become associated with them may know the terms upon which they come in and will be bound as the Grand Trunk Pacific would be and as they ought to be.

Mr. GRAHAM. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that the clause proposed is identical with the one in the original Act referring to the Grand Trunk Pacific itself? I think it is far different.

Mr. BARKER. Will my hon. friend bring in the original clause?

Mr. GRAHAM. That would not be an answer to my question.

Mr. BARKER. It is a very common and ancient custom to answer one question by asking another. But are we to go on year after year and never get more enlightened? The hon. gentleman himself has had an opportunity of knowing what was thought right in 1904. But he is going backward. Are we not therefore to go forward? If we find a weakness, if there be a weakness in what was then proposed, why should we not correct it? Or shall we do as the Minister of Railways and Canals proposes, cut away our protection altogether? Surely there can be no question as to what we should do. What possible excuse has this company to come here and say that the branch lines which, in the original contract, were to be built by the company, subject to certain rights on the part of the people of Canada, shall, by our own acts and concurrence, be allowed to be built by somebody else who will not be bound by those conditions. Why, talk to any business man on such a subject and he will say that the proposition is one of pure idiocy. Does the hon. gentleman suppose that if, as an individual, he were making a bargain and were a shareholder or proprietor or interested in the contract, he would be taken in by such a palpable evasion. I give him credit for too much common sense to believe it. But of course he is only dealing for the people of Canada, and we know what, the late Mr. Vanderbilt is supposed to have said about the public.

Mr. JOHNSTON. What did he say?

Progress reported.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

The hour for private Bills having expired, the House resumed consideration of the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act and the proposed amendment of Mr. W. J. Roche thereto.

Mr. MONK. As I said, Mr. Speaker, before you rose at six o'clock, what impressed me most, during this discussion regarding what took place in Manitoba, is the failure by hon. gentlemen opposite to deny that what is called 'the thin red line' was perpetrated either by Leach himself or under his direction. Surely if any alterations had to be made in the electoral lists, they came naturally under the purview of the returning officer in each constituency. Although there may not be any provision especially in the Act, under the circumstances in which those alterations were made, the returning officer was called upon, in common fairness and justice, to notify the candidates before making any changes. Did he notify those with regard to whom he intended altering the lists? No, the alterations were made by a person or persons having an authority; and once made, whatever might have been their effect—whether they cancelled entirely the names of the voters or transferred them to distant polls is a matter of no importance although one as to which there has been a great deal of quibbling—those alterations should have been brought to the knowledge of those who were affected. But we have no excuse whatever offered in that regard. The whole discussion has impressed me with the absolute certainty that what was perpetrated that time was the result of a preconceived scheme which successfully worked the disastrous results that have been subsequently condemned on all sides.

My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie spoke at great length of defects in the present Manitoba law, but to my mind none of these defects were of a really grave character and none confuted the crowning principle that finally this making of the lists in Manitoba comes under the view of the judge, as it does in the province of Quebec. There are defects in the electoral law of the province of Quebec but that does not mean that our electoral law is not a singularly satisfactory one. Even admitting that defects do exist in Manitoba that is no ground for the sweeping change this Bill contemplates. When in 1898 we decided to adopt the provincial lists in principle did we not know that defects would be found in the provincial laws exactly as defects were found under our own Dominion Franchise Act? It is the merest flimsy pretext to say that because in some particular respect the electoral law of a province is deficient we will sweep aside the principle we adopted in 1898 and on the eve of an election and after the issue of the writs, that the government will take unto itself the entire preparation of the voters' lists. The amendment of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) after laying down the truism that this Bill discriminates against Manitoba and British Columbia compared with the other provinces, declares:

That this law is a radical departure from the principle of accepting provincial voters' lists and is invidious and unjustifiable.

I stated this afternoon that there is no unorganized territory within the limits of the province of Quebec and that therefore there is no justification for this enactment in reference to Quebec, because the whole province is organized municipally and under the provincial law every man who has the right to vote can be placed upon the list by the proper officer. My right hon. friend may ask: if such be the same, why do I fear the passage of this enactment.

Mr. DEVLIN. There is unorganized territory in Quebec.

Mr. MONK. Where?

Mr. DEVLIN. In the county of Wright which I represent there are 572,397 acres of unorganized territory.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend was not here this afternoon when I placed before the House what I think was an unanswerable argument. Let me repeat for his benefit that every piece of territory in the province of Quebec is under the control of a municipal council and it is therefore organized.

Mr. DEVLIN. It comes under the municipal code in as much as it may be under the control of the county council, but it may not necessarily be organized into a municipality and the residents of a township which has no municipal organization would not have the right to vote unless they have property in an adjoining township.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend is mistaken. Let him look at article 32 of the municipal code, which says: That if there is no local municipality in any given place within the limits of the county—and all parts of the province of Quebec are within the limits of a county—then the county council replaces the local municipality, and so the secretary is obliged to prepare a list of electors for these 500,000 acres my hon. friend refers to, exactly as would the secretary treasurer of a local council. There can be no doubt whatever about that, and I will not discuss the point further. True, there is no local council and there are no local councillors, but, if there are not the very small number of people required by our municipal code to form a municipal council, in that case the administration is by the county council.

Mr. TALBOT. Does the county council make electoral lists?

Mr. MONK. Our electoral law prescribes that the secretary treasurer of the council, whatever council it may be, must make an electoral list, and if he has under his control territory which belongs properly to the county council where there is no local municipal organization, he should make an electoral list for that part of his territory. There is no question about that whatever. My hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross) asked me had I any knowledge of a case where a county secretary treasurer had made such a list and my reply to him is that I have not, and the reason is because there are not many places where there is no local council. But if there were such a place the duty of the officer would be perfectly plain, and if he did not fulfil his duty under the provisions of our election law any party interested could apply to a judge for a remedy, and the judge could order the secretary treasurer to prepare the electoral lists.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. What control has this parliament over such an officer?

Mr. MONK. We have no more control over him than over any other municipal officer, but parliament has adopted the principle that we shall take out lists from these municipal officers. We receive the electoral lists from the registrars who receive them from the secretary treasurer and the registrar is a municipal officer. It is true they grumble about it but nevertheless they forward copies of these lists to Ottawa and so far no difficulty has been experienced. In fact when this franchise question was discussed in this parliament in 1908, I spoke of it in my own county, and knowing that generally speaking our provincial lists are well made, I took the ground that I was not opposed to the change, and I think our experience in the province of Quebec has justified me in that. That being the case, and I know it is a fair subject for discussion, and it is because it is a fair subject for discussion that I have most fear. Here are already two hon. gentlemen from the province of Quebec who mention large areas in that province where there is no possibility of having an electoral list. That is what my hon. friend from Wright (Mr. Devlin) has stated.

Mr. DEVLIN. There will be every possibility under this Bill.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend takes the ground at the present moment that there is no possibility. If that were the case, then I would have to admit that there is a large desolate area in the province of Quebec where there are very few people, where it is very easy to send people, and where people might spring up suddenly like Cadmus' soldiers, and those people would have to be provided with the electoral franchise.

Mr. DEVLIN. In the county of Wright they all vote honestly.

Mr. MONK. I have no doubt about that. There was an old French Canadian in my county who said that he believed everybody was perfectly honest, but that he had misgivings about everybody. What would happen in the province of Quebec would be that this enabling enactment would enable the government on the eve of an election, after the issue of the writ, to send out persons to make electoral lists. I know of ten or twelve or fifteen constituencies in the province of Quebec which would be liable to this kind of invasion. How do I know that in my own constituency, almost an urban constituency, portions of which are densely populated, some gentlemen on the eve of the election would not find some spot unorganized municipality in his opinion, where he would have to make a list? I say this is a most dangerous enactment so far as the province of Quebec is concerned. The Transcontinental Railway is at present under construction through several of those constituencies—through parts where there is no municipal organization. If the idea propounded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) and the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin), and sustained by the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Ross), be correct, there will be the opportunity to send in an officer to prepare a list, conforming himself, says the Bill, as far as possible to the law. Well, there is only one law, and it is perfectly clear, that is, that you can only make an electoral list between the 1st and the 15th of September. How can a man go in there and make a list at any time, and how can he, between the issue of the writ and the final event, conform even in the slightest degree to those dispositions of our Electoral Act, which require two stages—a revision by a council of men, jurymen, so to speak, with a right of final appeal to a judge thirty days after? And what will be the position of a candidate who does not happen to be a friend of the parties carrying out this scheme? Will he run up into those far northern latitudes in order to find out whether lists are being prepared, and leave the rest of the constituency, where are the legally qualified electors? The truth is that in these cases he will have to trust to chance, and wait patiently until some time after the election, when these parties have returned to the proper seat of the election, and reported as to the results. That is the position, and I say that it places in doubt a considerable proportion of the electoral districts of the province of Quebec. What we are asked to do this evening is to sanction that principle, which is really a return, under a slightly varied form, to the old rotten borough system as it existed in England before the Reform Bill. It is nothing else. We know from past experience that these things are possible. The men who would be suddenly brought into constituencies would be the legitimate successors of what used to be called the pot-wallopers—people brought into a constituency at the last minute in order to change the free expression of the will of the people. Our hon. friends may argue that this is to suppose that the government would abuse its powers. Governments do abuse their powers as much now as they did before the Reform Bill, and to ask us to allow that latitude is to expose us to the danger of the intolerable oppression that existed before the passage of that same Reform Bill. Under these circumstances what is our duty? It seems to me that our duty is very clear—it is to resist the granting of such power, to resist the possibility of a renewal of those abuses. I speak only for myself. We have in our hands a remedy, which is the old remedy which enabled the people of England to secure the redress of the great grievances from which they suffered during centuries, that is, to refuse supply to the government until they have abandoned this unjust and unfair pretension; and I tell you, Mr. Speaker, and this House, that as far as I am concerned, that being the only remedy in our hands, I will avail myself of it to the fullest extent. This is not the case of an ordinary grievance. It is not the case of applying under ordinary circumstances the old adage that redress goeth before supply. This is not a question of policy; it is not a question of a grievance which at a later date can be cured; it is not a question of a grievance as to which there can be any doubt; it is a question of an imminent danger of oppression. That is the way I view it. We are more or less on the eve of an election, and the government ask this House for power to control the franchise in the constituencies, under circumstances which are but thinly veiled in this enactment—the old abuse by which the Crown prevented the free expression of the will of the people during such a long time in England.

It is for us at the present moment, for those of us at least who do not feel disposed to grant that exorbitant power, to resist it by all the means at our command and the means to my mind are very plain. They are to refuse the grant of supplies. The government asks us to give them this power that will enable them, under the circumstances detailed in this enactment, to go into the constituencies and prepare their own lists contrary to the existing law, contary to the understanding, contrary to what at present is our best and only guarantee, and at the same time they ask us to vote supply, to give them money. The proposition seems to me to be one absolutely untenable and I would not hesitate, fearless of what would be the consequence. to say that I would never consent to such a thing as that. We must follow the very celebrated example of some of our ancestors of old. The Commons of England mustered in the monastery of Westminster, they knew how to close the doors of the refectory and the cloister, shut themselves up and refused to be moved for supply or scutage or aid to the King unless he would come down and cure their grievances, and this they did at the very peril of their lives. We stand in no such peril. Speaker Seymour, I think it was, was committed to the Temple by the King because, speaking in the name of the Commons, he had complained of the cost of the maintenance of the King's mistresses. This is a far more serious grievance, this is a question of the relinquishment unto the government, the giving to the government in its own discretion, of the preparation of the electoral lists and to my mind nothing having any weight whatever has been laid before us to show that this very sweeping change is necessary. Under these circumstances I for one would be faithful to the old principle and I would refuse supply until this grave grievance has been swept away.

Mr. EMMANUEL B. DEVLIN (Wright). I am sorry I had not the opportunity of being in my seat this afternoon when the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) began his speech. I always admire the hon. member when he speaks in the House for his courtesy and for the soundness, as a rule, of his arguments. But this afternoon, in listening to him, I felt that he made certain statements which cannot be borne out by the law as it exists in Quebec. His statement that there is very little or practically no unorganized territory in the province of Quebec, is certainly not borne out by the facts. I have not had occasion to look up the exact extent of the unorganized territory in that province, but I have already cited that in the county of Wright we have 572,397 acres of land. In the county of Pontiac we have 11,577,618 acres of unorganized territory with a population of 1,339 people. I feel that if this Bill will give to the people living in that portion of the province which is unorganized territory the right to vote, then it certainly overcomes a difficulty which we have felt in that province for a very long time and will be an excellent measure of justice to those people.

Mr. MONK.

Mr. MONK. Has the hon. member read section 17 of the Electoral Act, which provides that the secretary-treasurer of each municipality must prepare the lists of that municipality?

Mr. DEVLIN. Is the hon. member quoting from the statute of 1903?

Mr. MONK. The Act of 1893 as amended up to 1903.

Mr. DEVLIN. Section 9a of this Bill provides:

9a. Notwithstanding anything to the contrary herein contained, voters' lists for the portions of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec which consist of territory not municipally organized and where there is no regular assessment or valuation roll——

Those are the words that I would like to point out:

—upon which the voters' lists are based——

—&c. The first section which deals with elections in this country and which applies naturally to the province of Quebec is section 6 of the Dominion Elections Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 6, which reads.

For the purposes of any Dominion election held within the limits of a province, the voters' lists shall, except as herein otherwise provided, be those prepared for the several polling divisions established, and which, on the sixtieth day next preceding the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election.

Again section 10 reads.

The qualifications necessary to entitle any person to vote at a Dominion election in any province shall, except as herein otherwise provided, be those established by the laws of that province as necessary to entitle such person to vote in the same part of the province at a provincial election.

Again section 21:

So long as and whenever, for any reason, a certified copy of any list of voters as finally revised has not been transmitted to or received by the clerk of the Crown in Chancery, pursuant to the provisions of this Act, the original and legal list for Dominion elections shall be the same as that for provincial elections.

Referring to the old law of the province of Quebec to be found in the Revised Statutes of Quebec, the law then practically was, as pointed out by the hon. gentleman:

The secretary-treasurer of each municipality shall, between the first and fifteenth days of the month of September, in each year, make in duplicate, subdivided before each polling subdivision, a list, in alphabetical order, of all persons who, according to the valuation roll——

I again point out the word 'valuation.'

—then in force in the municipality for municipal purposes, appear to be electors by reason of the immovable property possessed or occupied by them in any manner within the municipality or by reason of being otherwise qualified as set forth in article 9.

There were subsequent amendments to that law and we find in the statutes of Quebec, 3 Edward VII, chapter 9, this provision :

Section 9. The following persons, and no other, being males, and who, at the time of the deposit of the list under articles 25 and 26 of this Act, are of the full age of twenty-one years, subjects of His Majesty by birth or naturalization and not otherwise legally disqualified, shall be entered upon the list of electors :

1. Owners or occupants, in good faith, of immovable property estimated, according to the valuation roll in force, at a sum of at least three hundred dollars in real value, in any city, municipality entitled to return one or more members to the legislative assembly, or $200 in real value or $20 in annual value in any other municipality.

It goes on to speak of tenants, teachers and so on. Then, we find in this law the meaning of the word 'municipality' as follows :

The word municipality means every municipality of a parish or part of a parish, of a township or part of a township, or united township, of a village, of a town existing under the operation of the Municipal Code, and every town or city municipality incorporated by charter or special Act.

Now, I see what the hon. member (Mr. Monk) had in mind. He quoted, as I understand, section 32 of the Municipal Code. It is perfectly true that that section brings such unorganized territory under the county council for municipal purposes, but it does not bring it under the county council for the purposes of voting at provincial or federal elections:

The county council may, by a resolution, after public notice to that effect has been duly given, previous to the passing thereof, and approved and published in the manner prescribed by article 41, erect into a parish municipality, under the name which belongs to it, according to the rules prescribed, any territory included in one or more townships or part of townships, whether or not erected into municipalities, and which has been constituted into a civil parish, provided that such parish contains a population of three hundred souls and is wholly situated in the county.

Mr. MONK. I did not quote that section. I quoted section 28.

Mr. DEVLIN. Yes, that provides for municipal government for municipal purposes, but it does not bring the unorganized territory under the provisions of the statute governing elections.

Mr. MONK. Why not?

Mr. DEVLIN. Because, to begin with, there is no valuation roll upon which the voters' list may be founded.

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. gentleman pretend that one must be on the valuation roll in order to have his name entered on the electoral list?

Mr. DEVLIN. The lists are prepared from the valuation roll.

Mr. MONK. But the hon. gentleman surely knows that the man who earns $300 a year is not entered on the valuation roll, but his name must be put on the voters' list. It has been held, time and again, in our province that it is not necessary to be on the valuation roll in order to be on the voters' list.

Mr. DEVLIN. I know that. But my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is speaking of the preparation of voters' lists. Now, in the general preparation, the voters' list is taken from the valuation roll. My hon. friend has surely mistaken the purpose of section 28 of the Municipal Code. I had not previously looked at that in this argument, but, of course, I knew about it.

Mr. MONK. I do not think the hon. gentleman has looked very much into this question.

Mr. DEVLIN. I certainly have had reason to, because I am more affected by it than is the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I have had experience.

Mr. MONK. I have no doubt that this proposed enactment is very useful to my hon. friend (Mr. Devlin).

Mr. DEVLIN. It is very useful because it will bring into existence as voters at the election people who should have the right to vote, but who have no right to vote today. I certainly have not gone to these people to ask them whether they will vote for a Liberal or a Conservative condidate.

Mr. MONK. I am surprised that my hon. friend has not had them put on the list already. They should be there.

Mr. DEVLIN. No, I have never put men on the list who had not the right to vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. You mean, men who would not vote right.

Mr. DEVLIN. But, going on with the legal argument, I would point out that section 32 provides that unorganized territory may be erected into a municipality provided it has a population of 300 souls and is wholly situated within the county. But, what about the parish that does not contain 300 souls? As a lawyer of the province of Quebec, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk knows it cannot be.

Mr. MONK. I did not refer to that article, but I quoted the article I did refer to.

Mr. DEVLIN. The hon. gentleman referred to section 32.

Mr. MONK. If I did so, it was by mistake.

Mr. DEVLIN. Article 32 covers the point the hon. gentleman wanted to make—shows how this territory is brought under the authority of the county council. But I will point out that there is no provision in the law of the province of Quebec to-day which gives the people living in this unorganized territory the right to vote. The hon. gentleman says it would be only in very remote parts of the province where such cases might be found. I would point out that in the township of Denholme, I think it is, within a very few miles of the city of Ottawa, the residents there, unless they possess property in adjoining parishes municipally erected, have no right to vote. Above the village of Maniwaki or the village of Montcerf, which is only about 117 miles from Ottawa, there is a very large population of farmers who have not the right to vote.

Mr. MONK. Why not?

Mr. DEVLIN. Simply because the law of the province does not allow it, and we have not those the hon. gentleman suggests we should have to put them on the list.

Mr. MONK. Are they qualified ?

Mr. DEVLIN. They are property holders and otherwise qualified, but they have not the right to vote.

Mr. MONK. They must have.

Mr. DEVLIN. Not under the law.

Mr. MONK. If my hon. friend will allow me, the Electoral Act specifically imposes upon the secretary-treasurer of the municipality which controls these people the duty of making a list and entering their names in it.

Mr. DEVLIN. Where does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) find that?

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman quoted from it a few minutes ago—it is section 17, which provides that the secretary-treasurer of each municipality must between the 1st and 15th of September make the list and put upon that list the names of those who, by the assessment roll, have the right to vote, 'or who, by reason of being otherwise qualified, as set forth in article 9' and so on —providing for the case exactly where there is no assessment roll.

Mr. DEVLIN. What particular part of section 9 gives that right?

Mr. MONK. There is a large enumeration in that article. There are, for instance, those who earn a total of $300 a year—say those who work on the Transcontinental Railway.

Mr. DEVLIN. Let me read section 17 :

The secretary-treasurer of each municipality shall, between the first and fifteenth days of the month of September, in each year, make in duplicate, subdivided for each polling subdivision, a list, in alphabetical order, of all persons who, according to the valuation roll then in force in the municipality for municipal purposes, appear to be electors by reason of the immovable property possessed or occupied by them in any manner within the municipality or by reason of being otherwise qualified as set forth in article 9.

Now I will read to the hon. gentleman article 9, subsection 1 :

Owners or occupants in good faith, or immovable property estimated, according to the valuation roll in force, at a sum of at least three hundred dollars in real value, in any city municipality entitled to return one or more members to the legislative assembly, or two hundred dollars in real value or twenty dollars in annual value in any other municipality.

But if they are not organized municipally how are they going to possess the right?

Mr. MONK. Read subsection 11.

Mr. DEVLIN (reading) :

Persons who are domiciled in the electoral district, and who draw, from their salary or wages, in money or in effects, or from some business, employment, trade or profession, or from some investment, a revenue of at least three hundred dollars per annum, or persons who work by the piece in factories and who derive at least three hundred dollars per annum therefrom.

Does that cover the son of a farmer who gets a salary from his father on the farm?

Mr. MONK. What about the $300 a year men?

Mr. DEVLIN. I am now speaking of farmers in the province of Quebec. We are not providing for transients, people that may pass through a town and that no honest man will attempt to put upon the list. I think the hon. gentleman ought to be satisfied by this time that there is a large portion of the population in the province of Quebec who have, under the existing law, no right to vote at a Dominion election. But by section 9a of this Bill these people will have a right to vote and therefore justice will be done to them. I have no hesitation in saying that this Bill will meet with the universal approval of the people of the province of Quebec, and that it will cover a long felt want. The only reason I have heard hon. gentlemen adduce against this Bill is the fear that they may have dishonest officials to operate it. That is a very foolish argument. If every time we wished to pass a law in this House we were deterred by the fear that it would not be efficiently enforced, or that some dishonest officials might put it into operation, why, we would pass no law whatever in this House. When I first glanced at this Bill I immediately thought of the poor people residing in the county which I represent, people who have said to me time and again: It is a shame that your parliament does not pass a law which will give us the right to vote. Merchants have come to me, farmers have come to me and have asked why their names should not be put upon the voters' list.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman ever appealed to the legislature of Quebec to remedy that defect he complains of?

Mr. DEVLIN. I leave to the legislature of Quebec to deal with matters coming within the sphere of their jurisdiction. At the present time I am considering what laws this House is called upon to pass.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this Bill propose to fix a basis of representation ?

Mr. DEVLIN. No, but this Bill will bring into force in unorganized territories the provisions of the law as they exist in organized territories.

Mr. FOSTER. If this Bill becomes law will it empower you to place on the revised list any man anywhere who has not, under the province in which he lives already, the property qualification for a voter?

Mr. DEVLIN. Speaking for the province of Quebec, provided he has under the provincial law the necessary qualifications of an elector, and those qualifications are laid down in section 9.

Mr. FOSTER. If he has those necessary qualifications now?

Mr. DEVLIN. But he has not.

Mr. FOSTER. This Bill does not propose to amend the qualification.

Mr. DEVLIN. Not at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Then how will he have the right to vote under this Bill?

Mr. DEVLIN. Because this Bill will bring him under the operation of section 9a I have just read.

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary herein contained, voters' lists for the portions of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec which consist of territory not municipally organized and where there is no regular assessment or valuation roll upon which voters' lits are based.

The moment a man lives in unorganized territory he has at present no right to vote, but the moment we pass this Bill then he will be brought under the operation of the provisions as we have them to-day. As the Minister of Justice remarks, the new lists which will be prepared under this Bill will be prepared according to the laws of the province as they now exist, and, therefore people who have the necessary qualifications to vote in organized territory will then have the right to vote in unorganized territory. That is the whole point. Therefore, I have no hesitation in saying that I will give this Bill my entire support. I cannot speak with any personal knowledge of the operation of the election laws in the province of Manitoba, but I have no hesitation in saying from a study of the Bill and from what I have heard in this House that this Bill is going to cover a great many irregularities. Surely the people of Manitoba are not as dishonest as hon. gentlemen opposite wish to make them out. Surely if hon. gentlemen opposite have had amongst their organizers certain dishonest people who have given wrong affidavits or who have taken from the proper authorities the seal of the court and placed it in their headquarters, if hon. gentlemen have had that experience with their organizers, there is no reason to suppose that if they come into the Liberal camp they will not find men who are prepared to act honestly and to put this law into proper execution.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to name some of the irregularities in the Manitoba Election Act?

Mr. DEVLIN. I am speaking, not of irregularities in the law itself, but in the operation of the law.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Some of Mr. Leach's work possibly.

Mr. DEVLIN. No, I was referring to some of the affidavits that were fraudulently obtained, according to newspaper reports.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Is there a provision in this Act that an enumerator can take it upon himself to be the assessor of property in unorganized territory in the province of Quebec, so as to put values on farms in order to find out whether the owners are qualified to vote in that province?

Mr. DEVLIN. We have a provision which gives a man the right to vote according to valuation. The hon. gentleman's objection is well taken, but it has no basis in fact, because the municipal councils, under the working of the provincial Act, will find out what is the valuation of that property before the owner is allowed to vote. There will be absolutely no difficulty on that score. I have no hesitation in giving my cordial support to this Bill, as I believe it is one of the best ever submitted to this House.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). Mr. Speaker, I am not a lawyer but the arguments which have been advanced by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat seem to me to have been most extraordinarily mixed—so much so that I could not help coming to the conclusion that he must have a very poor notion of the provisions of this measure. Of the two arguments which have been advanced from the province of Quebec up to the present, I could certainly have no hesitation whatever in giving the preference to that submitted by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk).

Mr. DEVLIN. If I were in your place, I would have no hesitation either.

Mr. LAKE. I am aware of that, but I am not speaking from a party point of view. I am speaking from the point of view of clearness, and I should certainly say that in that respect the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has been a lamentable failure. Let me call attention first of all to the fact that there has not been one argument put forward so far to justify the application of this measure to the province of British Columbia. We have not had a British Columbian declare that the working of the Dominion election law in that province is unsatisfactory, and that such a radical alteration in the law of the Dominion is required as regards that province. The only reason, it seems to me, which has induced the government to apply this Bill to that province is that the administration of the provincial law with regard to elections is honest and satisfactory and that is what this government is anxious to avoid.

Mr. D. ROSS. Admitting for the sake of argument that we have an honest voters' list in British Columbia, does my hon. friend pretend that when that list is not adapted for federal purposes we should not pass a law to adapt it for those purposes ?

Mr. LAKE. No argument has been laid before the House to show that it is not adapted for federal purposes and no complaints have been raised.

Mr. D. ROSS. Surely my hon. friend is aware, if he knows anything about the lists in British Columbia, that in several instances provincial districts and federal districts do not coincide and consequently the lists are not adapted for federal purposes.

Mr. LAKE. I am willing to admit that I know but little about the law of British Columbia, but what I say is that we have not heard any member from that province argue that there is any reason or necessity for any change. If there were no other circumstances, those in which the Bill was introduced are sufficient to create grave suspicion as to the honesty of the government. This measure is one which is bound to have most far-reaching effects. It is perhaps the most important Bill with regard to elections which has ever been brought before the people. It changes our election law in three important particulars, In this short Bill of eight pages, we find three great principals embodied. First, a complete abandonment of the secrecy of the ballot. That is a matter which deserves a Bill for itself and the long and earnest consideration of this House. The second is the abandonment of the principle of provincial franchises, which was adopted by this House, after very long and careful discussion, some years ago. Third, it adopts the principle that a company or an association incorporated for political purposes may collect and distribute without restriction an election fund of any size and thus evade all the provisions with regard to individuals. This is the Bill which was promised in the speech from the Throne at the opening of this session. The government allowed four or five months of this session to pass before bringing it down. The ordinary explanation of this delay would be that the government had been spending a great part of that time in considering the details ; but if we are to believe the Minister of Justice, that was not the case at all. According to him, its chief provisions were put on paper some four or five months before the beginning of the session and had then received the consideration of the government. Let me recall to the House words he used in moving the first reading, after we had been in session some four or five months. He said:

> The measure I am now introducing is one I committed to paper some four or five months before the present session, and with the exception of one or two details which remained for further consideration, these provinces had therefore that consideration at my hands and the hands of the government.

It would therefore seem that the government has decided upon the details of this Bill, except in one or two minor points, months and months ago and yet they wait until near the close of the session, when the members are weary with their parliamentary duties. to place this important measure before the House. The Minister of Justice explained some unimportant details of the Bill and then proceeded to say :

> The other amendments in this Bill are of possibly minor character altogether.

But let us see what the Minister of Justice describes as being of a minor character. First of all there is this section 1 which the Minister of Justice himself now admits to be the main feature of the measure. He was speaking of that which occurred in Manitoba last election when large numbers of persons had been disfranchised by the thin red line outrage, and he said :

> I am confident that the omission of such names were few in number and that there was nothing of intentional wrong-doing. However that may be, it is of interest that provision should be made in the Elections Act which will authorize and permit the officers of the law to make that redistribution of names.

That is all he said about that matter, and he goes on to explain why he considers even that necessary :

A riding for Dominion purposes may contain portions of a dozen different polling subdivisions established for provincial purposes and the officials conducting the Dominion elections, have of necessity to transcribe from the general list to a special list for the purpose of that poll, the names of the voters who properly ought to be assigned to the particular poll. I am proposing, in the Bill I have prepared, a clause which will authorize that to be done.

That is all the explanation that was given by the Minister of Justice of this most important portion of the Bill, this portion of the Bill which completely abrogates the adoption of the provincial franchise in so far as it relates to two great provinces. This want of candour, this want of honesty in the explanation of the Bill by the Minister of Justice, makes one naturally very suspicious of the intentions of the government in introducing such a measure. Another of these minor details which the Minister of Justice referred to involves the secrecy of the ballot and this is what he said about it:

I do not seek to conceal from the House the fact that to remedy this, to permit such numbered ballot or ballots containing marks of identification to be counted, is a radical departure from the whole principle of the Dominion Elections Act. It has been said by learned judges, and no doubt correctly said, that the ruling principle of the Dominion Elections Act is secrecy at all costs, secrecy even at the cost of defeating the will of the people by preventing the counting of ballots which are perfectly good when they leave the hands of the electors, but which may afterwards be vitiated by the deputy returning officer or some other officials. If it is a question whether that over-riding principle of secrecy is or is not to be encroached upon for the sake of preserving the individual vote and securing a true expression of the will of the voter and of the people, then, in my judgment, the principle of secrecy ought to give way, and not the principle of giving to the voter the means of expressing his true wish at the polls and carrying out that wish in the counting of the ballots.

How could any intelligent man say that this was a minor detail of this franchise Bill? Now, in addition to this want of candour of the Minister of Justice when he introduced the Bill, it has occurred to me that when he moved the second reading he made statements which were calculated to mislead the House and which were only partially the truth. Speaking of the thin red line outrage he said it was the returning officers who had used the thin red line, but every member of the House must have known perfectly well that that statement was a suppression of the whole truth, and that in most cases these alterations on the voters' lists were made by Mr. Leach, the organizer of the Liberal party in Manitoba. Again, the Minister of Justice stated that these alterations were authorized by the provincial law, only, that a black line was to be used, and he said that these alterations were made by officials of the provincial government, keeping back the fact that the authorization in the provincial law is only given to judges who are of course officers of the federal government. In other particulars I noticed time and again that the Minister of Justice was suppressing the true facts and was not candid with the House. Nothing could be more calculated to arouse suspicion than the statements made by that hon. gentleman both on the first reading and the second reading of the Bill. Now, the very first feature of this Bill involves a departure from the principle of adopting provincial lists for Dominion elections. I have frequently been asked on the public platform if this government had not failed to carry out all the promises it made the people before it came to power, and I have always answered that the only one promise they kept was the adoption of the provincial franchise. I regret to say that I shall have to abandon even that moderate praise for the government as to carrying out its pre-election promises. for it seems that now they have abandoned that pledge with all the rest.

All of the arguments which were made by the Minister of Justice in urging that the first clause of this Bill should be adopted were directed to the necessity for a proper and thorough revision of the lists drawn up by the provincial authorities, on the ground that no opportunity was given for such revision; and yet we find that the provision he is making is simply for the drawing up of lists by the officials of this government, and for no revision whatever, either by the officials this government may appoint or by the judges who should be appointed under the provincial law. The Bill states that after the writs of election have been issued the government shall have the lists prepared, and, as my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) pointed out, the time occupied in carrying out the provision of the provincial Act is so long that it would make it absolutely impossible in almost every case for any revision of these lists to take place. So that the Minister of Justice could not have been sincere in arguing that there was a necessity for the revision of the provincial lists. What he desires, and what hon. gentlemen opposite desire, is simply that they shall draw up their own lists subject to no revision whatever, and, in drawing up improper lists, shall be in a position to capture the country at the next general election.

The hon. Minister of Justice spoke of the administration and preparation of the lists by the provincial authorities as being an engine of tyranny and oppression. To my mind there has been nothing whatever proved in this House against the honourable, careful manner in which the provincial lists in the province of Manitoba have been prepared. But I think we had very full and very complete proof of the tyranny and oppression which we are to expect from the officials of this government, if they are to draw up these lists, in the speech delivered here the other day by the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce), who showed the abominable manner in which an attempt had been made to steal his constituency from him at the last election by stuffing the list with the names of persons who had never existed or had left the country or had died before the list was drawn up. To the charge that there has been tyranny and oppression in the preparation and administration of the lists in Manitoba, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) gave a most exhaustive reply last night. To my mind that reply was absolutely unanswerable; it has not been answered yet, and I do not believe any attempt will be made to answer it. For every statement he made he gave chapter and text, and I am convinced that the Prime Minister sitting in his seat in the House, was more than half persuaded that he had been forced into a most improper measure by false representations on the part fo his followers. What evidence has been offered to us on the other side of fraud and oppression? We have had assertions, but the only proof we have had has been innumerable extracts from newspapers, mostly from the Manitoba 'Free Press,' which we all know is a paper with an extreme party bias, which receives an enormous amount of pecuniary assistance every year from this government. Let me instance the case of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway), who stood up in this House with a list in his hand and told us that he had lived for nearly thirty years in his present constituency, that he knew almost every man in it, and that he was prepared to say that there were a large number of names on that list which should not be there, and that a number of names had been omitted from it which should be there. He was promptly challenged to mention a name on the list that should not be there. He stated that he could give the names in his own neighbourhood, and that he would write them down and send them to the leader of the opposition if he so desired; but the fact remains that after making the boast that he did, he was not able to mention one name when called upon to to do. Then we had the proofs uttered by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole), who went sponsor for the affidavits of criminals, which were drawn up nearly a year ago, and which, although there has been a session of the legislature of Manitoba since, and although those affidavits had reference entirely to the provincial elections in Manitoba, had never yet been placed before the public or been mentioned in the Manitoba legislature. No member of that House had the hardihood to stand as godfather of such an extraordinary lot of misstatements as were contained in those affidavits. I believe that the telegram which the hon. member for Marquette read in reference to those affidavits has absolutely discredited them, and has put the government in a very bad position indeed. I do not know that I have ever read of a more discreditable incident than the reading those affidaviits before this House, in view of the fact that they had been purchased from a criminal who is even now a refugee from justice.

In the earlier part of this debate it was charged that the members of the opposition had nothing more to say in regard to the thin red line outrage, that there was nothing in it, and that we had got tired of repeating it. I think the government must be enirely without shame in regard to elections in this country, and I was not surprised to hear my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) call attention to the astounding nature of the facts which had been brought out in regard to the thin red line outrage in Manitoba, and yet members on the other side of the House seem to think nothing of it. They think it is a perfectly natural and proper thing to appoint returning officers who have so little regard for the duties of their office that they will hand over the lists to the organizer of one political party and allow him to mutilate them as he will.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. How could the hon. gentleman arrange those lists without a repetition of the thin red line episode in some form or other?

Mr. LAKE. The law provides that the returning officer himself shall make those changes. That has been already pointed out.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to point out again?

Mr. LAKE. If the hon. gentleman likes to wait, I will look it up, but it has been pointed out over and over again in this House, as he knows perfectly well. He thought he would put up a bluff that I had not looked into the election law.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I do no know what the hon. gentleman means by bluff.

Mr. LAKE. If the hon. gentleman considers his own character, he will have a pretty good idea of it. Returning officers should be men of high standing. It seems to me that since this government have been in power they have considered the appointment of returning officer to be a matter of political patronage; they have certainly used it as such in my part of the world. That is certainly one office which should be entirely removed from political patronage, that of the man who has to stand between the two great parties of this country and see that there is fair-play between them. There is no provision whatever in this Bill for a penalty upon any returning officer who is so recreant to his duty as to do what was done by the Manitoba returning officers, who handed over the lists to an organizer of one of the great political parties.

The test case which was taken in the matter in the district of Provencher showed the extraordinary way in which the returning officer worked in with one of the political parties. It showed that the poll books were stored in the Liberal committee rooms. It showed also that aftr they were collected they were again placed in the Liberal committee rooms. Is that any place for ballot boxes before or after an exciting election, to be manipulated, handled or tampered with? I ask the Prime Minister if he considers that a right or proper thing. In my own constituency the Liberal committee room was in the same building as the office of the returning officer, one was on the upper floor and the other on the lower floor, and after the election the ballot boxes were all stored in the Liberal committee rooms. I know that, as people could see them through the windows. Further than that, I know that the election clerk who, as the right hon. gentleman knows, acts for the returning officer in certain questions, was content with holding that one office of election clerk, but also held office as secretary of the Central Liberal committee. I myself have in my possession a letter which he addressed on the day before the election to one of the deputy returning officers telling him he was to accept the votes of certain threshers who were working in that vicinity and signing himself 'Secretary Central Committee.' The case is perfectly clear, here is a man supposed to have some authority with the returning officers writing to them the day before the election, telling them what voters they were to accept and what voters not to accept. I consider there should be some provision for a severe penalty upon an election official who behaves in a partisan manner and who does not withdraw himself from all communication with one party or the other.

In reference to the thin red line scandal let me point out that after one of the constituencies had been stolen from the Conservative party and a Liberal had been elected by means of the outrage perpetrated by R. E. A. Leach, the organizer of the Liberal party, he and others who acted with him in this matter were rewarded for winning that seat for the government by being appointed to seats under the Dominion government. Leach himself was appointed inspector of land agencies in the Northwest. This I consider was simply an outrage on public decency when you consider all the talk there was over the illegal way in which Leach had manipulated these lists, thereby changing the results of the elections. I believe it is intended to encourage the corruption, I cannot see it in any other way. I believe that if persons who were corrupt in these elections in the interests of the Liberal party are to be rewarded by this government for such acts, we shall find many others who are ready to be similarly corrupt expecting like rewards. Let me say the appointment of the man who does these things to a position in the civil service is in itself an inducement to corruption in the civil service, and it certainly is a direct inducement to civil servants to take part in elections in spite of the fact that this House has declared that a civil servant shall not take part in elections either Dominion or local. All the debates in regard to the Interior Department at any rate, which have taken place in the House for the last session or two, have gone to show that no punishment will be meted out to officials of that department if they do take part in elections. In fact, I will go further and say that the statements of the minister of that department have always been more or less of an incentive to officials to help on his own party in the elections.

In regard to Mr. Leach's appointment as head of the Land Department of the Department of the Interior in the Northwest, let me read a letter from a gentleman who was a supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite in the old days, who was a member of the Liberal party when he wrote this letter, although at the time he did not agree with them as to their treatment of the Liberals in the west and ran as a candidate for the provincial rights party, still calling himself a Liberal. I refer to Mr. R. L. Chisholm, who ran for the district of Battleford. Mr. Chisholm wrote:

> It is true that never before was the civil service machinery employed so extensively in this western country as during this last contest. Some officials practically abandoned their official duties during the last few weeks and worked very hard against us, particularly perhaps in this constituency. It has always been known that the civil service exerts an overpowering influence in this locality. In this contest the service, almost to a man, was disposed to stand back and see an even fight between my opponent and myself. Some were disposed at first to help me.

Mr. Chisholm had been an official in that office and naturally his brother officials were rather friendly with him than the reverse.

> But R. E. A. Leach made two or three trips here at brief intervals, and Talbot came frequently and a man named Perry, an organizer, who gets credit for our northern polls outrages, came several times, and the servants fell in one by one until at the finish they were working as they never did before. I feel a little reluctance in formulating specific charges against the civil servants here because I know that each and every one who went into the battle against me was pushed in much against his inclination and under various forms of duress.

Further on he says in reference to Leach:

I am satisfied that he is the individual that we may thank for nearly all the activity of his fellow servants here and to a large extent elsewhere in the province. I have it on very good authority that Leach is now persecuting the agent of Dominion lands here because the latter refused to act as a party tool. The agent of Dominion lands will not discuss the matter at all.

That shows how Leach immediately got to work for the party as soon as he was put in a position to do so as a reward for his services in regard to the lists in Manitoba.

Mr. KNOWLES. Nobody, of course, will challenge the statements made, but I think it is only fair to state that the reason the statements are not questioned is that the gentleman who wrote that letter is dead. Of course we will not question the statements under the circumstances.

Mr. LAKE. I am not sure but I think I had this on record before Mr. Chisholm died. I am very sorry that Mr. Chisholm, who was a most estimable gentleman, unfortunately died since that time.

Mr. OLIVER. Might I say a word in regard to the persecution of the land agent at Battleford because of his lack of partisanship in that election? It might interest the House to know that he has been persecuted by having his salary raised since that time.

Mr. LAKE. I am very glad to hear it. It is possible that the fact of this matter having been brought to the attention of the minister made him step in himself, because I do believe that when a matter of that kind comes to his personal knowledge he will not stand for that sort of thing, but he has officials in the west and he has allowed them to do this sort of thing without question. Every day I am getting fresh proof to convince me that this is the case. Now, Mr. Chisholm was not the only gentleman supporting the Liberal party who wrote to me in similar terms in regard to the interference of officials in elections. There is another gentleman, well known to the hon. gentlemen opposite, who is at the present moment, I believe, a candidate in the Liberal interest, Mr. J. T. Brown, who referred to this matter in a speech in the Legislative Assembly in Regina. He is reported as follows:

Influences working against the provincial rights party were dealt with by Mr. Brown. He said that government officials, both federal and local, had taken an active part in the recent campaign and while he did not advocate the disfranchisement of these men, he would certainly advocate that they be not encouraged in the work. They did not appear in the late campaign as ordinary individuals, but presented themselves clothed in all the authority of an official and ready to intimidate a voter at every opportunity.

This gentleman, as I have said, is a candidate of the Liberal party, and, at that time, always called himself a good Liberal:

In many cases they held out as bribes the patent to a homestead, and in some cases the bribe was paid.

With all the authority that that gentleman possesses, he made that statement.

In others it was never handed over. He knew of many instances in the Souris electoral district where the government homestead inspector held out concessions as a bribe to some electors.

Mr. Scott. You are aware of the statement made by the Hon. Frank Oliver that officials are liable to dismissal if they are reported.

Mr. Brown had read the statement of the Minister of the Interior, and he expected that Mr. Oliver would be given a chance to make good his promise in that respect. It was only by the Minister of the Interior taking the matter up that the desired results would be attained.

Mr. Brown had read the statement of the Minister of the Interior and expected that that hon. gentleman would be given a chance to make good his promise.

Mr. KNOWLES. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) what he is reading from?

Mr. LAKE. From the report of the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. KNOWLES. An official or a newspaper report?

Mr. LAKE. When I was in the assembly no official report was taken. This is the report which appeared in two local newspapers—or, later, three—and pasted in a book and considered a 'Hansard' of the proceedings. I do not think that the method has been changed since, although I have often wished to get a full account of the proceedings.

Mr. KNOWLES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) has misunderstood. From which newspaper is he quoting?

Mr. LAKE. I am not quite certain, but I think it is the Regina 'Sun.' I may add that I have had the list of officials who were working in Mr. Brown's constituency, with some statements in connection with the constituency which Mr. Brown contested at that time. I was given names of the officials but, in addition to that, I was able to lay before the House, almost immediately after the statement was made by Mr. Brown, a number of affidavits—nine or ten, I think—proving that officials of the Department of the Interior had acted as scrutineers and in other partisan ways in the elections that had just taken place. The Minister of the Interior had the opportunity, as Mr. Brown suggested, of making good what he had said, but I have yet to hear of one single dismissal of an official for taking part in these elections and breaking the rule which had been laid down in this House against officials taking an active partisan part in the elections of members for the provincial House. I have another letter, which I shall not be able to read, from another Liberal, who was a candidate of the provincial rights party in that election. He says the same thing as the others regarding the officials in his district, and the Minister of the Interior knows that we placed case after case before him and he refused to take action. He himself has appeared on the platform with an official of his department acting as chairman in addressing a party political meeting.

Mr. OLIVER. Perhaps I may be allowed to explain, in order to prevent misapprehension of the case. The person alluded to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) was a sub-land agent. And I would like to say, as I said before—and I have always taken the same position—that, inasmuch as we do not pay the sub-land agent for the whole of his time, nor do we pay him enough salary to give him a living—and do not pretend to; we only pay him part of his living—in the other part of his time he is as free to exercise his political rights as if we did not pay for any part of his time.

Mr. LAKE. That is the explanation the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) gives. But let me point out that this man had a regular monthly salary, $30 a month at that time. The minister knows that such an official exercises a most powerful influence in that country as being the sub-agent of the department and this gives him a considerable amount of patronage as well. I do not think it matters whether an official is high-paid or low-paid; he is an official of the whole country and is paid by the people of both political parties. The government has no right to use him for party purposes and for the advancement of the interests of one party over that of the other. I do not care if he only receives $5 a month, the position is the same; the government has no right to use him for party work as it has done practically with so many. The sub-land agents in the Northwest often get a larger salary than $30 a month. In several of the cases that were brought to the attention of the minister, the salary was ample to remunerate the official for the whole of his time; yet, as I said, I do not think the minister has taken action in any case. The resolution was passed in this House to which I have referred, and it seems to me it is the height of——

Mr. KNOWLES. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake); but I would like your ruling on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. gentleman has wandered from the motion before you in his discussion of the resolutino to which he has referred, of the cases of sub-land agents, and so on. I submit that this is not properly within the scope of a discussion on a motion for the second reading.

Mr. LAKE. I am pointing out that there should be a provision in this Bill to prevent civil servants from taking part in elections. We have referred to the fact that there are omissions in the Bill. This is a Bill for the amendment of the Elections Act, and this was promised to the country ever so long ago, and I consider it perfectly in order that I should discuss such an amendment as this. I was working up to that point that, although this House has decided by resolution that officials should not take part in elections, yet, when the government bring in an Election Bill they will not put that into the Bill, and this shows simply that the government do not intend to have that carried out.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Are you in favour of disfranchising civil servants?

Mr. LAKE. No, but I am not in favour of permitting them to take an active part in elections.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. How would you do that?

Mr. LAKE. Certainly I would not disfranchise civil servants. I have seen a little of the working of the Civil Service Act in the old country. Usually men enter the service at a pretty early age, they can enter from the age of sixteen upwards. I myself was a little more than sixteen when I entered the civil service, and one of the first things I was told was that while I had the privilege of exercising the right to vote, I must carefully abstain from active partisan work. That is the only way in which you can get a really good civil service in this country. The way in which pressure has been put upon civil servants in this country to induce them to take an active part in elections puts them in a very awkward position. One thing the government should provide in their proposed Civil Service Act is to make it absolutely clear that while the civil servant may exercise his right to vote as the expression of an individual opinion, he must not exert any political influence. To my mind this Election Bill should provide severe penalties against any man who is in the pay of the Dominion government, canvassing, addressing meetings, acting as scrutineer, or taking an active part in any other way in Dominion elections. The right hon. leader of this government has laid down the principle in forcible language that there should be no interference by civil servants either in provincial or Dominion elections. While I am upon that point, let me call his attention to the opinion of Mr. Mackenzie in regard to this question. In 1873, Mr. Mackenzie placed this resolution on the Order Paper.

That it is highly criminal in any minister or ministers or other servants under the Crown, directly or indirectly, to use the powers of office in the election of representatives to serve in parliament, and any attempt at such influence will at all times be resented by this House as aimed at its own dignity, honour and independence.

Let me submit that expression of opinion of one of the first men in this country, a man whose memory is held in the highest respect by both parties, let me submit it as worthy of adoption. Let me urge the government to put into force the principle which this House has adopted, that civil servants shall be punished who take an active part in elections.

Another matter which I have already referred to as being one of supreme importance is the abolition of the secrecy of the ballot which is involved in the Bill before the House. I read the statement of the Minister of Justice in regard to that provision. He says clearly that this measure does away with the secrecy of the ballot, and that where it comes to be a question, by the inadvertence of the returning officer in placing a mark upon the ballot, whether the ballot should be rejected or counted, it is better to have it counted. This provision means then, as pointed out by the leader of the opposition, that every ballot may be legally numbered, and that the name of the voter may be placed upon the back of it by the returning officer. Therefore every ballot which is cast in the coming elections may be legally marked by the deputy returning officer, and every voter may be identified. It seems to me that nothing should so disturb the old Liberals of this country as a sign of degeneracy in the present Liberal party, and that the government, without any compunction, introduce an amendment which does away with what used to be one of the great principles of Liberalism, the secrecy of the ballot. This measure is one providing for open voting, and there are many people in this country who believe that open voting is the better system, that it is right and proper that a man should go up to the poll in a manly way and mark his vote in the open. This measure does not provide for open voting, but it does provide that the deputy returning officer may make a mark on the ballot so that he may tell how every man votes. Of course the object of this provision is clear enough to every member of this House, but I think it is a change that the people will resent as an infringement upon their privilege of voting for whom they like. They claim the privilege of voting without any pressure being placed upon them by their employers or others upon whom they are dependent. I mistake very much the opinion of the honest people in the Northwest if they do not resent in the most vigorous manner this invasion of their rights. Large numbers of people are coming into the country from abroad, and are becoming citizens of Canada, and it will be possible, under this new provision, to put pressure upon them to vote for the government candidate. In many instances these people are dependent upon the good-will of government officials in the matter of homesteading. In this connection I would like to mention a circumstance that came to my notice the other day. An officer of this government who took an active part in the election in Prince Albert had to flee the country for having been guilty of a criminal act in holding bogus polls and making bogus voters' lists. He and two others had to flee from justice into the United States, and one of the three who was not an official at the time but who fled into the United States, was a homesteader, and this government gave him an extension of time while he was residing in the United States in order that no one else should come in and cancel his homestead. Is it not an outrage that a fugitive from justice should be allowed an extension of time in which to perform his residence duties, simply because he was fleeing from justice after having committed this outrage in the provincial elections which were being held? Furthermore, with regard to this matter of the marked ballots, let me point out how it will affect those cases in which bribery is being practised. We have seen the evidence in connection with the London election trial and other trials. We are seeing the expense and trouble that the Liberal organizers are put to in getting men to instruct deputy returning officers how to mutilate the ballots and how to have them marked so that they can be identified. And this provision of the Bill seems devised to save the Liberal party any further expense in this connection and to enable the deputy returning officers to know how every man voted so as to ensure that those who had been bribed delivered the goods.

The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) said a few words the other day on this subject. He glossed it over. All you would have to do, he said, is to provide a penalty for the retruning officer who would be guilty of such practices. But what struck me was how significant it was that the Minister of Justice should have inserted this provision without at the same time providing a severe penalty for the returning officer who would mark ballots so that they could be identified. Either the hon. minister was careless or else it was his intention to facilitate the marking of these ballots. I think it would have been very much better if, instead of providing for the marking of ballots by the deputy returning officer, he should have provided a penalty to be inflicted upon those who wilfully marked ballots in that way, and thus put a stop to some of the bribery and corruption which is now being practised.

I do not intend to discuss at length the extraordinary provision which legalizes corruption by a company incorporated for party purposes. That provision and all the other provisions of this measure will no doubt be most thoroughly discussed in committee and we then hope to have some sweeping amendments accepted. But what occurs to me as perfectly evident is that if we accept this clause as it stands, it will allow any company to commit any of those acts of corruption which are severely forbidden to individuals.

As I said a short time ago when the First Minister was not in his seat, in my opinion the right hon. gentleman was almost persuaded by the cogent and eloquent arguments put forward by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) last night. I believe that in his heart, my right hon. friend knows that my hon. friend from Marquette was justified in the statements he made. My hon. friend (Mr. Roche) certainly proved every statement by chapter and text. I believe that the right hon. gentleman was convinced last night that the Manitoba law is fair, equitable, and just, and that he has not been truly informed as to it by the hon. gentlemen from that province who sit behind him.

What struck me just now when my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) was speaking, is, that he was perfectly willing to allow the provisions of the existing law with regard to the province of Quebec to stand as they were. He had no complaint whatever and yet the province of Quebec is in the hands of the Liberal party. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) had no objection to that, but on the other hand we find that the main reason to allowing the lists to be drawn up by the provincial authorities in Manitoba and British Columbia is the fact that the local governments of these provinces are in the hands of the opponents of the Dominion government. But we have had no suggestion made that there is anything wrong with the lists in British Columbia. I do not think that the right hon. gentleman realizes the bitterness of the feeling which exists in certain parts of this country with regard to the provisions of this Bill. Should this Bill go through, I would warn him that the people who are deprived of this most sacred right of the franchise by wholesale are likely to take the law into their own hands and commit illegal acts.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Will my hon. friend find out one clause in the Act which deprived anybody of his franchise?

Mr. LAKE. Of course there is no clause which directly deprives anybody of his franchise, but it has been clearly proved by my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Boyce) that it is quite possible people will be deprived of the franchise by the thousand. In my opinion, should this clause be carried into effect, that is bound to happen. Even if the officials appointed by the government desire to be honest, they have only a short time between the issue of a writ for the election and the election itself, to draw up all those lists, and under the Manitoba Act it would be impossible to have the lists revised. So that even if the officials desired to be honest, there can be no guarantee of their having proper lists. And further, we may expect that some dishonest men will be appointed to prepare those lists, and we shall then find people deprived of their franchise, which will cause intense bitterness of feeling. We had the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) pointing out last night that in the polling division of Beausejour, a certain number of men, who had been deprived by this thin red line outrage of their votes, entered the polls and threatened to destroy the ballot boxes. I can well imagine people from the old country, where no such interference with the rights of the electorate would be tolerated, being strongly inclined to make trouble when such outrages are committed.

The right hon. gentleman who leads this House and who holds the fate of this Bill in the hollow of his hand, will himself be personally responsible to a very large extent if this Bill goes through in its present form, if there should be such unfortunate occurrences as I have mentioned or if there should be bloodshed. After all the Prime Minister is the principal beneficiary if this Bill works out as I believe it will, to return his party to power, and he is the man who should be held mainly responsible for it. I appeal to him. He has held a foremost position in this great country of Canada for the last twelve years; he has held a foremost position before the whole world. Is he going to stultify the last few years of his prime ministership by allowing legislation to pass which in British Columbia, Manitoba and the unorganized territories of Ontario and Quebec is a violation of the principles with regard to the franchise which prevail in the other parts of Canada? Is the right hon. gentleman going to stultify his great record—for he has a record—by countenancing such an outrage? I believe the people of this country have changed their mind about the right hon. gentleman and that they will not continue him in power, but is he going to let it be said that one of the last acts of his administration was the doing away with the secrecy of the ballot? I don't believe the Prime Minister will allow such a thing to take place. I believe he will look to his future reputation and that he will step in and withdraw the obnoxious clauses of this Bill.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS (Yale-Cariboo). I think the few of us here have been sufficiently punished by listening to the long and rather discursive speech of the hon.

gentleman who has just taken his seat, and I therefore move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. FOSTER. When shall we have the next punishment?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. You will get it soon enough.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What comes on Monday?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The next punishment.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 11, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—THE ROSS RIFLE.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I will read from the 'Citizen' an article which appeared in that paper on Saturday last:

A few weeks ago in the House of Commons the Minister of Militia took occasion to deny, with much indignation, that a test of the Ross rifle had taken place in England and that it had been reported against as an inferior weapon. The statement had appeared in the 'Citizen' and we asserted that the test took place at Hythe about four years ago. The 'Citizen' is taking steps which it believes will result in the production of proof of the accuracy of its information. In the meantime it is not amiss to point out that, while the honourable minister was repudiating the statement with virtuous indignation, he has been holding from parliament the report of the test of the Ross rifle made at Woolwich two years ago in which the rifle was unreservedly condemned as a military weapon. This document has now come to light through the medium of a return to the Senate.

There are three principal misrepresentations in this article to which I would like to call attention. The first is that 'the minister denied with much indignation that a test of the Ross rifle had taken place in England,' and so forth. In the House of Commons on the 27th of February, in answer to a question put to me by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington), I stated:

1. There is, in the Department of Militia and Defence, a communication from the War Office, through the Colonial Office, dated May 1902, marked 'secret,' referring to the Ross rifle; but such correspondence does not admit of the construction implied in this question. Nobody ever pretended that there could be inter-changeability of parts between two rifles of different patterns.

It is a fact, however, that no serious inconvenience can result from the use by two forces co-operating in the field of rifles of different pattern but firing the same ammunition.

2. The same 'secret' correspondence referred to an alleged trial at Hythe of two rifles said to have been supplied by an agent of Sir Charles Ross; but subsequent correspondence established the fact that an error had been made, as no such rifles were supplied either by Sir Charles Ross, his agent or any one on his behalf.

Again, the 'Citizen' says:

The statement had appeared in the 'Citizen,' and we asserted that the test took place at Hythe about four years ago. The 'Citizen' is taking steps which it believes will result in the production of proof of the accuracy of its information.

In this House on the 13th of March I had occasion to bring up a question of privilege in this connection, taking exception as I did to this statement in the same newspaper:

Now comes the curious part of it. This correspondence, which took place in 1902, was published in a report of the British War Office for 1906, and it was only when this report was added to the collection of volumes in the library of parliament that the existence of this correspondence was discovered. Since the discovery the volume has disappeared from the shelves of the parliamentary library, and there is no record in the books to show who took it away. In other words, it has been clandestinely abstracted.

And I read the following statement from the librarian of parliament:

With regard to the foregoing you may care to have the following report:

1. No report of the nature indicated appears in the imperial parliamentary papers for 1906; see index herewith.

2. No report of the kind has ever been received in this library from any quarter whatever.

3. All the army volumes of 1906 that have been received up to date are on our shelves at this moment; not one has been taken away by anybody.

(Sgd.) MARTIN J. GRIFFIN,
Parliamentary Librarian.

With reference to the concluding mis-statement and the most important one for consideration now, the newspaper says:

It is not amiss to point out that while the hon. minister was repudiating the statement with virtuous indignation, he was withholding from parliament the report of the test of the Ross rifle made at Woolwich two years ago.

Well, I hold in my hand the papers brought down by me and laid on the table in March, 1907. They contain in full the tests referred to made by the War Office at Woolwich in 1906, covered by the following letter :

17 Victoria Street, S.W.,
October 12, 1906.

To the Hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence, Ottawa.

Sir,—With reference to the letter from your department dated 26th April last, No. 478-4, respecting the supply of samples of the Ross rifles to the War Office, I have the honour to transmit to you, herewith, for your information, a copy of a letter (dated 29th ultimo) which has reached me from that department on the subject, together with a copy of the report by the chief superintendent of ordnance factories, Royal arsenal, Woolwich, referred to therein.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
STRATHCONA,
High Commissioner.

Then follow pages 365, 366, 367 and 368 giving a full report,—much more full than has been published recently in the newspapers—of the tests which took place at Woolwich, and I repeat that this report has been before this House since the 15th of March, 1907, and before the Public Accounts Committee during the most of the time from that date to the present. There is also among these papers the reply from Sir Charles Ross, the Ross Rifle Company, at page 387, to the report of the War Office. I would further call attention to the fact that in a discussion in this House—

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Might I ask was not that report of the War Office—the so-called report of the War Office—brought before the Public Accounts Committee nearly a year ago ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It was before that committee from the 15th of March, 1907. In a debate which took place in this House on January 14, 1907, I made the following statement :

In addition to that, the Ross rifle had been subjected to the severest test by a committee of the War Office in England.

Mr. TISDALE. When?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Recently, and the report is most satisfactory from the point of view of the military experts here. They found the same defects which had been discovered here, though not all of them, and all the defects which they discovered had been remedied before this report reached us.

I simply quote this to show that I had actually mentioned the fact that there was such a report, some weeks before the papers were laid on the table, thus showing no desire whatever on my part to cover up in any way this particular report.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would like to ask the hon. minister if it is his intention to give the impression to this House that the rifles pronounced upon by the Royal School of Musketry at Hythe were not submitted by the Militia Department or the Ross Rifle factory ? If not, has the hon. minister any means of explaining how any rifles came to be pronounced upon and if the report signed by Mr. Broderick, Lord Middleton, then Secretary of State for War, did not say that two Ross rifles had been examined by the officers of Musketry School at Hythe, in comparison with two Lee-Enfield rifles, and that the result was marked inferiority of the Ross rifle ?

Mr. SPEAKER. This matter has come up as a question of privilege and cannot be allowed to drift into a discussion. All the hon. gentleman is entitled to do is ask a question.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall be very happy to answer the question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I want to ask another ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. One at a time. Perhaps better let me answer the first.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is about the same subject. Take the report from the Woolwich Arsenal, I would like to ask the minister if he considers that a favourable report. He said it was considered favourable by the military experts in this country. If it be a favourable report, I would like to ask who are the experts that pronounced upon it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I read my statement which I made in the House last session and which speaks for itself. In that statement I said that the report was considered favourable, inasmuch as all the faults or defects mentioned in that report had been remedied before the report reached us. With regard to the alleged test in 1902, that is an entirely different thing. The Woolwich test took place in 1906. I think the Hythe alleged test took place in 1902, and I have already said that no Ross rifles were sent by the government nor by Sir Charles Ross nor by anybody on his behalf to Hythe, much less to be tested at Hythe.

ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES AT SOREL.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I was asked to bring down the report of Mr. Gaudet giving the result of the investigation held by him into charges against Mr. Roy of the Board of Works in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I have that report here and I beg to move :

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the report made by Mr. Victor Gaudet as a result of the investigation held by him into charges preferred against Mr. E. Roy of the Board of Works under the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and of the evidence in connection therewith.

I will produce immediately the report. The evidence is rather bulky. I can get it copied and have it brought down as soon as possible.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BRODEUR. I beg to lay on the table the return to an order of the House of Commons for a copy of the report made by Mr. Victor Gaudet as a result of the investigation held by him into the charges preferred against Mr. E. Roy of the Board of Works in the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. LENNOX. Some time before Easter we had an amendment to the Immigration Act. It was then said that the matter was one of great urgency and that it was proposed to pass an order in council to regulate immigration into British Columbia. On the 30th of April the Minister said that a memorandum to council was being prepared and would be brought down to the House when passed. Has that order in council yet been passed, and if so, will it be brought down ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The order in council has been passed. I regret that it has not yet been brought down but it will be brought down very shortly.

QUEBEC BRIDGE COMMISSION'S REPORT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the Minister of Railways anything to report on the progress of the printing of the report of the Quebec Bridge Commission ?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railway and Canals). I have nothing to report. I am disappointed that we did not have the report before this. I shall make further inquiry about it this afternoon. That is the report proper without the evidence and exhibit.

GOVERNMENT STEAMER 'MONTCALM.'

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER. Has the Minister of Marine any further information to give the House about the 'Montcalm' ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). No, except that, as I said, I have given instructions that the wreck commissioner should go down immediately to hold a preliminary investigation. He held this preliminary investigation on Friday night and Saturday morning and decided that a formal investigation should be held. I then authorized him to hold immediately the formal investigation because the crew of the 'Milwaukee' might be returning to England. I understand that he began his formal investigation this morning. I may say that the 'Montcalm' has been brought to Pointe à Carcy in Quebec harbour and is lying there under water.

Mr. FOSTER. The last two words of the minister give some information that seems to have been studiously withheld up to the present. Do I understand the minister to say that the vessel has sunk ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And do I understand the minister to intimate that the investigation will be held by Commander Spain alone ? This is the case of a government vessel in collision with a private-owned vessel, the 'Milwaukee.' It would seem as though the investigation should be a broader one than that given by a government employee.

Mr. BRODEUR. Commander Spain, it is true, is a government employee, but he is at the same time wreck commissioner and will be assisted by two assessors, according to law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who are the assessors ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know, they are selected by him. I understand that they must be two men versed in the merchant marine. I do not know who they are. They are always selected by the commissioner himself.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are any steps being taken to raise the vessel, is it possible to raise her ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, yes, it is expected the vessel will be raised probably about the middle of this week.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are any special precautions being taken to recover the silverware aboard ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Of course.

QUESTIONS.

REPAIRS TO DREDGE 'MONTAGUE.'

Mr. W. J. ROCHE asked :

1. What amounts were paid for repairs to the dredge 'Montague' between March 31, 1907 and April 30, 1908?
2. To whom were same paid, what amount to each, and the date of each payment?
3. What persons furnished supplies to said dredge 'Montague' between above dates?

4. What was the amount of each account for such supplies, to whom paid, and the date of each payment?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. $4,464,39.
2. See attached statement 'A.'
3 and 4. See attached statement 'B.'

BRITISH COLUMBIA FISHING LICENSES.

Mr. KENNEDY asked:

1. Were any fishing licenses issued last season to the British Columbia Packer's Association?
2. Is this a foreign corporation registered in New Jersey, and is its membership confined to British subjects?
3. Was it contrary to the regulations in force last season to issue licenses to foreign corporations or corporations whose membership was not composed exclusively of British subjects?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Yes.
2. The department has ascertained that this corporation is registered in British Columbia under the Companies Act, of British Columbia, 1897. The department is not aware as to whether each of its members is a British subject or not, and whether this corporation is registered in New Jersey.
3. The regulations do not refer at all to corporations. The practice has been to issue licenses to companies authorized to carry on business in Canada.

CHIEF ENGINEER—QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Mr. ROBITAILLE—by Mr. J. J. Hughes—asked:

1. Prior to the collapse of the Quebec bridge who was the administrative and responsible head of the bridge company?
2. What were the Hon. S. N. Parent's functions as president of the bridge company?
3. Who recommended engineer Hoare as resident engineer for the Quebec bridge company?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The board of directors.
2. Same functions as those of the presidents of other incorporated companies generally.
3. The company when reorganized in 1887 found him in charge as chief engineer, and by reference to return No. 16, in answer to an order of the House of Commons dated June 18, 1891, it will be seen that he was favourably recommended by Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, then chief engineer and general manager, Canadian government railways.

COST OF ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked:

1. Does the contract price of the Ross rifle $25, include cost of inspection? If not, what is the cost per rifle of inspection?
2. What inspection is necessary, and is it actually made of each rifle before its acceptance by the government?
3. Does the inspection include: (a) the quality and efficiency of each of the component parts of each rifle; (b) quality and efficiency of the component parts assembled in the completed rifle; (c) the interchangeability of parts as between different rifles?
4. Who has inspected the rifles for the government?
5. Taking into account the original contract price, cost of changes made, and the cost of inspection and management, what is the cost to the country of the Ross rifle already completed and delivered?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. (a) No. (b) $1.90 each.
2. Certain of the principal components are inspected individually and the whole assembled rifle is again inspected before being accepted by the government.
3. (a) No. Only certain principal parts are inspected as components, the remainder being inspected in the finished arm.
(b) Yes.
(c) No. Not between rifles, but the principal parts are gauged for interchangeability by standard gauges before being assembled into a rifle.
4. The inspector of small arms.
5. Contract price of rifle, $25 each; cost of inspection, $1.90 each.

Payments chargeable to Capital.

Amount expended in replacing the tools and fixtures which became obsolete in consequence of:

(a) Mark I, sight being changed to Mark II, $11,351.50.

(b) Mark II. sight being changed to Mark III. $15,000.

(c) Modifications in Mark II rifle, $3,-648.50.

(d) Change in pattern of cocking pieces, $930.

Amount expended for gauges (which will last an indefinite time), $26,237.63.

These payments are a charge against capital for the reason that they are a factor in the cost of production of all rifles of the present pattern already manufactured or to be manufactured in future, consequently the proportion to be borne by each rifle cannot now be ascertained.

CHICOUTIMI BOOM.

Mr. PERLEY asked:

1. Has the Chicoutimi Pulp Company yet paid to the government the excess of expenses over receipts for the year 1906 and 1907 in connection with the government boom on the Saguenay river above Chicoutimi?

2. If not, what reason does the Chicoutimi Pulp Company give for not paying?

3. Does the Chicoutimi Pulp Company claim that the boom was built in the wrong place, so that a large percentage of the logs put in it are carried by the current down the river and lost?

4. Does the government purpose changing the location of the boom?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works).

1. No.

2. The company contends that the booms were not completed in 1906 and that they were not properly placed.

3. This claim has been made by the company, but not admitted by the department.

4. While not admitting the correctness of the company's contention, the engineering branch of the department is further considering the question.

TIMBER ON DOKIS RESERVE.

Mr. PERLEY asked :

1. Has the government obtained the consent of Chief Dokis himself to the sale of the timber on the Dokis Indian reserve?

2. When did the government decide to sell this timber and on what date was an order in council passed authorizing the same?

3. Has the government had a careful estimate made by experts of the quantity of timber on each of the berths advertised for sale?

4. Has the government adready decided on the upset price for the said berths?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. No.

2. Immediately upon acceptance of surrender by order in council, which order passed on March 24, 1908.

3. An estimate is being made by two experts.

4. No.

POSTAL RATES ON LETTERS.

Mr. BLAIN—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. What was the postal rate on letters at confederation?

2. What reductions have since been made and the dates of same?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. 5 cents per half ounce.

2. 1868, rate reduced from 5 cents per ½ ounce to 3 cents per ½ ounce ; 1889, rate reduced from 3 cents per ½ ounce to 3 cents per ounce ; 1899, rate reduced from 3 cents per ounce to 2 cents per ounce.

From 1868 to 1875 the drop letter rate was one cent. In 1875 letter carrier delivery was introduced and the one cent drop letter rate was continued until 1889 when it was made two cents per ounce as regards places where letter carrier delivery existed.

MAIL CONTRACTS AT RIMOUSKI.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. What was the date of the last contract entered into by this government to carry the mails between the transatlantic steamers and Rimouski, when did said contract expire, what was the amount of the contract, the names of the contractors, and the amount paid?

2. Did the proprietors of the steamer 'Rhoda' receive payment for carrying mail during the time that the government steamer 'Lady Evelyn' was employed at that service in 1907?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. The last contract was entered into on the 2nd July, 1904, to cover the period from opening of navigation 1905 to the close of navigation 1908. The contractor is Joseph H. Dorion, and the rate $80 per trip.

2. Yes.

BAYONETS FOR ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked :

Has the government entered into any contract with the Ross Rifle Company, or any other company, person or firm for the supplying of bayonets for the Ross rifle? If so, for what quantity and at what price?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Yes, for 52,000 bayonets and scabbards, for $5.25 each complete.

DOG-FISH REDUCTION PLANT, CANSO.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. Is the dog-fish reduction plant at Canso owned and operated by the government? If not, on what plan?
2. What officials or employees were engaged, and at what salary during the years 1907-8?
3. What is the total cost of construction to date of the wharf and plant respectively?
4. What have been the yearly operating expenses, and what have been the yearly returns therefrom?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. This plant is owned and operated by the government.
2. A. B. Cox, manager, $1,200; D. A. Hendsbee, weigher, $700; E. A. Kelley, checker, $675; extra labour was employed as required at rate of $1.50 per day, $2,100.
3. Dog-fish plant and wharf, Canso (no separate account kept), $42,130.67.
4. 1905-6 (operating, $18,323.24, 1906-7; expenses, $14,859.37, 1907-8, at works), $10,630.25.

Most of the product manufactured in 1905 and 1906 was not sold until 1907. The net amount realized for the products of 1905 and 1906 was $13,691.78. Those for 1907 have not yet been all disposed of.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN ARTHUR CLARK.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. Has any claim been presented to the government for compensation for the death of Captain Arthur Clark, who lost his life near Parry Sound, through a defective buoy on the 22nd of April, 1906?
2. If so, what action has been taken thereon by the government?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Yes.
2. Petition of right has been granted, practically the case stands for trial.

J. C. TACHE—DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. AMES asked:

1. What is the position occupied and what are the duties performed by J. C. Taché in connection with the Department of Public Works?
2. Does he occupy more than one position in the employ of the department?
3. What salary does he receive in connection therewith?
4. Does he receive further perquisites, such as house rent, fuel, light, heat, service, supplies? If so, to what extent?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1 and 2. He ranks as chief clerk on the permanent staff and is employed as engineer in charge of the harbour and river works in the counties of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, Que. He is also superintendent of telegraphs for the Chicoutimi district.

3. He receives $1,950 as engineer in charge of harbour and river works and $300 as superintendent of telegraphs.

4. No.

ROSS RIFLES.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. For the Ross rifles already completed and delivered to the government, what has been paid by the government; (a) on original contract price of $25 each; (b) for changes and improvements of all kinds; (c) for expenses of inspection, including staff, rent, subsistence and travel; (d) for expenses of supervision and management at Quebec and Ottawa?
2. On the above basis what has been the cost per rifle as ultimately accepted by the government?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. (a) $1,005,000. 40,000 rifles.

(b) Payments chargeable to capital: Amount expended in replacing the tools and fixtures which become obsolete in consequence of: 1. Mark I. sight being changed to Mark II., $11,351.50. 2. Mark II. sight being changed to Mark III., $15,000. 3. Modifications in Mark II. rifle, $3,648.50. 4. Change in pattern of cocking piece, $960.

(c) $76,580 not including an expenditure of $26,237.63 for gauges which will last an indefinite length of time and are, therefore, chargeable to capital.

(d) Included in answer to (c).

2. The cost per rifle is as follows: Contract price, $25 ; cost of inspection, $1.90 ; total, $26.90. The above payments set forth in answer to question 1 (b) are a charge against capital, because they are a factor in the cost of production of all rifles of the present pattern already manufactured or to be manufactured in future, consequently the proportion to be borne by each rifle cannot now be ascertained.

DEPARTMENT OF MILITIA—INSPECTION.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. Who inspects the guns and artillery for the Department of Militia, and what payments are made therefor?

2. Who inspects the saddlery and clothing, respectively, and what payments are made therefor?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. All tests and proofs are made by the War Office and paid for after the work is completed and the guns delivered. Major-General O'Grady Haly, C.B., M.V.O, is employed in connection with such inspection and is paid for his services at the rate of £500 per annum.

2. Lieut.-Colonel Robert Brown, who inspects all saddlery and is paid 2 per cent of the value thereof. Clothing is inspected by James W. Caldwell and James Robertson, who are each paid at the rate of $2,200 per annum.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—COURT OF APPEAL.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved :

That, on to-morrow, the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to make provision for payment of annual salaries to judges to be appointed to the Court of Appeal in the province of British Columbia, as follows:—

The Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal $8,000.

Three Justices of Appeal, each $7,000.

He said : I have to state that His Excellency the Governor General, having been apprised of the subject-matter of this resolution, approves of and commends it to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Aylesworth for the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, and the proposed amendment of Mr. W. J. Roche thereto.

Mr. DUNCAN C. ROSS (Yale-Cariboo). Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of a measure dealing with the franchise of the people of this country it is rather unfortunate that so much heat and party bias should be shown. It is equally unfortunate that in the year 1908 we have not yet a perfect franchise Act upon our statute-book and that we find it necessary from time to time to make amendments that will meet complaints and remedy the evils that do exist. But, we can find consolation in the fact that in the mother of parliaments, up to 1832, they had no franchise that was worthy of the name, and it took sixty-five years after that date before they secured a Franchise Act that, in a measure, met the wishes of the people. Legislation was introduced in the Imperial parliament with reference to the franchise in 1843, in 1865, in 1878 and again in 1885, and if any amendments have been introduced since then they have been of a minor character. I think it would be interesting to know the nature of the franchise that they have in Great Britain. The statutes provide who shall be voters, what the qualification of the voter shall be and what the provisions are with respect to placing voters on the lists, or receiving names. They also provide for the functions of the revising barristers, who they shall be and the whole machinery for the arrangement of the lists, but, in England, they accept the municipal lists as the basis of the franchise. These lists are prepared by overseers appointed by the municipal authorities and these overseers receive the applications and protests against the same and they use their own discretion as to what should go on the list and who should be struck off, or who should be left on.

They complete their work; then there are revising barristers representing the imperial government who are a court of final appeal in the preparation of the lists. The point I particularly wish to emphasize is that the imperial government does not accept these lists without the right of appeal, nor would they accept provincial lists without the right of appeal had they provinces in Great Britain. In Canada we had our changing systems of registration and franchise. Provincial lists were first accepted —accepted but not without complaints and objections such as we hear in this House to-day, and these complaints came from our Conservative friends. They complained that in Nova Scotia a Franchise Act was passed which treated Conservatives unfairly in the then approaching federal election and that when this measure accomplished its object it was repealed before the next provincial election. They complained of an unfair franchise in Prince Edward Island, and so far as the Conservative party was concerned they complained wherever there was a Liberal government in power in any of the provinces. They always complained that they were being defrauded in the preparation of the lists by the party opposed to them in politics who had control of the provincial government. It is not pertinent to this debate to discuss the merits or demerits of these claims, but it surely must be accepted by both sides of the House as sound policy that a man properly qualified and anxious to vote in a federal election has the undoubted right to look to this parliament for redress of any grievance real or imaginary, and not to anybody over which this parliament has no control. Our Conservative friends passed the Dominion Franchise Act in 1885 and the last state was worse than the first; not so much because of the violation of any correct principle but because of the cumbersome, expensive, and dishonest machinery provided to carry the legislation into effect. This legislation proved so unsatisfactory that some even of our Conservative friends wanted it repealed, and in 1894, Sir John Thompson who then led the House made an honest effort to repeal the existing law, but the influences within his party were so strong that the Bill was not passed. The House refused to accept a similar Bill introduced by Mr. Charlton in 1895, and the Conservative party went out of power in 1896 with the Dominion Franchise Act providing for Dominion lists on the statute-book. Under the Conservative Franchise Act, revision was so expensive that it was seldom attempted and sometimes elections were held on lists over two years old so that a man had to be twenty-three years of age before he could exercise his franchise in Canada. During the time the Act was in force four revisions cost nearly $2,000,000 to this country. Revising barristers were political partisans of the worst description and the record shows that even Conservatives were heartily sick of the legislation. I am bound to say—because I was not in the House in 1898—that the Liberal party went to the other extreme in their legislation of that year. They accepted provincial lists with practically no conditions attached except that the then Solicitor General sounded a note of caution in reference to these lists. I find in 'Hansard' page 3952 (1898) that the Solicitor General made this statement:

Mr. FOSTER. Would the hon. gentleman like to have an opportunity of qualifying one expression he used, that the revising barristers appointed under the legislation of 1885 were partisans of the worst possible description?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Well, yes, I will qualify the statement if it pleases the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. It is just for my hon. friend's own sake that I ask.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I was only making an historical statement.

Mr. FOSTER. But it should be true.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is a good deal of truth in it; not exactly all, but some.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Then I will say 'some.'

Mr. TAYLOR. They were most of the judges in the country.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Oh, no.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am willing to say almost anything that is within the realm of truth to meet the wishes of the hon. gentleman. I was proceeding to quote this statement made by the Solicitor General who introduced the Bill in 1898:

The principle of the whole Act is that we intend to adopt the provincial franchise as a basis of the franchise for the Dominion. That is our intention. It is idle for my hon. friend to assume or to suppose that we assume that the provincial franchises existing to-day will continue for all time. I cannot follow the argument of the hon. gentlemen on the other side who say that we dispossess ourselves of control over the franchise. We do not do anything of the sort. We simply adopt for the present the franchises of the provinces, but if at any time the provinces should do anything that we consider detrimental to the interests of the Dominion we are entirely free—we don't tie our hands at all—to make any change that we think proper. We do not dispossess ourselves of our control over the franchise.

The Solicitor General also said (page 4044 'Hansard,' 1898):

Of course in our view of the case we are not giving the local legislatures the power to make our franchise. We are simply adopting for our own purposes the franchise they use for theirs.

And the right hon. the leader of the House while advocating the adoption of the provincial franchise also spoke regarding what might be necessary in the future. At page 5671 'Hansard,' 1898, the right hon. gentleman is quoted as follows:

The new law we hope will be more workable and more acceptable, but still it has to be put to the test, and though we have great expectations from it, I am far from pretending that it will give full and absolute satisfaction. But time alone will test its usefulness and it was in this view that we accepted many of the amendments which were offered on the other side.

Again at page 5674, the right hon. gentleman is quoted:

I only ask hon. gentlemen opposite to give this a law a fair trial. It may be that it will not answer the purpose; it may be that we shall be the first to be deceived as regards its operations. If we are so deceived, then it will be open to hon. gentlemen opposite to attack the Act and present something which should not be the law existing before, nor the law as it will exist henceforward. For my part, I say this, and repeat it that though I have very great confidence that this new law in the future will give satisfaction, I can only express a hope and not a certainty. Time alone experience alone, will prove whether it is wise or unwise. My belief is that it is wise, and we should give it a fair trial.

Now, Sir, the right hon. the Premier and the Solicitor General, in presenting the Bill of 1898 to this House, clearly pointed out, first, that we were accepting the provincial franchise only as a matter of convenience in making our own lists, and that if any grievance should arise they should be remedied. But what was the position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite in 1898 ? They seem to be very much exercised over legislation introduced into this House at the present time for the purpose of doing what ? For the purpose of remedying evils that have arisen since the Franchise Act of 1898 was passed. They are very much opposed to any change in the Franchise Act ; they seem anxious to have this parliament wedded to a provincial franchise without any reservations whatever ; they seem to be enamoured of the view that parliament has divested itself of all responsibility in the matter of protecting the people of this country by a federal franchise. But what was the position they took in 1898 ? Let me refer to the record. Sir Charles Tupper was leader of the Conservative party in those days. He opposed, and opposed bitterly, the legislation introduced by the government at that time. On page 2274 of 'Hansard' he is quoted as follows :

I need not at this moment go into the evidences that existed in regard to that point, further than to say that it was found that the right and power of the local legislatures to select a franchise, which was afterwards used by the Dominion, was in some cases certainly grossly abused; and so strongly was that abuse pursued, that in the province of Nova Scotia the legislature absolutely passed a Franchise Act after the general election to have an effect upon the Dominion elections, although they never intended to use it, and never did use it, for their own elections; and they repealed the Act before the local elections came on, showing they had absolutely the power to control the representation of this parliament, by adopting a policy which they did not exercise themselves and never intended to exercise. One such illustration is sufficient to prove the absolute necessity of this parliament, if it was going to occupy an independent position in the estimation of the country and the world, adopting a franchise of its own.

How can hon. gentlemen opposite reconcile the position taken by the then leader of the Conservative party with the position they are taking to-day, in objecting to a measure which has for its object the reviewing of provincial lists and the remedying of any grievances that arise in connection with those provincial lists when they are used for Dominion elections ? The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) who is a stickler for constitutional precedents, took in the House in those days, and he took very strong grounds in reference to this parliament adopting the provincial franchises without any protection to the people who wanted to vote in federal elections. He said, as reported on page 2296 of 'Hansard' :

The fathers of confederation never contemplated that the provincial lists should be used for any length of time for electing members to this House. In the British North America Act they only provided that these franchises should be used until the parliament of Canada otherwise provided; that provision was inserted for the purpose of electing the first parliament, so that when elected and parliament organized, parliament could then deal with the question as it saw fit and lay down a proper franchise law, under which members should be elected to this House.

Again, on page 2297 he is quoted as follows :

We have found in the provinces fancy franchises adopted by the provincial legislatures, to the detriment of certain classes in the community who were as well entitled to vote in the election of members to this House as any other class. And it was just because we found that evil becoming so great that it could not be tolerated any longer, that we took up the question in the Dominion parliament, and legislated as we did in 1886. The cases which the right hon. gentleman cited afford the very strongest argument why there should be one franchise law to control the election of members to this House in every province or territory of the Dominion.

Our friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) was in the House in those days. He is a striking illustration of the mellowing influences of time because he is not now nearly so ferocious in discussing public questions as he was then. So indignant was he at the thought of this parliament adopting a provincial franchise, so strong in his denunciation and so violent in his language, that he was called to order several times by the Speaker. Let me quote one of the mildest things he said about the legislation proposed by the government :

On the question of principle, I contend that it is in the best interests of the Dominion as a whole that there should be a uniform franchise list, and that it should not be delegated to the different provinces from time to time, and at all times to provide for those provinces such franchises and such lists as they might desire for the election of Dominion representatives. Take in the first place, the case of Prince Edward Island. If there is a province in the whole Dominion where the Conservative party may expect the most unmanly and most dishonest treatment it is the province of Prince Edward Island.

And there is our hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche), who howled in the House the other day at the very idea of this parliament taking to itself authority to listen to appeals against the unfair tactics of the political partisans in the province of Manitoba. He was going to stay here all summer to fight such an enormity as that. But he wailed in 1898 at the very idea of our having a provincial franchise. I am quoting from page 2586 of 'Hansard,' where he said :

The franchise, Mr. Speaker, is the basis of constitutional freedom and if we are going to have stuffed lists prepared by partsan officials, the liberty of the subject is gone. If we are going to legislate afresh upon this Franchise Bill, for decency's sake let us not put an Act on the statute-book that will be ten times more vicious in principle than the one we repeal. What is the use of enacting fresh legislation unless we can improve on the old?

But let me give you a particular gem from the hon. member. He is complaining of our not accepting the Manitoba lists at the present time. Here is the opinion he had of the provincial lists in 1898:

However, I see by the provision of this Bill the Northwest Territories are exempted from its operation and now I ask the government to place Manitoba in the same category as the Northwest Territories, at least until such time as they can bring pressure to bear on their Liberal confreres of Manitoba to get them to wipe off the statutes of that province an Act that is now a disgrace to it, and for it, substitute a fair Act; a Franchise Act in the widest and truest sense of the term; an Act that will give a Conservative in that province an equal say in its affairs with his Liberal fellowman.

This was the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Marquette in 1898. But he is quite satisfied now to reverse that opinion and accept the Provincial Act. When the men, for whom he is the chief apologist in this House, is in power in Manitoba, he is quite prepared to accept for himself and party the political advantages to be gained through the rascality of his rascally officials in Manitoba. When, however, there was a Liberal government in office in that province in 1898, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) was the man who howled the loudest because this parliament was going to revert to the provincial lists.

We have another charming gentleman in the House, and I am sorry he is not here to-day, because I want to say kind words about him. I refer to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). We love him for his inconsistency. I think he is making a serious mistake when he devotes his time to politics at all. He ought to devote his entire time to the practice of law, because whether he be right or wrong he is equally at home in the discussion of an argument. We always admire his facility and felicity of expression and the cogency of his argument, whether he is on the right or the wrong side. Why, in 1898, he was the fighting lieutenant from the province of Quebec for the valiant Sir Charles Tupper. He was not satisfied then with protesting against reverting to the provincial lists, but was the bold bad man who introduced an amendment for the purpose of doing in 1898 what is proposed to be done in the legislation now introduced. Let me quote from his speech, page 4056 from 'Hansard':

But this much I do contend, that it was intended by the framers of our constitution that as soon as possible after confederation, with a view of welding the people together with a view of making one people of all those who inhabited British North America, we should control our own franchise, establish exactly how it should be exercised and not relinquish that franchise to the provinces, thus producing conditions of inequality, as we are now doing by this Bill.

This is the gentleman who the other day threatened to obstruct Supply and put the civil servants on bread and water. Why? Because the government is doing in 1908 what he advised the government to do in 1898. Consistency is a precious and rare jewel but it never gets within hailing distance of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk).

Then comes the noblest Tory of them all, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). He had some very strnog views in the Franchise Act in 1898. No doubt he has strong views to-day because in 1898 he told us that:

So long as I have a seat in this parliament I will contend that it is essentially necessary for the dignity and best government of Canada as a nation, that she shall have uninterrupted and absolute control of her own franchise. And I believe that the great majority of the people of this country will not be satisfied to have it otherwise.

Again he said:

I think the government would have done a useful thing for this country, and would have kept its position and that of its supporters logical and consistent, and would have made itself square with public opinion if it had allowed the plea of the opposition which is simply that in the last resort, the voters' lists shall be subject to the revision of a competent court of law.

I am bound to say that we on this side have exercised due caution in accepting the advice of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), but no doubt he will be extremely flattered to find that after ten long years of consideration we have practically determined to accept his advice. The hon. gentleman said:

So long as I have a seat in this parliament I will contend that it is essentially necessary for the dignity and best government of Canada that she should have uninterrupted and absolute control of her own franchise

The hon. gentleman did not always have a seat in parliament since then. There was an unfortunate hiatus, but no doubt this will in no way influence him in his opinion with reference to a proper Franchise Act. He told us some three years ago that, disappointed in politics, he had changed his views somewhat with reference to the education question, but I am sure that the fact that he did not always have a seat in parliament is not going to make him change his views with reference to the Franchise Act, and I feel quite confident that, in accordance with those views, we shall find him voting for the measure now introduced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth).

These extracts I have quoted show the position which these hon. gentlemen took in 1898. I am not going to quarrel with that position. I believe it was a strong position. I believe that while it is convenient to accept provincial lists, this parliament should not, under any circumstances, divest itself of all responsibility to see that people who are entitled to vote in federal elections should be given the opportunity of voting.

Where does the leader of the opposition stand to-day on this question ? In 1898 he did not take so prominent a part in the discussion of public affairs as he does to-day, but he was then a member of this House, and he then pleaded for a court of appeal, particularly in his own province of Nova Scotia. He said that his Conservative friends were not likely to get justice down there, and he wanted a court of appeal. I say again there is nothing in the legislation we are now discussing which has anything else for object than the putting of people on the list who are entitled to be there and taking people off who should not be there. That is the only object of the measure. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, cannot very well escape from the position which he and his party have taken in connection with this question. He also threatened obstruction. Why ? Because parliament, after ten years experience, is adopting a measure which has for its object the relief of those who think they have been unfairly dealt with by the provincial officials. He is in favour of the disfranchisement of those entitled to exercise their franchise in federal matters and of enfranchisement ignorant foreigners, made British subjects by fraudulent naturalization papers. He turns a deaf ear to the appeals of those who expect relief from this parliament from the acts of dishonest officials, acting in the interests of partisan government, and is going to stand for such a list to the point of political exhaustion.

Why does he want such a list ? Why is he opposed to an honest list in a Dominion election ? Is it because he cannot hope for success on any other list than such a list as we have in Manitoba to-day ? We say, Sir, that the time has come when a large body of voters in this country claim that abuses have crept into the system of administration in Manitoba ; and whether these charges are or are not well founded it is the bounden duty of this government and this parliament to say to those people that in so far as their franchise in federal matters is concerned, any doubts are to be removed. Can it be said that John Smith, an intelligent Canadian, a desirable citizen, a payer of taxes, who takes a keen and intelligent interest in the construction of the Hudson Bay railway, in the all red route, in the tariff, in immigration matters, in all questions of a purely federal character, who travels from his home a distance of 100 miles to the office of the registration clerk in his provincial registration district and finds that there are so many people ahead of him that the clerk has no time to take his application, and his name therefore cannot go on the list and also finds that there are others whose names go on the list by fraud—shall it be said that this man is not to get his undoubted right to exercise his franchise in federal elections ? Shall it be said that John Smith is to be left to the loving kindness and tender mercies of Bob. Rogers. This government has no control over the government of Manitoba or any other provincial government—

Mr. FOSTER. How is that for a point of order Mr. Speaker, are governments to be spoken of in that slighting way ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The reference was to a member of a provincial government. I am inclined to think the rule does not apply to members of a provincial government.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a question of taste on the part of the member speaking.

Mr. D. ROSS. I do not think the hon. gentleman has taken his point of order very seriously. This parliament has no control over the government of Manitoba or any other provincial government in the matter of making whatever provision it deems best for the granting of the franchise for provincial elections. Provincial governments can give the people, for provincial purposes, what franchise they see fit ; but this parliament has the right and it is its bounden duty to see that every man properly qualified is protected in his right to vote in a federal election. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) who is not in the House, became rather alarmed the other evening. He sounded a note of warning to the premier that there was likely to be trouble, even bloodshed, if this legislation was passed and there was any attempt to dishonestly disfranchise the electors. I reiterate that warning. There always should be trouble if the electors are dishonestly disfranchised. As I said before there is not one single provision in this Bill which has for its object the disfranchisement of any one, and it is up to the government to see that the officials appointed under this legislation do their work honestly. Generally speaking the people of the west, whether Liberal or Conservative, want honest voters' lists and honest elections and they will stand for no other kind. But I want to sound another note of warning to the right hon. the Prime Minister and it is that the people of Manitoba, of British Columbia or of any other western province can be left to take care of any one in office there who tampers with voters' lists who gives dishonest voters' lists ; but they will not submit to this parliament allowing such officials to disfranchise them for federal elections and they expect this parliament to protect them in their federal franchise, without any regard for the opinions of any provincial authority.

What are the complaints against the existing system ? The voters' lists in Manitoba to-day is five years old. It has been continued from year to year by Acts of the provincial legislature, with the result that it is loaded up with dead men, absentees and people without fixed residence. The courts of revision in Manitoba are constituted and organized to obstruct the proper purging of the voters' lists. The revising judge sits from 1 o'clock to 6 o'clock only. All the time can be taken up in the hearing of the evidence in one case.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is not so.

Mr. D. ROSS. My hon. friend says that is not so.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. No. You may find an individual case—

Mr. D. ROSS. Oh, no, it is not so now, because the government of Manitoba and its officials have been making a show of righteousness during the last two or three days that they did not make in the last two or three years.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I make the statement that it never was so.

Mr. D. ROSS. It is in some cases.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Perhaps in half a dozen cases but it is not by any means the rule.

Mr. D. ROSS. I am making the statement, I am making it upon the authority of those who know, upon the authority of those in whom I have confidence, that revising barristers have sat from 1 o'clock to 6 o'clock on one day only.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. They have.

Mr. D. ROSS. And all that time could be taken up in hearing the evidence in one case.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Can you give an illustration of that having occurred ?

Mr. D. ROSS. Illustration after illustration.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Give us one.

Mr. D. ROSS. I have not one at hand, but if the hon. gentleman would read some of the speeches by hon. members for Manitoba—and they would do him a world of good—he would find numerous illustrations of what I am quoting. When six o'clock comes court is over and the other cases remain unheard ; the dead men and the others remain on the list.

Mr. D. ROSS.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It is absolutely uncommon.

Mr. D. ROSS. Our friends do not like this.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. We like the truth.

Mr. D. ROSS. The additions to the list in Manitoba are made by registration clerks appointed by order in council by the government who also, by order in council, fix one place in each constituency to receive applications and one day in which to receive them.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is absolutely not correct.

Mr. D. ROSS. Yes, I say the Roblin government have been showing extreme righteousness for the last two or three days or perhaps the last two or three months. I am dealing only with questions that arose during the time they had a free hand in the province of Manitoba to make voters' lists that were entirely in their own interest and denied the franchise to Liberals entitled to receive it. Applications must be made in person in Manitoba and there are numerous instances where men had to go one hundred miles to reach the registration booth. Let me quote from a speech of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford), who said :

> I have here the name of one division where electors have to travel 400 miles to get their names on the list. In another division, if they had to make the return trip, they would have to travel 220 miles. In Swan River they would have to travel 145 miles each way.

These are illustrations to show that under the system of administration adopted by the Roblin government of Manitoba until a few weeks ago, every scheme imaginable was adopted in order to keep people off the voters' lists who were entitled to go on them. It also occurred that the registration clerk could not complete his work in one day, and those who had not an opportunity to put their applications in remained disfranchised. These are some of the grievances complained of in the province of Manitoba.

My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) made some reference to British Columbia. Let me say at the outset that the people of British Columbia have never been educated down to doing small and mean things in connection with their election contests. The voters' lists have been honestly prepared. The people do not buy votes, they do not stuff ballot boxes, and they do not switch ballots ; and generally speaking, they play the game of politics fairly, as they play all other games. But while the voters' lists are honestly prepared, they offer the gravest possible encouragement for dishonesty. They are also loaded up with dead men and absentees. In each provincial district there is a collector of votes who is generally the government agent or the mining recorder. He receives applications to be placed on the voters' list every day in the year. The applicant can get a blank form of declaration from any officer of the government, which he fills in and signs before a postmaster, alderman, mayor, justice of the peace or member of parliament, anybody in authority; and he hands in that application to the collector of votes. The application is placed on file, and twice in the year, in May and November, a court of revision is held. If there is no protest his name remains on the list. The operation of putting a man on the list in British Columbia is purely mechanical. No one ever thinks about anything crooked being done in having his name put on the list. There is a provision for getting names off the list not entitled to be there, but it is somewhat cumbersome and expensive. When there is a change in population, those lists often bear the names of absentees and others than bona fide voters. Let me give a personal illustration. A short time ago I sent out copies of a speech to the electors of my own district, using the latest revised voters' list, and through one post office alone nearly 200 of them came back endorsed by the postmaster, 'Left the country, present address unknown.' Then we have in British Columbia a large number of new men who are entitled to go on the voters' lists, and who can send in their application to the provincial collector of votes, but their names do not get on until the first court of revision in November. I propose to quote the opinion of a gentleman who took a very keen interest in public matters in British Columbia for a number of years, I refer to Mr. John Houston, who was president of the Conservative Association in British Columbia for a number of years. He was also a member of the local House. Mr. Houston is a Conservative, but sometimes he does not work at the game, and he is rather independent in the expression of his views. In his paper, the 'Empire,' published at Prince Rupert, he writes as follows :

> British Columbia has a rotten system of registering votes, and there is no likelihood of the McBride government changing it for the better. Were the McBride government ousted from power, the Liberals would see to it that the law would be made even worse than it is.

Of course I cannot agree with that. What I am pointing out is that Mr. Houston is not a political partisan, though he was president of the Conservative Association of British Columbia ; and his criticism is directed against both parties.

Why, the reader will ask. Because neither the Conservative nor the Liberal parties in British Columbia have any desire to be fair to each other. The men who run the two parties are imbued with the idea that the people who vote have no rights that need be respected. Every voters' list in the province contains as many 'dead' names as 'live' ones; and were the names of every person qualified to vote placed on the lists once a year, it is safe to assume that few of the men now members of the legislature would have M.P.P. added to their names. At the last provincial election in one district in Kootenay, 243 names were on the voters' list at one polling place; yet less than 50 votes were polled. The others were not in the district. At another polling place in the same district, over 100 men who had the qualifications of voters were not on the list because of the clumsy methods of registration. Yet Premier McBride and his attorney general will rage with fury because the Dominion government proposes to take a hand at revising lists that have been 'dead' since 1903, and stuffed during the last six months.

Then he makes suggestions as to how the lists should be prepared. Now here is an expression of opinion from an independent source to show that in the province of British Columbia, while I am prepared to admit that the lists are prepared honestly, at the same time they are loaded up with dead men and with absentees.

Now what does this proposed legislation do ? As I understand the measure now before the House, it accepts the provincial lists as a basis for the federal lists. It provides for putting on the names of people who have been improperly left off, and it provides for striking off the names of people who should not have been put on. In the preparation of the lists it provides for nothing that will in any way interfere or disturb the lists, honestly, efficiently and completely prepared by the provincial authorities ; or in other words, if the provincial authorities prepare honest lists, complete lists, there will be nothing to do for the Dominion officials appointed under this legislation.

Mr. HERRON. Who are to be the judges whether the lists are honest or not ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The judges appointed under this legislation.

Mr. HERRON. They are government officials, I understand, appointed by this government.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. What I mean to say is that the judges appointed under this legislation will put on or take names off the list in accordance with the laws of the province in which they are acting ; that is, they will supplement the work which the provincial authorities ought to have done themselves ; and if the provincial authorities do their work properly there will be nothing for the Dominion revising judges to do. This Bill also provides the necessary authority to adjust the lists when there is an overlapping of constituencies. My hon.

friend from Qu'Appelle, in answer to a question of mine the other night, suggested that there was no such authority in the old Act. Well, I think there was, but when our officials attempted to exercise that authority they were prosecuted by Colin Campbell, Attorney General of Manitoba.

In British Columbia, a portion of the provincial electoral district of Yale is in the New Westminster federal district and the other portion is in the federal district of Yale-Cariboo. The Yale-Cariboo election was a deferred election. The only list available was the provincial list for the whole provincial district of Yale. I may say to the House that in British Columbia we have no well defined polling subdivisions. I remember quite well that in the year 1904 neither one of the returning officers—the returning officer in New Westminster or the returning officer in Cariboo knew what to do with this list, but finally they decided that Armstrong, the New Westminster returning officer would guess at the people whom he thought should vote in New Westminster and he would vote those on November 1, while O'Hara, the returning officer in Yale-Cariboo, would vote the balance in Yale-Cariboo on November 22. The work was done the best way they knew how and there was no complaint from either side because it was honestly done, but it afterwards developed that a small settlement south of Hope voted in New Westminster instead of Yale-Cariboo, and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Kennedy) got a small Liberal majority to which I was entitled. The point I am making is that it is surely not arguable that there should not be some one in authority to furnish these returning officers with lists properly made and certified. It surely is not arguable that we should not have passed in this parliament such legislation as will put into the hands of returning officers lists upon which people may vote and not leave them open to prosecution at the hands of partisan officials. I may say there was no trouble in British Columbia in 1904, because everybody thought the work was honestly done although it may have been imperfectly done. But, since then there has come to us in the province of British Columbia an attorney general who would indict His Majesty the King if he thought he could make any political capital out of it, and I for one do not propose that any officer of this government who is honestly attempting to do his duty in connection with an election should be open to prosecution or persecution at the hands of partisan officials of the provincial government.

Now, Sir, regarding the other clauses of the Bill, I have but little to say. I never had much confidence in legislation intended to make people honest in election time. I have very little patience with legislation that is intended as a sop to the Pharisee and which some of those who so loudly applaud have no intention of observing. I would put a man in jail for buying the elector. I would put a man in jail for tampering with the ballot box or switching or mutilating ballots, and I think a man ought to go to jail for publishing absolutely false statements during an election campaign. But, I would not load up an election law with a lot of details which nobody intends to observe and which only bring the whole legislation into contempt and create a disregard for the bigger things that count.

A good deal has been said about the Liberal party going back on the position taken before 1896 and crystallized into legislation in 1898. Mr. Speaker, the principle of accepting provincial lists still remains, notwithstanding the proposed amendments. Nothwithstanding this legislation we still stick to the principle of accepting provincial voters' lists, and we do say that if these provincial voters' lists are honestly made there is nothing at all for any officer appointed under this proposed legislation to do. The amendments are intended to meet evils and defects that have arisen since the 1898 legislation became law. As I pointed out at the outset, the Solicitor General, who introduced that legislation, and the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who led the House at that time, stated that further legislation might be necessary to meet any evils that might arise in connection with the legislation then introduced.

Personally, I am not worried very much whether the Liberal party was theoretically right in 1898, or in any other year. I am satisfied it is right now. I am satisfied that this parliament should never divest itself of authority to ensure to the federal elector fully qualified his right to vote and notwithstanding anything that was said or done in 1898 or any other year, it would be cowardice on our part not to pass legislation that will cure the existing evils despite the onslaughts on our opponents in this House and outside of it.

Mr. F. L. SCHAFFNER (Souris). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross) and while I do not desire to accuse that hon. gentleman of intentionally making statements that are not true, I will say that if the Manitoba Act was what the hon. gentleman says it is I would be the first man to vote against that Act and to substitute such a measure as I considered to be fair. There is not one Liberal member on the other side of the House from Manitoba who will say that the hon. gentleman's statements are true. I do not know whether he intended to go as far as he did in making those statements.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I made no comment whatsoever in regard to the Manitoba

Election Act; I made my comment with reference to the administration of the law.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I take the hon. gentleman's explanation and I say there is not a Liberal member on the other side of the House from Manitoba who will substantiate the statements that he made in connection with the administration of the law of that province. We have been discussing this question for a great many days and nearly every hon. gentleman from the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) down has devoted very little time to the question outside of the province of Manitoba. That little province, against which this government is doing all it can, has been occupying a great deal of the attention of this House during the last week. I stand here to-day, Mr. Speaker, asking for only a fair franchise Act. I believe it is the right of every citizen of this country to exercise his franchise and I am not one who will stand for any law, by whomever it may be made, that will disfranchise a man who is properly qualified to vote.

Let it be remembered that the present Dominion Franchise Act was passed in 1898 at a time when, I think I am safe in saying, all the provinces in the Dominion were administered by Liberal governments. When the Liberals came to power the Franchise Act of 1885 was on the statute-book, and when they introduced their legislation in 1898 they had all those years between 1885 and 1898 to give it consideration and one would have thought that the Act they then passed would be the result of their best judgment and deliberation and knowledge. As I said, the provincial governments were then all Liberal and friendly to the Prime Minister. It is a fair question to ask the Prime Minister now : If there were Liberal governments in all the provinces to-day would we ever have heard of the Bill now before the House? I believe we would not. Surely if their Franchise Act of 1898 was good enough for the country then it ought to be good enough for the country to-day. I have a word to say with reference to the Minister of Justice. There is no man in this country who regrets more than I, that a gentleman like the Minister of Justice who has been so active in public life should be deprived of his hearing. It must be a great affliction to the hon. gentleman and I express personally my very great regret, but speaking for myself I do say it is hardly fair to this House and this country that such an important portfolio should be held by a gentleman who is absolutely unable to hear any argument that is presented after he delivers his address. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) dealt with this question admirably and left little to be said and were it not that some hon. gentlemen on the other side from the province of Manitoba have made statements which are not supported by facts I doubt if I would have taken part in the debate. Let me say again that as to the first clause in this Bill with which I am particularly concerned, my opinion is that the Minister of Justice had very little to do with it. My opinion is that the speech delivered by the hon. gentleman did not come from him, nor was it suggested by the Prime Minister of this country. I do believe it was suggested by the same man who suggested the Bill that was all printed and ready for introduction in 1904. The right hon. gentleman shakes his head. Does the right hon. gentleman mean that the Bill was not printed ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Since my hon. friend asks me the question I say most decidedly that no Bill was presented in 1904 except the Bill which came before the House.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The right hon. gentleman misunderstood me. I did not say it was presented, I said it was printed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not misunderstand my hon. friend.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I said a Bill was printed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend is altogether in error.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. All right, before we get through with this question we will see whether it was or not. I accept the right hon. gentleman's statement that a Bill was not printed but I do say that the father of this present Bill was the same gentleman who fathered the Bill in 1904. But the Bill of 1904 never was read even a first time in this House and I am going to give my version of why it was not read. I believe that the Minister of Justice of that day absolutely refused to have anything to do with it. I believe it is a logical conclusion to infer that the then Minister of Justice said : In 1898 we decided to adopt the franchise of the different provinces and I am not going to stand now for making an exception of that little province of Manitoba. That is the reason the Bill was dropped. I believe, Sir, that if the same hon. gentleman were Minister of Justice to-day the same fate would come to the Bill now before the House. That is my opinion any way. But the present Minister of Justice has not felt any difficulty apparently about introducing into this House a Bill that is most certainly designed to hit at the little postage stamp province of Manitoba. There have been rumours that a compromise would be arrived at if it was agreed that the Bill should be left applicable to Manitoba and that the provisions with regard to British Columbia and the unorganized territories of Ontario and Quebec should be stricken out. Whether that is true or not I do not know but it undoubtedly has been rumored. Now the first clause of this Bill says :

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary herein contained, voters' lists for the portions of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec which consist of territory not municipally organized and where there is no regular assessment or valuation roll upon which voters' lists are based, and for the several electoral districts in the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia shall be prepared immediately after the issue of any writ——

Now, when I visited my people a short time ago I expressed my wonder to them why the province of Manitoba should be placed in exactly the same position as the unorganized backwoods of Ontario and Quebec. I wondered why it was that what was considered good enough for the backwoods should be considered good enough for Manitoba. I shall speak later about that provision for preparing the lists after the issue of the writ. The section continues :

—after the issue of any writ for an election in any such electoral district or in any electoral district composed or partly composed of such territory, or at any time when the Governor in Council so directs.

Now, I have very little confidence in that reference to the governor in council. As a matter of fact we seldom know when an election is going to take place. Generally the first definite knowledge we have of an election is the issue of the writ so that the expression after the issue of the writ practically means nothing in its working out. I should think that taking it on the average the writ for an election is usually issued about four weeks before the election. Hon. gentlemen opposite have laid great stress on the point that under the Manitoba law there is not enough time given to prepare a fair list, but under the Manitoba Act there is two months given and I would like to know how this Bill is going to remedy that when as a matter of fact the machinery under it will only be set in motion after the issue of the writ which will give only four weeks for the preparation of the lists. Now, I do not think that the Minister of Justice gave a full or candid explanation of this Bill when he moved its second reading. He knew it was a contentious matter and that it had been condemned by the Conservative and independent newspapers of the country. I therefore have to complain that the explanation given by the Minister of Justice on such an important Bill was not such as it should be. I shall quote some of the remarks of the hon. gentleman and here is one statement of his :

In 1898 the present law was passed, the old Franchise Act of 1895 was repealed and the system of adopting the voters' lists prepared for the various provinces substituted in its stead. It was contended by different hon. gentlemen that whenever you have voters' lists prepared in the municipalities upon the basis of the assessment roll you have to that extent a guarantee of substantiality and a guarantee of fairness.

Whether that be true or not I am not going to say, but the 'Globe,' the leading Liberal newspaper in the Dominion, took a very different view, and although the member for Lisgar stated the other day that the system of preparing the voters' lists was a fair one, I think I can show that in the past he expressed a very different view. The Minister of Justice continued :

The general outline of their system of preparing the voters' lists was that registration clerks were appionted for the various constituencies of the province.

I want to say that through all the speech of the Minister of Justice there is not more than a column that has reference to anything outside the province of Manitoba ; almost his whole speech dealt with the thin red line and the province of Manitoba, and as his followers on the other side have followed the same line it is only fair to assume, as I said before that this Act was intended particularly to hit at Manitoba. I continue to quote from the Minister of Justice :

And the work of the registration clerks in forming the basis of the voters' lists was afterwards revised by some member of a registration board, which consisted I think in practice of the county judges of the province, which upon the face of the statute might consist either of the county judges or of barristers of three years standing.

Now, while that statement is partially correct, I do not think it is wholly correct, and I think the Minister of Justice was hardly fair in making it. As a matter of practice the revisions in Manitoba for the last few years have been made practically by the judges but the inference has been drawn by hon. members opposite that under the law of Manitoba the revision might be before a judge or a barrister of three years standing appointed by the government. That is not the fact and the Minister of Justice should have made his statement plainer. He should have said that the revision must take place before the judges or before revising barristers of three years standing appointed by these judges, and had he said that he would have told the whole truth. The government of Manitoba have absolutely nothing to do with the appointing of those who are to revise the lists. It is the judge who revises the list in almost every instance, and if it is not the judge himself, the revision must be by a barrister whom the judge appoints. The government has no more to do with appointing these revising barristers than I have.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the present law of Manitoba.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is the present law of Manitoba. I think I can also show that the very law which the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) advocated the other night is in great part the present law of Manitoba. The Minister of Justice continued to say :

The result is that throughout the whole province there is an overlapping. A Dominion constituency will have all round its borders an outstanding fringe consisting of portions of various surrounding provincial constituencies and in many instances the boundaries of the individual polling subdivisions in the provincial constituencies will not be coterminous with the boundaries of the Dominion constituency either.

The last part of the phrase is correct, but the first part is incorrect. I emphasize what I said before, that although hon. gentlemen opposite may not be disposed to accept any statements I may make, we on this side have the right to accept statements made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) in explaining so important a measure. We have the right to expect that any such statements will be absolutely founded on facts, and consequently ought to be accepted. But what do we find? We find the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) saying :

The result is that throughout the whole province there is an overlapping. A Dominion constituency will have all round its borders an outstanding fringe consisting of portions of various surrounding provincial constituencies.

That statement is not correct. He went on to say :

Now, under the system of registration, as distinct from the system of preparing voters' lists with the assessment rolls as a basis, you have the voters' lists prepared for the various constituencies divided, not into polling subdivisions, but into registration districts, and the registration districts do not necessarily correspond with the polling subdivisions. They may or they may not do so, but the group of voters brought together by the registration check upon the one sheet of paper and certified to be qualified list of voters for a particular registration district consists, it may be, of men who vote in more than one polling subdivision.

Now, as a matter of fact, while it is not always the case that the registration districts correspond with the polling districts, I think that in the majority of cases they do, and that statement is not actually correct. In the majority of cases, in the majority of years, the registration districts absolutely correspond with the polling districts. I think I can safely make that statement, but you would gather from the language of the Minister of Justice that in very few cases they do. Further on, however, he makes a statement which rather contradicts that. He says :

The qualified list of voters for particular registration districts, consists, it may be, of men who vote in more than one polling subdivision.

That statement is misleading. A man cannot vote in more than one polling subdivision. It is a case of one man one vote. When a man has voted in one polling subdivision or electoral district, he cannot vote in another. Then the hon. minister goes on :

But more than that and worse than that, for the difficulty I am about to present, these voters are not in, I think I may safely say, the majority of instances, designated by the ownership of a particular piece of property.

That is hardly a fair statement either. I can show here voters' list after voters' list made up in 1897, and there are very few in which there is not the name of the township, range, section, post office and occupation. Then the minister continued :

In some cases, possibly in the greater number of cases, the voters' post office address is given, but in a great many instances, in a very large percentage of the voters' lists throughout the country, not even a post office is given, but simply the name of the man entitled to vote.

If the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) were really aware of the facts, he would never expect any one in this House or out of it, who knew anything about the matter, to accept such a statement. The cases in which only the man's name is given, without any lots, section, range or post office are exceedingly rare, and the statement is not a fair one to make in connection with the lists. The hon. minister referred to a man named Anderson, living at Louise Bridge, occupation a mason, and he said:

That is the identification of the voter, and that is the case in respect of all the names throughout the list. The voter's name, his post office and his occupation are given——

He made a different statement there :

—with no reference whatever to the property in respect of which he votes.

I call attention to that statement :

Or the exact place where he may live.

I want to tell the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) that a man does not vote in Manitoba in respect of any property. When the hon. minister made such a statement, either his intention must have been to mislead or he has never studied seriously the Manitoba Act and has been accepting blindly statements made to him by his hon. friends from that province. Here is the minister's statement :

With no reference whatever to the property in respect of which he votes.

But a man in Manitoba never votes in respect of property. There we have manhood suffrage. You are never asked whether you own any property or not.

Here comes a sentence, half a column in length, which I hope some one will be able to explain. It looks to me like a verification of the proverb that a drowning man catches at a straw. The Minister of Justice was trying to find some excuse why in 1908 this government should refuse to take the Manitoba Franchise Act—the very Act which they placed on the statute themselves. He was trying to find some excuse for going outside of that Act, and I propose to read the whole clause. I can make very little out of it:

I suppose it had not been thought of in 1898 or at any subsequent session of parliament. Possibly it was thought of in 1898 but considered not of practical importance for this reason: In 1898 the voters' lists in the province of Manitoba were not revised annually or at fixed times; they were revised whenever the Lieutenant Governor in Council so directed.

What innocent fellows they were in 1898! How little they were given to think what might happen in the future! But I have no doubt the whole thing was well thought out. Let me go on quoting the hon. minister's remarks which will show clearly that they thought it out:

Accordingly the legislation of this parliament, as passed in 1898, provided that whenever that was the case with the voters' lists of any particular province, these voters' lists should not necessarily be accepted for the purpose of elections to this House. Our statute at the present time continues to provide that where, under the laws of any province, the voters' lists for any particular electoral district or division are prepared, not at regular intervals, but at such times are fixed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, or by some other provincial or local authority, or only from time to time for the purpose of general or other elections in immediate contemplation, then the last preceding list shall be used, if it is less than a year old, but only in that event.

What the Minister of Justice, I think, was trying to point out was that surely they did not think they would be ever called upon to use the Manitoba lists. Well, granting that the province of Manitoba did not make out its lists more than once in four years, if there was an election once in three years, we would not have to use their lists, but we would any time in a year after they made up the lists. What I fail to see in his illustration is why we should not at all times adopt the lists made by the province of Manitoba.

If it is more than a year old the Dominion in that event prepares its own voters lists in the manner at present prescribed by the Dominion Elections Act and which has been on the statute-books since 1898. So that in 1898 when this legislation was passed repealing the old Franchise Act of 1885, Manitoba was not having annual revision of its lists, and was not in that sense affected by the Dominion legislation.

I say that in one year out of four it would be affected by the legislation of Manitoba.

But the provision of 1898, in the condition of things which then existed in Manitoba, was that the provincial lists of that province should be used for Dominion purposes only if there came a Dominion election when such lists were less than twelve months old, and that if such lists were at that time over twelve months old then the Dominion would prepare its own lists.

Now, he says:

That possibly is the explanation of the circumstance that no special provision was made in 1898 for the case of such overlapping as I have been describing.

Would not overlapping exist exactly the same in any way after the first year after the revision of the Manitoba lists? I say that argument is not clear nor is it a valid reason; it is not an argument that will appeal to members of this House or to the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) as a reason why in 1898 they did not foresee this state of affairs and why they are now introducing legislation trying to remedy it. The Minister of Justice went out of his way to refer, if he will pardon me for saying it, in an undignified way for a man in his position, to the manner in which we made up our lists. His language was more suited to the stump than to parliament. He said:

The Manitoba legislature provided by the statute of 1904, (repealing the provisions as to voters' lists which had theretofore existed in this province) that their registration should take place annually. It is true it was a sort of peculiar registration but it was what they called registration at all events.

I am prepared to prove to fair-minded men that we have not only 'a sort of registration,' but that we have a system of registration and a system of revision that for fairness and honesty and opportunity to Liberals and Conservatives alike to exercise their franchise is not excelled in any province. When the Minister of Justice sees fit to refer to our registration as a sort of registration he has failed to read and to be thoroughly seized of all that registration means in that country. He went on:

It was not registration preparing lists de novo by requiring each man who claimed the right to vote to appear before the official appointed for the purpose and state his claim, but it was the taking of the existing lists by the registration clerk and the adding to such lists or the revision of them on his part by making the changes which it might appear to be necessary. Accordingly we have the legislature of Manitoba in the spring of 1904, by the enactment I have referred to, making their provincial voters' lists revisable at regular annual intervals and no longer, at only such times as should be fixed by the government of the province. The effect was at once to make this provision of our Elections Act which authorized the Dominion authorities to prepare lists for the province of Manitoba no longer applicable to Manitoba.

I would like to know how he can justify that statement. He goes on to refer to the registration of 1903 as being made solely and entirely for the provincial elections. I take no exception to that statement, that was the duty of the officials. He proceeded:

Under these circumstances they were not prepared by the officials who were engaged in the work with any idea of their being used in Dominion elections.

What should they do? What was the point he was trying to make? The duty of the provincial legislature was to make up a list for the provincial election and it is the duty of the Dominion government, according to their own laws, to take that list and use it for Dominion elections as they have always done.

They were not prepared in any way with reference to Dominion constituencies or Dominion polling subdivisions but with no other thought than the provincial limits I have mentioned.

I understand that this condition of affairs does not exist in Manitoba alone, that this overlapping, to which he must be referring here, exists in nearly every province. I know from reliable authority that it exists in Ontario, not only in the unorganized but also in the organized parts which this Bill will not touch.

The Minister proceeded to speak of the size of some of the constituencies, and said :

We were investigating specially at that time the conditions with regard to the three constituencies of Selkirk, Provencher and Macdonald and the size of these constituencies was stated to be in round figures: Selkirk, 100 miles wide by 210 miles in length; Provencher, 50 miles by 115 miles, and Macdonald, 80 miles by 86.

It could be proven that there are constituencies in this province just as large as that.

Suppose you had a constituency extending with regard to its width as far as from Toronto to Trenton, and so far as its length as far as from Toronto to Brockville, and you had a returning officer appointed for that whole territory, 100 miles one way and 210 miles in the other, and you place in his hands a series of voters' lists amounting to perhaps 4,000 or 5,000 voters in all, scattered over that territory, and with no other guide than at most the number of the lot and very probably with no other guide than the post office or possibly not even a post office, to enable him to say whether or not a particular voter is within these boundaries; why it is manifestly impossible that any man unless he has travelled from end to end of the province and from end to end of the constituency and unless he has a local knowledge greater far than the average citizen possesses, it is manifestly impossible that he would be able to do anything more than make one may say a guess, or secure such information as he could with reference to an individual and endeavour to make in that way lists which should be appropriate and legal for the purposes required.

That condition might exist in a very few outlying portions of Manitoba. Take the constituency of Selkirk. No doubt in the northern portion of that constituency there are some scattered voters, but when the hon. member for that constituency comes to speak I hope he will tell us how many people there are away up in the north and how many men have to travel 100 miles in order to register. There is no question that these cases are exceedingly exceptional.

The Minister of Justice, almost at the close of his speech, said :

I do not wish in the least to be misunderstood, and I assure you I am not in any degree blinking the situation, nor am I unwilling to take the fullest responsibility for the measure of redress as I believe this to be, which I am presenting to the House in the Bill now under consideration. Not only were there, in many instances throughout Manitoba the redistribution of names I have pointed out as absolutely requisite under this system of registration by registration districts, of these districts not corresponding to the boundaries of the Dominion constituency, but there was also a similar redistributing of names in cases where that was made requisite because of the Dominion returning officers subdividing polling divisions as they had existed for provincial purposes.

Here the Minister of Justice makes a statement not in agreement with the statements, to which I have referred, in the earlier portion of his address.

In many cases, the registration districts of the province, which were supposed to correspond with the polling divisions, and which, I presume, in the main did correspond.

That is a fair statement.

The polling subdivisions in southern Manitoba practically correspond with the immigration districts. Then you may ask why call them registration districts? I think there is a very fair explanation, when you are registering you are not polling, you register at a certain time, you poll at another time.

He does not say in every case. You would judge from the statement of the Minister of Justice to which I referred at the beginning, that they rarely if ever correspond ; but when he gets along this far he seems to have forgoten what he said at first. He now says that they are supposed to correspond—'and which I presume in the main they did correspond ?'

Mr. MILLER. Is that your opinion, that in the main they did correspond ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is my opinion, that in the majority of cases the polling subdivisions correspond with the registration districts. For instance, this year and many other years they absolutely correspond. I think that is the rule. I do not think the provision that the registration clerk shall be appointed from every polling subdivision, is carried out in every case, but that is the principle upon which they appoint their registration clerks.

Now, this is not a matter of political differences; it is a matter of men entitled to vote being physically unable to record their votes between 9 and 5 o'clock on polling day, simply because they were too far distant from the pole to make the journey. . . In the whole province, I suppose, there is a matter of 50,000 names to be handled upon the voters' lists. I think, if you have 10 returning officers sent down with 50,000 names, 5,000 on the average for each one to distribute according to their proper polling subdivisions, to do that work in the four weeks that pass between the receipt of the writ and the receipt of these lists, and the polling day, to get together the necessary information and do the best they can—

I think I have proved that about four weeks was all that the Minister of Justice was going to give to do this work, and if it is impossible to do it in the four weeks, why is it impossible to do it in about six weeks given by the provincial government? It is about two months from the time the machinery starts until polling day. Then he goes on :

That that should take place, you have a condition of things that calls for a change, and calls for legislation in this parliament which would make it impossible, so far as human foresight can do so, that the same state of things should occur again; and that is the whole purpose of the legislation in question so far as this provision of it is concerned.

And further on :

Whatever the reason, the result has been that the time allowed for the revision in each year since then has been, according to the view at any rate of the one political party, entirely inadequate for the purpose. The statute requires notices of appeal from the registration clerk to be given within a certain number of days from the closing of the work of the registration clerk. The statute empowers the Lieutentant Governor in Council to fix the number of days upon which the revising officer, judge or barrister shall sit on his work, and when the day fixed by the proclamation for the concluding of that hearing of appeals or revising work is passed, there is no power on the part of the officer to continue his work, no matter how much may remain to be done and no matter how many appeals may remain unheard.

Now it does seem to me that this Act gives the revising officer, who, is the judge, the power mentioned by the Minister of Justice in this statement. I will read clause 61 of the Manitoba Act :

In order to give full and due effect to the powers of the board, the said board may provide for any proceeding, matter or thing for which express provision has not been herein made, or for which only partial provision has been made; or, where it shall be found that the time allowed to do any act is insufficient and an alteration or extension of such time, and any alteration of dates consequent thereon, shall appear to be necessary, the board may declare that such alteration shall be made, and thereupon the same shall be made and take effect accordingly.

Not being a lawyer, it seems to me that gives the revising officer, who is the judge, the power, if he thinks there is not sufficient time for the revision at any particular place, to extend the time. I would like the First Minister, if he has not examined that clause, to look into it.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. What is the date of the Act ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. 1904, revised to 1906. If that has been changed, I am not aware of it, but I do not think that clause has been repealed :

It is alleged that such men are of one political party, that their names are left off right and left by the registration clerks, that their only means of getting on the list and obtaining the right to exercise their franchise is by appeal to the judge, and that the judge is given, it may be for a whole constituency, but one day between the hours of ten and five within which to do the work of days or weeks.

That is an unfair statement, I do not care who makes it. A challenge has been thrown out by a Winnipeg paper, which covers past time, that $25 will be paid for every man our adversaries can find who, being a legally qualified voter, has presented himself to the registration clerk in Manitoba and has been refused the right to have his name put on the list. That challenge has been printed and sent abroad, and I intend to quote it before I am through. Now the Minister of Justice was not making a fair statement when he said that these men are of one political party and their names are left off right and left. I make the statement that the Liberals in the province of Manitoba, and I challenge contradiction, have absolutely the same opportunity and the same privilege of getting on the voters' lists as the Conservatives. When the Minister of Justice says that the judge has only one day between the hours of 10 and 5 to do the work, he is in error, perhaps it is a clerical error, because the actual time is from 11 to 6. However, that shows what I have been trying to prove, that the Minister of Justice did not make himself very familiar with the Manitoba Act before he attempted to discuss it, when he introduced this Bill on the 9th of March. He says :

In the constituencies of Kildonan and St. Andrew's—

That may be an error of 'Hansard,' because Kildonan and St. Andrew's are all in one constituency.

But without questioning what the merits or demerits of the provincial system may be, I say that it is manifest that any system, no matter how good, may be administered that it will be oppressive and unjust, and that there is at any rate ground for complaint that the present system in Manitoba as at present administered in the preparation of the voters' lists, is an engine of tyranny——

That is the definition given by the Minister of Justice to this House of an Act in the province of Manitoba which can be absolutely proven to be fair.

—and oppression as against the party that is opposed to the provincial government.

That is a statement which is absolutely unfair, to say the least.

In the condition which now exists in Manitoba, with voters' lists which were prepared more than five years ago, with voters' lists that have never been since that time effectively revised, with voters' lists therefore that contain the names of hundreds of men who are either dead or departed from the province, we have lists that need revision.

The man on the street would infer from the remarks of the hon. Minister of Justice that since 1904 we had never had a revision of the lists when, as a matter of fact, every year the names of dead men and absentees are taken from the list, the lists are verified and the names of men who have come of age or who have come to the province during the year are added to the list. Is it any wonder, after reading over the remarks of the Minister of Justice, that I made the statement which I did at the beginning of my speech ?

We have lists that ought to be submitted to the work of a revising officer, a county judge or a barrister according to the Manitoba system, with time given him within which he can effectively do that work——

Will the Prime Minister tell me how he is going to get time to do that work if he has not time now ? He is going to begin to put the machinery in operation after the issuing of the writ, and if so it is absolutely impossible for him to do that work and the Minister of Justice failed to explain that when stating the objects of his Bill.

—of revision, within which he can effectively purge the lists of dead men and of absentees, the presence of which upon these lists is but an invitation and a temptation to impersonation.

I suppose there has never been any impersonation going on in the province of Ontario. I am not going to refer to that to-day, but I think we have very good evidence that the impersonation has not all been in the province of Manitoba.

We have lists from which the names of hundreds of men in Manitoba are absent—hundreds of men who, whether rightly or wrongly, claim the right to be upon those lists, and the right to exercise their franchise; men who claim at any rate that they have been prevented from having their claims adjudicated by the insufficiency of the time allowed under the statute for the purpose of revision.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are all the remarks that I have to make in connection with the speech of the Minister of Justice. I have tried to be fair. I have read his words and, in finishing my references to the Minister of Justice, I repeat the statement that I made at the outset, that his remarks were very unfair. They were unfair to his own people. The members on the other side of the House had a right to expect a fair definition of this Bill from the Minister of Justice, and I have tried to prove that his statements are not statements that can be borne out by the facts.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. When the House rose at six o'clock, I had finished dealing with what I believe to have been the unfair exposition made by the Minister of Justice of the provisions of the Manitoba Franchise Act. Let me point out that when this government saw fit to make a new franchise Act in 1898, they found the boundaries of the federal districts coterminous with those of the provincial districts all over Canada. It has been argued by gentlemen on the other side that this condition does not exist to-day. But if it does not exist it is because this present federal government changed the boundaries of the federal electoral districts, and it is they who are to blame. The great underlying principle of the Manitoba Franchise Act of 1903, was a personal registration. The present Manitoba government was impressed with the fact that personal registration was the fairest way to compile a voters' list and so they adopted that principle. They came to power in 1899, but they did not change the Election Act until 1903. The Roblin government believed that the law in force when they came to power was most unfair in the manner in which it provided for the preparation of the voters' lists, and the best evidence that it was unfair is the very large number of names which the Conservatives of Manitoba at great expense and labour had removed from these lists. In 1899, 1,925 names were added to the lists and 5,446 names were stricken off by the court of revision. The Conservative party achieved this end at the cost of a great deal of money and a great deal of labour, but the results were successful and money expended in cleansing these lists was not wasted because we were able to defeat the Greenway government which had inflicted such a Franchise Act on the province. Let me show the contract in the city of Winnipeg alone between the results of the revision on the Greenway Franchise Act lists as compared with the results under the legislation of the Conservative party. In 1899, there were but three electoral divisions in the city of Winnipeg and in Winnipeg centre we got 971 names removed from the lists, in Winnipeg north 649 names, and in Winnipeg south, 909 names removed or a total of 2,529. In view of these figures I do not think it requires much argument on my part to prove that these lists were stuffed. Then the Conservative government provided for personal registration and this was the result: In 1904 in Winnipeg centre, ten names were stricken off by the court of revision, in Winnipeg north, nineteen names, and in Winnipeg south twenty-five names, or fifty-four names in all, as compared with 2,529 when our Liberal friends made up the electoral lists. In 1905, ninety-three names were removed from the list in Winnipeg centre, fifty-eight names in Winnipeg north and sixty-seven names in Winnipeg south or a total of 218. In 1907, there were four divisions in Winnipeg and in Winnipeg centre thirteen names were removed from the list, in Winnipeg north, seventeen, in Winnipeg south five, and in Winnipeg west twenty-one, or a total of fifty-six. These facts will prove the difference between the lists prepared under the Greenway government and the lists prepared under the Roblin government, and the contrast is not creditable at all to the Greenway Franchise Act. I shall cite to the House some statements dealing with the question of voters' lists made up from the municipal assessment roll as compared with lists which are made up from personal registration. I shall quote from the 'Free Press' which is not only a Liberal paper but which in my opinion is a paper controlled by the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton).

I may say in passing that the very best evidence of that is to be found in a recent occurrence in the city of Winnipeg, when we were told that the present member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) was solicited to become a candidate for that city. I do not think there is very much doubt in the mind of anybody in the western province that that article was inspired by the hon. member for Brandon himself. We could get any amount of evidence that this paper is under the control of that hon. gentleman and is practically owned by him, and this is the paper from which I quote. On June 11, 1892, the 'Free Press' made these remarks:

The registration clerk at Morris has compiled a fraudulent list in the interests of the government, most probably at the direct instance of the government, and doubtless in the expectation that his rascally work would be aided and abetted by the revising officers. The registration clerk in Beautiful Plains in suspicious harmony with the action of his Morris confrère, has deliberately refused to enter a large number of names that have been lawfully tendered him.

Now, I would like any hon. gentleman opposite or anybody else to prove that any man qualified to be placed on the voters' list in Manitoba has ever been refused. We have a challenge to that effect; so there is an opening for any man to make some money. If he can show that there are any such he can get $25 for each case.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Is that a retroactive challenge?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Yes, and I will place it retroactively on 'Hansard' before I get through.

Mr. KNOWLES. May I ask the hon. gentleman if that offer would hold good in law or is it only a bluff?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I am not a lawyer. There is the challenge made openly.

Mr. KNOWLES. The hon. gentleman knows that a promise made without consideration does not amount to a snap of the fingers.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I claim that it has the fullest consideration, knowing well the facts on which it is founded. There is the challenge, and if the hon. gentleman wants to make $25—I know he does not need it—or $100, let him get four cases and then he can prove whether it is legal or not.

Mr. KNOWLES. I would just like to say, lest it might be misunderstood before the country, that the hon. gentleman's statement that I do not need $25 is about as true as anything else he has said to-night.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If you cannot make it, that is pretty good proof that you cannot find a case. The challenge is as open to my hon. friend as to any other citizen of Canada. The 'Free Press' goes on to say:

These registration clerks, who are appointed to perform the necessary clerical labour in preparing the lists are assuming the function of the revising officers and deciding for themselves what names shall go on. They are doing this, not because they believe they have any right or judgment in the matter, but because, if they were not to do it, there would be no opportunity to play their tricks and bedevil the lists. They are forced to take upon themselves the authority of revising officers, in addition to their own, in order that they might decide against the reception of names now and again in order to weaken the enemy. If the lists are to be stuffed and otherwise manipulated, it must be done in the preliminary stages of registration. Clerks who are up to what is expected of them must, therefore, refuse applications, even if attested by affidavit, while there is absolutely no check whatever except their own consciences, to the addition of improper names. Such work as this could not be left to the revising officers. The lists must be doctored before they reach the court of revision; hence the necessity for unscrupulous clerks who do not hesitate to usurp the functions of a court, supposed to be established for the purpose of insuring honest lists. The Act never contemplated that discretionary powers, such as we have seen exercised, should be given the registration clerks. Their duty is to enter all names known to themselves as qualified electors and to receive and enter all applications supported by affidavit.

Should there be any errors in the preparation of the lists, the work of rectifying them belongs to the revising officers who are appointed for that sole special purpose. This is the plain meaning of the Act, and it is impossible that registration clerks or any others can mistake it. The fact, therefore, that clerks have gone out of their road to doctor the lists is evidence of fraudulent intent.

Let the opposition everywhere be vigilant against these frauds. It is an outrage that they should be thus forced into the defence of their rights, rights that should never be assailed. But so it is; and until better methods prevail they must make the best of it. Should there be the least disposition on the part of the revising officers to refuse them the amplest justice, then, if they be men determined not to be trampled upon, they will know how to protect themselves. Fraudulent lists must be purged, let the cost be what it will.

I can assure you, as I stated a little while ago, that it cost the Conservative party thousands of dollars to perfect that list. Under date of June 13, 1892, the 'Free Press' published the following warning to electors under large headlines :

The number of electors left off the list in Winnipeg is simply alarming. Immediate attention is necessary if you wish to vote.

In the 'Free Press' issue of June 14 a list of electors left off in South Winnipeg aggregating 500 names is published. In the issue of June 15, Winnipeg Centre list is published, showing 750 names left off the list. In the issue of June 16, Winnipeg North lists are published,showing 500 names left off, or aggregating 1,700 names left off the lists of three Winnipegs. Here are some editorial comments made in the 'Free Press' of June 13, 1892, in reference to the constituency of Beautiful Plains :

This is the way in which the 'Neepawa Register' independent if not neutral in local politics, speaks of the Beautiful Plains list: 'The voters' lists for Beautiful Plains are out. Much has been said against them, and, in all conscience, they are bad enough, though not as iniquitous as at first reported. It would appear that the registration clerk lent his influence to elect Mr. Crawford by an unfair compilation of the lists. Members of Mr. Davidson's committee inform us that between seventy-five and eighty names have been left off. It is said that eighteen such names have been omitted in Neepawa, while there are names in both town and country that have no right to be there.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What was the result of the election at that time?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I am not prepared to say. Then, here are some editorial extracts from the 'Free Press' of July 8, 1892 :

Have we not an Election Act passed at the sacrifice of principle and intended to give a dishonest advantage to the party in power? Did we not see in that surreptitious amendment to 'The Real Property Act' last session, and in the brazen falsehoods over the public accounts, and in that asylum bread contract, how unscrupulous individual members of it are ready to serve a political friend or to advance their own political interests ? Go back over the whole four years and sum it up, and you will see with us that this government has been dishonest all through and will continue to be dishonest if we give it our votes.

The question has been discussed in this House as to which was the better way to make up a voters' list—by adopting municipal registration or by adopting the principle of personal registration. On that subject the Toronto 'Globe' of July 22, 1892, said this :

The system of compiling voters' lists in Ontario under the recent 'Manhood Suffrage Act' has broken down. This is the testimony of the Toronto 'Globe.' The making of the lists is left to the assessors and clerks of the municipalities.

In small towns and municipalities the system works out all right. It is when tested in the larger centres of population that it proves to be a failure. To illustrate, it is estimated that in Toronto there are 8,000 appeals made in behalf of citizens whose names were left off the lists compiled a few weeks ago. These appeals involved a great deal of labour and not a little expense, and they go for nothing three years out of four, unless there happens to be a bye-election. There is no finality, says the 'Globe,' for judging from the past the list for next year must be gone over in the same way. And it adds: there is an easy way out of all this. Let the active party men, instead of trying to gain advantage over each other, often by questionable means, in preparation of the lists, join hands in advocating a system that will make it easy to compile the lists and give no advantage to either party.

That is what I claim we have in Manitoba —a list that gives the same identical advantages to either party, whether Grit or Tory. What does it say ?

A scheme of personal registration is needed. Every year, before the preparation of the lists, the city clerk should be empowered to open offices in each of the six wards of the city, and there electors who desire to vote could sign their names and addresses, at the same time making declaration as to their qualifications.

I have here an extract from the 'Free Press' of October 24, 1895:

In more than as many days Mr. Moffett, registration clerk for the electoral division of South Winnipeg, has received not more than fifteen applications to be registered as voters on the list that is now being prepared. In the other divisions the number of applications is not estimated, but both the clerks agree in saying that there is little or no interest manifested. If this is the condition of things in Winnipeg, where registration is so convenient we can hardly imagine what it is in rural constituencies, where the farmers are overrun with work and the conveniences are by no means so great. The effect of this apathy is to leave the entire work of compilation in the hands of the registration clerks.

And the registration system of the Greenway government worked out in that way. The registration was practically left in the hands of the registration clerks. Even when the registration closed any particular day, there would be hundreds of names handed in to the registration clerk—something which cannot occur to-day. I intend to prove how that cannot occur to-day before I take my seat:

The entire work of compilation is in the hands of the registration clerks, who can put on or take off whatever names they please. It may be said that this is the fault of the electors themselves, who can attend and see that their names are duly registered as they wish. This is quite true, but it is primarily the fault of the law which encourages the electors to believe that somehow or other their names will be registered as voters without the necessity of any trouble on their part.

That condition cannot exist to-day. The elector absolutely knows that the only way his name can get on the list and he can become a voter is by attending the registration and applying to have his name put on. If he is ill or absent from the country, there are forms for registering; but the House will agree that there are not many of these cases. The great bulk of the men who are on the voters' lists in Manitoba are men who have personally signed and registered on the day or days of registration.

The government takes those lists into their own hands by appointing registration clerks who are to compile them by providing that they shall be made up of former lists, Dominion lists, assessment rolls and other available sources of every description. They virtually invite the electors to leave the whole matter with the registration clerks.

So says the Winnipeg 'Free Press':

The whole principle is wrong. The government in the first place should have no connection with the lists. All registration should be made on the voluntary application from the voters themselves.

That is what the 'Free Press' wanted and that is what we have got. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway), who was then first minister of Manitoba, had something to say about this. The 'Free Press' of January 14, 1896, had this to say on the Greenway Election Act:

The provincial election will be over in a day or two. When the legislature is called for the despatch of business, as it will be in a very short time, it could not do better than remove from the province the reproach of the present election law, so far as it has to do with the voters' lists. Mr. Greenway has induced a party franchise scheme. When an election is pending, he sends his party friends into a constituency to act as registrars. These party friends collect the names of voters, and if there is any objection to the lists thus prepared, the voter has the right to appeal to another member of the Liberal association.

That means simply this, that they are not only to be registrars but are also to be revisers appointed by the party:

—appeal to another member of a Liberal association except where a judge revises the lists and any such cases are rare.

I would have expected the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) to be in favour of this as the basis upon which the lists are founded, namely, municipal assessment work. Mr. Greenway would now have the voters' lists compiled by municipal clerks. In the Liberal platform adopted March 24, 1903, the following is stated:

We declare in favour of a simple method of preparing the voters' lists, to be based upon the lists of resident ratepayers compiled by the municipal authorities and supplemented by personal registration.

That is what the liberal party and the Greenway government said when they adopted their platform of 1903, but that does not seem consistent with the views expressed by the hon. member for Lisgar some years before:

It has always been the desire of the Liberal party to leave the preparation of the voters' list in the hands of the municipal clerk, and although the compilation of the lists in 1888 by enumerators had been satisfactory, it was determined in 1889 to introduce a measure providing that the work should be done by municipal clerks. This act was passed in 1889. The lists throughout the provinces in 1889 are made up from the municipal lists which were compiled by the municipal clerks. The result was that the lists were, almost without exception, utterly bad. They contain a multitude of names which should not have appeared, and the residents who were not owners or tenants of real estate were left off in wholesale numbers. There is hardly a constituency in the province in which an examination of the lists of electors made up under the Act of 1889 will not show that it is the most incorrect and defective list ever made up for legislative elections for the territory which it covers. Fortunately there was only one election (Portage la Prairie) held upon the lists of 1899. It was found also that work of getting proper returns from the municipal clerks was so slow and unsatisfactory that in a great many cases the list of 1889 was not completed and revised until 1890. The Portage la Prairie list for 1889, for instance, was not completed until April 30, too late to be used for the municipal elections of 1889 (the municipal and legislative lists being compiled together.) The experiment of having municipal clerks compile voters' lists for legislative purposes was thus given a fair trial, and turned out a dismal failure.

Mr. Greenway also, on the floor of the legislature in 1901, denounced such a system on the ground that it would tend to introduce party politics in the municipal affairs. That was a very good argument. My Conservative friends do not always agree with me, but that makes no difference and we can agree that municipal interests should not be mixed up with either local or federal politics. I believe that our municipal elections should be on an absolutely independent basis, and should have no connection with either federal or provincial politics—and in that I believe Mr. Greenway agrees with me.

The present Act passed by the Roblin government has been given a trial and everywhere the best opinion is that it is the fairest and most impartial piece of legislation ever enacted and placed upon a statute-book. The preparation of the list is entirely removed from government control and influence.

It is only fair to say that that statement probably refers to the Act of 1903, to which I shall refer at greater length a little later on.

The county court judges have the appointment of the registration clerks and revising officers; and non-partisans are selected. The result is that an honest expression of the people on the acts of the government in power is possible. Dead men and absentees have banished from the list.

We can make that statement with confidence from this side of the House. The list as it is revised from year to year in Manitoba is practically free from dead men and absentees. You cannot say that there will not be on it the names of some who are dead as deaths may have occurred since the revision was made, but the principle of the Bill remains the same, to give a clean list, a list which is not stuffed and a list free from the names of dead men and absentees. That is one of the great principles of the existing Manitoba Act.

This government is trying to take particular pains in the little province of Manitoba to do away with that list and to substitute for it a Bill that, according to the Minister of Justice himself, gives only, about four weeks to inaugurate all the machinery necessary to conduct an election in that province. There seems to be a misapprehension on the part of some members. I heard a very intelligent member say today that he thought, even after all we have said, that the judges do not revise our lists, that they are revised by other officers and that the judges came in only on an appeal from the revising officers to the judge. That absolutely is not the case, and I want to make it very clear that the only people who revise the lists in our province are judges or barristers of three years' standing who are appointed by the judges. The government have absolutely nothing to do with the appointment of revising officers.

Mr. D. ROSS. If that is so now, how does the present Bill change it ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The government is to appoint its own officers.

Mr. D. ROSS. As I understand the Bill it does not in any way affect the revising officers in each province.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Here is what it says :

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary herein contained, voters' lists for the portions of the province of Ontario and Quebec which consist of territory not municipally organized and where there is no regular assessment or valuation roll upon which voters' lists are based and for the several electoral districts in the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia shall be prepared immediately after the issue of any writ for an election in any such electoral district or in any electoral district composed or partly composed of such territory: or at any time when the Governor in Council so directs; and for the purpose of preparing and giving effect to such voters' lists the Governor in Council——

That is the Dominion Governor in Council :

--may appoint all necessary officers and confer upon them all necessary powers.

The great trouble I find with the hon. gentlemen opposite, from the Minister of Justice down, is that they have not made themselves conversant with the Manitoba laws of to-day. I would recommend them to spend a night or even a Sunday in studying them.

I wish to deal with some of the statements of my friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford). He is not a drinking man—I do not want to be unparliamentary—but I know he always keeps his head ; therefore I wondered that an intelligent man such as I believe him to be would make such statements as he has made. I hope and I believe that I can confound him if I do not dumbfound him out of his own mouth. He started off by saying :

The judges have no control over the courts of revision.

Is there any other Liberal who would like to make that statement.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I repeat the statement that the judges have no control over the time fixed for revision; that is, the order in council passed by the Manitoba government fixes the dates on which the judges sit and the hours they shall sit; and no business done outside of those hours is acceptable to the government of Manitoba; if anything is done by the judges outside of those hours it is declared invalid and not allowed to go into force.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I did not know what was away back in the deeper recesses of the hon. gentleman's mind. Here is what he said as reported in 'Hansard':

The judges have no control over the courts of revision——

A statement which is absolutely not borne out by the facts. The judges have full control over the court of revision in almost every respect. I drew the attention of the hon. member for Selkirk to that to-day and quoted section 61 of our Act. He was surprised and did not believe that section was there.

Mr. D. ROSS. Have the judges power over the time and place of sitting of the court of revision in Manitoba?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Here is another gentleman to whom I shall have to give some information. Here is clause 61:

In order to give full and due effect to the power of the board——

That is the registration board which is composed of judges and no others.

—the said board may provide for any proceeding, matter or thing for which express provision has not herein been made or for which only partial provision has been made; or where it shall be found that the time allowed to do any act is insufficient and the alteration or extension of such time and any alteration of dates consequent thereon shall appear to be necessary, the board may declare that such alteration shall be made and thereupon the same shall be made and take effect accordingly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The executive council of the province of Manitoba have power to fix the dates, places and times at which the court of revision shall sit, and the clause which provides for that is section 22. subsection 3, from which the hon. gentleman has quoted.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I am not quoting from any subsection at all.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then you had better get the Act.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I have the Act, and I will pass it over to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFFNER.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am quoting from the Election Act of Manitoba, subsection 3 of section 22:

The date——

That is to fix the date:

—or dates on, the place or places at, and the hours between, which applications for registration and the correction and striking off names of electors will be received and shall be concluded in each electoral division.

Now section 65, subsection 11:

The revising officer shall also receive and deal with the applications of all persons to be registered as electors who shall be present at the time fixed for the closing of the court of revision, notwithstanding that the time so fixed shall have elapsed.

It does not allow for dealing with the polls after the hour fixed by order in council. Following that up, the Attorney General of Manitoba, where there were thirty-eight names added to one poll after the hour provided by the statute, struck those names off the voters' list and disfranchised the whole thirty-eight voters.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I have already read section 61 which was revised up to 1908, so that is about as late as we can get it. I will read the clause again for the benefit of the hon. gentleman:

In order to give full and due effect to the powers of the board, the said board may provide for any proceeding, matter or thing for which express provision has not been herein made, or for which only partial provision has been made; or, where it shall be found that the time allowed to do any act is insufficient and an alteration or extension of such time, and any alteration of dates consequent thereon, shall appear to be necessary, the board may declare that such alteration may be made, and thereupon the same shall be made and take effect accordingly.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. In what year was that clause passed?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. In 1904, re-enacted in 1908, and has never been removed. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish again to refer to some remarks of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford). I have been able to stir him up already. His statement that the judges will have no control over the court of revision is absolutely not borne out by the facts. This is what the hon. member says:

While I do not approve of the Manitoba law in its entirety . . . the greatest trouble we have in that province lies in the administration of the law.

He there admits that we have a good law.

The time allowed by the executive council of Manitoba to revise the list is five hours in the day, from one to six o'clock p.m.

He is speaking there of Beautiful Plains. Now this hon. gentleman and many other hon. gentlemen have tried to create the impression that from one o'clock until six in the evening was all the time allowed for revision. Now let me inform the House that in Manitoba we have forty-one constituencies, and in every one of them with the exception of six. the time allowed for revision is from 11 o'clock until 6 o'clock, without any intermission. Now we have heard some one talking about two hours. There may have been some years individual cases of so short a time, I will not say there are not, but I do say that if hon. gentlemen opposite want to be fair they will state the rule and state the exception. I am not saying that in every place the time is from 11 o'clock till 6, but I am saying that with the exception of six constituencies the time is from 11 o'clock until 6. Now the hon. gentleman makes another announcement, speaking of Beautiful Plains :

> Only during those five hours can the judge act in connection with the revision of the lists.

I have read from the Act to show that if the revision was not completed within the time fixed by the statute, the officials had full power to extend the time until the revision was completed. Then the hon. gentleman speaks in connection with the polling subdivisions. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) stated that the Hon. Mr. Mickle who leads the opposition, spoke favourably of our list. So he did; and I say that in the local legislature of Manitoba not a single member of the opposition has ever introduced an amendment to that Election Act during all the time the Roblin government has been in power. The hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie said this :

> That law Mr. Mickle, I think, approved of, and I am prepared to-night to say that the provisions of that law met my views more completely than any other law that I know of with reference to the preparation of the voters' lists. It was practically independent of any political or partisan manipulation; it was free from it altogether. But that did not suit our Tory friends.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is that the law we have got to-day?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. No, and I am going to explain that the statement made by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie was absolutely astray from the facts. He says that that Act was entirely done away with —those were his words—'That Act was entirely done away with.' I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether it was entirely done away with or not. There were some changes, but when an hon. gentleman stands up and makes a sweeping assertion like that he ought to be able to back it up and I claim that he cannot back it up because it is not in accordance with the facts and I propose to prove it. I would like to know if, in the Act that we have to-day, the same great underlying of principle of personal registration does not exist. That was the great principle underlying the Act of 1903. Have we made any change in the blank forms that we use and which I propose to put on record ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. How many sections of the Act were repealed ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is begging the question. The hon. gentleman's statement was that it was entirely swept off the statute-book.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like to make an explanation now.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You want to make an explanation ? There is your statement.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The question was as to whether the principle of the Act of 1903 had been entirely wiped out. I say so now.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I say again that I do not know what is away back in the deep recesses of the hon. gentleman's mind, but I must take what he says to the House.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Sixty-eight sections were repealed.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is not what you say here. Why do you not say what you said in the House before ? The hon. gentleman said that the Act was swept off the statute-book and I say that such a statement is not a fact, that the great principle of personal registration was initiated then and exists to-day. I say that the blank forms that were used for putting men on the list, for putting men off the lists, for absentees, for illness or any of those things, remain to-day on the statute-book the same as they were in 1903. To-day we have revision by judges. It was by judges in 1903. These are the most important provisions of the statute. There was no repeal at that time of the clauses providing for a revision by judges and there is no repeal to-day. Yet the hon. member for Portage la Prairie says that the Roblin government completely wiped the legislation of 1903 off the statute-book. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie was delighted with our law of 1903. Mr. Mickle, the leader of the opposition, was also delighted with it. The law of 1903, the hon. gentleman says, gave the Liberal the same opportunity as the Tory and that the lists were based upon the principle of personal registration. It was at that time that we did away with the old Greenway Act and introduced a Conservative Act providing for personal registration in making up the voters' lists. I have proved, I think, out of the mouth of the hon. gentleman himself, that the great bulk of the names, numbering 50,000 or 60,000, were put upon the lists under a fair law which met with the approval of the leader of the opposition in Manitoba, Mr. Mickle, and my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie. It is wonderful that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie should get up and confess what a grand law this is and then proceed to find fault with it. The hon. gentleman tried to make some point out of the number of days that we give for registration now as compared with the number of days that were given for registration in 1903. I will just take three lists. As the Minister of Justice said the other day, I just happened to pick up these three lists. One is for the electoral division of Beautiful Plains, one is for the electoral division of Avondale and the third is for the electoral division of Mountain. My hon. friends on the other side of the House have tried to show that according to this Act of 1903 there was lots of time given for registration, that there was a whole week, six days, and that there was a registration clerk placed in each one of these registration divisions, which is absolutely correct. But, I ask the House to consider this. What had we to do then ? We had an absolutely new list to make out. Every voter in the province, no matter how long he had lived there, had to go and register. But, he is not required to do that again. When we made our annual revisions after that it was only the man who had become of age or the man who had come from England or some other place and had become qualified by residence, whose name had to be added to those lists. It would not have been just to have put the country to the expense of having a whole week of registration and a large number of men employed in order to add a few names. That would be absolutely ridiculous. But, this shows the unfair way in which some hon. gentlemen on the other side have tried to present this fact to the country. They have sought to show that our Act was unfair because in 1903 we gave six days and six clerks for registration, whereas, we now only give one day and one clerk in each place. Now, let us take the case of Beautiful Plains. I think my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie will agree with me that in Manitoba there are not any more, if any, qualified voters in a local electoral district to-day than there were in 1903. There have been changes no doubt, but Manitoba to-day is a comparatively old settled place and it is almost a question if there are not as many voters going to Alberta and Saskatchewan as there are going from any electoral division in Ontario. So, I think I will not be contradicted by any hon. gentleman opposite when I say that there is about the same number of voters on the lists to-day as there was in 1903. In 1903, when they were made up by personal registration, we had, in Beautiful Plains, to add over 2,000 names —2,002. How many did we have to add in 1907 ? We had to add 188. I will ask any hon. gentlemen if we required as many days and as many registration clerks to add 188 names as we did to add 2,000 ? That is the way it works out. In Beautiful Plains in 1903 there were 96 days which, if you work it out, will give an average of 21 names per day.

In 1907 there would only be 17 per day, which proves conclusively that if we had as many days and as many registry clerks these gentlemen opposite would be the very first to complain about the terrible expense involved. Let me point out that in Avondale in 1903 they had to register 1,547 names and in 1907 they had to register only 147. Carried out in the same way it proves beyond doubt that there is every opportunity given at the present time to every man who wants to register. In the electoral division of Mountain there were 2,303 names added in 1903 when we had six days and six clerks, and in 1907 there were only 158 added. Will any one attempt to argue from these facts that the Manitoba government is not doing its duty in reducing the number of days and the number of registration clerks ? The Minister of Justice stated that the voters on the electoral lists in Manitoba were not properly designated. I can get the lists of all the electoral divisions. I have a large number of them here, and I don't think these gentlemen opposite can find a dozen names after which the occupation, the section, the range, the township, and the post office address is not given. I think that is a pretty fair description of a voter. I don't believe that any law we could place on the statute-book would be perfect, but comparing this Bill which is now proposed to us with the splendid system in the province of Manitoba, I should think the Bill we are discussing is about as imperfect a thing as could be produced. Let us see the days and hours on which the registration clerks of the different electoral districts of Manitoba will be at work in the registration which will take place in a few days. In the electoral division of Arthur they have eight days, in Assinaboine, 10 days, Avondale, 6 days, Beautiful Plains 11 days —the government have been so good to the hon. gentleman from Beautiful Plains (Mr. Crawford) that they have given him 3 days in the town of Neepawa in which to register the names—Birtle 6 days, Carron 11 days, Dauphin 15 days, Deloraine 10 days, Dufferin 14 days.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you mean the office is held open that many days ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. In every electoral district the number of days which I give are the days on which new men who are not on the list have an opportunity to register.

Mr. CARVELL. This year ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. This year.

Mr. CARVELL. Does that mean consecutive days ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. They are consecutive days.

Mr. CARVELL. Does that mean that the clerk opens his court and keeps it open for 10 or 14 days consecutively in the one place?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I did not say that and it would be very unfair if he did so because that would mean that the voters would have a long way to go to register and there would then be some reason for hon. gentlemen opposite to protest. The registration clerk moves around the different parts of the local constituencies to make it convenient for the voters to register and the great aim and desire of the Manitoba government is to give a fair and honest and consistent voters' list.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Will the hon. gentleman tell the House in what year they made these decided improvements in the operation of the Elections Act ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That question is about as irrelevant as many other questions asked by the hon. gentleman, but I would answer that they do not do that every year although they do it a great many years. This is not the first year by any means that it has been carried out. In a year when there is no idea of having either a provincial or a Dominion election it might not be made quite as complete but I am giving you the operation of the law as it is at the present time. In Emmerson they have 12 days, in Gilbert Plains 21 days,—Gilbert Plains is a rather large constituency and they give the voters in the outlying district an opportunity to register—Gimli 21 days, Gladstone 20 days, Hamiota 9 days, Kildonan and St. Andrews 13 days, Killarney 10 days, Lakeside 9 days, Lansdowne 21 days, Manitou 11 days, Minnedosa 16 days, Morden 10 days, Morris 11 days, Portage la Prairie 6 days, Rhineland 6 days, Rockwood 12 days, Russel 14 days, St. Boniface 10 days, South Brandon 9 days, Springfield 12 days, Turtle Mountain 11 days and Virden 8 days. These are the number of days which the provincial government gives the people to register their votes in each constituency this year. Hon. gentlemen opposite have also tried to show that the registration office is open only a few hours during the day, but let us see how that works out. The Manitoba government gives the people 392 days in which to register their votes this year and in that whole number there are only three days in which there is not full time allowed. Surely gentlemen opposite are catching at straws when they are forced to have recourse to such an argument to discredit the Manitoba Act and to bolster up this diabolical thing we have presented to us here as a franchise Act. In one of these three days there is 7 hours allowed, in one 6 hours, and in the other 4 hours. You cannot find a two-hour business from top to bottom. In all the 392 cases except 3 the full time is given, if I am not mistaken—from nine to twelve and from one to six. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie says :

In the local division from which I come they established sixteen registration places appointing a registration clerk for each of these sixteen registration places. These registration clerks had to receive applications there for one whole week, from Monday morning May 25, until Saturday night May 30, and the hours were from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m., giving ample time for the people to register. They were not confined to a couple of hours as has been the case in the last few years or to half a day, but they were allowed six days and sixteen registration places in my constituency.

The hon. gentleman referred to the challenge which appeared in the 'Winnipeg Telegram.' Now, I propose to put this challenge on 'Hansard' :

Another Challenge.

The Bole affidavits were designed to back up the plea that Liberal electors have not had a fair deal in the past. The 'Telegram' has as much faith in the fairness and impartiality of the lists which have been prepared in the past under the existing Manitoba Election Act as it has in the belief that the coming preparation of the lists will be conducted fairly. Firm in this confidence the 'Telegram' will pay $25 to any qualified elector, who not being on the voters' lists and applying in the regular manner was refused the right to register in the last revision of the Manitoba voters' list. Moreover the 'Telegram' is willing, if any claim or claims be made to have them decided by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, from whose decision there shall be no appeal.

So much for the coming registration. Our Liberal friends were not satisfied with that. They wanted a retroactive challenge, and here is the retroactive one—I am sorry the Prime Minister is not in his seat :

A Fair Offer.

The 'Telegram' will pay the sum of $25 to any elector in the province of Manitoba who is not already on the voters' lists who is refused registration if he applies in the regular manner and is legally qualified to vote under our law. Should any claim or claims be made under this offer each case to be referred to Hon. C. J. Mickle, leader of His Majesty's loyal opposition in the Manitoba legislature from whose decision there shall be no appeal. Should any award be made, one half the amount is to be paid to the elector who has been refused registration and the other half to the Winnipeg General hospital.

If we ever got the present Bill on the statute-book, which we never shall, I wonder if any challenge like that would be given. It could not be given, for the reason that it would be absolutely impossible in the time designated in this Bill to properly revise the lists.

Before I take my seat I cannot help referring to the thin red line. Our good friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) undertook to read out of a book something about Mr. Leach, the gentleman to whom the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) gave such a splendid character the other day. He started to read an anecdote ; it read like a novel ; and I wanted him to continue it ; but as he would not do so, I am going to complete the document. I will make him the best believer in the Manitoba voters' list that we have in Manitoba :

In Manitoba as elsewhere, the original election lists are prepared under provincial law. Those for 1904 were reprinted at the bureau at Ottawa for the Dominion elections and sent to the returning officers. A number of these officers turned over the lists to Mr. Leach in Winnipeg.

The hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. member for Portage la Prairie tried to read into the evidence of Mr. Knott, who was down here from Winnipeg giving evidence, that he had said that that was a legal Act. I can find nowhere in the evidence that Mr. Knott made that confession. Mr. Knott said that in every case it was illegal. I ask the hon. members of this House if it was legal to hand over the voters' lists in a number of federal constituencies in Manitoba to a gentleman who secreted himself, and marked those lists to suit the Liberal party of Manitoba. We have every reason to believe that Mr. Leach, before those lists were handed over to him, had had his men make a very careful canvass all over the province of Manitoba ; so that he knew who were the supporters of this government and who were opposed to them, and was in a splendid position, when he and his assistants met in the star-chamber in the Bank of Commerce building in the city of Winnipeg, to prepare the lists to suit the Liberal party. Hon gentlemen opposite are fond of leaving the impression on this House that this difficulty arose in constituencies which overlapped, that is, Dominion constituencies which overlapped local constituencies. Now, I want to point out and emphasize the fact that there never was a prosecution in Manitoba upon the thin red line except where that device had been applied to disfranchise electors in polling subdivisions wholly within an electoral division, and had absolutely nothing to do with the overlapping of constituencies. Every transaction was in connection with those polling subdivisions lying wholly within an electoral division. But I am sorry to say that that is on a par with many of the arguments which have been produced on the other side of the House in connection with this great question ; and no object should be dearer to the heart of every man in this House than to give to every man who has the right to vote the privilege of voting without manipulation by any party, whether Tory or Grit.

A number of these officers turned over the lists to Mr. Leach in Winnipeg——

Absolutely unconstitutional, I should say.

It was the duty of the returning officer to arrange for polling places and decide where each elector should vote. Instead of doing this themselves, those officers who obeyed the party instructions, handed over the task to Mr. Leach's office. From the organizer the lists went back to the returning officers beautifully carved up.

There is no mistake about that. Nobody can dispute it.

Hundreds of names were erased with red lines. Conservative voters, whose names were thus struck out, had no knowledge of the change until they appeared at the polls originally designated for them and asked for ballots. Some of them were then told that their names were probably on a list in some other polling place, though if they were not government supporters they could not learn what place it was.

I would not be reading this evidence, had I not been compelled to by the hon. gentleman who refused to accommodate me by reading it himself. I have therefore to supply the omission :

Hundreds went from village to village all election day looking for their poll and never finding it. Hundreds who were struck off in one place were never registered in another. Hundreds were transferred to polls farther from their homes than the one where they expected to vote and too far to be reached after they had learned the facts. No Conservative had any way of knowing before he went to the poll what had happened. The rearranged lists were not posted as the law required, but private notice was given to Liberals who might have been transferred. Mr. Leach was not an election official. He was not openly known in the case until afterwards. But he had his agents all over the province beforehand ascertaining the political sympathies of the electors and preparing for this splendid operation.

I want now to read some of the evidence which was given before the commission of which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) was chairman :

Q. You carried out the work in the same way as the rest of the work in this office—in such a way that information as to what was being done did not go outside, as far as you know?—A. It did not get outside.

Mr. WHITE. Whose evidence is that ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Mr. Leach's evidence.

Q. Except to the Liberal organization and the persons you thought entitled to the information?—A. We did not take any pains to notify our opponents.

Q. But you took care to keep your work from your opponents. You were doing your work as effectively as possible?—A. It turned out to be effective.

And the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) wants this Bill to be effective in a similar way. Speaking in this House on the subject he warned the right hon. the First Minister that if he wanted to get a single member from Manitoba elected to support him, he had better do some thing with the voters' lists. And that is what the government have undertaken to do. The hon. gentleman was quite right. Public opinion in Manitoba, after considering the conduct of this government from 1898 down to 1904, when the brothers-in-law had full sway, has come to the conclusion that if the government does not make this election Bill fair and honest, there will not be one Liberal returned from that province.

Some of the men concerned in this conspiracy to defraud the electorate were prosecuted and a number escaped to the United States. Several pleaded innocence and the judges differed as to their personal criminality. Others escaped on legal technicalities, but the main facts were well established. One deputy returning officer swore that he took the original lists into the office of Mr. Leach, who undertook to fix it for him. He left the paper with Mr. Leach, and afterwards it came back to him with a number of the names struck off. And though the returning officer was responsible, he did not take the trouble to ascertain whether these names had been struck off properly or not. He admitted that in his own evidence.

Q. You did not know anything about the lists?—A. No.

Q. There may have been different lists altogether so far as you know?—A. Yes.

Q. They may have been the lists of Macdonald and Winnipeg?—A. They may have been.

Q. You took the word of Mr. Leach that these were the lists such as they may be?—A. Yes.

There is the evidence given before this commission by the returning officer who should have done this work but instead turned it over to Mr. Leach. He admitted that he left the red line list open in the Liberal committee room after it had been fixed. This was in Provencher, where 568 were disfranchised and the government majority was ten. Does any one doubt that that constituency was stolen ? There can be absolutely no doubt that it was. In one polling place thirteen were struck off and all Conservatives. In other polling division, the red line went through fifteen names, every one Conservatives, who had voted in that place for years. One incident occurred at Beauséjour where forty-one names were struck out by the thin red line. Government supporters, whose names were erased, were placed in other lists and notified beforehand so that they knew where to vote. Eighteen electors who had expected to vote in that poll were not so notified and could not get information to show them where they ought to go. In this instance the outraged men forced the returning officer to take their ballots and record them as having voted. He put the ballots in envelopes. It was explained that one of the eighteen had made a mistake marking his ballot and thus unintentionally voted for the government candidate. They counted the votes in these envelopes where these men insisted on exercising the franchise, and in the end they showed sixteen Conservatives and two government ballots. The election day was on the 3rd of November and Mr. Leach received a new years gift of an office with $2,000 a year.

Before resuming my seat, I want to call a little attention to the hon. gentleman who represents Winnipeg (Mr. Bole).

Mr. HENDERSON. He is bowled out.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I do not know whether it is because he is bowled out, but he is rarely ever here.

Since his election he has spent very little time in this House. He was here for a short time the other day and referred to the leader of the opposition as taking up a great space in 'Hansard' with quotations; in his own speech, about the only one he has made this session, there is about a column of his own expression and for the balance of the time he read affidavits. I was struck, and I have no doubt other members were also, by the number of apologies he made for reading those affidavits. I do not wonder at that now, in the light of what has transpired. The hon. member remained long enough to read the affidavits, he then retired from the chamber and has not been seen since. These affidavits had been made by a man named Rudneski and they have proved rather a boomerang to our hon. friends. I have here a facsimile of the cheque on the Merchants' Bank of Canada, Winnipeg, by means of which Mr. F. Walton, the organizer of the Liberal party in Manitoba, paid Rudneski $25 for eight men's affidavits. This has turned out to be not a very honourable affair in which the hon. member for Winnipeg has been engaged. The memorandum attached to the affidavit reads :

This was in payment of the affidavits used in the House by Mr. D. W. Bole. Note memo. made on the cheque that it was for eight men's affidavits. The cheque was accepted on the back by Rudneski, but the acceptance being in blue ink was not reproduced in the copy.

We cannot produce the cheque but this facsimile answers my purpose.

We have some more affidavits and I shall not apologize for placing them on the records of the House. I shall read these affidavits from the 'Tribune' of Winnipeg, a paper which supported our Liberal friends very enthusiastically in the last local election in Manitoba. The article containing them is as follows :

In government circles yesterday considerable stir was created by the action of D. W. Bole, M.P., in the federal house on Wednesday, when he read a number of affidavits from Galicians in the city, which went to show that foreigners were naturalized wholesale, by the Conservatives during the last election, and that bribery, fraud and corruption was practised to an enormous extent in North Winnipeg, so that the Liberal candidate could be defeated.

Mr. Bole in the affidavits read mentioned the names of a number of prominent workers in the Conservative party in connection with these alleged frauds, and yesterday affidavits denying the allegations made, and affirming that some of the men making the affidavits read by Mr. Bole are fugitives from justice, and cannot be considered reliable men to support the charges made.

W. H. Hastings, in adition to making his affidavit denying the charges made, made public the fact that he held a cheque for $25 given to Theodore Rudneski by Mr. George Walton, who was Liberal organizer, in payment, he alleges, for the eight affidavits held by Mr. Bole, a number of which he read in the federal House on Wednesday last.

The Liberals in reply contend that the cheque was given in good faith for services rendered.

The following is the affidavit made by W. H. Hastings, the Conservative organizer, during the March elections:—

Dominion of Canada, province of Ontario, to wit:

In the matter of the naturalization of foreigners in the city of Winnipeg, in the year A.D. 1907—

I, Wiliam Henry Hastings, of the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, barrister-at-law, do solemnly declare that I have read in the morning issue of the Manitoba 'Free Press' of this date, what purports to be a copy of an affidavit of one Theodore Rudneski, made on the 31st day of March, A.D., 1907, and read in the House of Commons at Ottawa by Mr. Bole, the member for Winnipeg, during the debate upon the Aylesworth Bill yesterday.

(2) The said Rudneski was employed in my office during the provincial campaign of 1907 merely as a copying clerk and his principal and only work was wrapping up and sending out campaign literature.

(3) I never discussed, directly or indirectly, with the said Rudneski, the naturalization of foreigners, either in the city of Winnipeg or any other part of Manitoba; I never placed him in charge of any committee or allowed his name to be placed on any committee in connection with that campaign.

(4) The statements regarding the mode of procedure in the naturalization of foreigners as set forth in the said affidavit, are, so far as I am concerned, absolutely false and without any foundation whatever, and so far as I know all naturalization papers put through the court for or upon behalf of the Conservative party were so put through in proper and regular form.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

(Signed) W. H. HASTINGS.

Declared before me at the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, this 7th day of May, A.D. 1908.

BENJ. L. DEACON,
A Commissioner in B. R., &c.

R. C. Irving, inspector of legal offices for the provincial government, who was mentioned in an affidavit read by Mr. Bole, has replied with the following affidavit denying the charge:—

Dominion of Canada, province of Manitoba, to wit:

In the matter of the naturalization of aliens in the year 1907.

I, Robert Chrystal Irving, of the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, do sclemnly declare:

(1)—That I have seen the affidavit purporting to be made by one Theodore Rudneski.

(2)—That the statements made in clause 14 of the said affidavit are false.

(3)—That I never received at the hands of the said Theodore Rudneski any applications for naturalization.

(4)—That I never by instructions or innuendo suggested antedating such applications.

(5)—That I never stated I could get applications through the court in a few days without notice.

(6)—That the statement in clause 15 of said affidavit is false.

(7)—That I know nothing whatever of the instructions mentioned in clause 16 of said affidavit that 450 sets of naturalization papers were to be handed to me by the 4th day of February, and further that I did not receive such papers.

(8)—That the statement made in paragraph 17, of said affidavit, that on February 4, 125 applications for naturalization were delivered to me is absolutely false.

(9)—That the statement made by the said Theodore Rudneski in clause 18 of his affidavit that I handed him personally 450 naturalization certificates is without foundation and absolutely false.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

(Sgd.) R. C. IRVING,

Declared before me at the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, this 7th day of May, A.D. 1908.

CHARLES S. TUPPER,
A Commissioner in B. R., &c.

Here is an affidavit by the registrar of the county court :

Dominion of Canada, province of Manitoba ; to wit:

In the matter of naturalization of aliens in the Winnipeg county court, in the year, 1907.

I, L. N. Betourney, of the city of St. Boniface, in the province of Manitoba, do solemnly declare

(1)—Since the amendment to the Naturalization Act requiring three weeks' notice to be given to the court by aliens applying for naturalization, no applications have been read in open court and no certificates of naturalization have been issued by me, without such notice having been given by such aliens as required by law.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

(Sgd.) L. N. BETOURNEY.

Declared before me at the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, this 7th day of May, A.D. 1908.

AUGUSTUS MILLS,
A Commissioner in B.R., &c.

I do not think I need read any more affidavits. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make clear the way in which we make up our Manitoba lists. In referring to the manner in which they were made up under the Greenway administration, I said that it was possible, and I believe it had occurred, that in the local constituency of Turtle Mountain, which is within my own constituency, the lists were made up in such a manner that 10, 20 or 50 names might be handed in, and we believe were handed in, after the close of the registration at the end of the day. Now, I want to show how impossible it would be for such a thing to happen under the present registration laws. I hold in my hand the Manitoba Election Act and the provisions regarding registration. Every man who is registered according to our law must subscribe to this form. First:

1. What is your Christian name, surname, place of residence, occupation and post office address?

2. Are you of the full age of twenty-one years?

3. Are you a British subject by birth or naturalization, and which?

4. Have you resided in the province of Manitoba for one year prior to the date of this your application to be registered an elector within this electoral division?

Let me say in fairness to some hon. gentlemen opposite that they have tried to make a great deal out of the fact that we require a man to be a resident a year in the province of Manitoba, even though he is a British subject. The other night when the hon. member for Portage la Prairie was speaking I asked him who made the law. It was made under a Conservative administration, the Norquay administration, who made the qualification six months in the province and one month in the riding. The Greenway government changed that from six months to one year, and I said the other night that I had an impression that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie was in the local House at that very time. Our government in that province now is ever ready to do anything that is in the line of fairness and justice, and they have continued that qualification; the applicant must have resided in the province of Manitoba for one year.

5. Have you resided or had your chief place of abode in this electoral division for a continuous period of three months prior to the date of this your application to be registered an elector within this electoral division?

6. Are you in any respect disqualified from being registered an elector in this electoral division under 'The Manitoba Election Act'?

7. Do you now reside in the electoral division for which you now apply to be registered an elector? On what premises do you reside?

8. Is your name at present on the list of electors for this electoral division?

9. Have you applied for and been registered an elector in any other electoral division in the province during the current period of registration?

10. Is your name on the list of electors for any electoral division in the province? If so, give the name.

Now, here is the declaration that every man who goes on our voters' list has to sign:

I, , do solemnly declare that the foregoing answers in writing to the above interrogatories are true and correct in substance and in fact, and I make this declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of 'The Canada Evidence Act, 1893.'

All persons who are not ill or absent have to subscribe to that form of declaration. Now, here is the form of notice to registration clerks which is used in the case of persons unable to apply for registration, owing to sickness or other physical disability:

Take notice that I, , of claim to be entitled to be registered as an elector in polling division No. in the electoral division . That my place of residence is that I am physically unable to apply personally for registration as aforesaid. That I am entitled to be registered, and to become an elector in and for the said electoral division of .

Here is the form of notice to registration clerk on behalf of an absentee:

Take notice that I, John Smith, on behalf of Andrew Jones, claim that he is entitled to be registered in the electoral division of Turtle Mountain; and that I know the said Andrew Jones well, and have a personal knowledge of the facts herein stated. That the place of residence of the said Andrew Jones is ; that he is unable by physical inability to apply for personal registration; that he is entitled to registration in said polling subdivision, and to become an elector in and for the said electoral division of Turtle Mountain.

In any one of these three ways, so far as I know, a man can get on the voters' list in the province of Manitoba. A Liberal who comes up to the mark, takes the declaration, or signs it being ill, or gets some one else in his absence to sign for him, gets on the voters' list just as well as a Conservative—absolutely no difference. There is not the same opportunity as that which existed at the end of the day under the old Greenway Act to put in names. Under that Act, at the end of the day you could hand in any number of names. There was nothing to show that you could not do that. Take this registration record and you begin with A—Aitkens, Andrews, or any other name beginning with A is registered on that page. Then you have names beginning with B, C, D, E, or whatever the initial letter may be and it goes on in the same way. At the end of each day the registration clerk is not only obliged to sign this list, but he is absolutely bound by law to sign at the end of all these names. He signs at the end of each day's work. That prevents any tampering with the lists. When six o'clock arrives he has to sign after all these different names and if a page is not signed it is because there have been no names added under that particular letter of the alphabet. There are so many good things about this Manitoba Act that one could talk for weeks about it. I wonder how they ever got such a perfect Act as we have on our statute-book in Manitoba. In making the claims that I have for this Act I have endeavoured to stick strictly to the law and the facts, and I think I can go further and show that it has been carried out practically to the letter. It may be said that no franchise Act is carried out just to the letter, but I doubt if there can be very many cases brought forward to show that such a criticism can be made with respect to the Manitoba Act. To show to what extent these hon. gentlemen are driven one gets up and tries to show that three men at Morris, out of the immense number that we have on the voters' lists were not put on in the right way. I am not going into that question. The judge put them on. Granting that these men were not put on according to law, is it not pretty good evidence that the law is fairly administered when hon. gentlemen opposite can only produce these three cases in support of their statement that the law has not been properly administered? If we have such a good law why change it? I tried, as I stated this afternoon, to discover in the speech of the Minister of Justice, the justification of the government in changing this law, but I was unable to do so. Instead of giving any real reason for the change the Minister of Justice spent most of his time talking about the province of Manitoba.

What was the position of hon. gentlemen opposite in 1898 when they introduced the existing Franchise Act? They had been in opposition for some time. They had had ample opportunity to consider a franchise

Act and we all know that in 1893, in the city of Ottawa, there were a number of planks drawn up at a Liberal convention. I think it has been proven pretty conclusively that the only one of these planks that they were prepared to stand by was the plank by which they pledged themselves to change the Franchise Act by adopting the provincial lists for federal purposes. That was the one plank upon which they stood and now, on the eve of absolutely losing the confidence of the people, of going into opposition, they are going to break that pledge. I was in hopes that this government would go out of power with one single bright spot at least on their record, but it seems now that that hope is not to be realized. Had not the Prime Minister when in opposition thought out this question of a franchise Act? Let us see what he said when he undertook to establish a franchise Act in 1898. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) quoted these words and I am not going over them all but there are some of them that it is utterly impossible for even the Prime Minister to get around. He said that the question of the franchise and of the preparation of voters' lists was absolutely a matter of civil rights and was therefore within provincial jurisdiction, and it was not right for the parliament of Canada to interfere with that; when any province established its franchise and prepared its voters' lists, for the election of its members to its legislature, that franchise and these voters' lists should stand good for the election by the electors of that province of members of this House of Commons. That is very clear, it cannot be mistaken and I believe it was the result of a well thought out principle. Then the right hon. gentleman said:

> Our policy is that the franchise under which the members of this House should be elected is the franchise under which members of the local legislatures are elected. This is the position which we have taken from the beginning——

> But it does not seem to be the position that they are going to take in the end.

> —this is the position we maintain at this moment.

That was in 1898. Then, at page 2281 of 'Hansard' the Prime Minister says:

> I now come to this proposition, which I lay down as a principle of good government, that under a federative government such as our own it is better that there should be only the franchise as regards the provinces and the Dominion—the same franchise should serve to elect members of this House as to elect members of the local legislatures.

At page 2282 the Prime Minister says:

> The regulation of the franchise is, above all things, a domestic matter which concerns and ought to be regulated by the local legislatures and not by this parliament.

At page 3967 :

There can be no doubt what the policy of the government is on this subject.

There is no doubt about that. They had come to the conclusion that this thing was right :

We have introduced the principles and have fought for it for many years——

They could not have fought for it without having thought it out.

—that the franchise ought to be regulated by the provincial legislatures, that it is for them to decide whether or not the Indians should be admitted to vote or not.

He goes on to say that :

The same authority which regulates the franchise for the local legislature should also regulate it for the Dominion parliament.

Again :

We are satisfied to have them prepared by either the provincial or the municipal authorities.

Now, one excuse given for the introduction of this Bill so far as Manitoba is concerned is that the Manitoba list is not made up by municipal authority, but we can see from the statement of the Prime Minister that he is not particular whether the list is made up by municipal authority or by the provincial government. In reference to the action of Mr. Heap—who by the way I may say is a Liberal—that question was fully and exhaustively dealt with by the member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), but I wish to correct a statement which was made by members on the other side of the House in reference to Judge Walker in connection with that indictment. It will be remembered that Mr. Heap added a certain number of names to the list after his jurisdiction had expired and that Judge Walker had certified to this list as he did to the others, but the fact is that Judge Walker issued an entirely different certificate in that case from the usual certificate given by him. The usual certificate given by Judge Walker is the following :

I, David Marr Walker, chairman of the board of registration, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true copy of the names, residence and occupation of the persons appearing on the several registers of the electoral division of Springfield, and duly qualified to appear as such electors for the said electoral division.

D. M. WALKER.

But in the Lac du Bonnet case the following was the certificate given :

I, David Marr Walker, chairman of the board of registration, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the names, residence and occupation of the persons appearing on registration register of registration district number 2, of the electoral division of Springfield, added at the adjourned meeting of the court of revision held at Lac du Bonnet, on the 24th day of June, 1903.

D. M. WALKER.

Any one who reads these two certificates will see the very vital distinction which is made in the latter case, and that they are not the same certificates at all. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have taken up more of the time of the House than I intended, but in a sense I do not regret it. I am deeply in earnest about this matter. If there is one province in the Dominion of Canada to which this Bill should not apply and as to which there is no reason it should apply, it is the province of Manitoba. I ask the Prime Minister to take our Election Act, to take the manner in which our votes are registered and our lists prepared and to consider all the conditions, and I think he must come to the conclusion that the Franchise Act and the manner in which it is administered in Manitoba is fair and just to all parties. It is probable that you can not get any Franchise Act which is absolutely without some defects, but I assert without fear of contradiction that in no province of the Dominion to-day has the election law been more fairly and justly administered than in Manitoba. Why then does the government seek to pick out Manitoba for exceptional treatment ? No doubt British Columbia and the unorganized territories of Quebec and Ontario are included in the Bill, but that was done no doubt so that the fact of picking out Manitoba alone would not be so glaring. I speak with no disrespect to the people who live in the unorganized territory of Ontario and Quebec but I would like to know why it is that the province of Manitoba is put in the same class with them. We want honest and fair lists in Manitoba, we want the Liberals to have the same opportunity for registration as the Conservatives have ; we do not want to do injustice to anybody, and in that spirit the law has been carried out in my province. Why then should the province be interfered with ? One of the members spoke the other night about bloodshed and I do not know what he meant by that, but I do say that so far as I am concerned, after the 27th of June I will be staying here at as great a sacrifice as any member of this House, but I am prepared to make that sacrifice. The Conservative members of Manitoba are standing for a principle which they are prepared to defend to the last, and I believe that we, as well as every member on this side of the House, are determined to resort to every constitutional and legitimate means to prevent this Bill becoming the law of Canada.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON (Selkirk). I do not intend to detain the House at any great length but I feel it incumbent on me to reply to some of the remarks addressed to the House by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche). At page 8270 of 'Hansard' he refers to the difficulties that the Conservatives had in Manitoba in the year 1899 in trying to clean up the electoral lists preparatory to a provincial election; but I think it would be interesting for him to know the troubles we had in my own constituency in 1906 in trying to purge the lists of that year. The hon. member for Souris has been telling us for the last three hours about certain happenings in Manitoba and amongst other things he said that in 1899 it cost the Conservatives about $30,000 to clean up the provincial lists. Perhaps it may astonish him when I tell him that when we undertook to do some cleaning of the provincial lists previous to the last provincial election it cost us in my own county about one-tenth of the sum he named, and the results I think will be surprising to him. In the local division of Rockwood we added 102 names and struck off 264 or a total of 366.

In Gimli we added 81 and struck off 45; in Springfield we added 160 and struck off 111; in Kildonan and St. Andrews we added 122 and struck off 127; total for the four constituencies, 1,012; average for each constituency, 253. The Conservative changes in 1899 for 40 constituencies were 7,371, an average for each constituency of 184¼, or 68¾ less changes in each constituency than we had in 1906. Any hon. gentleman can verify that from the voters' lists which I have here and which I will lay on the table of the House. I leave in for the purpose of this comparison the three Winnipeg constituencies. If we took these out the comparison would show much more to the advantage of the Greenway Act. Therefore,I think it will be fair for us to say that that much-abused Act was certainly a very favourable Act compared with the Act we now have on the statute-book. As far as I am concerned, I have not very much objection to the present Act in Manitoba; it is not the Act itself that I have objection to, but the administration of it by order in council. There is nothing stable about the Act; we do not know from year to year what we may expect. In the last six years every year they have given us something different from what we have had every other year, so that we do not know what to expect. We hear to-day that a new proclamation has been issued—they are going to give us more time for revision. This just goes to show why this matter should be in the hands of the Dominion authorities. I do not want it to be in the hands of partisans on the other side, because I know what we have been treated to in the past.

Mr. LANCASTER. Do you want partisans on your own side?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. No, I do not want that. In my speech in 1905 I said that if we had a Municipal Act such as they have in the province of Ontario, I would be satisfied.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What did Mr. Greenway say?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I am not speaking of what Mr. Greenway said; I am speaking for myself.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The hon. gentleman was supporting Mr. Greenway in the legislature at the time.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Yes, and I have nothing to regret in the support I gave that hon. gentleman for twelve years. We had the best government in Manitoba then that we have ever had. I will just show you, by a table I have here, the difference between this Act and the Greenway Act as to the time given for registration. In 1903 they gave 1,980 days; in 1904, 347 days; in 1905, 40 days; in 1908 they are giving us 392 days. I have not the figures for 1906 and 1907, but they were different from every one of these others. Every year since 1903 we have had a different basis; we do not know what to expect, because the law is not a law on the statute-book, but a law by order in council—that is the objection I have to it.

Mr. STAPLES. Might I ask the hon. gentleman if there is anything different in the Bill before the House?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. It is a principle of the present government to adopt the municipal lists. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who has just spoken if the present Manitoba law is such a good law, what would be the difference if this government revised the list and gave it to us in the proper time? What we object to is that we have not the proper time for revision.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Act proposed does not give more time than the one on the statute-book.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. That can be changed, I suppose, in committee. I would like to point out that one great objection to the present law is that just as soon as the list is made up by the registration clerk, he takes the book away and we may not see it again. We cannot see who are on that list or who are not on it. Under the Greenway Act, just as soon as the registration clerk made up the list he had to have it printed; that was before revision. I will read the clauses of that Act from the statutes of 1891:

The registration clerk shall forthwith, after the closing of the list, cause to be printed at the printing office directed by the clerk of the executive council, two hundred copies of said list of electors and shall at least thirty days before the date fixed for the court of revision cause one copy of said printed list to be posted up in the following places in the electoral division:

(a) Every county court office;
(b) Every post office;

(c) Every public school house;
(d) Every municipal hall or office;
And shall mail to the following persons each fifteen copies thereof :
(a) The member of the legislative assembly for the electoral division last elected;
(b) The defeated candidate for the electoral division at the last election;
And one copy, to each mayor, reeve, councillor and alderman in the electoral division.
The registration clerk shall be bound to furnish to any person applying for the same, copies of said printed list, for a fee of not more than 20 cents for each copy; provided that such registration clerk must retain a sufficient number of copies of said printed list for the purposes required by this Act.

I may say that we wanted a list in the province of Manitoba during the last three months for purposes of organization and it cost us $40 to get what we required from the Roblin government, and we had hard work to get the number required. I want to point out another feature of the Greenway Act, that is, the time provided for revision. Section 16 says :

When it has been determined to make and revise a list of electors in one or more electoral divisions, the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall, by proclamation, appoint a proper person, to be called 'The Registration Clerk,' for each of such electoral divisions ; and, by such proclamation, fix the date for the closing of the list in each electoral division by the registration clerk. Such date shall not be less than four weeks from the date of such proclamation.

Section 20 says :

Forthwith after appointment such judge or barrister shall fix a day, hour and place, for the revision of the list for each electoral division for which he has been appointed, and shall notify the registration clerk in each case. Such day shall not be less than six weeks after the day fixed for the closing of the list by the registration clerk. Such judge or barrister may fix separate days and places for different portions of an electoral division if deemed advisable on account of distance.

In a few days the registration clerks will be going to about five places in my district. I understand the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) to say that the registration districts and the polling districts are conterminous. That is not the case, for in that part of Rockwood, which is in the county of Selkirk, we have 5 registration districts and 9 polling divisions, and in Kildonan we have 13 registration districts and 17 polling divisions ; the others I think are conterminous. In my opinion there is no comparison between the two Acts. The only objection raised against the Greenway Act was as to enumerators. The enumerator had to take the last voters' list of the province of Manitoba, the last Dominion list, and the municipal lists, and from them he had to make up a list, and any one could get on by application. The hon. member for Marquette said there was a difficulty in a voter getting on by application. I think there might possibly be found one of the men they have now appointed as registration clerks that will perhaps not be just the fair thing. That is all I have to say now, so far as Mr. Greenway's Act is concerned.

The other night the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), at page 8283 of 'Hansard,' made a very strong appeal to the First Minister, and pointed out to the right hon. gentleman that he ought to be influenced by the opinion of the Hon. Chas. Mickle regarding the Act. Let me just quote what the Hon. Charles Mickle said when the amendment to the 1902 Act was being moved in 1904. In resuming the debate on the Election Act, he said :

In resuming the debate on the Election Act amendments Mr. Mickle stated that it was usual in such cases for the government to give some explanations, not merely as to why a new measure was introduced, but also for any new departure from principles heretofore accepted and acted upon. The Bill before the House involved radical departures from established precedent and from the policy the government had before pursued; but no explanations had been offered by the attorney general in his speech on the reason for those departures. The essence of the existing election law was the principle of personal registration, and in the amending law that principle had been abandoned. From the beginning to the end of the attorney general's address there had been no explanation of this abandonment. True, he had gone over the amending clauses with some care and particularity, but no explanation or defence of the new principles involved in the Bill had been forthcoming.

One thing, however, was very plain, and must be admitted by everyone who examined the Bill—that in substance it was a capitulation on the part of the government to the soundness of the principles for which the Liberal party in Manitoba had long contended.

Mr. Mickle stated that in the past few years there had been some important changes in the Franchise Act of the province. The Franchise Act of the Greenway government had been based on the municipal lists. When this government came to power they found fault with this principle and succeeded in getting a new principle adopted which had now been in force some years.

In defence of the principles underlying the present Franchise Act, much might be said. Three main features were embodied in the present law—personal registration, the placing the making of the voters' lists in the hands of the judges, and the educational test. The new law did away with some of the most objectionable features of the old. Some of the Liberals had taken exception to the principle of personal registration, as being inconvenient, troublesome and cumbersome. These objections were now removed, for the principle the government introduced and fought for had entirely disappeared. The new Act provided that the list, with annual alterations, should exist for the next twenty or thirty years. The principle of personal registration, as Mr. Mickle understood it, implied personal registration for the preparation of every list.

From this principle and practice the new Act was an entire departure.

Another advantage claimed under the present Act was that the making of the lists was taken out of the hands of partisan officials and put in the hands of the judges. This provision, also, was wiped out by the proposed legislation. It was reasonable and fairly satisfactory in practice under the present Act, but now it was done away with. Henceforth the registration clerks were to be appointed by the government. True, there was still a board of registration, but it was not for the receiving of names but for the appointment of revising officers. If the principle adopted under the present Act had the merits claimed, what reason was there for the changes now sought to be introduced?

Regarding the third principle in the present law, that the voters' lists should be prepared for each general election, Mr. Mickle said that by this means the public was apprised of the approaching contest, and took the necessary interest therein to register. But the new Act provides for annual lists, whether or not an election was impending. The inevitable result would be that three years out of the four, the apathy of the electors would make the so-called revision useless.

Mr. Mickle then went on to point out that the Act was vague in many important respects. As he understood it, there was to be only one place in each electoral division for registering. In many of the larger constituencies this would impose much hardship on those desirous of registering. This provision he disapproved. The hours of registration, and the number of days were not specified.

I think that when the hon. member for Marquette appeals to the right hon. First Minister to take cognizance of the opinion of Mr. Mickle, it was not this opinion he wished the right hon. gentleman to follow.

There is another question I would like to take up and that is regarding the statement made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), on page 8298 of 'Hansard,' and which has to do with the thin red line. He said:

And now, I come to a discussion of the 'thin red line.' We are not afraid to discuss this, as the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) seemed to think we should be. What does the 'thin red line' mean? The voters' lists sent by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to the various returning officers in Manitoba previous to the last Dominion election were mutilated, and mutilated illegally, and scores and hundreds—how many it is impossible to say—of Conservatives were disfranchised by Leach and his associates through the mutilation of these lists.

Again on page 8300, he said:

In my own constituency there was very little overlapping——

He had evidently changed a little when he made these remarks—

In my own constituency there was very little overlapping, just a small portion of three municipalities, one of which is in the unorganized districts. And still there were 1,900 names through which the red line operated.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON.

The hon. gentleman was taking the statement of Mr. Rogers, and he went on to say:

I am not going to say that those 1,900 names were absolutely disfranchised. It was impossible for me to tell. We did not have an investigation in the constituency of Marquette, and why? I knew the returning officer was an honest man, he was a personal friend of my own, and he himself could not stoop to anything in this character.

And on page 8304, he said:

The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) says that there was no complaint in my riding. Why? Because Mr. Leach did not mutilate the lists. He did not transfer the names. They had a returning officer who did that work, and if what the hon. gentleman states is correct, I presume he did it honourably.

After I heard what the hon. member had to say on this point, I would ask how does he account for having remained silent while listening to the untrue and misleading statement made on August 3, 1906, by Mr. Rogers at a meeting held in Minnedosa. Why did he not there say what we heard him say here the other day as regards the honesty of the returning officer? The other night, in the speech he made on this subject to which I have referred, the hon. member for Marquette said it was impossible for him to say how many votes were struck off in Marquette on the occasion of the last Dominion election. Now I have a better opinion of the hon. gentleman than to believe that statement. If he has not the time himself, he could for a very small expenditure, engage someone to go over the voters' list in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and check us the actual names, if any, which were struck off the lists in his county. But these gentlemen do not want the truth and would rather back up a statement which they know is not correct. I have been going up and down in the county of Selkirk in the past four years and have never as yet met a man who said that he had lost his vote during the election of 1904 through being left off the list.

Mr. STAPLES. From whom is the hon. gentleman quoting?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I am making comments on the remarks made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche).

Mr. STAPLES. From what document are you reading now?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I am not reading from any document. I was reading from remarks made by the hon. member for Marquette in this House, and I am now commenting on them.

Mr. STAPLES. The hon. gentleman is reading a document and I want to know what it is.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I am saying that I have been going up and down in the county of Selkirk for the last four years and have never yet met a man who claimed that he had lost his vote during the election of 1904 through having been left off the list. If any had been left off, I certainly would have heard of it. If any large number of voters, say 100 instead of 1,406—the number given by Mr. Rogers at Minnedosa—had been left off, I must have heard of it.

Mr. STAPLES. Who said that?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I am saying it.

Mr. STAPLES. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has not the right to read the remarks he is making. He can only read the remarks made by somebody else.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is the rule that an hon. member may not read his speech, but I am not aware that the hon. gentleman is doing so.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I wish to refer to a few extracts which I have made from the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of August 4, 1906, from a report of a speech made by the Hon. Robert Rogers, at Minnedosa. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) was present on that occasion. Mr. Rogers is reported in this way:

In dealing with the thin red line outrage by which thousands of Manitoba electors were deprived of their franchise, Mr. Rogers presented a telling array of statistics carefully prepared to show the extent of the nefarious practices brought into use by the Liberal organizer to steal seats for the Laurier administration at the last general elections by giving the number of names struck off in each constituency and the majority obtained by the candidates.

Mr. Rogers showed that in each of the four ridings that went Liberal, far more than enough names were struck off to steal the seat for the Liberal candidate, while in each of the three constituencies won by the Conservatives their majorities would have been much larger had the lists not been tampered with.

What would Dr. Roche's majority have been, said Mr. Rogers, had the thin red line not have been operated in his constituency? What would Dr. Schaffner's, what would Mr. Staples' majority have been? And where would Mr. Greenway, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Crawford and Mr. Cyr be to-day had it not been for the handiwork of the Liberal organizer?

Astounding statement.

Mr. Rogers in dealing with the question of publication of the voters' list gave the most astounding statement of the extent to which the Liberal organizer previous to the last Dominion election operated in the destroying of the franchise of many good citizens. He submitted statistics showing the number of electors struck off in each constituency and the majority obtained by the candidate of either party.

Mr. Rogers gave the figures as follows:

I wish for the information of the House to place on 'Hansard' the figures given for the constituency of Marquette represented by my hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche):

As I understand, at the last local election there were only 737 Tory votes polled in the local constituency of Hamiota, and yet this gentleman in the presence of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) made that statement and the hon. member did not open his mouth to contradict it.

This hon. gentleman cannot give me the names of ten men in the district who were struck off and yet he did not say a word at this meeting when it was stated that 1,919 were struck off in Marquette.

Mr. STAPLES. Does the hon. member mean to say there were not that many red lines drawn through the names of the respective people as stated by Mr. Rogers in the various subdivisions in that riding?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. If he had said red lines, that would have been another matter, but he said disfranchised.

Mr. STAPLES. That is what he said, that there were red lines, just as you have read. Further than that, if you will produce to me the lists as returned to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery here by the deputy returning officers, I will show you there were that many.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The figures given for the local constituencies of Birtle and Russel were:

After listening to that statement as given by Mr. Rogers in his own district in reference to which he must have known that the figures were not correct, because Mr. Rogers said that these men were disfranchised, here is what the member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) is reported to have said(:

Dr. Roche, who spoke last, contended that Mr. Waddell's record was such that no fair-minded man could turn him out and asked for the same loyal support for his friend that had been accorded him at the last Dominion election. The Doctor was in a particularly happy vein and touched humorously on the many scandals which had been unearthed at Ottawa during the last session which had been called many times the 'scandal session.' The Atlantic Trading Company deal, 'Arctic' steamer exploit and others of these disgusting revelations were lucidly explained by the speaker before resuming his seat.

For the information of the House I shall place on 'Hansard' a statement of the figures for the county of Selkirk as given by this gentleman, Mr. Rogers, at the same meeting at Minnedosa :

I had charge of that particular district. I was only nominated 40 days before the election and had not time to go over the whole county, and I would say that not one man was disfranchised there. I would ask any hon. gentleman to point out one man left off the list out of 1,500 names. I am known there, I have lived there for 28 years, this is my 21st session in the legislature and in this House and nothing would hurt me more than such a condition as that. Is it likely that there is one particle of truth in that statement ?

Mr. STAPLES. Produce to me the list and I shall show the red line through every one of those names.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The red line does not disfranchise. I will now give the figures for Kildonan and St. Andrews.

Assiniboia.

District.	No. struck off.

10..	66

I might say that I furnished the information which enabled the official in charge to distribute the votes in those polls because they both overlapped into St. Charles in Macdonald represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Staples). I would ask him now if he knows of a single man there who was disfranchised and whose case justified the statement that 22 and 66 were disfranchised there. I know every man in those two polls——

Mr. STAPLES. If the hon. gentleman will go to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and get the list I shall show him the red line drawn through that many names.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. That is not the question.

Mr. STAPLES. That is what Mr. Rogers stated, you can call it disfranchise or what you please.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I have the list right here, an exact copy, furnished by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples) I know is a reasonable gentleman, and if he will give me an hour to-morrow I will convince him that in that particular list that is divided between himself and me out of Assiniboia, there was not a single man left off.

Mr. STAPLES. I say that red lines were drawn through that very list, and that is what Mr. Rogers said.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. That is not what the Conservative press all over the country are saying.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in understanding that the hon. gentleman has a list there from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Yes, as furnished to me by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. It is the list printed by this government and used by the deputy returning officer.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It is not the list, it is a copy.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. It is a copy of the list that is sent from the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on application. Now I would like to point out the absurdity of Mr. Rogers' statement. Now in my home poll, the Stonewall poll, he says there were 270 names disfranchised, 270 votes struck off. In my speech of 1905 I held the opinion that our returning officers had just as much right to change the polls as the returning officers of the Roblin government. In the very heart of my district, in Springfield, where there were eleven returning officers in the preceding election, when the Roblin government had an election in 1903 their returning officers increased the number of polls to thirteen. While I was in the local House supporting the Greenway government, I always had a poll in the centre of the township of Grassmere for the convenience of the people. I did not feel like making good Grits travel twelve miles to vote, and I took twelve sections and added them to the village of Stonewall. As soon as the Roblin government came in they thought it would not hurt the people to travel twelve miles to the Stonewall polls, and they moved that poll from the centre of the township and made them all go to Stonewall to vote. When I was nominated I was asked to select a returning officer. Hon. gentlemen opposite know very well that that is the custom, there is nothing private about my doing that. It is an open secret that I, as the candidate supporting the government, was asked to give the name of the returning officer, and I gave the name. Now it is also an open secret that the returning officer consults the member who recommended him, as the member has greater knowledge of the conditions and knows what point would best suit the convenience of the people. And so this Mr. Duggan, who was appointed returning officer, consulted me and I advised him that we had just as much right to increase the number of polls as the returning officers of the Roblin government had, and I laid out a poll down in Grassmere right in the centre of the township. There were 346 names on the Stonewall list for the whole township and village.

Mr. STAPLES. What authority had you to lay out the polls ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. We had authority in the statutes ; we considered we had the same authority that the Roblin government returning officers had. Anyway, we went on and did it, and it was satisfactory to the people. Now there was a list of 346 names, and my returning officer had to transfer two of those lists. He scored out 200 names from the list used in the Grassmere poll, and the number of votes on the Grassmere list was scored out of the Stonewall poll. There were in all 346 names that were lined out. It was necessary to do that, whether in red ink or black ink. Now let hon. gentlemen opposite point out one man in that poll that lost his vote, though they were all scored out. I am telling this to show the absurdity of the statement made by these hon. gentlemen.

Mr. STAPLES. Was there any overlapping in that poll ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. None whatever. It was right in the interior, the poll of that township, right in the middle of the county; yet there were nearly 300 disfranchised according to Mr. Rogers and not a man lost his vote. Now let me point out how Mr. Rogers' statements have been scattered all over Canada. For instance, here is what the 'Mail and Empire' says:

There is indignation in parliamentary circles over the fact that Mr. Leach, the government official who operated the 'thin red line' in Manitoba, has been appointed to supervise the distribution of seed grain in the Northwest. This politician was formerly Liberal organizer for Manitoba. At the last election it was found by persons who came to vote in many of the constituencies that their names had been crossed off the lists by a thin red line. It is estimated that fully 10,000 voters were disfranchised as a consequence.

Now take the Montreal 'Gazette,' another good paper:

The Montreal 'Gazette' recalls the 'thin red line' episode at the last federal elections by which 9,000 voters were disfranchised and points out that the appointment of thin-red-line Leach to supervise the distribution of seed grain is not really a cause for the surprise that was expressed in parliament but perfectly in line with all the customs and practices of the present government. The 'Gazette' gives a brief biography of Leach and comments on the policy of Liberalism in retaining such men in its service.

Then it goes on further:

The matter has often been discussed in parliament. Mr. Leach or those working under his direction drew red lines through the names of known or presumed voters, and disfranchised them. In Portage la Prairie, 1,395 names were erased; in Selkirk, 1,406 names; in Lisgar, 1,131 names; and so on.

Now the 'Edmonton Journal'—I do not know whether that is Conservative or Liberal; perhaps the Minister of the Interior can tell:

The erasion of the names of over 9,000 Conservatives from the electoral lists of the province of Manitoba, just prior to the general elections of 1904, and by which outrage the Liberals stole three seats in that province, was sufficient to recommend Mr. Leach to the farmers of this country as an adept distributor of political gains, if nothing else.

Then the Montreal 'Gazette' has another editorial:

Mr. Leach or those working under his direction drew red lines through the names of known or presumed Conservative voters, and disfranchised them. In Portage la Prairie 1,395 names were erased; in Selkirk, 1,406 names; in Lisgar, 1,131 names; and so on. These names had been regularly put on the lists by the proper officers; the lists had been sent to Ottawa and duly printed. Their removal by a partisan acting for the Liberal machine was an outrage that would have provoked widespread denunciation in any community not rotten with partisan bigotry.

In the Ottawa 'Journal,' we find:

In the election of 1904 (when Mr. Leach was party organizer in Manitoba) the original voters' lists were prepared under the provincial law, reprinted at Ottawa, and sent to the returning officers in Manitoba, a number of whom turned over their lists to Mr. Leach. From his hands the lists went back with hundreds of names erased in red ink. In nearly every case the name so erased was that of a Conservative. Some were probably on the list at some other polling place, though they could not learn where to go. Hundreds went in search, but could not find where to vote. Hundreds were erased in one division and not placed at another, and hundreds were transferred to places too distant to reach after learning how they had been fooled. The number of Conservative voters thus disfranchised was estimated at over 9,000. In Provencher 500 Conservatives were discarded and there the government majority was ten.

With a fund of nearly three millions at his disposal on what appears to be the eve of another general election, it should not be difficult, knowing the man's record, to imagine the particular sort of seed sowing Mr. Leach will indulge in most extensively. That the harvest he will provide for will be one of Reform majorities may easily be believed.

Well, I do not think that it is necessary for me to read many more extracts. But I will just read one more:

'Thin Red Line' Manipulator will distribute Seed Grain.

This is taken from the 'Mail and Empire.'

Regina, Sask., Feb. 13.—R. E. A. Leach, the Liberal politician who was involved in the 'thin red line' outrage, has arrived in the city to superintend the work of the seed grain loans, to be made by the Dominion government. Offices have been taken, and a staff of forty will be engaged for the next three months. Leach states that from 25,000 to 50,000 applications for seed grain are looked for.

There is nothing very bad in the last quotation only showing the intent to fasten a stigma on Mr. Leach's character. In the year 1905 after the Dominion election, as you may remember, Mr. Leach was arrested. I may say that I have a pretty good knowledge of the Tory party and the way they manipulate things in Manitoba, and a determined effort was made in the last Dominion election to terrorize the voters in my constituency. They had their provincial police up in the northern part of the province, up in the parts where the foreigners were, and these men would throw open their coats to show their stars and in that way terrorize the voters. They arrested a returning officer in my constituency before anything wrong was done. In 1905 there certainly were 12 or 14 names struck off the list. But Mr. Duggan was arrested in Selkirk about 11 o'clock in the morning and there was nothing communicated so far as I know to the Winnipeg authorities before one or two o'clock in the afternoon from Beausejour. They also arrested Mr. Walton and took Mr. Calverly to jail. I was myself at Stonewall, but we had too many of our friends in that district for them to do anything. They tried to tyrannize the northern district. They had men sent up there as constables with that object in view. That is what we are up against with this government in Manitoba. They will not stick at anything. I have no hesitation in saying that the government of Manitoba will stick at nothing at an election and the consequence is that we have to fight in order to hold our own. We have been doing that for the last 20 years and I think we can do it for a few years yet. After all these charges were made against Mr. Leach in the different courts and after everything that took place regarding his case, here is the wind up :

TORIES WITHDRAW ALL CHARGES AGAINST 'THIN RED LINE' LEACH.

Attorney General of Manitoba makes application at Manitoba Assize Court to have all Prosecutions dropped—Straight Confession of Falsity of outrageous charges formerly made.

That is pretty good.

Winnipeg, March 3.—The Conservatives threw up the sponge completely at the assize court to-day by making application for nolle prosequi in the celebrated cases brought by them against R. E. A. Leach and other Liberals in connection with the last Dominion general elections in Manitoba. Their action to-day is the most abject confession of having made totally unwarrantable charges of wrong-doing against Mr. Leach and three returning officers; charges for which they had not a tittle of evidence and the withdrawal of which to-day is positive proof that they had no evidence.

Yes, these hon. gentlemen, although they have seen this in the paper, still go on with their charges. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) repeats these charges, and even, I am sorry to say, our hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), spoke disapprovingly of the idea of Mr. Leach being entrusted with some work in connection with the distribution of seed grain when there is absolutely nothing against this man.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman honestly think that any returning officer was justified, in view of the oath of office he took, to receive the lists from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, in handing these lists over to the organizer of a political party and to give him the right to advise him and map out the polling subdivisions?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Well, would it have been right to go to the organizer of the Conservative party?

Mr. SPROULE. No, it would not.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I think if I had been the returning officer I would have gone to a friend who knew something about the matter and asked him to give me all the information he had in his possession, and Mr. Leach, being the organizer, was the man who had this information. There is no one that the returning officer could have gone to who was better informed upon the subject.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentlemen think that the fact that Mr. Leach was the organizer of the party was enough to create a want of confidence in what was done on the part of those on the other side, and does he not think that it is very desirable to avoid that?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I never considered the matter very much in that way. We did what was right in connection with the voters' lists, and if these gentlemen wanted to find fault they would find fault anyway as they always do. It does not make any difference how we manage matters, they are always finding fault. I will just continue this quotation :

The incident to-day came about in the following manner. When Chief Justice Howell had concluded his address to the grand jury at the assizes he asked if there were any cases ready to be heard. E. L. Howell, solicitor for the accused in the prosecution against L. Duggan, J. C. Jickling and A. Ayote, returning officers for Selkirk, Macdonald and Provencher respectively in the last federal election and R. E. A. Leach, called the attention of the court to these cases. Thereupon deputy Attorney General Patterson, acting for the Attorney General of Manitoba, stated to the court that a stay of proceedings had been granted and all the indictments dropped.

This marks the close of the famous and much advertised 'thin red line' cases over which Conservatives throughout Canada have attempted to make party capital for three years past.

An hon. MEMBER. What paper is that?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The Regina 'Leader.' I have known Mr. Leach for a number of years. I know that he was an honest farmer in the Brandon district and a teacher of a Sunday school class in the Methodist church.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I do not think that would hurt him any. I have never heard of one single thing being uttered against Mr. Leach's character in the province of Manitoba. He did what he was asked to do, and I think he did it in a very fair manner. The hon. member for East Grey will understand that when a man is put up against a list like this it is hard for him to tell what to do. What is the returning officer going to do when he is put up against such a list as was presented to me? When I came down here I sent for a list for the electoral division of Selkirk on which there were 8,000 and some odd names and 5,000 of which belonged to the constituency of Selkirk. I say we should have something from the Dominion government to provide that when we send the returning officer the list he may carry it home with him and lay out the polling subdivisions.

Mr. SPROULE. When the returning officer in my division applied to me to make the polling subdivisions I told him to consult the clerk of the council who was as well informed on that subject as any one and who, I thought, could give him more assistance than any one else, and for myself or any agent of mine to interfere would be very improper in my judgment.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I can understand the hon. gentleman doing that in an old-settled district, but if he lived in a district in which there are 14,000,000 acres of land and in which there are lots of men without any qualification at all on the voters' list he would understand how difficult it was to adopt that procedure. I went over this list four years ago and I found that I was 200 or 300 votes out in my calculation, and I am pretty good at figuring. But I just want to pass on to another subject that has been mentioned by the leader of the opposition. The hon. leader of the opposition has challenged any one to point out any man who was actually disfranchised during the last year or two by this Act. He wanted the names. I shall read from the 'Free Press' of June 17, 1903, an article dated June 16, from Beausejour which will perhaps give some new information about the Lac du Bonnet case and which has not been given to the House before.

Beausejour, June 16.—The court of revision for Springfield constituency was not closed here yesterday, but Mr. Fred. Heap, the revising barrister, after considering representations made to him, adjourned the court to meet at Lac du Bonnet on Wednesday, June 24th.

At the court of revision here yesterday, a man named McLeod, from Lac du Bonnet applied to be registered. He informed the court that out of fifty electors who resided at Lac du Bonnet but one had registered during registration week, while he himself was the only one who applied for registration at the court of revision. The remainder would be disfranchised unless the court adjourned to Lac du Bonnet.

It appeared from statements which were made to the court, by the candidates, and by Mr. Madden, the reeve of Brokenhead municipality, that the responsibility for this state of affairs rests upon the registration board. In dividing Springfield into registration districts, they included Lac du Bonnet in a district, the polling booth for which was placed at Cromwell. Cromwell is distant from Lac du Bonnet as the crow flies, about twenty miles, but the two places are separated by an impassible morass. In order to register, the residents of Lac du Bonnet would have been obliged to travel by train over the branch line from Lac du Bonnet to Molson, thence along the main line to Beausejour, and from that point they would have to drive eight miles to Cromwell. The only train service to Lac du Bonnet is a weekly train which leaves Molson every Wednesday forenoon, runs down to Lac du Bonnet and returns in the afternoon. The electors of Lac du Bonnet were therefore unable to present themselves at the registration booth. The only man who registered propelled himself from Lac du Bonnet to Molson by hand car, then proceeded by railway train to Beausejour, and thence to Cromwell. The matter was very fully debated by parties cognizant of the facts at the court of revision here yesterday, and it was pointed out to the revising barrister that the people of Lac du Bonnet had been allowed to believe at the time of registration that the court of revision would adjourn to that point in order to enable them to register their names. Mr. Heap, the revising barrister, expessed a willingness to proceed at once to Lac du Bonnet, but objection was taken to this by Mr. Corbett, the Conservative candidate, and Mr. Madden, the reeve of Brokenhead, who requested that time be given to allow due notification to the people of the Brokenhead district. Mr. Heap accordingly fixed the date as above mentioned, namely, Wednesday, June 24.

On that day, Mr. Heap will go down to Lac du Bonnet on the one train that runs each week. In the interval the electors will all be notified, and it is hoped they will all be present and enroll themselves during the hour or so which will elapse before the train begins its return journey.

The feeling here is that Mr. Heap has taken the only honest course to prevent the disfranchisement of the residents of an important settlement, and his action is universally approved by people of all shades of politics.

Mr. STAPLES. What paper is that from?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The Manitoba 'Free Press.'

Mr. STAPLES. Is it an editorial ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. No, it is from their correspondent at Beausejour.

Mr. STAPLES. Was Mr. Heap a revising barrister under the law on the day of the adjourned court ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. If you want my opinion I would say he was.

Mr. STAPLES. Judge Walker says different.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I do not think the hon. gentleman has any authority for such a statement. I will now place on 'Hansard' a list of electors which may be interesting to the hon. leader of the opposition. The hon. gentleman asked for the name of a single one who had been disfranchised, and I give him this list :

List of electors, electoral division of Springfield. Registration district No. 2. Being names added at the adjourned court of revision held on the 24th day of June, A.D. 1903, at Lac du Bonnet.

Allard, Frank, Lac du Bonnet, laborer

Tallman, Walter, Lac du Bonnet, brick-maker
Thompson, John, laborer
Turcotte, John, Lac du Bonnet, laborer
Wellway, Thos. H., Lac du Bonnet, cook
Wood, John, Lac du Bonnet, laborer

This was returned by Mr. Heap to D. M. Walker, who was the senior judge of the county court and chairman of the board and Judge Walker attached to the list the following certificate :

Winnipeg, June 29, 1903.

I, David Marr Walker, chairman of the board of registration, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the names, residence and occupation of the persons appearing on registration register of registration district No. 2 of the electoral division of Springfield, added at the adjourned meeting of the court of revision held at Lac du Bonnet on the 24th day of June, 1903.

(Signed) D. M. WALKER.

Mr. STAPLES. Is that the same declaration as the judge signed to the other lists ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. This declaration is sufficient for me and I think it would be sufficient for any court in the land.

Mr. STAPLES. Is it the declaration set out in the statute ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. He certifies these names were added at the adjourned meeting of the court of revision.

Mr. STAPLES. Does he say they were qualified electors?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. He certifies that they appear on the registration register of registration district No. 2 and that they were added at an adjourned Court of Revision. Now I will give you some more information in connection with this matter. I quote from the 'Free Press' of Monday, July 20, 1903 :

The outrageous blocking out of over a hundred duly qualified electors in Centre Winnipeg from the court of revision, though it was declared by the Court of King's Bench a grossly unjust and illegal procedure, nevertheless remains effective, thanks to the steps taken before the Court of King's Bench could give judgment to put it out of the power of that court to remedy the injustice done. As a result, over a hundred duly qualified electors in Centre Winnipeg will not be allowed to record their votes to-day. They have been disfranchised, though they complied exactly with the provisions of the law.

The case of the thirty-eight voters of Lac du Bonnet is still more glaring. These men would have been absolutely unable to register had not the revising officer, Mr. Heap, of Selkirk, adjourned the court of revision to Lac du Bonnet for their benefit.

For the course he took—which was upheld by the judgment of the Court of King's Bench in the Centre Winnipeg case—Mr. Heap had dire threats launched against him by Mr. Colin H. Campbell, Attorney General by grace of Mr. R. P. Roblin. But Mr. Heap, undeterred, went straight ahead and did his duty.

But Mr. Colin H. Campbell has had a card up his sleeve.

There are nine subdivisions in the constituency of Springfield, Lac du Bonnet being in the record. The voters' list for the constituency has been prepared in nine sections, one for each subdivision; and the thirty-eight Lac du Bonnet electors have been added in an appendix at the end.

The list furnished to the deputy returning officer for use in subdivision No. 2, Springfield, to-day is the second section of the list for Springfield. That is all he has been given; the appendix containing the names of the Lac du Bonnet electors, has not been furnished to him. He has been strictly instructed that he is to allow no one to vote whose names is not on the partial list put into his hands.

What do the honest electors think of this deliberate disfranchising of registered voters?

I quote from the Manitoba 'Free Press, June 26, 1903 :

Mr. Fred. Heap, of Selkirk, the revising officer for the constituency of Springfield, set a noteworthy example of the conscientiousness and fearlessness which a public official should bring to the discharge of his duties.

He held the court of revision for Springfield on June 15 at Beausejour and when 5 o'clock arrived instead of closing the revision proceedings and declaring his functions as revising officer ended he announced it adjourned to Lac du Bonnet. This he did in order to allow the residents of the latter place to register. Had he not done so they would have been disfranchised. When Mr. Heap announced the adjourning of the court of revision, both the Liberal and Conservative candidates were present.

By agreement Wednesday was fixed upon as the date to which the adjournment should be made. Wednesday accordingly Mr. Heap went to Lac du Bonnet and registered 38 electors. In adjourning the court of revision as he did Mr. Heap braved the terrors of the Roblin government. Mr. Attorney General Campbell notified him that if he did not at once sign his books and turn them in the chief of provincial police would be despatched to Selkirk to bring both him and the books to Winnipeg, but the launching of the thunderbolt by Mr. Campbell did not cause Mr. Heap a tremor. He went straight ahead and did his duty and he has a complete vindication in the fact that the 38 electors in Lac du Bonnet who are now on the list would have been disfranchised had he closed the court of revision at 5 o'clock on June 15.

As the 'Free Press' has already explained there is only one train a week on the Lac du Bonnet branch. It runs on Wednesday going out from Molson on the Canadian Pacific Railway main line in the morning and coming back in the evening. This made it impossible for the electors of Lac du Bonnet either to register at the booth appointed for the registration district to which they belong or to attend the court of revision at Beausejour. Had Mr. Heap not taken the course he did despite the fulminations of the Attorney General, these electors would have been barred out from the exercise of their franchise. Every fair-minded man will applaud Mr. Heap's action and condemn the Attorney General's resort to intimidation.

Mr. AVERY. What are you reading from ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The Manitoba 'Free Press.' Now, Mr. Speaker, the other day the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) referred to Mr. Heap as a partisan revising officer. I do not think he knows Mr. Heap or he would not speak of him in that way. I have known Mr. Heap for something like 12 years and he was then a Conservative. He did not do anything for me in the last campaign of 1904. I can say that if there is a fair man who is above any partisan feeling in the whole province of Manitoba it is Mr. Fred Heap, and I know him very well. I do not know that he voted for me, as he was not in any way active. He did not attend any meetings in my behalf, and I do not know him to be a partisan at all. I have never known him to take any active part in a political campaign till last year. If there is any man in Manitoba who is non-partisan, he is the man. These 38 men were disfranchised so far as the election of 1903 was concerned. In the list of 1904 I find only 14 of those names. If we had a stable list, the whole 38 names would have been on that list, and could only have been struck off for cause. I find in my list for the federal constituency of Selkirk for 1907 there are only nine of those men ; all the others were struck off, so that they have been disfranchised. In connection with this matter, it has been charged that some one in the Attorney General's office tore off a page and a half of the list. Here is the sworn evidence of O. B. Harvey, who was returning officer in Springfield in the election of 1903, as to a list of electors at Lac du Bonnet who were deprived of their votes. He said :

I didn't deprive them of their votes; it was the board of registration. We knew that a page and a half of names had been torn off, but he said I am not sure they were torn off in my presence.

Mr. Howell.—Did you have a list with this page and a half in your possession?

Witness.—Yes, I had it.

Mr. Howell.—Who mutilated the list by tearing off those names?

Witness.—I cannot say.

This witness was the returning officer for Springfield, and he made eleven polling divisions out of nine furnished him from the lists.

Now, I would like to show how the present law affects the constituency which I have the honour to represent in this House.

The Revised Statutes of Manitoba, volumn 1, 1902, page 859, clause 47, provides that the registration clerk shall enter on his register the name, occupation and residence of applicants. There does not appear to be any post offices required by this clause to be put after qualification of voters, but we find that in the Statutes of Manitoba, assented to on the 8th day of February, 1904, page 27, section 15, also the Manitoba Elections' Act, 1904, chapter 52, page 10, section 31 provides for the post office being put after the qualification of voters. Now this statute was passed three months before the 1904 voters' list was made up, and yet the post office address of 8,234 voters is not on the list out of a total number of 8,338 as shown on the list sent me by the King's Printer, only 159 voters being put on the list in a proper manner as set forth in the statutes. Also in the Manitoba Statutes of 1906, page 64, clause 31, provides for the post office address. Though this applies only to Winnipeg city and Brandon divisions. I have also here a partial list of the county of Selkirk for the year 1906, made up from Manitoba lists on which the last provincial elections were run, and out of 5,566 names on said list 2,877 names are without post office addresses. When an appeal is made to strike off any name it is necessary to notify the registration clerk as shown by form No. 9, page 75, Manitoba Elections Act, 1904. Now, this application to strike off a name must give the name and post office address of the party appealed against. You put in your appeal and where there is no post office address on the list you must simply guess at the post office, as my district is so large and scattered that it is impossible to swear to the post office address of the majority of the voters. When you come before the judge or barrister, who sits at the point, tens, yes hundreds, of miles away from the voter appealed against, you find it impossible in most cases to present evidence which will enable the revising officer to strike off the name. Now, I would like to ask any hon. member of this House what he would do if he was up against a list such as was furnished me by the King's Printer of this government when he was asked by me to send a copy of the voters' list for the county of Selkirk, and which I now lay on the table for the information of hon. gentlemen. I might say further that in anticipation of a coming Dominion election I asked a gentleman well qualified for the work to prepare me a list for the county of Selkirk as taken from the list used in the provincial election of 1907. After some weeks' work he sent me a list which was supposed to contain the names of all those entitled to vote at the present time in that county. Upon examination I find that the voters in two suburbs in Winnipeg, Lincoln Park and Elmwood, had not been included by him in the list for the county of Selkirk, and these voters were now in North Winnipeg for the provincial purposes, but still remain in my county for the purpose of a Dominion election. Upon looking up the municipal list which I had for this ward seven of the city of Winnipeg, I found that it contained 922 names. He also omitted to put on this list 127 names which are in the local division of St. Boniface, but belong to the county of Selkirk for the purpose of a Dominion election. The lists as furnished to the returning officers by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery are in such shape that I would challenge any two honourable gentlemen to go over these lists and prepare an identical list. I have gone over them several times and every time with a different result.

I mention this to show the difficulties we are up against in asking our Dominion returning officers to make a proper list for any county in the province of Manitoba from the present provincial lists. For the information of the House I will give particulars regarding this 1904 list which appertained to the county which I have the honour to represent in this House. In the county of Selkirk are two complete electoral divisions and parts of four others. The list for Kildonan and St. Andrews contains 1,942 names, all in Selkirk. The list for Springfield contains 1,090, all in Selkirk. The list for Assiniboia contains 1,002 names, 89 of which belong to Selkirk and 913 to Macdonald. The list for Gimli contains 1,234 names, 594 of which belong to Selkirk and 640 to Dauphin. The list for Rockwood contains 1,706 names, 1,381 of which belong to Selkirk and 325 to Macdonald. The list for St. Boniface contains 1,414 names, 127 of which belong to Selkirk and 1,287 to Provencher. The names on these 6 electoral divisions total up to 8,388 ; of these names 5,222 belong to the county of Selkirk ; 640 to Dauphin, 1,238 to Macdonald and 1,287 to Provencher, or a total of 3,165 names which have to be taken off the lists as furnished to the returning officer by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. I would like to make an explanation here. When I was speaking on this subject in May, 1905, I made the statement that there were 9,000 names on the list sent me by the King's Printer of which only 4,824 votes were in the county of Selkirk. I now find, as stated a moment ago, that the exact figures are 8,388 and 5,223.

Just here, Mr. Speaker, I will give you a list of the registration districts in the electoral divisions of Kildonan and St. Andrews, Rockwood, Springfield, and Gimli, as set forth in the 'Manitoba Gazette' of April, 1907, and give the distance from the place where the registration was held to the towns where the judge sat on the court of revision.

Electoral division of Kildonan and St. Andrews, on Monday morning, May 27 :

Lots 71 and 72 Kildonan, at the house of Stanley Lane, distance to Selkirk, 20 miles.

On Monday afternoon May 27, the house of John T. Haywood on lot 111 Middlechurch, distance from Selkirk, 16 miles.

On Tuesday morning, May 28, at the reading room St. Andrews, distance from Selkirk, 7 miles.

On Tuesday afternoon, May 28, at the Council chamber, St. Clements, distance from Selkirk, 4 miles.

On Wednesday, May 29, at the house of Jacob Anton, Winnipeg Beach, distance from Selkirk, 30 miles.

On Thursday, May 30, at the house of E. L. Carter, on section 12, township, 6, range 3, east, distance from Selkirk, 20 miles.

On Friday and Saturday, May 31 and June 1st at the Town Hall Selkirk.

On Monday afternoon, June 3, at the house of Benjamin Davis on section 20, township 15, range 6, east, distance from Selkirk, 22 miles.

On Tuesday afternoon, June 4, at the school house, Balsam Bay, a distance from Selkirk, 40 miles.

On Thursday, June 6, at the house of J. B. Chevrefils, on River lot 22, Fort Alexander, distance from Selkirk, 80 miles.

Electoral division of Gimli, Court of Revision, Gimli :

On Monday morning, May 27, at the house of S. G. Nordan, on section 23, township 22, range 3, east, distance from Gimli, 23 miles.

On Tuesday, May 28, at the house of G. Helgason, on section 5, township 21, range 3, east, a distance from Gimli of 20 miles.

On Wednesday, May 29, at the Baldwin hall, Gimli.

On Friday, May 31, at the post office, Pleasant Home, a distance from Gimli of 21 miles.

On Tuesday, June 4, at the Lindar Hall, Lindar, a distance from Gimli of 119 miles by the only possible route.

On Wednesday, June 5, at the Markland Hall, Markland, a distance from Gimli of 140 miles by the only possible route.

On Friday, June 7, at the house of John Blue on section 10, township 21, range 7, west, a distance from Gimli of 140 miles, by the only possible route. These registration divisions have been changed some by a recent Gazette, but the court of revision for my district remains at Gimli.

Electoral division of Rockwood :

On Monday, May 27, at the house of W. McNeil, Teulon, a distance from Stonewall of 20 miles.

On Tuesday, May 28, at Skinkles Hall, Balmoral, distance from Stonewall, 8 miles.

On Wednesday, May 29, at the registry office, Stonewall.

On Thursday, May 30, at the house of William Mitchell, Stony Mountain, distance from Stonewall, 7 miles.

On Friday, May 31, at the house of A. M. Campbell, on section 10, township 14, range 1, east, distance from Stonewall, 40 miles.

And referring to this registration district. I might say that no such person as A. M. Campbell resides on the quarter-section described.

On Saturday, June 1, at the house of David Porteous, on section 9, township 14, range 2, west, distance from Stonewall, 17 miles.

On Monday, June 3, at the house of A. R. Henderson, on section 20, township 15, range 3, west, distance from Stonewall, 34 miles.

On Tuesday, June 4, in the Council chamber, St. Laurent, distance from Stonewall, 48 miles.

On Wednesday, June 25, at the house of L. Ward, on section 30, township 16, range 1, west, distance from Stonewall, 27 miles.

Electoral division of Springfield :

On Monday afternoon, May 27, at the house of John Fetterly, on section 30, township 10, range 8, east, a distance from Beauséjour of 60 miles, by train the only route at the time of revision.

On Tuesday afternoon, May 28, at the house of O. B. Harvey, on section 24, township 10, range 4, east, a distance from Beauséjour, of 50 miles by train.

On Wednesday, May 29, at the post office Springfield, a distance from Beauséjour of 35 miles by train.

On Thursday, May 30, at the house of W. G. Stebbing, on section 14, township 12, range 6, east, a distance from Beausejour of 11 miles.

On Friday, May 31, at the house of R. J. Gerradr, Tyndal, a distance from Beauséjour, of 7 miles.

On Saturday, June 1, at the House of R. Bethel, Beauséjour.

On Thursday, June 6 at the house of John McLeod, Whitemouth, a distance from Beauséjour of 25 miles.

On Saturday, June 8, at the house of Antoine Monezhenski, Cromwell, a distance from Beauséjour of 7 miles.

If the persons qualified to be put on as voters do not receive notice of the time of registration or for any other reason do not appear at the place fixed for registration, they have to travel the distances mentioned to get on the list, and from reliable information obtained by me in the year 1905, hundreds of British subjects, in other ways qualified, were unable to get on the lists for the county of Selkirk and were consequently disfranchised, something no hon. gentleman in this House should for a moment justify.

There is quite a large settlement at or near Berens River and around Snake Island on Lake Winnipeg, and the average distance from there to Balsam Bay, where the voter had to go to register would be about 125 miles by water; and it is impossible to go by land which would not be any shorter. Last spring navigation opened in these parts on June 18, and the time fixed for registration was ended the first week in June. The consequence being that no names were added to poll No. 14 and only two struck off, the reason being that they had moved to Selkirk, the town where the court of revision was held.

I will give a few instances of the distances people have to travel if they wish to attend the courts of revision and this applies to the revision shortly to take place:

Fisher river to Gimli, 130 miles.
Hecla, Big island to Gimli, 50 miles.
Wells mill, Humbug bay, to Gimli, 90 miles.
Georges island to Selkirk, 200 miles.
Little Grand rapids to Selkirk, 266 miles.
Berens river to Selkirk, 160 miles.
Badthroat river to Selkirk, 90 miles.
Fort Alexander to Selkirk, 80 miles.

As far as Berens river is concerned, it is a farce to send a registration clerk there now. No mail goes up there at this season and the men are out fishing, so that there are none there at present. If a man there wants to get on the list, he has to travel down the distance mentioned by me.

Mr. STAPLES. What date does the registration clerk sit at this particular place ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. June 6.

Mr. STAPLES. Will navigation be open then ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. It may be. Last year it was open June 18 at Berens river.

Mr. STAPLES. Does no mail go in there ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. For six weeks in the fall and six weeks in the spring there is no mail to that point.

Mr. STAPLES. Did you have registration there under the Greenway administration ?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. We sent a man up in the spring to round up the votes.

Mr. HENDERSON. To round up the Grits.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), the other evening, challenged the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) regarding a statement he made as to this distance people had to go to register in my district. Just before the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) came into the chamber he asked me what was the furthest distance any voter had to travel in my district to register, and I said one hundred miles. The hon. member for Marquette said he had taken the map and found that there was a registration district within thirty miles of the northern boundary of Manitoba. But he should have cast his eye east and he would have seen that there was a distance of 110 miles up the Berens river where there was no registration district, and if he had looked up the census map, he would have found that there was a settlement of 133 people there. They are not all entitled to go on the list but a considerable number are. It is a Hudson bay settlement and has quite a half-breed population. It takes three days to get there, so that in making the statement he did the hon. member for Lisgar was absolutely correct.

I wish now to draw attention to another point. Rockwood and Springfield courts of revision last year were both on the same day, making it impossible for the Dominion member to be present at one of these places, Stonewall and Beauséjour. This is an awkward thing for a Dominion constituency and its representative. It is impossible for him to attend all the courts of revision. In my district they have two or three sittings on the same day at different places. I would like to attend the courts while I am a member for the Dominion House but it is simply impossible. These courts are laid out to suit the local constituencies, and that is why the Dominion should take hold of the matter and arrange it to suit the Dominion constituency. The courts of revision should be held on different dates in the different districts of a Dominion constituency.

Let me refer to the proclamation in the 'Manitoba Gazette,' No. 17, April 25, 1908, which shows the short time given at the court of revision, and the time is statutory, judges and barristers having no power to extend it.

Assiniboia court of revision, June 27, last day of registration June 1st. The Assiniboia time is fair, twenty-five days. That is the best in my county.

Gimli, court of revision, 16th of June, last day of registration, June 6,—only nine days between the date of registration and the court of revision, and it is a difficult district to get over.

In Kildonan and St. Andrews there was only 12 days, in Rockwood 13 days, in St. Boniface 24 days, in Springfield 5 days.

In 1904 in Assiniboia there were 23 days, in Gimli 19 days, in Kildonan and St. Andrews 18 days, in Rockwood 8 days, in Springfield 5 days, and in St. Boniface 18 days.

The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) stated that he understood nearly all the registration districts and the poll districts were coterminous. That is not so in regard to this district. In Kildonan and St. Andrews in 1904 there were 17 polls and only 10 registration districts.

I might state for the information of the House the size of some of the local constituencies. Gimli has an area of 156 by 54 miles, Kildonan and St. Andrews an area of 72 by 168 miles, Springfield an area of 42 by 84 miles and Rockwood of 30 by 42 miles.

The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) asked the Minister of Justice who arranged the lists for the local elections. I do not know what answer the minister gave him but I may say that for the local elections of 1903, the returning officers arranged the lists. I have here a letter from Mr. J. Hooper showing that 13 returning officers made more polls than were allowed, as claimed by him, according to the law. This shows that it is nothing new for returning officers in that part of the country to make more polls than are laid down by the registration divisions.

One deputy returning officer in my constituency left the province really to avoid the annoyance he was put to on account of the harassing tactics of the Roblin government and this federal government will have to see to it in the future that their election officers shall have protection and shall not be worried to death by a partisan government.

There is one point to which I wish to call the attention of the Prime minister and the Minister of Justice. Under the Manitoba law there is no power to increase the number of polls, the 1903 polls must stand under the present law. I would ask any hon. gentleman oposite to point out any power vested by the Manitoba statute in any one, from the Governor General down, to increase the number of polls in a local constituency. In the constituency of Selkirk, which I have the honour to represent, the census of 1901, upon which the last redistribution was founded gave a population of 24,021. The polls as laid down in 1903 in the local lists suit that census and though the population of Selkirk in 1906 was 39,093, there was no change in the number of polls nor can there be until the Manitoba law is changed. So this Bill before its passage should have a provision inserted curing this defect. From 1901 to 1906 the population of Selkirk increased 15,072, and since 1906, I can safely say 5,000 more have been added. Now this increase of population is scatterred over a very large and rough country and it is absolutely necessary that at least 20 new polls should be established; if this parliament does not wish to practically disfranchise a very large number of hard working and honest farmers. For of my own knowledge I can say that a large majority of this increase are men located on farms. The attention of the Minister of Justice is especially directed to this point, as it is one of immense importance to Selkirk, Provencher and Dauphin, each of these three counties having increased at about the same rate. In the spring of 1905, one year after the last general elections, I took a trip up to Snake Island, about 100 miles from the town of Selkirk. A Mr. Raymond, who kept a general store, gave me a list of over 30 British subjects of over 21 years of age, who should be on the list but were disfranchised owing to the methods of compiling the lists. Most of these men were fishermen and many of them were born in the province.

The present Bill, with some amendments, for we can hardly expect any Bill to pass through the House without some amendment, will, I believe, cure many of the defects as far as lists are concerned, with which we are at present troubled in Manitoba. I do not wish any partisan compilation of lists ; all I wish for is a list that will be just and fair to all concerned and will secure a full and free expression of the will of the electors. It has been claimed by one hon. gentleman that if there had been a fair list, I would have been defeated by 1,000. That is not borne out by the experience of the local elections. In the local elections in the spring of 1904 one of the local counties in my riding, was carried by the Liberals by 256 in the part that was in the county of Selkirk, this one Gimli being a fractional division, another by 185 ; we lost one by 40 and another by one; in two polls in Assiniboia, which are in my riding there was a local Liberal majority of 25. My majority was slightly over 500 in 1904, and we had a Liberal majority of over 400 in the local campaign. You can understand that the Roblin government having control of all matters in connection with the running of provincial elections there would certainly be no disfranchisement of any Conservative voters in the local election.

Mr. W. WRIGHT (Muskoka). Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the Bill before the House will touch the riding, I have the honour to represent, I may be pardoned for discussing it for a short time. It is Bill No. 115, to amend the Dominion Elections Act introduced by the Minister of Justice. There are many good features in the Bill. I do not purpose entering into a discussion of its various clauses, but shall confine myself to section 9a, which reads as follows :

9a. Notwithstanding anything to the contrary herein contained, voters' lists for the portions of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec which consist of territory not municipally organized and where there is no regular assessment or valuation roll upon which voters' lists are based and for the several electoral districts in the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia, shall be prepared immediately after the issue of any writ for an election in any such electoral district or in any electoral district composed or partly composed of such territory, or at any time when the Governor in Council so directs; and for the purpose of preparing and giving effect to such voters' lists the Governor in Council may appoint all necessary officers and confer upon them all necessary powers.

I shall briefly refer to the position of the two parties in regard to this matter. The Conservatives in this House have been charged with inconsistency, inasmuch as they have objected to the introduction of this measure giving to the Dominion parliament a measure of control over the election machinery in connection with Dominion elections. Now, the Conservatives in the past have endorsed the compilation of the voters' lists under the control of the Dominion parliament, and they placed an Act upon the statute-book a good many years ago under which they held several elections. The Reform party came into power pledged to do away with the Dominion Franchise Act and adopt the Acts of the provinces, and they did so. I believe they did this on the plea of economy. They claimed that it would be cheaper, and they pinned their faith to the Acts of the various legislatures and asserted that they could be worked out to the satisfaction of the people. Now, what we have found objectionable in the Provincial Acts consists mainly in the following points: We have objected because the qualification is different in the several provinces; manhood suffrage prevails in some and a property qualification in others. Another reason was that residence was required in some places and not required in others. In some provinces they have one man one vote ; in other places a man can vote as many times as he can qualify, and can only be limited by the number of constituencies he may be able to reach. Then the provinces have different methods of making voters' lists, and the lists are compiled at different times. So in adopting the various lists we have found a great deal of objection, we have found it difficult to compile lists suitable for the whole Dominion.

Now, how far does this Bill go towards curing these objections? I do not find that it touches a single objection that the Conservatives have raised to the provincial franchise lists. If the provincial franchise were adopted with a view to economy, then every move that has been made since would meet with the objection that they are increasing the cost. Now, what is the necessity for introducing this measure? It is claimed that in the province of Manitoba there has been some difficulty with regard to the adoption of the provincial lists.

Charges have been made across the floor of the House, and counter charges have been made; I do not propose to go into a discussion of these charges. I propose, however, to say a few words as regards the province of Ontario. Now, our method of compiling voters' lists may date I suppose from the return of the rolls by the assessor. Over a large portion of the province this is done on the last day of April. There is then a period of fourteen days given for anybody to appeal who thinks he has been improperly assessed, or that any of his neighbours have been improperly assessed. At the end of that fourteen days the council, or a committee of the council, is appointed a court of revision, and they sit upon appeals. After they have rendered their verdict the clerk takes the roll and compiles a voters' list off that roll. He compiles it in three parts. In part 1 he puts down the names of all persons qualified to vote at both parliamentary and municipal elections. In part 2 he puts down all the names that are qualified to vote at municipal elections only, and in part 3 those who are qualified to vote at parliamentary elections only. As soon as these have been printed they are posted up, and thirty days' notice is given to enable any person aggrieved to put in an appeal. If an appeal is made inside of 30 days the district judge, or the county judge, as the case may be, takes up the matter. He states the day on which he will hold a court, so that in every case there is a court provided, and a judge sits and hears all appeals and renders his verdict accordingly. After the judge has held his court he then gives a certain length of time in order than anybody who has been inadvertently left off the list may appeal to be put on. Then he sends the list to the clerk of the Crown in Chancery, where it is further dealt with. Then comes in a provision found, not in the Ontario statute, but in the old Dominion Elections Act, which requires these lists to be completed by the judge 60 days before the nomination of candidates or the issuing of the writ, I forget which. Now, I want to point out that all this legal machinery is considered necessary before these lists can be used in order that the rights of every one may be safeguarded, and that everybody may have a right to vote who is qualified to be placed upon the voters' lists. Now, what is the necessity of the 60 days' delay after the completion of the list? I apprehend that it is to allow the lists to be printed at the Government Printing Office in Ottawa, and that ample time may be given the proofreaders to see that no names are left off that were sent in to them. Then the list is sent back to the various municipalities that the candidates who are running for parliament may become conversant with them before they use them in the election. Now, if all that machinery is necessary, and we have found it necessary in Ontario in the organized territory that is not brought under the scope of this Bill, would it be safe, I ask, to adopt a measure such as this that would allow the government to start its legal machinery immediately after the writs are issued? I say that it would be utterly impossible to start that machinery after the writs are issued and at the same time to safeguard the rights of all men who have a right to the franchise. Any attempt to do anything of that kind will lead to the disfranchisement of hundreds and thousands of people in the territory that will be brought under the scope of this measure.

One very strong objection was made by the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) that there was not sufficient time under the Ontario Act properly to make up the lists in the unorganized territory. Now, if there is not sufficient time under the machinery that has been provided by the Ontario government in the unorganized territory, what will be said of the opportunity that will be provided under this Bill that will require the whole thing to be done inside of five weeks? If we take the last election as a criterion we can come to no other conclusion but that the election will take place in about five weeks after the issue of the writs. Let us see how that will work out. The writs are issued. The compilation of the lists is placed in the hands of certain enumerators—I am dealing now with the unorganized portion, we will say, of Ontario or Quebec. The same argument I presume would apply to Manitoba or British Columbia. The enumerators start out to perform their work. We have found it necessary in Ontario to give 30 days' notice that people may become conversant with the fact that the court will be held.

We will suppose that they give 30 days notice and the people are given an opportunity to have their names placed on the list; some people feel aggrieved because they have been left off by the enumerator who ever he may be. He is not an official of standing, he need not be a lawyer or a judge; he may be anybody and the presumption is that he will be a strong party man. He will sit in court and if he has left anybody off or if anybody is put on who should not be put on there will be an appeal. Is it possible that there can be an appeal before the judge and that these lists can be completed and placed in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for use in election? The thing is an absurdity. It cannot be done and any attempt to do anything of the kind will result in robbing the people of their rights to a large extent in this country. In the unorganized districts of Ontario we have had a law that has allowed the compilation of lists about every three years and we have had a provision in the Dominion Elections Act to meet that discrepancy. I think that probably I had better read the provision that we have already so as to show there is no necessity for further legislation to make this matter workable. I will read the sub-section (a) of section 8 which is to be found at page 59 of the Dominion Elections Act :

In case the lists mentioned in the last preceding section have been prepared for more than one year, new voters' lists shall be prepared, and the Governor in Council may, for the purpose of preparing and giving effect to such new voters' lists, appoint all necessary officers and confer upon them all necessary powers.

2. In the preparation of such lists, the provisions of the laws of the province regulating the preparation and revision and bringing into force of the provincial voters' lists in such cases, shall, as far as possible, be obseved and followed.

That was probably necessary in order that we should be able to make the voters' lists of that province workable for Dominion purposes. I have no quarrel with that provision of the Act and I only point it out to show that everything has been provided for. That has been supplemented by a provision in the Ontario Elections Act passed during the last winter for the revision of the voters' lists in the unorganized portions of Ontario every twelve months. There is absolutely no reason for touching Ontario in this matter in any shape or form.

Mr. CRAWFORD. How are the lists going to be prepared now for the provincial elections in northern Ontario ? I understand that the elections are to be on the 8th June and that the lists are not complete yet.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. The machinery was set in motion last March and they have been busy ever since preparing these lists. They have to go through these various stages in order to preserve the rights of the public. If the hon. gentleman wants to show that this measure is necessary he will have to show that this all could be done in the five weeks which would elapse between the issuing of the writs and the holding of the election. Five weeks have already elapsed in regard to the lists in the unorganized portions of Ontario.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Have they got the registration completed yet ?

Mr. W. WRIGHT. What does the hon. gentleman mean when he says ' completed.'

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the enumeration completed yet ?

Mr. W. WRIGHT. I believe the enumeration is about completed but there will be an appeal to the judge.

Mr. GRAHAM. I agree with my hon. friend as to the thirty days that ought to be allowed after the enumeration for revision, but in the unorganized district where the enumeration is not completed it will be impossible to have thirty days for revision before the elections on the 8th June. That is the point that my hon. friend (Mr. Crawford) is making.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. The thirty days have elapsed. More than thirty days have passed since they commenced to compile these lists.

Mr. GRAHAM. But that is not the provision. The provision is that thirty days must elapse between the completion of the lists and the court of revision and that is a physical impossibility because the enumeration is not finished yet.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. No, there are not thirty days between the completion of the lists and the court of revision if the Minister of Railways and Canals means the court that the judge will preside at. That is not the provision in the Act, but it is that there shall be thirty days between the giving of the notice and the meeting of the enumerators that has reference to the sitting of the enumerators, and then there are ten days between that court and the judge's court, the idea being that people shall have that additional opportunity of getting on the list. These two periods, one of thirty days and one of ten days, make forty days that must intervene and there must be the time when the enumerators are getting out their notices and distributing them to the various districts.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am a little rusty on the Ontario election law now. I understood the time was longer. Would my hon. friend say that as a matter of fact in a large district like that, ten days, as he says the law provides—I thought it was longer—is sufficient time for the enumerators to prepare their preliminary list, to have that looked over and to allow people to put in their applications for names to be out, on or struck off.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. Do you mean the appeal to the judge ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. We have thirty days in the older districts but only ten days, the hon. gentleman says, in the newer districts.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. And ten days in the others. You have not thirty days in the others.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. I know whereof I speak. You have thirty days originally to appeal to the enumerators, but you have only ten days to appeal to the judge from the enumerators. The enumerators take the same place as the appeal to the judge would in the unorganized districts so that there are thirty days in addition to the ten days in which to appeal.

Mr. GRAHAM. Ten days is not long enough.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. It is open to debate, I will admit, as to whether ten days is a sufficient length of time. But, the point I am making now is that you have thirty days and ten days and if these periods are found necessary in order to safeguard the interests of the public, how are you going to get the whole thing done in the five weeks that this Act provides for? I think the Minister of Railways and Canals must admit that there would not be sufficient time to perform the whole operation inside of five weeks. I believe there has been a change in regard to the question which was raised by the Minister of Railways and Canals. I believe that there was a repeal of the provision respecting the thirty days' appeal from the enumerator, if I may so term that official. We did not call them enumerators in the Ontario Act. There was the right of appeal for a period of thirty days, but in order to hasten the preparation of the lists for the election that is pending in Ontario that time has been shortened and this has been subject to a good deal of criticism. I think there should be a reasonable time given, but under the provisions of the Bill which we are now discussing such an appeal would be absolutely impossible. No government could commence after the writs are issued and make up proper voters' lists and look after the interests of the people at the same time. Somebody is going to suffer.

That being the case and every interest of the public being safeguarded in the province of Ontario, I do not know any good reason why we should be brought under the scope of this Bill and put to the double expense of looking after two courts of revision inside of one year. Let me point out that any government that wishes to get the voters' lists in the province of Ontario as old and as obsolete as possible will hold an election in the month of October or November. By doing so they will have lists that are practically a year and a half old, and hundreds and thousands of people in that province will be disfranchised whenever elections are held late in the fall of the year. If they were held a little later the new lists would be available and if they were held earlier the lists would be nearer to the date of the previous final revision. But under the machinery in Ontario, as I described it a little while ago, the lists are finally completed by the judge and available for election purposes along in the latter part of November and December. If an election should be held in October or November next, we will be using lists that have been compiled a year and a half previously. That applies to the organized part of Ontario which this Bill does not deal with. Now, the fact is that under our law we could not have a list that would be as old as that in the unorganized portions of the province, so that the unorganized territory is, under the law, more up to date in its voters' lists than the organized part of the province. That being the case, I do not know of any good reason why this law should apply to the unorganized portions of Ontario. The lists there will be compiled annually from this time forward. I think there never has been any charge of unfairness; I think our courts in the northern part of the province have been fairly conducted both under the late government and the present government and there has been very little complaint so far as I know. I think the people have tried to act honestly and honourably, and that being the case, I do not see why we should use federal machinery; go over what has been already well done by the province. It is an utter waste of time and effort and of public money, and unjustifiable from any standpoint.

One of two words with regard to Manitoba. I do not purpose going into any general discussion of the question as it affects Manitoba, but I point out that it would be very hard indeed to satisfy our Liberal friends from that province. Their idea seems to be that the proper method of compiling voters' lists is to hand them over to some well known partisan of their own party who would take the lists down to the party headquarters and do what they like with them and never let a Conservative voter know what has been done so that he cannot tell whether he is on the list or not, and if he is lucky enough not to be disfranchised he is sent to vote 15 or 20 miles away. That seems to be their idea of what will be a fair and equitable and reasonable arrangement. How can they expect the Conservative opposition in this House to agree to that? As far as I know the courts of Manitoba are properly constituted and the judges will sit upon every appeal that is made from the revision court. I cannot believe that the judges of Manitoba will be so unjust in their decisions as to disqualify any man who has a right to be registered. I do not believe that, and consequently I am prepared to stand by the arrangement that allows an appeal to the court. As to whether or not sufficient time is allowed for registration I cannot discuss that question, because I do not know the character of the roads and the local conditions and other matters of detail, but I have no reason to believe that the government of Manitoba or the judges of Manitoba would deliberately set about to disfranchise certain of their citizens. At any rate if sufficient time is not given it would disqualify Conservatives as well as Reformers. We were told to-night that Mr. Leach was a very honest man, that one time he was an honest farmer and that he taught Sunday School. Well, that might have carried a great deal of weight at one time, but we have the memory of another gentleman who used to teach Sunday School and who went into West Elgin and sang There is Sunshine in My Soul to-day, when at the same time his cohorts were around disfranchising the people and stuffing the ballot boxes for all they were forth. That man was punished by this government giving him a very lucrative office, and I believe Mr. Leach has also been punished by getting a good government situation out in the west. I am afraid our Reform friends will hardly be able to satisfy the general public of this country that what they are asking in this respect is fair and reasonable and honest.

I want to say a word or two with regard to the province of Quebec. There is an attempt made in this Bill, whether it is a sham attempt or otherwise, to bring Quebec under the provisions of clause 9A. In the province of Quebec they have a property qualification; a man must have property worth so much money, or he must have an income of a certain amount, or he must have earned a certain sum during the preceding 12 months to qualify him to be on the voters' lists. It has been stated that in certain outlying portions of that province there is territory outside the municipal boundaries and the residents of which are not on the municipal lists. It is proposed in order to put these men on the lists to send out an enumerator. Is he going to be qualified as a valuator in order that he shall determine whether a certain farmer should be put on the list, whether his property is sufficient to entitle him to go on the list, whether if he has one or more sons the property is valuable enough to entitle them all to a vote. And after the enumerator has traversed the riding and made his lists, it would be utterly impossible to have an appeal to any judge because 30 days would have expired and then the decision of this enumerator would be final. It has always been deemed wise to have an appeal to a judge in such cases. Is an exception going to be made here? If the appeal is cut out, injustice and wrong may follow. Looked at from every standpoint, I fear that this clause 9A has been conceived in iniquity and born in sin, if it ever comes to birth. Now, the province of Quebec has been in the hands of friends of the Prime Minister for a good many years and if there is any crying grievance in that province, surely the remedy can easily be applied. Our friends on the opposite side cannot claim that they have an unfriendly government in the province of Quebec. We have sitting in this House as head of the government, a gentleman who is very intimate with the Quebec government, and who has, I believe, a great deal of influence in the province of Quebec. We know right well that all the right hon. gentleman has to do in the province of Quebec is to say to one: Go, and he goeth and to another: Come, and he cometh. If there is anything wrong in the compilation of the voters' lists in the province of Quebec, all he has to do is to raise his little finger to have it set right. I cannot conceive that the government of that province could have been so unmindful of the rights of their own citizens as deliberately to leave them off the voters' list, like scattered sheep. As was proved the other day by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, there is provision in the statutes of Quebec enabling the county officers to compile the list if the municipal officers are not able to do it. So that the machinery is here and can be put in motion at any time. It has been intimated that possibly the fact that never before has there been a transcontinental railway built throughout the back part of the province, and that never before have foreigners in that district been put on the voters' list, may furnish a key for unlocking the door which will let us into the reasons why it is proposed to put this law on the statute-book at the present time.

We have not had much information, I admit, from the province of British Columbia. The hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross) stated that they had very little complaint to make of the voters' list there. He said that they had not descended to the bickerings which people apparently did in other parts of the country, and that the voters' list was honestly compiled and everybody entitled to a vote was put on it. If that is the case, why meddle with it? If there is no grievance and everybody is satisfied, why should we lay violent hands upon a matter that pertains to the province only?

If this government were taking hold of this question from the broad standpoint of making a voters' list for the whole Dominion, I would give it my support. It does seem to be an anomaly that we should have all kinds of qualifications, people voting half a dozen times in one province and only once in another. There are many reasons why we should have a uniform Franchise Act covering the whole Dominion. But this Bill does not attempt to touch any grievance. Its effect will be to perpetuate any thing evil in the present situation, rather than to remedy it. Looking at the Bill from every standpoint, I cannot see any good reason for it. The only ostensible reason is the one little point in the province of Manitoba, of Dominion ridings overlapping provincial ridings. That ought to be provided for, and if it is provided for by the authorities in Manitoba, there is no excuse for this Act. If it is not provided for by them, this House would have a right to make some reasonable provision for it. But that work should be done by a proper court, by men vested with proper authority, and after being properly advertised, so that everybody would have an opportunity of knowing that he was on the voters' list and that somebody was appealing to have his name knocked off, or of having his name put on if it is not there. Voters should not be subject to being bandied about by some party hack without knowing any thing about it. Any interference such as we have had by the thin red line cannot be tolerated in a free country like Canada. I cannot understand how it is that members from the province of Manitoba have got up one after another without condemning a condition of affairs like that. If that is their idea of what is fair and honest, I am sorry for the people of Manitoba who have sent such representatives to this House and I think they ought to send men here who are more reasonable.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What about the black line used by the Conservatives ?

Mr. WM. WRIGHT (Muskoka). I do not care whether the lines are red or black, or whether they are used by Conservatives or Liberals ; I do not think they should be used.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How could the work be done ?

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. If it were done legally, in open court, where both parties were present, there would be no grievance. Any judge who would disfranchise people whose names should be on the list should have his gown taken from him, no matter what political party may have appointed him. If there is any thing that ought to be done straight and clean and honest, it is the compilation of the voters' list, so that every man who is entitled to it should have the privilege of putting his ballot in the box and having it counted for the candidate for whom he wishes to vote. In this matter I would not countenance any crooked work for any party, and I do not believe the judges of this country would lend themselves to any thing of that kind. I have every confidence that they would do what is fair and right, and I think provision should be made that nobody but a judge should be the final arbitrator to decide what names should be put on or taken off the list of voters. We ought not to leave such a matter in the hands of any man that a government—whether the government of Manitoba or the government of Ontario or this government—may choose to pick out for this work men who are under obligations to the party who appoint them, and who know that they will get a fat office if they do the dirty work of the party, we shall never have a clean election. Let it be done in a way that will bear the light of day ; let it be left to the judges, and let us see that ample time is provided for every man who is entitled to vote to have his name put on the list, and then let us see that he is properly safeguarded in exercising his right to go to the poll and cast his ballot for the man of his choice. There are other matters that I would like to speak of, but as the House must be weary at this late hour of the night, I will reserve what further I have to say for the discussion of the Bill in committee.

Mr. DUGAS (Montcalm). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I do not intend at this late hour of the night to go very minutely in the Bill before this House. I will limit myself to a part only of the arguments advanced by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), in his speech last Friday.

The hon. member has quoted the electoral law of Quebec in a very inexact way. I was astounded when reading his speech in the 'Hansard' when I saw what gross errors he had made in expounding that law.

He said that the principle of the law was that every organized municipality, either parish or county, in our province had the power to prepare the electoral lists. This is absolutely against the practice up to this day. I will quote his own words, so that I will have a better chance of reputing them:

> Now, is there in the province of Quebec any territory not organized municipally? For, if there is not, then the statement contained in that enactment is not true, and a great semblance of reason it seems to me, is given to the statement made here by my hon. friend from Marquette. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has practised law for a long time in a part of the country where municipal cases were frequent. He knows perfectly well that there is not one inch of the province of Quebec that is not organized municipally—not one inch. He shakes the head; he has doubts on that point. I will, therefore, endeavour to convince him. You know that we have in the province of Quebec cities and towns and villages especially organized—that is, covered by special statutes of the local legislature. Will my right hon. friend say that these particular places are not municipally organized?

Thus, the contention of my hon. friend is that in the province of Quebec there are no unorganized territories as municipalities. I will show that this statement is absolutely contrary to the facts. The hon. member establishes his argument on section 17 of the Electoral Law of Quebec, which reads in this way:

> 17. The secretary treasurer of each municipality shall, between the first and fifteenth days of the month of September, in each year, make in duplicate, subdivided for each polling subdivision, a list, in alphabetical order, of all persons who, according to the valuation roll then in force in the municipality for municipal purposes appear to be electors by reason of the immovable property possessed or occupied by them in any manner within the municipality, or by reason of being otherwise qualified as set forth in article 9. It is the duty of the council of the municipality to see that at the time named there is such a secretary treasurer appointed and competent to act.

Relying upon this section, the hon. member contends that the list of voters can be made by the secretary of every municipality. This contention has absolutely no foundation. Here is what my hon. friend answered to this argument. Here is what he said the other night:

Our electoral law prescribes that the secretary treasurer of the council, whatever council it may be, must make an electoral list and if he has under his control territory which belongs properly to the county council where there is no local municipal organization, he should make an electoral list for that part of his territory. There is no question about that whatever.

In order to give more weight to his statement the hon. member said that he had studied law under a very distinguished member of the Montreal bar, under a man with whom a certain number of members of this House were acquainted, and who has held also a prominent place in Canadian politics.

He added that the hon. First Minister had adso studied law under the same jurisconsult, and that he was astonished that the government presided by the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had agreed to put into the Bill now before the House a clause to the effect that in the unorganized territories, the government may prepare the electoral lists.

Alluding to the great lawyer already mentioned, he said: Only good principles were thought by him, and we had the advantage of getting the best light to guide us in the study of law. All this was said, Mr. Speaker, to impress more fully the mind of the House.

The hon. gentleman has based his argument upon section 1 of the 'Municipal Code,' and upon section 32 of the same code. He contends that under section 1 there are no unorganized territories in the province of Quebec. I will quote the section:

1. The municipal code applies to all the territory of the province of Quebec, excepting the cities and towns incorporated by special statutes.

And from this he contends that there are no unorganized territories in the province of Quebec for the reason that the 'Municipal Code' applies to all the territory of the province. But, if the hon. gentleman had read further, if he had read section 2, I have no doubt he would have immediately modified his views. Here is what this section says:

2. The territory subject to the provisions of the municipal code is divided into county municipalities.

County municipalities include country, village or town municipalities.

Thus the territory subject to the 'Municipal Code' is the territory erected in village, parish and city municipalities, and all the rest is unorganized territory according to the 'Municipal Code.'

The hon. member has quoted section 32. I cannot understand what argument he wanted to draw from it, because this section adds another proof to the existence of unorganized territories. It provides for the erection of municipalities by the citizens. I will read it:

The council may, by a resolution, after public notice to that effect has been duly given, previous to the passing thereof, and approved and published in the manner prescribed by article 41, erect into a parish municipality, under the name which belongs to it, according to the rules prescribed, any territory included in one or more townships or part of township, whether or not erected into municipality, provided that such parish contains a population of three hundred souls and is wholly situated in the county.

Consequently this section instead of supporting the contention of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier contradicts it absolutely. It says that whenever there will in an unorganized territory a population of at least 300 souls, the parties may ask to the county council to erect in a municipality. If the hon. member had read section 28 he could have found there a stronger argument in favour of his contention.

I will read the section:

Every territory not erected into local municipality, or every territory of which the council is not organized, is, until it be annexed to an adjoining local municipality or until the council therefore be organized, administered and regulated by the county council and its officers, under their usual names and with the same privileges, rights and obligations, as if such council and officers were the local council and officers of such teritory.

As I have just already said, if the hon. member had read that section he could perhaps draw a satisfactory inference frcm it. But if it is true that the unorganized territories of the province of Quebec may be governed by the county councils, when they request it, I do not know of any one who ever did. In my own county there was at the time of my first election four groups of population which were subject to the county council. These various groups of settlers who come into our province prefer to wait till they are numerous enough before asking the county council to erect into a municipality.

Now the electoral law of 1903, of the province of Quebec, gives the necessary qualifications of a voter:

9. The following persons, and no other, being males, and who, at the time of the deposit of the list under articles 25 and 26 of this Act, are of the full age of twenty years, subjects of His Majesty by birth or naturalization and not otherwise legally disqualified, shall be entered upon the list of electors:

1. Owners or occupants, in good faith, of immovable property estimated, according to the valuation roll in force, at a sum of at least three hundred dollars in real value, in any city municipality entitled to return one or more members to the legislative assembly, or two hundred dollars in real value or twenty dollars in annual value in any other municipality.

2. Tenants in good faith, paying an annual rent, for immovable property of at least thirty dollars in any city municipality entitled to return one or more members to the legislative assembly, or at least twenty dollars in any other municipality, provided such immovable property be estimated, according to such valuation roll, in real value, at, at least, three hundred dollars in any city municipality entitled to return one or more members to the legislative assembly, or two hundred dollars in any other municipality.

Thus no one but those whose names are on the assessment rolls can be a voter.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier said: But the assessment role does not say who is an owner or a farmer's son; it does not state who is a retired gentleman, a fisherman, &c., to whom the law gives the right to vote.

The hon. member is also mistaken. Section 718 of the Municipal Code says:

718. The valuation roll must include all taxable property in the municipality, and must specify in so many distinct columns and in the following order:

1. The consecutive names on the rolls;
2. The names, surnames and the quality of the owners of taxable property, if they are known;
3. The quality and age of the owners;
4. By whom it is occupied;
5. The qualities of the occupants, when they are not the owners;
6. The indication or designation of the taxable real estate, in the manner prescribed by a resolution of the council; but for any lot or part of any lot entered in the cadastre it is necessary to use the numbers of the cadastre;
7. The real value of such real estate giving separatively the value of any part of a lot occupied by any person not being the owner;
8. Their annual value or rent;
9. The nature of the property declared taxable by article 710;
10. The value of such property;
11. The total value of the taxable property of each person, including, if necessary, the real value of the real estate, and the value as mentioned in the foregoing paragraph;
12. The names, calling and qualification of the following persons, being males of the full age of twenty-one years and subjects of Her Majesty and subjects by naturalization:

(a) Teachers teaching in the municipality under the control of school commissioners or trustees;

(b) Retired farmers or proprietors (annuitants) receiving a rent of at least one hundred dollars;

(c) Fishermen, owners of boats, nets, fishing gear and tackle or shares in a registered ship, and the actual value thereof;

(d) Farmers' sons, working under father's or mother's farm;

(e) Sons of owners of real properity residing with their fathers and mothers;

(f) Priests, curés, vicaires, missionaries and ministers of any religious denomination, domiciled for upwards of six months in the municipality.

So that the militia council of the province of Quebec makes obligatory that the assessment roll of each municipality must contain all what I have read. But if we compare section 718 of the Code with section 9 of the electoral law of the province of Quebec, we see that both are identically the same. Numerous amendments have been made to our Code, but they were always directed to agree with the provisions of the electoral law.

But the capital sin of the hon. member is this. Basing his argument on section 17, which I have already quoted, he said, alluding to the preparation of the electoral list: The law does not make any distinction, and where the law does not make any distinction, nobody can distinguish, and he added that the word secretary-treasurer of the municipality means just as well secretary-treasurer of a county council as of a local municipality.

If the hon. member had read paragraph 10 of section 3, which the interpretation of the electoral law, he would have seen what was meant by the word 'municipality.' Here it is:

10. The word 'municipality' means every municipality of a parish or part of a parish, if a township or part of a township, of united townships, of a village, of a town existing under the operation of the municipal code, and every town or city municipality incorporated by charter or special Act.

Thus according to the election law, the clerk of these municipalities is the only party who can make the list, and by the construction which the law puts on the word 'municipality,' it cannot be applied to a county municipality.

The Municipal Code gives about the same definition to the word municipality, in section 19, paragraph 1

1. The word 'municipality' means solely the territory erected for the purpose of municipal administration. In every municipality bounded by a navigable or floatable river the limits of the municipality extend to the middle of such river.

2. The term 'rural municipality' or 'country municipality' includes and means parish municipalities, municipalities or part of a parish, of a township or part of township, of united township and generally every local municipality other than town or village municipalities.

Thus the meaning that must be given to the word 'municipality' according to the Municipal Code is about the same as the one given by the electoral law, and when section 17 of this law puts upon the secretary treasurer of every municipality the duty of making a voters' list each year, from the 1st to the 15th of September, this duty is imposed upon the secretary-treasurer of parish municipality and not upon the secretary-treasurer of a county municipality.

Lists are made from assessment roll and I would like very much that the hon. member would tell me where I could find any section of the Code giving the power to a municipality, other than local municipality to make an assessment roll. I see in section 365 and 366 the following provisions.

CHAPTER 8.

Officers of the local council.

365. In addition to the municipal officers which it is required to appoint of the other provisions of this code, every local council must appoint, in the month of March, of every second year:

1. Three valuators;
2. A road inspector for every road, division, in the municipality.
3. Rural inspector for every rural division in the municipality.

366. The valuators enter upon their duties so soon as they have made oath well and faithfully to discharge the duties of their office.

Section 716 puts upon the valuators of every local municipality the duty to prepare assessment roll every three years, in conformity with the section 716 already quoted.

716. In the months of June and July, triennally, the valuators of every local municipality must draw up, either personally or by any other person employed by them, a valuation roll based upon the real value of the property, and which are set forth with care and correctness all the particulars required by the provisions of this title.

It is plain, therefore, that the voters' lists must be made from assessment roll, and that this roll must be made by the valuators appointed by the local council. There is not in our municipal code of Quebec a single section giving to the county council the right to appoint valuators to make an assessment roll, and I cannot understand where the hon. member has found such a thing.

Mr. DUGAS.

Now in conclusion I am able to state that there is in the province of Quebec some unorganized territories.

As I stated in the beginning of my remarks, when I was elected for the first time in 1900, there were in my county four settlements whose inhabitants has no right to vote, because they were never elected in a municipality. I was anxious that the franchise should be given to these four settlements ; I had even made a promise to that effect during my last campaign.

I have at that time got the opinion of eminent jurisconsults ; I have myself carefully studied the question, and I came to the conclusion that there was no other means to give to these citizens their franchise, than by the interference of the federal government through a law corresponding to section 9 of the Bill before us. I must say that if I have not succeeded to convince the government of the opportunity to make a law such as would give the franchise to these four settlements in my county, two at least have already obtained that right by forming themselves into municipality, without the assistance of any federal law of this Parliament.

The good administration of the affairs of the country, and the prosperity that we have enjoyed, since Sir Wilfrid Laurier is the leader of the government, has been felt in that part of my county as elsewhere, and the population have so increased that two of the four settlements already mentioned have been able to form a municipality under the Municipal Code.

This is all that I intend to say on this question. I followed this debate with much interest. I am satisfied that grave injustices has been made in the province of Manitoba. I am equally satisfied that four settlements in my county have been unjustly deprived during many years of their franchise. In the Bill before us, I see a remedy to this, and I cannot do otherwise than to support it in principle.

I have no doubt that when the Bill will come in committee, that amendments will be made. In these circumstances I am proud to give to the Bill my hearty support.

On motion of Mr. Calvert the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.55 a.m. Tuesday.
